"Some one remarked the other day that Miss —, daughter of Mr. —, is going to — College and that her father wishes some one would persuade her to go to Elon. She is a very talented girl and ought to be a leader in our church. She certainly would be with the training and atmosphere at Elon.

"It seems that the principal of her school is from — College and I understand that college has been talked the whole year.

"I cannot understand how parents, members of the Christian Church, can afford to send their children to other colleges rather than to their own Elon. Do what you can to change her mind. I will do the same."

Now may I say a few words relative to cases of this kind?

We shall never build up our Church while our choice young people go elsewhere for their higher education. The Church's system of education and College Day, which we are laboring so earnestly to make effective in our churches now, can never function properly under conditions like these in our local congregations. There ought never to be a question in regard to where our boys and girls will go to college. Our college is as much a part of our church life as is our local Sunday school. We should be loyal to it.

Out of Elon have come our ministerial and our lay leaders. There are a few exceptions for the laity, but the exceptions only serve to prove the rule. For our ministry there are no exceptions. In fact, in thirty-two years only two candidates for our ministry have during their undergraduate days completed their college courses in other colleges. One of them abandoned the ministry and the other is in the Presbyterian Church. If we are to have leaders, we must support our own college.

Now, as to the parental attitude, I thoroughly sympathize with the desire of parents to send their children where they will be satisfied, feeling that thus they will do a higher grade of work. Usually we are outnumbered in the community, and more young people of other churches are going to college from from our church. This makes it hard on our young people and on their parents to secure a ready and willing decision to patronize our own. This is the disadvantage of being small. It will keep us small unless we are able to be loyal at the expense of great sacrifice.

On this ground I appeal to our parents and our young people. We have great principles and we have a college founded on those principles, whose very atmosphere is permeated with them. The hope of our future is conditioned on our ability as a church to inspire our young people with these principles. Experience has demonstrated that we cannot do this, unless our young people entering college choose our own college as the training station for their life and its motivation.

Certainly it will require sacrifice to do it. But the magnitude of our sacrifice is the measure of our soul growth. I appeal to our people, our parents, our young people, to all, to make the sacrifice and to support our college loyally, that we may be able a generation from now to have for our Church a trained and devoted leadership second to none.

We love our Church. Let's prove our love by loyal sacrifice in support of our college and of all our Church's noble institutions. No matter what your life-work may be, our college has courses qualifying you for it. There is really no excuse for going elsewhere. Send for a catalogue and see that it is so. Be loyal, beloved; be loyal.

SUFFOLK LETTER

ONE can tell what kind of a preacher a congregation has, if one knows the people. "Like people, like priest." (Hosea 4:9.) The people make the minister. They call him. They pay him. They create the atmosphere which he breathes. They make the conditions in which he serves. They suggest, unconsciously, it may be, the character of his sermons. They are the soil into which he casts the gospel seed; and the wise planter puts into his field the seed adapted to the soil. The pastor must study his congregation and select his seed—his sermons for them. He is not a dictator, but a minister. He must not get his seed from doubtful sources. The Bible is the storehouse from which he must get his texts, his lessons, his inspiration, and his authority. No human standard is authority for his utterances. He may search the whole field of literature and art for illustration, comparison, and proof of the gospel among men; but "preach the Word" must be the standard for pulpit deliverance.

The time has come for the people to understand their obligation in preaching the gospel. Much is said about leadership in this day, but that does not mean that the people should depend on the preacher for the whole service. The congregation can make the preacher or ruin him. A prayerless, indifferent, illiberal congregation reflects its own spirit in a minister who is embarrassed in presenting the real claims of the church upon its constituency. It is sometimes said that the pastor says nothing about money for conferences and other purposes; and sometimes he is almost afraid to mention it. Most pastors would be glad to urge the payment of Men and Millions pledges, if the subscribers would help him to feel that they want to pay those pledges. "They that feared the Lord spake often one to another." (Malachi 3:16), and God's people could make preaching powerful and payments easy, if they would do as well as people did four hundred years before Christ. Conversation is a powerful agent in creating public sentiment. "Let your conversation be as it becomes the gospel of Christ." (Phil. 1:27); "for our conversation is in heaven." (Phil. 3:20). The congregation can talk almost anything up or down. They can make the last sermon a blessing or a curse. It was perpetual speech that made the nation dry. The tongue is mighty for good or evil. The congregation speaks as well as the preacher. Their approbation or condemnation of the gospel is the great force in the community. The faith of the people, their daily life, their Sunday observance, their attitude toward social evils, their trade relations with one another, all enter into the preacher's messages. Sermons against dancing avail nothing while the congregation condones and indulges; but the condemnation of the dance by the congregation would make a sermon against it a power in the community.

It is not the minister preaching to the congregation, but the church preaching to the community to win all to Christ. A responsive congregation makes a fearless minister. There is no good reason why every congregation might not have a good preacher; but criticism behind his back can never help him. If he has faults, tell him. If he needs encouragement, encourage him. If he lacks fervor, build a spiritual fire around the pulpit. If he goes too slow, press him. Help to make your preacher just the preacher you want him to be, and you can do it.

TESTING TIME

The people of God are submitted to many tests of various kinds, but one of the most severe is such as came to Naomi, "in the days when the judges ruled, that there was a famine in the land." Like God's people today, she with her family was forced to decide the question: Shall I stay where God has placed me and trust Him, or shall I seek help elsewhere? They tried the latter course, with the result that the family was nearly wiped out. It always has been true, it still is true, that when God's people trust and obey, every need is met. It has always been true that when God's people have failed to trust Him and have allied themselves with the ungodly, chastisement has followed.

When Naomi decided to return to her own country and God's people, then the testing time came for her two daughters-in-law, for a life choice must be made. It meant forsaking their own country, their gods, and their own people, for a people, a country and a God they had not known, or staying with their own gods and their own people. Orpha decided to not break family ties or to give up her own gods. Ruth chose the better part, although her choice meant giving up her false gods, her own people and her own country, that she might be identified with the people of God.

It is just what Jesus said we must do if we would become His disciples. "Whosoever he be of you that renounceth not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." Jesus' "whosoever," as used here, is just as all-inclusive as His "whosoever" in John 3:16. If today the Lord has placed you where the work is hard and the outlook is discouraging, are you ready to trust and obey Him there? Or are you seeking to find a way out of it? If today the Lord is asking you to break family ties and to leave all for His sake, are you ready and willing to trustfully, obediently say, "Here am I, send me"? Chastisement or a blessing awaits your choice. The choice must be made. Will you not follow Jesus all the way and be blessed?

THEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT

After years of waiting, we are promised such a department at Elon. That those who teach in other branches need special training is admitted. We require those who minister to our bodies to undergo years of special training under experts in the art of healing before we allow them to administer to our sick. We employ only well informed and skilled lawyers, physicians, and artisans, yet in many instances when we employ persons to minister to us in spiritual matters—which we all consider the highest and most important of all—we have persons often who are unqualified to minister to our spiritual necessities. If in secular matters we are misled, we may suffer loss; but the loss is only temporal: but when we are misled in spiritual matters, we may suffer eternal loss.

In fact, the minister of the gospel should be the best Christian and the best informed man in the fundamental doctrines of the Bible that he can be. He is a representative of Jesus, and, like him, should be "apt to teach" and clean in person and in speech. I rejoice in the prospect of seeing a theological department at Elon. For many years I have desired it, advocated it, and prayed for it. Will not some good man or woman endow this department, that it may be a permanent blessing? To my mind this is a great opportunity, and calls for a great hearted Christian to immortalize himself.

Chapel Hill, N. C., June 3, 1922.

Recently there died in Pittsburgh the senior member of one of the largest retail clothing stores in the country. He began as many another merchant prince, with a peddler's pack. He came to America with nothing but health, a boundless ambition, and a determination to build his fortune on truth. But this was much. He said: "An asset that grew as we went on was this piece of advice from our father: 'Sell to others as you would buy for yourself. Good merchants make small profits and many sales. Deal fairly; be patient, and in time your dishonest competitors will crowd your stores with customers.'" This is good business philosophy for a Gentile as well as for a Jew.—United Presbyterian.

THE LORD REIGNETH!

A Sermon by REV. J. H. JOWETT, D. D., in The Christian Herald

"The Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoice."—Psalm 97.

THE Lord reigneth." Where shall we put the emphasis? Shall we place it here—"The Lord reigneth?" Yes, let the emphasis be first placed upon the lordship of God. The Lord reigneth; the sceptre is not in the hands of the evil one. Whatever appearances may seem to dictate, and, in spite of all evidence which suggests the sovereignty of the devil, the Lord is upon the throne.

Where, again, shall we place the emphasis? Shall we place it here—"The Lord reigneth"? Yes, let us vary the music by changing the emphasis. The Lord reigneth; He does not hold the sceptre loosely, giving part of His sovereignty to another; He never relaxes His hold of dominion, and, amid all the changing seasons, He pursues His sovereign will. Things are not governed by caprice. We are not the victims of blind, dead, indiscriminate chance. The apparent chaos is a cosmos. The spirit of disorder is not riotous in the universe. There is on the throne a ruler, a dominant Mind. "The Lord reigneth."

Now, what kind of man should this great evangel make of me? What ought to be the tone and disposition of my life? I think the Psalmist proceeds to give the answer. "Let the earth rejoice." The word rejoice is significant of movement, of nimble movement, of a certain busy activity of limb. It suggests the busy habits of birds on a bright spring morning. Watch the birds when the sun is up, how every fibre in their little bodies seems to palpitate with life. We, too, feel the influence of the sunny day. The bright morning makes all our members alert. We say one to another: "A bit of sunshine makes all the difference."

And here in my text the sun is up and shining; "the Lord reigneth," and we His children are to be as busy as His birds on the bright spring day. "Let the multitude of isles be glad." We are not only to be active; we are to be blithe. We are not only to share the birds' movements, we are to possess their song. The soul must not only be vigorous; its vigor must be set to music.

And now I am startled by the succession of the Psalm. The fact of the sovereignty of God should make me blithe and busy as a bird. But all this seems to be challenged by the words which immediately succeed: "Clouds and darkness are round about me." The darkness is the symbol of distress; and the coming of the clouds and the darkness will assuredly stop the singing of the songster and paralyze its limbs. Why should the Psalmist introduce the ministry of the cloud? It is introduced because the Psalmist knew that joy that is not touched with reverence is superficial or unreal. Joy is never at its sweetest until it is touched by awe. And, therefore, the suggestion of the mysterious dispensations of God is not intended to smother the song, but rather to deepen and enrich it. Every grace needs the accompaniment of reverence if it is to be perfected.

But now, in order that the gathering clouds and darkness may not paralyze men, something is told us as to what dwells in their innermost place. "Righteousness and Judgment are the habitation of His Throne." My reverence must not be a craven fear. My awe must not crush me into despair. The ministry of the cloud may be inscrutable; yet the cloud itself is governed by the reigning Hand. The darkness may throw men into perplexity, and yet the darkness itself is regulated by the Lord of the noon-day. In the very midst of the cloud and the darkness there is the throne of righteousness and judgment. Therefore must my reverence be inspired with confidence, and not be stricken with cringing fear.

"A fire goeth before Him and burneth up His enemies." Surely this word will impair our confidence and cause us to tremble with dread? No, this word also is intended to minister to our hope. It is well for us that a fire goeth before us. We need the pure flame of His presence; we need the ever-burning atmosphere in which all defilement is consumed. The unclean child has need of the great Father's everlasting burnings! How much there is in me to be burned away! How greatly I require the discriminating flame! My Lord cauterizes my being, and burns away my sin. Therefore the fire need not alarm me; it is the merciful agent of my God. "His minister . . . the flaming fire."

"Come as the fire and purge our hearts
Like sacrificial flame."

The fact, therefore, of the reigning sovereignty of God should fill me with a busy and reverent spiritual activity, inspired by confidence and hope.

And now the Psalmist turns away to retrospect. He has proclaimed the sovereignty of God, and he now turns to the things of yesterday, to find the evangel confirmed. "His lightnings lighten the world." Who does not know the lightning interposition of God? Who has not known the season when the clouds and darkness gather about us, and it seemed as though we were alone, and suddenly God has leaped out like a lightning flash. Sometimes our Father comes like the dawn. Truth breaks upon us like the growth of the morning. But sometimes He comes as the lightning. He flashes upon us unexpectedly; the divine is obtruded when we least expect it. We had almost forgotten the divine. The nearness and the depression of the cloud had caused us almost to forget Him. Or we were wondering if He would ever return. And suddenly He appeared! It is a by no means unsuggestive study to collate from the Word of God the records of the sudden lightning appearances of the Lord our God.

"The hills melted like wax at the presence of the Lord." The divine suddenly interposes and the obstacles melt away. Have we not known the experience?

The difficulties towered in front of us like gigantic hills, and we saw no way over the tremendous heights. And then suddenly, half-unexpectedly, the hills melted, and the difficulties vanished away. Missionary literature abounds in such experience. There was the long, long wait in Rarotonga, when the difficulties appeared to be insuperable. And then suddenly God revealed Himself in melting power and the hills became a plain, and the difficulties passed away.

A young member of our church yearned to go into the foreign field, and the hills and mountains seemed to obstruct her way. Still she waited in prayerful expectancy, and one day, quite suddenly, the hills and the mountains melted, and her way was made plain. She went out into China, crowded her little space of missionary life with marvelous activity, and passed in the chariot of martyrdom into the presence of her Lord. But not only in the life of the missionary does one find the melting of the hills. Every Christian could produce confirmatory witness. God has suddenly interposed, and the difficulty has withered away, and the outsiders have seen the glory of the Lord, and His leadership and righteousness have been declared. It is the lightning interposition which confounds the ungodly. They are turned pale by the passing of the hills, and by the triumph of the meek and lowly in heart. "But Zion heard and was glad."

Now, in the face of this evangel, "the Lord reigneth," and with this corroboration from the witness of experience, what shall we do? The Psalmist supplies the answer. "Ye that love the Lord, hate evil." This is the foundation of everything. Our own experience will confirm the witness of history. If we make our groundwork here—"hate evil." The affection for the Lord has its equivalent in our recoil from the devil.

And what shall be our reward, if we are possessed by this love-hatred, this twin ministry, this mortifying grace? He preserveth the souls of His saints. We shall be kept by God. He will erect fences to guard us from peril. Sometimes the fence may be a hedge of thorns, but the hedge is upon the top of a precipice, and the pain it occasions is purposed to save us from death. "Light is sown for the righteous." We are not only to be preserved, we are to be illumined. God will give to us the light we need.

I know not what the morrow may bring. It is not given me to know the character of the road I have to travel. I do not know the problems that will confront me, the questions I shall have to answer. But God knows all, and the light I shall require is already sown for me. It is a beautiful figure, that even now the counsel is prepared, the light is sown, and when I need its harvest to illumine my judgment its ministry will be quite matured. "And gladness for the upright in heart." Then my light is not only to be sure, it is to be glad light, sunlight. It is to minister to the warmth of my heart as well as to the illumination of my mind. It is to comfort me as well as lead me. It will be a genial presence as well as a counsellor.

"The church must go to the lost or go to oblivion."

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

I hardly think we should become discouraged. The kind Master is good to us and blesses us more than we can ever hope to be worthy of. I realize that we cannot do our best when we are discouraged. When we look over our farm and see grass growing where the corn ought to have been planted several weeks ago and has not because of the continuous rains, we should feel discouraged but for the fact that we have never seen a year yet but that there was a time to plant and a time to gather in. We look forward to see that time this year.

The Master has blessed the children with the best of health and no serious sickness has come our way. Eighty-five little boys and girls have a happy time playing on our lawn and enjoying the fresh breeze. You would hardly think that as we have so many little children the birds would come to be our companions; but such is the case. The robin builds his nest in our yard and raises his young, the mocking-bird sits in our grove and sings his many tunes. It makes us feel happy as we are busy at work to listen to the mingling of the songs of the birds with the voices of our children. We do not allow the children to throw at the birds at all, but teach them to be companions to them. We are fond of the little children. We also like the little birds.

We have quite a number of children who are appealing to us for a home. We want to give them a place as soon as we can get funds enough ahead to keep us from getting embarrassed. We hope to get all the Sunday schools on the list of contributions this year. If your school is not on the list, help it to get on. The Eastern Virginia Conference leads all the conferences, as every Sunday school in that conference makes a monthly offering except three. If all of our Sunday schools would make a monthly offering it would help us so much.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

OUR GREATEST MISSIONARY TASK

THE recent session of the Southern Christian Convention at Suffolk voted that the Mission Board take the place of the Campaign Committee in carrying on to completion the Men and Millions Forward Movement. The Campaign Committee felt that it had done the work for which it was created, and the Convention decided that the logical organization for completing the Movement was the Mission Board. Viewed in its larger light, this seems not inappropriate. Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, Chairman of the Board, was the first individual to propose such a movement publicly, and from its inception has been an ardent advocate and most enthusiastic supporter of the same. Moreover, as all denominations are seeing and saying, such movements are wholly missionary. This was the original conception in the Methodist Centenary Movement, for the resolution creating that Movement reads as follows:

"The Centenary Commission should keep constantly in mind, as its goal, to make every church in Methodism dominantly missionary. By this we mean a church with a missionary passion which will be evangelistic at home and truly missionary in its outreaching to the ends of the earth; a church in which each member recognizes it as his sacred obligation to promote the world-wide plans of Jesus Christ."

This missionary note, so far as this writer has been able to find out, is dominant in every church that has put on movements akin to our Men and Millions. It is certainly the original conception in our own Movement.

We had had drives, campaigns, and solicitations for one enterprise and another, but in this Movement the object was to give every member in the Christian Church the opportunity of expressing his or her interest in and devotion to every enterprise and interest of the church. The Mission Board, as it assumes the task of carrying on the Movement, does so with the understanding,—

First, that it is to help, and stand in a position as assistant to every pastor and every church in the Convention;

Second, that every institution and enterprise of the church is to be cared for and developed to further usefulness and success through this Movement

During a history of more than one hundred years we have as a people stood upon a well defined platform known as our Five Cardinal Principles. During the period covering our history we have founded and are now developing seven enterprises:

1. Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor.
2. Religious journalism and publications, specifically THE CHRISTIAN SUN.
3. Missions, Home and Foreign.
4. Christian schools, particularly Elon College in North Carolina and our Bethlehem College in Alabama.

5. The Christian Orphanage.

6. The care of aged ministers, their widows and dependents.

7. The Convention itself, which promotes all these.

These are the enterprises or institutions through which we as a church express ourselves to the world. These are an expression of our church life and activities through which we share our common benevolence and through which our organized aims and efforts reach out into the world. Now for the Mission Board, the Men and Millions Movement has upon it the burden of caring for all these and at the same time affords an opportunity for each individual in the church to express not only through his love but his loyalty to each and all the interests and enterprises of the church to which he belongs.

This Movement is the first, and only, comprehensive co-operative effort we as a church have ever made. Some of us love foreign missions and are willing to make contributions thereto; some love the Christian Orphanage and are willing to help in supporting the homeless ones there; some love Elon College and the great work it is doing for us as a denomination; some love our aged ministers and their dependents, and wish to see them cared for in their declining years; but in Men and Millions we are permitted to express our love for all these and our devotion and loyalty to each. The Board wishes that each individual who pays a dime on his Men and Millions pledge might realize that in that act he expresses his love for the entire church and for all that the entire church is trying to do in the world. In other words, as the Board conceives its task of carrying on the work of the Movement it is the greatest missionary task to which our church has ever been called.

What a grave and unspeakable pity it is that there have been so many false rumors and misleading reports and conceptions of the Movement current amongst us. It has been said that in this Movement the few were trying to lord it over the many; that individuals were trying to force other individuals to make payments and pledges against their will and that certain interests, individuals or enterprises were trying to profit at the expense of others. Such rumors and scores of others of similar character were very hurtful to the best and noblest task the Christian Church ever gave itself to. The Mission Board understands that it is to give all our people the opportunity of expressing their interest in, devotion and loyalty to, all interests and enterprises of the church alike. The Convention decided upon certain methods and percentages of funds paid in and to be pledged. This division was made after due and prayerful deliberation and consideration for the needs of each. If its wisdom failed, as human wisdom often does, this should in no wise lessen our interest in the Movement and love for the objects of our care and benevolence which we have founded and developed during the one hundred years of our existence. The Mission Board desires to assist the pastor in increasing his church membership, in developing in the congregation a keener interest in the Christian Church and its enterprises; it desires to see the devotional and spiritual life so quickened and deepened in the local church that revivals shall break out, that souls shall be saved to Christ, and that the whole church shall go forward in the work to which our church has committed itself. We believe that this Movement is more than a temporary event, ceremony or celebration: it is a revival Movement intended to express our denominational life and church activities more intensely at home and extensively to the uttermost parts. The Mission Board will certainly not apply any sort of force nor try to drive people to any deed against their will, but it will try with all its mind and strength to aid in every possible way in increasing interest in Kingdom service and in carrying forward the work of the Kingdom as our Heavenly Father seems to have committed it to us.

Brethren, sisters and friends, we ask you—for your co-operation and pledge you our co-operation in carrying forward this, our greatest Missionary Movement.

GOOD NEWS

Rev. W. C. Carpenter, Joppa, Alabama, who has been preaching at one of our newly built churches in northern Alabama, sends this very encouraging word: "We have organized another church here in northern Alabama and we wish to impress the importance of Stewardship and Tithing on the minds of all the members. Please send us more tithing literature. Some of our members are already tithers and we hope that all will sign a tithe pledge card." Our northern Alabama field is one of great promise and this is the third church we have organized within the brief period of less than two years. We have two nice substantial church buildings and the prospect is bright for another at an early date.

Rev. E. H. Rainey, who served so successfully as pastor of our Elm Avenue church, Portsmouth, Virginia, last summer, is this summer located at 622 Chesapeake Avenue, Ocean View, Virginia, as pastor of our new church at that place. Brother Rainey has spent the past year in Yale, and arrived after his examinations were over in time to hold services Sunday, June 4. Under date of June 5 Brother Rainey writes: "I arrived Saturday. We had a very good day yesterday. There were seventy-one present at our Sunday school and thirty at the preaching service. The people here seem very enthusiastic. We are already working toward unity in the community. We have arranged for union service next Sunday." Rev. O. D. Poythress, of our South Norfolk church, has rendered valuable service in starting the Ocean View church, and he is most happy to have Brother Rainey give all his time to the work of the pastorate there for the summer.

Mrs. C. E. Newman, writing under date of Virgilina, Virginia, June 1, says: "I am enclosing $1.85, our Sunday school collection for missions last second Sunday. We voted to give one Sunday's offering a month to missions and also to have a mission superintendent." We are glad to have this decision from our good Union church Sunday school at Virgilina, and to add this name to the growing list of our Sunday schools giving one offering a month to missions.

IN THE HANDS OF CHINESE ROBBERS

W. H. Oldfield, Liu-chow, South China

(Concluded from last week.)

AS we walked along I could tell by the sun and the position of my shadow that we were traveling about northeast. I took mental note of the different landmarks, hills, trees, rocks, etc., so that I would know which way to travel if I ever got away. I did not expect, however, to escape very soon. All natural help was vain.

It was hard tramping, made the more so by our wet clothing, and as we were hurried along my bare feet were cut by the sharp stones that lined the rugged paths, and caused me at times to limp a little. But the pain was almost forgotten in the new sounds and scenes that greeted us at every turn, and the thought of the uncertain fate that possibly awaited us before our journey was ended. I confidently expected that the Lord would see me through, though whether or not I might have to spend weeks in captivity in the mountains I did not know.

The crowd of captives, bound with ropes around neck and arms, and the captors with their stolen booty, urging the captives to walk faster, striking them with stones or sword, presented quite a picture. I thought as I walked along that after passing through these experiences I would like to preach on the Babylonian captivity. The ropes around the captives' necks and my own especially reminded me of Dr. Mantle's illustration of the political prisoners in England. I forgot the illustration, but I remembered the rope.

The robber who was following me did not hit me, but he gave my grip some terrific cracks with an old-style executioner's sword, as he yelled, "Fai-ti," (hurry up). Soon I had a hole pounded in the side of my grip, and fearing lest my legs might get the next bang by mistake, I walked faster and got ahead of the next prisoner.

We had traveled for some time when we came to the foot of a high hill, the top of which was enclosed by a high earthen wall. We could see ahead that the robbers were occupying this hill, and also other smaller hills around it from the summit of which they could see all over the country and watch the roads running in different directions. Robbers laden with booty could be seen ascending the highest hill to the enclosure above. We could hear distant shooting to the north and thought perhaps the robbers were attacking another boat.

Soldiers to the Rescue and Robbery

When we reached the foot of the highest hill, one who seemed to be a robber chief came down, signal flag in hand, and consulted with our men as to what route we should take. We had a moment's rest, and then started off again. This time the robbers marched before and behind while the captives were kept in the center. But we had not traveled a great distance when bullets began to soar over our heads. Another halt was called and then we were hustled off the path and through the long grass to the right. We passed through a small corn field and as we did so bullets came crashing through the corn. It was then for the first time I realized that soldiers were coming to our rescue and that a fight was on between them and the robbers. It was becoming evident that our crowd had to change its course and retreat. The retreat began, but every now and then we had to drop to the ground, as bullets were whistling past us every minute.

The running threw us into disorder, and consequently we were not as well guarded as before. The robbers threatened to shoot anyone who attempted to get away and I knew my chances of escape were slim. In the crowd a Chinese might dodge to one side for a moment unobserved, but not so a foreign missionary dressed in American costume. I knew therefore that an unsuccessful attempt to get away might mean instant death, so I kept close beside my armed guardians. I ran when they ran, stopped when they stopped, ducked when they ducked. They probably guessed by the way I yielded to them in everything that I was a married man! That yielding spirit, however, was all on the outside. Inside I had a few little thoughts which I was keeping to myself, and anxious for an opportunity to put them into operation. Finally after a run and a brief pause we started on again. I feigned to start with the rest, but didn't, and as the robbers were on the run they did not notice me for a moment. Grip in hand, I turned and darted backward through the long grass. When at last I poked my head up I could see the approaching soldiers, but in the distance, and in the excitement, they mistook me for a robber and leveled their rifles to fire. Down I went to mother earth and crept along a little further. Three soldiers ran toward me with rifles ready to shoot, but when they came closer and saw I was a captive they lowered their guns.

By this time the robbers noticed that several prisoners were escaping and they turned a brisk fire in our direction. The ground was stirred up around us by the bullets and the soldiers told us to run and they ran with us. When we had gotten out of range of the robbers' rifles, the soldiers grabbed us and searched us for money. My grip was opened and shoes, mouth organ and other things that the (first) robbers had missed were taken. I was then unbound, the rope taken off my neck and arms. Later the soldiers pitied me and gave me back my shoes. Five other captives escaped in a similar manner and after being searched and their few remaining things taken from them, we were all taken back by the soldiers to their headquarters at Loh keo, where we were given water to wash and something to eat.

The robbers could be plainly seen standing on the hillside, but the soldiers did not molest them further, as they said their own ammunition was insufficient. They therefore left the robbers with their other captives, and with the loot which they had recovered for themselves they returned in triumph to the shelter of their barracks and to the opium pipes which they had left behind.

The robbers were left on the hill-top in full sight of everybody. The hill could easily have been surrounded, and that crowd of robbers captured, but the soldiers said they had used up their ammunition and were outnumbered.

Diet before Duty

This is the biggest robbery that has occurred on the river for years. Kidnapping was on a large scale, about fifty men and thirty women and girls being taken, while everybody on the boat suffered more or less. The captain alone of all the crew escaped. As soon as the robbers reached the boat they searched for the captain, but at the first sign of danger he had jumped out of bed, and partly by boat and partly by wading he got to shore under a brisk fire, and running to the nearest market-town three miles away, gave the alarm. However, it was early in the morning and the soldiers had not yet eaten their morning rice! This, of course, must be attended to first! Vegetables and meat were brought and the rice put on the fire to boil. When it was cooked all sat down to a hurried meal, while all the time three miles away men and women were being murdered, robbed, tied up, and led away to robber haunts in the mountains. The very hill that the robbers occupied could be plainly seen from the market-town where the soldiers were leisurely preparing for the rescue. Of course it would have been more dangerous to have attacked the robbers while they were looting; far safer to wait until they had gotten away with their booty and then fire a few shots from the rear!

Other military centers were also notified, but were alike dilatory. One walled city within eight miles of the robbery was notified by special messenger, and almost eighteen hours later the official arrived with his braves fully armed and anxious for the conflict!

Word was also sent to the city of Liu-chow. Here are stationed over two thousand soldiers. When the authorities heard of the robbery, the city was thrown into a state of excitement and a government gunboat, with maxim guns and a company of soldiers, were sent post haste down the river. They came within sight of the robbers, saw their fires burning on the hill top, knew that the passengers who had been taken captive a few hours before could not be far away, yet the soldiers turned unconcernedly away and enquired for the remainder of the opium which the robbers had not been able to carry away. Having secured twenty-seven cases of the drug it was placed on board the gunboat and all returned to the city proud of their noble rescue, anticipating the rewards that might await them for their deeds and gallantry!

Later soldiers were sent to the boat to secure the baggage left by the passengers, and carry back the loot that was piled up on the shore which the robbers could not carry away. This they did, but on the return journey one could see here and there the loads placed down upon the road while the soldiers picked out what they wanted and ran away and hid it for themselves before continuing their journey.

Families Broken Up

Many of the passengers lost their all. One gentleman of means who had recently retired from official life, with his entire family, was moving to Canton for safety. There were fifteen in his family and all of them were taken captive. The old gentleman and his wife walked until they could walk no further, and when crossing a stream fell down exhausted. The robbers pulled them up by the ropes about their necks and urged them on, but they soon fell down again. Finally they were left by the roadside and eventually found their way back to the boat. Later two of the younger sons were released, but eleven of the family, mostly girls or young women, were taken away and have not been heard of since.

From another family out of a household of twenty-two only six escaped.

My own losses were not so heavy, owing to the fact that the robbers did not seem to care for American clothing. They took my heavy winter overcoat and other things to the value of about one hundred dollars. But later I received a small rebate, for while running with the robbers I saw a roll of bills in the path. I paused a second and looked at it, but money had little attraction for me just then. I thought, of course, tonight I will be bound hand and foot and probably searched again when my watch and the money in my socks will be taken from me. But another thought entered my head, and so, hastily snatching up the roll, I put it in my vest pocket and ran on with the others. When I got away from the robbers I counted the roll and found it contained thirteen dollars, Canton notes. It was enough money to buy something to eat and to pay my way back home. It convinced me as never before that thirteen is not an unlucky number. Praise the Lord!

During the hours of excitement and danger I did not feel any particular pain, but when the excitement was over, for days after, the arm that had been bound had a funny feeling which reminded me that I had been kidnapped. Wading the cold river and later streaming with perspiration as we were hurried over the paths and through the fields brought on such a dreadful cold that for days I could not speak above a whisper. But my heart bubbles over with joy as I think of the great deliverance God has given, and of possible future years of service in this interesting field, should the Lord tarry.

People who think missionary life is hum-drum ought to come to South China, to the wilds of Kwangsi. Here there is enough excitement and danger to satisfy the most venturesome. But though—

“Oft in danger, oft in woe
Onward Christians, onward go,
Let not fears your course impede,
Great your strength if great your need.”

The pathfinder is one who blazes the trail. The camp follower is one who devours that to which he has no right. He is the parasite of the camp. Yet the scorn of his own generation has been visited to a greater degree upon the pathfinder than upon the camp follower. Socrates was a pathfinder of truth and they caused him to drink the hemlock. Paul was a pathfinder and they called him a fool. The book of the martyrs is but another title for the book of the pathfinders.—Exchange.

To one who asked George Muller the secret of his service, he said: “There was a day when I died, utterly died”; and as he spoke, he bent lower, until he almost touched the floor; “died to George Muller, his opinions, preferences, tastes, and will; died to the world, its approval or censure, died to the approval or blame even of my brethren and friends, and since then I have studied only to show myself approved unto God.”

The Downfall of Judah. II Kings 25:1-21.

Golden Text: Be not deceived; God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. Gal. 6:7.

Topics for Thought and Discussion: God's Punishment of Disobedience; Results of National Disobedience to God;

He serves his country best
Who lives pure life and doeth righteous deed,
And walks straight paths, however others stray,
And leaves his sons as uttermost bequest
A stainless record which all men may read.
This is the better way.”

“Eddystone's lighthouse perished once because it was built of wood, and burned. Sailors upon the sea were wrecked because the light failed to shine. Judah was God's lighthouse in the world. Judah was God's people. To the Jews was given the word of revelation to be their guide in a dark world, and to guide others. But Judah fell because she forgot God, and the world lost for a while the light of the knowledge of His word.”—Westminster Teacher.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR JUNE 18, 1922.

Cultivating Contentment. Phil. 4:10-20.

“God bless the heart of sunshine
That smiles the clouds away,
And sets a star of fresh-born hope
In some one's sky each day.
God bless all words of kindness
That lift the heart from gloom.
And in life's barren places
Plant flowers of love to bloom.”

OUR GROWING SUNDAY SCHOOLS

Reports from our Sunday schools received up to this date show that the schools reporting have enrolled 605 new members during the past month. Reports by Conferences are as follows:

North Carolina, 30 schools reporting 255 new members.
Alabama, 4 schools reporting 21 new members.
Valley of Virginia, 14 schools reporting 144 new members.
Eastern Virginia, 11 schools reporting 91 new members.
Georgia-Alabama, 5 schools reporting 94 new members.

This makes a total of sixty-four Sunday school secretaries who have mailed in the report cards furnished them. It is hoped that many more will send in the cards giving the report of the work of their schools during the contest, or at least the attendance and gains achieved on the final Sunday, June 11. No doubt many schools have been working and gaining new recruits during these last few weeks, but have been delaying sending in the cards. We want to hear from every school, before we publish the list of honor schools. Although June 11 was set as the closing day of the contest, it is to be hoped that that day will see only the real beginning of our work of increase, and that every new member enrolled will be trained to become a working member of our great Sunday school movement.

FROM OUR RELIGIOUS EDUCATION LETTER FILE

Since the Sunday school contest between the different conferences started, our school has increased one hundred per cent. When the contest first began we had eighteen pupils on roll. Last Sunday, May 21, 36 pupils were on the roll, and including four teachers and the superintendent our school has a total of forty-three. Our superintendent appointed a committee to see about organizing a Home Department and a Cradle Roll. We are going to make an effort to enroll every church member and as many others as possible within reach of us in some department of our school. We now believe that we can increase 200 per cent instead of only 100 per cent.—Pressley Ingram, Secretary Christiana Sunday School, Alabama Conference.

I am glad to report a Christian Endeavor Society at New Hope with a roll of twenty-one, with Hubert Liskey as president and Miss Laura Estep as secretary.—Miss Wilda Liskey, New Hope church, Valley of Virginia.

Our Christian Endeavor Society is doing fine. Several more young people are taking part on the programs and we expect them to become members soon.—Miss Annie Huey, Noon Day church, Alabama Conference.

Our Christian Endeavor Society is growing. Five new members joined last Sunday night, making a total of eighteen active members now. Our Sunday school is growing. We are going to have to make about three more classes, as we have so many new members. We are having a contest in the Sunday school. One side is the Blue and White, the other the Red and White.—Miss Lillian Hand, Vanceville church, Georgia-Alabama Conference.

(Note.—Miss Hand also writes of a very fine Mother's Day service, held at the Vanceville Church last month. An inspiring program was rendered. This church is doing a splendid work, and is advancing along all lines.)

We are in our new home, and the Lord is giving us a blessing. We have organized a Baraca Class and are expecting great things from it. We have twenty-five charter members, with ten present on a rainy day.—W. M. Crowder, East LaGrange, Georgia-Alabama Conference.

In the recent contest our ten per cent increase quota was sixteen, and to date we have enrolled thirty-three new members with several to come in next Sunday. During the month we have had an average attendance of eighty-five per cent, and our offerings have increased twenty per cent. We do not intend to stop because we have more than reached our quota and have made every requirement of the campaign. This campaign has been a wonderful help to us and has caused us to grow larger in many ways.—Nelson F. Richards, Superintendent of Winchester Sunday school.

MEETING OF BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

The Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention met in special session at Elon College, May 30 and 31. On the 30th the Board met with the Mission Board to consider ways in which it could best co-operate with the Board in forwarding the interests of the Men and Millions Movement. Following this meeting, the Board met for the purpose of organization, and the following officers were elected:

Chairman, Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., Richmond, Va.; Vice-Chairman, Rev. R. F. Brown, Columbus, Ga.; Recording Secretary, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Richmond, Va.; Treasurer, Mr. C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C.; Publicity Secretary, Mr. P. T. Hines, Raleigh, North Carolina.

On Wednesday morning, May 31, the Board met with the members of the faculty of Elon College to consider the possibility of holding the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College this year. Members of the Board present were Dr. W. T. Walters, Rev. R. F. Brown, and Messrs. Stephenson, Hines and Holland. Members of the faculty were Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. J. U. Newman, Dr. N. G. Newman, Dr. T. C. Amick, Professors Kennett, Brannock and Hook, and Dr. Wickler, with Dr. Atkinson and Mr. Williams from the Mission Board also present. It was decided, after much discussion, to hold the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College, the week preceding the opening of school, August 28 to September 4. The following program committee was elected: Dr. W. T. Walters, Dr. W. A. Harper, and Miss Lucy Eldredge.

It was voted that the Board of Religious Education endorse heartily the Men and Millions Forward Movement. The resignation of Mrs. Boyd Richards, of Winchester, as a member of the Board, was accepted, and Mrs. J. W. Patton, of Elon College, was elected to fill the vacancy.

It was voted to re-elect the Field Secretary for another year, or until July 8, 1923.

Reports were read and approved, and much time was given to discussion of plans for future work.

If one can envisage the influence and meaning of a Buddhist temple upon the people of its community, he can grasp something of the task ahead for Christian missions in Japan from the fact that there are 80,000 such temples in that country. It will take a long-drawn-out campaign of sacrifice and service, both at home and abroad, for Christianity to make full conquest of that great nation. And yet there is no cause for discouragement when one remembers how much greater, at one time, were the odds against the Christian missionaries in Rome, in the forests of Germany, and in the English Isles—in all of which the Cross of Christ was gloriously victorious.—Exchange.

CHURCH NEWS

MEMORIAL DAY AT MOUNT BETHEL AND BEREA

On the third Sunday in May a large crowd of members and friends met at Mount Bethel for an all-day memorial service. The service was one of the best held in years at Mount Bethel.

The church has just been painted, and the many pretty flowers made the church look very beautiful for the services.

Both sermons were delivered by the pastor. The music was made the feature of the day. Friends from Reidsville assisted in the musical program.

Fathers, mothers, friends and loved ones met last Sunday at Berea to renew their humble tributes to those sleeping.

The service was made very personal; several friends and members took part in the service, making some very helpful remarks on memorial day. Rev. Frank Isley, in his sweet and pleasing way, gave some helpful thoughts preceding the morning sermon by the pastor.

Plans are being made for our revival meeting, beginning July 2.

Praying for the work, we are hoping to carry our part of the banner.

PLEASANT HILL—ALAMANCE

We had all-day services at Pleasant Hill yesterday. Dr. J. O. Atkinson preached in the afternoon. It was a strong and forceful message. The pastor preached at the morning hour. The audience was large and very attentive. The song service was excellent. In addition to the local choir, led by Brother D. H. Isley, there was present a quartet from Greensboro, consisting of Prof. E. C. Hamilton, Messrs. Fred and G. C. Swilling, formerly of Rome, Ga., and Wister E. Ruth. They sang several pieces which were much enjoyed.

The singing by the local choir and congregation was very good, and the trio by three of our Sunday school scholars, Madge Teague, Gertrude Jones and Alene Lasley, and the quartet by Pauline Carter, Hazel Lasley, Beatrice Lasley and Gertrude Thomas delighted the audience. From the church we went to the cemetery, led by Dr. J. O. Atkinson and Rev. Walker Fogleman. There Dr. Atkinson offered prayer and friends placed flowers upon the graves of the sleeping dead.

The claims of THE CHRISTIAN SUN were presented and Brother Paul E. Coble was named as the local representative to secure subscriptions and names of those desiring sample copies. As I think of the day now, it impresses me as a great and good day of Christian service.

CORRESPONDENCE

WHO NEEDS SUCH A MAN?

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

I wish you much success in your work as Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. If at any time I can be of help to you please let me know.

It must be a joy to you, notwithstanding the responsibilities, to take up again the editorial pen and serve in that field where you have served so well before.

I am very anxious to devote full time to the pulpit and the pastorate; but the way seems long in opening. I am asking that the Master's will be done. I am getting on well with my work, and it is a great field of service; but I want, if it is the Lord's will, to devote all my time to the pulpit, pastorate and pen. As it is now, I have church work and am Superintendent of Public Welfare for my county. The work is large and the field is great; but deep down in my heart, there is a longing for full time service in pulpit and pastorate.

P. H. FLEMING.

DECORATION DAY WITH MARINES IN HAITI

May 30 being an American national holiday, and set apart for memorials in honor of dead heroes, the First Brigade of the United States Marines in Haiti so observed it.

At Port au Prince, services were held as follows: At 9 a. m. several different organizations formed platoons at the Barracks, and, to the music of the band in the lead, marched to the cemetery where the bodies of five Marines lie at rest side by side. Arriving at the cemetery the troops were arranged in column formation facing the graves and the civilian attendance was gathered in silence close by. The Chaplain offered a prayer. This was followed by the Star Spangled Banner by the band, an address by Captain Fogg on the history of Decoration Day. The squad fired three volleys and the trumpeter sounded taps while everybody stood at attention. Three planes circled low over the cemetery and dropped flowers. It was a very impressive and fitting ceremony.

The five marines buried here were killed in action during the uprisings in 1915 and 1916. For necessary reasons their bodies could not be taken home at that time. It is understood that a movement is on foot now to locate their families and transfer their bodies to their homes.

The afternoon of our holiday was spent in celebrating on the Champ de Mars (park and ball field) by giving field events and a baseball game. Events consisted in the 100-yard dash, wheelbarrow race, 100-yard backward race, barrel boxing, tug of war; and the baseball game was between Headquarters Detachment and the Fourth Air Squadron. These sports were enjoyable. A gentle breeze fanned us and made the burning sun bearable. The day was well spent and served as quite a recreation to all.

CALLED HOME

HILL.—Jackson Farmer Hill was born September 6, 1857 and died May 21, 1922. Aged 64 years, 8 months, and 15 days. He was twice married. His first wife lived only a few years. He was then united in marriage to Miss Ella Reese, December 24, 1893. He leaves to mourn their loss his dear devoted companion and five children, viz: W. W. Hill, Girard, Ala.; Mrs. B. K. Ward, Girard, Ala.; E. E. Hill, Indian Harbor, Ind.; A. A. Hill, Girard, Ala.; and O. O. Hill, Girard, Ala.

He united with the church when he was quite a lad and was always faithful and loyal to his church. He contributed to its finances and labored earnestly for its success. There was not a person in the Christian Church who loved the Church more than Brother Hill loved it. He has been a member of the Georgia-Alabama Conference for 30 years. During this period he has served the Conference in the capacity of Secretary, with the exception of two years. He was Secretary of the Conference at the time of his death. He loved this work and made a fine Secretary. He was also Secretary-Treasurer of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Missionary Association. For about thirty years he was a deacon in the Beulah Christian Church and was ever interested in the welfare of his church and backed up the pastor in all of his worthy undertakings. He was also a Past Grand Master of the Odd Fellows fraternity and was held in high esteem by his brother Odd Fellows.

For many months he suffered great agony, but never murmured. He was patient in waiting for the will of God to be accomplished. His faith was unchangeable, his love for his home, his family, his church, and his God was abiding, and his character unimpeachable. Indeed a great man has fallen.

The funeral was conducted from his church by Rev. H. W. Elder, assisted by the writer and Rev. P. L. Duke. The interment was made in the Pine Grove cemetery with appropriate services by the Odd Fellows fraternity. May the lonely companion and the grief-stricken relatives look to Him who is able to heal broken hearts.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Mrs. Cordie Hornaday Harden

Whereas it has pleased our gracious Heavenly Father through his Divine providence to call from time into eternity and from the visible fellowship of the Graham Christian church, Mrs. Cordie H. Harden, to her eternal reward; Therefore be it Resolved; First: That we be perfectly resigned to the will of Him who does all things well—who has promised to care for husbands and children who put their trust in Him.

Second: That we have lost a good citizen, a friend to the needy, a conscientious, consecrated Christian and member of the Church, a devoted wife and mother worth of every ones imitation and respect.

Third: That we express our deepest sympathy to the members of the family who are left behind, and assure them that their grief is our grief and their loss our loss and will ever cherish in loving remembrance her faith, devotion and labors of love.

Fourth: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, sent to the local paper, The Christian Sun and spread on the church records.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—LEWIS

Resolutions adopted by the Philathea Class of the Suffolk Christian Church Sunday school on the death of Miss Mary Lewis.

“In the midst of life we are in death,” has again been taught us by the sudden departure of our beloved member, Miss Mary Lewis, who died on April 19, 1922.

Bowing submissively to the will of our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well, Therefore, be it Resolved by the Philathea class of the Suffolk Christian Church Sunday school as follows:

First:—That we as a class have sustained the loss of a faithful and loyal member.

Second:—That we extend our deepest sympathy to her family in their bereavement.

Third:—That these resolutions be recorded in our minutes, a copy sent to the family, and a copy sent to the Christian Sun for publication.

THOUGHTS ON THE HOME

THE HEART OF HOME

Oh, Home is a wonderful thing!
In all the world so wide
There's never a place
With half the grace
Of the spot where our own abide!
And always we see it clear,
Wherever we may roam,
For Home is the Heart
Of the world's great mart—
And love is the Heart of Home!

Oh, hard may the struggle be,
Against the wind and tide;
The waves may dash,
And the thunders crash,
As the world's rough sea we ride;
But ever we gain toward the shore
Where a light shines over the foam,
And Love's own strength
Shall win at length,
For love is the Heart of Home!

—Minnie Leona Upton.

It is possible to have a lovely home even in an unlovely house. To Adam Paradise was home: to the good among his descendants home is Paradise.—Hare.

Almost anyone can be courteous and forbearing and patient in a neighbor's house. If anything go wrong, or be out of time, or disagreeable there, it is made the best of, not the worst; even efforts are made to excuse it, and to show that it is not felt; or, if felt, it is attributed to accident, not design; and this is not only easy, but natural, in the house of a friend. I will not, therefore, believe that what is so natural in the house of another is impossible at home; but maintain, without fear, that all the courtesies of social life may be upheld in domestic societies.—Ibid.

A cottage will not hold the bulky furniture and sumptuous accommodations of a mansion; but if God be there, a cottage will hold as much happiness as might stock a palace.—Dr. J. Hamilton.

As long as our Christian life consists simply in outward appearances, our homes will see our worst side; when our lives are an expression of the indwelling Christ, our homes will see our best side.—Laura Moore.

Have you ever placed a single drop of ink in a glass of clear water? Then you know how that one drop pollutes the whole glassful. Have you ever seen how one angry word spoken in the home at the beginning of the day can poison and ruin the peace of the family for that whole day?—Henry Park Schaffler.

It is just as easy to keep a calm house as a clean house; a cheerful house, an orderly house, as a furnished house, if the heads set themselves to do so. Where is the difficulty of consulting each other's weakness, as well as each other's wants; each other's tempers, as well as each other's health; each other's comfort, as well as each other's character? Oh! it is by leaving the peace at home to chance, instead of pursuing it by system, that so many homes are unhappy.—Phillip.

A late writer says, “I am one of those whose lot in life has been to go out into an unfriendly world at an early age; and of nearly twenty families in which I made my home in the course of about nine years, there were only three that could be designated as happy families. The source of the trouble was not so much lack of love, as the lack of care to manifest it.” It is in the discharge of the quiet duties of the family, in the unostentatious charities, and the unromantic heroisms of the home, in the trifling services rendered almost without thought and received almost without recognition, that most of us have to do the will of God.—R. W. Dale.

Not one of us can determine into what home he shall be born. There are two determinations we can make, however. (1) We can determine how we shall conduct ourselves in the home. By being loving and loyal, forgiving and thoughtful, unselfish and helpful, we can have much to do with making it an ideal home. (2) And we can also determine what kind of a home we ourselves shall establish in later years. We can cultivate ideals about that home, and when it comes to the choosing of a life companion we can seek for one who is worthy of those ideals, and who will help to make it a Christian home.—Jason Noble Pierce.

CRUSADING IN THE WEST INDIES

I have read with a deepening sense of our opportunity and of our obligation Rev. W. F. Jordan's book, "Crusading in the West Indies." It is a well-conceived and sensible book, based on twelve years' experience in the countries to the south of us, and sympathetic with those countries.

It is characteristic of the man that he finds in these neighbors of ours many admirable traits and qualities. Being a lover of men at heart and believing in the efficacy of good literature, the Bible first of all, to uplift and inspire to noble endeavor, Mr. Jordan has really written a spiritual autobiography of his experiences as missionary and representative of the American Bible Society.

The book is suited to delightful personal reading and also for mission study groups. I hope it may have a large distribution and await with keen anticipation its companion volume, "Crusading in Indian America," soon to be printed by the Fleming H. Revell Co., who have printed this charming book. The price is $1.75 net. W. A. HARPER.

NOT all of prayer is petition or asking; much of prayer should be that of praise and thanksgiving. We must also realize that though God knows our needs before we ask Him, we have been taught from the Word to ask and it shall be given. Every good gift is from above and cometh down from the Father; some of these gifts which are essential to the continued physical existence are supplied in abundance, as air, sunshine and water. But many of these gifts are to be had only by paying the price. They are abundantly available but only receivable by paying the price for them, which is in the reach of all. The price is simply the asking, which shows that, at least, they are desired, appreciated, and valued.

There is an abundance of free literature of high type today, and the donors know that the people have need of this literature before they ask for it, yet its distribution is restricted to those who do ask for it. God knows that the sinner has need of the pardon of his sins before he asks for it, yet pardon is not granted till it is sought and asked for. It is not divine economy any more than it is human economy to bestow precious gifts where they will be trodden under foot. Neither does all benefit come from answered prayer, for much strength and courage is received from the seeking and asking.

Every heart has burdens and sorrows and secrets of the inner life that it cannot whisper into the human ear, but it brings a comfort and a joy to talk them over with Him who knows all, even before we tell Him. Not that our Heavenly Father needs the information, but that we need the comfort and strength and joy that comes from the experience—"Jesus and I talked them o'er." We need to pray for our own good.

NOTES

Honorable William Jennings Bryan has been elected president of the National Evangelistic Committee, and will visit most of the big cities of this country and speak, seeking to awaken an interest in the work of that committee. Mr. Bryan has had great success in speaking as a statesman, and we wish for him even greater success in speaking as a Christian worker.

Rev. J. M. Roberts, pastor of the church at Isle of Wight Court House, in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, along with a number of other churches, is pronounced a good preacher. We do not see why he may not be released from the farm and given all-time preaching, not only on Sunday, but for his whole time. Try him and see if you do not get help from his preaching.

We wish to express our high appreciation of the many good words of approval of our relationship to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Your good words of high regard help in a difficult task. May we ask that your good words be now supplemented by your prayers, that we may rightly and wisely sense the real spiritual needs of the people and may do our best to serve these needs and then have the courage and wisdom to do the things which may be pleasing to the Lord our God.

Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., Burlington, N. C., is a busy man, serving as pastor and then as the Welfare Officer of Alamance County. No doubt he loves the work of looking after the welfare of the people of his county, but we are quite sure he would like it better if he could give his whole time to the direct work of the church. If you wish to test what we say about this matter, then give him a call to a field which will command all of his time and energies, and see what will happen.

Be sure to read the announcement in this issue from Doctor Walters concerning the Chautauqua. It is to be moved this summer from Ocean View to Elon College, where it is expected that a large number of our people will be in attendance. Let it have your special attention.

Who are the Fundamentalists of whom so much is being said in the papers nowadays? They are such men as Rev. W. B. Riley, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist church of Minneapolis; Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D., Philadelphia; Charles G. Trumbull, of the same city, who is editor of the Sunday School Times; Rev. J. C. Masee, D. D., pastor of the Tremont Temple (Baptist), Boston; Rev. A. B. Winchester, D. D., pastor of Knox Presbyterian church, Toronto; Rev. Cortland Myers, D. D., of Boston, and many others in different parts of the country. As may be easily seen, these are leading men from the various denominations. They have banded themselves together in defense of the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith. But keep yourself posted as to what they are doing.

Rev. M. W. Butler, so well known in the South as one of our hard working pastors, is now pastor of the First Christian church at Muncie, Ind. He has been there for a year or two and is actively engaged in a long and a strong pull to bring that church to its best. His many friends will be glad to know that he is so well and so actively engaged in the Master's work.

Rev. Prof. W. C. Wicker, D. D., of the Chair of Education in Elon College, says he has not missed a single class recitation in (if we mistake not) nineteen years on account of sickness. That is a fine record, both for his health and his relation to the college. It is indeed an enviable record, and we wish he may be able to maintain it for nineteen more years and then some.

* * *

President Harper is laying himself out for a summer of hard work for Elon College, and he needs the help of our pastors and all Christian workers. Will you not lend a hand, and do it promptly, that this good work may get the support of the public and especially of our church in your community. You may hesitate, but you need not—only put your hand to the plow and do not turn back, but go forward, and as you go, talk of Elon and its work.

* * *

Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., is a preacher of unusual ability. He is well qualified, not only by his educational advantages (he is an honor graduate of both Elon College and the University of North Carolina) but he has had fine advantages in the actual work of a pastor, in both city and country work. If you are looking around for a pastor, send for him and hear him preach the Word, and we believe you will desire to call him from his present field in Dendron, Va. His wife is a sister of Rev. D. P. Barrett, Ponce, Porto Rico, and a good and practical church worker.

* * *

We hear a good deal of Judge J. F. West, of Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, and of C. D. West—they are highly esteemed by our people, and rightly so; but it may be well to know that these are not all of the "West boys." Oh, no! There are two others who are not so much before the public as those named above, but they are solid and highly useful characters in their spheres. They are Robert T. West and John W. West, both of Waverly, Va., and they are like their worthy brothers in the church—they are just as dependable and as true as steel to the work of the church. We have known them all since they were children, and we have known them to love and honor them, every one of them, including an only sister, Mrs. Watson, since the days of their childhood. They had a good beginning, for their father and mother were of the cream of human society. It must be a matter of supreme joy to parents to look down from their heavenly home and see that of a large family of children left here, every one of them has been true to the teachings of the now sainted father and mother, the late Brother and Sister H. T. West. God bless their memory! They were noble souls and friends as true as steel.

IS A DOCTRINAL STORM COMING?

NOT coming, but already here. That is the way we see it, but lest some of our readers should think that it is only raging in our brain, we will show it otherwise. For a number of years many leading men in the several denominations have been apparently drifting from the faith of their fathers under what is known as the new theology. The drift has been so strong that a number of the conservatives have gotten together to see what they can do to stem the tide of Radicalism, as it is now presenting itself in the church. They have organized for the purpose of counteracting the work of these Radicals. A body known as Fundamentalists has been formed and they are making a noble fight for the preservation of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, and strange to say, the Radicals are taking exceptions at this act, and they are beginning a great battle against the Fundamentalists. The stir is shaking the various denominations. Of course something will come out of it—it always does when there are strong men and women behind the work, and that is true in this case—strong men and women are marshalling their forces for the fray.

As a rule the religious papers are taking sides, either with the Radicals or with the Fundamentalists, and the end is not yet. Indeed, the end cannot come till something happens. The church itself must get a new grip on its own life and must come to show that it is serving the Lord more acceptably under the one or the other of these parties. It really looks as if it has gone about as far as it well can go under the lead of the Radicals. Now, if the Fundamentalists can bring the church back to its old stand for truth and righteousness, then that will tell a mighty story in behalf of their cause. We believe this is the only way we can establish the fact that the Radicals are out of the truth line and that the Fundamentalists are right. When their seed-sowing shall bring a harvest and sweep the church back to its old foundations, then we think it will be time for the Radicals to drop their colors and get back into the right line.

There can be no doubt, we think, that recent years have witnessed a great upheaval in doctrinal matters, and many have gone far astray from the old paths—they seem to have gotten outside of the old bulwarks of truth. The drift has been large and heavy. Now the day has come when it must subside or it will go on to the hindering of the present life of the church. This must not be, and so of necessity there must be a break somewhere, and we believe the break is coming with the Radicals—error always must in the end do the breaking, as fundamentals cannot break because they are of God—that is, insofar as they are real fundamentals. God is the strength of doctrines which are fundamental, and therefore error cannot break them.

The Christian Register (Boston, Unitarian), sees ahead of us great dangers in the way of these Fundamentalists. Because the Fundamentalists stand for the inerrancy of the Bible, the Second Coming of Christ, the Supernatural Birth of Christ, the Vicarious Atonement, and the Bodily Resurrection of Christ, they see danger ahead. These are the five strong points the Fundamentalists are emphasizing and standing for, and we could wish they may stand till the end. If these great doctrines of the Christian Faith are to be surrendered in order to satisfy the Radicals, we may as well surrender everything the Church of Christ has taught and held dear in the past, for if the inerrancy of the Bible, the Second Coming of Christ, the Supernatural Birth of Jesus, the Vicarious Atonement, and the Bodily Resurrection of Christ be lost to the church, then for what shall the church stand? It is high time, as it seems to us, that the people who hold to the Christian faith were on the alert to save the fundamentals of Christianity to the church.

A new day is dawning. The men who are holding the vitals of Bible Christianity are just beginning to fully awake to the situation now confronting them. They see, as many have seen for years, that the modernist, or, as we have called them in this article, the Radicals, are practically trying to sweep these columnar truths of Christianity into oblivion, but the Fundamentalists, as they get aroused over this situation, are organizing to resist this awful work that is being done in the name of scholarship. We have great respect for scholarship, when it respects itself, but when it loses its sense of self-respect and plunges headlong into infidelity, then it is high time that this class of scholarship should be made to feel its own littleness and find its place outside of the pale of the Christian faith. The issue is confronting the church today in such boldness as was perhaps never known since Christ came and died for our sins. It therefore becomes every lover of Bible Christianity to awake and get to his post of duty to resist this effort to break down the stronghold of truth. Let prayer be offered for divine guidance in resisting this onrush of error.

THE GROWTH OF THE CHURCH AS A WHOLE

THE Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America gives out to the public a very remarkable report of the Church in America, as a whole, as to her gains during the last five years. It claims that every day during the last five years the various church bodies have gained, in the aggregate, 2,173 members; they have averaged the establishment of three congregations daily for the same time; that an average of four and one-half persons have been added to the ministry per day for the same years.

The total membership of all of the churches in America at the time of making the last estimate, or rather, compilation of figures, is 45,997,199, making an increase over the year 1916 of 4,070,345, indicating a clear gain of over 1,000,000 members during the last twelve months. Of the 45,997,199 church members, the Roman Catholics have 17,885,646, but that includes the entire Catholic population, including all baptized persons in the Catholic Church, whereas Protestant bodies count only actual communicants.

The thirty bodies composing the Federal Council of Churches have 19,933,115 members. They have 142,472 congregations, with 113,761 ministers. Their gain in membership during the last five years is 1,245,395. The total constituency of the bodies composing the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is 55,812,722, and that makes a gain over the 1916 census figures of 3,448,618.

For the first time the Baptist churches go ahead of the Methodist in total membership. They now have 7,885,250, as against the Methodist membership of 7,707,991. The Lutheran bodies stand third with a membership of 2,466,645, and the Presbyterians stand fourth with a membership of 2,384,683. That is a brief but comprehensive presentation of the present state of these denominations in the United States. Of course, there are many denominations not included in this last paragraph. However, in the second paragraph above all the denominations, as we understand it, are included.

POISONS FOR CHILDHOOD

IT is a fine thing to live in the greatest day in the world's history—a privilege which none of us perhaps would willingly exchange for some day having less advantages, and yet the berry bush has its thorns which make gathering the berry hazardous for the hand. It is even so in the day of the greatest civilization the world has seen. We have reached a high state of progress in the affairs of men, but like the berry tree, our present civilization has its thorns and they strike at the very centers of our modern life. The scratch of the thorn may be annoying only for a little while, but not so with the thorns of modern civilization—they prick the vitals of modern life and leave a blighting effect, perhaps for generations yet to come. With such a situation confronting human society to-day, we need to "sit up and take notice," and if by any means in our reach we may be able, we ought to see that this moral poison is removed.

The masses of children today are left exposed to certain evils which, in some measure at least, grow out of the complex conditions of modern society. A great portion of the children of our American homes are today reared in the very stench of an evil atmosphere, so that it is practically impossible for the average child, without special help, to come to manhood and womanhood with anything like a strong and healthy environment. Our cities and especially certain streets are packed with humanity, and in this packing house of poison and filth, the dear children are compelled to push their way to the adult age, not even having a chance to get the help of good literature to add, if possible, a bit of uplift to their heavily burdened conditions.

Take a child in a city home. He may not be deprived of literature to such an extent as are many in our country places, but the literature he gets is often much more harmful than none would be. If he has any books at all, they are not likely to be of a kind that will lift him in the moral scale of human life. If he has a book at all, it is more likely to be a dime novel than otherwise, and if he has no book at all, he will likely pick up, or have one thrust upon him in the home, papers which have no moral worth, but quite the contrary, often what he reads will be reeking with moral poison, so adding nothing whatever to the purity of his life, but quite the contrary, a positive hindrance to the development of the life that ought to be helped to come to its best in young manhood, or in young womanhood. While these conditions prevail more largely in city life, they prevail all too largely in the homes of our country people. Reading these dime novels and other kinds of literature no better, the average child has a poor chance to develop, except in a downward way.

It is true that our country and city boys and girls have the help of our public schools, but are they always helps to moral development? It is indeed very doubtful, since many of the public school leaders seem to have a thought that the chief work of the public school is to open their doors to almost everything that comes along, at least in a large degree. First, some one has conceived the idea that the dance makes children graceful, and therefore, the dance must have a place in public school education. Then if anything could make it worse, it seems to be a fact that nothing could come nearer to serving the evil purposes of lower ideals than the fact that the authorities in many instances have removed the Bible from the public schools. They have made it an offense to read, or to teach, the Bible in the public schools. Thus they not only crowd the school with things which tend to drop the moral standing low, but they remove the one great moral bar to the introduction of these evils, and of course the last state of the public school children has a chance to be much worse than the first. We are told by the Boston Evening Transcript that the histories which our youth are studying are devoted in a far too great an extent to the record of crimes of public characters in past ages. This of course but adds to the dreadful situation now confronting our American children. Every drop of this kind of moral poison makes it yet more difficult for the teacher with good intentions and high moral purposes to accomplish anything in the way of permanent good for the children.

Beyond all question, our children are the hope of the future of our country, and every time we allow childhood to be thus tampered with by the introduction of evil to their pathway, by so much are we making it harder for the future to withstand the oncoming rush of evil to which unprotected youth are so easily exposed, and if possible, more easily damaged in real character. Children should be fed morally, as well as intellectually and physically, on the best food obtainable, but there are many who seem to think never a moment of this great and pressing need of the boys and girls who are to constitute the moral stamina of the next generation. It should be the highest aim of parent, teacher and friend of our boys and girls to keep out of their reach all sorts of moral poison, and when a public school helps to feed the boys and girls in its care on these common poisons in human society, well, at least better teachers should be secured, those of high moral ideals.

SUFFOLK LETTER

UPERSTITION is an unreasoning belief, but facts are stubborn things. That the 13th is unlucky is of the nature of superstition; but two historic facts disprove the claim. This country was composed of thirteen original colonies, and yet it has grown into the greatest nation. That is the first fact. Yesterday, June 13, four preachers had the time of their life at "Jack's Camp." That is the second fact. Therefore, the 13th as unlucky is a fallacy and the old superstition is untrue. But the fact is larger than stated above, and would not be understood without elaboration. The reader does not even know about "Jack's Camp" without explanation. Well, "Jack's Camp" is a place in the woods, beside a pond, in Isle of Wight County, Virginia, near Zuni, on the Norfolk and Western Railroad which crosses the Blackwater river at that point. It is the property of J. M. Darden, better known as "Jack." This man was the first to give a $5,000 check to missions in 1918. Mr. Darden has a neat house with a stove and six cots, a kitchen with oil stove, a garden, little orchard, a splendid artesian spring of good water, and the heart of a natural and well trained host. Here is where he goes for rest and recreation from a strenuous business life; and here he entertains his friends with country hospitality. It is shut in from the bustle of the city, the dissipation of fashionable resorts, and the irritation of office life. It was to this haven that "Jack" invited Doctors J. O. Atkinson, C. H. Rowland, I. W. Johnson, and this pencil-pusher, to spend the 13th of June mentioned above. They accepted. Dr. Atkinson had lectured for Pastor Fuller and his people the night before at Ivor on his trip to Porto Rico; and Dr. Johnson and I left Suffolk in his Ford at six o'clock a. m. and reached the camp at 7:15. We found Dr. Atkinson rowing a boat in which Dr. Rowland stood erect, now very much improved in health, casting his minnow for bass; and "Jack" held up a big one and said: "See what Rowland caught." Those who know Dr. Johnson can see how quick he and I were in a boat, lines unwound, and paddles splashing toward the deep. When the call came for breakfast we were soon in the kitchen by the table loaded with a good breakfast, fish piled upon fish, and the reader can imagine what followed. To say all in a word, the day was spent on the water, on the cots, and by that table where Frank and Grace served; and Jesus makes it plain that the highest thing in life is to serve. The kitchen is too often forgotten in the dining room, but in this case kitchen and dining room were one—sure enough old country style.

A more agreeable group could hardly be found, and a better day for recreation could hardly be planned. The day was ideal, the host was unrivalled, the hospitality was Christian, and the guests were unanimous in grateful appreciation. It was a day of ministerial association in God's own forest, with man's added welcome and provision, and all apostolic in love for the lake. They fished "all day" and took something, and therefore beat those who "toiled all night and had taken nothing." If ministers could be together more, apart from the human world that weighs upon their being like children upon a mother, it would create a fellowship and unity of spirit and judgment that would shorten and sweeten many a conference discussion. Such a day is recreation, not dissipation. There is nothing coarse or unclean in such a day. After such a day sleep is sweeter, digestion is better, mind is clearer, and work is a delight. What this busy age needs is recreation, I had almost said mental regeneration. Violin strings must relax or lose their resonance; man needs relaxation as much as violin strings, and "Jack" Darden gave it to us.

ELON LETTER

HAD occasion last August to speak appreciatively in this weekly letter of the support the Burlington News, Mr. O. F. Crowson, Editor, was giving Elon. Mr. Crowson last summer secured letters from some two dozen leading citizens of Alamance County, praising Elon in highest terms.

Since then Mr. Crowson has begun to publish, in addition to his long-established semi-weekly, the Burlington Daily News. In the issue of Tuesday, June 6, of this growing paper, the following editorial appeared:

"GOING TO COLLEGE?"

"We hope so. The only way to build up our County is to increase the general intelligence of our people. More than one hundred boys and girls from our best homes have finished our various high schools this year. We hope every one of them will go to college. It is the logical and sensible thing to do.

"Out of every one thousand of our population, only 111 finish high school. Thirty-eight of these enter college and fourteen graduate. Only 1.4% of our population is college bred, but this small percentage supplies more than 90% of our leadership. One man in 10,000 without a college education gets in Who's Who, but one college man in forty appears there. A college education, in other words, multiplies life's chances of permanent achievement 250 fold. We submit there is no better thing for the parents of these Alamance County high school graduates to do than to send the boys and girls to college—send them no matter what the cost may be, no matter what sacrifice it may entail. Give the boys and girls a chance.

"And we want to advise one other thing: Give the college right at our door every consideration in deciding where to send the boys and girls. Elon College is an A-grade college, so rated by the State Department of Public Instruction. Many of our leading citizens in all the walks of life received their education there. There is no better college. And remember when you build up Elon College you build up Alamance County, the county where we live and which we hope shall lead the whole list of North Carolina counties not only alphabetically, but in every other way."

This kindness on the part of our county's only daily newspaper, the editor a leading layman in the M. E. Church, is highly significant of the estimate Alamance County, irrespective of denomination, places on Elon College. To one acquainted with the leadership of this county, the persons who attended our recent Commencement speak volumes for the recognition of Elon as a community force.

Beloved, if our friends appreciate us in this signal way, how should we bestir ourselves to continue to merit so high an opinion of our place and worth? Let us thank God, take courage, and press on to better things.

We are grateful, Brother Crowson, and kind Alamance friends. Elon is with you, shoulder to shoulder, to put Alamance County where your vision thinks she should be—first in the alphabet of North Carolina counties and first also in moral and spiritual leadership for the state.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT OF HAITI

MAY 15, 1922, was an epoch-making day in the history of Haiti, in that the new president of the republic assumed his duties with inaugural formalities. Hitherto the presidents of Haiti have left the palace informally, with terms unexpired. Their passing out was due to revolutions or interior dissatisfactions of certain classes. Some abdicated, some were kidnapped, and some were murdered. One went up with an explosion that carried away the palace. Never before in the history of the republic has a change of presidents been made in peace and tranquility, with such formalities and amidst such popular applause.

The day was made a big holiday. Everybody "knocked off," closed up and turned out. The parks, streets, and every available space in close juxtaposition to the palace was a seething mass of black humanity, vehicles and horses. The palace was elaborately decorated and adorned with flying flags and flowing furbelows. The Gendarmerie (Haitian Army) within the gates presented arms in spectacular array. A company of two platoons of the United States Marines presented without the gates and looked rather ominous in the background. Several thousand of people—a living stream—poured into and out of the palace portals to bid the retiring president adieu and the incoming one God's speed. By noon the entire celebration was over and everything settled down, apparently, to normal conditions. The brevity of it all was refreshing. The sun was hot and conditions were sweltering. But for reasons more expedient, perhaps, to the two presidents and their retinue, brevity was wisdom and would probably preclude further anxiety.

The president-elect, Monsieur Borno, first went to the cathedral, where prayers were said for him and his administration (a comendable precedent). Thence, in the presidential carriage, drawn by two fine steeds, preceded by his heralds on foaming chargers and the mounted guard, accompanied on either side by his escort, and followed by the Haitian Army in march formation, he proceeded to the palace, where, with formalities and expedition, he was invested with the authority of President of the Republic of Haiti. The retiring president, Dartignave, wished him God's speed, stepped into an auto, and was rushed to the dock, where he boarded a United States vessel awaiting him and was soon on his way joyfully to his old home in the southern part of the island. The official function of this transfer did not take longer than twenty minutes, perhaps. All salutes were presented with the firing of twenty-one guns, presenting of arms and playing the national airs. Thus a new period in the history of Haiti was begun.

Dartignave is the first of the Haitian presidents to complete his term of office. Every one seems satisfied that it should be so, and there seems to be complete harmony among the people with the present administration. It is hoped that all his successors may be so honored. It portends better conditions among the people of the republic, and speaks well of the value of American service with this government.

SUBMISSION TO GOD'S WILL

Lord, do with me as Thou wilt that the people may come to know Jesus. As I sit in my study tonight and think how deceiving the devil is, and how, through deceiving, he overcomes the people, because, somehow, they do not know how to trust Jesus, I feel that I would like to rush out and tell the people everywhere of Jesus' power to save.

I am fully convinced that the devil was never more deceiving than to-day. Therefore the world was never in greater need of real gospel preaching than now. The spirit of abuse is not needed, but the spirit of love. With Jesus and Him crucified plainly preached as the only hope of salvation, the mists of sin may be removed and the freedom of life in Christ be given to the needy.

From the felt day I felt called to preach, I was impressed that God will thrust me out into the revival work. I have never felt any other way, and yet I realize that I am now getting some of the best training I have yet received. I am learning something of the pastor's problems. I do not feel that any one would be justified in undertaking the evangelistic work till he knows something of the pastor's problems.

To-night I am saying to the Master: Lord, do with me as Thou wilt, only let me help to make known to the people what a wonderful Savior Jesus is.

Brother ministers, may God help us to hold up Jesus to a lost world very plainly in all of our teaching and preaching. If we fail to do our part God will hold us responsible, the people will be lost, and in the Day of Judgment they will cry out against our unfaithfulness. But if we do our part, we shall hear the welcome words: "Well done, good and faithful servant." Let us be faithful.

THE CHURCH

By Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, Pastor Second Christian Church
Portsmouth, Virginia

THE Day of Pentecost was the birthday of the Christian Church before they had been individual followers of Jesus. Now they became His mystical Body, filled with and enlivened by the Holy Spirit. On the evening of the Day of Pentecost the over three thousand members of which the Church consisted were: (1) Apostles; (2) Previous Disciples; (3) Converts. In Acts 2:41 we have indirectly exhibited the essential conditions of the church communion. They are: (1) Baptism—baptism implying on the part of the recipient, repentance and faith; (2) Apostolic doctrine; (3) Fellowship with the Apostles; (4) the Lord's Supper; (5) Public worship.

The real Church consists of all who belong to the Lord Jesus Christ as His disciples, and are one in love, in character, in spirit. Christ is the Head of all, though as the Body of Christ it consists of many parts or members. As we study further on the subject, let us search the Scriptures, that we may see what they say. Ephesians 1:22: "And hath put all things under His feet, and gave Him to be the Head over all things to the church." Colossians 1:18: "And He is the Head of the Body, the Church, who is the beginning the first-born from the dead, that in all things He might have the pre-eminence." Dear friends, I feel that we have looked at (or some of us at least) the house to which we went as the church. But according to Scripture, this is not the church, but only a place we meet to worship. We may build a house to cost a million dollars, or with a steeple a thousand feet high, and fill it with people; but if the worshipers had not been born of the Spirit, and the Spirit of Christ did not reign in their hearts, and He was not the Head of the Body, it would be no nearer a church than any other club or organization. There are many churches today that are very little more than a club or society, because Jesus Christ has not been given the right-of-way, because He has not been made the Head, and His Spirit does not rule and reign in the hearts of the people. Many churches think that if they have raised a large amount of money, kept up in attendance, built a new house, or have the necessary organizations, that they are on safe ground. But we may have all of these things and then be like the church at Laodicea which had much riches and thought she lacked for nothing, but God knew her troubles and said that He would spue her out of His mouth. May the Holy Spirit help us to know if we are to be a member of Christ's church, we must be made a new creature in Christ Jesus, and that the true church is a body of believers saved by the shed blood of Jesus Christ. May God help us to see, as never before, what it means to be a member of this church, with Christ as its Head and the only door through which we can enter.

The church is the Body of Christ. "Now are ye the body of Christ and members in particular"—1 Corinthians 12:27. Every believer is a member of Christ's body and as such has a definite ministry. 1 Corinthians 12:12: "For as the body is one and has many members and all members of the same body being many are one body, so also is Christ." 1 Corinthians 12:13: "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free, and have been all made to drink into one Spirit." 1 Corinthians 12:14: "For the body is not one member but many." We are many members of different gifts and talents, but the same Spirit. Some one has said that we find no two people alike, and we are different in looks and actions, size and shape, and have different gifts and talents, but the same Spirit. Romans 8:9: "He that hath not the Spirit of Christ is none of His."

Every one that has been born into the Kingdom and become a member of the body of Christ, which is the true church, has that same Spirit of love, mercy, meekness, humbleness, kindness, forgiveness, and lives a real life of helpfulness to others; in short, is a new creature, old things of self have passed away. 2 Corinthians 5:17: "Therefore if any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature, old things are passed away; and, behold, all things become new." Galatians 6:15: "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision availeth anything but a new creature." Colossians 1:13: "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness and has translated us into the kingdom of His dear Son, Christ, exalted to be the Head of His body, the church." Ephesians 1:22, 23: "And hath put all things under His feet and gave Him to be Head over all things to the church which is His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." The New Testament speaks sometimes of the church, sometimes of the churches, sometimes of a church. There is only one true Church, but there are local churches in different localities to suit the convenience of the people. In these local churches there are members of different gifts, talents, and capacities; as in 1 Corinthians 12:4, 5: "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit, and there are different administrations, but the same Lord." We are taught in the Word of God that where one member suffers, all members suffer. Let each one of us ask ourselves the question whether or not we as professed members of the body of Christ are living such lives as to keep this body pure and holy, that it should be a body of people with Christ as its Head, be a light to those who see it. I do not understand how the standard of the church and its membership was ever brought so low, when we have had God's Word to go to as a guide. The desire and prayer of my life is that the church of Jesus Christ should come to its own in Jesus' name as a body of followers bound together by His Spirit with Him as its Head. For I know then that it would be a mighty power. Christ said that we should be as a light set on a hill. The church should be a great lighthouse, and every member should be a light as he moves about in this world of sin; a light to light men to Jesus. You may go on the rocky coast and you will see lighthouses here and there. But in addition to that, you will see all along the way little lights giving out their lights to the passing ships. What if these smaller lights should fail to give out their lights, the ships would lose their way and be dashed to pieces on the rocks. When my wife and I were on a ship going from Washington to Norfolk one night last summer, as we were out on deck I saw many of these little lights, and I was very much impressed with their importance, and I was impressed really as never before with the importance of each one of Christ's followers having his life fully surrendered to Jesus, that his light might be giving out light to light men to the true Light.

Each one has his part in this body of Christ—church—and when we fail to be governed by the Head the whole body will suffer, and some one will fail to see the light. Friends, there is a longing and emptiness in the human heart today for something they have not, as never before. And many do not know just what it is. They have tried to find it in money, education, society, amusement, all kinds of worldly pleasures and secret orders, and some even church service, work and organization, but if you have not surrendered to Jesus Christ you have not found pardon, peace or joy. We have been looking at one another and not at Jesus. We have been looking to works and not Jesus. We have been looking at the failures of men and not at Jesus. Not at Jesus who has never lost a patient that trusted Him. We have been looking at the church and been discouraged at its failures to meet the need and fulfill the promise of Christ to bear much fruit. You say, Has not the church been a light and borne much fruit? Yes, but far too dim a light and too little fruit. You can no longer trust the teaching that goes on inside a building because it has a steeple on it and is called a church. Every church should be a great lighthouse in the community in which it is located, and a great soul-saving power in the name of Jesus, going out in His name to rescue men from sin in His name. Many of the so-called churches have not rescued a soul in a whole year, and some even in years. Still we pray, "Thy kingdom come," without putting forth any effort to bring it about even in our own lives. Why? Simply because we have failed to trust, obey and follow the teaching of Jesus Christ who is the Head of the true church. For an individual to be identified with this church should be sufficient guarantee for him to be trusted. To do the right thing under all conditions and matters of business, and to take the right stand against all kinds of amusements and all moral questions. Not only one that can be trusted in business and on the moral questions in life, but one that is continually trying to lead others to Christ by his example and teaching. The church has the command to go preach the gospel, but after over nineteen hundred years what have we done, and oh, how we have failed in the task, not because the provision for the redemption of man is not sufficient in Jesus and not because we have not the men and means, but because we have not followed the instructions of our Lord and Master. In thirty-one days in the time of the late war there was more money spent for war purposes than had been spent in one hundred and fifty years for the spread of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Why have we failed? Because we are cut off from the power that sustains us, trying to do things in our own way. Those little lights along the rocky coast could not survive within themselves. There was a great power house somewhere back of them, and if they had been cut off from the power supply, they would have failed to give out their light. Here lies our trouble. John 15:4: "As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine, I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered, and men gather them and cast them into the fire and they are burned."

The conclusion: Friends, I have just started on this subject. There is so much that might be said, and truly said, but at the close I am glad that I came come to you with a message of hope, for I myself love the true church with my whole heart, soul, and mind, and I feel that you really love it also. And I am glad that our Captain or Leader, Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, still lives today and has lost none of His power. That as He defeated Satan in the wilderness and caused him to walk away in shame, so He can defeat him today and give us victory. That, as in Heb. 7:25, "He is able to save to the uttermost." There is not a backslider nor an unconverted man He cannot save, if he or she will believe and trust in Him. There is not a dead church He cannot revive, and make a great soul-saving organization, if its members will give Him His rightful place.

His instructions are plain and simple in Matthew 4:19, when He called His first disciples. His very simple instruction were to "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." May God send the Holy Spirit to help us hear and accept this call today to become a member of this body, with Christ as its head. My friends, the door is thrown wide open today, but there is only one door and that is through faith exercised in Jesus Christ. Then we become members of this body and real branches in the true vine, and will bear much fruit. We will be one in spirit, hope, and love. This is the only church that will endure to the end. Matthew 15:18. This church is built on the solid rock, Jesus Christ, and all the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Nothing can altogether overthrow and destroy it. Its members may be oppressed, imprisoned, beaten, beheaded, burned, but the true church is never altogether extinguished. It rises again from its afflictions; it lives on; when crushed in one land it springs up in another. The Pharaohs and Herods and Neros and thousands of others have labored to put down this church and slay many and then go to their place, but the true church outlives them all. This is the church that will stand the test and will be glorified in the end.

Friends, this is the church to which a man must belong if he would be saved. We may join this church or that, take the communion, pay our bills, and have many outward forms, but if we have not become a member of this true church by exercising faith in Christ Jesus, we are only a lost soul today. But I am so glad that I can stand before you with a wide open door, for Jesus said, "Whosoever will may come and I will in no wise cast out." The believer's security—Matthew 28:20. Jesus said, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Romans 8:35-39: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, of famine, or nakedness, or peril or sword? As it is written, for Thy sake we are killed all the day long. We are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Dear friends, may God help us that we may enter through this open door and become a member of this true church which is the body of Christ and He the Head of this body, and that He may use us to extend this invitation to a sin-sick world that they may know of a Savior's love Who has paid the price for the redemption of our souls and has gone to prepare a place for us, and will come again to receive His own to Himself.

THE BETHLEHEM DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

And they helped every one his neighbor,

And every one said unto his brother,

Be of good cheer!—Isaiah 41:6.

This motto of the Daily Vacation Bible School held for two weeks in the Bethlehem (Virginia Valley Central Conference) church, expressed the underlying spirit of the whole school. The school opened on May 22, with an enrollment of thirty-eight, and during the session eighteen more boys and girls were enrolled. Twenty-eight of the number did not miss a session during the whole time that the school was held. Each day for two and a half hours, from 9 to 11:30 a. m., the children met, and played, studied and worshiped together. The school opened with a period of worship in which even the smallest child could take some part. New songs and Scripture passages were memorized. Good citizenship was taught in the salutes to the American and the Christian flags. Each morning the children made an offering to the work among the children of the mountains as carried on by Miss Hedgepeth. Following the opening service, there was the period for Bible study, a recreational period, and then a time devoted to hand-work. This hand-work was connected with the Bible story of the day. Also the older boys and girls made a number of toys to be sent to the mountain children. A missionary story and the closing service ended the morning, and the children marched out with happy faces eager for the next day to come. Many expressed the wish that the school could keep on throughout the summer, and all seemed to be looking forward to next year's session already.

The Field Secretary had the privilege and pleasure of being present for the first four days. And it was a pleasure indeed to work with teachers like we had in this school. All of them were busy women, with much to occupy them at home, but all four of them were there every morning because of their very great interest in the work. To Mrs. R. C. Myers, Mrs. D. H. Welch, Mrs. Martha Driver and Miss Ella Pickering should be given the credit for the good work accomplished. They report a good program rendered at the Sunday school the Sunday following the close of the school. To estimate adequately the results of such a school is impossible, but to show something of the immediate benefits seen, we quote from a letter received from one of the teachers:

"Our school has created lots of interest among our people here. After our program we had a very enthusiastic discussion about it and the school. And best of all is the good it has done our Sunday school. We had 110 present last Sunday. We have divided into two classes, and we surely need our Sunday school rooms now."

The reports of the Secretary during the contest showed the enrollment of thirty-eight new Sunday school scholars, and some of these came in through the influence of the Vacation School.

Was the Daily Vacation Bible School at Bethlehem worth while? The children say so most emphatically. The teachers who worked the hardest are enthusiastic about it. The pastor, Rev. A. W. Andes, is pleased with its work. May we not hope that not only Bethlehem may feel its strengthening influence, but that from this church's success and blessing many more of our churches may be inspired to undertake this great work, to give their children the same opportunity, to do a greater work for Christ and the church through the happy medium of the Daily Vacation Bible School.

NORTH CAROLINA SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION

The annual session of the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will be held with the Liberty (Vance) church, July 11-13. Now is the time when all of our Sunday school superintendents should be planning to take a vacation and attend this gathering. They need its information and its inspiration. There are over one hundred Sunday schools in the North Carolina Conference. Last year we had six superintendents at Reidsville. If our Sunday school work is to grow, we need to have many times that number at Liberty. It is none too early for Sunday school teachers and scholars and Christian Endeavor leaders to be making arrangements to attend the Convention. Let "Every church represented at Liberty" be our slogan, and make this the best convention North Carolina has ever held. Liberty is already planning to entertain you. Mr. G. W. Eaves, Henderson, N. C., R. F. D. 6, has been chosen as chairman of the Entertainment Committee and will be glad to hear when and how you are coming.

"All roads lead to Liberty (Vance) July 11-13."

OUR INCREASE CAMPAIGN

Cards are just coming into the office of the Board of Religious Education giving reports for the final Sunday of the six weeks' campaign. Nearly one thousand new members are reported so far. If every school would report, our hopes would be more than realized. Next week we hope to give the final results of the campaign, and the roll of Honor Sunday schools of the Southern Christian Convention.

CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS

The Chautauqua and School of Methods of the Southern Christian Convention will be held at Elon College, North Carolina, August 28 to September 4, the week preceding the opening of the college. The Program Committee met in Richmond last week and endeavored to formulate a program which will be rich in inspiration and information, and of much practical worth to workers in every local church. There will be classes for the study of the Bible, missions, and methods of work. The mornings will be devoted to class work, the afternoons to recreation, and the evenings to programs of varied nature, including a music hour, and lecture, sermon or program of an uplifting nature.

This gathering is planned especially for our pastors and church workers, those who are most interested in seeing the church go forward along all lines. No church in the Southern Christian Convention can afford not to make a very earnest effort to have at least one representative at this Chautauqua and School of Methods. No church can make a better investment than to send its pastor to Elon for this week.

For information regarding program, cost, or any details of the Chautauqua, address the office of the Board of Religious Education, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia.

DID YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL TAKE THE OFFERING?

June 11 was the day the Southern Christian Convention asked your Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society to take an offering for the work of the Board of Religious Education. Did you take it in your school or society?

Through Miss Eldredge's efforts, one Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Convention, two Sunday schools and eleven Christian Endeavor Societies have been organized; eighteen institutes and one Vacation Bible School have been held, bringing renewed interest and better methods to that many communities.

The work is too important to let it suffer for the lack of funds. If your Sunday school did not take the offering, will you please see to it that it is taken and the amount sent to C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C., immediately. We asked the Sunday schools for one thousand dollars and we need it.

W. T. WALTERS, Chairman,
Board of Religious Education.

CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS TO BE REMOVED TO ELON COLLEGE

At the last session of the Southern Christian Convention, the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods which has been maintained at Virginia Beach and Ocean View for the past several years through the sacrifices and generosity of a number of loyal and interested church members was transferred to the Southern Christian Convention and placed under the control of the Board of Religious Education. This Board held a meeting at Elon College, May 31, and after a careful consideration of the field of our activities, the expense involved and the equipment essential to success, decided to hold the next session at Elon College, August 28 to September 4.

This is a more central location for our people and the college proposes to furnish rooms, light and water free and to give us meals at cost. A program is being arranged which will be inspiring and of practical benefit to pastors, Sunday school superintendents, teachers, Christian Endeavorers and other church workers, the details of which will be published later.

Begin now to work up a delegation from your church. For information, write Miss Lucy Eldredge, Secretary, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia.

W. T. WALTERS, Chairman,
Board of Religious Education.

In our work of spiritual reconstruction let us not forget that one of the first things to be done is to restore the family altar. Insidious and powerful forces are at work to destroy the Christian home. One of the strongest bulwarks against those forces is the family altar. Many old institutions and methods are passing away. Our safety is in using all of our resources in insuring the permanence of certain old institutions which are fundamental and eternal. Among these is the family altar. When Lord Roberts died, Lord Curzon, in an eloquent speech in the House of Commons, drew from his pocket a letter and said: "When, little more than a fortnight ago, I received a letter from Lord Roberts, the last he ever wrote to me, in the midst of the trials of this war while busily occupied with providing for the comfort of our troops, he nevertheless attempted a strong plea in defense of family prayer. These were his words: 'We have had family prayer for fifty years. Our chief reason is that they bring the household together in the way that nothing else can.'"—Christian Advocate.

"The mission of the church is missions."

MISSIONARY

HOW SUNDAY SCHOOLS HELP

Some SUN readers are wondering how Sunday schools may help our Men and Millions Movement. Possibly this may be answered by learning how the Sunday schools of other churches help in such movements. For example, in the very outset of the Baptist Seventy-Five Million Campaign the Sunday schools of that denomination were asked to contribute $2,500,000 of the amount. Most of this is being given through special offerings taken on three special days during each year when a program is furnished. The North Carolina Sunday schools of the Baptists are giving in this way over $100,000 a year to the Seventy-Five Million Campaign, and last year the women in their missionary societies of the Baptists gave $299,870.42 to the Campaign, and the women of the South reported to their convention at Jacksonville a total given through the year of $3,408,011.50. All of this counts on their Seventy-Five Million Campaign.

The Methodists are doing similar work through their Sunday schools and missionary societies in rolling up the total amount of their Centenary Movement. The Methodists are training their young people in their Sunday schools through the Annual Every-Member Canvass to contribute to their Centenary Movement, and in all their literature they are calling upon their Sunday schools and their auxiliary organizations to help in securing the total pledged.

Our Board of Religious Education in session at Elon College last week voted that their secretary, Miss Lucy Eldredge, do all in her power through the agency of Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor to get the matter of Men and Millions before our young people, and to assist in every possible way in carrying to completion our Movement. This is a movement in behalf of every enterprise of the church, and for us to fail or shirk will hurt a cause near and dear to all our hearts. Every institution, interest and enterprise of the church is involved in and helped by this Movement. It therefore behooves all loyal members of the church to do all in their power to give momentum to the Movement and help carry it to successful conclusion.

TAKING SWEET COUNSEL

"We took sweet counsel together, and walked into the house of God in company" (Psalm 55:14). Last Sunday, June 11, was a happy day to this scribe. By urgent invitation he was in company of Rev. W. B. Fuller, Ivor, Va., at Union (Southampton) at 11 a. m., Barretts at 3 p. m., and at Ivor at 8 p. m. We envy most the country preacher, for his people are most ready and willing, on the Sabbath, to hear the Word of God. The congregation at Union was good, cordial, attentive. The Sunday school had been enthusiastic, interesting, and inspiring. The writer had not intended it, but the interest manifested and the attention given made him speak more than an hour on "The Power of Belief." It was pointed out that our Men and Millions Movement was the climax of our Christian Church tasks and undertakings so far, as it was the first and only co-operative movement we Christians had ever undertaken looking to the loyalty and support of all the interests of our church. The Union brethren will meet their pledges as they are able and will give the movement their full loyalty, love and support.

At Barretts the congregation was larger and equally as attentive. This is the church that has given us both the sainted Dr. W. B. Wellons and our venerable Dr. J. W. Wellons, and now also Miss Iola Hedgepeth of our Mountain School. The spirit of fellowship here is sweet and one feels like one is on holy ground. Many of the members had not understood the meaning and methods of Men and Millions; but they are loyal and devoted to their dear church and will pay their pledges as they are able and stand by the movement in all its efforts for righteousness and progress.

It was the Children's Day at Ivor, and the program as arranged and carried out by Sister B. H. Lane was interesting, inspiring, and joyful. The writer was with this church Monday night also and after a recital by Sam Davis, spoke on Porto Rico, under the auspices of the Missionary Society. The silver offering was liberal and the audience was large. Monday was spent with the ministers of Eastern Virginia in conference at Norfolk. Men and Millions was discussed and every minister present said his people would meet their pledges as rapidly as they were able. It was great and good and sweet to have such fellowship.

LOVING AND SERVING THE WHOLE CHURCH

It sometimes seems a tragedy that every good thing undertaken in this world has to be done through trials and tears, and carried on in spite of calumny and falsehood. No good has ever yet come to man and lodged itself in the hearts and lives of men except by the way of effort and hardship, sorrow and sighing. The life of Jesus, His grief and sorrows, His cross and Calvary, represents the history and reveals the heart of every good measure or movement coming to this world for man's betterment and uplift.

There is no finer illustration of this on record than that of our own Men and Millions Movement in the Christian Church. For since our branch of the church was conceived, and the Lord Jesus was declared to be the only head of the church, with Christian as a sufficient name and the Bible a sufficient creed, down till this very hour there has never been amongst us a nobler conception nor a holier idea than that of Men and Millions. For, to put its meaning in one sentence, this was and is a movement whose sole purpose it was and is to build up the whole church and carry on to further usefulness and power every enterprise of the church. If the aims, purposes and principles of O'Kelly, Rice Haggard, Barton Stone and the others were just, true, righteous and holy, so are those of Men and Millions, for this movement simply means our co-operative endeavor to carry on what they so well and so hopefully began. And the perfection of their lives depends upon our completing what they began and have inspired others to begin. This movement was and is a call to all of us to undertake together to build up the work of the Kingdom as it has been entrusted to us of the Christian Church. And when this movement is understood as conceived in the minds and hearts of its originators there can be no objection raised to it on just or righteous grounds.

Last Monday, June 12, the writer of this met in Norfolk, Va., all pastors save two of our Eastern Virginia churches, and every one of these pastors to a man not only expressed his heartiest endorsement of the movement, but declared that their people favored the movement and would pay their pledges as soon as they were able. The people of our Eastern Virginia churches endorse the movement and are loyal to it because their pastors do, and have made the purposes and principles and plans of the movement clear to them.

We mortals may fail, and do, in our methods of carrying forward great and good tasks. But the errors and blunders of our fellows ought not to excuse us from standing by our church and doing our duty to our Lord's Church and His Kingdom.

HOW TO GRIP A BIBLE BOOK'S CONTENTS And How to Get Real Bible Study Out of Thoughtless Boys, and to Understand Bible Arithmetic

I WAS once greatly helped in a Field Workers' Conference by the late Dr. H. M. Hamill, one of the veterans of organized Sunday school work, in getting the contents of "The Book of Acts."

Lord Jesus Christ.” (2 Peter 1:5-8.)

“Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.” (Matt. 6:25-34.)

In spiritual arithmetic the Lord God, the great Teacher, claims as his divine prerogative, his sovereign right, that no one should add to his words (Deuteronomy 4:2; 12:32), and the Preacher (Proverbs 30:6) adds, “lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar,” and the Holy Spirit warns, in Revelation 22:18, “If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book.”

“Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer.” (Proverbs 25:4.)

“I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin.” (Isaiah 1:25.)

“A new heart also will I give you . . . and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh.” (Ezekiel 36:26.)

“Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.” (John 1:29.)

“He was manifested to take away our sins.” (1 John 3:5.)

“Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he take-eth away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.” (John 15:2.)

As in Addition, the Divine Teacher claims as his right that no one should add to his words—so he exercises his privilege in subtraction, in the awful words of warning, “If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.”

Multiplication

“Now he that ministereth seed to the sower both minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your righteousness.” (2 Corinthians 9:10.)

“Thy gentleness hath multiplied me.” (2 Samuel 22:36.)

“To the elect . . . grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied.” (1 Peter 1:2.)

“Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord.” (2 Peter 1:2.)

Division

“For the word of God is quick, and powerful . . . dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow.” (Hebrews 4:12.)

“All these worketh that one and selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.” (1 Corinthians 12:11.)

“Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman . . . rightly dividing the word of truth.” (2 Timothy 2:15.)

So it will be seen that what the Lord adds to our spiritual lives produces fruitfulness; what he subtracts makes room for the growth of the new-born soul—the “new creature”; what he multiplies increases our fruit through the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; what He divides enables us to know ourselves and minister to the needs of others.

The whole of these fundamental principles enable us to solve life's problems and assist others to apply its fundamental truths to harder and higher grades of life's mathematics.—Mrs. T. C. Rounds, Chicago.

GETTING BOYS TO STUDY AT HOME

A Sunday school teacher finding it difficult to get her class of boys to study their lessons at home hit upon the following plan. For her class of twelve boys she purchased twenty-four note-books, twelve of which she numbered “One” and the other twelve “Two.” The first Sunday, just before the close of the lesson period, she distributed the “Number One” books and gave the boys five questions on next Sunday's lesson to write in them, leaving five blank lines between the questions, on which to write the answers during the week.

When the class period came the following Sunday she taught the lesson around these five questions. Just at the close of the lesson period she exchanged the “Number Two” books for those numbered “One,” and gave five questions to be written in the “Number Two” book for next Sunday's study.

During the week she went over the “Number One” books, and gave each one a grade mark, such as the boys received in public school.

When the next Sunday came and they brought back the “Number Two” books, with the work for the week written up, these were exchanged for the “Number One” books, into which new questions were written for the following Sunday, and so on every week.

With this plan the thought of the lesson was guided, concentration was secured, and the learning process was completed by getting expression, which insured impression.—Hugh Cork, Philadelphia.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, of Elon College, was with W. B. Fuller at three of his churches on Sunday, June 11, and delivered two powerful sermons at Union (Southampton) and Barretts, and gave a Sunday school address at Ivor church on Sunday night. On Monday night he gave quite an interesting lecture on Porto Rico to a large audience, for the benefit of the Woman's Missionary Society of Ivor.

CHURCH NEWS

ELON COLLEGE DAY

As one of the local pastors of the Christian Church I wish to say that with all my heart I endorse the action of the Southern Christian Convention when it voted to set aside one day a year as Elon College Day. I think it is a step forward that looks well to the future of our denomination. I wonder why we have waited until now to commence this in our churches as a whole? Perhaps we will not see the fruit of such a program the first year or two—that is fruit in abundance, but I believe that in a few years it will mean a great deal to the denomination we represent, as well as keep before our people the ideal and importance of preparing ourselves for larger usefulness in the Master's name.

At Newport News we hope to use the program as suggested in the college bulletin, as near as possible. I feel it ought to be a real pleasure for every pastor to hold the ideals for which Elon has stood before his congregation every year, and so I am looking forward to Elon College Day at Newport News with pride and expectancy.

SOLEMN VOWS

LAMBERT-CAGLE

On May 16, 1922, at the home of W. J. Edwards, Olie Lambert was married to Miss Myrtle Cagle. The home was beautifully decorated. After the wedding march was played, the ceremony was performed by Rev. W. J. Edwards. Then a bountiful and tempting repast was served in the dining room. From this scene of beauty and interest the young couple went to their home at Biscoe, where Mr. Lambert is express agent for the Southern Railway.

CALLED HOME

POWELL—At her home, Crittenden, Va., on Sunday morning, May 28, 1922. Mrs. Mary Ann Powell, aged 73 years, two months and 25 days. She was one of the Charter members of Mt. Zion Christian church. She was a good and faithful worker in the cause of the Master and will be greatly missed, but our loss has been her gain.

She was married twice; first to Capt. Theodore Haughwout, second to Mr. G. V. Powell. She leaves a husband, one half-sister, Mrs. Georgie Forest, many relatives and friends. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, assisted by I. W. Johnson, D. D., and E. K. Denton, D. D., of the M. E. church, and her remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. God bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

COX—Wm. Calvin Cox was born March 20, 1853, died June 2, 1922, aged 69 years, two months and 12 days.

He was married in the year 1876 to Miss Elizabeth Brown, daughter of the late Rev. Wm. R. Brown, who preceded him several years to the Spirit world. To this union were born nine children, five of whom survive as follows: Audie C., of Lake View, N. C., Cullie B., of Richmond, Va., Wylie R., of Greensboro, N. C., Wrenn C., and Rassic H., who resided with him at Ramseur, N. C., Route 1.

He is also survived by two Brothers, Rev. Paton R. Cox, of Westfield, Ind., and Virgil Cox, of Ramseur, N. C., four grand children, besides many other relatives and a host of friends.

He made a profession of faith and joined the church at Pleasant Ridge about 42 years ago at which place he was buried beside his companion in the presence of a large congregation.

He bore his sickness with patience under the testimony that he was ready and waiting to go with Jesus.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—SYKES

Whereas, our Heavenly Father, in His wisdom has seen fit to remove from our midst Brother John W. Sykes, the President of the Wellons Bible class of the First Christian Sunday school, of Richmond, Virginia; therefore, be it Resolved:

First; That in his death the Sunday school and church has lost a good member, the class an efficient officer and the home a devoted husband and father.

Second; That we bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well and that we strive to imitate the virtues of our deceased brother, and that the Wellons Bible class endeavor to carry forward the work in which he was interested.

Third; That we extend to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy and commend them to our Heavenly Father, who alone is able to give the comfort and strength needed in this hour of trial.

Fourth; That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of our class, a copy be sent to the family of the deceased and a copy furnished The Christian Sun for publication.

A METHOD OF MISSIONS

In all the long history of humanity no other book can even be compared to the Bible in its fitness for translation and in the demand for its translation into the tongues of men. In six hundred languages its messages are now read by men, in whole or in part. Next to the Bible, yet a long way behind it, Pilgrim's Progress has been printed in one hundred languages. But even its popularity is due to its graphic story of Christian experience and that story is told largely in the language of the Bible. Shakespeare has been produced in forty-seven tongues. None other approaches these.

The work of translating the Bible message belongs to the periods when Christian men have been reading and studying its words and have been stirred by the missionary impulse, and impulse which an understanding reading of the Bible always arouses.

Up to the beginning of the modern missionary period it had been put into twenty-eight languages. Thus Bible translation and missionary activity go together. Bible translation is a method of Missions.

THE KING'S LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

It is the oldest company in the world, having been in successful operation for thousands of years. It has never changed management. It is the only company insuring against shipwrecks on the oceans of life or on the river of death. It is the only company insuring against loss on the great Judgment Day fire. Its policies never expire, giving to the faithful holder thereof eternal life.

The President is Jesus Christ, the King of all kings.

The capital is the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Surplus, exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think.

Cost of policy—without money and without price. The President has already paid your premium with His own precious blood.

Benefits—those who take out policies in this company receive abundance of grace and the gift of righteousness, salvation from all sin, and are filled with the Holy Spirit and walk in newness of life. They go about trying to get others to take insurance with this company. Seek the President while He may be found.

The head office is heaven. Applicants can apply direct at any time, but they must be humble and have faith in the President.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKER

"No man is born into the world whose work is not born with him."—James Russel Lowell.

Much that is being said concerning modern Sunday school progress pertains to material equipment, methods, and intellectual preparation, including classification, courses of study for pupils and the training of teachers. This is all good and highly important, but there is another element that enters into the Sunday school worker's preparation for efficient service, and that is his devotional life.

Meaning of Sunday School Worker

When I speak of "The Sunday School Worker," I mean any person who holds a position in the school as officer or teacher. It is so often said that the teacher is "the key person." This is true to a large degree, but every officer is also responsible for the influence of his leadership on those about him. Some center all spiritual responsibility upon the superintendent and scarcely think of his associates. In many cases the other officers of the school take it for granted that there is but little required of them personally in helping to direct the school in the deeper channels of spiritual living. When I speak of the devotional life of the Sunday school worker, I mean the devotional life of the superintendent, assistant superintendent, secretary, treasurer, chorister, organist, departmental officers and any other officers and teachers the school may have.

Spiritual Preparation Essential

Much, is said today about the qualifications of the Sunday school worker, such as the physical, educational and social, which are good and essential, but these, in themselves, are not sufficient. There must be spiritual preparation which means more than a nominal profession of religion. Without doubt, the most vital requirement of the Sunday school worker is that he be a Christian; that he have the mind of Christ; that he incarnate the Master's teachings in such a way that there will be no doubt as to the sincerity of his religious profession and spiritual qualifications for leadership.

Practice of the Devotional Life

The practice of the devotional life on the part of the Sunday school worker is indispensable. His spiritual nature cannot get along without it any more than his body can do without food. Indeed, his soul will starve and die without it. The devotional life consists of the quiet, devotional practice alone with God, coupled with a devoted Christian service in helpfulness to others. "Follow me," said the Master. Who follows Him? He went apart by himself at times. No one fully follows Christ who does not find or take time for quiet, undisturbed devotion. But these quiet times were to the Master always a preparation for His life of activity. "To retire from the world to save our own souls is not following Him who came into the world to save others."

The Sunday school worker needs to go apart frequently in the quiet of the deeper spiritual life and thus renew his strength and increase his efficiency. The exalted work in which he is engaged, the numerous and unequalled opportunities for doing good, the possibilities of his own increasing spiritual enrichment, and the silent and transforming power of Christian example, should all spur him on to the most intimate relationship with God.

The Real Power

Let us remember that the real power is not in education, methods or equipment, valuable and indispensable as these are, but in one's own spiritual, devotional life. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit." This is "the divine revealing of the secret power in all Christian work."

Let Us Pray

Blessed Father: Show unto me all the excellencies of Thyself as revealed in Jesus Christ. Help me to embody those excellencies in my own life so that those with whom I work, whom I direct or teach, may be enabled to travel in the upward path unhindered. In Jesus' Name. Amen!
—Brewbaker.

MISSIONS AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Do missions belong in a Christian Sunday school?

One may as well ask, "Do trees belong in the forest or waters in the sea?" Of course missions belong in the Sunday school. But why? Is it because missions need the Sunday school, or because the Sunday school needs missions? It is easy to see what the Sunday school has done for the missionary enterprise. It has furnished the volunteers, the contributors, the intercessors, the personal workers, the local evangelists. Missions cannot get along without the Sunday school. Can the Sunday school get along without missions?

The Sunday school would be as handicapped without opportunity for missionary expression as a chemistry teacher without a laboratory or a farmer without a farm. What the laboratory is to the teacher and the farm to the farmer, the missionary enterprise is to the Sunday school. It is in the missionary expression more completely than anywhere else that the pupil learns Christianity by living it.

It is true that a pupil may be trained in politeness, honesty, temperance and similar virtues without attempting to share with others his choicest blessing, namely, Christianity. These qualities are, however, relatively negative and passive. The pupil needs some big task, some more adequate self-expression, to make the fiber of his moral and religious being strong. And missions is the biggest task to which human beings are ever called.—Trull.

JESUS TRAINING HIS WORKERS

Jesus' ideal of life was missionary. His high regard for John the Baptist is one indication of this. John the Baptist was in every sense a missionary. Of him Jesus said, "Among them that are born of women there hath not arisen a greater than John the Baptist." His dealings with his disciples provide a similar illustration. His one purpose for his disciples was that they should become missionaries. So far as we know all of them except Judas became missionaries. In fact they had been called to become missionaries. "Come ye after me, and I will make you fishers of men." It was not selfish motive to which Jesus appealed. Persons were to become his disciples that they might win others. This was Jesus' first challenge to those He called to discipleship. His few years of companionship with them were devoted largely to teaching and training designed to fit them for missionary service. In the tenth chapter of Matthew we have a detailed account of one of the occasions on which He sent His disciples out on missionary trips. Evidently He was training them for future efficiency in similar work. He gives elaborate detailed instructions as to how they are to act and as to what they may reasonably expect to encounter by way of opposition, persecution and rewards. It seems likely that this was only one of many similar commissions. In Luke 9:10 and Mark 6:30, we are told of the return of the disciples from such a trip. Jesus took them apart into a place of quiet, in order to talk over with them the results of their work and point out lessons for the future. Jesus' last request to His disciples related to the extension of the Kingdom "unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem." Thus Jesus' intercourse with the twelve constantly revealed his missionary outlook and passion.—Trull.

BIBLE STUDY UNDER DIFFICULTIES

A mother in Brazil, who had brought a Bible and shared its teachings with her children, was forbidden by her husband to read it, but she had become so much interested that she only hid it away while he was about the house. He learned from the servants and the children that she was still reading the book, and several times treated her roughly and beat her for disobeying his prohibition. She then conceived the idea of reading at night when all were asleep. To do this she would hide her Bible, a box of matches, and a candle, cut into small pieces, under her pillow. After all the household were soundly asleep she would light one of the bits of candle and hold it closely down by her side that the light might not shine across her body and disturb her sleeping husband, and thus she spent many nights seeking out of God's book His messages for her soul. The children of this godly woman have grown into beautiful Christian character, bringing up their families in the knowledge and fear of God.

Needs of the Church

By MISS MINNIE LOHR

Mount Vernon, Ohio

THE Church to-day needs more men and women who have "put on the whole armor of God." It needs those who are mighty in the Scriptures, those who "let the word of Christ dwell richly" in them. It needs those who are "instructed in the way of the Lord," those who are "fervent in spirit." It needs men and women who will speak and teach diligently "the things of the Lord." It needs those who are teachable, that they may know "the way of the Lord" more perfectly themselves. Only such men and women are able to convince others of the great need of leaving all and following Jesus all the way.

It needs to remember that it is the body of Christ, and that each believer is a member of that body, and as such has a definite work to do. It needs most of all to ever remember that Christ is the Head of the body, and that the hand, the foot, the eye, the ear, every member, is to move at the direction of the great Head alone.

It needs that the whole Church might work and pray for a revival of "pure religion and undefiled" within the Church. It needs that the "abominations," such as the desecration of the Lord's Day, irreverence for the house of God, and disobedience to God's commands, may be removed.

It needs that both priests and people might sanctify themselves, that they might "inquire of the Lord" and "to keep the word of the Lord" to do all that is written in the Book. Then the "greater things" which our Lord and Master promised will be brought to pass.

NUMBER 26

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY

IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY

IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY

NOTES

Deacon John H. Harris, of our Wakefield church, makes a poor out in any effort to show himself off in Christian work, but when it comes to getting down to real work and doing his part, and sometimes that of a good many others, he is a first-class workman.

Rev. P. T. Klapp, one of our most earnest and godly preachers of the Word, is a very gifted preacher of the gospel. His many friends will be glad to know that he is enjoying fine health and is closely engaged in the work of the pastorate.

They tell me that expenses at Elon will be higher next year.—An Elon Patron. We think that is a mistake. Certainly the board bill will be a good bit cheaper, and we know of no cause why any other item of expense there should go up, and we think it will not.

How often you meet people who in private will take a certain position as to religion, but will not say in public what they have said in private! And yet we feel compelled to ask, if you have the truth, why not give to the the public? The truth is needed everywhere, and one can hardly miss the right place by going forth as a sower, giving out his message to the winds to carry it to every nook and corner of the country.

I feel that you have a difficult place to fill in attempting to keep both your pastorate at Reidsville and the editorial work on THE CHRISTIAN SUN.—Eastern Virginia. It is true that the two fields make a severe strain on one's strength, but if the brotherhood will help us by sending in a plenty of matter for the contributions department, and then be careful not to send the cash for subscriptions to the editor, but to the publisher, it will greatly help to make our burden lighter.

✦ ✦ ✦

"With much love and prayer for you and your work." That is the closing of a letter recently received from a brother in another state. If we can get that sort of sympathy and help from the brotherhood generally it will mean much, even if the editor should be overworked. Give us a plenty of love and prayer and we will do our best to serve in giving the best church paper we may be capable of producing. Try it and see what effects follow.

Rev. J. Lee Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C., is a preacher who needs not to be ashamed. Indeed, he preaches the gospel with power from above, as most of us who heard him recently in the Reidsville meeting think. It was not now and then a good sermon, but every one he preached was good, very good. He sticks to the Old Book and declares its truths fearlessly and faithfully. May God give to His Church more such preachers of the Gospel.

Do you like to tackle hard questions? Well, then try this: Why do little children suffer so much in illness? That question was recently asked the writer by one who was witnessing the terrible suffering of a dying child. What would be your answer, when your aim was to comfort the father and mother of the little child who was passing away? Put your answer in a few words and send it to THE SUN for publication, if acceptable. It may be that in giving your answer to the public many will find comfort.

Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., Elon's Grand Old Man, is keeping along well for the years which honor him. He has long been a hard worker, and as we believe, he will never feel that the younger men ought to do all the work, for if there be anything he can do, there is no young man more willing to do it than is he. In the late annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of Elon College, he not only attended, but he climbed to the third floor by a little help and stayed there through the entire meeting—till very late at night, and so did Rev. W. G. Clements.

Spiritualism is laying great claims to-day to the success of its work, but let us remember that success is not necessarily the ear mark of truth. Sometimes error gets what is called success, but it is for a short time and then away it goes to oblivion. Tell us what cult, or organization, has stood that most trying test, the test of time, and has proved it has lived as the Church of Christ has lived. Truth will stand forever, but error will stand for only a short time, and then it will go into oblivion. It is reported that the spiritualists are now trying to get the influence of our government to bolster up their propaganda by claiming that the government licenses them to practice their teachings, but the Moody Bible Institute Monthly says that it has information from Washington that the government issues no such certificates. That ought to settle it and at the same time show that these deluded people are not licensed by the government.

Somehow a good many excellent people are so devoted to peace that they are willing to pay any price for it. And is this course not commendable? Well, Jesus did not seem to think so, for He said He came "to set at variance a man against his father and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law, and a man's foes shall be they of his own household." That does not look as if he thought that peace at any price is to be desired. There are some things better than peace. For instance, truth is better than peace, unless you can have truth with peace. We have a kind of peace in the grave-yard, but it is because the dead only abide there. If a man prefers peace to truth, he can bury his convictions and secure peace of that kind, but we do not think he has gained anything to his credit, unless he can establish peace on the basis of truth. Peace at any price (see Matthew 10: 35) never pays, and is not to be coveted by Christians, even. Let us have truth and then peace. That may make peace costly, but it will be invaluable and a great blessing to the cause of Christ. On the other hand, peace which is purchased at the expense of truth is never helpful or long-lived. If you wish peace, get it, but do not pay for it at the sacrifice of truth—the truth of God.

THE ONE OUTSTANDING DIFFICULTY IN THE WAY OF UNION

A GREAT and determined effort at union among the people of God has been coming to the front for many years, but the union for which Jesus prayed, and the union for which such persistent effort has been made for many years, is still in the background. As we see the situation it is held back by one special difficulty, and that seems almost a necessary difficulty, and yet it does seem that must not be allowed to stand, for if it does, then the union of God's people is defeated for many a long day, unless some way to remove this hindering cause shall be found.

This obstacle to union is found foremost in practically every effort which has been made in the last fifty years, and no matter whether the plan is that of an individual, or of some one body of believers, that difficulty is there, standing just in the way of the consummation of the great union idea. Till this obstacle can be removed we see no chance for union. Can it be removed? Can it be put out of the way to such an extent as to make possible the union of the various denominations, or of any considerable number of them? May I narrow the confines and say can it be put out of the way to such an extent as that even two of the denominations can unite? We remember that on several occasions union of two or more bodies has seemed within easy grasp, and yet when they have come to the final step, one side or both have backed out of the union which seemed almost within their reach, and why? Oh, it is because of this one obstacle which stands in the way of union in every effort made in many years, perhaps we might say it has stood in the way of every effort since the memorable prayer Christ offered for the union of His people.

Do you ask, And what is the obstacle? It is this: Every individual seeking to bring about union seeks to have his own peculiar view made the basis of that union. That is true also of the efforts of denominations at union. Their own peculiar ideas of union and how it can be accomplished, seems always to be colored by this one difficulty, each one wishes his peculiar view to become the basis of union. And is this not necessarily so? How can a man or a body of believers seek union except on what they conceive as their own theory of union? One of the most conspicuous instances in the recent past for union of the people of God is that made by Canon Headlam, but his idea is really the outgrowth of the Episcopal plan, or more correctly the Church of England plan, and yet it amounts to the same as all other plans with which we are at all acquainted, the one difficulty pops up and confronts the situation, viz.: The thing which must dominate the situation is the plan of some one who has long been in the divided ranks of Christendom, and he feels that the ideal which has dominated the body with which he has been connected is the very plan which should form the real basis of union, and here we stand butting each other off the tracks of the one dominant thought of union.

The one instance to which reference has been made, that of Canon Headlam, is well worth the study of our readers, as illustrating the difficulty to which reference has been made. We find the statement in one of our exchanges as follows:

Is it possible for human nature to free itself completely from predilections and prejudices, so that a man can look at a question in which he is interested with an impartial mind? We doubt it. We have been reading with much interest a book by Canon Headlam on The Doctrine of the Church and Christian Union. In part it is very acceptable. The Canon seems very liberal in his attitude toward the Anglican Church, and very fraternal toward all other Christian bodies. He restates with approval the views of Bishop Lightfoot that the Apostolic Church was governed by Presbyters, that there was no distinction between Presbyter and Bishop, and that the Episcopate was evolved out of the Presbyterate after the death of the Apostles. He interprets Apostolic Succession as merely the succession of an official ministry without involving any grace or orders through the laying on of hands. He frankly says that Apostolic Succession has no scriptural authority behind it and hence the validity of orders does not depend upon Episcopal ordination. He argues strongly for the validity of the orders and the sacraments of non-Episcopal Churches. In contending for this reunion of Christendom he insists that the only possibility of securing it is for the churches to approach the subject with mutual recognition of each others' claims to constitute a part of one universal Church of Christ. No church has a right to assume that it is the true Church and to seek to reunite Christendom by asking all other Christian bodies to come into union with it.

All of this sounds well, and offers a promising outlook. But when the Canon comes to lay down the basis for union, he makes the historical Episcopate an essential plank. This, not because it is scriptural, but because it has behind it the authority of the early and undivided church, and has continued to this day to be a constituent element in the larger part of Christendom. While recognizing the validity of other orders than the Episcopal, he insists that in order to secure unity for the future, all must agree upon one doctrine or orders, and that for the sake of unity all other Christian bodies should be willing to accept the orders of the Anglican Church. He would not have the ministers of other Christian bodies re-ordained, but from the time of the union all candidates for the ministry must be ordained by laying on of the hands of the bishop.

Practically Canon Headlam makes the same demand with the High Church Anglicans, only on different grounds. They demand that all submit to Episcopal ordination because it is essential to validity of orders; he on the ground that it is essential to unity. They demand it on the ground that it has Apostolic authority behind it; he on the ground that it has behind it Church authority.

Furthermore, Canon Headlam's recognition of the validity of the orders and sacraments of non-Episcopal Churches is disappointing in the outcome. We thought it implied an interchange of pulpits and inter-communion in the sacraments. But not so. He says that nothing would be gained by this. On the contrary, inasmuch as it would be a violation of the rules of the Anglican Church, it could only result in harm by causing dissension and strife. Here again the Canon and the High Church Anglican are in practical agreement. Both exclude us from their pulpits and bar us from their communion table—the one on the ground that we form no part of the true Church, and the other on the ground that the rules of the Anglican Church would be violated.

It is evident from Canon Headlam's book that his views found expression in the recent Lambeth Appeal, and to him is largely due the exceedingly fraternal tone and earnest Christian spirit of that appeal. It is further evident that he has done nothing to remove the barrier of the historic Episcopate to the reunion of Christians. As long as any branch of the Church makes one of its distinctive institutions, and that confessedly destitute of Scriptural warrant, a sine qua non, the prospect of a reunited Christendom is far from bright.

With Canon Headlam the difficulty is that he wishes to force the historic Episcopate upon the people of God as the basis of union, but he cannot do that—there are too many who not only will not, but they could not make the Episcopate fit them. Some other plan must be found, and in that plan there must be some way out of allowing our own sect ideals to upset the plan and so bring defeat. Who can tell us how to remove this difficulty?

SERIOUS QUESTIONS FOR THE CHURCH MEMBER

FOR many years we have sought in giving instruction to new converts to impress them with one special thought, viz.: Do not undertake to live a half way Christian life, for half way means to fail. If you are to make a success of your life as a Christian, then give your whole heart and mind to the task of yielding your heart and mind to Christ. The half way Christian is in fact the no way Christian, and a no way Christian is not a Christian at all. One must be a Christian, or not a Christian, and it were better to be no Christian at all rather than to be a half way Christian. When a man is no Christian at all, he is open to approach on that question, but when he is a half way Christian, then it is that he is not open to approach because he declares that he is a member of the church, thus shielding himself from all influences that would seek to lead to Christ, and so the half way Christian is screening himself against all approaches from the soul-winner, and thus he goes on in sin.

There is another reason why the half way Christian should not be in the church, and that is because men of the world, seeing the manner of his life, take it for granted that that sort of life is what people mean when they seek to win men and women to that kind of a life, and they turn away in disgust, declaring that they do not wish any such religion as that, and who can blame them? We might say that they ought to know better, but as a matter of fact, if they know better they do not seem to be willing to admit it, and so they go on to ruin, stumbling over some man or woman who is disguised as a half way Christian.

The man who is not interested in his Bible does not know much if anything of the Lord. For if he knew the Lord, he would desire to know the Book He has sent to give us light on the way of life. Any man who does not care about his Bible, does not seek to drink its riches as a means of spiritual life, well, at best, we shall not expect to find him a whole-hearted servant of God. If we had the ear of every new convert in the land we would say to him, never be satisfied with being a half way Christian—be out and out for Christ, and then the Christian life will stand for something worth while both in time and eternity. Read what Miss Julia H. Thayer says along this line, as follows:

“Are we enough emotionally religious?” I parry; for on all sides I meet a cold, stolid indifference to spiritual things.

“There are so few people in my church who care to talk on the greatest of all subjects—religion,” I said to an exemplary Christian woman.

“In any church you can count them on the fingers of one hand,” was the quick reply.

Vital, practical, sympathetic heart-Christianity can come from only one source—the Bible's teachings. It is neglect of the Word of Life which has brought the alarming conditions that we see and feel all about us.

Never were there so many copies of the Bible as now, but where are they? Is it the “heathen” who have them? Seldom do I see a Bible in the hands of anyone. There are Bibles in our homes—oh, yes, but for the most part they lie unopened, unread—until someone falls ill or someone dies.

Rarer still is the sight of a person engaged in studying the sacred Word, yet we are told to “search the Scriptures.” We know the meaning of that word “search” when we have lost a valuable jewel or a pearl. We lift every rug, move every piece of furniture, peer into every dark corner if haply we may find our missing treasure. Few thus search for the “pearl of great price.”

In all that I say, I am not speaking of the worldly person, but of the one whose name is on the roll of the “visible church.” How will that person ever be able to find his way to the Unknown Land if he does not acquaint himself with the directions for reaching it? The Bible is the only chart that maps out the strait and narrow way leading to Eternal Life.

“Keep your Bible open and turn a leaf every day,” says the Open-Bible League—an association which has a choice multitude of members.

“Is that all one has to do?” someone asks.

“Well, that is all you promise to do,” I reply.

Said a member of the League, “When I go to my Bible to turn a leaf, I read—I'm ashamed not to.”

That is the very object aimed at by the League in its simple request to “turn a leaf every day.” The act is designed to lead one to the words of God.

Some persons object to having their Bible open, saying that dust gathers on the page. Do not fear that, for it will be so slight that a breath can scatter it—if you turn a leaf daily!

Have your Bible conveniently near—make it easy to reach. Read it thoughtfully, prayerfully. Would it not be beautiful to be found so doing when your Lord comes?

SUFFOLK LETTER

EDWARD BURGESS WALTON, son of Samuel H. Walton, was born in Gates County, N. C., March 31, 1887. His father was in the Confederate Army for two years and nine months, and was wounded twice, losing one of his eyes. He died May 28, 1918, at his residence in Suffolk. His good wife had died before him October 2, 1912.

Edward B. went to Camp Lee June 5, 1918, remained in camp six weeks before leaving for France. From the time his father knew Edward had to enter the army he grew despondent and gradually lost hold upon life. Edward joined the Suffolk Christian church November 17, 1907. He sailed from the United States July 26, 1918, and died in an army hospital of spinal meningitis following influenza in France, October 5, 1918. He was in the mail service before entering the army. His body arrived in the United States October 27, 1920, and reached Suffolk November 27, 1920, and was buried in Cedar Hill cemetery the next day, November 28, 1920.

The history of this young life, thirty-one years, six months and four days, is the history of thousands upon thousands of young men who made the "supreme sacrifice" in the greatest war of time. War is the most tragic and the most cruel human blunder. "Thou shalt not kill" should be engraven upon the heart of all human beings. It is heroic to obey the call of country and to lay life upon the altar; but nations will be held responsible for making the world a slaughter-house and men victims of ambition. When Jesus Christ is enthroned in the hearts of rulers the nations will abolish war and the Prince of Peace will unfurl His banner over a happy world. Brave boys like Edward Walton who gave their lives in war were innocent victims of an age-long custom. There is, at the present time, universal yearning for the abolition of war and the settlement of international differences by arbitration and courts of justice. Judges of international courts would be much more honorable than generals. War has deceived the race. The chances for fortunes from governments in time of war tempt men to favor war. Men grow rich by the shed blood of young men, and imagine themselves innocent.

The nation honors the boys who died on field or in hospital, but can never restore to parents the blighted flowers of the home. No Decoration Day can compensate the mother for the loss of her son in war. Somebody must answer some day for the holocaust that robs a nation of its youth and happy homes of their jewels. But peace will never come to a warring world until military schools are abolished. The reduction of armaments will not insure peace while military schools train youth for war. It is a contradiction in terms to tax a Christian people to maintain military schools. Military schools inspire and cultivate the military spirit, train young men in military habits, and lead to military action. If girls were admitted to military schools it would make amazons of them and change the currents of civilization. Military schools should be converted into schools training the young for the arts of peace. Too much importance is attached to the training for war, and too little to the cultivation of peace.

IMET two men the other day—one a Methodist, the other a Christian. The Methodist was a Christian too, though not a member of our Church. Both men had daughters to send to college, and both were good personal friends of the writer. I did not meet them in concert, but on the same day.

I congratulated each of them on having a daughter to finish high school. When I told them that only one in nine of our population attains this distinction, they immediately rated their daughters higher. Naturally we fell to discussing the future. I met the Methodist man first. He is a man of moderate circumstances, a hard worker, on a salary basis, so that additional financial obligations are to him matters of grave concern. He confided to me his life's aspiration with reference to his daughter—that she should be graduated from college. I congratulated him again and told him that one in thirty only gets to college and one in ninety to graduate from college. There was joy in his very manner when I got him to see what a high-visioned man he was and what awaited her in the way of life achievement, for this one ninetieth of our population who are college graduates have furnished us ninety per cent of our leadership in Church, State, and industrial life. His countenance then became to me an inspiration.

Then being ever alert for recruits for Elon's student body, I offered this princely father the advantages of our college for his daughter. He thanked me. He spoke well of Elon. He had visited the college once and was impressed with its Christian tone. He had observed its influence in the lives of its alumni whom he had known. "But," he added, "we Methodists have a college for this territory. It is my duty to patronize it. I have never had another thought than that my daughter should go there." Then he told me how every pastor he had ever had, had spoken always of his daughter as a prospective student for their college. This layman and these pastors are normal in their attitudes in their Church.

A few minutes later I met the man of our Church. He greeted me effusively and rejoiced in the great work I was doing for the Church at Elon. Of course I set him right on that point. The work being done at Elon is great, but is a social product, the achievement of no man or group of men, but of a Brotherhood.

He, too, declared his intention to send his daughter to college. "Elon is ready for her," I declared with expectancy in my voice. "Well, er"—he stammered forth with such hesitancy and evident embarrassment—"that is where I want to send her. I fear, however, she will go to —," and he named this Methodist college. I argued the best I could. I am considered somewhat of an argumentarian, having persuaded in my youth a lovely maiden to take me for better or for worse. Well, I failed, not with the maiden, but with him. My brother insisted at first that his daughter wouldn't obey him. Then he tacked for a new position and insisted he was free to patronize any college he saw fit. He said his pastor had never mentioned Elon to him nor ever referred to the college during his pastoral visits or in his pulpit in his hearing. This layman and this minister I am unwilling to accept as characteristic of our Church. I know some glowing exceptions, at any rate.

Of this I am sure, however, absolutely sure: We shall never build up our college or our beloved Church while our membership assumes this indifferent attitude.

The Methodist Church is large. It is growing. The Christian Church is the typical American church. It guarantees in the realm of the Christian life the same principles of liberty and equality our government guarantees in civil life. Yet our Church is smaller today in America than it was in 1860. Does anybody know why? Perhaps Governor West will tell us. Perhaps some fine layman with a son or daughter to send to college and who sends to some other college can tell us.

No, I am not pessimistic. I recently talked with Brother P. J. Carlton, Richmond, Virginia, Elon's latest addition to the trusteeship, a man with a world-vision. I am far from pessimistic. Beloved, is a democratic church able to be loyal?—that's the question. And each individual member must answer for himself. What shall your answer be? And remember the future of our Church depends on your answer.

W. A. HARPER.

THE UNKNOWN FUTURE

That part of our existence which has our greatest interest and invites our keenest hopes and fears is the part that appears the most inscrutable. Even the heedless hope for to-morrow, the indifferent think of it, and the prudent plan for it. We all would like to know what it has in store for us; yet our vision fails, and conjecture takes the place of assurance.

A wise Providence conceals the future for our good. Death, the earthly end of things, is there. If we could know when it is to come we might amend our heedless ways, make prudent preparations, and meet it better than we probably shall. But what would life be, tortured by the stern knowledge that on a certain day it must end?

In the forward movement of the different denominations, planning for the future welfare of the church, after mature thought, meditation and prayer, conceived the idea to put on a drive for greater financial assistance. Meetings were held, plans made, committees appointed, and the work began enthusiastically. The committees worked unceasingly and heroically till the goal was reached and the glad shouts were heard from every one, "Over the top!"

After the storm, then the calm. We subscribed liberally, we did our part faithfully, to make the drive a success, our consciences are at ease, yet we have failed to meet these obligations. Hard times, stringency of money is the pitiful excuse we offer, but the real cause is indifference, lack of interest and activity on the part of those entrusted with the collections and those who subscribed. This is a voluntary debt, an obligation, a free-will offering, a pledge to the church and to the church's God. We cannot afford to lie to God. If we fail to make a faithful effort, we may witness a scene which will remind us of the awful mistake of Ananias and Sapphira.

COLLEGE MONTH

It was my pleasure to attend the session of the Southern Christian Convention held at Suffolk, Virginia, last May, and listen to the debates on the many important questions vital to our denomination's life.

It strikes me now that the time spent in discussing these questions was not always in proportion to their importance. If I remember correctly, not much time was spent on the floor of the Convention on the College Month proposition. In fact, the matter was disposed of so quickly that, I believe, the majority present failed to realize its far-reaching importance. Now, as I look back on the work done at Suffolk, I am convinced that the action of the Convention in making June College Month for the churches was one of the most important things accomplished at the Convention.

For many years we have needed some way of focusing the attention of the Christian Church upon our church school. We have suffered for the lack of a systematic plan that would bring to the minds of our scattered constituency the inter-relationship of church and church school. We do not yet fully realize how dependent the church is upon the church school for leadership. Nor do we seem to understand to what extent the church school must rely upon the denomination for supplying the raw material out of which leaders can be made. Our people, I fear, have been allowed to think of Elon as something far away and detached and having no vital relationship to their own local church.

If our denomination is to grow we must have more trained leaders. The records show that we cannot depend upon outside sources. The only source that can be depended upon with certainty is our own church school. One has only to consult the Ministerial Directory or visit our most progressive churches to verify this fact.

Last May at Suffolk the Board of Education recommended a plan which, if followed up, will go a long way toward giving our people the correct idea as to the status of our church school. The Board recommended that June be made College Month. The Convention approved and adopted this plan. Now the responsibility of putting this plan into operation rests upon all who are interested in the future of our denomination.

FAMILY WORSHIP—DAY BY DAY

By Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, D. D., in the Alliance Weekly

Sunday

"No man shall come up with thee." (Exodus 34:3).

In every instance the man who prevails in prayer is the man who is alone as he prays with God. Abraham leaves Sarah behind when he pleads with Him for Sodom. Moses is by himself when near the bush in the wilderness. Joshua is alone when Christ comes to him as an armed man. Gideon and Jephthah are alone when commissioned to save Israel. Elijah raises a child from the dead, and Elisha does the same, and in each case not even the mother came in while the prophet, alone with God, asks and receives. So of Ezekiel, so of Daniel.

Although others were present, Saul, journeying to Damascus, is alone with Christ, after that He reveals Himself to him. Cornelius is praying by himself when the angel flashes upon his solitude; nor is anyone with Peter upon the housetop when he is being prepared to go to the Gentiles for the first time. John the Baptist is alone in the wilderness; and John the Apostle is alone in Patmos when nearest God. It is when alone under his fig-tree in prayer that Jesus sees Nathaniel. All religious biography testifies to what Christ means when He says, "And thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly."

"Give me neither poverty nor riches. Feed me with food convenient for me." (Proverbs 30:9.)

If it be God's will, I would be free from the temptations of want. I dare not ask for wealth with its temptations. Tomorrow may never come for me; I must not be careful for it, or boast myself of it, by asking for hoards to lay up. I pray not for encouragement to sloth, but for power to work, and for a blessing upon diligence. If I am idle, this prayer is presumption. When I pray for the daily support of my soul's need, I do not look for it to come by special miracle; I must seek it in the way of faith and obedience, in the careful use of the means by which Christ gives knowledge and grace. I cannot ask daily provision for myself, and be careless how others fare. If I am selfish, this prayer is mockery. When I plead with my Father for His children, whose souls and bodies want, I bind myself to show, by what I do, that I mean what I say. I pray that I may receive, as part of my Father's bounty, a spirit of love, leading me to impart freely to my brethren.

Tuesday

"If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." (John 13:8.)

These words require us to believe that the Lord Jesus Christ is not more intent upon the salvation of a soul than He is upon its sanctification. The prayer, "Lord, save, or I perish!" has not more power to touch the sensibilities of heaven than the prayer: "Make me perfect to do Thy will." Faith in Christ is as truly sanctifying as it is saving. According to our faith it is unto us. If our faith takes Him to be our sanctification, He is that to us. In one sentence, He is to us exactly what our faith takes Him to be. The same Jesus Who bore our sins in His own body on the tree, here presents Himself in the capacity of Purifier, and says: "If I wash thee not thou hast no part with Me." If there be any union, any commerce, between Christ and ourselves, it is in the way of Sanctification. If I refuse to accept Him as my Sanctification, I have no part with Christ.

My dying Saviour, and my God,
Fountain for guilt and sin,
Sprinkle me ever with thy blood,
And cleanse, and keep me clean.
Wash me, and make me thus Thine own.
Wash me, and mine thou art,
Wash me, but not my feet alone,
My hands, my head, my heart.

Wednesday

"If any man stumbleth not in word he is a perfect man, able to bridle the whole body also." (James 3:2 R. V.)

According to the Apostle James, stumbling not in word is the supreme work of a "perfect" or "complete" spiritual man. The present is a sifting time for all the children of God in every degree in the spiritual life. Hasty, unloving, ungenerous words cannot be co-existent with the deep knowledge of God of the truly spiritual man. To "stumble not" in word has much to do with our power in prayer and with our abiding in the secret place, within the veil. If the Adversary can draw us out of the hidden place into the strife of tongues he will do it. The Apostle asks in verse 11, "Doth the fountain send forth from the same opening sweet water and bitter?" We cannot speak "bitter words" one moment and in the next be a channel for the sweet, pure stream of the "river of water of life." "Set a watch, O Lord, at the door of my lips."

Thursday

"Let Me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them." (Exodus 32:10.)

When God threatened to consume Israel because they had proved themselves to be stiff-necked and idolatrous, God confesses to the enormous power which the intercessions of His servant Moses had over Him. "Let me alone!" He cries. "Remove this barrier between Me and this people, and I will consume them and make of thee a great nation!" How wonderful that the Almighty One should be prevented, held back, bound fast by the prayers of Moses! What an astonishing thought! It is in the power of a man to let God go or to hold Him back. How faintly we realize the power God has given us with Himself. Moses reminds God of His chosen servants; and of His covenant with them, and he not only lays hold of God, but he prevails against Him and overcomes Him (verse 13). This Almighty One gives Himself into our hands today. When a man lays hold of God's chastening rod and cries: "Hold! Spare me! Be merciful! I plead in the name of Thy Beloved Son; what I ask He also asks; Thou hast never refused Him anything, therefore hear Thou Him; I have Thee, I will hold Thee, I will not let Thee go." Then the prayer of faith in the Name of Jesus prevails.

"The field is the world." (Matthew 13:38.) "The whole creation groaneth." (Romans 8:22.)

The King claims proprietorship of "the whole creation." That which is indicated by this phrase is that which was also in the mind of the King when He said "the field is the world." The whole creation, every form of life, every condition of being, every part of the great whole belongs to the Son of Man. The creation is His field, and if it be true that there is suffering throughout all the cosmos let us never forget that this field of the world is His, and it is waiting for the sowing of the good seed which is to produce the harvest of the Kingdom. I never feel that I am engaged, even under the leadership of Christ, in attempting to wrest something from one to whom it belongs. Our toil and conflict are directed rather towards bringing back to the rightful owner that which belongs to Him. Everything belongs to Him, mountains and valleys, continents and countries, beasts and birds, flowers and fruits, and men of all kindreds and tribes and nations. The devil is a squatter, and a squatter is a man who settles on land he has no right to, and works for it for his own advantage. That expresses the whole truth concerning the devil.—Dr. G. Campbell Morgan.

Saturday

"Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth." (Revelations 16:15.)

"A deep lethargy seems to settle upon God's people in regard to what should be their inspiring expectancy. The world is so near and so very real that it is easy to be taken up with its tasks and toys, its pursuits and pleasures until their glamour pales the star of hope, and their voices drown the message of warning. A false and unbelieving idea of permanence subtly pervades the minds of many of Christ's people, and like a deadly miasma, it paralyzes their energies. They do not really believe in the possible nearness of His return. Hence they are not eagerly warning and laying hold of the unsaved, while yet opportunity for such service remains. And yet Christ has made it as plain as He can, that the quietness and swiftness of a thief who gives no warning of His approach, is the way in which one day He will come. Supposing it were today! Are we ready to meet and go with Him? Or should we be ashamed for Him to find us at the occupation which now gets most of our time, our thought, our strength?—Dr. J. Stuart Holden.

We honor them that would exalt Jesus Christ; but the conception of how to exalt Him seems very childish in some instances, as when they would accentuate the contrast between Him and His disciples by declaring that we cannot be saved from all sin in this life, and that we give him his rightful place only as we acknowledge our incurable defilement; that to profess holiness or confess its feasibility is to make ourselves His dependents. We know of no one who reduces his humility to these terms exactly, but this is the logic of that view which would have us honor Christ by reckoning ourselves incurably sinful.—Selected.

HOME

The walls of a house may be builded of wood,
Its foundations, of brick or of stone;
But a genuine home is an exquisite thing,
For its builded of heart throbs alone.
The price of a house may be reckoned at once
And paid with a handful of gold;
But the price of a home very few can compute,
And that price they have never yet told.
The rooms of a house may be stately and grand,
Their adornment, a triumph of art;
But the beauty of home is the final result
Of the toil of an unselfish heart.
A house may be burned, may be sold or exchanged,
Nor the loss of one's peace interfere;
But the loss of a home—how it crushes the heart!
For our homes we all love and revere.
Of houses a man may possess many scores
Yet his property lead to despair;
But an honorable man in a home of his own,
Must be counted a true millionaire.

DIVINE REVELATION

The absolute necessity of a divine revelation is sufficiently established. If God be the sole Fountain of Light and Truth, all knowledge must be derived from Him. "The spirit of a man may know the things of a man; but the Spirit of God can alone know and teach the things of God." That is, the human intellect, in its ordinary power and operation, is sufficient to comprehend the various earthly things that concern man's sustenance and welfare in social life; but this intellect cannot fathom the things of God; it cannot find out the mind of the Most High; it knows not His will; it has no just idea of the end for which man was made; of that in which his best interests lie; of its own nature; of the nature of moral good and evil; how to avoid the latter, and how to attain the former, in which true happiness, or the supreme good, consists; and these things it is the province of divine revelation to teach, for they never have been taught or conceived by man.

How unspeakably we are indebted to God for giving us a revelation of His will and of His works! Is it possible to know the mind of God but from Himself? It is impossible. Can those things and services which are worthy of, and pleasing to an infinitely pure, perfect, and holy Spirit, be ever found out by reasoning and conjecture? Never; for the Spirit of God alone can know the mind of God; and by this Spirit He has revealed Himself to man, and in this revelation He has taught him, not only to know the glories and perfections of the Creator, but also his own origin, duty, and interest. Thus far it was essentially necessary that God should reveal His WILL; but if He had not given a revelation of His works, the origin, constitution, and nature of the universe could never have been adequately known. The world by wisdom knew not God. This is demonstrated by the writings of the most learned and intelligent heathens. They had no just, no rational notion of the origin and design of the universe. Moses alone, of all ancient writers, gives a consistent and rational account of the creation; an account which has been confirmed by the investigations of the most accurate philosophers.—Dr. Adam Clark.

FROM OTHER SANCTUMS

There is a place where thou canst touch the eyes
 Of blinded men to instant perfect sight;
 There is a place where thou canst say "Arise"
 To dying captives bound in chains of might;
 There is a place where thou canst reach the store
 Of hoarded gold and free it for the Lord;
 There is a place upon some distant shore
 Where thou canst send the worker or the word.
 There is a place where God's resistless power
 Responsive moves to thine insistent plea.
 There is a place—a simple trusting place
 Where God Himself descends and fights for thee, Where is that blessed place? Dost thou ask where?
 O, soul, it is the secret place of prayer.

Aristotle said: "No great genius was ever without some admixture of madness." On the other hand, no great genius was ever aware of his madness. "I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness," said Paul, the greatest genius of the Christian Church. The genius who is aware of his madness is not a genius, just as the saint who is aware of the halo about his head is not a saint. "Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone."—Selected.

God means for us to study circumstances in connection with His guidance, but circumstances alone are not sufficient. They must be read in the light of God's Word and in the leading of the Holy Spirit. Otherwise they may lead us far astray from His will. In teaching the recent Jonah lesson to the Washington Square Bible Class of Philadelphia, Mr. Paul Cell, of the National Bible Institute of Philadelphia, said: "See how circumstances concurred for His convenience which at first he may have believed were from the Lord. First was his desire for Tarshish, then when he reached Joppa there was a boat docked waiting to sail somewhere—yea, even to Tarshish. Then he discovered that he had the fare, and again that he could secure passage, and, most striking of all, he had rest and quietness, because we find him sleeping." The trouble was that Jonah did not study his circumstances in the light of God's direct word to him, "Arise, go to Nineveh." It is a very serious mistake, which all of us will discover as did Jonah, if we merely allow the wish to be father to the thought in deciding how and when we shall serve God.—Sunday School Times.

One of the clubs with which we break the Ten Commandments is the tongue. Dean Rugh of the Philadelphia branch of the National Bible Institute was asked by one of his pupils: "What does this mean in Hebrews 13:5, 'Let your conversation be without covetousness'?" And Mr. Rugh's reply was something like this: "I wish I had a million dollars"; "I wish I lived in a brownstone front"; "I wish my Mary could have as fine Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes as Mrs. Jones' Kate"; "I wish my husband had enough money to hire a cook and a maid"; "I wish I could have a six-cylinder like Smith"; "I wish I had that government job of the man just above me in the department"—"I wish, I wish, I wish." Idle wishing is quite a different thing from praying to God to supply our real needs. Dare we say that such "conversations" are without "covetousness"? Oh, but you say, that word "conversation" means "walk." Well, our talk is the mouthpiece of our walk. If our speech is poisoned in this way, a good antidote is available in a new expression of gratitude for the countless blessings that we really have.—Sunday School Times.

Christian Endeavor societies are putting fresh life and vigor into the churches and institutions of Madagascar. The present number of Christian Endeavorers in the island is 14,201. Recruits for church membership come largely through the Endeavor societies, six churches reporting that 153 out of 197 accessions were from the Christian Endeavor organizations. The members are encouraged to take up definite work, and in the Betsileo several of the societies support evangelists and teachers. A missionary with forty-two years' experience in Madagascar writes: "In the movements we have recently witnessed toward Christianity we have been thankful for the Christian Endeavor societies, and too much stress cannot be laid upon their importance."—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Speaking of the fact that in nearly every college are groups of fine young people who are dedicating their lives to the most genuine Christian service, we note that in each of eleven colleges in New England groups of students have undertaken the annual support of some important foreign missionary enterprise. A number of colleges thus support one of their own students in the foreign field. Such facts are largely ignored by that element in the Church today that is so severely criticizing the theology of our higher institutions of learning.—Exchange.

The annual report of the American Bible Society just completed shows the largest circulation of Bibles by that organization since the high levels of the war period—4,855,464 volumes being distributed, more than a million in excess of last year's record. The largest increase is shown in China, where 2,362,730 were circulated. From Japan, the Near East, and all of Latin America, there has come an increased demand so great that the Society has been unable to meet it.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

The urgent need, the holy hymn,
 With these all time is filled,
 The altar light is never dim,
 The prayer is never stilled.

Thy Kingdom come! Thy will be done!
 The watchman keep their tryst:
 Not one, but all hours, thou hast won
 The world to thee, O Christ!

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON, JULY 2, 1922

Ezekiel, The Watchman of Israel. Ezek. 2:1—3:27

Golden Text: "Seek ye Jehovah while He may be found; call ye upon Him while he is near; let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto Jehovah, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon."—Isaiah 55:6-7.

Lesson Thoughts:

Ezekiel is the third of the greater prophets, so-called because of their great spiritual power. For twenty-two years at least his work continued as he faithfully acted as "watchman" to warn them of the consequences of sin. In this lesson he sees a vision and hears his call. He faces a hard task, the great demand of which is faithfulness to duty. The same call comes to God's servants to-day, to bear His message. The work is in our hands, the results in His.

"Take heed to thyself and thy teaching. Continue in these things; for in doing this thou shalt save both thyself and them that hear thee." (1 Timothy 4:16.)

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC, JULY 2, 1922.

Better Praying.—Matt. 7:7-11.

(Consecration Meeting)

Seven Conditions of Better Prayers:

1. Penitance.—Psalm 66:18.
2. Forgiveness.—Mark 11:25.
3. Unselfish Motives.—James 4:3.
4. Preseverance.—Luke 18:1-8.
5. Faith.—Mark 11:24.
6. According to the Will of God.—I John 5:1-4.
7. In Jesus's Name.—John 16:23-24.

Seven Great Promises:

Mark 9:23; Isa. 65:24; Phil. 4:19; John 15:7; Phil. 4:6; Eph. 3:20; Matt. 18:19.

Real prayer is the most intense act that a man can perform. More important than the most earnest thinking upon a problem; more important than a personal interview to influence an individual; more important than addressing and swaying an audience; far more important than these and any other forms of activity is the act of coming into vital communion with the great God of the Universe and wielding the forces of the prayer kingdom.—John R. Mott.

"ALL DRESSED UP AND SOMEWHERE TO GO"

If you have never heard the joke, "All dressed up and nowhere to go," you will profit by asking Dr. Atkinson to explain this joke to you at the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, which meets this year at Liberty (Vance) near Henderson, N. C., the second week in July, opening Tuesday evening, the 11th, and closing Thursday afternoon, the 13th. You see, I can always depend on the Doctor being present at these conventions, and I am sure that it will be a pleasure for him to expostulate the whys and wherefores of the above joke.

Now, what I want to say to you is that you have somewhere to go the second week in July, and it is just as much your duty to be there as it is mine; and the question is, are you dressed for the occasion? Is the report going up from your Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society satisfactory to you and ready for tabulation? Is your departmental report ready for the Convention and the press? Have you made your business arrangements to be away from home these two or three days? Have you dressed down that talk or speech, so that you can start and stop on time? Are you fully dressed?

The stage is set for a great Convention, the program carries some excellent speakers, and we are assured by the chairman of the Music Committee that this part of the program will be fine also, and we do not want you to miss it.

We are going to expect more pastors, superintendents and delegates this year to be present and take part in the work of the Convention than ever before. The good people of Liberty are making great preparations, really dressing up in grand style for this occasion. Will you disappoint them? Are you fully dressed? If so you are to be congratulated. If not, let's put on our best suit of enthusiasm, bewitching smiles, and polish up with the oil of sunshine, right now, for the biggest and best Convention ever.

C. H. STEPHENSON, President,

Then you will be met at train, if necessary, and entertainment will be arranged for you. I will meet all trains on the Seaboard Air Line and Southern July 11 from 12 M.

To share in Christ's Kingdom, even by faithfully praying for its coming, is glory indeed for a human soul. But when to aspiration we are privileged to add an actual partnership with the King in bringing in the good day of His reign—this is life's supreme dignity. The King counts on our loyalty, on our initiative, on our unselfish service to help him cast out evil from the race, and spread justice, mercy, peace, and brotherliness in all the earth.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

TWO LETTERS AND MORE

In behalf of the Mission Board, the Secretary recently sent a letter to the Captain in every congregation of the Convention advising them of the action of the recent Convention in placing the Men and Millions Movement in the hands of the Mission Board, and assured the Captains that the Board was ready to do all in its power to help them carry to completion the great work of the Movement so well begun. The responses to these letters are most gratifying indeed. The Secretary has seen in person since the Convention a very large per cent of the pastors and quite a few of the Captains, all of whom say that they believe a great part of the pledges will be paid and the work of the Movement will go forward just as soon as business conditions improve sufficiently to allow the same. That readers of THE SUN may get the individual opinion that seems to prevail, I am selecting two letters from my morning mail which are typical, I think, of all those received thus far, and show far better than I can possibly hope to do the spirit that prevails among the Captains and in the churches relative to the Movement. I know these two brethren never dreamed that their letters would go to print, but I feel that they will pardon me, since theirs represents the general trend of those being received from all directions. I select the two following:

"News Ferry, Va., June 19, 1922. DEAR DR. ATKINSON: Replying to yours of a recent date relative to the Men and Millions Movement, will say that on account of bad crops for the last two or three years, especially in this section, we decided it was useless to try to make any special effort to do any collecting just now, but think if everything keeps favorable till fall we might do some good work along this line. I believe it is the aim of those who subscribed to this fund to pay, but we all know that we have to possess before we can pay.

"Now if it is the wish of the Board for me to see or write these parties, of course I will go at the job.

With very best wishes, I am, Yours sincerely, P. W. FARMER."

"DEAR DR. ATKINSON: I am in receipt of your communication of June 9 regarding the work of the Men and Millions Movement having been placed in the care of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention. I wish to express here my appreciation of your promised help in any way I think best for the good of the movement in this section. In reply I do not know what to suggest. My heart is in the work, and I would sacrifice any reasonable amount of time or means to bring about a full and complete response of our people to this fund. In April I sent out notification blanks to all who have pledged that are under my watch care, and I received $85 in response. Also I made a short talk in our church telling our people of the little we had accomplished during the second year, and urged them to respond as early as possible. The first year my church (Berea, Norfolk) paid in 57 per cent of the amount pledged, and 58 per cent of the pledgers responded. Last year (the second year) only 24 per cent of the yearly amount was received and 16 2-3 per cent of pledgers came to our rescue. I feel it needless to distribute envelopes at this time among our members, as it would incur some expense with very little or no results. I have the utmost confidence in some of my friends who, I believe, will pay every penny pledged, but they will have to be given time. One that pledged $60 a year for the five years gave me his check in July, 1921, for the whole amount for the first year, but has given nothing for the second year. Yet he told me a few days ago that, the Lord helping him, he intended to pay every dollar, and I believe he will. We have others as loyal. I believe if we had someone whose soul is on fire for the good work of this movement and who could come into this community and speak out his heart yearnings for the fulfillment of all pledges for this great, grand, glorious movement, we might accomplish a great deal more than we will otherwise do.

"If you, dear Doctor Atkinson, can sometime in the near future come this way and give us a little of your time, please let me know of it and I will have it announced and try to get our people together and give you a hearty welcome. Yours in His service, M. W. HOLLOWELL. June 18, 1922."

GROUP MEETING OF PASTORS

By request of the Mission Board there was a meeting at the First Christian church, Raleigh, N. C., June 19, 1922, of ministers accessible to Raleigh for the purpose of considering the follow-up work of the Men and Millions Movement. Those present were Revs. D. A. Long, J. O. Atkinson, R. L. Williamson, Stanley C. Harrell, J. Lee Johnson, B. J. Howard, J. E. Franks, J. V. Knight. Prayer led by Dr. D. A. Long. Purpose of the meeting was stated by Dr. Atkinson as follows: (1) To express his feeling relative to the Men and Millions Movement. (2) To receive an expression from the pastors present relative to the movement and how he should go about his work with the pastors in carrying to completion the work begun. Dr. Atkinson placed before the ministers as his chief idea that our great need in this work was and is co-operation. That the matter, after all, is with the pastors and the churches they serve. Because here is the center of the working of any campaign, and the two chief ideals in this movement were evangelism and finance. He further stated that the chief aim is to get the whole church behind the whole problem of Kingdom service. We are to collect the pledges made to Men and Millions and so discharge our moral and spiritual obligations.

Dr. Long introduced the following: Resolved: That we, a part of the pastors within the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention, heartily approve of the action taken at our Convention in placing the collection of unpaid pledges to Men and Millions Movement in the hands of the Mission Board. Resolved, second: That we will do what we can to induce all who have made pledges to fulfill their promises. Third: That we will co-operate with the Mission Board in trying to perpetuate and enlarge the scope of the movement, in order that we may lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes of our denominational enterprises. We believe that the giving of all gifts for religious purposes should sweetly blend with our songs of praise of redeeming love.

There was a free and frank discussion by every pastor present. Every pastor gave assurance that he was doing, and would do, what he could to co-operate in the Movement, and that he believed his people would pay, for the most part, as rapidly and as promptly as depressed financial conditions would allow. The resolutions offered by Dr. Long after full discussion were unanimously adopted. Meeting adjourned after prayer by Rev. George W. Avent.

THE WHY AND HOW OF MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

THE Church is the greatest institution in the world. The Sunday school is the greatest organization of the Church. The missionary enterprise is the greatest movement of the church and Sunday school.

The present missionary situation is a supreme challenge to the Sunday school. The world today lies open to the proclamation of the gospel message. The people of the whole wide world are accessible to the glad tidings of great joy. There are no barriers that cannot be overcome in this present day. The missionaries have mastered the major languages of all the various nationalities. The gospel has been translated into all languages. Great things have been accomplished—in many lands there are Christian communities and much is being done by the native Christians—but the greatest challenge of missions to the Sunday school is to be found in the cries which everywhere confront the Christian Church in the unevangelized lands. In spite of the successes that have attended the labor of the missionaries in the past decades, it is now apparent that the church has as yet scarcely begun to evangelize the world. We cannot find words strong enough to convey an adequate idea of the crucial nature of the present situation. The ease of travel, the modern means of communication, the growth of democracy, the distrust of authority—all show most surely that there is a great awakening the whole wide world around. What is to be done for the world in a Christian way must be done quickly. For old faiths are passing away—and all faiths are to become Christian now or never. It is Christ now, or never, so far as the present generation is concerned. Our greatest obligation is to the people living, and our children shall care for the generations yet unborn.

In the Sunday schools of today there are youths who are eager to go as heralds of the Cross of Christ. Many of these youths walk with leaden feet on spiritless errands, whereas they would fly with winged feet to fulfill the great commission of their Lord. They do not lack devotion—they lack knowledge, the definite knowledge of the world and its needs. The evangelization of the world waits alone upon the willingness of the workers in the Sunday schools. For among the Sunday school scholars of to-day are the missionaries of to-morrow. The world will be evangelized in that generation in which the Christian teachers of its youth determine that it shall be done. Shall it not be in this generation? Shall the heathen wait longer for the knowledge of Him who gave His life for them?

The first step in the program of missions in the Sunday school is to form a small group of leaders into a missionary organization. This may or may not take the form of a missionary society. The purpose of this organization is to direct the mission work of the school. To envelope the whole school in such an effective atmosphere of missions as shall most surely encourage the finer growth of missionary interests. The missionary leaders should be eager to advance all plans which have for their object the leading of any man to accept Jesus Christ as his personal Savior.

There are several ways to teach missions in the Sunday school. The reading of a letter from a missionary in the Sunday school led James Chalmers to dedicate his life to missions in New Guinea. The opening period of worship in the school offers an occasion of rare value for missionary instruction. The scripture reading in each Sunday's program affords opportunity to drill the school on the missionary selections of the Bible. A missionary map drill locating the principal mission stations is exceedingly profitable. The posting on the bulletin board of missionary news in current events; the hanging of charts and posters before the school; the display of pictures, curios and objects, all have educational value. The names of the Cradle Roll members can be secured for membership in the Little Light Bearers, and through this missionary approach, a missionary atmosphere may be thrown around the child in the home. A good way to interest the adult members of the Sunday school in missions is to form a mission study class and study some books on missions.

Strive to create a missionary atmosphere in the Sunday school. It is most important—just as it is impossible for the body to live without air, it is impossible for the missionary interest to live without missionary atmosphere.

To teach the children to give, devote the collection of one Sunday a month to missions and impress upon the children the fact that the money they bring on that day goes to the little heathen children.

Last but by no means least, pray for missions. Have one prayer each Sunday for the missionaries and their great work.

ELSIE KELLEY.

Jonesboro, N. C.

That religion is a human thing within reach of everybody is a fact that Phariseism and Sacerdotalism will not allow. The result of Phariseism is to put religion out of the reach of the people; the result of Sacerdotalism in mediating religion is to bring to itself many selfish and highly esteemed advantages. Against all this Jesus set himself with the impact of his Divine personality. Hence common people heard him gladly and sinners flocked to his holy presence.—Exchange.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

The continued rains have hindered us very much in our farm work. We have done our best between the rains and have finally succeeded in getting our corn crop planted. It is hard to tell which grows the faster, the corn or the grass. The ground keeps so wet that we can plow it very little. We still have about twenty acres of land to break and plant in soy beans. At this writing, June 20, we are rained out again, but we look for bright sunshine after the cloud.

Our friend are good to us and we are grateful indeed. The Ladies' Aid Society of the Pleasant Grove Christian church, Virginia, shipped us thirty dozen eggs a few weeks ago and the children enjoyed them very much. How often could our little children be made happy if our good women, and especially our Ladies' Aid Societies, would ask each member for a dozen or two eggs and make up a crate and ship to us. It would not cost any one but a small item, but many societies making this contribution would be a wonderful help to us. Who will follow in the good deed of the Pleasant Grove ladies?

Our good friend, Joe C. McAdams, Elon College, N. C., made us a donation of two bolts, 100 yards, of nice ginghams for the children's dresses. Mrs. E. L. Moffitt, Asheboro, N. C., sent to us by parcel post a package containing ready-made garments for the little girls.

The Robertson Fertilizer Manufacturers shipped us five bags of fertilizer to help us in getting out our crop. All these contributions help us very much, and we are grateful to those who had a part.

We have mailed a letter to the secretary of each Sunday school not now making a monthly contribution toward the support of the Orphanage. If your Sunday school is not making a monthly offering, I trust you will begin now. We depend largely, during the summer months, on the monthly Sunday school offerings for our support. At this season of the year we do not have many special offerings to help us tide over the summer months, and I want to insist that your school help us.

We have eighty-five little children to feed, clothe, and care for. It takes quite a good deal to do it. When our expense account runs more than our income it makes us feel that we are forgotten. We are supported entirely by charity. It is a work of love. It is lending a helping hand to the helpless. It is giving a home to the homeless. These children may not be from your home community, but they are your neighbor's children. It is an opportunity you have of helping the helpless in their distress. I want to ask you, dear reader, to insist that your Sunday school makes a monthly offering to help us in this work.

THUNDER PEALS

When thou art turned again, capitalize thy backslidings and errors, and save some other foolish souls from an expensive career from which they may not so fortunately return.

Of the five Bible backsliders, Saul, David, Solomon, Judas and Peter, we are only assured that two returned. Of the rest a sad wail seems to say, they had better not have been born.

"There is time enough yet," says the devil, till he draws you far out on his hellward road. Then he turns and drives you with a verdict that you have crossed the deadline and it is now forever too late.

Depraved men outdo the devil. It is Satan's policy to keep prodigals out of the pig pen, lest they should see themselves and return to God.

When eternity raises its curtain we shall see that anywhere outside of heaven is hell. That which keeps a man out of heaven puts him in hell.

It is little loss to Satan for you to lead a useful life, preach a mighty gospel, or build a great influence, if in life's evening he can put wheels in your head and vitrol in your soul and make you a liability to the cause you served.

It is sunset, but there is no evening star, when the soul ceases to battle against temptation and surrenders itself to sin. The chance of retrieving is governed by the light sinned against.

There are just two systems of religion in the world; the one that has a binding moral standard and promises deliverance from sin, and the one that does not. The latter, under every sky, is heathen.

A repentance that cauterizes all the sin of your life will be followed by great restfulness, and comfort as sweet as the cooing of angels.

"A truly awakened heart" is one on which God writes hatred for sin and love for service. God's law is a romance for him, and God's call is music to his ears. —Way of Faith.

CALLED HOME

SMALL—Mary Bet Small, was born February 3, 1904, and died May 12, 1922. She was the wife of Ervin Small, and the daughter of Mr. James S. and Mrs. Mattie Foster. She was a member of Long's chapel Christian church. The funeral was conducted by her pastor, the writer, and her remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. May the Lord let His blessings rest upon the bereaved ones.

J. F. APPLE.

HINTON—Sadie E. Hinton, daughter of E. D. and Martha E. Jones, was born October 15, 1881 and died May 23, 1922. Age 40 years, seven months and eight days. November 13, 1904, she married W. E. Hinton, of Semora, N. C., who survives her, with eight children. The children are Clair, Elizabeth, Annie, Rassie, Clarence, Claude, Pauline and William. Eva Mae died when one year of age. She also leaves three sisters and two brothers.

At the age of twelve, sister Hinton united with Bethel Hill Church in Person County, N. C. She was educated at Bethel Hill Academy and Oxford Seminary and taught school for five years.

As a girl in her father's home she was obedient and faithful. As a teacher a splendid success, and there was no wife more faithful nor mother more devoted and self-sacrificing. During her entire Christian life her faithful piety impressed and influenced others. Her last year on earth was one of much affliction of body, but she bore suffering as only a true follower of Jesus can. Two days before her translation she talked freely to her family about leaving them, asking them to meet her in heaven. The funeral was at Lebanon church, May 24, conducted by the writer and assisted by Revs. Clayton and Beam, and the burial in the church cemetery.

C. E. NEWMAN.

CAHOON—Audrey Fay Cahoon, died June 1, 1922, aged two years, eight months and seven days. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Cahoon, 816 Duke Street, Portsmouth, Va. Afflicted from birth yet she was an appealing child and easily and quickly won her way to the hearts of her loved ones and friends. In wisdom which we may not now be able to understand, God took this tender plant and transferred her to the Heavenly Garden.

The funeral service was conducted at the home, June 3, by the writer, pastor of her parents, and the body was laid to rest in Oak Grove cemetery, Portsmouth, Va., to wait the resurrection morning.

ELISHA BRADSHAW.

WILKINS—Mrs. Sarah Wilkins was born August 6, 1848, and died June 2, 1922. Age 73 years nine months and twenty-six days. Her maiden name was Sydnor.

When young she united with the church. December 25, 1883, she married Mr. Frank Wilkins of Halifax County, Virginia, who survives her together with one son, Thomas A. Wilkins. She leaves one brother, William A. Sydnor, of Chase City, Va., and two sisters, Mrs. R. F. Tuck and Miss Belle Sydnor of Virgilina, Va.

It has been my privilege in recent years to visit occasionally the home of Sister Wilkins and her deep piety impressed me. In the church I have seen her rejoicing because of Christian joy in her soul. For several years she suffered from paralysis, but as the body weakened, the spirit ripened and strengthened for heaven.

My sympathy and prayers are with the family, especially the son and the aged husband who is a true servant of God.

C. E. NEWMAN.

SEAWELL—Brother James Robert Seawell was born September 17, 1887, and departed this life June 7, 1922, age 34 years, nine months, and 28 days. He leaves to mourn their loss a devoted wife and two dear little children, a loving mother and six devoted brothers, two affectionate sisters, all wait to see him again in the glory land.

He was a member of Damascus Christian church, Gates County, N. C. He has always taken an active part in the work of the church from his early boyhood days. The church militant has lost a loyal and devoted servant, but the church triumphant has gained a shining trophy. He is not dead; he liveth in the eternal City, where God and the Angels are. We shall see him some sweet day if we walk in the light. Funeral was conducted in the presence of a large gathering of sorrowing friends and loved ones.

IRA S. HARRELL.

TUCK—Mrs. Mary Carter Tuck, daughter of David I. and Elizabeth Whitt Tuck, was born in Halifax County, Virginia. October 5, 1845, and died on June 8, 1922. Age 76 years, 8 months, and 3 days. Her parents died when she was young and she together with her brothers David and John were reared by her guardian and uncle, Captian Richard Tuck. More than sixty years ago she professed faith in Christ and united with Union Christian church where she remained a loyal member till death.

Her first marriage was to Jechenias Overby. Two sons were born to them, David Thomas and John Wilburn. The latter survives her. Mr. Overby died in the Civil war.

About the year 1870 her second marriage was to James Robert Tuck who died in 1910. There were six children to this marriage: Mary Gertrude, Mrs. Myrtle Wall and Luther are living. Willie Polard died in infancy. James Kemper reached manhood, dying in 1913. Elizabeth Clay married Thomas Tuck and died in 1904. There are nine grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. A true Christian and one who lived a useful life has gone to reap the reward of the faithful.

C. E. NEWMAN.

CRABTREE—Sister Elizabeth Crabtree, departed this life June 15, 1922, in her seventy-sixth year. She leaves to mourn their loss, 7 children, 4 sons and 3 daughters. Sister Crabtree's health had been on the decline for some time. She had been a consistent member of the Christian church at Damascus near Chapel Hill, N. C. for many years, and was much beloved. She has been a good and faithful mother. She has 38 grandchildren 35 of this number are living, she also has 3 great-grandchildren. The funeral and burial was largely attended. Her body was laid to rest in the Damascus Cemetery. The Crabtree family was known to be a very affectionate one and she will be greatly missed by her children, and I truly hope they can turn to the words of the Poet and take comfort:

Here our loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.”

The funeral and burial services by the writer and pastor.

P. T. KLAPP.

Years ago, after Mark Twain had been introduced to many kings and queens, to say nothing of dukes and earls, he was introduced to the German Kaiser. When he came home, his little daughter, commenting on it, said, “Pretty soon you will know everybody but God, won't you, Papa?” All other friendships are poor, indeed, beside the fellowship of the Elder Brother, and the fellowships which make that impossible will pauperize and ruin the soul.—C. MISCELLANEOUS

In my reading somewhere I once found the beautiful story of a wondrous stream which possessed the rare power of making white everything that came in touch with its waters. The little pebbles in the bottom of the channel were perfectly white. The flowers that ornamented its banks and sometimes kissed its surface were white as snow. The birds which loved its cool shades and bathed in its waters came forth from their baptism with a ray of light. And a bar of iron, left for a time in its bosom, became as a bar of finest silver. All of this was because of peculiar mineral qualities found in the source from which it flowed. So of the heart, from which flow the issues of life. If we have Christ, the great Alchemist from the skies, to dwell there, all the waylets that go to make up the stream of life will be pure as He is pure.—Rev. M. M. Davis, in Christian Standard.

Andrew Bomar tells of a simple Christian in a farmhouse who had “meditated the Bible through three times.” This is precisely what the Psalmist had done; he “had shaken every tree in God’s garden and gathered fruit therefrom. The idea of meditation is to “get into the middle of a thing.” Meditation is to the mind what digestion is to the body. Unless the food be digested, the body receives no benefit from it. If we would derive the fullest benefit from what we read or hear, there must be that mental digestion known as meditation. If we would “buy the truth” we must pay the price which Paul intimated when he wrote to Timothy: “Meditate upon these things, give thyself wholly to them.” David meditated in God’s Word because he loved it, and he loved it the more because he meditated in it.—Selected.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

What is to Become of Ireland?—

Is it possible that the governments of the civilized world must stand still and see poor old Ireland destroy itself? It now appears that the Irish Free State is as bloody as was Ireland under British rule. They seem to have lost the spirit of true patriotism and in doing so they have descended to the level of a dog fight. Why should such a state of things come to pass, just as that country was granted the right of self-government. Can it be that "Old Ireland" has lost her cunning for better things? We dare to express the fear that in some way she has turned against God and His righteousness. It is stated by a reliable authority that "every day brings the most distressing and disheartening reports of assassinations, assaults, reprisals, and other forms of violence throughout the Island. If Ireland must henceforth be left to herself, she will sooner or later destroy herself. Pity poor Ireland—she is in desperate straits and none know what may come next.

The Outcome of the Washington Conference.—

Many predicted great things as likely to come out of the work of the Washington Conference, the one which assembled in that city last November. It is now stated that our Government is the only Government in the world which has ratified the treaties enacted in that Conference. One paper states that we are waiting for other governments, which were there represented, to ratify what was done there, and we believe we may wait, for we doubt that such ratification will be given. The Governments of the world are not withstanding such expressions of Confidence and esteem as was given when the Conference adjourned, these Governments are afraid of each other—they are afraid to limit their armaments lest they should be caught at some time in a helpless condition and should be speedily overthrown to the dismay of their people. It is now more than three months since those treaties were enacted by the Conference at Washington, and yet nothing of permanent value has been the outcome, and nothing further can come till the nations composing that Conference shall ratify the same. Of course our Government will not be bound, although it has ratified these treaties, if the other governments participating do not ratify. Let us stand still now and see what we shall see.

Ex Vice-President Marshall to the Point.—

The late World War induced many to talk of no more war and of the speedy coming of a better world. Indeed, the thought which for a time seemed uppermost in the minds of some of the world's very greatest men was that the World War should be the last, but it seems that they were prophesying without the gift of prophecy. How glad we should be to be assured that we shall have no more war but such assurance cannot be given—at least not till there has been a change of heart on the part of the world's great leaders. Even now we are assured that there are now 1,000,000 more of men under arms in Europe than there was when the late world war started. That does not look like disarmament, does it? Not only are the armies in Europe, and we believe in America, too, larger than before the war, but it is true that practically all the world is in an uproar—there is dissatisfaction on all sides. Even now it is reported that Trotsky, the Minister of War in the Government of Russia, recently said to some military leaders:

"Don't believe in the Genoa speeches; trust only in your bayonets and batteries. Conference will not give us what we want; this only can be obtained by having the Red Army cross the frontier of capitalistic states and the Red flag wave over the whole of Europe. Perhaps during the summer the Red flag will be called to give proof of its fighting force."

Former Vice-President Marshall, who has been traveling in Europe for some time, recently undertook to tell why the United States was not represented in the Genoa Conference. He said one reason was that Mr. Hughes, our Secretary of State, did not wish to go more deeply into entangling alliances (foreign). Then Mr. Marshall declared another reason was religious character. Then he wittily said: "We in America are not good, but we are religious." A large preponderance of our people believe in eight commandments, quite a respectable number believe in nine, and some few assent to ten." That is a thrust at his own people as keen as a two-edged sword, but is it not the truth?

The Independence of the Philippines—

The N. Y. Christian Advocate says:

"A change of attitude has come over the government at Washington regarding the propriety of granting the demand of an influential native body in the Philippines for independence. During the last administration this group was induced to believe that the United States was completely sympathetic with the aspirations of the Islands for independence, but the present administration has not hesitated to place the emphasis upon the other side. This attitude is the result in a measure of the fate that has befallen many dependent peoples as an outcome of the war. The international mandate has come strongly to the fore with regard to the government of peoples who are more advanced than the Filipinos. Syria is under mandate, and Albania, which was independent, has asked for the protection of the League of Nations, and the demand for self-determination does not seem to be as urgent as it was a few years ago, when it was still in the theoretical stage as far as certain countries are concerned. However, some of the Filipinos still think that Washington is anxiously awaiting the opportunity to haul down the flag at Manila, and they have sent a delegation to urge Congress to give early and favorable consideration to their plea for independence. Meanwhile General Wood is giving the Islands such an administration as they have not had for several years, and the general sentiment for independence is not now as declarative and insistent as it was a year ago."

A German Warning Against Russia.—

The fear and unrest and the lack of confidence is not a mere local condition. It seems to prevail everywhere, and no one can with certainty predict what the end will be. Judging from published facts, Germany is playing with Russia again in the hope of using her some day perhaps in some important crisis to enable her to accomplish what she failed to accomplish in the late world war. Referring to Germany's attitude the press is saying some pretty sharp things. One paper says:

"It was not with universal exultation that the Treaty of Rapallo—between Germany and Russia—was received in Germany. From various sources throughout Germany the note of warning is being sounded, a sort of harking back to Kipling's exhortation to Great Britain and other people to "have no faith in Admazad, the bear that walks like a man." The Boersen Zeitung is inclined to take the view expressed in Secretary Hughes' letter to the Moscow government, saying that, "After all is said and done, the fact remains that the sources from which rejuvenation of Russia can emanate lie within Russia, and that all attempts to build her up must come from within. Foreign aid can only hope to play a secondary role in this process."

"This paper looks upon Soviet Russia as "one gigantic scrap heap," and describes that government as the "greatest producer of rubbish," remnants and spoilage the world has yet seen," and that can meet her obligations only "with scrap iron, and other waste." It was denied by the German and Russian delegates at Genoa that the Treaty of Rapallo contains a military agreement, and while this may be technically true, it is now admitted that such an agreement was signed in Berlin on April 3, and that by the terms of the agreement "the Germans undertake among other things, to furnish the Red army with a certain amount of arms and war materials, to reorganize the Russian Baltic and Black Sea fleets, and to train Russian instructors in the latest discoveries and inventions of chemical warfare." A dispatch published in a Riga paper states that a German officer and others have arrived in Moscow to organize the Russian air service."

NOTES - PERSONALS

Rev. William T. Scott, Greensboro, N. C., expects to begin a meeting at Mt. Bethel in Rockingham County, N. C., on third Sunday in July. The Editor of this paper is engaged to preach for him in the morning service of that day, and Bro. Scott will preach for the Reidsville church in place of the pastor at eleven o'clock.

There is a good field of labor in the Eastern Virginia Conference without a pastor. It needs a good and devoted servant of God to minister to it. Mr. J. W. Roberts, Windsor, Va., is a member of the pastoral committee.

Rev. J. F. Morgan, late pastor of the Berkley, Va., Christian church, is reported as doing well in his new field at Winchester, Va. He is a splendid brother, a good pastor, a fine preacher and a man worthy of the confidence of his flock.

The Christian—Evangelist, a Disciple paper of St. Louis, Mo., raises a rather new question, when it asks: "Could Jesus have commanded Baptism?" what would be your answer to that question? You will do well to study it a bit before you answer.

Our Newport News, Va., church may do well to keep their eyes wide open, as we understand a committee from another field slipped into one of their Sunday morning services and heard their young pastor preach. They evidently had an eye on him as their next pastor. Indeed, we have heard that the Newport News pastor, Rev. B. J. Earp, has received a call to another field, but we are not sure that he has accepted, or even intends to accept, but we are sure that our Newport News brethren better keep their eyes open and watch the coming of strangers to their services, as they might be representatives of some church seeking a pastor.

Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., pastor of Burlington Christian church, in which the American Christian Convention is to meet in October, reports that the work in preparation for the coming of said Convention, is progressing nicely. Our brethren North, East and West need have no fears so far as the entertainment is concerned—the Burlington church and its worthy pastor, will do their part in the entertainment of the Convention. This is the second time this Convention has ever met in the South. The first time was in 1902, when the Convention met in Norfolk, Va.

The Christian Temple of Norfolk, Va., is showing real pluck in the undertaking to raise the needed funds for the erection of the new building. The character of the people is shown quite largely in the money they raised in a recent canvass for the construction of their new house of worship. Their special canvass raised about $131,000 of the $200,000 they expect to be raised for this building. We say, Well done, and we wish for them the highest success in completing the new house of worship. Dr. L. E. Smith, the pastor, is putting his life and all his powers in the effort to accomplish the great undertaking. Let our people give them all possible encouragement.

Rev. W. M. Jay, D. D., the pastor of the Holy Neck church, is one of the few men who came South from the North, and found it easy to adapt himself to Southern conditions, till now he is one of the beloved brethren in Eastern Virginia. He is the President of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference. During our stay at Holland, Virginia, we lived in the same town with him, and found him and his devoted wife, splendid neighbors and delightful associates. We succeeded him as pastor of the Holland church and found him to be one of the most pleasant ex-pastor's we ever worked with. He was in fact, a great help to the work we sought to do in the field in which he was formerly pastor.

The Christian—Evangelist insists that our Disciple brethren must lay greater stress upon building up the home base. We join you, brother, in that thought. The home base must be kept in good order and healthy and active, or else we shall have no means of taking care of the foreign fields. The Church which is not missionary is not entitled to standing room in the great army of the Captain of our Salvation.

We hear frequent references to the fact that many preachers are afraid to say what ought to be said in defense of the truth. It may be true in some instances, but we truly and deeply wish there were no grounds on which to insinuate such a charge. Brethren, buckle up a bit closer to the truth and see that no honest man has a cause to lay such a charge at your door. If it is true in any case, the man of whom it is true is in no sense qualified to fill the place of a preacher of the righteousness enjoined in the New Testament. See Matt. 5 : 20.

We are sorry to hear that Bro. J. L. Elder of the Columbus, Ga., Christian church, has been far from well of late. He is a son of the late Rev. J. D. Elder of what was in his days the Georgia and Alabama Conference. Much is said of the fact that preachers have bad children, well, if there is a black sheep in the Elder family of children I have not met him. They have been a noble set of boys and girls and so far as we are informed they have been very loyal to the church of their father's choice. We wish Bro. J. L. may be in his usual good health ere this. We cannot forget the uniform kindness of himself and family during our stay in Columbus as his pastor—it was unflinching.

Just a word to our brother editors of religious papers in the city of Richmond, Va., the Sun's new home: You have the advantage of us in the extent of your constituency and perhaps in your editorial resources, but we are determined by the grace of God, you shall not excel us in the spirit of true brotherly kindness, and you shall not be more loyal to the Christ and His teaching than we shall try to be. You may excel us in all of these, but when you do so, you may be sure that we are plodding along, trying to reach your excellence and awaiting an opportunity to stand by your side in all that is brotherly in every effort to grasp the truth and give it out to others yet we must stand for the truth as we said.

With this issue the Christian Sun rises in Richmond, Va., where its future home is to be. We recall the fact that we had a hand in taking the paper from Virginia to North Carolina over forty years ago—in July, 1882. Now it is our pleasure and privilege to come with it back to Virginia as its editor but the long journey and the things which have happened between the leaving of Virginia and the return, if written up properly, would fill many volumes. Life's highway indeed gives a highly interesting panorama—it is so full of items of far reaching significance. We hope our people will give it a hearty welcome back to the Old Dominion as a home. We also hope that our North Carolina people will be as generous as were the Virginia people, when it left them. It is in the interest of the cause we all love and for which we labor. Let us see to it that North Carolina is as big hearted and as generous as was her sister state Virginia in those days.

Let our missionary ideals be not lower but higher. The rate of increase in the usefulness of the Christian Church, at large, since we began to be real missionary, is astonishing. If you wish to see just what the difference is, go back and take an inventory of our possessions as a people in 1880 and then take it for the year 1922, and you will get your eyes opened.

We are indebted to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Livingston Portlock, South Norfolk, Va., for the announcement of the marriage of their daughter, Marion Hunter, to Mr. Edgar Hamilton Adsit. The marriage took place in South Norfolk, Va., on June 27, 1922. We extend heartiest congratulations to the happy bride and groom with the best wishes of a loyal heart for their highest and best interests in their life-journey together. May God's blessings attend them in all their ways, but not more so than the evening of life, when life has been well spent.

How beautiful is the sunset scene, a symbol of the closing days of a life which has been spent in doing good in the Lord's vineyard. Blessings be upon the happy young couple!

The effort to establish a Christian Church in Richmond, Va., where THE CHRISTIAN SUN is hereafter to be published, is a most commendable undertaking. We are not beginning this work in that good old city of Virginia simply that we may be represented among the churches of that city, but because there is not merely room for us, as a people, but because there is need for us there. Let our Richmond church have the sympathy and prayers, and, as far as we may be able, let us give that young church our financial help. They have already shown great capacity for self help. When we were there in April, they had already raised by pledges, the most gratifying sum of $63,000, if we mistake not. That shows something of their worthiness to have help given them. People who are willing to do for themselves, as far as their ability will permit, are the people who are worthy of help. Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., is bravely leading as pastor in this good work.

Our little church at Ocean View, Virginia, seems to be making a good start. It is not quite a year old yet, but it is enjoying the services of Rev. E. H. Rainey, if we mistake not for his whole time. While they have only twenty church members, they have about one hundred pupils in the Sunday School, and that is almost a sure promise of larger membership in the church. The church is located where we are told there are hundreds of people not in any of the churches. The church is located on Chesapeake Avenue. If any one knows of people who are living at Ocean View and affiliated with the Christian Church, they are requested to report the same to Bro. Rainey at once, at address given above.

Visitors to the Seashore this summer are requested to look up Bro. Rainey and attend his services while they are there. That is a good chance, while you are resting to help build up a good work, and you will be all the better off for doing so. We hope Bro. Rainey will let us hear from his good work at Ocean View, Va., again soon.

I certainly wish that you make a great success in your work as editor of "The Christian Sun."—Rev. E. H. Rainey, Ocean View, Va.

The Church at Old Antioch, Isle of Wight County, Virginia, Rev. H. H. Butler, pastor, has done a good work through a long history, and she is still in the business of the Master. Bro. Butler thinks that what Old Antioch has failed to do for him as it's pastor, is negligible, for she has stood by him in the hours of his greatest need. That sort of devotion binds the pastor to his people with hooks of love. Old Antioch has been stalwart in the Lord's army.

In this issue will be found the sermon preached at Elon's late commencement by Rev. R. C. Helfenstein, D. D. We ask for it a careful reading. His admission of the moral state of our times, largely as the outcome of the late World War, is more than we had expected, but it shows his purpose to be true to the truth. None of us should do less than that. The moral effects of the war, have been disastrous in many ways. But that does not say that we all have not a great part, great according to our ability and opportunity, in reestablishing the moral ideals of the New Testament—the immediate need of this day of boasted light.

Through Mr. J. B. Lockhart, Durham, N. C., we learn of the death of two faithful friends of "The Christian Sun," viz.: Miss Mary A Harward and Miss E. A. Lockhart. Miss Harward passed away November 17, 1921, and Miss Lockart on January 2, 1922.

We esteem them for their faithfulness and loyalty to "The Sun," and lay this honor-sprig upon their graves and to the memory of real worth in the Christian life. God bless the great army of noble women who give their loving and faithful service to the cause of Christ. We rejoice that there is a host of them.

AN INTERESTING NOTE FROM DR. JAY

We wish to commend the issue of "The Christian Sun" of June 14th as one of the best it has ever been my privilege to read.

Cheapening the price has not cheapened the paper at all, if this issue is to be a sample for the "Sun's" future.

The editorials were of excellent caliber and timely. The Elon Letter was unusually appropriate at this time, and was applicable to many a local situation in its appeal to the loyalty of our people in choosing a school where they will educate their boy or girl.

The Suffolk Letter was considered of such value that the writer took the liberty of reading it in full, with comment, as a part of the Sunday morning message. The writer is glad that Dr. Staley chose to give this message to the "Sun's" readers instead of giving it alone as a message to his own people. Both pastors and church members will do well to give this article careful study. There were other good things in the "Sun" for this issue but I will mention only one other;—the article by Dr. J. O. Atkinson on The Men and Millions. We heartily commend the action of the Convention in its recent session at Suffolk for placing this great missionary movement of our church under the auspices of the Mission Board. Here we believe it will be given due and wise attention and we bespeak for this Board the most hearty and willing co-operation of the pastors and churches.

Though, because of the fact of a financial stringency I am unable to make payment of this debt for the present, should I not cherish the further fact that this obligation is unto the Lord who makes it possible for me to pay any of my debts.

Dr. Atkinson's article should not only set aright those who have any notions about this great movement but should arouse a zeal on the part of all of us to see that no degree of failure will be due to any neglect or repudiation on our part of our sacred obligation in this great work.

W. M. JAY.

The North Carolina Sunday school and Christian Endeavor or Convention is to meet at Liberty in Vance County, N. C., on July 11-13, and it is decided that there may be a full attendance. We thank the President for an invitation to attend and would gladly accept the same were we able to do so. We look for a good report and wish the Convention great success.

"It will seem natural, I know, for you to be back at your old place, as editor of "The Christian Sun." The only thing that mars the joy of your return is the absence of the one who so often and so faithfully helped you heretofore—for she is not. It may be that she will be a help to you even though separated."—P. D. R. Yes, we shall miss her help on many an occasion. She was always interested in the "Sun" and she proved her interest by the way she watched over its welfare in the days when it did not have so wide a field as now. It is but a just tribute to her memory that we should say that we never felt uneasy about the safety of the work, when we were necessarily absent, if we knew she was in charge. She truly loved the Christian Church and all of its enterprises.

Rev. J. W. Knight, Stokesdale, N. C., is a faithful undershepherd and is devoting his life to the cause of Christ. He missed many early opportunities, but we believe he is wisely using the opportunities of his later life. He is serving both town and country churches, as the opportunity comes, and his labors are greatly blessed.

Rev. J. U. Newman, A. M., D. D., of Elon College, N. C., is the man who has waded through tons of books in his life time, and he is not yet tired of the noble task. He is still teaching in Elon College and has the love and confidence of a large circle of friends, especially among the old students of the College.

Dr. E. L. Moffitt, Ashboro, N. C., who was for a number of years editor of "The Christian Sun" and also president of Elon College for several years later, in now in business at Ashboro, but maintains his youthful appearance almost as he did in the days of his public activities. There is one thing in his make up which is fine, if he happens to be on your side, and that is he does not know how to give up in debate. He is a sticker!

Rev. J. W. Patton, Elon College, N. C., is announced to hold a series of meetings at Shallow Ford, beginning the second week in July, if we mistake not.

Rev. S. L. Beougher, Graham, N. C., we hear is doing a splendid work for his Graham field. He is a good speaker and deserves success, which we hope he may reap abundantly.

What are you doing, brother, for the extension of the Sun's circulation? Now is the time to push the circulation, for the paper cannot be maintained except by faithful work, and nowhere scarcely is such work more necessary than in the effort to extend the circulation. It is necessary both for the good of the paper, and just as necessary for the good of our people. Every member who is left to go without the help of his church paper is the loser not only to himself, but to the cause.

UNDERSTANDING GOD.

I have just read the "face message of the Sun called "Listening to God," by Brother Harward. Listening is certainly a susceptible attitude, but if there is no understanding, there is disappointment and confusion. It is not enough to listen, but there must be understanding. This is necessary to conversation, and conversation is necessary to highest communion.

Intelligent conversation is difficult with us. It is more so with God. One must express himself intelligibly and in turn receive intelligibly. We often talk to God in our prayers, in our reading and meditations, etc., and we may as often listen to Him, but how often do we ever get an answer from Him. Many never seem to at all. They have tried to talk to God, but hearing nothing—finding God silent—doubt His answer, and then His existence, and grow agnostic, if not infidel. A silent God is only in theory and theory only is of no service.

When did God last speak to you so that you understood Him? "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Have you ever heard a single word out of the mouth of God? If you would understand a Frenchman you must know the French language. If you would understand God, you must know God's language. He has a language. He has words. They are His works. "The works that I do shall ye do;" His miracles; such as meeting abnormal conditions with abnormal measures; Life's crisis; when out of horrors men learn to covet the best gifts; life's misfortunes; when men learn to think; Time's revelations: "As God giveth us the light," (Lincoln); personal opportunities; doing good everywhere.

More specifically speaking, obviously the more one knows about science, feels the appeal of righteousness, lives in a world of trust and passionately seeks the truth, the greater is his appreciation of the vocabulary of God; the greater is his stock of God's words and the greater is the conversation and communion with Him. "Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." Therefore, "Blessed are the truth lovers for they shall hear the voice of God. Add to this the consecration of the heart and the spirit to "be still and know," we have communion complete. This being true, no one has a right to deny himself this experience. The feebleness of the church and the feebleness of the individual soul is the lack of communion with God.

FIELD NEWS

We had good services at Haw River on the third Sunday in June. Four members were received into church fellowship. There were three persons baptized.

Rev. N. G. Newman and Dr. W. A. Harper were with us at the evening service. Dr. Harper delivered a stirring address on education which was well received.—P. H. FLEMING.

There can be no heat without flame. A smouldering fire blinds the eyes and smothers the breath. The fire of some men's piety has never burst into flames, and they oppress us by the smoke that ought to be flame. They are grouchy and hypercritical, and we flee their presence as from a smouldering fire. When they catch fire they become gentle and kind, and full of love, and we seek them for the warmth of their fellowship.—Exchange.

THE EDITOR'S "GOOD MORNING" GREETING.

Ships, when passing at sea, give to each other a most cordial greeting. It is indeed a beautiful custom, and is, we suppose, intended to express the joy they feel in the safety of each other while exposed to the dangers of the deep. In a somewhat like manner the editor comes to greet his readers and therein he gives expression to his joy in finding them still in the land of the living, seeking to know and to do the will of God.

In the short space of forty three years it has fallen to my lot three times to send forth such greetings to our people, as the editor of this paper. On February 10, 1879, I became editor of "The Christian Sun" and served two years. Well do I recall, even to this day, with what fear and trembling I ventured to undertake the work. When I had finished the work on the first issue, I said to myself: "How shall I ever find enough matter to get out another issue?" I bent to my task and by God's good favor, I have lived to get out more than 800 issues of "The Christian Sun" and other like publications.

On July 15, 1882, I purchased the "Sun's" outfit and again became its editor and served for nine years and four months. After purchasing the paper, I moved it from Suffolk, Va., to Raleigh, N. C. On November 19, 1891, I again severed my connection with the paper, due to the fact that I had broken my health under the long mental and physical strain which my heavy duties had imposed upon me.

On May 5th, 1922, while the Southern Christian Convention was in session in Suffolk, Va., that body for the third time again called me to become the editor of "The Christian Sun." I entered upon my duties June 1st, following, and I am now writing for the third time in forty-three years, words of greeting to the readers of this paper. Between the first and third time of writing such words of greeting, the world has passed through one of the most nerve-wrecking periods in the history of modern times, in which humanity has been subjected to new and most trying ordeals. The conditions of human life have been changed, and changes are still going on. What the outcome may be none of us can tell. Even the visible Church is in a doctrinal uproar. The whole world is unsettled and the drifts are in many directions. The craft that is not anchored may drift into a vortex of ruin. The Christian Church has come to such a time as this, and let us hope with a great commission from God to serve His righteous purposes in a day like this. With "The Christian Sun" as a sort of Pilot-Leader, the Church is to undertake to do its part in bringing peaceful relations to the human family—a most difficult and delicate task which cannot be performed by the cry of peace, peace, peace, when there is no peace. We must first get Justice and Righteousness as a foundation on which to build a peace that will endure and weld the people of God as by some master stroke, into one fold and under one Shepherd. Let us seek to help the world to peaceful relations on Truth as its basis, and Righteousness and Peace as its outer manifestation, according to the teachings of Jesus Christ. To gain such an end, as the people of God, we must stand like a stonewall for Truth and Righteousness.

We cannot, we must not sacrifice Truth to gain such an end, for peace, standing on error as a foundation, cannot, must not, shall not, stand. The undergirding of the Everlasting Arms will not uphold error—never!

In such a battle we must have brave men and women, with iron-nerve to stand in the hardest place for God and His Truth. We cannot, we must not sacrifice Truth, not even to attain so good an end as peace. We must have the Oracles of God as the foundation of our defense. To meet this situation we shall need the courage and wisdom of a Martin Luther, being dominated by the Spirit of God. If what we have said be half true, and we believe it is wholly true, then we are already in the shadows of the coming battle.

The Editor's place in such a time is a hard one. No doubt many think of the position as one of honor and distinction. Beloved, these are the smallest parts of the reward, in such a battle, a battle as wide as the world, as deep as the sea and as high as Heaven. This is no imaginary word picture—the battle is actual and the struggle is unto victory or defeat. Which shall it be? Let the answer be for the men and women who are not afraid to stand for the truth, VICTORY! May God help us to see clearly the battle line and so make no mistake in finding our place in that line. Let us raise the grand old hymn which Martin Luther sang in the days of his great battle against Roman Catholicism:

"The Son of God goes forth to war,
A kingly crown to gain;
His blood-red banner streams afar;
Who follows in His train?
Who best can drink His cup of woe,
Triumphant over pain,
Who patient bears his cross below—
He follows in His train.

"A noble army, men and boys,
The matron and the maid,
Around the Savior's throne rejoice,
In robes of light arrayed;
They met the tyrants brandished steel,
The lion's gory mane;
They bowed their heads the stroke to feel;
Who follows in their train?"

The position of editor is not only a place of much hard work, but also one of great responsibility and daring. He must stand and contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints. Doubtless the lines have fallen to us in hard places, but our hope is in Him who is able to do exceedingly abundantly, above all we can think or ask. If the battle is gained it shall be to the glory of the Captain of our salvation; if it be lost, it shall be to the humiliation of the victors. God help us to be faithful sentinels, ever on the alert to discover and use the Truth of God for the perfecting of His saints.

Our appeal is to every true soldier of the Cross. Stand for the truth as it is given to us in the Bible, for the Bible is the Creed of the Christian Church. Here we stand. God help us to be loyal and faithful till He calls us to lay our armor down and come up higher.

Give us your prayer, your loving sympathy, and a plenty of new subscribers, together with a sufficiency of rich, creamy, articles with which to feed our readers, and we promise, God helping us, to do our best for a stalwart Christianity. Let your articles be as sound as the teachings of the New Testament, which enjoins the use of sound words. We hope to give Christian and brotherly treatment to as many as may differ from us, and to all an everlasting faithfulness and an unyielding loyalty to the Word of God. Upon this platform we shall welcome the co-operation of every loyal child of God.

Your Humble and Sincere Servant,
J. PRESSLEY BARRETT,
Editor.

ANTI-CHRISTIAN FORCES IN CHINA.

As civilization advances in China the Enemies of Christianity seem to increase, working with a great determination to stem its tide and give it over to the kingdom of darkness. That should be no surprise to us who live in a land of Bibles, however, since we know wherever the Gospel of the Son of God is preached that there shall opposition arise and drive it back, if that were possible, to oblivion. This opposition to the Gospel comes from one of the oldest enemies of Truth—Atheism, supported by all the anti-Christian forces at its command. Of course, in a land like China, there are many enemies of Christianity, such as ignorance, superstition, prejudice and idolatry, with Atheism in the lead. It is then no wonder that Christian forces in China are face to face with the most determined opposition, and what is true in China is doubtless also true in other heathen countries. It is the world of darkness against the Christ, the Light of the World.

Only a little while ago, Dr. John R. Mott was in China, holding a meeting of the World Federation of Christian Students in Peking. An organized attempt was made to boycott the meeting, and it was directed by the Atheistic forces of the country. And strange to say it was aided by the educational leaders of China, several of them at least. One need not be surprised that such an attack should be made by educational leaders, since education without Christ only qualifies these men to do the more dangerous work and makes them the greater foes of Christianity. Every time we educate a man in this country without Christ, we give him the greater chance to stand as a stonewall against the truth, and, of course, this being true in this Christian Country, it must be even more true in a land like China, where the forces of darkness can be so easily called into action for a given purpose.

The latest outbreak of the anti-Christian attack comes from the Chinese Psychological Society. Its opposition was so pronounced, so determined, and withal so blasphemous, as to attract attention in many parts of the world, being widely published in America. They put forth a plea well calculated to mislead and to deceive the people of China, who at their best are just emerging from the darkness of heathenism, and of course are still subject to many of their old heathenish ideas, making them the more and easy prey to the work of these enemies of the Gospel of the Son of God. Their plea was not in the shape of outright repudiation of Christianity, as something else would the more promptly and effectually serve their purpose. Their plea was this:

"Religion served certain purposes of primitive people, but it fails to function in modern society, where science and civilization predominate. Jesus Christ was not mentally sound, they claimed. The fact that He called himself the Son of Man and the Son of God indicates that he was troubled with a double personality, and His seeing the devil three times in one month," as they claimed, "shows mental disorder."

"We pay respect to His personality," they said, "but the teachings of missionaries are below the intelligence of the average adult. If they could hold corresponding positions in commercial life," they declared, "they would do so." Their own countrymen look down on them. Nine-tenths of the native preachers would be beggars and vagabonds, but for the fact that they have chosen this profession in order to obtain, shelter and comfort. They preach negative morals which amount to vices."

All of this talk astounds us when we come to know that it practically all came from Peking, and we are more astounded when we are told that Peking is the home of half of the returned

Chinese students from America and Europe. As we understand it, Peking is a city of 52 colleges, two normal colleges and many other schools, while the lower grade schools number more than 30,000 pupils. This gives us some idea of the extent and character of the forces now arraying themselves against Christianity. We may dismiss the whole matter by saying these forces amount to very little. But this is a mistake. On the human side of this matter, the educational forces of any country, even if no further advanced than is China, are a mighty force with which our missionaries have to contend in the proclamation of the Gospel. The hope of the Gospel in China, as well as elsewhere, is the mighty power of God in pulling down the strongholds of sin and darkness.

However, the Christian people of our land should not be too easily satisfied by such a plea to such an extent as to slacken their efforts to support and sustain our missionaries in China and elsewhere, for we should remember that in pulling down these strong holds of heathenism and its sins, God uses His people through whom to work to gain these ends in the establishment of the Christian religion. The watchword for us here in America is surely to be up and doing, sending every possible help to our brothers across the sea in their struggles with the darkness of heathenism. Let us get to our places in the great missionary work and then do our best to support and sustain our men on the front in this great battle line.

GREAT ENCOURAGEMENT FROM KOREA.

We have been hearing of great things which are taking place in Korea, as the result of missionary labors. At times we have thought it could hardly be true, or to say the least, it must have been greatly overdrawn, but that cannot be, as we see it, and for the reason that the reports are backed by statements, both by men on the field, and by men who have gone there to investigate, so as to make sure of the truth. Certainly all of these men could not be bribed to tell a false tale as to what has been wrought in that land of darkness.

Listen, if you need a word of encouragement to stimulate your own devotion and your enthusiasm for the cause of heathenism being converted into the life of Christian lands, then give heed to the following facts:

We are told that in one village near Mokopo every man, woman and child has decided to accept Jesus Christ as their Savior. In Kwangju, the capital of the South Chulla Province, with a population of about 12,000, more than one-tenth, or 1,500 are already in the Sunday Schools each Sabbath, while 15 years ago there was not a Christian living in that city. The gospel is even now on a boom in the Korean Church. New churches are being organized, new schools opened, meantime great interest is manifested in all parts of the country in Christian activity.

Although Koreans have had but a short time in which to build up the Christian faith among themselves, yet we are told that even now they have the largest theological seminary in the world, and yet they cannot supply the demand for preachers to teach these people and lead them in the way of life.

The Koreans are doing a great work in the proclamation of the Gospel among themselves. It is true they have had some missionaries among them to preach the Gospel. They were dependent in the beginning of course upon these foreign missionaries, but now they are not dependent on the foreign missionary, either for the preaching of the gospel to them, or for the business management of their missions—they can and do very largely look after the Lord's work in that kingdom.

We have a test of membership in our own churches in this country which we say is CHRISTIAN CHARACTER, but these Koreans have a different test, viz., They do not accept one to membership as soon as he professes faith in Christ, but they tell him or her, to go out and win a soul to Christ and bring him in, and then they will receive such an one to membership in their churches, and is that not a fine test? If one can lead another to Christ that is pretty good evidence that he himself knows Christ. We believe that practical test of discipleship is better than our professional test. The gain of the gospel in Korea is one of the marvels of modern missionary effort. Let us rally to the support of this cause.

UNION AND ORTHODOXY IN CHINA.

We read with great interest, and yet with a sense of disappointment, the following article, as contributed by Rev. Hugh W. White to The Presbyterian Standard. We are republishing it that our people may know the facts in the case. We cannot believe, as yet, that even the men among us, who are in sympathy with "higher criticism," if there be such, will for one moment approve the way the higher critics on the mission fields of China are attempting to dominate the field in the interest of this "cult" in China.

For one we have no sympathy with any such methods at home or in China, or anywhere else. It is time for the Churches in all denominations to be awakened and aroused to the true situation. It is no wonder that a movement is starting to be known as the "Fundamentalists," the purpose of which is to meet this work of the higher critics wherever it may appear and drive it back into darkness.

We wish to be fair with every one, but there is no fairness in the way Mr. White declares these people are working in China. If that be the method in China, we may be sure it will be far reaching and strike other countries as well as China. Mr. White says:

"For some years union movements in China have fallen under the leadership of the Continuation Committee of the Edinburg Conference, a self-electing body. In it radicals have the leadership, and even the conservatives have fallen in with their principle, to-wit: in union conferences, institutions and the like, nothing must be said against destructive criticism.

"Through the influence of men prominent in this movement, the theological seminaries in China are being radicalized. The Presbyterian Seminary at Nanking in 1911 was converted into an interdenominational institution, the strongest guarantees being given in the constitution that it would stand for the fundamentals. Now we find radicals on the faculty and radical books being used.

"The influence of the C. C. C. men is being thrown against literature of conservative character. To counteract radical books issued, a group of strong men, led by a well-known missionary, are preparing Orr's Encyclopedia in Chinese. His mission voted strong approval of it. But the Conference of Boards in New York refused to sanction the work, and the board of his own church, while granting all other requests, would not grant this missionary's annual appropriations except on the condition that the money should not be used on Orr.

"Leaders of the C. C. C. have fostered ecclesiastical union along the lines of compromise. The Presbyterian London Mission, and Congregational Churches met in Shanghai, April 22, 1922, to perfect plans for union. In the discussion as to doctrinal statement, it was said that the word "Redeemer" therein referred to the atonement, two missionaries challenged the statement, one of them saying on the floor that redemption did not mean atonement except as the speaker interpreted it so. Their votes for this doctrinal statement were cast with this in mind.

"A resolution to the effect that we believe in "redemption through the blood of Jesus" was voted down. Another, saying that the whole Bible is inspired, met a like fate, as did the attempts to define the use of the word "Lord." The majority forced their views through in such ways that a visiting brother said he had never seen such high-handed ways used in an ecclesiastical court. The matter goes to the Presbyteries for action, and a strong element, especially of the Chinese preachers, are opposed to the compromise union.

"It is not known how the C. C. C. have been financed. They have large expectations from the Interchurch World Movement. Indeed one of them in a Synod told the Chinese that so much money would be coming they would not know what to do with it. Now it is commonly reported the C. C. C. are in debt. So they have evolved this plan; (1) Dissolve; (2) Make a new organization which can command the financial support of the home churches.

"To this end they called the National Christian Conference now meeting (May 5th) in Shanghai. It was not proposed nor indeed discussed by the missions. In planning for this conference every effort was made to keep out of the program all mention of the redemptive work of Christ, giving us as the "Message of the Church to China" merely social righteousness. The committee of arrangements argued that point for hours, and finally threw the responsibility on a new committee composed entirely of Chinese. The "message" they prepared reads beautifully, but no questions may be asked about it in the conference. The most rigid rules have been adopted to exclude from the program everything not acceptable to the C. C. C.

"Pressure of sentiment has compelled the committee in charge to allow the presenting of resolutions affirming faith in (1) The Deity of Christ; (2) The Atonement; (3) The Divine Authority of the Bible. Having been discussed, they will go back to the committee, and may come forward for vote two days hence. Even if they pass, it will be but a Pyrrhic victory, for men elected to the council will not be required to subscribe to them, and all indications are that the same men who have led the C. C. C. will also handle the council, and they, of course, will continue to hush up all testimony to the integrity of the Word.

"The Council, if it is erected, will put a heavy financial burden on the home churches, probably beginning with five to ten per cent of the annual budget for work of each participating mission, and increasing as time goes on. Thus when you will have economized and saved up a little money for the salvation of the Chinese, some of it must first go to the upkeep of this organization. The preachers, teachers, doctors, who are bearing the burden of the direct work, will have their funds cut down to support a set of "bosses," who use all their influence to shelter the destructive critics.

"This question of finance is not on the program for discussion by this conference, and the "steam roller" is working so beautifully that those who wish to bring it up may not be able to do so. It looks as though this load is to be dumped on the home churches without anybody realizing it."

One of our exchanges declares that learning could be more easily disseminated without a school than could Christianity without the church. No doubt that is true, and if it is true, as we believe it is, it will give people a new idea of the real purpose of the church.

ELON LETTER

College month has passed. A great many of our churches observed College Day during one Sunday of June as suggested. You can always count on some of our churches doing everything the Convention asks them to do. The number of such churches is increasing. One day it will approach 100 per cent. Then the Christian Church will be a spiritual dynamo of great energetic capacity. Her force will be irresistible and all her institutions will flourish.

The Christian Church is no stronger for united service than the willingness to cooperate in general enterprises of her most localized congregation. What a responsibility before God rests on these churches and their ministers who refuse to join hands in the cooperative work of the Kingdom. The devil is never happier than when he can induce Christians to invest all their energies in local ways. He is happy over such an achievement, because experience teaches that localized effort alone will kill a church, just as selfishness will destroy the spiritual life of the individual believer. And killing churches is the devil's most joyous occupation, next to killing the love of individual Christians for their Lord and Master. Where there is no vision, the people and the churches alike perish. Cooperations begets vision.

Some of the pastors write that they will observe College Day during July and inquire if that will be all right. Certainly. June was selected by the Convention, but already some churches had planned other things for June. So July will be all right. By all means observe the day. It will mean great things for our church a generation from now to give due prominence and insistence to Christian Education by the annual observance of College Day in our congregations. The people enjoy thinking of the vital issues involved in Christian Education. Large audiences have attended the celebrations so far held.

One of the most successful College Day programs rendered was given in the Holland, (Va.) Church, Rev. James H. Lightbourne, pastor. Here is the program of the occasion:

Doxology, Invocation, Response by Choir, Scripture Lesson ii Peter, 1:1-12, Prayer, Introductory Remarks, "Records and Statistics," Gordon Holland: "Why I Wish to Go to College," Ray Reid; "What Elon Means to Our Church," Prof. Esmond Riedel; "A Message From Elon," Miss Lois Holland; "Why Patronize Elon," Isaac Luke; Announcements and Collection, Anthem by Choir, Address by Miss Emily Midyett, Doxology, Benediction.

Three Elon students and one full graduate graced this program by their presence and participation. Mr. Ray Reid, president of the Holland High School Class of '22, told his fellow citizens why he wished to go to College. I have had the pleasure of reading his speech, a splendid one, and I am going to take the liberty to quote somewhat from it.

Mr. Reid had three good reasons for desiring to go to College. In the space of this letter I can only excerpt them. "I find that a High School education," writes Mr. Reid, "is not sufficient for the average man or woman in the present time. Every position worth while requires a High School education plus special training."

"Second, I want to go to College," he continues, "the better to prepare myself for my life work, to make myself more competent and capable of doing better and higher things than I could do with only a High School Education . . . I wish to be in position to do something that others may profit by On leaving High School I realize that my work is not complete. I have only had a glimpse of the opportunities which are before us, whereas a college course will broaden our minds and views and help us see things in a larger and different light."

"Third," says Mr. Reid, "the day is coming, I dare say it is already here, when an unlearned man finds himself at the mercy of others and gets very little chance of a square deal in the business world. Isn't this enough when we stop to think to make any boy or girl want a College education? I don't expect an easy task if I should be fortunate enough to enter College. It is an old adage that anything worth while is worth working for. I have always had ambition to do something that counts in the sight of God. We are all capable of better service and it is my desire to push forward to nobler and higher ideals, which I know I must attain through a better education."

Now I submit that it is worth while to have our High School Graduates talk like this to their home people. Elon has in mind to do the very things for the young people of our Church who come here which Mr. Reid holds as stirring him to strive for a College degree. We would add but one thing to our young friend's excellent reasoning—that our young people may be definitely trained by experience and through study for places of leadership in the life and program of the Church and Kingdom. But for this aim, Elon need not exist at all. State schools can do the rest. It is the denominational College alone that can place the emphasis of its contribution on Christian character, without which all too sadly at times higher education is a curse to the individual possessing it and for the social order in which he lives. Our Christian colleges—they are the hope of the Church and also of the world. What a mighty work our Church could do with a generation of Ray Reids and their sisters trained in our College! Let's do it.

SUFFOLK LETTER

The best things attract the least attention. A hundred people go to their daily task and perform their part well, and nobody takes notice of them; one person makes a false step in social or business life and it becomes community talk. A thousand women walk the street in decent apparel, and it goes as a matter of course; ten women walk the street in questionable dress, and the town goes wild over the danger. This is the fallacy of the Daily Press. It sees the worst. It prints the worst. And people read the worst. The logical conclusion is that the world is on the way to the bow-wows. This spirit comes to be loved pessimism. People finally love the worst things instead of the best things, because they feed on the coarse, the sensuous, the criminal in human society. The church member leaves his church and spends Sunday at the seaside. He sees the bathers. He enjoys what he sees. He returns to his home. He says the world is growing worse. He did not see the many thousands in the interior, who went to Sunday School and church that day, and have never seen the ocean. He judged out of eyes that neglected the house of prayer that holy day. Reporters visit the resorts. They see the fringe of society. They mingle with the Sabbath breakers. They report the abnormal, the blunders, the indiscretions, the drownings, the murders, the suicides, the divorces, the weaks; and then the film-makers reproduce all this and the movies throw on the screen the follies of the times and the thoughtless conclude that this generation is on the road to ruin. This is pessimism.

The sick people attract. The sinner attracts attention. Nobody thinks of the multitude of healthy people, and good people; the man himself says more about pain for one day than health for a year. Optimism looks on the best side of things and people. Optimism gives thanks for the good of to-day, and looks for better tomorrow. The adverse critic does not help anybody. He discourages men. He offers no constructive program to improve conditions. Faultfinders have easy work, but there is little virtue in it. The Pharisees and Scribes "found fault," but what did they ever do to improve the life of the church or the world. Hope is not founded on pessimism, but on optimism. The pessimist cannot exercise faith which is the "substance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen." If all the good in this age could be reported, we would forget discouragement and take heart for new progress. We sometimes forget that "out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh." The eye sees out of its own self. The artist sees what is in his own soul. The musician writes or sings what is in his own soul. One should be careful in passing judgment lest he betray his own life. God sees the best in the worst of men and that is the reason Jesus Christ gave His life to save sinners. God expects the world to be saved. That is the reason He gave His Son. Love is always optimistic. Hate is pessimistic. The world is growing better. The word is read by increasing numbers. Faith is more deep rooted than in any age. The world is bad enough, but the Babylons, Sodoms, and Pompeiis have no modern existence. Read Herodotus, Genesis, Bulwer's Last Days of Pompeii; then trace the race to the present time. The Kingdom of God gains steadily, and surely. Nations feel to-day the power of the gospel.—The "Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in His wings."—W. W. STALEY.

RICHMOND LETTER.

The First Christian Church of Richmond has been fortunate recently in having the pleasure of hearing Rev. P. T. Klapp, Dr. J. Y. Fair, of the Presbyterian Church, Mr. Watkins of the Railroad Y. M. C. A., and Dr. W. A. Harper, President of Elon College. The messages of all these brethren were highly appreciated by our people and we shall be glad to have a return visit.

Our annual election of Sunday School officers took place Sunday, June 28th and resulted as follows: Superintendent, D. J. Kelly; Assistant Superintendent, D. W. Darden; Secretary and Treasurer, Wm. R. Harton; Assistant Secretary and Treasurer, W. F. Holmes; Home Department Superintendent, Mrs. Annie M. Brown; Cradle Roll Superintendent, Mrs. W. T. Walters.

Two bank notes amounting to $2,750, have been taken up by the church within the last few weeks.

The Architect is busy on the plans for our new church building and we expect to be ready to submit them to the contractors for bids within the next two weeks, and we hope to get the work started on our church in August.

We hope to have a church in Richmond in both a building and a membership, which will be a source of pride to the Southern Convention.

We need your prayers and co-operation in this effort in the capital of the South.

GOOD NEWS

Rev. E. H. Rainey, 622 Chesapeake Ave., Ocean View, Va., is located for the summer as pastor of the First Christian Church at Ocean View and seems quite happy in the work. Under date of June 16th he writes: "Our work here looks more encouraging than ever. We put on a canvass of the community and endeavored to get a card in each home of this part of the town and far out into the county, extending a cordial invitation to the people of Ocean View to worship with us and announcing the hours of our services.

"Our people have voted to complete the church as rapidly as possible. We will have four class rooms for the Primary Department of the Sunday school in the rear part of the church. These will be separated only by curtains, but that is much better than having all classes together.

"The second Sunday in July is to be a great day for us. We are preparing an elaborate program that we think will, when completed, attract and be of real service.

"Pray for us. By the help of our Master we purpose to do a good work in His name."

We have a very promising situation at Ocean View and it would seem that the right man has been found to take charge as pastor.

Miss Emily Midyett of Norfolk, Va., now on vacation from her work as teacher in Carroll County, Va., spoke twice to our Holland, Va., congregation last Sunday. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, is enthusiastic in his praise of the great work she did. His congregations were delighted, and Miss Midyett held their rapt attention at the morning and evening services as she told about the work that she and Miss Hedgepeth have been doing for us. Miss Midyett is to attend Summer School at the University of Virginia and in the fall is to return to Carroll County as teacher in our school there for next year. The people of our Mountain section are greatly delighted with the splendid work she did the past year and are exceedingly happy that she is to return the coming year.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell, who has spent three years in Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, and the past year in Elon College, has volunteered to preach for us in Carroll County for six weeks and is now at Fancy Gap, Va., having gone there for his first appointment at our new building June 17th. Brother Sorrell will acquaint himself with conditions and preach to the people as opportunity affords during the remainder of June and July, and early in August Dr. W. W. Staley will spend a week preaching there. Miss Hedgepeth writes that the people were greatly benefitted by the great sermon Dr. Staley delivered on the day of dedication and are exceedingly anxious to have him return and preach for them again.

J. O. ATKINSON.

There are epochs in the moral life of a people when God must have martyrs. Great causes have failed because their adherents had not the martyr spirit. The times in which we live are calling for these martyr souls. The world will not swing back to God until there shall appear martyrs who will find a new cross from which they can send forth the challenge of salvation to lost men. Men may mock the martyr, but they will never be able to banish from their experience the influence of his sacrifice.—Exchange.

The children are to be recognized in the "Sun's" pages. Provision is to be made for the little ones as well as for the big ones.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The financial report this week is very small and far below what it ought to be. I hope our churches will take into consideration that we had a very dry season last year and the Orphanage farm seemed to be right in the heart of the dry belt. This spring and summer we have been rained out and it makes it hard on us. We have done enough work on our farm this spring to put in two large crops, but it seemed that when we would get a lot of ground ready to plant we would have a regular flood and it would undo all we had done; and, if we succeeded in getting a head of the rain and put in a day's planting, we would have a hard beating rain and it would pack the ground so hard we could not get a stand of anything. But our eighty-five little children must be fed. The rain and hot sunshine does not hinder digestion, and they get as hungry as if we had no troubles all the year.

I want to insist that all our Sunday Schools come to our rescue and lend us a helping hand. What, if you were Superintendent and eighty-five little orphan children were looking to you to see that they were supplied with food and clothes, don't you think you would appreciate all the Sunday Schools standing loyally by you in the work?

This is vacation time. Many of our children are out on a ten days' vacation. We try to give each child that has been in the institution any length of time a ten days' vacation each summer. A number have already had theirs and have returned, others are out this week and a number of others to go. Some will perhaps not get to go. The distance may be too far to go to their people and the expense too great.

A GREAT REVIVAL IN LANETTE, ALA.

The Revival at the Christian Church of Lanette, begun May 28. From the first service the meeting was full of interest and the presence of the spirit was manifested in many ways. There was rain throughout the first week of the meeting but the people came and scores were turned away because there was not room to stand in the church. The seats were filled at almost every service before the hour for worship came.

Such a spirit and a "hungering after righteousness" was never before witnessed in this section. The pastor, Rev. H. M. Gray, did the preaching, throughout the meeting. His sermons were surely gospel, full of power and the people of all ages, young and old, could understand them because of the simple way in which they were delivered. No man could have preached more gospel than did this man of God.

The intention of the pastor was that the meeting would close June 11, but at that time the people said, "We can't stop now," and the meeting went on until Thursday night following.

The singing was under the direction of the writer, with Miss Ina Gray, pianist. The church is fortunate to have one who is so talented as she is. The church choir is one of the best known, it has a seven piece orchestra, which was a great help. With the co-operation of all concerned, the music was fine. During the nineteen days of the meeting nothing came in the way. The Spirit had His way among the people. There was only one service during which no one made profession by joining the church. It was not an emotional, or a spiritual excitement that caused the people to turn about, but it was a straight-forward prayer answering, heartfelt revival. One that was felt by the worst sinners in town. It was not a young people's, or children's revival. There were only eight persons added to the church under sixteen years of age. At the time the meeting was scheduled to close, ninety-two had been added to the church, and at three o'clock Sunday, June 11, baptism, by immersion, was administered unto fifty-four, at Lanette Y. M. C. A. pool.

After that time, until the meeting closed, twenty-four more were received for Baptism, making a total of seventy-eight for Baptism and sixty-six by certificate; making grand total of 144. Eight of which go to the Baptist Church and two to the Methodist.

The interest of the people seem to grow throughout the services, the testimonials of the young converts were soul-stirring—the brightest days of the history of this church are today being enjoyed. Plans are now being made to build a larger, more comfortable church which is badly needed and must be had at an early date.

May God send many more such revivals into our church that will put in action all who are idle and add thousands, who will carry on the work of the church and save the world for God

J. H. DOLLAR.

We purpose not to be embarrassed by failure to do our duty. We are going to do our best. We may be embarrassed by others, failing to do their duty.

Every department of church work will from time to time receive attention in these columns.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A GREAT PRIVILEGE

It has been a great privilege the last two weeks to meet nearly all the ministers of Eastern Va. and North Carolina and get their ideas and views about our Men and Millions Movement and learn from these faithful pastors how they wish the work carried on in their fields. The group of pastors that met in Norfolk, then later the group that met in Raleigh, and a little later the group that met in Burlington, and last Monday the group that met in Greensboro showed the deepest interest in the Movement and the abiding concern for its progress and completion. Every pastor present at all of these Conferences expressed himself desirous of seeing all the pledges paid and an anxiety to do as pastor everything he could to aid the Movement. As stated to the groups, the Mission Board had nothing to put over on them, but was anxious to learn from them their attitude and their suggestions as to how best to do the great work. As stated above, it was indeed a rare privilege to enjoy the fellowship and share the counsel of these faithful and loyal pastors. The Conferences were of the most agreeable type and not a discordant note was sounded by any pastor. Such brotherly love and co-operation among the pastors of our Christian churches means more than can be told and gives promise of a future big with good things for the cause our Church represents. I am sure all our pastors who attended these Conferences feel that they were really worth while and will mean much to the future of a work we all are devoted to.

J. O. ATKINSON.

"THE UNKNOWN FUTURE"

The writer's attention was attracted in last week's Sun to an article by Dr. J. H. Welch, bearing the title "The Unknown Future." I do not know which attracted me first or most, the title of the article or the name of the writer, for if all Sun readers knew that faithful and loyal layman, Dr. Welch, of our Wadley, Ala. Christian Church, they would more fully appreciate what he said in the article referred to. It is to be doubted if in all our churches we have a man more loyal, devoted and true to all we represent than is Dr. Welch. As a practicing physician and practical banker of wide experience he marks well his words and comprehends wonderfully the cause that retard church progress and power. When he says that indifference, killing indifference, is the real cause that we make progress so slowly in our church activities, I am sure he feels all that he says, and more. And I think furthermore that every Christian Sun reader will agree with him. In trying to prepare for that unknown future which waits us all, and in our endeavor to transmit to those who come after us a church of progress and power, we Christians in 1920, as Dr. Welch points out, were lead through meditation and prayer to institute our Men and Millions Movement. The question that confronts us today as a Church and that most deeply concerns our future is our attitude to this Movement and what we shall do about it now. I cannot do better than quote the words of Dr. Welch.

"After the storm, then the calm. We subscribed liberally, we did our part faithfully, to make the drive a success, our consciences are at ease, yet we have failed to meet these obligations. Hard times, stringency of money is the pitiful excuse we offer, but the real cause is indifference, lack of interest and activity on the part of those entrusted with the collections and those who subscribed. This is a voluntary debt, an obligation, a free-will offering, a pledge to the church and to the church's God. We cannot afford to lie to God. If we fail to make a faithful effort, we may witness a scene which will remind us of the awful mistake of Ananias and Sapphira."

This is plain language and any one who is acquainted with Dr. Welch knows that he feels deeply every word he says. Since carrying on to completion the task undertaken in Men and Millions has fallen into the hands of the Mission Board, every member of that Board desires to give every member who pledged to the Movement the opportunity to pay those pledges and so redeem their promises and thus cause our dear Church to face the unknown future with hope, courage and conviction. Brethren and beloved, shall we allow a killing indifference to paralyze the mightiest Movement and the holiest task that the Christians have ever undertaken? For the sake of our church in the unknown future, God forbid that such should befall us.—J. O. ATKINSON.

THE REAL MEANING OF MEN AND MILLIONS

Through the century and more of our existence as a denomination the Christians have held steadily to the following principles:

First, The Lord Jesus is the only head of the church. Second, Christian is a sufficient name for the church. Third, The Holy Bible is the only creed of the church, and a sufficient rule of faith and practice. Fourth, Christian character is a sufficient test of church membership. Fifth, The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Standing on this platform and holding steadfastly to these principles, the Christian Church has founded and seeks to foster the following seven enterprises:

First, Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor. Second, Religious Journalism.

Third, Missions, Home and Foreign.

Fourth, Christian education through higher institutions of learning.

Fifth, The care of fatherless and motherless children through its Orphanage.

Sixth, The support of its aged ministers and the widows of ministers.

Seventh, The Southern Christian Convention.

These constitute the entire institutional life of the Christian Church and are the agencies through which the arm of the church reaches out to the uttermost parts in its endeavor to give the world the divine blessings and benefits so far revealed to the church.

These seven enterprises have been given us at various intervals of our unfolding history, and represent the co-operative effort and devotion of the people called Christians.

At various times efforts have been made by interested parties and loyal devotees to secure funds for, or carry forward, one or the other of these enterprises; but it was left to the consecrated membership of the churches in the year of our Lord 1920 to institute a Movement known as Men and Millions, whose one aim and single purpose was and is to care for ALL the seven enterprises of the church, and give every member of the Christian denomination an opportunity to show his or her love for and loyalty to all that the Church has and stands for. In all the history of the Church no nobler ideal or holier task was ever conceived by the Christians than this Movement. It was, and up to date is, the only co-operative movement we have ever undertaken, and the only attempt ever made to elicit the loyalty and support of all to all that the Christian Church represents and now undertakes.

From time to time there have been those who were willing to make special contributions to Missions, to publications, to the Orphanage, to ministerial relief, to the Southern Convention, to our Colleges; and so on; but never before were all Christians called upon to take into their hearts an equal love for all that we stood for and express in their pledges and their prayers their loyalty to all the enterprises of the Church.

Now, by this wise provision, whenever an individual pays a dime or a dollar on his or her pledge to Men and Millions, he or she has the consciousness of knowing that that gift, little or large, will be distributed according to the needs of ALL the enterprises of the Church whose principles we champion and proclaim to the world. Every gift to Men and Millions is divided to all the seven enterprises of our denominational life and are thus carried to a higher degree of efficiency because of this gift. Men and Millions means a clarion call to all the people in our Christian Church to get behind all the enterprises of the Church and together carry them on to greater power, and usefulness to the world.

The good and saintly who have gone before us and died in faith obtained a good report through faith, but did not receive the promise, God having provided a better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect. (Hebrews 11:39-40). Those who have gone before sowed seed out of which our seven enterprises have sprung. To perfect their saintly lives, God has provided for us the better thing, namely, That we should be constrained to carry on to greater usefulness and efficiency that which they so well begun. Our Men and Millions Movement contemplates this, the carrying on to further usefulness and efficiency ALL the interests of the Kingdom that have been committed to us by the saintly lives of those who have gone before. Surely no people ever had a more holy cause to challenge them to supreme effort or nobler sacrifice and generations yet unborn will rise up to bless those who with persistency and sacrificial effort contribute to Men and Millions and complete this great and divine Movement.—J. O. ATKINSON.

S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTION

The N. C. Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will meet with Liberty (Vance) Church July 11th-13th. Let all our ministers plan to come. One hundred Sunday School superintendents should get busy and see that a full number of delegates is elected that will attend, and then Mr. Superintendent be sure to come with them.

Liberty church has recently been enlarged, by building on four Sunday School rooms to help meet the demands of her own growing Sunday school and to make room for all who will come to make this the biggest and best Convention we have ever held. Don't forget that we are to meet with one of our strongest country churches, that is able, willing, anxious, and ready to entertain you.

Notice the announcement of the entertainment committee and give us the pleasure of your presence at the Convention, and you will be pleased and benefited with the trip. All visitors a heartily welcome.—J. E. FRANKS, Pastor.

THE SUN'S PULPIT

THE CHALLENGE OF OPPORTUNITY

Baccalaureate Sermon, preached before the Graduating Class of Elon College, May 28, 1922.

BY REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

Pastor of the Peoples Church, Dover, Delaware.

TEXT: "Who knoweth whether thou art not come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"—Esther 4: 14.

A group of High school lads were standing in the corridor of the school building at the close of the noon hour waiting for the signal to announce the recitation period. And as the janitor passed by he stopped a moment and asked the boys why it was that lightning never struck the same place twice. The boys gave different answers, and among the answers was one by a lad much younger than the rest. "Oh, that's easy," he said, "lightning never hits twice in the same place because when lightning hits a thing once, the thing isn't there any longer."

Be that as it may, we are all aware of the fact that since the lightning of the terrible war struck the old world, the same world is no longer here. The world in which we live today is a different world from that of eight years ago. I do not contend that it is a better world than it was in the spring of 1914; but it is a different world, and it is our supreme privilege as well as a heaven imposed obligation resting upon us to help make it a better world.

There has been a perilous letting down of our moral, our civic, and our social standards. We have been drifting with the tide. The alarming and demoralizing social reactions following the war to which the present day has fallen heir, the economic unrest in every department of life, the industrial conflict, and the misunderstandings and suspicions and divisions in the cause of religion, make the present hour of momentous significance to the future history of the world. The response that the present generation makes to its opportunities of service and advancement will determine the world's progress for all time to come. And if we fail humanity at this crucial hour, "so shall our judgment be forever." But truth is not to be forever on the scaffold. Wrong cannot remain upon the throne. The scaffold of our hopes sways the future.

"And behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow

And just as God raised up a Moses to lead the Children of Israel out from the oppression of Egyptian servitude and bondage; just as He raised up a Martin Luther to give to the world the principles of Protestantism and the Open Bible in defiance of the Pope, the dignitaries of the Roman Church and the Emperor of Germany; just as God raised up a Washington to lead what seemed to be an insignificant and deluded band of colonists to strike for freedom and independence; just as He raised up out of obscurity a Lincoln to preserve the Union of the States; just as he raised up a Frances E. Willard to lead the Nation in the crusade against intemperance and vice, so God will raise up men and women today to face and solve the problems of building a new and better world.

And in the question of Mordecai to Queen Esther of old, I fling out the challenge to the member of this class of 1922, "Who knows but that you have come to the Kingdom for such a time as this?"

God has a place for each of you in His program of world building. Who knows but that some of the members of this Class may be destined to be numbered among the Nation's leaders? Who knows but that some of the members of this Class may be destined to be numbered among the world's illustrious? Who knows but that from this Class may come masters in the realm of science, masters in the realm of music, of art and of literature, masters in the realm of commerce, masters in the realm of industry, masters in the realm of religious thought and service? Who knows but that you have come to the Kingdom for such a time and such an hour as this—the greatest hour in the history of the world?

Never before have the avenues leading to greatness been so numerous as today; never before have young men and young women had such advantages in making their mark in the world; never before have the opportunities to render a real and lasting service to mankind been so challenging as they are today. There is not a young man in this graduating class who does not have a far better chance to make good in the great game of life than had Abraham Lincoln. But you say, "Oh, Lincoln was born great." That is wrong. No person has ever been born great. Even the Son of God Himself "developed in body, in mind and in spirit," so the Scriptures declare.

I know we often hear the quotation that "Some men are born great; some men achieve greatness; while other men have greatness thrust upon them." But life is a different story. There is only one road to true greatness, and that is the road of nobility of character, honesty of purpose, sincerity of effort, and unconditional perseverance. There is no room in the world for day dreamers, but there is always plenty of room up front for the person who has a definite objective in life and ambition to work. The world always makes way for the person who knows where and why he is going. Abraham Lincoln had a purpose high and noble. It was his uncompromising purpose to live a life clean and above reproach, and a life that would be useful to society. His objective was to be a real man, and to render a real service to his day and generation. He responded to the challenge of every opportunity to serve. From boyhood on up, he thought of others as well as of self. He thought of his State as well as his community. He thought of his Nation as well as his State. And because the map of his country was engraved upon his heart, he was able to say with meaning, with feeling, and with effect—"The government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

Abraham Lincoln was not a child of destiny any more than is every member of this Class. He might have been content to split rails all his life, but he felt that God had a bigger task for him. And so he made room for God in his life, and God led him along the highway of service, on up to the loftiest pinnacle of fame. And so for every aspiring soul the City of Self-Realization lies along the Highway of Service to others.

Phillips Brooks was one day talking with a young student at Harvard, and the young man confidentially told Mr. Brooks that he believed he might have been great himself if he had been born fifty years before. Mr. Brooks replied, "There is just as much chance for young men to become great now as there ever has been."

And I declare unto you, I believe there is even a greater opportunity in our day than the past ever offered for young people to climb the ladder of achievement. Young men today and young women today have many more opportunities than had the young people of any generation in the past. The men and women of yesterday have opened the way for the youth of today to follow after. They have laid the foundation upon which we may build. The inventions of the past have been many, and the young men of today may lament that everything has been invented that needs to be invented, and that hence there is no chance for him to exercise his inventive genius. But that is just the way people without inventive genius have talked from the beginning of time. It was only the genius who could discern the things men needed but which they did not have. If a young man or woman will not make the most of their opportunities in this year of our Lord 1922, neither would they have responded to the opportunities of any generation past, if they had lived then instead of now. The challenge before the college graduate is to appreciate his superior privileges in life by reason of the contributions of past generations and because of the educational advantages to make the most out of every opportunity for self-realization; to apply himself and rivet his attention upon the major interests in life; and with his eye on the Will of God to press forward along the pathway of duty. And if one does that, whether he be endowed with one talent or five, his life is sure to be a success, for he will be qualified for whatever place God has for him in the world's work.

You may never be a Shakespeare, a Wordsworth, a Macauley, or an Emerson in the realm of literature; you may never be a Michael Angelo, a Raphael, a Leonardo de Vinci, or a Turner in the realm of art; you may never be a Moses, a Garibaldi, A Lincoln, or a Frances E. Willard as a reformer; you may never be a Froebel, an Erasmus, a Horace Mann, or a President Elliott as a teacher; you may never be a Rothschild, a Carnegie, a Rockefeller, or a Babson in the realm of business; you may never be a Darwin, a Burbank, an Osler or an Edison in the realm of science; you may never be a Wagner, a Kreisler, a Caruso, or a Galli Curci in the realm of music; you may never be a St. Paul, a Spurgeon, A Beecher or a Phillips Brooks as a minister; you may not, and yet you may. You do not know, nor does the world know with what talents God has endowed your life. The spark of genius may be in your mind, in your life, as it was in theirs. They were not always aware of their capacity for greatness. For years many of the world's illustrious were practically unnoticed if not ignored by their contemporaries, and they themselves were unmindful of the powers God had intrusted to their stewardship. It was the greatness of others that found greatness in them. Steel sharpened steel. Deep called unto deep.

Would you young men and women know the powers and the capacity for greatness with which you are endowed? Remember those powers will never be self-disclosed. Just as there are veins of coal hidden away beneath the surface of the earth that will never be mined, so there are apt to be capacities of power and strength hidden away in the lives about us—capacities that may never be realized or known. There are men and women today filling the inferior positions in life who had the capacity for development and power that would have fitted them for leadership. But they have never arrived simply because they have never touched arms with those who were strong; they have never touched minds with those who knew; they have never touched hearts with those who loved.

We must strike mind with the great minds of the past and the present, if we ourselves would come to our largest self realization. And above all one must strike mind with the Master mind of the Universe. It is as genius strikes genius that the sparks of genius are evidenced. One can never know the capacity of his life for achievement until he touches mind with those who have achieved. The libraries, the colleges, and the universities afford that matchless privilege of touching minds with the great of the past and the present. One can never know his capacity of appreciation of the beautiful until he has touched mind with those who have appreciated and produced the beautiful. One can never know his talents until he touches mind and heart with those who have discovered and developed their talents. One can never know his capacity for nobility of life until he touches life with those who have lived most gloriously, and the most victoriously. One can never know the power of love until he touches mind and heart with those who love, and with the world's greatest Lover, even Jesus Christ, the Son of God. "The world has plenty of men and plenty of women to do its work, but it is sadly in need of a higher type of manhood and womanhood, in order to insure that its work shall be done rightly."

There is no other one thing of which the world stands in such need today as it does of a genuine and powerful love—love for the truth—love for one's task—love for God, and love for mankind. We have tried to conquer and subdue the world with big ships, big guns, big armies, big navies, and with the biggest War of all times. But Where are we? We have been beating against the air. We have failed with big armies and big navies. It is time we were trying Big Love. That is Christ's way. If we had been trying Christ's way even the past two generations, the white-winged dove of peace would now be nestling above all the parliaments of the world; the nations would long since have beaten their swords into plowshares and their bayonets into pruning hooks; nation would never again lift up sword against nation, neither would they learn war any more; men and nations would trust each other instead of casting toward all the eye of suspicion; employer and employee would sit together in harmonious council; Capital and Labor would co-operate with each other, and "Righteousness would cover the earth as the waters cover the sea."—IF, IF, IF all men had only been trying Christ's way—the way of Big Love!

The enthronement of love in the personal, the social, the educational, the commercial and the industrial life; and in the national and the international life would speedily usher in the millennium of peace, prosperity and happiness which all right-minded men and women desire. It must be done sometime. But how is it going to be done? That is the problem. And who knows but that you young men and young women of this graduating class have come to the Kingdom for such a time as this?

The various problems in the social, the economic, the industrial, the educational, and the religious realms of life will be solved for the most part by the graduates of our colleges and universities. That is the purpose of an education—namely, to equip young men and women for service to society. Society has a claim on your knowledge. She has a claim upon you. She has invested generously of her resources in providing educational opportunities and privileges for you in the graded schools, the high schools and the colleges. The privileges of an education bring with them social and civic responsibilities. One's sincere purpose should be to use his knowledge to the glory of God and the service of man. Notwithstanding the cultural theory of education the utilitarian principle is the basis of all true education. Upon the college and university graduates rest the great responsibilities of today. The salvation of the world is largely in their hands. If they fail to carry on, then God pity the world!

I admonish you, young men and women, that you be determined to make some definite contribution to humanity's good. It is an excusably unworthy motive for one to have secured an education simply in order to make a better living. One's education will enable him to make a better living to be sure, but of greater importance is the fact that an education equips one for more efficient work. There will be no room in the New World for idlers, "lounge lizards," or social parasites. The New World will insist that every able-bodied and able-minded person shall be a worker with mind or with hand—a producer, whether he needs the fruit of his labors for his own support or not—that he shall work for the good of others. The New World calls for strong arms, strong minds, and strong hearts.

In the realm of moral conduct the New World needs young men and young women of high ideals of their own—people who will do what they think right because they believe it is right rather than because society has simply decreed that it is not wrong. Progress has been sadly retarded by mere conventional goodness. Conventional goodness is for one to do no more than society requires in order for one to keep himself respectable. Have your own ideals of goodness. Act upon first hand convictions, rather than upon second hand opinions. Do not simply follow in the old paths. Make new paths. Lead the way to higher planes of goodness, higher planes of morality, higher planes of citizenship, higher planes of manhood and womanhood, higher planes of service.

In the realm of economics, the New World is calling for young men and young women who have a keen sense of discrimination of values, and high ideals of economic justice, who will insist that there shall always be a proper relative between the cost of production and the selling price of the commodities of life; and who will create such a sentiment of economic fair play that a profiteer will be in even worse repute than a highway robber.

In the realm of industry, the New World is calling for young men and women to champion the cause of social solidarity—the fundamental principle of a happy society,—that no man liveth to himself alone and that no group of men can live to themselves alone. This principle of interdependence must be recognized for the good of each and for the welfare of all. Labor must recognize that it serves not alone the money interests, but that it also serves the social interests. Society is just as much concerned about the grade of work and the amount of work, and the spirit in which the work is done, as is the employer himself. And Labor should be made to realize that a fair day's work is essential to the social welfare. On the other hand, Capital should be made to realize that it too must serve society, and that society is as much concerned about the amount of wages paid, and the conditions under which men work as is Labor itself. Moreover, Capital and Labor both must be made to realize that Labor is entitled to a fair day's wage only in return for a fair day's work. "The gospel of the square deal" must be practiced by both Capital and Labor in order to protect the well-being of society, of which both Capital and Labor are legitimate parts.

In the realm of politics, the New World is waiting for young men and young women of vision and of courage to take the "tics" out of politics. The rising generation will see to it that partisanism is relegated to the junk pile of disfavor for all time to come. Partisanism has been the greatest stumbling block in the path of our Nation's progress. It is often the greatest barrier in the way of community advancement. It causes men to stand in their own light, and block the way of progress in their own community. Partisanism is unsocial and unAmerican and therefore un-Christian. The New World will have none of it. Public opinion will insist that no man should be elected to any office just because he is a member of a certain political party. Public opinion will decree that a man can be elected to office only on the strength of his fitness for office, by reason of the merits of his character, his work, and his worth. In the past there have been men who would have voted for the devil himself, if he had been running for office on their party ticket. But in the New World, the party lines will become less distinct. And though there always will be, and always should be different political parties, the higher type of American citizenship will put principle before party, and will vote for the candidate who is best qualified to serve the people. You young men and women will be called upon to help lead the way in this great and challenging civic readjustment.

The world is calling for young men and women of intelligence to champion and interpret the principle of the Master's Golden Rule in business, in industry, and in government, and in every other relationship in life. That Rule is more Golden in practice than in theory, and if applied, will solve every problem that haunts the pathway of humanity. The Golden Rule should be the principle of conduct for every college graduate, namely, that "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

In the realm of religion, the New World is calling for young men and young women of high ideals to make plain to the people of all classes that religion is a thing of deeds rather than of creeds. The New World is calling for young men and women to practice the principles of Christian democracy in whatever vocation they follow,—to be living protests against exclusive denominationalism and religious prejudice.

There are some people who actually think that heaven has been reserved for the members of their particular church or denomination and that all others will have to stay on the outside, or at best be satisfied with a back seat. But I declare to you that a man is an infidel who believes in the God of his denomination, but not in the God of other denominations, as paradoxical as that may sound. There is only one God, the Lord and Father of us all. And if we have but one God, certainly all those who call Him Father, should call one another brother. And the New World is calling to you young men and young women to help sow the seeds of a practical Christian Unity, recognizing, as all fair-minded people must, that God is no respecter of persons nor of denominations. It is deplorable that the Church has been divided into so many different sects with their various shiboleths of faith.

We are told that there are more than a hundred and eighty different religious sects in the United States alone. Naturally such a situation is depressing and disheartening. It even causes some people to discount Christianity itself when they see its forces so divided. But the fact that the forces of Christianity are thus divided is no ground for any person to say that he will not accept his responsibility in doing his part in the interest of a United Christendom.

The religious world is not alone in being divided. The healing world is likewise divided. "It has its allopaths, its homeopaths, its osteopaths, and numerous other paths. And the experiences of life has taught us that all 'paths' lead ultimately to the grave." You young men and women will have a part in ordering that all denominations must ultimately lead to the grave of sectarianism.

In the realm of education, the New World will lay the chief emphasis not merely upon education "per se," but upon Christian education,—the education of character. Brilliancy of intellect alone will not suffice. "It is possible for men to walk with their heads above the clouds intellectually while their feet are in mud ankle deep morally." The training of the intellect is not enough. The training of the heart must go hand in hand with the training of the mind. The responsibility that rests upon you members of the graduating class as you leave these halls of learning, and say good-bye to your Alma Mater, is a responsibility of tremendous significance. While you were a student, your conduct and your ideals were only of personal significance. A misstep on your part—a failure to measure up to your privilege and opportunity was only a reflection upon yourself, and perhaps upon your parents. But now your life is to be a witness for or against the good name of your college. President Hadley used to tell us at Yale that "the strength of a college depends on the character of its graduates, more than on the number of its students or the distinction of its faculty. The spirit and work of the graduates of a college," he declared, "shows what the school has accomplished in the past, and what society has a right to expect it to accomplish in the future."

Much has transpired in your life since the day you walked up the old campus path for the first time, and shyly entered the President's office to enroll as a student in Elon College. Can you now picture yourself that day when you entered college? Think of what this school has contributed of culture, intelligence, and strength of character to your life. Your debt to Elon College, and to society is great. It can only be paid by a whole-hearted response to the opportunities of service that the world holds before you.

It has been my privilege to come in personal contact with students of several of the leading colleges and universities in this country and in Europe as a student and in official capacity. For six years I was pastor of a church at the seat of the second largest university in the world, and my experience disclosed to me the fact that the students who catch the inspiration for noble Christian living are most likely to excel not only in proficiency of scholarship, but also in power to achieve in the world of affairs. As men and women make room for God in their lives, He makes room for them in His World. We cannot hope to do much for humanity until after we have first allowed God to do something with us.

You young men and young women stand today upon the threshold of the New World with its countless opportunities for service challenging you. The need is tremendous! The demands are great! Who knows but that you have come to the Kingdom for just such a time as this, to be a leader in the world's great work? God may be waiting to break forth into human experience in a new and larger way through your life. Give Him room! Fit yourself the most efficiently for His service,—the service of humanity.

Horace Greely urged the young men of his day to "Go West, Go West!" My admonition to every member of this graduating Class would be to take at least a year of graduate work in some great university. Go with the determination to equip yourself in the best manner possible for a worthy service to humanity,—the largest service possible for you. Give yourself every chance. There may be some spark of genius in your life that will never be realized unless you go farther in your education. You have launched, where will you anchor?

The New World will make greater demands of you than the old world made of your parents. You will have to compete in life with men and women who had every advantage that the best schools could afford. Your parents have had to compete with high school and college graduates. You will have to compete with those who have not only graduated from college, but who have specialized in their respective fields of activity by taking courses in the great universities. Equip yourself to measure arms with them. I would urge you to specialize also, and then go back to your home community and render the largest possible service. Go back pledged to the task of helping to make your community the Model community of your State.

There are some who say that an education spoils people. A little of it is apt to spoil most anyone, but more of it soon brings a person back to his senses. The more people know, the less they think they know, because the more people know the more they realize how much there is that they do not know, and how little they really do know as compared to what there is to be known.

"A little learning is a dangerous thing,
Drink deep, or taste not the pierian spring.
These shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
But drinking deeper, sobers one again."

Members of the graduating Class, if you would prove that you have come to the Kingdom for such a time as this, it is yours to make some definite contribution to humanity's good. It is not enough just to be active. Some people are always busy, very active making a stir and a noise, but their efforts are aimless and without purpose. Have a program to work by. Be systematic. Conserve your energies for the really worth while things of life. It requires as much good judgment to be able to discriminate and know what not to do, as to know what to do. Eliminate the insignificant and trifling concerns, that consume time and energy without benefit and without purpose to anyone. Devote your time and effort to the vital realities of life. Aristotle used to say "the measure of a person, is the things the person is interested in." Cultivate interest in the things that are really worth while—the things that strengthen character and lift humanity to higher levels of thought and attainment. Know what you want to do, and then do it with all your might. "It is better to strike one telling blow a St. George, than to go through life with the mere motions of a St. Vitas."

Cultivate the disposition of perseverance. It is only persevering men and women who arrive. Cyrus Field was defeated fifteen times in trying to lay the Atlantic Cable. He was told that it could not be done, and he was laughed at for continuing to try. But he persevered for nearly seventeen years, and not until the sixteenth time he tried it, was he successful. There is no shortcut path to achievement, no royal road to learning, no golden highway to success.

Be stable, so the world will always know where to find you. The vascillating men and women who do not know their own minds are not in demand by the forces of progress.

Make friends—but above all, choose good friends—the kind that will help you. A bad friendship has meant the ruin of many lives of promise. It has caused the downfall of thousands. Make as many good friends out in the world of affairs as you can. Your friends will constitute your greatest wealth. A good friend is one of the surest inspirations in life. Charles Kingsley was once asked by George Eliot to tell her the secret of his success-life. And he replied, "I had a friend."

That has been the secret of the success of thousands of men and women,—a good friend to inspire them to do their best. You will need that inspiration. It may sound like a contradiction to admonish you to select your enemies with the same precaution you do your friends. But it is not a contradiction. Only men and women of flabby morals and shallow minds avoid making enemies. You will be known, and the world will judge you not only by the friends you have but also by the enemies you make. Choose your enemies with discretion.

My best wishes go with every member of this graduating Class as you now pass out into the School of Life. And it is my sincere hope and prayer that you may truly have come to the Kingdom for such a time as this, and that on the Final Commencement Day when the Great Teacher of The University of Life shall hand you your diploma, it may have inscribed thereon the Divine "Magna Cum Laude."—"WELL DONE."

BIBLE CIRCULATION.

The biggest year of Bible circulation since the high levels of the war period, is reported by the American Bible Society, in their annual report just issued.

The total number of volumes circulated during the year was 4,855,464, which is more than a million in excess of the distribution of the preceding year. The largest increase is shown in China, where 2,362,730 were circulated. From Japan, the Near East, and all of Latin America there has come an increased demand so great that the Society has been unable to meet it.

During the year, the Society has been busy with many important translation programs. The revised Spanish New Testament has been completed and will be ready for distribution during the coming year. Translation work has gone forward also in Luragoli for missions in British East Africa; in Quechua for the Bolivian Indians; in Zulu for the black people of South Africa; in K'pelle for use in Liberia. In China large parts of the Scriptures have been issued in the new Phonetic Script, which is a simplified written form endorsed and promoted by the government.

During the year, the Society has arranged for the re-organization of its manufacturing program and hopes thereby to largely increase its output. It will make use of the largest and best organized printing concerns in America for the rapid production of its books in many languages for use in all parts of the world. It will continue to use its own plates and exercise painstaking supervision of versions in accordance with its policy of over one hundred years.

Young says, "on the soft bed of luxury most kingdoms have expired." Pampering the body fills it with countless pains. In the university of hard knocks most great men matriculate, and from that university they graduate into places of power and prestige. The easy life is a great foe to hard-fibered, triumphant character.—Exchange.

The Fruit of Life.

He liveth long who liveth well,
All else is being flung away,
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day.
Then fill each hour with what will last,
Buy up the moments as they go;
The life above, when this is past,
Is the ripe fruit of life below.—Bonar.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

JULY 16, 1922.

THE HANDWRITING ON THE WALL.
(Temperance Lesson.)

Daniel 5:1—21.

Golden Text: God will bring every work into judgment with every hidden thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil.—Eccl. 12:14.

Lesson Teachings:

Belshazzar had failed to worship the true God. He profaned the sacred vessels. He had lived in drunken revelry. Intemperance causes men to forget God and drives them to debauched living, and God "will bring every work into judgment."

Belshazzar turned to the wrong source for his counsel, and the "wise men" of the kingdom failed. Remembered by a good woman, Daniel was brought into the court. The captive youth whom Nabuchadnezzar had found "in whom was no blemish, but well favored and skillful in all wisdom and endowed with knowledge," had kept his life pure and so was able to serve his God and deliver a great warning to a wicked ruler.

Without fear, Daniel delivered his message of condemnation and warning. God needs bold spokesmen today to denounce evil for Him! The Flying Squadron Foundation, under Oliver W. Stewart's leadership, is sounding the temperance warning boldly today. In their recent campaign through thirty-four states, they have been uniting forces for an onward sweep for a dry nation in deed and in truth. Have you the Daniel spirit in this great issue?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

JULY 16.

EARNEST OR TRIFLERS?

(Amos 6:1-8; Eccl. 12:13, 14; Matt. 12:36.)

Lesson Thoughts:

These triflers of whom the prophet spoke are wholly indifferent to the moral havoc and spiritual poverty that is rushing the nation to its doom, Christian Endeavor today is interested in a Christian nation and in training Christian citizens to lead in that nation's affairs.

Washington Gladden once declared: "It is better to say: 'This one thing I do' than to say: 'These forty things I dabble in.'"

Make every occasion a great occasion. For you cannot tell when someone may be taking your measure for a larger place."

"You cannot dream yourself into a character. You must hammer and forge yourself into one."—Froude.

Are you an earnest Christian Endeavorer or a trifle? A worker or a drone? An active recruit or a slacker?

"How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

1,111 NEW SUNDAY SCHOOL MEMBERS.

The six weeks contest for new members in the Sunday Schools of the Southern Christian Convention ended formally Sunday, June 11th. Weekly reports for all or a part of the time were received from sixty-four Sunday Schools, which report a total gain of 1,111 Sunday School members, increased offerings, and an average per cent attendance of 71 per cent of their enrollment, for the six weeks from May 7th to June 11th. Many "Honor Schools" increased 10 per cent or more, or maintained an average attendance of at least 70 per cent of their enrollment, or did both. The contest was conducted between the two groups of Conferences, the North Carolina and the Alabama Conferences, in competition with the two Virginia and the Georgia-Alabama Conferences, records including the following five points; Number of new members enrolled; Number of Honor Schools which increased 10 per cent; Number of Honor Schools which maintained an average attendance of 70 per cent or more; Offerings received, and the average attendance (per cent) maintained by the group during the time. One hundred points was to be given to the side excelling in each of these five points, making a total of five hundred points, the side securing the largest number of points to be the winner.

The report of North Carolina-Alabama totals is as follows:

Total New Members enrolled.....417.
 No. of Honor Schools on Increase (10 per cent)..... 15.
 No. of Honor Schools on Average attendance (70 per cent)..... 15.
 Offerings during Contest.....$341.83.
 Average per cent attendance of group.. 72 per cent.

Eastern Virginia, Valley of Virginia and Georgia-Alabama Conferences reported as follows:

Total new members enrolled.....694.
 No. of Honor Schools on Increase (10 per cent)..... 15.
 No. of Honor Schools on Average attendance (70 per cent)..... 14.
 Offerings during Contest.....$733.30
 Average per cent attendance of group.. 70 per cent.

These reports give the honors for new members enrolled and offerings given to the Virginia-Georgia schools, but North Carolina-Alabama has one more school maintaining the average attendance, and a higher average per cent of attendance, while on the fifth point, Honor Schools on Increase, both sides have fifteen. According to the points to be won, each side has 200, with the fifth hundred tied for. If your Sunday School has increased 10 per cent, or had an average attendance of 70 per cent of your membership during the past six weeks, let your Field Secretary know, and let us determine the real winner of the contest. We hope also that other schools will report their number of new members. We must have our 10 per cent increase on our total membership before the Burlington Convention. If your School is not in the following list of Honor Schools, send in your report so that we can put you there, and decide the contest victor.

In North Carolina the greatest increase was shown by the Happy Home Sunday School which showed a steady gain, amounting to an increase of 70 per cent, while Randleman increased 56 per cent and at the same time had an average attendance of 96 per cent of its enrollment. The following are the Honor Schools of North Carolina in this contest: Happy Home, Raleigh, Graham, Haw River, Liberty (Vance), Henderson, Morrisville, Randleman, Fuller's Chapel, Amelia, Palm Street, Greensboro, Mt. Gilead, Liberty (Va.); Pleasant Grove (Va.); Bethlehem (A); Bethel and Union.

Alabama had a school which increased 203 per cent with an average attendance of 88 per cent at Christiana. This school organized both a Cradle Roll and a Home Department besides increasing the regular enrollment. Other Honor Schools in Alabama are Pleasant Grove, Mt. Zion, Spring Hill, and Antioch.

In the Valley of Virginia honors were closely divided between the Winchester and Bethlehem Sunday Schools. Bethlehem increased 33 per cent with an average attendance of 75 per cent while Winchester increased 27 per cent with an average attendance of 89. Antioch reports an average attendance of 99 per cent for the six weeks. Other Honor Schools, all of which did fine work in the Valley, are Dry Run, Mt. Olivet (R); Linville, Concord, St. Peter's, Timber Ridge, Palmyra.

In Eastern Virginia, Elm Avenue increased its membership 28 per cent with an average attendance of 88 per cent, while Suffolk increased 24 per cent. Honor Schools are Franklin, Rosemont, Oak Grove, and Newport News, with Elm Avenue and Suffolk.

Georgia-Alabama has three Honor Schools, all of which increased their schools and maintained a high average attendance. Vanceville increased 100 per cent, enrolling 71 new members. North Highlands, Columbus, and East La Grange were close Rivals of Vanceville.

In mere figures, this gives the report of our Contest. But its work is just begun. The task now is to make our schools able to care for these new members and the others who will join them. Our hope is that the example of these "Honor Schools" may inspire all of our Sunday Schools to a renewed effort to grow and to serve.

CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS.

Too much praise cannot be given, nor too much credit bestowed upon those who had the wisdom and the foresight to start the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods of the Christian Church. It was an institution designed to meet a long felt need in our denomination and to those who have had the privilege to attend its sessions has come a larger vision of their task and a new inspiration for their service.

The financial support of the work was largely borne by a few of our big hearted brethren, who were willing to make sacrifices in order to give the Church this much needed program. The Church owes them a debt of gratitude which it will never be able to repay.

Feeling that the Church should carry this responsibility and bear the expense of this institution, the management asked the Southern Christian Convention, at its last session, to assume control and provide for the financing of the movement. The Convention placed the institution under the control of the Board of Religious Education. This Board has decided upon three things, viz.: First, to hold the sessions as conveniently as possible to all our people; Second, to try to give a program that would be of practical benefit to all our workers—pastors, superintendents, teachers, endeavorers, laymen; Third, to reduce the expense to a minimum. We hope to meet these conditions in the next session which meets at Elon College, Aug. 28—Sept. 4, 1922.

W. T. WALTERS, Chairman,
Board of Religious Education.

WHO IS GOING TO THE CONVENTION?

This is the month of Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions, with our people. The North Carolina Convention meets the 11th, the Eastern Virginia the 25th and the Alabama the 29th. Who is going to represent your School?

A Convention is not simply a place to get reports as to what the schools and societies are doing or have been doing for the past year, but it is a place for the exchange of ideas; for the discussion of methods; the gathering of inspiration and the laying of plans for the most successful prosecution of the work. It should be representative of the best thought and experience from every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society. Every superintendent and teacher, and Christian Endeavor president should make a special effort to go. The Lord's work is too important for us to do less than our best, and our best is done just in proportion to our interest in getting hold of these methods that bring the best results. If your School or Class is perfect and you feel that you do not need help, go and tell the Convention what you are doing and help the others.

Sometimes we feel that we do not have the time to spare for these meetings, but I have observed that the farmer has time to attend farmers' meetings, the business man time to attend business associations, the lodge man time to attend lodge conventions, and the voters time to go to political conventions, and yet if it came to a proposition of the community having to give up one organization or the other, the church would always be the one to be retained. Why? Because deep down in every man's heart he knows that the church is the most important organization on earth, the Sunday School is an essential factor in the development of the church. It is worth while for you to give a day or two of your time in the interest of the advancement of the Sunday school work in your church and your denomination.

Let every pastor, officer and teacher make a special effort to attend the convention and thus make the convention mean the most to our work.

W. T. WALTERS.

A WAY OUT IN MISSOURI.

Albany, Missouri,

June 19, 1922.

I am seventy years old today. Have been preaching forty-five years. Preached my first sermon the second Sunday in June, 1877, at three o'clock in the afternoon. It was in a log school house near Muses Mills, Kentucky. Since that time I have preached in nine different states. At present I am preaching in the North Missouri conference. During last month I had the privilege of baptizing twenty-two persons in the name of Jesus Christ. If I should live to preach forty-five years more they would all be spent in the Christian Church. Our Western Christian Convention and Religious Education Summer School for pastors was a success. I was pleased to meet so many of the brethren. I must mention Dr. Burnett who began his ministry in October after I began in June. We became very fast friends in those days of long ago and have remained so. We were happy to have him in the convention but more especially in our home. We may never walk together in this world again, but if not, we will walk together in that Heavenly Jerusalem and praise our King for saving and bringing us up there. May the Lord bless the "Sun" family and the Work of His Kingdom.—A. P. HURST.

CHILD'S HOUR

MOTHER'S APRON STRINGS.

We've had the most beautiful little secret in our family ever since little Timothy was old enough to walk. For he has always been a regular shadow, tagging around at mother's heels all day long—upstairs, downstairs, attic, cellar, garden; it's all the same to him. We think of it as so dear and comical of him that we smile at each other, knowingly, Bill and I; so you can imagine our astonishment when we went to the store with mother once.

The grocer gave mother her packages then he said: "It beats all, Mrs. Hathaway, how these three kids of yours are tied to your apron strings of their own accord."

All of us, mind you!

"Why we're no such thing!" I exclaimed, rather provoked, for mother never wore an apron on the street in all her life. But of course, it isn't polite to contradict grocery men, especially as he and mother smiled knowingly at each other, exactly as Bill and I always do about Timothy's devotion. So when we were out on the sidewalk, Bill said: "What's all this about apron strings, anyhow?"

"You haven't any!" I cried.

"Oh, yes I have," she smiled, fairy ones!"

"Oh," said I, "is it going to turn into a story for bedtime?"

"It is," she answered.

And for once in our lives the clock simply crawled from seven to eight o'clock. But by and by we heard this story, which we have loved and loved ever since:

For it seems that once upon a time there was a queen so rich and beautiful that everyone turned to look at her hundred silken gowns as they cried, "Oh!" and "Ah!" every few hours she had to change of course; first a breakfast gown, then garden gown, next a luncheon gown, then a gown to drive in, another for dinner, another for the court ball each evening—you can see for yourself what fun it would have been to watch her. And you might suppose she would have been the happiest person in the world instead of which she was—as blue as indigo!

Because, you see, she had three handsome sons and three pretty daughters, but not a single prince or a single princess ever did what their nurses or governesses wanted them to do; it was frowns and scowls and kicks and loud words all day, even until the King and Queen were nearly frantic; for the children were a perfect nuisance to have around. When news of this behavior leaked out into the kingdom the poor subjects wagged their heads most solemnly and sighed: "Such ill-bred children ought to die! We shudder to think of the day when such disagreeable monsters will be old enough to rule us."

The others said: "They don't die, because they're fed too carefully and watched too thoroughly by all those guards and nurses in the palace. So, if we don't want them to grow up to be our rulers, let's kill them off now, one by one." And they exactly plotted to do this very thing!

When news of this wicked plan reached the Queen, what did her beauty or her gilded crown or her hundred silken robes matter to her then?

"Ah, me!" she wept, and the tears splashed down on her purple satin gown and made little marks all over it.

But when she had cried exactly half a dozen great salt tears, behold there stood at her elbow a weazened little fairy, the kind who has grown old by continually worrying over helping other people's trouble. And this kind little creature said gently: "Tut! tut! your majesty, this is no way for a queen to spoil her royal purple gown."

The Queen blinked through her tears in surprise: "Oh, if you knew why I cry—" she began, but the fairy interrupted: "I do know; and tears won't help at all. Has your majesty tried wearing apron strings?"

"Apron strings!" gasped the startled Queen, "what an absurd suggestion to make to me, you silly fairy. How would I look wearing apron strings in court? People would laugh at me."

"Oh, no," breathed the fairy, "they would not dare to laugh. Besides they would think it was a new fashion you were setting, and by the next morning every storekeeper in the whole realm would be selling aprons as fast as he could take them down from the shelves. I really think that if you sent the nurses and governesses away at once, and tied each little prince and princess to your apron strings, you'd soon notice a world of difference in their behavior. And it would be such a pretty fashion, the prettiest in the world, that all the sour old duchesses who hate your disagreeable children would begin smiling and smiling until every court lady would copy you at once. There isn't a moment to lose, if you would save your children."

"W-e-l-l," wavered the Queen, "I might try it, but where can I get these apron strings; I'm sure the court dressmakers would faint if I ordered them off hand this way."

"Oh, as for that," smiled the fairy, "I can make you some right away." And with her little wand she touched the six salt tear drops that had stained the purple satin gown; and from those glistening tear drops long slender threads grew rapidly—three on one side and three on the other.

So the Queen summoned her children, but as usual they refused to come, stamping their wayward feet and wrinkling their naughty noses until they spied those curious gleaming strands which a fairy was weaving; and they crept nearer. And the fairy whispered, "It's the loveliest game in the world, my dears, just tie these round your hearts, and tag along with your mother, and whatever she does, you do, too."

"Oh, what a circus!" grinned the prince; "Oh, what a lark," sang the princess.

So the queen went into the court with that little human train of six excited children trailing behind her. And when she graciously shook hands with the Great High Chancellor of the realm, behold, the six small children thought it was a part of their new game to shake hands, too.

And the old gentleman was exceedingly pleased.

"Usually they poke out their nasty little tongues at me," he said to Mrs. Great High Chancellor that night; "my dear, why don't you buy some apron strings your self, so each of our little High Chancellors can be tied to you? I think it would be exceedingly becoming to you."

I thought of it myself," she admitted, "for never have I seen the Queen look so adorable as when those six wee children copied her delightful manners all night long. I'm sure the subjects do not dream how dear those children really are—oh I wish that wicked plot were at the bottom of the sea!"

"It shall be," said the Great High Chancellor emphatically. And it was.

For the Queen's apron strings made all the difference in the world. So from that day to this all really proper children are tied round their hearts to their own mother's apron strings. Oh, no, you hardly ever see these strings; they're spun from love and tears and tenderness; but the children that are tied to them grow up into splendid rulers while the careless rude children who cut loose from those strings are invariably spoken of like this by every one: "I'd like to get rid of that awful child. A regular nuisance—and so unloveable."

So whenever Bill and I do some wild, reckless thing that hurts dear mother dreadfully, we see her sweet face sadden as if we'd crushed some pale, white violet, and generally one of us whispers: "Oh, mother-est, you're spinning us new apron strings from love and tears, aren't you? We're terribly sorry we broke the old one—just terribly!"

And we know you have an apron string like ours, too. Don't you love it?—"Peggy," in the Baptist Observer.

We have a letter from a lady, who only a few months ago lost her devoted mother. Of course, she was deeply grieved, as well she might be, for not all worthy daughters ever had so devoted a mother. Now she is sighing for the presence of a vanished hand—she longs to see that devoted mother again. Her cry is "If only I might have her with me again for a few minutes, or if I might live it all over again and have her with me once more"—but there she stopped and the balance is unwritten. How many are the thoughts of loved ones gone before, but after we have thought and thought, we cannot bring them back again, and so the one thing for us to do is to keep ourselves and as far as we may, our loved ones in readiness to go to the dear loved and lost awhile. No traveler returns from the next world, but we may go to them there and see them again in the house of many mansions, which Jesus has gone to prepare for them that love and serve Him. May God comfort the weeping ones and keep them ready for the better life beyond. Did you ever think how disappointed some of these loved ones will be if those left behind should fail to go to them by and by, when this life is ended.

On Monday, June 26th, Dr. Atkinson had as many pastors in the vicinity of Greensboro, as could well do so, to meet him in the First Christian Church of that city for an informal consultation on the present situation as to the work of Men and Millions. There were present Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Rev. T. E. White, and Rev. J. D. Wicker, both of Sanford, N. C., Rev. J. E. McCauley, Halifax, Va., Rev. C. E. Geringer, McLeansville, N. C., and president Harper of Elon and the "Sun's" editor. After discussing the various phases of the work of Men and Millions, all expressed themselves as deeply interested in the success of the great enterprise and each one expressed himself as intending to do his best in his own field to accomplish the purposes of the movement. The following resolution was unanimously passed:

Resolved, That we hereby pledge ourselves to give our best efforts for the promotion of the Men and Millions Movement and promise the Mission Board our best assistance to help carry out the Movement.

We quote the resolution from memory and may not have it worded exactly as it was passed, but in substance it presents the purpose. We wish every one could hear Dr. Atkinson's graphic presentation of the real meaning of the Movement. The Movement has already saved to the Church "The Christian Sun," as the organ of the Southern Christian Convention, and that is no ordinary task, for the movement would have been eminently worth while if it had accomplished nothing more (though it has accomplished much beside) for without the "Sun," we could do little, if any, co-operative work as a Church. Let us rejoice and be glad for the good things the Movement has already accomplished, and it is in a fair way, with proper attention, to do yet greater things, if that be possible.

Called Home

WALKER.

Kathryn Wylanta, the youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Walker, Burlington, N. C., was born March 4, 1921, and died June 18, 1922, being one year, three months and fourteen days old. Her parents are faithful members of the Burlington Church, and on the morning of the day that little Kathryn went away all the family were in Sunday School.

While Kathryn had been on the Cradle Roll since she was a month old, on the day of her death she was present at Sunday School and joined the Cradle Roll class and made her first offering to the church.

After the family returned home from the morning's worship, she and her father had gone across the street to visit a sick lady who had some strychnine tablets lying where the child could reach them, and thinking they were candy tablets, all unobserved she ate some of them and in thirty minutes she was gone, medical skill being unable to hold back the power of the grim reaper.

Kathryn was the joy and the light of the home. Her going has cast upon the family an unutterable sorrow and loss. But with her all is well. In the morning she was a member of the Cradle Roll on earth; early in the afternoon of the same day, she was transferred to the Cradle Roll of the skies.

Funeral was held by the pastor, assisted by Dr. P. H. Fleming, from the Burlington Christian Church at six o'clock on the following afternoon, and as the sun was setting we laid her peacefully to rest in the Pine Hill Cemetery, Burlington, where angels are watching above her grave until "the day dawn and the shadows flee away."—G. O. LANKFORD.

WALTERS.

Mr. William M. Walters died at his home two miles north of Burlington, N. C. May 29, 1922, being at the time of his death seventy-nine years of age. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Sarah Frances Walters, Burlington, N. C.; and five children as follows: Mrs. Martha Piper, Burlington, N. C.; Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., Richmond, Va.; C. M. Walters, M. D., Burlington, N. C.; George Walters, Greensboro N. C.; and Mrs. J. A. Blanton, Miami, Fla., all of whom were with their father in his last hours on earth.

Mr. Walters had lived many years in Alamance County, having reared his splendid and most useful family here. He was a quiet, unassuming man, but always stood for those things that are right. Early in life he confessed Christ as his Savior and united with the Methodist Protestant Church. We feel that a good man is gone to his reward.

Funeral by the writer, assisted by Revs. J. W. Holt and S. L. Beoughter, after which the body was laid to rest in Pine Hill Cemetery, Burlington, to await the resurrection.—G. O. LANKFORD.

MAGGIE PAULINE FARRELL AND JAMES M. FARRELL, HER FATHER.

Pauline was 11 years, 1 month and 14 days of age when she passed to her reward on June 17, 1922, after a week of intense suffering.

Pauline was a good child. Though she possessed the thought and composure of one of mature years, she was full of child life of the joyful type. She seemed unnatural when not smiling. To speak to her was to meet a greeting long to be remembered. Acquaintances loved her and strangers admired her. Truly, she was the "darling of the house," the baby daughter.

On the day following her death, a beautiful Sabbath, grief stricken relatives and sympathizing friends filled the seating capacity of Hanks Chapel Church from which her funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Boone of the M. E. Church, Pittsboro, N. C. The burial was in the church cemetery, and the little mound was completely hid from view by the beautiful flowers brought from far and near.

James M. Farrell rested from his labors Monday night, June 19, 1922, at the age of 65 years, 9 months and 25 days.

In the year 1885 he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Holt, and to this union were born twelve children, eight boys and four girls. All of these, except two girls, survive with the devoted Christian companion and mother.

Brother Farrell had been partially paralyzed for several years, and the strain which came in parting with his little daughter was more than he could bear. In the hour of his grief he expressed a desire to "go with her," and only about 12 hours after her death, he collapsed in nervous prostration, lasting a little more than two days and nights thereafter.

He was a patient sufferer, a kind and loving husband and father, a consecrated Christian and a loyal citizen. Death held no fear for him. He walked with his Lord in faith and the translation to a more intimate and eternal presence with Him was a joyful anticipation.

About two years ago we were sitting under the lovely oaks in front of his home when he requested that the writer, should he be a survivor and within reach, conduct his funeral service. This we did at Hanks Chapel Christian Church, of which he was a faithful member from boyhood. His pastor, Rev. J. S. Garden, of Durham, and Rev. Mr. Boone of the M. E. Church were present and assisted in the service.

May comforting and keeping Grace richly abide with the family. Amen.—B. J. HOWARD.

REESE.

Death entered the ranks of the First Christian church of Richmond for the first time, May 7th, when J. A. Reese, one of the charter members, passed away at the age of 64 years. His death was due to being struck by a train while driving a truck across the track.

Brother Reese lived 10 miles from Richmond, at Atlee, Va., and owing to the distance did not get to the services often but was interested in the church and its progress. He will be greatly missed in his community where he was the friend of the poor and a neighbor to all. The funeral services were conducted at his former home, South Boston, Va.

He is survived by his widow, two sons and five daughters, and also one brother and one sister.

May the Lord comfort and bless the bereaved.—W. T. WALTERS.

SYKES.

John W. Sykes was born at Fayetteville, North Carolina, and died from pneumonia at Richmond, Virginia, June 1, at the age of 23 years. He was married to Miss Fannie Melton, September 29, 1920; to this union was born one son, John W. Jr., who with his mother, survives the death of his father. He is also survived by his father, two brothers and three sisters.

Brother Sykes was one of the Charter members of the First Christian Church, of Richmond. He took an active interest in the work of the church and at his death was the president of the Men's Wellons Bible Class.

Funeral services were conducted from the Leigh Street Baptist Church by the pastor, Rev. Howard I. Stewart and the writer and the remains laid to rest in Oakwood Cemetery.

May our Heavenly Father bless and comfort the bereaved.—W. T. WALTERS.

THE INNER SUPPORTS.

It is said that San Francisco architects, at the time of the great earthquake some years ago, noted particularly the disastrous effects upon buildings of brick with no supporting steel frames. Many such buildings were literally leveled to the ground, in some instances scarcely one brick being left upon another. As a consequence, when the new city arose after the catastrophe, steel girders and supporters were in constant demand.

In laying out our plans for life it is well for us to think of the inner supports. In prayer we find one of the sturdiest of spiritual re-enforcements. A praying life is not easily shaken or disturbed. Faith in God's overruling love and providence, also strengthens our spiritual life immeasurably. A sense of intimate companionship with Christ is a priceless possession for support. When the storm comes and we reel under the shock of some great trouble, all these will stand us in good stead. While it is not always necessary to advertise the presence of such supports to the world, the man who is conscious of their possession invariably looks out upon life with greater courage and confidence.—Forward.

SEVEN GOOD REASONS.

During a temperance campaign, a lawyer was discussing, with no little show of learning, the clauses of the proposed temperance law. An old farmer, who had been listening attentively, shut his knife with a snap, and said: "I don't know nuthin' about the law, but I've got seven good reasons for votin' for it." "What are they" asked the lawyer. And the grim old farmer responded, "Four sons and three daughters."—Presbyterian Review.

GREER—ELDER.

The parsonage of the Rose Hill Christian Church was the scene of a quiet marriage Wednesday afternoon, June 21, when Miss Edith Merle Elder became the bride of Mr. Thomas Edwin Greer.

The marriage was characterized by charming simplicity and dignity. Rev. R. F. Brown, pastor of the Rose Hill Christian Church, spoke the words of the impressive ring ceremony which united the lives of this prominent young couple.

The bride is an attractive young lady and is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Elder of Columbus, Ga. For the past several years Mrs. Greer has made her home in this city where she has made a host of friends and acquaintances.

Mr. Greer is connected with the Columbus Electric and Power Company and is well known and liked in the community.

After the ceremony, which was witnessed by only a few friends and relatives, the bridal party motored to the home of the bride on Summerville Road where delicious refreshments were served and a most delightful reception was enjoyed by the happy couple and their good friends.—R. F. BROWN.

McDONALD—DAWSON.

Mr. Raymond Oswell McDonald of Baltimore, Md. and Miss Martha Atelia Dawson of Elon College, N. C., were united in the sacred bonds of matrimony at the residence of Professor A. L. Hook, brother-in-law of the bride, at 11:30 A. M., Wednesday, June 28, 1922. Only the immediate family witnessed the Souvenir Christian ceremony which united the happy pair.

The parlor of the Hook residence was tastefully and appropriately decorated for the occasion, and the pair plighted their troth beneath a lovely arch of flowers and evergreen. The ring service was used, little Mary Virginia Hook being the ring bearer, and little Irene Hook scattering petals of roses in the path of the bride and groom as they approached the altar.

Immediately after the ceremony the happy pair left for a bridal tour to Blue Ridge Summit, Pa. and other northern points.

Mr. McDonald is a successful builder and contractor of Baltimore, Md., and Miss Dawson, since her graduation at Elon College has taught successfully at Lumberton, and the past two years at Burlington, N. C.

The best wishes of a host of friends accompany them. The writer officiated.—J. O. ATKINSON.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Pandita Ramabai, a Great Mission Worker.—

Many friends in this country, as indeed throughout the civilized world, will be grieved to hear that that very remarkable woman of India, Pandita Ramabai, who was the founder and director of a Christian settlement in India, known as "Mukti," meaning salvation is dead. This institution was located at Kedgaon, India, and was established many years ago for widows and orphans. What a blessed work it was and how this noble Christian woman gave herself to it as to a task for the benefit of the very needy among her own people. She visited the United States in 1889, in the interest of the institution over which she presided with such wonderful success. She has gone to be with her Lord, which is far better for her, if not for the widows and orphans for whom she did so much in her life time. She had been overwhelmed with sorrow in the later part of her life, chiefly because of the death of her own daughter, Manoramabai, who was a strong woman in her work. No doubt she had hoped to leave her daughter in charge of the institution, but she was taken away first. This institution, known in India as "Mukti," was liberally supported by many friends in this country. Many lives in India have been rescued and saved for noble purposes through the labors of Pandita Ramabai. Doubtless they will be so many trophies of grace, which she has laid down at the feet of Jesus, as the evidence of her life work for Him. Did He not say, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me"? Pandita Ramabai was a cultured and consecrated woman. She spoke a half dozen Indian languages. She also spoke English with fluency and was an accomplished woman. The world seems poorer because she has gone from it, but Heaven must be richer because Jesus has seen fit to take her home to be with Him. (See John 12: 26.)

Prohibition Through English Eyes.—

Lady Astor, a native of Virginia, but now a British subject and a member of Parliament, has recently been on a visit to this country. If going to Parliament has done nothing else for her it seems to have given her the gift to talk on public questions. Among the subjects which has interested her is this question, is that of Prohibition in the United States. Of course, that is quite a live question and shows her ability to discriminate between important and most important things. She finally, after much investigation declared that as she saw it Prohibition is an excellent thing, and then she said:

"I found no one, whether wet or dry, moist or parched, who wanted to re-establish the liquor trade and have it again as an organized political force. I am not surprised. I have seen dangerous use of this power in municipal and national politics in England. The liquor trade in its effort to fight prohibition has been driven into anti-American propaganda. This has been the only anti-American propaganda I have noticed in England. The drink problem is not only one of social welfare, it's a question of political welfare—of clean politics. It is so easy to exaggerate, or to make general conclusions upon exceptional individual experience or precedent. In these, my observations, I have tried to give impartial and broad conclusions, based upon the views expressed to me by a large number of people during the past six weeks. By their stand against the temptations and seductions of alcoholism the United States and most of the provinces of Canada have made a big contribution to the spiritual regeneration of the world."

So she goes back to England much in favor of legislation that will give the right of option to her adopted country, and that will be a big advance for England, for it is well known that England is far behind the United States and Canada in the matter of prohibition, but England will yet be a prohibition country. The day is coming, and we hope soon.

Has the United States Turned Bootlegger?—

And so the world is getting better, but it will be hard to prove if our own government must be a witness, for it is said that it has been proven that the United States Government has become the biggest boot-legger in the world, and so turns out that there is truth in the charge. It is said the Mr. Lasker, the head of the Shipping Board, has actually been proven to be a real boot-legger, and that he is violating the Volstead Act by allowing, in fact by sending liquor aboard United States ships for use, and that he does it because he says the United States Ships cannot cope with other ships unless they carry liquors, as they say, the public will not travel on boats which do not carry liquors. It is a shame that our own Government is indulging in such disreputable business, and we are glad that it has been caught—it ought to be caught and punished for violating the laws of the very Government under which they live and receive protection, as well as fat salaries. The Western Christian Advocate in referring to this sad blot on the fair name of our country, has this to say:

"That was a wicked piece of sarcasm that a representative of the Anhauser-Busch Brewing Company hurled into the teeth of the Government recently when a young scion of that old brewing tribe shot across the country that hot, sizzling accusation that the American Government was 'the greatest bootlegger in the world.' It seems he was more right than the average member of the public is willing to admit. It looks as though the Shipping Board has been infringing upon the Volstead act. The chairman of the same seeks to throw the responsibility on the Germans. It is so easy 'to blame the Dutch' for everything when an alibi is needed. Just how we are going to come out on this matter remains yet to be seen, but we predict that the Constitution will be enforced."

Sale or Adoption into Slavery.—

It is difficult for people who live in a Christian land to appreciate the conditions which exist in a heathen land. Even heathen countries seem to be making progress, and yet in spite of their efforts to make headway for better things, they are cramped by the fruits of their former life. Take China as a living example. It is estimated that China has four hundred millions of people to support and care for as best they can. They have been in other days accustomed to awful depredation upon the rights of human life. China has a law against the selling of children in slavery, but that law is of little consequence since the country has been cursed under an awful famine. In spite of the law the people are selling their children to mitigate as far as possible famine conditions. They call the SALE of children there ADOPTION, but those who profess to know, say it is really not adoption, but the sale of their children. The law lacks the support of public sentiment, and so it is handled in a way to make adoption nothing less than pernicious slavery.

The Chinese Government is now making a most determined effort to create public sentiment which will enable it to cope with this most objectionable practice. Surely China needs the Gospel of Jesus Christ to enable it to stamp out such an evil as the selling of their children in abject slavery.

Archeologists and History.—

The archaeologists are working wonders and doing some very unexpected things. Digging in Sardis, the ancient Lydian capitol in Asia Minor, they have found a large number of gold coins which in some way had been buried in the ruins of that place. They have been sufficiently read to know that they are of the coinage of Croesus, the last king of Lydia and the first international banker whose name has been the symbol of wealth for nearly 2,500 years. The recovered coins were minted about 561, B. C. These discoveries are very interesting as well as valuable. These discoveries support history and clear up many uncertain points in history especially some matters that have been hidden for hundreds of years. Let the good work go on, unearthing truth to hush the gainsaying of men who do not know as much as they seem to know. All truth is good, but buried truth, when unearthed is of the highest importance in many instances.

NOTES - PERSONALS

Be prompt in all of your church work and so purchase to yourself a good degree in the life of the church and great boldness in the faith.

Our beloved brother, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle has been chosen professor of Theology and Dean of Men in Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio.

Mrs. C. B. Riddle and little Ruth, Wife and daughter of our former editor, are at home from the hospital and we are glad to say are doing well.

The church at Reidsville, N. C., has granted its pastor a two week's vacation. It will be spent where he hopes to get strength for the work before him.

On Sunday evening, June 25, the pastor of our Reidsville church baptized seventeen young people, and it was a remarkable impression that was made by the service.

Please give special attention to the message from Lieut-Gov. West. It is important and should have the attention of every lover of the Christian Church and the good work it is seeking to do.

Did you get a letter of inquiry a few days ago, from some official, asking for information as to some denominational matter? Have you answered it? If not, why not? It should be answered at once.

We held our college day on June 25. I am sending you a paper written by Mrs. Ida Carter, Superintendent of the Sunday School of the Epworth Christian church., near Templeville, Md.—Rev. W. C. Moore, Dover, Delaware.

May I just thank you with all my heart for your editorial in issue of June 21, Is a Doctrinal Storm Coming? I surely admire the position you take with the "Fundamentalists" on this question. This one article is worth the price of the paper—An Eastern Virginia Pastor.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell is the pastor at Durham. He is so quiet as to the work he is doing, we scarcely know how to report him, but we have reason to believe he is doing a good work. They are needing a new house of worship and we doubt not that he is wide awake as to the need.

Rev. James H. Lightbourne, the pastor of the Holland church, in Eastern Virginia Conference, is rejoicing in the completion and occupancy of the new parsonage. We do not blame him for rejoicing, for it is a treat after one has been cooped up to get into the open of a good and comfortable house.

We have a pressing invitation from friends in Ohio to visit them, and it would afford us great pleasure, but "The Christian Sun" does not allow us to leave home but little and then only a day or two at a time, at best, and so we cannot say when we shall be able to visit our dear "Buckeye" friends.

Rev. B. J. Howard, pastor at Chapel Hill, N. C., has a fine field of usefulness. His church is near the location of the University of North Carolina, where he has a chance to meet young men from all parts of the state. It takes good work to hold such a place, under the circumstances by which he is surrounded.

"In business, what is better than practical brotherhood and fairness and good-will? In family life, what is better than the attitude Jesus had toward women—good women and bad women? In quarrels, what is better than to love one's enemies though one hate, perhaps evil ideas and actions? In sickness, what is more healing than a mind wholly in Christ?"

The Rev. A. H. Morrill, D. D., Newton, N. H., passed on June 7th, 1922, his 74th birthday. He was "showered" by a multitude of cards and letters from his old friends in different sections of the country. He is one of the strong men and he deserves well of the brotherhood. He has filled the places of both minister and teacher largely in his day, and no doubt he was delighted to be remembered so affectionately by such a host of friends.

The churches at Windsor, Mount Carmel and Bethlehem, in the Eastern Virginia Conference, may have a supply pastor though of this we are not sure, but they have no regular pastor for the present year. This is a good field and ought to be supplied with a pastor at the earliest moment possible. A supply pastor is far better than no pastor at all, but every church needs a regular pastor, and when any attempt is made to do without a pastor, the church must expect to be a loser in the end.

Prof. N. F. Brannock, who has been head of the Chemistry Department in Elon College for 15 years, has received from Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio, the degree of Lit. D., and with this recognition of his scholarship, he has been chosen a member of the Summer School Faculty of Columbia University, and begins his work there July 1st, but will return to Elon in time for the opening of the fall term. These are scholastic honors of which Prof. Brannock, or any other good man and teacher, might be justly grateful and appreciative.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Secretary of Missions of The Southern Christian Convention is certainly a man of vision in the field of missions. He has a big telescope through which he looks at the great field in which he is serving. That telescope is the Bible. The Book reveals to him through the Spirit the great things of this work. You may hear him to-day. Then hear him again next day or next week, or next month, and you will find that he has discovered another field of rich thought as he has looked at the field before him, and then you will see a part of what he sees, possibly all of what he sees in the great Telescope of the Bible. You may be glad to hear him every time you can, for each occasion will enrich your thought and your heart with the saying and enriching truths of the Word of God.

Referring to the things in this life which are easy, a writer in Zion's Herald presents a fine thought and it may help any of us to proceed with ourselves in the better way. He says: It is easier to live honestly than dishonestly; easier to be unselfish than selfish, though it may not be so easy to have the common sense to follow the divine commands. It is easier if one has grace and truth, when sickness, pain, loss, or disappointment must be endured. Christianity, the real Christianity, has been tried, over and over by many individuals. The saints are not all in the past, or lacking until a better age. The system Christ taught is not one to add hardness to life for even the very unhappy. Truly did He say, come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Yes, there is rest in Jesus, blessed rest.

In the great field of Religious Education there are at least two things the Church needs: First, an appreciation of childhood; Second, a leadership trained for service. And this appreciation of childhood should not be simply "loving children," but an appreciation of the fact that the hope of the world lies in the lives of the children. And this trained leadership should have heart as well as intelligence, and a capacity for sacrifice and service beyond human standards—HERMON ELDREDGE, Member of International Sunday School Lesson Committee and Editor of the Officers' and Teachers' Journal.

We hear complaint from some of our leaders, and we believe the complaint is just, that so many of our people will not give out information when asked to do so. We think it is not that they are unwilling to give out the information asked for, but they carelessly overlook doing so, but that is quite as enexcusable as if they were to refuse to give it out. Brethren, you are a link in the chain of our work, and if that link fails to function, the work is hindered and largely a failure, and for no other reason, so far as we are informed, except that of carelessness. This is too bad and ought not to occur again.

We are hoping to attend the Convention (at Burlington) in October and shall expect to see you then—Mrs. Lula C. Helfenstein Dayton, O. We shall be glad to have a host of our Western and Eastern friends attend, and we are expecting them to do so. Dr. Lankford and his Burlington people are making big preparations for the coming of the Convention, and we hope we shall not be disappointed in seeing a large attendance. The Burlington Convention is to be one of the events in our Church work for this year. It will not only be the Quadrennial meeting of the Convention, but it will be the reunion of many old friends. Reminiscences will be the order of the day as well as Church business. Come, friends and come to stay till the Convention adjourns.

Rev. R. F. Horton of London, England, is regarded by some as a very erroneous teacher in the doctrines of Christianity, but he has recently said some very pointed and valuable things as to Christianity. He says in discussing Spiritualism this: "So far as we can find, Spiritualism has little to tell us of God, and very little indeed of Christ. It has no recall to repentance, and no way of regeneration. As a religion it lacks the ethical aim, the ethical impulse, the ethical quality. It is in that defect it will die down again, as it always has before. And with purged eyes men will see, and with grateful hearts receive the Gospel of the Resurrection." As we see it, there is one way to tell a man made religion from a God given religion. The man-made religion always leaves out repentance, but the God-given religion never does leave it out.

For men really want, not immortality, but redemption. Their deepest need is deliverance, not from death, but from sin. Therefore the one sure foundation of the belief in an after life is that, Christ died for our sins and rose again for our justification.—Rev. R. F. Horton, D. D., London England. Even though that may have come to us from a heretic, yet it is fine teaching. We only wish that Dr. Horton were as nearly Scriptural as that in all he teaches. Deliverance from sin presages immortality, but immortality without deliverance from sin by the power of God, does by no means give us assurance of the glorious after life. Let us stick to the Bible way—it is God's way, and therefore, it is a marvelous way of grace and everlasting life.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT!

To Every Pastor in the Southern Christian Convention:

MY DEAR BROTHER:

As you are aware, the recent session of the Southern Christian Convention transferred the management of the Men and Millions Movement from the special Campaign Committee that had been created for the purpose to our Mission Board. Be assured that the Board did not seek nor desire this task, but since the Convention deemed it wise to ask us to do the work we are willing to help in every way we can. As the one who originally conceived the Movement and gave the first public utterance on the same, I want to assure you that only love for the cause we represent and the church of which we are a part, has prompted me from then till now. I want to see our Christian Church go forward and do its part in winning souls to Christ and building up the Kingdom of our Lord. In this I am sure you are with me.

In such a spirit as this I am writing this open letter to say that you shall have at all times our heartiest co-operation and support, not only in collecting pledges made to Men and Millions but in seeking in every way possible to win souls to Christ through the local church and to make your congregation stronger and more powerful spiritually and financially.

The Board will undertake to help you in every way it can, and particularly through the agency and effort of our Field Secretary, Rev. J. O. Atkinson. He will come to your field to aid you in every possible way in collecting the pledges for Men and Millions which your members have made and for which they are now morally responsible. I speak for the Board in expressing the wish that you will call upon him freely and as you may find need in carrying to a successful conclusion this, our greatest Movement.

As you know, other movements have been for a single enterprise of the Church. This is the first and only movement we have ever put on that involved every interest and enterprise of the Church and meant loyalty and devotion to the entire Church. Men and Millions means our whole Church seeking, by God's help, to move forward along all lines.

If you have any suggestion to offer as to how we may best help in this, our greatest Missionary Movement, I will appreciate a line from you.

May I count on you for your sympathy, prayers and co-operation?

Fraternally yours,

J. E. WEST, Chairman.

WALK IN LOVE.

Paul rose to this great entreaty in Eph. 5:2. He had every right to enjoin people to walk in love, because he walked in love as few men ever have done since. Often he wrote of love, but his greatest treatise on love was his own daily living. The central reason for Paul's life being a labor of love was Christ.

It is a great and uplifting thing to love anyone, but to love Jesus is glorious above all comprehension—it is life everlasting. Loving Jesus transcends all one's endeavor, thought, and being. It gives one a peace that passes understanding; it shakes the prison shackles off of one's feet and hands; it says to frightened men on an infuriated sea, "Do yourselves no harm, we are all here."

Paul loved Jesus—not as a dead hero—not as a martyr, nor dead master, but as a living Person, whom he had seen, a Person who had suffered for him and who had died in his stead. So thoroughly convinced was he of this, he said, "I have been crucified with Christ; and it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me; and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." Oh, how personal and witness-worthy are these precious words of Paul. How genuinely refreshing are they in a day when Christ is looked upon as a great man, but when there is much denial that He is God! Only when we walk in a living Christ, the only Redeemer, the ever-blessed Son of God, can we follow Paul's injunction to "Walk in Love."

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR WEST'S FIGURES.

The figures of Lieutenant-Governor West may not be correct, but they, with others, seem to indicate that we are not so strong in numbers as in former days. These are grave facts and they require courage to face them. I hold that this decline is not due to any principle, or working machinery of the church, but to indifference on the part of individual members. Sins of omission look greater to me now than those of commission.

Lieutenant-Governor West asks the Burlington Convention to answer for this situation, but I wish to answer for a part of this trouble. It is possible that the Convention is not aware of what has hindered our progress in Northern Alabama. Shortly after our work began in Southern Alabama and Georgia, it began here in Northern Alabama also. A group of churches were organized and the Alabama Conference met here once. They seemed to be doing well, when some of the members and ministers had a misunderstanding, which developed into a very unpleasant situation.

Did you say what? That is telling too much. Well, truth is truth, and we stop long enough to ask our Father in Heaven to have mercy on a minister who has envy in his heart. Finally, all the ministers left but one and he, feeling the burden was too heavy for him, sought union with the C. M. Church and carried most of his members with him. The members remaining were as sheep having no shepherd, and they united with various denominations in order to get a church home, but the principles of the Christians are still in their hearts. It is pitiable to see the old veterans who still survive, although many have already gone to their reward, but such as remain are often quite overcome with emotion when the matter is discussed in their presence. Most of them are now almost in the valley of the shadow, but they fear no evil, for His rod and His staff comfort them, for they are going to a land where disappointments never come. Our new churches in Northern Alabama are not in reach of these members, hence we cannot care for them. Most of them will soon be gone. This writer was deeply touched a few days ago, when one of these old soldiers, who is now at the tottering age of seventy-four, said with a trembling voice and tears running down his cheeks: "But I can serve my God anywhere." Isn't this a tragedy? Pray for us brethren, that we may help to bring belated happiness to these dear and aged brethren who have been so disappointed in the failure of our church to function among them. It may be that a similar story tells the fate of thousands who have been driven out of our church and work.

O Father give us the spirit of Elijah, or Paul, or O'Kelly, a Stone, a Jones, a Wellons, or an Uncle Doc. Elder, who would trust, if need be the ravens for food, or make tents for a support, or ride on horseback for thousands of miles, serving for none other than spiritual blessings. They sought to build up our work and so spread the gospel to the ends of the earth.

My dear reader, you are called of God—the fact that you still live and have the privilege of bearing witness to the precious truths of God's Word, is evidence that you still have something to do in His vineyard. God does not cut us off until He has given us every chance to do His will. Are you a chosen one? The world is hungry for the liberty of conscience and the right of individual interpretation of the Scriptures. Individually, what are we doing to extend this Gospel Liberty?

THE CHURCH AND THE INDIVIDUAL PLEDGER ON TRIAL. WHAT WILL THE VERDICT BE?

Reports from the Treasurer of the Men and Millions Movement indicate an alarming amount of carelessness on the part of a large percentage of those making pledges. It is a distressing situation when men and women so lightly regard their pledges, especially men and women who are members of the Great Kingdom, and who, on the whole, regard their business obligations so much more seriously.

The Christian Church and the individual pledger are on trial. The denomination can be no stronger than the personnel of its membership. If the membership is to be slack or negligent toward its obligation, then the church cannot grow and prosper, neither can the individual member. Has it occurred to you that this obligation is just as binding as any note you ever signed, and that you nor your church can hope to prosper spiritually or financially until you meet your obligation?

It is a critical moment in the life of the Christian Church. If we fail in this movement, in my judgment, the denomination will never outgrow its failure. The Church is on trial. The individual pledger is on trial. No one but you who have made pledges to this very worthy enterprise can make it possible to render a verdict which will be acceptable to God. What shall the verdict be?

HOLLAND ITEMS

June 4th was Stewardship Sunday, the culmination of more than a month's study of the theme. A sermon on Tithing was preached and literature distributed.

June 18th. was observed as Education Day. In the morning several Elon students and graduates took part in the services and very impressively. In the evening—Children's Program was rendered. Miss Emily Midyett, of Norfolk and the assistant of Miss Hedgepeth this last school term, was with us at both services. Miss Midyett gave us two impressive and interesting talks and we recommend her to our churches as a very pleasing and earnest young woman.

Holy Neck and Holland contemplate holding a Summer School of Religion at the Holland Church sometime this July.

June 24th the keys to the new parsonage were turned over by contractor Smith, of Franklin, Va., and on June 17th the pastor and his family moved.—SCRIBE.

THE VEILED AND THE UNVEILED FACE.

In the Second Letter to the Corinthians Paul speaks of two faces, the one veiled and the other unveiled. In the one case Israel could not get a clear view because of the veil which was upon their faces. In the other, the face was an open face, or it was an unveiled face, so permitting the person to get a good and a true view of what was before him. There is all the difference between the two faces, one was veiled and the other was unveiled. In the one case the beholder could get a good and clear view of the thought which was before him; in the other case, the vision was obscured so that nothing, no matter how good it was, or how valuable it might be, the beholder could not get any true conception of what it was. It is easy therefore to determine, in part at least what one might lose by wearing a veil on his face. Veils always obscure the vision, and so hinder the beholder in grasping the full view of what is before him.

Veils are numerous and of different kinds, but so far as our observation goes all veils tend to obscure the vision. You may be thinking of the veil which a lady wears on her face when out riding. Very well, that veil also obscures her vision, the vision of the natural eyes, but we are referring now to the veils which obscure the vision of the mind and heart. These veils are just as numerous perhaps as the other kind, but they blind far more than the other kind, and because of the danger to the beholder to-day, we desire to have a little interview with the reader in the hope that we may persuade him or her to put away such a veil from off the face, as hindering his coming into the light and from grasping the truth. You may grasp, even with the veil on the face, a thought, but the danger is that you will most likely get a distorted view of the thing you are looking upon, and so your vision may not only be worthless, it may be far worse than worthless—it may do you much harm by putting the truth before you as error; or it is just as liable to put error before you as truth. In either case the beholder is the loser, seriously so. To illustrate, let us give you the case of the man who is studying the Diety of Christ. He has the veil on his face and he undertakes to see through a veil, when lo and behold, he arises from his study, declaring that Jesus was only a mere man, that he is not of the Diety—just a good man. In such a conclusion he has missed the true character of the Son of God, and henceforth he cannot be a partaker of the Divine Nature, and for the reason that he regards Jesus as a mere man, and no man can impart the divine nature to a fellowman. Hence he has lost the inheritance of the saints in light because he has seen Jesus with the veil of ignorance or of prejudice on his face. Then he cannot know Jesus Christ as the Savior of men because he has seen him as only a man. He has therefore seen Him in error, and having seen Him in error, he can only have him as he has seen Him.

Take another illustration: One man wearing on his face the veil of ignorance or of prejudice, and the one is about as bad as the other, sees the birth of Jesus as that of a bastard. He has therefore lost the blessing of the Virgin Birth—without which, as we see it, there can be no salvation, for if Jesus was not begotten of a Virgin by the Holy Spirit, then he was a bastard and could not become the Savior of the world. There are men who have gotten this view of the Christ, and in doing so, they have lost all, so far as the divine life is concerned, for no bastard could become the Savior of the world. He has not in him the elements which constitute the essential character of the Savior of the lost world.

These two illustrations may serve to show the difference between the man who sees the truth through a veil and the one who sees the same truth with an open face. The man who sees truth with an open face has at least a chance to get all the truth he is capable of receiving, while the man who sees the same truth through a veil gets his mind and heart as full of error as he may be capable of receiving, and you have the difference between what these two men receive, the one gets filled up with truth, while the other gets filled up with error. There can be no doubt as to the advantage of the one over the other, or as to the blessing the one gets where the other gets only a curse to his life.

Do you ask, What are these veils? A good question, and while we cannot here name all the veils that may obscure human vision, yet we may name some of the most dangerous in the way of hindering men from getting a true insight of the real character of truth, and in that event, then they mix up the two and so destroy the chance of real heart enrichment and the true fruitfulness of the genuine Christian life. Let us name some of these veils:

1. Ignorance is a veil of widespread influence, blighting the finest thoughts God has ever given to man. In such a case the loss is beyond estimation. God has spoken to us of everlasting life and the glories of Heaven, but man hears the message in ignorance and is unwilling to let in the light, and he goes down in darkness because he was ignorant. Yes, in part, but if possible even more largely because he would not open his heart and mind to receive the truth. Ignorance is one of the most deadly enemies to the truth of the gospel and the gift everlasting life.

2. Prejudice is a veil which often obscures human vision and so cheats man out of the riches of grace. A certain man made up his mind that he would not believe in the reality of sin, and then when he hears the gospel of salvation from sin through the blood of Christ, he deliberately shuts his mind and heart against a truth so precious and so essential to the happiness of man, and then loses all, and for no other reason than that he allowed prejudice to rule his heart and mind and so cheat him out of the most wonderful blessing God has given man.

No doubt many an unsaved man is today without God just because he was prejudiced against some messenger of the gospel—some one came to him with the message of salvation, but having conceived a prejudice against the man, he would not receive the truth, and he lost all. But he lost all for no other reason than that he had shut himself off by a veil of prejudice and unjustified opposition to the Son of God, who came to this earth as the purest being that had ever been seen among men, and he came that he might bring the message of salvation to the lost, and yet so many men and women lose the one chance of eternal life in Christ through a little old streak of prejudice—that which mars the good and the beautiful everywhere.

Is there any way a man can get clear of his prejudice, so that he can see the truth at least clearly enough to find life and to enter into salvation through the merits of the atoning offering Jesus made of himself for sin for all men, that through faith all might have the chance of living in happiness for ever? Certainly there is, and it is not dependent on the word of man to establish the thought. Paul makes it very plain in 2 Cor. 3:16, where he tells us that this veil shall be taken away through turning unto the Lord. Lay your prejudice down and turn unto Jesus Christ, the savior of the world, and the veil shall be taken away and no more keep men from believing unto salvation. By all means have the veil removed by divine power and then we may see.

THE MAIN QUESTION IS THE ISSUE.

We are living in a great day—a day of marvelous privileges and opportunities, but all such are fraught with great responsibilities and unusual dangers. The present is, we think, no exception to the rule. The expansive ideals are prevailing in almost all lines of human activities. We must do something that has not been done before, if possible, and sometimes it seems to this end there is none too great a sacrifice. Accepting some new faith and propagating it seems to be in the air. We must do some new thing, or it may be the opposite, we must undo some old faith, and then put in its place some new idea, perchance the work of our own brains, or that of some other mere person, which may be just as unreliable as if it were our own in fact. A thing is not necessarily true just because it is new, nor is it true because a thing is old. The truth is there are many new things and many old things, too, which are false and of dangerous tendencies in both human society and the Church of Christ.

It is a fact that we have many brethren who seem to lean backwards in an effort to gather some new idea, and that may not be objectional, if only the idea gathered be true, but if it be false, then it does matter a great deal. Perhaps there are few, if any, spheres in which these things are more true than that of the Christian life, and certainly there are no spheres in human life that is more worthy of the closest study than is this. But instead of a close study of the theme, a good many seem to make it a matter of speculation. They must theorize, they must in some way get out of the practical and into the theoretical, but that is a dangerous point in one's tendencies, for if we do get ourselves blinded by the wisdom of the world, we are so liable to go in some new direction till we have shifted the truth and put in its place error of a most serious nature.

As an illustration, let us note one of the tendencies of the day, as it deals with the matter of the new birth. It is a common thing now to hear some of our "moderns" talk of so training men and from childhood as that they shall come into the Christian life by a natural way. For instance some hold that we may train boys and girls into the Christian life, so that they will not need the new birth. Who can believe that this is true? Can any man point to the life of some man who has thus been brought into the Christian life, by early training, rather than through the Atonement—through the blood of Christ? By what power can a child be led into a Christian life, if other than the power of God through the Spirit? Perhaps you may think this is unimportant just so the child becomes a Christian. Verily, but what child has become a Christian apart from the Christ life? I dare say that a child may be led to imitate the Christian life, and all as a result of training, but who can tell me that the child does not need more than an imitation of the Christian life. As we see it, the child, as he comes to years of responsibility, no matter how much he has been trained, needs to be regenerated by the power of the Holy Spirit, no matter how much training he has had. There are few more dangerous doctrines abroad in the land today than this which teaches that the child may be so trained as not to need regeneration for his own heart and life. If man or woman can point us to some child of earthly parents who has been trained to be a Christian and that life has proven it true, that the early training was all that he needed in order to bring him into the new birth, then we shall be ready to listen to such teaching. But until some such case is proved to have existed, or does now exist, we must beg our people to shun any such a thought. There is but one way into the Christian life, so far as we have learned it, and that is by the regeneration of the Holy Spirit. You may train your child to imitate the Christian life, but no training that man can give will bring a man into the Christian life and experience apart from the work of the Holy Spirit.

We hope we shall hear no more of this matter of keeping a child from ever needing regeneration simply by Christian training. It is far more than training—it is the inworking of the divine life under the regenerating power of the Spirit. If you are prepared to give Bible authority for such an idea as becoming a Christian through training, rather than by the inworking of the Holy Spirit, then we shall be willing to listen to your Bible reference to establish such an end, but till such Bible authority can be given, please do not ask for space in THE CHRISTIAN SUN to advocate the thoughts of becoming a Christian through child training. No, THE CHRISTIAN SUN stands for the doctrine of regenerating the human heart by the Holy Spirit, and for that we know of no substitute. If Jesus meant that children could be made Christians with training, let some one point us to the place in the New Testament where any such idea is authorized by the Master Himself.

THE SPADE UNCOVERS WONDERS.

This is the day of wonders, both at home and abroad. as common-place as is the spade, it is having a fine part in unearthing some of the curiosities of the long ago. Dr. Clarence S. Fisher of the University of Pennsylvania, has been in charge of some work of unusual interest in Memphis, nearly opposite Cairo, Egypt. He has unearthed what he believes is the palace of Menepthah, who is supposed to have been the Pharaoh of the Exodus. The palace area was about 800 feet square. Dr. Fisher had unearthed only about one-third of this area, but in doing that much he has discovered many matters of high interest to the people, especially those who are interested in the work of the spade. In his excavations he came across the remains of the Judgment Hall of the Pharaohs. From what he discovered, buried in the bowels of the earth, he has rebuilt the Hall as it then existed, more than 3,000 years ago. It is about 25 X 40 and more than sixty feet high. The roof of the building was supported by two rows of columns, six feet in diameter. One of these columns will be brought to the museum. He found the doorway lintels all inlaid handsomely with faience in many colors, and strange to say it, but it is reported as true, that these colors are as bright today as they were when put there in the long ago. The dais is about four feet above the floor. Pharaoh's throne was upon this dais. This dais was richly decorated with red and blue signs. The Egyptian Government will not allow this dais to be taken away—it must remain in Egypt. It is supposed that it was from this dais that Pharaoh and his officials sat and heard appeals for justice. It was there most likely that Moses and Aaron stood, pleading with Pharaoh to let Israel go. Just behind the throne room the king had his private suite merely for rest after listening to appeals for redress. Close by was a handsome bathroom, with fine plumbing, wardrobes, a couch in a bedroom, and a little cellaret in which was found an alabaster mug, used for drinking purposes. It is stated that no record was found showing that Pharaoh was drowned in the Red Sea. But remember that only one-third of the palace area has been unearthed as yet. The Bible says he was drowned, and that is enough evidence. When men lose their lives in a disreputable business, their friends do not like to have anything to say on that point, and we do not especially blame them for keeping quiet on so sore a subject. We will venture to suggest that later the spade will bring to light some evidence that the Bible record is true.

IT IS NEEDLESS.

It is a great thing to be living and serving to-day, provided we may be found serving in a way which may be acceptable to God and so for the good of truth and righteousness among the people. But if a man or woman is not awake to the true situation and so is not doing his or her part for the building up of the true kingdom of Jesus Christ, then he is walking in the shadow of trouble, for sooner or later, God will call him to account for his failure to take his place and do his part in the work of the Lord's garden. There are many excellent people, in a way, who dare to shrink from the difficulties before them, and so they add but little to the progress of the kingdom. If we should listen to what they claim, we should be impressed with the thought which they so fondly indulge, that the world's progress is in a measure depending on what they are doing and not doing, perhaps as much on what they are not doing, as on what they are doing they themselves being judges.

We have heard of doctors of peace, they are at work on two sides of the questions, which as they imagine, will bring a delightful peace to whatever or whoever may be concerned. On the one side, they dictate to their patients what they must not do in order to have peace. In the first place, they must shut their mouths and have not a word to say on the negative side of the matter under consideration. Then on the affirmative side of the same question, they dare not come out boldly and openly for the things for which they stand. They do manage to get in a few bold strokes for what they are trying to believe, but they do it so uncertainly that though it counts for what they are believing, it does not commit them to it, so as to let their constituency place them as defending this or that. They are really afraid of both sides of the question and so they touch even what they really believe almost as if it were covered with dangerous briars and thorns, and playing betwixt and between, why they do not seem to get anywhere so far as the progress of truth is concerned.

They seem to fear that some one will rise up against them and so possibly spoil their popularity, at least in a small circle, and the result is they stand for one thing and then shield themselves by beating around the bush, so you cannot very well place them anywhere. Now we do not believe in needlessly irritating the public mind, but when it comes to a matter of truth, we believe the Christian ought to stand till the end for what is truth. What can we do if all truth should be denied and frittered away in trying to shield errors?

Some are clamoring for silence on the ground that if we let it alone, it will soon pass away. The truth however, is that we are facing such a situation to-day as history fails to give an account of in the days of the past. People who do not read can hardly appreciate this statement, but it is true that the issue is before us and we must decide for the one or the other, or play the part of the man who is afraid of his shadow.

The issues between truth and error never were so clearly drawn as it seems to us to be to-day. The issue is The Bible, is it true or is it largely mixed with myth and error? Now listen a bit and see if you can decide what is the trouble. On one side of this great controversy men are standing for the truth of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, such as Miracles, the Inerrancy of the Bible, the Atonement, the Virgin Birth, the Deity of Jesus, the Supernatural in Christianity and the second coming of Christ, Then on the other side, others seem to be standing for the opposite ideals. They discredit the Scriptures, they declare against the truth of miracles, against the Reliability of the Bible, as the Revealed will of God, they repudiate the Atonement, the Virgin Birth, the Deity of Jesus, the Supernatural in Christianity, &c., &c. The issue is clear out and the day of destiny, doctrinally speaking, draws near. The day is not far in the distance when we shall have to decide for which we will stand, is it for error or truth, for the Bible or against it? This is the issue and the day of decision is not far away.

Brethren, and we speak to them who think it is wise to keep silent on these questions. What is the need to keep silence? The truth of God is attacked, disputed and denied, and the issue is shaping so fast that not much longer can we be neutral—we must take a stand for victory and truth—we cannot, and ought not, to stand to one side, having no share in either case. The issue is fast shaping, and the men who are to be true to the Bible ought to get to their places and get good standing room on the first floor, and so be ready for action at a moments notice.

You may plead for silence, but that will not stay the incoming tide. Where do you stand for the truth of the Bible, or for the error of the Bible? Take your stand and fear not? If the truth must go down, may we not afford to go down with it? The question is before you—decide where you will stand in this battle for truth.

We have said that the day of taking your stand in this great struggle is not far away—the day draws nigh when a man of standing will have to take a stand in these questions, or be discounted as a man who is afraid.

Do you ask for proof of this assertion? Very well then, here it is. Our Baptist brethren of the North are in the lead in this struggle and are already coming into close quarters. In their National Convention recently held in Indianapolis, Ind., the fight on this line was decidedly a strong one. It was squarely between the Fundamentalists and the New Theology men. The New Theology men seemed to outnumber the Fundamentalists, and yet the Fundamentalists controlled the Convention on a number of points. The new Theology men were no doubt greatly astounded when it was made known that there were 1,800 churches in the bounds of that convention which have deliberately refused to make contributions to their denominational work till these doctrinal matters are settled. That shows the strength of the Fundamentalists. When churches in one denomination numbers 1,800 which withheld their gifts till these doctrinal questions are settled, it means something; and so basing our thought on this fact, we say the day is not far away when the ministers and laymen of the Christian Church will be aroused to action in this matter, and when that day comes, we shall have to show our colors and take a stand. The radicals in this controversy have been going on in a way to spread their views and to establish their wishes without much of a fuss, but at last they have gone far enough to awaken and arouse the people, and already 1,800 churches have taken their stand and say they will pay no more to their denominational purposes till this controversy is settled. Even our Baptist brethren cannot afford to lose so large a number of churches and they are likely to think twice before they will take a stand which will put these churches out of the work of the denomination—they will not be likely to do that. As the churches at large may come to be aroused on the New Theology, the Christian Church just cannot keep out of it—we shall have to take our stand and may it be for Christ and the Bible as the sure Word of God for His people.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

We live in two worlds—a world of realities and a world of ideals. The material world is a real world. The ideal world is larger than the real world and is the world in which progress is born. If we cling to the real world, we make no progress; "we walk by faith not by sight." The tiller of the soil sees the harvest as he sows the seed; the architect sees the building before the foundation is laid. It is an ideal house before contract is made. The world is full of ideals, and the race is working toward the ideal. "Facts are stubborn things," but they are crystalized ideals. God is not making more diamonds, nor more coal; but He is making larger men out of those who cut the diamonds and use the coal. To look at the one in the mountain, one would not think of the steamer crossing the ocean, unless his ideal conceived the smelting of that one, the fashioning of it into a steamer, the application of steam, and the distribution of power, a crew of trained men, and all that is employed in an ocean steamer. The real thing is transformed into the ideal thing, and the real ocean becomes a highway for trade and travel.

The ideal world is the world of inspiration. Science works in the real world—the material world.

Religion works in the ideal world—the spiritual world.

Science works upon the "seen," which is "temporal."

Christianity works upon the "unseen," which is "spiritual."

Education works upon both the seen and the unseen.

It lays its foundation in facts, in realities, and it projects itself into ideal realms. The painter lives in an ideal world, while he works in a material world. The picture is in his mind before the pigments are placed upon the canvas. The anthem is in the soul of the musician before it is expressed in characters on paper; but in all cases progress starts with the ideal. The ideal home is more than house, furniture, and grounds; it is love, consideration, appreciation, confidence, forbearance, patience, service. Nobody can describe it in words, nor photograph it, nor paint it. The camera can reproduce the house, the yard, the grove, the landscape that lies back of it; but the home is ideal, unseen; but it lingers in memory, sings its own praises, and teaches its own lessons. You know what it is, but I can't tell you. It illudes definition. It is the acme of virtue, of religion, of character. Mother is its symbol. She was the best woman. Her life was ideal. She made home. When she went away to return no more, the real lost its charm. The house lost its spirit. The yard never blossomed again, as when mother walked among the flowers. But you thought of an ideal home to which mother had gone. That was the home of her faith and her faithfulness. Heaven will be sweeter because she is there. Do not place too much care upon real things; the diamond is not as valuable as the finger that wears it, if that finger is on the hand of a child of God. The farm is not as valuable as the farmer. The church is not as good as the congregation. The church is real; the congregation is ideal, that is, spiritual. The earth at first was "without form, and void;" it was ideal first and real afterward. Creation was complete before the real universe came into being. The universe was not "evolved," it was "created." "He spoke out and it was done." His word is the ideal word, the mighty word; "heaven and earth may pass away, but not one jot or tittle of His word shall pass away." The materialist clings to the temporal; the idealist moves toward the eternal. The spiritual life is ideal in its faith, its work, and its hope.

ELON LETTER.

On June 28th, the following telegram reached me from Mr. J. Norman Wills: "On behalf of the Board of Education invite you to be present tomorrow at the corner-stone laying." Of course, I went. Who could have refused? And how my heart thrilled!

The Methodist Protestants of North Carolina have for thirteen years been sending their sons and daughters to Elon, a splendid compliment to us. They had no college of their own nearer than Maryland and desired to have their young people educated in a Christian atmosphere and where they would not be tinged with disloyalty to their own. During these thirteen years several hundred M. P. young people have studied here and more than two score have been graduated. Three of those who graduated are missionaries in foreign lands or under appointment. "Not one of our young people attending Elon," said a leading minister to me, "has returned to us less consecrated in life or in any way disloyal to our Church."

That explains the signal honor of inviting Elon's president to be present at the corner-stone laying of the first building of their new college, now in process of construction on a sixty acre tract near High Point, on the national concrete highway and within a few minutes walk of their splendid Children's Home. The site was given them by High Point and $100,000 added to it by the same city to secure the location of the College nearby. How the public has grown in generosity in thirty-three years! When Elon was founded, twenty-five acres were given and $4,000 in money subscribed. Bethlehem College secures fifty acres and $25,000 in money. The N. C. M. P. College is presented with sixty acres and $100,000 in money. We rejoice to see our day. It speaks volumes for the future of our nation, when Christian Education in a single generation thus increases in importance in the public estimation.

The exercises began promptly at 11:00 A. M., with President Andrews presiding. The Board of Education and the invited guest sat on the improvised rostrum. The multitude stood about in the scorching sun. The speakers looked at uplifted umbrellas rather than faces for the most part, but a reverend attention pervaded all and made the occasion one of deep and abiding significance. An advance step for Christian Education was registered at High Point that day not only for the Methodist Protestants, but for North Carolina. The main building is to be known as Roberts Hall, in appreciation of a gift many years ago for a college by a princely layman, John Calvin Roberts, of Kernersville, N. C. The portrait of this good man was fittingly presented by Dr. J. F. McCulloch. The keynote speech was given by Dr. T. H. Lewis, president of the M. P. General Conference, easily one of the most eloquent platform men in America. His theme was Christian Education. It was an inspiration to sit under his eloquence. While he spoke, the sun blistered my face and hands. But I knew it not. It was a great oration.

President Andrews offered a touching prayer of dedication and then distinguished men deposited in the corner-stone the Holy Bible, copies of church and secular papers, the church discipline, and the Conference records, each with appropriate words. The appearance of J. Norman Wills was the signal for an ovation. He presented a solid steel trowel with mahogany handle, with which to lay the stone, the same to be preserved in the archives of the College. An ordinary thing, to be sure, and yet an ovation was given him. Why? Because this man had personally given $100,000 to make the College possible. Not a word was said with reference to it. He would not permit it, yet the people knew him and expressed their gratitude, noisily, but with evident sincerity. It was privately learned that this good man is also hoping to earn the money with which shortly to erect a church on the new campus in memory of his father, a leading M. P. minister of a generation ago. Talk about ministers' sons, would that we had ten times as many!

President Andrews announced publicly that another man, name withheld by request, had agreed to erect at once the men's dormitory at his own expense. The statement was further made that the plant and endowment when completed will reach the sum in value of $6,000,000. Truly my heart rejoiced.

After a splendid picnic dinner, that afternoon the corner-stone of the new Boys' Dormitory of the Children's Home was laid, by Chairman Milliken. The building is to cost $50,000 and George and Jim Penny, auctioneers, are giving one-half of it. Happy is the church with such laymen in it. These great givers are not millionaires. There is not a millionaire in the M. P. church in this state. In some cases the gifts of its laymen to this church's enterprises has represented more than half their property. In one case eighty per cent has been given, I am told. God will bless any people who thus honor Him.

Present at the corner-stone layings were twenty-two graduates of Elon College and fifty or more who had studied here for a year or two. It was almost for me an Elon reunion. For eleven years I have been attending the N. C. M. P. annual conference, the Young People's Convention, and the Ministers' Summer Conference. During my visits they have accepted me as a brother and showered upon me every courtesy, all undeserved. I have learned to love these people. We ought to be one body in Christ. I think it grieves His great heart that we are divided in our organizational life. June 29, 1922, confirmed me in that conviction, which has deepened with each succeeding year. I am one with them in heart. May God bless them in His work and make them a blessing.

W. A. HARPER.

We saw an old father in Israel sometime ago who was more than fourscore years and ten, and yet his word was full of joy, and his life a feast of love. For a life time he had served God and preached Him to men, and age only sweetened his spirit, and deepened his faith. The songs of so many lives die at eventide, but this life was full of song, and his heart was overflowing with gladness. Does it pay to serve God? Happy is the man who is planted by the river of waters. His leaf shall not wither even in age and feebleness extreme.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

FAMILY ALTAR

BY REV. J. GREGORY MANTLE,
In Christian Alliance.

SUNDAY:

Everyone that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.—Matt. 7: 7.

The "asking" is the lower form of requesting; but the "seeking" implies the activity of one who puts himself to the labor of a search; and the "knocking" refers to the continued importunity that repeats its application, until it is satisfied that there is no one in, or until the door is actually opened. Here, too, we come to those parables spoken by the Lord, to the end that men ought always to pray and not to faint. The true suppliant is importunate. Like Jacob, he wrestles with the angel, if need be, until the dawning of the day; or like the Syro-Phœnician woman, he renews his entreaties in the face of seeming rebuke; from an apparent refusal, draws a plea which in the end prevails. No mere sluggard's formalism, therefore, will suffice. That is not prayer. That is but the husk of appearance. The true suppliant will "continue instant in prayer," and when it is over, the exhaustion of the spirit will convince him that he has been laboring indeed. "Believe me," said Coleridge to his nephew two years before his death, "to pray with all your heart and strength, with the reason and the will, to believe vividly that God will listen to your voice through Christ, and verily do the thing that pleaseth Him at last, this is the last, the greatest achievement of the Christian's warfare on earth."

"Man's plea to man is that he nevermore
Will beg, and that he never begged before.
Man's plea to God is that he did obtain
A former suit, and therefore sues again.
How good a God we serve, who, when we sue,
Makes his old gifts the example of the new!"

MONDAY:

A vessel unto honor sanctified and meet for the Master's use.—II. Timothy 2: 21.

Purification is effected, not merely that our souls may be safe from hell, or more happy on earth, but that they may work in righteousness for the world's well being. What a work has been done for God in the world! God's plan is to save man by man, and whether we look Godward or manward, men holy in life and fired with zeal are the men needed for the purpose. It is the loyal soul, the confidential servant, the tried soldier, that is sanctified and meet for the Master's use. Such can offer a joyous service, because "the joy of the Lord is their strength," and on the score of righteousness they will put their whole soul into it because of indebtedness. Force, too, will mark it, for for such service they are "strengthened with all might, according to His glorious power." Neither shall they labor in vain. Purity means power; and when Christians are purified, and filled with the Holy Ghost, they may go to their work in the steadfast and immovable conviction that they will "come again with rejoicing, bringing their sheaves with them."

"O use me, Lord, use even me,
Just as Thou wilt, and when, and where;
Until Thy blessed face I see,
Thy rest, Thy joy, Thy glory share."

TUESDAY:

If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them.—Matt. 18: 19.

The word "agree" is literally "symphonize," the response of the keyed instrument to the note sounded. Lawrence Greenwood tells how one night he noticed that when his little daughter, playing the piano, struck the note "E" something in the room rattled. He asked the child to keep on striking "E" till he found out what was responding in symphony. After a long search he found that away in the corner of a large mirror was a bit of glass that had been fractured and had become loose. It was in symphony with "E" and responded every time. A true prayer-meeting is a meeting where all who take part are in sympathy with the Holy Spirit and with each other. When a company of musicians are about to begin an oratorio the instruments must all be attuned. Until the discord ceases the Hallelujah Chorus can not begin. Behind family or public prayer there must be unison with God. It is not so much a question of being present to pray as being prepared to pray.

"Tune me, O Lord, into one harmony
With Thee; one full, responsive, vibrant cord;
Into Thy praise all love and melody Tune me, O Lord."

WEDNESDAY:

They that use the world as not using it to the full.—I. Cor. 7: 31 R. v.

"A fruitful source of backsliding is having too much worldly business. God does not wish His servants to have so much work to do that they cannot get time to confer with Him, to tell Him their situation and progress, and to ask His directions. If you accumulate so much business that you cannot attend on God, it is evident that you have no right view of business. If you really considered it as God's business, you would not think that this was the best way to please and honor Him—to plunge into such a mass of worldly business that you cannot pray nor read your Bible. Business is a duty. It is a duty, which God requires, to be busy—always usefully employed in some way. But to get into business that will encroach upon secret prayer and eat out religion is all wrong. God never requires it."

"We need not bid for cloistered cell.
Our neighbors and our friends farewell,
Nor seek to wind ourselves too high,
For sinful man beneath the sky.

The daily round, the common task
Will furnish all we ought to ask;
Room to deny ourselves, a road
To lead us daily nearer God."

THURSDAY:

Shall not God avenge His own elect, which cry day and night unto him?—Luke 18: 7.

A gracious revival had come upon one of our churches, to the surprise of most of the members of it. They were not expecting it, or prepared for it. If they had been praying for it in a cold formal way, they hardly expected their prayers to be answered. But now the Lord was manifestly among them, reviving His people and converting the impenitent. How should they account for it? True, He has graciously said, "Ask, and it shall be given you;" but they had not been asking in a way that authorized them to expect such a blessing. "But some one has been praying, if no more," was the reply. And so it was. It was ascertained that one humble woman had spent a whole night in prayer for the very revival that God was then giving them.

How precious her reward! And have we none among us at this day to feel enough for the impenitent, enough for the glory of God, to spend all night in prayer? One night? We have preaching, and that which is good, and perhaps enough in general of it; but what now seems to be needed especially is praying on the part of the members. Think what one humble woman did. Cannot you, possibly, without any special gift bring down showers of blessing upon the thirsty ground by a night of prayer?

"The world's false voice would bid me enter not that hallowed spot;
And earthly thoughts would follow on the track to hold me back,
Or seek to break the sacred peace within, with this world's din.
But by Thy grace, I'll cast it all aside, whate'er betide.
And never let that place deserted be,
Where I may dwell alone, my God, with Thee.

FRIDAY:

As thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone.—I. Kings 20: 40.

"He whose days are crowded with business cares, so that he thinks he has no time to read his Bible, meditate on God, and pray, may accomplish great things from his own point of view, yet he fails to do what he was put into the world to do. He fails to cultivate the acquaintance of his Heavenly Father. He loses more than he gains; for he starves and dwarfs the spiritual man within him, whose life is to go on for infinite ages after the grandest commercial triumphs in human history shall have faded away into their real relative pettiness, if they had not also actually passed out of the memory of everybody except Him who never can forget. To go into God's presence by-and-by as a comparative stranger, and to have only this excuse, 'I was too busy to attend to His invitations to learn to know Him well'—this will be lamentable indeed."

"Take time to be holy,
The world rushes on;
Spend much time in secret
With Jesus alone;
By looking to Jesus,
Like Him thou shalt be;
Thy friends in thy conduct
His likeness shall see."

SATURDAY:

Mine eyes are ever toward the Lord.—Psalms 25: 15.

A minister was once a visitor in the house of the great and good Bengel. He had an intense curiosity to see and know more of the secret life of that godly man, whose simple and saintly piety was even more remarkable than his great learning. One night, after he had taken leave of his host, he lingered in his chamber, which adjoined Bengel's, with his door ajar, that he might hear, if possible, the last words of his evening devotions. His desire was gratified; for, in a little while, the good man put aside his papers and books, and, closing his Bible, knelt and uttered this simple prayer: "Lord Jesus, things are still just the same between us;" and then retired for the night. Beautiful fellowship! The child-like saint walking so closely and constantly with his Lord that neither business nor conversation could interrupt his communion, and life was all one service and devotion. "You are soon to be in the presence of your Lord," said some one to a dying workman. "Why, man," he replied, "I've been walking in the light of His presence for twenty-five years." Rowland Hill often used to repeat the words of the saintly Bengel, and we believe he died repeating them, for things were "still just the same" between him and his Saviour.

Lord! it is not life to live,
If Thy presence Thou deny;
Lord! if Thou Thy presence give
'Tis no longer death—to die.
Source and giver of repose,
Singly from Thy smile it flows;
Peace and happiness are Thine—
Mine they are, if Thou art mine."

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

OUR PREACHER AT FANCY GAP, VA.

As "Sun" readers are already aware, Rev. M. T. Sorrell, one of our consecrated young ministers in Elon College the past year, volunteered at our solicitation to give much of his summer to pastoral and evangelistic work in Carroll County, Va. We knew it was a great opportunity and that the people were exceedingly anxious for the gospel, but we were hardly prepared to realize what Brother Sorrell has already found. Under a personal letter June 19th he writes:

"I will try to give you a little idea of my first days work here. Sunday morning I went to the little house in which Miss Gladys Lankford is holding school, and which is known as the "Shack" and found that more people had come than we were able to seat or even get into the little house. After Sunday school I spoke briefly from Isa. 1:18 and I have never had just such an experience before. The people were all eager to hear the simple gospel story and gave such good attention that one could hardly help having his eyes filled with tears as he looked into the faces of those who were so eager to hear about Christ and His love. I do not think it will be long before we will have a church in this section, not many months at least. Sunday afternoon I went to Sandy Ridge school where Mrs. Teague and Miss Wheeler are and there found the people fully as eager to hear about Christ as were those of the morning to whom I had spoken. After the service there I came back here to our own good building and preached Sunday night. I enjoyed the service here very much and had a large congregation, though the house was not quite full.

I took my first trip among the people Monday and made a brief survey of the field. I may say that there is more here than one minister can well do, and I do not see anything else than that we will have to have a minister here next year. I feel like the people here want a preacher so much that they are just going to have him, and of course we Christians are hoping to supply the need and work this field.

I hope to have a church ready for you to organize very soon, and possibly another down at the "Shack." I have had one confession of Christ and I feel that many others are simply waiting the opportunity. This person was one that I approached on the subject personally. I shall be careful about giving invitations until the people are acquainted with me.

The people all seem ready and receive me with as warm a welcome as I can desire. All the other workers up here are getting along well and doing fine in their work.

There are great prospects here and I am liking the work real well.

Your brother in service, M. T. Sorrell."

Then under date of June 22nd, after another Sunday service and a week intervening, Brother Sorrell writes even more enthusiastically as follows:

"In writing this letter I hope you will excuse any terms that I may use in trying to explain my real pleasure and joy in the work I am finding here. This morning a lady came up to see if she might join our church, or as she called it, "Miss Hedgepeth's church". She had not, of course, even had an invitation to join us, for I had not had time to speak to her on the subject. Sunday morning after hearing me preach she adopted me as her son, or rather said henceforth she was going to call me her son. I cannot tell you how eager these people are to hear the story of Christ.

You need not be surprised at any time to get a message from me, either by mail or wire asking you to come up here and organize a church and baptize our candidates. We are making progress in the work, and I am beginning to believe that it may be better to organize the church even before holding our revival. I will give you reasons for this later.

Miss Hedgepeth and I are giving this work much prayer and careful consideration. She is one of the finest workers I have ever worked with, and furthermore she is doing all she can to aid me in the work I am trying to do. We are doing what we consider God's leading and guiding in regard to starting a church. I will give you an experience I had this morning in a home. I went up to the house and introduced myself as the preacher who had come to be with them. The members of the family were greatly rejoiced in having me. Before I had time to say anything to them about reading the scripture, the mother asked me to read some to them and pray before leaving. I told them I would. Before I had a chance to speak about it again she said "You won't mind reading and praying with us will you?" When I opened the Bible which was torn completely to pieces and bound up in some backs just enough to keep all of it together and had read I Cor. chapter 13, they wanted me to read more, so I read the 24th chapter of Matthew, then prayed with them. Part of the time the family were in tears. I have never enjoyed a visit quite so well as I did this one. I would that I had more than one life to give to these people. It is wonderful to see how eager they are to have those with them who love God and know Him. My heart, mind, and soul are completely wrapped up in this work. If possible, please send me some cheap, large print, Bibles and Testaments. In a home like this one I visited this morning they not only needed, but wanted a Bible, but had absolutely nothing to buy with, and really not enough to live on. In such places where the people are hungering and thirsting for the word of God we must give it to them. The very cheapest bindings will be sufficient.

I guess you know about Miss Hedgepeth getting married, and I do not wish our people or the Mission Board to feel that she is making a mistake, for I have begun to get acquainted with the field and think that it is the very best thing in the place she is and the work she is doing. I believe I am safe in saying that her work henceforth will be of greater success than it is now, which however seems impossible.

Please feel perfectly free to ask me anything about the work up here you would like to know, and I hope that you will now begin to think and provide for a preacher that we will need for this field the coming year.

"Yours in His service"

Dr. Staley has kindly consented to spend the first week of August when Brother Sorrell has to be away in meetings of his own. This is indeed gratifying, as there is no one amongst us more capable of helping our prospective church start off properly than Dr. Staley.

I trust that Christian Sun readers will be much in prayer for our dear Brother Sorrell who has gone for us and who is entering into the work with such heart and soul.

I am ordering for him a dozen Bibles of cheap binding, also a dozen Testaments.

J. O. ATKINSON.

OUR CAPTAINS.

The word "Captain" has been objected to as a proper term to designate the leader of our Men and Millions Movement in the local church. Possibly some other name might be more popular and appropriate, and yet the name "Captain" is significant and has justification in Scripture. True, Captain is a militant term and suggests warfare, but we do well to remember that the church itself is militant and is made up, or should be, of loyal and brave soldiers. As soldiers we march under the blood stained banner of the Cross which Christ, our Leader, the Captain of our salvation, carries forward over the field of battle with sin and Satan until we through His leadership shall gain victory.

The "Captains" were selected to lead the forces of righteousness in each local church forward and onward in His name and in His strength. One of the very objects of our Men and Millions Movement was to develop in each church a leader or worker who would be faithful not only in collecting pledges made for Kingdom service, but discharge the duties in the church as the pastor might direct and opportunity might afford. Every Captain in every church thus has an opportunity for service of the best and noblest type. Often theirs is a thankless job. It is no easy matter to keep prominent before the church financial affairs and personal obligations. Yet if individual members are to advance in spiritual power and activity they are to be confronted with just such problems and activities. The Book of Acts and the Letters of Paul in the Bible do not reveal easy and pleasant places for those who would undertake to lead the forces of righteousness in the name of our Redeemer. It is not the ones who have the easy places, but the ones who have the difficult tasks that count for most in the world and accomplish most in our Master's name and service.

Many Captains in our churches are valiant and faithful and capable indeed. I pray God's blessings upon all of them. They are in a work greater than they know and are vital parts of a Movement upon which the very future of our Church rests. I wish each and every one of them could see and realize the full meaning of Men and Millions and the part they have in carrying it to completion.

Never was a holier Movement undertaken by us Christians, for it is our first and only comprehensive, cooperative task. He who works for this Movement works for every enterprise of the Christians and all that they stand for and represent. God in His goodness, has seen fit to bring us to the day in which the loyalty of all of our people is challenged to the whole task of the Church. He who gives an hour's time or pays a dime or a dollar on his pledge to this Movement renders a service to the whole Church, for the Movement exists to benefit and uplift the Christian Church in all its undertakings.

Our Captains, God bless them, have done and are doing a most noble work. Theirs is the task of keeping strict account of all money paid in: of informing the people as to their duties and pledges to the Movement; of making the objects of the movement known from time to time to the local congregation, of transmitting carefully all money when collected to the Executive Secretary, and of doing all they can to build up in every way possible the work of the Lord in their local church. Surely this is a position in which men and women can serve their day and generation well and accomplish untold good in behalf of their local church, their denomination and the Kingdom of their Lord. God bless, preserve and keep our noble Captains in their great efforts to render faithful and efficient service in His name.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

OUR WOMEN LEADERS.

In the Men and Millions Movement our good women have taken a lively and loyal interest from the beginning. This is natural. They have always been most ready and devout in all good work. The women of the Christian Church have always done their part. Ask editors and managers of The Christian Sun who have been most willing and loyal in their support; ask superintendents of The Orphanage, or presidents of Elon College, or secretaries of Missions, who have been most ready, willing and loyal to these enterprises and they will point out the fact that the good women rank first and foremost in their loyalty. Now, when a movement is put on that looks to the support of all these enterprises of our church it is not surprising that many of our women are found in the foremost ranks of those who support and advocate the movement.

In every such there was appointed a woman leader who was to assist the local captain in his good work. These women from the beginning rendered invaluable aid in securing pledges and promoting the work. They are willing now. Theirs is the task to help keep the objects of the movement before the people; speak of the movement in the Ladies' Aid and Woman's Missionary Societies; distribute literature on the movement to the churches, and urge in every way possible the obligations upon all who have pledged to pay their pledges as soon as they are able; to send to the Mission Secretary any suggestions about the need in the local church; to help the captain in getting envelopes to all who should have them, and help the Captain collect all pledges made and in securing new pledges from those who are willing to make them.

This is our greatest missionary movement, one that is to help every enterprise of our church to greater power, progress and efficiency. Whatever the women can do in such a movement they will do and may God direct them in their efforts for this our greatest movement for our dear Christian Church.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

HOW SUNDAY SCHOOLS HELP.

Our Christian Sunday Schools are already giving in their own way to benevolences of the Kingdom and very many of them to missions once per month. It has been asked how these schools may help to further the cause of our Men and Millions. In various ways. Back of every pledge and donation to church benevolences and charity should be information and inspiration. Unless these are back of the donation the spirit is lacking and the giving is grudgingly. Our Sunday School teachers can discuss with their class the great work of Men and Millions. They can teach their class the meaning of Men and Millions, they can get their class interested in the work and detail of Men and Millions. Every Sunday School class should know that Men and Millions means everything that the Christian Church means, and nothing more. Men and Millions means our first and only co-operative effort to carry forward all that the Church is and stands for, Men and Millions means the effort of the whole Church to build up every local congregation, increase the church membership, win souls to Christ, secure recruits for service and gifts of money to all that the church fosters and supports.

A letter from the Secretary of the Sunday School Department of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, says, "About 9,000 of our Sunday Schools are contributing regularly to the Centenary. I do not know precisely the amount they have contributed up to this time. At the last reckoning it was considerably over $900,000. Probably by this time it is a million." A letter from the secretary of the Baptist Sunday School Department gives equally flattering reports of what the Baptist Sunday Schools are doing in their Seventy-five Million Campaign. All that the Sunday Schools of these churches contribute make up a part of their movement.

While it is different with us, the object is the same and the efforts should be the same. Our movement only supplements what each and all are seeking to do and is an endeavor to make more efficient all the enterprises of the church. To this end our Board of Religious Education recently adopted the following:

"Recognizing the Men and Millions Movement as the greatest movement ever inaugurated by the Southern Christian Convention, for the unification of aims and the co-operation of forces, including as it does the emphasis on service and the enrollment of Life Work Recruits, the teaching of systematic giving and the registration of Tithers, and the pooling of our offerings for distribution to the great enterprises of our Church, and believing that this should become a permanent movement of the church and that opportunity should be continually offered for the enrollment of Life Work Recruits and the registration of Tithers, and that as fast as new members are added to the Church they should be given the privilege of making pledges to the fund:

Therefore, We, the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention, do hereby pledge our influence for the perpetuation of these ideals and our active co-operation in the carrying out of these plans. And further, we call upon the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies, at stated times, to call for the enrollment of Life Work Recruits and Tithers, and to keep the movement permanently before these organizations to the end that each new member may become a contributor to the fund.

(Signed) The Board of Religious Education,
J. F. Morgan, R. F. Brown, P. T. Hines, C. H. Stephenson, E. T. Holland, Mrs. J. W. Patton.

By W. T. Walters, Chairman."

For all of which we are grateful.

Mission Secretary.

WOMAN'S WORK GROWING.

Lineville, Ala., June 26, 1922. Rev. J. O. Atkinson, Sec. Dear Sir: Please send me the literature for organizing a Womans Missionary Society, as I am going to organize a new Society at Shady Grove Christian church, Saturday, and I would like to have the literature for them when we organize.

Our Society at Spring Hill is just moving on nicely. Glad to say that our Missionary work is growing in Alabama. We would be glad if you would visit us sometime soon.

We ask your prayers for us that we may come to do a great work for the Master.

Respectfully,

MRS. OSCAR ORR.

The literature was gladly sent.

WHO NEEDS THE NEW BIRTH?

My opinion is worth but little and will pass away, but the Word of the Lord "standeth sure" and "shall not pass away." Then, if we would understand, let us "turn to the law and to the testimony."

Looking first at the words of Jesus, as recorded in John, iii:3, we have Him saying to Nicodemus: "Except a MAN be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." (A V). The word MAN here might, to some, be misleading as referring only to maturity but the R. V. clears this up by translating the Greek word TIS, not "man," but "one."

According to the "Englishman's Greek New Testament," the sentence reads "Except ANY-ONE be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God." Now this seems, to me, to be, very clearly, the meaning, for since "ANYONE" must be born again to "see the Kingdom of God." Nicodemus need not "wonder" that he, a moral man needs the new birth.

The same Greek word is used in 2 Cor. 5:17, which reads, according to the E. G. N. T., "So that if ANYONE be in Christ there is a new creation." Notice that to be "in Christ" requires a creative act of God. Christ made this emphatic when He said to Nicodemus, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit." If anyone who is born become a man in flesh, so does one have to be born again, born anew, born from above, "created in Christ Jesus" a spiritual man. God's word is as emphatic concerning the creation of the new man, as it is to the creation of the first man. "The numerical Bible" has this to say on this point: "If then 'that which is born of the spirit' speaks, as it certainly does, of the product of new birth, 'that which is born of the flesh' covers all that man is naturally; and that he thus is only 'flesh' is the effect of the fall."

Now if this new birth is the creative act of God, how could it ever be by growth, or culture, or training? This of course is not human reasoning, but God hath spoken—let men keep silent.

Looking at it from another angle, or from other scriptures, I find the same meaning. In Ps. 51:5, we hear the cry "Behold I was shapen in iniquity and in sin did my mother conceive me." If one should say that these words apply only to David, then let me ask for scriptural proof, or let me apply the same mode of interpretation to any other scripture. Why not say that Paul's words, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and thy house," apply only to the Philippian Jailer and his family? Why not say that the great commission applied only to the men to whom Jesus was speaking? That David was not speaking of himself only is manifest by other scriptures. "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one."—Job, 14:4. Again, "How can a man be justified with God? or how can he be clean that is born of woman."—Job, 25:4. Notice the words here. The question of justification is raised. Who is it to be justified, cleansed? Why, clearly, man that is BORN of woman.

Take this New Testament scripture: "We all . . . were by NATURE children of wrath, even as the rest." (R. V.) I notice the small lexicon which I possess gives the following meaning to the Greek word translated "Nature," "native conditions, birth, native species, kind." Hear Dr. Gaebelin just here: "Man enters into the world by the natural generation with a nature of sin, a fallen, corrupt nature. The whole race is by nature unfit to be in the presence of God. Both Jew and Gentile are under sin and on account of sin the whole world is guilty before God. Out of an unclean thing nothing clean can be brought forth."

Of course with many this is unpopular and coarse and savors not of this enlightened new day, but nothing can erase it from "The Book," not even the "Shorter Bible." And while we are confronted with the "dark sayings" of man I am glad that we have the "sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a LIGHT that shineth in a DARK place."

THE SUN'S PULPIT

The Whole Christ and the Whole Bible for the Whole World.

A Sermon by Rev. A. C. Dixon, D. D., preached in Los Angeles, California, June 2, 1922.

TEXT: In Him dwelleth all the fullness of the God-head bodily.—Col. 2:9.

All Scripture is God-breathed and profitable.
—2 Tim. 2:16.

Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.—Mark 16:15.

Out of these Scriptures come three triplets of truth:

- I A Triplet of Definitions;
- II A Triplet of Implications;
- III A Triplet of Obligations.

We have a definition of Christ as one in whom "dwells all the fullness of the God-head bodily." God has all wisdom, and in Christ dwells the fullness of omniscience. God has all power, and in Him dwells the fullness of omnipotence. God is all-holy, and in Christ dwells the fullness of holiness. I do not understand how omnipresence can be present nor how the infinite and eternal can submit to the limitations of the finite and temporal. But I see it in Christ as "God manifest in the flesh." I stood the other day out in the open and looked up at the broad expanse of sky and cloud and out upon the wide stretches of space in all directions to the horizon. Then I went into a little building called a "Camera Obscura," and the broad expanse and the wide stretches I saw in moving picture upon a table three feet square. I may not understand how so much can be compressed into so little, but I can see and enjoy it. In Christ is all of God and all of men, except sin; the fullness of deity and the fullness of humanity. I do not comprehend it, but I see it and rejoice.

In the second text is a definition of the Scripture, "All Scripture is God-breathed and profitable." Beyond question this is the right translation. In "all Scripture" is the breath, which is the life of God. It does not say that all writers of Scripture are God-breathed, though "the Holy Spirit did speak by the mouth of David" and "holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." Scripture is not WRITER, but writing. In the writing is the life of God. This writing refers to the Old Testament and, by fair inference, to the New. Every Scripture in these Scriptures has in it the life of God.

Our third text defines the field of Christian activity. "All the world." This, of course, means all the earth to its remotest parts, but immensely more. "Unto all the cosmos," the present order of things at home and abroad. What this present order needs is the Gospel. "The field is the world," near as well as distant. Whether the present order be civilization, as in America and England; or savagery, as in Central Africa, the universal need is just the same. "Preach the Gospel to every creature," civilized, semi-civilized and savage.

II

The first implication is that Christ stands alone as the Savior of the world. In him alone "dwells all the fullness of the God-head bodily." He is the solitary mountain peak, rising far above the hills of humanity.

He is the solitary sun in the heavens which eclipses all other lights. He has no peer and no rival. "There is none other name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved." "The only-begotten." Millions of others have been begotten by natural generation and of God unto eternal life, but He stands alone as begotten of a virgin through the Holy Spirit. Among all the personalities in the universe He is unique in His virgin birth. In this He is "the only begotten" in earth and heaven.

The second implication is that the Bible stands alone as the God-breathed Word, which "liveth and abideth forever." Other books have in them the life of men. This is the one book which has in it the life of God. Other books have in them divine life only as they have drawn it from this solitary source.

The third implication is that the Church, by which we mean all who have been born from above, stands alone as the agency through which this unique Christ and unique Book are to be taken to all the world. "Go ye" was spoken not to angels but to his disciples. We are His sole dependence for world evangelization. If we fail Him, the work will not be done.

III

Our first obligation is to give to such a Christ the place He deserves. The one in whom "dwells all the fullness of the God-head bodily" deserves our worship and service. It is fitting that we should fall before Him and say with Thomas, "My Lord, and My God." It is fitting that such worship should be linked with constant and whole-hearted service. To serve Him without worship is to rob Him of the glory which is His due, and to worship Him without service is a pietism which may result in mere spiritual luxury. Social service which takes the crown of deity from Christ is treason to our King, and no amount of doing good can atone for such a wrong.

Our second obligation is to give to the God-breathed Book the place it merits. It is our text-book on theology, the most important science under the sun. Only he who has no God can truly say that he has no theology, for theology is what we know about God. If we have a little insignificant God, we shall have a little insignificant theology. The greatness of the God we worship is the measure of our theology.

The Bible is for the most part the revelation of God in Christ, and the book that reveals in Him "all the fullness of the God-head bodily," has such a theology as no other book approaches. Indeed, all other books which do not echo the teachings of the Bible have nothing better than mythology. In the world of books the Bible not only merits pre-eminence but is so unique as to suggest that, like the Christ it reveals, it belongs to a class apart.

The Bible merits first place as a text-book on history. "All history," said Dr. A. T. Pierson, "is His story;" and the Bible is, as no other book, the story of God's dealings with the race. No other book goes back so far into the past, and it is the only book that, with prophetic vision, reveals the distant future.

Mr. Welhausen, founder with others of the distinctive school of higher criticism, in his commentary on Genesis informs us that the five kings in the fourteenth chapter had no historic existence; but now in the light of knowledge revealed by the pick and spade, the reign of Arioch is acknowledged to be the certain starting point of ancient history, showing that the Bible was for thousands of years the only correct text-book on this part of ancient history; and Mr. Welhausen's mistake led many a student to discredit the truth.

A few years ago the historians who did not accept the Bible as the inspired Word of God, denied that Sargon, King of Assyria, mentioned in Issiah 20:1, ever existed. His name did not occur in the list of Assyrian kings that were known to modern scholarship, and the Bible therefore, must be mistaken. But now in the light of what the pick and spade of the archaeologist have revealed, we know the date and deeds of Sargon's reign and have even unearthed the foundations of his palace. So that the Bible was for at least twenty-five hundred years the only correct text-book of Assyrian history.

And the Bible was until the time of Copernicus the only correct text-book on astronomy. While the world was believing silly things as to the shape, size and support of the earth, Job wrote, "He stretched out the North over empty space and hangeth the earth upon nothing." Job 26:7.

While scientists through hundreds of years were teaching that air had no weight, Job was trying to tell them of "the weight for the winds." Job 28:25.

When modern apologists for what they regard as mistakes in the Bible tell us that the Bible was not intended to teach science, we can remind them that in history, astronomy and aerology, the Old Book was for centuries ahead of its time and that in science, as well as history, it is always up-to-date. When there is conflict between the Bible and scholarship, we may take it for granted that scholarship is mistaken. The Bible has stood the test of centuries and scholarship must sooner or later recognize its truthfulness.

During the past year I have devoted some time to the study of history of geology with the kind assistance of the Peabody Librarian in Baltimore; and, though the task is not yet finished, I must confess to some startling surprises. When I studied geology in college, I thought that its classifications and principles were as solid as "the eternal hills" but this recent study has, so far, left only one certainty, which is, that, as a science, geology which the mining engineer studies gives him facts upon which he can rely, but in the realm of theoretical geology the fogs of uncertainty prevail.

The most famous geologist of his day, and its founder as a science, was A. G. Werner, of Saxony, who died in 1817. Werner studied the strata of his native land, and imagined that similar strata encircled the globe. The lowest rocks he very reasonably supposed were the oldest and the uppermost rocks he just as reasonably supposed were the newest. He had a genius, if not a mania for classification. One historian says that he bought books, not that he might read them, but that he might classify them in his library, and he gave banquets, not that he might enjoy the fellowship of friends, but that he might have the pleasure of properly arranging them at the table. His "Onion Coat" theory of the earth's strata was orderly and beautiful. But investigations in other countries, notably in America, have proved that some rocks which are lowest in Saxony are uppermost in America and vice versa. The fair inference is that Werner was as much mistaken in his stratification as everybody now knows that he was mistaken in his theory that basalt was of aqueous formation. But geologists were so enamored of his beautiful stratification theories that they tried to explain the American situation by imagining stupendous freaks of nature which they called "Thrust Faults," etc.

The man who did most to found that department of geology known as fossilology was William Smith, an Englishman, who died in 1839. He was a surveyor who supported himself by his trade and, as he went about his business, made as careful observation as possible of the earth's formation, specially of the fossils which he found in many places. He had talent, if not genius, for drawing maps of what he saw and in time attracted wide attention to his discoveries. He did for fossils very much what Werner did for rocks. He was certain that the age of rocks could be determined by the fossils that were in them. But subsequent investigations have proved that the fossils which Mr. Smith classified as belonging to the upper strata are elsewhere found in the lower strata, and vice versa. Indeed, the rocks and the fossils have become so inextricably mixed that George McReady Price, who has devoted his life to geological studies, asserts that no up-to-date scientist can afford to risk his reputation for geological learning by declaring that he can now tell the age of a rock or a fossil. I find, however, that all scientists from Aristotle to Mr. Smith agree in one thing, namely: that the present dry land surface of the earth was at one time under the sea, for sea fossils are found even on the highest mountains. The fair inference is that great upheavals have taken place and the sea bottoms have been so lifted as to make, for the most part, the present dry land.

Now I turn to the Bible and find that between the first and second verses of the first chapter of Genesis, there is time enough for long ages of deposit in the perfect order of "the heaven and the earth" which God created. And since "was" may be translated "became" so as to make it read, "the earth became waste and void," there is an intimation that a great upheaval took place at that remote time. This intimation leads a distinguished Bible student to say: "It is by no means necessary to suppose that the life-germ of seeds perish in the catastrophic judgment which overthrew the primitive order. With the restoration of dry land and light, the earth would bring forth, as described. It was animal life which perished, the traces of which remain as fossils. Relegate fossils to the primitive creation, and no conflict of science with the Genesis cosmogony remains."

Geologists are willing to admit that more than one upheaval may have taken place.

We turn to the Bible and find the historic record of such an upheaval in the sixth and seventh chapters of Genesis, when "the fountains of the great deep were broken up," the waters covered the highest mountains and all animal life was destroyed except that which was preserved in an ark specially built for the purpose. We are tremendously interested by the fact that all geologists of note, who wrote before A. D. 1830, believed that present geological conditions can be explained by this biblical record of the Noahean Deluge. Not until rationalistic modernism, born of the pagan theory of evolution, began to discredit the trustworthiness of the Bible, did scientists turn from this very reasonable explanation, and plunge into the abysmal past for imaginary theories. As I have read the geological literature of the past fifty years, I have turned to the Bible with the confirmed conviction that it is the most reliable, up-to-date text-book on geology that is now before the public. All geological phenomena can be here more reasonably explained in the light of the Bible than of any other book in existence.

Biologists admit three things: (1) that science cannot explain the origin of matter and life. (2) That life comes only from antecedent life. (3) That one species has never been known to evolve into another species. Such a claim can be based only upon what is imagined to have taken place before the historic period.

When we look into the Bible, we find that God is revealed as the author of both matter and life. We find also that every species is reproduced "after its kind." The biology of the Bible thus harmonizes with the known facts of Science and contradicts only the vagaries of speculative scientists. We have, therefore, the right to claim that the Bible is an up-to-date text-book on biology. In the Bible is revealed, not only the origin of matter and life; but of the Sabbath, of marriage, of the State, of civilization, of sin and of crime. Since philosophy is "the science which investigates the causes of all phenomena," and the Bible reveals most clearly and authoritatively these causes, the Bible is the most reliable text-book on philosophy.

As a text-book on theology, on ancient history, on astronomy, on aerology, on geology, on biology and on philosophy, the Bible is worthy of a place in our schools. When all other books were teaching error about Arioch and Sargon, the Bible was right; when all the world was wrong in its thoughts about the earth and the air, the Bible was right; and today the proof that the Bible is the inerrant Word of God is immensely stronger than the proof in favor of any theory of geology, biology, or philosophy that contradicts the Bible, while the geology, biology and philosophy of the Bible are in harmony with all the facts of nature about us, history behind us and sound reasoning within us. Those who really know the Bible and the facts of history, astronomy, aerology, geology, biology and philosophy must be convinced that to exclude the Bible from our schools is to keep from the young people of this generation knowledge that they have a right to possess. Only ignorance of both the Bible and Science will make us content to keep from the young what the Bible teaches about science and everything else.

Our third obligation is to give to world evangelization the place it deserves. We have a universal Christ in that He is just the Savior that every creature needs, and a universal Bible in that it has a message to every creature. It is fitting that we should carry such a Christ and such a Bible to the utmost part of the earth. Our Master is expecting us to do it. Let us not disappoint him.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES

Dr. N. G. Newman, who for the past five years has been pastor of the college and community church here, at a called session of the church offered his resignation. This came as a distinct surprise to the membership. Dr. Newman was unanimously asked by the church conference to reconsider his decision, but he found it inadvisable to do so. He agreed, however, to serve the church until November 1st, during which time special effort will be put forth to secure a successor for him.

Dr. Newman has done a great work as pastor of the Elon College Christian Church, and as head of the Department of Sociology in the college. He ranks as one of the small group of real leaders in the Christian Church, having served as college pastor in Defiance, Ohio, for four years previous to coming to Elon College. His labors here have been signally fruitful, resulting in the co-ordination and correlation of the activities of the campus in such a way as to avoid needless duplication of effort. During his pastorate also weekday religious instruction has been undertaken for the graded school, for the Christian Orphanage, and for the colored people of the town. Under his leadership also it has been decided to erect a house of worship here, and at last night's session a building committee was appointed for this purpose.

Dr. Newman announced to the church that he had no plans for the future, though it is understood that several of the leading congregations of the Christians throughout the country are anxious to secure him as pastor in view of his ability and outstanding leadership in the denomination.

Before adjourning the church conference elected Messrs. L. W. Vaughan, W. A. Harper and R. M. Rothgeb, a pastorate committee to secure a successor to Dr. Newman and report to the church.

IMPORTANT EVENTS OF THE SUMMER.

Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, Berea (Norfolk), July 25th-26th.

Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, Noon-Day, September 29th and 30th.

Chautauqua and School of Methods, Elon College, N. C., August 28th to September 4th.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

JULY 23, 1922.

"Daniel and the Lions."—Daniel 6: 1-28.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions."—Heb. 11: 23.

LESSON TEACHINGS:

God's protective care is for His children. "What time I am afraid, I will put my trust in Thee."—Psa. 56: 3.

Daniel's devotion to God was recognized by his heathen enemies and by a foreign monarch. Does your life proclaim that you are a "servant of the living God" who is all-wise and all-powerful?

Daily prayer furnishes a strong and effective weapon against temptation. Daniel "prayed and gave thanks as he did aforetime." Daily communion with God gave him courage and power.

"No manner of hurt was found upon him, because he trusted God." The hour of testing and of difficulty comes to every man. The result of that hour depends upon our trust in God. "But God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation make also the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it."

"For Jehovah God is a sun and a shield,

Jehovah will give grace and glory;

No good thing will he withhold from them

That walk uprightly.

O Jehovah of hosts,

Blessed is the man that trusteth in Thee."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

JULY 23, 1922.

"GROW."—ii. Peter 3: 18.

"O that I may grow!

I see the leaves out-pushing hour by hour,
With steady joy the buds burst into flower,
Urged gladly on by nature's waking power.

O that I may grow!

"O that I may grow!

What though Time cuts his furrows in my face,
My heart may ever add grace unto grace,
Graces with added days still keeping pace,

O that I may grow!"—Mattie D. Babcock.

Grow in Grace.—"The grace of our Lord is abundant."—i. Timothy 1: 14. "Grace is given through Jesus Christ."—i. Cor. 1: 3-4.

Grow in Knowledge.—"Knowledge is the gift of God."—Eccl. 2: 26, and "a gift of untold value."—Prov. 13: 3.

The aim of our teaching and training is growth. Dr. Coe defines the aim of all Christian education as the "Growth of the young toward and into mature and efficient devotion to the democracy of God, and happy self-realization—growth in faith and devotion; growth in love and service; growth as admonished in ii. Peter 1:5-7, that "ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

"Be Strong!

We are not here to play, to dream, to drift,
We have hard work to do, and loads to lift,
Shun not the struggle; face it. 'Tis God's gift."

YOUR 1922 VACATION.

How are you going to spend your 1922 vacation?

This is a popular question just now, and may we offer a suggestion for your reply. At Elon College, North Carolina, August 28th to September 4th, many of our Christian Church people are going to spend a vacation week that will combine recreation with work enough to make the week interesting, rest with good comradeship which will make the week memorable. They will be attending the Chautauqua and School of Methods of the Southern Christian Convention, and while they are relaxing from their customary work, will be gaining strength and knowledge to make the next year a happier and more useful time.

Pastors will be there renewing old acquaintances at the College, spending a morning again under the Bible teaching of Dr. J. U. Newman, meeting daily in Dr. Staley's class for the study of the great work of the pastor. Sunday school superintendents and teachers who are really concerned about doing well the great tasks entrusted to them, will be there studying with leaders the principles and methods of their divine work. Christian Endeavorers with their enthusiasm and loyalty and devotion will be there each morning learning how to do more "For Christ and the Church." Then all together will enjoy and profit by the conference hours, and the mission study classes which complete the morning's program.

A letter from Coach F. B. Corboy, Elon's Director of Athletics, who is spending six weeks at the University of Illinois, makes it possible for us to guarantee that you will enjoy the afternoons if you spend your 1922 vacation at Elon. He tells us that he will take pleasure in arranging a program of recreation and athletics for the afternoon hours of the Chautauqua. He will really teach you how to play.

A "Music Hour" in the evening followed by an entertainment, or a "radio evening", or a lecture will complete the day's program at our Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods. Sunday will be observed with a model Sunday school and Christian Endeavor meeting, and the two church services, and an afternoon story hour on the campus.

And while spending this week's vacation at Elon you will be getting in close touch with the enterprises of our church. You will see Elon just as the college is ready to open her doors to a throng of students for the new term. You will see the children of your Orphanage happy in their home on the hill. You will come in daily contact with other people vitally interested in the progress and growth of the Christian Church, and from the week go home with your own interest quickened.

It is to this time of devotion, study, conference, inspiration and recreation that the Board of Religious Education invites you to come for your vacation. We shall be glad to do anything in our power to make it possible for you to come, to answer any questions, to send any information.

We cordially invite you, every Sunday school and Christian Endeavorer worker, every pastor and member or friend of the Christian Church, to spend your vacation with us. Will you come?

OUR COMMON TASK.

Ever since the inauguration of its work in the Southern Christian Convention, the Board of Religious Education has endeavored to work in closest co-operation with every other department of the work. In accordance with this policy, and expressing its deep interest and concern in the progress of the work of the church, the following resolution was passed at the recent meeting of the Board at Elon College, and heartily endorsed by every member of the Board:

"Recognizing the Men and Millions Movement as the greatest movement ever inaugurated by the Southern Christian Convention for the unification of aims and the co-operation of forces, including as it does the emphasis on service and the enrollment of Life Work Recruits, the teaching of systematic giving and the registration of Tithers, and the pooling of our offerings for distribution to the great enterprises of our Church, and believing that this should become a permanent Movement of the Church that opportunity should be continually offered for the enrollment of Life Work Recruits and the registration of Tithers, and that as fast as new members are added to the Church they should be given the privilege of making pledges to the Fund:

"Therefore, We, the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention, do hereby pledge our influence for the perpetuation of these ideals and our active co-operation in the carrying out of these plans. And further, We call upon the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies at stated times, to call for the enrollment of Life Work Recruits and Tithers, and to keep the Movement permanently before these organizations to the end that each new member may become a contributor to the Fund.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION NOTES.

Monticello Sunday school added eight new members during the recent Sunday school contest, and has almost doubled its attendance during the past twelve months. All lines of the work are progressing very nicely, under the leadership of the superintendent, Mr. W.F. Burton, who is an interested and capable Sunday school worker. The children of this church are also organized into a Junior Christian Endeavor Society which is alive and active in its work.

A Daily Vacation Bible School will be held in the Holland Christian Church the week of July 16th. The two churches of Holland and Holy Neck are uniting in this School, and the teachers and helpers are at work planning for a good week's work. Leaders in the work are Rev. W. M. Jay, D. D., Rev. J. H. Lighthourne, Mrs. I. A. Luke, and Miss Mary Nell Holland.

The Pleasant Grove (Virginia) church, of which Rev. J. E. McCauley is pastor, is planning for a two week's Daily Vacation Bible School which will open July 17th.

Enrollments are beginning to come in for the Chautauqua and School of Methods, August 28th to September 4th at Elon College. A good and helpful program is being arranged for the week, and many of our workers should be planning to attend.

Has your Sunday school sent in its Children's Day offering yet? We still have some copies of Children's Day programs which we shall be glad to send to Sunday schools which can still use them.

Religious education involves more than spiritual education; it is character education. It must consider every influence in human life which affects character. Christianity is more than a form of worship, so religious education must do more than teach ritual. Christianity is more than a form of belief, so religious education must do more than teach doctrines and creeds.—G. WALTER FISKE in Abingdon Bulletin of Religious Education.

Who Runs Your Sunday School?

Who runs the Sunday School in your church? Who keeps up the attendance and expenses? What kind of a school do you have? Who goes?

These are all pertinent questions that might be asked about the Sunday School in any church. No man becomes a partner in a business enterprise without expecting to keep up his part of the work and contribute his part of the finances. No man expects to join a lodge or a brotherhood without paying his part of the dues. Why should men join the church and then feel that they are justifiable in deciding not to cooperate except from certain angles or along certain lines? The average church must look to the Sunday School for three-fourths of its future membership: the community and the home must look to the Sunday School for the larger part of the religious and Biblical training given the young people, and the state and nation must look to the Sunday School for its future citizens and for the preservation of democracy.

Have you any moral right as a church member, to leave this important work to the other members of the church and not be willing to do your share? Can you afford to sit at home, or what is worse go and visit some one else and perhaps keep them away, and keep hands off in this work of rescuing the children and training them for God and the church.

But you say, you cannot superintend the school or teach a class; that may be, but you can go and show your interest and make your contribution of time and means to this great and most important work. What would your church and community be in five or ten years if you had no Sunday School? Is it any more your fellow-church member's place to do this work than it is yours? You are interested in your church and community, you are interested in the children in your home or that of your neighbors. Why not show that interest by helping every movement that has for its aim the development and uplifting of the young people.

Ask God, in all the seriousness of your heart, what he wants you to do for the Sunday School in your church.

Why not adopt the slogan: "Every member of the Church in the Sunday School?"

W. T. WALTERS.

SOUL-STIRRING MEMORIES.

Sometimes how lonely and sad we are and how we long for some loved one, perhaps one gone to their home in Glory, or some absent friend some comforting soul to open our hearts to and pour out the pent up feelings and how blessed are those who can fill such a place in this life. Often when tired and burdened with the cares of this life, the griefs and disappointments that come our way, I think sometimes they are little mountains thrown across our pathway to make us turn and go the other way, and when we feel we can bear these things no longer, there is One to whom we can go.

The burden-bearer who is ready to share all our troubles. In fact he said, "Cast thy burden before me?" If we will only do this, then we will receive the comfort no earthly friend can give us. We each and all, can think of sometimes in life and perhaps many, when needed more than others the sustaining grace of our Heavenly Father.

There has been a time when the heart cried out in anguish: "Lord we can bear this no longer; do take this burden and help." Did He ever fail when we fully trusted Him? No, and how light and bright our way seemed, after we did this. There has been just such experiences in all our lives. When we were little children, learning on mother's knee and depending on her for love and sympathy, did we ever once doubt that father would fail to defend and protect us from harm and danger? I remember so many times when I felt safe, no matter what was happening, if, my now, sainted father, was near me.

How much more is our Heavenly Father able and ready to shield us from all the hard things along life's pathway if we trust Him, and to lead us on safely until the time when He shall call us to come up and to dwell with Him in the mansion He has prepared for us. Have we ever sat at the bedside of a loved one as he or she was passing away, mourning the eternal's love, and looked on the face as it became brighter with a heavenly brightness? Shall we ever forget that look? That was a little glimpse of heaven. That last night that my own dear father spent on earth, when he said that Jesus will take care of us tonight," as he grew weaker, as the hours passed, there was the brightness of angels shining on his face when he turned his face to me and asked me for "a drink of water." Will I ever forget the expression? No, but when I shall, with God's help, meet him, I shall see the same sweet face made sweeter and more beautiful because he has been with Jesus. He told me the Lord had shown to him during his illness, that He would soon send a host of angels for him and take him away. I know that in those last hours, he was seeing that Heavenly company waiting to bear his soul home to God.

What happiness beyond any earthly expression! He fell smilingly to sleep and awoke in Heaven. Now he is my greatest comfort, in my lonely hours. I believe that he is near me, with his angel presence, and I am able to go on and continue my place here. I love to sit at his desk, where he read his Bible so much. I love his room where he sat with us so long, where he has prayed so often, and where his spirit hovers over me. Sometimes we will follow in his footsteps, which were always leading Heavenward, we shall join him and mother and other loved ones.

What a gracious prayer he prayed for us! And his grandchildren, not many days before he passed away. The last words some of them ever heard fall from his lips were: "Some day God grant that we may be gathered home an unbroken family in the realms of bliss."

CHILD'S HOUR

HOW JACK FOUND THE POT OF GOLD AT THE FOOT OF THE RAINBOW.

Jack and his mother lived alone in a little house on the edge of town. They were poor, so poor that sometimes Jack got so hungry he wished he was a horse and could eat grass.

He was feeling pretty much that way one day during a hard thunder storm. His mother was away cleaning house for some rich folks, so the little fellow hunted all over the kitchen for just a crust of bread. He even looked under the sink, but everything was spick span, clean, and empty.

Soon the storm was over, and Jack went out on the porch. Everything was dripping wet, so he couldn't sit down, but he stood gazing up at the sky with his hands in his pockets. The most beautiful rainbow was stretched right out there before him. One end was lost in a fluffy cloud, but the other dipped down over the hill.

"If I could just have the pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow," thought Jack, "what a wonderful supper I could have ready for mother when she comes home!"

His eyes sparkled at the thought, and his mouth turned up at the corners in the cutest way. He stood on one foot, and then on the other. Suddenly, he clapped his hands and shouted:

"I'll do it! I'll get the pot of gold for mother!"

Down the steps he dashed and out into the road. The glorious rainbow seemed to urge, "just over the hill!" That was the way to town, too, so Jack ran along the road for some distance.

He passed several houses where people were opening doors and windows, but he kept on running steadily toward the foot of the rainbow. Not far ahead of him he saw a little girl carrying bundles. She was dancing along merrily in spite of the packages, when suddenly, she slipped and fell kaplunk into a puddle of water. She cried so loud that Jack ran faster than ever to see if she were hurt.

"There, there," he said, breathlessly, as he came up to her. "I don't believe you have hurt yourself. Give me your hand, and I will help you up."

She held up 10 dirty little fingers, and Jack pulled her to her feet.

"Where do you live?" he asked, picking up the bundles.

"Just down the road," she answered, pointing in the direction from which Jack had come.

The boy looked back and saw that the end of the rainbow was lost in the cloud. But he nodded to the little girl, and turned back with her.

"Here's the house," she cried, and pushed open the gate.

They walked around to the back door, climbed the steps, and entered the kitchen.

"Why, Elizabeth Ann!" exclaimed a lovely lady. "Whatever has happened to you?"

The little girl told about falling into the puddle, and about Jack helping her. Jack had laid the bundles on the table, and was slipping out of the door, when the lady said:

"Come here son. Elizabeth Ann and I are grateful to you. We have some freshly baked cookies. Perhaps you would like some."

She disappeared into the pantry, and when she came out she handed Jack a bag full of cookies. His little heart just pounded, and his eyes sparkled.

"Oh, thank you!" he cried, and out of the kitchen he ran.

He clasped the bag tightly in one hand, and his feet seemed scarcely to touch the ground he was in such a hurry. "I shall get there yet," he said to himself. "It looks as though the pot of gold was just over the church steeple. I'll take this road to the right. It's shorter, and—"

But just around the bend stood a solemn-eyed cow. Now Jack wasn't a bit afraid of cows, but surely, this one was out of place. She was dragging a rope several feet long behind her.

"Why it's one of Deacon Jones' cows!" cried Jack. "She got out of the pasture and maybe she's lost."

He broke a switch from a bush and hustled her along with it. It was a good half mile to Deacon Jones' house, but Jack never thought of deserting the cow. When he got there, he switched her right in at the front gate, and Deacon Jones himself met him at the door.

"Well, I declare!" exclaimed the Deacon. "If it ain't Bess! I sent the hired man out an hour ago to find her."

"She was down at the turn, sir," said Jack, a little frightened. Thunder storms and cows were all right, but Jack wasn't sure about Deacons.

"Come on to the barn, son, and we'll milk her," said Mr. Jones, leading the way.

There wasn't anything to do but to obey when a big man with bushy eyebrows spoke to you, so Jack followed at his heels. He gave one last fond look at the rainbow and then disappeared into the barn.

There was something fascinating about milking, and Jack knelt at Bess' feet in admiration of the creamy spurts that flowed into the pail. Just when he was longing most to try his hand at it, Deacon Jones moved his stool out of the way, and motioned the boy to have a try. Eagerly Jack worked his fingers in imitation of Deacon Jones and finally, with some help from the Deacon, he persuaded Bessie to give up a stream of milk.

It wasn't long before Jack and the Deacon were chatting like old friends. Soon Mr. Jones knew all about the rainbow and the pot of gold. He looked searchingly at Jack, and said:

"Why, son, you can be a rainbow, and your heart can be a pot of gold."

Jack looked up quickly at the Deacon to see if he was in earnest. Then it struck him so funny that he rolled over on the barn floor with laughter.

When the hired man came in with the horse and buggy, Deacon Jones said:

"Here, Tom, drive Jack home; and Jack, here's your part of the milking." With that he poured a pitcher full of milk, and handed it to Jack.

"Thank you, thank you," called Jack from his seat in the buggy. He held the pitcher tightly in his arms lest he spill a drop.

It wasn't until he was on his own porch again that he thought of the rainbow. He looked. It was gone! But the thought that he himself might be a rainbow tickled him so that he shouted:

"Oh, mother, open the door quick!" He saw her whisk a tear from her eye with the corner of her apron.

"Mother, let the rainbow in," he said laughing.

He set the milk and the bag of cookies on the table. Then he climbed into her lap and told her about everything, the pot of gold, Elizabeth Ann, Deacon Jones, and about his heart. And his mother hugged him close as she said:

"You found the pot of gold, son, when you stopped getting and started giving. All kind acts are little rainbows. Now for a feast of cookies and milk."—Maud W. Neider Meyer in The Presbyterian.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our friends still remember us with things we need. Nothing is better for little children than milk and butter. Mrs. L. J. Fonville, of Burlington, N. C., kindly gave us a nice milk cow last week. I want to thank Mrs. Fonville very kindly for this nice present. The children will enjoy the milk.

There seems to be lots of fruit this year. Fruit is one thing the children would enjoy every day in the year. They will eat green apples and plums by the time they get half grown till they are all gone. They seem to have such a relish for fruit that they cannot wait till it gets ripe. It takes it too long and they cannot have patience. The orphanage has a young orchard that will bear in the near future, but we have no fruit this year except blackberries.

In the passed years the good women of our church have always canned much fruit for us when we had a fruit year. I wonder if they would not like to can some this year? We will gladly furnish the cans to all who will can some for us. I would suggest that if you can can some fruit for us to buy the cans at your nearest store and have the merchant to mail the bill for the cans to us, and we will gladly mail him a check. To do this will save express on the cans and will really be cheaper for us, as we can keep the cans for future use. Who will lend us a helping hand in this work of love and charity?

Resolutions of Respect

Mrs. Annie Virginia Norfleet.

When the gentle spirit of Mrs. Annie Virginia Norfleet took its flight to that land of endless day, the angles must have sung a sweet refrain, as they pushed the gate ajar and stood just outside; Another beautiful angel, I am sure stood near the front, rejoicing greatly over the coming of his beloved that they might enter together the beautiful city prepared for them by God. Surely Heaven rejoiced when these two noble hearted soldiers of the cross were united and stood before the great white throne and heard the Master say, Inasmuch as you have been faithful over a few things, I will make you ruler over many, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord.

Words are inadequate when we try to write of this dear friend, gone to her Heavenly home.

Her hearty handshake and pleasant smile won your heart and made you think that after all life was worth living.

She not only loved her own church but was ever ready to do her part wherever her lot was cast, and many have partaken of hers and her husband's great hospitality at the old Friends Church at Box Elder, Va., such a welcome as you got at their Christian home was never to be forgotten, now she is with us no more, may be said, whereas God in His wisdom saw fit to transplant this beautiful full bloom rose from earth to Heaven: Therefore be it resolved,

First: That our loss is Heaven's gain, God is great, wise and good and He never maketh a mistake.

Second: The Church now has a vacancy never to be filled, a grand character, a noble Christian, worthy of our imitation. May God help us to imitate her example, that in the end we may be able to enter the celestial city, to live with those gone before.

Third: That we offer our heartfelt sympathy to those she loved so dearly, and point them to the living God that taketh away the sins of the world.

Fourth: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy spread on the minutes of Liberty Spring Christian Church records.

Dying For Others

Dying for others is an act that many appreciate very much, thought it is an act that very few are very anxious to execute. I say that many appreciate it when it is done, regardless by whom it is done. Andrew Carnegie had that fine sense of appreciation of this act, to the extent that he has awarded many beautiful medals to individuals who have given their lives to save others. He did not give those medals to create any honor to his name but, because he knew that it is in accord with the teachings of Christ in John 15:13, that it was worth while, and he does that so the relatives may have an expression of appreciation of the heroic act of their loved one.

Then there are individuals who are willing to die and very often do die, in order to help someone in life. We believe that if any church or neighborhood ever had an evidence of this fact, Apples Chapel Church and neighborhood have in the death of Ruth, oldest daughter of J. C. and Laura Thomas Gerringer, born November 5, 1905, and fell asleep in St. Leo's Hospital, June 10, 1922, at the age of 16 years, 6 months and 5 days. She is survived by her parents, 2 sisters and 3 brothers and a great host of relatives and friends.

About 6 years ago she professed faith in Jesus Christ and united with Apple's Chapel Christian Church of which she remained a faithful and loyal member till her death.

Ruth was ill only a few days, but her suffering was inexpressable, but like a heroine she bore it well. She said at the beginning of her illness that she was going to die, but so often did she say, "I die to help someone else", and "Am going back to heaven."

It is a great mystery why God should come into a home, a neighborhood and Church and take such a sweet character, a promising life and faithful worker. But we realize that he never makes a mistake and that he has a great blessing in the death of Ruth to pour out on someone she died to help.

Ruth was a girl that filled her place in the home, community and church. she certainly was devoted to her parents and every member of the family, anxious to see her community be its best, and labored in the choir, Sunday School and church to build it up. Her work now has been finished and we feel stronger by having known her.

The funeral was conducted from Apple's Chapel by the writer assisted by a former pastor, Rev. J. F. Apple, in the presence of a host of friends, and her body laid away in the church cemetery, where her grave was covered with beautiful flowers.

May God bless the sorely bereaved and all those who mourn, and help us ways to appreciate the memory of e who died to help others.

It was an occasion very much enjoyed when on the 21st of June Deacon J. F. Coghill became host to many relatives and a few invited friends. The occasion was the celebration of the day that marked for Brother Coghill the eightieth milestone on the journey of life. It also celebrated the birthday of his companion of many years and Miss Fannie Bledsoe, a cousin of Mrs. Coghill, which occurred in May.

The more than one hundred and thirty guests included the following:

Their three sons, J. W., S. F., and J. F., Jr. two daughters, Mrs. J. W. White and Mrs. S. W. Fuller, with their respective wives and husbands; 28 grandchildren and 3 great grandchildren; Rev. and Mrs. C. W. Bates and the writer and wife. The numerous guests were served with a bountiful dinner consisting of as delicious barbecue as this scribe ever tasted, chicken, ham, cake, etc.

His three sons presented him with an outdoor "rest room", which we are sure he thoroughly enjoys these hot days. He seemed to enjoy the occasion as much as any one present, shaking hands with his friends and making them feel welcome and at home. Brother Coghill is always interested in all that he considers for the betterment of his community, but especially has he been active in church work. If we mistake not, he was the first to express the need of a church in his immediate community, and when the old church was built bearing the name "Fuller's Chapel" he was one of the most liberal donors of time, labor and money, and the same was true of him when the present comfortable house of worship was built. Of this church, he has for years been senior deacon, and has ever been respected for his devotion and zeal for the Masters cause. His advice and counsel are still sought and very much appreciated by those

Court of International Justice.—

The world is moving and possibly in some directions for the better. One of the chief signs now appearing upon the horizon of human affairs is the fact that at last the world has a Court of International Justice. It opened at the Hague June 15, and it is now undertaking to do its part in making the world come to its senses and give itself again to international righteousness. Some one has said: It is strange that the world has waited so long to apply to the affairs of nations in their dealing with each other the same legal principles which are the foundation berrock of civilization itself with in these nations. That is a singular freak in human government, but it has been true in the past, and it may be true again, but for the present, it looks as if the outlook for improvement is much better. Surely a nation so advanced in the science of human government as are the nations of Christendom to-day ought to find it possible to live with the nations of the earth on peaceable terms, and no doubt that this can be done except in instances where the leaders are anxious to provoke war for some ulterior end. In such a case, we may expect that unregenerate men will do their best to make a fuss between nations that may serve the ends and purposes of these men, but when Christ comes to reign again on this earth we will see a world so transformed as to make it possible to live in peace with all the peoples of Christendom, and let hope that at least soon after he comes even the heathen nations will come to see the righteousness of the Son of Man and be glad to abide by His principles.

The Eighteenth Amendment.—

We are now told that Secretary Weeks of the War Department of our Government is in favor of giving wines and beers to the people. And now we should like to know a little more of this Mr. Weeks. A man high up in authority and striking at the Constitution of his own country. What does that mean? We have always been taught to think of it as a criminal act, or almost so to say a word against the Constitution of the United States which is the Gibraltar of our country. Can Mr. Weeks strike at its 18th amendment and still hold the office of Secretary of War? Then why need we punish any man for striking at the fundamental principles of our Government? If Mr. Weeks can so strike, why may not any other citizen of our country do the same. It may be said, possibly, that Mr. Weeks is not striking at the 18th amendment directly but simply at some of the provisions made under the 18th amendment? Be it so, but who does not know that when we give these men the right to sell some kinds of strong drink, in spite of the Constitution, and some of its requirements, that it will be only a little while till they will pull down the whole amendment. If we give to these men who clamor for the right to destroy many men and women by selling to them poisonous liquors, we may be assured that emboldened by this concession to their demands, they will soon knock out the entire amendment and so put the United States back into the rule and ruin of liquor sellers. We hope the men of sense and Christian courage will stand against the yielding of any one point to these men to the detriment of the good of all. Let the Constitution's 18th amendment and the Volstead act stand like a stonewall against these men who are concerned not for the moral good of the people, but for the greed of their own pockets. Let the Volstead act stand and so support the Constitution.

The Waldensians Coming into their Own.—

The Waldensians, living in certain parts of Europe, have been a greatly persecuted people for perhaps a thousand years. They had their origin in the person of Peter Waldus, a rich citizen of Lyons, who from reading the Bible and certain passages from the Fathers of the Church, which so much impressed him that he was induced to have these passages translated into the native tongue. Then he determined to imitate the manner of life, as indicated in these passages, that the Apostles and primitive Christians used. Then he gave his goods to the poor and then began to preach the doctrines which he understood from the Bible was the common way in the days of early Christianity. He soon gathered about him certain followers in large numbers. They were sometimes called "the poor men of Lyons" on account of their voluntary poverty. They were called also Sabotati because they chose to wear wooden shoes or sandals. They were called Humiliatists because of their humility. As early as 1184 A.D., they had spread over Southern France and Northern Italy. This was too much for the Pope to endure and so they were excommunicated by the Pope, and from that day till this they have been a much persecuted people suffering terribly at the hands of those who ought to have been their defenders. Now it seems after about a thousand years of hardship and suffering, through which they have been true to their faith, they are coming into their own, as the papers announce that the Mayor of Venice and the Vice-Mayor of Florence, Italy, are both Waldensians. so it seems that after long waiting, they are being recognized as men of sterling character and of real worth to the State and the world. Peter Waldus must have had much truth in his teaching, or they would never have lived through the persecutions which has been theirs for nearly a thousand years. It takes character to endure what they have endured, and all the while they have stood as stalwarts for the Christian Faith.

What Bolshevism means to the Church.—

These are days in which world history is being made rapidly. Even in the short lifetime of men and women, now living, things have happened, perhaps of world importance, and yet the facts were not known to the public for years afterward, if at all. But now things are not only happening rapidly, but they become quickly known to the reading world. We are moving, but whither? World events may come to pass in a day, events, too, which had not seemingly cast their shadows before them. The daily press of June 30, brought us the news of the collapse of the Russian Orthodox Church, after it had stood the test of centuries, as the most powerful agency in the social, political and religious affairs of that great nation. It is possible that this is the first of the casualties coming to Russia as the outcome of Bolshevism. Not the first, of course since the country has been dreadfully cursed in many ways by the blighting touch of this curse to organized government. As we understand it, Bolshevism has a special aim to destroy religion, and this is perhaps the first evidence of what Bolshevism means to the Church. Of course, the Russian Orthodox Church had in its own body many weak points, but Bolshevism has shown its hand, we suspect, in the downfall of the Russian Church. It will most likely show its hand again in the downfall, not only of the Church, but of the nation itself. The Bolshevists have set themselves against the work of Christianity, as we understand it, and we suppose the downfall of the Russian Church is a part of the program of Bolshevism. At the best, the outlook of the Russian Orthodox Church is anything but promising of good. Their first step in the downfall was accomplished when the Church split to pieces, so that now, even if the church could stand, it is divided so badly that there is little hope that it can get to work together again, certainly not till something unusual takes place in the way of Revolution. One of the steps which led to this collapse was the ordering of the church treasuries of Russia to be turned over to the relief of famine sufferers. This so crippled the work of the church and introduced so much confusion in its ranks that it has been practically helpless since that event. Back of this downfall was a lack of confidence in the priests, on the part of the membership. They regarded the priests as devout in their church worship, but they are said to have destroyed their own influence over the membership by charging them for every service rendered, making them pay for marriages, births, and deaths. No wonder they had no confidence in their priests, and in such a case, it is no small wonder that the church went to pieces. God pity poor Russia, in both State and Church.

NOTES - PERSONALS

Rev. J. W. Holt is asking some pertinent questions in this issue of The Sun and his questions ought to be answered. Who can do it? Who will undertake it? Surely some one can give the information he asks for.

The Sun will be very closely read by me and I hope later on to include a subscription for every family in our church—Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va. That is the idea and that is the need of the Sun and every church.

Rev. L. W. Fogleman, Siler City, N. C., has recently been in some good work in his field, especially at Patterson's Grove. Bro. Fogleman is open to engage as pastor for the coming year. Churches may make a note of this fact.

I wish the Lord may give you all needed strength for the extra work you are carrying. I know the work is hard and would tax any man, but I feel the burden will be lessened before long for you. You must feel at home in the Editorial chair of The Sun—Rev. M. W. Butler, Muncie, Ind.

Just home from prayer service. To-night it was the ninety-first Psalm; at the last meeting it was the nineteenth Psalm. Two jewels are these and very instructive when studied together, or consecutively. Life is short and its security is certainly in God—Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va.

Dr. Harper in his Zion Letter this week is putting down some plain words for our people, preachers as well as of the laity, and we must admit that he has the right side of the question. Read and see if you do not think so. The attitude of our people as well as preachers toward our college is most important.

We are having the hot weather of the summer now, but it will not do to quit work because it is hot weather. Rather let us have united effort now to get things in good shape so that when the cooler weather comes we may be ready to do our best for building up the cause of Christ as it is represented in the Christian Church.

The new church building at Mebane's, N. C., is doing well and it is hoped that soon it may be ready for use. Rev. P. T. Klapp is pastor. He is generally known as a hard working pastor, and therefore we hope to see the church soon completed and the church at that place go on prosperously in all that is good.

Chaplain and Mrs. W. W. Elder of the U. S. Navy announce the birth of a daughter, Elizabeth Anne on June 18th, 1922. Congratulations are in order and we wish for both parents and the babe every good and perfect gift which may come to them from the hand of our Father in Heaven. How beautiful is the unfolding life of the child!

Rev. Geo. D. Eastes has a few weeks in August in which he is free to answer calls for evangelistic services with any church and pastor. He has been in some splendid work during the present year and is ready and willing to continue through these warm summer days. Bro. Eastes has done some excellent work for our people and we wish the church may keep him busy. You may address him at Virgilina, Va., in care of Rev. C. E. Newman, till Aug. 1.

The many friends of the Rev. H. Russell Clem, pastor of the First Christian Church Greensboro, N. C., will be pained to know that he is in St. Leo's hospital Greensboro for treatment for blood poison, which has recently developed in his lower limb. A recent note from Mrs. Clem says his condition is hopeful and seems to be yielding to treatment nicely. We wish for our brother early and complete healing.

Rev. W. P. Minton, our Foreign Mission Secretary, has been honored by Defiance College with the honorary title of D. D. He deserved more honor than that title can give him. Formerly it meant something more than it does in late years to wear the title, but as we see it, none of us need any such titles in doing the Lord's work. We need help from above.

Some of our younger men are taking vacations in these hot summer days, but Rev. Jas. W. Wellons, D. D., is on duty. He is serving as Chaplain of the Masonic Old Peoples Home at Greensboro, N. C., where his correspondents may address him for a month. He is there looking after the spiritual interests of these veterans. God bless his labors to the good of the inmates. We are all glad to know Dr. Wellons is able to do this good work while he is yet so near the centenary of his life.

I am enjoying the Sun fine and think your editorials are really valuable in this day of so much vain-glorious theorizing. You have had my prayers and best wishes for years already, and especially do I remember you now—Rev. Jno. G. Truitt, News Ferry, Va. There is nothing more comforting to a man standing in a hard place than the assurance of a praying constituency—praying for the man who stands in a hard place, that he may have wisdom, love and courage to do the work in hand to the glory of God and in keeping with His will.

Glad to know that you are back in the editorial chair and my earnest wish and prayers for you are that you may have the abundant blessing of the Lord, as you attempt faithfully to do the work before you—Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, Evangelist, Virgilina, Va. We thank you, Bro. Eastes for your prayers and sympathy. Perhaps the editorial responsibility is no heavier now than it has been in the past, but I feel the responsibility more than I have done in any of the previous twenty-five years in which I have served our people as editor in the South and in the North.

The work at Muncie, Ind., under the pastoral care of Rev. M. W. Butler, is moving forward most hopefully and the outlook seems fine for larger usefulness. The church has recently laid plans for improvements on their house of worship and for the pastor, a study, so that he may be more comfortable and therefore do a better work. Bro. Butler is a Southerner and loves his native land. We wish some of our churches in the South might secure his services and so bring him back to his native land, if that could be done by the inducements any of our churches could offer him.

Rev. C. E. Geringer pastor of Apples Chapel and other churches in this part of the Conference, was in Reidsville on the evening of July 9 and preached for the pastor of the Christian church, who was away on his vacation. His sermon was most favorably commented on by those who heard him. He is a promising young man and will, we believe do well, if the churches he serves will give him a loyal and sympathetic support. One good thing of his preaching is that he is not afraid to tell the truth, as he sees it. The churches ought to appreciate the courage of this young man and his loyalty to the Word of God.

President Harper is making a call for the support of our own people for Elon College, and he ought to get what he is asking for and get it promptly. Of course, if the young people of other denominations come to College, we shall be glad to have them, but the chief work of Elon is, as Dr. Harper so well says, the education of the young people of the Christian Church. Hear his plea for the hearty cooperation of the people of the Christian Church in the training of their young folks in our own colleges." We can fill our College with young people from other churches, but our Christian Church did not found Elon for such purposes. Our people have not invested hundreds of thousands of dollars here, dollars calling for real sacrifice in so many cases, with the idea of educating young people of other churches. We are therefore concentrating on our own young people. We need your help. The only hope we have of building up a strong, progressive, growing Church is to train our young people in our own College. Ample provision has been made here so far as any college can make it for any profession, as our catalogue and the achievements of our graduates prove."

I have just finished reading the copy of the Sun for July 6th, 1922. I have been reading The Sun for fifteen years, and during this time have not missed more than six or seven issues of the paper, and yet I must say that the issue of July 6th is the best I have ever seen. Surely no one will ever kick at the price of $2.00 on the paper as it is. You will get a list of good subscriptions from this end of the line soon. Hope your work goes well and that you may have many happy hours in making the Sun shine brighter—J. Vincent Knight, Raleigh, N. C. That promise of a good list of subscribers is fascinating and we shall look for its fulfilment at no distant day. The paper shall have our best, but what we need is to get our people to reading the paper. Let the subscribers, not only from Bro. Knight, but from all sections begin to pour in and we will do our best to serve every new subscriber, together with the old ones as well, to the best of our ability under such blessings as God may be pleased to pour out upon us in the work.

Lieut-Governor West, Suffolk, Va., is surely bringing some facts to light as to the growth of the Christian Church. The facts seem to be saying, What is the matter with the Christian Church that she does not grow in this day when all the denominations have been making gains, if we mistake not? That is the question which the facts seem to be calling for and the question ought to be answered. What is the trouble that the Christian Church does not grow as well as the other bodies of Christians? We are asking this question, not as a mere formality, but we wish an answer to it, and if the answer is not given by September 25, 1922, we propose to try our hand at answering. We do not claim that we shall surely be right, but we do claim that our answer will be somewhere near the point where the difficulty lies. We have been preaching in the Christian Church for forty-nine years, and editing her papers for twenty-five years, and we believe we can get close to the facts. They will not be pleasant facts, but then we think they ought to be given. Mean while, we wait to hear from other brethren as to the cause of the slow growth of the church of our choice and for which we have labored so earnestly. Let us hear from you, brethren.

Reidsville, N. C.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF DIVINE GUIDANCE.

Mystery is due to the lack of human understanding. Ignorance of divine law is responsible for very many of our failures. We have been taught from infancy up to the adult age that there is such a thing as divine guidance, or the leading of the Holy Spirit. And yet usually we fail to realize its benefits—we go out instead under the guidance of our own brain, and then we feel that the teachings we have received is wrong—that there is no divine guidance, but such a conclusion is erroneous. The trouble is, we have not grasped and conformed to the laws of God which control divine guidance. Because of this fact we walk in the dark and go into places of great danger and the result is much suffering and the loss of the things we were seeking. Then we conclude that there is nothing in the teaching given us in our childhood and we feel like giving up any attempt to live a Christian life. Have we made another mistake which brings us into greater darkness?

The trouble is, we do not understand the laws of the divine life, and because of this fact we stumble and fall, and finally we give up in despair. God has done His best (we say it reverently) to show us the plain way of the Christian's life journey, and yet we do not find it. What is the trouble? We can but give the same answer. The trouble is blindness—we can't see, and we cannot because we have not learned the way—the way of Truth and Righteousness.

There is a law of divine guidance and it is just as necessary that we understand that law, as it is to understand any other law in order to reap the benefit of it. Some years ago a power company had a great engine made in Scotland and shipped to this country to be used in turning the great floods of water at Niagara Falls into power for various manufacturing purposes. The engine was made and safely landed at Niagara, but when it was set up, it could not be made to work. They sent far and near in this country for expert machinists, but not one could make it work. Seeing not one could handle it, and so put it to work, the question was: "What can be done?" It was soon decided to cable to Scotland to have the man who made it come and put it to work. The maker of this great engine traveled from Scotland to see what was wrong with the engine he had made—crossing the ocean to do so.

When he arrived at Niagara, he went at once to the engine, and after making a hasty examination, he touched a very small spring, and at once the engine moved off beautifully. The secret was out. The man who put it up was ignorant of the Secret Spring on which the successful operation of the engine depended. Had they known of the secret spring and its function in the operation of the engine, it would not have been necessary to send to Scotland in order to put the engine to work.

It is in some such sense as this that the ignorance of the laws of divine guidance ties up our hands and leaves us helpless. In such a moment and in such a failure, we turn to our own brain for help, but it does not work. The result is the individual, thus seeking divine guidance, fails to realize it, and failing, he yields to Satan and goes without the light that has been promised him, and he forthwith counts the promises for divine guidance as all a mistake. What was his trouble? Oh, he was ignorant of the laws of divine guidance. He only needs that one who knows might come and follow the laws of divine guidance, for then results would come.

But what are the laws of divine guidance? The true life of the Christian is from God. This being true, the life of the body must be under the control of the (person's) spirit, and the spirit must be under the control of the Holy Spirit. And this brings the individual under the influence of the Indwelling Spirit and the Life of God. As we understand it, then, and only then, can we be sure of divine guidance. If we grieve the Holy Spirit, we cannot expect Him to live in our lives, nor to keep us in the way of Truth and Righteousness, and when He does not so keep us, we may be sure we shall go astray.

Certain things then must come to pass, as a primary condition of divine guidance, such as—

1. The person to be divinely guided must be sure that he has received the life of God from above—it is God's gift to the individual soul.

2. This life, given from above, must be in perfect submission to God, for then only can the life be fully dominated by the Holy Spirit." Perfect submission—all is at rest."

3. When the life is at rest in God, then the Holy Spirit can guide the life into all truth and into God-chosen ways for us. Thus as we see it, we come under the divine guidance of the Holy Spirit, and He leads us into the ways which God chooses for His own. This seems to set forth the Biblical view of divine guidance, and how the believer may get it. In so far as we have the correct view of this matter, we have the true philosophy of guidance from above. This view is not alone for the spiritual life, but also for the temporal life of the individual believer, for God is the Author of both the temporal and the Spiritual, and as such, He delights to guide us into His way.

THE EDITOR ON THE WING.

The Reidsville church gave its pastor a vacation. That pastor happens to be the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. As the vacation began at about the time "The Sun" took up its residence in Richmond, Va., I spent the first few days of my vacation in a visit to Richmond to see how our Managing Editor was getting along. Leaving Reidsville, N. C. at 12:40, A. M. on the morning of July 6, I arrived in Richmond about 9 o'clock the same morning, and went immediately to the Central Publishing Company's building, the new home of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, where I found everybody and the machinery, too moving on double quick time. You could scarcely hear any human voice, except as the voice and the ear might come near the one to the other, and even then, the hearing was not good, but it was a pleasure to see such activity as we saw there. I have been in many newspaper offices and big printing establishments, but I do not recall a single instance in which there was such a whirl of machinery as was the case in The Central Publishing House. The first floor of the big house was filled with printing presses, type and printing paraphernalia. This shows what industry and economical attention to business can do. Prof. P. J. Kernodle and his son, Jno. T. have given themselves to this business for a few years and the success they have attained is little short of wonderful.

The day on which I arrived was the day of the first issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN in its new home. I need not write of that as our readers have seen it and can judge for themselves of its merit or demerit.

After looking after the business which had taken me to Richmond, I spent the balance of the day in visiting friends in and out of the city. Dr. W. T. Walters, pastor of our Richmond church, took me in his auto to see Bro. A. E. Pierce, formerly of News Ferry, Va., who has been making his home in Richmond for several years. And at this time he was in a hospital, being very feeble, and waiting there for an operation. He was bright and cheerful. Since then he has undergone the operation and at last accounts was doing well. His brother William, who still lives at News Ferry, was in the city that day to see his brother, so I had the pleasure of meeting him again. Many of our ministers will remember both of these brothers as the sons of Bro. and Sister E. T. Pierce, whose home near News Ferry was always open to the ministers of the gospel.

In the afternoon Dr. Walters took me to the country, South of Richmond, to visit Bro. T. L. Daughtry, who by the way was a Nansemond county boy. We had a pleasant hour with him and his children. Mrs. Daughtry being absent locking after some church work.

Returning to Richmond, we spent the night with Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Crews on Chamberlaine Ave. These are old friends of forty years standing, or nearly so, they gave me a royal welcome and I had a delightful visit. The next morning I went to Petersburg and visited two of my former parishioners, when I was pastor of the Memorial Temple, Norfolk, Va., Bros. Charles and James Joyner. They are brothers and have been in business as hardware merchants in Petersburg for about twenty years. I found them prospering. Some grey hairs are creeping in as evidence of the passing of the years, but otherwise they look very natural and not so much older than when I left the Temple, 19 years ago. I had a pleasant visit with them.

Leaving Petersburg at 7:25, P. M. by the Atlantic Coast Line, I went to Wilson, N. C., to make a little visit to my daughter, Mrs. Bunn Hearn, and family. Arriving at Wilson near midnight, I went to 907 Anderson St., only to find that all were asleep, but my call soon brought me a glad welcome. Mr. Hearn was from home on business. However, I was not lonesome, as the two grandsons, Bunn Jr., and John Barrett gave me their time and love and kept me well engaged. Bunn, Jr., is now in his seventh year and is quite a big boy, but a boy all the same. John Barrett will this month complete his fourth month on his second year. They are both likely boys and so far well and strong. Bunn of course remembers me well, but John Barrett cannot so well remember me from time to time as I make my visits. When I took him into my arms, he rather shrank from being so close to a stranger. Then he looked at me closely for a moment and then smiles came into his face, and then he began to show signs of affection as if it had just come to him who was holding him. Bunn is a Hearn, taking after his father very much, while John Barrett is an Everett, taking much after his grand mother. Sunday morning a little after sunrise Mr. Hearn came, and then the family was complete. I remained with them till Monday morning when I returned to Reidsville to look after matter for the Sun before I should go on to finish my vacation. I am now at White Sulphur Springs, near Mount Airy, N. C. Next week I expect to return to Reidsville and then if the Lord will give me strength and time I expect to buckle down to hard work for the remainder of the summer..

WHEN YOU CALL A PASTOR.

There are few occasions known to the church which require more tact, good judgment with a general grasp of the situation than does the hour for calling a pastor. Some church members are over particular as to the man they get.

They want a pastor who shall be up to date in style, in dress, in manners, in the way of society, yes, that is the sort of a pastor a good many think they need, but you will rarely ever hear these same people put in any conditions for the man who is to become their pastor as to his piety, his godly life, his uprightness in all the walks of life, his loyalty to the Bible, his faithfulness to duty. These things do not appeal to many men, and for the reason perhaps that many men do not know much along the lines of that sort of life. If they can get a man who will just suit the public, regardless of whether he suits the Lord or not, why that is the man they wish.

We do not wish to be severe, but that kind of man may build up a club, but not a church. He cannot do it, and he cannot because he does not know much of Him from whom this sort of life must be drawn. If you desire that sort of a man for your pastor, well then, if the church will accept that sort of a man for pastor, why you can go ahead and get him, but you will not get a pastor, nor the man your church needs for leading in the way of life. If you wish your church to be built up and to become a real power for winning men and women and children to Christ, you will do well to go back to the beginning of your church life and find out what is the kind of man who has built up your church in the past, and then, if you really wish the church to be built up, why you will do well to think and pray much for Divine guidance in the matter of securing such a man as pastor—one who has power with God and over man, that he can lead Heavenward.

We have found in an exchange an article full of valuable suggestions, bearing on the matter of calling a pastor, and we herewith submit it to the consideration of our churches. When you go to call a pastor, be careful, be thoughtful, be prayerful, that you may get just the pastor you need. The paper from which we quote puts the matter up to the church people as follows:

"When we remember what a pastor means to the life of a church, whether temporal or spiritual, we are always more or less shocked when we follow the various steps in calling one, or the requirements laid down by those to whom the duty of recommending one has been given. The pastor has to rule, to serve, and to feed. These are the essential requirements found in the Scriptures and confirmed by the experience of the Church in all ages.

"Yet when a church seeks a pastor a committee is appointed for the purpose of recommending a suitable man. That committee is chosen on the principle that every element of the congregation must be represented, which is no doubt a wise plan.

"Such a plan is very good, but in composing such a committee men are chosen at random with regard to their spiritual insights, with the result that there are often misfits. Sometimes a man is recommended for the pastorate because he will please the young people. Sometimes because he is a good "mixer," and sometimes because he has a fine personal appearance. All of these reasons are good, but the requirement is left out—whether he is deeply spiritual, or whether he will feed the flock with right food. In these days of changing beliefs, it is very necessary to look more thoroughly into his beliefs, in order to guard against the introduction of false doctrines.

"The Lafayette Park Presbyterian Church, of St. Louis, Mo., as quoted by the Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, gave to the committee appointed to select a man to be recommended for the pastorate to recommend such men only, who will express their personal belief in these doctrines of the Word of God:

"1. The unique, inspired authority and infallibility of the entire Bible in every part as the word of God, (ii. Tim. 3: 16).

"2. The Deity of Jesus Christ, different in kind as well as in degree from any so-called 'divinity' of man, so that He is very God, (John 1: 1).

"3. The virgin birth of Jesus Christ, so that He is very man, (John 1: 14).

"4. The divine personality of the Holy Spirit, so that He is very God, (Acts 5: 3, 4).

"5. The lost estate of all men as the result of Adam's fall, (Rom. 5: 12).

"6. Salvation for men, only by faith in Jesus Christ, who by his death became man's Substitute, receiving in himself the penalty of man's sin and the necessity and holy wrath of God against sin, (Eph. 2: 8-10; i. John 1: 9).

"7. The necessity for regeneration of men unto a new and holy nature by the Holy Spirit, (John 3: 3-5).

"8. The resurrection of the body of Jesus Christ and of all men; of believers unto everlasting life with God, and of unbelievers unto everlasting destruction from the presence of God, (Rom. 1: 4; John 5: 28-29).

"9. The imminent, personal, physical, visible second coming of our Lord.

"The time has passed when a church can assume that any man who is a member of one of our Presbyteries is, by virtue of that fact sound in doctrine, because Presbyteries are notoriously careless in the reception of men. Those who are sound will welcome the most thorough investigation—while those who resent such questions can easily be spared."

WHAT IS THE HINDERING CAUSE?

Let us find it, and let us do it quickly, if possible. We mean, let us find the cause which is hindering the young men of the Church from entering the ministry. It is claimed by nearly all our leaders in quite all of the denominations that there is a sad lack of young men offering themselves for the ministry. In discussing this question, The Western Christian Advocate says:

The church is asking repeatedly to-day, Why do not young men enter the ministry in larger numbers? Many reasons have been given to explain their reluctance. There is a reason for it that is found in the very heart of the church. When water sinks in the well it is because of some drying up of hidden springs. What does the modern church lack that her young men, her flower and her promise, cannot find scope in her service for their loyalty, their enthusiasm, and their devotion? Why should there be a perceptible hesitancy in the young men upon whom the church has laid her hands in holy baptism, to give themselves to the ministry of Christ and of the church? In the past there has been that supreme and unselfish motive which has drawn them into the consecrated ministry. These motives have been abandoned in the past few years. The young men coming into the ministry have not come into close and positive personal contact with Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour as they should. They have not been brought to the place where they have abandoned themselves in utter affection and surrendered to the control of their Lord and to the ecstasies that come from an approach to the gracious beauties of his life. They have been led to respond to the appeal of the ministry as a profession and as a life investment. Some do come for a love of Christ, but the appeal given too frequently has not been based upon an affection for him that would lead them to sacrifice their lives in his behalf. Therefore we say that the two motives formerly accentuated, more than they are now, should be reinstated and given opportunity to make their appeal to young men.

First, there is the imperious motive of personal affection for Christ himself. This appeal rested upon a sense of indebtedness every young man was made to feel in Christ because he, as an individual, had come to know how powerful Christ could be in his life to save him from sin. When the fire burns low on the altar, how shall hearts be kindled unto the sacrificial flames? Apart from the love of Christ, the church itself vanishes like a fairy city and leaves only cold forms and empty sacraments and lifeless prayers. No wonder young men to whom appeals for the ministry cannot be brought in the name of a personal affection for Christ turn away and choose other occupations and avocations than that of the ministry, which is occupied only with cold forms, "empty sacraments, and lifeless prayers!"

The second motive may be said to be bound up with the first. To every man of the true apostolic succession the challenge of our Lord, "Lovest thou me?" is followed by his commandment, "Feed my lambs; shepherd my sheep." This is the appeal to personal responsibility. When a youth enters the kingdom of God by a conscious experience of Jesus Christ as his Saviour, there is laid the foundations for an appeal to his affections by the Holy Spirit to give his life in consecration to the Christian ministry. When this is not afforded, the church must resort to a makeshift and appeal to the youth to consecrate himself to the ministry as a profession and to devote his life to that as an investment out of which he may hope to receive such returns as to make it worth while and repay him for the consecration and sacrifice required.

If anyone asks why young men are not entering the ministry in sufficient numbers, he will find the answer in the above statement. Christ has no difficulty in getting young men who have come to know him as their personal Saviour to surrender themselves to his sacrificial ministry. At this point let us say and repeat it with emphasis that the one inexorable condition of successful ministry is to learn the inexpressible value and beauty of the human soul. No man can obtain this without a personal association with our Lord. Those who in every age have had the power to seek and to save that which was lost, though they differed often in method and doctrine, have been alike in this that they were all baptized in the love of souls because of a love for Jesus Christ. A ministry based upon professionalism can never attain this. A ministry based upon the conception of sacrificial service as an investment cannot attain it. Only when a man comes through indebtedness to the Christ of Calvary and through his atoning death can that mysterious, inexplicable life be led that has characterized those who have been called in the past good ministers of Jesus Christ. The Christ of the soul crisis is the dynamic of evangelism.

However, it should be emphasized that larger numbers of young men are entering the ministry to-day. The number may not be equal to what some think it should be. Nevertheless, the appeal of the ministry to desirable young men is not abating in its power and results. Those who come to know and hence to love him do not hesitate to sacrifice for him.

Well said, as far as the thought goes, but we are persuaded the most important link in the chain is lacking, and while we wish our readers to share in the ideas so well presented by The Advocate, we beg to add another, which, though hinted at, is not directly given, viz.: The spiritual impoverishment of the Church. As the Church shall increase in its spiritual life and power, it will find the number of young men giving themselves to the ministry will greatly increase. A church which is spiritually impoverished cannot bring forth men for the ministry. She has not the strength to do so—the spiritual strength. The power that shall bring young men into the ministry of the gospel, Paul presents in 2 Cor. 5:14, as follows: "For the love of Christ constraineth us."

The Church which has this constraining force in its life in a good measure will bring forth men for the ministry of the gospel.

WHAT WE TALK OF.

A person's conversation is a pretty accurate indication of the character of the person. Naturally we talk of the things we most appreciate, the things which most interest us. Then of course, our conversation is an index to our own character and life.

Here is a man who loves to talk of riches, of the things which men count as the desideratum of life. He sees the things which may make him wealthy, and then we know that his life is given up to the service of the flesh.

The man who likes to talk of this life and its possessions, of the world and its pleasures and its vanities, well to say the least we cannot feel that he is laying up his treasures in Heaven. To illustrate the idea, it is said that on one occasion the owner of slaves did. Some one asked old Uncle Ben if he thought his Master had gone to Heaven: Uncle Ben replied: Well, I do not know. I know that when he was going on a journey, he had much to say of the journey and was making great preparations before the time to start, but I never heard him say anything about going to Heaven, and I did not see him seem to be busy in making preparations for death and eternity, so I have my doubts as to whether he has gone to Heaven or not—at any rate he did not seem to be interested in the journey, or in the place of his future abode, because he not only had nothing to say concerning the one, nor did he seem to be making preparations for his future home. Uncle Ben was evidently right, for men love to talk of the things which are most on their minds and hearts.

It is a fact that man is continually making a mental photograph of his own life and character. He does this in his daily actions. Every little selfish deed in his life tells far more plainly what he is, than does what his neighbors say of him. It is also true of the man who is devoting himself to philanthropy and to good deeds. Each deed of this kind writes his name in the annals of the good and true.

So what we talk of and the deeds we do tell most plainly of the real character of the man who does the talking and performs the deeds. These are certainly related to the character of the man, and in a very real way they tell of his life as it really is. Think of it, your daily conduct—as it is even hourly making a picture of your real character and life. Then beware of what you say and of what you do, for what you say and do will not only color your life and character, but these will give the public a true estimate of you—of the man or the woman you really are.

TRAFFIC IN NARCOTICS.

We pity China in its sale of children, but here in our own country we have some most objectionable work going on. Indeed it is much worse for America than is the sale of Children in China, for the reason that in America we have the light of Christianity and what is called a high state of what is known as Christian civilization, and yet we have a class of men and women among us who are trying to debauch our people by selling a poisonous drug to people, and it is just as sure and even in a worse way to destroy its addicts, as is the selling of Children to ruin the life that now is, to say nothing of the life to come. Remember this is taking place here in the United States, and it has reached such vast proportions as to induce the House of Representatives to take action against it.

The measure is known as the Jones-Miller bill. The aim of the bill is to stop the traffic in narcotic drugs. The bill totally prohibits the importation of opium, except such amounts as may be necessary to meet the needs of the medical profession under the supervision of the Secretary of State. It is also seeking to prohibit the smuggling of this drug into our country. The penalty is imprisonment up to ten years, and in case the guilty party is an alien offender he is to be deported. It is said that the easiest victims of this awful drug are the young people from sixteen to twenty years of age. It is estimated that there are in this country now more than one million addicts.

It is said that in 1919 that 365 tons of opium and that is equal to forty tons of morphine, were shipped into the United States. It is said by those who ought to know, that the United States received 365 tons, a far larger sum than any other country in the world. China itself the biggest country in the world by population used only thirty tons of morphine, while the United States having only about one-fourth as large a population used forty tons.

Would you believe it? The effort to pass a law against the importation and sale of opium in this country has caused a big fuss in Washington on the part of big interests which wish to enrich themselves by the sale of this awful drug, but the Government is standing by their purpose to defeat these evil men, and it is supposed that the guns of the Government are well trained upon these devils in human form.

AN AWFUL AFFLICTION.

Do we not think we know something of real affliction in this country? Most likely we do, but in fact we know very little, as compared with the blighting touch sin is afflicting the people in heathen lands. If there were no other serious drawbacks in heathen lands, but physical afflictions, we should greatly prefer to take our lot and place in a Christian land. We think of the blindness, spiritually, which prevails in the lands of darkness, as the one great curse of heathenism, and it may be true that it is the great curse of those lands, but there are other curses inflicting those lands which seem to leave us out entirely, being so much greater and so much more dreadful than anything we know of in our own land.

Take the blindness which afflicts some of our people, and we think of it as awful. We have built homes and hospitals and schools for the benefit of the blind, that in part at least their afflictions should find some alleviation through the generosity of those who do see, but we know nothing of such an affliction as compared with the same affliction in the lands of heathen darkness. The heathen is not afflicted with the blindness of the soul, but his body is almost equally afflicted, and they have no one to minister to his needs, as we have them in this country.

In China it is said that there are 1,000,000 people who are now blind with hardly a chance to be ministered unto. In India we are told that there are 600,000 blind. There are, we are told, 251,000 blind in Egypt, with 98,000 in Japan and 23,000 in Korea. This gives some idea of the physical blindness which is upon the people in heathenism. And, if possible, to make the situation worse, we are told that blindness in these lands is attributed to the power and work of demons, or to the anger of their gods, because of their sins. To be blind therefore in these lands is not only to be greatly afflicted physically, but what is worse, if possible; they are regarded by their friends and neighbors as accursed, and so the people are afraid of them, so making their condition most pitiable indeed. We are told that thousands of these unfortunate people die every year of neglect, ill-treatment or starvation, and that right in the midst of their relatives and friends. If the strong ought to help the weak, as we are told in the Bible, then surely the people of civilized lands ought to give them the help they so much and so constantly need. Who is to be pitied more, these people in their blindness, or our people for their hardness of heart in not lending them a helping hand?

PROHIBITION AND SOLDIER'S BONUS.

The Literary Digest has undertaken to secure a big vote from the people of the United States on two great questions: 1. As to prohibition. 2. As to the Soldiers' Bonus. As to Prohibition they ask three questions as follows: 1. Do you favor the continuance and strict enforcement of the eighteenth amendment? 2. Do you favor a modification of the Volstead law to permit light wines and beers? 3. Do you favor a repeal of the Prohibition Amendment? On the Soldiers' Bonus, only one question is asked: Do you favor a Federal Bonus for all American Soldiers and Sailors who wore the uniform during the World War? In order to secure a full vote they give assurance that they need not sign their names to the votes they might send in. As we see it, that vote will be of little value, for no one will have to be responsible for his or her vote, and consequently you will know little more after the vote is in that you did before. It certainly will not tell the tale of the next election. It may go one way or it may go another, but this fictitious vote will not indicate the way the election is going, and therefore we see little good that can be accomplished by this great and expensive effort. As to Prohibition, we stand for making the laws even more stringent than at present. As to the old Soldiers' Bonus, well, we wish the old soldiers every blessing consistent with the welfare of our country, but we doubt that it is wise to make such a drain upon our government at a time when it seems that every one has about all he can carry. We would love to reward the old soldier for his great service to his country, but we do not see how it can be given with safety to the country financially.

I Am With You.

Our Savior did not say, "I will be with you." He said, "I am with you." He did not intend to have His friends think of Him as one who would be with them somewhere else, some time. Far from it, the sanctified experience of His fellowship is all the way, moment by moment.

We do not have to gaze into the distance to discern our Saviour nor either into the heavens, nor back to Galilee; we do not await some catastrophic thunders to have Him revealed. He is saying to each of us just now "I am with you." When we are happy we may say to Him, "thou art near." When we are tested we can say, "Thou art near." When we are sick, broken, bereaved, we can look within and find Him. His love does not weaken when He finds of what sort we are, as more and more we reveal our true selves, our pettiness, our complainings, our envies and dislikes and unbeautiful hearts.—Exchange.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THIS IS ENCOURAGING.

"Dear Dr. Atkinson: I am mailing to C. D. West, by this mail check for $3500.00. This makes $69285.00 I have paid him on the Men and Millions Fund to date.

I am also writing to Dr. Staley to make an apportionment of $10,000.00 to the different departments as I know some are needing their part.

With every good wish, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

C. D. JOHNSTON, Executive Secretary.

July 5, 1922. Elon College, N. C."

Letters continue to come in from our Captains in the local churches which tell of loyal and faithful service being rendered. We know well enough that many cannot pay their pledges now, but they will as soon as they are able. Our Captains have an opportunity to render a real service to their church and their Lord, and as they work and pray for Men and Millions they do it not unto men, but unto God. This is His work.

REVIVAL MEETING AT ROSEMONT.

We launched our evangelistic campaign on Sunday June 18th and on Wednesday the 21st. Dr. M. L. Weekley, pastor to the United Brethren Church of Mansfield, Ohio, came to our assistance and did the preaching throughout the remaining eight days of the meeting in which there were many reconsecrations, conversions and additions to the Church.

Dr. Weekley is one of the leading ministers of his denomination; a man of splendid personality; a deep student and a power in the pulpit. We shall always remember his visit with the keenest sense of appreciation.

Sam Davis was on the job every night and "tapped the ivories" as they had not been tapped in a whole year (not since the Lighbourn-Davis meeting). As usual, Sam captivated his hearers and rendered a splendid service that added much to the success of the meeting.

We were also delighted to have Dr. and Mrs. L. E. Smith as visitors during the meeting.

A GREAT REVIVAL.

The Rev. George D. Eastes and Prof. Frederick J. Balmond conducted, during the month of November, 1921, one of the greatest revival meetings in the First Methodist Church, Piedmont, W. Va., that has been held in this community in a very long time.

Thorough work of preparation had been done; the church was organized and active, ready for the campaign. Prof. Balmond captured everybody with his ability as a soloist and leader of song. Soon he had everybody singing and the people were led into sacred nearness to the great inspirer of all uplifting song. The spiritual quality of his work was always pronounced and every song service under his direction prepared the congregation for the message to follow. Then Mr. Eastes preached with a sincerity and earnestness of spirit that is bound to win. True in every utterance to the old gospel, he fearlessly exposed sin with all of its awful power to mar and destroy everything noble, good and pure, and with great tenderness of appeal offered a never-failing remedy in the saving power of the Son of God. How he plead with men until every ounce of physical strength had been used! And the response was never lacking; they yielded by twos and threes, by the dozens and scores. The "Mercy seat" was filled at nearly every service, many times twice filled and never did any leave the Altar without a personal word from Mr. Eastes about the importance of the decision and the beauty of the Christian life. Nearly four hundred people professed conversion and large numbers were consecrated to the service of the Master. More than two hundred have already united with our church besides many having joined other churches in the Tir-Towns.

Messrs. Eastes and Balmond have gone on with the earnest prayers of a quickened church and community following them—but the spirit of the revival continues with us. The minister of the First Church is glad to recommend these two splendid men of God to any minister, church, or community of churches in need of a safe and constructive evangelistic campaign.

THE 1916 CENSUS OF RELIGIOUS BODIES.

The last census of Religious Bodies was issued in 1916 and I trust that the 1926 census will show great improvement along every line for the Christian Church. The Burlington Convention should be the greatest session of the American Convention and 1922 should be the greatest year in the history of the Christian Church.

An examination of the Christian Annuals and the reports of the Federal Council of Churches having shown a decline in churches and membership, I submit a comparative summary of a few principal statistics for the Christian Church for 1906, and 1916 as taken from the census of 1916.

HOLLAND NOTES.

Sunday, July 2nd, Miss Lucy Eldridge was with us in the evening service. She delivered an interesting address on the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work in the Southern Convention.

The pastor and several of the High School boys of the church are planning to attend the Chautauqua at Elon.

Our D. V. B. S. will begin on July 17th and close July 21st. This will be a union school of Holland and Holy Neck, and Dr. W. M. Jay, pastor of the latter church, will be principal.

The Anti-Saloon League will hold a service in our church the evening of the third Sunday.

The frequent and heavy rains are retarding and in many cases destroying the crops in this section. An expression very often heard is this—"the Lord Knows best." If our farmers, who have been hard pressed these last two years can say that, then surely the churches, with their programs and plans should feel encouraged to greater faith and moved to wait upon the Lord.

SCRIBE.

WHAT WENT WITH IT?

The question of dividing the N. C. Conference as asked for by the churches of said conference: It was expected that the matter would take shape in time for the separate conference to hold separate sessions this Fall, but it seems that the wish of the churches is to be defeated by pigeon-holding the matter with a committee until too late for the matter to be arranged. A committee adverse to doing what has been asked for will not give the churches satisfaction. Let the committee act now. It will take no more time now than later on.

BY REV. J. GREGORY MANTLE, D.D.,

In The Alliance Weekly.

SUNDAY:

Evening, and morning and at noon, will I pray.—Psa. 55:17.

"Very earnestly would I advise the dedication to secret prayer of a strictly regular time, especially in the morning. The conscientious Christian, who is doing the will of God through the day, is likely to be physically tired at night in a way in which he will not be, certainly in his youth, in the morning. And our Master knows our frame. But, ah, blessed and richly fruitful is the time really devoted to adoring communion with that beloved Master before we lie down. How can I even suggest an abbreviation of it? In any case, let us be sure that nothing abbreviates it for us that is not the plain will of God. Five minutes or even less about midday, given to an act of faith, of surrender, of dedication, of prayer, of praise, may be a gift bringing a rich return of joy, strength and willingness."—Bishop of Durham.

MONDAY:

O man greatly beloved, fear not.—Dan. 10:19.

"This was the Divine character given to Daniel. It literally means, 'O man of desires!' This is a necessary element in all spiritual forces. It is one of the secrets of effectual prayer. ' whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye have received them, and ye shall have them' (Mark 11:24 R. V.). The element of strong desire gives momentum to our purposes and prayers. The races that live in tropical countries grow inert and languid through their easy surroundings. The hardy races of the north owe their aggressive qualities to the wholesome discipline of difficulties and hardships. God has often to wake us up by the presence of trying circumstances, and push us into new places of trust by forces that we must either subdue or sink beneath their power."—Dr. A. B. Simpson.

TUESDAY:

What time I am afraid I will trust in Thee— (Psa. 56:3).

It is said that engineers on the railroad dislike moonlight nights, because they are all the time fighting shadows. There is a shadow across the track just ahead; it looks like a man, or a horse or a tree; but it is not; it is only the shadow of something extending across the rails. We spend a lot of our energy—most of us do—just fighting shadows. We are prone to mistrust God, and to see great troubles rising up before us. Time after time we have come to the place, and either like the women at Christ's tomb, found the trouble removed, or have found that God has given us grace to overcome it. One trouble is scarcely passed until we are looking into the future for new ones, forgetting that we have a promise good for all days to come: "My grace is sufficient for thee."

WEDNESDAY:

For yet a little while and He that shall come will come and will not tarry.—Heb. 10:37.

I am not fallen and without strength of my own. There is no hope for me but in Him who cometh from above. In one way He has come and the work for me is finished. He comes now, to be in me, a living Presence, a power of grace to furnish the dynamic of obedience, that the full fruitage of His first coming may be mine, and that I may be constantly prepared for the coming that is yet to be. Do I really prize what he has done? Am I rejoicing in His nearness now? Can I truly say with the Apostle: "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I but Christ liveth in me; and the life I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, Who loved me, and gave Himself for me." When, some sweet happy day, He comes again for His own according to His gracious word, shall I be prepared to welcome His appearing?

O that each in the day
Of His coming may say,
"I have fought my way through,
I have finished the work Thou didst give me to do!"

THURSDAY:

When thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father Who is in secret.—(Matt. 6:6).

Is there a set hour of the day, whether it be noontime or some other time, that you strictly observe, day by day, as the hour for entering your closet in the completest sense of the words. A set time when you are closed up with God; when no eye but His sees you; when no ear but His hears you, and you pour out all your heart to Him? If you are really one of God's children, you cannot live happily one day without going thus to your Heavenly Father. Secret prayer will be as necessary to the life of your soul as your daily meals are to the life of the body. You cannot live the spiritual life without secret prayer. If you are living contentedly without it, your spiritual life is gone, and you have merely a name to live.

"My God! is any hour so sweet,
From blush of morn to evening star,
As that which calls me to Thy feet—
The hour of prayer."
"No words can tell what sweet relief
There for my every want I find,
What strength for warfare, balm or grief,
What peace of mind."

FRIDAY:

When thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father Who is in secret.—(Matt. 6:6).

A young Christian fell into great distress about not being able to pray more earnestly. He went often upon his knees, he used full petitions, he knocked loudly at heaven's door, and then went away empty and unsatisfied. "Have you followed the Master's rules?" asked an old preacher, to whom he told his trouble. The young man said he thought he had. "You enter into your closet?" "Yes." "How about shutting the door? Did you shut out all your business worries? all your plans for pleasure? all your self-esteem? Was all your earth silent before God when you sought Him in that little closet temple?" The young Christian felt in his heart that the speaker had found out the secret of his discomfort in prayer. When in your closet let your first petition be, "Now, heavenly Father, help me to shut the door." And, having shut it, watch and guard it for just as sure as you enter that closet your great enemy begins by clamor or by wiles, by force or by craft, to break down the door and put out all your devotional thoughts and feelings.

"With that deep hush subduing all,
Our words and works that drown
The tender whisper of Thy call,
As noiseless let Thy blessing fall,
As fell Thy manna down,
Drop Thy still dews of quietness
Till all our strivings cease;
Take from our souls the strain and stress,
And let our ordered lives confess
The beauty of Thy peace."

SATURDAY:

Blessed is the man that endureth temptation.— (James 1:12).

There are four things we all need to understand about temptation. First, temptation is not sin; second, temptation is not defeat; third, temptation is God's gymnasium; it is the appointed test of virtue. It was the understanding of all this that made the saintly Rutherford say: "I find it most true that the greatest temptation out of hell is to live without temptation. Faith is the better for the free air and the sharp winter storm in its face; grace withereth without adversity. The devil is but God's master fencer to teach us how to handle our weapons." Let us never despise our temptations, but put on the whole armour of God, and face them resolutely, for "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life which the Lord hath promised to them that love Him"—(James 1:12).

"Exposed to no temptation
That may our souls o'erpower,
Be thou our strong salvation
Through every fiery hour.
Ah! leave us not to venture
Within the verge of sin;
Or if the snare we enter,
Thy timely help bring in;
And if thy wisdom try us
Till pain and woe are past,
Almighty Love, stand by us,
And save from first to last!"

PREPARE YOURSELF.

Well for what? Why prepare yourself for life and service and for Eternity and Heaven.

In the olden time it was common for good men and women who were engaged in good tasks and carrying heavy burdens to prepare themselves before the Lord. These are the men and women who bless humanity in their service—they do their work well because they do prepare themselves, and not only so, but they prepare themselves before the Lord.

It is said that on one occasion a man who had visited Jerusalem was talking with Sir William Humboldt. He was telling the great scholar what he saw in Jerusalem, when to his surprise he found that Humboldt knew a great deal more about the thing he was seeking to present, than did the man who was undertaking to tell him of it. So he said: "Why, when were you in Jerusalem?" I never was there, but I expected to go sixty years ago, and I prepared myself. That is the secret in many a life—he does his part so well because he had prepared himself long ago, and so knew more about it than did he who had but recently been there.

The Rev. W. C. Hook, pastor of the Rosemont and Berea churches in Norfolk county, Va., has tendered his resignation and the same has been accepted. Bro. Hook has done a good work since he went to that field and is resigning because of his health. A specialist has informed him that he must seek a different climate, and on this account he has resigned. He is hoping to find a field in a better climate, perhaps in the West. Bro. Hook has made many friends in Norfolk County, who regret his leaving, but the necessities of health induce the people he has served so acceptably and successfully to accept the resignation. The Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch says he has served both fields well and they are reluctant to let him go. We wish for our young brother the very best blessings; our Father may have in store for him.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

July 9th was observed in Suffolk church as "College Day," and it was a good beginning. The congregation was large, the services lasted two hours, but "seemed short" as many expressed their feelings. We had invited a few Elon College folks outside of this congregation to help in the service and they did their part gladly and well.

The church choir and the Junior orchestra rendered music. The choir is an extra choir, and the Junior orchestra, under the leadership of Miss Nina Oliver is considered very fine. Dr. J. Rawles of Lakeview Hospital read the message and Commonwealth's Attorney S. E. Everett, introduced the speaker. Both of these are resident members of the church and graduates of Elon College. They are both successful men in their profession and active in church work.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of Christian Temple in Norfolk, a graduate of Elon and of Princeton, delivered the Address which was a credit to both Institutions and himself. His text was: "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Prov 22:6. It was what I might call, "A Sermonic Address," making the climax a splendid presentation of Elon College and its claims upon the church. The clearness of his argument, the rhetorical finish of his periods, and the soul of the deliverance made a fine impression. Mr. George F. Whitley of Smithfield and Commonwealth's Attorney of Isle of Wright county, and also a graduate of Elon, sang very effectively "Lest We Forget," and he and Mrs. J. C. West sang as a duet, "Sun of My Soul." George has added to his natural and trained baritone voice the art of interpretation. This is a great achievement. The solo and duet enriched the service and the thirty-one Elon students present enjoyed every note, as did, also, the great audience. Both Dr. Smith and Mr. Whitley brought their good wives with them. The day was the beginning of an annual "College Day" in this church. A goodly number of High School graduates and High School students marched into the auditorium with the Elon students and enjoyed the full exercises.

The history of Elon College is a short history, but a history in which the church should feel a loyal pride. It is one thing to be proud of an achievement; it is another thing to be loyal in such pride. It is safe to say that the graduates of Elon College are filling successfully, positions of importance just as well as graduates from other Colleges, and even Universities. There is as much of real education, and as little of tinsel, at Elon College as at any College. Elon has not had time to make a reputation upon which she can live; and she must make her way by a high class of work—and she is doing it. The General Education Boards are setting up financial standards for Colleges without authority or reason, and by so much lowering the standards of education that makes manhood and womanhood. I went to Trinity College when she did not have a hundred students, but two of her sons of that day are leading Senators of the United States today; and many others are high in professions. Elon's motto: "Christian character First and Always" will build for the Institution a reputation that will command the confidence and support of her own constituency and the respect of the great public.

ELON LETTER

"I can not send you names of young people from my field. I have not considered it my duty to secure students for the College." So once upon a time wrote a minister of the Christian Church. There are ministers that feel the same way with reference to "The Christian Sun," the Christian Orphanage, Missions, Men and Millions, Religious Education, and every other enterprise of our Church. They assume the same attitude toward schools, roads, and law enforcement in their local communities. To say the least of it, these brethren are consistent throughout and consistency is a jewel.

I am not writing this note in criticism, but as a sort of diagnosis. The brethren who thus unrelate themselves to the enterprises of the Kingdom are good friends of mine. So far as I know there is nothing personal in their lack of co-operation. They are good men, too, but they need a new vision of the vital relationships that must co-ordinate, correlate, articulate, unify the Church's work, if it is to function hopefully for the Kingdom.

When we unite to form a civil government, we do not lose liberty; we gain liberty. Some people cannot understand this. They look upon government therefore, as an infringement of their rights, as an evil, a necessary evil perhaps, but nevertheless and essentially as an evil. They cannot if they live in town sing until 3 A. M. of nights, or keep a pig to consume the waste from the kitchen. Their liberties are therefore abridged, they insist, and sometimes their sense of personal grievance becomes so accentuated that like Walt Whitman they withdraw from civilization in the frantic pursuit of their rights and their liberties. Poor, misguided individualists fitted for the hermit's life rather than the society of men!

Such citizens are particularly outraged at every increase of taxation. What they produce is theirs, they contend, and no government has a right to deprive them of enjoying what their labor or their ingenuity has yielded them. The bad government is the one that collects high taxes, they assert. The perfect government they think would collect no taxes and arrest no transgressors of its laws.

Now these men forget the incalculable gains that come through government. Suppose every man had to be his own policeman. Suppose each man had to build his own road or street. Suppose each purchaser of milk or meat had to inspect the animals that produced it. Suppose each man had to build his own sewer, water, and light lines. There are thousands of other things just as vital to efficiency and happiness of life as these, though not so obvious, which we do so readily in common, but which if we undertook privately to provide them would be impossible save for a few well-favored and fortunate individuals. We give up a mere pittance in order to secure a perfect flood of benefits through government. The real student of political history is fully aware of this benefit of co-operative civil life.

Such benefit is characteristic of all associated action whether it be civil or religious or social or industrial. One can chase a thousand, but two can put ten thousand to flight. You double your force and you increase its efficiency five-fold. This increment of co-operative effort is something many of our ministers need to know. It is one thing that retards the Kingdom's growth as it relates to them and the lives they touch.

Where are our strong, growing, progressive Churches? Is it not true that they support the College, the Orphanage, the "Sun," Missions, Religious Education, Men and Millions, and all the rest? Do their ministers send to presidents' office at Elon names of prospective students? Do they not celebrate College Day with their people? Do they not frequently illustrate their sermons by kindly reference to our educational work? Do they not in public and in private urge our people to patronize our own College? Do these ministers in thus co-operating with our College impoverish their Church or build it up? Every one who knows this Christian Church knows what answer to make to these queries.

Every pastor in the Christian Church when he rightly understands his official obligation is both a local and a general servant of the cause of Christ. The general enterprises of our Church cannot survive apart from the sustaining co-operation of the local congregations. Apart from those congregations the general enterprises have no occasion to exist at all. Our general enterprises are the creatures of our local units and are a method of making the local unit more efficient, just as the civil government makes the individual citizen more efficient.

The local units can exist without our general enterprises, but it would be a poor, halting, ineffective existence they would lead. The Primitive Baptist Church has but one enterprise—a dead-and-alive paper. Its local units are dying of self-centredness. It is with Churches as with lakes that have no outlet. They give nothing out and nothing can live in them.

When the College calls on our ministers and other leaders to report prospective students and personally to urge young people to patronize Elon, our workers should not regard this as a burden imposed from without, but as a gracious privilege inhering within the local situation and merely a suggestion as to time from the central educational station of our Zion. The local leader, ministerial or lay can have more influence in bringing our young people to our College than any one else. Failure to co-operate with the College in this matter weakens our efforts all along the line.

The Christian Church is not a series of pickets outstationed to do guard service in some 250 outposts in this glorious South of our hearts and homes, but a united army flying Immanuel's banner and engaged in a loving conquest of the social order for our King. In order to do this, experience has taught us we must insure the growth and prosperity of the local congregations by genuine co-operation in Christian Education, to say nothing of our other enterprises of a general character. Will any devoted heart of our Brotherhood refuse to help in so splendid a crusade? For one I feel sure our people will do valiant service for Elon during the next few weeks. Am I dreaming or speaking words of truth and soberness? God bless our Church and make it a blessing

A MATTER OF CONCEPTIONS.

When one speaks of Utopia, we smile. We read Isaiah's vision of the world with incredulity in our hearts, and many believe it merely because it happens to be incorporated in the canon of scripture. Yet within every human breast since time began, there has been buried deep beneath that which he was, the thing he hoped to be. A desire to leave behind him a better world than he found.

History is not alone the story of wars that have swept across the world leaving in their wake piled human forms, ravished lands, and grief immeasurable. It is the record of imperfect men striving after the perfect. Their methods were wrong, cruel methods as measured by our standards, but have we paused to think that had they not lived and striven, we would not have our exalted standards by which to measure them. The progress of the conception of peace has been slowly groping its way up, up, up from the black, abysmal depths where dwells the neolithic man, and there is yet far to go ere we attain the sunlit peaks of God.

We read of the vast conquests of mighty empire builders, and see but their own self-aggrandizement. That was there, but there was something more; beneath the gruesome exterior lay the fond hope that somehow they might achieve a united world and peace.

Alexander must have dreamed that dream, else why that marriage feast, when two mighty continents were wed? He was seeking in his imperfect way that for which mothers have prayed so long, peace. It did not occur to him that peace is a matter of conceptions, and may best be obtained by the shaping of the thoughts of men.

Caesar too dreamed of peace, and for a brief span of years he won it. He built a federation of the world, and with three hundred years to teach him, went further than Alexander. He linked his empire up with roads, improved the lands he conquered, and garrisoned them with soldiers—not with schools. He could not think that peace is a matter of conceptions, and may best be obtained by the shaping of the thoughts of men. So when a weaker than himself reigned in his stead, his empire crumbled and his peace was gone.

Elizabeth of England and Henry IV of France dreamed the dream of peace. They with centuries more of light than Alexander or Caesar, sought it not by conquests, but by treaties and the circumlocutions of diplomats. It was a step forward, but it was not enough. Peace is a matter of conceptions, and can come only as the whole, not a part of mankind, is taught aright. No potentate, howsoever powerful, can say to a people, "Peace," and make it true.

Later still came the Napoleonic wars, followed quickly by the Concert of Europe. This Concert of Europe came nearer the realization of the dreams of men than had any previous scheme, but it survived a bare fifteen years. The conceptions of men were not broadened sufficiently, the minds of men were not shaped for peace.

After every great war there has arisen a cry for peace. The experience through which we are passing today is no new experience. It is a mere repetition, perchance one level higher than the last.

But the dream of peace has received a mighty impetus from the philosophers and religionists of every land and age. They have contributed inestimably to its realization. Buddha, Mohammed, and Jesus gave themselves to the realization of the world's ideal, peace. Each sought it in his own way; Buddha, by atheism and work, Mohammed, by monotheism and wars, and Jesus by the shaping of the thoughts of men. All strove for oneness; Buddha, oneness in works; Mohammed, oneness in government; and Jesus, oneness in thought.

Peace is a matter of conceptions. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." In this hour of the surging, restless world it is our privilege and our duty rightly to shape the thoughts of men.

Men plead for peace. They are sick of blood. They are appalled by Russia's agonies. Like little children in the dark and afraid they vainly tried to reach the ideal with a league of nations at Versailles and an arms conference at Washington; but these failed of their highest aim because the thoughts of the multitude had not been rightly shaped. No matter how sincere, how earnest, how wise those who attempt it, no league of nations can be drafted, no world court instituted, no council evolve a scheme which will bless the world with peace until the thoughts of the multitude have been rightly moulded, and until the leaders have learned that secret diplomacy is poison in the veins of peace. Until the United States and Japan can discuss the affairs of China with China present, there can be no peace. Secrecy breeds distrust, and the result is hate and war.

Peace may come clad in a league of nations, a world court, or in some other fair apparel yet unthought, but these are draperies, as it were, with which the enlarged conceptions of men attire themselves. Underneath these fair adornings must lie the fundamentals of educated thought. There must be economic adjustments, and the righting of old wrongs; but this means concessions and concessions mean education. In the last analysis it goes back to the fundamental fact that peace is a matter of conceptions and may best be obtained by shaping of the thoughts of men.

The youth of the world is taught to select the wrong ideals. Hero worship is innate in every boy. The hero he chooses after whom to pattern his life affects that life permanently for good or ill. The youth of our day the world over is taught that warriors are heroes, and they choose the combative portion of their hero's life from which to copy. Alexander, Caesar, Cromwell, and Washington has each his full quota of worshippers. No matter what the cause, they sought their end by the shedding of blood, and it was wrong. So long as our young people follow in their footsteps there can be no warless world.

Robert E. Lee, the man at whom no man would dare hurl a reproach, for whom the South holds the greatest reverence, and who has his quota of faithful worshippers, chose Washington as his hero. It was Washington who shaped his thought, and it was Washington who placed him at the head of an army. No matter how dear this cause to us, the method was wrong, and Robert E. Lee's boyhood ideal was in great part responsible.

If the hero of boyhood years shaped a life so great as this, the selection of heroes by the youth of the world ought to be made a matter of grave concern. Were a boy to select as his hero one of the world's thousand benefactors, he would be laughed at by his companions and stigmatized, as "A molly-coddle, who has not yet broken away from his mother's apron strings." Such a condition of things is lamentable, and so long as it exists there can be no peace. The world must learn that "Peace hath greater tests of manhood than battle ever knew."

The longing for adventure is the salt that has saved the world from stagnation, and made for progress in all the ages. The world could not long survive the passion for adventure, but all too long this love for adventure has spent itself in alien channels. Too long has it found expression in blood-drenched fields. The teachers of the future must show the youth of the world that peace has its fields for adventure, that there are opportunities for daring feats surpassing any found in war. They must lead them into the laboratory and there let them dare and do, they must show them the adventures in the world of books, and the daring there is in lifting the world from darkness into the light.

Histories must be rewritten and the teachers of history retaught. They must see not alone the mighty conqueror in meteoric splendor, flashing across the pages of history, but they must see the weeping mothers and dying babies, victims of his glory. They must teach the achievements of peace with as great emphasis as the achievements of war. The whole system of education must be permeated with the thought of peace. Illustrations must be drawn from peace instead of war. War must be banished from the thoughts of men, but banishment is not enough. It must be supplanted by the thought of peace. The whole trend of human thought must be reversed, and naught but the educational agencies can do it.

The world is ready for the turning. Napoleon has been deposed as the most popular man of France, and Pasteur enthroned in his stead. The world calls for peace. This hour brings an opportunity never before offered to men. Shall we utilize this desire for peace? Or shall we let the impulse die and leave the world to darkness and to death? The thousands of students who in Europe are all but starving that they may know the truth, which shall they learn, love or hate? For which shall they stand, peace or war?

The peace of the world will be cared for, if we begin the educational campaign at once. There will not be another war in this generation; and in one generation marvellous changes may be wrought in the thinking of men. In 1870 the Germans were a peaceful, home-loving people sharing in the eternal hope of world brotherhood. But a generation had elapsed, when in 1914 Germany was that militaristic monster before whom earth trembled. This transformation occupied but a brief span of years. The schools, the colleges, the press, the platform lecturers, and every other educational agency had been busy shaping the thoughts of men.

Education produced a hell, it can produce a Heaven. "The mind is its own place, and in itself can make a hell of heaven, a heaven of hell." Peace is a matter of conceptions, and may best be obtained by the shaping of thoughts of men.

Slowly, falteringly the conception of peace has grown from domestic felicity, through tribal harmony into national tranquility. One other step remains. That step will substitute internationalism for nationalism, brotherhood for division, love for hate. This step must be taken as the others have been, by the shaping of the thoughts of men, for peace is a matter of conceptions, and may best be obtained by the shaping of the thoughts of men.

Prohibition Favored in Fact and Theory.

There is great ado in this country over prohibition. How many there are who desire to abolish the Prohibition law, or change it so as to be able to sell a little more than at present is allowed? We do not see upon what grounds these men build their hopes for getting the law changed or for abolishing the 18th amendment altogether. Why, it will take the votes of 36 states to abolish the law, and we do not see how the most hopeful man in this country can get up courage enough to even hope that such a thing may come to pass. One of our exchanges in referring to the present state of the public mind on this matter gives the following significant statement:

A survey recently conducted by the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, covering 158 colleges and universities, in forty different States of the Union, finds that 136 of these educational institutions, representing 142,000 students, are favorable to both the theory and fact of prohibition. Only eight, representing 16,000 students, were unfavorable; while four, representing 2,000 students, were favorable to the theory but unfavorable to present laws. Ten, representing 22,000 students, were either noncommittal or indefinite. And this showing, we take it, is another indication that our higher institutions, of learning are not altogether bad or altogether perverted in their ethical ideals.

THE SUN'S PULPIT

The Glory of the Cross in its Vicarious Suffering.

BY A. C. DIXON, D. D.

TEXT:—"When I see the blood, I will pass over you."—Exod. 12:13.

"For our Passover also hath been sacrificed, even Christ."—I Cor. 5:7, R. V.

The first thing to do is to learn just what vicarious suffering means. There are seven Scriptures to which I shall refer you. I did not select them because I have a fondness for the number seven—though that is true; it appears so often in Scripture—but after I had collated the Scriptures I was searching for, I found that I had just seven on hand.

You will find the first in Romans 5:6: "Christ died for the ungodly." The second is in Romans 5:8: "Christ died for us." The third is Romans 14:15: "Him * * for whom Christ died." The fourth is I Corinthians 8:11: "The brother for whose sake Christ died." The fifth is I. Corinthians 15:3: "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." The sixth is II. Corinthians 5:15: "He died for all." The seventh is I. Thessalonians 5:9-10: "Our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us."

There are seven things that come out of these seven verses differing slightly one from the other. In the first we have the kind of people for whom Christ died: "the ungodly." A learned commentator says that the word "ungodly" in the 1st Psalm means the abnormal, those who have been wrung out of shape by sin, made unlike God; created in His image, and now marred by iniquity. The heart of it is in the old Anglo-Saxon participle "wring." We have been wrung out of shape. That is what is the matter with every unredeemed sinner; and "Christ died for the ungodly," that He might bring them back into normal shape.

The second thing is the cause of His death: "Christ died for our sins." It was my sin that helped to nail Him to the Cross. That is one reason why I hate sin. I hate it when I see what it does.

As I walked along the Thames Embankment one afternoon, I saw upon one of the benches there a poor drunken woman asleep. I thought I could see in her face the traces of motherliness; somebody's wife, somebody's mother, perhaps, but marred and ruined by sin. As I took another look, I hated sin. And as I see what sin does for the young man, how within a few weeks it changes his countenance and wrecks his life, I hate sin. But when I remember that it was my sin that drove the nails, my sin that broke His heart, I hate it all the more. Bring your sins into the light of the Cross and it will appear very sinful indeed.

The third thing is the setting of His death: He "died for our sins according to the Scriptures." The death of Christ was no accident historically, for prophecy is just history written beforehand. This means that He died in fulfillment of the prophecies, hundreds of them pointing forward to the suffering Messiah. As we view the death of Christ in this Biblical setting, we have one of the best evidences of His Deity.

The fourth thing we have is the reach of His death. Christ "died for all," "the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." There is a sense, and a very precious sense, in which Christ died for the elect, for His own people; but there is a Biblical sense, just as true, in which Christ died for all from the birth of Abel to the trumpet of the archangel. The atonement of Jesus is sufficient for all, but efficient only for those who believe. There is enough bread in the bakery, but bread in the bakery will not satisfy your hunger; you must eat it. There is enough water in the reservoir, but water in the reservoir does not quench your thirst; you must drink it. There is salvation complete and salvation enough for every one of the millions of mankind, and yet salvation only for those who accept the Lord Jesus Christ.

I love to think of the "Whosoever," the great reach of the death of our Lord. Then, as a Christian, I put my head upon the pillow of electing grace, and say, "Hallelujah," as a foretaste of Heaven.

In the fifth place we see the individual application of the death of Christ. "Him * * for whom Christ died." "He died for all," yes, and for me, for the individual. He had you in mind when He died; and it is through this individual, personal relation that salvation comes to the soul.

Yet we have in the next place the social application of His death. He "died for us." We are saved individually, but we are saved socially as well. The Lord pity anyone who is willing just to be saved individually, just to have the hope of Heaven himself, not caring about those he meets day by day. Christ "died for us." "Our Father, which art in Heaven." When Jesus teaches the disciples to make that prayer in public, it is "our Father." When on another occasion He teaches them to make it in private He does not change it to "My Father;" it is still "Our Father." When on another occasion He teaches them to make it in private He does not change it to "My Father;" it is still "Our Father." When you go into your closet with God, it is not simply you and God, but it is the whole family and God. You are to pray for your brother and your sister, and your friend in Christ, as you pray for yourself. The social application of the death of Christ is very important.

Then, finally, comes the merit of Christ's death. "The brother for whose sake Christ died." There is a very definite meaning in the phrase "for whose sake." "He died for me;" "He died for us;" "He died for all." But there is a sense in which one can die for another and yet not die for his sake, not die for the sake of passing something on to him. You may die because you love; you may die because you want to express that love. But there is more in the death of Christ than even that. "The brother for whose sake Christ died." This death has a merit that is transferred to the sinner, the merit of the righteousness of Jesus. He took our sins, and we take His righteousness.

Out of all this there comes to me a definition of vicariousness. It is dying for the sake of others, in the place of others, not simply because of others. People suffer because of other people who do not suffer in their place, and they do not specially suffer for their sakes. It is simply because of them that they suffer.

I went into a home in Boston where there was a wayward daughter. The mother said to me, "I have not seen daughter for over six months.

I walk the streets of this city sometimes till three o'clock in the morning, hoping I may meet her! I cannot sleep, and husband cannot sleep." The girl was led astray by evil association, and the mother was suffering because of the daughter. It is possible to suffer on account of the sins of others when you cannot suffer for them, and you cannot suffer specially for their sakes, though you would be glad to do it; they will not let you. But the heart breaks, the home withers, and happiness departs because of sin that has come in with its blighting influence.

In the death of Jesus there was suffering in our stead and for our sakes. Is there any glory in that? Is there glory in suffering in the place of others? Just after the great Civil War in America, you might have seen an old farmer with a little board about three feet long and perhaps a foot wide, trudging his way for more than fifty miles to a battlefield. When he reached it and had found a certain grave, with tears in his eyes he put that rough board at the head of the grave. If you had seen that board you would have read in a very awkwardly written scroll, "He died for me." Back of all was the fact that the farmer had been conscripted to enter the army, and this young fellow, a neighbor's son, came over and offered to take his place. That farmer stayed at home and supported his wife and children, and the brave young fellow fell on the battlefield. The farmer felt that the best he could do was to make this little plain slab and with his own hands placed it on his grave. His act is worthy of a poem. I would like to carve it into marble; I would like to put it into music—gratitude to true nobility of character, as manifested in sacrificial love.

Yet I have read in infidel books that it is wrong to suffer for another. It is one of their stock arguments, that it is immoral for me to be saved by the merit of Jesus Christ, through the suffering of my Lord. I ought to suffer for myself, if I am to be ethically right. I would like to take those gentlemen to Trafalgar Square and stand in front of Chinese Gordon's monument and say, "What did you put that there for? Why did you place Gordon in bronze for the multitude to look at?" He was a man who was willing to give himself even unto death for his country. Then I would say, "Look a little higher. What did you put Nelson up there for, on the top of that shaft?" Go down to Portsmouth and look at the old ship "Victory," and when you go on the deck you will stop a moment and see the place where he fell; it is marked. We mark the spot, and put up the monument here in the center of this great city because the death of Nelson has a tinge of the Cross in it; it was the giving of himself. Whatever you may say about the horrors of war—and I will join you in it—in the midst of all the horrors there is a spirit that leads us to build a monument and commemorate the man who is willing to give himself, even to risk his life, for what he believes to be his country's good.

I am intellectually convinced that Jesus Christ is God. I believe it so firmly that I am persuaded that if any man knows the proof in favor of it and does not bow the knee to Christ, he commits sin against his reason. I believe in the Inspiration of the Bible so thoroughly that if any man knows the proof in favor of it and does not accept the Book as God's inspired Word, I believe he, too, commits sin against his reason. Clear reason will make a well-informed man an intellectual Christian, but that is a sort of Rationalism after all. By no process of reasoning, however, did the Lord win my heart. It was when I got a glimpse of the uplifted Christ, dying for me, that I surrendered; and I have not wanted to get away since. I am just willing to be a prisoner of that fascination. The death of Jesus Christ for me holds me as nothing else can. Wherever I see the least trace of it I say, "There is honor; there is glory."

I read an account of an Italian girl in a prison, cold and hungry. Some one came once a year from the Government and offered her freedom if she would just tell what she knew concerning her father. She shook her head and went back to her cell. After eight years of that experience she was found one cold morning a corpse, lying on the stone floor. When I read it, I felt like erecting a monument as high as St. Paul's Cathedral to that faithful girl, willing to keep the secret unto her own death rather than betray the one she loved.

The Lord Jesus Christ makes that appeal to us in His vicarious suffering. He died for us, and he died for our sakes. Because He died for us, we ought to love Him, and trust Him, and obey Him, and be faithful even unto death.

THE CHRISTIAN FUNDAMENTALISTS.

The Christian Fundamentalists are a group of men,—clergymen, educators, editors, and Christian lay workers and members,—representing various denominations, who are working together to stay the tide of evolutionary infidelity in church and school. They stand for "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints," as opposed to "modernism," "new theology," "higher criticism," and "liberalism."

A clear and definite idea of their platform may be gained from their "doctrinal statement," consisting of nine points of faith:

I. We believe in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as verbally inspired of God and inerrant in the original writings, and that they are of supreme and final authority in faith and life.

II. We believe in one God, eternally existing in three persons, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

III. We believe that Jesus Christ was begotten by the Holy Spirit, and born of the Virgin Mary, and is true God and true man.

IV. We believe that man was created in the image of God, that he sinned and thereby incurred not only physical death but also that spiritual death which is separation from God; and that all human beings are born with a sinful nature, and, in the case of those who reach moral responsibility, become sinners in thought, word, and deed.

V. We believe that the Lord Jesus Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures as a representative and substitutionary sacrifice; and that all that believe in Him are justified on the ground of His shed blood.

VI. We believe in the resurrection of the crucified hope of our Lord, in His ascension into heaven, and in His present life there for us as High Priest and advocate.

VII. We believe in "that blessed hope," the personal, pre-millennial and imminent return of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

VIII. We believe that all who receive by faith the Lord Jesus Christ are born again of the Holy Spirit and thereby become children of God.

IX. We believe in the bodily resurrection of the just and the unjust, the everlasting, conscious punishment of the lost.

It will be seen at once that in the main this doctrinal statement is nothing more or less than the stand that orthodox Christianity has always taken on the fundamentals.

It may be asked, why is it necessary for men of various communions to unite on this platform when the denominations of which they are members are subscribers and exponents of the same identical doctrines?

The reason for the existence of the Christian Fundamentals Movement lies in the fact that the majority of the denominational schools and many of the most influential pulpits of the land have been captured and held by men who believe and advocate the evolutionary theory as applied to religion, history, science and philosophy. Because certain denominations are so controlled by the new theology propagandists, it has become necessary for those few men who are loyal to the unadulterated gospel to join hands irrespective of denominational affiliations and seek to combat this new enemy of the religion of Jesus Christ that has arisen within the church itself.

The Fundamentalists are not aiming at the formation of a new and separate denomination, nor are they seeking to injure the denominations now existing.

The chief hold of the advocates of the new interpretation of Christianity is in the schools of the land, both state and denominational. The thousands of young men and women who are year by year going out from the educational institutions, are being taught at every turn the evolutionary idea which is a negation of the Bible and the things revealed therein.

Dr. Griffith Thomas and Dr. Trumbull, who have made a recent journey among the missions and missionaries in China, reported at the Denver Conference that a most lamentable situation exists in foreign lands. Many of the missionaries of various denominations have become enamored of the teachings of the new theology, and are in turn passing on this emasculated, Bibleless, Christless gospel, to the heathen who are yearning for the assurance and help that Christ and His Word alone can give. The Fundamentalists are doing a great work for God in the earth, and are helping to stay the tide of great apostasy and the period of almost universal infidelity and skepticism that is coming on the earth—Exchange.

POVERTY AND LIBERALITY.

On one occasion Jesus designated as the most liberal giver the poorest one in the company. Nor was it the amount she put in that called forth his expressed estimate, but the fact that she had nothing left. There was something which He placed above giving to the poor or even to a worthy cause, and that was love and devotion to Himself. He giveth much who loveth much.

There is a grace of liberality that may be exercised out of deep poverty. Paul speaks of it in writing to the Corinthians, "Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed upon the churches of Macedonia; how that in a great trial of affliction the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded to the riches of their liberality."

Here is a wonderful combination and it is evident, on the face of it, that is no man planned affair. Who would expect to find great affliction, abundance of joy, deep poverty and riches of liberality in evidence in the same people? and yet this is the finding to which our attention is called. And it is such a happy combination that Paul thinks it worth while to emphasize the importance of abounding in such a grace, "As ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also." He is here evidently talking about the grace of liberality. The Macedonian churches had this and with it abundance of joy and a willingness to go beyond their power.

They were not those who excuse themselves, saying, "we are doing the best we can." It is not our ability but God's that is to be the test of our service. Paul, speaking further to the Corinthians, said, "For God is able to make all grace abound toward you, that ye always, having all sufficiency in all things may abound to every good work." It is God's ability and our willingness. "If there be first a willing mind it is accepted, according to what a man hath and not according to what he hath not." Being willing is to give God a chance. This is further brought out in connection with the Macedonian Christians, in that they "first gave their own selves to the Lord." And here Paul seems to have found the secret of what otherwise was a marvelous thing: Riches of liberality out of deep poverty. I feel sure that it will work every time.

What objection to giving this thought more prominence in our Men and Millions movement?

HOLINESS OR HELL.

There are only two places or worlds beyond this and we are going to one or the other of these. And as to where we go, depends upon the life we have chosen. God does not want you to go to hell, neither does He send you there. Your life of sin sends you there. There are two roads, one is broad and the other straight and narrow, and we are free moral agents left to choose for ourselves the road we will take. One of these roads leads to hell and damnation, and the other to heaven and eternal happiness. These places are co-eternals, and if one of these is not real, the other is not, but if one of these is real, then the other is also. The word of eternal truth, tells us without holiness that we cannot see God. Follow peace with all men and holiness without which no man shall see the Lord. Heb. 12:14. A holy life is a life wholly given to God in love, faith and service. A holy person is one freed from sin. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. Rom. 4:22. We can see by this word, that holiness to God means a life free from sin. I believe that holiness is an absolute requirement for admittance into heaven. The soul or heart of man must be absolutely pure in the sight of God, or be denied a home in heaven. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Matt. 5:8.

We would say just here that no man can be made Holy who does not deserve it, or hunger for it. Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled. Matt. 5:6.

Some one may ask, cannot a justified Christian be saved? We answer, yes, if provided, he seeks after holiness, for we believe it will take that to keep him truly justified. Wesley said, "We must either be in possession of this high state of grace, or be pressing after it, if we would retain the favor of God, and be certain of heaven. We do not believe that a truly justified soul will be lost, but that it is God's purpose to make it pure and holy before it reaches heaven.

Now, in conclusion, we would say again, with true holiness, we have the blessed assurance of seeing God, and without we will be lost in hell.

Be Patient.

You cannot hurry if you are teaching children, especially if they be little stupid children. You must linger, and spell the word again, and be at infinite pains to make things clear. And what are we but little stupid children, spelling our way across to God's lesson-book, and needing to have it syllable by syllable if we are ever to frame it into sense.—G. H. Morrison.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION THE HOPE OF THE WORLD.

Why should any one be surprised that Germany tried to paganize the earth when the ordinary Christian home, even in America, gives thirteen-fourteenths of its time and forty-nine-fiftieths of its money to things that are not Christian?

The sincere desire of most Christian parents is to put first things first, but they find it almost impossible. Custom and fashion are largely contrary to them. They feel incompetent to teach the Bible and conduct worship in their homes. Reading, writing, arithmetic and all branches of learning are just as much neglected. If there were no public schools, children would grow up as ignorant of spelling as they are now of God. "With such unpaid teachers as it can enlist, and only one hour per week out of the 105, the child is awake, the Sunday School has wrought wonders. But its efforts must be greatly reinforced."

Herein lie the opportunity and the necessity of the Christian college.

It takes the young man and young woman, whose supreme self has been slighted at home and ignored in the public school, into an institution that is designed and operated primarily and chiefly to inculcate truth and to build up character, whose atmosphere is Christian, whose breath is prayer, whose life is faith, whose rule is love. Two years, four years, six years of such training fulfills for that soul the purpose of the Master, "I came that they may have life, and have it abundantly."

But of course the emancipation and enrichment of the individual is only the beginning of many multiplying blessings. He becomes a leader in the church, either locally or as a minister or missionary. Every Sunday School he touches becomes more efficient in its divine mission, and every home he enters is henceforth a fitter place for children to get their growth. His influence goes out to every phase of community life. With such men and women watching over the public school it can not remain a wholly secular thing. With such colleges amply supported and largely patronized, state universities and colleges on private endowments will find it impossible to ignore the things of the spirit.

Indeed, the abiding fruitage of the days when family worship was the daily rule in Christian homes and higher learning was wholly under Christian auspices, has saved our American civilization from utter ruin. The times have changed and the old order has passed, but somehow the eternal necessities must still be met. Christian education is the hope of the world, and without it there is no hope.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

I have been informed by Rev. E. M. Carter that there will be a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Bethlehem College at Noon Day Church on July 29th in connection with the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor convention of Alabama Conference.

I have been in correspondence with several young people in Georgia and Alabama with reference to coming to Elon College this fall. It is my plan now to attend this meeting of the trustees, and I shall be very glad for the young people who plan to go to college this fall to make it convenient to be present at this convention. I hope the friends of the college will urge these young people to be present that I may confer with them

Jeremiah 29:10-14; Ezra 1:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT: "We know that to them that love God all things work together for good." Romans 8:28.

LESSON TEACHINGS:

God is all-wise and loving in His guiding care of His children. Faith in Him and faithful following changes a catastrophe to a blessing, and seeming defeat to victory.

God's promises are sure: "He hath remembered his covenant forever. The word which he commanded to a thousand generations."

The character Cyrus shows, indicates a man of marvelous personality, generous and liberal. He recognized the power of God, and sought the goodwill of his people. From obscurity he arose to great prominence.

The proposal of Cyrus was twofold:—to those who were to go and to those who were to stay, and each had his part to do in the plan. Those who went were to build a house in Jerusalem to Jehovah. Those who stayed were to help and support the builders. Thus it is in our great missionary program. Some are to go, helped by those who stay at home. Both types of workers are essential to the extension of the work of the Kingdom.

God often finds leaders in unexpected places. Cyrus was an instrument in God's hand to fulfill His promise. Read Isa. 45:5. God has a plan for the lives of His children.

"I cannot drift beyond Thy love,
Beyond Thy tender care;
Where'er I stray, still from above,
Thine eye beholds me there.
I cannot drift so far away
But what Thy love divine
Upon my path, by night and day,
In mercy sweet doth shine."

LESSONS FROM GREAT HOME MISSIONARIES.
Acts 8:4-17.

"Missions is youth's vision realized—Hendrix."

Did you know that the Christian Church:

Fosters a work among the logging camps of Western Washington that is showing very great results?

Maintains a fine piece of Americanization work at Haverhill, Mass. where our home missionary, Miss Kirkendall, carries on various kinds of community work among foreign speaking people?

Has a growing work in the mountains of Virginia where teachers are daily inspiring true Americans with American and Christian ideals?

Sends Conference field men to needy churches, teaching the real functions of church membership and better organizing churches?

Helps in building and supporting many churches throughout the country?

"Never in the history of the mission work of our church has there been so much accomplished because there has never before been the support. This accomplishment, however, to be conserved must continue and must grow. We believe that growth at this time is essential, and to have it, there needs to be the corresponding development in our churches."—Home Mission Board.

A vision of the worth of men is the home missionary's inspiration.

"Is it nothing to you that the Bible stays,
A precious, but sealed up book,
And you with the light of the Father's face
Could brighten the darkest nook?"

WHY HAVE A SUNDAY SCHOOL?

Why have a Sunday School in your church? Why not just have your regular church service eight times a month or once a month, as the case may be, and then stop?

Since the men and the women are the ones, who largely run the affairs of earth, why not provide a program of service to meet their needs and let the others go? There are several reasons why.

Those adults were first children and fixed the most of their habits and largely formed their characters before attaining manhood and womanhood, and those who are young today are passing through this same process of character formation and the influence of the Sunday School is an important factor in this development.

You should have a Sunday School because it is the greatest evangelistic force in the world. Of the 800,000 members received into the churches of America, the first year it is safe to say that 65 per cent of them or approximately 10,000 every Sunday came through the Sunday School. 20,000 converts were reported in the eleven weeks evangelistic campaign conducted by Billy Sunday in Baltimore a few years ago. It was considered one of the greatest religious meetings ever held in this country, and yet, at the present rate, the Sunday Schools of America added 10,000 members to the churches in that period. If your church is interested in the salvation of souls, it cannot afford to do less than maintain the best Sunday School possible.

We should have a Sunday School because it affords us an opportunity for rendering service. Every Christian feels that he wants to do some work for the Lord. In no other field is there a more varied program of service offered than in the modern Sunday School.

Let us have a Sunday School in every church. Let us let every church member work in it.

Let us make it the best school possible.

And let us keep it open twelve months in the year.

A CALL TO SERVICE.

A Memorial Address delivered on Memorial Day at Port au Prince,

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE.

It is with deep respect and loving memory that we gather each year to show our love, honor and appreciation for the noble work which our departed comrades performed for the benefit of us and for those who come after us.

We have not met here to-day to tell the story of war, death and the freedom for which those fought whom to-day we honor. It is not for us to go into the details of their heroic deeds. It does not seem to me a fitting occasion for glorying in war. But it does seem most fitting to meet for the sacred duty of enshrining the memory of past heroes who have responded to the heavenly roll call. They have fought the good fight, often against many odds. They died and won. And more has depended upon their sacrifice than we are apt to think. I am thinking not only of the few whose bodies lie here, but as an American, I am thinking of America. If our soldiers had not saved America, America could not have been a saving element of the world. In this we honor our heroes, not for their heroism, but because they won a victory, but for the mighty principles for which they were willing to give their lives,—the principles of a free but united nation. Thus we are here not simply to recount our history, but to increase our faith in better things for the future, to strengthen our hope in greater achievements and deepen our love in humanity.

When our memorials may mean this, they will never grow out of date. The meaning embodied in the word "memorial" inspires us. It is a subject about which we may grow eloquent any time and not exaggerate, nor stray from its significance. Such words as "Commemorating," "Sacred to the memory of," "Monumental," etc., speak from the tombs of the past and grow more eloquent with the passing of the years.

It has been said that no man truly lives who does not thrust himself out into the midst of the world's affairs lending a helping hand wherever there is physical and spiritual need. Equally true is it that no memorial has served its highest ends until it has cast its shadows before and inspired its celebrants not only to pay tribute to the past, but also to thrust themselves forward in the greatest achievements possible to them. And in order to do this, we have to forget ourselves, get down to common horse sense and live to be some use to others. We may be cultured and we may have achieved much to be proud of, but unless our achievements are converted into terms of utility for betterment, for increasing life, it must come to naught. That which does not serve must fail.

We no longer tolerate him who boasts that he is a horseman when we learn that he has never saddled a horse. There is no place in our hearts for the man who boasts of battles when he never shouldered a gun. But for him who has rendered a real ministry, we have respect and esteem, whether it be in the humbler or the higher callings of life. Thank God for the day when a man who is born in a cabin, perhaps, with Godly training and with a spirit to give to the world a life of constructive service, may occupy the highest position of trust and may redound his memory into the hearts of the oncoming generation. It is in this spirit that we are spending our money, even on our unknown dead to-day, and that we gather around their tombs in profound reverence, because we feel that, though they are unknown, they have been a part of the forces that have made the world as good as it is, and in this they have served. Greatness is through service. How noble a tribute! This was our Savior's teaching when He refused to grant any one special favors in his Kingdom. Honor was to be won by service, he said. And God will cut off any man or any race which has no concern for such a ministry.

We believe a true note of this kind has been sounded within our own ranks when we are called upon to "by all proper means lying within our power to seek to develop and maintain a spirit of friendship, confidence and co-operation between the two governments and among the peoples" where we reside; when it is brought to our attention that graver responsibilities than military operations now devolve upon us; when we are asked to cultivate friendly and cordial relations and a mutual spirit of good will between the members of this command and the inhabitants of the country; when we are directed to apply these principles through the medium of kindness, fairness, honesty and generosity, so characteristic of the American people in their intercourse with those less fortunately situated than themselves. This rings true to righteousness. It challenges every thing good that is within us. It challenges most friendly confidences. It inculcates highest ideals, and it promotes human kindness. It says that there is something higher to be achieved than military force and fighting.

Is not this a divine mission? Are we not divinely called unto such tasks as this? When such ends are to be served, is it not as much a call from God as anything else? God calls men to lift as well as he may call some to the preaching of the Gospel. The man who raises corn to feed the hungry multitudes, and does his work faithfully and conscientiously, is a minister of God. The man who raises corn for "Moonshine" whiskey, or any other whiskey, seeking his own personal gain and accomplishing nothing but making men drunk and debauching their bodies and destroying their minds, cannot be a minister of God. The soldier who establishes confidences and friendly relations, righteousness and peace, and aids in general betterment, is a minister of God. He who lives to fight and destroy cannot be.

Thus the plea to give constant concern to efforts helpful to others is the call of today. The helping hand, the cheerful word, the loving heart, is the greatest benefactor the world has ever known. It is a practical form of service for the betterment of mankind; and if God has so honored the service of the past dead, by bringing out of their sacrifices better conditions for us, making possible greater achievements for humanity by us; how much more will he honor our service, not only in living worthily of the past, but also in thrusting ourselves forward into the opportunities and possibilities that may confront us. Why should we not serve? Why should we not administer the "Milk of human kindness" to those who need it? Until this question is disposed of satisfactorily, down to the last man, not only does our memorial fall short of its meaning, but the question of life itself is not answered.

But such a life is not without its price. We cannot be selfish and be a benefactor. To make benefaction the chiefest of our concern calls forth the giving—the sacrificing life. As we look back over our past history, we are convinced that the good things of this world have been made possible through those who have been willing to take up the cross and suffer and die for it. And it is to the memory of these we are now giving our thoughts, spreading our flowers, and paying our tribute. In doing so, may we face the facts and shoulder the tasks for the sake of those who are coming on. It is easy to desire to serve—to be utopian—to talk about it. It is not so easy to desire to serve through personal suffering. We are too prone to like our ease and comfort. Our Saviour had something to say about this when on one occasion, two fellows, in a burst of enthusiasm, wanted to go with him, he said, "Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of?" "The Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Those men soon learned what then they did not know, viz., that to live for the good of others meant personal sacrifice and suffering, probably death; and the service which abides throughout eternity is the ministry of a bleeding heart.

Consciously or unconsciously, every thought of our minds, every act of our bodies, and every motive of our hearts, in its last analysis, is for self, or for some one else. Which is it with us?

"An old man going a lone highway,
Came at evening cold and gray,
To a chasm, vast and deep and wide.
The old man crossed in the twilight dim;
The sullen stream had no fears for him.
But he turned, when safe on the other side,
And built a bridge to span the tide.

"'Old man,' said a fellow pilgrim near,
'You're wasting your strength in building here;
Your journey will end with the ending day,
You never again will pass this way.
You've crossed this chasm, deep and wide;
Why build you this bridge at the evening tide?'"

"The builder lifted his old gray head;
'Good friend, in the path I came,' he said,
'There followed after me today
A youth whose feet must pass this way.
This chasm which has been as naught to me
To that fair-haired youth may a pitfall be.
He, too, must cross in the twilight dim;
Good friend, I'm building this bridge for him.'"

THE LEADERSHIP OF CHRIST.

Love for man,
Earnestness of effort in doing good,
Anxiety for the soul of man,
Daring to do the will of the Father,
Endurance, both physical and mental,
Righteousness of purpose,
Seriousness in every task,
Humbleness of heart,
Initiative to put across His program,
Purpose to exemplify a wholesome, upright life.

Christ had all of these, as we find manifested through all His works.

I sometimes think that we exercise our thought and meditation too much upon the teaching power of Christ without proper regard for Him as a leader. He was a great doer. His life was a continuous effort to do, and where it was necessary to speak before doing He never hesitated to blaze the way.

Christ was a wonderful business man in endeavoring to accomplish His purpose. He made His plan, then worked it. Working it was the doing. The doing, in every instance, was a distinct mark of great LEADERSHIP.

To be a good church member, a good Sunday school teacher, superintendent, a successful business man, or whatever else that requires leadership, we need the enriched qualities of the Christ-like life.

Two view points observable: the pulpit or preacher, and the pew or congregation. The preacher studies little and preaches poor sermons; the congregation gives little attention and poor pay. Each gets value received no doubt.

Think and pray over the matter. Let the congregation reach deep down into their pockets, and make the preacher comfortable. Let both discharge their obligations and be built up in good works.

CHILD'S HOUR

AUNT CLARA'S BIRD GAME

"Aunt Clara," said Jamie, a bit woefully, do you know of anything that I can do? It is rainy, and I have played with all my things, and now there is nothing at all to do."

"Well, well, that's sad," replied Aunt Clara, with a smile. "Nothing to do and it is so rainy that you cannot go out and play. Then perhaps you can help me a bit."

"Oh, Aunt Clara," exclaimed Jamie, his face brightening with Aunt Clara's smile, "what can I do to help?"

"What bird is best suited to watch Uncle John's cattle?"

Jamie was puzzled. Then he thought for a moment and replied, "I do not know, Aunt Clara. I did not know that birds watched cattle."

"This is just a little pasttime," answered Aunt Clara. "You think of all the birds' names and then see if you can answer that question."

Again Jamie put on his thinking cap, and finally said with a grin, "A cowbird might do."

"Good boy Jamie. That is just the one I had in mind."

"What about the ox-eye?" came a voice from the doorway, and Aunt Clara and Jamie turned to see Uncle John standing there. "That is what the gunners call the sandpiper. May I ask one question?"

"Yes, please do!" exclaimed Jamie.

"Well, if I went out into the woods to get something to mend the pasture fence, what kind of a bird would I bring back with me?"

"A rail," came the quick reply from Jamie, and then he asked, "What would Aunt Clara wish on baking day?"

Aunt Clara was puzzled for a moment, and Uncle John laughed and then exclaimed, "What is necessary for a good successful baking?"

"Oh, an oven-bird," Aunt Clara said. "Now it is my turn. What bird would be represented by a happy cook?"

"Humming bird," said Uncle John, as he turned to go back to his work. "And now I guess I'll go and take a bird with me to get the mice that are bothering around my grain chest."

"Good! Take the cat-bird right along with you. She is so well fed here in the house that a mouse would walk right in front of her and she would not notice it." Aunt Clara then turned to Jamie and continued, "What bird is best suited to Thanksgiving and Christmas, other than turkey?"

Again Jamie thought hard, and Aunt Clara had to help him a little, but finally he exclaimed, "Oh, the nut hatch!"

"Aunt Clara, I have one that is so hard I do not think you can guess it at all. What bird would be a help in trying to make a flag for winter sliding?"

Aunt Clara thought and thought, but she could not guess it at all.

"Why," she said, "I cannot even think of a bird that would help make a flag. What is it?"

"A snow bunting!" And Jamie grinned from ear to ear.

"Well I am a dunce! That is a good one. Now guess my next one. What bird is unpopular in Europe just now?"

"That's easy. It is the Kingbird! Try me with another one of your hard ones!"

"Oh, all right, guess this one, then. What bird does a Chinaman like at many meal times?"

"The rice-bird," answered Jamie so quickly that Aunt Clara laughed and said, "Well, it is hard to catch you with your thinking cap off, isn't it?"

"What bird would you ask to help you when you are doing up preserves?" asked Jamie.

"Jar, kettle, spoon,—a spoonbill might do, but that is not the one you were thinking about, is it?" asked Aunt Clara, and as Jamie shook his head, she continued, "hot water, steam, fire — I do not know; what is it?"

"The wax-wing," answered Jamie, "You know you are always fussy to get good wax to seal your jars with after you put jelly in them. Now tell me what bird do you wear when you are sweeping?"

"Black-cap," was Aunt Clara's prompt reply. "Isn't this fun!" exclaimed Jamie. "I did not think there were so many queer names. Let's look through some of your bird books, and see if we can find a lot more."

So Aunt Clara got out her book of water birds, and she and Jamie found a lot more. Here are some of them:

- Best for chowder — clam-bird.
- For the church organ — the reed-bird.
- For helping to make a stew — the oyster-catcher.
- For the mason — the plaster-bill.
- That all monkeys have — long tail.
- For Uncle John when he shaves — the razor bill.
- For the mint when short of pennies — copper-bill.
- For the person who laughs quietly — chuckle-head.
- Found on the bottom of a ship — barnacle-goose.
- For the east shore of Mexico — gulf-bird.
- For the man who wears an extra large hat—great-head.

And as they talked about these birds' names, a voice came in from the other room, "Well, if you folks do not get through with that game before a great while, I shall not have a great stomach left—none at all, by the way it feels now."

And Aunt Clara and Jamie found that the time had passed so swiftly that it was past time to get supper ready.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:—

Our financial report this week pushes us across the $10,000.00 mark for this year. It has been hard climbing for the past month, but we rejoice that we have passed this mark for this year. We hope when we get every Sunday School to make a monthly offering that we will run our total up more rapidly. We have had ten applications in the last ten days, one per day. We have decided to take six out of the ten and trust to the Lord to touch the hearts of our people that they may, out of their abundance, contribute enough to make possible for us to take care of them.

Mrs. Walter Harden of Graham and her Sunday School class had a little class basket picnic here last week and invited as many girls from the Orphanage as there was in the class to picnic with them, and they had a real enjoyable time and the little Orphanage girls were happy indeed to have the opportunity of entertaining them and enjoying the good dinner and lemonade.

The Ladies Bible Class from the Haw River Sunday School paid us a visit Saturday July 8th, and surprised the children by treating them to ice cream. It is always a joy for the children to be treated to ice cream, for every child in the Institution likes it. It was impossible for the superintendent to be here at the time, but the children reported a good time and all want to extend their heartfelt thanks to the good Ladies of Haw River Christian Sunday School for this much enjoyed surprise and treat. We always enjoy having picnics here and hope our friends will use our grounds any time they want to have a picnic.

Don't forget to can some fruit for us. We will need it next winter. The good women in our church have always come to our rescue and we know they will help us out in this line.

ELON COLLEGE DAY

The 4th Sunday in June was Elon College Day with the First Christian Church in Portsmouth. The outlined program was carried out almost in every detail, and it proved to be a day really worth while.

It brought to our people facts that they never knew about our beloved Elon. Lieutenant-Governor West was with us and delivered the principal address, which was inspiring and full of interest. His theme was "Religious Education".

It was a masterpiece and it was enjoyed by all who heard him. Lieutenant-Governor West is what I consider a christian politician. He puts his church and God first. Our country is in great need of more such men.—W. L. WELLS

SALEM CHAPEL REPAIRS

Salem chapel has just finished an extensive program of repair work on the church. They have re-covered the church, repainted it, and replaced the old windows with new. Besides this they have built cement steps at the front after remodeling the entrance.

The people are awake to the needs of their church, and with the new work on the church the congregation have significantly increased.

The work which they have so far done is already paid for, and cost above six hundred dollars. They do not intend to stop with this but are hoping to install a piano by the first of August, and later to reseat the church with the very best modern seats to be had. All this means a growth of the church, and we may expect greater things of the chapel in the interest of the Kingdom.—SION M. LYNAM.

ANTIOCH WOMEN AT WORK

The women of Antioch, Chatham County, are busy at work. The movement is a result of a workers' council organized there nearly a year ago. They have at present a thriving band of workers and hold meetings in the various homes of the community. They have given a bell to the church and are now working to raise funds sufficiently large to do some repair work on the church.

The work of these women is enlisting a greater interest in the church in every line of endeavor. With the material additions to the church there has come a correspondingly large spiritual awakening. We believe that this awakening will be manifest in the coming revival in August.—SION M. LYNAM.

MARRIED

William Andrew Hughes and Mrs. Elizabeth M. Fitch were united in wedlock at the home of Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, N. C., July 5, 1922, Rev. J. W. Holt performing the marriage ceremony.—J. W. HOLT.

Miss Lucy Wagoner became the bride of Mr. Ernest G. Somers at the home of Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, N. C., on the morning of July 6, 1922. They left on the 11:18 train for Asheville, N. C., and other points in Western, N. C., to return in a few days and will reside near Ossipee Mills in Alamance County, N. C. Marriage ceremony by Rev. J. W. Holt.—J. W. HOLT.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT
GERRINGER

Inasmuch as God has seen fit in his wise providence to remove from our midst in Sunday School and Church Services Miss Ruth Gerringer, and though we keenly feel our loss in this death of a very sweet character, an efficient worker and a christian girl of a very high type, we humbly submit to His will, for we have a clear hope of a meeting in the great beyond, and offer the following resolutions:

First. That in the death of Miss Gerringer, her church (Apple's Chapel) and Sunday School has lost one of its valuable and efficient members and workers.

Second. That her place in our midst and in the work will be vacant, but her death may prove a blessing to God's Kingdom.

Third. That in this sad and trying hour we extend to the family our heartfelt sympathy and prayers, and ask God to bind up their broken hearts and help them to be humbly submissive to His will.

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be spread upon the Minutes of the church records.

MRS. D. E. MICHAEL,
MRS. R. E. APPLE,
MISS GRACE KERNODLE,
COMMITTEE.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT
PIERCE

On June 20, 1922, God in His infinite wisdom saw fit to remove one of our beloved members, Mrs. W. C. Pierce.

She was a devoted mother, a kind neighbor, and a loyal member of Damascus Christian Church and of the Woman's Missionary Society, and attended these services as long as health permitted.

Therefore, we the members of the Missionary Society have drawn up the following resolutions:

First. That we the Society realizes the loss of a loyal member.

Second. That our deepest sympathy is extended to her family.

Third. That we hereby give expression to our feeling of sorrow and appreciation of her life.

Fourth. That these resolutions be recorded in the minutes of the Missionary Society and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication".

MRS. E. S. PIERCE,
MRS. J. E. CORBITT,
MRS. R. L. CORBITT,
COMMITTEE.

GOD'S LOVE.

God comes to meet us in every opportunity of service. The man who woke his neighbor in the middle of the night to ask for help in hospitality came as a divine summons to the sleeping friend. We need to have a share in good-will for all and help so far as our means will allow. God's love is our warrant in loving and helping men. And when we love others God Himself will be our guide.—Rankin.

THE UNFAILING ONE.

He who hath led, will lead
All through the wilderness;
He who hath fed, will feed;
He who hath blessed, will bless.
He who hath heard thy cry,
Will never close His ear;
He who hath marked thy faintest sigh,
Will not forget thy tear.
He loveth always, faileth never,
So rest on Him to-day, forever.

Then trust Him for to-day,
As thine unfailing friend,
And let Him lead all the way.
Who loveth to the end.
And let the morrow rest
In His beloved hand,
His good is better than our best,
And we shall understand—
If, trusting Him who faileth never,
We rest on Him to-day, forever.

MEREDITH—HEDGEPEETH

In the presence of many friends who had gathered in the chapel of the new school building on the top of Elk Spur Mountain, on the evening of the 24th of June, 1922, Mr. Russell Meredith and Miss Lola Hedgepeth were united in holy matrimony.

The groom was accompanied to the marriage altar by Mr. Clyde Meredith, his brother; the bride by her sister, Miss Janet Hedgepeth, the wedding march being played by Miss Kate Wheeler of Elon College, N. C.

In the glow of the lighted candles from the arch above the happy couple took the vow which united them as one.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Morrell of the M. E. Church, Hillsville, Va.

The auditorium was tastefully decorated with rhododendron, mountain ivy, and ox-eye daisies.

The loving thoughtfulness of the bride for those who had been her pupils was manifested in that front seats had been reserved for them, and from their number she found ribbon and flower girls for this important event.

It will be of interest to those who are interested in our mountain work to know that the step that has been taken is not separating Mrs. Meredith from the work in which she has been engaged and from the people whom she has so nobly served, but that with a companion who is as much interested as she, the work will be strengthened.—ADA A. TEAGUE.

BAKER—NEWMAN

A beautiful marriage was solemnized in Elon College chapel on the 29th, inst., when Blanche Long Newman became the bride of Wilbur Hillary Baker. The chapel was artistically decorated in white and pine. Prior to the ceremony Mrs. William Huff of Burlington, N. C., sang "O Promise Me" and "The Dawning". Starvation in Europe and the Near East.—

We have heard much of starvation in Europe and the Near East, and we hoped that the worst of the famine conditions were over. But it seems it is not so. Mr. L. L. Gravely of the Eastern part of North Carolina, has recently made a trip through Europe, and on his return, in referring to the famine conditions as he found them in Austria, he declares after visiting in England, Germany, France, Italy, Switzerland and Austria that Austria is by far in worse condition than any of the other countries he visited, with the chances for still worse conditions unless outside help can be given to Austria. Surely the curse of the war has been visited upon Europe and some of the Eastern countries. If nothing now could be seen on the horizon but the famine conditions, it would seem quite enough to warn the countries of the earth against more war. And yet the warning of famine is not enough to put an end to war. The reason is not that the common people are in favor of war, not at all, but monied men who see a chance to heap up great fortunes are in favor of war as a means of enriching themselves, no matter who else may suffer. Alas for the avarice of fallen human nature.

A Crisis in Human Affairs.—

"Stirred up" well represents the present condition, not only of our country, but of the civilized world. There is scarcely a country which is in a normal condition. Many believe that we are approaching some great change in the world's history—some crisis in human affairs. No doubt this is most likely true, but the world is not ready to receive the change, and it does not seem disposed to get ready, for the nearer we come to the day of such a change, the less we are prepared to meet it, nor does it seem that there is such a disposition on the part of the leaders or the masses of the people. What is the cause? We do not know, but we do know what may be the cause. The people in the mad rush for wealth, pleasure and fame seem in some large measure to have forgotten God, and are in a large measure counting and depending on themselves—having forgotten God, they are afraid of every one but themselves, and like the old Quaker, they are almost afraid of themselves. And the end is not yet. Is it not a fact that these unsettled times have always been the forerunner of a decline in national glory? Surely a Christian ought to not go in any such way—they ought to know and do better.

Christians who Doubt Inspiration.—

One of the most devoted men of modern times, devoted we mean to the cause of Christ, was Hudson Taylor, the great missionary to China. He gave the world many good and precious messages, but one of the best short messages he gave, so far as we now recall, was this: "It is most important that we bear in mind that as the Incarnate Word is a Divine Person, so the written Word is a divine Message: and as we may rest all of our soul's interests on Jesus Christ, so may we rest all of our soul's weight on the Word of God. To be unsettled on the question of inspiration is to be overcome by temptation, and to be unable to accomplish God's work. The connection between full faith in God's will, as revealed in His written Word and the Incarnate Word is so close and intimate, that you can no more separate them than you can separate between body and soul, or between soul and spirit" Let us study that message carefully and thoughtfully. One of the most dangerous works the devil has wrought, was wrought when he induced some professing Christians to doubt the inspiration of the Scriptures, not dangerous to the Word, for that Jesus said will stand forever, but doubting the inspiration of the Scriptures is awfully dangerous to the soul's of men and women who may be led off into any such form of unbelief—for that is what it is, unbelief pure and simple.

Bible Teaching on Death Penalty.—

On what grounds shall it be made possible? We mean on what grounds can it be made possible to have the law for death penalty abolished? Why each state has the right to abolish any such law. Yes, I see, but what about the higher laws—the Bible law. The Bible declares that the man who sheds the blood of his fellow-man his blood shall be shed: Beyond all doubt the Lord had a good reason for making this law for the protection of human society. There are a few men who like to do what they please, regardless of Bible teaching, as for instance a majority of the men in certain states have voted to abolish the death penalty. Well, now we are sorry to see or to know that any man has been, or is announced by competent authority, to be put to death, but is it wrong to visit upon a cold blooded murderer the death penalty. He took matters in his own hands and inflicted death upon his fellow being. We are told by some writer that Portugal has abolished the death penalty. It did it in 1846; Holland did the same in 1870; Italy in 1876; Norway in 1902; Russia in 1907, besides various other states. We are told that six states in this Union have no capital punishment. These are Michigan, Wisconsin; Maine; Minnesota; and South Dakota. Kansas has not had the law since 1872; North Dakota and Rhode Island almost never have an execution, we are told. Well, now if the writer meant to be fair, why did he not tell us how many of the States which once had the law, have felt constrained to reenact the law? We believe the writer himself will have to admit that he ought to be fair enough to give the facts on both sides.

The Attitude of convicts toward Alcohol.—

"Several weeks ago, a United States Senator of a reflective turn of mind asked himself whether it would not be practicable to find out how the victims of the liquor traffic—men who had fallen in the great battle of life, and who had yielded to crime and are now suffering the consequences of their criminal acts—feel on the question of "Wet" or "Dry." Would these men, looking back over years of dissipation and lawlessness, recognize that drink had been their chief cause of their downfall in almost every instance. Would they be sane enough and frank enough to say so, and to admit that, but for the drink and its breaking down moral standards, they might have been today decent and respectable citizens, instead of inmates of prison cells."

"This Senator thought out the problem carefully and decided to take a chance. There is some element of good in every man, he reflected, even in a convict. He had become satiated with the discussion over "wet" and "dry" in the newspapers, the clubs and legislative circles. What he wished to know definitely was: Is the drink evil of such magnitude that even its victims cry out for its destruction?

"He submitted the problem to the Prisoners' Relief Society of Washington, and found that organization ready to give hearty cooperation. Arrangements were quickly made, and with the consent of the prison authorities, a vote was taken on "Wet" or "Dry" among the inmates of 322 American prisons. In all, 134,413 ballots were cast, of which 909 were "Wet" and 133,413 "Dry." It was the only instance on record of a vote being taken within prison walls and among the convict inmates. It was a revelation of the prisoners' attitude in their sober and reflective moments, toward the vile traffic that had contributed more largely to their downfall than all other causes combined.

"It is estimated that there are some 3,000,000 convicts in the United States. The test vote was indicative of what the vote of our whole convict population would have shown—95 per cent. would in all probability be "Dry." Many of the prisoners who voted for "Dry" declared that had it not been for intoxicants and their evil effects on the human family, there would be few prisoners and little need of jails, reformatories, and houses of correction. Assuming that no undue influence was used, the vote must be interpreted as showing that an overwhelming majority of these unfortunates attribute their downfall to alcohol and its associations, and emphasizes their conviction that a drinker has "no chance" and easily gravitates to a criminal life.

NOTES - PERSONALS

Rev. J. F. Morgan, formerly of Berkley, Va., but now pastor of our Winchester church (Virginia) is making a good start in his new field.

Rev. B. F. Black, Wolfeboro, N. H., is having a fine time in his pastorate. It is a very busy time, but that is the best of the good times, when we are doing the Lord's work. See in this issue a fine report from him.

In this issue is a message concerning the progress of our colored brethren. It is really gratifying to witness their strides forward in the Lord's Work. See report elsewhere in this issue. Rev. S. A. Howell, D. D., is their leader and he is doing a really remarkable work.

The program of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention failed to reach the office in time for insertion in last week's "SUN". And its publication in this week's paper would be of no real service. We shall be glad to have a report of the convention for a future issue.

Owing to delay in the mail doubtless, notes and personals are wanting this week. This form has been held to the last moment and a little too long. We had not counted on this failure of copy. It will cause us to be better prepared for emergencies.

Mr and Mrs. Melza Saunders with their two sons of Durham, N. C., spent several hours in Richmond this week as welcome guests of the Managing Editor of this paper. They were en route to their home after visiting relatives in Eastern Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Saunders are active workers in the Durham Christian Church and reported the work there in a prosperous condition with a very bright future.

The South Norfolk Christian Church is building, or preparing to build, a handsome new church house. The drawing shows a beautiful building, and we long to see it completed that Rev. O. D. Poythrees and his people may be comfortably worshipping in it. It will certainly be a credit to our people in South Norfolk. Bro. Poythrees has done a wonderful work and he should have not only the appreciation of our people, but their hearty cooperation. He seems to be an untiring worker and the best of it is he accomplishes the thing he undertakes with the blessings of God resting upon him.

Rev. W. W. Staley, D.D., has tendered his resignation as pastor of the Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., after forty years of service, and has been elected as pastor emeritus for life at a salary of $2500.00 a year. Evidently the Suffolk church does not believe in turning an old horse to die on the grass which charity might offer and they have shown it in terms unmistakable in their action toward their pastor. But Dr. Staley has given them the best of a long life of most useful service, and the church fully appreciates this fact. He no doubt also deserves the liberality of the church to which he has given a long life in faithful service. We think that both Dr. Staley and the Suffolk Christian church are to be congratulated in this happy ending of a long pastorate.

All of our Sunday School workers will be interested in the article "Four Epochs of Sunday School History" which begins in this issue of the "Sun." The author, Dr. Minor C. Miller, of Bridgewater, Virginia, has made a thorough study of the problems facing the church along the line of religious education, and is now Director of the Bridgewater School of Religious Education. We are grateful to Dr. Miller for this article, which was prepared for an address at the Virginia State Sunday School Convention at Charlottesville last spring, and which made such an impression upon that body that there was an unanimous vote to have it published.

MAKING A NAME.

Whether you realize it or not your name stands for something which always comes to the minds of others, whenever your name is mentioned. Day by day some trait of character, either good or bad is being developed which adds something to the name your parents gave you. Day by day some work of the flesh, or some fruit of the Spirit is placing its mark upon you so plainly that others think of it as a part of yourself every time they hear your name.

Judas Iscariot by one act added to his name a title which has always stamped him with evil, although he had been a very good imitator of the true follower of the Lord. When we read of him in God's Word we always see following his name, "who also betrayed Him." Every professed follower of Jesus Christ who gives short weights or measures over the counter, or elsewhere, all who deal unjustly or overreach in any way because of the love of money are just as guilty of selling the Lord as was Judas, for all sin is against the Lord. When we think of Pilate we think of him as a weakling, a coward, as the man who played for popularity, who sold the Lord for popularity. He was not the last of his class by any means. Every true Christian has only contempt for him and all his class.

Jereboam "who made Israel to sin," never lost that title. It has always followed his name ever since he schemed to hold a following by inducing the people to worship false gods.

We are also told he "made them to sin a great sin" and that they "departed not from their sin." Woe unto that man or woman who causes another to sin. Woe unto that church official, that Sunday School teacher, or superintendent, or the least one of His professed followers, who by example or influence leads others into the present day evils and vices.

The name of Ahab always brings to mind the King of Israel who "did more to provoke the Lord God of Israel to anger than all the Kings of Israel before him." We think of him as the one who did sell himself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord." Sometimes in this day and age of the world, we hear men praised for their shrewd dealing and sharp schemes they have been able to put through. The Word teaches us, however, that they have only "sold themselves to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord," and that they have sinned greatly. Be careful, for God changes not, and He hates sin just as much today as He ever did, be it ever so carefully hidden from men's eyes, or ever so cleverly put through.

On the other hand are many who by their faith and obedience are known as "heroes of faith." At the mention of their names we think trust, faithfulness, obedience. As you lay your life bare before God today, what does your name stand for? Is there any reason why those who are acquainted with you should connect scheming, deceit, lying, worldliness, any crime or vice with your name? Or, do they see in you one who deals justly, one who fears God rather than man, one who is laying aside every weight and sin, one whose walk bears testimony that you are a true child of God? The sons and daughters of God not only have the witness that they are the children of God, but their conduct bears witness to that fact before the world. The world knows the true child of God, walks and talks and acts differently from the people of the world.

Search us, oh Lord, and see if there be any wicked way in us. If we are betraying Thee in any way, if we are making others to sin, if we are selling Thee for popularity or money, if we are selling ourselves, in any way, to work wickedness in Thy sight, root out the evil thou dost find in us. Open our blinded eyes that we may see wherein we are coming until we shall be found worthy to walk with Thee in white and to have Thy name written upon us.

A PRAYER MEETING TURNED OUT TO BE A FEAST.

This may not sound well in the start, but it worked very nice for a pastor, his wife, and children. On Sunday July 9th, it was announced at church that the members would hold a prayer service at the house of the pastor on the following Thursday night July 12th. This was a great pleasure to the pastor as he is a great lover of prayer meetings and especially to have the members of his congregation to meet with him, and family, for this purpose. But Thursday night being a very stormy night no one came. Well we felt that it was all over for the time being, at the least, but decided then to give them an invitation for the following Thursday night. I was called away from my study early Friday morning to the bedside of a very sick child. And on my return I found in front of my door, Bro. J. W. Wilson's Ford with two young men in it, Charles Wilson, and Earl Felton. It appeared to me that there were more people in the house than usual. So I entered and went direct to the dining room. There I found Sister J. W. Wilson, and Sister C. H. Coles, and more than this the dining table, was filled with good things, and many on the floor, such as flour, meal, bacon, cheese, eggs, butter, lard, sugar, coffee, cakes, soap, washing powders, vinegar, corn, beans, cabbage, potatoes, syrup, and several other things not here mentioned. Now none of you but a pastor and his family know how this is appreciated, and as words are not sufficient to express our gratitude to the people in a time like that, we can only pray God's blessings on them and resolve we will be better servants of God and for the people. I still think we will have the prayer meeting later. May God's richest blessings rest on each member, both in a temporal and a spiritual way. And may God help me to be a better pastor during my short stay here.

PORTSMOUTH NOTES.

Wednesday July, 12th, Elm Ave. Christian Church, Portsmouth, held its regular quarterly conference. The secretary Bro. J. W. Felton, reported good progress along all lines of the Church, and Sunday school work. This Church has made wonderful progress. Several new organizations have been formed, and 40 new members have been added to the church, during the past quarter. They have also raised the pastor's salary twenty-five dollars per month during the last quarter. At the close of the conference the pastor offered up his resignation, to go into effect at the close of the conference year. The pastor resigns with an earnest prayer that this work may continue to grow, and that God may send just the right man to this field of labor.

A FINE TRIBUTE TO DR. STALEY

SUFFOLK, VA., JULY 19, 1922.

To The Suffolk Christian Church,In Conference Assembled,Suffolk, Va.

We, your committee appointed at the last regular session of the Church conference, held on July 12th, to take into consideration the selection of a Pastor of this Church for the coming year, begs leave to submit the following report:

"Our present pastor, Dr. W. W. Staley, has been with us and served us for forty years. He has rendered the most faithful service, and has accomplished most gratifying results. Under his leadership a small Church has been developed into probably the strongest Church in the denomination. We love him—we are bound to him by hooks of steel—and we desire that he shall remain with us and consent to act as our pastor for life. He is still active for a man of his age, and in this we rejoice with him, and is still capable of doing a great work and of rendering great and valuable service. We feel, however, that his present burden is too great and that he should be relieved of a part of it, and for that reason we recommend as follows:

1. That we elect Dr. W. W. Staley our paster emeritus for life at a salary of $2,500.00 per year, and that he shall occupy the present Church parsonage. We believe that he should preach for us when he feels like it, do a part of the pastoral visiting, and whatever else he may believe will be for the best interest of the Church. His loving and faithful work entitles him to this consideration, and it is a pleasure for us to bear the additional burden this recommendation may impose upon us.

2. We recommend that a committee be appointed, who by and with the advice and assistance of Dr. Staley, shall select and recommend an active pastor of this Church at a salary to be agreed upon, and who will be expected, with the co-operation of Dr. Staley, to do the active pastoral work of the Church. We feel that Dr. Staley and the pastor so selected can divide the work—now too big for any one man—and that together they can accomplish better results for the Church and for the denomination.

Respectfully submitted,

REV. W. W. STALEY ON

INACTIVE LIST

Becomes Pastor Emeritus After Forty Years of Service At Suffolk.

The following taken from The Ledger-Dispatch, Norfolk, Va., of recent date, tells an interesting story of one of the best loved men in public life in Virginia. The story speaks for itself, and in doing so, it tells a beautiful story:

"At the quarterly conference of the Suffolk Christian Church last night a committee composed of Col. E. E. Holland, John King, Lieut. Gov. J. E. West, C. A. Shoop, Hersey Woodward, W. E. McClenny and W. S. Beamon presented a recommendation that the pastor, Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., who has given this church forty years of splendid service, be made pastor emeritus for life, with a salary of $2,500 a year and the use of the parsonage as long as he lives. The resolution also carried with it a recommendation that a committee be appointed, with Dr. Staley as chairman, to look into calling an active pastor for the Church who will take over the arduous work of the Church, with Dr. Staley's advice, assistance and counsel.

"The work of Dr. Staley, called by Suffolk people the best loved man in the community, has not only been done in his own congregation, but among all of the people in the city, and whenever there is trouble or sorrow, whether among his members or not, he has always been among the first to respond and bring comfort and cheer.

"When Dr. Staley came to the Suffolk Church it had suffered from some internal dissension and was far from being a strong church.

"The membership in 1882, when he became pastor, was 136 persons, and the pastor was paid a salary of $600 per annum. The entire amount raised a year was $770.83. Under his wise ministry the Church grew and prospered and in 1892 the present handsome house of worship was erected, the auditorium being considered one of the best in the state in which to speak. In 1914 a brick addition was built in the rear of the Church and is used by adult Sunday School classes, etc.

"From a membership of 136 the Church has grown to have more than one thousand members on its roll, and the Sunday school numbers over seven hundred. Last year more than $30,000 was raised for all purposes by the Church.

"During his forty years service Dr. Staley has united in marriage the young members of the Church, married their children and baptized their grandchildren. The Church activities have become numerous and far-reaching under his ministry, and missionary societies, adult classes, a Business Men's League, Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union and Christian Endeavor societies have been formed.

"During his service the Church has had nine secretaries—Jesse T. Whitley, Thomas H. Hines, James R. Baker, John Monnell, H. M. Parker, B. F. Cutchin, John King, M. M. Watkins, J. D. McClenny. There have been five treasurers—B. F. Cutchin, James M. Caulk, P. J. Kernodle, Hersey Woodward and E. H. Rawles.

"James A. Turrentine and Robert Brinkley were chosen joint Sunday school superintendents just about the time of the Civil War and left for the Confederate army soon after the election. Superintendents since the war have been: D. B. Dunbar, P. J. Kernodle, C. A. Shoop and W. S. Beamon.

"It will be a source of great satisfaction to the entire community, Suffolk and Eastern Carolina and Virginia, where Dr. Staley is widely known, to know the splendid recognition taken of his work and that he will still remain as guide and council in the affairs of the Church."

"For each serious problem of life to-day, Jesus has provided an illuminating suggestion for the easiest solution. Would you judge a lover, a business man, a book? Remember that "by their fruits ye shall know them." Would you be informed as to the cause of your failures in life? Estimate what your follies and vices and selfishness have cost you in money and friends; consider whether with devout sincerity you have pursued a calling that sober truth commended to you as the one most fitted to your powers." That is well worth considering, as suggesting lines likely to show you yourself and the needs you have for a change in your life in order to attain the best results.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Reidsville, N. C.

A VERY SIGNIFICANT WORD.

We often lose much of thought and comfort by not knowing the meaning of words. This is especially true of Christians. A message comes to us clothed in such language as seems pretty plain to us, and we let it pass because we take it for granted that it is all right, and it may be all right, but that does not keep us from losing heavily, if we do not look into it sufficiently to make sure that we get the true meaning of the words there used.

Let us take as an instance of this kind the words we find in 2 Kings 18:5, where it is said of Hezekiah as a king:

"He trusted in the Lord God of Israel; so that after him was none like him among all the kings of Judah, nor any that were before him."

Now how many of the average Bible students know in fact what is meant when it is said that Hezekiah trusted in the Lord God of Israel? We do not mean to insinuate that our readers are lacking in the understanding of Bible words more than are others, but we do mean to say that among all branches of the Church of Christ, it is likely that a large per cent. of the average members of the churches are not careful to hunt up the real meaning of Bible words.

What is it to trust another—to trust the Lord? No doubt in any attempt to define this word there would be many opposing ideas presented, and that is largely due to the fact that so few of us have given ourselves the opportunity to get the real meaning of the word, or there would not be such diversity of opinion as to its meaning. Till we get the true meaning of the word, we cannot define it for others and not even for the comfort and assurance it would bring to our own hearts. Hence we are at fault seriously in our failure to get the thought God meant us to have in the Biblical use of the word.

The word trust occurs in the Old Testament 152 times. It is the rendering of the Hebrew words which signify to take refuge; to lean on; to roll on; to stay upon. Now let us think of the thought which that word brings to the mind of the trustful Christians. Hezekiah was in trouble, although he was a king and a man of great power. What did he do in his trouble? He trusted in the Lord God of Israel. But what does that mean when it is applied to the act of Hezekiah, to what he did in the time of his trouble? Why it means that in his time of peril, he took refuge in God, that is he left his trouble and fled to God for safety, and he was safe. Then again it means that he leaned on God. He felt his weakness and having not the strength that was so much needed to handle the situation into which he had fallen, he simply leaned upon God for deliverance. Or again it may mean that Hezekiah in the time of his peril, simply rolled his burden on the Lord and so had the help of one who is mighty to save and to deliver. Or it may be that he stood still and so stayed himself upon the Lord, the God of Israel, and in that way got deliverance. The word trust is used to indicate a refuge in Ruth 2:12; in Psalms 56:3, the word trust is used in the sense of leaning on the Lord; in Psalms 22:8, the word trust is used in the sense of rolling his burden on the Lord, with the assurance that He would carry it for him; in Job 35:14, the word is used in the sense of staying one's dependence upon the Lord. What a field of light comes to us in that one word trust, as used in the Scriptures, especially in the Old Testament. In the New Testament the word faith, or believe is the equivalent of the word trust in the Old Testament. Now let us think for a moment. If to trust in the God of the Christian means that the Christian may take refuge in God in the time of need; or that he may lean on the Lord for strength in his weakness; or that he may roll his burden upon the Lord and so be relieved of its weight; or if it means that we can stay our all upon the Lord in the moment of great need, then we ought to learn that we have a place of safety in all of our troubles and that whatever our need may be, He is ready and willing to meet our needs through trust in Him. If you wish a helpful and soul-stirring up-lift in the Bible, get your concordance and turn to the word trust and follow it as used throughout the Scriptures, and you will be well repaid, and then you may go on your way rejoicing because the Lord our God is your strength all the way from the cradle to the grave.

NOT FOR CONTROVERSY'S SAKE....

There is a higher end to be served in the discussion of right and wrong than the mere matter of carrying your point in an argument. What we are really concerned about is the establishment of the truth as God has given it to us—that is of more importance than any human shrewdness, or the establishment of any human thought, except as the thought may be an expression of truth.

The day in which we live is even now famous for the expression of human opinion regardless of Bible authority, but since the Bible is the record of God's own thought for the welfare of the world, some day and somewhere, there must be a reaction, when men will come back to the Bible as the standard of human life and conduct, and when that day comes, as come it will, we shall see a much more orderly procession in human affairs. Man never has been able to mark out his own course and then pursue it with complete success, and he has not, because God made man to be dependent on divine leadership. It is therefore not at all strange that when we attempt to act for ourselves, independent of God, we invariably come to grief, for man never has been competent to pursue such a course as the direction of his own destiny with success.

This does not say that many men have not tried to direct their own destiny in the affairs of this life, for they have, but their success has, as we believe, been only partial, and even then not for the good of the man who was trying to work out success in his own life. This is as true as it is of individuals, most likely, and therefore it is clear that both individual and the nation stand in great need of divine leadership, even in the affairs of earth, to say nothing of the preparation for the Life Beyond. The Psalmist seems to have been thinking of this trait in the character of man, when he said:

"Fret not thyself because of evil doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity. For they shall soon be cut down like grass, and wither as the green herb."—Psalms 37:1,2.

In this day when human wisdom is so rampant to have things go its own way, not regarding the teachings of God's Word, we find many who are opposing capital punishment—it is entirely too barbarous a thing to meet their approval, and hence we see human condonement of awful crimes and some go far enough to lavish their sympathy on the criminal, but God's Word says:

"And surely your blood of your lives will I require; at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man." Who so sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed, for in the image of God made He man—Gen. 9:5, 6.

That it seems to us, is as plain as language can make it. God who is the Creator of us all, has caused it to be written for our edification and for the preservation of human life, that whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed. Why? Well, He says that he made man in His own image and that seems to indicate that the punishment to be visited on the murderer is because man has destroyed in his fellow-man the image of God which He put there in creation, so distinguishing man from all other living things. Man is the only living thing, so far as we are informed, which was made in the likeness and image of God, and to protect and preserve that image in man, God has said that whoso sheds man's blood, his blood shall be shed. The thought of executing a murderer reaches my pity to the bottom of my heart, but that has nothing to do with the fate of the murderer—God has said that the murderer shall have his own blood shed as a punishment for his crime. God who made us all is Final Authority, and when He speaks it becomes man to be silent and bow in recognition of Divine Authority.

It is said that the Old Testament has been abolished. Who said so? The only thing that has been abolished, so far as we are informed, is the ceremonial law, and even its abolishment did not do away with its truth. The truth of the ceremonial law ended in the law, but it came forth again in Christ, and in Christ it was perpetuated. This is shown in the fact that Christ took the place of the old ceremonial law in the salvation of the sinner. Hence He ended the ceremonial law, but perpetuated the truth of that law in His own death for the saving of the sinner.

SWEEPED INTO THE CONSTITUTION BY AN OVERWHELMING MAJORITY.

"Dying hard" is an expression which means that the defeated is in a desperate struggle to maintain a losing cause. So it may be said that the whiskey business is "dying hard," for they are struggling hard to maintain the liquor business. When the nation was going dry, State by State, voting prohibition into the constitution the liquor men seemed indifferent to the fate of their business. They evidently looked upon the scene as a huge joke, not dreaming that the 18th amendment would be made a part of the constitution of the United States. But it was carried by a solid vote, except three of the smaller states, viz: New Jersey, Rhode Island and Connecticut. New Jersey has since ratified the 18th amendment, leaving only two of our forty-eight States on the negative side of this question. The talk now is of having the amendment repealed, but they are too late, the amendment has been swept into the Constitution by an overwhelming majority of the 48 States of the Union. As we understand it, unless 36 States at least will vote to repeal, and we do not believe that any party, or no party, can get enough Votes to repeal it, and therefore it is practically out of the question to attempt any such thing. But let us be not deceived, if the 18th amendment is not repealed, it will fail only because the liquor men simply cannot accomplish its defeat. These men will resort to anything within the limits of their power to accomplish this end. They take most any falsehood and use it to bolster up their plea. Only a little while ago they claimed to have found evidence that Abraham Lincoln was not in favor of Prohibition, but the matter has been investigated and the following facts were ascertained:

The alleged statement of Lincoln's views were set forth in a circular widely broadcast in the campaign, and did much to defeat the local option measure by winning over the entire colored vote to the side of the "wets," Rev. Milner, explained.

The words credited to Lincoln but since admitted to be those of another were:

"Prohibition will work great injury to the cause of temperance. It is a species of intemperance itself, for it goes beyond the bounds of reason in that it attempts to control man's appetite by legislation, and in making crime out of things that are not crime.

"A prohibitory law strikes a blow at the very principles on which our government was founded. I have always been found laboring to protect the weaker classes from the stronger, and I can never give my consent to such a law as you propose to enact. Until my tongue be silenced in death, I will continue to fight for the rights of man."

The quotation was headed "Abraham Lincoln's proclamation." and was followed with this appeal:

"Colored voter, He appeals to you to protect the liberty he has bestowed upon you. Will you go back on his advice? Look to your rights! Read! Act! Vote for the sale."

Rev. Milner declared that the alleged statement of Lincoln is being circulated today by organizations opposed to the eighteenth amendment and appealed for a "campaign to forever clear the name of the great emancipator of so foul a stigma."

The affidavit made public by Rev. Milner says in part:

"That the Rev. Sam Jones, Henry W. Grady, this affiant, and many other speakers then openly denounced the purported words of Abraham Lincoln to be a flagrant forgery, defied discovery of them in any recorded utterances by Lincoln and offered a reward for proof of their genuineness, but no one produced any such proof.

"That some time after the excitement of the campaign had disappeared, this affiant, in conversation with Col. John B. Goodwin, who had been the director of the anti-prohibition forces in said campaign, was told by Col. Goodwin, that he himself devised the circular in question, composed the alleged words of Lincoln so as to attract the adhesion of the colored voters and had done so because to win them was the forlorn hope of the 'wets' the country at that time being under a prohibition law."

THERE GOES YOUR MINISTER.

When a preacher becomes an actor, the angels of grace and the nymphs of art hold their breath and maintain a heavenly poise for fear of the outcome. But the modern minister has little hesitancy in undertaking the most perilous tasks. Seemingly without the least reservation he proceeds to walk where angels would fear to tread. All through the Christian centuries he has been cautioned that as a preacher he must not assume the role which he himself is not. As a preacher he may elocutionize, but he must never act a part that does not belong to his everyday life. Furthermore, he has been advised that the whole trend of the actor's art and the theater's influence is away from personal piety and Christian devotion.

But the modern minister is discounting these old counsels and annulling those old restraints. He is declaring by his actions that the actor's art may be utilized in the furtherance of the gospel; that it can be entrusted to carry educational value; that it can be directed to evangelistic ends. Therefore he brings his dramatic instincts to bear upon the Bible itself and takes the stories thereof and enlarges them into dramatic form; breathes into them modern life; creates in them dramatic incidents; recasts them for tragic ends, and remolds them for romantic atmosphere.

The appeal of the cinema has had a profound influence upon him. If he is not restrained by moral prejudice he is carried off his mental feet by a desire to put into action all the great stories of the church, all the great dramas of religion, and all the great incidents of Scripture. If some men among these leaders were given the opportunity they would dramatize the whole current of religious history from start to finish; from Genesis to Revelation; from St. Paul to Jonathan Edwards, and from Alpha to Omega.

There may be something commendable in this, but we have our reservations. In a limited way it has its value, but these must be conserved by the greatest possible Christian consideration. The church is treading on unproved ground and the motives that are urging it on should be carefully examined. We learn that a new Bible play is being produced by the churches of one of our large cities in which the character of Jeremiah is to be the center. The preparation for the great pageant or play is being directed by a group of ministers who are to assume the most prominent part as actors. The scenes are located back in Jerusalem where the angry mobs shouted their threats of violence against the enemies of the Holy City. The ancient Hebrew melodies will be chanted; the woes and warning of priests and prophet will be sounded out against the trumpet calls of the approaching Babylonian armies.

It is said that the play, although dealing with tragic times and with events which laid the foundations for a large part of modern religion, abounds with lighter touches and with moments of romance. The entire conception has grown out of the brain of a minister with dramatic genius. There are elements of humor to dissipate the feeling of the sacredness of the story, while love and romance is woven around the weeping prophet and his beloved Sherah, which brings both joy and pathos into the general theme.

The ministers of the gospel, who have joined the cast, it is said, have done so at a considerable sacrifice. They were engaged in it during the busy season of Lent. Strange that they should have been so occupied, but you cannot tell these days what some ministers will do even during the most sacred period in the life of our Lord, which the church celebrates in memory of his suffering and death. But they believe they are using the stage and the drama as a means of making the Bible live. Somehow they have the conception that it is a dead book. And to make it throb with vitality, as though it had not given the spirit of humanity to mankind for nearly 2000 years! and thus to find for it absorbing interest on the part of a larger public than it has ever had. This type of minister, obsessed with the idea that the drama can be made an accessory to the preaching of the gospel, gets into action, giving his whole soul to make it a success, assuming at times the most responsible roles and the most unexpected parts. These have shown a willingness to impersonate the harsh and unjust men of the times. How would you like to see the performance when, for instance, the gates of Jerusalem are entered by an army of Babylonians to take captive the people of Judah, and have someone say to you, "There goes your minister," and to discover that he was playing the part of the all-glorious and terrible conqueror of all the world, the famous Nebuchadnezzar, builder of Babylon, the immortal city with its gates of brass and iron and stone?

That would be some impersonation for a distinguished follower of the lowly Nazarene! But then another comes as General of the army, who chains and binds Hezekiah the king, and binds Hilkiyah the high priest, and Shaphan the scribe, and dozens of others, all being impersonated by some minister who heartlessly seizes the captives and drives them away with thongs and blows into the captivity that has written itself in the most imperishable language that has ever been uttered by prophet, priest, or patriot. There goes your minister! playing the role of some infamous man of history. He can undertake anything. His genius has taught him how to impersonate, how to practice his art. Don't be surprised if some one calls your attention, crying, "There goes your minister, playing the devil!" Well, Well; tell it not in Gath; publish it not in Askalon.

The metamorphosis of the personality of those who have been trained to always be what they appear in the eyes of men will no doubt strain to the utmost limits the powers of human nature that will affect the integrity of a personality that has desired to follow ideals and impersonate them in the very life of the soul. No doubt it will be an interesting performance to witness the exhibition of this modern conception in dramatic form of Jeremiah.

But why was Jeremiah selected? Was it temperamental? To make an exhibition of that prophet's life for the entertainment of men may not be questionable, but it surely should be looked upon as a delicate matter. For he who sat by the city gates and wept until his tears became rivers of waters, because his heart was broken over the downfall of his people, is too sacred a character to be set in the market place, where the crowds may pass by to gaze with heartless irony. There is a sacredness about Holy Scripture that should preserve it from secular exploitation that divests of all of its divine association.

There is an apartness of the ministry that demands that clerical dignity should be so conceived and preserved that it will always find a defense against lay indignities. When, therefore, a minister enters into those secular enterprises that strip him of all evidences of his former life he is placing himself in a perilous position. For if all the lowering forces of the ministry are taken into account, we are face to face with the conclusion that the standards of judgment applied to him are different from those by which other men are tested. He holds a position of moral aloofness and perfection of character which he must maintain at all hazards. He must be sky-pure. He must be absolutely white. He must be far above the least compromise of opinion, conviction, character.

The people look upon him as their spiritual leader, the voice of God to them, the daily example of the Christian life. For him to compromise by assuming some other character, he exposes himself to that divestment that may perchance leave him in the minds of men as being on the common level without a distinguishing characteristic. He must strive in behalf of his own immaculateness for he is not judged by the standards that measure other men. They may not grant it to him should he claim it, but they deal with him and judge him upon that level.

This discussion is not a jeremiad over the situation that is developing. Our fear is that the old prophet may ultimately find himself multiplied by those who undertake to impersonate him.—Western Christian Advocate.

Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left THY FIRST LOVE.—Revelation 2:4.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Does it pay to go to college? Does it pay to go to college, if one does not possess the means to go? Does it pay to spend years in college, and years out of college to pay for the years spent in College? It is said that "fools ask questions that wise men cannot answer." The above questions may be foolish questions, and the answer herein given may be more foolish than the questions, but questions arise in the minds of young people relating to college life akin to what the above questions involve. Like young birds out of the nest, young people must select their own course and use their own powers for future movements. Self-choice and self-movements determine future results.

Any field occupied by human service is measured by the numbers that enter it. In the field where the smallest numbers serve is easily seen the largest opportunity. The smallest percentage of human beings go to college, and a still smaller number graduate: and this makes the army of college men and women, to fill positions with that class of educated people, a field of largest opportunity. The army illustrates this statement. The officers are chosen from the educated men, with but few exceptions.

People of means can hardly afford to neglect collegiate training for their children lest they drop below their social and financial level. There is a certain culture demanded of people of means that they cannot well afford to neglect. It pays people in the higher walks of life to go to college in order to hold their influence in society and to set standards that will inspire less fortunate young people to work upward. That class of families create an educational atmosphere that gives health to society.

If one does not possess the means to go to college the reason is all the stronger for going: for that is the surest road to standing and usefulness. The personal effort for collegiate education is practical education: and every man and woman needs both training and experience. It takes the rich about as long to acquire real experience after leaving college as it does the poor to get through college by his experience. It takes the finest trees longest to grow, and it takes the longest time to fashion them when cut in the mill. If there is any fault in this age in the Outlook for young people, it is impatience. They are in danger of thinking the time too long to work and make money enough to pay through College. Too much stress is laid upon commercial success in the matter of education; and that as to immediate results. The matter should be considered in its relation to the whole of life, as to being, time, usefulness, and final results. It pays in this larger sense to spend many years in College at hard work, and many years out of College, before or after the college course, to pay for the cost of collegiate education. By the end of that double period of personal sacrifice and effort the life will be ready for years of service that will enrich self and help others.

All this is said to set young people to thinking along lines that may lead to personal character, satisfaction, and a career of useful service. Make up your mind that you will go to college, and if you cannot go to college this year, you will go next year, or the year after.

ELON LETTER.

The die is cast. So far as aggressive work is undertaken for new students for Elon this fall it will be with our own young people. We have a sufficient number of young people of our own Church on our mailing list to crowd our College to its utmost capacity. Elon was founded to provide them under positive moral and religious influences with higher education at most reasonable rates. Through the years the Brotherhood has added to its initial investment till now we have a physical plant, a faculty, and a reputation for faithful high-grade work that rejoices every member of our Church. We have done nobly and God has blessed us. We are grateful.

But one thing has always circumscribed our ability to serve our Church as fully as we might, that practically half our students have come to us from other Churches. We have been glad to serve our brethren of other denominations. Elon has demonstrated that a Christian College without sectarianism can gather together on one campus all shades of religious creed and return them to their own, each strengthened in his Christian life and deepened in his spiritual experience. This is an achievement to be proud of. It conclusively proves that the real essence of the Christian faith is not creed but the expression in conduct of the Christian spirit. Vital piety our Christian Church forebears called it—that is the real essence of the Christian way. What seers they were.

But the stubborn fact remains that fifty per cent of our students are from other folds and return to those folds after graduation. The good has been done in motivating them for the Christian life, but our own Church has spent its resources for other denominations. This matter was treated in my annual report of May 1922 to the Board of Trustees. I quote briefly as follows: "Inasmuch as every student costs a College more than is paid, the general average the country over being as follows: 39 per cent. paid by students, 31 per cent. from gifts, and 30 per cent. from endowment, it is doubtful whether we ought with our present resources to try to secure more than 300 students. It will be many years before our own constituency will send us that many annually. All beyond the students coming from our own Church represents a work of interdenominational and community benevolence, a splendid work if we can afford it. The Board of Trustees entertain the same opinion. Our aim should not be numbers. A decrease in enrollment would put the College financially in better condition. Our aim therefore should be to put forth special effort to bring our own young people to our own College.

If others wish to come and we feel sure they will, we will welcome them and do for them the same good work as in the past thirty-two years. But so far as aggressive effort is concerned to secure students it shall be expended on our own people. So far as the administration is concerned the die is cast.

Some one asked the other day when this matter was being discussed, "What if our own people do not come?" "Then," it was replied, "In all likelihood for a year or two our enrollment will decrease, till our people realize that this policy is to be strictly adhered to and thorough cooperation all along the line shall fill Elon College eighty or ninety per cent. full of boys and girls from Christian homes, who after four years have been spent in study in their own College, will return to their home communities fire-brands of Christian zeal for the growth and development of our Brotherhood."

I have faith in our people. If that faith is misplaced, our College will suffer. That is the upshot of the matter. If our people do not rally to our College, we certainly ought not to expect others to do so. Nor is it right for us to expend our energies in the effort to induce them to do so. We shall therefore as Grant said "fight it out along this line" if it takes into the valley of temporary eclipse and requires a generation to bring us the victory we are sure God desires us to achieve.

But this victory is ours now, this very September, if we want it, if we will cooperate to that end. We have more than a hundred preachers. Let every one of them go out and sit up with some young man or woman till attendance at our College is assured. We have two hundred and fifty Churches. Surely in every one there are one man and one woman who love our cause sufficiently to go and do what I have suggested for our ministers. Of course both ministers and lay workers will keep me informed of prospects so we may send literature and where possible visit personally. It would bankrupt the College however, were we to keep a force in the field large enough to interview all prospects.

If you have never spoken personally with a young person about attending our College, go immediately, beloved, and do it. It will quicken your love for our Church. It will give you a new hold on the heart and life of the young person interviewed. In the years ahead it will give you the satisfaction of having directed a young life into channels of larger, richer service for Christ and the Kingdom. Personal work—that is it. Our Christian Church needs that you do that sort of work for our College right now. What a rewarding work it is too!

I recall now, two young men whom some eighteen or twenty years ago I was privileged to influence to come to our College. One of them was planning to quit and go farming. He is now a rising lawyer, a Christian lawyer too. He is capable of being governor of his state, a stalwart Christian leader in his profession. The other young man was going for a short-cut business preparation. I persuaded him to take our business course. He did, and God so impressed him before the year was out that he decided to enter our ministry. He continued in College till graduation after taking his business course. He is today pastor of one of our best city Churches. How my heart sings praises to God when I think of these two young men and of the many others whose lives our College has touched for higher things.

Beloved brothers and sisters of our Christian Church, I plead with you thus to touch for good, for uplift, for God the lives of the young around you. Sit up with them till they are safely within our own institution. Under God, we shall endeavor so to train and motivate that they shall be devout leaders in Christ's Kingdom in the days ahead.

The die is cast. Elon must be what the faith of our fathers decided in her founding—thronged with the boys and girls of our own Church. Who will be a helper in this time of need?

W. A. HARPER.

FAMILY.

To see a family live in love; husband and wife, parents, children and servants doing all in love to one another; to see a town live together in love, without any envyings, brawlings, or contentions, lawsuits, factions or divisions, but every man loving his neighbor as himself, thinking they can never do too much for one another, but striving to go beyond each other in love; how happy, how delightful a sight is this—RICHARD BAXTER.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

An address delivered at Newport News, on Sunday, July 16, in celebration of College Day

By MR. JOHN KING, SUFFOLK, VA.

America has been termed the melting-pot of the world. And perhaps nothing so truly shows the truth of this description as the figures which show the increased annual number of foreign students who come to America to catch the Western spirit of democracy. The beginning of autumn greets a group of these young thirsty torch bearers. By the end of summer, another group, satisfied and filled with new ideals to transplant in their home lands, is bidding good-bye to these shores.

The question of the influence of America upon these incoming and outgoing students is very important. The majority of those that arrive are young, eager and progressive. On them, their country has placed all hopes to lift her out from the mire, of weakness, set her upon a pedestal of strength, and steer her straight in the path of progress. The far-reaching power of some is unquestionable.

Fresh from the wellspring of knowledge, a student returned to China and there revolutionized the educational system of an entire province from the bottom to the top. He thus had to do in a very formative way with the life of more than two million people. Many of the statesmen who are now playing prominent roles in the field of international politics are American trained. The New Culture movement is destined to have a progressive influence on thousands of returned students.

From every foreign land that has sensed the spirit of the new age of culture and democracy, America, has students. From the Philippines, Hawaii, India, Japan and the West Indies, they come with fresh minds and open hearts to catch the beat of what has made America the progressive nation she is today. With such a continual flow of students in our midst, the opportunity to bridge international chasms is really significant. The greatest peace problem is learning to think internationally. The world is becoming smaller and more unified year by year. No generation ever faced such possibilities of weal or woe as does ours as it sees nations being reborn, civilization looking to Christian people for guidance; and yet sees the forces of evil, of war, of challenge to this generation for world brotherhood and a new internationalism which alone can make peace permanent.

You can do your share in moulding international opinion if you look upon foreign students with international helpfulness. By serving them nobly and well, by teaching them those foundations of Character that build real cosmopolitanism, by extending to them sympathy and help in times of their country's misfortunes and distress, you will be contributing your part in speeding up enterprises for constructive goodwill.

Foreign students are electrically responsive to the better influences of America. They show it while they are here and they express it when they return home. Their spirit of mutual friendliness was recently shown by the sacrifice they made in the Stadium campaign at the University of Illinois. These students coming from every part of the world without friends or associates who could guide them through the troublesome first year of college life, with language and customs entirely different from our own, have given unflinchingly, unreservedly; that Illinois' most sacred ideal might be realized. To most of them it has meant a tremendous sacrifice, a sacrifice which is untold in the subscriptions of hundreds of dollars which have been received so plentifully. These students felt that they owe a debt not to be measured in terms of money. Their liberality is a symbol of love and reverence for America.

We have the evidence of the fact that our American schools are perfect, and offer a greater advantage to the boys and girls of today than any other country, from the very fact that parents of the old world are sending their children to the Western Hemisphere for training in our schools. They recognize that the United States does not only offer better physical and mental training, but a Christian education as well. They recognize our universities as standard bearers for the best and most useful training that can be given to man or woman.

Our preparatory schools are principally free, and our universities are liberal, so that any boy or girl can secure an education almost at their door practically without charge.

It is not necessary to be born of rich parents to secure an education as the poorest boy or girl can get an education if he or she desires, without price. It seems that riches are a burden to a student. I have often thought that it was almost a crime for a parent to supply his child with a great deal of money at school. Their minds are led away from books to worldly things that money will buy.

Since we see that foreign lands are sending their children here, at a great distance and cost to educate them, why should this not be an incentive to us to apply ourselves and take advantage of this golden opportunity that is so free and easy to accept?

The world is demanding every day better educated men and women to meet the demands of this rapid progressive time in which we are travelling. I tell you you had better get ready or the old ship will sail by and you will be left out in the deep sea without rudder or compass.

The Christian Church has built up a school at Elon that has done wonders in the past twenty-five or thirty years. Think of what this college has done for the church. Not only for the church, but you can find many leading lights all over this land who received their training at this college. What would the Christian Church be today but for the men and women that were educated at this college? Your pulpits would be vacant, and some of your free schools would be without teachers.

I believe in co-education. Men and women should be trained up together under the proper protection so that when they go out in the world they will know how to respect each other. They will know how to shield the other from the world.

If the Christian Church ever expects to build up a great denomination it must patronize its colleges, for these are the standard bearers to a fashionable school, but I tell you you do not need fashions. If you want to give your son or daughter a thorough christian education. Fashions in this country are principally from the under-world, and you can get too much of this at home.

The blessing of democracy will flow only "in so far as it represents the rule of an intelligent and cultured people."

The American ideal, and it must be maintained if we are to mitigate disappointments and unrest—is the ideal of equal educational opportunity, not merely for the purpose of enabling one to know how to earn a living, and to fit into an economic status more or less fixed, but of giving play to talent and inspiration and to the development of mental and spiritual powers.

Democracy cannot live on bread alone. It is not enough that one shall be able to earn a living, or a good living. This is the foundation but not the structure. What is needed is to have life more abundantly.

Life is not a pastime, and democracy is not a holiday excursion. It needs men trained to think.

The revolt of the young merely means that we have raised a generation that knows everything. Being born since the fliver, jazz, and movies, is what did it. After Bismarck's day, Germany raised a generation that knew everything. What happened to them will happen to our young know-it-alls.

In twenty years from now the world will be what the boys and girls of today make it.

Then, if the ongoing of the world to material and spiritual splendor is dependent upon the Man, how important that the Man in the making shall be fashioned rightly. He must be trained to righteous doing, and he must be stimulated to inspire ideals. The influences of every day around him in his childhood must develop and maintain in him the aspirations to be the Man redeemed and capable of being a redeemer. It is not enough that his home life shall be sanctifying; for powerful suasions exist outside of home, and most of his waking hours are spent away from the family circle. The school must help to make the Man. And in a large measure the Man on whom the future of the world depends is being formed or deformed in the schools of today.

What kind of Man are we educating for the great and perhaps final task of humanity in this dispensation—preparing for the Kingdom? Religion is the chief factor in improving the character of this coming Man; and as well expect the church or the home to prepare him without religion for his coming world duty, as to expect the school without religion to give to him the safe mental equipment and the spiritual aspiration.

Of all things most needed now in this distracted world is the Man—the man in myriads—tutored in the truth and prepared with religious fervor to help in the world's redemption.

It all depends upon the Man, for God uses men to work out His mighty purposes with the race.

What are You doing in home and church and school, to build the Man for God?

While we are preparing our sons for the Man of tomorrow we should have an eye singled upon his training. If he is trained up in the atmosphere of sin, he will go down to degradation. Then why not teach the boy at home, and in school, the love of Jesus Christ.

Why should our public schools refuse to have the Bible read in these schools? They are allowed to read Caesar and Vigil, but the Bible and Jesus Christ is forbidden. This is because the Jews and Roman Catholics object. If the Jews had the power Judaism would be taught in these schools.

If you force your public schools to teach the Bible to the young when they advance in their studies they would naturally incline their hearts and mind in the way of their early training, and your pulpit would be supplied every Sunday instead of being vacant.

The people of every other nation put carefully into their schools what they consider their very best possession. The Mohammedans put their Koran there. The Chinese put their Confucius there. The Indians put their Buddha there. What we would have in the life of the nation we must put into the schools of the land.

The future safety of the United States lies in Christianity. It matters not what our natural resources are: what our form of government is; what our business ability; what our foreign trade; how great and many our dreadnaughts; how thorough our educational system; these things cannot insure national safety and perpetuity. The principles of Christianity are the only sure foundations for national security. The future of America rests not on Wall Street, but on Plymouth Rock.

"Public instruction" said Napoleon, "should be the first object of government." "All who have meditated on the art of governing mankind," said Aristotle, "have been convinced that the fate of empires depends upon the education of youth." "Knowledge," said Daniel Webster, "does not comprise all which is contained in the large term 'education'. The feelings are to be disciplined, the passions are to be restrained, true and worthy motives are to be instilled, and pure morality inculcated under all circumstances. All this is comprised in education. "Teach," said Seneca, "the art of living well." "Reason and experience both forbid us to expect," said Washington, that "national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles." "Educate men without religion said the Duke of Wellington." "and you make them but clever devils." "Religion and liberty are inseparable," said Philip Schaff. "True religion," said Burke, "is the foundation of society." When that is once shaken by contempt the whole fabric cannot be stable or lasting.

The Bible is the North Star among books. You may travel all over this land and foreign countries for knowledge, but unless you carry some knowledge with you you cannot bring knowledge back.

While we are preparing our sons and daughters to meet the battles of the world don't forget the great outstanding fact that the greatest requisite for success is a Christian religious training and may I leave the words of the Apostle Peter with you—

"Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity."

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

By Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D. New York City.

Christian experience is the result of Christian activity, but all activity springs from the deeper self. Without a fundamental attitude of faith in Christ there can be no Christian experience. Such a fundamental faith organizes the entire self into a unity of Christian purposes and gives the set that is bent on the realization of that purpose; and all the activities as they converge upon the attainment of such a purpose spring from the deeper use of this newly constructed personality.

Experience may be analyzed into its Component elements or aspects as follows: Fundamentally and primarily experience is a trying out process. It is doing something to see what will happen as a result of the deeper spiritual urge. Secondly, the self undergoes or suffers something as a result of the doing, Thirdly, the Self Connects the outgoing wave of activity to the incoming current of undergoing, and consciously sees the relation of the one to the other so that one of these aspects means, or is the means to, the other and is known to be so for future conduct. Now if this activity is done as a result of our loyalty to Christ our faith in Christ, our striving after Christ, the result is Christian. The activity the response, or the service must be something done on our part as a result of a conscious promotion of His Kingdom, in service to humanity or else the Christian element is left out of the deed and the experience is not Christian, but anything done in His Spirit is Christian. When the act is done, when the prayer is offered, the song sung, the sermon preached, the alms given, suffering alleviated, or sickness healed, it must be done with a conscious purpose to serve humanity in His Spirit, or the act degenerates into simply a moral quality which is service to society; if it is done with no desire to promote Christ's Kingdom or to serve humanity, but simply to satisfy self it degenerates to a lower level, viz; the purely intellectual or merely medicinal routine.

The spiritual outcomes of Christian Experience, the undergoing or suffering, resulting from our conduct will be joy or sorrow, happiness or misery, humility or rapture according to the nature of the purpose and outcomes of our conduct. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

The Christian world has put too much emphasis on the faith or attitude side of religion. To be sure, faith is fundamental. Without faith we cannot please God." but the faith that founds kingdoms, removes mountains, stops the mouths of lions, builds Churches, supports missionaries, promotes education, trains a dynamic progression, rgent, creative faith which lays hold of the entire self, and directs all the impulses, urgencies, instincts, habits and thought process in working out the problems that arise in promoting these enterprises.

The Church has too long sat supinely by praising our principles and neglecting our purposes, resolving in Conferences and Conventions to accomplish wonders, and never resolving the adopted resolution into practical application. We need to mobilize all the thought and energy, the earning power and the enterprize, of the genius of the creative intelligence of the young people of the church to undertake great things for Christ from the first of their Christian experience of the individual, enlarge their loyalty, encourage co-operation, stimulate wiser and better organization, and consciously and intelligently direct our present plans for higher purposes and greater progress.

The Christian Church should get away from authoritarianism as quickly as possible. It should shun the very appearance of evil and cultivate the spirit of Co-operation, with emphasis upon the growing, intelligent constituency; enlisting their intelligence; their enterprise their push and energy; their creative imagination; their enriched experience fresh from the fountain of life in the vital problems that naturally develop out of progress. We could well utilize all the wisdom of experience and age in directing, stimulating and guiding the activities of the younger generation of the Church in undertaking for God and humanity.

AFRO-CHRISTIAN CONVENTION MEETS.

The 28th Biennial General Convention of the Afro-Christian Church has just closed one of the most successful sessions in its history, its meeting place being Macedonia Christian Church, Vaux Hall, N. J. Ninety delegates, including the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society were in attendance, coming from many states in the South, Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey. Dr. S. A. Howell, President stated that this convention is the development of a vision he had twenty-five years ago, when he saw the old Afro-Christian Church holding its National Convention in the North, with its conferences from all sections represented.

The opening reception was an interesting feature of the Convention, when the many local ministers of all denominations, the officers of the Northern District Conference and the Township officials met and made welcome the personnel of the convention.

The Afro-Christian Church has made a marked progress during this last Convention year. Dr. Howell and his executive officers were called to Baltimore last fall for the purpose of setting apart a work there and connecting it with the Christian Church. As the result of such a merger, a Baltimore Conference has been organized, and eight churches approximating a property valuation of seventy five thousand (75,000) dollars and one thousand communicants are now numbered with the Christian Church. At this Convention two ministers, representing a work in Central America, made application for affiliation and were accepted with their representation of six hundred souls. The Afro Christian Church proudly accepts such men as Drs. Brown, Edwards Knight and the other ministers of Baltimore, and Reverends Wilkins and Tylerbest of Central America. All are highly trained Christian ministers who desire affiliation with the Christian Church, simply because they like best the principles of it.

Dr. W. G. Sargeant, Sec'y of the American Christian Convention and a member of the Board of Control for Franklinton Christian College made a very pointed talk on matters dealing with the College, its needs and its goal. Dr. S. A. Howell retiring President of the College, responded in a very earnest, spirited and equally pointed manner. During his two years as President, Dr. Howell has made more improvements than ever before in the history of Franklinton. The farm has been put in operation and two mules put upon it. Last year 2100 pounds of pork was put in the smoke house. A little post office has been built, where mail can be collected and distributed in an orderly way, and a Domestic Science Department has been equipped. A complete heating plant has been installed, and all rooms are now comfortable. Dr. Wm. H. Hainer, Pastor of the Christian Church, (white) Irvington, N. J., in his commendatory remarks concerning Dr. Howell's accomplishments for Franklinton said "Franklinton has never begun to be in the history of its being, what it is today, and she has had a punch, I predict, that will send her over the top." Over seven hundred dollars was raised in cash and pledges for Franklinton.

The Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society made splendid reports, showing advancement along all lines. The spirit of co-operativeness and oneness was effective in every phase of their operations. It is a big auxiliary to the Afro-Christian Convention. One hundred dollars was laid on the table for foreign missions, and a special collection taken for the Central American work.

Very few changes were made in the official personnel of the Convention or Missionary Society. Prof Henderson was nominated for the position of President of Franklinton Christian College, and his name will be presented to the Board of Control for its endorsement. Dr. S. A. Howell is again in the harness as President for another Convention year, and if the same zeal and interest and co-operation remains a reality, the old Christian Church has every reason to make during this Convention year, a history that will surpass itself and be pleasing even to the most sanguine among its laborers.

GOD,S KNOWING.

Our God is a Master of detail. He does not regard men simply in the mass. He knows every individual. They say that Napoleon Bonaparte had a wonderful memory for names. I have seen it stated that he was personally acquainted with tens of thousands of men who served under his flag. God knows every man and woman in the wide world today. Not one is overlooked. Not one is forgotten. We can appropriate all his tenderness and care to ourselves. We can individualize it. "The Son of our God," said Paul, "loved me and gave himself for me." "The Lord," says the Psalmist, "is my shepherd."

J. D. JONES.

FOUR EPOCHS OF SUNDAY SCHOOL HISTORY.

BY DR. MINOR C. MILLER.

The church has just entered a new day in religious education. For more than a century and a half the Sunday School has been the one organized agency for teaching religion. The movement has developed from a small beginning and in the face of much opposition but nevertheless there has been a growing recognition of the fact that its program has been tremendously worth while. Only a few years ago there were those who were ready to discount the worth of the Sunday-school but today, by common agreement, it is recognized as the greatest evangelization agency of the church. With this increased emphasis upon the importance of the Sunday-school has come the movement for an enlarged program including vacation schools and weekday schools of religion until today we may properly say that the church has entered upon a new day in religious education.

I. THE PERIOD OF ORGANIZATION

The Sunday-school had its beginning in 1780 and the history of the movement for nearly a century may be characterized by the one word organization. The promoters of the Sunday-school idea during this period were interested primarily in the spread of the movement but were not greatly concerned as to the efficiency of their program. In order that we may appreciate the significance of the modern emphasis upon religious education it will be necessary to note certain influences which were responsible for the origin of the Sunday-school and which controlled its development almost to the present day.

1. CONDITION OF THE WORLD.

a. Religiously—divided protestantism.

During the middle ages there has been a constant struggle for supremacy between the church and the state. Men could not agree as to which of these institutions represented the supreme authority in the world.

Kings and all temporal rulers held that they were divinely appointed by Jehovah to rule in temporal and spiritual affairs and from this idea there developed the doctrine of the holy state. Opposed to this view was the doctrine of the holy church, which regarded the pope or bishop as the divinely appointed representative of Jehovah in both temporal and spiritual affairs. This struggle between the church and the state was often very bitter and each side resorted to every form of abuse to enforce its claims. It should be said that by the close of the 13th century the church was absolutely supreme. Every one was required to belong to it, and it not only had the organization of the state but in many places it performed the function of the state.

In the midst of this confusion and bitterness Martin Luther declared that there was neither a holy church nor a holy state. He affirmed rather that Jehovah had given to the world a holy book and that every person should have a right to read it in his own language and to interpret it for himself. In order that the common people might have the opportunity to know God through his revealed word, Luther translated the Bible in the German language and thus we have the doctrine of the Holy Book superceding the doctrine of the holy church.

As soon as the people began to regard the Bible as the source of Divine authority there arose differences of interpretation. Prominent religious sects, each claiming the superiority of his own particular view point. During the years that followed many of the present-day religious denominations were founded. By 1780 Protestant Christianity seemed hopelessly divided and the several warring bodies had well nigh spent their vitality in controversies of one sort or another.

b. Politically.

Commercially and politically the world had just passed through a long period of expansion. The nations of the old world had for centuries been busy with exploration and colonization. The mad thirst for material gain seems to have taken full possession of the people. In America the thirteen colonies had been drawn together through common interests and had practically won their independence. The whole world was in a state of fermentation. In Europe for more than a century conditions had been going from bad to worse and in 1780 the nations of Western Europe were on the eve of the great French Revolution.

c. New life of science.

Voltaire, one of the keenest thinkers of the period, was one of the first to attack the church. For centuries the church had taught that the earth was flat but during the period of discovery it was found that the earth was not flat. Again, the church had taught that as water boiled the devil made the tea-kettle lid rise but with the advancement of science such theories were attacked by the critics, who were bold enough to charge the church with positive failure. "The church has either lied or is ignorant," said Voltaire and it was further argued, that having proved the church ignorant in one particular was sufficient ground to convict it of ignorance and failure in every particular.

d. Oppression of the Child.

The Sunday-school was born in an era when children were most severely oppressed. This was especially true of the children of the common people. In England, as in either parts of the world, a child was regarded as chattle to be used to the economic advantage of his parents or employer. Before the invention of machinery, infanticide was common in many countries of the world, but with the rise of industry, children were called upon to suffer a worse fate in the factories and shops of civilized nations. Perhaps no country so severely oppressed children in this respect as England in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

There was, indeed, much poverty among the middle classes and as the demand for cheap labor increased, laws were passed which virtually made the overseer of the poor the agents of the mill operators. Children were compelled to work in the lace factories from 10 to 20 hours per day. They were fed the coarsest food and what little rest they had was often obtained in beds which were constantly occupied. It is said that children four and five years of age were compelled to work in coal mines, in order that they might carry the tiny pieces of coal out of crevices which were too small to admit larger workers. These children were called apprentices but they were virtually slaves. It is recorded that as late as 1840 a whole gang of such children were sold with other belongings of a bankrupt. Of course under such conditions there was no thought of education for children of the poor and it was the appeal of the suffering, neglected children of England that prompted Robert Raikes to start Sunday-schools in which they could acquire the rudiments of knowledge.

2. THE FIRST SUNDAY SCHOOLS IN ENGLAND.

Luther had given to the world the doctrine of the Holy Book, but it was for Robert Raikes to introduce the doctrine of the holy child. Raikes was the son of a rich man, a typical eighteenth century aristocrat. It is said that when Raikes was "dressed up" he had on $3000 worth of clothes. He was a Journalist by profession and through the columns of his paper—the Gloucester Journal, he had long advocated various measures of reform, especially prison reform. One Sunday while writing an editorial in his up stairs office, his attention was attracted by the profanity of a crowd of children in the streets below.

When he looked out of the window the sight that met his eyes was indeed pathetic. There were crowds of children in filth and rags, utterly neglected, not even conscious that they were profaning God's Holy Day. The sight was sufficient to touch the heart of Raikes and he is said to have thrown his editorial in the waste basket and exclaimed, "If you want to uplift society, you must begin with the child." Raikes then wrote a stirring article on the uplift of childhood. Going to the street he collected a crowd of children and hired a woman to teach them for $1.25 per Sunday. Thus was begun what was destined to become the greatest movement for the uplift of humanity in all christian history.

3. DEVELOPMENT IN AMERICA.

The Sunday-school as it developed in America was very different from the institution first started in England by Raikes. It may, indeed, be said that about the only point of similarity between the two schools was the fact that both met on Sunday. The English reformer was interested in providing a limited educational opportunity for the common people of his day. His schools, therefore, were designed to teach the rudiments of a general education and, in fact, the organization of Sunday-schools marks the beginning of the English Common schools. Since religion, was an essential part of the ordinary school curriculum it was, therefore, taught in the early Sunday-schools. It may be said, however, that these early Sunday-schools in England were not designed primarily to teach religion.

In America the situation was quite different. Settlements in America had been made primarily to escape the tyranny of European aristocracy and particularly to escape the tyranny of an autocratic church. Our forefathers had determined to forever abolish the union of church and state. They, therefore, established the principle of religious freedom which forbids the majority to impose its will upon the minority, however small, in religious matters. For this reason it was impossible to touch religion in the public schools and it was at once discovered that if religion was to be taught at all it would have to be done by the home and the church. The church readily took up the idea of a school on Sunday for the primary purpose of teaching religion and soon after 1780 many schools were organized in America under Church management.

The American Sunday School Union was organized in 1824. This organization has always been interested in organizing schools. The union employed missionaries and sent them out to establish schools in all parts of the country. Large sums of money were raised for the support of the work—the workers receiving about $1.00 per day for active service. It should be said that many of the strong churches in the Ohio and Mississippi river valleys as well as churches in the far West owe their origin to the efforts of these faithful Sunday-school missionaries. It is reported that in two years 78 workers had organized 2867 schools.

It is not particular surprising, and yet it is pathetic to note that the Sunday-school has always had to fight its way into the church. Many devout christians looked with suspicion upon the efforts of the Sunday School Union and often serious opposition was in evidence. Many Sunday Schools flourished for a short time and were then discontinued because of general disfavor. In spite of opposition and lack of support seventy-five years after Sunday-schools had been established in America the movement had spread to all parts of the country.

THE INDIANAPOLIS CONVENTION.

By 1872, when the Sunday-school forces gathered at Indianapolis in the fifth National Convention it was found that there was almost as many dead Sunday Schools as live ones. There had been no well defined program to follow. Sunday Schools had been organized and had been left largely upon their own resources to work out their progress. As a rule there had been no lesson helps and without such helps and other standards it is not surprising that many schools had been discontinued. At this Convention it was pointed out that it would be necessary to inaugurate a double program to unify the schools and to inspire the schools. "Unification and Inspiration," therefore, became the motto of the period.

The leaders of the day were caught by the idea of every person studying the same lesson at the same time all over the world. They did not consider the needs of the pupils and the importance of suiting the material to these needs. After a long debate the principle of a uniform lesson was adopted. It is generally recognized that these lessons accomplished the purpose for which they were designed for they did result in unifying the Sunday-school program of the continent. While we believe that these lessons should be immediately superseded by lessons designed to meet the needs of the various ages of childhood, it must be admitted that the Uniform Lessons made a distinct contribution toward the development of religion throughout the country.

The Indianapolis Convention authorized the Sunday School convention system. This system of national, state, county, and township conventions was designed to furnish sufficient inspiration to carry the movement along successfully. At the same time the various conventions served the purpose of disseminating information concerning methods of work and the general program of local churches.

III. TRAINING AND GRADING.

The third epoch extends from 1890 to about 1918. This period is characterized by the movement in favor of Teacher Training and Graded Lessons. Bishop John R. Vincent was among the first to start the campaign for Teacher Training. At a meeting of his church conference in 1886 he was able to have passed a resolution calling for the organization of institutes for the training of Sunday School Teachers. Soon came the idea of the Sunday School Assembly, which was first held at Chautauqua Lake, New York. This provided a prolonged period of training and as it developed it became especially helpful to all who were privileged to come under its influence.

The teacher training movement developed slowly. It would not be correct to say that Teacher Training in religious education has kept pace with the Teacher Training in public education. There are always many people who insist on having a mature and well trained teacher to teach arithmetic and geography who are quite willing to send the same children to a Bible teacher who has had little or no preparation for his task. In 1903 Teacher Training work was firmly organized in the International Association and since that time the advance has been quite encouraging.

Paralleling the development of Teacher Training came the enthusiasm for a graded school and graded lessons and this movement developed rapidly between 1903 and 1908. As soon as schools began to classify the children in groups according to age, educational leaders began the agitation for a graded curriculum. The Uniform Lessons were used almost universally and the campaign for a graded curriculum was vigorously opposed by certain interests, which were engaged in handling lesson helps based upon the Uniform Lessons. Various experiments were made with graded lessons and notwithstanding strong opposition, the International Convention held at Louisville, Ky., in 1908 voted unanimously to authorize its lesson committee to prepare a graded course of lessons for such schools as might desire to use them.

A WORD FROM WOLFEBORO, N. H.

The successful execution of plans conceived last January at the annual parish meeting of the Christian church, resulted in the re-opening of "The Little White Church" last Sunday with a pure Colonial type church auditorium, a newly furnished vestry, enlarged class rooms, and a gymnasium, all of which is a source of great satisfaction to those directly concerned and of congratulation from those interested.

The hundreds of people who attended the services last Sabbath found in this old church edifice, (erected in 1833 and moved to its present site in 1858) a complete transformation. An old-fashioned merit of style presents itself informally and exceptionally complete to all who enter. On approaching the church one is attracted by the prominence of two ornamental tablets of Colonial design—one displaying the church activities, the other a history of this venerable institution, and above the entrance a charming little English window completes the symmetry of the splendid front.

The inside walls are paneled and finished in delicate brown, while the vaulted ceiling is just a shade away from pure white. A beautiful gallery with colonial pillars and balustrade, with a seating capacity of 100 is easily approached from the vestibule which is decorated in self colors of brown. A new choir chair rail of early type adds to the beauty of the rostrum. The main floor is highly polished; all the furniture and organ case is renewed in mahogany finish. Leather covered doors swing softly on cushion hinges. Runners of rich body brussels, matching the platform carpet, complete the color scheme. The hymn-books are on the side walls and in front of the pulpit is a new mahogany communion table.

The pipe organ, a 75 years old instrument of devotional type, operates by an electric organ-blow located in the basement. The lighting of the church is from a special designed pendant dome, very soft and ornamental in its simplicity. The choir section has concealed lights above the arcade. A spacious vestry opening into the main auditorium seats 100 people. Downstairs is the Sunday school room for the primary department, a fully equipped kitchen and a gymnasium readily adapted to the use as a dining room with separate entrance.

A new hymnal of inter-denominational character has been purchased. The 100 new "Songs of Service" for the Sunday school department is the gift of a Friend, and the 100 new chairs for the vestry and gallery were presented by a Friend. Five memorial windows of early English design are on their way from the builders and when installed, the Christian church edifice with its white spire, will stand out typical of the pure spirituality of the early days and holding forth its welcome to men of all faiths who worship God in spirit and in truth.

The services last Sunday were very largely attended, Dr. Lucian Edgar Follansbee of Portsmouth, N. H., who for twenty-five years has been one of the foremost lecturers on the Chautauqua platform was the speaker both morning and evening and presented messages that thrilled and inspired the appreciative audiences. Rev. A. Edwin Keigwin of New York, assisted in the morning worship. The choir was assisted by Mrs. George Frederick Morse, Jr, of Boston, a soprano soloist of delightful personality and charming voice. Her singing last Sunday was of the highest order and greatly enjoyed. The musical programs were elaborate.

At the evening service, the local pastors assisted. Kindly recognition being made of the absence of Rev. Mr. Long. Situated on North Main street, at the entrance to Sewell road, The Little White Church is the Stranger's Sabbath Home.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Elon College, July 15.—A signal honor, that of the election to the chaplaincy of the Masonic and Eastern Star Home in Greensboro, has recently come to the venerable J. W. Wellons, now in his 97th year, and who has made his home in Elon College for the past twenty years as co-pastor of the local church and active trustee of the college.

Dr. Wellon's health failed him in the active ministry when he was about the age of 75 years. He was at that time located at Durham, N. C., and was pastor of the Christian church there. He then moved to Elon College where he has been a trustee since 1869, the year the college was founded and has since made his home here.

Dr. Wellons has a room in the west dormitory and is so to speak chaplain of the dining hall where he takes his meals with the college students, and where he has renewed his youth in the association with the young people who resort here from year to year.

In June without any suggestion on his part the trustees of the Masonic and Eastern Star Home elected him Chaplain of that institution and provided for him a room to be used as his whenever he could occupy it and allow him the privilege of going and coming as he may elect. This honor came to Dr. Wellons because of his life-long devotion to the Masonic order, his high reputation as a Christian minister, and the further fact that he is the oldest Royal Arch Mason in the State.

Dr. Wellons is at this time in Greensboro at the Masonic Home serving as Chaplain. He plans to divide his time between the college and the Masonic and Eastern Star Home so that he can keep in touch with the religious life and spirit of both institutions. For one of his years, Dr. Wellons is a very well preserved man, and while he would hardly engage in a marathon race he is still quite active in the race of life and a good runner therein.

A PRAYER.

O God, who knowest us to be set in the midst of so many and great dangers, that, by reason of the frailty of our nature, we cannot always stand upright; grant to us such strength and protection as may support us in all dangers and carry us through all temptations; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.—Quoted in "The Meaning of Service."

FAMILY ALTAR

BY REV. J. GREGORY MANTLE, D.D.,
In The Alliance Weekly.

SUNDAY

"And the barrel of meal wasted not" (I Kings 17:15).

"The woman took the handful of flour and the little oil and made a cake for the hungry prophet first, and then for herself and her household. Then she found that there was as much meal and oil left as she had before. There are several things to commend in this woman. One is her faith. She believed what was told her, and acted on it. It is when we do God's commandments that He blesses us. His promises are conditional, depending upon the fulfilment of our part. Had this woman not believed and obeyed, the wonderful two or three years' miracle in her house would not have been wrought. The woman's unselfish generosity must also be commended. She had enough only for a meal for herself and son, but she fed the stranger first. Had she prepared a meal for herself and son, and left the hungry prophet unfed, there would have been no miracle of increase. We must be ready to share our little with others who need, if we would have the blessing on ourselves."

Is thy cruse of comfort failing?
Rise and share it with another,
And through all the years of famine
It shall serve thee and thy brother.

Love divine will fill thy storehouse,
Or thy handful still renew;
Scanty fare for one will often
Make a royal feast for two.

"His eye seeth every precious thing" (Job 28:10).

"When I was in Australia I was anxious to go down a gold mine. The very name and sound of the thing was enough to fill the imagination with all sorts of wonders; so I put on the rough dress of the miner, and lit my candle, and went down some hundreds of feet underground. Then, the thick darkness only slightly disturbed by our candles, we splashed along through the pools that filled the tramways, and stooped through low and narrow passages, until we came to the place where the men were at work. Here and there between the darker rock ran a line of white quartz, just like a vein of marble. Not a sign or trace of gold glistened in the candlelight; not a single particle of the precious metal gleamed anywhere. The gold was in the quartz but invisible. To me there was no sign, no possibility of gold. Yet the expert saw the treasure in the quartz, and knew the flashing gold was there. This is the glory of our God that He sees in us an infinite worth; that which He can uplift and beautify and transform into His own very image and likeness. So gracious, so skilful is our Heavenly Master! Where others see nothing He sees much. 'His eye seeth every precious thing.' All we have to do is to give ourselves up to Him."

—MARK GUY PEARSE.

"Just as I am, Thy love unknown,
Has broken every barrier down;
Now to be Thine, yea Thine alone,
O Lamb of God I come."

TUESDAY

"When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and shut thy door" (Matt. 6:6).

"When thou prayest"—when thou gatherest up thy strength to seek thy God with all thy heart—"Shut the door." The closet has its temptations—first, the temptation not to enter, and then the temptation to step out as soon as carnal man can satisfy his conscience. It is in secret prayer that you make yourself a true worker before God. When thou prayest about thy work, go to thy closet and shut the door. Go afterwards to thy work in the strength gained in the secret place of prayer. "Shut the door," and thou wilt discover perpetual and ever fresh sources of life and power. The fountain is always open at the mercy seat where the fainting worker refreshes heart and mind and spirit. Only satisfy God with the genuineness of your prayers and the fountain will always be open to you, both for yourself and your loved ones. Let the furniture of your bedroom and your study know that you are not a sham minister, a sham worker, a sham Christian."—DR. ALEXANDER WHYTE.

"Oh, let my hand forget her skill,
My tongue be silent, cold and still,
This bounding heart forget to beat,
If I forget the mercy-seat."

WEDNESDAY

"I will praise the Lord with my whole heart" (Psa. 111:1).

"Blessed be God! He makes room for me. Come, my soul, he bids thee join his choir. He would hear thy voice, and that not only in the choruses, but for a solo. Think how that I can give to God a bit of music that none else can bring. Our characters differ much, and yet more do our circumstances. Now, nobody has ever yet been led along the way in all its windings by which I have come. To me has been given some token of His love that none else ever proved. So then I, even I, can bring some note of music, without which the great chorus of God's praise is incomplete. If I am dumb, there lies forever 'forgotten in unthankfulness' some revelation of His goodness, some deed of His love. Bless the Lord, O my soul! Do not envy any man. Do not try to be anybody else. Be thou filled with His praise; and if it be like no other, so much the better."—MARK GUY PEARSE.

"Praise the Saviour, ye who know Him;
Who can tell how much we owe Him?
Gladly let us render to Him
All we are and have.

"Jesus is the name that charms us;
He for conflict fits and arms us;
Nothing moves and nothing harms us,
When we trust in Him."

THURSDAY

"Men ought always to pray, and not to faint" (Luke 18:1).

"Pray believing, pray passionately, in the simplest of all words, with the simplest of all thoughts. Pray, for the manliest thing a man can do is to pray. It is the fastening of his life to the Eternal. It is the drinking of his thirsty soul out of the great Fountain of Life. Pray distinctly. Pray upon your knees, if possible. One grows tired of the thought which is perfectly true, that a man can pray anywhere and anyhow. Men have found it good to make the whole system pray. Kneel if you can, and the very bending of those obstinate and unused knees will make the soul kneel down in the humility in which it can be exalted in the sight of God. If you can read your Bible with your soul as well as your eyes you shall see Christ so much greater than the Christ of Palestine, that as you bend over the page, at one word of prayer, He will come to you through the centuries and not only be the Helper at your side but your Abiding Guest."—BISHOP PHILLIPS BROOKS.

"Be not afraid to pray—to pray is right—
Pray if thou canst with hope
Though hope be weak, or sick with long delay;
Pray in the darkness, if there be no light.
But if for any wish thou darrest not pray,
Then pray to God to cast that wish away."

FRIDAY

"Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together, and running over" (Luke 6:38).

"Give." Let the whole trend of your life be towards giving; let getting only be viewed as a means of giving; put far from you the world's thought that the path to happiness is found in getting, keeping and holding. "Give" to God, and for His dear sake, and according to His will, to all around you, of your best, to your utmost, with a defiance of the world's economics that would be madness in any but one in conscious partnership with the Lord of heaven and earth. "Give, and it shall be given unto you;" and the Lord of glory will ransack creation ere "any good thing" shall be wanting from your life. "Give," but if necessary be content to walk by faith now, until in the vision of the treasure laid up in heaven you shall see that "He is faithful who hath promised."

"Not the waste drops of thy cup overflowing,
Not the faint sparks of thy hearth ever glowing,
Not a pale bud from the June roses blowing;
Give, as He gave thee, Who gave thee to live."

SATURDAY

"Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed he went into his house . . . as he did aforetime" (Dan. 6:10).

If you were to use yourself (as far as you can) to pray always in the same place; if you were to reserve that place for devotion, and not allow yourself to do anything common in it; if you were never to be there yourself, but in times of devotion; if any little room (or if that cannot be) if any particular part of a room was thus used, this kind of consecration of it, as a place holy unto God, would have an effect upon your mind, and dispose you to such tempers, as would very much assist your devotion. For by having a place thus sacred in your room, it would in some measure resemble a chapel or house of God. This would dispose you to be always in the spirit of prayer when you were there; and fill you with wise and holy thoughts when you were by yourself. Your own apartment would raise in your mind such sentiments as you have when you stand near an altar; and you would be afraid of thinking or doing anything that was foolish near that place which is the place of prayer and holy intercourse with God.—WM. LAW.

Remember, God giveth each saint
Who will use it a golden key.
That key is called "prayer;" and when hands
That are strong by faith turn it 'round,
The locks and the bolts and the bands
Fly back, and God's treasures abound.

Some one has recently said: "Christianity is not easy. It never was easy." To this some one replies: "It seems to me that it is the easiest system of life. Jesus said My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Well, said, and yet there are ways in Christianity which may seem hard, but it may also be so because we have not yet learned the secrets of the divine life to such an extent as to ascertain, personally, the easy side of the Christian life. The yoke is easy and the burden is light, when Jesus carries the other end of the yoke, but it may be hard to the man who undertakes to carry both ends of the yoke on his own neck. The hardness of Christianity may arise from the fact that we are trying it in the light of human wisdom, rather than in the power of God.

IMPORTANT EVENTS OF THE SUMMER.

Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, Noon-Day, September 29th and 30th.

IMPORTANT: Have you enrolled in the Chautauqua and School of Methods of the Southern Christian Convention, at Elon College, N. C., August 28th to September 4th?

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

The Temple Rebuilt and Dedicated.—Ezra, chs 3:6.

Golden Text: "My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of Jehovah." Ps. 84:2.

CENTRAL THOUGHT: What God's House should mean to a community.

LESSON TEACHINGS.

The spirit of praise and thanksgiving filled the hearts of the workers. Christians today accomplished most when they live and work and praise in this spirit of joyful service and love.

Dean Brown, of Yale Divinity School recently declared: "What an hour for the Christian Church. It is the one institution on earth which is brave enough to stand up and accept the social ideal in its entirety. And it will never cease its effort or limit the range of its prayer until the great consummation has been reached. What a glorious privilege to belong to an organization which has the moral courage to display its limitless aspiration on behalf of human life. The church itself is built out of men and women who have declared their loyalty to Christ and are undertaking to live in the same high mood. In them we have indeed a building of God, a house not made with hands, a habitation of the Spirit, eternal in the realm of moral values."

Worship of God is the most important thing in any town or country. The church is the place dedicated to worship and should be the center of a most holy influence for righteousness in the community.

I love Thy kingdom Lord,
The house of Thine abode;
The Church our blest Redeemer saved
With His own precious blood.

"I love Thy Church, O God!
Her walls before Thee stand,
Dear as the apple of Thine eye,
And graven on Thy hand."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

August 6, 1922.

BETTER RECREATION. I. Thess. 5:16-24.
(Consecrated Meeting).

THOUGHTS ON THE TOPICS.

"I believe that recreation is a Christian duty, and that all Christian duties fall within the province of the church."

AMOS R. WELLS.

"If ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others?" Christ evidently believed in social intercourse. Christian Endeavor recreation promotes good fellowship through social activity.

"True recreation is change of occupation." Christian Endeavor has a great opportunity to provide through recreation for the social needs of the young people of the community. In no way can the church better serve youth than by raising the standard of play in the vicinity.

God wants us to enjoy life. He is constantly reminding us of the fact in His Book. Pollyanna calls our attention to the fact that there are eight hundred rejoicing texts in the Bible. "Surely," she says, "if God told us to rejoice eight hundred times, he meant for us to rejoice some." God doesn't put his stamp of approval on longfaced Christians.

Do you take God into consideration in your recreation? Does your recreation tear down, or build up? Can you serve God better because of the recreation you enjoy? There is the test.

Have you enrolled for the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College, August 28th to September 4th? A number of pastors and Sunday School teachers have already sent in their enrollment cards.

Dr. Staley has agreed to teach a class of pastors for one hour each morning. This will be a course which will be especially helpful and inspiring to all our pastors. For Sunday School workers there will be a number of classes. For those interested in Sunday School organization and administration, as superintendents and officers, Prof. A. L. Hook, will teach a class. Teachers of adult will find an interesting class taught by Dr. W. P. Laurence. Rev. E. H. Rainey, now of Ocean View, Virginia, has agreed to teach the class of those interested in Young People's work in the Sunday School, while Elementary workers will have the opportunity of having class work with Mrs. Fred E. Bullock, Field Secretary of Sunday School work, of the American Christian Convention. There will be other classes to choose from and conference hours with leaders to be announced later. Many good things are in store for those who attend the Chautauqua.

For the scores of young people who signed Life Recruit cards in the Men and Millions' Campaign, the Chautauqua offers an opportunity to spend a week in definite preparation for Christian service. If you signed that solemn pledge: "Conscious that my life is God's gift, and that I am His and desiring to give myself in a definite way for His service, I covenant with Him" to enter the ministry, or become a home or foreign missionary or to do some Christian service as a life work, can you overlook the challenge which the Chautauqua and School of Methods offers you to help you to keep your covenant with God and His church.

HOW DO YOU READ YOUR BIBLE?

How do you read your Bible? Do you follow any definite plan in your daily readings, or do you read at random, perhaps just where it happens to open? What do you remember about the chapters you have read during the past year? Do you read it as a duty, a pastime, a pleasure, or with a desire to learn its truths and grasp in a comprehensive way the development of the plan of redemption?

Why not make a special study of one book or one subject. Why not map out for yourself a course of daily readings for six months or a year along a given line and thus familiarize your self thoroughly with that one portion of scripture? Or better still, why not secure a course that has been outlined by a committee composed of eminent Bible scholars, who have given much time and thought to the plan? You have an organization in your community that will be glad to furnish you such a plan and in addition will give you notes and explanations to aid you to better understanding of the portions read.

That organization is the Sunday School. A period of six months has just been devoted to a study of the Kingdoms of Judah and Israel, taking up the history of the division of the Kingdom and following it to the downfall of Israel and the captivity of Judah. We are now spending three months in the study of the exile and restoration of Judah, as described in Ezekiel, Daniel, Ezra, Esther, Nehemiah and Malachi. You will find every lesson interesting. Beginning with October we are going to spend three months on the subject: "Jesus the World's Savior," as recorded in the Gospel of Luke.

A five year course of daily Bible reading, following the course outlined by the International Lesson Committee, will give you a great fund of Bible knowledge and a comprehensive view of the plan of salvation from the fall of Adam to the coming of Christ

I have been informed by Rev. E. M. Carter that there will be a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Bethlehem College at Noon Day Church on July 29th in connection with the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor convention of Alabama Conference.

I have been in correspondence with several young people in Georgia and Alabama with reference to coming to Elon College this fall. It is my plan now to attend this meeting of the trustees, and I shall be very glad for the young people who plan to go to college this fall to make it convenient to be present at this convention. I hope the friends of the college will urge these young people to be present that I may confer with them

THE SEVEN PIT FALLS ON LIFE'S HIGHWAY.

"Knowing this that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is free from sin.—6:6, 7.

The Bible speaks in an unmistakable way of "The body of sin" with which every person is born into the world. Forgiveness of the sins which we actually committed does not destroy the depraved nature within; but provision of grace has been made that, subsequent to regeneration, the very roots of sin in the heart may be destroyed. Thank God!

The purpose of this article is not so much to deal with the means of deliverance, but to show forth various prominent traits of the Old Man. These vary in different individuals, one or two traits usually being more manifest in unsanctified souls. Perhaps the best way to deal with the subject at this time is to note the workings of this body of sin in various Bible characters and God's disapproval.

1. Unbelief as found in Abraham the father of the faithful.

Although having sufficient faith to arise and start for a country, he knew not where, according to the divine command, and later by finding God true to His own promises, having faith "Accounting that God was able to raise him (Isaac) up from the dead;" yet carnal unbelief arose in the matter of Ishmael. This brought division in the household, and also through whose lineage Mohammed, the false prophet, was born, thus deceiving and cursing millions.

Many souls remain in the bondage of sin because they do not believe it possible to have victory through the blood, and others enter into the promised land through unbelief, as did the children of Israel. Unbelief has given rise to all the modern destructive criticisms of the Bible. If faith in the Bible and the issues of life and death as set forth therein really gripped the hearts of men, all would flee the wrath to come. An evil heart of unbelief is a trait of the old man. Abraham's faith was perfected, but the record of his unbelief and its results has been left as a warning to all.

II. Murmuring is manifest in the children of Israel.

All Bible readers will remember how the children of Israel murmured first about one thing and then about another, although the Lord brought them out of Egypt with outstretched arm in a marvelous way. After leaving Mt. Sinai, and even before, they murmured and complained. They said, "Up, make us gods, which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we know not what is become of him." Exodus 32:1.

At Marah they murmured against Moses. When food failed, manna was given from heaven, but after awhile they said, "Our soul loatheth this light food. Give us meat to eat." Again they said, "We do remember the leeks and onions of Egypt" etc. Continually grumbling and complaining, with which God was so displeased, he would not suffer any of the entire congregation to enter into the promised land, except Caleb and Joshua. Complaining and murmuring against people or our lot, is a trait of the old man.

III Anger.

Many church members think there is no sin in losing the temper and getting angry as occasion may seem to arise, but the Bible says, "But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. Lie not one to another, seeing ye have put off the old man with his deeds. Col. 3:8, 9. James records, "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." In the time of stress, Moses spake unadvisedly with his lips, for which cause God would not permit him to enter the promised land. God's grace is sufficient to enable justified persons to control their temper and take away the roots of bitterness in the sanctified. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." Isa. 26:3. Other manifestations of wrath are sullenness, drawing away in spirit from those with whom we do not see eye to eye, etc.

IV. Selfishness.

Before his experience at the brook when Jacob prevailed with God and his name and character were changed, Jacob was not only selfish, but a scheming, long-headed wire puller, always looking out for and twisting things to benefit Jacob. Alas, too often something of this is manifest in unsanctified preachers, scheming to get the charges which pay best, etc., seeking for places of prominence in the Church. Even some professing entire sanctification are not guiltless, but these do not possess. A pure heart is unselfish and "seeketh not her own", but is only desirous of serving its Master regardless of circumstances. Jesus was absolutely frank and open and absolutely unselfish. "For even Christ pleased not Himself." Jacob met his match in Laban, who went the line of deception when he gave Leah to wife rather than Rachel for whom he had served seven years. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

V. Unholy Lust.

David's weakness was this which not only led to the sin of adultery, but in an effort to cover up this sin Uriah the Hittite was slain. While David was active he did not fall into this sin, but left in Jerusalem while his army went to battle in an evil hour he fell. Under the light of the Spirit he prayed not only for forgiveness, but for a clean heart. "Purge me with hyssop and I shall be clean; wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." Psalm 51:7. His prayer was heard, but he also must suffer and his house, from which the sword has never departed. Shortly after his son Amnon was slain for a sin by Absalom, and then Absalom fell in battle when rebelling against the throne. Solomon's heart was led astray by "strange women." "Can a man take fire in his bosom and his clothes not be burned? Can one go upon hot coals and his feet not be burned?" Prov. 6:27, 28. "A wound and dishonor shall he get; and his reproach shall not be wiped away." Pro. 6:33.

These dealing with the outbreaking of the old man of sin in people otherwise good may seem drastic, but God would teach us the subtlety of the old man and thus persuade and warn us to deliverance.

VI Pride.

Although King Saul was very humble when anointed king of Israel his heart became puffed up, a victim to pride and open disobedience to the words of God through the prophet Samuel. "Pride goeth before a fall." One of the seven things which is an abomination to the Lord is "a proud look." Pro. 6:17. Pride manifests itself in immodest dress, worldly attire not suited to warmth, neatness, modesty and hygiene. Pride is often the cause of violent discord. Most of church schism may be attributed to pride, which occasions desire for leadership, etc. "Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" Let him that would be greatest be servant of all." "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet (a most menial service), ye also ought to wash one another's feet." And yet men may literally do this and have much pride in the heart." Some take pride in their plain attire. Only the blood of Jesus can purge out the roots of pride. The devil fell through pride.

VII. Unholy ambition.

Before Pentecost the disciples were guilty of revenge, unholy ambition, sectarian bigotry and cowardice, resulting in their humiliation; but thank God they tarried at Jerusalem till the Holy Ghost fell on them; and this promise "is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off." Peter declared God "put no difference between us (Jews) and them (Gentiles), purifying their hearts by faith." Acts 15:9. God does radical things which prove out in every day life. Either the old man of sin is dead in the heart, purged out, or is not dead. The entire character of the apostles was changed at Pentecost, as was that of Jacob by the brook Jabbok. With the old man in the heart the inner battle continues; but "there remaineth a rest to the people of God."

Beloved, cross over into Beulah land today. Jesus wills your entire sanctification. "Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it." He suffered "without the gate that he might sanctify the people with his own blood."

"Now O my Joshua, bring me in,
Cast out thy foes; the inbred sin,
The carnal mind remove;
The purchase of thy death divide!
And O! with all the sanctified
Give me a heart of love."

BRO. JOHNSON AND THE NEW BIRTH.

DEAR SUN:

I am gratified, yes comforted by Rev. J. Lee Johnson's article in the Sun, July 13th issue. In this day when there is so much denial of the re-birth, such wholesale perversion of the Word, not only is it timely and fit, but urgent, impelling, that men and women of his caliber and faith come to the fore.

I know that for daring to speak and teach as brother Johnson speaks and teaches, the social education of today (much of it misnamed religious education) demands a price; but, whatever that price may be, I pray God He will not let His true servants and ambassadors be afraid and that more and more He will give them courage publicly to defend and proclaim His unchangeable, mighty truth. We know strong delusion" already has gripped the minds, if not the hearts, of many honest believers; some may be intentionally reprobate but others, no doubt unwittingly are deceived. And we know that in the end "that Wicked shall be revealed whom the Lord shall consume, etc;" but because God can do His will without your help or mine, can we afford not to resist with all the power and grace He gives us, the onslaught of error and evil which so threatens and delays Christ's purpose for His earthly church and so robs Christian men and women of their richest earthly inheritance? for the happiness of God's true children is not all a deferred legacy; God intends us to be happy now as well as hereafter. Moreover, it is the measure of faithfulness here in the face of struggle and persecution, and victory over these, which develop and determine capacity for the enjoyment of that perfect and glorious life beyond.

Yes, God shall save His remnant in spite of us. But how about ourselves becoming "cast-a-ways?" How about the love wherewith He loves us and which we are privileged to possess and commanded to exercise toward everyone? "Love rejoiceth in the truth."

A nominal attitude is not enough today. It was not enough in Saul's time. By his mere silence Saul "consented." Even more so in this present time omission may be equivalent to commission. Let us beware. If we fear God and love men's souls we will be careful to take heed according to the Word and not according to the doctrines of men.

CHILD'S HOUR

SEEING THROUGH SERVICE.

They had saved for this trip for five long years, these two young working girls, and now, fairly started, they were in an ecstasy.

"Oh!" breathed Clarice. "The mountains! The ocean! Harriet, I believe we shall see God on this trip!"

Harriet's eyes widened and she pondered.

"Yes," she decided, lying awake that night from the novelty of being in a sleeper. "Looking at God's wonderful works ought to make us see Him."

As the trip progressed, however, it seemed as though something always prevented Harriet from "looking at God's wonderful works." Clarice grew impatient.

Harriet," she remonstrated once, "let that child alone and enjoy yourself."

Harriet tried to look over the head of the restless child she held and see the great hills which, seeming to grow out of the horizon, were enshrouded with the most enchanting purple tint she had ever seen. It certainly was trying to hold a fretful baby while coming in sight of the first mountains she had ever beheld. A look at the child's mother, however, out of whose tired face sleep was ironing the lines of care, checked Harriet's sigh and she gave her entire attention to the baby.

Clarice raved over the mountains that night; but long after she slept Harriet lay recalling that exquisite purple, and, when her eyes closed, the smile of one who sees a vision was upon her lips.

Early the next morning people began flocking to the observation car. The Rockies were to be crossed that day! The girls, young and quick, secured excellent seats, but when Harriet saw an old lady unable to find a chair, she sprang up and put the white-haired woman into her own.

Then, imprisoned behind finely woven, dust-filled screens, which are the killjoys of Pullman travel, Harriet sat during that magnificent ride. Clarice in the observation car, could see snow glistening on the peaks, and watch the engine as it curved and twisted, seemingly to cling, with its train like a fly to the granite sides. Once, in the afternoon, hearing that an open observation car was being attached to the train, Harriet dashed to the rear, hoping to secure a seat, but once more she encountered the mother and baby.

Harriet glanced at the frail old lady and at the heavy child. "Give him to me," she smiled to the mother.

It was nearly evening when she found a vacant chair near Clarice and sank into it.

"Hasn't it been grand!" she beamed. "Clarice, you must have seen God today!"

Clarice started. So occupied had she been in clinging to the best seat in the car, in straining every nerve to drink in all the beauty, that hardly a thought of the Creator had come to her all day. See God? She glanced sharply at Harriet and struck by her expression, the words died on her lips. What—whom—was Harriet seeing?

The next day presented a different scene. The face of nature had changed in a night. Gaunt white hills relieved only by a sage brush and stunted evergreens which stood up stiffly on the crust they had burst through, confronted the travelers. Weary stretches of plains upon which alkali dust lay like snow had to be crossed. The porter closed the windows to keep out the heat, and the passengers began to cultivate each other's acquaintance. The little old lady fluttered over her daughter, who had succumbed to the heat, and lay supine on a seat while Harriet took care of the baby.

"Is it your business to look after that child?" scolded Clarice; but Harriet only smiled.

All day the train flew, like a thing afraid, through desolation, with hardly one human eye to note it as it climbed the chalky mountains and traveled the scorching plains. Now and then passengers would lift a shade and peer out. Once the whole car exclaimed over a beautiful white lake, and again over a lovely blue river, only to laugh at themselves a moment later for being deceived by a mirage.

"Clarice, wasn't it wonderful that we saw God as plainly today as yesterday!" marvelled Harriet that night. She did not notice Clarice's stare. She was tired. The baby had been so cross, but his mother had enjoyed a good rest, so Harriet was at peace.

Clarice was sleepless that night, and when morning came she had something to say to her friend.

"Harriet, we are each missing something on this trip. You are missing your fair share of the scenery and I am missing my chance to see God."

"But—but"—puzzled Harriet, "one sees God through his works."

"Yes," replied Clarice; "but one sees Him plainer through service. One may view the grandest sights on earth and catch not a glimpse of God, or one may see Him constantly, although living in a basement in a city. He anoints the eyes of those who serve Him."

Toward evening the train began climbing the Coast Range, and magnificent pines crowded near the track and swept up the mountain sides in miles of marvelous greenness. Clarice insisted upon Harriet's taking turns with her at the window, and she helped care for the weary passengers.

"My husband will be so disappointed," sighed the fagged little mother. "He is a literary man, and I promised to write a description of this scenery for him, but I am unequal to it."

"Let me write it," cried Clarice "I ought to be able to and I should love to try."

At Los Angeles the girls saw their charges leave the train, and bade them a cheery good-bye.

Two weeks at Coronado were wonderful to the girls. They swam, visited the battleships in the harbor, marveled over the novel sights of a Southern city, and every day, at high tide they sought a place where, perched on high rocks, they could see and hear the ocean in all its grandeur. On their last night, tanned, wind-blown, and rather serious, they sat in their usual place.

Clarice leaned toward her friend.

"I got a letter today," she stated, "and I have decided it ought to go to you. It is from the man I wrote that description for. He wants me for a private secretary, but you can take the position as well as I. It means good pay, congenial work, and a home in beautiful surroundings."

"Clarice! Clarice!" cried Harriet, nearly falling off the rocks in her excitement. I got a letter, too. It was from my little old lady offering me a position as companion to herself and daughter, and that dear baby. I didn't tell because I wasn't going to leave you."

"Oh, Harriet!" Clarice gasped. It couldn't be more like a story book, could it? Writing, living here—I can't think its true."

"We did see God on this trip, didn't we?" smiled Harriet as they left the rocks an hour later.

"Yes," deliberated Clarice. "You saw Him first through service. I saw Him afterward through you and we both have seen Him through His works besides."

"And He has seen us," exulted Harriet clasping the two letters happily.—CHARLOTTE E. GRAY, in Western Christian Advocate.

Evidently the Report of the Superintendent of the Orphanage has been misplaced in the mails. The paper was held till the last moment expecting the copy would appear. Next week we will doubtless have a double or combined report.

THE GIFT OF GOD.

Jesus spoke to the woman at the curb of Jacob's well in the land of Samaria of "living water," and she thought it must be some device which would save her coming the long way from Sychar with her pitcher to the well. He spoke to her of "the gift of God," and yearned to reveal Himself to her as the long expected Savior; but her mind was filled with technical questions concerning sacred places and religious rituals.

How like that is humanity still! "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is now speaking unto you," is still the urgent, pathetic appeal of the infinite God to those whose eyes are unseeing while professing to see and understand all things. The benefits and conveniences of civilization accepted as the chief blessing of Christianity; the outward form and name of religion placed for a heart knowledge of the Son of God! Infinite opportunity in one's hands, but to let it slip without recognition; to have the Messiah sitting by you and to see Him sit; to look upon the day as commonplace and drab with utter monotony, when the most sacred revelations of an infinite God are unfolding before your unseeing eyes—that is tragedy!

And yet that is happening all about us, perchance in our own lives, and we know it not. Perhaps some of the greatest moments of life come to you dressed in the garb of the commonplace. You cannot be sure when the Christ in person may pass your way bearing the infinite blessings of the kingdom. To despise Him in the form He pleases to take while exclaiming, "When the Messiah shall appear, He will tell us all things," is blindness indeed. Do you look to discover Christ in spectacular or miraculous manifestation, forgetting that the ordinary ways of life are the channels of God's revelation?

The discovery of ourselves and our real needs is the work of Christ through the Spirit today. The sinfulness of the human heart and our infinite separation from God He would have us see, that we may become like Him and dwell in His companionship; but this revelation in unpleasant and we put it from us and look for Christ to come another way. The testimony of the woman is still true—"He told me all things that ever I did; is not this the Christ?"

The "Gift of God" is not all addition. The excavation must precede the laying of the foundation for Christian experience and character. Has the Christ come into your life today and passed on unrecognized, leaving no blessing of grace and peace? Oh that we might recognize the form He wears and accept the conditions He imposes that we may find at our heart's door an abundance of riches and grace!

The common events of the day have come and gone. What have they left with you? Are you the better and richer for them? Have you seen in them the "Gift of God," and recognized in the messenger the face of the King?

Called Home

Henry T. Johnson, a native of Wake Co. and a citizen of Morrisville "fell asleep" June 21, 1922, and was buried at Christian Chapel, Chatham Co. where he had lived for a long time. He served through the entire civil war and was nearly eighty at his death. He leaves a widow, three sons and five daughters.

The writer knew him personally for over twenty years (a part of the time very intimately) and can testify to his character. He was considerate and cautious with his words, clean in habits, and his promise was better than most mortgages and notes.

HOUSTON

Mary Francis Houston, Wife of R. H. Houston, 1910 Peachtree St. Portsmouth, died July 4, 1922. in the 52 year of her age. She leaves to mourn her lost, besides her husband, eight children. Clifton P. Houston, Mrs M. Sykes, Harry W. Houston, Richard H. Houston, Jr., Cordelia Virginia Houston, Mrs. Eva C. Owens, Ella S. Houston, of Portsmouth, John E. Houston, of Brooklin, N. Y.

She was a member of Elm Ave. Christian Church, according to her husband's statement she was a kind wife, and a loving mother. She was especially attached to her children and they to her, and her death was a grief to them. She was a great sufferer, but she bore it all with patience. Children, friends and doctors did all they could to keep her alive, but God had called, and we were helpless, and must submit. To Him who is not only loving and merciful, but is too wise to ever make a mistake.

The funeral service was conducted at Elm Ave. Christian Church by the writer, her pastor. And her body was laid to rest in Oak Grove Cemetery, Portsmouth Va, to wait the resurrection morning. May God comfort the loved ones left behind.

ELISHA BRADSHAW.

Pastors guard your own! Be careful of your language. The forces of evil are standing at your elbow ready to pick up your own words and turn them against you. Recently a young and enthusiastic pastor in the East was reported as saying, "When your church runs down and is about ready to be closed up, invite the dance and the theater in and it will be filled again." The devil heard this as he stood hard by and watched the proceedings and said, "Well, I guess I'd better be going. They'll invite me in next." There is no homeopathic cure for spiritual apathy or worldliness. No matter how resourceful a man may be, he cannot resuscitate righteousness by using the means accredited to the force of evil.

A CREED.

I do believe
That, while in this old world few things are sure,
Right, truth, and love forevermore endure;
That these are 'mongst the things most worth our while —A song, a smile,
The wiping of a tear from eyes that grieve.
I do believe
That in the day of famine or of feast
That one is richest who has sought the least;
That, spite of all earth's woes, and tears and pains,
Love is and reigns;
And sunshine through the ages Time doth weave.
I do believe
God plants some seeds of gladness in each day,
And smiles on children happy at their play;
That living men, though paupers, churls, or slaves,
Are more than graves
To which the grass and mosses damply cleave.

THE TEST OF CHARACTER.

There is something finer than to do right against inclination; and that is to have an inclination to do right. There is something nobler than reluctant obedience, and that is joyful obedience. The rank of virtue is not measured by its disagreeableness, but by its sweetness to the heart that loves it. The real test of character is joy. For what you rejoice in, that you love. And what you love, that you are like.—

HENRY VAN DYKE.

A POET'S THOUGHT.

Life changes all our thoughts of heaven:
At first we think of streets of gold,
Of gates of pearl and dazzling light,
Of shining wings and robes of white,
And things all strange to mortal sight.
But in the afterward of years
It is a more familiar place
A home unhurt by sigh or tears,
Where waiteth many a well-known face.
With passing months it comes more near,
It grows more real day by day.
Not strange or cold, but very dear—
The glad home-land not far away,
Where none are sick, or poor, or lone
The place where we shall find our own.
And as we think of all we knew
Who there have met to part no more,
Our longing hearts desire home, too,
With all the strife and trouble o'er.

HAPPY IN GOD.

Above all things, see to it that your souls are happy in the Lord. Other things may press upon you, the Lord's work even may have urgent claims upon your attention, but I deliberately repeat: It is of supreme importance that you should seek, above all other things, to have your souls truly happy in God himself. Day by day seek to make this the most important business of your life. This has been my firm and settled conviction for the last thirty and five years.

SILER CITY NOTES.

July 9th was Sunday School Rally Day, at Patterson Grove. Much of the day was taken up with singing by choir from Pleasant Hill. Brother Morice Stuart of the Friend's church preached in the morning and Professors F. M. Wright of Ashboro and R. W. Isley of near Liberty spoke in the afternoon.

Because of the soul stirring songs and instructive speeches, we feel encouraged, and we have more definite aims to labor for. We would like to have larger attendance in the Sunday School, and a Teacher's Training Class.

I would be glad to become pastor of any churches within reach of my home on Siler City route for the next year.

MR MOODY'S LITTLE SERMON ON GRACE.

One day when Mr. Moody was giving a talk to the Northfield Seminary girls on card playing, theater-going and dancing, one young lady asked him if he could not admit that dancing among family friends was not only harmless, but somewhat desirable, inasmuch as it tended to add grace to one's figure. Mr Moody replied: "My dear girl, I would a thousand times rather have you get more grace in your heart and less in your heels."

The Eastes Evangelistic Campaign closed

here on Sunday night, February 26th Before 7 P. M., the church was packed to it's utmost capacity and hundreds were unable to get in to hear the farewell message of Rev. M. Eastes and Prof. Balmond. A total of 228 persons confessed the Lord Jesus Christ as their Savior with many more left under conviction. Without question this was the greatest revival held in this church for many years. To every service crowds attended and on many occasion many were turned away. To begin our song service a half hour before the schedule time on account of the crowds was a very frequent occurrence.

The morning prayer-meetings in the home of the people were reasons of great spiritual refreshing. Frequently these meetings were attended by more than two hundred people. These meetings are continuing and will continue for some time to come.

One of the enjoyable features of the meetings was the "Booster Choir" of 100 to 150 boys and girls directed by Mr. Balmond who is an adept in directing choruses as well as being a splendid soloist. He sung his way into the hearts of the people. Mr Eastes preached the Word faithfully and fearlessly without any sensationalism and even the unsaved appreciated his worth as a man of God. These men constituted the finest evangelistic party that has been in Frederick for many years. No church will make any mistake in securing their services—Baltimore Methodist.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

In the Valley of Armageddon.—

The University of Pennsylvania has been excavating in the valley of Armageddon. They cut a deep trench in the earth, and discovered the ruins of seven or eight ancient cities, one on top of the other. This only adds light to what is already known, that the valley of Megiddo, which is the valley of Armageddon, has been the burying place of the ages. For thousands of years the nations of the earth have met each other on the plains of Armageddon and grappled in mighty death struggles. And on those same plains of Armageddon will occur the last battle the world will ever know, a battle in which blood will flow to the bits of the horse bridles for two hundred miles.

Dr. W. C. Wicker at Columbia University.—

Rev. Prof. W. C. Wicker, D.D., is teaching this summer in Columbia University, N. Y. City. This is the sixth summer he has spent in this university teaching, and that is a fine recognition of the talent of the Christian Church, and it speaks well for the teaching talent in Elon College. When Columbia University will choose our men for a term of six years for its teaching force, we think Elon ought to consider itself fortunate in having such talent on its faculty. Prof. Wicker graduated in the summer course of Columbia University in a professional course in the Science of Education in 1920, and has since that time spent his summers there teaching. The class in which Prof. Wicker is teaching has 240 advanced students. He is thus associated with leading teachers of the day. He reads and grades all of the papers these students submit and gives them one hour of counsel and conference each day. We rejoice in this merited recognition of Dr. Wicker's ability.

Sectarian Doctrine and Bible Doctrine.—

One of our exchanges tells us that there is widespread hatred of what we call doctrine. Everywhere there seems to be objection to the doctrinal idea. It must be that the people have gotten some distorted idea of doctrine, or they would not be so opposed to it. Christian doctrine is one of the foundation stones of Christianity, and indeed without Bible doctrine, Christianity not only could not have power, but it could not even live. Christianity is expressed in doctrinal terms, and so we could not have the true idea of real Christianity without the presence of doctrine. Most likely the opposition to doctrine is based on the fact that real Bible doctrine has been abused till a false ideal of doctrine has been given to men and women. They have in mind some sectarian doctrine, and no wonder they hate it, but there is a wide difference between a sectarian doctrine and Bible doctrine, or doctrines of grace. If there be no doctrines of grace, then there could be no doctrines of the Christian life, and if there be no doctrines of the Christian life, then there could be no Christian experience and then there could be no Christian life, nothing but a form of Christian life. Brethren, let us learn something—let us distinguish between the cocoon and its shell, and let us make sure that we do not mix up the sectarian doctrine and the doctrines of grace—the teaching the way of salvation.

Based on The Teachings of Jesus.—

Mr. Roger W. Babson, the statistician, has spoken concerning the needs of our country in a most remarkable way, and the thing that is so remarkable is that he seems to speak from the high standpoint of a Christian. He sees our country's situation with the eyes of a man who fears God and is seeking to bring the people to a sense of their need of a deeper and richer conformity to the truths of Christianity. He says: "The need of the hour is not for more factories or materials, not more railroads or steamships, not more armies or more navies, but rather more education based on the teachings of Jesus. The prosperity of our country depends on the motives and purposes of the people. These motives and purposes are directed only in the right course through religion. In spite of their imperfections, this is why I believe in our churches, and why I am a great optimist on their future.

"We stand at the crossroads. We must choose between God and Mammon. Materialism is undermining our civilization as it has undermined other civilizations. Unless we heed the warning in time and get back to the real fundamentals, we must fall even as the civilizations of Egypt, Greece and Rome fell—and for the same reason.

"Statistics of every nation indicate that true religion is the power necessary for the development of its resources, and for its successful continuation. The challenge goes out to every man to support his church, to take an active part in the religious life of his community, to live according to the simple principles upon which this, the greatest country in the world, was founded three hundred years ago."

Here are The Facts—Who is Right?—

We are passing through times of testing now. Strikes seem to be the order of the day. Capital and Labor seem to be contending for supremacy on the ground that both wish the lion's share of the milk that may be in the cocoon. Here are the facts as given out from what seems to be reliable sources:

"A circumstance which has had powerful influence in turning sentiment against the unions is that they fully recognize the jurisdiction of the Board when it increased the railroads' payrolls to the extent of $600,000,000 a year, and repudiate its authority only when it reduces wages according to the same principle upon which it raised them.

"In the spring of last year, when living costs and wages were receding, the railroads fell into difficulties because of a severe slump in business, and sought relief from the burden of paying wartime wages. After full hearings, at which the workers were ably represented, the board ordered a 12 per cent reduction, effective July 1, 1921, representing an annual saving to the railroads of $400,000,000 a year.

"Meanwhile the increased schedules of freight and passenger rates had not produced enough additional revenue to meet operating expenses and pay the dividends which the Government morally underwrote when it assumed the power to fix both the revenues of the railroads and the wages they should pay. As a matter of fact, the charges were raised so far that they accentuated business depression, and there was a general demand that they be reduced. The result was that two months ago the Interstate Commerce Commission ordered cuts reducing the railroads' freight revenues about $400,000,000 a year, thus wiping out the saving made through the wage reduction of July, 1921.

"The railroads, therefore, proposed further decreases in wages, and, agreement with the unions proving impossible, the case was laid before the Federal Labor Board. Hearings began in Chicago on March 6 and ended April 29. Three decisions were rendered. On May 28 the Board announced a cut of $48,000,000 a year from the pay of the 400,000 maintenance-of-way workers. On June 6 it ordered a reduction of nearly $60,000,000 in the annual wages of 400,000 shopmen. On June 16 it ruled that there should be a decrease amounting to $26,500,000 annually in the pay of clerical and station forces. Added to the $400,000,000 cut of last year, these reductions represented an aggregate of $535,000,000—a very large sum, but still leaving to the men $65,000,000 of the $600,000,000 increase given in 1920.

"The vital point is that the Board applied in these cases identically the same principles it applied two years ago. Upon the ground that the cost of living had advanced, it then added $600,000,000 to the payroll; and upon the ground that the cost of living has receded, it has now ruled that there should be a corresponding wage reduction of $535,000,000, which leaves untouched the large increases granted under Government control. In each of the three cases the labor representatives on the Board filed a dissenting opinion, and on the last occasion went so far as to advise the workers to resort to a strike."

NOTES - PERSONALS

Welcome to the editorial field again. Shall be glad to get your paper—Rev. F. H. Senft, Editor Alliance Weekly, New York City.

Dr Staley and Dr Atkinson are going to visit the Carroll county mountain work early in August. It is a rough country, but it is very inviting.

Rev. H. H. Butler, Suffolk, Va., is expecting to hold a series of meetings at Antioch church, Isle of Wight County, Va., beginning the third Sunday in September.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D.D., has been down in Eastern Virginia for several days—he is doubtless at work, but he is in a good hand to take a rest and eat a plenty for the good of his body, and may be too much.

“Four Epochs of Sunday School History” by Dr. Minor C. Miller, of Bridgewater, Va., began in last issue of the “Sun” is concluded in this issue. All Sunday School workers will find this address instructive.

I preached for Bro. Elisha Bradshaw first Sunday in July. I had a real good time in the work there. We received one member and consecrated five children unto the Lord. Bro. Bradshaw is doing a good work in Portsmouth—Rev. H. H. Butler, Suffolk, Va.

We understand that the churches at Bethlehem, Nansemond Co, Va., and at Windsor and Mt Carmel, Isle of Wight Co, Va., are without a pastor and have been for several months. Now is the time to look after one for the coming year. Do not delay, as delays are dangerous. The three churches constitute one pastorate.

I preached at Antioch, Warren Co., N.C., yesterday, July 23, in the morning and at Bethlehem at 3 P. M. I distributed a few copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN at both Antioch and Bethlehem, and urged the people to subscribe. I will begin a protracted meeting at Ebenezer, Wake Co., N. C. next Sunday—Rev. D. A. Long, D.D., Franklinton, N. C.

I have advised the members of the six churches of which I am now pastor, to look out for another minister for next Conference year. These churches are located in three counties, and it is impossible for one minister to serve the people under such conditions—Rev. D. A. Long, D.D., Franklinton, N. C.

Let your church paper have the sympathetic help of our people. We are doing our best to give you a chance to do so. Now will you make the effort and so help the cause of Christ for which we labor—laboring together for the Lord's work, we believe is the right way to success. We cannot carry on our work without a church paper.

When are you going to begin special work for extending the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN SUN? If you will not do it now, when the paper is made so much larger and reduced in price, too, I do not know when you will do it—this is the day and the hour when you need to do your best for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Do get busy, and do it now.

The Venerable Rev. J. G. Bishop, D.D., and his devoted wife, have recently returned from Terre Haut, Ind., where they spent last winter with Rev. and Mrs. H. Russell Jay, and on his return to Dayton, he sent in his subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We welcome him to our list of supporters. Let our readers hear from you often, Dr. Bishop—THE SUN has room for your pen often.

Drs. N. G. Newman, L. F. Smith and R. C. Helfinstien are all attending a preachers' conference of two weeks at Union Theological Seminary here. I am sure they are getting some up to date theology from the Union point of view—Rev. W. C. Wicker, D.D. The Union point of view is rather significant, when we remember what it has stood for so many years.

There will be an important meeting of the Trustees of Bethlehem College at Wadley, Alabama, July 29. It is a very important meeting and a large attendance is much desired. This is the new institution the Southern Christian Convention is planning to establish in Alabama. We wish it great success. Its name seems to give promise of the character of the institution when fully established and at work. Let only the best talent be employed.

Rev. Jeremiah W. Holt, after serving the Christian church at Bethlehem, Alamance County, N. C., for 34 years, has tendered his resignation, and will on account of age and infirmity retire at the close of the present conference year. The church highly appreciates his service, and says as much in appropriate resolutions appearing in this issue. God bless the aged servant through his remaining days, and may his best days come as the crown of his life.

Bro. and Sister M. J. W. White, Norfolk, Va., are now on the Pacific Coast, making a flying visit in this vacation time to friends and relatives there and in the Northwest. In a message from them bearing date of July 13, 1922, and mailed at Yellowstone Park, they say: “We are here enjoying the wonders of the great park. We have five days here, but cannot hardly begin to see all the wonders though we have traveled nearly two hundred miles by automobile in the park.” We are glad for you, dear friends, and wish for you a safe return to dear old Virginia.

We are pained to learn of the serious accident which befell Mrs. A. A. Terrell of our Columbus, Ga., some weeks ago. She was attending a missionary meeting, and in opening a door to go to another room on committee work, she had opened the wrong door and fell down a 20 foot stairway, breaking her arm and a lower limb just above the ankle, and was otherwise bruised up. Her life was despaired of, but she is slowly coming back to health again and her loved ones and the church are hoping for the very best for her future. She is one of the most consecrated members of the Columbus church and indeed very useful—her influence is always found on the side of the best things for the church. Her friends will rejoice with her in the prospect of recovery.

“I have received the first copy of your first issue published in Richmond, Va. Please allow me to say that I am very pleased. There is nothing but compliments for your young predecessor. He is to be congratulated upon the success he made of the publication. I believe, it will be admitted, however, that experience and a life devoted to such work are certainly qualifications superior and renders a more useful service as an editor. To me this is already seen in these first copies, and I believe that, even though under a handicap, The Sun will be a superior publication. I shall await its visit with anxious delight—Chaplain H. E. Rountree, Port Au Prince, Haiti. Bro. Rountree has a fine field for service, and yet we would like to have him back in the home field for active pastoral service. We have great need of pastors.

Referring to the work of Bro. M. T. Sorrell in Carroll County, Va., Dr. J. O. Atkinson says: You know Bro. Sorrell is from our Catawba Springs church and is one of the most consecrated young men we have—converted and inspired under the labors of Rev. J. Lee Johnson's safe and sound teaching—Since that note was written the editor of this paper has made a visit to Carroll County and has seen something of the work this young brother is doing, and as Dr. A. says, it is wonderful to see what this dear young man is accomplishing. The people in this mountain region are very devoted to Bro. Sorrell. By all means he should remain with this work, or if he must return to college, then our Mission Board will be under the necessity of finding another man for that field, for it simply will not do for these people to have to do without a pastor, after getting such a good start and doing so well.

Our brother, Mr. John King, Suffolk, Va., has been appointed by the Governor of Virginia to represent the state of Virginia in a Commercial Congress, representing seven different countries of Europe, such as France, Belgium, Denmark, Switzerland, Germany and England. These representatives of this country will assemble in New York City about Aug 15, and will sail on the steamer George Washington for Europe on Aug. 19th. The idea of this Congress is to bring about a closer union and to demonstrate to them the value of the Southern States in supplying Europe with its various commodities. Bro. King is honored in being chosen one of the three men to so represent Virginia in this Commercial Congress. He will be permitted while on this mission to meet many of the dignitaries of Europe and will therefore be prepared to tell our readers of the best things in his sight-seeing in Europe, and he is hereby notified that his people of the Christian Church will expect regular letters from him while abroad for The Christian Sun. Do not forget to take along with you your best American pen and ink, and then be sure to use it well and wisely in letting us know of the most interesting scenes through which you may pass, giving our readers your views and impressions as you may have opportunity on the entire trip. God bless you and use you for good as you go and as you come.

“Your last week's issue of The Sun—the first to come from Richmond—was good and great I do not see how you and Managing Editor Kernodle are to keep up the high standard you set for yourselves in this issue, but I shall be hoping and praying for you daily. Since trying to be editor myself and having then realized the divine guidance and strength for our editor, I have made it a rule to pray for him definitely and anxiously every day. What a weight of responsibility and yet what a glorious opportunity our editor carries. He needs the daily intercession at the Throne on the part of his brethren and sisters. How I pray you may be spared and given the strength to hold up under the great task now laid upon your shoulders—Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D.D., Elon College, N. C. Thank you, brother. Your assurances and suggestions are most timely. Perhaps some may wonder what can be the responsibility of an editor, which Dr. A. considers so great. May we mention just one item. The editor of a church paper is to prepare spiritual food for thousands of people for each issue. It is supposed that we reach five people for every family into which The Sun goes. Say it amounts to ten thousand people reading The Sun each week. For all of these the editor is preparing mental and spiritual food. Now suppose he by a lack of divine guidance should fail to give out such food as will thus help his ten thousand readers, do you not see how he would fail in a large measure to fill his place as editor and so bring upon his own head the sense of condemnation for not having done his part well, and not only so, but would he not bring upon himself the condemnation of God in such a failure? Then let us have the prayers daily of our entire brotherhood.

The Advance in Maintaining Health.

In some respects the world really is advancing. For instance, in the matter of ridding the country of disease, real progress is making. From The Literary Digest we glean the following:

Specifically, as President Vincent writes in his annual report, recently issued to the press, 1921 a quarter-million annual appropriation to the School of Hygiene and Public Health of Johns Hopkins University, pledged two millions to Harvard for a school of health, contributed to public health training in Czecho-Slovakia, Brazil, and the United States, and aided the Pasteur Institute of Paris to recruit and train Personnel. It also promoted the cause of nurse training in America and Europe, underwrote an experimental pay clinic in the Cornell Medical School formally opened a complete modern medical school and hospital in Peking, assisted twenty-five other medical centers in China, and promised a million dollars for the medical school of Columbia University. The foundation also contracted to appropriate $3,500,000 to rebuild and reorganize the medical school and hospital of the Free University of Brussels, made surveys of medical schools in Japan, China, the Philip-India, Syria, and Turkey, supplied American and British medical journals to 112 medical libraries on the Continent, and supplemented the laboratory equipment and supplies of five medical schools in Central Europe. In addition, it defrayed the expenses of commissions from Great Britain, Belgium, Serbia, and Brazil, provided 157 fellowships in hygiene, medicine, physics and chemistry to representatives of eighteen countries, continued a campaign against yellow fever in Mexico, Central and South America, prosecuted demonstrations in the control of malaria in ten States, cooperated in hookworm work in nineteen governmental areas, and participated in rural health demonstrations in seventy-seven countries. Sundry services to many Governments and voluntary societies have also been rendered. These benefits were accomplished in part by the Foundation directly, but chiefly through its departmental agencies—the International Health Board, the China Medical Board, and the Division of Medical Education. Disbursements for the year totaled $7,444,565. while the administration expenses amounted to only $185,792. Pledges of gifts ahead, up to 1926, amount to $23,219,394. From the time it was chartered in 1913, the Foundation has disbursed, appropriated or pledged sums totaling $84,301,169. Its working capital now amounts to 174,511,957, and its physical property—lands, building and equipment—is valued at 8,668,813.

The progress in prevention, in which the Rockefeller Foundation is greatly concerned, has been a "boon to mankind," says Dr Vincent in his report, with the advance in sanitation and preventive medicine, he goes on, "the presence of smallpox is now a disgrace to any civilized community or country; cholera and plague have disappeared from the leading nations; typhoid fever has been enormously reduced; malaria and hookworm disease are giving ground; yellow fever is being narrowly restricted; typhus is practically unknown among a cleanly people; the fear of diphtheria has been largely allayed. Such victories as these, together with advances in general sanitation, higher living standards, more attention to individual health habits, have resulted in steadily falling death-rates in all the more progressive countries.

"But it is too early to feel complacent. Only a beginning has been made. Many diseases still baffle the health authorities. Whole regions have been almost untouched. Even the most advanced communities fall far short of what might be attained. The average individual remains relatively ignorant and negligent of sanitary science and of personal hygiene. Almost all physicians are still too exclusively concerned with the individual aspect of disease."

MORE CONSECRATED TEACHERS IS THE NEED

"The Public Ledger-Dispatch" of July 15th, contains the following report of an address delivered before the Tidewater Sunday School Association by Bro. J. H. Blanchard, of The Norfolk Christian Temple Sunday School. No doubt there is need of reform on the points which he emphasizes. Read for yourself as follows:

"How can we deepen the spiritual life of our Sunday School? This was the important subject discussed at the meeting of the Tidewater Christian Sunday School Association last Sunday. Some very helpful suggestions were made by workers of the various schools, all of whom recognized the need of a deeper spiritual atmosphere in the schools and made pleas for more interest on the part of the teachers.

The paper which led in the discussion was read by J. H. Blanchard, of the Christian Temple, and is given in part at the request of the association. It is as follows:

"It is a regrettable, recognized, fact that the average Sunday School room of the present day is more of a hub-bub of talk and laughter than it is a place of quiet and poise or meditation. We seem to think, from our actions, that the hour should be spent in frolic instead of Bible study. Do you know a school to which this would apply? I do. So without further comment I proceed to offer the remedy:

"1. The superintendent should possess that Christ-like spirit that will enable him, at all times, to be able to command reverence, quiet and respect from the school.

"2. The teachers must be such devout followers of Christ that their lives, daily, will testify that Jesus lives within.

"3. We parents who attend the school must live the Christ life seven days a week in the home, train the children to love Jesus and teach them reverence and when we go to school on Sunday morning be spiritual-minded and quiet ourselves. We cannot expect our boys and girls to be reverent when we grown-ups are talking and fussy. Set the example if you please.

"4. All the above virtues and Christ-like qualities are obtainable for all of us who are willing to forsake the foolishness of the worldly things and give all for Jesus and Godliness. Study the beautiful life of Him who sat the example for us in the four Gospels, and we will get a vision of our duty as to the examples we should set for our boys and girls of today.

"We are failing in the mission of the Sunday School unless we are learning the young to live consecrated, God-fearing, Christ-like lives, and we who are leaders and teachers cannot train the young in this way unless we ourselves really live what we profess in our daily every-day walk in life. The plea of the present day Sunday School superintendent is for a consecrated band of teachers, who put Christ first in their lives and then give the teaching and training of their classes the best that is in them.

THE NEED OF MEN—REAL MEN

A cheese with one-half of it spoiled is not a good cheese, and we doubt that any sensible man would desire to buy it for a whole cheese—and for the reason that it is at best worth only half price. Is it not somewhat so with men? There are men and men. Some are good men and some are only half men. Now, it comes to pass that now and then one of these half men, that is, a man with some important part of his character left out entirely, seeks to enter the ranks of the Christian ministry, and oftener than otherwise he gets in, and then he finds that a half a man is much out of place in the ministry. Because he has some qualifications for the life and work of a minister is no reason why he should be put forward in that work. Indeed, often it may be a reason why he should not be put forward at all.

Let me illustrate what I mean. Here, is a man who desires to enter the ministry. He is well and strong, and he has a prepossessing personality, and a fine classical education and good training for the preacher's work. Is he the man that is needed in the ministry? Well, we will do well to look a little further into his life before we decide to take him in. The Apostle Paul warns us to lay hands suddenly on no man. What did he mean by that warning? Well, evidently he meant that we should not thrust a man into the ministry until we are thoroughly acquainted with the man, his ability, his habits, his industry, his moral standing and his prudence, as he goes among the people. Say, for instance, in most of these things he is a fit. He is intellectual, his training is good, he is a fluent speaker and most agreeable in the social circle. Will he do for a minister? Not if that is all you know of him—you better listen to Paul's warning and wait a little. We do not say this because he is not all you have claimed for him, but how is he morally? Oh, well we cannot say as to that. But you had better wait till you can settle that point very definitely, for an immoral man in the ministry is more out of place than is a pig in the parlor. If a man be not moral, then you do not need him in the ministry at any price. Again, is he prudent in his work? If not, you do not need him, no matter how badly you are in need of a pastor. An imprudent pastor can do you more evil in the social circle than he can good in the pulpit, no matter how gifted and cultured he may be. Take Paul's hint and lay hands suddenly on no man, and then you will have altogether a better class of man in the ministry, and your pastor will be better, because you will have a better class of men from which to choose your pastor.

Remember that the subscription price of the "Sun" has been reduced from $2.50 to $2.00 per year, and the amount of reading matter greatly increased. If your label shows that you are in arrears, remember also that your arrearage may be paid at the reduced price. This was decided by the Board of Publication.

If you are a subscriber to the "Sun" we congratulate you. If you are not a subscriber, you are earnestly solicited to become a reader by sending in your subscription. The price is $2.00 per year; address "The Christian Sun," 1536 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

THE KEY TO THE SITUATION.

This is a day of enlightenment and of divergent opinions. Every one is likely to have a hobby and the strength of his hobby is the fact that every man is wrong and his way is right. This is true in practically every sphere of human activity. Even the Church does not escape its part in this tragedy of human thinking.

In recent years no theme has had a larger share in human thinking than Christian union, and the more thinking has been done, as to union among the people of God, the more they have failed to get together. In a number of instances effort has been brought the people of two or more denominations very close together, but in every instance so far as we are informed, as they have come so near to Christian union, the more surely have divided and gone back to their old haunts of denominationalism, leaving the cause of union bleeding and dying only because some little thing stood in the way. In one case two bodies of Christians were seeking to unite, and by much effort they had got every barrier out of the way but one, and that was the name by which they should henceforth be known. Here they could not agree, and so they at once gave up the effort and the two bodies remain till this day far apart, although the effort was put forth perhaps thirty years ago.

The history of this instance has been the history of practically all of the efforts to unionize the people of God. So nearly is this true that, so far as we are informed, not a single effort has been a complete success. A few years ago a similar effort was made to unionize the Presbyterian Church, North, and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. For a very short time it was considered a success as a union effort, but it soon turned out that there was no real union, for while a part of the Cumberland Presbyterians united with the older body of Presbyterians, a goodly number of the Cumberlands backed and kicked and would not go into the union at all.

If there be a single instance where such an effort has been made and with complete success, we do not know it, and will thank any reader to inform us of the event, who, and when and where. We shall count it a pleasure to make announcement of the fact, only in case the same has been shown by the course of events to have been genuinely a successful effort for bringing together any two bodies of Christians. We are not arguing against union—we are in favor of it. It ought to be accomplished, but the one puzzling question is this: How can it be done? There must be a way it can be accomplished, and yet that way has not been made apparent to the average churchman, and so we are standing, waiting for some man to come up and tell us how it can be done. No living man, as we see it, can possibly present a way of union among the people of God that will be accepted by any two bodies now in existence. Is this an extreme statement? It may be, but so far as we know there is no proof, not in a single instance, to show that we are in error in such a statement.

What is the chief difficulty in the way? Why cannot the people of God in the different denominations get together? There may be a division of opinion as to any answer that may be made to this question, and yet it seems to us quite clear that the whole difficulty is to be found in the fact all parties, seeking union, are so in love with their own view of things denominational that they absolutely cannot, or what may be worse, will not, give in to the point which to them seems the distinguishing difference between the two bodies, and so they meet and consider and then separate, but the union is not, for prejudice has driven it out of the reach and hope of reality, and so the good cause of union for which Jesus prayed is still standing at the gate, knocking for admittance, but a party shibboleth has stood in the way, and so we have no union of any two bodies of Christians in modern times.

But there must be a way out, and there is if only we can see it clearly. Let us look at a possible way, and most likely the only way, in which any two or more bodies may really and truly come together ecclesiastically, and let us not forget that coming together in Christ and coming together ecclesiastically are two widely different things. All Christians who are truly in Christ are already one in spirit and purpose, but this is not the point of difficulty—we seem to need to come together ecclesiastically, and this is where we find progress so hard to make. But there is a way for ecclesiastical union. The way to reach this desired haven of rest for the weary and troubled people of God is plain enough to as many as can get their eyes open to see it without prejudice. We do not mean intentional prejudice, but prejudice of the hidden kind—it works effectually, but does not show itself plainly. This hidden foe must be dealt with and removed before we can master the situation. The plan is not original with this writer, but is already in existence, albeit, it is serving in a contrary field.

As we see it, there is but one way we can get together, and that is to let every congregation, and every minister and individual interpret for itself, or himself, the teaching of the Word of God so long as the interpretation is in spirit and thought, truly Christian. That is practically what we now have, but in disunion. Could we not have it in union just as well as in disunion? Would the Church of Christ really lose anything by such a plan? We see nothing for it to lose in such a union except disunion. To think is to differ. We now differ on many points and we live and call ourselves Christians. Under this plan, we certainly could do more and perhaps we might do better. The Churches now do as they like. If we were one, on that basis, we could do more, and we would be together in the main thought of Christianity. The only difference between the situation now in disunion and then in union would be, in disunion we are fighting one another, or if not in actual combat, we are looking at each other as though we were not the servants of a common Master, while in union, we would be looking upon each other as the servants of a common Lord and that would make mightily in favor of real union.

We cannot get all men and women to think alike. Every reasonable man knows this. Now why make human thinking the basis of union, when we know it cannot be attained. Why not take the Word of God as the basis of union, allowing each body, or minister, or each individual, the right of individual interpretation, as the best way to live to the glory of God in the salvation of the world. We cannot get union by human thinking. Let us try it on divine thinking, each doing his best to follow the truth as it shall be made plain to us of God. We do so now in a divided state—would it be any worse if we were united and still doing the same? There is no other way. Let us try it!

THAT COUNTS BUT NOT MUCH MORE.

The world is very fond of making a fine showing, even though that be about all there may be in the effort. Some times even Christians get that spirit and they fall into the thought of showing something in which the show is about all there is. Now what is the use to make such a showing? It cannot count in the final shaping up of the things. It may be this or that which we hope to accomplish by making a showing; which in fact is not much but a showing, but in the end it can do no good and may do much harm to the very cause we seek to help by making such a show.

Let us illustrate what we mean. The daily papers of July 25, gave out a statement to the effect that in this country the protestants have a population of seventy-five millions and that the Roman Catholics have only a population of seventeen millions. Other religious faiths, 3 millions, and with no religious affiliation, 10, millions. That looks pretty well, but for both Protestant and Catholics, not church members are counted, but the population which is supposed to be in sympathy with the respective bodies. That takes in all who are in the most remote ways affiliated with the body named. For instance it is stated the figures include such as are affiliated by means of membership, financial support, attendance, or other ties. Now seventy-five millions sound pretty big, but when we know it is not church members, but all who are members, or who are in any way affiliated whether it be by financial support, or attendance, or any other tie, we do not think it means very much, except that it shows us what a vast field there is for real effort to win the people to Christ, and this is the main advantage we get from these statistics. We have a great field for work, and to do this work will require the very best efforts on the part of the church members.

The fact that this population is said to be Protestant reveals to us some idea of what we need to be doing to give the gospel to the people right here in our own land, and that while the call for help in foreign lands is even more urgent, for where we have a few millions here at home, in heathen lands we have them by the hundreds of millions who are now living in the darkness of heathenism and must have help or go down in the ignorance of these lands of darkness. Let us prayerfully view this great task, and let us realize that we must do our part in this work, for there is no one to do our part for us. We must do, and save them; or not do and lose them.

THE EDITOR CONTINUES HIS JOURNEY

My last letter left me in Reidsville, but the next day, I left for the White Sulphur Springs, near Mt. Airy, N. C. We made the trip by automobile as Mr. and Mrs. Chas. W. Gerringer of our Reidsville church were making the trip and offered us a seat with them. We journeyed by the way of Greensboro and Winston-Salem. Mr. Gerringer is a good, but rapid, driver. After making good time from Reidsville, when we were in three or four miles of Winston-Salem, when going up a hill, and for once going slowly, Mr. Gerringer heard something break. He stopped the car at once, and getting down to investigate, he found the axle was broken, and there we were! Soon a stranger came along and offered to take Mr. G. to Winston-Salem to a garage for help. In something like a half hour he returned with help. We were pulled into North Carolina's biggest city and the work of repair began. In the course of two and one half hours, the repair work had been finished and we were again ready to go on, which we did reaching White Sulphur Springs, arriving there just before the evening twi-light came on. That breaking of the axle was a close call and we were very thankful that it did not injure any of us. Reaching the springs, we soon had supper and then, being very tired, we were soon asleep, but before the coming of day-light Mrs Geringer was taken ill and had six chills in the following 36 hours, and became a very sick person. The doctor was called, but she did not improve. As day after day passed the patient continued quite ill. An old friend of Mrs. Geringer's girlhood days, living only a short distance from the springs, hearing of the illness of her old friend, sent and requested that she be brought to her home. After consultation, this was done, and on Sunday evening at sun-set, Mrs. G. was removed to the home of her friend and almost immediately began to improve, but when I left the springs the latest news said she was improving. Since my return to Reidsville news came to her father and mother that she was still improving and was able to be up.

As to the White Sulphur Springs, in North Carolina, it is safe to say that it is a fountain of fine water. It tastes highly of sulphur, and has a fine reputation for its medicinal qualities. It has a large hotel and ample shade and fine grounds for the comfort of its patrons. It also has a fine spring of non-mineral water, soft and good. The hotel itself is not very inviting, but the value of the spring water is much appreciated, I think, although it did not agree with myself very well. However, it is said that it does not seem to agree with many until they are fully under its influence, and then its work of health-giving is very pronounced. The work on "The Christian Sun" did not seem to permit me to remain longer, so on Monday evening I pulled up stakes and left for Mcunt Airy.

I am about to pass over a very important item, and this I must not do. On Saturday, July 15, soon after dinner, one of the hotel men came to my room and announced that a gentleman down in the lobby wished to see me. I hurried down, having no idea who could be calling for me there, as I thought I was well out of the way of my acquaintances. I went down and was approached by a young man whom I did not recognize. He introduced himself as Mr. Sorrell, saying he was from Fancy Gap, Va. I knew that was the center of our mountain work, and by that time he told me that he had come for me to go over and spend Sunday with him, saying he wished me to preach for him, organize a Christian church in Carroll County and baptize people. I asked how far it was and was told that it was about 25 miles. The young man assured me that the interest was so intense that I must not refuse his request—that the people were expecting me and would be much disappointed if I did not go. Those who know me well, know that I could not refuse under such urgency. So we hurried to Mount Airy, secured an auto and away we went. There was nothing of unusual interest till we reached the foot of the mountain. Then we were told that it was seven miles to the top of the mountain and very rough. I found it so. On one side of us were the high mountains and on the other side was a precipice, perhaps four or five hundred feet deep, and may be more. Our faithful auto climbed heroically for the whole distance, and at length brought us to the top of the mountain about sunset. I never felt more like I was on the top of the earth than I did just then. Away below us were mountains and valleys in great abundance. Night came but I was comfortably housed in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred McMillon, where I was well cared for by as kind a host as one will meet with, even in the level country. After an early supper we went to the school house, the new house which was built to accommodate Miss Hedgespeth's work. Our people may thank God for the opportunity to build such a house and for such a purpose. It is the scene of much usefulness and the center of a great work.

Only about one month ago Rev. M. T. Sorrell of Wake County, N. C., went to give his time to this work for the summer. He has already been greatly blessed. He has held one or perhaps two revivals, when the people seemed to come flocking home to God under the gospel's call. In one of these meetings there were near fifty persons made a profession of faith. I had the privilege of organizing the first Christian church ever organized in Carroll county, and then I baptized many of the members of the newly organized church. Several other churches are in early prospect, and Bro. Sorrell assures me that he thinks within one year, the most of them will be self-supporting. The people seem so deeply interested that I think it will not do for Bro. Sorrell to leave them at this juncture, unless the Mission Board can at once supply the place by some other man who may be well adapted to the work. To leave these people without preaching till next summer would be disastrous. Bro. Sorrell wishes to return to college but it would be a grave mistake for him to do so, as important as completing his education is, unless another can take his place to good advantage. Miss Hedgespeth is no longer Miss, but Mrs Meredith, and so she has her household to look after and cannot, I think, hope to do very much work in the active field. Miss Midyette is now home on her vacation. Miss Lankford is to go on her vacation the first of August. That will leave only Mrs. Merideth and Miss Wheeler on the field unless Bro. Sorrell remains and that will be far too few to carry on the work. I was much impressed with the opportunity this field gives the Christian Church, and I hope we shall make no mistake by neglecting it. The people show one fine spirit—they are devoted to their teachers and preacher, and the preacher and the teachers seem most devoted to their work. They are delighted with the opportunity. Some of these workers are spending their time and strength without salary—just having their actual and necessary expenses paid. Miss Gladys Lankford of Franklin, Va., is devoting her summer vacation to this work without salary and glad to do it just for the sake of the good she hopes to do for these people. Miss Lankford told me that she would spend at least $100.00 more than she felt free to charge up as expenses and that she would pay from the earnings of her school work during the past winter. This is due to the fact that there are so many needy ones whom she would pay from the earnings of her school with her money, to their necessities. My work for Sunday closed with the baptizing, and then I turned my face toward North Carolina, reaching the springs about night fall. Remaining at the Springs till Monday afternoon, July 17, when I was taken by Bro. Geringer over to Mt. Airy where I spent the night with Bro. and Sister W. E. Lindsey, formerly of Chapel Hill, N. C. Here I spent a delightful evening and night, being so well cared for as to give me a sense of ease that was most gratifying to one who had just been taken that long ride to Fancy Gap, Va., and that over the roughest road I believe I have ever found in a life of many years. I remember a trip I once made up the Blue Ridge in Rockingham county, Va., which I thought was then the roughest road I ever traveled. I remember that one man said to me, as we were starting on that memorable ride, that every time our buggy wheels got off a rock they would be on a dollar. I did not see any dollars, and so suppose the wheels were on rocks all the way up. It was quite as bad, or almost so, in my trip to Fancy Gap and the way was much longer. Tuesday morning, Bro. Lindsey took me to the station and by three o'clock in the afternoon I was in Reidsville again. Bro. Lindsey and his wife are most comfortably located in Mt. Airy, but I really believe that to this day they have a longing for Chapel Hill.

Drs. Staley and Atkinson are to go to this field early in August and I am sure they will find a warm welcome, and if they should be so fortunate as I was, to be located with Mr. and Mrs. Alfred McMillin, when they are at the top of that high mountain, they will fare well and be useful. If they will turn to Matt. 4:8,9, and read it as they go up that mountain height. I think they will get a fine impression of the temptation Satan tried to put over on Jesus, for they will see many a precipice that will look like the scene to which reference is made in the temptation of Jesus in the wilderness.

When I reached Reidsville there was a pile of letters which must be opened and prepared for the Sun before the going down of the Sun, in order to get their contents off to the Sun Office in Richmond—and these must go away that night in order to give the printer something to do on the next issue of the Sun. I did not realize the fatigue which was upon me till those letters were remailed to Richmond, and then suddenly I seemed to wake up to the fact that I was very tired, so I laid aside everything and went to bed while it was yet twi-light. I did not get much of a vacation, but I did get some opportunity for service in the Lord's work, and as I am feeling as well as usual I think the work instead of play and rest, did not do me much, if any, harm.

THE SPIRIT OF DEVOUTNESS.

The spirit of devoutness may distinguish prince or peasant. So Nicholas Herman, "Brother Lawrence" (flourished 1666), "for thirty years a cack in a Carmelite kitchen, amidst the drudgery of his labors he carried a great stillness of heart and every smallest act was done as if for God himself."

—Homiletic Review, October, 1915, (Page 273).

The following extract from Herman gives the clue to his life:

"Having found in many books different methods of going to God, and divers practices of the spiritual life, I thought this would serve rather to puzzle me than facilitate what I sought after, which was nothing but how to become wholly God's. This made me resolve to give the all for the all; so after having given myself wholly to God, that He might take away my sin, I renounced, for the love of Him, everything that was not Him; and I began to live as if there was none but Him and I in the world."

Drs. Staley and Smith are off on their vacation this week. Dr. Smith is camping in some lonely spot where he and his family can rest in comfort. Dr. Staley, if we mistake not is in the mountains of Virginia, looking after our work in the mountains, where Mrs Merideth (Miss Hedgespeth as was) Miss Lankford and Miss Wheeler are at work. That is a rough country, but a fine opportunity for doing good work. We believe Dr. Atkinson is also to go with Dr. Staley—between the two these dear mountain people ought to get some preaching that they will not forget in a generation.

Will Bro. Ira. D. Mellott send us news from the Southern Pennsylvania and Rays Hill Conference. Tell us, brother, what the Pennsylvania folks are doing in the way of Church and conference work.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention was in session July 25-26 as the guest of Berea Christian Church, Norfolk County, Va., Rev. W. C. Hook, pastor.

The weather was good for July, the attendance was fine, and the hospitality rich and abundant. The registration of delegates and visitors was good, the interest intense, and many fine addresses. Dr. L. E. Shith presided over the body as President, and Rev. B. J. Earp was elected Secretary pro tem.

Rev. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Secretary of Mission Board, Dr. W. A. Harper, President of Elon College and Prof. P. J. Kernodle, managing Editor of "The Christian Sun" were present and took helpful part in the business of the Convention. Drs. Atkinson and Harper delivered great addresses. Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Secretary of Board of Religious Education was also present and contributed to the interest and value of the work. Dr. W. T. Walters of Richmond added another active member of helpfulness.

The usual Committees were appointed, performed their duties, and reported results. One of the interesting reports was made by Mrs. I. W. Johnson, Superintendent of Cradle Roll. Her report showed 990 on Cradle Roll, with unreported prospects to make the total one thousand.

The total cash receipts $741.90. Full Minutes will appear in The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Hand Book. Officers for coming year: Hon. E. E. Holland, President; Rev. B. J. Earp, Secretary; J. W. Folk Treasurer; and Superintendents of Departments.

Only one Christian Endeavor Society sent delegates and report: but next year will give more recognition to this Society, and no doubt they will have full representation.

In addition to Resolution of hearty appreciation of the innovation and splendid entertainment by the Berea congregation, the Committee recommended that Pastors, Captains, Superintendents, and Teachers keep the Men and Millions movement and pledges before the Churches and Sunday Schools: and both of these resolutions received hearty adoption. Such expressions of interest and cooperation should encourage the Mission Board in carrying forward this greatest of church undertakings to a successful completion, and strengthen the earnest endeavor of Dr. J. O. Atkinson in his arduous task of clearing this matter of doubt and helping all to see that these pledges are not only to all the seven lines of the Southern Convention work, but an expression of real loyalty, liberality, and love for the church. If any are not able to pay according to the time named in the pledge, keep the obligation alive and pay as soon as conditions permit.

No Convention has ever been controlled by a sweeter spirit throughout, a greater desire to plan for something more worthwhile, a unanimity of purpose in trying to put the Sunday School on a more intelligent and spiritual basis, and to enlist the co-operation of all the Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies in progressive activities.

Miss Midyett delivered a sweet address, and Misses Maude and Mary Howell, and Evelyn Byrd read interesting papers. These young girls made a unique feature toward the close of the session and revealed a hopeful willingness in young girls for christian service. There never has been a time when as many young people are striving after higher and better things: and this in the face of complaints that the young care for nothing good or worthy.

ELON LETTER.

Liberty does not consist in the absence of restraint. Liberty is not the ability to do what you may want to do. The Son of God knew restraint. "And He must needs go through Samaria," writes John of Him. Jesus knew the experience of what the philosophers call the categorical imperative, what in the common speech of everyday men know as moral compulsion.

And why must He needs go through Samaria? It was not the usual path of travel. The best roads were in another direction, by Jericho and up the Eastern bank of the Jordan. The Samaria road would take Him through a land inhabited by people racially enemies of His. Yet He went, because a sinful woman on a hot summer's day was coming to draw water at Jacob's well and He wanted to tell her of the water of life. His liberty was circumscribed, men say. Not so. Liberty is a social experience. If only one human being lived in the earth there would be no such thing as liberty. Liberty is the method of adjusting persons to one another in their social environment.

Nor is liberty freedom to do as you want to do. It is not only a social product, but it is a moral thing, liberty is. The free man does not crave to do what his passing whim may suggest. Such a man is an anarchist, and anarchy is the despair of liberty, its antithesis. The free man is more concerned about his duties than about his privileges, I mean the Christian free man in contrast with the savage. The truly free man craves to do, not what he may want, but what he ought.

When James O'Kelly and his immortal associates withdrew from the Methodist Episcopal Church in Baltimore and first styled themselves Republican Methodists and then Christians, the name his followers ever since have been happy to wear, what he sought to achieve was freedom from restraint imposed from without. He saw the bishop exalting little men and debasing big ones by the arbitrary use of unlimited appointive power. His soul rebelled against it. My soul does. He proposed the right of appeal to the Conference from the bishop's decision. He lost his appeal. He walked out and he did right. His bold stand for freedom from such restraint has served to relieve all Methodist preachers of such tyranny. Today the M. E. Church is measurably free in theory, and entirely so in practice, and James O'Kelly did it.

But unfortunately the followers of O'Kelly have been unable in many cases to distinguish between the assumed authority of an ecclesiastical tyrant ruling in his own right and the authority delegated to a chosen representative of a free people, an authority he must have and which must be respected in him if he is to get anything done in democracy's cause. Dr. W. W. Staley was for more than thirty years the president of our Southern Christian Convention. He is now succeeded by Dr. L. E. Smith. While Dr. Staley was president, our president let me say, we owed it to him to follow his leadership and help execute his plans for our work. We owe Dr. Smith the same allegiance now. Dr. Smith is now our chief chosen channel of cooperative action. If we do not carry out his plans, we will carry out none. Failure to follow its chosen leadership in co-operative work is the paralysis of democracy. What I have said of Dr. Smith as the Convention's president applies with equal force to Miss Eldredge, to Uncle Charley, to Dr. Atkinson, to Editor Barrett and Managing Editor Kernodle, to every chosen representative of our Church in their respective places of responsibility. We must co-operate with these representatives of our co-operative undertakings or we must see the paralysis of these undertakings.

Let me particularize particularly from a recent historic situation. During the Men and Millions Campaign some pastors and captains did not approve the plans of the Campaign Committee. Not approving them, they refused to co-operate. Result? So far as they were concerned, the grandest movement of our history floundered. The plans of our leaders in posts of denominational responsibility are geared together. We ought to be willing to work the gears as they are co-ordinated. If we try them honestly and they don't work, we are blameless and, mark the word, we can get a new set of gears by exercising our sovereign right to turn off our present leaders and elect successors to them. But we owe it to our leaders to support them in their plans while they are our leaders. The Kingdom's interest demands this.

There is all the difference in the world between a Bishop Asbury ruling the religious life of a people by his own right and the president of the Southern Christian Convention ruling by and with the consent of a free people who have delegated their authority to him. Ready acquiescence in the plans proposed must, however, be forthcoming in either case, or co-operative achievement is at an end.

It is no abridgment of your liberties, brothers and sisters of our Christian Church, that you have leaders for your general Church enterprises and that they ask you to support the plans and programs they esteem to be necessary for the growth and development of your work. You can find weaknesses in those plans, you can refuse to respond to their appeals for co-operation, but if you do, you know what the result will be. Our Church will not do her part of the Kingdom's work. And whose fault will it be? Honestly and in the presence of God, whose fault will it be?

W. A. HARPER.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D.D., pastor of the Christian Temple of Norfolk, Va., writes in a most hopeful and encouraging mood as to the progress of the new building for the Temple. This will be good news for the friends of this great enterprise. They have met the cash requirements so far and still feel that they see no danger of failing to do so, if all their friends will rally to their help in this time of need—and it is the biggest effort that has ever been undertaken by a single church organization in the Christian Church. Let us cheer them and help them in every way we can.

Did you have an Elon College Day in your church? If not, it is not too late even now. Everywhere such an event seems to have resulted in awakening great interest in the cause of Christian education. Try it in your church and report results as far as you can.

Do not forget that generous help you were going to lend to the Sun's publisher. He needs your assistance and he needs it now, and what is more, the cause we love and in which we serve needs your help in sending in many subscribers.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

PAUL THE ROBBER.

The writer at the church at Corinth used some very strong and striking language. One would not dare call Paul a robber, for instance, if he had not called himself such. In 2 Cor. 11: 8, he says: "I robbed other churches . . . to do you service." The church in the great and thriving city of Corinth came to be a strong one no doubt, but it had its weak days and tremendous struggle against great odds. All churches building in great cities have immense burdens; but usually they come through right and then become great assets in helpfulness of others. Paul was no doubt excused for robbing other churches that he might help Corinth in the day of its struggle. Till the end of time I presume we will have to keep on robbing the strong to help the weak churches. It is the method of making the weak strong, and of making the strong stronger. No doubt the churches Paul robbed for the sake of Corinth were the stronger for the robbery.

Last week Executive Secretary C. D. Johnston divided $10,000 of Men and Millions money to the various enterprises of the church, missions, our Christian colleges, the orphanage, The Christian Sun, support of our Sunday School work and all our Christian enterprises according to their several needs. It was the strong helping the weak in order that all together might grow stronger. When I think of how every enterprise of the Christians has been helped to great efficiency and activity by our Men and Millions Movement since its beginning two years ago, I rejoice that I have lived to see this day and this great thing take place amongst us. For once in all our church history of more than a hundred years, we are all called upon to contribute in prayer, sympathy and sacrifice to all the enterprises that God has seen fit so far to give us. He is giving us the joy He gave Paul of urging the strong to help the weak. It is the Christian way.

TRYING OUR FAITH.

We do not know whether our faith is strong or weak until it is severely tested. No doubt this is why God sooner or later applies the test. He spared not His own Son. Knowing His testing time was at hand He prayed and prayed and prayed. From the garden of sweat and blood and prayers and agony. He went to His trial and his cross. He stood the test. And from the cross He went to His glorious and triumphant resurrection. God spared not His only begotten Son. He went to victory by way of the cross. And it has ever been so. Listen at our Savior's words, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me," (Mat. 16:24). There is no way to follow Christ save by the way of self denial: God so ordained, and it is His way.

These are depressed times through which we are passing. God is now trying our faith to see whether it is genuine or spurious.

A widow living on a farm with poor prospects of a crop walked up the other day and paid up her dues to Men and Millions. She had made the pledge in times of prosperity. Now in her adversity, God was testing her faith. She stood the test.

A man with an invalid wife, living on a farm where heavy rains of late seemed to destroy all hopes of even a half a crop, came to church and paid all dues to date on his pledge to Men and Millions. He said, "Times are hard, money is scarce, the outlook is gloomy, but my pledge is my bond, and it was made in good faith." God tried this man's faith, and it stood the test.

One of our own good captains who is a merchant said recently: "A number of the people on my list owe me personally, but their pledges to Men and Millions are as much of an obligation as their grocery and dry goods accounts are, and they should pay the one as rapidly as the other." God was trying this merchant's faith and he was standing the test. He was willing that those who owed him, as much as he needed it, divide up their scarcity and pay off their pledges to God's cause.

These pledges to Men and Millions are sacred and solemn obligations and should be so regarded: Given in times of prosperity, they are hard to meet now. But those who stand the test, endure the hardship, make the self-denial necessary to meet them, will win out, and will have their faith strengthened and their spiritual lives enriched.

God is testing us, not to impoverish or to wound us, but to try us that we may grow stronger in Him.

J. O. ATKINSON.

PRAYING FOR THE INCREASE.

All should have something very definite to pray for. Prayers that are answered must be freighted with a burden for some specific person, cause or object. Knowing this, our Southern Convention at its last session voted that we of the Convention—all of us of our churches composing the Convention—pray definitely that the dear Lord would give us at least ten per cent increase in our membership the next year.

In many sections of the Convention this is the revival or protracted meeting season. Are we all praying that God will give the increase?

Many pastors have labored faithfully all the year in presenting the Word, in soaring and cultivating for the harvest. Now the harvest time has come. The writer wonders if many SUN readers are bearing on their hearts the burden of desire for increase in church membership, and to see souls truly born into the Kingdom of our Lord. Those of us who are not in evangelistic meetings should be praying for those who are. If the increase is to come, God must give it. "I have planted," wrote Paul, "Apollos watered: but God gave the increase" (1 Cor. 3: 6). It must ever be so in the increase of saved souls, God bringeth that to pass in answer to our prayer.

J. O. ATKINSON.

The West Grove church, Dark County, Ohio, has set a fine example for many of our Country churches in that it has moved out from the half time preaching and now it has preaching every Sunday. Well, that is fine and a good example to others. We once had the honor to serve this church as pastor, and we believe it has done the right thing in having full time preaching. We rejoice with you, brethren, and wish for your new arrangement great success in building up the cause of Christ. West Grove is a country church and it is doing well, notwithstanding so many are making many sorts of secular plans in trying to keep the Old Ship afloat in country places. We believe that West Grove has lived and flourished on the gospel, and the gospel in the power of God, given in the power of God, given to the people will bring real prosperity, as it has done in every age of the Christian Era.

We need not bother about getting some new plan, or some new method, to enable the church to live and do its work, just feed them liberally on the very essence of the gospel, and we believe you will see great things come to pass. Who will really try out this suggestion and let us know the results? Many people, and even some pastors, spend much time in hunting for some new plan, or some new method for making the Lord's work a success. We wish you would try an effort to bring to your help the power of the Holy Spirit, for then you will get results that will mean so much to the cause of the Lord. Try it, brethren, and we believe you will accomplish far more than you will, if you depend on some new plan or some unusual method. Method can do very little for any church apart from the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

Here is a note from a leading man among us and it has a wail of sadness which ought not to be there. After recounting some of his most useful labors, he adds this sentence: "I do not know that our people appreciate it. Now brethren, do you think that was your pastor? Well, if so, do you think that he deserves some words of encouragement now and then? He would work with a fresher zeal and with more earnest purpose, if he only knew that the men and women and boys and girls for whom he labors so continuously, really did appreciate it. You may say: "Well, we appreciate his labors for us and among us." Well let us grant that, but do you not think it would do him good some times to hear these very people for whom he so faithfully serves, tell him that they love him and that he is a real help to them in their efforts to live a Christian life? Try it a few times, in the next few months, and see what effect it will have to let him know that his labors are appreciated. Do not go to him with fulsome praise, for that is displeasing to men who have real merit, but go to him in a private way and tell him how he has helped you in your efforts to serve the Lord, and see if it does not put a new sparkle in his eye and a new tone in voice.

Rev. J. G. Truitt is helping the Rev. C. E. Gerringer in a meeting at Apple's chapel, in Guilford County, N. C. It was estimated that there were a thousand people present to hear him on July 23, and it was said he preached a great sermon. Bro. Truitt is a man of real ability, not only in an intellectual way, but spiritually he knows the Lord and this fact gives him power over his audience. Bro. Gerringer, the pastor at Apple's is one of our most deserving young ministers. His work must tell for good, as we think, for he fears not the face of a man that shall die, and his work, we think, must be fruitful in great good to a community.

Three months, June, July and August, were allotted in which to increase the subscription list of "The Christian Sun." Up to this time only a tithe of those to whom receipt books and blanks were sent have reported. Now one month in which the nine tenths may report remains. If all were to manifest the same activity and interest as those reporting have, the "Sun" would not "stand still." Thanks are tendered for the reports received, and other reports are awaited with expectancy.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D.D., our pastor at Richmond, Va., is making an effort to build a house of worship in that City and he has a fine prospect before him. When in Richmond a few weeks ago, we saw the plans for the new building, and we believe it is one of the neatest designs we have seen. We are anxious to see it really built, for then we believe our Richmond people will grow.

AN EDUCATIONAL POLICY FOR THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN CON- VENTION

The delegates to the American Christian Convention, which meets in quadrennial session at Burlington, N. C., may confront an important question as to an educational policy for the Quadrennial. It is possible that the Commission on Education may submit a proposal to put our denominational schools under the general control of the Board of Education of the A. C. C. Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio, is an accredited college of good collegiate rating in the North Central College Association. Palmer College, Albany, Miss., is rated not above a junior college in this association. So is Union Christian College, Merom, Ind. Elon College, Elon College, N. C., is rated as an A grade college by the State of North Carolina.

Now, for institutions to be rated as colleges, certainly after 1925, each shall have a productive endowment of not less than $500,000. To meet these demands every religious denomination or other agency maintaining a college must see that certain conditions, this endowment question for one, are complied with, else the institution not so provided for will fall into a perilous condition, if not fatal.

It is but wise that our highest official body take due note of this condition and face it with wise Christian statesmanship. It may appear that I write as an alarmist. I doubt that I am alarmed, but I am convinced that we face a very positive demand so far as our denomination schools are concerned. Too, I am of the opinion that for us, as a Church, not to meet that demand will greatly hinder the growth and efficiency of the Christian Church as an agency in the Kingdom of Jesus Christ. The reasons I feel this way is: that our mission work and our other institutions, too, prosper largely in proportion to the efficiency of our educational institutions. We ought not to forget that knowledge is power, and that Christian intelligence is Christian power. We should not forget that vision of a people is usually in proportion to intelligence—little intelligence, little vision; large intelligence, large vision. "Where there is no vision the people perish," is the substance, if not the literal, Bible statement of this thought.

Nearly three weeks ago I came to the University of Chicago primarily to do some research work in connection with a course of literature in Elon College, but within that time I have come into personal relations in a time-consuming way with prominent persons in this North Central Association of Colleges and by letter and by conference with prominent persons of my own denomination. This question, that has pressed so persistently upon my attention, will have to be faced—faced and voted on by the delegates at the Quadrennial in October. Shall the Convention undertake to centralize its forces and make and maintain our schools as colleges?

W. P. LAWRENCE.

Elon College, N. C., July 24, 1922.

"WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH?"

Several days ago Dr. Barrett, in discussing the facts and figures presented by Lieutenant-Governor West, threw out a very pointed question, and challenged some one to answer it, stating that if some one did not do it he would. This letter is no attempt to answer the question in such a way as to prevent his answer, for many of the ministers and laymen in the denomination will look forward to his answer. It does, however, mean that lots of other people are studying the question, and feel that it needs a careful study and an answer. There is no desire on my part to try to answer the question authoritatively, but I do know there is something radically wrong somewhere.

What is the wrong? Well, so far as doctrine is concerned there certainly is no wrong anywhere. We hear lots of adverse criticism of the Church, but I have never yet heard anyone criticize the doctrine of the Christian denomination, and never heard any one say they did. The fact is, the Christian denomination has the only form of doctrine upon which all the followers of Christ can unite, and yet it is numbered among the smallest denominations. There is something wrong somewhere, or a Church like ours would prosper. It is built on the same principles as the International Sunday School work, and the Christian Endeavor movement, and these have long ago gone to the ends of the earth with their message to humanity. Then, if you agree that there is nothing wrong in government and principle, where is the wrong, and what is the remedy for the wrong?

First, I think the pendulum has swung too far. In our effort to get away from the rule of Bishop Asbury, the Methodist Church, and College of Bishops, we have permitted the pendulum to swing so far in the opposite direction that we have almost taken the life of the Church. There are literally thousands upon thousands that love the principles set forth in our Church, but do not care for the extreme spirit of Democracy we uphold in the work, because it, in too many cases, defeats the very thing we are trying to do. True, it may be best in some cases for the local church to be supreme in its action, and have no check by either Conference or Convention Officers, but these are exceptions and not rules. Men are more or less extreme in politics and religion, and every man is free to think, and it's my candid opinion that if O'Kelly and his followers had brought over to this Christian Church of ours a part of the Machinery of the Methodist Church and put it in operation, ours would have met with the same progress theirs and others have made, and even more. I believe that one of the great obstacles is in the fact that the pendulum has swung too far the other way.

Second, our organizational life is insufficient, and incomplete. I study the denominational papers of my church and those of other churches. Here I find our organization as a church is exceedingly loose, and in too many instances does not function. The great mass of our churches are rural and have no service from the pastor, because he cannot reach the field of emergencies. I know one pastor who drives his "John Henry" fifty miles to preach to a country church, and as he goes he passes six Christian churches pastored by other men. This ought not to be. If we had the proper machinery our rural churches would be grouped into pastorates, given a double amount of service, and in every case would double their contributions to the church enterprises. Our loose system of organization is one reason our loss in ministers, churches and individual members has been so great. And what is more, we are destined to keep on losing until our Conventions change their Constitution and put a check on it. One fine remedy for this laxation would be to require each Convention president to give his full time to the work and set up active functioning organizations in each Conference of the American Convention. It would save ministers, churches and members.

Third, we do not live up to our Creed. Any church that takes the Holy Bible for its Creed, and lays as much emphasis on the New Testament as ours does, and does not follow the divine command, "Go ye into all the world," part of it, need not expect to prosper. How can it? Jesus said, "GO," and then said, "I am with you." That means the going is possible, and that the way is prosperous and successful. Our church does not seem to have the larger vision of the world task. When a work is enlarged the idea seems to be to cut it up in parts and make it just as little as possible, and while we are doing this other denominations fasten their eyes on the world-wide task and go to it. I need not say they have or will prosper, the world already knows. As I see it, the wrong Dr. Barrett is looking for lies in the following three statements: Extreme Democracy, Loose Organization, and the Lack of a Vision of the World Task and the Need the World Has for Our Church.

Now, what is the remedy? We must remember that our church has a Cosmopolitan membership, and together with it, every denomination under the sun represented. To me this means we are more of a brotherhood than a denomination, for we are a part of every denomination, and should govern ourselves accordingly. Then, our forces must be organized better. Not more but better organizations. Unless we have it, we can never hope to measure up to our standards. This ought to be done by the Burlington Convention next fall. Our only hope, as I see it, is in the caring for our rural churches, for we are a rural people. If we haven't the organization and authority to do it with, then change Constitution, By-Laws, customs, dig graves, bury the dead, group these churches, give them some service, expect something in return from them, and in so doing, save our work the embarrassment and humiliation of some one always talking about us losing out, when the talk is every bit true. And above everything else, live up to the teaching of our creed and its fundamental principles, knowing that when we do it, God is able to take care of His own.

A PASTOR.

THE COUNTRY CHURCH AGAIN

It was with interest and profit that I attended the classes of Professors Branson, Meyer and Steiner, and the general meetings of Institute of Public Welfare at the University of North Carolina during the Summer School there this summer. But I wish to speak especially of one of Dr. Branson's lectures on "The Country Church." It was a masterpiece in conception and execution. It was delivered in connection with and as a part of the course in Rural Economics and Sociology.

He told us in his concise and graphic way, spiced with rich illustrations, of the country church, its status, menaces, and constructive measures. He gave to us a large list of helpful reading references: books, bulletins and pamphlets. When the lecture was over, I went to Dr. Branson and said, "Dr. Branson, that was a masterpiece. I wish that I could sit at your feet." I wanted to hear him again, and again. I wanted to be in his class longer than my stay allowed. He looked up and said to me, a preacher, "I need to sit at your feet." I passed on and went to another class; but the impressions of the lecture lingers. I wish that every minister and social worker could have heard that lecture.

There is certainly a large and important field of service for the country church. If ever we get out of the present turmoil and strife; if this world is ever won to Christ, the country church must play a leading—an important part, and all the agencies working for the purification of the race and for the uplift and betterment of mankind must link up with the church to do their best work.

FOUR EPOCHS OF SUNDAY SCHOOL HISTORY.

By DR. MINOR C. MILLER.

(Concluded from last issue.)

IV. THE NEW DAY IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

Having traced now in bare outline, only, the organization and development of the Sunday School movement, we may turn our attention to the present period, which we have chosen to call, The New Day In Religious Education. It is, indeed, a new day—now because of the vision and enthusiasm which is beginning to characterize the entire movement. Generally speaking, the present movement in religious education began about 1918 and it has steadily been gathering power until it looks as if the entire program of education under church auspices would be completely revolutionized.

1. A REVIEW OF ACCOMPLISHMENTS.

This New Day was born out of a conscious effort to study the religious conditions and needs existing throughout America. Church leaders of every denomination began to take inventory. They began to think! How we wish they had begun to think sooner!

Some one has well said that the church sometimes tries to hop on one leg of either education or evangelism. This is always unfortunate for the importance of both of these agencies should always be recognized in the development of the Kingdom. There is no conflict between education and evangelism. Education directs its attention largely to childhood and youth while evangelism appeals to maturity. Education seeks to keep the child from ever breaking connection with the divine Father while evangelism endeavors to win for the Kingdom those who have wandered from the fold.

It may be truly said that it took the Sunday School more than a century and a quarter to teach church leaders the value of religious education. May we say, to teach these leaders the very great value of a very meager educational program. As soon as the church began to take inventory it was discovered that most of her recruits came from those who had received a partial religious education in the Sunday School. It was discovered that fully 80 per cent of those who united with the church were the product of the Sunday School—the product of just a little bit of teaching. Leaders of the church began to see that if such a large percentage of gain came as the result of such feeble educational effort that it would be wisdom to increase the efficiency of the church's educational program.

A simple illustration will make clear the real situation. Suppose a merchant is engaged in selling three lines of goods, groceries, dry goods, and hardware. If after a period of years he finds that 80 per cent of his total dividend has resulted from his grocery department, 15 per cent from his dry goods department, and 5 per cent from his hardware department, you will hardly find him enthusiastic about expanding either his dry goods or his hardware departments. Rather he will be enthusiastic about increasing the efficiency of the department which has given him 80 per cent of his returns. This is the very thing that has happened and is happening in the church. The leaders are becoming more and more conscious of the value of Jesus' way of winning people for the Kingdom. "Go ye therefore and teach," he said, and we believe that teaching the principles which Jesus taught is still essential and the most fruitful way of enlarging the Kingdom.

Until recently the church decided upon a program of Sunday instruction. Whenever we have considered training children in religion we have always thought in terms of a small program. Now in the midst of our very complex life it will be impossible even to hold the children who come from church homes, with such a meager program and the whole church is beginning to rise up and face the task which awaits her effects.

2. THE PRESENT PROGRAM IS INADEQUATE.

As soon as church leaders began to seriously study the problem of religious education they were convinced that the present program was woefully inadequate.

a. The church failed to reach the people.

According to recent statistics there are 42,991,850 protestant children in the United States of whom only 14,361,900 are enrolled in Sunday School. The Catholics are reported to have 8,676,000 children under 25 years of age of whom only 1,870,000 are receiving religious instruction. It should be noted that the Catholics reach the largest proportion before confirmation and then neglect all of them after that period. The Jews are credited with having 1,545,000 children with only 87,000 enrolled in their religious schools. Looking at the picture in terms of percentage we see that the various protestant churches are reaching 33½ per cent of the available protestant children. The Catholics are reaching 21.6 per cent and the Jews 4.81 per cent of their children with their respective program of religious education. Estimating these results in terms of our total population we find that 69.3 per cent of the children and youth under twenty-five years of age are receiving no religious instruction at the hand of any church or organization.

The unreached millions in America constitute the most serious problem of the church. While the protestant church is directly responsible for the religious training of all the children of the nation, she is directly and very definitely responsible for those children who come from protestant homes. The combined programs of all the protestant churches has only reached 33.5 per cent of the children for whom these churches are directly responsible. Surely we have a right to say that the church's present educational program has failed to reach the people. We have been tempted to boast about the rapid expansion of the Sunday School Movement in the United States, and we readily admit that the Sunday School has been the chief agency for keeping alive the spirit of religion. But in emphasizing the work which has been accomplished we have been blind to the task which yet remains to be done. The protestant church cannot save America by reaching only one third of the children, or even one half of the children. If the church is to perform her duty toward the children of America she must develop a program big enough to give all of them a knowledge of these ideals which have made our country great.

When we consider that only one third of the children are enrolled in Sunday-school we set a partial vision of the task which the church has to face. This fact alone, however does not represent the true situation. We have many children counted on the rolls of our Sunday Schools who attend so seldom that they can receive little positive benefit. The church has been able to get about one third of the children to enroll in Sunday-school, but only about one half of these are counted on the rolls are actually present every Sunday. A modern public school would not continue pupils on the roll if they attended so carelessly as they do in the Sunday-schools. As long as the church only enrolls one third of the children and then can get only one half of this number to attend Sunday-school regularly we are compelled to say that her educational program is inadequate because she is failing to reach the masses of the people.

b. The Character of the program.

If we are to reach any intelligent conclusion as to how the church is meeting her responsibility for religious education through her present program, it will be necessary to study the character of the program itself.

(a). Lack of time.

We find that the church's program of religious education is a one day a week proposition. In the field of public education we require our children to go to school five days a week. We believe that this is necessary if they are to receive satisfactory training. When it comes to religious training we feel that we have discharged our obligation to our children if they attend the church school one day a week. We would not think of sending our children to public school of just one hour a day. Many of us would be greatly distracted if for some reason our own boys and girls could attend public school for just one hour each day, five days each week. We have come to put such a high evaluation upon the intellectual training of our children that we want them in school five or six hours each school day. As loyal churchmen we say that we value religion above everything else, but in actual practice, we consider it just and fair to have our children in the church school one hour a week and in the public school from twenty to thirty hours a week.

It is not for us to say here what would be the right proportion of time between the church school and the public schools. It should be apparent, however, that the church must have more time for her program of religious education.

We have just seen that the church is now giving religious instructions for one hour each week to about one sixth of the children from protestant homes. The actual period of teaching is not more than one half hour per week but the church has the children under her care for approximately one hour. This represents the valuation which the church places upon the religious training of children. Admitting that the present church program has failed to reach the masses and that too little time is provided, the question arises as to how effectively the church is teaching those who do attend her schools.

The church has depended upon voluntary teachers and supervisors. In selecting her teachers the aim of the church has been to secure individuals who would merely consent to take classes. Little consideration has been given, to the training or personal fitness of workers for their positions. No standards have been set and no definite results have been expected. The fact that the majority of our Sunday School teachers and supervisors are inexperienced and untrained is evident. In a typical city statistics show that 52 per cent of the teachers in the church schools began teaching between 13 and 20 years of age. The same survey shows that only 45 per cent of the teachers had graduated from high school. In the public schools teachers with such limited experience and training are not employed except as a last resort. Indeed, where such teachers are employed in the public school they are better prepared for their task than they would be for teaching in the church school. Even though a teacher in the public school has very limited training, all of her training has been designed to prepare her for proficiency in the field of general education. On the other hand, a very large per cent of the teachers in the church school have only a limited general education and almost no training to enable them to attain proficiency in teaching religion. It is a grave mistake to suppose that religion can be effectively taught unless a teacher has had the same specialized training in religion which would be required to teach any other subject. Indeed, religion is the most difficult subject of all to teach and it is the only subject where there have been no adequate standards set for the teacher. If the church desires to make her teaching effective she should at once take steps to secure a body of teachers who are thoroughly trained for the task for which they are called.

The present program of religious education may be characterized as a cheap program. The church has been willing to give money far more freely for almost any other purpose than for religious education. In fact, many churches are still allowing the Sunday-school to operate on the pennies gathered from the children. A recent survey revealed the fact that the churches studied were spending twice as much money to pay their janitors as they were spending for the religious education of their children. It will be impossible to operate an efficient school of religion without a reasonable financial support and as long as the church is unwilling to give this support the masses will be compelled to grow up in spiritual illiteracy.

3. THE REMEDY.

What will be the answer of the church to the children of America in the light of the present situation? We believe that her answer will be a new program of religious education—a program which will mean a richer and fuller life for every boy and girl. The following steps should be taken as a means toward this end.

a. Improve and extend the Sunday-school.

The Sunday-school, poor and imperfect as it is, has saved Christianity for America. Suppose the Sunday-schools throughout the country were, in fact, real schools of religion. Suppose the building and its equipment, the supervisors and teachers were up to the standard required for a modern public school. If such conditions should prevail, would it not be a fact that greater results would follow even though the church's educational program should be confined to an hour on Sunday? There are also many communities where the people do not have the opportunity of attending Sunday-school. When such conditions exist, Sunday-schools should be organized. It is the duty of strong churches to push out to every corner of their territory and organize mission Sunday-schools wherever there are children. The fact that the church has reaped such large results from the little effort she has put into religious education should be sufficient reason for improving and extending her program. The merchant stresses the particular line of his business which yields him the largest dividend. Should we not do the same in religion?

b. Week day and vacation schools.

Even though the Sunday-school should be made as efficient as the public school, it is unreasonable to suppose that it would ever give the American people as adequate religious education. The church must find a way to give more time than an hour on Sunday for religious instruction. The only way this can be done will be for the church to organize a system of week-day religious instruction. There will be a decided advantage for a child to receive religion training regularly throughout the school year. Where it is impossible to immediately organize regular week-day schools, the first logical step would be to organize vacation schools of religion. These schools have been very popular wherever they have been held and they offer great opportunity for religious training in addition to what is offered on Sunday. The vacation school should be considered only as a means toward an end. The final goal should be for the church to provide an opportunity for all children to receive religious training on week-days.

c. Improved Curriculum.

One of the greatest weaknesses of our present program of religious education is the lack of adequate curriculum material. A child goes to the public schools and finds a rich curriculum, attractively arranged and selected to suit his needs, but when he goes to the church school he finds an absence of almost everything which would lend interest to his work. In the public schools we have provided well bound text books, illustrated with good pictures and other helps but in the church school we use only the cheap leaflet or quarterly and often the poorest pictures. We have given little consideration to the interests and needs of the child. I believe that many failures to hold interest can be traced directly to the improper selection and arrangement of the material we are compelled to use in the church school. If the church desires to build an adequate program of religious education she must provide a curriculum designed to meet the needs of her pupils.

d. Developes system of training schools.

The success of any educational program depends upon an efficient system of training schools. In recognition of this fact the state has built normal schools for the purpose of training those who are to teach the masses. It is more difficult to teach religion than any other subject and yet the church has made little provision for training those who are to teach in her schools. The church should build a system of training schools which will recognize the needs of all types of workers. Church colleges are beginning to recognize their responsibility for providing specialized training for church leaders, but the college alone will not supply the demand for trained workers. There must be some way found to train workers in the local church and in the community. Every local church should operate a teacher training department and young people should begin their training in the local church. I am of the opinion, however, that the final solution of the teacher training problem is to be found through cooperative effort. High grade Community Training schools should be organized where young people of all denominations may receive their specialized training. The importance of trained workers should be so emphasized that no one would think of attempting to teach or perform any service in connection with the church school who has not first taken advantage of such courses which will make for greater personnel efficiency.

In the first half of this discussion we endeavored to trace the development of the Sunday-school movement from its organization in England through several well defined periods culminating in what we have termed, the new day in religious education. Without any reflection upon the splendid work of the past, the present religious education movement deserves to be called a new day—new because the church has a new consciousness of her responsibilities for the spiritual nurture of childhood, and now, too, because the church is beginning to formulate a program commensurate to her task.

In the past the church has been more interested in the children of other lands than in the children of America. It is often been easier to move people to action and to get them to give their money in behalf of the suffering and neglected children of India or Japan than in behalf of the spiritually neglected children at their own door, but today the church is getting awake and to those who have any deep religious or patriotic feeling of the unreached millions in America presents a mighty challenge. We are told that 69.3 per cent of our children are not getting any systematic religious instruction at the hand of any church, Jewish, Catholic, or Protestant. What would it mean to the development of our democracy if 69.3 per cent of our children were not getting any training in the public schools? So important does the state consider universal intellectual training that compulsory education is being extended throughout the nation. If we allowed more than two-thirds of our children to grow up ignorant of our ideals of government, could we expect the nation to remain loyal to our established principles? Will not the same principle hold concerning the religious training of our children? If we allow more than two-thirds of our children to grow up ignorant of religion, when they reach maturity, can we expect them to be loyal to our religious faith?

The most hopeful sign of the new way is that we are developing a consciousness on the subject of the religious nurture of the child. In all progressive communities it is considered a disgrace for parents to deprive their children of a general education. But this has not always been so. We have developed a public school conscience to the extent that a community frowns upon parents who raise their children in illiteracy. We believe we are beginning an epoch—a new day, when it will be just as much a disgrace for parents to raise up children in spiritual illiteracy as it is now a disgrace for parents to keep their children from the public schools.

Go back with me 2000 years to the city of Jerusalem. A Jewish family has attended the Passover and on the way home they discover that their son, twelve years old, is not with them. Anxiously they go back to the city and after much delay they find him in the Temple sitting in the midst of the Doctors of the Law. But he is doing more than that! He is answering their difficult questions and he is asking them questions which they can't answer. Here is a boy of twelve who had received such careful training in the scripture that he was easily at home in the midst of the most learned men of his day and who had lived so close to his Father that he dared to say, "Wist ye not that I must be about my father's business."

Let us pray that God may raise up great prophets among us—prophets who will be bold to declare the glory and beauty of childhood, and let us pray, too that we may be willing to make any sacrifice in the interest of the spiritual nurture of the child—God's Holy Child, the image of the Divine Father.

Dr. Harper says the die is cast—in the future his main work will be to secure students from the Christian Church. Of course, he will receive students from any place, outside of the Christian Church, but his main efforts are to be directed to inducing parents in the Christian Church to send their sons and daughters to Elon. We wish him great success in the effort, and at the same time we wish our people may heartily cooperate with him. He does not specially wish less number of students, but he wishes many more of Elon's students to come from our own churches, and he wishes this because Elon was established specially for the benefit of our young people. Let it be so, but it cannot be so unless Dr. Harper may have the hearty cooperation of our preachers and people.

BY REV. J.-GREGORY MANTLE, D.D.,
In The Alliance Weekly.

SUNDAY

"How much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?"
(Luke 11:13).

"There is one prayer that may be offered with an absolute certainty that the very thing sought for will be granted. With respect to everything else, in our limited knowledge of what is best for us, we have to connect with each petition an acknowledgment of submission to the Divine will and wisdom. We implore God to give—but to withhold, should it seem best to Him. But to the prayer for the enlightening Spirit of God, no proviso need be appended. It is declared without qualification in the Scriptures that God is willing to give His Spirit to them who ask. We can apply to Him, if there be in us faith enough to go to Him at all, confident that we shall receive the very thing that we desire for ourselves. He can touch the soul in a moment with His own mysterious life-giving Spirit, and quicken it to a preception of realities which are now but dim and shadowy. Trust Him to do it now, and then thank Him for having done it."

"Saviour, grant the prayer we offer,
While in simple faith we bow;
From the windows of Thy mercy
Give to us this blessing now."

MONDAY

"He declared how the Lord had brought him out of the prison" (Acts 12:17).

The deliverance of Peter from prison is one of the most remarkable facts on record, as an illustration of the hearing of prayer. Two powers are, as it were, struggling with each other; one, the secular power, attempting to hold the Apostle fast, and slay him; the other, the Church of Christ, desirous of rescuing him, and preserving his life and liberty. The former has all material instruments at its disposition—a prison, chains, fetters, soldiers, and weapons; the latter has none of these, but in the place of them prayer—united and fervent prayer; faith in God, who was in Christ; love to one another for Christ's sake; Christian hope—indeed the whole inner life that proceeds from redemption, infusing itself into such intercession; thus prayer lays hold on the omnipotence of God in faith. This united prayer in the name of Jesus Christ, is heard; it accomplishes more than all the power the world can attempt to do. . . . The power of the world, attempting to resist God and Christ, suffers a most ignominious defeat, while the Gospel and the Church of Christ advance with power.

"Impossible things to the wisdom of men,
He ever is doing, and will do again;
Wait—prove if He will not remember his vow, Hath He said? He will do it. Trust Him with the 'How.'"

TUESDAY

"And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites" (Matt. 6:5).

Drexellius tells us of a vision that a religious man had at his prayers in the congregation. He saw a several angel at the elbow of every one present, ready to write down his petitions; those who prayed heartily, their angels wrote down their suits in gold; those that prayed but coldly and carelessly, their angels wrote too, but it was with water; those that prayed customarily, only from the teeth outward, had their angels by them, who seemed to write, but it was with a dry pen, no ink in it. Such as slept, had their angels by them, but they laid their pens by. Such as had worldly thoughts, their angels wrote in the dust. And such as had envious and malicious spirits, their angels wrote with gall. If this be so, I fear few angels have written this day in golden letters; but the pens of the others have gone very fast. Have a care how thou prayest, if thou wouldest have them written with the Golden Pen.—N. Rogers, 1658.

Lord, teach us how to pray aright,
With reverence and with fear;
Though dust and sales in Thy sight,
We may, we must draw near.

WEDNESDAY

"The love of Christ constraineth us" (II Cor. 5:14).

What did the love of Christ constrain Paul to do? It made him publicly change sides, and stand forth among his fellows as a redeemed and confessed disciple of the Lord Jesus. That kind of reversal demands a mighty constraint—to stand in the old circle, making a new confession of a new Lord. To stand in the old workshop and say, "I love the Lord Jesus," means the way of sacrifice, and no man will do it unless he is driven by love. This love constrained Paul to risk anything and everything that would mar his loyalty to his Lord. Social prestige, ecclesiastical honors, the prospect of a distinguished career, all these had to go. The same wonderful love is still laying its glorious constraint upon God's children; it is still gripping them, and carrying them forward into new ways of holy service."—Dr. J. H. Jowett.

THURSDAY

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord and He shall sustain thee" (Psa. 55:22).

Dr. Payson, when a young man, wrote as follows, to an aged mother, burdened with intense anxiety on account of the condition of her son: "You give yourself too much trouble about him. After you have prayed for him, as you have done, and committed him to God, should you not cease to feel anxious respecting him? The command, 'Be careful for nothing,' is unlimited; and so is the expression, 'Casting all your care on Him.' If we cast our burdens upon another, can they continue to press upon us? If we bring them away with us from the Throne of grace, it is evident we do not leave them there. With respect to myself, I have made this one test of my prayers: if, after committing anything to God, I can, like Hannah, come away and have my mind no more sad, my heart no more pained or anxious, I look upon it as one proof that I prayed in faith; but, if I bring away my burden, I conclude that faith was not in exercise."

"I cast it, Lord, just now, I cast it, and arise Without it, burdenless, and full of glad surprise;
I feel no weight—all, all is light—
I've changed for day the darkness of the night."

FRIDAY

"Shall not God avenge His own Elect, which cry to Him day and night" (Luke 18:7).

"Of all the mysteries of the prayer-world, the need of persevering prayer is one of the greatest. That the Lord, Who is so loving and longing to bless, should have to be supplicated time after time, sometimes year after year, before the answer comes, we cannot easily understand. Our great danger is the temptation to think that, after all, it may not be God's will to give us what we ask. If our prayer be according to God's Word, and under the leading of the Holy Spirit, let us not give way to these fears. Let us learn to give God time. Let no delay shake our faith. Each believing prayer brings a step nearer the final victory. Each believing prayer helps to ripen the fruit and bring us nearer to it. It fills up the measure of prayer and faith known only to God alone; it conquers the hindrances in the unseen world; it hastens the end. Child of God! Give the Father time!"—Dr. Andrew Murray.

"When the promise seems to linger, long delaying,
And I tremble, lest, perhaps, it comes too late,
Still I hear that gentle whisper ever pleading,
God is working, God is faithful—Only wait."

SATURDAY

"And he said, I will not let Thee go, except thou bless me" (Gen. 32:26).

A man was sorely lamenting his low spiritual condition to President Finney, the great soul-winner. After listening attentively Mr. Finney turned to him with his peculiar earnest look, and with a voice that sent a thrill through his soul, said: "You don't pray! that is what's the matter with you. Pray—pray four times as much as ever you did in your life, and you will come out." He immediately went down to the parlor, and taking the Bible he made a serious business of it, stirring up his soul to seek God as did Daniel, and thus he spent the night. It was not in vain. As the morning dawned he felt the light of the Sun of Righteousness shine upon his soul. His captivity was broken; and ever since he has felt that the greatest difficulty in the way of men being emancipated from their bondage, is that they "don't pray." The bonds cannot be broken by finite strength. We must take our case to Him who is mighty to save.

GIVING OCCASION TO THE LORD'S ENEMIES

In 2 Samuel, 12:14, we read: "Howbeit, because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme, the child that is born unto thee shall surely die."

Then in Judges 13: 3, 4, 5, we read: "And the angel of the Lord appeared unto the woman, and said unto her, Behold now thou art barren, and bearest not: but thou shalt conceive and bear a son. Now therefore beware, I pray thee, and drink not wine nor strong drink and eat not any unclean thing: For lo, thou shalt conceive and bear a son; and no razor shall come upon his head; for the child shall be a Nazarite unto God from the womb; and shall begin to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines."

It seems to me that these two passages of Scripture show, as I think, that it is sin that causes our little ones to suffer. Take the mother of Moses. She begins to prepare the ark just as soon as the child was born and he becomes a great leader for God's people. If we would not disobey by doing that which has been forbidden, and get into the ark of God and throw that influence around our children, we would have more men and women to lead and point the people to the way of holiness, as the Lord has revealed it to us. David did not restrain his passions, neither did the boys.

When we wilfully sin against Nature and against God, doing the things which God's Word tells us not to do, we may be sure that the hand of God will be laid on us. My answer to the broken-hearted mother would be, for I am one myself, and I have four dear children in Heaven: Rest in peace, for the child cannot come to you, but you can go to it.

LESSON TEACHINGS.

God secures leaders by bringing men and women face to face with a great need. Esther faced the call of need from her own people in danger, and gave her best in answer to their appeal.

Surely there is a "divinity which shapes our ends." A God of love and justice rules. Although the name of God is not mentioned in the account of Esther, still the signs of His divine leading are unmistakable.

The book of Esther is a patriotic story with an appeal to loyalty to one's own nation. Life itself is not too much to risk with devotion like that of Esther and Mordecai.

To Mordecai duty was a privilege to be grasped as an opportunity for service. Such is our duty to the work of the Kingdom. It is a privilege and a joy to be a "co-worker with God."

"Heroism is compounded only of character and opportunity." "No sacrifice is too great for the right."—General Wood.

Esthers are needed today; Esthers who are brave and loyal, Esthers who will risk all for the good of others, Esthers who will use the power in their possession for the uplift of mankind.

"Who knoweth whether thou art not come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

"Pride and Humility." (James 4:6-10.)

LESSON THOUGHTS.

"Nature teaches us that those trees bend the most freely which bear the most fully. As a proud heart loves none but itself, so it is beloved by none but itself."—Secker.

"The high mountains are barren, but the low valleys are covered over with corn; and accordingly the showers of God's grace fall into lowly hearts and humble souls. The more poor in spirit, the more self-empty, the more earnestly we are desirous of spiritual things, and such shall be filled."—Worthington.

"Not as men of science, not as critics, not as philosophers, but as little children, shall we enter into the kingdom of heaven."—J. C. Shairp.

God's word condemns the proud, and exalts the humble. Read Proverbs 13:10, 16:18, 21:4, Matt. 23:12 and Mal. 4:1, and contrast with the following verses: Matt. 5:3, Phil. 2:5-8, Matt. 18:4, I Peter 5:5.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION NOTES.

A Daily Vacation Bible School was held for two weeks in July at the Pleasant Grove, Virginia, Church. The pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley, led in the work and was ably assisted by Misses Lelia Farmer, Nannie Baker Farmer and Lizzie Boyd, as teachers. The Field Secretary had the pleasure of spending Sunday, July 16th, at the Pleasant Grove Church, and was present during the opening days of the School.

"I hope we shall have another school next summer, and that it will last longer." This is the wish expressed in a letter from Miss Gladys Myers, a Junior girl in the Bethlehem (Valley of Virginia) Sunday School. Boys and girls everywhere enjoy these summer schools. It is not too late for your church to make a beginning in this work this summer. Let us know how we can help you to have a Vacation Bible School for the sake of your boys and girls.

Sanford Christian Sunday School had a most successful Children's Day on Sunday, July 16th. The program which was arranged by Mrs. K. W. Lawrence and Miss Jennie Gunter, was well rendered, and enjoyed by all present. Especially enjoyable was the part which the Cradle Roll Babies had on the program. Four of the little tots "graduated" into the Beginners' Department, receiving their diplomas at this service. Unique invitations were sent out to every baby to come and bring papa and mama. Miss Emma Hart is superintendent of this Cradle Roll, and to her we are indebted for samples of the invitations, and account of the program.

The Christiania Sunday School (Dadeville, Alabama) continues to grow and to do good work. Mr. Pressley Ingram, the Secretary, reports an enrollment of ninety-six at present, an increase of twenty-four members since the close of our Increase Contest, in which this school increased its membership 203%. The Home Department has helped to increase the membership, and even the attendance at the Sunday morning session, as the Sunday school interest is developed and strengthened. Already Christiania is planning work which will keep up the interest through the winter months. Truly this is one of our "Banner Schools."

Last Saturday and Sunday, July 29th and 30th, the Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention was held at the Noon Day Church. We hope for a complete report later. This makes the fifth Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention held in the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention this year, or a Convention for every Conference. These gatherings have made a great contribution to our work and have increased interest in many sections. May they be but the beginning of a better year of work. The Handbook, to be published in the near future by the Board of Religious Education, will contain the minutes of all five Conventions, and statistical reports from all Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. If no report has been sent in to your Convention thus far, will you not please send your report to the Field Secretary very soon, in order that your School may not be left out.

Additional Children's Day offerings have been received as follows: Rose Hill, Ga., $2.15; Richland, Ga., $2.00; Amelia, N. C., $3.52; Berea (Norfolk), $2.75; Spring Hill, Va., $2.70; Holy Neck, $6.00; Sanford, $6.82. Has your School sent in its offering yet?

A Daily Vacation Bible School is in progress this week at Holland, Va., with the following teachers: Dr. W. M. Jay, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Mrs. I. A. Luke, and Miss Mary Nell Holland.

Plans for the Chautauqua are progressing nicely. Enrollments are beginning to come in. Very soon, the program will be entirely completed, and published. Suggestions from our ministers or church workers regarding the Chautauqua will be gratefully received. Information will be given gladly from our Richmond office. Among the interesting recreational features of the week will be the daily ball game between the Chautauqua team, with Rev. O. D. Poythress as the Captain, and the Y. C. C., of Elon. For the music hour we have been fortunate enough to secure Miss Julia Braxton as leader, and Mr. Walter Greenwood as soloist, and Prof. E. M. Betts as pianist. The children of Elon, and those who will attend the Chautauqua with their parents will rejoice to hear that there will be a Daily Vacation Bible School, held every day during the session, especially for the children, with story hour, recreation, expressional work and everything to make their stay pleasant.

As the Board of Religious Education is just entering upon its second year of active work, with a Field Secretary for full time, it is with the earnest desire to be of greatest service to all of our churches in every way possible. Inquiries regarding the work will be gladly answered at any time. Suggestions will be gratefully received. Only with the fullest co-operation of our ministers and Sunday School and Christian Endeavor workers can we make our work helpful to the work of our church in the South.

EASTERN VIRGINIA SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

The sessions of the Sunday School Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference were held July 25th and 26th with the Berea (Norfolk County) church people. A fine representation from the churches of the Conference was present when the Convention opened at ten o'clock Tuesday morning, July 25th, with the President, Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., of Norfolk, presiding. After an inspiring song service, the morning worship was conducted by Rev. B. J. Earp, of Newport News. A cordial welcome was extended to the delegates and visitors present by Rev. W. C. Hook, pastor of the Berea Church, and his address was responded to by Mr. John J. Pitt, of Norfolk.

Two splendid addresses completed the program for the first morning. Dr. W. A. Harper spoke on "The Essential Qualifications of a Successful Superintendent in the Modern Sunday School," impressing all with the importance of the position. He emphasized the fact that as God's representative, the Sunday School Superintendent should be a man who is trained, prayerful, serviceable, and faithful to his work; that he is a man who does not despair, nor scold, nor consider that he knows all that is to be done, nor "ride hobbies" to the detriment of the work of the School. He further suggested that this successful superintendent will take notes from all sources which will help his work, that he will study the records of his school as a basis for progressive work, that he will keep in intimate touch with his officers and teachers, and that he will have a definite program for the work of his school. The closing address of the morning was delivered by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Field Secretary of Missions, who spoke on "The Greatest Missionary Task of our Christian Sunday Schools" stressing the importance of expression on the truth taught in our Sunday Schools, and speaking of the various channels through which our church expresses itself in activity; as Education, Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor, Missions, Publications, Christian Orphanage, Help to Aged Ministers, and our Convention work itself. The great task of our Church is to link all of these enterprises into one great program, that we may go forward along all lines, and to do this our children must be taught of all this work as one great program of expression. It was shown that this is the great aim of our Men and Millions Campaign, and those hearing this great address were impressed by its truth, and stirred with a pride that the Christian Church has launched such a program, and with a desire to further the good work.

The afternoon session of the Convention Tuesday was devoted to reports and addresses. Mrs. I. W. Johnson, of Suffolk, gave a most splendid Cradle Roll Report, showing that almost one thousand babies are enrolled on the Cradle Rolls of the Eastern Virginia Sunday Schools, and that every church except eight have now an active Cradle Roll. The report was received most enthusiastically, and several expressed their intention to do more in this important branch of the work. Timely and impressive addresses were delivered by Rev. J. H. Lightbourne on "Teacher Training," and by Dr. W. M. Jay on "Our Sunday Schools and Elon College." An interesting Talkaround on "Building New Sunday Schools within the Convention at the most likely points" was led by Dr. L. E. Smith.

At the evening session, the devotional services were led by Dr. I. W. Johnson, and Dr. W. A. Harper spoke on the subject: "Education with a Difference."

The second day opened with a song service, led by Rev. O. D. Poythress, of South Norfolk, and a devotional period during which Rev. W. L. Wells spoke on the theme, "Worship in the Sunday School," bringing out clearly the importance of a worshipful attitude in the School, and suggesting means to deepen the devotional spirit of our Sunday morning sessions. The report of the Teen Age Superintendent, and an address on that work was given by Rev. O. D. Poythress. Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., gave the report on Adult Work, and followed his report with an address. Miss Emily Midyett, of Norfolk, and a teacher in our work in Carroll County, Va., gave an inspiring and interesting address on our work in the mountains. Her words gave a vivid picture of the needs of the people who live so near to us, and of the great work which she and Mrs. Meredith are doing in our school there to meet those needs and to make possible a better life for the people there. The Field Secretary of Religious Education, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, spoke on the theme, "Looking Forward," pointing out some of the advance steps being taken in the work of religious education through the Sunday School, and of the great work still before us. Dr. W. T. Walters, of Richmond, Va., Chairman of the Board of Religious Education, spoke on the work which the Board has attempted to do during the past year, and of contemplated work, and called upon the Convention for its interest and support. Mr. E. T. Holland spoke on the coming Chautauqua and School of Methods to be held at Elon College August 28th to September 4th.

The closing session was held Wednesday afternoon. An address on the subject, "The Relation of Christian Endeavor to the Sunday School and Church," was made by Rev. E. H. Rainey, and in a clear and convincing way, Rev. Rainey pointed out the great possibilities of the work of Christian Endeavor in training our young people for a larger service in the church and community. Three five-minute talks were made by three young people. Miss Maude Lee Howell spoke on "The Sunday School—A Challenge to our Best Socially," and Miss Mary Nell Holland spoke on "The Sunday School—A Challenge to our Best Mentally." Miss Evelyn Byrd spoke on "The Sunday School—A Challenge to our Best Loyalty," and all of these talks were splendid and show what our young people can do because of their Sunday School training, and show their keen interest in its work. Miss Eldredge spoke briefly on "What Should Be Our Program for the Fall Campaign?" After a brief business session, the Convention adjourned.

All delegates and visitors pronounced the gathering a success. As a time of good fellowship and social enjoyment, the Convention was a treat. The members of the Berea Church, and their friends in the community were most royal in their hospitality. The officers of the Convention worked hard to have the sessions the best they could possibly make it. A spirit of harmony and progressive plans marked the Convention.

The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President, Col. E. E. Holland, Suffolk, Va.; Vice-Presidents, Mr. John J. Pitts, Norfolk, and Rev. W. L. Wells, Portsmouth; Recording Secretary, Rev. B. J. Earp, Newport News; Corresponding Secretary, Rev. J. H. Lightbourn, Holland; Treasurer, Mr. J. W. Folk, Suffolk.

WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO?

This is a question that is faced by all young people of both sexes. Life opens up before them with its many opportunities and varied possibilities. Along the pathway of the future are to be seen wealth, pleasure, fame, service, toil, ignorance, enlightenment, dissatisfaction, respectability, a drone in the community or a respectful citizen. And the boy or girl, young man or young woman, must choose which of these are to be ignored and which to be cultivated. Some seem to drift through life without ever having made any decision. They drift from one thing to another and usually make themselves one of the crowd with whom they associate; but most of us make some kind of a decision and adhere to a more or less fixed policy. Every man and woman can live a worthwhile life if they will, but they must prepare themselves for it, and, if life is worth living, it is worth preparing ourselves to live. Many of our young people will make the decision soon that will affect all the after life. Schools and colleges all over our land will throw their doors open within the next few weeks and thousands of our boys and girls will enter them in preparation for life's work. Are you going?

The Southern Christian Convention offers two opportunities for preparation for service:

The first opportunity comes with the session of the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College, August 28th to September 4th. The old adage, "That whatever is worth doing, is worth doing right," will certainly apply equally as well to church and Sunday school work as elsewhere. It was the hope of the promoters of the Chautauqua, and is still the aim of those who have it in charge, to better group our church and Sunday school workers for service. Come and spend a week with us and go back with new ideas and a new inspiration and thereby do a greater work for your church and community.

The second opportunity comes with the opening of Elon College September 6th. It is our college and it is doing a splendid work for our people. Every church within the bounds of our Convention should have a representative there. We need more ministers and more trained layworkers and they should get their training at our own college.

No one should set a standard which means less than doing his best for himself, for mankind and for God.

W. T. WALTERS.

EASTERN VIRGINIA S. S. CONVENTION

The Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference met on July 25 and 26 at Berea, Norfolk County. This the fifty-third annual session was very interesting, and the attendance large. The speeches were of a high order and well delivered. Visitors from a distance were Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Secretary of Missions of the Southern Christian Convention; Dr. W. A. Harper, President of Elon College; Rev. N. G. Newman, College Pastor Elon College, N. C.; Prof. P. J. Kernodle, Managing Editor of the CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va.; Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Field Secretary of the Board of Religious Education, Richmond, Va.; Miss Emily Midyette, Instructor in our Mission School at Fancy Gap, Va. The reports of the various departmental secretaries show that progress has been made along the various lines. The report of the Cradle Roll superintendent perhaps deserves special mention. Near 1,000 babies were reported as being lined up in the Cradle Roll.

The place of next meeting was left in the hands of the Executive Committee. The new officers for the year are as follows:

Christian Orphanage

Dear friends:—

Last week your Superintendent was attending a Convention of the Welfare Workers of the State of North Carolina, held at the University of North Carolina. Hence the Absence of our weekly letter.

While in the convention we had the opportunity of hearing addresses by Dr. Hastings H. Hart of the Russell Sage Foundation and Miss Abbott of Washington, D. C. It is a good tonic for people who are engaged in the work of handling children to listen to experts on the question like the above mentioned experts. We always get new ideas that help us in our work.

One of the most appreciated gifts and one that has brought as much joy and happiness to the children as any gift that has come to us, is the contribution by Mr. J. M. Darden of Suffolk, Va., of a playground set including an ocean wave. It is a pretty sight to see twenty or thirty little children on the ocean wave at one time having a merry time and singing their little play songs.

Brother Darden will have to pay us a visit and see them play, and he will then get the worth of his gift in seeing how happy he has made the children. We need one other thing to make our place more complete and that is a swimming pool. I have not made a calculation as to how much it would cost, but it would be a blessing that would bring joy to every child in the Institution. They all like to go to the branch and make a little pond large enough to get under the water. Who will be so kind as to give us this blessing?

Sometime ago we wrote a letter to each Sunday School and asked them to give us a monthly contribution if they were not already making one. Quite a number have already responded and we are grateful. We are praying and hoping that all our Sunday Schools will soon be on the list.

Please can some fruit for us.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Uncle Charlie:

I am late for June, but am sending 20cts for June and July. We have had lots of rain lately. Crops are not looking so well, and it is awfully bad on our little biddies and turkeys.

Hope all the little cousins are well. With lots of love to each of them.—Lydia Janette Carter. Sunbury, N. C.

Wet weather is bad on biddies and young turkeys. My mother raised lots of turkeys when I was a little boy but that has been a long time ago. "Uncle Charleys" hair is getting thin on the top of his head and the flies like to light on it. We appreciate your letter and want you to write each month.—"Uncle Charley"

THE N. C. SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION

This Convention was held at Liberty Church, Vance County, July 11, 12, 13, and was altogether the most helpful, practical and wholesome session this writer has ever attended. This is, he thinks, to be accounted for by the fact that Miss Lucy Eldredge, of our Board of Religious Education, consented a year ago to act as General Secretary of the Convention and had most to do in shaping the program for the meeting. We sometimes hear complaint made that our Conventions and Conferences are not definite and practical in their work. Put the fault, nine times out of ten, at the door of the program maker and you will not go far wrong. Miss Eldredge, with her helper, has built a program for the Convention that drove directly toward the mark of definite information and suggestion along practical lines for Sunday school superintendents, teachers, officers and pupils from beginning to end. And if each delegate did not go back to his home school with something to suggest and to help along the line of better methods, it was certainly not the fault of this Convention.

The sessions began at 8 P. M., July 11th. Mr. Geo. M. McCullers, with the aid of an up-to-date Convention orchestra, began at the fall of the President's gavel a soul-stirring musical program that inspired all present with a desire to hear, heed, work and worship. Rev. J. E. Franks, pastor, led the devotionals and gave cordial words of welcome, to which Rev. B. J. Howard gave fitting response. After the enrollment and a brief business session, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, raised the slogan and set a high standard for the Convention in presenting very powerfully and convincingly, "Four Fundamental Sunday School Objectives."

Wednesday A. M., from 9 to 9:45, various types of music, some by the local choir, some by the Convention orchestra, and brief suggestions about best methods and best music for the Sunday school, greatly edified and inspired the Convention. After a business session of 15 minutes, President C. H. Stephenson delivered a well-planned and wonderful annual address, "H—E—A—R—T—Work in the Sunday School." It is a pity that all our Sunday school teachers and officers, as well as pupils, cannot have a copy of this suggestive utterance. At 10:30 Departmental Reports were presented. Cradle Roll by Miss Emma Hart; Primary, by Miss Susie Riddick; Adult, by Rev. S. M. Lynam; Teacher Training, Rev. T. E. White. These reports told of the work done in the departments the past year and contained suggestions for work the coming year. Mrs. W. H. Stephenson, Attorney-at-Law, of Dallas, Texas, who aided so materially in the work of the Convention orchestra, delivered an address of real uplift for all Sunday school workers, using as his subject, "A Clear Day." Following this the Convention divided into two divisions for a conference hour on the themes: "(A) Superintendents and Officers' Conference," led by Prof. L. L. Vaughan, State College, Raleigh; (B) "Elementary Workers' Conference," with the theme of "Story-Telling," led by Miss Lucy Eldredge. In the afternoon. Reports were presented from: 1, Senior Christian Endeavor; 2, Junior Christian Endeavor. And brief, pointed talks were given on Christian Endeavor Essentials—six in number.

Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., Secretary of C. E. for the American Christian Convention, delivered a great address on "Modern Comrades." Rev. J. Vincent Knight, of Raleigh, led the Seniors in a Christian Endeavor Conference Hour, and Miss Flora Summers and Miss Knight, the Juniors. It was our hour of question asking and answering bearing on the essential problems of Christian Endeavor.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., of Richmond, closed the afternoon session with an address of power on "The Church of Tomorrow."

Rev. R. L. Williamson, of Henderson, opened the evening services with fitting devotionals at 8 o'clock, and Supt. C. I. Johnston, of the Christian Orphanage, presented the claims of that institution so forcibly that an offering of nearly $200 was given. The writer then spoke to the Convention of our Men and Millions Movement, and the need of emphasizing this movement in all churches from all our pulpits and in all our Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies.

Thursday the Convention began promptly at 9 A. M., with the avowed plan and purpose to finish the work before adjourning for dinner. After devotionals and general reports on Music, Co-operation, Literature, Organization and Expansion, Missions, etc., addresses were given by Dr. W. T. Walters on "Our Board of Religious Education," and by Dr. W. A. Harper on "Facing the Future." Dr. Walters, as Chairman, explained in detail the work his Board had done and was trying to do, and President Harper, in a most logical presentation, showed what we must do in our churches and Sunday schools if we are to "Face the Future" with assurance of safety and security. It was an address whose timely suggestions the Convention cannot forget the coming year. In the Conference hour that followed, Miss Susie Riddick led the Elementary Workers in one division, and Rev. S. M. Lyman led the Adult Workers in another.

No write up can adequately portray the work of this Convention. But the schools and C. E. Societies, as well as the churches, will feel the impact of it the coming year. "The Vision—Now the Task," by Dr. G. O. Lankford, was the proper topic and in the heart of the right man as a conclusion to the sessions. Liberty entertained the great Convention with regal hospitality and the fellowship of the workers and visitors was delightful throughout.

Called Home

JOSEPH HENLEY

JOSEPH HENLEY, a member of the Christian Church at Mt. Carmel, Franklin Co., N. C., was born 1865, twice married, leaves a widow, three Daughters, one Son, five grand children and a host of friends to mourn his departure. As Brother Green his Pastor was conducting a protracted meeting at Ropes Chapel, he could not attend the funeral services which took place in the beautiful grove at Mt. Carmel, yesterday, conducted by Brother Dowell, Pastor of the Baptist Church, at Franklin, N. C. It is a very rare thing to see such a large congregation at the funeral services of anyone at a country church. Brother Henley and family have a large number of warm friends.—D. A. L.

RUSSELL GRAY

DEACON RUSSELL GRAY, was born about forty years ago and passed from labor to reward June 4, 1922. He was Deacon and Superintendent of the Christian Church at Bethlehem, Warren County, N. C. His widow and only child, Oliver (age 14) were present in the large congregation, yesterday, July 23, when the funeral services took place. Brother Gray, was a very earnest Christian and useful citizen. The members of the Church at Bethlehem will in a short time, elect another Deacon. Mrs. Gray and Oliver have the Christian love and sympathy of the entire community about Bethlehem.—D. A. L.

WINCHESTER LETTER

The work in the First Christian Church, Winchester, Va., is moving on very nicely considering the very warm weather we have been having the last several weeks. The Sunday school is doing good work under the splendid leadership of Mr. Nelson Richards, the young, but efficient superintendent. The Christian Endeavor Society, too, is doing a good work, and the attendance is holding up in a most encouraging way. Mr. Percy Sheetz is the President of the Endeavor Society, and is doing good work. The other organizations of the church are all doing splendid work, and I believe a much greater interest will be manifested in the next few months.

The Church attendance has been very good since I have been on the field, but not what it ought to be. But there are signs of better attendance, and I see no reason why the work here should not move forward as well as any mission point in our church. This is our only city church in the Valley Conference, and should be made to go by all means, and should be supported in every way possible. Mrs. Morgan and I are going to do our best to be of service in this field, and we desire the prayers of the brotherhood in the behalf of this work. We have a most pleasant people to work among, and some of as loyal members as one will find any where.

We are comfortably situated in the Parsonage purchased for us just before we came to the field, and are happy despite the fact that we have before us a gigantic task.

The annual meeting of the church will be held on Wednesday evening before the first Sunday in August, at which time the new officers of the church will be elected, including an Official Board of the church, which will meet once a month to transact any business that needs to be attended to between the quarterly conferences. Some other new features will also be added to our organization, by which we hope to be able to do better work in the interest of the Kingdom. Yours in His Service, 12 W. Clifford St., J. F. MORGAN.

LIBERTY, VIRGINIA

July 12.—Liberty Christian Church was organized by Rev. Chas. E. Newman in 1910. He is still the pastor. It has but recently experienced one of the greatest revival meetings it has ever had. It began the first Sunday in July. It closed the second Sunday. Rev. G. D. Eastes, Norfolk, Va., assisted the pastor. We consider him a great preacher and one especially gifted as a revivalist. We feel that we were fortunate and blessed in having such a man to labor among us. Bro. Eastes is a thoroughly consecrated man and an untiring worker, ever eager for the salvation of souls. We had more professions and more to unite with the church than ever before. There were twenty-three professions of faith in Christ, and twenty-four united with the church. Mr. Eastes conducts meeting not only for our church, but for other denominations—even more than for our own. This ought not so to be, for our churches need his services every day in the year. I am wondering why more do not utilize his time and talents. There are certainly many Christian Churches in the Southern Christian Convention which need his work and his help. We are evidently making a great mistake in allowing others to reap the benefits of his labors, when we so much need him. He has made himself many lasting friends in our community, and we sincerely wish he may be with us again next year.

UNION MEETING

Norlina, N. C., July 17, 1922.

Dear Dr. Barrett:—We had a Union Meeting at Mt. Auburn. Services began the Second Sunday in the month and closed yesterday, P. M. The following persons were among the speakers: Reverends Nelson, Pastor of the Baptist Church, Salf of the Methodist Church, the Rector of the Episcopal Church, Knight of the Christian Church, Harper of Elon College, and D. A. Long.

The fellowship was delightful, the congregation large, and as you see, we send Mt. Auburn a Pastor. You know what a kind and hospitable people live in this part of N. C. and Va. The converts gave their names to Brother Kimball and instructed him to notify the various Pastors of the Denomination of their choice. No paid Evangelist or singers. The collection will after paying the sexton be equally divided among the Orphanages of the Denominations represented in "the union meeting." The vote was unanimous for another Union Meeting next year. I preached for the Baptists here last night and will preach here again to-night before starting to Franklin.—D. A. LONG.

BELEW CREEK NOTES

Beginning July 16th we held a five days revival meeting at Belew Creek, assisted by Rev. L. L. Wyrick of Elon College. The meeting could not be called a sensational success, but there were three conversions all of them coming into the Belew Creek Church.

Brother Wyrick ably presented the gospel message, and his preaching was well received. His experience as a pastor made him very valuable to us in our pastoral work among our people, and we feel that he left the community much better for his coming.

In spite of the inclement weather the congregations were good especially at the night services. The church seemed to be aroused, and we believe that the meeting will send it forth to its great work with renewed life.

The Sunday School at Belew Creek is taking on new life. The intermediate and adult classes are now organizing, and they expect to do much work through the class. We do not have a Christian Endeavor, but if the organized classes function as we believe they will, there will be no need for the Endeavor. By using the organized class as the agency for teaching and expressional work the school hopes to avoid duplication of effort by correlating its work properly.

We Can Do without Meat, so say Scientists.—

Is meat a necessity? So people think, but Dr. Cattell, the Editor of The Scientific Monthly, who is said to be one of the foremost men of science in this country says so long as milk is included in the bill of fare, meat may be omitted, not only with safety, but with advantage. The fact that God did not allow the Jews to eat meat ought to be enough to show us that it is not necessary as a diet. Let us eat less meat and keep in better health.

Is Christianity The Final Religion of This World?—

What a pity that doubt has done so much to hinder, if not to destroy, the only religion that makes any pretence to save men for everlasting life, and yet there are thousands of professing Christians and especially ministers of the gospel who seem to feel honored when they can throw suspicion or doubt on the reliability of the Christian religion. We hear much said of comparative religions, just as though a false thing could be properly compared with a genuine article. A study of comparative religions, meaning a comparative study of false religions might be made profitable by giving the world a greater knowledge of these false religions, as so much information, but any thought of comparing the demerits of false religions with the merits of Christianity is a shame. Any effort to bring them on a par is scandal of the most despicable kind. If any man knows that Christianity is false religion and as such, belongs in the same class as others there is no false religions, then he may compare them, but there is no comparison between the genuine and a spurious religion.

Poor Armenia Lies Helpless and Bleeding.—

It seems quite unbelievable that the Turk after being whipped into submission to the allies is still allowed to go destroying Armenia, poor helpless Armenia, and we believe it is because Armenia is a Christian people. The Nations of the present day, we mean the so called Christian nations, stand still and see their brethren suffering almost extinction at the hands of the cruel Turks, and yet seem to be doing nothing for real relief. It is a blot on latter day justice that these nations stand still and see their helpless brethren suffer as Christians at the hands of the heathen Turks. That the nations which triumphed in a world war will stand still and allow one of the heathen nations to continue to trample on the helpless people who were loyal to the allies all the way through the world war, and that by a nation who did their best to destroy the Allies is a matter difficult to explain. Our Baptist brethren in their late Convention at Jacksonville, Florida, made an appeal to our President to take some steps along with other nations, to put a stop to the wholesale murder of the Armenians by the Turks, and it is stated that President Harding is moving in the matter in the hope of accomplishing something for the relief of the Armenians. Most surely late action is better than no action at all, but such action ought to have preceded the war instead of waiting several years after the war had subjugated the unspeakable Turk. Let every man and woman throw the weight of his or her influence in favor of this move to free Armenia from the terrors of Turkish cruelty. We should have moved in this matter long ago.

The Land of Luther is Not Lutheran.—

It was once, but now it is not. It has been swept out into the overflowing stream of modernism, modernism in its worst form. German rationalism seems to have done its worst when it got a chance to strike back at the great reformer. Now we are told that what was once Lutheranism is now rank Unitarianism and along with that almost any kind of ism you may wish. Some one has said that orthodoxy in Germany is bankrupt, of which fact the late world war is the outstanding evidence. Some one has even gone further by saying that the late world war was evidence that orthodoxy is bankrupt among the nations as a moral force. We are not prepared to deny it, but as a fact an orthodoxy which is the outcome of a stolid stand for truth without the life, or for the letter without the spirit. We believe that the life which Jesus gives to the people is just as virile to-day as it ever was. No mere form of theological statement can be depended upon as giving life to the people—it must be indwelt by the living of the Son of God. Some one has said, and we fear it is all too true, that for a half century the leading theological schools of Germany have been the leaders in the apostacy from the faith. We dare to say that this apostacy from the Christian Faith in Germany opened the way for the world war, Bolshevism and the present day restlessness, and it is now almost world-wide. What else can we expect to be brought out of this German apostacy from the faith. What else can this falling away be made to mean to the world? This at least, every possible evil which Satan can conjure up for the spread of error. It is time that men who are loyal to Jesus Christ should get in line for a return to the truth in the hope of getting out of this most awful apostacy of the Christian Era.

The Wisdom of One Age the Error of the Next.

The world is one great battleground. If an idea can find a place in world thought and then hold it for a century, in that fact it will find justification of its plea for existence and for a place in the thought of progressive men and women. As a matter of fact few ideas, we mean of course, human ideas, ever run the gauntlet successfully for so many years. In many instances the teaching of the people of one century is repudiated by the people of the next century, and this is more or less true in all spheres of human activity. As an example of an idea which has been of long standing, and yet loses out when it was apparently at its best, we can call attention to the repudiation of Pepsin as a medicine for bad stomachs. We know when pepsin seemed to be the great factor in relieving stomach trouble, but now it is repudiated as entirely worthless as a remedy for the ills of the stomach. Another instance is found in the starch-digesting ferments. Only a little while ago great factories were built for the manufacture of these starch-digesting ferments, but now high medical authority pronounces these as remedies absolutely absurd. See Good Health, page 53, for February, 1921. Even in Science, the theories of to-day have to wait only a little while to find a grave. The science of one day is the folly of some succeeding day, not so far away from the time of its usefulness. Take the theories of astronomers. Astronomy lives, but men's theories of astronomy die almost as fast as they come into existence. In the opinions of men ideas which to-day are accepted as truth, to-morrow may be put away in the graves which will never be opened again. Let us be glad that while men's opinions of the very truth of God change almost with the moon, yet the truth of God stands and will never change—it is as eternal as their Author. Let us not be frightened when some mere man gives out that he has found error in the truth of God. Comfort yourself with the thought that the truth of God is standing as of old, and that the thing which has been found in error is some man's opinion of the truth. It was said on one occasion in the State of New York, in 1833, Abraham Lincoln was spending the night with a farmer, during some political canvass, when away in the dark hours of the night the old farmer called Mr. Lincoln and told him to get up that the day of judgment was at hand. Mr. Lincoln arose and dressed and went out to see what was taking place. When he got out he saw something like the stars were falling. He stood and watched them for a few minutes. when he yawned and stretched his long and bony arms out at full length and said: "Well I see the seven stars are in place and as long as they are there, I guess we are in no danger," and saying so he retired and went to sleep again. Let us get a little comfort from the Lincoln incident. Science may change, human opinions will change, but as long as the truth of God stands, like Lincoln, we may simply assure ourselves, as long as the truth of God shall remain, we need not trouble ourselves over the changes in human knowledge, or in the ways of thinking men, for we have an anchor that cannot drift and we are safe when within the limits of God's truth and way.

NOTES - PERSONALS

In the eleventh chapter of Hebrews when one reads it, he feels like saying, amen! What else could he say?—Dr. G. S. Staub, Dayton, Ohio.

The new church building at Mebane, N. C., will be opened about this time, perhaps next Sunday, Bro. Klapp, the pastor, says he has a most faithful band of workers in that church. So may it come to the best and very soon.

Rev. J. E. Franks is one of the most faithful and popular pastors in our North Carolina Conference. He has been very successful as a pastor and as a preacher. He is reputed to be a growing man and a man even now of great usefulness.

We are glad to hear that Rev. W. B. Fuller is doing well in his work at Ivor, Va. That is another Tar-Heel that has found a home in Virginia. Anyhow we are glad that he is doing so well and we wish him great success in doing the Lord's work in the Old Dominion.

If you are ever going to help your church paper now is a good time to do so, and do not be any longer in doing it than you can help. That is one weak point in so many of our people, they think the Sun can run whether they do anything for it or not. You may wake up when it is too late. Get busy for The Sun now.

Wake Forest College has opened its doors to the fraternities, and it has thereby raised a row in their camp, for protests are coming in from many directions, and we believe they will have to shut these doors, or have the great body of the Baptists of North Carolina refuse to darken the said doors. We are very much interested to see what is to come of this innovation in a Baptist college.

Rev. P. T. Klapp is in a series of meetings at Pleasant Ridge, N. C., this week. A number of brethren are calling for help in such meetings and we wish we could respond favorably, but hearts are full and hands running over, so what can we do it, but say, No? We are reluctant to say it, but our strength and spare time are not sufficient to help in only a very few instances.

It seems that mail for "The Christian Sun" for July 27 was delayed in transit. It left Reidsville on good time, at least we committed it to the keeping of Uncle Sam in good time, as early as usual. This is the first matter for "The Sun" that has gone astray since we took up the work. One thing is sure doing your work as editor at such long distance has many inconveniences and greatly hinders the editor in his work.

That is an interesting letter from Porto Rico in our columns of this week. Whoever expected to see in the early part of the twentieth century a congregation of seven denominations meeting together and no one refer to his respective church in any way except as Christian? That must have been an inspiring occasion. No doubt many of our American readers would have taken delight in meeting with this great body of believers in Porto Rico.

The article by Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D., in a recent issue of "The Christian Sun" is surely wonderful. Long ago I took the stand that the Bible is inspired and the most wonderful of all books—Dr. G. S. Staub, Dayton, Ohio.

Rev. J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va., has had much on his hands this year to hinder him in doing his pastoral work, as Mrs. Foster has been ill and had quite a stay in the Lakeview hospital in Suffolk, under the care of Dr. J. E. Rawles and his associates. We are glad to state that news from Mrs. Foster is that she is doing well and in a good way to recover. Bro. Foster is if we mistake not, now in his tenth year on that field and he has done a good work in building up that part of the Lord's vineyard.

Dr. Harper is one of our busiest of men now, working for the opening of Elon early in September. He is, if you remember well, trying to fill Elon College for next session with our own young people. He does not object to young people of other denominations coming to College at Elon, but he does want our people to get the benefit of Elon's educational advantages. Let see if we cannot help him to fill up Elon with our own young people who ought to go to Elon, set in to the task and see if you cannot get them to go. There is certainly a great advantage in having a Christian education. Let our young people do their best to get such an education, and while they try, you can help them, if you will.

How have you answered the calls of Bro. Chas. D. Johnston, Superintendent of our Orphanage? Do not refuse help in his case if you can possibly avoid it, for he has the orphanage children there to feed and clothe, and when you refuse his call you are refusing to help some of the helpless orphans, and you cannot afford that, when you can prevent doing so. Just think: Suppose you were gone and your own dear little children were left without natural protectors in life's great struggles, do you not think it would be a hard heart and a close fist that would not pour out to the needs of the children? Doubtless you would think it a queer Christian who would thus refuse to help, when the need is so great, so urgent.

We think so, too. The Biblical Recorder speaks out on the matter of the dangers and fatalities of the railroad crossings. The Recorder says: "The staggering toll of death on railroad crossings should cause the Corporation Commission to order the closing of as nearly every grade crossing as possible. There is a constant stream of casualties reported day after day of people whose lives are lost at these grade crossings." Let every good citizen, in so far as he has any influence in that direction, exert himself to see that relief is given to a long suffering public. Why should any company or corporation be allowed to set a death trap in the midst of the people. You may be sure when such a trap is set, some one will lose his or her life there. Away with the grade crossings for both our railroads and traction companies. There is no plea that can justify it.

Here are some awful figures. Listen! We are told that the United States Commissioner of Education estimates that during the year 1920, while the world was starving, we expended for joy-riding automobiles, luxurious living, tobacco, jewelry, and other unnecessary luxuries the sum of $22,700,000,000. During the same time we gave to missions to promote Christ's Kingdom abroad $437,886,040, or comparatively we spent $600 in luxuries for ourselves, and $1.00 to evangelize the world. That is an awful comment on the life we are living. Surely we ought to be praying for the power of the Holy Spirit to fall on the Church people of this land till we should turn and reverse ourselves; at the least in a large measure, by doing so much more for the giving of the Gospel to the world, as it lies in wickedness and in sin. It is a shame that the Church of Christ has been so poorly taught as to be guilty of such extravagance. May God forgive the preachers of this land for having taught the people so loosely and so poorly, as to make it possible for the people who profess faith in Christ to do such an awful thing as to spend so much on ourselves and so very little for the giving to a dying world.

We have received two copies of a local paper called The Little White Church from Wolfboro., with our old friend, Rev. B. F. Black as editor. It is published in the interest of The Little White Church at that place. We wish it a sphere of great usefulness. We rarely ever see the name of our Bro. Black but that we think of him as a most generous brother. We know he was all of that, four years ago we were left in the city of Cincinnati, O., and that was before we became a resident of Ohio, The National Convention of the Christian Endeavor Society was in session there. It was nine o'clock in the night, when I found that I could not get out of the city till the next day. Hotels and boarding houses were crowded. In seeking admittance to a boarding house, I was told that there was not a bed to spare in the house and then I was puzzled, but just then Rev. B. F. Black, heard my voice, and he said, "Come right in—you may have my bed and I will sleep on the floor." I objected to his generosity on the ground that it would not be fair to him, but he was determined and I had to submit, and I confess, under the circumstances, the submission was most cheerfully rendered, and I had a good bed, while my brother slept on the floor. If ever he gets in a hard place and needs help he can get it, to the extent of my ability, if I may be in reach of him. He is generous to a fault and a big hearted brother. God bless his ministry in New Hampshire.

There is no doubt about it, we think, there has rarely been in the history of the world, certainly not in modern times, such a disregard for the authority of law as just now. By some means we seem to be just finding out the possibility of getting along without law. That is no doubt true, and yet how awful is the getting along without law? We are told that in The Presbyterian Banner that Dr. A. Z. Conrad said in address before the Moody Bible Institute that a lack of faith in the Bible undermines reverence for rightful authority. He said that the underlying cause of the lawless conditions which have recently so disturbed Chicago and other large cities is the anarchistic trend of disregard for law. That is the one thing most lamentable throughout the country to-day. It is partly an aftermath of the war, since war always lessens regard for life and property. But it has a deeper reason—drifting away from divine authority. This is behind it all. A large element of the Church has ceased to believe in the final authority of the Bible. Let us get back to the old time reverence for the Bible because it is the law of God and our reverence for it as such, means a better life for the man or the woman who so believes it. The authority of God must stand among His people or all other authority will be disregarded, and when we have no authority then we shall have pure and simply anarchy, and that will be a curse to the world. Let us wake up and do our best to believe and obey God's law. When this is done a new day for the people of God will dawn, and no sooner, we believe.

BLUE PENCILING THE COMMANDMENTS.

That is a strange suggestion, but it comes to the front every now and then, and in the strange part of it is that there are men who are ready and willing to stand by such nonsense. The Literary Digest, a few weeks ago, told of some move on hand by an official body of a certain denomination to blue pencil the Ten Commandments. By that we understand it was meant that a good bit of the Ten Commandments are out of date and not needed in this day of advanced culture. What nonsense!

We are compelled to give in to our modernists on one point, viz.: They have in their ranks some men who can get up the most unheard of notions and withal, the most foolish suggestions that men ever brought forth, and the result is a discredit even to the more steady of these modernists. They have some men in their ranks, we think, who would be ashamed to have any connection with the wild work some of these men are doing, or rather trying to do, for we are thankful to believe that no great number of the modernists will permit themselves to join in supporting some of these notions—wildcat schemes to make for themselves a reputation for learning. Alas, we pity the learning which some of these men parade before the public.

Here is another instance. A pastor in a New England town, we are told, strongly objected to the teaching of the Ten Commandments to the Sunday school children, because, as he claimed, the Ten Commandments are not up-to-date. Of course he was an extremist, and yet it seems unfortunate that such a man should be in the pastorate of any church. In this case the man not only objected to the Ten Commandments being taught to the children in the Sunday-school, but he repudiated the doctrines of the inspiration of the Bible and the Diety of Christ. This man was undoubtedly in advance—but of what? We should say that he was in advance of the wicked one himself. Undoubtedly he was taking more advanced ground than the devil himself could use, and therefore his extremes did his cause more harm than good. We fear there are some men who find nothing too advanced for them in the way of discounting the things of record in the Bible. Surely men ought to learn some practical things while they are advancing so fast.

HINDRANCES IN THE PRAYER LIFE.

Do you know what these hindrances are in the prayer life? If you do not know, we fear you do not because you have done but little praying. People who pray know—they know at least that they are hindered, although they may not be conscious of what hinders.

The Rev. H. A. Brown of Winston-Salem undertakes to tell the readers of The Biblical Recorder what may be some of the things which hinder our Baptist brethren in prayer, they may hinder our people also, we republish from The recorder what he says, as follows:

"Every preacher who has been in the ministry long has preached one or more sermons on the hindrance to prayer. Every book that I have read on prayer has one or two chapters devoted to this subject. Every Christian who has prayed at all knows out of the depths of his own experience that these hindrances exist. The heart knoweth its own bitterness and its own hindrances better than another can describe them. Until we come to realize that prayer is a communion of our spirit with God—a breathing of our spiritual nature, a yearning or panting of the soul after God—we shall be hampered with all sorts of difficulties and hindrances."

"Even words may prove a hindrance: for there are longings in our hearts which no language can frame into expression. Prayer may be to us an attitude of the heart—a condition of the mind, a surrender of the will, a yielding of the life to God. The Psalmist said, "I was dumb with silence; I opened not my mouth because. Thou didst it." Was there no worship of the spirit in that quiet hour?"

"A fond mother had her baby die in her arms; then she stole away to a lonely spot, and when a member of the family found her in hiding and said to her, Why are you here?" She answered, "I wanted to be still before the Lord." Was there no worship in that attitude of silence? Jesus said, "When thou prayest enter into thy closet and when thou hast shut thy door pray to thy Father who seeth in secret." There are times when we feel that we must get away from noises and disturbances connected with the presence of others, that we may be alone with God. He rebuked the Pharisees for wanting to stand on the corners of the streets and make long prayers to be heard of men. Prayers that are made to be heard of men are not often heard of God."

"A multitude of words may smother out the breath of prayer. Jesus spent whole nights in prayer but it is not probable that these prayers were uttered in words. Language is too poor a vehicle, sometimes, to convey the deep breathings of our souls to God. The Holy Spirit makes intercession for us, according to the will of God, in groanings which cannot be uttered. It is remarkable that nearly all the prayers recorded in the Bible are brief. The prayer of the publican, the thief on the cross and the woman who prayed, "Lord help me." are striking illustrations."

"We are taught to pray to be forgiven our trespasses as we forgive them who trespass against us. As long as we harbor revenge or hatred or anger in our hearts against others we will find ourselves hindered in our prayers. If we are proud and haughty and full of thoughts of ourselves we will pray in vain to God who resisteth the proud and giveth grace to the humble. If when we bring our gifts to the altar and remember that our brother has aught against us we should seek reconciliation, if we would not have our prayers hindered.

Socrates prayed, "Make me pure and beautiful within." we may make the same prayer with great benefit to ourselves. David prayed with fervor for a clean heart and a right spirit. If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me. If we can pray the prayer of the Psalmist, "Search me, Oh God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me in the way everlasting," there will be no probability that our prayers will be hindered."

There is another hinderance not included in the above. The praying believer is often urged that he must arise from his knees, as an important duty demands immediate attention. That is one of the devil's sharpnesses used to stop Christians from praying. Do not let him fool you thus.

A NATION-WIDE REVOLT—DR. STRATON'S BOLDNESS.

We believe it will become Christendom-wide, and the sooner the better. We refer to the struggle between the Bible and its enemies. No such perversions of the truth, as we hear of these days, can go for a great while without paralyzing Christianity's forces on the human side. The conservatives have already kept quiet far too long, but at last they are being aroused and the fight is on in earnest. It will not stop till one side has been vanquished and the truth once more given the right of way in the pulpits of the churches of Christ. We have seen for years that this fight is inevitable. To-day the denomination, which a few years ago was regarded as the most conservative, has become one of the leaders in this battle against the plain teachings of the Bible, and that is the Baptist body. It is near to the splitting point, and, as we see it, nothing but the overruling Providence of God can save that great denomination from a division. In that event, however, the Baptist denomination will not long be alone, for the same uprising which may split the Baptist denomination on the rock of materialism, higher criticism and the new theology, will most likely split all the evangelical denominations into at least two parts, and then we shall see the people who stand by the Bible most likely coming together on the Bible, as the common platform of the Christian Faith. Then a new day will dawn for the Church of Jesus Christ and she will arise and go to the ends of the earth with the precious gospel of the Son of God.

The conservatives have been having but little to say as to these disturbing elements. Possibly they believed that it was a sort of fad that had struck a few of the teachers, but they see that these "scholars" are determined to wreck the ship, if their teachings will do it, and now the Conservatives are rising in the strength of the Christian Faith, and they are going to meet the men who are repudiating the Bible, and the battle is on in earnest, and must remain on till one side or the other is vanquished, and let us remind our readers that this is no joke—it is a solemn and earnest fact. The battle is on!

The denominational papers, at least some of them, have been leaning toward these opposers of the Bible, while the denominational papers of the conservative kind have been keeping up a "watchful waiting" to see what it all means.

They are beginning to get their eyes open and they are already putting on the whole armour of God and getting into the thick of the fight. It is a battle for the defense of the gospel and for the saving of the world in Christ. Scores of the leading men of the different denominations, and especially of the Baptists, are pulling off their coats and getting down to business.

Only a few weeks ago we told our readers how eighteen hundred Baptist churches in the Northern Baptist Convention have refused to make any further contributions to denominational work till this question is settled, and that list will grow by leaps and bounds as the days may come and go. Undoubtedly, as we think, the conservatives are numerically in the lead, and their numbers are being argued rapidly. As we see it, not one half of the conservatives or as they call themselves, Fundamentalists, have yet been aroused, so though at this time, the radicals are seemingly in the lead, but if you wait a year or two, you will see that these radicals are most likely out numbered two to one.

The Rev. John Roach Straton, pastor of one of the leading Baptist churches in New York City, has come out in the boldest way and declares himself for a bold and determined stand against these radicals. The Methodist Protestant of Baltimore, in giving the facts as to the stand of Dr. Straton, says:

Straton Attacks College Infidels.

Declaring that the Baptist faith faces danger dissolution by the encroachment of infidelity in the in the theological seminaries where the principles of the Christian religion are supposed to be taught, the Rev. Dr. John Roach Straton, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church of New York City, in a recent sermon called upon Baptists throughout the country to turn upon those men who, he said, are departing from church tenets, and cast them out of the denominational colleges. "So far as I am concerned," declared Dr. Straton, "I announce here and now that I am done with the schools that countenance and continue these false and destructive teachings, and as an individual I will never give a dollar of money to them, nor will I encourage the members of the church to give their support, nor will I encourage young men to go as students to them." Dr. Straton read excerpts from writings and addresses of certain college and seminary professors, dealing mainly with denials of the supernatural attributes of the Bible and attacks upon the credibility of certain parts of the New Testament. Among those mentioned as having offended in this respect were, Prof. Henry V. Vedder, Prof. Spencer B. Meeses and Prof. Frank G. Lewis, all of the Crozier Seminary; Prof. William Newton Clark of Colgate Seminary, Dr. W. H. P. Faunce president of Brown University, Prof. William F. Bade of Berkley Divinity School, and Prof. C. B. Smith and Prof. Shailer Matthews of the University of Chicago Divinity School. Dr Straton is well known as a militant reformer. We are glad that he has entered the lists as an equally militant defender of the faith. And he is not alone. There are abundant evidences of a nation-wide revolt against the brazen rationalism of our day.

("That ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints"—Jude 3.)

You see where Dr. Straton takes his stand. The various denominational schools, where the rank teachings of these "modernists" are held forth to the young people, are going to find hundreds of the supporters of these schools are going to do just as Dr. Straton is doing, and just as eighteen hundred Baptist churches have already done, in refusing to give a dollar to their support, and will follow this action by doing all they can to keep their young people from these schools in which this bold error is so boldly taught, and when the conservative side of the various denominations get into action, throwing the weight of their influence against evolution, higher criticism and the new theology, then these schools will feel the pinch of a lack of money to carry on their work against the Christian's Bible.

We do not claim to be a prophet, or the son of a prophet, but who lives to see the situation as it shall develop in the next ten to twenty years, will see what is then taking place, or more than likely, will then have already taken place, the conservatives will be in the lead, and the radicals will be asking for help to keep their work a-going, but the answer to such calls will be few and far between.

We do not wish for controversy along the lines of the Christian life. The present situation is not one of ordinary controversy—it is far more.

It is obedience to the injunction of the inspired writer who said:

"Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints"—Jude 3.

That looks as if Jude had trouble with men, and he told the saints to stand for the faith, yea, to contend for the faith, which was once delivered to the saints. It is most likely just as important now, as it was then, that we do not desert the Word of God to its enemies, but that we contend earnestly for the faith and at all cost maintain the cause of truth and righteousness in the name of our God.

THE QUESTION NEEDS TO BE HANDLED.

No doubt that many of "The Christian Sun" readers are in some way mixed up with tobacco. They may make it. Or it may be that they sell it, or possibly they use it. Now it is often a bit hard to approach men who are mixed up with evils of a habit, or a business. So it may be that we cannot approach many of our readers, and yet if a man is a Christian, he ought always to be willing to look into the facts which may be associated with his life. So it is with tobacco—there are some facts relating to the question which all Christian men and women ought to be willing to face and candidly consider, and if they find themselves on the wrong side, as Christians, there is but one thing to do, and that is to disassociate themselves from the evil thing, no matter what it may cost in dollars and cents. The Herald of Gospel Liberty has recently given its readers a fine editorial on The Amazing Increase of the Cigarette Habit. It is so valuable that we are taking the liberty to republish it as follows:

The Herald always tries to be reasonable on any and every subject, and not to be an alarmist or an extremist. It certainly has not been radical on the tobacco question. We know many fine Christian men who use tobacco. We believe it to be a filthy, useless, costly habit—and they do, too! And we know a large number of Christian men and women who do not use tobacco themselves, but who raise it, or sell it. And we do not see that it is much worse to use it than it is to raise it or to sell it—and many of them do not either. However, we have had little to say about it. But we do believe that both those who use tobacco and those who raise it, as well as the rest of us, have a right to become alarmed over the almost incredible increase in the use of the cigarette, and what this increased use will mean to the physical and intellectual, if not ethical, stamina of the coming generations.

There is no use trying to ignore the fact that up until the war, the cigarette was very generally looked upon as an unmitigated evil. Its baneful effects upon both physical and intellectual vitality were widely recognized, especially in educational and medical circles. School men everywhere denounced it, doctors and surgeons very generally opposed it, coaches and physical training experts for ball and other sports tabooed it and some business concerns prohibited its use in their establishments and offices. But there was no other one thing in which the war mania caused more people more absolutely to reverse themselves than in the matter of the cigarette. Folks simply lost their heads on the question, and threw all of the experience and scientific experimentation and investigation of years to the winds—in a perfectly silly and sentimental attempt to baby the soldier boys. Doctors, preachers, Sunday-school teachers, good old "white ribbon" mothers, physical training experts who all of their lives had fought cigarettes as a most insidious foe to youth, all at once joined in with the hue and cry, and helped to raise money and to pass out cigarettes to the "boys!" The consequence was that restraint was broken down everywhere, and the work of long years was overtopped in a very short while. Young smokers who always had avoided the cigarette as a vicious thing, and other young men who never had nor never would have smoked if Christian people had not been so silly as to supply them with the "makings," took up the habit. And the result is that this country has experienced such a growth in the use of this form of tobacco as is bound to have a most deleterious effect upon the human race if steps are not taken to check this rapidly growing evil. Figures just furnished by the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington give a startling revelation of how the cigarette habit is on the increase. According to a statement furnished by this Government office to Rev. O. K. Miller, Superintendent of the New York Civic League, the number of cigarettes manufactured were as follows:

1905	6,913,138	3,666,814,273
1906	10,742,354	4,501,254,783
1910	19,374,077	8,644,335,407
1915	15,816,210	17,964,348,272
1916	22,192,700	25,290,293,911
1917	24,596,110	35,331,264,076
1920	28,938,552	47,430,105,055
1921	45,309,529	50,835,068,919

Thus it will be seen that while there were only four and a half million of the large cigarettes (those weighing more than three pounds per thousand) and over three billion of the small (those weighing not more than three pounds per thousand) made in 1900, that their number had gradually increased by 1910 to over nineteen million of the large and eight and a half billion of the small. Then in 1916 there was a sudden increase of nearly fifty percent in the use of both sizes. That was only six years ago. But in the brief space of time since, the number of cigarettes manufactured in the United States has more than doubled—the output for 1921 being estimated by the Internal Revenue Office at over forty-five million for the large and nearly fifty-one billion for the small. The seriousness of this appalling increase is augmented by the fact that there has been not only a steady growth year by year, but that that growth has come faster in the large than in the small size cigarette—leaping in the large size from twenty-eight million in 1920 to forty-five million in 1921, an increase of over sixty percent in this last year.

That there is in such an astounding increase just cause for the utmost concern of sober-minded people will be admitted by every one who can at all grasp even the economical side of the question. But The Herald is thinking today of that other, and far more serious, phase of it—the inevitable effect which such an unrestrained use of the cigarette is bound to have upon the life of this nation. It is silly for people to allow themselves to be deceived by the subtle propaganda of those who make money out of cigarettes or out of advertising them, into thinking that they are innocuous and harmless. Our liquor dealers and the papers which advertised their business worked that game so sly and so long, telling us that there is no harm in whiskey or beer, that thinking men and women surely ought to be wise to that old trick by this time. And it is a sign of pathetic weakness for any man, simply because he indulges, to blind himself to the injury which does come from any bad habit—and there is no surer proof that it is a bad habit than when it is capable of making a man do just that very thing. There is abundant proof that the cigarette has the power to attach itself upon individuals as an almost irresistible habit—and a habit that cuts down vitality and resistance. Its effects may not be apparent in every individual; but on the whole it is altogether too harmful to be unchallenged and unrestrained. The surprising rapidity with which its use in increasing makes it high time for even for tobacco users themselves to admit these facts and recognize its perils. There are none better qualified to speak of the effect of this form of tobacco on the young than are the teachers. Their opinion against it is determined; and the National Educational Association declares that its alarming increase is not only a cause for alarm, but a call to arms. Everywhere people should be stirred anew to how this danger is fastening itself upon our country, and Christian forces should redouble their efforts to regain the ground that has been lost in the fight against this insidious evil."

It is amazing how good men and women are sometimes swept off their feet and induced to do things which, to say the least, are un-Christian. During the recent war there were many excellent people who under the thought that they were doing something for the soldier, went out and begged for money to buy tobacco to send to the battle field. Some almost lost their usual good temper because some of us would have nothing to do with any such thing, believing that such help was to comfort the enemy. Alas, let us wake up!

THE NEED OF REAL STATESMEN IN THE CHURCH.

The outstanding fact in the life of every church member should be the Christian life. No man has a right in the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ unless he has been born again, unless he has been regenerated. That, as we see it, is the basis of all true church membership, for without the new birth no one can be a Christian, and if one is not a Christian, he certainly does not belong to the Church of Christ. Having experienced the new birth, as the basis of his Christian life, he has a right to a place in the membership of the Christian Church. We need two things to greatly promote the life of the Church at large. The first is the new birth in every member: Then another need is real Christian statesmanship on the part of our leaders. Not every one can fill the place of statesmanship, but we surely do need some men, as leaders, who are in their very make-up statesmen—men who know how to plan for the accomplishment of great things in the life and work of the Church. We have studied this matter for years and we believe that we can count on our fingers the number of real statesmen in the Christian Church. Indeed, we are not sure but that they may be counted on the fingers of one hand, and even these will not stand out as unusual in their statesmanship in point of strength and vital activity.

We have men who are filling the places which by all means ought to be occupied by statesmen, but in many instances they fill the place in a way, but how many things have they ever brought to pass to enlarge the work of the denomination. We have in mind now a man who is bright and a good talker, who has been filling the place of a statesman for many years. He draws his salary and looks after the mere clerical work of his office, but if he has ever inaugurated a single enterprise, or in any way shown ability in doing the tasks of a statesman, we cannot now recall it. His position is a most important one, and yet he has filled the chair and the desk of the office with himself, but if he has ever planned any great work for the enlargement of the boundaries of the Church, we cannot recall it. If in this we are mistaken, let him or some friend of his just name the thing wherein he has displayed the ability of true statesmanship. This is not the main trouble in this matter. Of more serious consequences than this one individual case is the fact that statesmanship is so seldom displayed among our leaders. This is to be regretted, of course, but it is time for us to seek statesmen to fill our general offices, for until we try and succeed in doing so, we are doomed to a very limited existence as a denomination. Of this fact we have not the slightest doubt. Of course, we must not be understood as meaning that we need statesmen irrespective of Christian character. No, we mean that we need Christian men to become our leaders who are statesmen in fact.

We call to mind an interesting case. Away back in 1882, there came into one of our conferences a new man. He did not know the ways of work in that conference and so he fell out of line and did not do but little of the work the Conference had asked the pastors to do. This stirred him up and he paid his fine like a man, and then he threw himself into the work heart and soul. Financial conditions in the conference were very poor. This man took up the task of making these conditions much better. He went at it in such a way that almost no one saw his purpose in what he was doing, but today, forty years later, as the outgrowth of his statesmanship, that conference is the largest in its finances in the denomination, as we believe, and it is due largely to the statesmanship of this one man, and he has no unusual ability in that line, but the little that he had has made a new day, financially, in that conference. What we wish our people to see is that if a little ability as a statesman has been so abundantly blessed, what would it mean to the whole body of churches, if our leaders generally had only been statesmen instead of mere clerical forces. We believe this is one of the most important matters with which The American Christian Convention will have to deal in its session at Burlington, N. C., next October. If we go on with men filling our offices who are simply bright men and even interesting men, and even good men, but men who have no ability as statesmen, then we may expect our future to continue as it has been with us in the past—slowly but surely going backward.

Would you put a stop to this backward movement? Then be sure to choose your officers for their statesmanship, choose men who are able and willing to lead and to devise plans and to execute them in a way to bring to our work a new day in its development and a new hope for the cause we love. We say nothing against these men, except their lack of real aggressive statesmanship. This is the secret of our future prosperity or failure. Get the right men to lead.

Instead of Religious Education, let us make it Christian Education. Do you ask what is the difference. You might teach a Moslem the tenets of his faith, and that would be religious education. You might teach a Hindoo the leading ideas in Hindooism, and that would be religious education, but when you come to teach a person the tenets of the Christian Faith, that is Christian Education. You may still hold to Religious Education as your preference, but you are bound to admit that Christian Education means immensely more than Religious Education, for Christian Education is being taught in the ways and truths of Christ, and that is what we need.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Criticism in its best sense works by some standard for the improvement of literature or art; but criticism is also adverse and works for the injury of reputation or work. The first is essential to progress and has no prejudice; the second is full of bitterness and contains no good motive. All people naturally court friendly criticism as a means of discovering faults and correcting them, but most people resent unfriendly criticism in terms and by a spirit equally blamable. There is no life so perfect as to prevent either kind of criticism; the question naturally arises as to how criticism should be treated. This would not be so important if criticism were not universal, but all human beings are either the choice objects or the victims of criticism. Both are in danger. The one may become vain by merited or unmerited friendly criticism; the other may become sour under unfriendly criticism. James says: "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." But you cannot say that of adverse criticism. It is more like a serpent; resist and it will come toward you with more venom. Anger is the same in spirit, if not criticism run mad. Resist anger and it increases its force upon you.

There is a good side to all badness if one is good enough to meet it in the spirit of Jesus. "He was oppressed and He was afflicted; yet He opened not His mouth. That is the spirit in which to meet adverse criticism. Criticism, unresisted, is really free advertisement; but resisted, it becomes a ground of justification for the critic. Hot words resisted justify the anger and increase the bitterness that uttered them. Let anger express itself without a counter spirit and words, and it will say too much and regret it. Adverse criticism puts man or business before the public more than friendly criticism. Friendly criticism dies in the air, but adverse criticism lives and grows. One bad thing you do or one good thing you neglect will live longer and go further than a dozen good things you say or do. It is the fire in the city that develops firemen. It is the hard year that develops farmers. It is the trials that develop Christians. "The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering." Adverse criticism is the index to the evil that is in the world, but the Christian does not overcome evil by counter evil but "overcomes evil with good."

The best weapon with which to fight criticism or angry words is silence. Silence is the innocence of speech. It is the impregnable fortress of self-control. It is the sanctuary of peace. It is the temple of the Most High. It is the character-house built upon a rock. It needs no defence but its own right spirit. Do not talk back. Do not complain. Do not entertain bad feelings. Do not seek revenge. Let others talk. It will keep your name before the public, it will advertise your wares. It will cost you nothing. It will do you no harm, unless it is true; and, if it is true, resentment will make it worse. There is only one remedy for wrong and that is repentance.

The main trouble about adverse criticism is that its conclusions are founded on partial evidence. The facts are not known. Prejudice and ill will enter into a false judgment that expresses itself in unjust criticism and repetition multiplies the wrong. The world is full of unguarded speech. Keep your ears open and your mouth shut. Call your whole being into executive session when dangerous tongues malign your motives or your actions. The main thing is to keep your life clean and your lips true.

W. W. STATEY.

ELON LETTER.

Not so long since a friend troubled with the phantom of religious doubt asked me—"how can we know God?" I hope, but want to know."

Anyone who studies discerningly the universe in which he is placed and is acquainted with the march of human history will readily have need for such a being as the Christian's God to account for the facts. The universe is rationally constituted. Behind it there is an intelligent first cause and present in it there is a sentiment directing force. It were madness to draw any other conclusion. Reason leads to God, and any conception of God or of His universe or of His methods of dealing with men which is irrational will not abide. Many such have already passed away.

The second great source of knowledge of God is observation of the lives of others. Here are two men, one knowing God, the other ignorant of Him. How do their lives compare? Is there any significant difference? There certainly should be, especially in the crises of life. The Master was willing to rest His case for God right there. Witness the parable of the Last Judgment. The verdict was based on the life's fruit in conduct. "By their fruits ye shall know them," He declared, and what is more, "By their fruits ye shall know them and God". Men judge our God by us, by His influence in controlling and guiding and shaping our lives. Many a distraught soul has found God through association with some saint of God. What a responsibility thus rests on us, who profess His name!

Revelation too is a fruitful source of the knowledge of God. Our loving Heavenly Father has in every age spoken to those ready and willing and able to hear and in our Bible the choicest of those messages are recorded. The conception of God as revealed in the Holy Bible, the creed of our dear Church, satisfies the deepest longings of the heart. "If we did not have this view of God, we should try to find it and grope in darkness till we did," said a devout Christian preacher. To which an infidel replied, "It is a fine notion, but how do you know it is true? I would rejoice to know that God is the person you believe Him to be."

This brings us to the fourth and most dependable source of the knowledge of God, our own experience. It is well to consult reason, and to observe the effect of the belief in God in the lives of others, and to study the work of revelation, but the evidence that can never be surpassed is our own personal experience of God. God is present in His world, present to me as I write and to you as you read, present everywhere and anxious to speak to us. In moments of holy exaltation, He does gain our attention, it may be but for a brief moment, but we descend from such an experience possessed of a power that no force can shake, a power that grows out of personal acquaintance with God. What would a man take for such an experience? And one of these days the knowledge of God will fill the earth as the waters cover the sea.

It is God's will that every child of His creation should live constantly and consciously in the uplifting inspiration such knowledge of Him brings. Why not practice the presence of God by prayer and meditation and calm reliant trust? Do you wish to know God so that you can never forget Him? Put Him to the test. He will reveal Himself to you and you will know. Wait on Him. He will speak.

W. A. HARPER.

WHAT ARE YOU WORTH?

What are you worth? Your first answer will be the one usually given, so many acres of land, so many head of stock, so many houses and lots, so many stocks and bonds amounting to so many dollars, but is there not another way to ask and answer the same question? What are you worth to the home, to the church, to the community and to your generation? Are you worth all you might be and are you rendering the best service of which you are capable? Have you made the best preparation you could for the work you are attempting to do?

Are you a Sunday School Superintendent, a teacher or a personal worker? How many books have you read on your line of work? If God demands the first and best of our love, He certainly has a right to demand and expect the best of our service. We cannot do our best unless we prepare ourselves for our task. Your worth in example and service is measured largely by the preparation you have made.

The aim of the Chautauqua and school of methods and of Elon College is to equip workers to render a larger and more worth while service. We want to help you do your best, through the drill of the college course or the suggestiveness of the chautauqua class or lecture.

You may never be rich in the wealth of the world but you can make your life of untold worth to your fellowmen through preparation and service.

Safety on Your Knees.

George Adam Smith was climbing one of the Swiss Alps. They were moving up with guides on the sheltered side. As they reached the crest of the last crag, Principal Smith was first and with a bound he stood on the top. He had failed to take account of the wind. As the guide saw him stand a minute and then begin to totter, he cried, "Down on your knees." There was safety in the gale which blew at the top of the mountain only on one's knees.

The highest places in life are kept only at the greatest sacrifice. Prayer is the acceptable sacrifice of heart and life. The speech part is of such little consequence, compared to the humble heart.

Napoleon's military principle was that an army advances on its stomach. The Christian advances on his knees. We have too much machinery to carry us along in church.—Exchange.

SPECIAL TO THE SUN.

During the week following the second Sunday in July we held our regular series of meetings at Ingram. The church was in fine spiritual condition at the beginning of the meeting so far as was known to any one. But as a result of the meeting each member that had the pleasure of attending was encouraged and uplifted.

Beginning with the Monday night service Bro. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk church was with us and did the preaching throughout the week. He brought messages that were inspiring to the christian and appealing to the sinner. As a result there were nine additions to the church, and several reconsecrations. Unto God be all glory and praise.

A MIND TO WORK.

On Tuesday P. M. of the Eastern Va. S. S. Convention at Berea, Norfolk, last week between twenty and thirty Captains and Women Leaders of our Men and Millions Movement met for conference and counsel in a school house near the church. It was a joy to be in that meeting, and to realize that one was associated in so great a task with workers so willing and so capable. Each reported the condition and needs in his or her own field and gave most valuable suggestions as to how the work is being conducted. Each one showed a willingness to work and to do his best in the great task committed to him by his church and for their Master. If all the Captains are as faithful, and will prove as willing to work at Men and Millions as these are there need be no fears as to the outcome. It is a rare privilege indeed to be associated with them in a task so great and a cause so worthy.

Our Captains are not working either for pay, honor or glory. They are enlisted in a cause near and dear to their hearts, and one in which they can serve their church and their Lord. Through them Men and Millions seeks to enlist and build up workers in each local church upon whom the pastor can depend and in whose hands the work of the Kingdoms secure and will go forward. Our Captains and Women Leaders stand indeed "in a large room and an effectual door is open with them." I am grateful beyond words at their cooperation, sympathy and counsel.

GOOD WORDS FROM PORTO RICO.

The last few weeks have been busy ones. Always we have a great deal to do in our regular mission work, but of late we have had a few extras, and of course, that always adds to our daily tasks. On July 4, 1922, the "glorious fourth," as we call it sometimes, here in Porto Rico. The Third Summer Conference for Porto Rico, began in the little town of San German. The Conference sessions were held on the premises of the San German Polytechnic Institute. You read of this famous spot in the letters of our dear brother, Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., who while with us last Fall visited this place. He also told us of the distinguished founder, Rev. J. W. Harriss of Texas. Mr. Harriss explained to Dr. Atkinson all his plans and showed us the drawings of his proposed million dollar plant of which he has been dreaming for years. Now his dream is coming to pass. One of the beautiful buildings of which he has dreamed, has been realized, and it was ready to receive the one hundred and twenty-five delegates, who assembled from all parts of the Island for this summer conference. The opening service was at 8, P.M. on the fourth of July. So on our Ford car we drove over taking five delegates with us. We had the pleasure of reaching there in just two hours and twenty minutes, and without even a necessary stop. The delegates were delighted to see each other. They were delegates from seven different denominations which are doing work on the island. They belong to the Evangelical Union. It was hard to find out what mission the delegates represented, as no one heard a word as to the denomination from which they came. Only Christian was mentioned when referring to the Church. The opening service was led by a young and native Christian. It consisted of a short devotional service, and song and praise service. The Main message of the evening was delivered in English by Dr. Neal, a representative of the Baptist denomination. The message was pointed, instructive and inspiring. It was charged with power from above, and it gave such an impetus as made sure the greatest conference yet held on the grounds. The speaker's main point was El Cristiano Alegre, meaning The Happy Christian. Dr. Neil made the audience happy after the sermon by singing the Chorus of "Brighten Your Corner," in Spanish. He had visited Porto Rico once before and had so fallen in love with the language as to induce him to learn enough of the language to enable him to be to that extent in common with others. When he was through his Spanish song, he received the greatest applause ever given in the new building. Wednesday morning by the time the birds began to sing the delegates began to gather in the auditorium. Here we were led in song and prayer service by Senor Matos, a young minister from the Congregational Church. At 7:30 the bell rang for breakfast. At once we retired to the Institute dining room, where we were served oat meal, bread and butter and coffee. Many of the students who had been in school during the year remained over to cook and serve the meals for the Conference. It was a jolly, good natured crowd of young people. One of the young ladies was a daughter of the President. The greater part of the morning was taken up in Bible studies, lectures, and discussions of missionary problems. After dinner, which was served at the same place and by the same persons, as the morning meal, the entire afternoon was given to recreation. The conference lasted for six days.

Being unable to stay through the whole time, I returned home, when Mrs. Barrett went and staid three days and on her return home I left at once to spend the final day with the Conference and to bring home the delegates which I had taken over in the beginning. We had eight representatives from our people during the sessions.

The closing service was in harmony and spirit of the entire conference. Rev. N. H. Huffman superintendent of Christian work in Santo Domingo preached from a text in Revelation: "If ye have ears to hear, hear what the Spirit saith." The conference came to an end with everybody feeling it was good to be there. These conferences are to grow as the accommodations of the Institute may grow, so being able to accommodate us. This year the Conference only allowed the workers to attend, but this included all ministers, native and Americans, their wives and women workers. It is hoped that all members who can go, will be provided with accommodations within a few years. Among the delegates was Miss Olive G. Williams of our Church who did not return to her work but sailed from Mayaguez July 11, for the North, going home on her vacation. She has not been very well for some time, but hopes to get well and strong and then return. She said as she was about to leave that she would prefer returning to her work in Salinas to going North, she had received such an inspiration for her work during the sessions of this conference. She goes North to regain her strength and to visit a few friends and the Quadrennia Convention at Burlington. She necessarily leaves a vacancy at Salinas. She will be greatly missed there. She has impressed a large number of those with whom she has come into touch with her self-sacrificing spirit. She has always been willing to expose herself in order to meet the needs of the poor, the suffering and the dying. I have not always been able to agree with her in her methods, but I have always admired her noble spirit of sacrifice. Miss Williams told me that she would never have known what real missionary work in Porto Rico was had she not gone to Salinas. There she saw it in its first stages, more or less. No one can follow her in her experiences better than Rev. T. E. White or Miss Jennie Mishler. They know the ins and outs of initiating mission work in Santa Isabel and Salinas. Miss Williams goes with many good wishes from all the friends and with the hope that she may soon be well and strong, and if it be God's will, that she may soon return to her Salinas field, where she has already spent over a year in service.

Why is it that the great body of Christians do not read the book of Revelation? The character of the book would seem to entitle it to a wide reading. Revelation means a taking down of the veil so that we can see beyond—see Jesus, for He is the theme of the book. It is the Revelation which God gave unto Jesus Christ as His faithful Son. The Message of Revelation God gave to Jesus Christ, Jesus gave to the angel, the angel gave it to John, and John gave it to the churches. Now you see how it came to man. Christ is the central theme of the book, and the whole scene is moving toward the second coming of the Lord. The main end which the sacred writer seems to keep in view is the coming of the Kingdom. Now do you think Christians should neglect such a book—not read it and not study it, as giving us strength for the tasks of life. Let us get out of this neglect of this great and last book of revealed thought, and let us come to learn it and so get the help it may have for us?

Honored Womanhood

BY MRS E. A. CRAWFORD, MEBANE, N. C.

Delivered before the Alumni Association Elon College, N. C. May, 1922.

For nearly two thousand years a Grecian woman, Aspasia, was looked upon by the learned with wonder and veneration, simply because she had shown herself the equal in intellect of the men of her age. And just as men ask themselves if it could be possible that one man could conceive all the beautiful phases of Shakespeare, so scholars, reading the encomiums of Socrates, Plato, Xenophon and Thucydides concerning this Athenian woman inquired one of another if there would appear among mankind a second Aspasia to delight with the graces of Womanhood and to counsel with the wisdom of the sage. However, the last several centuries have beheld such rapid intellectual development of woman, that Aspasia seems no longer a miracle. Indeed she seems wonderful today only because she is one of the few women who attained to anything of intellectual prowess before the Christian Era.

But from the time that the Virgin Mary wrapped her first born in swaddling clothes and cradled him in a manger, womanhood has been glorified. And something of the radiant beauty and sacredness of the reflected halo about the Holy Family has shown with a steady glow adown these more than two thousand years, to guide and bless and sanctify the homes of all lands.

Many are the opportunities and achievements that have been vouchsafed to woman during these years, as step by step she has industriously forged ahead in all lines of endeavor. However gratifying and satisfying this success may seem woman today is just entering upon a career whose brilliancy and success shall be measured only by her own attitude toward and grasp of the wondrous new opportunities, which are presenting themselves in ever increasing array.

The 19th Amendment to the Federal Constitution has brought the American woman shoulder to shoulder with man politically. She had already taken this place socially and intellectually. Many other nations have extended the vote to their women and it is merely a question of a little time till all will do so. But enlarged fields of activity signify increased responsibilities. The question of how woman shall meet these increasing demands upon her time and labor is a vital one, one which must give anxious moments to the thoughtful. Assuredly her task is no easy one.

A retrospective glance at what has been accomplished by women in the past may give us some conception of what must be achieved if the woman of today, in the light of her new opportunities is to excel or even equal her sister of Yesterday. In every age there are women who rise like mountains from the undulating plains of ordinary humanity. Let these familiar characters be our illustrations—for they, as leaders, give the true measure of what has been done by the sex.

Truly such a one was Florence Nightingale. We recall how this noble woman first conceived the idea, during the Crimean War, of going with a band of nurses to the front to give succor and comfort to the wounded soldiers. Her great heart bled at the thought of the terrible suffering of the soldier, with no soft hand to smooth his pillow, no gentle touch to sooth his suffering, no word of comfort to calm his dying hour, so she used her great fortune and risked her own life to be a mother to the soldier lad. Little did she know the great wave of pity and compassion she had set in motion, for, the great idea of the Red Cross Organization grew out of this heroic undertaking, conceived by the loving heart of one woman. Needless to recall to our minds the glorious work of this noble band in the late war for the words "Red Cross" conjure up a host of memories of the devotion and sacrifice of the "Rose of No-Man's land".

And while thinking of this woman who did so much to relieve the horrors of war-time and of the influences she set in motion, my mind naturally reverts to one who waged a peaceful warfare here in our own land, that has done more to relieve the suffering of humanity than even Florence Nightingale and the great Red Cross. This woman, like Cicero, needs nothing mute to honor her, nothing silent to do her homage for she lives in the hearts and memories of her country-men. However, when the visitor to our National Capital enters Statuary Hall for the first time, a quick survey of the great Hall of fame reveals the statue of this woman, the only woman in Statuary Hall—namely, Francis E. Willard—nor does this noble woman seem at all out of place among such men as George Washington, Robert E. Lee, Zebulon B. Vance and numerous others whom their states have delighted to honor. And as the visitor allows his gaze to linger upon that splendid statue, the vision which she saw and the dreams which she dreamed, seem to rise before the mind's eye, for indeed Francis E. Willard dreamed dreams and saw visions, dreams of better social conditions—visions of a world free from the terrible curse of alcoholic beverages. So with the courage born of her great faith, she organized Temperance Unions throughout the land and through these began to educate public sentiment to the evil of intemperance. She was absolutely tireless in her efforts and if she ever became discouraged it was a matter between herself and her God. As a result of this brave and beautiful spirit we now have the 18th Amendment and no longer is the open saloon a menace to our boys. And, these growing up under temperance instruction at home, in day school and Sunday-school, shall go forth a mighty conquering army to put down the power of illegal traffic in alcohol. Other nations are even now preparing to follow in our footsteps, and soon shall the whole glorious vision be fulfilled. No wonder Illinois should have honored herself by placing the statue of Francis E. Willard in Statuary Hall.

While these two remarkable women challenge our admiration and love because of the public and beneficent character of their work none-the-less, should we cherish and honor the names of those women who although leading quite, unobtrusive lives have, still left the impress of their character on the world, through the lives of their children, and their fame is reflected from their honor. When in any part of the world men's thoughts turn to the ideal of equal rights under law and equal opportunities at birth, there rises out of all the mists of democracy in the past but one colossal figure—George Washington—cold, silent, unmovable, yet a man the most generally admired of any the world has ever produced. As governmental systems pass on the scale from the American method onward through constitutional monarchy to the deeper shades of despotism, the fame of Washington advances, until those historians who are farthest away are most sensible of what he did that was God-like and most enthusiastic in placing him foremost among the men who have been. This powerful, terrible, exorable, gentle, patient, just man, the Father of his country of 105 million people, inherited his remarkable personality from his mother Mary Washington. George Washington, himself, always unhesitatingly attributed his great success to his mother's forming care. The home of Mrs Washington, of which she was always mistress, was ever a pattern of order. There the levity and indulgence common to youth was tempered by a deference and well regulated restraint and thus the chief was taught the duty of moderation and obedience which prepared him to command. When in 1833 a marble shaft was erected to the memory of this wonderful mother it was thought sufficient to inscribe it with these simple words "Mary the Mother of Washington", certainly enough reflected honor for any woman. Said President Jackson, "The mother of a family who lives to see the virtues of her children, rewarded, who is known and honored because they are known and honored, should have no other wish on this side of the grave to gratify." "Rise noble pile! And show an unborn generation who rest below

And say to mothers what a holy charge
Is theirs—with what a kingly power their love
Might rule the fountains of the new-born mind!
Warm them to wake, at early dawn,—and sow
Good seed before the world doth sow the tares,
Nor in their toil decline—that angel bands may Put the sickle in and reap for God
And gather to his garner."

This mere glance at what has been accomplished at the hands of woman in the past may well make us stop and inquire earnestly: "Whence this great power? Have we of today in any measure this same power?" Nor does it need a prophet to tell us that there is grave cause for anxiety here. Today we have in the United States 35,000 churches without pastors. A large per cent of the representative churches on being questioned as to the number of ministers sent out in the last 25 years, report none, while many young men who have entered the ministry have dropped out. This one thing gives us, so to speak, the pulse of our religious life, proving conclusively that it needs quickening and reviving. But let us not conclude that this task of strengthening and stabilizing the forces of the Kingdom is for the Church alone, for the causes involved are traceable to home influences. Therefore this problem may, we believe, be solved in only one way—namely: by a genuine revival of Christian nature in the home.

Indeed amid these new and enlarging scenes of activity for the woman of our land a great danger threatens our nation at this its most vital point. The home is still where woman may and must wield her greatest influence for good and God, or must fail utterly in her God-given task. Nor does this in any way imply neglect of the newer opportunities, but rather gives the chance to use these to the best advantage.

This idea of Christian nurture is strongly emphasized in the Bible: "Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it" And numerous similar commands, and though we have drifted far from the idea today, this means that a child shall be so trained that he may never be conscious of any definite period at which he may date a beneficent change of life, although he realizes his harmony with God's will. Jesus became a child, some one has said, that he might be the Saviour of children. He has sanctified childhood as he has every other age and experience of humanity by passing through it. And the light and sanctity of this Divine Childhood still lingers around every human child." And since the child of Nazareth set on it his seal and sign, who till man's sin hath marred it—Saith that childhood is not divine!" Baxter was at one time greatly troubled because he could recollect no time when there was a gracious change in his character. But he discovered at length that education is as properly a means of grace as preaching, and thus found the sweeter comfort in his love to God in that he had learned to love him so early.

We can better understand the workings and importance of this ideal of Christian nature if we bear in mind the fact that all society is organic, the state, the church, the school, the family and that in all these organic bodies there is a common spirit by which they are pre-ved and distinguished from each other. How different, for example, is the spirit of France from the spirit of England; the spirit of both from that of the United States; and that from the Spartan or the Athenian republic. This spirit produces a kind of organic character so that an Englishman cannot make to himself a French character, or any one of us an English character. We cannot act the character of one another, for so distinct are the feelings, prejudices, and temperaments of each, that they cannot even be accurately conceived and reproduced unless we are actually enveloped in them as an atmosphere.

In like measure is a peculiar spirit in every church, whether you take the larger divisions, the Jewish, the Greek, the Roman the Episcopal, the Presbyterian, the Baptist, or descend to the churches of the given city, you will find something characteristic in each—a common stamp to the members peculiar to themselves.

Also we know that there is a spirit which differentiates every school from every other one and places its stamp upon the lives and characters of its students. How often, and how lovingly and with what pride too we speak of the Elon spirit. How it rejoices our hearts that we may safely trust our sons and daughters to the loving Christian nurture and culture of Mother Elon. Here safe in a Christian college their young minds and hearts may be nourished and nurtured in the Godly atmosphere of the Elon family. To Alma Mater we confidently intrust these our greatest treasures and expect that every possible benign influence shall be so shed around these young lives, that in some measure at least, even defects of home training shall be counteracted and overcome. Truly we believe that the Elon spirit shall have a sweetening and wholesome influence on our boys and girls and that these shall return to us purer and better than when they came.

Then since we see clearly that there is a spirit in each of these organisms peculiar to itself and more or less hostile, more or less favorable to religious character and to some extent, at least, sovereign over the individual man, how much more must be true of the family, the very limit of organism. Indeed we possess only a mixed individuality all our lives long. A pure separate individual man, living wholly within and from himself is a mere fiction. No such person ever existed or ever can. On the other hand every member of the family conceives the manner, personal views, prejudices, practical motives and spirit of the home as an atmosphere which passes into all and pervades all as naturally as the air they breathe, however, not in any absolute or complete sense as to leave no room for individual distinctions and choices. Sometimes a member of the family passing into the sphere of other causes, as the school, the church, neighboring families, or general society, will emerge and take a character partially distinct, partially, never wholly. The odor of the house will always be in his garments and the internal difficulties with which he has to struggle will spring of the family seeds planted in nature, for to a certain extent we are parts or members of a common body, as truly as the limbs of a tree. In a general way we realize these truths, but so often fail to make them count toward the progress of the Kingdom.

The Kingdom of God among men maybe and is to be extended by two principal modes—One by the process of conversion and the other as I have intimated, by family propagation. The one by gaining over to the side of faith and piety, the other by the populating force of faith and piety. The former is the grand idea that has taken possession of the churches of our time, they are going to convert the world. They have taken hold of the promise, which so many of the prophets have given out, of a time when the reign of Christ shall be universal, extending to all nations, they will finally convert them and bring them into the gospel fold. Meanwhile very much less or almost nothing is made of the other method, namely, that of Christian population.

Indeed all our modern notions and speculations have taken a bent toward extreme individualism. In the State we have been engaged to bring out the civil rights of the individual, asserting his proper liberties as a person and vindicating his conscience, as a subject of God, from the constraint of force. In matters of religion we have burst the bands of church authority and erected the individual mind into a tribunal of judgement within itself. The state, the church the family have come to be regarded as mere collections of units. A national life, a church life, a family life, is no longer conceived, or perhaps conceivable by many instead of being wrought in together and penetrated to, some extent by historic laws and forces common to all the members, we only seem to be as seed piled together without any terms of connection save the accident of proximity, or the fact that we all belong to the common heap and thus the three great forms of organic unity God has appointed for the race are in danger of being lost out of mental recognition.

Never-the-less, we cannot escape the fact that Christianity does have the power to prepare a Godly seed that not only takes hold of the world by its converting efficacy, but it has a silent force that moves by a kind of destiny in causes back of all casual operation or individual choice, preparing by a gradual growing in of grace, to become the great populating motherhood of the world. As an example of this out populating power of Christianity let us compare the history of the Christian and Mohammedan races. The Christian development begins at an elder date, the Mohammedan at a later. The one is propagation by moral and religious influences, at least in part, the other a propagation by military force. Both have religious ideas and aims, but the main distinction is that one is taken hold of by religion as being a contribution to the free personal nature of souls; the other is taken hold of by a religion whose grip is Divine. For a time the latter spread like a fire in the forest, propagated by the terrible sword of predestination, and it seemed about to over-ride the world. But it by and by began to appear that the one religion was creating, the other was uncreating manhood, one en up great and powerful characters, the other tearing down, steeping in lethargy, the races it began to inspire; Till finally we can now see as distinctly as possible that the one is pouring on great tides of population, creating a great civilization and great and powerful nations; the other falling away into a feeble half depopulated, always decaying state; that augurs finally extinction at no distant period. The campaigning centuries of European chivalry, pressing Mohammedanism with crusade after crusade, could not bring it under, but the majestic populating force of Christian faith and nature can even push it out of the world, as in the silence of a dew-fall.

"They shall inherit the earth;" Yea verily, for there are causes and conditions of "menease" operative in the church which exist nowhere else. For example, wealth is unfolded more rapidly under the condition of Christian living. True piety is itself a principle of industry and application to business. It generates a faithful character, which is the basis of credit, as credit of prosperity. Hence it is that upon the rocky, stubborn soil, under the harsh and frowning skies of our New England, we behold so much high prosperity, so much physical well being and the wealth created is diffused about as evenly as the piety. This wealth accruing is power in every direction, power in production, enterprise, education, colonization, influence and consequent popular increase.

In the Christian people there will also be more talent unfolded and talent also takes the helm of causes everywhere. Christian families abound with influence especially favorable to the awakening of the intellectual principle in childhood. Religion itself is thoughtful. Every believing soul is exalted and empowered by union to God. His Judgement is clarified, his reason put in harmony with truth, his emotions swelled in volume, his imagination fired by the object of his faith, and so through God's university, the church, her sons become a talented and powerful race. Here too, will spring up science, discovery and invention. The great books will be born here and the highest, noblest, most quickening characters will here be fashioned. Popular liberties and the rights of persons will here be asserted. Commerce will go forth hence to act the prelude of the Christian love, in the universal fellowship of trade. And hence we see by this rapid glance along the inventories of Christian society, that all manner of causes are included in it, that will go to perfect the organization, raise the robustness, swell the volume, multiply the means and magnify the power of the Christian body.

And since these influences must largely arise in the home, what more wonderful opportunity for service could be conceived by human minds and hearts than is here pictured for woman? And yet I believe that woman should feel it not only a privilege to take her rightful place in politics but that she should feel it her duty to make her influence felt here. If she wishes to enter the race for a seat in the Legislature of her own state or the United States Congress, who shall say her nay? Or if she should care to accept the position of Mayor of her town or Chief of Police, she may even find a field of usefulness here. Already many positions of public trust are being honorably and intelligently filled by woman both in our glericus democracy and in the other countries. She is proving in many instances that man's confidence in her ability and sincerity has not been misplaced or over estimated. But if she neglect the home in the doing of these things the world is and will be the poorer for her services and she shall have neglected the greater opportunity for the infinitely lesser one. Lady Astor, first lady member of the English Parliament, an American, moreover a Southerner, a real live Virginian, says that the home is pre-eminently Woman's sphere. We are justly proud of Lady Astor's politically career, but which one of us is not more touched by her devotion to home and the simplicity of her life and tastes than by the brilliancy of her public career? Not notoriety but usefulness should be Woman's Watch Word. Therefore I covet for every fellow Alumna and indeed for every woman in the land a vision of service such as is conceived and beautifully expressed by Leigh Hunt:

"Abou Ben Aden (may his tribe increase)
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace
And saw, within the moonlight within his room
Making it rich and like a lily in bloom

An angel writing in a book of gold:
Exceeding peace had made Ben Aden bold,
And to the presence in the room he said,
"What writest thou?—The vision raised its head
And with a look made all of sweet accord, Answered "The names of those who love the Lord,"

"And is mine one?" said Abou- nay not so Replied the angel- Abou spoke low,
But cheerily still; and said "Pray thee, then,
Write me as one who loves his fellowmen"
The angel wrote and vanished—The next night
It came with a great an awakening light,
And showed the names whom love of God had blest.
And lo! Ben Adens name led all the rest."

Shall the name of woman lead all the rest in Service? She alone may answer, may the God of our fathers grant that she make no mistake here! For what shall it profit her if she gain the whole world and lose the spiritual welfare of her own family, or what shall she offer the Master in exchange for her failure in Christian nurture of the Kingdom in her own home?

For if the home, the very fountain of all organic bodies, be healed there shall burst forth a river of Godly lives, noble thoughts, and lofty ambitions, whose crystal stream shall make pure the community, the State the Church and shall hasten the time when none shall say to his neighbor, "Know ye the Lord?" for all shall know Him from the least even to the greatest. And happy, yea, thrice happy is the woman who not having neglected state or church, still recognizes with satisfaction that the most enduring work she has done, has been the Godly influences set in motion in her own home. And so shall woman indeed come into her own and her reward shall be the regenerated souls of her own household.

court and receptions, at which much of the nobility of France was present. It is said that Paris used to send their clothes here to be laundered in the waters of Haiti; because of the extraordinary bleaching and blueing quality of the waters.

France became wealthy in Haiti at the expense of the black slaves. We are told that the French were hard taskmakers. While the court of Louis VI held down their peasants in the days of the gillotine, the colony in Haiti did the self-same thing to their negroes, and worse. And here was born Haiti's present pitiful condition.

The negro race multiplied rapidly until their numbers far exceeded the whites. Criminal abuse continued. A man by the name of Oge attempted to obtain justice from Paris as well as from local authorities, but to no avail. At last by the example of the whites who rebelled against their own government, they rebelled and pitched battle took place. Through incapable commissioners and mal-administration, France lost her grip and the rebel slaves set up two governments—one in the north and one in the south. That of the north was led by one able leader, Toussaint L'Overture; that of the south by one named Rigoud.
The latter was attacked and vanquished by L'Overture's forces at Port au Prince, led by Dessalines who, himself became intolerant and murdered thousands of whites and mix-breeds.
It is said their slogan was, "Not a drop of white blood in Haiti." L'Overture remained supreme and, drunk with power, made his fatal step by claiming to be ruler of the whole island. Instead of liberating his people, he ruled it as a French colony. He also was a tyrant, and was kidnapped and imprisoned in France, where he soon died.

Interest in Haiti was lost for a while because of war between France and England. Dessalines seized the opportunity to become ruler himself and declared his country independent, and thus became the founder of Haitian Independence.
He is so honored today, and his statue stands in the center of Champs De Mars to his memory.
This was about the beginning of the Eighteenth Century. From then until his assassination, in 1806, it was a one-man power of terrorism and brutality.

Upon the death of Dessalines, after rival claims, heated and exciting contests, Christophe became ruler. He was more despotic than his predecessors. He built the wonderful citadel on the peak of one of Haiti's highest mountains.
It is constructed of massive stones and cement, in walls 140 feet on one side, 130 on another, and from 80 to 110 on others. Terrace 40 feet high. One wall is 270 feet one stretch. It was to have been used as a fort, but it was never fully completed. The big guns are still there.
How all this was accomplished no one can tell.
The ascent is so steep that to carry up heavy building material seems beyond the limits of human endurance or possibility. It is said that the slaves refused to undertake the job, but the Despot had them lined up and every tenth man was shot down in cold blood, reminding the others that theirs would be the same fate if they did not do it. It was done—big massive stone blocks and heavy cannons pinched up inch by inch until the structure was completed. The rocks of the steep slope over which this material was carried, where not grown over with the dust of time, still shine slick in the glistening sun.
At the base of this mountain was Christophe's mansion, "Sans Souci." It is now in ruins. Gossip says that he had a secret tunnel from this mansion to the citadel. It is not known. Lest the secrets of this citadel be revealed, one day

Present History of Haiti

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

NOTES: By invitation of the Editor, it gives me pleasure to supply THE SUN with a few articles on Haiti. My present plans are to give them in a series with subjects as follows:

Haiti—An Historical Sketch.
Haiti—Today.
Haiti—Her People.
Haiti—Her Agriculture.
Haiti—Her Religion.

For the facts of my information I am indebted to Mr. W. P. Davis, the President of the American Sugar Company, who has been here six years and has devoted much of his time to collecting material in preparation of an authentic history of Haiti, and he is an authority.

HAITI—An Historical Sketch

Down in the West Indies, between Cuba and Porto Rico, there lies a beautiful tropical island called Haiti. It is about the size of South Carolina, being about an hundred and fifty miles wide and three hundred miles long. Owing to settlements, which we will understand later, the eastern two-thirds is Santo Domingo, and the western third is Haiti. For geographical reasons, we will use the name Haiti as referring to the entire Island.

The country is extremely mountainous, being the top, or tops, of a Carribean under-sea mountain range. We understand quite well how this may be true, when we are told that the waters close by are very deep, the shore descending into the water in places with mountainous cliffs.
There are three main ranges running east and west. In between are fertile plains and rivers.
I wish we could know something more of the geographical history. Much of the mountain formation is lava thrown up in great piles telling a story of some great volcanic eruption that threw it all up so; and when we discover here and there on their very tops fossilized oysters, sea shells, fish, and what seems to have been old sea shores, we wonder what forces could have transformed the bottom of the sea to a mountain so amazingly beautiful. The other day, within the barracks reservation, in Port au Prince, right at the surface a piece of petrified wood was dug up. They say petrified wood is at least a thousand years old.

The history of Haiti is both fascinating and tragic. It was here Columbus made his first settlement. The Cathedral at Santo Domingo claims his bones. I believe that history tells us that his body was taken back to Spain and there buried, but on visiting the Cathedral, we are told that a certain enclosure and casket within contains the bones of Columbus, and a brass star in the floor near the altar is pointed out as the place where his bones were found. It is also explained that the bones buried in Spain are not the bones of the illustrious explorer. His bones were discovered later and truly identified and kept here as one of the historical and holy attractions of the Island.

The first settlers found a native Indian here (about 200,000). As a result of the contact, the natives passed away quickly—so completely that there is scarcely a trace of Indian blood in the faces of the present inhabitants, and none of their place names survive. Revolution, crime and barbarism is the story. The disgraces committed by the men whom Columbus left and the pioneers who followed, were most deplorable. In a few years their number was only 14,000.

Here the African negro was introduced in the year 1510, and the curse of slavery fastened itself on the new world. During a century the ownership of the country had changed hands.
French adventurers flooded the country and by the year 1697 they were so successful that, practically, they controlled the western portion of the island now called Haiti. These continued the practice of introducing African slavery and thousands were added to the number each year. In the year 1728 there were 50,000 slaves in the colony. In the year 1798 there were 460,000.
Haiti became France's richest colony—wealth, magnificent estates, prosperous planters and French noblemen filled the island. Cement and macadam roads were built, mansions for the rich, pomp and power was everywhere. Forts with bulging cannons were constructed at strategic points on high elevations. Port au Prince was one of the great ports of the world, where, we are told, Grand Opera was often given. How pitiful in contrast with what was soon to follow!
Relics of these, built in stone, cement and mortar, though covered over now with the jungle, still remain. Pauline Bonaparte, sister to Napoleon, lived here. She had a residence at Cape Haitien and also at Port au Prince. Both these estates lie in ruins and there is a slight trace of luxury about the huge pool where once she held he took his architect to its top and while showing him the wonder of the cliff, he pushed him over into eternity.

Being tired of Christophe's rule, Petion, from the South, declared himself President. The people joined him. Having lost his power and being helpless from an attack of paralysis, Christophe committed suicide. Petion died in office and Boyer succeeded. France signed a treaty acknowledging Haiti's independence upon the condition of certain indemnities, which, owing to revolution after revolution following, were never paid.

Black and mulattoes were now the contending forces, and as soon as one ruler was set up another knocked him down. Law and order was unknown and but few presidents died a natural death. From 1867 to 1911 ten presidents held office. In 1912 Le Compt was blown up after a short term of one year. In the following six years six presidents held office. The slogan of "no white blood" was almost a complete success. Other things had gone, too: No homes, no estates, no roads, no money; everything abandoned. All of what Haiti used to be, had passed away; only the island itself remained, a wilderness full of starving negroes, as wild animals, subsisting on the natural fruits of the land and fighting one another. What a tragedy!

Finally, in the year 1915, the climax came, when President Sam was driven from his palace by a mob and chased by them through the streets. He sought refuge on French territory of the Legation. But they had no regard for legation. They entered, siezed him, and hacked him to pieces with hatchets in the presence of the wife and children of the French minister. Intervention by France was naturally imminent, but in order to preserve the integrity of the Monroe Doctrine to protect helpless countries from foreign acquisition, the United States entered, declared martial law, and forced the existing government of Haiti to accept a treaty which temporarily allowed it to take a free hand, police the island and maintain law and order; to protect the people and help the Hitians to build up a civilized government.

It took five years to rid Haiti of the rebel forces, called "Cacos," and convince the people of our friendship. During the year 1921, this conviction seemed to soak in. The Americans did no harm to any one. "Cacos" were not seen any more. Gardens and stock were no longer molested as before. Peace and tranquility settled over the country. Now one may travel through the country without fear of harm, over roads that are passable. The people have gone to work to some extent, possibly as much as their ability, standards and equipment will allow them to do. Gardens are everywhere; and, while there is yet but little money in the country and starving conditions exist here and there, for the most part they have something to eat and are happy.

THE JOY OF THE LORD.

H. A. BROWN, in Biblical Recorder.

Jesus Christ is our great source or well-spring of joy—the fountain whence flows all our streams of gladness. If we can carry about with us the sweet consciousness of His presence we shall be filled with joy and clothed with strength. Joy is a stimulus to effort, but grief often depresses the spirit. Solomon said, "My heart rejoiced in all my labor." Every one who knows that they work best when they sing, whether on the chain-gang or in the factory, field or kitchen. Joy is the sunshine of the soul with no shadows near to darken the pathway. It is the singing pilgrim who has the least of weariness at the close of the day. When the Israelites were released from their Babylonish captivity they went forth with gladness, and did not think of the roughness of the way for the joy that would come to them at the end of the journey.

We Christians may have traveling joy and crowning joy. The joy of the Lord is the joy of forgiveness. David prayed "Restore unto me the joys of thy salvation." He had not lost salvation but the joy of it; he had not lost his acceptance with God but the evidences of it; he had not lost his religion but the comfort of it. There is reason to fear that this is the condition of many in our churches today. They are in a far-country and their harps are on the willows for they cannot sing the Lord's songs in a strange land. The prodigal had it when he came back to his father's house and had the ring placed on his finger and shoes on his feet and heard the sound of music in his father's house once more. The Samaritans had it when Philip preached the gospel to them and many of them believed and were baptized. It is said, "And there was joy in that city." There is always joy when captive souls are delivered from the bondage of sin.

The joy of the Lord is the joy of acquiescence in His will. It is the joy of readiness. Readiness to go or to stay, to be or to do, to suffer or to sacrifice, to live or to die. It takes away all the terror of death; for death is simply "departing" to be with Christ, which is far better. It is the acquiescence which Samuel had when he said, "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth." It is the joy that is set before that makes us willing to endure the cross and despise the shame and wait with willing feet to go on any errand of mercy to which a kind providence may direct us. The joy of the Loving in our hearts will find an expression in loving service to others. Jesus went about doing good. The early disciples went from house to house and ate their meat with gladness and singleness of heart. Dorcas was joyful in making garments for the poor.

The joy of the Lord in our hearts will make our homes an earthly paradise. "No member of the family should rest until the home becomes the place of allurements, the bower of beauty, the hive where all honeyed sweets are assembled, the Mecca to which all feet turn joyfully when the day's work is done."

There is joy in thinking of the immortality of bliss awaiting those whose lives have been transformed to the image of Christ. He brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

The thought of not living after we have "shaken off this mortal coil" is unbearable and unthinkable to well ordered minds. Job said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth and though after this skin worms destroy this body yet out of my flesh I shall see God and I shall see Him for myself and mine eyes shall behold Him and not another." It is always a joy to think, "It will be better further on."

"So long Thy power has blessed me, sure it still Will lead me on,
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till the night is gone,
And with the morn those angel faces smile,
Which I have loved long and lost Awhile!"

A SINGER'S RESPONSE.

The biographer of Jenny Lind has pictured her sitting close by the surfs that were rolling in from the ocean. Upon her knee was a Lutheran Bible; while moving down upon the westward waters was a sunset of surpassing splendor and beauty. Multitudes had been charmed by her voice and had called and recalled her again and again to look upon her face and hear such notes as human lips rarely render. The wealth and honor of continents were at her disposal. A friend asked this gentlewoman why she abandoned the stage so early in her wonderful career, when at the very height of achievement. She replied, "When every day made me think less of this (laying her finger on the Bible) and nothing at all of that (pointing to the sunset) what else could I do?" Here is a great principle. Every attraction, position or possession should be sacrificed, however severe the suffering, if they take the place of God. The great singer had been sought by kings and queens; millions had crowded the halls where she sang, but all this was dross compared with God's Book and the reflection of His glory in the splendor of the sunset. There is a divine compensation for every true sacrifice.—Exchange.

ISRAEL'S TRAGEDY.

Do not fail to read the poem below—it is a master piece and presents a picture of Israel's plight as I have no where else seen it in so short a space. The author is unknown to us, but his lines will bear a close study and impress you with the awful fate which has befallen the chosen people of God. The lesson it seems to us to teach is the dreadful fact that without an atonement made for sin, He cannot spare the sinner, even though the sinner be one chosen of God to fill a peculiar place in the history of the world's redemption. Read the lines and if you can, commit them to memory and so keep this wonderful picture always in your mind—it may help to steer your own course through a world in sin with safety.—Editor.

Without a false god, or the true;
No covenant, the old or new;
Passover still, but no lamb dies,
Atonement, but no sacrifice.
Still eating of unleavened bread,
Phylacteries still upon thy head;
Still reading Moses through the veil,
Still clinging to an empty shell.

Linking the present with the past,
Binding together east and west;
Still humming in thine ancient tongue
The mournful strains thy fathers sung.
Still deaf to the prophetic Word,
Still blind to David's Son and Lord;
Naught hast thou learned, and naught forgot,
Lo-ruhamah and Ichabod.

Thy rites and forms could never feed
My hungry soul with all its need;
They left me hungry, thirsty still,
They failed my emptiness to fill,
They cast no light into the tomb,
Nor scatter sin's appalling gloom;
They do not make acquaint with God
A life crushed down beneath its load.

Alas! false prophets whisper peace,
Saying, "Thy warfare soon shall cease."
That Cross outside the city wall
Forbids thee keeping festival.
Think not that God could e'er forget
Thy hands with Jesus' blood were wet;
Bitter must thy last chalice be Because of Calvary's tragedy.

EXAMPLE OF GUIDANCE.

Away went Abram from Ur of the Chaldees and on his way he received a renewal of the promise. Very beautiful was this! It showed that he was on the right road and that God's faithfulness followed him like an angel of defense.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

The Second Return from Exile.—Ezra, Chapters 7 and 8.

Golden Text: "The hand of our God is upon all them that seek him, for good." Ezra 8:22.

LESSON TEACHINGS.

There is a great need now as well as in the day of Ezra for religious leaders and teachers. An opportunity unexcelled is theirs. Ezra was a pioneer in the field of spiritual teachers.

Ezra had a noble purpose (Verse 7):—to seek the word of God, to do that which he found, and to teach the truth he discovered to others. God can use mightily the man or woman of such lofty purpose. Set your heart right, for "Jehovah seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance but Jehovah looketh on the heart."

Ezra prepared for the journey with prayer. The wise man or woman prepares for every step of life's journey with prayer to God for His guidance and protection. Above all, Ezra trusted his God.

"Ezra was simply a man who saw the need of religious leadership and trusted God enough to throw himself into the task." Can you not do that today?

Dr. Work in "The Westminster Teacher" says: Ezra believed in three things with all his heart, and sought to confirm among the people: The value of an ordained and consecrated ministry; the place of prevailing prayer in the life of God's people, and the power of the Word to sanctify and guide them. His example is strong in the churches even unto this hour."

"Be strong and of good courage;

Be not affrighted, neither be thou dismayed;
For Jehovah thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest."

FOLLOWING AND SETTING GOOD EXAMPLE.

(2 Chron. 24:15-19; 26:3-5.)

THOUGHTS ON THE TOPIC.

There are many worthy examples to follow, and we have a definite responsibility to set a worthy example for others to follow. The Bible presents a host of examples to imitate. Read the following verses: Matt. 11:29,30; John 13:15; I Peter 2:21,22; Phil. 3:17-19; I Thes. 1:6; Mark 1:32-39; Luke 10:30-37; Luke 23:33,34; Matt. 21:9-13. Luke 4:1-8.

Study the life of Christ as your great example. Search out the characteristics of His life which are a challenge to you to follow.

"If we were more careful of where we step those who follow us would not stumble so often."
—Colonel Hunter.

"Example is a school of mankind, and men will learn at no other,"—Edmund Burke.

"If one sheep jumps over a precipice, all the others will follow to destruction. Most people are like sheep; they will jump over the precipice by the million. Only a few have gotten far enough away from the sheep stage to stop to consider, to count the cost, to reason. A sheep makes one big leap; man takes a great many little ones—they both land in the same place."
George H. Knox.

"People pay far more attention to our example than to our good advice."—F. H. Chely.

WEEK DAY RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION.

More and more are we coming to see that one hour on Sunday morning is entirely inadequate for the religious instruction of the Protestant youth of America. The following resolution was presented to the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, in session at Berea church July 26th, and adopted by that body:

"The world is torn with dissension and strife; men are seeking rest but finding none; disrespect for law and order is rampant; the sacredness of the home is violated, and chaos threatens our civilization. The church is on trial:

"We believe that in such a time as this there is but one solution and that is a firm reliance on Almighty God. But how shall they trust in Him whom they know not? And how shall they know except they be taught? Our Sabbath Schools are teaching, but reaching so few. Those who are invited have failed to respond. Now is it not our duty to cut into the highways and carry to them the Truth? While the home should be the place for primary instruction in God's word, so many of our homes have no knowledge of His truth to impart. The secular education of the children of our land is being well cared for in the public schools and it behooves us as Believers to give to them no less opportunity to learn of God and His love, therefore resolved that we endorse—

1st. The "Plan for Bible Study for High School Pupils" as provided by the Board of Education of Virginia.

2nd. That we encourage our own children entering the High Schools to avail themselves of the privileges provided for.

3rd. That we endorse the Movement for Daily Bible Schools adjacent to or in co-operation with the public schools and seek to encourage the establishment and promotion of such schools for all grades."

Mr. J. O. Wiggs, of the First Christian Church of Norfolk introduced this resolution, as one who is vitally interested in the plan of week day instruction in the Bible being planned there. The following plan for Daily Bible School, co-operating with the Public School, worked either by an individual church or several churches co-operating, has been suggested also.

1. Obtain the consent and co-operation of the School Board to the plan.

2. Secure building or room adjacent or convenient to School building and fit it up for school purposes. (If there is an unused suitable room in school building, this may be rented, but a reasonable rental should be paid to avoid the complaint that the school building is being improperly used for the furtherance of religion.)

3. Employ a competent teacher. (Or teachers who should meet the educational requirements of the Board of Education as well as be consecrated to the service.

4. Arrange a schedule of classes suitable to all grades or such grades as there are available pupils, which schedule should coordinate with the regular school program.

5. Secure written request from parents or guardians addressed to the school authorities to excuse the pupil at such hour as may be arranged for the Bible class of such grade.

6. Adopt some definite course of instruction suitable for each grade requiring the same standard of work as is required in the secular course. (Many school authorities give credit for Bible study the same as for any other study provided for in its curriculum. This credit is specifically provided for in the High School plan approved by the Board of Education of Virginia.)

It is hoped that this resolution, adopted by the Eastern Virginia Convention, and the suggested plan may prove suggestive to other localities and stimulate them to follow Norfolk's footsteps in inaugurating some definite plan for week day religious education.

CRADLE ROLL PROGRESS.

One of the best reports we have ever heard given by a Department Secretary at a Sunday School Convention, was that given at Berea church recently by Mrs. I. W. Johnson, of Suffolk, Secretary of Cradle Roll work in the Eastern Virginia Convention. She reported the organization of four new Cradle Rolls during the year, and a total gain of 316 members, making the number of babies on the Cradle Rolls of the Convention 971. Another Cradle Roll (Ocean View) reported while the above report was being given, brought the grand total of enrollment almost to the 1,000 mark. Mrs. Johnson's goal for the year. There are now only eight churches in the Eastern Virginia Convention which do not have active Cradle Rolls, and already Mrs. Johnson has begun an attempt to have them organize before next year, and make Cradle Roll work 100 per cent. Mrs. Johnson's habit of starting work the minute she is elected to the office in the Convention is one which may well be cultivated by all department secretaries, and is the secret, we believe, of her splendid reports to the Convention.

ENROLL FOR THE CHAUTAUQUA.

Our Chautauqua and School of Methods will be held at Elon College, August 28th to September 4th. Holding this gathering at Elon is a venture made with the hope of reaching more of our people with an instructive, inspiring week of work, which will make our leaders more efficient in their work for the Kingdom. It will be most helpful to the Committee making arrangements for your entertainment and for the program of the week, if you will send us your name, and tell us to expect you. Books must be ordered, and other plans made, which can be made much more easily if we know something about whom to expect. If you are coming for the week, let us know. If you live near Elon and are planning to take in the study courses of the School, we shall be glad to know about it. Send all enrollments and inquiries to our Field Secretary, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia. Write us to-day.

Miss Olive G. Williams is no doubt in the United States on a furlough from her work in Porto Rico, as she left Mayaguez on July 11. She will receive a hearty welcome both by her personal friends and also by our Church people, with the best wishes of all, that she may soon regain her strength and be able to return to her work before the furlough is out.

FAMILY ALTAR

(BY REV. J. GREGORY MANTLE, D. D., in "Alliance Weekly.")

"For yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." (Heb. 10:37).

"The sixth reason why we should love the second appearing of the Lord Jesus is because when He comes rewards of service are given and crowns conferred. It is one thing to be saved, it is another thing to be crowned. A crown is a symbol of reward. We are saved by faith through grace. We are crowned on the basis of service and good works. Different crowns are designated in Scripture, each one being a reward of some particular kind of fidelity. No crown is so easily obtained as the crown of righteousness. The only condition is to love the Lord's appearing with all that it implies. (II Tim. 4:8). (7) Because at our Lord's coming the curse will be removed. Creation will be delivered from its age-long curse. The sounds of nature, the cries of animals, the songs of birds, are all pitched in a minor key. Earth and sea and sky are full of fierce pursuit and cruel capture, breathless escape and haunting fear. (See Isa. 55:13; Isa. 11:7; Rom. 8:22). (8) Because Jesus will then share His throne with the Overcomers. The second coming of our Lord means His coronation upon the earth where He was rejected and crucified: It would seem as if God would be obliged to bring His Son back to this world to vindicate His own veracity concerning the Davidic dynasty (Acts 15:16). (9) Because the Second Coming is the time of Resurrection and reunion. Resurrection is the antidote of death. "There shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory." (I Cor. 15:54; I Thess. 4:15-18). (10) Because it brings the translation and consummation of redemption for believers. The spirit will be purified, the mind clarified, and the body glorified. This is full salvation."—Dr. F. W. FARR.

"A star in the sky, a beacon bright to guide us;
An anchor sure to hold when storms betide us;
A refuge for the soul, where in quiet we may hide us,
Is the hope of the coming of the Lord.

MONDAY

"My voice shalt Thou hear in the morning, O Lord." (Psalm 5:3).

As soon as you awake in the morning try and realize God stretching forth His hand towards you, and saying: "Dost thou really desire that I should watch over thee this day?" Lift up your hands towards this loving Father, and say to Him: "Yes, yes, lead me, guide me, love me, bless me, guard me, use me, I gladly submit to Thee!" He will allow no trial, or suffering, or temptation to come above what you are able to bear. You need only be careful about one thing, never to displease God, and He will direct all that concerns you; all your material interests, sympathies, worldly cares. The sudden enlightenment that will come to you will astonish you, and your heart will be filled with a wondrous peace. No privation, no trial, no injustice can come to you unless He permits, and if it wounds the soul it will be in order to cleanse some spot within. The trial will soon pass away, but God will remain yours for ever.

"Ill that He blesses is our good,
And unblest good is ill;
And all is right that seems most wrong,
If it be His sweet will."

TUESDAY

"I will pour My Spirit upon thy seed, and My blessing upon thine offspring." (Isa. 44:3).

"O, Thou who wast the covenant God of my father, Thou art now also mine! I pray Thee, then, to be the covenant God of my children and my children's children unto the latest generation. Write their names on the covenant grant, seal them with the covenant seal, sprinkle them with the covenant blood, and make them partakers of all covenant blessings. I ask for them not wealth or greatness, or fame, or any of the honors of this world, but the privileges which belong to Thy covenant people—Thy favor and eternal life!" If this is your prayer it is answered, for it is in accordance with God's will, and we know that "if we ask anything according to God's will He heareth us."

"O Lord of hosts, how blest is he
Who steadfastly believes in Thee!
He all Thy promises shall gain:
The soul that on Thy love is cast
Thy perfect love on earth shall taste,
And soon with Thee in glory reign."

WEDNESDAY

"Whosoever abideth in Him sinneth not." (I John 3:6).

Here we have a plain, decisive statement, that everybody who abideth in Christ does not sin. Therefore, we have this plain inference, that it is through abiding in Christ that we are preserved from sinning. We must keep in mind always, that being preserved from sinning depends upon our abiding in Christ. In order to this abiding there must first be a full committal of all to Him—not a part yielded up and the rest retained for our own uses. Then there must be a continual submittal to God in all things of the common life. There must also be a holding fast of that which is committed to us. All this we do by the power of the Holy Ghost dwelling and abiding in us. Thus abiding in Christ, He keeps us, moves in us, and enables us to will and to do of His good pleasure. Day by day, hour by hour, and moment by moment, we are preserved from sinning, to the glory of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

"When thou the work of faith hast wrought,
I here shall in thine image shine,
Nor sin in deed, or word, or thought;
Let men exclaim, and fiends repine,
They cannot break the firm decree;
All things are possible to me."

THURSDAY

"I will turn my hand upon thee and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin." (Isa. 1:25).

God has all the resources for the work to be effected. His Word convinceth, His Blood cleanseth, baptism upon baptism of the Holy Ghost He will give till prophecy becomes fact, which says: "I will turn my hand upon thee and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin" (Isa. 1:25). He has a perfect test to which the work is submitted. Two ladies watched a purifier of silver. When questioned as to his intent attention, and as to how he knew when the process was complete, he replied that the work was complete when he could see his own face reflected in the silver. That is what Christ wants to see. He cannot leave us until

He sees His own image in us. But what quantities of dross He has first to remove! However, it must be done. He is our Pattern; and when it is said that "He did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth," it is also expressly stated, that "He left us an example, that we should follow his steps."

"Since thou wouldst have us free from sin,
And pure as those above,
Make haste to bring Thy nature in,
And perfect us in love.

The counsel of Thy love fulfill:
Come quickly, gracious Lord!
Be it according to Thy will,
According to Thy word!"

FRIDAY

"By the word of Thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer" (Psa. 17:4).

"In steering a vessel a chart is needed. Here the coast line is accurately marked, together with every rock and every shoal by which the ship may be imperiled. His chart the navigator constantly examines, tracing on it the course of his ship so that he may avoid the dangers it indicates, and by the best track reach his desired haven. To neglect the chart would be to miss that haven and to wreck the ship. God has given us a chart in His holy Word. That chart should be our daily companion, the subject of our habitual meditation. Let us watch against the dangers it points out; let us steer along the course it indicates. We can only get safely into port by following its directions. God has given us this chart that we may consult it."—DR. NEWMAN HALL.

"Whither, O whither should I fly,
But to my loving Saviour's breast?
Secure within Thine arms to lie,
And safe beneath Thy wings to rest.

"I have no skill the snare to shun,
But Thou, O Christ, my wisdom art!
I ever into ruin run,
But Thou art greater than my heart."

SATURDAY

"They received the Word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily" (Acts 17:11).

A man, by daily repetition of love and duty, becomes habitually a Christian; it is a second nature to him, and thus it is easy. A man who is punctual, diligent, and faithful daily, in secret prayer, will be bound to prayer after a few years by such an adamant chain in his very nature as it will be almost impossible to break. And so habits of right feeling, as well as of right action, wear their channels of experience so deep into the soul that you cannot turn them back, and the obstacles thrown in to hinder them are themselves swept onward out of the way. This is the blessedness of conscientiously following Christ daily. It is the power of habit; therefore avail yourselves in little neglects. If there be acts of duty which you are tempted to neglect today, step up to them at once and perform them; for it is no great thing, no burden after all. And the same things will be incomparably easier tomorrow, if you are energetic and punctual with them today.

"Give me to bear Thy easy yoke,
And every moment watch and pray,
And still to things eternal look,
And hasten to Thy glorious day.

For Thee delightfully employ
Whate'er Thy bounteous grace hath given;
And run my course with even joy,
And closely walk with Thee to heaven."

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:—

It is of much regret that our space in the Sun was not filled with our weekly report last week. It is the first time that it has been blank since we have been in the work. We have nursed thirty six sick ones during the "flu" and the same week got our report. I blame no one. We mailed it from this office on Tuesday night which gives it ample time to reach the printer.

This month we will send two girls to hospitals to take training as nurses. One left (Aug. 1st) for Watts hospital, Durham, N. C., About August 20th, the other one will leave us for Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va.

Both girls came to this Institution when small and have been reared here. Both are bright intelligent girls and go out with the love and best wishes of the entire management of the Institution. They have done their part well, and we feel proud of them. One of the great joys of the work is to see a little boy or girl come to us in its young and tender years homeless and helpless and then at the age of eighteen go out a splendid young man or woman with a spotless record and loved and respected by all. I think of the greatest and most noble possessions any boy or girl can have is a good name and a spotless character.

If this life was the only life and there was no future life to come I would want to live the bright side of life and get the best there is in life. But when we know this life is but a preparation for the life to come, and the loving deeds, kind acts, pure thoughts, wholesome words are the material to build our mansion on high, we should cling to all those good things and live the bright side of life here.

Don't forget to can some fruit for us, it will help us very much.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Uncle Charlie,

What has become of all the little boys and girls that used to write to the cousins? We are sending $1.00, hope we can write again soon. We attended the Bible School at Bethlehem and like Miss Eldredge very much.

With love to you and the cousins.—Leonora, Lewis and Ray Welch.

The little cousins must be taking a vacation. We wish they would keep the corner full of letters each week.—"Uncle Charley"

The Trustees of Bethlehem College Meet.

At a called meeting of the Trustees of Bethlehem College, held at Noon Day church, on the 29th day of July, some forward steps were taken in the interest of the college. A majority of the trustees were there and seemed enthused over the work of the school.

The election of the temporary officers at the Suffolk meeting was confirmed which was as follows; Chairman, Dr. T. H. Denney, Wadley, Ala.; Secretary, Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley Ala.; Treasurer, Mr. J. S. Stephenson, Kite, Ga. The Executive Committee; T. H. Denney, E. M. Carter, O. O. Mitchell.

The Executive Committee was authorized to assess the amount of the bond of the Treasurer. Feeling the need of an agent to look after the finance of the work, that duty was left in the hands of the Executive Committee also. This place will require an acive man to give much of his time to the work.

Special efforts will be taken, looking forward to the opening of this school in September 1923. To this end a committee was elected, the chairman of the board to be chairman of this committee, to consider plans and specifications for the buildings and to report their findings to trustees; the Building Committee is as follows; T. H. Denney, E. M. Carter, J. J. Carter, R. F. Brown. H. W. Elder.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted: That we endorse the actions of The Southern Christian Convention in authorizing the Mission Board to carry on the work of the Men and Millions campaign; and, that we urge all our people to support the movement with their pledges and the payment of the same.

The meeting adjourned to meet again October 15, 1922, at Wadley, Ala.

NEWS FROM HOLY NECK VA.

Two adult members were received in church by letter on the fourth Sunday and several others have given their promise to do so later.

Fourteen members of the Sunday school attended the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Convention at Berea, Norfolk this week. Seven of these were young women from the Philathea class. A near Sunday will be set aside for reports to be given to the whole school.

The Sunday school board has voted to send at least one member to the School of Methods at Elon College.

Our Christian Endeavor Society at Holy Neck was organized in April with about thirty members. This society is remarkable for one thing: the willingness on the part of the members to take an active part in the meetings.

Many who are not members participate, and there has not been a dull meeting held yet. The meetings are well attended by the young people.

Cradle Roll Day will be observed on the fifth Sunday of July. Mrs J. T. Lewis is Superintendent of the Cradle Roll for the Missionary Society and Mrs C. A. Piland for the Sunday School; both are taking a vital interest in the work.

The Sunday School plans to hold its annual picnic sometime in August.

The pastor is taking his vacation during the month of August. He will conduct a revival meeting at the Bethlehem church the week following the second Sunday.

After this he will take a ten day trip to his home in Bedford Co., Pa., and attend the session of the Raphill and Southern Pa. Conference.

The first Sunday of September will be celebrated by a union all-day service of the Holy Neck and Holland churches. The services will be held in Holland. Bring your dinner and stay all day. During the week following the first Sunday Rev. L. E. Smith, D.D., of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, will assist us in revival services. The Lord grant that the revival may begin first in our own hearts.

FROM THE FIELD.

July 29th, 1922.

Our work at Antioch is moving onward and upward as well, as we could expect, under the conditions and circumstances. We all need to get closer to our Lord and live more upon our knees in prayer to God for help. May we lift up our hearts as well as our voices to Him whence cometh our help. The Lord be with us and help us in our work for the building up of our beloved zion, for the salvation of souls who are perishing without the blessed Christ.

Earnest heart-felt prayer will unlock the door and the blessings we need will be given. Why we are not more successful in our work is because we do not pray as we should, one for another. We must work together with our Lord. "The Lord turned the captivity of Job, when He prayed for his friends."

We desire the prayer of all God's people in our work for the building up of our beloved zion, for the salvation of souls.

Our meeting at Antioch will commence Third Sunday in September. There will be two services, one morning at 10:30 and one in the afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., and Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, the Lord willing, will be with us, and do the preaching. Brethren get ready. We want a glorious festival of religion at old Antioch, the mother of churches. Let's all pray for the success of the meeting for the salvation of souls.

FIELD NEWS.

Educational day at Union Ridge was held on the second Sunday in June. Dr. W. P. Lawrence was with us and delivered an excellent address. The church has recently purchased a piano. There are a great many young people in this church and congregation.

The children's day exercises held on the fourth Sunday evening was well attended and an interesting program was rendered.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, N. C., is to assist us in revival meeting at Union, beginning on the fourth Sunday in July. Children's day service was held at Pleasant Hill on the first Sunday in July. The attendance was large and a delightful program rendered. This church has an excellent Sunday School, and the singing is fine.

In the afternoon of that day, Rev. C. B. Riddle gave a very thoughtful educational address which was very kindly received. The service was helpful and full of hope.

Called Home

MRS. S. A. KING.

Mrs. S. A. King, wife of deacon J. B. King was born Nov, 21, 1845. and died very suddenly on the morning of July 3. 1922. Brother and sister King were married more than 52 years ago.

Seven children were born into this home. They are all living and married. It was a great comfort to mother that they all are now Christians, and members of New Hope church.

Sister King lived a most consistent Christian life. I have never heard the least thing against her beautiful Christian character. New Hope church has lost one of her best members. The memories of a devoted wife and loving mother will be cherished by the deeply bereft husband and children.

Funeral service by her pastor.

J. E. FRANKS,

HALL

BROTHER SAMUEL HALL, was born July 14, 1836, and departed this life March 14, 1922. Age 85 years and 8 months. For thirty-one years he was a faithful member of Berea (Norfolk) Christian Church. He was an old Confederate veteran, having served through the civil war 1861-65. He was a member of Captain Jett's Co., Company B, Mahoon's Brigade of Va. During the closing days of the war he was wounded in the right shoulder. After the surrender he returned to his home near Great Bridge, Norfolk Co., where he resided till his death.

At the age of thirty he was married to Miss Nancy Guinn. To this union seven children were born. Four of which preceded him to the great beyond. George Hall, Marshall Hall, and Mrs. Mary O. Striker, survive.

His first wife died at the age of thirty-nine. Two years later he was married to his second wife, Miss Sarah F. Hodges. To this union five children were born. Two survive, Mrs. Lelia McPherson, and Mrs. Viola Hughes. He leaves behind to mourn their loss, his widow; five children, nineteen grandchildren, and seven great-grandchildren. He is the last of the old confederate soldiers in that section of Norfolk Co. A great and good man has gone to receive the reward of the just.

The funeral services were conducted at the home in the presence of a large gathering of sorrowing relatives and friends, by Rev. W. C. Hook, assisted by the writer. Burial was in the family lot Berea cemetery, near Great Bridge, Virginia.

Holt has been our very efficient and devoted pastor for 34 years out of the last 42, and WHEREAS, he has through his ability as an able thinker and strong Christian character, held the banner of old Bethlehem high, and WHEREAS, because of advanced age and physical infirmity he has tendered his resignation as pastor of this church, we the members of Bethlehem Church, in meeting,

RESOLVE, That in accepting the resignation of Bro. Holt, we do so with bowed heads and grieved hearts and pray that God's blessings may rest on and comfort him in his old age, and that he may be spared to meet with us in many services, and encourage us in the faith he has preached to us for lo, these many years, and as a further appreciation of his faithful service we do elect him honorary pastor of this church so long as he shall live.

On motion of R. T. Kernodle, seconded by J. D Simpson, the foregoing resolutions were adopted by a rising vote of Bethlehem Christian Church July 16th, 1922, with request that a copy be furnished The Christian Sun and Burlington News with request to publish. Resolutions offered by L. D. Rippey at request of Deacons.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

Resignations of Rev. W. C. Hook as pastor of Rosemont and Berea churches, Norfolk County, have been accepted by the two churches. Rev. Hook's resignations do not take effect until October 1.

Resignation of Rev. Hook as pastor of Berea church was accepted at a meeting of the members of that church Sunday, July 16. He gave as his reason for resigning that he had been urgently advised by his physicians that the climate here is against his health and that he should go to a climate more suitable for his condition. He expressed deep regret over the fact that he is to leave, especially since he had at all times received the united support of the church and the community, and because he likes the place and the people.

Following the acceptance of his resignation several spoke declaring their regret to know that Rev. Hook is to leave, and expressed the opinion that there is not a single member of the church who does not regret that Rev. Hook has resigned. A committee was appointed to draw up suitable resolutions for the church, expressing the members' thanks and appreciation for the services he has rendered, and their regret to lose him as pastor.

The resolution reads:

WHEREAS, Rev. W. C. Hook has served as pastor of Berea Christian Church, Great Bridge, for more than a year, during which time he has proved himself capable, energetic, fearless, and consecrated servant of God; and has at all times worked faithfully to glorify God and to teach people of His Ways; and

WHEREAS, as an able and resourceful preacher, and as a kind and lovable pastor, he has elicited the admiration of the members of this church and of the people of this community; and

WHEREAS, because he has found the climate here to be very much against his health, being unable to get acclimated although he has been here over a year, and has been urgently advised by his physicians that he must go to a climate more suitable for his condition, he has tendered his resignation, which resignation has been accepted,

THEREFORE, Be It Resolved: That by these resolutions the members of this church do express their sincere regret that Mr. Hook is to leave as pastor of this church; that they truly appreciate and thank him for the work he has done; that it will ever be their privilege to indulge a high and lasting pride for his efforts here; and that they wish good health and continued success for him wherever he goes, knowing that he will carry with him the message "that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all."

Be It Further Resolved: That a copy of these resolutions be presented to Mr. Hook, and that copies be sent to one or more of the local newspapers and "The Christian Sun," the official organ of the Southern Christian Convention with requests that they publish same.

Signed, Mrs. F. N. Hall.
Mrs. C. C. Hall.
Committee.

REV. W. C. HOOKS,

Following acceptance of your resignation as pastor of Berea Christian Church, Great Bridge, at a meeting of the members of that church Sunday, July 16, the undersigned were appointed a committee to draw up suitable resolutions for the church, expressing the members' thanks and appreciation for the services you have rendered, and their regrets to lose you as pastor.

We were instructed to present to you a copy of the resolutions, and we take pleasure in enclosing same herewith.

*THE NEARNESS OF GOD

God is nearer to us than our own soul: He is the Ground; He is the Substance; He is the Teaching; He is the Teacher; He is the end and the need for which every soul travaileth; Till I am one with Him I may never have full rest nor bliss. The goodness of God is the highest prayer; It cometh down to the lowest part of our need;

It quickeneth our soul and bringeth it on life; It maketh it to waxen in grace and virtue; It is nearest in nature; It is readiest in grace; It is the same grace that the soul seeketh; And it ever shall seek till we know verily that He hath us all in Himself enclosed.

GOOD MORNING

Good morning, Brother Sunshine; Good morning, Sister Song. I beg your humble pardon, If you've waited very long. I though I heard your rapping; To shut you out were sin. My heart is standing open; Won't you walk right in?

Good morning, Brother Gladness; Good morning, Sister Smile, They told me you were coming, So, I waited on awhile.

I'm lonesome here without you, A weary while it's been. My heart is standing open; Won't you walk right in?

Good morning, Brother Kindness; Good morning, Sister Cheer, I heard you were out calling, So I waited for you here. Some way I kept forgetting I have to toil and spin, My heart is standing open; Won't you walk right in?

HAVE YOU ASKED TO SEE HIM?

If you say, Sirs, I would see Jesus, You will find Him in the Holy Scriptures, You will find Him in every Christian's experience,

In proportion as it is enlarged and true— Yea, you will find Him in the very statement itself,

For no man ever asked to see Him with the sincerity and earnestness of fire, Without the answer beginning the moment the question ended.—Joseph

What Brings The Cancer?—

The idea has long prevailed that eating hog meat is the cause of cancer in the human body. The testimony of many leading physicians has seemed to make it quite sure, but now they are coming to the front with a new claim as to the cause of cancer. It may be that no one really knows, but a writer in Good Health holds out the idea that cancer prevails where the people are much given to the use of tea and coffee. He says in every country where flesh is much used in conjunction with tea and coffee, or narcotics, is subject to a large amount of cancer. On the other hand it is declared that wherever tea and coffee are not used that there is little cancer. It seems to be a fact that cancer is regulated by the amount of flesh, tea and coffee used. It seems where these are not used at all, there is scarcely a cancer, where they are used a little, there is only a little cancer, but where these articles are largely used there cancer abounds more largely.

The Cost of Labor Troubles.—

The battle between labor and capital seems never to be finished. Since our boyhood days the strike has been often repeated as a means of forcing capital to assent to the demand of labor, but the victory seems not to have been gained by either side, but the public has been made the sufferer. The laboring man loses and the capitalist loses, but the great burden-bearer is the public—the long suffering public. The day draws near, we trust, when victory will come to the right and make it possible to put an end to the strikes. It is almost inconceivable that so much money is wasted in every strike, and yet the strike goes on, as if it were a profitable investment. Even our Government seems unable as yet to lay its hand upon either party and say in the interest of the people: This thing must stop, and then tell how to do it. The New York Times of a recent date tells us that during 1921 strikes cost the vast sum of $132,000,000. The same paper says that the loss in time will be greater than last year. In 1921, there were 2,267 strikes and lockouts in the United States. The total duration of 1,409 of the strikes and 70 of the lockouts last year were 60,165 days. The average length of the strikes in 1921 was 60 days. Putting the average at $2 the total loss of wages due to labor troubles in 1921 would be about $132,000,000. We can see, therefore, that the strike is a losing proposition, not merely to the laboring man, but practically to all concerned. Some way ought to be found to put an end to this disturbing situation. The only plan that we know of to put an end to this troublesome and vexing question is to call for the Son of Man. He will not even have to make a plan, for His plan is already for service, and if acted on in the fear of God and seeking the good of men, it will quickly be effective. He says: "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them." Nothing but selfishness can keep men at loggerheads. When they wish to get together, they can do it, and all would be much happier and better provided for if all would act on the Master's rule, for that is a rule that never injures any one who is on the right side.

The Triumph of Prohibition.—

There is much talk of the failure of Prohibition now a days, but it has not failed. Of this fact there is abundant evidence from reliable sources. When I hear a man declaring that there is more liquor drunk now than before Prohibition, I know where to place him at once—in some way or other he is in opposition to Prohibition, and so he seeks to make an impression against the 18th amendment, but never mind, dear man, your opposition is not likely to reverse that Amendment. Mrs. Mabel Willebrandt, who is, though she is a woman, Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, says: There is one important thing in which the law-abiding citizens of the United States can be of the greatest help in the enforcement of the prohibition law, and that is, that every good citizen should help sweep back the current of flippancy which so many people assume when speaking of the infringement of the prohibition law. What we need in this country is a public sentiment backing the United States. They can broadcast the facts which show that prohibition is prohibiting. In doing this they will help to create a public sentiment which will back this Amendment. This is a great opportunity for all good citizens. Some one asked Prohibition Commissioner Hayes what he thought of the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment; he unhesitatingly answered: "I have never been so encouraged over anything in my life, as I am over the success of the enforcement of this law." Some one then asked him to give some reasons which encouraged him in this matter, and at once, he said: "Facts—events that have and are happening which are irrefutable proofs that the law is being enforced. Facts are what have convinced me that ultimately prohibition will triumph." Then again he went on to say: "For several years immediately preceding the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment the United States consumed on an average of one hundred and thirty million gallons of American-made whiskey. In 1920 permits were issued for the withdrawals of twelve and one half million gallons, and in the year 1922, withdrawals will not perhaps exceed two million gallons. Isn't that pretty good proof of progress? The next fact which encourages me is that at the beginning of this fiscal year there were approximately 500 breweries engaged in the manufacture of nearbeer. We knew many of them were evading the law. Two hundred and eighty-five of them were reported; more than sixty of these have been seized and are being prosecuted. All of them want to compromise and two have offered $96,000 each to have their cases compromised. Another fact which would cheer any faint heart is that more than 10,000 convictions for the violation of the law have been obtained in the Federal Courts, that is over a thousand convictions a month. That does not sound like prohibition fails to prohibit, does it? Another encouraging fact is that we have discovered the ships that are smuggling liquor. We know the ships and their owners, their methods and sea routes, and we are going after them, going after them with marine and air service. Another most gratifying fact is that the drunkard has almost disappeared from the streets of our great cities. Arrests for drunkenness have decreased 60 per cent: scores of inebriate institutions have closed their doors; the open saloon has disappeared and the influence of sober workmen is evident everywhere in the industries of our country. Another worker for the enforcement of prohibition said another fact is the decreased number of inmates of the infirmaries, asylums and penal institutions—notably Blackwell's Island prison, one of the outstanding criminal institutions in America. It ran out of inmates when New York City had been under Prohibition for twenty months, and it is now used as a psychopathic institution. At Dayton, Ohio, we are told that the jail has been empty six months. At Birmingham, Ala., the $200,000 jail has been transformed into a city welfare department building. Another fact is given that last year the second year of prohibition, there were added to the churches of the United States two and one-half million members—and this was the largest increase in church membership in the same period in the history of the nation. Mr. Volstead, the author of the Volstead act, said: "I believe on the whole the law is being enforced as rapidly as it is possible. It must not be forgotten that the enforcement of prohibition is a matter of education. We have had the decalogue since the days of Moses, and murder is still committed, but there is no hue and cry to rescind the law against murder." Another said: "I will tell you what I do think—"I think there is a well organized propaganda going on throughout the country to persuade the people that the prohibition Amendment is a failure. If prohibition is not prohibiting in his town, it is the inactive citizen's fault. To all of this we add what Mr. Harry M. Daughtry has said as to the attitude of the Government: "The law must be enforced!" Let the good work go on till the thing kills itself by kicking against the law, and it will not take many years to do that, if the friends of the cause will be brave and do their duty.

NOTES - PERSONALS

Are you getting ready for Elon, to enter there at the opening? Do not wait too long to make the preparation. Try to get ready and enter on time.

A brother in writing to the editor said something like this: "God has been so good to me that I mean that He shall have all there is, or may be, of my life. Like Frances R. Havergal, let us sing: "Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord to Thee." That is just what we all ought to do, and we shall not know the power of the true Christian life till we come to such a resolution.

Rev. I. W. Johnson, D.D., one of Elon's early graduates, has held his present pastorate for quite a while. Indeed he has but little change in his ministry, and is now pastor of Berea (Nansemond County) and Liberty Spring, in the Eastern Virginia Conference. May the Father make his ministry a power for good as the road lengthens before him.

Rev. W. D. Harvard, D.D., wishes to retire from his present field and for the reason that under his ministry it has outgrown his strength. It is now so large as to make it seem a necessity to seek a more compact field. He is one of our best preachers and a good pastor. The church that needs him will do well to act in a hurry, or you may miss him entirely.

One of our exchanges asks a very pointed question, and again we should like to know if we have any witness in this case. He asks: Are we humble enough to profit by the good advice of those who are considered inferior to us in their social station? You may not think it so, but there are plenty of that class who can give us wondrously good advice. Now will you take it when they give it?

How does it feel, Dr. Staley, to have given forty years to one pastorate and then to have the same pastorate employ you for life with a comfortable salary? As so few of us can ever hope to have such an experience, we suggest that Dr. Staley tell us how comfortable it all feels. Not many of your brethren will have a chance to know how it all seems to a man under such circumstances, so will you please tell us how it seems to you?

You remember your generous promise to do something to help in the work of building up the subscription list of "The Christian Sun." Well, have you begun the work of making that promise good. If not, when will you? Now is a good time to begin, and do so by seeing that brother or sister in your church which you have long had in mind as likely to take it—go and get the subscription and send it in to Prof. P. J. Kernodle, 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson is a traveler—his work requires him to be. He is here and there, busy as he well can be. He has vision—it is a missionary vision and he is trying to show it to our people. If he cannot get you to see the vision, then there is not much chance to get you to see. He does it so clearly that it seems strange that others cannot see it with him, but do not be discouraged. Keep trying to see it and praying for light in which you may see it, and your efforts will not be in vain. The Lord shows His people when they are willing to see.

That is good news from Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C. They are to remodel their house of worship and almost rebuild it, making it a modern house of worship, not only for the adult part of the congregation, but the new house when completed will take care of the Sunday school in an admirable way. We are glad for the success of Bro. Harrell and wish the Durham church and their pastor the greatest success in attaining the ends they have in view—the furtherance of the gospel of the kingdom.

What book have you read this summer? The Bible? Well, that is good, but you ought to read it every day through summer and winter. What other book have you read? Have you ever read the life of James O'Kelley? Or the life and Labors of Rev. William B. Wellons, D.D., who was for so many years the leader in our Southern Christian Convention? Have you ever read Facing the Truth, or Forty Years on the Firing Line? The Minister by Dr. Staley? Or have you ever read, Looking Heavenward, by the late Rev. Jno. T. Kitchen? To allow these books to lie around unread is to do yourself a great injustice.

Said Ira D. Sankey once: We all agree with what Dr. Pentecost has said regarding the power of sacred song: "I am profoundly sure that among the divinely ordained instrumentalities for the conversion and sanctification of the soul. God has not given a greater, beside the preaching of the Gospel, than the singing of Psalms and hymns and spiritual songs. I have known a hymn to do God's work in a soul when every other instrumentality had failed. I could not enumerate the times God has rescued my soul from darkness, discouragement and weariness by the singing of a hymn, generally by bringing one to my own heart and causing me to sing it to myself."

There has been much advance in the work in the Virginia Valley Conference since we first knew that conference. Of course, the name has been changed and new men have gone in there and have wrought well. The first advanced step was when the late Rev. W. T. Herndon went there as a missionary. He planted a number of churches in that conference, which are now active and useful. Then the union of the two conferences, the Valley and the Central, was another step forward. It has been a difficult field in many respects, but the work goes forward and there is cause for rejoicing. Another step forward was reached in the building of the Winchester church, under the leadership of Rev. W. T. Walters, D.D., and that church seems to be promising of much usefulness. Again let us rejoice and be glad, and go forward!

We once heard Dr. Lelacheur of the Missionary Alliance tell of an experience he once had in taking a caravan into the borders of Tibet. It was a most exciting incident. As they journeyed they came in sight of a band of robbers, who were lined up on either side of the road, so that Dr. Lelacheur and his party must pass between the two lines of robbers. Of course that was an exciting moment, for the robbers were well armed and Dr. Lelacheur was not except as he had God with him. The party stopped and prayed, and then proceeded on their way, passing between the two lines of robbers. The robbers had their spears raised and pointed on the apparently helpless band of missionaries, but as they drew nigh the robbers seemed to have been paralyzed, and they stood there and the missionary party went on, unhurt and unharmed. The Lord their God had come to the rescue and the missionaries were safely delivered without making any effort, except prayer. The Christian's God is a marvel of extraordinary power when the Christian trusts Him in the moment of peril.

Our brethren down South are moving for better things in their church work. The building of Bethlehem College at Wadley, Ala., gives promise of great things. A new day is dawning for our cause in the further South, and we believe it is true that our Men and Millions Movement is the human agency for accomplishing of this advance in Georgia and Alabama. This means something, too to our people who have made Men and Millions—it means that we must meet our obligations and so enable the good work to go on to the achievement of larger things in the Master's work. Let not your pocket book be shut against what God is doing for you. Your promise was to the cause of Christ and to drop it now and leave it unpaid, would be a reflection upon your devotion to the cause of your Lord and Master. He will help the soul that truly desires to build up His cause, but what will be His providential dealing with the man who deliberately refuses to do what he promised to do for this fund? You answer that question by going to your knees and to God and ask Him to show you what He wishes you to do—ask Him if he would have you pay the pledge you made and so honor the name of a Christian, or would He have you to fail to pay it, and so bring reproach upon His cause?

We like a new thing when that new thing is a true article, but we do not care so much about a new thing when it is spurious. In recent years we have had a class of fine men who are anxious to improve the race of men. Now we should like to see a better class of men coming into our world, if indeed they might be better men. When we see men trying to get better men for our day and generation, we are in hearty sympathy till we see they are trying to get better men without having them made better by the Lord Jesus Christ. There are some hundreds of ways men are trying to have men made better without Christ, but they are all failing. If you wish better people for our day and generation, then let Christ take them in hand, and we shall see things come to pass in the way of improving the kind of men we have. One of the modern fads for raising a better class of men is by means of what they call Eugenics, but the celebrated Paul Rader says that that is already a plain failure. He goes further and shows that once upon a time the Lord Himself undertook to work the Eugenics plan, and while it started out with a fine prospect, it soon degenerated. He said the Lord chose Abram and his beautiful wife and sent them to a new country where He could teach them His will. He gave them a miraculously born son, who must have been one of the finest specimens of manhood that had yet been seen. To this end, He gave Abram a Eugenic bride, and they looked for a perfect manhood—perfect in body, mind and soul, and yet Mr. Rader declares that one of the two sons born of this Eugenic marriage was a hairy man, a slave to appetite, while his brother was as crooked as a dog's hind leg, and God had to lay his hand on him heavily before Jacob, the supplanter, could be made a Prince with God. It will take the work of God in the human heart and life to make the right kind of man, Eugenics or no Eugenics. Eugenics may accomplish something for men, but they cannot be brought to their best till God takes them in hand and makes them after the divine plan. Many men are most anxious to remake man and get a better sort of men, but when man has done his best, the Lord our God will have to touch the Eugenized man before he can become a model, for only divine power can do so much.

THE PSALMIST'S TESTIMONY IS AGAIN VINDICATED.

No matter how many times some people say the Bible is not reliable, it has a strange way of vindicating its own record, or may be better, should I say that in the trend of events, vindication of the claims of the Bible are wonderfully apparent. Where you would ordinarily not expect to find the Bible record vindicated, well, there it is again and again vindicated, and the fact stands out so vividly that we cannot doubt the fact, no matter how much some one disputes that record, we know there is evidence.

The Bible tells us that the fool hath said in his heart there is no God. Who would expect to see that statement vindicated anew away here in the twentieth century of the Christian Era. David wrote those words probably a thousand years before the coming of Christ. That makes it quite three thousand years ago since David penned those words, and yet here in this the 22nd year of the twentieth century it is vindicated just as surely as if it had been originally written in the last ten years.

How is it vindicated anew? A paper published in New York State recently told of the death and funeral of the man who by his course of action vindicated Psa. 14:1. The man who died had himself prepared the address he wished used on the occasion of his funeral. It was in this address he said:

"I do not believe in a personal God, or in other words, the God of the Book called the Bible. This Book is the production of man, and in the near future the largest portion of it will be looked upon as emanating from a corrupt and diseased imagination, man is not a fallen creature, but has always continued to rise from the atom to man, the highest intelligence on this plane, and will continue to rise from one grand reality to another throughout the aeons to come. You are your own architect, you will be your own judge and executer. You cannot transfer your responsibility to the shoulders of a Christ."

What talk?—what nonsense?

The vindication of the Psalmist's statement is beyond all question. We know that this man was a fool, not only because the Bible says so, but the man himself says so, for no reasonable man would talk that way. His own statements are sufficient to establish the fact of his foolhardiness. He no doubt disbelieved God's Word, but he believed the devil's lies, and in this, if nothing else, he showed himself the fool. In this case the term fool does not mean he had no sense, and on that account, was considered a fool. He had plenty of sense likely, but he made such a miserable use of it. He doubtless had sense enough, but he put it to such bad service. A sensible man may be a fool for the lack of wisdom to put his intelligence to a good use, to high and holy purposes. That is what makes a man a fool. Any man who entertains such thoughts when he is going into the presence of his Creator for judgment shows himself to be a fool. He may have sense, as doubtless he did, but did not have wisdom to make a wise use of the sense he did have, and that fact was no doubt due to moral degeneracy. Even his lack of wisdom was likely traceable to this same moral degeneracy. Having turned away from God, he goes on step after step, and each step was but leading him further away from the true God of heaven and earth.

Can any reasonable man have in him a purpose to dethrone God in the estimation of his fellowmen? Such a man at once presents the proof of his moral insanity. The fact that a man has the daring to say there is no God, is proof in itself that he has lost the way of truth and wisdom and is trying to establish the fact, but contrary to all sanity. The man who says there is no God is an Atheist—for it takes an Atheist to say there is no God. To say there is no God is to show one's self a degenerate—a man who has fallen below his kind and is walking in the ways of death, following the pathway to hell. Would you follow such a man? If so, you are to be pitied, for there is no hope for you, since you repudiate God, and God is the only help for a sinner, and when that sinner is daring enough to say that there is no such Being—he is indeed without help and without hope, for he is already traveling the way into darkness and ruin.

THE WAY ONE BAPTIST EDITOR LOOKS AT THE QUESTION.

There are some questions which are denominational, and so do not concern us all, but there are other questions which concern the whole Church of Christ. The question of the authority of the Bible, the place of the Supernatural in Christianity, the reality of miracles, the Deity of Christ, etc., belong to the Whole evangelical Church. As has been stated in these columns of late our Baptist Brethren seem to have gotten into this fight a little earlier than the other denominations, and so they are lining up for the fray. This is no ordinary controversy. It is rather a great conflict for truth and righteousness. What has come to our Baptist Brethren will most likely come to all of the various evangelical denominations, and when the contest comes to defeat or victory, then we shall see such a combat between light and darkness as this world has rarely, if ever, seen. It will be a division of the militant forces, on one side will be found the men and women who will risk, if need be, their lives for the establishment of the truth of God's Word. On the other hand will be found the men and women who repudiate great portions of the Bible, and the struggle will be long and terrific.

Biblical Recorder, tells the Baptist brotherhood of his stand in this matter and why, as follows. It will be interesting to our people:

ONCE MORE.

Several times we have advised our ministerial students who are planning to take theological training to go to Louisville. We have given our reasons frequently for offering this advice. We sincerely believe that our seminary at Louisville is the greatest theological school in the world. The older professors are all men of the worldwide reputations, and the younger ones promise to be worthy successors of those at whose feet they sat.

But the prime motive we have in advising our young ministers to go to Louisville is because the teaching there is sound. It is a great mistake, however, to think that because the teachers at Louisville are true to the doctrines of the New Testament, they are fossils and discourage individual investigation on the part of their students. The seminary at Louisville is conservatively progressive. It accepts the teachings of the New Testament as generally interpreted by Baptists as the standard. It does not accept an interpretation that would substitute rationalism for the supernatural. It holds to the doctrine of Christ's miraculous birth, His vicarious atonement, His resurrection and His second coming. On this solid foundation it stands, and from it no storm of modernism will move it so long as the present faculty is in charge. But within the limits fixed by the New Testament there is room for independent thinking and this is encouraged by the faculty at Louisville.

We have expressed sincere regret at the unmistakable evidences of division in the North on the great fundamentals of our faith. The Northern seminaries are in control of the Liberal wing of the Northern Convention. If the teaching in these seminaries was radical before as has been alleged, and of which there is strong evidence, judging by the utterances and writings of some of their professors, we may expect them to become bolder in their advanced teaching after the apparent victory of the Liberals at the late Convention in Indianapolis.

The age-long fight between rationalism and supernaturalism is now being pressed with intensity, and strange to say, our denomination appears to be more seriously affected than any other just at this time. The rationalistic group in the North seems to predominate, at least they have had things their way at the late session of their convention. We verily believe that Southern Baptists have a great mission, in standing for the fundamentals of our faith. In order to fulfill this mission the South must have a trained leadership, and it follows that the training must be of the right kind.

We have spoken of the Louisville seminary because North Carolina has led all the States for years in the number of students in this great school of the prophets, and we sincerely hope our State will continue to hold that enviable distinction; and for the further reason that the Seminary at Louisville is a Southern Baptist enterprise. The Southwestern Seminary is as sound in its teachings as any that can be found, but as most of our students who go to other seminaries than Louisville usually go North, we are trying here to emphasize the advantages of Louisville.

Some of our friends have intimated in pretty strong language that the Recorder is trying to force men to go to Louisville. For the benefit of any who entertain such suspicions we may say two things, first, the editor of the Recorder is a Baptist and he believes in Baptist liberty. He would not if he could force a Baptist to do anything against his convictions. In the second place, he knows that he could adopt no surer method of having his advice ignored, than to try to force it on people. The writer has had the opportunity to observe a little more widely than the young men who are just entering the ministry, and his experience is somewhat larger than theirs.

The writer may be pardoned for saying that three young preachers who had about decided to go to Northern Seminaries consulted him on that subject, and he advised them to go to Louisville for the reasons herein stated. They all followed his suggestion. This was gratifying, of course, but the pleasure of the writer was greatly heightened by having each of these young men tell him in later years that he was glad that the advice was given and accepted. One of these young men is now president of one of our leading Southern colleges, another is pastor of a strong and growing church in a large city in another State, and the third is one of the most promising young pastors in this State.

In no spirit of dictation or with no desire to coerce, is this editorial being written. The writer is here expressing the sincere convictions of a heart that goes out in tenderest sympathy and affection to his young brethren who are preparing for the greatest work on earth. He feels absolutely confident that not one who sees fit to take the advice herein given will have cause to regret it in the coming years.

A SINGULAR PLEA FOR TOLERATION:

Webster says toleration is a recognition of the right of private judgment, yes, but a right of private judgment in what sphere?

Is private judgment allowable everywhere? Hardly. Then in what sphere may one demand the right of private judgment? Can he make such a demand in the matter of the fundamentals of the Christian Faith? Can he demand the right to believe or not believe the Bible, and still be a Christian? Can he demand the right of private judgment in the matter of believing in Jesus as the Saviour of the lost, or not believing it? Can he demand the right of private judgment in the belief of the supernatural, or not as he may wish? Can he demand the right to believe or not believe, that Jesus died for our sins—the sins of the whole world? Most assuredly a man can so believe. That is one thing, but there is another thing that is equally definite, as we see it, and that is, that while he may demand the right to believe as he pleases, he most certainly cannot demand the right to fellowship with the people of God, while he so demands toleration in these things.

Much has been said of late of the fact that the Fundamentalists are intolerant because they will not fellowship the Radicals who are demanding the right to fellowship with the people of God. Well, are the Fundamentalists right or wrong? The Radicals are making their fight against the Fundamentalists because of their intolerance (!) and the tendency to divide the people of God. The Radicals are pleading that the Fundamentalists must not divide God's people—that in their fight for the truth they are intolerant. The Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, one of the most accomplished writers among the Radicals is making a most cunning plea that the Fundamentalists are intolerant and that their work is tending to divide the Church. Mr. Fosdick takes it for granted that the Radicals are right in their stand as to the Bible and its teachings, and on that ground he puts in a plea for toleration, and for not dividing the Church. This is a catchy plea, and with many people it will have weight because they do not understand that Mr. Fosdick's position is a denial of many parts of the Bible, a denial of the supernatural as a feature of the Christian Faith, that he denies much of what the Fundamentalists believe to be fundamental truth as set forth in the Bible. If the average man and woman could only see that what Mr. Fosdick's thought is, is a denial of many of the great fundamental truths of the Bible, then they themselves would not join him in his demand for toleration.

We know where to place the man who sings the praise of Mr. Fosdick and his associates in this matter, they are either ignorant of what Mr. Fosdick's teaching is, or else they are with him in that teaching. We have heard many praise Mr. Fosdick's books, as beautiful, as fine, as good. They say he is an unusual writer and of great force in presenting his thought, but a more important question is: Is Mr. Fosdick true to the truth of God's Word? Certainly he is not, for as we understand him, he does not pretend to believe the Bible is truly the Word of God, that at his best he only claims that some parts of the Bible are true, and that is the secret of the intolerance of the Fundamentalists. Because Mr. Fosdick and the Radicals generally do not accept the Bible as the Word of God in its entirety, the Fundamentalists take a stand for the Bible, holding it is true and is the Word of God, and it is because that the Radicals will not accept this attitude that the Fundamentalists refuse to give them fellowship, and who blames them if they do not? I do not, because I do not see how it is possible for Belief in the Bible to fellowship unbelief in the same Book. And that is unquestionably the point between the Fundamentalists and the Radicals, of whom Mr. Fosdick is one of the chiefs. We believe the Fundamentalists are right in the stand they have taken, and believing them to be right, we dare to stand with them—we are for the Bible, as against their distorted notions of its reliability.

A good many people praise Mr. Fosdick's books largely because of the beautiful language he uses in them, but let us not forget that beautiful language may conceal piles of error. Take his book on the Meaning of Prayer, and to the best of my ability I regard it as highly sprinkled with error, and so of all of his books which I have read. What shall we do with Mr. Fosdick's plea? Oh, drop it as you would a poison. Have nothing to do with it. In the broad and all inclusive faith of many people they seem to act as if there is no limit to the toleration they would extend to their fellows. But can that be true of any real child of God? Can he fellowship everything which stalks forth in the garments of Christianity? I think not—how can he? Shall his toleration include all men who wear the name of Christ, or who wish to wear His name? The Unitarian calls himself a Christian, but he denies the divinity of Jesus, and declares that he is a mere man. If Jesus be only a mere man, then he has no power to save more than other mere men. Shall the real Christian extend his fellowship to include the men who say that Jesus was a bastard, and not in any unusual sense the Son of God? Shall we offer fellowship to the Jews, who declare that Jesus was not and is not the Saviour of the world? Shall we offer fellowship to the man who says the Bible is not the Word of God—that it is unreliable and much filled with myths, folk lore and legends from the literature of the heathen nations of the day and time of the coming of Christ? Shall we be so tolerant as to include in our fellowship all sorts of teaching? For one we say No! But says one, Does not the faith of the church to which you belong hold to toleration in all things? No, Sir, and if it did, we could not stand with it. The Christian Church holds to toleration in matters of human opinions as to what the Bible teaches. That is true, and so long as a man holds to the Bible as true, we admit he has a right to interpret it for himself and without sacrificing my fellowship, provided of course, that his interpretation is in thought and spirit Christian. If a man gives forth an interpretation which is not Christian in thought and spirit, then we are under no obligation to fellowship him, and we will not do it. The truth means something and we are not, for the sake of toleration, or anything else, to sacrifice that truth. The Bible is the chart and creed, of the Christian Church, and as long as a man accepts that as the inspired Word of God, he has a claim on our fellowship, but when he in any way repudiates the Bible, then I bid him good bye, so far as Christianity is concerned. The Fundamentalists are right in their stand for the Word of God as the Christian's Book for guidance and practice, and we hope they will stand. No matter how much Mr. Fosdick may say they are important.

CHRIST WALKING IN THE MIDST OF THE CHURCHES.

In the letters in Revelation to the Seven Churches, the key thought seems to be Christ Walking in the midst of the Churches. Naturally we ask for what purpose was He walking in the midst of the churches? Evidently He was walking there for inspection of the character and work of the churches. He is looking into their lives and work that He may make known to them their strong points and their weak points, for that is just what He does.

In the Church at Ephesus He made His inspection and then told them just what He found there. He said:

"I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil; and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars. And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast labored, and hast not fainted." What a fine record for the church at Ephesus!

He has seen their work and their labor and their patience. He had discovered their stand against evil—how they could not bear them which were evil, how they tried men and women who were claiming to be apostles and were not, and how they had found that these false apostles were liars, how they had labored and borne and been patient in all of their struggles, but had not fainted.

That was a pretty good church. If you had been a member, when the Master said so much in their favor, do you not think you would have congratulated yourself on belonging to a church with such a fine record in the Lord's work, and yet did you know that the Master did find something against that church. Listen! He says in verse four of chapter two, this:

"Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love."

And then He said to them:

"Remember, therefore, from whence thou art fallen, and repent and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his (its) place, except thou repent. But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate."

In those verses we have the deliverances of a Judge. He had investigated, He had scrutinized, He had examined with care the church in its work, in its character, in its stand against evil, and He tells them of their character, and yet He found one thing against the church at Ephesus, they had fallen away from their first love, and His immediate appeal to them was to repent and do their first works over again. He told them if they did not do it—do as He commanded—he would remove their candlestick out of its place.

Now what was that candlestick? It was the Church. This you may establish by turning to Rev. 1:20, where the inspired writer interprets the meaning of the candlestick as signifying the Church. But how would He remove the church from the church? I think he simply meant if they did not repent and do as He had instructed them to do, he would withdraw from them and take away the character of the church, so that while they might be an association of some kind, they would no more be a church of Christ.

In this we have one thing that all churches ought to keep in mind, and that is, when a wrong is done in the church, it must be repented of at once, and the church proceed to do its first works over again, or it will lose its character as a church. And why not? If a church will not maintain the Scriptural character of the church (see Eph. 5:27), why should it be permitted to occupy the place of a church and claim to be a church?—why should such an institution be permitted to encumber the ground in the Lord's vineyard? Jesus is not a "white washer." If there is something good in the church he immediately points it out, and if there is something bad, He directly points that out and asks for its removal. If His request be not heeded, He at once takes from that church its standing as a church, and it goes out to its own place.

If a church is to hold the place of a church in the kingdom of Jesus Christ, then that church must maintain the character of a church.

It must quit the wrongs it has been guilty of and it must do the works of a true church of Jesus Christ, or He will put it out of its place by taking from it the name of a church of Christ, which it had been wearing, but unworthily. It is clear that Jesus does not permit an unworthy church to wear His name and have His approval, when in fact it is in character not such a church. He not only inspected the churches showing them the wrongs that were in them, but thereby He gave warning to others, that they might profit by the inspection he had given to them.

Notice, too, what he says to the church at Ephesus, when He had completed His work therein. He said:

"He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches: To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."

The word is so full of hints and plain statements as to the character and duty of the church that it seems as if there can be no chance for one who wishes to go aright, to go astray. Notice also that His message of warning is not to every one, but only to such as have an ear to hear. That means, if we get the thought correctly, that some people have no ear to hear what the Spirit is saying. Of course they can not get the message, for though they hear it with the natural ear, they will not hear it with the spiritual ear, for they have no spiritual ear, not because they have not been given the hearing ear, but because they have wasted opportunities for hearing, till the spiritual ear has been paralyzed and no longer can hear the truth. So they have no ear and of course can no longer receive the message of reproof, of correction, of instruction. Such was the course our Lord pursued with the church at Ephesus. He pointed out their good things and their bad things. If they tried to abolish the bad things and encourage the good in themselves, then they were given further opportunities and urge to go on to perfection (see Heb. 6:1—3), establishing themselves in the true character of the Church of Jesus Christ. We may with great profit study the character of the church at Ephesus.

THE MOST DANGEROUS COUNTERFEITER KNOWN TO MAN.

It is little wonder that men are often puzzled over the affairs of human life; yea, even in the matters of the Divine Life. Everywhere men are liable to be mystified and hindered, even in their best endeavors to serve God, but there is a reason why this is so, but this reason is little known to men, and it is even less understood.

God is seeking to lead men aright, to the highest and best aims and ends of life, but Satan is also seeking to control and lead men and women to the worst ends in life. Often men are bewildered and hindered because of the work of the arch-counterfeiter. While this is true it is also true that many of the people, even Christian people, do not keep their eyes open to the facts. In some indefinite way they understand that God is ruling in the earth, but they seem to think nothing about the fact that Satan is abroad in the land, seeking whom he may devour, opposing God in every way, and so trying to defeat the highest ends of God. To make his opposition successful, he must in some way get man to believe him to the discredit of the Almighty. Naturally, under such confusing conditions, man is misled and induced to do what Satan desires him to do, at least in many instances and of course, man is in this way confused till sometimes he does not know whom he is serving.

To make the situation more embarrassing to the people of God and to hinder them in their efforts to do His will, Satan camouflages every possible situation, so that his work may seem to the not well informed to be the work of God, and, in so far as he can get them thus to misunderstand, he misleads them and to the utter confusion of the plans and purposes of God for men. This he accomplishes against the more readily and surely, than he could otherwise do because the people against whom he is working do not understand—they really confuse the minds of the people, inducing them to believe that God's work is Satan's work and that Satan's work is God's work. Under such confusion it is not at all strange that pandemonium reigns and the work of the Lord through His people is greatly hindered. How could it be otherwise unless the people who profess to be Christians will learn the teachings of the Bible?

Satan's biggest field for such operations, as we might expect, is found in his efforts to destroy the power of God's Word in its teachings. If he can induce some not well informed Christian man or woman to misunderstand the teaching set forth by Jesus or the apostles, then he has up his kingdom of darkness and at the same time he has in a large measure pulled down the kingdom of God. There is abundant evidence to sustain the position we have assumed. Turn to Matthew 4, and you may find this evidence in a strong degree. He tried even to mislead Jesus in the wilderness temptation. He even quoted Scripture wrong in an effort to induce Jesus to be misled. Not only so, but he tried to give him inducements to worship the arch-enemy of souls, and if Jesus had not been well informed as to the exact wording of Scripture, Satan might have induced Him to give heed to his misquotations and so have led him to failure. Of course Jesus was not to be misled, but many of the followers of Christ, being more or less ignorant of the teachings of the Bible, do yield to the same temptations, or to similar temptations. The truth is, all of us are in danger, as to following Satan when we are intending to follow Jesus. This fact is due to the devil's camouflaging the situation and making many believe one thing while the real truth is in another direction. To accomplish such an end the devil will go to any lengths. Paul tells us that the devil will transform himself into an angel of light that he may mislead the disciples of our Lord and Master. This he does by making it appear that he is doing and what he offers you are both the work of the good, and this he does under a false light that his deception may be the more complete.

What is the remedy of all this misleading of the professed people of God? That is the question of first class importance and should have a first class answer. There are three remedies that will prove most effective in defeating the plans and purposes of Satan. They are these:

1. Prayer. 2. Bible Study. 3. Active Christian Service. Prayer will make us hungry for Bible Study. Bible Study will prepare us for resisting the temptations of Satan and make us anxious to do Christian work. Try it, not merely for a day, but try it a year, and then for life.

CAN HE DO IT?

Mr. Hays, he who was in Mr Harding's Cabinet, as Post Master General, in the beginning of the present administration is reported through the daily press as saying that it is impossible to have a censorship of the press, pulpit, film, or spoken word. He declares this is true because the principle of freedom, upon which this nation was founded, cannot permit it. Well, really that is news to us. Just as well to say that the principle of freedom on which this nation is founded forbids prohibition, and so turn loose the saloon again.

He further says: State-wide or nation-wide censorship will fail in every thing it undertakes. It hasn't been done successfully, and never will be. Too many people who know nothing about the business are named on censorship boards. We are going to obviate the necessity of censorship."

Well, now there are some new and interesting ideas, Mr. Hays. Wish you would explain how you are going to obviate the necessity for censorship. We may be mistaken, and we wish we may be, but that statement of Mr. Hays to the effect we are going to obviate the necessity for censorship seems to us to mean about as much as a spoonful of moonshine in a dark night.

Again: Does Mr. Hays mean that the United States Government, said to be the best government in the world, has not enough power to put an evil under the ban and stop it from robbing our people of their morals. If that is so, we think it is time to get another kind of government, or to strengthen the back-bone of what we now have. The freedom which cannot restrain an evil corporation from destroying the morals of the people, to whom it has been given, it seems to us is not freedom at all, but the most abject slavery the world has for its inhabitants. Why the people who cannot prevent the subjugation of themselves to vices and immoralities, such as the moving picture and other evils, are themselves the most abject slaves in the world.

Freedom which invites slavery is a queer element in human life. Mr Hays, you need to wake up and try again—you are clear off the track as to the power of a free government to protect itself against an immoral moving picture business. You are pleading not for freedom, but for the people to sit supinely by and submit themselves to the worst sort of slavery, that of evil ruling the good. Nonsense! This country was not founded on any such liberty.

Robert Blatchford's Recantation.

For years Robert Blatchford has stood for materialism and the materialist interpretation of the universe and of life. It is said that in his earlier years he was repelled from the religion of the churches by their incorrigible self-centredness, as he conceived it; and if that be the case, he is not the first to feel that the church has not always been sufficiently alive to the social implications of its own gospel. Nevertheless he like others, has failed to see that, in its work for the uplift of personal character through the agency of personal conversion, the church has ever been making an inestimable contribution towards social well-being; and because he failed to see this obvious fact he has been the unrelenting foe of the churches and the message for which they stand. During the last few weeks he has made a great recantation, not of his whole attitude of unbelief, but of his reliance upon materialistic theory as an explanation of all existence. It is once more the mystery of death that arrested him, and it is M. Flammarion, the great astronomer, in his book on "Death and Its Mystery" that has told him that it is not the eyes which are only the instrument of vision. Blatchford says concerning this: "I have no longer the materialistic theory to stand by, for science has shattered it into a nebulous cloud of electrons; but I do not know that M. Flammarion is right. I only hope he is. I do not think many of us could look upon the dead body and dead face of one we had long loved and known, and believe nothing has gone. We feel that something has gone. What can have gone unless it be the soul?"—Exchange.

ELON LETTER.

It is good for a fellow to get out among the people. There are so many of them and each life has its own message. I am thinking now of two men, both members of our Church and in their way loyal to it, and both laymen.

The first brother on greeting me inquired, "How is your College getting on?" I told him the best I could and then added that he might omit the "y" and make it "our" College! He then went on to say that in theory our institutions belong to the people, but in fact a few individuals controlled them and some folks were getting tired of it. "Now", said he, "the College Trustees won't let a professor be a pastor of Churches and a few years ago tried to prevent the young ministers studying at Elon from serving as pastor while they were students." Now this brother needed enlightenment. I tried to give it and left him feeling better. I told him it was far better for a young minister to borrow money to go to College than to cripple himself throughout his later life by preaching while in College. He accepted that, when I explained that the Board of Education is in a position to lend the money. "And about the Elon professors' preaching," I inquired, "did you ever hear of a man holding two government jobs at once?" He saw the point and laughed his hearty agreement. Will we ever be able to explain thus to everybody? Ought it to be necessary? Ought the presumption not to be in favor of our institutions?

But the other brother was of an entirely different spirit. He slapped me hard on the back with one hand while he gripped my right hand with the other and straightway inquired, "How is my College?" And that is the way he acts. His daughter will be here this fall. She was born to come here. This brother owns Elon College, just as the Psalmist in his famous twenty-third hymn of the psalter owned God. "The Lord is my Shepherd," he chants, not our Shepherd, but my Shepherd, and then he is prepared to enter the valley of the shadow of death comforted by that calm, sweet, that personal assurance of ownership.

Call not this attitude presumptuous. Call it not selfish. Call it not anti-social. It is personal, intimate, experimental. Every Christian ought to know this joyous experience.

Yes, this brother was right. Elon is his College. The Christian Orphanage is his orphanage. "The Christian Sun" is his religious newspaper. Miss Lucy Eldredge is his field secretary of Religious Education. Dr. J. O. Atkinson is his spokesman for missions and also for Men and Millions. This exultant braggart owns mission stations in Japan and Porto Rico and plans shortly to own some others in China. He has a Mountain School at Fancy Gap, Va. Elon belongs to him and shortly he will have a deed to Bethlehem College. He has a board employed to provide for his veteran preachers, their widows, and orphans. He owns Church property valued at more than a million dollars and has more than one hundred preachers on his pay roll. He is a very rich man, and yet a few thousands as the world counts riches would sum up all his worldly possessions. Best of all he has a clear title to mansions in the sky. The present life is real and sweet and precious to this brother. He is equally certain as to the life to come. It is not speculation with him. It is certitude. He knows in whom he has put his trust.

It is an inspiration to fellowship with this man. He is sunshine, radiance, gladness itself. He loves his church. It is his. He owns it and rejoices in his proprietorship. Now don't you undertake to belittle his property or any of his servants. Once a few years ago I heard a "slacker" talk suggestively in his presence of one of our general officers, those brethren who represent us and whom we properly or improperly make the recipient of criticism once in a while, and what this brother said to him was sufficient unto the occasion. The memory of it lingers with me illuminatingly, why he regarded the brother's insinuations as personal insults and as such resented them. Think of it!

This man has the right attitude, and the beauty of it is that his attitude floods his life with joy. It pays to be owner in the Lord's vineyard. Proprietorship in things spiritual, that is it. This Christian Church of ours can take this world for Christ single-handed and alone, If (what a tremendous word this!) all our people would realize their ownership in our church, its enterprises and their servants.

W. A. HARPER.

THE CHURCHES AND THE TRAGEDY OF THE NEAR EAST.

Is it conceivable that the American people will let the Armenians be massacred out of existence? Already, according to conservative estimates, nearly a million of them have been put to death since 1915.

Not only the Armenians but apparently all the Christian minorities in the Near East are in danger of extermination. Is it nothing to us? Through the Near East Relief we have given fifty millions of dollars for the saving of these people. Are we to rescue them from famine only to see them die under a vengeful sword?

It is nothing less than a moral tragedy that no great enthusiasm for the cause of these persecuted peoples has arisen in public quarters. No great leader has appeared to espouse their cause. Are we so suffering from the moral let-down after the war, so callous to bloodshed and destruction, that they no longer stir our hearts?

America is probably the one country which today has sufficient power and prestige to prevent the continuance of the atrocities against the Christian minorities in the Near East. At least the nations of Europe are not likely to take effective action without the moral support of America. According to latest reports, the proposal for an official investigation by British, French, Italian and American Governments into the reported atrocities has now been given up. Are we so encased in insular provincialism that we do not feel our solidarity with our fellow-men in the Near East, to say nothing of their being our own blood-brothers in Christ?

The chief hope for effective action on the part of the American Government lies in the creation of a great tide of public opinion, and the chief hope for creating such public opinion lies in the churches. Already they have put themselves squarely on record. The following official resolutions, adopted at recent denominational assemblies and conventions, indicates clearly their concern:

By the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis, Ind., June 19, 1922:

"We view with profound pity and horror the extermination of the Christian peoples—Armenian, Greek, Syrian—now in progress at the hands of the Turks. At the Conference at Versailles the United States was requested by the allied nations to assume a mandate for Armenia and to protect her faithful and heroic people. The Northern Baptist Convention makes a solemn protest against the ruthless starvation and massacre of the first nation to accept the Christian faith. We hereby petition our government immediately to adopt measures to secure united action on the part of the United States and European governments looking to the deliverance and security of imperilled Christian peoples in the Near East."

By the Southern Baptist Convention at Jacksonville, Fla., June, 1922:

"Whereas, atrocities against Christians in the Near East by the Turks continue, and

"Whereas, the British Government has taken action seeking cooperation of our Government, as well as those of France and Italy, in putting an end to the said atrocities,

"Resolved, That the Commission on Social Service be instructed to call this matter to the attention of the President of the United States, and to write him to cooperate with other governments to this end."

By the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., at Des Moines, Iowa, May 24, 1922.

"Whereas, the people of the United States have been for years and are now being requested to contribute to the relief of the Christians in the Near East, and

"Whereas, We believe the conditions necessitating relief arise mainly through the persecution of the native Christians by the Turk, and

"Whereas, Mere relief, however generous will not guarantee the security of the Christians of the Near East,

"Therefore, The General Assembly respectfully petitions the Government of the United States to take such steps as may seem wise to make the Christian peoples of the Near East secure in the peaceful pursuits of their lives and worship."

By the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Hot Springs, Ark., May 12, 1922.

"That the General Conference memorialize the government of the United States to take whatever steps may be necessary to stop the persecutions which threaten the complete annihilation of the Christians in the Near East and to give them such protection as will enable them to reestablish their desolated homes and support themselves in decency and comfort."

By the United Presbyterian Assembly at Cambridge, Ohio, May, 1922.

"Resolved, That this assembly does hereby call upon the President of the United States and the Secretary of State to exercise every possible means to secure the relief of the peoples of the Near East from political oppression and persecution."

Other bodies had taken earlier action, such as the Congregationalists, whose National Council a year ago made the following declaration:

"Whereas, In the present critical situation the intervention of our own and Allied governments has become necessary to avert a final disaster at the hands of the Nationalist Turks,

"Therefore be it Resolved, That we appeal to the President and implore him to use the good offices of the United States Government to the utmost for the protection of these people."

Still other church assemblies which will be meeting during the coming months will undoubtedly take similar steps.

Not only through their own separate denominational organizations, but also unitedly through the Federal Council of the Churches have the Christian forces made their position unequivocal. Three months setting forth the salient facts in the situation and urging them to bring the influence of their communities to bear upon Congress and the Administration. A special memorial was submitted to the Department of State in which the following declarations, among others, were made:

"The American public has given millions of dollars to save the remnant of this shattered race, in confidence that they will be given a protected home. This remarkable response to a nation's need will be lost if these promises are not fulfilled.

"America cannot escape her responsibility upon the ground of non-membership in the League. Our vast relief contributions—the cause of humanity—and our own moral welfare, require more than expressions of sympathy. Action is demanded."

What has been done is good, but it is only a beginning. We must make it too clear to be ignored that the Christian people of America are looking to our nation to assume its full measure of responsibility. Insistently and incessantly the churches must be creating a public sentiment that will lead not simply to investigation but to action.

RECONCILING INFLUENCES BETWEEN AMERICAN AND GERMAN CHURCHES.

"Forgetting the things which are behind, and pressing forward to the things which are before" is the central idea underlying two recent events of large significance in the relation of the American churches with the churches of the lands from which they were formerly separated by the vicissitudes of war. One of these events was the reception of Dr. George Michaelis, formerly Chancellor of Germany, as a guest at the July meeting of the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches in America.

Chancellor Michaelis is President of the Student Christian Federation of Germany, and it was in this connection that he was especially welcomed. In addressing the representatives of the thirty denominations which constitute the Federal Council of Churches, Dr. Michaelis spoke in part as follows:

"I appreciate more than I can say the warmth of your greetings to me and the privilege of meeting with the representatives of the Christian forces of America. It will be a source of great encouragement to the Christians of Germany to know that we can join together in facing the future.

"We are living in Germany in a very hard time. The situation appears to us very dark—so dark that I do not know what I shall find when I get back home after an absence of nearly six months. There are those who feel that the worst period for Germany has only begun.

"I have just come from an International Conference in China—the meeting of the World Student Christian Federation which brought together representatives of the Christian forces from all over the world; thirty-three nations in all, representing all races. This meeting gave me an insight into the possibility of fellowship of the Christian churches of all nations and made me feel that the great hope for the future lies in the development of this spirit of unity."

Dr. Robert E. Spear, who presided at the meeting, responded to Dr. Michaelis' address and in behalf of the Churches of America welcomed the cooperation of the German churches in working together for the building of a better world. He said in part:

"The division between nations and races cannot be argued away; they have to be lived away. It is in our common efforts to work out the Christian ideal in the life of the world today that we find the one influence which can break through racial and national differences. The spirit of fellowship represented within this room is an evidence of the larger unity that is still possible. Here in the Federal Council of the Churches we see the marks of the healing of a former war which divided our own nation, for the representatives of both the Northern and Southern states are here, at one in their loyalty to their common Lord and in the task of winning the world to Him. There are also here the representatives of both the white and Negro races. If there can be developed such a spirit of unity as we now have within the Church, we need not doubt that it is possible to secure a unity which shall take in all nations and all races of the world.

"We hope that this meeting is only an indication of the reconciling influence that are now at work between the Churches of America and the Churches of Germany, and that we shall be able to cooperate in the future in the great tasks which require the full strength of the Christian forces of all lands"

At the same meeting of the Federal Council, an official message was received from the newly-formed German Evangelical Church Federation in response to the message of good-will authorized by the Executive Committee of the Federal Council at its meeting last December. The message from the German churches giving interesting sidelights on the present situation, reads in part as follows:

"Dear Brothers in Christ:

"On Ascension Day, 1922, at the grave of Martin Luther in Wittenberg the city of the Reformation, the document creating the German Evangelical Church Federation was solemnly signed. Thereby the task which was begun in 1919 and 1921 in the Church Conferences at Dresden and Stuttgart has been completed. Thereby the wish of German Evangelical Christianity, which recognized the seriousness of the present hour, and which sought to clasp hands in united service of the heavenly King, has been fulfilled. We pray that God may bless our work and that through it we may have added faith and brotherly love manifested among us.

"Several weeks ago before the days of federation, the German Evangelical Church Committee received your message which you kindly sent to the Christian Churches of Germany under date of February 21, 1922, and which at your suggestion, was graciously delivered by Professor Deissmann. The significance of this message seemed to call for a postponement of an answer until a reply could be sent under the name of the new Church Federation itself.

"We heartily thank you for the friendly expression of your readiness to enter into a relation of economical cooperation with the German Churches. We are certain that the mutual contact of our two great federations can become a blessing for the whole of Christendom. With heartfelt thankfulness we have noted during the past years that streams of brotherly helpfulness have flowed into our land not only from the National Lutheran Council and other Lutherans, but also from prominent churches of the Federal Council.

"The only hope for a torn world is that all nations may bow under the mind and will of the Prince of Peace, Jesus Christ, our universal Lord and Savior. You will understand, honored Sirs and Brothers, if we for truth's sake sincerely acknowledge that under the pressure of our present condition we look to the future with heavy hearts.

"Our nation laid down its arms upon the reliance of a peace of justice and cooperation. As these promises have not been fulfilled, it is difficult for us to realize that the war is over. For we are still under the sway of unfriendly forces, both in outer lands and at home. The German is still considerably outlawed and even German missionaries are excluded from the fields of their blessed labors in the Kingdom of God. Under the pressure of unbearable burdens placed upon us the best element of our nation suffers most, especially that part upon which our Churches depend. The anxious care for daily bread has a destructive effect upon the moral elasticity and the cheerfulness of faith of hundreds of thousands. The impudent luxury of a small part of profiteers is only a special sign of our moral need

"With you we are convinced that the outer and inner burdens which cause our nation and other nations to sigh have their root in the fact that the Spirit of Jesus Christ, the Spirit of truth and love, has not become the moving power in the lives of men and nations. Thus we consider this time of darkness in which we find ourselves as an urgent call of God to the hearts of all people with renewed earnestness that which serves the peace of the world. We are convinced that all the Christian Churches should follow this call of God in the spirit of brotherliness and truth by unitedly seeking to unlift the life of mankind with the renewing power of the Gospel."

WILL YOU PAY THE PRICE

We often wonder at the success of other people and sometimes envy them their positions. We fail to see that back of all true success is toil and preparation. Great men do great things because they have made great preparation. If you would attain the highest success in life prepare yourself for the responsible positions—positions that are ever open for those who are prepared for them. A college education multiplies your opportunities several hundred times. Elon College, the property of our church and of the Southern Christian Convention opens its doors September the 6th. If you are a normal boy or girl you can prepare yourself there for a life that is worthwhile. It will take four years of close application but the result is worth the price. Are you willing to pay it?

Perhaps you are not situated so you can go to college, but would like to be better prepared for the work in your home church. There is no reason why you should not succeed with a Sunday school class or other church work as well as others.

Go to the Chautauque and School of Methods at Elon College, August 28th to September 4th. It will take a week of your time and ten dollars of your money, but if you are really interested in your work you can afford to pay the price.

"The heights by great men reached and kept,
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night."

HOLLAND ITEMS

Dr. J. O. Atkinson was with us the fourth Sunday of July. He preached at the morning service with his usual fine thought, earnestness, and charm:

Dr. Atkinson spoke in very high terms of our Sunday School, of the interesting class work of class No. 5, and of the music at the morning worship.

Our Sunday School was represented at the Eastern Virginia S. S. Convention by its duly elected delegation, its pastor, and its superintendent. A profitable and enjoyable convention.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

WHAT SOME LAYMEN SAY

To say that our good people are deeply interested in Men and Millions and will pay their pledges when they can, but expresses a truth more and more apparent every day. I believe the following from one of our most loyal laymen about expresses a feeling prevalent everywhere: "I hope we will yet be able to make this movement the success it ought to be, and that some who have been as pessimistic about it will see that it can be done. I have always had faith in our people and believed they would pay their obligations when they got in a position to do so, and I still have that faith. I know that for the past three years it has been hard for me to meet my obligations, and a few of them I have been unable to meet. But if the Lord lets me live and gives me good health I expect to meet every one of them, and I judge other people's feelings by my own. I judge that others in our denomination who made pledges to Men and Millions feel very much as I do."

I am finding laymen everywhere who express the same feelings and views as does this good brother. Laymen everywhere who gave pledges are saying that their pledge to their church and the Kingdom is their bond, and that they consider these pledges as binding and as obligatory as any other obligations or debts they owe.

In such a spirit our Men and Millions Movement—the holiest and most helpful movement our Church ever initiated—will go on to the glorious results it so richly deserves.

IN GOOD COMPANY

When quite a youngster my father used to try to teach me to keep good company, or stay alone.

I am to this day grateful for that wholesome teaching. And if every one had good company this scribe has had since he began to associate with the Captains of our Men and Millions. It has been the writer's privilege now to meet a very large number of these Captains and Women Leaders in our North Carolina Conference, in our Eastern Virginia, and Georgia and Alabama Conferences. They are among the very best men and women our Christian Church has and to meet in council with them and discuss matters of vital concern to our Church and the Kingdom is an unspeakable joy. The writer has been surprised and grateful beyond measure at the number of intelligent, consecrated laymen this movement has found and at the grasp they have of the situation and their determination to do and dare in their Master's name for this movement.

There certainly is compensation in life. If working for Men and Millions is sometimes hard, the joy that comes from working with so many loyal and true and devoted men and women in a cause so good and great more than compensates for any hardship that may be found. The Christian Church, could it see them together, would certainly rejoice at the splendid leadership and Christian loyalty of these good Captains and Women Leaders. It is indeed a joy and a privilege to be associated with them.

WHY TALK A SICK MAN TO DEATH!

A very intelligent layman in a section of country hardest hit by these "hard times" said to this writer recently: "Matters never have been as hard as they were pictured." He was speaking of the financial depression in which he himself had lost heavily, as well as the rest of his neighbors. And then he explained. He said he had not found any of his neighbors actually starving from hunger and thrust into jail because of unpaid debts. Moreover, he noticed about as many automobiles on the roads now as ever, if not more, and gas was just as high as it used to be. So far as he could see his neighbors were dressing about as costly and as nicely as they ever did, and in fact, matters were going on very much as formerly—except when it came to talking and paying church obligations and many other obligations. This layman knew our economic or financial man was sick, but he was not really as sick as we made out like he was, and if he were, our talking about his disease always was like helping talk a sick man to death.

There is ever and always excuse for not meeting church obligations. But men and women of faith and loyalty do not give up. Thus trust and pray and keep on trying.

Yes, our men and millions pledges were made in "flushed times." Had we paid them then it would have been out of our plenty and abundance. Now we are called upon to pay them out of our want and need.

God ever requires sacrifice in order to bestow the larger blessing. And the faithful man who stands the test will receive the better blessing ever received for those who, like the widow, give out of their want and living.

OUR FIRST CHURCH ORGANIZED IN CARROLL COUNTY, VIRGINIA

Miss Gladys Lankford, of Franklin Va., who taught for us in Carroll County, Va., this summer, seems to have had great joy and good success in her work. Her report for the eight weeks she taught was as follows:

Enrolled in day school	20
Average attendance at Sunday school.....	55
Average attendance mid-week prayer services,	40

Organization of a Christian church by Dr. J. P. Barrett with eleven members and six more ready to join at the next meeting. This is to be known as Rocky Ford Christian Church. In order to have a church house for worship, all the community people have promised work, two men have promised land and money, and the County School Board will pay $50 to $70 a month on salary of our teacher. Have about sixteen homes in this community, and they are live, wide-awake, ambitious people. I visited each home at least once every two weeks, and more often than that in most of the homes. Placed Bibles in four homes. Found one fine young girl who did seventh grade work, who is so very anxious to go on to school, and to fit herself for active, Christian service. What a fine opportunity for some of our Missionary Societies to help this deserving girl to get a start in the world. She would make good if she only had a chance. How my heart longs to see her given a chance.

This is the second summer Miss Lankford has taught for us and the mountain people are grateful and greatly pleased at the good work she has done.

THE WORK IN THE MOUNTAINS

We began our work on June 17th. For several days the work only proved to be that of just a good success and then it began to grow. People invited me into their homes, and I spent several days only visiting. The great welcome that the people gave me was far greater than I am able to express. I found a warm welcome every where I went, and more invitations than I will be able to fill should I spend a year with the people.

I always tried to be at the place appointed when I said I would be there. The people have manifested a great interest in the work, and nearly two hundred have taken a stand for Christ. Others are waiting a chance. When I say a chance there are so many places waiting for me to come and be with them. I have not been able to fill all the calls for my work by any means. I preached thirty-three times while up there, and Dr. Barrett preached one time. There Mr. Crutchfield kindly consented to come and preach for me while I was unable to preach owing to being over worked. He preached five times for me. Miss Lankford filled one of my appointments making about forty preaching services. We organized one church while up there, and there are two others that need organizing. Our greatest problem now is giving them what they want; namely, a preacher. It is true that there is so much work to do that a minister will have a very hard time keeping his body in good condition, and do the necessary work. One cannot hope to preach less than three times each week and do the visiting which is a great part of the work. The worst will be getting across the mountains, and going chiefly by foot. But some one will have to make this sacrifice, and no one could refuse a call who favours the great desire for our service.

The question which has confronted me most since I have been up there is, Am I going to spend at least one year with them? This question I have been unable to answer, but knowing that the Christian people would not let such a great work be neglected, I have promised them that some one would be with them this year.

We have made arrangements to build a Church at Rocky Ford. There has never been a church here, and my oldest member is seventy-four years old. We are planning to build this church independantly of any help from the Board. There has never been a church or any preaching services in this community, until I went up there.

The first Sunday I gave an invitation, there were more than twenty that gave their hearts to God. Now we have a good church started, and lack nothing but a building to worship in and a place to call our church. We have plans for the work and every thing ready to start on the work as soon as we can hear our Mission Secretary, Dr. Atkinson, say go ahead.

I may say that I have never dreaded any work quite so much as I did this, when I started off up there. And since I have gone I have never received such a great blessing from any work. I shall be badly dissappointed, if we fail to send a minister this year, and think that since we have started, to fail to do such will mean that our work will be a failure for the next few years, owing to the fact that the people are looking for us to come and work with them.

I am now on a few days rest, and to serve my church at Garner. I shall then return for two weeks, and at the close of that two weeks I will be expecting to have heard Dr. Atkinson say some one is ready or will be up in a few days to carry on the work which God has so richly blessed us in starting. I would be glad to give the wonderful experiences that I have had while up there, and the conditions as they really are, but owing to time and space I will not be able to do so for a few weeks.

The Value of an Education

IDA B. CARTER, Maryland, Md.
Superintendent of Epworth S. S.

When we are young parents we fondly imagine our children are our very own—that we are rearing them for our own enjoyment; but as the years speed by we waken to the fact that the house is very quiet, and two plates are all that are needed on the dining table and it is no trouble to place two chairs and oh, we are so lonely!

The parents are all who are left of a once noisy family. Every time mother happens to encounter a pair of wornout shoes or a small old garment, or "the books they loved and read and tore" she sighs, and the lines seem deeper on her face, as a mental picture comes to her of the children who owned them, "but then we owners come no more the lonely hours thru." Perhaps they dwell miles apart, for they have taken their respective places in the great world—the places their education and training demand.

The parents now realize they were not rearing a family for themselves, but that they reared their children for the world.

It is God's plan that this is true, so it is good.

How earnestly we pray, Thy Kingdom Come, and the surest way to make it come is to send the best possible men and women out from our hearth stones into the world, but how? This question is directly and vitally linked up with every family.

Now it is no safer for a family to forget God and moral integrity than it is for a nation. There is nothing out of date in the fact that a nation may go to destruction today, as well as in ancient times. The same is true of a family. These ideas stand out big in our recent Sunday School lessons; so the parents problem is this, how may we send forth from our homes men and women who will make the world better instead of worse?

That great orator and statesman, Wm. Jennings Bryan says on this subject, "A trained mind can add largely to the usefulness of life when it is under the control of the spiritual in man, but it can wreck any human being, even civilization itself, if it is allowed to exercise authority.

"Brain and money are both good servants," says Mr. Bryan, "but they have not the qualities that are needed in a master."

At Pottstown, Penn., June 18th, in his address at the Hills School commencement, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, of Brooklyn, declared that "educated people are dangerous unless they believe in God and follow His teachings." Said he, "If culture counted most in life, Athens and not Calvary, would be the base of the world's true civilization. Without God there can be no real civilization or true education."

These same thoughts are expressed in different phraseology by Ex-Presidents Roosevelt and Wilson and President Harding and many other great men, so when you are prepared to enter a school of higher learning, I would urge you to choose a Christian institution.

A lady said recently, "Shucks! People don't need so much educating."

True, many succeed nobly without much instruction. They are people of great natural ability. Many play a musical instrument well without knowing a note when they see it. They are people of great musical ability, but what might these gifted ones have become had they had proper training? Of the measure of their powers they know little. They only know as they call upon them they respond. They have a great depository of ability upon which they know not how to issue checks.

A student understands why he does certain things and the gain or loss, if he does otherwise. Training gives one confidence and poise, and expands and illuminates the capacity for enjoyment. It gives one ease in any company.

Begin now—choose the subject you like best and study it in your spare time. You will soon find your self lifted from the rut you were in, actually forced into a wider field, where your knowledge will be of use to those about you.

"The tragedy of our lives is we are not living in conditions of our own choosing." That makes no difference. You can, if you will. No power in society can keep you down in knowledge, virtue and influence excepting the power of your own consent. You can rise by the sacred power which Jesus called the "Kingdom of God." He said "it is within you."

This power makes Helen Keller the wonder of the world of science, though she is walled in by darkness and silence. It made Blind Homer the first great master of literature, and Blind Milton to write "Paradise Lost." It made a Booker T. Washington, a Lincoln, a Garfield—American history and biography are full of evidence of the fact that any one can have a good education if they truly hunger and thirst for it. Proof of this runs through the early chapters of the history of some of our countries best and greatest men. So, were I again young, I would choose to be educated and educated in a Christian institution, regardless of the seeming merits of others, and unless I had great talent in some other direction, had I been reared on a farm, I would choose agriculture as my profession as I would have a good start in the knowledge of my chosen field.

One thing which would help me decide this is the fact that statistics show that 60 per cent. of those entering the business world fail within ten years after their entrance, and every city and small town has more professional men than seem able to make an honest living.

We could welcome an agriculturist in our neighborhood. I for one wish some would come and teach us how to farm.

A Boston lady told me that a few years ago there were hundreds of abandoned farms near that city, all of which had been brought back to fertility by agriculturists.

Ex-Governor J. G. Townsend, of Delaware, said in a speech before the Peninsula Horticultural Society, held at Berlin, Md., his boyhood's home town, "As I drove over your splendid stone roads the wonderful changes that have been wrought in your county flashed over me. Where perhaps the worst sand road in the country could be found, now there is a stone road." Then he told how Delaware was taking her place in educational matters. He told how one community similar to our's "made good."

He said "25 years ago Baltimore Hundred was struggling along with her land values around $8 to $40 per acre. A great many of her people in debt, with poor homes, poor land and conditions generally bad. Selbyville, the shipping point of the Hundred, was a town with few homes, one or two stores, streets that were covered with mud after each rain."

Scientific farming wrought a change. Continuing he said, "Now, Baltimore Hundred has been divided into farms of from 10 to 30 acres and nearly every farmer is a grower of strawberries—property clear of debt, land values have increased to $50 to $200 per acre, new homes, new churches and schools have been built every where in the Hundred and the town of Selbyville has been built up to be one of the prettiest on the Peninsula with two banks in which the people have a line of deposits of over a million dollars. Each year their strawberry crop brings over a half million dollars and not a man there has over 15 acres to strawberries.

This simply shows what education rightly applied will do for a community.

City people used to consider country people quite behind the times. Conditions have changed because of agricultural students who, during their college years, have come in contact with the widest possible sources of information, the newest results of investigation and the broadest conceivable influences and carried this elevating atmosphere to the country. Statistics state that now more students are enrolled in Agricultural Colleges than ever before and half of them will go to the country to farm. Statistics show that farmers have come to be the best informed of any class of society in the United States and city laborers are the most meagerly informed.

Invention and improvement have brought a fuller life to all, but to no one in so great a measure as to the farmer. Men and boys are always interested in power machinery with which, up-to-date farms are now equipped. The rural route brings the farmer the daily news and his choice of magazines. The phonograph furnishes him the best in music. He can study any language he wishes by its aid. The telephone makes him next door to any one on the line, and motor cars and trucks have eliminated the barrier of distance. I read of a Western farmer who was a war aviator who has purchased an airplane to use for marketing and now the radio phone is opening a new treasure chest of interest to the farmer and all these blessings to mankind come through trained minds, in other words education. Can you question the value of it?

Surely man is but a "little lower than the angels," if he will but rise and accept his heritage.

CHURCHES CALL PASTOR FOR ANOTHER YEAR AND INCREASE SALARY

"New Providence and the Graham Christian Churches held a short business meeting July 30th, and gave our present pastor, Rev. S. L. Beougher, a unanimous call to serve the churches for another year at an advance of $500 in salary. Mr. Beougher and family have greatly endeared themselves to our people by great interest and excellent work for the churches in trying to build up the Christian Church, or rather rebuild in this community.

We, as a church, feel proud that we have a pastor in this field who can give his time to the work, as there is yet so much material out of which a strong church may be built."

MRS. JOHN B. STRATFORD.

LOOKING FOR A PREACHER

"Last week a delegation of church people composed of Messrs. J. U. Gunter, J. Walker Kelley, J. S. Truitt, and S. H. McDuffie, of Sanford, came to Graham looking for a preacher and called on Rev. S. L. Beougher, pastor of New Providence and Graham Christian Churches, for the purpose of securing him as pastor of the Sanford Christian Church for the coming year. It is not believed they will get him this time, for his churches had a meeting a day or so later and gave him a unanimous call with a substantial increase in salary."

Present History of Haiti

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

NOTES: By invitation of the Editor, it gives me pleasure to supply THE SUN with a few articles on Haiti. My present plans are to give them in a series with subjects as follows:

Haiti—An Historical Sketch.
Haiti—Today.
Haiti—Her People.
Haiti—Her Agriculture.
Haiti—Her Religion.

For the facts of my information I am indebted to Mr. W. P. Davis, the President of the American Sugar Company, who has been here six years and has devoted much of his time to collecting material in preparation of an authentic history of Haiti, and he is an authority.

HAITI TO-DAY.

No. 2

A century has passed since the French were obliterated. The whites are gone. The white from the flag is torn out. A few United States Marines have hoisted the Stars and Stripes, and not only put their guard at the strategic points of the country, but patrol every trail. A Haitian army, Gendarmerie, has been organized and, under the command of Marine officers. The Customs have been taken over and moneys are not misappropriated. Sanitation is instituted and supervised by American physicians. Modern improvements such as paved streets, electric lights, ice plants, street cars, building of roads, etc., are installed under the supervision of American engineers. At eight o'clock each morning at the beautiful palace built to replace the old one destroyed ten years ago by a terrific explosion when a former president demonstrated that to occupy that high office in Haiti meant certain and sudden death, (They say "he went away." And he did, and too he was going up when he left), a squad of Gendarms and a band perform the ceremonies of raising the flag, playing the Star Spangled Banner and the Haitian National Air. On the drill grounds companies are being drilled by their American officers. On the Champs de Mars the United States Marines are marching. What has happened to Haiti?

The story is long and every phrase has its own interesting importance. "Shibolth" may make a good password, but it doesn't make a foundation for a permanent structure. Haiti is not the only country that has tried to build without laying the proper foundation for her structure. It has always been on sinking sand.

The population is now estimated at two million people, nearly all unmixed ancestry. Besides the Marines, there are only a few hundred whites. The natives are divided into two groups, the educated and the uneducated. The first is about five percent of the total. These can read and write French and some of them may be said to have adopted European culture standards. Some are well educated, polite and courteous. This group controls the entire country. The other group, ninety five percent, are sunk in ignorance, superstition and poverty. Privation and suffering is the lot of the mass. Sanitation and morals seem to be unknown. It is said that more than ninety five percent is infected with syphilis, some so horribly so that they are a mass of sores.

The upper classes have never learned to work. They have no work ideals. And this spirit seeps down through all the classes so that whenever it is possible they become a middle man as an agent for work and draw their graft. An officer pays a valet about five dollars a month to do his chores for him. The valet will hire some one to take the burden off of him. My boy went down for the laundry the other day. He hired a "Gorcon" to toat it for him. He paid him two cents to carry it about three quarters of a mile. Some time ago an editor was jailed for certain intollerable utterances. As a prisoner he was made to work. What a howl went up by his compatriots! They called the Marines "White Savages" for making him work six hours a day and didn't give him but one hour at noon to sleep. This represents the elect who are to be cared for by the common herd. As a result of this spirit and condition, there are more people seeking public office than there are offices. Graft is second nature and they have no compunction of conscience about it. There is always a class who is interested in upsetting a government for the benefit of their own personal welfare, rather than maintain it, and each man thinks he is "it" for the job. We are told, and it is a matter of record, that in an interview regarding the presidency of Dartigenave, Admiral Caperton said to another aspirant by the name of Bobo, "Dr. Bobo, if Senator Dartigenave is elected president, will you help him loyally and earnestly in his efforts to benefit Haiti?" Bobo replied, "No, I will not. If Senator Dartigenave is elected president, I will not help him. I will go away and leave Haiti to her fate. I alone am fit to be president of Haiti; I alone understand Haiti's asperations; no one else is fit to be president but me; there is no patriotism in Haiti to be compared with mine; the Haitians love no one as they love me." (Quoted from Prof. Kesley). When Dartigenave was elected, Bobo tried to start a Revolution. This incident marks a fundamental difference between our concept of government and that which obtains in Haiti.

Under these conditions, it is not hard to understand that revolutions would take place frequently, and how laws would amount to nothing. Quoting Prof. Kesley again, "Until Haiti gets a vision of Government by law and a respect for public opinion, there can be no hope of stopping revolutions which have cursed her career." The course is wrong. It builds up an army to protect a president rather than constitutional rights. It makes impossible a sound financial policy (Her debt is now $35,000,000). It makes impossible development of schools, roads, public health and other fundamentals. This with the condition that the poor have no money for taxes nor anything to be taxed, and the rich dodging their taxes, makes a fearful condition. The seriousness of the situation is more keenly appreciated when we learn that school teachers, for instance, are paid a very small pittance for their services, while by contrast the president draws $2000.00 a month plus certain other sums for expenses.

The country itself is altogether agricultural. Once in the prosperous times, there were at least 1,000,000 acres in cultivation, and now we are told that there is not more than a thousand altogether. Personally I am of the opinion that it will sum up more than that. Nevertheless, during the revolutions during the years 1915—1921 farming ceased almost altogether. The revolutionist pillaged everything until no one undertook anything. The most of the present gardening has sprung up within the past twelve months and is in the form of small gardens. The people are peaceable and amiable but indolent, cultivating just enough for their subsistence or what nature has provided for them, and live altogether in an environment designed by nature for just such people. But as I am to write about the agriculture of the country later, I will not say more here.

Port au Prince and Cape Haitian are the only cities that have any touch of modernism worth speaking of, such as, modern dwellings, modern business houses, electric lights, paved streets, ice plants etc., and Port au Prince is the only one that has paved streets and street cars. These cars are the gasoline type, the Dodge.

The most of the above improvements have come about under the influence and guidance and supervision of the American forces. And, as is noted, this applies thus far only in the towns and cities. The dwellings throughout the country are what is known as "Kiis," bamboo huts run up on poles with thatched roofs,—little places of two rooms on the ground,—both together not big enough for one, and in this possibly a family of from ten to fifteen. Many have no homes at all, and when one travels at night these may be seen in groups here and there sleeping on the ground. Most land seems to be anybodies and wherever one may "Squat" and hang up a horse skull or a pan of some kind there they live until they see fit to move on.

Schools are maintained in all cities and towns under the supervision of the Roman Catholic church and are regarded as state schools. But even this touches but the "fringe of the garment," so to speak, and is very meager compared with the whole need.

In Port au Prince and Cape Haitian, there are a few American and french taught physicians. But outside of these, there has been no medical attention at all, save for the proverbial "medicine man" who dons costumes, hangs a ring in his nose, paints his face (or does some other fool thing), and to the awe-stricken constituency, proclaims himself healer of all diseases. This may be an extravagant way of putting it, but the fact is that such do exist and is the only medical help available. It is said that there are over 300,000 sick ones beyond reach of any medical attention whatever. Superstition is supreme in this kingdom of healing.

The Sanitary Department under the supervision of the Americans has done wonders to stamp out Small Pox and other contagious diseases, clean up the cities, establish sanitary systems as far as possible for the health and comfort of all that they can reach. They have officers in every strategic center. The American Red Cross which began operations here a year or so ago in conjunction with this Department, is establishing free dispensaries in some interior towns with a native pharmacist.

Travellers, at seaport towns, can find accommodations about as well as they would expect in a country like this. Port au Prince and Cape Haitian has a few hotels with a few touches of modernism such as a shower bath, a bed with "honest to goodness" sheets and very good food. There are two American hotels in Port au Prince, the American House and the Mountain House. I live at the former and the service, though managed by an American, is Haitian and far from what it is in the United States. However, considering that it is in Haiti, it is fairly satisfactory.

And what are we doing in Haiti, did some one ask? And did some one say "nothing?" At a glance, it may seem so, and there may be many things at which we may be at fault, falling far short of what might be best, but, in the meantime, things like the above are being accomplished. Much has been said derogatory to the American Forces in Haiti. It is all propaganda by the set who would overthrow government for their own personal benefit. The fact is that Senators from the United States, by authority of the United States Government, have made thorough investigations into all complaints and have found no grounds for the charges and complaints which have been made.

There is no question that the United States has always desired the success of Haiti, and today, not only wishes, but is doing what is possible to win that success and complete her independence. Our government was forced to put an end to the reign of tyranny and anarchy, and establish soundly a government which the Haitians might choose to maintain against change by revolution. To do this it must direct finances and establish fundamentals. Haitian leaders are in accord with this for they had lost all power for an orderly government and all confidence in themselves to govern.

Now, as regards to life, the peasant is safe. Revenues are honestly collected, with a few exceptions, as it is said, where internal revenue is not under American control and the old system continues. Whatever may be said to the contrary, the Haitian does not believe that we are here to destroy his sovereignty and are looking to us to make good or quit, but we are trying to pull her out of the mud.

BEAUTIFUL! BEAUTIFUL! IS IT THIS WAY IN YOUR HOME?

We have been rarely more interested in a short article than in the following, which we find in an exchange. It is so good and so appropriate to the families of this day that, in the hope of helping as many as may read it, we are giving it a prominent place in our columns. You may say that is the ideal home, but not the real. If that is so, it is because the Christian people of this day do not set themselves to the task of gaining such experiences in their daily lives. It is ideal, that is true, but it may be practical and ought to be made practical in the lives of as many as love their Divine Savior. We cannot afford to say it is merely ideal—we may say that and speak the truth, but we need also to declare it is plainly practical and needs exemplification in the daily life of the people of God. Do not fail to give it a careful reading, no matter how you look at it, for even the reading of it ought to give us all a real hungering and thirsting after the ideal till we bring ourselves into this practical way of daily living in every Christian home. This beautiful word picture follows:

"LOVE NEVER FAILETH"

I know a home which is the abode of poverty, toil and constant pain. Yet one cannot remain there, even for one brief hour, without feeling that something fine and sweet and good abides in that place. There is an atmosphere of love kindness, courtesy, gentleness, contentment, such as one seldom finds on this earth. The poor furnishings are forgotten in the presence of this greater thing, which, indeed, is priceless.

There is an invalid mother in this home who knows that she will never leave her couch until her spirit is summoned to the better and higher life.

There is a father who toils long hours each day, and for a small wage.

There is a son just entering high school, who delivers papers both morning and evening, proudly placing his earnings into his mother's wasted hands.

There is a daughter who, aside from her household duties, is stenographer for a great business enterprise.

Each day is filled to the brim with tasks which must be done.

Still, there are bright smiles, clear-ringing laughter, pleasing jests, cheerful optimism and undimmed hope beneath this lowly roof.

A visitor lingering for a happy moment just yesterday, noted these precious deeds, all done with a natural grace which marked them as being natural:

The son entered his mother's room with twinkling eyes and one hand held behind him.

Said the mother: "What have you in that other hand, you blessed boy?" It was a bunch of violets, fresh from the woods, which he held gently to her pale, sunken cheeks.

The daughter came with a book from the public library, and, with a kiss, placed it in her mother's hands.

"I think you will like it, mother," she said.

The father sat by the bed and told a funny story he had heard that day, yet one could see that he was all worn with toil!

"What a wonderful home you have!" said the visitor. "What makes it so rich and full?"

"It is mother," said the son.

"It is love and mother," said the daughter.

"It is Christ and love and mother," said the father.

"It is the love of Christ, the mind of Christ, in all of us," said the little mother.—E. C. Baird in Christian Standard.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

At Noon Day July 29th and 30th Noon Day Church had the pleasure of entertaining the best Convention in her history. Not all the speakers being present we had to supply with others. Saturday morning after the devotional exercises, Rev. R. F. Brown made a service talk on Religious Education which was enjoyed very much. After him came Dr. J. O. Atkinson presenting the principles of the Christian Church of which we are proud. Then came Mr. L. W. Vaughn, Bursar of the Elon College, in interest of the College. Other talks were made by Rev's J. D. Dollar, J. H. Hughes, Jessie Dollar, C. M. Dollar, E. M. Carter.

Sunday School at 9:30 o'clock with 150 present in Sunday School and 68,000 verses of scripture reported being read the week before. After S. S. Mr. C. W. Carter made an address in the interest of the school which was enjoyed very much. Mr. Carter has a very warm welcome at Noon Day having been the pastor there several years ago. At eleven Dr. J. O. Atkinson delivered a great sermon on belief which was greatly appreciated by a large crowd and it made a great impression on all that heard it. We feel that the Church and Sunday School have been greatly benefited by having these great men of God with us and may He ever bless them all in their work.

DURHAM DOINGS.

On Wednesday evening, August 2, The Durham Christian Church awarded the contract for the rebuilding of its church edifice. The plans call for the complete rebuilding of the entire interior. The proposed changes of the interior arrangement will about double the present seating capacity for both church and Sunday School departments. In the Sunday School department there will be fourteen separate class rooms, and an assembly hall. The church auditorium will not be used for Sunday School purposes. Building operations will begin August 14, and we are hoping to have it all completed by October 1st. The total cost of all improvements will approximate $15,000.00, and will give the Durham Church a very commodious and serviceable church equipment.

The work in Durham has been handicapped by the lack of adequate building accommodations. The present financial depression made it too difficult an undertaking to attempt to build an entirely new building sufficient for the needs. The growth and activity of the Sunday School, and the increase of the congregations at the church services of worship made it necessary to provide larger accommodations. The membership of the Durham Church is loyal, forward-looking, and sacrificing in spirit. We are praying that the Lord will use us for larger service in the future.

STANLEY C. HARRELL.

THE PURPOSE OF PRAYER.

Our ordinary ideas of prayer are quite one-sided. We think of prayer as a means of approach by which we may obtain some desired benefit from God. From this it is but a step to the further error of supposing that the purpose of prayer is to influence the mind of God in our behalf. Whereas prayer is intended to fit us to receive the good from God which his unchangeable love is ever waiting to bestow. Thus we lose sight of the important fact that prayer is commanded for the sake of what the act of prayer will do for us rather than as a means of obtaining our desires.

It is not possible to produce a favorable change in the unchangeable goodness of God. And it is well for us that this is so. How evident, then, that if prayer is intended to effect any change it must be in ourselves! When we realize the blessedness of emptying the heart of bitterness that it may be filled with the sweetness of God and of having our jangling thoughts attuned to the mind of God, we will begin to know something of the true purpose of prayer.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

On account of the fact that the American Christian Convention meets October 17, 1922, it is thought best by the Executive Committee of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference to change the date of this Conference October 17, 1922, to October 3, 1922. This is done in order to avoid a conflict in dates. The Georgia and Alabama Conference will meet with the East Lagrange Christian Church, Lagrange, Ga., October 3, 1922, instead of October 17, 1922. All who are interested in this Conference and expect to attend its sessions will please make a note of this change of the time of meeting.

Nehemiah's Prayer.—Neh. Ch. I.

Golden Text: "The supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working." James 5:16.

Time—445 B. C. The Place—Shushan.

Nehemiah was interested in his race: "And I asked them concerning the Jews" is the natural query of the Jew in exile. He was interested in their personal welfare, and in the state of their great city, Jerusalem.

Nehemiah was concerned about his race, when he received a reply to his inquiry. When he heard of their affliction, and of the desolated condition of Jerusalem he "sat down and wept, and mourned certain days, and fasted and prayed before the God of heaven." His was not mere idle curiosity, a desire just to know what others were doing. Nehemiah was eager to know their real condition, and when he learned of their need, he recognized that it was a need that he in his own power was unable to satisfy, and he went before his God. To Him he acknowledged the sins of Jehovah's people, how they had failed to keep the commandments, as he prayed for God's help.

Nehemiah was unselfish. He could have settled down in comfort in his position as the king's cupbearer. In this position he had honor and prestige. He had a beautiful and luxurious home, but he was not happy because his people were not happy. Their need was his call. Today God is calling men and women to do his work by showing them the needs of people throughout the world. Perhaps He is showing you a great need. May that not be your call to service? Are you going to settle down in the comfort and luxury of your position, or Nehemiah-like go, in the strength of Jehovah, to endeavor to meet the need which has been impressed upon your heart. It was Dwight L. Moody who once heard a man say that the world had yet to see what God could do with a life wholly dedicated to His service. And Moody declared "By God's help, I'll be that man," and with that determination and devotion, he went forth, and the story of his life is the story of the good God can accomplish through a life dedicated to His service. Nehemiah was unselfishly interested and concerned in his people, and he felt his own personal responsibility in the matter, as he went up to the king.

"My hands were strong in fancied strength,
But not in power divine,
And bold to take up tasks at length—
They were not His, but mine.
The Master came and touched my hands,
And mighty were His own;
But mine since then have powerless been,
Save His were laid thereon,
'And it is only thus,' said He,
'That I can work my works through thee.'"

LESSONS FROM GOD'S OUT-OF-DOORS.

(Ps. 8:1-9.)

Read Psalm 148, in which the psalmist invokes the whole Creation to praise Jehovah. All of God's great out-of-doors is a continual evidence of His power and of His goodness to His children.

"Have we thought what the out-of-doors meant to Jesus? We think of his praying, his teaching, his temptation, his betrayal; but do we see immediately the garden and the desert, the lake, the sea side, the well, the public way, the city street, and the hill-top? Just because the life of Jesus is so closely connected in all our thinking with the beauty of the out-of-doors we understand better why this singer of the long ago calls all creation to praise the Lord, saying joyously with Wordsworth, that lover of nature, 'We live then, in a bright and breathing world'".—The Girls' Year Book.

"God bless the heart of sunshine

That smiles the clouds away,

And sets a star of fresh-born hope

In some one's sky each day.

God bless all words of kindness

That lifts the heart from gloom,

And in life's barren places

Plant flowers of love to bloom."—

A. H. G.

"Somewhere on the great world the sun is always shining, and just so sure as you live, it will sometime shine on you. The dear God has made it so."—Myrtle Reed.

"Only let God be within us, and everything outside us will become a godlike help."—W. Mountford.

CHAUTAUQUA NOTES.

At eight o'clock Monday night, August 28th, at Elon College, the 1922 Chautauqua and School of Methods begins. The men and women, who are to lead the week's work, will be introduced and there will be a program of short talks and music, followed by a social hour. This is "Get Acquainted Night", a time of good fellowship with which to begin a week of work and play, study and recreation, inspiration and uplift.

On Tuesday morning, August 29th, at 9 o'clock, the regular program will begin, with the morning worship period, followed by the Bible Study, taught by Dr. J. U. Newman, on "The Book of His Presence—Revelation." From ten to eleven there will be class periods for pastors, Sunday school superintendents and officers, workers with adults, young people and children, Christian Endeavors, and for the study of the Daily Vacation Bible School. It is possible that this last class may be at a later hour to accommodate those who wish to attend it and one of the other classes as well. Also for the visiting children and children of the community there will be a daily Vacation Bible School conducted during the regular morning's session, probably from ten to twelve o'clock. After the class study, there will be a division into three groups, pastors, Sunday School workers and Christian Endeavors for discussion of problems in the various fields, led by men who have studied and solved questions confronting many of our church workers. For pastors, the following phases will be discussed, Visiting and Oversight of the Flock, Study Hours and Reading matter, Church Evangelism, Co-operation in denominational, interdenominational and civic movements. Sunday School workers will discuss Building and Maintaining a Membership, Making the School a Spiritual Force, The Sunday School During the Week, Teaching Missions and Benevolence in the Sunday School, each conference hour led by a wide-awake Sunday school superintendent. Christian Endeavors will consider The Spiritual Aims of Christian Endeavor, Christian Endeavor Through the Week, A Growing Christian Endeavor Society, Christian Endeavor, A Life Recruiting Station. The leaders of all these Conference Hours will be published in next week's "Christian Sun". These hours are planned to bring real practical benefit and give plans and methods, which have proven successful, to be carried to other fields.

One of the most helpful and interesting hours of the day will be the Mission Study Hour, from twelve to one o'clock, courses and leaders for which are to be announced.

The afternoon will be devoted to rest and recreation. Coach Corboy will have charge of the program of athletics, and there will be events to attract everybody. Already there is much interest in the daily ball game to be played between the Y. C. C. team of Elon and the Chautauqua team, captained by Rev. O. D. Poythress. Clean sport and good comradeship will be the order of the day during the Chautauqua week.

The evenings, with the music hour, led by Miss Julia Braxton and Prof. Betts to begin with, are sure to prove attractive and enjoyable. Miss Braxton will be the head of the violin department and teach public school music at Elon next year, while Prof. Betts is the director of piano and organ at Elon, and well known to Elon visitors. Each night there will be a program in the college chapel following the music hour. Mr. Johnston has promised that a program will be rendered one night by the children of the Orphanage. By the way, if you have never visited our Orphanage, a pleasant hour may be spent there while you are at Elon.

The Program Committee has endeavored to plan a week that will both entertain and instruct, and help to further our work along all lines. If you have not enrolled, will you not let us know soon that you are coming? Rooms, with water and lights, will be furnished free in the college dormitories. All you will need to bring will be pillow, bed linen and towels for your own use, as the college does not own these articles. Board will be furnished at a reasonable rate in the college dining room. Board for the week, including registration fee, will be ten dollars.

We hope to have many of the churches of the Southern Christian Convention represented, and a cordial invitation is extended to any person interested in preparing for more efficient service in the work of the church. Churches will make a good investment to send their pastor. There is not a Sunday school which could not send at least one representative. Life work recruits will find in this program an opportunity to make themselves ready for the great work toward which they are looking. A pastor sent in word the other day to expect him and three of his boys, boys who are looking forward to the Christian ministry and service. There is no telling what such a week spent at our college may mean to our boys and girls. Will your church be represented?

Write to the Board of Religious Education, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia (Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Secretary) for a program or enrollment cards, or any information regarding the Chautauqua that you desire.

MORE SUCCESSFUL DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

The Holland-Holy Neck Daily Vacation Bible School closed Friday, August 4th, with all the children eager for a longer session next year. The attendance increased daily until it passed the fifty mark. An enjoyable feature of the daily program was the Music Period conducted by Mrs. James Lightbourne, when the children learned the words of a church hymn, and sang other more familiar songs. For the Bible story, the pupils were divided into four groups. The kindergarten class was taught by Mrs. I. H. Luke, and with her stories and pictures and sand table, this was an interesting hour for the little folks. Miss Mary Nell Holland, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, and Rev. W. M. Jay taught the other classes, and the interest of the children proved how well they did their work. Ten minutes of the recreation period was spent in calisthenics, while the remainder of the time was spent in group games. Miss Olia Wise Everett told a missionary story each day, and on Wednesday the children were delighted with a reading by Miss Lois Holland. On this day also the school was visited by Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, and their daughters, Miss Annie Graham and Miss Birdie, and Mrs. Eure from Franklin, and Dr. and Mrs. Rowland both spoke briefly. Altogether this was one of the most interesting Vacation Schools that the Field Secretary has been privileged to visit, and we feel that a great work was begun in this year's session at Holland.

Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor of the Pleasant Grove, Virginia, church writes of his Vacation School: "The interest held up fine all the way through with both the children and older people."

This School was conducted for two weeks, and in addition to the regular classes usually found in such a School, every day there was a class of adults meeting for Bible study with their pastor. Miss Mary Kent, of the Ingram church attended the School several days and aided greatly with the program. Already Rev. McCauley is laying plans for a session next year that will be even better than this year's.

HOLY NECK YOUNG PEOPLE MEET.

On Tuesday night, August 4th, the Field Secretary had the pleasure of attending an interesting and unique Sunday school class meeting. This was the joint monthly business and social meeting of the Baraca and Philathea Classes of the Holy Neck, Virginia, Sunday school. About fifty members of both classes assembled at a hall near the church, and the meeting opened with a devotional service, led by Mr. W. C. Morgan, of the Baraca Class, with Miss Maude Lee Howell as pianist. After singing several songs, reading the Bible lesson, and offering prayers, the classes separated for their business sessions. In the Philathea class, of which Miss Lillie Holland is the efficient teacher, and Miss Adelia Jones the president, reports were given, and plans laid for the future work of the class. The members of the class are reading the book "New Life for the young People's Bible Class" by Henrietta Heron, and putting into practice its helpful suggestions. It was voted to have a member of the class introduce the lesson each Sunday morning, giving the connection between the lesson of the day, and that of the preceding Sunday. This will be a busy class during August and following months if they carry out all of their plans, and we feel sure after seeing their enthusiasm that they will.

After the business sessions, the classes came together again for a social hour during which delicious refreshments were served by a Baraca-Philathea Committee. It was indeed a delightful evening for everybody, and a spiritual, mental and social stimulus to all to do a larger work for the Sunday school and church.

THE HOLLAND AND HOLY NECK D. V. B. S.

This union school was held in the Holland Church with Dr. Jay, the Holy Neck pastor, as principal, and the following as teachers: Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Mrs. I. A. Luke, Mrs. James Lightbourne, Miss Mary Nell Holland, Miss Olia Wise Enreth, Miss Lois Holland, and Rev. J. H. Lightbourne. The school began at nine o'clock Monday morning, July 31st, and closed at the noon hour Friday, August 4th, the session each day being from nine until twelve. The students voted unanimously for a school next year and as enthusiastically for it to go on another week. The following daily schedule was observed.

March Quiet Music
Hymn—Holy, Holy, Holy
Prayer
23rd Psalm in Concert
Collection for Mountain Work Habit Talks
Singing Period
Bible Period
Recreation
Surprise Period (handwork, bible games, tests, etc.)
Missionary Story Period
School Yells, etc.
Pledges to National and Church flags
Closing Devotions

The attendance exceeded our expectations, being as follows: 35, 45, 46, 51, and 49 exclusive of teachers and visitors. Twenty-nine were present at every session. The scholars were on the whole punctual and orderly and evidenced a splendid interest.

The writer is very much impressed with the D. V. B. S. and hope to participate in one each summer.

DID YOU VOTE IN THIS ELECTION?

The Literary Digest has been taking a vote on the Bonus Bill and on the question of Prohibition, and the facts as ascertained will be given to the public, but at most it can be of little value and for the reason that they will reach so few of the masses. As illustrating what we mean, read the following:

*"Literary Digest,
New York City.*

"DEAR SIRs:

"Seeing that you desire to get a poll of the country on the Prohibition question, on yesterday the Philathea Class of the Suffolk Christian Sunday School, of which I am teacher, voted 38 against wine and beer amendment (one present not voting). I am satisfied the fifty-two absent members would have voted the same way. It is interesting to note that only two members out of the thirty-nine received your poll card. I was authorized by the class to notify you of its action.

"Yours Truly,

"J. E. WEST, Teacher."

REVIVAL MEETING.

Raleigh, N. C., Aug. 7, 1922.

The revival meeting began at Ebenezer on the 30th of July and continued until August 16th. The services were all conducted by the pastor, Rev. D. A. Long. Words would fail me if I should attempt to describe the sermons delivered during the past week. They were simple enough for a child to understand, deep enough to give us older people a clearer understanding, a broader vision and a greater inspiration to rally around the great banner of love. The church has been very much revived and several gave their hearts to God. Three united with the church. Doctor Long is indeed a wonderful and powerful teacher and his praise is sung by all. The attendance was unusually large and on some occasions we could not seat them all.

May the Lord preserve his health and strength for many days.

M. J. CARLTON.

A HOLY LIFE

We first consider what sin is.

It is the transgression of the law of God. (1 John 3:4.) Sin is imputed in proportion to one's light. (Rom. 4:15; 5:13. Jas. 4:17. John A:41; 15:22.)

All accountable men are sinners before conversion. "For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." (Rom. 3:23.)

"But the scripture hath concluded all under sin that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be to them that believe." (Gal. 3:22.) Therefore, Jesus came to save from sin and not in sin. "And she shall bring forth a Son and thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." (Matt. 1:21.)

Christians are not sinners. If we say Christians are sinners, we discredit the efficacy of Christ's blood, the sufficiency of his grace and his teaching." The blood of Jesus Christ, his son, cleanseth us from all sin. (1 John 1:7.) "And he said unto me my grace is sufficient for thee." (2 Cor. 12:9.) And another reason is, that they have been freed from sin. "Being then made free from sin ye became the servants of righteousness. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." (Rom. 6:18, 22.) Whosoever is born of God, doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him, and cannot sin because he is born of God." We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not. (1 John 3:9:5, 18.) His Holy people are possessed with the spirit of Christ. Now if my man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his. (Rom. 8:9.) How we can see that a life of Holiness is a life separated from sin. And without Holiness we can never see God.

"Follow peace with all men and holiness without which no man shall see the Lord." (Heb. 12:14.)

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:—

A few weeks ago we wrote to each Sunday School superintendent whose Sunday School was not making a monthly contribution towards the support of the Orphanage and asked them to urge their school to set aside one offering each month toward the support of the Orphanage and also asked each one to write me if their school had any special reason for not giving. Out of more than sixty letters I wrote I received one answer with a complaint, and for fear others might have the same impression I am writing this letter. I know how easy it is for the wrong impression to get abroad without any foundation. This is what he said: "His school did not give anything toward the support of the Orphanage because they thought it took too much to run it for the number of children we cared for. If all the money that has come to the Orphanage had been spent in taking care of the number of children we have here the brother and his church folks would have a just cause for complaint and I would be in accord with him."

Now, let us see what has been done with the money that has come to us. Six years ago the Christian Orphanage carried an indebtedness of seven thousand dollars and we had forty-three children, we had no bank account and the income was much less than one hundred per week, and it seemed a hard task to get the income up to five thousand per year. What has the Orphanage accomplished during the last six years?

It has supported an average of sixty children and now has in its care eighty-eight.

It has paid off an indebtedness of seven thousand dollars.

It has bought land that cost us sixty-two hundred and fifty dollars.

It has built a new building for small children at a cost of fifteen thousand dollars.

It has spent for farm machinery fifteen hundred dollars.

It has repainted its old building at a cost of more than a thousand dollars including repairs.

It has increased its dairy from two milk cows, six years ago to twelve milk cows.

All these items mentioned are permanent improvements and are here as a part of our plant. The real value of the Christian Orphanage today is one hundred thousand dollars. It does not carry a dollar of indebtedness and has money enough in the bank to pay its monthly bills at the end of the month. All this has been accomplished in the last six years and the above items have not gone to cloth and feed the children but in permanent improvements for property we now have. Your superintendent tries to the utmost of his ability to make a dollar go as far as he can possibly do, and has not spent a dollar that is not necessary.

The six years of success of the Orphanage has been brought about by the splendid management on the part of the Board of Trustees and their timely suggestions. By the loyal support of the pastors in our denomination. By the loyal support of the churches, Sunday Schools, and friends of the little orphan children. God has blessed the work.

It is a pleasure for your superintendent to work when he knows he has such a loyal backing.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

A RURAL CHURCH PROBLEM.

By Rev. W. M. Jay, D.D., Holland, Va.

It is menacing to the country church when the old homesteads formerly occupied by the pillars of the church fall into the hands of families who will not affiliate with the church or if they do, prefer to retain their membership in some far distant church. Every rural church should make a diligent effort to absorb into its fellowship all the families moving into the church community without fear of being charged with that awful accusation of proselyting. It is not proselyting to seek after the fellowship and the membership of those moving into your midst even though they be members of another denomination and out of reach of their church. It is spiritually criminal not to do so. Many a rural church has been knifed to the heart by the influx of such families who will not affiliate with the local church or who hold their membership miles away.

Whenever one is so religiously intolerable that they can't transfer their membership, they should remain within reach of their own church. If I, being a member of the Christian Church, move into a rural community where the church that serves that community is of another "faith and order" and I will not unite with and support that church, when sought after, I am a dead weight and a liability, spiritually speaking, in that community. However good, as an individual Christian I may try to be, my Christianity is of a negative sort and more of a spiritual hindrance than help in that community.

True it is difficult to get into some churches, without being done all over again and fashioned according to their particular belief; but if I can't conform, have I any right to make my home in that community and be a non-conformist? I am speaking of the rural situation and not the city, or town church. If I am a Christian what good can I do there? Suppose many others should secure their homes in that same community and become like myself a non-conformist, so far as the local church is concerned, what would happen?

The church would be greatly weakened and perhaps have to close, as some have been compelled to do, without doubt, and for no other reason. No! absolutely no! I have no moral right to locate in that community under such conditions. Better, far better that that home should be occupied by non-Christians, for then the church could work for their concession and probably secure their membership also.

This is rather bold speech; but I am only saying what scores of others have thought and said but have not made bold to put into print. I take my church letter with me wherever I go and don't keep it in my trunk either. I don't want to be a dead weight on any church, by moving away from it, depriving it of my services and curtailing my financial help, for there will be numerous financial calls that will never reach me, and my spiritual help to that church will without doubt be reduced to a minimum; while at the same time the church where I next locate will not get this support because I can always offer the excuse, "I am a member some where else."

Herein lies a great weakness of the rural church. We should not value membership in a local church or a certain denomination higher than we value membership in the Kingdom.

The Kingdom of God is greater than any local church or denomination.

WHO WAS IT?

Once there was a maiden who wouldn't be polite;
 Wouldn't say "Good morning" and wouldn't say Good night;"
 Felt it too much trouble to think of saying "Please;"
 Slammed the door behind her as if she'd been a breeze;
 Wouldn't ask her mother if she could take a run;
 Ran away and lost herself because it was "such fun."
 Merry little maiden! Isn't it too bad
 That, with all her laughter, sometimes she was sad?
 But the reason for it isn't hard to find,
 For this little maiden didn't like to mind:
 Wouldn't do the things she knew she really ought to do;
 Who was she? Oh, never mind, I hope it wasn't you!

RESIGNATION NOT ACCEPTED

Rev. B. J. Howard, pastor of the Chapel Hill Christian Church, Chapel Hill, N. C., tendered his resignation as pastor at a business meeting of the church some few weeks ago. After due consideration on the part of the church it was unanimously decided not to accept Mr. Howard's resignation.

Mr. Howard has served this church as pastor for four years. The first time he served two years and resigned. Meanwhile Rev. R. F. Brown served a year, after which Mr. Howard was again called and has since served two years.

Mr. Howard has been a very successful minister and has promise of even greater success in the future. The church is to be congratulated upon again securing the service of Mr. Howard.

It was also decided at the business meeting to give Mr. Howard a month's vacation. Our best wishes to him for a happy and restful vacation.

GEORGE ROBERT MAYNARD.

Died at his home in Alamance county, N. C. near Union Ridge, August 1st, 1922, George Robert Maynard in his 84th year. He was united in marriage to Miss Alice Murray, April, 1880. He united with Union Ridge Christian Church early in life and about 1866, he was chosen a deacon of said church. As a member and deacon, he was true and faithful. He enlisted in the Confederate Army in 1861 and served through the entire war. He was made a Lieutenant in 1862. At the close of the war he came home to the old home-stead and devoted himself to the rebuilding of his home and his devastated country.

He sought no office nor honors. He preferred to lead a quiet life of service to God and man. He delighted to dwell by the side of the road and be a friend to man. Many individuals have felt the kindly deeds of his noble charity.

Truly a great man and a prince in Israel has fallen. Earth is richer for his having lived; but poorer because he has gone.

He was a devoted husband, a kind friend, and a good neighbor. He was a Christian gentleman.

His wife, one brother and two sisters survive him. The funeral services were conducted from Union Ridge Christian Church by the writer. Rev. Mr. Roberson of the Presbyterian Church was present and took part in the services.

His body was laid to rest in the Church cemetery where it awaits the resurrection call.

P. H. FLEMING.

THOMAS WILDEY APT.

Thomas Wildey Apt, son of Daniel and Mary Apt, was born February 15th 1867, and died July 10th 1922. Mr Apt was for twenty years a salesman and merchant in South Boston Va. Five years ago he suffered a stroke of paralysis from which he never recovered entirely. He never married. After his decline in health he made his home with his sister, Mrs. Alfred Hayes of Virgilina, Va., where everything was done for his comfort and pleasure. His sufferings for the last six months grew more intense. His mind dwelt more and more on the future life. He had many hours of anxiety over his spiritual condition but read and prayed for assurance till at last his soul was flooded with joy. He was a member of the church for fifteen years. When in health he was jovial and excellent company. He was generous in heart and purse and especially considerate of the poor. He leaves three sisters and a host of friends comforted in the belief that he rests with God. The funeral was conducted by the writer from the home and he was buried in Union Church cemetery. The attendance was large and the floral designs numerous and beautiful.—C. E. NEWMAN.

J. B. WILKINSON.

John B. Wilkinson, son of William F. and Verlinda P. Wilkinson was born at Kentuch, Pittsylvania County, Va., Aug. 12, 1868. died July 4, 1922. On Dec 4, 1894, he married Mrs. Amanda L. Clark, who survives him together with three children—Mrs. W. M. Yeaman, Arthur and Willie Wilkinson, and a step-daughter, Miss Belle Clark.

Brother Wilkinson after his marriage settled in Halifax county, Va., and united with Liberty Christian Church soon after its organization in 1911, and was one of the most active men in planning and building the house of worship. No man in his community was more faithful to visit the sick and help his neighbors. He attended his revival meeting on Sunday and on Monday was busy getting his affairs in condition to attend the other services.

Tuesday morning at one o'clock he was taken ill and at six past into the Spirit land. All day Tuesday friends visited the home to show their esteem for him and offer sympathy to his loved ones. On Wednesday, P. M. the funeral was held at his church by the writer and Rev. George D. Eastes, and his body placed to rest in the church cemetery.

Loved ones sorrow, but all are members of the church and find comfort in their trust in a loving Savior.

THY BURDEN.

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord and He shall sustain thee."—Psa. 55:22.

"Child of my love, lean hard,
And let me feel the pressure of thy care,
I know thy burden child, I shaped it;
Poised it in mine own hand: made no proportion

In its weight to thine unaided strength.
For even as I laid it on, I said,

I shall be near and while she leans on Me,
This burden shall be Mine, not hers;

So shall I keep My child within the circling arms

Of My own love'. Here lay it down, nor fear

To impose it upon a shoulder which upholds

The government of worlds. Yet closer come;

Thou art not near enough, I would embrace thy care

So I might feel My child reposing on My breast,

Thou lovest Me? I knew it. Doubt not then:

But, loving Me, lean hard."

And the singer's eyes were misty
As she sang of clouded skies,
Of the worm at the heart of the rosebud,
Of tears in a loved one's eyes.

And I sighed in acquiescence,
So oft had the tale proved true—
A hurricane blasting the meadows,
A bolt plunging out of the blue.

There were lives so close about me
Whose faith and hope were dead,
And others in nameless terror
Of the path they were called to tread,

But listen! the song is not ended,
There's a change in the singer's tone,
A note of triumph has sounded,
A Paean instead of a moan.

There's a climax of exquisite beauty
As she sings of stars in the night,
Of the rainbow over the cloud-tops,
Of love through the world alight.

And my soul leaps up with gladness,
And soars on the wings of the song;
My faith and my hopes are victorious,
My life shall be ever more strong.

THE FOOLS' FAMILY TREE

A Spaniard has written what he calls The Fools' Family Tree, in which occurs the following stingingly suggestive biography. Read it and understand that it means that all of these classes of characters comes off the tree, as it develops in its fruit-bearing:

"Lost Time" married "Ignorance;"

They had a son who was called, "I Though;"

"I Though" married a "Youth" and they had the following children:

"I didn't Know;" "I didn't Think;" "Who Would Have Expected;"

"Who Would have Expected" married

"Heedlessness," and has among other children

"To-Morrow Will Do;" "There's Plenty of Time;" "Next Opportunity;"

"There's Plenty of Time" married "I Didn't Think," and they had for a family; "I Forgot;" "I Know All About It;" "Nobody Can Deceive Me."

"I Know All About It" espoused "Vanity," and begat "Pleasure," who became the father of "Let Us Enjoy Ourselves" and "Bad Luck."

"Pleasure" married "Folly" for a second partner. Consuming their inheritance, they said one to another, Let Us Spend our Capital and Enjoy Ourselves this year, for God will provide for the next. But "Deception" took them to prison and "Poverty" to the work-house, where they died. Their grand child, "Despair" begged enough money for a rope and went and hanged himself.

THE END OF THE SONG.

"There hath never a song been written
But hath its minor strain,
There was never a life so buoyant
But had its hour of pain."

The singer stood in the chancel
And her vibrant voice dropped low,
And I listened with rapt attention,
While my soul responded, "E'en so."

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

A Good Work in Palestine.—

A Mrs. Vester, a missionary in Jerusalem, has accomplished a wonderful advance in the customs of the Mohammedans, as to marriage. She has been making a long and a hard fight, which many thought she could not win, but she has won and it is a glorious victory, too. Some time ago she made an appeal to the properly constituted authority to raise the age of marriage among the Mohammedans for their girls from fourteen to eighteen years. Only recently she received the glad news that her appeal had been successful, and henceforth girls must be eighteen years of age before they are permitted to marry. Mrs. Vester is now seeking to obtain the same protection for Jewish girls in Palestine. She is also leading in an effort to establish in Jerusalem a Welfare Bureau for the benefit of children. Mrs. Vester's father and mother are Americans, but they have been in Jerusalem for many years as missionaries. Mrs. Vester was born in Jerusalem. She is now in this country, the first time she has ever visited the native land of her father and mother. It is said to be the first time that any of the family have been out of Palestine in 18 years.

Ten Million Outsiders.—

It is said that the total church population (not church membership) at this time is said to be 95,584,107, the total population of this country being 110,000,000. This seems to give out of every 106 individuals as living in affiliation with some recognized church. That leaves over 10,000,000 wholly outside of the Church, and may be set down as heathen, not having any connection in any way with the Church. Statisticians claim that the Protestant Churches have in the United States 75,000,000 adherents. The Catholic Church (Roman) have 17,885,646; the Jews have 1,600,000; Eastern Orthodox, 411,054; Latter Day Saints, 587,918. The three largest bodies are the Methodist, 22,171,959; Baptist, 21,938,700; the Roman Catholic, 17,885,646. It really looks like that the country is with the Protestants by large numbers. The ten million of "home heathen" is an open field for the people who can and will go after them with the gospel. It is plainly the duty of the Christians to go with the gospel, seeking the lost and trying to win them to Christ. It will cost some money, but everything that is worth saving costs money, and so the Churches ought to lay the money on the altar that the missionaries may go and bring them in. If the above figures are reliable, and we assume that they are, then it may be said that the progress of the Churches in recent years have been unusual, but let us not forget that the church has a great task yet before it, first in its own members and then in the effort to win the "Home Heathen" to Christ. To get its own members vitalized and then to win the ten million outsiders—that is a big task, indeed!

A Remarkable Exception.—

In this day of strikes it is remarkable to find one company which has never had a serious strike. It seems as if it might be wise to send this company out to teach other firms how to avoid strikes. It is the firm of Kimberly-Clark Company, Fox River Valley. They are a thrifty people. They have never had a strike or a lockout, except a very brief one in 1904, when an effort was made to unionize the plant, and there had never been a cut in wages until April, 1921, when it became necessary to deflate war-time wages. The company had encouraged its employees to make their own homes under their own ownership. They operate a mutual benefit association. They also have a bank for the benefit of their employees, in which the Company added fifty per cent on deposits up to $150.00. These people are mostly Hollanders, at least 90 per cent. are 75 per cent. of these people are married and more than fifty per cent. own their own homes. This factory has a Council for the sake of regulating their affairs, such as both the company and their employees may be mutually interested in. To this Council are referred all questions of policy, relating to working conditions, health, housing, safety, hours of labor, wages, recreation, education and similar matters. In this Council the employees have a representation of nine members and the Company has a like number. In case of a disagreement the president of the Company meets the employee representatives, and if they cannot adjust the matter in dispute, the two select an impartial arbitrator or arbitrators, and both the Company and the employees abide by the decision which may be thus rendered, and so they get along without strikes or lockouts. They do not discharge a man as long as there is a chance for him to become acceptable—they seek then to put a man who is not rendering acceptable service in some other department in the hope of finding the place in which he will fit and become an acceptable employee.

The Russian Orthodox Church.—

It begins to look as if the Russian Orthodox Church is to be destroyed, or badly crippled. The Bolshevik Government seems to be at the helm directing the process of crippling. They have the head of the Russian Orthodox Church in prison awaiting a trial. This is Patriarch Tikhon. Archbishops and bishops are deprived of their offices and immured in convents. Five priests have been condemned to death and have been executed at Moscow. The clergy are being arrested in large numbers. The American Relief Administration and Dr. Nansen's Commission have applied for pardon of these condemned men, but in vain. A number of British church people have also applied for the pardon of these condemned men, but failed. It is said that the Bolsheviks know neither justice nor mercy. They even sneer at the appeals made. These condemned men are charged with the crime of conspiracy against the Soviet state. It is charged that the group of the Patriarch has been working hand in hand with the czars, bureaucracy and the nobility. It is believed that the Bolsheviks have determined to destroy the Orthodox Church in Russia and then attempted the bolshevization of what is left of the Church. The Bolsheviks it is claimed have always regarded the Church as the chief hindering cause of the defeat of communism in Russia. Will the Bolsheviks succeed? They claim they will, and to make such a result possible, they imprison, banish, or execute every prominent churchman who may be elected to the Council. It is said that Peter the Great made exactly the same experiment in his day. He persecuted, flogged and beheaded members of the minor part. Now it is said if the Church is not left to itself entirely, and a further ordeal follows, the people will rise up against their oppressors. The Russian people are sick of the present situation, and yet they still find enough courage and purpose to defend their last refuge, and that is faith.

Monster Hail Stones.—

The following was clipped from the Los Angeles Examiner: "A terrific hail storm, during which hail stones three inches in diameter fell this morning caused approximately $10,000 damage in Madison (S. Dakota) and vicinity. The Madison State Normal School suffered the greatest loss, 204 windows and the $5,000 skylight being broken. Several stained glass windows in churches were also smashed."

Last year we published a similar report of another hail storm in the east, in which hail the size of a baseball fell. We afterward heard of a man who was offended because we published such ridiculous lies. But larger hail than this has already fallen to the earth. We quote from "Travels in Tartary." Hail is of frequent occurrence, in these unhappy districts and the dimensions of the hail are generally enormous. We have seen some that weighed twelve pounds. In 1843 during a storm, there was heard in the air a sound as of a rushing wind, and there fell in a field near a house a mass of ice larger than an ordinary millstone. It was broken to pieces with hatchets, yet though the sun burned fiercely, three days elapsed before it melted." The book of Revelation tells of a great hail storm which is coming in the future when every hail stone will weigh a talent, which is figured to be about 135 pounds. (Rev. 16:21.)

NOTES - PERSONALS

The church at Chapel Hill, N. C., refuses to accept the resignation of its pastor, the Rev. B. J. Howard.

Rev. R. L. Williamson assisted last week Rev. J. W. Patton in a meeting at Shallow Ford in a series of meetings. Let us have the news, brethren.

Hot weather is no excuse for decline in spiritual life. We have the same God in hot weather we have in cold. Lean hard upon Him for succor in the hot days of August.

The Reidsville, N. C., Christian church has given its present pastor a call to serve another year. The call was unanimous, but it is not yet known whether the call will be accepted or not.

Dr. D. A. Long has been preaching twice a day at Ebenezer and Six Forks since last fifth Sunday, till August 9th. There were converts at both of these churches. They expect baptismal services for both churches the third Sunday in August.

Rev. W. L. Wells, pastor of the Washington Street Christian church, Portsmouth, Va., assisted Rev. J. L. Foster in a series of meetings at Spring Hill, Sussex county, Va., last week. We hope to have report of a good work accomplished in that meeting.

Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va., reports a fine work in the Vacation Bible School, held jointly by the Holland church and the Holy Neck church. It seems to have sprung into popularity at once, as the call has already been made for another session for next year?

In this issue will be found an address by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C., on Four Fundamental Sunday School Objectives. We fully believe that every Sunday school officer and every Sunday school teacher, yea, and every church member, and every father and mother, ought to give this address a good reading—it is most timely and it is invaluable.

We have received from Rev. T. E. White a copy of The Sanford Christian Church News, gotten out in the interest of the Sanford Christian Church. It is a good piece of work, viewed from almost any point of view. Its motto is: "Fellowship and Service." It is not published for money-making, but for doing good. Of course, it takes money to run the paper, and if you like, you may subscribe and send him fifty cents for a year's subscription.

Rev. R. L. Williamson, Henderson, N. C., is finishing his fourth year at Henderson Christian church, and with the close of the present conference year, will retire from that field. We presume Brother Williamson will be open to a call to some other field. He is a fine young man, just entering the prime of life. His father was a strong friend of the Christian church, and so is the son. He has spent several years as pastor of the Raleigh, N. C., Christian church, and then four years at Henderson.

There is one task it is hard to induce the church to undertake, and that is to put the church paper in every home in the church. We wonder why it is that it is so hard to induce such an effort? Is it because the Church paper is not what it ought to be? That may be, but it still seems that a church might afford to try to make the church paper better by taking it and reading—it ought to help them, if not the paper.

A certain brother, in writing of what has taken place for the last four or five years says that many have talked much of certain things. Ah, yes, that is what a good many of us are doing—we talk and talk, but do not much else. Talk is very cheap. It does not cost us much to talk and it does not pay those to whom the talk is made very well. A little less talk and a great deal more real work and thinking would pay us all better no doubt.

"The school was a great success; sixty were enrolled in the school, twenty-nine of whom were present every day. Four classes were conducted for the children, and taught by the two pastors of Holland and Holy Neck churches and two ladies, Miss Mary Nelle Holland and Mrs. I. A. Luke. Miss Lois Holland and Miss Olo-wise Everett rendered valuable help in the story telling period which greatly interested the children. It is time spent the value of which cannot be computed."—Rev. W. M. Jay, D. D., Holland, Va.

The church at Newport News has the distinction of having a Junior Christian Endeavor Society which is the largest in Newport News, and also the largest reported in the Eastern Virginia Conference. There are forty-eight active members enrolled in this Society. The Senior Society is now meeting jointly with the society of the Second Presbyterian Church, and fine programs are being rendered. The Sunday School of this church, under Superintendent C. D. West, is also doing excellent work. Rev. B. J. Earp is the pastor of this church, and is intensely interested in the work his young people are doing.

Rev. M. W. Butler says he intends to meet his brethren in Virginia on the occasion of the assembling of the Eastern Virginia Conference at Johnson's Grove, October 31st. The Johnson's Grove church is Brother Butler's old home church. He came into the church there in his boyhood days under the labors of the present editor of The Christian Sun. That was our first pastorate, and we should be glad indeed to meet there again after almost an elapse of fifty years. Come, brother, and we shall go back to see who has gone home since we were there before. Many faces will be missing, no doubt, and yet we may find now and then one who was there fifty years ago.

Referring to the Henderson, N. C. Christian church building, a correspondent says:

"In July 1921, the congregation began the erection of Sunday school rooms, which were completed by the fall of that year. Five comfortable rooms have thus been added, with an auditorium, having a seating capacity of about one hundred. These rooms will be separated from the main auditorium by curtain or folding doors. These will be used soon. It should be stated that to Brother W. A. Newman is due much credit for the completion of this work. During the entire time of building he superintended the work. And this he did without any monetary consideration, or compensation. The church appreciates very much his services in this capacity. We now have ample equipment for our present needs, giving us seven separate class rooms, and with the possibility of forming several others by the use of curtains.—Corre- spondent. Rev. R. L. Williamson retires from this field at the end of the present conference year and is open to engagement as pastor.

Wake Forest College has gotten itself in a muddle. It admitted Greek Letter fraternities to its student body. It made a fuss among the North Carolina Baptist, and they sent in protests against this innovation. The trustees met again recently and took the matter up a second time, but decided to let these fraternities stay, notwithstanding the Baptist of the state had entered many vigorous protests against their admission. The trustees are masters of the college and can do as they please. What do they care for the wishes of the Baptist of the state? But they will care when the great body of the Baptist people of North Carolina gets fully aroused. That seems like the method of certain organizations—they do as they please, no matter what the people they represent may say. These same people (trustees) tried to bolster up themselves by saying that every standard grade college in the state has these fraternities. But that is not true. Elon College is of standard grade, and it has not these fraternities, and we hope it never will have them. Look here, Wake Forest, it is bad enough to fool your own people into an endorsement of these fraternities, but when you come to misrepresent a sister college, near by, in order to make them (the Baptists of the State) believe that you are doing right in admitting these fraternities by saying every college in the State of standard grade has them, when that is not true—for Elon is of standard grade, but does not have these fraternities. If you cannot make the Baptists of the State accept what you have done by telling them the truth, why you had better not tell them anything.

ELON NEWS.

Elon College—At a call meeting of the local church such pressure was brought to bear upon Dr. N. G. Newman, who presented his resignation as pastor of the church to the congregation in June, as to cause him to reconsider and remain with the local church.

When Dr. Newman presented his resignation in June the church unanimously voted its desire that he reconsider, though at that time Dr. Newman felt that the church would have no difficulty in securing a suitable man to succeed him in the pastorate here.

Since the June meeting the sentiment has been growing in the community that Dr. Newman ought to reconsider his resignation and remain with them. This sentiment came to have such momentum at the called meeting that Dr. Newman was induced to reconsider and accept the call. There is thorough satisfaction with this decision. The members of the church have resolved to do more for the progress and development of the Kingdom here next year than they have ever done before so that Dr. Newman returns to the pastorate with the congregation united and thoroughly committed to progressive measures.

At the same meeting it was also decided to recommend to the church building committee that a parsonage be immediately undertaken on the church lot adjoining the site of the proposed church. The building committee consists of Dr. S. W. Caddell, Mr. H. D. Lambeth, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. W. A. Harper, and Dr. W. P. Lawrence. It is understood that the committee will move at once in this direction. Following the completion of the proposed parsonage the building committee will adjust itself to plans for the erection of a modern church building for the congregation here.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The seventy-fourth session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference was held at Joppa Christian Church, August 17-19, 1922. This church is located, from Edinburg, Va., about seven miles, in Powell's Fort Valley, a picturesque section of Shenandoah County. To reach this place it is necessary to cross over a mountain, one of the "Massanutten" range.

The Conference was called to order by the President, Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., of Richmond, Va., by whom religious services were conducted. The enrollment of delegates was made by Rev. A. W. Andes, secretary of the Conference. On motion, Rev. S. L. Baugher, of the U. B. Church; P. J. Kernodle, managing editor of the "Christian Sun"; and Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of First Christian Church, of Winchester, were invited to seats as deliberative members. Rev. A. W. Andes, pastor of Joppa Christian Church, extended a hearty welcome in behalf of the members of the church and friends in the community; Rev. J. F. Morgan responds on behalf of the Conference. Reports of the Executive and Program committees were received.

A number of delegates engaged in the discussion of Conference problems and their solution. One need specially brought out was the need of pastors and ministerial supply for the churches. After some miscellaneous items of business the Conference adjourned for dinner.

The afternoon session was opened with religious worship conducted by Rev. William M. Clem. After the further enrollment of Conference delegates, the annual address was delivered by Rev. R. P. Crumpler. The report of the committee on Religious Literature was called for. P. J. Kernodle, managing editor of the "Christian Sun," made a brief address on "Spiritual Illiteracy," and also spoke in behalf of our Sunday school supplies and other religious publications, especially the "Herald of Gospel Liberty," and the "Christian Sun."

After the transaction of certain miscellaneous items the Conference adjourned.

The night service was conducted by Rev. J. F. Morgan, who preached a most excellent sermon.

Friday morning, August 18th, the Conference met, and religious worship was conducted by Rev. R. P. Crumpler. After the roll-call and enrollment of new delegates, Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, N. C.; Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, and Rev. D. B. Seal of the Baptist Church, were invited to seats as deliberative members. The report on Moral Reform was read by Rev. W. C. Hook, after which discussion was adopted. Other Christian workers in the audience from Elon College, N. C., and from Berea Christian Church, North County, were recognized and introduced to the Conference.

Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent, spoke on the History and Development of the Orphanage and the work it is doing. A contribution followed.

"Our Greatest Missionary Movement," in the absence of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, was discussed by Dr. W. A. Harper. He spoke of the origin of the Men and Millions Movement and what it had already accomplished for the church. His address was highly instructive.

A motion was adopted to make the Conference year to begin August 1st, and end July 31st, in order that ample time might be had in which to make out the necessary reports to the Conference. It was also decided to have the Conference meet on Tuesday and close on Thursday before the third Sunday in August. The Conference adjourned for dinner.

The afternoon session was opened by religious worship led by Rev. W. C. Hook. The report of the committee on Foreign Missions was read by Rev. R. P. Crumpler, who led in the discussion. It was also discussed by Revs. J. F. Morgan and W. T. Walters, D. D., and adopted.

The report on Education was read by the Chairman, Dr. Walters, who introduced Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College. Dr. Harper presented the subject of Education in a clear and forceful manner.

The time for the Conference Missionary society having arrived, the chair was assumed by the President of the Association, Rev. W. C. Hook, and the Secretary, Mrs. A. W. Andes announced the officers who reported—the report of Mrs. Larrick was especially note-worthy; the Conference decided to incorporate the minutes of the Association in the Conference minutes. The President of the Association vacated the chair, and the Conference resumed business.

Church and ministerial reports were read. These indicated progress. Announcement was made that the night session would be given over to the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board. Adjourned.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Board of which Mrs. Boyd Richards is chairman, conducted the services and two excellent addresses were delivered by Revs. J. F. Morgan and W. C. Hook. The program was interspersed with music.

Saturday morning—after religious worship, the report of the committee on Sunday schools was presented. Then followed an address, "Young People and Life," by Rev. J. F. Morgan, which was highly entertaining as well as instructive. Dr. W. T. Walters presented the Chautauqua which meets at Elon College, August 28th-September 4th. (The program is an excellent one; it appears in this issue of the "Sun.") The Conference Treasurer read his report, which was referred to an auditing committee.

In accordance with the report on Education, William M. Clem was licensed to preach the Gospel of Christ, and the hand of fellowship was extended him by the ministers present. Rev. William M. Clem dismissed the Conference.

The afternoon worship was conducted by Rev. S. L. Baugher of the U. P. Church. The report on Christian Endeavor was read by Rev. J. F. Morgan. The reports of the committees on Home Missions and Apportionments were also presented. Other miscellaneous business was transacted. Thus closed a harmonious and successful session. Adjourned to meet with Timberridge Church. Benediction by Rev. R. P. Crumpler.

Night services were announced to be conducted by Rev. Wm. M. Clem. All day Sunday services.

The entertainment of the Conference was cordial and hospitable. All were made to feel at home.

CAN YOU TRULY SAY, I AM A CHRISTIAN?

If you are not certain as to your answer to this question for yourself, personally, then we urge you to read the following from the celebrated John Wesley, and after you have read it, then return to the question and make an honest effort to answer it in the fear of God. And if you cannot answer it, then know that you need to go to some lonely place and have a talk with God, till you know truly whether you are a Christian or not. Do not hesitate as to taking such a step, for if you are not a Christian, it means everything to you to settle that question in the light of God. You may say: "Well, I think I am a Christian, but I do not know it."

Answer one more question: If you were in desperate need for a five dollar bill and had one, but did not know that you had it, what would it be worth to you, when you did not know that you had it? You could not use it and it could do nothing for you, inasmuch as you did not know you had it. I seriously doubt, however that you could in any way get any help from the thing which you did not know you had. What do you think as to this five dollar bill which you very much needed, but did not know you had it?—do you think you could get any good out of it while you did not know you had it? If you could get no good out of a five dollar bill you did not know you had, what do you think you could get out of a religion you did not know you had?

Now as to what a Christian is, John Wesley, the founder of the great body believers, known as Methodists, says:

"Who, then, is a Christian, according to the light which God hath vouchsafed to his people?"

He that being justified by faith, hath peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and at the same time is "born again," "born from above," "born of the Spirit"; inwardly changed from the image of the devil to the image of God, wherein he was created;

He that finds the love of God shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost which is given unto him, and whom this love sweetly constrains to love God supremely, his neighbor (every man) as himself;

He that has learned of his Lord to be meek and lowly in heart, and in every state to be content; he in whom is that whole mind, all those tempers, which are also in Christ Jesus;

He that abstains from all appearance of evil in his actions, and offends not with his tongue;

He that walks in all the commandments of God, and in all His ordinances, blameless;

He that in all his intercourse with, does to others as he would have them do to him;

And in his whole life and conversation, whether he eats or drinks, or whatever he doeth, all to the glory of God"

Is not such a man a Christian?

And are you that sort of a man or woman?

FROM ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

The meeting at Christiana was a complete success, with five additions to the church and others converted who we hope to receive next meeting.

The revival began Sunday, July 30th, and closed Thursday, August 3rd.

Rev. C. W. Carter arrived on Monday A. M., and did the rest of the preaching, we know the power of God was with him. The church and community are greatly revived.

Brother Carter served this church as pastor for ten years and has been away two years although they have not forgotten him for they all love him and he is worthy of all respect and appreciation.

The Sunday school is doing the best work in its history with our worthy Brother A. L. Jennings as superintendent.

He surely is the right man in the right place. The writer, their pastor, appreciates this good work, if possible, more than any one.

This church is a border church and is a good long way from any sister church, however, they are doing a good work and they appreciate their humble pastor.

G. H. VEAZEY.

The Western Christian Advocate says that "Envy is a robber who tickles you under the chin while he pilfers your pockets." Well, now have we any witnesses who will testify to the proposition The Advocate submits? Who will be the first to declare the truth of what he says?

A STRIKING AND TOUCHING PICTURE.

In one of our exchanges a few days ago, we saw a very striking and touching picture—it was a picture of an aged minister of the gospel, nearing the end of his earthly career. We easily could see the history of his situation at a glance. He was an old man, who had worn himself out in preaching the gospel and in doing his best to build up the kingdom of Christ. He was sitting on a stool, trying to mend an old pair of pantloons. His hair was white and his beard long and gray. Evidently his good wife, of the days of his usefulness, was gone to her reward. His children were away looking after their own affairs, and the dear old servant of God was trying to patch his clothes that he might wear them a little longer, may be he could make them last till the time when he should be called home. His money was gone, he could no longer work for a living. The people to whom he had once preached so acceptably, no longer wished to hear him because he was getting old and feeble. They had gotten the best of his strength in a real and living service, and now they forget that the dear old man, who had, under the blessings of God, led them and their children and neighbors into the way of life, who had married their young people and who had buried their dead, was in need, that his clothing was scant and that his food was poor and scarce, and that his home was a single room in which he was passing his last days on earth, and without friends to do for him. He seemed to be waiting for the call of the Master to come up higher. No doubt the dear old man would have been glad to have heard the call of his Lord to come up higher to his everlasting home. He had given his best to the people of his day, and now there were none to care for him and he was not able to care for himself. Poor old man, his reward is up yonder, and he is patiently waiting for the coming of the day of his home going. It may be that as he sits there trying to mend his clothes that he is asking himself what sort of a welcome will the church members, for whom he did his best in the days of his strength, get when they reach the judgment bar of God. They had a plenty but he was in poverty. It may be that they think what he has is good enough for the old man, and it may be that it is, but what will be their portion when they pass into the everlasting city of God through the gates of gold? Will they pass through these gates of gold? Ah, that is a question more than I can answer, but it is more than likely, that when they see the city of gold, they will look out upon its blessedness and it may be that the first one upon whom their eyes shall look will be this dear old man, but he will not be mending his old clothes then. He will likely be singing the praises of God, but what will his people be doing? Will they get a chance to join him in his song of praise, or will they wish they could?

We have seen the poor old horse which has been turned out to get his living the best he can, while the man who had used him for his own personal benefit through the years, when he was strong and willing, but now he must nip a little grass wherever he can, but already the cold winds of winter are on the way from the North to make him shiver when he must stay out through the long and cold nights—what ought to be done for the poor old animal? Or rather should we not some helpful degree, but not nearly so much as ask what ought to be done for the man who had so used the old horse in the days of his strength, and then when he got old and unable to work hard, turned him out to live or die as might be his lot? Poor old horse, we are sorry for him, but even more sorry for the man who had treated him so shamefully. The old preacher and the old horse belong in the same class from the standpoint of the world—the world is after grasping all it can get. If it can get it through the labors of a good, a strong and an able horse, all right, but when that horse is old and unable to do, he must go out homeless and foodless. And so it is with some of the dear old ministers of the gospel. They had ability to make money, but they gave it to the one purpose of leading men and women out of sin and into the ways of righteousness, and so he had not laid up anything for old age.

Sometime ago we read a little story which may illustrate one phase of this subject. It is related that the father of our former President Wilson, who was a Presbyterian minister and at the time was living in Augusta, Ga. One summer day as he was driving through the city behind his gray mare, when a man sitting in front of a store, looked up and saw that it was Parson Wilson, who was wearing an old alpaca coat, almost worn out, when this man in front of the store called out and said:

"Your horse looks better groomed than yourself."

"Yes," said Mr. Wilson. "I take care of my horse. My congregation takes care of me," and the old parson drove on, no doubt thinking of the fact that even the man in the street had taken notice of his shabby clothes, and he must have felt bad, but how did his congregation feel? It seems to us that people ought to take care of even an old horse that has faithfully done his part in his life time to make a living for the owner. And if so, how much more the preacher?

One of the incidents of my childhood and young manhood that has always been a source of satisfaction, was the history of an old horse. It was old Caleb. When I was a child Caleb was a young colt. We grew up together, but later I left home, but old Caleb stayed, and by and by, he got old and unable to work. What should be done with him? Why every voice in that old home cried out: "What shall be done with him? Why keep him and feed and water him just as long as he can eat and drink. And they did. One day I went home to see mother, and when Brother Mills met me, after a few words of greeting, he said: Brother Pressley, old Caleb is gone," and there seemed to be a choke in his throat. I asked several questions about him and learned he had been gone only a few days, that before the end came, he was helpless and down in his stable. Brother said every morning, even when old Caleb could not hold up his head when he was approaching the stable, the old horse would whinney as a greeting to the coming of the one who had for so many long years waited on him and cared for him, and this he did up to the day of his death, or nearly so, and there were eyes moistened at the news of the death of old Caleb, for he had been a faithful animal and had served well the whole family. Alas, and shall the Church of Christ be less kind and less considerate of the old wornout preachers than was our family of an old worn out horse? God forbid!

A GOOD EXAMPLE—LET US PROFIT BY IT.

Without the printed page no organization can hope to do very much in the way of bringing the world to Christ. The Christians, represented in these columns, have used the printed page in we should have done, not nearly so much as we could have done, and that brings us face to face with a serious failure in the discharge of duty—and that is a sin, just as much as if we had committed some hated sin.

In the good example referred to in the heading of this article, we refer to the work of the late D. L. Moody. In 1894 he established what he called The Bible Institute Colportage Association, an institution for publishing religious books and tracts, both to sell and to give away. To give away books, where they were needed, has been one of the chief features of the organization. In the twenty-eight years of its existence and work it has sent forth religious literature as follows:

2,733 Colportage books given city firemen.

2,705 Colportage books and Emphasized Gospel of John distributed to railroad men.

42,150 copies of the Four Gospels with Dictionary and Index, Colportage books and Emphasized Gospel of John donated to destitute mission Sunday Schools, state farms, widows and orphans, foundlings' homes, homes for the friendless, cotton factories, missionaries, etc.

62,569 Colportage books forwarded free to missionaries in Spanish-speaking countries for distributed on their field.

15,049 Colportage books and Four Gospels distributed in hospitals.

8,609 Colportage books and Emphasized Gospel of John forwarded for distribution among merchant seamen.

1,045,182 Colportage books, Bibles, Testaments, "portions," tracts, etc, distributed free to prisoners of the United States and Canada.

62,073 Colportage books sent to India for free distribution and for sale at cost.

10,970 Colportage books sent to Africa for distribution by Rev. Andrew Murray's missionaries and others.

483,245 Colportage books and other books and tracts distributed to soldiers and sailors of this country during the Spanish-American War and the recent so-called World War.

694 copies "Good News for Russia" given to friends interested in evangelization of Russia.

120,202 Colportage books, tracts, etc, given to lumbermen in the northern woods.

40,974 Colportage books, Pocket Treasures and other Scripture portions were distributed among settlers, homesteaders and others in the sparsely settled regions of the West, on the Pioneer Book Fund.

3,189 Four Gospels, Colportage books and Gospels of John given to miners in various Middle-West states.

6,086 Colportage books, tracts, etc., placed in city lodging houses and hotels.

90,698 Colportage books, periodicals and Scripture portions sent to neglected mountain districts of the South, for the young especially.

7,654 Colportage books and Four Gospels forwarded for distribution in the mining camps and fishing stations of Alaska.

15,249 Colportage books sent to the Military Camps and hospitals of England.

7,492 Colportage books and Scripture portions sent to men in the United States Coast Guard service.

206,625 Gospel and other tracts distributed gratuitously by colporters and Christian workers.

10,028 tracts against "Millennial Dawn" given away.

1,029 Reports of Prophetic Bible Conference (held Feb. 24-27, 1914) sent to missionaries. (These do not include a large number of copies sent out by the Moody Bible Institute.)

51 books to needy ministers, in the South especially.

The grand total of publications used in the above donations is 2,245,256 copies.

The foregoing statistics do not include purchases by friends for distribution themselves in these channels, but represent the missionary work of the Colportage Association only.

TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS RESUME.
(1894-1921)

7,745,447 Colportage Library books published, representing 2,207,300 pounds weight of printed pages in 6 languages and 112 titles. 2,614,552 copies of D. L. Moody's own works published in the Colportage (paper-covered) Library series alone. 50 states and territories and about 60 foreign countries have made up the field in which the Colportage Association has operated.

5,725,259 Bibles, Testaments, Gospels and other Scripture portions published. Included in the above amount are the following: 173,035 Marked New Testaments. 54,600 Four Gospels. 150,000 Emphasized Gospel of Matthew. 170,000 Emphasized Gospel of Mark. 150,000 Emphasized Gospel of Luke. 4,369,552 Emphasized Gospel of John. 50,000 Selected Psalms and Proverbs. 646,572 Pocket Treasury. 13,442,880 tracts published. 995,084 Hymn Books published. In addition to all publications mentioned above. The Bible Institute Colporate Association has issued an aggregate of 536,879 copies of miscellaneous books.

That is a wonderful record of actual work done and given away. Besides this portion that was given away, large numbers of books and tracts were published and sold.

This is no advertisement—we are seeking simply to show our people what has been done under a little real effort under the blessings of God. If Mr. Moody's work in this line, begun only about six years before his death, has accomplished so much, as it seems to have done, then why could not we as a people have gotten together and spread much literature for the promotion of the cause of Christ? It is not yet too late for us to undertake and accomplish great things in this line of work, if only we may get our commission from above, and then dedicate our energies to this good and great work. There is undoubtedly plenty of room for our efforts in this direction. Why may we not do it? There is no reason, so far as we know, except our inactivity in this line. There is a demand for it—the needs of the people are calling for such work. We are not answering the demand and the responsibility is ours.

As a body of believers we might have sown literature all over our territory, to the enrichment of the people and to their better and much larger development, if we had only tried right. What a blank in our history as a people! How much could we have accomplished, if we had only tried. How many thousands of people to-day have no hope in Christ and are in their sins only because we have not gone to them with the printed message of the gospel. Indeed, beloved brethren, it seems to us that it is time we were up and doing—the field is white unto the harvest, and yet we are not ready to send the reapers into the fields. Shall we go on in this way, or will we simply put our heads and hearts together and undertake something for God and humanity? The opportunity is great, but it is passing.

Who would like to see the Christian Church undertaking such work? If there are others who feel the same way let them speak out and say what they will do for such an undertaking.

WARFARE, NOT WELFARE.

One of the dangers threatening the life and prosperity of our nation at this time is the senseless fight between Capital and Labor, and they are both in it—the one is about as guilty as the other, guilty of real selfishness; and what we need is for both sides to get right and behave themselves as Christian men and women ought to do. One of the most sensible articles we have read on this warfare between classes is from the pen of the Rev. Chas. M. Sheldon, D.D., and appeared in The Christian Herald of Aug. 12, 1922. It was written in answer to a note from a labor man. It follows:

(Extract from one out of hundreds of letters received by the editor commenting on his experience with union labor which refused to work on his house with non-union labor.)

Mr. Editor. You surely are an enemy of organized labor. What did you want to hire a scab for? Why not do as Jesus did? He always sided with the poor against the rich. Why not practice some of the things you preach? Labor has to defend itself by organizing and any man who refuses to join in with organized labor is a traitor to human welfare. Get out of your little study and learn something about the rights of mankind.

The editor does not believe in making his editorial page an occasion for personal discussion, but the principle that is defended at present in the industrial world by both capital and labor is so contrary to the teachings of Jesus that it is not out of place to make clear the principle that He stood for, which was so different from that announced by the extract in the above letter that it ought to be stated in plain terms without malice or personal antagonism.

As a matter of fact Jesus never took sides with one class of people against another class. He rebuked the rich for their greed and cruelty, but he also rebuked the man who wanted his brother to divide the inheritance with him. If Jesus were here today, He would rebuke both Capital and Labor for the injustice and wrong and selfishness which characterize them both. It was principles that Jesus defended when He rebuked or commended men for their actions. The last thing in the world that we can imagine in Jesus is defending a class as a class. It made no difference which group of humanity broke a law of God, whether rich or poor, the disobedience was a thing separate and apart from any condition that surrounded the group.

I do not believe that Jesus would call a man who did not wish to belong to a labor organization a "scab." If his reason for not joining such an organization was honest and sincere, and if he believed in advancing the welfare of labor by other ways and means than those used by organized Labor, I can not conceive of Jesus hating him or treating him like an enemy to the cause of labor. Under any circumstances, I can not imagine Jesus trying to terrify him or intimidating him or using physical force to keep him from work.

The principle that President Harding has announced in his recent proclamation to the railroad men out on a strike is the principle that Jesus would uphold namely, that any man has a right to work, whether he belongs to a particular organization or not. But Jesus would go farther. He would also declare the principle of the brotherhood which works for the common welfare and not for the common warfare.

For it is about time that organized Capital and organized Labor began to understand that the American people are beginning to get very tired of the selfishness and greed and injustice of both Capital and Labor. There is not a hair's difference between them. The writer of the letter quoted in a later paragraph seems to labor under the misapprehension that the editor is attacking Labor and defending Capital, in telling of his experience with union labor. As a matter of fact the editor might easily write another account, telling of the exorbitant prices charged for building material, supplied by Capital for his house repairs, and exhibiting fully as much unconcern for human welfare as organized labor showed.

In other words, Capital and Labor, when are you both going to quit fighting and begin to act like friends? The common people, of whom the editor is just one plain citizen, are mighty weary of your senseless strikes and profiteering and injustice and idiocy, blocking the track of commerce, impeding the passageway of human progress and causing enormous and useless waste and loss of life and property and morals. You are both of you alike enemies of mankind. It is the height of human stupidity to accept your methods of dealing with economic problems. You are both traitors to human welfare as you turn the tide of your petty human selves with your narrow minded passions against the common sense of life. If any group of men in the whole world need to repent before Almighty God it is the organized group called Capital and Labor. In any case, do you realize, Mr. Correspondent, you who ask the editor to learn something about the rights of mankind, that the general public has lost its sympathy with the organization to which you belong, and at the same time, it is not in sympathy with the opposing group, because both of you for years have been working not for the welfare, but for the warfare of mankind. There are no rights of mankind unless mankind itself is right, and you are both wrong in your methods and in your childish and wicked warfare. If Jesus were here He would rebuke you both, and say, "Depart from me! I never knew you!"

OLD BLACK JOE'S PRAYER.

Many people may offer up a prayer that is more elegant in language, and more refined in thought, but where will you find a prayer that is more expressive of the real needs of the people than is the one we give below? Dr. J. M. Anderson, a practicing physician of Sardis, Miss., sends to The Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., the following as a prayer offered by old Black Joe for the saving of the white people of his family. Perhaps it would be nearer the truth to say offered in behalf of the white people of the family which owned old Black Joe in the days before the war. We republish it below and wish every member of The Sun family may give it a careful and thoughtful reading. It is as follows:

Mars' Jesus, Ah comes befo' you dis nite to ax you to tech de hearts ob mah young marster an' mistis; make dem see de error ob d'air ways; make dem turn f'om de worship ob de golden calf an' go back to de old-time 'ligeon dat was used by Paul an' Silus; make dem cut out de 'white mule' and de lip stick, de 'shimmey' an' de 'rabbit hug,' an' wash dey souls in de bleed o' de 'am'. Mars' Jesus, mah race is mos' run, an' Ah's ready for de Jerusalem, thank God; but it makes mah po' ole heart bleed to see de sinfulness ob de young folk ob dis day an' time. Mars' Jesus, tech dey hearts wid de burnin' arror ob lub an' holines'; wake dem up fum de deadly sleep of a hardened conshus; make dem see de wickedness ob de ottermobile an' de scrimshus baving suits. An', O Mars' Jesus, tel' ole marster an' ole mistis dat ole Joe am doin' de bes' he can to make young marster an' mistis set a good zample to dey chilluns, but de debil wid his card tables an' jazz is wa'kin' nite an' day, mos'ly nite. Ah needs yo' he'p in dis fite fo' de souls ob mah young folk. Ah's a-comin', Mars' Jesus, an' hopes to bring dem wid me. Amen.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

By previous engagement I went to Fancy Gap, Va., via Mt. Airy, N. C., on Saturday, August 5th. Mrs. Iola Meredith, the efficient leader of the Mission work for the Christian Church in Carroll County, Va., was sick abed; but she had given notice of preaching at the new building that night. A heavy rain and hail storm fell one hour after my arrival, and it rained that night; but a good congregation came out and seemed to enjoy the word. Brothers Sorrell and Crutchfield held a meeting with fine results, and I found that the people were well pleased with both men and their work.

Sunday, August 6th, was bright and pleasant with large congregation at 2 p. m. I preached and at the close of the services organized a Christian Church with the following members: J. Russell Meredith, Mrs. Iola H. Meredith, Rose Meredith, Mary Lee Meredith, Mrs. Virginia Westmoreland, Ad Ayers, Mary Guynn, and Victoria Edwards, Mrs. Iola Meredith was elected Secretary, and Rose Meredith Treasurer. The election of deacons was deferred. At the close of this service we repaired to a temporary pond and baptized five candidates by immersion. The people are deeply interested in the work, but they are slow to identify themselves with the church in actual membership; but the church will grow in membership as the people come to see its meaning and value in the community.

On Tuesday, August the 8th, Mrs. Iola and I went some six miles down the mountain to Sandy Ridge school house in a valley where we met a group of fifty people. Revs. Sorrell and Crutchfield had held a good meeting at this place. I preached and organized a church at this place with the following members: and one man converted: Joe B. King, Walter Edwards, E. C. Cayle, F. M. King, Mrs. Pearl King, Mrs. F. M. King, Mrs. Eliza Jones, Mrs. E. C. Cayle, Walter Edwards was chosen secretary and Mrs. E. C. Cayle was elected Treasurer. As in the Fancy Gap church the election of Deacons was deferred to a future time.

In addition to the members, twenty persons favored the organization and pledged their support. These are the names: Wm. Easter, F. H. Hawks, T. W. King, Mrs. Walter Edwards, Mrs. Taylor King, Leila Jones, Lettie Jones, Realty Jones, Pata Jones, Massie Cones, Mrs. Wm. Easter, A. M. Payne, Mrs. A. M. Payne, Lettie Hawks, Bessie King, Marjorie Easter, Harmon Jones, Fountain Jones, Jesse King, and Mrs. Emma Cayle. Sandy Ridge is a ridge between two mountains and the community contains some four hundred people who have not had religious and educational opportunity. With wise religious help it ought to become a good and prosperous community some day. We made our trip to this place in a Ford truck and returned late in the evening.

My home during my stay was with Jesse Meredith and family where I spent five nights and enjoyed their mountain hospitality. Mr. Meredith is the father of Miss Iola's husband, a big-hearted prosperous Blue Ridge Virginian. On Wednesday I walked and visited five mountain families and took dinner with Thomas Guynn, an old Confederate soldier, who is quite ninety years of age with the spirit of the sixties. He remembers Suffolk as a war time experience. His son, Joe and family, live with Mr. Guynn and his companion. I visited two sisters that day one 93 and the other 98, and their brother is 90. I preached again at Fancy Gap on Wednesday night.

On Monday the 7th Miss Iola had to go to Hillsville to consult a doctor. I went with her to visit the Court House made famous by the tragedy when the Allens shot the Judge, Commonwealth Attorney, Clerk, two jurymen, and a young woman. The bullet marks are still in the walls and furniture of the Court House.

I was to preach again at the new building on Thursday night, at Rocky Ford on Friday night, and at Sandy Ridge on Sunday and baptize candidates: and I had gone over to dine with Miss Iola and her husband on Thursday; but before dinner a telegram called me to Suffolk for the funeral on Friday of Miss Monemia Eley who had been bed-ridden at the home of her sister Mrs. Eudora Kilby for five years. Miss Eley was one of the church's choicest members, of the splendid Virginia family. The services at the home of her sister were sweet with rare flowers, good music, and a sympathetic audience, Rev. Dr. I. W. Johnson assisted in the service. The memory of her life is as fragrant as the flowers which loving friends had sent to express more than words for the comfort of the family.

I came back from Suffolk on Saturday the 12th to Moore's Springs where I found some 300 guests at dinner on Sunday and, by request, preached in the Hotel on Sunday night.

Mrs. Maria Rogers Truitt, wife of Mr. George W. Truitt, died at the home of her only son, Will Truitt, in Bronxville, N. Y., on July 31st. She had been in feeble health for some time and was on a visit to her son when the unexpected end came.

Mrs. Truitt was the daughter of the late Philip Rogers, and is survived by her husband, son, and one brother, E. R. Rogers, and a host of friends.

She was a faithful member of the Suffolk Christian Church, the Woman's Missionary Society, the Ladies Benevolent and Social Union, the Philathea Class, taught by Lieutenant Governor J. E. West, and the Ministering Circle of the King's Daughters. Perhaps a hundred women from these organizations attended the funeral services in the Christian Church at 3 o'clock on August 2nd. The Pastor was assisted in the services by Rev. J. W. Johnson, D. D., Rev. H. H. Butler, her former pastor at Cypress Chapel, and Rev. G. T. Lumpkin, pastor of the Baptist Church. The choir sang hymns 643 and 463; Marmaduke Woodward sang a solo; Mrs. Clarence Harrell, Mrs. I. W. Johnson, W. W. Ballard, and R. J. Brinkley sang "Come to Our Hearts and Abide." The church was filled with a great congregation of friends. There was never such piles of flowers on the pulpit platform and around it; and nothing could more fittingly represent her life in its simplicity, beauty, and sweetness. Wealth made no change in her personal relations with kindred and friends. Her religious life shed an influence that was as fragrant as the flowers that covered her casket.

Living in a palatial home, she could enjoy herself and make others enjoy themselves in a cottage with friends. Wealth had not changed her faith, her manner, her relations, or her conduct. A model Christian devoted to her church, she lived and loved, suffered and served, and then passed on to her reward. Few women have written a record of truer faith, sincerer affection, more devoted relations, and brighter hope than did this model christian woman. "She hath done what she could" may be written of Mrs. Truitt in all the way of her life.

The loss of such a member to a pastor is like the loss of a child to a mother; and yet, the hope is like the hope of a mother in the loss of a little child; for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." Home robbed of such a wife and mother can find comfort only in the sympathy of friends and the hope of reunion in the "house with many mansions," mother and one dear child in heaven: father and one dear son on earth. God bless them.

ELON LETTER

Again Editor Crowson, of the Burlington News, has wreathed this scribe in a circle of smiles. Brother Crowson is the friend of Elon College, and everybody knows it. He appreciates Elon as an Alamance County institution. As such he is anxious to see it grow and prosper. He has the same kindly interest in every business enterprise of a worth while commercial value in Alamance County. As a far-visioned community builder this attitude is good business. As a community venture Brother Crowson considers Elon College a good business proposition and as such he supports it.

But Mr. Crowson believes in Elon College for another and a far deeper reason. He recognizes Elon as a Christian institution and believes in the type of character it succeeds in forming in the youth who study here and whom Mr. Crowson knows from his proximity to the College and his association with faculty and student body in a personal way.

Our good friend writes out of a full heart and bases his judgments on a wide experience. Our Church has struggled for thirty-two years with the institution here. The fine words of praise and appreciation spoken by our good M. E. Editor without suggestion from any one, but just because he wanted to witness before the world his convictions respecting Elon will stouten the hearts of our people and encourage them all the more loyally and liberally to rally to our College. For this reason I am quoting in full Brother Crowson's fine editorial, to which he gives the very suggestive title of

"Our Friend, Elon College"

"The time has come when boys and girls will be making plans for entering College next fall. This is an important event in their lives and one that will influence their entire life.

"We have always believed in the Christian College, as offering the best fundamental training for our boys and girls. There are so many things that enter into the training of the mind for life's work that are given at a Christian College that are not found in the secular colleges, that make stronger men and women.

"As we have often said, Elon College is a home college, it is a county institution, it is inexpensive and should especially appeal to those of our people who are going to send their sons and daughters to college. The expenses for the ensuing year have been greatly reduced, and persons living in the county can save in many ways and can have the pleasure of having their sons and daughters near so that they can get home often without such great cost.

"We are always glad to make an appeal for Elon College and we believe that every citizen of our town and county ought to feel it a duty to work for this college so that we may build up within our county one of the greatest colleges in the state.

"Elon has never asked any favors at our hands. She never asks for loads of money, but she does plead for your children. She believes that she can be of service and of benefit to you and we believe this and we should always take a delight in keeping this great institution before our people. It is our college. It is your college."

FAMILY ALTAR

BY REV. J. GREGORY MANTLE, D. D., In The Alliance Weekly.

Sunday.

"In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths" (Prov. 3:6).

Never trust your own judgment. When your common sense is most sure of the rightness of a certain course of action, it will be best to make assurance doubly sure by lifting up your soul to God, that it may dim with His "No," or glisten with His "Yes." When voices within or without would hasten you to decide on the strength of your own conclusion, then be careful to refer the whole matter from the lower court of your own judgment to the supreme tribunal of God's. If there is any doubt or hesitation left after such reference, be sure that as yet the time has not come for you to understand all God's will. Under such circumstances—wait. Throw the responsibility of the pause and all it may involve on God: and dare still to wait. . . . If you trust God absolutely, it is for Him to give you clear directions as to what you should do. And when the time for action arrives, He will have given you such unmistakable indications of His will that you will not be able to mistake them or err therein.—Dr. F. B. MEYER.

"Order Thou our way
All our earthly stay;
Should our path be rough and thorny,
Give us grace meet for the journey;
Then when life is over,
Open wide Thy door."

Monday.

"Know ye not...how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be counterfeit?" (II Cor. 13:5 R.V.).

Whatever ground we have lost in the past, we must repent; then God will come to us again and fill us with Himself, and enable us to show men that life can be lived in the ordinary surroundings by the power of the Spirit Whom He has given for that purpose. If there is any unbelief in your heart, how can you expect mighty work to be done through you? Will you come into God's presence and tell Him what is wrong, that the cleansing power may sweep it away, and that you may be brought into full communion with Him without a cloud between? Then the power of God will come upon you and go through you, and will be a channel Godward and manward, and floods of blessing will go through you to refresh the thirsty souls around. When you trust God, He will come perhaps suddenly into His temple, and he will do more for you when He comes than you have been struggling to do for fifty years or longer—He comes to purge the temple—then you will know the meaning of the indwelling of Christ as a Spirit of power and holiness. Then there will be a growth in holiness as never before. There are plenty of things in human life that may not be sins, and yet are weights; every sin, of course, is a weight, but there are some weights that are not sins, yet they hinder our growth in grace. We do not grow into grace, we must come into it by faith, and then grow in it. If we are not being used for the good of others, our holiness is a counterfeit.

"Purge me from every sinful blot;
My idols all be cast aside;
Cleanse me from every sinful thought,
From all the filth of self and pride."

"Give me a new, a perfect heart,
From doubt and fear, and sorrow free;
The mind that was in Christ impart,
And let my spirit cleave to Thee."

Tuesday

"Give us this day our daily bread" (Matt. 6:11).

This seems a very small thing to ask—only bread for a day. Why are we not taught to pray for bread enough to last a week, or a month, or a year? For one thing Jesus wanted to teach us a lesson of continual dependence. He taught us to come each morning with a request simply for the day's food, that we might never feel we can get along without our Father. Another lesson he wanted to teach us was that the true way to live is by the day. We are not to be anxious even about the supply of tomorrow's needs. When to-morrow comes it will be right for us to take up its cares. The same great lesson was taught in the way the manna was given—just a day's portion at a time.

"Make a little fence of trust
Around to-day;
Fill the space with loving work,
And therein stay.
Look not through the sheltering bars
Upon to-morrow;
God will help thee bear what comes
Of joy or sorrow."

Dr. J. R. Miller.

Wednesday.

"Drink deeply of God's Spirit" (Eph. 5:18 WEX.).

Turning to our Greek Testament, we note that the command, "Be filled with the Spirit," is in the present tense, denoting not a mechanical fullness once for all, but a vital fullness, a constant appropriation, and a perpetual reception, a ceaseless drinking and a ceaseless thirst. Hence the paradox of Charles Wesley,—

The thirst is for more of the same kind, not for anything different, like the thirst of a perfectly healthy babe. "But the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well (artesian) of water, springing up into everlasting life." The need of an increase of this water is not excluded. There is danger of a diminishing appropriation till the soul has ceased to drink. Says Bengel: "Truly, the water, as far as it depends on itself, has in it an everlasting virtue; and when thirst returns, the defect is on the part of the man, not of the water."

"We may insensibly, and without raising the suspicion of our Christian friends, lose the life of the Spirit, and preserve at the same time deceitful appearances. For when the Holy Spirit withdraws from the soul, He sometimes allows the forms which He has created to remain. The oil is exhausted, but the lamp is there; prayer is answered, and the Bible read; the going to church is not given up, and, to a certain degree, the service is enjoyed; in a word, religious habits are preserved, and, like the corpses found at Pompeii, which were in a perfect state of preservation, and in the very position in which death had surprised them, but which were reduced to ashes by contact with the air, so the blast of trial, or temptation, or that of the final judgment, will also destroy those spiritual corpses."—Dr. DANIEL STEELE.

"Ye also helping together by prayer for us" (II Cor. 1:11).

A station in the China Inland Mission was peculiarly blessed of God. Inquirers were more numerous and more easily turned from dumb idols to serve the living God than at other stations. The difference was a theme of conversation and wonder. In England Dr. J. Hudson Taylor was warmly greeted at a certain place by a stranger who showed great interest in his mission work. He was so particular and intelligent in his questions concerning one missionary and the locality in which he labored, seemed so well acquainted with his helpers, inquires, and the difficulties of that particular station, that Dr. Taylor's curiosity was aroused to find out the reason of this intimate knowledge. He now learned that his stranger and the successful missionary had command together as co-workers. The missionary kept his home board informed on all the phases of his labor. He gave him the names of inquirers, stations, hopeful characters and difficulties, and all these the home worker was want to spread out before God in prevailing prayer.—Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

There are ministers unlettered,
Not of earth's great and wise,
Yet mighty and unfettered
Their eagle-prayers arise.
Free of the heavenly storehouse!
For they hold the master-key
That opens all the fullness
Of God's great treasury.
They bring the needs of others
And all things are their own,
For their one grand claim is Jesus' name
Before their Father's throne.

Friday.

"What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter" (John 13:7).

Like many other words of Christ, this saying of His has a much wider application than its primary reference to Peter's perplexity. It furnishes the key to very many of the providences of all our lives. We do not see how they can have any blessing in them for us. They seem altogether dark. But we have no right to judge of our Master's work in us or with us until it is finished.

This mystery is to be explained. This perplexity is to be resolved into the clearness of noonday. You do not understand now because you cannot see the end, cannot perceive the blessing and the beauty. The Master Himself knows just what He is going to bring out of each strange work of His, and therefore He is not perplexed. Then, He says that we also shall know hereafter. We shall see the cloud as it departs, glorified by the rainbow arching its dark folds. We shall see the tangles resolving into lovely grace and beauty.

Saturday.

"Lo I am with you all the days" (Matt. 28:20).

"Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the age," is the comforting promise of the Lord Jesus. There is One, even Jesus, with whom we may come into such direct and personal contact that His mind and Spirit will dwell in us, so that to live will be Christ. With Him, in the high and blessed sense, we are not alone. He sustains us by His hand. He knows our frame and remembers that we are dust. He knows what we have need of before we ask Him. He knows the secret thought and desire of our hearts, and ever judges righteously. Though all may be against us here, and we stand friendless and alone, we may, through Christ, have joy that is unspeakable and full of glory. If Christ be for us, then the whole world may be against us. If He dwells in us, then we indeed have all things and abound. Then to live is Christ, for He is the way, the truth, and the life. Then we have for a faithful friend One who is infinitely wise and holy, and One who can enter fully into our joys, with which a stranger cannot intermeddle. And should not every soul so highly favored and blessed be able to say: "I am not alone, for Christ is my Saviour, Brother, and Friend?"

STANDING THE TEST.

A good sister in one of our churches writes: "Are we going to stand the test, or will we fail? I ask you to pray for me and my Church." God is testing us now, and we need to pray earnestly for the church. In the days of prosperity we gave pledges with which to carry on the work of the kingdom. Now in adversity we are called upon to meet those pledges. Those who stand the test will have increase of faith and greater courage in Christian service. For God tested and tried the faith and endurance of His only Son. And He will not spare us; for He wants to strengthen our faith through trial.

FOUR FUNDAMENTAL SUNDAY SCHOOL OBJECTIVES.

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL,

Pastor Christian Church, Durham, N. C.

The art of teaching does not aim simply to impart information. Its supreme aim is to mould character. The imparting of information is but a means to an end. Education is the development of latent abilities, and the implanting of elevating ideals. Especially is this true of religious education. Knowledge of the Bible and its great truths is invaluable. But the teacher, who has no higher purpose than the imparting of knowledge about the Bible and its contents, has missed the fundamental purpose of Sunday school teaching.

I am afraid that there are many Sunday schools without a very clearly defined purpose for their existence. Why should your church have a Sunday school? Because other churches have them; and they seem to be good things for churches to have? That is not the best or highest reason for having a Sunday school. And what shall we teach in our Sunday school? Why the Bible of course, you will say. And why shall we teach the Bible? Because the Bible teaches us about God and religion. And what shall we teach from the Bible? The lesson that is laid down in the Quarterly that is placed in our hands. It is true that much good has been accomplished by Sunday schools that have had no more clearly defined purpose or policy than this. But since we are putting so much time and effort into our Sunday schools, why not outline a definite purpose and policy? Decide exactly what we wish to do; and then bend all our efforts, and shape all our plans toward these definite goals. It is our purpose in this talk to outline four fundamental things that we believe our Sunday schools should endeavor to accomplish by their teaching.

We are going to take the most important one first. It should be the purpose of every Sunday school, and of every Sunday school teacher, to lead those entrusted to their teaching to accept Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. It is the business of the Sunday school teacher to make Christians of those whom they are teaching. If they fail in this they have failed absolutely and completely. This fact is so evident that it should not be necessary to say it here. But there are so many teachers who have neither recognized nor accepted this as the purpose of their teaching, that it should be said over and over until every Sunday school teacher has come to realize that it is the one, all important thing that is to be done. It should be made the standard and test of all Sunday school teaching, until every teacher who is not leading the pupils to Christ as their Saviour, will be made to feel that the work they are doing is worse than a failure. That they are cumbering the ground, and that it is their duty to change their ways and mend their plans, so that they will do the work they are supposed to do, or resign and get out of the way, and let someone else take the task in hand. It is not my purpose to discourage anyone who is honestly trying. But I do hope that it may be impressed upon every Sunday school teacher and superintendent that the task of teaching the young is the most important one that was ever committed to the hand of man. That it is fraught with the greatest opportunities in the world, and that it also carries with it the most tremendous responsibilities.

There can be no other standard by which the teachers work can be judged. But is it always recognized? Is it not true that there are many superintendents and teachers who feel that if a teacher can catch and hold the interest and attention of a pupil for half an hour, and if the teacher can win the attention and confidence of the pupil, that the teacher is doing all that could be reasonably expected. These things the teacher must do if the main purpose is to be accomplished. But they are only means to an end. A movie will hold a child's attention for three hours on a stretch, but that does not mean it is making him a Christian. A jovial scape-grace story teller may win a child's affection, but that does not necessarily mean that high ideals are being planted in the child's soul. The business of the Sunday school is to teach folks to be Christians. Everything that even indirectly contributes to that end has a legitimate place in the work of the Sunday school. But unless it accomplishes that high purpose it is worse than useless.

We must recognize, however, that there are a million things that have their part and contribute their influence in the making of a Christian. We may defeat our purpose by over emphasizing the end we are striving for. We are engaged in a very delicate task, that stretches over years of time, and requires the most painstaking care and persistence. A good teacher may teach hundreds of lessons before the pupil is brought face to face with the question of deciding and declaring definitely for Christ, but every one of these lessons should have been paving the way and leading up to that one momentous decision. If, however, the question had been presented and urged in every lesson the pupil would have been wearied or repelled, and all the force of the appeal lost by countless repetitions. We are engaged in a task that requires infinite tact, wisdom, and patience. Our steps must be sure.

So much for the one great purpose of the Sunday school: that of leading folks to give their hearts and lives to the Kingdom of the Lord Christ. Has the task of the Sunday school been accomplished when the pupil has accepted Christ? In too many cases it is so regarded. When the truth of the matter is the task has been but well begun, it is just as sensible to believe that a man has been made a good soldier when the recruiting officer has persuaded him to sign an enlistment blank, as it is to believe the work of the Sunday school has been accomplished when a pupil has accepted Christ.

It is the mission of the Sunday school to teach the great ideal service. Service here and now for the benefit of humanity, and the establishing of the Kingdom of our Christ. We have magnified Jesus the Saviour, and forgotten Jesus the Servant. How many Sunday school pupils have an exalted idea of Christ, the Working Man? How many of them when they think of following Jesus have an idea of working to the limit of physical endurance? The Sunday school idea of following Jesus is "just being good." They have never been taught that the way of the Man of Galilee was the way of unceasing toil. The idea of the church as a work-shop; and the kingdom as a tremendous industry is foreign to the thinking of the average Christian. Join the church! What for? To be good, and to go to heaven when you die. There you have the idea that most of our Sunday school children are getting. "My father worketh hitherto, and I work," ought to be one of the great texts of the Sunday school. Unless we plant the idea of Christ the Worker in the minds of the Sunday school pupils I am afraid they are never going to get it. And speaking now from an acquaintance with some of the best churches that we have, I know that there are a large number of our church members who do not have the idea that work is one of the fundamental things of the kingdom. Our very talk about church members betrays the lack of the work idea, as one of our basic conceptions of church life. When we find one individual who is a real worker in the church, it becomes the talk of the town, even if we live in a pretty town. Nobody remarks about a farmer or a blacksmith who works. They are expected to work. We only remark about them if they are conspicuously lazy. But a working Christian is so rare that it must needs to be remarked upon. We preachers have to recognize the absence of the work idea. If there is work that has to be done we go around and very meekly ask somebody to do it, and if he hesitates we say, "Now that will be all right, I will see if I can't find somebody else to do it." If it is a hard task we must needs apologize profusely for it. Who ever heard of a farmer apologizing for giving the hired man a hard job. That is what he was hired for. And we cannot blame the church members. They came into the church with the idea that nothing much was expected of them, but to be good, and to come to church once in a while and listen, and maybe make a contribution if the cause was urgent. Nobody works when they go visiting. They do not go with that idea in mind. Jesus calls men for service in his kingdom, and service means just plain old ordinary work. Why not then have Sunday schools that teach folk that they are expected to work, that it is their duty to work, that their joy in the kingdom will come as the reward of their work. Jesus taught it. "But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant."

It will not be sufficient for our Sunday schools, however, to teach that those who come into Christ's kingdom are expected to work. A man may realize that he is expected to work, and that he ought to work, and still not know what to do or how to do it. The business of the Sunday school is to introduce the pupil to the one great task of the kingdom. What is that task? There can be but one answer to that question. It is the Missionary Task. It is the one supreme task that faces the follower of Jesus. It is the business of the soldier to fight. It is the business of the farmer to raise crops. It is the business of the merchant to sell goods. It is the business of the Christian to lead to Christ. That is his one great task. That is the missionary task that confronts the church. To acquaint the world with the Gospel of Christ, and to lead men to accept him as their personal Saviour, What a glorious task!

It is the only plan that Jesus had for the spread of His Gospel: that those who know him should tell others, and acquaint them with his saving power. And what supreme confidence Jesus had in us that we would not fail him. Humbly, gloriously, he went to the cross bearing the sins of the world, and risking it all on the belief that you and I would not fail to carry the story of his great love to all the world. Can we afford to betray such love as that? It is not only the task of the entire church, but it is the task of every member of the church. If our churches are ever to become missionary, our Sunday schools will have to be missionary for a generation, before the church will be thoroughly leavened with the missionary spirit.

Our conception of Missions also must be enlarged. The greatest missionary field in all the world is these United States of ours. Not half of our population is Christian. Sixty million folks who are our neighbors constitute our home mission field. They are nominally acquainted with the teachings of Jesus. They speak the same language. They live according to the same customs. They are taught the same things in the same schools. They are the ripest mission field in all the world. The pupils of our Sunday schools must be acquainted with the home mission task, as well as the Foreign mission task.

Our Sunday schools must become technical schools. Schools that teach missions. Schools that teach the spirit of missions. Schools that teach the why of missions. Schools that teach the how of missions. Schools that train and equip the youth of our day to win for Christ, not only the Chinaman who lives on the other side of the earth; but schools that will train the youth of our day to win for Jesus also the American who lives on the other side of the earth; but schools that will train the youth of our day to win for Jesus also the American who works at the next counter, or who lives in the next house, or the next block. The scope of this address will not permit us to consider how all this is to be done. But we must recognize the fact that the teaching of missions must be made one of the fundamental objectives of our Sunday schools or we are lost, and the world is lost.

There remains one other subject that it seems to me we must consider while we are thinking of these things. That is the teaching of Stewardship and Tithing. I am becoming more convinced every day that the weakest link in our church life is our attitude toward the financing of the kingdom. We are never going to be able to swing the mission task until we have solved the problem of financing the mission program. And we are never going to be able to solve the problem of financing the mission program by begging. The world is sick and tired of a begging church. Everybody in the church must blush with shame that the church has so long figured before the world in the role of a beggar. Everybody outside of the church feels, and those who think know, that begging is unworthy of the religion of Jesus Christ. You could never convince me in a million years that Jesus intended his church to be financed by begging. We have begged for so long only because we have turned our backs upon, and ignored, what the Bible teaches us about stewardship and tithing. We are going to have to continue to beg until the teachers in our Sunday schools learn what the Bible teaches about stewardship and a man's duty to tithing; and teach it to the youth of our churches. We will have to learn that tithing is not a way to get money, but a way to make Christians. That stewardship is not primarily a way to finance the kingdom, but the only way to keep the hearts of men from being led astray by the deceitfulness of riches, ere we shall have a generation meet for the Master's use. There is only one way by which we may surely bring men to a recognition of the proper spiritual relationship towards property, that is to teach them correctly from their youth.

These things are presented in the hope that we may not only have Sunday schools, but that we may have Sunday schools with a purpose. That we may teach, not just to be teaching; but that we may teach that we may lead those we teach to Jesus. Lead them to Jesus not only that they may be saved; but that Jesus may make them mighty unto the salvation of others. Teach them that they may not only want to save others; but that they may know how to set about the task. Teach them not only that they may give themselves to the task of missions; but that they should recognize that all that they have should be used in the Master's service. Teach them that: "We all come in the unity of faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

NOTE: This address was delivered before the North Carolina Christian Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, which requested its publication. And well they did, for the address is just what all Sunday school officers and teachers ought to read and study prayerfully—it is needed.—Editor.

WHICH SHALL CONFORM TO THE OTHER.

I am not here attempting to enter the field of controversy, as led for instance by the Fundamentalists, and Higher Critics, although I have an opinion just there. The purpose of this article is not so much to answer questions as to raise and stress them. Much is written, and spoken from platform, concerning the Bible as related to modern thought and to modern social and economic conditions, while doctrinal controversy grows warmly interesting at many religious centers with the debaters alive in the open field of battle. For a long period the church has been occupied with denominational propaganda, each denomination seemingly trying to outdo the others, and denominational ends have too often overshadowed the Kingdom's interest, except in so far as such interest was represented or expressed in the peculiar ritual of the denomination. The dominating effort and burden of church organs has been propaganda for some particular creed or ritual and the same thing may safely be said of much of the religious literature for the past quarter of a century. It may be good now for the Kingdom's interest that the matter of doctrine again comes to the attention of religious leaders. If it leads to a more serious and diligent study of the Bible it will serve the cause of truth and advance the Kingdom of God on earth. Agitation is necessary to prevent stagnation. There are multitudes of impotent ones, maimed, halt, and blind waiting for the troubling of the waters. The howling storm of wind, rain, and electric currents, clarifies the atmosphere, washes away the filth and leaves the earth with her trees of fruit and flower, and her landscapes and gardens fresher, better, and more beautiful. Touching one phase of life and truth Christ said: "I came not to send peace but a sword." The present controversy, to which reference is made, raises many interesting questions one of the most important of which is that of a standard of life and conduct, also a standard of belief. Standards are essential in every department of life. A thing is right or wrong, true or false, just or unjust, pure or impure, according to the standard by which it is judged. Before the giving of the Law men looked to God for authority, and ever since the law was given the Scriptures have been regarded as the standard of life and conduct for the people of God. It was true in the times of the Judges and Kings of Israel. God's Prophets usually began their messages with a "Thus saith the Lord," or "Hear ye the Word of the Lord." Christ himself often appealed to the Scriptures as authority for his doctrine admonitions, and warnings, as did Paul and Peter and other New Testament writers. I am not alarmed for the Bible. It is indestructible. Jeremiah's copy was dissected and burned, but distressing as the circumstances seemed at the time, it was speedily reproduced. But I am mightily interested in the Bible as a Standard of life and conduct. Let the Church of Jesus Christ exalt her standard and with the means which have come through its light and truth and placed at her door make haste to carry this universal standard to the races of men. To its authority let us bow our knees and humble our soul.

The nations will continue to suffer unrest, turmoil, strife, war, and oppression, and stagger on, reeling under the power and curse of sin until the world is brought to realize and to recognize the Bible as the world's standard of life, bearing the authority of God. It contains the greatest moral code, the finest business laws, the best sanitary and social rules and regulations to be found in all the world's literature or enactments of men. Men can no more make the Bible conform to modern thought, and to present day social and economic conditions than they can make the season conform to their conveniences and notions, or make the laws of nature accommodate themselves to their selfish plans. The Bible is either authoritative, divine, God-made, or it is the biggest fraud that was ever imposed on the credulity of men. It will not conform. It cannot. It is inflexible and immutable. The world's supreme need is conformity to the Bible as our divine standard, and just there centers the world's hope. Blot out all the light in every sphere that has come through its life and teachings and you would leave the world in midnight darkness and blackness. All that today is worth while in business, politics, society, and in the field of industry came through its influence. Standards were never intended to change with the changing tides in the affairs of men, but the converse is true. That the Bible does not conform to present day methods, to modern conditions is quite in its favor as a revelation from God and not the product of reason. The law is not supposed to conform to the desires and conveniences of the law violator. The trader must conform to the standard of weights, measure, and coin. The college standard cannot yield and conform to the desires and habits of the indolent and unambitious student. With the Bible as bearing authority from God the whole Christian system with her institutions will live or die. Upon its great teachings Christianity has been built. Let the burden of pen and pulpit be, "Thus saith the Lord", and "Hear ye the word of the Lord". Christ who is the very substance of the Book from beginning to end and who established the visible Kingdom here never committed the interests of the Kingdom to scholarship, but to the "Saints of God". Scholarship has its field and must not be discounted, but the intellectual and spiritual Kingdoms are as certainly two different orders of life, as are the physical and the intellectual.

Present History of Haiti

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

NOTES: By invitation of the Editor, it gives me pleasure to supply THE SUN with a few articles on Haiti. My present plans are to give them in a series with subjects as follows:

Haiti—An Historical Sketch.
Haiti—Today.
Haiti—Her People.
Haiti—Her Agriculture.
Haiti—Her Religion.

For the facts of my information I am indebted to Mr. W. P. Davis, the President of the American Sugar Company, who has been here six years and has devoted much of his time to collecting material in preparation of an authentic history of Haiti, and he is an authority.

HAITI—THE PEOPLE AND THEIR CUSTOMS.

No. 3.

Upon approaching Haiti, one enters the long bay of St. Marc channel. Nearly all day we sail the Bay with an extent of the island the north and Gonave Island on the south. Here and there on either side, smoke is going up. But for that, the rock hills look barren and forsaken. We wonder if anybody lives there.

Upon anchoring out a short ways from the dock, we find ourselves surrounded with "Bum" boats, each bearing one or more occupants, natives offering their wares for sale,—cocoanuts, oranges, bananas, lignum vitae wine-sets, mogony candle sticks, etc. For the most part these people are very scantily attired. Among them are lots of boys, apparently from the age of ten to sixteen, attired in their birthday clothes, that is, absolutely naked. These expect to amuse the visitors with their swimming and extraordinary diving. The passengers begin to throw coin into the sea and overboard the boys go. So swift and accurate are they in this feat that it matters not how far away the coin may be, within the limits of the immediate location of course, they never fail to get it and they nearly always catch it in their mouth. They take to water like a fish. Custom No. 1.

As we are landed on the dock, gangs of negroes gather around us offering their services to carry our trunks, baggage, walking canes, or anything. So here we go. A negro with a trunk on his head, or a suit case, or anything else. Custom No. 2.

Just seven years ago the ordinary Haitian wore no clothes except a piece of burlap or something tied around him. That was all that was necessary and in fact he did not regard that as necessary. As for shoes, such a thing was unknown except to a few of the better class. Seven years has brought about a great change. Now, nearly all wear something. Those who do not, are the exception. The children, however, among the masses, wear no clothes at all until they are from three to eight years of age when the boy puts on a shirt and the girl has grown up the most of the time having a little dress. When the boy is older, he puts on a shirt and then when he is a big boy he puts on a pair of breeches, and if a laborer he removes the shirt. Exceptions to this may be made in the city where American touch of life has influenced them. However, it appears that to be bare is perfectly alright.

The beast of burden here is the donkey. There are a few horses and mules (all are very small). Except in the city of Port au Prince, everything is carried, if not on the head, in machutes across the back of an animal. There are no wagons and no wagon roads, if there were, they could operate only in the plains and then only in the dry season. Haiti is nearly all mountains, thus to carry burdens on the backs of animals is a necessity. The other method of transportation is on the head. Anything is carried in this way, from the smallest stick to a cord of wood, a tin can to a coffin, a chair to a bureau. It is marvelous what loads they carry and with what dexterity. The other day I saw a woman, with a little tin can sitting on her head, come near being hit by an auto. She jumped and ran across the street. The can was not bothered about it at all, and so far as I could see she had made no effort to keep it there. These things are carried this way with perfect abandon, talking, laughing, turning and jumping (when necessary), and the friendly thing on the head never loses its balance. The other day I saw a boy carrying a pile of wood (tied together) on his head. It appeared to be as big as one-third of my desk. And then I wonder if it will be a house next. With these burdens, they go miles and miles and never seem to tire. It is by these methods they do their marketing, and they travel from distances as far as sixty miles, sometimes, to bring their fruits and their liquors to the market. When using the donkey, they usually ride on the top of the pack, but if it is for their own convenience and safety they walk along behind the animal and prod him along usually in an open sore on the flank of his hip, kept there for that purpose. They enjoy this marketing. It is a great part of their social life. So determined are they in making the trip to the city that they will not sell to one along the wayside though they are offered mere money. In this way thousands gather at Port au Prince each day and make the marketplace an interesting attraction.

Their traffic regulations are rather peculiar. When you meet them, they turn to the left. There are no sidewalks. Everybody goes down the streets, and at the sound of the claxon they are as apt to jump in front of the auto as they are to get out of the way of it.

The Haitian is a great bather. In the towns and cities the most of the homes have basins, an enclosed bath tub on the outside of the house. In the country they use the rivers and streams. They are less careful, however, about their clothes, for after bathing they put back the same dirty clothing. They have their ways in public and their ways in private. Their greatest defect, probably, is the want of cleanliness. Their habits at home are indescribable. When not dressed to receive company they are veritable slatterns, sauntering about in dirty, greasy, dressing gowns. Their bedrooms have a close, stuffy smell, highly displeasing to a stranger. On the other hand they are careless with their good clothes. They will cook in their best and look as though they might have upset half the stuff on themselves.

Notwithstanding their standard of filth, (?) rather cleanliness, (?) I should say, they do a great deal of laundrying. Every stream is a laundry and here hundreds gather to wet, soap and beat the clothes until they are supposed to be clean, if not beaten to pieces. This is done irrespective of the source of the stream or its destination. There was a time when this same water flowed on down and was the drinking water of the city, and I am not so certain that it isn't true now sometimes. However, every protection possible to the cities drinking-water has been made, and the water is very good. Away from the city, unless it is at some spring where the water is guaranteed, Americans have to boil all the water used for drinking purposes. After all that is said about their filthiness, a great many of them appear neat and tidy, enough so, for one to remark about it while passing.

When we consider the Haitian's disposition and temperament, the origin of the race and the wicked life through which they have passed, these few centuries in Haiti, you will not be surprised to be told that they are deceitful and unreliable. It is said that this characteristic prevails from the highest to the lowest. For instance we are told of a foreigner to send a native boy to buy a certain article which he desired. The boy reported to his mother that it could be bought for $20.00. The mother told him to tell the man that it could be bought for $40.00 and that "we will share the profits." When she was reprimanded for this she took it as a matter of course.

Every one, from the top down, believes that graft is legitimate. A foreman in a road-gang, though drawing his own pay and much more than the others, on pay day, must exact a gourde (the Haitian dollar) from each of the others for being foreman. And each worker takes it as a matter of course and to be all right. Many office holders believe that they must take their tolls and when they go out of office they believe that their successor has nothing to do with their encumbrance, so takes all papers with him, leaving the past a blank. These are some of the things that the American occupation is trying to change, and the grafters who can't graft any more evidence of our endeavors to put Haiti on a solid working basis. It is with this class of folks we have made ourselves unpopular and brought down upon our heads the caption "White savages."

The masses of the Haitians are courteous and kind and will share with you anything that they possess. They live in Kiis of thatched roofs, mudded bambo set up in little gardens, cleared for their subsistence. Even in the city more than one hundred thousand people live in temporary shacks made of pieces of corrugated iron, dry-goods boxes, barrell staves, Standard Oil tins; in fact almost anything that could be put together to make a shelter from the sun and rain. In the outlying districts every one owns a donkey for hauling his produce to the market. They come and go. Are always happy and nothing troubles them since the Marines are here to protect them and they can have their gardens.

The dense ignorance of the Haitian has given rise not only to unparalleled superstition but insistent bigotry. The educated and more cultured have not outgrown it. He cannot bear one to think that he does not know. One of them was visiting France and when being shown some beautiful parks and gardens, instead of enjoying its beauty, he merely said, "Its pretty but you should see ours in Haiti." A call was made in an office on one occasion. After the customary "Bon Jour" the man at the desk said: "I am reading Demosthanes." The volume he held in his hand did prove to be an interlinear translation. But the point is that he was trying to make an impression on his caller. I am not sure that the more intelligent races are without this trait. But here it is brought to our attention more emphatically. When at the breakfast table one, unable to speak the language, says; "bring me some puffed rice and poached eggs on toast." The waiter says: "Oui." "Now listen, comprenez vous?" Says the stranger. (He has learned that much French). "Oui, Oui," he says. "Yes, Yes." He disappears and returns with scrambled eggs and no cereal at all. He had not understood at all. The point is that he cannot bear for one to think that he does not understand, and he will never tell you that he doesn't understand. This characteristic of the Haitien is a serious impediment to his progress.

The other day a truck ran over a mule's foot, and the animal had to be killed. In the court that followed, the witness, the owner of the mule, was asked, "How fast was the truck going when it hit the mule?" Ans.—"Full speed, sir." What did the truck do after it hit the mule?" Ans.—"It run faster, sir." In private the questioner said, "All Haitians are liars." It is no doubt true that the best of them are swayed by the meagerest impulses of personal interest and ambition.

The chief social events known to them are the market gatherings and the Tom Tom dances. Outside of the city the Tom Tom is about the only musical instrument known to them. This instrument is a section of a hollow tree with a sheep-skin stretched over one end of it. This makes a drum and with a couple of sticks it is remarkable what a noise they can make and how far it can be heard. But they have rhythm in their natures and they have their good times with it.

These dances may last from one night to many days and nights, and they go many miles to attend them. They have lots of clarine there (This is the liquor every one makes from his own little sugar cane), a few drinks, the sound of the drum, then singing and the dance begins. They do not dance with one another, but separately. Nevertheless the whole idea of the dance seems to be the sex, and the vulgarity is horrible beyond description, much less to mention. The Tom Tom party ends in the most licentious debauch and savage indulgence.

Are they immoral? No. They are unmoral. They are scarcely but an improvement to their forefathers, savages from Africa. They have known no better? That is their life. Does any one blame a hog for wallowing in a mud-hole? We can pity them and, believing them capable of improvement, intelligence and good morals, we can teach them and hope for something better. I am told that it is wonderful what influence the last seven years of American occupation has had upon them in this direction.

In addition to this there is only one other social event they indulge,—The cock fight. Everywhere one goes there is seen an enclosure made of sticks and boards etc. driven down into the ground. If you pass that way on Sunday afternoon you will find that the whole community has gathered there. A few of them with game roosters for the fight. Here they pit these cocks against one another and stake all their money. This seems to give them lots of fun. The Sabbath, I understand, is the only day they are allowed to have these cock fights.

The Haitian is a very incontinent race. The fact is that continence is not considered a virtue. We are told that love-stories are told by mothers before their young daughters in all their crudest details, and no effort whatever is made to keep the minds or bodies of the young girls chaste. The consequence is that in early life, particularly among relatives, intercourse is almost promiscuous and children are by dozens. Amusements are very scarce and the young and the old give themselves up to this sort of gallantry. Anywhere, one may be invited in by mothers to visit their daughters. It is the constant opportunity with no sense of immorality, and the want of occupation and amusement, which causes incontinence, and not the warm blood. This is the kind of thing that is taking its toll with our young men here. When young men have no moral background and no Christ in their lives to hold them fast, what a tragedy must happen when they are overcome by the influence of liquors and lasciviousness.

From such conditions as above it is not hard to understand what marriage conditions are. There is very little marrying. They just live with one another. They pair off, of course, and live as husband and wife. Some bring up families and live to a ripe old age. Others have many wives. The Catholic church, which has been the church of the country through its history, I understand, demands marriage, but, I am told that, they make the marriage fee so great that it is prohibitive. The Protestant organizations are doing what they can to bring about marriages free of charge. They are baptizing and marrying people who are old and have already brought up large families. But I am told that it is very difficult to make them see the necessity of it.

As to names: What is in a name? Since legislation is not very effective, they change their names to suit their fancy and personal interest. The Episcopal Missionary here, told me the other day that one of his native clergy had changed his name three times. As he reads the Bible he finds a name he likes better, so he changes it from St. Paul to St. John. I am also told that when one gets in trouble officially, he may immediately change his name and thus may not be at all the person who was in the scrape.

Clarine and Rhum are among their products. These any one may make and in such quantities as they may like. Of course, everybody drinks, and if one declines to drink they look at him in astonishment. Eating, smoking and drinking,—they all like it. As to eating, they have only a few potatoes, a little rice and the native fruits. Some have meats. They eat any time they get hungry. To the most of them there is no meal-time. They eat a few mangoes and bananas and pass on, or they start a fire, put on a tin can they have picked up somewhere and boil a potato and a banana and that is their meal.

If you have followed my stories closely, you can easily draw another conclusion. With all their courteous and kind attitude they are a cruel people. They seem to have no feelings for man nor beast. If one hates another, and the opportunity presents itself, with a machete, (a big knife) which is the one instrument of service in clearing the jungle, digging the earth or fighting wars, he will swing and chop his enemies head off at one blow. And in former days, when desiring a child for the sacrifice at their Voodoo feast, they kidnap it, tie its hands and feet, hide it and leave it there for a few days until the feast is ready. There is no limit to such cruelty, and it is manifested continually toward their beasts. They harness the mule with their crude wooden saddles, put on a load of two hundred to three hundred pounds and hurry him along for miles. This saddle often works right on the backbone. When it is removed the animal's back is not only sore but the flesh is worn away until naked bone shines. On the flank of the hip of the animal is a sore. The driver walks behind prodding this sore with a stick. He says it makes him go faster. The dray and carriage men, in the city, have the crudest sort of harness and use their horses galded to the bone bottom and top. Hames are used without collars, often the iron hook of the hame is next to the flesh. When the poor beast refuses to go he is lashed until he feels it is more comfortable to pull than to refuse to do so. The draymen carry loads of brick, or rock, or building material, on two little mules, such as we in the states would not think of putting on our big horses, and at that on wagons with wheels worn out and the tires fastened on with bolts through the rim. It's awful!

One can write indefinitely and unlimited to fill volumes about the customs of this people. We would grow weary. Due to the lack of education all these things exist. Due to all the natural instincts of the African negro, it is a long way to make it different. Due to the hatred between the mulatto and the blacks they are continually at war. Without the white man they are totally incapable to govern themselves and to hold independent position.

DR. STRATON SPEAKS ON AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Speaking at the summer term graduation exercises of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, August 10, Rev. John Roach Straton, D. D., pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, New York, discussed "Worldliness In the Present Day Church."

"While we realize that we are living in the age of apostasy prophesied by the Scriptures, we should try to acquaint ourselves with its various forms in order that we may better battle against it," he said. "We have now come to a new era, in which there is a manifestation of worldliness in the church such as has never been known before. Rationalism in the pulpit is resulting in worldliness in the pew.

"The spirit of worldliness takes three manifestations: (1) Lusts of the flesh, (2) Lusts of the eye, and (3) Pride or vain glory of life.

"Lusts of the flesh consist of everything that glorifies the flesh at the expense of the Holy Spirit. We see the manifestation of worldliness on every filth, so suggestive in their sensuousness that they ought not be allowed in any Christian home. The dance has become degraded to the extreme, and yet some pastors are foolish enough to try to dance their young people into the Kingdom of God. Woman's dress is another manifestation of this general downward force.

"Lusts of the eye include the abuse of art. Art has its place, for God is a God of beauty, but whenever art separates itself from righteousness it becomes ruinous. The sculpture, painting and drama of today glorify the sensual; the art of today is godless and Pagan, and has departed from the standards of Christianity.

"The pride or vain glory of life is largely due to conceit. The Devil is a deceiver, and he plays upon the conceit of man. Overreigning God, he said to Eve, 'Ye shall surely die'. He intimated that he had a revelation above the revelation God had given, that he had an object which was higher than God's. The Devil is still using this plan. The supreme effort of the Adversary is to defy God's Word and to tell men that he has something higher and better, something which will bring them beyond the goal which God has provided. The supreme issue of this hour in the religious world is, Do you believe God? and not, Do you believe IN God? There is not a man on the earth that does not believe something about God, though he may deny it, but the question is, Do we believe God? Do we believe that God has spoken to us in His Holy Word, or do we believe that the men of this generation have a better revelation than that given by God?

"The spirit of worldliness has all but paralyzed the Christian Church of today. Many churches have great influence and fine buildings, but no power. They do not know what it is to see a soul converted to Christ. The church is honeycombed with the dry rot of rationalism. We have reached the place in New York where prize fights are being witnessed by church people of national and international fame. The whole movement toward Worldliness is in the name of charity, and now this has been applied to prize fights. There is too much churchianity and too little Christianity today, too much reliance on man made plans and too little reliance on the plan of the Holy Ghost, too much action and too little power."

Had you thought of it in this way? An exchange says Christianity has cooling power as well as warming qualities. Religion in the heart will cool down the passions, lower the temperature of hatreds, and freeze ill will into inactivity. Then you need genuine Christianity for both its warming and its cooling powers. True Christianity is amazing in its power!

Nehemiah Rebuilds the Walls of Jerusalem.—Nehemiah 3:1-7:4.

The Time—444 B. C.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Our God will fight for us."—Nehemiah 4:20.

WHAT HAPPENED BETWEEN LESSONS:

The second chapter of Nehemiah tells how his prayer was answered. The King granted Nehemiah the desired permission to go to build a wall around the city of his fathers, and even gave letters to governors through whose lands he must pass, and to the keeper of the King's own forest to give timber for the beams. Upon his arrival at Jerusalem, Nehemiah found enemies ready to oppose his work. After examining thoroughly the broken walls, he went to the Jews with his story of the condition and needs, and so vividly was the picture drawn that as one man they cried, "Let us rise up and build," and preparation was made for the work.

LESSON TEACHINGS:

Nehemiah believed in organization. "And next unto him builded." Over and over again we find these words, revealing the plan of work. Each man had his own place and his task. "Organization is system—the lack of it is confusion." The wise leader has his work planned. The successful workman is he who is placed where his ability can be best exercised. They builded together, with a common purpose and a common plan.

The secret of the success of the building was willing service. "For the people had a mind to work." And so the wall was built. Much can be accomplished when the people have a mind to work.

"This is the gospel of labor
Ring it, ye bells of the kirk,
The Lord of Love came down from above
To live with the men who work.
This is the rose he planted
Here in the thorn-cursed soil;
Heaven is blessed with perfect rest
But the blessing of earth is toil."

—Henry Van Dyke.

"Be not ye afraid—remember the Lord." The work had opposition. Most worth-while work has. The enemies were active to discourage, to ridicule, to delay the work through trickery. But Nehemiah was not fearful. Strengthened by the power of God, the threats of mere men could not phase him. His safety lay in his belief in the greatness of his task. He declared "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down." All work for God is great. When you are tempted to give up that Sunday school class or resign that church office, can you not, realizing the greatness of your work, follow the Nehemiah-way and declare "I cannot come down?"

The wall was built." Success crowned their planned, willing, and courageous efforts. God's will is ever done. And it must be done through His faithful servants.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

SEPTEMBER 3RD, 1922.

BETTER GIVING.—Acts 20: 31-35.

"One more revival, only one more is needed—the revival of Christian stewardship; the consecration of the money power of the church to God; and when that revival comes, the Kingdom of God will come in a day; you can no more prevent it than you can hold back the tides of the ocean." —Horace Bushell.

Bible Truths about Giving: Luke 12: 33, 34; Matt. 10: 42; 25: 24-40; Prov. 28:27; Eccl. 11: 1; II Cor. 9:6, 7; II Cor. 8: 12; Prov. 22: 9.

Are you a member of the Tenth Legion? This meeting offers a good opportunity to enroll as many as possible of your members in the Christian Endeavor Tenth Legion, with the great band of young people who have signed the covenant to make it a practice to set apart at least a tenth of their income and use it for disinctively religous work. Send a two cent stamp to the General Secretary of Christian Endeavor, Boston, Mass., expressing your purpose to join the Tenth Legion, and he will see that you get a Tenth Legion certificate which you are to keep. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Mal. 3:10.

"For giving is living," the angel said,
"Go feed to the hungry sweet charity's bread."
"And must I keep giving again and again?"
My selfish and querulous answer ran.
"Oh no!" said the angel piercing me through,
"Just give till the Master stops giving to you."

THE APPEAL OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

At the recent session of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, several young people were asked to give five-minute talks on different phases of Sunday school work. These talks were all splendid and every one gave evidence to the fact that Sunday school has an appeal to young people and a place in their lives. We are glad here to give part of each of these three papers to show our readers how some of our own young people feel about the Sunday school and its work in the world.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—A CHALLENGE TO OUR BEST.

The agency that gathers together more people in the growing years of their lives than any other for the exclusive purpose of teaching the value of life is the Sunday school. It is coming to its own and the day is right upon us when the great discerning minds and hearts of the world recognize that the Sunday school, next to the home, is the greatest power in existence for the development of clean, strong, pure lives.

Never since Robert Raikes dropped that acorn in that little kitchen in Catherine Street in Gloucester one hundred and forty years ago, has there been such interest shown in the Sunday school work as today. This is manifested by the agencies of our Sunday school coming together in a great continent-wide program for religious education. It is no wonder that millions of dollars are now being raised for Sunday school work, for dollars put into the Sunday school bring dividends in clean character, prosperity, and lessening of crime such as dollars invested in no other enterprise will produce. I am sorry for the man who, professing intelligence and insight, thinks little of the Sunday school. He has come too late, for the Sunday school is the greatest agency for good throughout the entire world.

The Sunday school has a duty in the home, and we should be blind indeed if we did not give it our constant and careful oversight and our constant and cordial support. But let us remember that the Sunday school was designed to be a supplement to home training and not a substitute for it. The home owes the Sunday school co-operation in its important work. Parents should speak well of the Sunday school. They should encourage their children to prepare lessons.

It is not what we intend to do but what we do that makes us useful. The old standard of education was to know something, the newer standard to do something but the real standard is to be somebody. Twenty-five years from now the money and power of the world will be in the hands of boys and girls who are now juniors in our Sunday school. Once a little girl was lost in Philadelphia, and when the policeman asked her where she lived, she said: "I don't know the name of the street, but if you will take me to my Sunday school, I can find my way home." Is your Sunday school helping folks to find their way home? It may require time and hard work, to be sure, but that inner peace that results adds a sweetness to one's labor that is not to be compared with riches.

The evangelization of the world waits alone upon the willingness of the workers in the Sunday school. Among the scholars in the Sunday school sionaries of tomorrow. The scholars of the Sunday school today are the missionaries of tomorrow. The day school today are the heirs to countless billions of dollars which represent the wealth of the Christians of North America. How heavily then rests the missionary responsibility upon the present day leaders in the Sunday school. Here is the world calling for men and women; for you and me, and the call can only be answered when we are all of us doing our full service in the Sunday school.

MARY NELLE HOLLAND.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—A CHALLENGE TO OUR BEST—SOCIALLY.

We see on the programme that the subjects for these talks are "The Sunday school—A Challenge to our Best—Physically, Mentally, Socially, Spiritually, Loyalty, and Service." For a Sunday school to be at its best, it is required to consider all of these things. The social side of all organizations is helpful in so many ways. We are brought in touch with each other. We are made to understand each other better as we exchange ideas.

There is a social side to the work of our organized classes. We in our church have two organized classes, the Philathea and the Baraca. They hold regular business meetings and socials once a month, and it seems to me that it has created more interest in the two classes by their coming together in the social way than anything that we have done yet. We have our business meetings in separate rooms; then we have a joint social affair, and each one seems to be interested in every way. This has increased our membership in both classes and the attendance is far better on Sunday mornings. So it seems to me that through the Sunday school we get our best socially.

MAUDE LEE HOWELL.

Holy Neck Sunday School.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LOYALTY.

What is Loyalty? Loyalty is allegiance and faithfulness shown our work, our duty and our God.

But the question mark comes after "Sunday School Loyalty."

There are so many ways we may be loyal to our Sunday school and how can we, as co-workers with God, fail that, the greatest and most wonderful institution ever created in the history of the Christian world, the Sunday school. It was there that we first felt, though small boys and girls, that we were necessary to the advancement and uplifting of our dearly beloved Sunday school. Though it may have been a small part, a child feels as proud or prouder with that, than an adult does as superintendent. Children long for expression of their impressions, and it is in the Sunday school that this opportunity must be found.

How may we be loyal to our Sunday school?

First in attendance. And what a great item this is, for any really successful Sunday school. We must go every Sunday, rain or shine, snow or blow. There are so many things to draw us away from the Sunday school today. There is a long peaceful day at the sea shore; a picnic on some mossy lake side, an invitation to spend the day with some friend, a good distance from Sunday school, a ball game you are greatly interested in, and just numerous things we could name. The result is poor attendance at Sunday school, caused by lack of interest in God and His teachings; and disloyalty to His commandments.

Second, in our lesson. Don't you think Jack was proud of the fact that he could compare the King, the night Daniel spent in the lion's den, with Daniel's whole life, when asked? Yes. And why could he? Because he had spent his time in studying his Sunday school lesson instead of in idleness and mischief. If we really want to learn God's marvelous truths we will find a few minutes during the one hundred and sixty-eight hours of the week to read up and study it. And if we do not know it, the very least we can do is to give our very best attention to what the others say.

Third, Sunday school loyalty does not consist of merely going ourselves but trying to win others to Christ through the Sunday school. We must go out, hunt every nook and corner of our neighborhood and bring in all those who do not attend any Sunday school. Help remove the obstacles in their way, and tell them and teach them the great truths and the great love of God.

Then lastly, there are several ways of showing our loyalty, perhaps we are called upon to sing a song of praise, play a hymn, lead in prayer, which I believe every young person should do above all things. Or it may be to teach a class in the absence of the regular teacher.

And in all these ways may we keep the great and mighty wheel rolling and be loyal to our Sunday school and God.

REVIVAL AT SHALLOW WELL.

The annual revival services began at Shallow Well the second Sunday in this month and continued until Friday evening. We had two services each day. The congregations were large and increased with each service. It was, I think, a real revival. There were six additions to the membership of the church. T. E. WHITE.

REVIVALS AT LIBERTY (HALIFAX), HEBRON AND LEBANON.

Evangelist G. D. Eastes was with us first week in July at Liberty and the third week at Hebron. At Liberty it was the best meeting from members added to church in the history of the same. Twenty-three professions and twenty-four accessions and a renewed interest on the part of the members.

At Hebron Church were good and much interest. There were eleven professions and seven to unite with the church. Two gave names for the Baptist church. This church has not a large membership and has had many reverses, but they are pushing ahead and the Eastes meeting will mean much to them. As an expression of their appreciation, they presented Brother Eastes with the largest purse ever given on a similar occasion by them.

At Lebanon the meeting began 3rd Sunday in July, closing on following Friday. On Monday, Brother Stanley C. Harrell came and did all the preaching. The attendance was fine, spirit lovely and the preaching of a very high order. Every service was delightful. It was indeed a real revival. There were fifteen professions and eleven accessions.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

On account of the fact that the American Christian Convention meets October 17, 1922, it is thought best by the Executive Committee of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference to change the date of this Conference October 17, 1922, to October 3, 1922. This is done in order to avoid a conflict in dates. The Georgia and Alabama Conference will meet with the East Lagrange Christian Church, Lagrange, Ga., October 3, 1922, instead of October 17, 1922. All who are interested in this Conference and expect to attend its sessions will please make a note of this change of the time of meeting.

The Christian Missionary says: "Not only must bibles be attractively bound and well printed, but some of them must be perfumed, peppered and poisoned as well. Bibles going to the Gilbert Islands contain in the binding glue and paste which fastens the cover a mixture of oil of cloves, cayenne pepper and corrosive sublimate. It seems that the bookworms of the Gilbert Islands are more pious than those in other places, and have a particular pleasure in devouring the bindings of Bibles, so that this appetizing and fatal menu awaits their attacks upon the Scriptures. Twelve hundred such Bibles have been sent by the American Bible Society on their fifteen thousand miles journey to Ocean Island by way of Sydney, Australia." Well, there are many curious things in this life.

THE FINAL WORD TO OUR MINISTRY.

DEAR BROTHERS:—

The day draws near for the opening of our college, which is September 6th. We have been doing our best at this end of the line in the Loyalty Campaign to bring the boys and girls of the Christian Church to our own college. The response has been gratifying, but not 100 per cent. These remaining days are fateful days for our church. They will bear tremendously upon the development of our church in the next generation. Dr. Barrett has well said in the "Christian Sun" that the College must have the co-operation of our leaders or it will suffer and the church along with it will suffer.

I am counting upon you, my brother, to put forth special effort now to bring those people in your field and acquaintance to our college this fall.

Praying a rich blessing on your work, and with every good wish to you, I am,

Yours sincerely,
W. A. HARPER,
President.

NOTICE! NOTICE!!

If you expect to attend the next session of the American Christian Convention to be held at Burlington, N. C., October 17-25, you are requested to send your name and address to the undersigned at once. This is to your interest as well as ours. You want to be well provided for, and the Burlington Church desires to serve you to the best possible advantage. This, however, we cannot do if you fail to notify us that you are coming. Simply state that you are coming, and a home will be assigned you and your assignment card will either be mailed you before you leave for the Convention, or will be on file and ready for you on your rival. We most earnestly ask that you give prompt attention to this important matter.

ARE YOU GOING TO THE CHAUTAUQUA?

How much are you interested in your church work? Is your interest deep enough to make you willing to go to some extra trouble and expense to better prepare yourself for your duties? The Chautauqua and School of Methods will be held at Elon College August 28th to September the 4th. The following should attend:

1. The pastors—There will be a class for pastors, taught by Dr. W. W. Staley, and every pastor in the Convention should try to be present. Then there will be pastor's conferences and conferences of pastors and Sunday School workers and Christian Endeavors combined.

2. Superintendents—The Superintendent of the Sunday School holds an important position, and he should equip himself as well as possible for the task. There will be a class for Superintendents taught by Prof. A. L. Hook, and then there will be separate conferences of Sunday School workers.

3. Sunday School teachers and those intending to teach. There will be classes for Adult, Intermediate and Primary teachers under competent teachers. There will be a class for Christian Endeavor workers and classes in missions. We are trying to give you the most helpful program possible. We want your presence and counsel.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Several years ago a man in the state of Ohio willed the Christian Orphanage $500.00, to be turned over to it after his death. This man just lacked three days living twelve months after he made his will and under the laws of the state it reverted to his estate and the Orphanage lost it.

It was his will and intention that the Orphanage should have this part of his estate and it should have gotten it. He wanted the income from this amount during his life. We have a plan which will meet cases of this kind. If you have money you want to give the Orphanage, but want interest on it while you live, The Orphanage will take it and lend it. Some to be secured by first mortgages in good real estate and pay you five and one-half per cent. payable semi-annually with the understanding that the principal will be the property of the Orphanage at the death of the party lending it.

This will make sure that the will of the person who wants to help the Orphanage in this way will be carried out. We would lend money through a real estate company that guarantees every loan and has a capital and surplus of one-half million dollars. It would be absolutely safe, and you would receive your interest on the day it is due without any trouble.

We hope and trust that many of our people will remember the Orphanage in their wills. It would be a nice way to leave a living monument when you are gone. It takes about an average of $175.00 to care for one child per year. Suppose you give the Orphanage an amount sufficient to bring in to it $175.00 per year. You would support a child for all time to come and think of the living monuments you would build as the years go by.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Since God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from the midst of the Philathea Class of the Suffolk Christian Sunday School our beloved member, Mrs. Maria Rodgers Truitt, who passed away at the home of her son, G. W. Truitt, Jr., Bronxville, N. Y., July 31, 1922, be it resolved;

First. That in the death of Mrs. Truitt our Class has lost one of its faithful members; one whose devotion to her Church and all of its institutions leaves a vacancy, but her death may prove a blessing to God's Kingdom.

Second. That we sorely miss the sunshine of her presence, her cheerful greetings, and the assistance she so cheerfully gave when called upon. We bow in humble submission to God's will knowing he never makes a mistake.

Third. To the loved ones who are so sorely bereaved we offer our tenderest sympathy and point them to the One who may truly sustain and comfort them in their sorrow and loss.

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our class, a copy sent to the family of our deceased sister and a copy be sent to the "Christian Sun" for publication.

MRS. J. V. GATLING.
MRS. W. H. YATES.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father saw fit on the 16th day of June, 1922, to call from his earthly to we believe a Heavenly Home, our beloved brother, deacon, J. W. Massey, who perhaps for more than fifty years had been one of Concord's best loved and leading members—a brother whose heart was full of human kindness; and was ever responsive to the call of church or charity; and whose kind and generous deeds will long be remembered by Concord Christian Church and the community.

Therefore be it resolved:

First. That in his death Concord Church loses one of its most faithful and loyal members, his children a kind father and his community one of its best citizens.

Second. That we extend to his bereaved family our sympathy and trust that Our Heavenly Father may comfort all hearts made sad by his decease.

Third. That a copy of these Resolutions be sent to his family a copy to the "Christian Sun" for publication and a copy be spread upon the Church Records

BROTHERS AFTER ALL.

A wounded Scotch Highlander lay upon a cot in a hospital in London, striking tenderly with his hand a German spiked helmet. A nurse, in passing his cot stopped and looked at him and said, "I suppose you killed your man?" "No, indeed," he replied, "It was like his: He lay on the field badly wounded and bleeding, and I was in the same condition. I crawled to him and bound up his wounds; he did the same for me. I knew no German, and he knew no English, so I thanked him by just smiling. He thanked me by smiling back. By way of a token I handed him my cap, while he handed me this helmet. Then, lying side by side, we suffered together in silence till we were picked up by an ambulance squad."—Exchange.

MRS. ELEANOR GREEN.

Mrs. Eleanor Dora Green, wife of Mr. I. M. Green, was born December 1, 1858, entered into rest July 22, 1922. Her husband, five daughters; Mrs. C. G. Daniel, Mrs. C. E. Fuller, Mrs. W. B. Fuller, Mrs. D. L. Kearney, Mrs. J. E. Barnes, besides five brothers and two sisters survive. For a long time she had been a great sufferer, and especially for several weeks just before her death she suffered intensely. Through it all she bore her sufferings with Christian fortitude and patience. She was a loving wife and mother, a kind friend and helpful neighbor. She loved her church, and it seemed a joy to her to worship with God's people. Funeral services were conducted by the writer from Liberty Church, where she had long been a member. Rev. John Mitchener assisted.

God's blessing and comfort on the bereaved husband, daughters and grandchildren.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

O. C. HAMM.

Mr. O. C. Hamm was born December 25, 1884. Entered the realms beyond August 7, 1922. His wife, three children: Clement, Lucile and Alvin Ray, mother, Mrs. Sallie Hamm, two brothers, five sisters, besides many friends remain to mourn his departure. He was a devoted husband, loving father and true friend. His mother, who lived with him since her husband's death, clung to him with a child-like dependence for support and comfort.

At Liberty Church, where he had been a member for some years, funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. E. Pritchard and C. E. Newman. The large congregation present gave evidence to the many friendships he had made. May the "Comforter" give that peace and comfort that He alone can give.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

SISTER ARGENIE DAVIS.

Sister Arcenie Davis, wife of Deacon A. L. Davis, of Christian Chapel Church, died July 25, 1922. Nearing her seventy-first birthday, she had been a Christian for 54 years. She leaves a devoted companion, seven children, 39 grandchildren, three great grandchildren, and a hoast of friends.

Sister Davis was regarded by all who knew her as a most aimable Christian woman.

She will be waiting, for her relatives and loved ones on the heavenly shore. Funeral services by her pastor, J. E. Franks.

J. E. FRANKS.

RESOLUTIONS.

We, the undersigned members of North Highland Christian Church and Ladies Missionary Society, wish to extend our heart-felt sympathy to our sisters Mrs. W. D. Spurgern and Mrs. Irvan Sykes in the lost of their husband's and our brothers and friends. For a source of comfort we would recommend "Jesus Christ" the great burden-bearer; he will also be a husband to the widow and a father to the orphans, a very present help in time of need. We pray that you will ever trust him. We recommend that a copy of this be sent the widows of these brothers. Also THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

MARRIED.

At the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. R. T. Walker, on Sunday evening, August 20th, I united D. M. Lawrence, of Shallow Well community and Miss Fannie Walker in marriage. A number of relatives and friends were present to hear them take the solemn vows of matrimony and to wish them well.

T. E. WHITE.

Still with Thee, O my God,
I would desire to be,
By day, by night, at home, abroad
I would be still with Thee.
With Thee when dawn comes in
And calls me back to care,
Each day returning to begin
With Thee, my God, in prayer.
With Thee amid the crowd
That throngs the busy mart,
To hear Thy voice, when time is loud,
Speak softly to my heart.

And though you have many burdens
Try to keep your eyelids dry
Let us love each other better,
In life's twilight, you and I.

You are such a help and comfort
But have all the toil and care
I am helpless so can't aid you,
Take this to the Lord in prayer.
Trust Him until times get better—
Do not ever breathe a sigh
Live in hope and love each other,
In life's twilight, you and I.

In the going of life's twilight,
As life's shadows on us fall,
May we trust our heavenly Father—
He will hear us as we call.
May He lead us through life's troubles
To the mansions in the sky,
With this hope let us be happy,
In life's twilight, you and I.

O God, grant, I beseech Thee, that Thy word may be preached in the earth, that in my own life, in my church and community, and everywhere Thy will may be done until all nations shall know the glorious truth of the one living and true God, and are called by Thy undying love back to Thyself until at last, the whole world shall know Jesus Christ, and Father of all. Amen.

LET US LOVE EACH OTHER.

The following lines were written by a Brother Dickie near Liberty, Vance county, North Carolina. He is very feeble, his children have gone out to make homes for themselves, leaving him and his wife at home, and now facing life's sunset. Get the setting fully fixed in your mind and then the lines are beautiful. These lines were sent by Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., of Elon College, N. C.:

In the twilight we are sitting
And I think of days gone by,
As we sit here in the twilight
By the fireside, you and I;

So just put aside your knitting,
It is time to save your eyes,
Let us talk and love each other
In the twilight, you and I.

I remember in life's morning
When you pledged your heart to me,
And the sun was shining for us
And so happy then were we.
And the sun's rays never darkened
On our love as days went by,
But now we are in life's twilight
Yet are lovers, you and I.

Now our children are a comfort
To us as they come and go,
Many dear friends come to see us,
Mr. and Miss So and So

And though all our children left us
We will never cease to try
To be cheerful and contented,
In life's twilight you and I.

Now our hearts feel so much better,
While we talk with those we love,
Like a ray of sunshine coming
From the better land above,
Yet there is no earthly sunshine
Cheers me as the moments fly,
As your love while we are sitting
In life's twilight You and I.

And when mother brings grand-daughter,
Then our joy is near complete
She is such a little treasure
Innocent and Oh! how sweet.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

A Great Family—Read.—

So far as we know, the Scudder family has made a missionary record not made by any other family in history. Read this brief statement: "John Scudder and his wife were missionaries to Ceylon and to India. Of their ten children who grew to adult life, one died while preparing for the Christian ministry and nine became foreign missionaries, five being medical missionaries. In 1919, the year marking centennial of the Scudder influence in India, three great-grandchildren sailed for that land. Thirty-one descendants have worked in India, while seven others are missionaries elsewhere."

A Strong Man's Faith.—

This is a day when almost anything may be heard on the streets, in the public highways and in places of business, but here is something very uncommon to come from a scientist, as follows:

The world has been told of the wonderful feats of bloodless surgery performed by Dr. Adolph Lorenz, the famous Austrian surgeon. But we have not heard much about his religious views. If the following report be true, it is a striking testimony of real faith: "During Dr. Lorenz's recent visit to Detroit a reporter asked him if his scientific investigations had destroyed his religious faith. His answer was: 'Does medical science or any other science tend to destroy belief in God? My friend, you are young; I am old. Science truly pursued does not tend to destroy belief in God. The pursuit of scientific knowledge makes an honest man humble. It makes him realize how little he knows. It makes him believe in God.'"

Just Say A Blackman Did It.—

Here is a most interesting incident which is said to have occurred in the crowded streets of New York City. The modesty of the man is equaled only by the heroism of the act he performed. A New York paper tells it this way:

"Threading the traffic during Fifth Avenue's most crowded hour, a woman lost her head and stepped in the path of swiftly-moving automobiles. Crowds looked on in horror or turned away from what appeared to be an inevitable fatality; but one man dashed through the vehicles seized the woman by the arm, and dragged her back to safety. Dazed, she failed to thank her rescuer. A traffic policeman was more alert. He stopped the man after he had taken a dozen steps and asked his name. The stranger, who was a negro, turned. 'Are you going to arrest me?' he asked. 'No,' said the officer. 'That was a brave act, and I want to report it.' 'Just say a black man did it,' he said and turned away. He was Dr. Robert R. Morton, successor of Booker T. Washington as head of the Tuskegee Institute and one of the foremost figures of his race in America."

The Volstead Act is Holding.—

The "wets" are trying hard to destroy prohibition, but so far, they have failed, and it looks now as if the country is safe for the "drys," if only the dry people will stand fast and be true to their profession. The "wets" are trying to make out all classes of influence as opposed to prohibition. Once in a while they claim this class of people and then another are opposed to prohibition. Only a little while ago they declared the farmers are opposed to prohibition, but since then, when the National Conference of the Grangers was held in Buffalo, N. Y., 33 of the Masters of State Granges voted to enforce the Volstead Act. Now and then it is claimed that the workingmen are opposed to prohibition, and then it dawns by some expression of the workingmen that they are for prohibition, not all of them of course, but the predominating influence is for prohibition.

A Stagnation that Balks the World.—

We are told that something like 10,000,000 or more gross tons out of a total of 62,000,000 of the world tonnage is now idle. According to the New York Herald's shipping page between 15 and 20 per cent. is idle. The United States Shipping Board's idle fleet accounts for 4,625,000 of idle tonnage. We are told that British shipping has been nearly as much affected as American. It is estimated that 1,900,000 tons of British shipping is eating its head off in idleness. We are further informed that although the tonnage laid up is not generally the most efficient, the average value of the idle vessels is estimated at not less than $45.00 a gross ton. Thus the total capital involved the world over is in excess of $450,000,000. Based on costs of construction, the figure would be much higher, as much of the tonnage, especially that of the Shipping Board, was built after 1915, and at the peak of building costs. If this idle shipping were properly engaged it seems as if it might help the financial conditions of the world at this time when strain is practically everywhere.

Straw Vote Versus Real Vote.—

By the Associated Press it is stated that Representative Tinkham of Massachusetts called upon Chairman Volstead to resign his committee seat because of aid said to have been received in his last campaign from the Anti-Saloon League of America. The resolution provided that unless Mr. Volstead did so within fourteen days from its adoption his seat on the committee which framed the prohibition enforcement act, should be declared vacant.

The resolution was laid on the table with a shout of approval. Then a member of Mr. Vol-steads committee offered a motion to expunge from the record. This was done by a vote of 141 to 3. The Literary Digest may take a straw vote, but the vote of Congress voices the sentiment of the United States.

Mr. Wheeler declared in a statement that the House vote on the resolution was "evidence of what the House thinks" of Mr. Tinkham's charges, which, he added, "were false, flimsy and foolish."

"If Mr. Volstead is subject to criticism," he continued, "for receiving the support of friends of the eighteenth amendment and the Constitution, what shall we say of Mr. Tinkham, who, as a member of Congress takes an oath of office to support the Constitution, and then stabs it in the back by advocating beer and wine to nullify its enforcement?"

"Mr. Tinkham's reiterated and repudiated charges against the Anti-Saloon League are for campaign purposes only. It is an effort to help wet Congressmen who are fast losing the confidence of their own friends and to embarrass that large majority of Congressmen who have been loyal to the Constitution."

The Joy of The Jewish People.—

It is said that the League of Nations has approved the British Mandate for Palestine. That makes quite sure the steady progress of the Jewish people in the future. They regard this approval of the British mandate as confirmation of the right of the Jewish people to establish their national home in the land from which they were exiled over 1900 years ago. They have given some public expression to their appreciation of this significant act. They declare: "We remember with gratitude the chivalrous co-operation of the men of vision and statesmanship, the representatives of great nations, who made our cause and who fought our battle as their battle, and who now rejoice with us in an achievement which is an honor to them and to humanity." This day of rejoicing we are told was celebrated in all parts of the world. It is a great day for the Jews. It may have some unusual significance in their national history, and if so, then these things are dovetailing into prophecy. The American Hebrew, which is opposed to the Zionist movement, tells us that in this step Zionism has been eliminated and Jewish Nationalism declared taboo. American Jews who are interested in the economic reconstruction of the Holy Land have taken as a sort of motto this: "Scrap Zionism and build Palestine." This mandate is in some way the outcome of the Balfour resolution for a national home for the Jewish people, and it is believed by many that this ideal for the Jews will now be realized, at some future day. At any rate the Jews practically all over the world are rejoicing in what they regard as their good fortune.

NOTES - PERSONALS

Our brethren in Ohio are beginning to know something they did not know a few years ago—a colored man has just made a race for the Governorship of that great state. He was defeated of course.

Rev. H. E. Rountree, Chaplain U. S. N., on duty with the United States Marine Corps at Port au Prince, Haiti, is visiting his family in Richmond. He expects to return to his duty about the 15th of September.

The Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference will meet with the church at LaGrange, Ga., October 3, 1922. A full attendance is urged upon the delegates and visitors. Rev. R. F. Brown, pastor of the Rose Hill church, Columbus, is the president of the conference.

Rev. William T. Scott is busy this summer in attending and assisting in revival services in the sections of the country contiguous to his field of labor. He has recently assisted in a revival service at Brown's Chapel. Last Sunday night he preached for the editor in the Reidsville Christian church.

I am enjoying the Herald and Sun very much. I have spent the summer out here in my old neighborhood—the home of my childhood. I am now expecting to go to Elon College to the Chautauqua, and then remain over to attend the A. C. Convention at Burlington, N. C.—Mrs. J. I. Joyner, Sedley, Va.

Vacation is almost gone. Now for getting back home and getting to work—that will mean business. Let every one of us who have enjoyed a vacation do his or her best to show in our work for the next several months that a vacation pays and pays well in renewed strength and real vigor.

Until Saturday night last, I had been in Chicago and had not seen a copy of the Christian Sun. It looks good in its enlarged form, good paper, and good print.—W. P. LAWRENCE.
Elon College, N. C.

Words like these are appreciated. Thank you.

You and Dr. Barrett are now giving us the best paper that we have ever had, and I hope that it can be kept at the present standard. With best wishes for you and the paper.—W. E. MACCLENNY, Suffolk, Va.

Nothing moves one to put forth greater efforts than does encouragement.

Bishop Jno. C. Kilgo, D. D., LL. D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died at Charlotte, N. C., Aug. 11, 1922, aged 61 years. He was a man of marked ability—was for years president of Trinity College, Durham, N. C., and then in 1910 he was elected Bishop in the Methodist Church. At the last General Conference at Hot Springs, Ark., he was feeble and made a farewell address to his brethren. He was taken ill before he reached home and from that illness he never fully recovered. He was regarded as a great and a good man.

Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Suffolk, Va., has recently paid a visit to the Missionary work of the Christian Church in the mountains of Virginia, located in Carroll County. From this trip he went to Moore's Springs, N. C., and spent several days in taking a good rest and drinking the fine mineral water of these celebrated springs. From there he goes to Elon College to take part in the Chautauqua, beginning on Aug. 28.

The celebrated evangelist, Gypsy Smith, the celebrated and greatly beloved evangelist of England, is coming to this country. He will begin his work on this trip with the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York on Aug. 27, 1922. Then he will visit and preach in a number of other cities. Let prayer be offered for him by all Christian people. He is not an evangelist of foolishness, but of great earnestness.

I read through the Sun that you made a visit to our boys, (James and Charles), when you were in Petersburg, Va., early in July. We raised those boys for the Lord, and we were glad that you got to see them. We trusted God for these boys from the cradle up, and we give him credit for what they are and for the usefulness which may go out from their lives. We are now trusting Him to take care of them till they reach the end of their earthly journey.—Mrs and Mrs. Jason I. Joyner, Sedley, Va.

We had real pleasure in visiting these young men in their business in Petersburg, and glad to see they are doing well, but that is what we might expect when father and mother have given them to the Lord, trusting Him all the way for their lives and for their all.

Rev. L. F. Johnson, D. D., pastor of the Vanderveer Park church in Brooklyn, N. Y., seems to have done a great and good work in that city. He has been there only a short while and yet his work seems to have grown in a large and encouraging way. Who would have thought not so long ago of going to the woods of Wake County, N. C., to get a leader for our work in that great city, but that is where this young leader of the missionary work in the New Jersey Conference came from. They know how to rear good boys down in that part of the piney woods.

The Rev. T. N. Ivy, D. D., editor of The Nashville Christian Advocate, has made an interesting discovery of late. In a recent issue he says: Are we Southern people lacking in the principle and habit of punctuality? We should dislike very much either to make the charge or admit it. Yet it sometimes seems to us that we have fallen into association with a good many people who are first-class socially, intellectually, and spiritually, but who, nevertheless, have never learned just how many seconds there are in a minute and act as if such ignorance were inconsequential. What is your notion and experience?

The Christian Index; the Baptist paper for the State of Georgia, gets off a good thing, and withal suggestive, on the rat, when it says:

A certain man had been troubled for a long time with rats. They did considerable damage by sneaking out at night and destroying anything that they came across. The man tracked them to the hole, but could think of no way to run them out, so that the cat could catch them. At last a happy thought struck him. He got a large electric light bulb and turned the light on in the den of rats, and lo, every rat scampered out and ran as if for his life. They could not bear the light. The man was not responsible for the rats, neither for their dues, but he was responsible for turning on the light.

How Shall War Debts Be Paid?—

One of the questions now puzzling the people both in Europe and in America is the payment of war debts. During the war great sums of money were borrowed by the nations at war from any source possible. Now "pay day" is at hand, and the governments, so borrowing, find themselves unable to pay, and there is a mighty scratching around to look for the cash, but after doing their best to find the cash, it can't be found, and then the next question is: What shall we do? England proposed to cancel war debts, but the United States did not agree, and now some think our Uncle Sam is a little "piggish" because it is desired that money loaned by the United States be paid back. Our European neighbors think, as they had the brunt of the war to bear and we are rich any how, we just as well cancel all of these debts and give Europe a chance to settle down to business again. Of course, there is a large debt owing to England and she says she will cancel these debts, provided the United States will cancel what she is owing her. Some one has suggested that there is quite a difference between the debts owing to the United States and the debts owing to England. The difference is this: The debts owing to the United States are owed by England and are perfectly good, but the money that is owing to England is not what is considered good debts. If England should cancel what is owing her, she loses almost nothing, as the debts are said not to be good anyway, but if the United States were to cancel what England owes her, she would be cancelling good debts, and that is the difference. Who can blame England to cancel bad debts, if by so doing she may have canceled what she is owing, which is considered very good money. It is now claimed by the Chicago Daily News that the settlement of these debts must be accomplished before there can be peace in Europe, and that adds to the gravity of the situation. International bankers say we ought to cancel what Europe is owing us, and for the reason on the one hand that these debts are uncollectable, and on the other because we have enjoyed the profits from this money inasmuch as the governments borrowing it with us for supplies and in other ways during the war. Others claim that we ought to cancel the debt because it is nothing more than a just contribution from the United States to the warring nations to whom it was loaned. England has one plea against canceling the debts due it, unless the United States will cancel what she owes to this country, and that is that considerable sums of the money England borrowed, she borrowed and loaned to other governments, and so if the United States must be paid, then these countries owing her must pay what they owe. England owes the United States the neat little sum of $4,685,000,000. England we are told will pay this sum, but she insists, if she must pay this amount, then the government to which she loaned the borrowed money must pay her, and this it is said these governments cannot do. Now what is to be done? Even the interest on the war debt is a staggering sum. Mr. H. E. Fisk, a prominent financier says the debtor nations have thus far paid in interest on war debts the sum of $489,813,000. Verily the world is in a puzzling situation, and no man seems to know what to do to deliver it from the same.

THE PARSIS.

The Parsis in India number about one million, the greater part of whom live in Bombay and along the west coast. They came to India from Persia. Many think they are the descendants of the ten lost tribes of Israel. Five reasons are produced to prove this statement. 1st.—They emigrated from the land into which they were taken captive. 2nd.—They were an educated, shrewd, money making people. 3rd.—They do not inter-marry with other nations, as a rule. 4th.—Their women are beautiful. 5th.—They despise Jesus Christ and His shed blood.

The Parsis came to India to seek refuge from their Mohammedan persecutors. They landed at Sanjan about 717 A. D., which was then ruled by a Hindu prince. A tall shaft has been erected to commemorate the event. The waste land given them was soon converted into a populous thriving district and town and with the permission of the ruler, a fire temple was erected and the sacred fire kindled. For about 300 years after their landing here, the Parsis lived in comparative peace. As their numbers increased, they emigrated to other towns along the west coast. At the beginning of the sixteenth century they assisted the Hindus against the Moslems. In the first great engagement they were successful, but in the second conquest, their leader was killed and the Parsis suffered great loss of life and property. This was the cause of a more widespread dispersion among them. Many fled to Bombay and other towns along the coast and among the hills. The ruined temple of worship and tower of silence mark the scenes of those days.

EDUCATION.

They are the most highly educated nation in India. No Parsi family, if their means can afford it fails to get an English education. The government schools are well attended by them. About fifty per cent. of their women have a common school education. They occupy a much more honorable position than the women of any other nation in India. The wives of the poorer class attend to their family duties, but the women of the wealthy engage in a great deal of social life. They love to display their rich clothing and jewelry. Companionship between a husband and wife in a Parsi home is about equal to that enjoyed in the average American home.

COMMERCIAL PURSUITS.

In proportion to their numbers, the Parsis are the wealthiest of any people in India, though they landed as exiles and in poverty. For about a thousand years they were chiefly employed as cultivators of the soil and as mechanics. But when the British gained power in India, old restraints were removed and the Parsis entered every door of opportunity for gaining wealth and distinction. They thus raised themselves from obscurity.

"Wherever wealth can be acquired or wherever the English flag has been raised, the Parsis have followed. Many of the finest houses in Bombay belong to them. About the half of the whole Parsi population have followed the avocations of merchants, bankers, and brokers, which fact furnishes a clear proof of the bent of their mind. Many of them are teachers, writers, lawyers, doctors and liquor dealers. They possess the business accumen of the Jew.

RELIGION.

The Parsis are Zoroastrians or fire worshippers. Their sacred writings are called, Zend-avesta. Zoroaster is considered to be the author. His writings are said to have covered twelve hundred ox-hides. The loss of much of his poetry and other writings was attendant upon the Persian conquest by Alexandra the Great. Their religious formula is "Good thoughts, good words, good deeds." By zealously practicing this formula they hope to acquire merit to offset all their demerits. They worship sacred fires in their temples, which is always kept burning. The fire they brought with them from Persia, which for many years burned in the temple at Sanjan, was removed on the occasion of a Moslem conquest to Udwarda, which is about one hundred miles north of Bombay. This is the center for many religious gatherings. Their dead are placed in a tower of silence, which is open to the fowls of the air. Flocks of vultures come to pick the flesh from their bones. After the flesh is removed the bones fall through an iron grating into a deep pit below.

If a person is not a Parsi, it is impossible to become a member of their religious cult or enter their temples of worship. This question has been tried in their courts. It has been decided that when a Parsi man marries a wife of another nationality, the wife cannot enter the temple, but their children are considered Parsis and may worship there. If a Parsi woman marries outside her race, she, with family are all ostracized from the temple worship. Outside marriages are rare, and because of this the race is weakening numerically. There are a great many childless homes among them. They are a selfish people in that they do not evangelize those among whom they live. They zealously circumscribe their religious life within the limits of their own race. In conversation with a learned Parsi recently, I was told that his main objection to missionary methods was their effort to change the religion of the people among whom they lived. He considered one religion as good as another. If a nation has had a religion for a long time, he thought it very wrong to try to change their religious beliefs.

PHILANTHROPY.

The Parsis excel in philanthropic work. It is an important teaching in their religion and they scrupulously make it practical. Many of the hospitals and educational institutions were originally built and operated by the Parsis, but later taken over by the government. They support homes for their orphan children and their feeble and infirm. They also have a fund which their sick and unfortunate poor are helped. There is much about the life and habits of the Parsi that has the semblance of American or European civilization. They are generally a well educated people. They appear cultured and neatly yea, very richly dressed. Their homes in the city are elegant in all their appointments. Many of them support motor cars and enjoy many of the luxuries of a higher civilization. They are generous in their gifts to the poor and to worthy philanthropic work. Mr. Tata, of Bombay, a wealthy Parsi silk merchant and banker, gave a million dollars to scientific research a few years ago.

If the Parsi had emigrated to India in search of a place or religious liberty with the knowledge of the gospel such as the Puritan fathers possessed, they might have been the agents for evangelizing all India. They have the genius, the education, the wealth, the languages and the power of adaptability to the social conditions, and climate of India to evangelize the entire country, if they only had the Evangel. But it is difficult to give them that. They are self-satisfied, at least they seem so, with their Zoroastrian faith. Efforts have been made by some missionary experts to reach them, but with little success. They are friendly to the missionary and his work, but are not influenced much by him. They will listen attentively to his message until he speaks of Christ and His atoning work at Calvary, as being the only divine provision for man's eternal happiness and safety, when he will turn and walk away or listen indifferently.

As the Jews claim a love for Jerusalem and Palestine, (Psa. 137:5,6) so the Parsis profess a love for their native land—Persia. They consider themselves exiles in India. A highly educated, well informed Parsi recently told me that if Persia was under English rule or enjoyed a good stable form of government, the Parsis would return to their land in a body. He said he loved his native land, Persia, as a good son loves his mother. There are a goodly number of Parsis living in our mission territory. They are a kind, lovable people, but without the gospel, and are hard to reach. Let us pray that the Spirit will turn them from their system of fire worship to the true worship of His dear Son.

A SUGGESTION TO OUR PEOPLE

Rev. George D. Eastes has been with me in my field of labor for four weeks in revival meetings. To my mind he is the best evangelist I have ever heard. Free from senatorial doctrine and methods. Preaches a gospel of love and deals with the practical needs of life. Let us without delay make him evangelist of the Southern Christian Convention and support him loyally. Brother Eastes conducted meetings in the middle west last season and over two thousand were added to the church. Of his meetings for the past year only five have been in churches of the Christian denomination. If the Southern Christian Convention cannot support a full time evangelist, then have Brother Eastes locate with one of our churches and be available when a community calls for his services. I like his spirit to work with other religious bodes, but we need him worse than they.

The Height of The Flights of Migrating Birds.

We are told that once migrating birds were supposed to fly at high altitudes, but later investigations have shown, however, that this is a mistake. Instead of flying in their long journeys at a high altitude, they are known now to fly quite low, often as low as 3,000 and may be lower. The greatest height at which they have been known to fly is 7,000 feet, but often they fly much nearer the earth. It is amazing what these birds accomplish as a matter of instinct—flying in just the direction that is best suited to their needs. Mr. Von Lucas tells us that most European birds fly in the autumn first towards the Atlantic Coast, and then turn Southward in order to reach Africa by way of Gibraltar. Some other interesting features are made to appear in the more extensive observations of the habits of these birds. Maps have been made of the course the birds travel. Thus the white storks living to the East of the river Weser fly over the Balkans, Asia Minor and Syria to reach Africa, while the birds hatched to the West fly over Spain and Gibraltar. It has been ascertained that certain migratory birds fly over the same routes. They put on these birds an aluminum ring, right definitely marked. Then they catch these birds when on the way and so prove the facts in the case. There may be not much profit in this business, but it is interesting to say the least. It shows how God put instinct into birds till they act almost as intelligently as do men.

THE CHURCH AND A MUCH SHUNNED RESPONSIBILITY.

Responsibility is a character-producing adjunct in human life. Without responsibility the church itself would be of little force since it is the weight of responsibility that develops the individual and makes character, and character is the brawn and muscle of human society, whether it be in or out of the church. Indeed character is the bedrock of all human activities. With it man can do any and everything that needs to be done, and without it not anything can be done which is to have permanence in the organized life of a people. Character is fundamental.

Some one has said that happiness is not the end of life, but character is, and that is true, for happiness may come and may go, but character is the one staying quality—it abides in storm and calm alike. Character is the engraved element in our being. The artist cuts deep into wood or metal the marks of his ideals, and what he leaves there becomes the character of the work he has done. Some one has said "that character is centrality, impossibility of being overthrown." Centrality may be overthrown, but you cannot overthrow character, especially in this true of Christian character. True character is formed on the world's stormy billows. The more severe the storms, the stronger is that which they produce.

It was Robert Browning who wrote:

Love, hope, fear, faith—these make humanity;
These are its sign, and note, and character.

It has well been said that the most brilliant qualities become useless when not sustained by character. You have seen a man of giant intellect, of great wit and of the most thoughtful purposes, but he falls down in action because his character was full of rottenness. A weak character cannot produce and maintain great worth—mark you, we did not say it does not to do it, but that it cannot do it. Character is the very sinew of all moral worth. Even Eternal life cannot be grasped and maintained in the absence of character. It is both a means and an end—a means of attaining the high ideals of life and an end as a basis of all worth. Surely no man and no institution can fill an honorable and useful place in human society without character, and the better the character, the better its product.

We have said all this that we might well and wisely emphasize the worth and the necessity of character in the individual and in the institution as a means of attaining ends for which we have been given our place among men. We are not here for the mere fun of living, but to serve the real purposes of God. This is just as true of an institution as it is of an individual.

We have said all this that we might get the church to see itself as a character-builder and in doing so get it to see the further half of its great mission, which is two-fold, viz: To win the world to Christ. 2. To train the world which has been won to Him for Him. Do you see the point? First, we must win the lost to Christ that He may save them, and having won them, then we must train them in His service and so establish them in Christian character, for without character, for without character the Christian is poor indeed. Can a man be a Christian without character?—without Christian character?

The much shunned responsibility, referred to above, is in the way the church has won many to Christ and then turned them loose without the development of Christian character and without training in service. If our leaders had seen it as the wise part of their Christian privilege, to say nothing of duty, to train every soul that has been won to Christ for Him and so to assist in bring the church itself and the newly won soul to the highest state of Christian culture and service, long since we would have won the world to Christ. It has been a sad defect in the leadership of the church that so little attention has been given to the spiritual culture of the men and women who have been brought under its influence and tutelage.

If we might have the attention of church people even now, we would lay this thought upon their hearts and minds. Today the crying need of the church is the training of its own members in the ways and service of the Christian life. How is it that we go to a church and find perhaps three-fourths of its members perfectly indifferent to the needs of the Master's vineyard? Why it is due chiefly to the fact that these men and women who are so indifferent to the calls of Christ have never been trained in His service. In most cases there has been no effort to train them to make them fruitful. Now we face the task of the Church of the twentieth century—its greatest task for the present, for while it does need to do a greater work in winning the world to Christ, now its first and greatest task till it is done, is to train and put its present membership into active service. We have faced it again and again, but it has seemed so Herculean that we have shrunken from the task and largely we have let it go untouched, and here is the weakness of our present day Christianity—it has a following, but a following that stands as helpless as if it were an outsider and not a follower at all, and this last is very nearly true, at least in many instances,—they have not become followers of the meek and lowly Christ.

Here stands the Church today, confessedly the biggest institution in all this big world of ours, and we should think at least three-fourths of its membership are as powerless, practically, as if they had never been brought into the church at all. Right here we believe we may find why it is that the revival fires are burning so low. It is not because the revival is not God's method of winning this world from sin and to Christ, but because the Church fails to take care of and train the great body of disciples He has already given us. He is waiting for us to catch up with our task so that He may give us other converts to train and to lead out into the field of service for the salvation of others who are yet in the way of ruin and in the shadow of great darkness. These He wishes saved just as much as he did you and me, but he wishes us to train those He has already given to us so that He may have room for new recruits and for a larger work.

What shall we do about it? Shall we rally to this thought and so give God the opportunity He seeks for winning the world to Himself? But if we would do this, we must do something worth while for the development of Christian character and Christian service on the part of those who have already been brought into the ranks of the church. A disabled or a disqualified soldier in the ranks is of no service, but a positive hindrance to the men who are seeking to bring the best results to harvest. Let us begin a campaign for the better training and service for our inactive members, and a new day will dawn on our organization.

GENERALLY IT IS SAFE TO KEEP TO THE OLD LINES.

Watch your motives, for motives govern and shape your life. This is a day in which individuals are appealed to do this or that to gain certain ends. Be careful how you respond to such calls. If you do a good thing through a wrong motive, you lose the blessing of the act. That is an easy thing to do—to lend your influence to an idea through a wrong motive. Therefore watch your step and see that you are kept along right lines and in the ways which God has marked out for His people. Many are the things which seem to have a good outside, as if just the thing a Christian ought to do, but when you get down toward the bottom, you may find that it was a temptation of the devil, while he was going forth, seeking whom he might devour, being arrayed in the garments of an angel. Do not be misled! Though it may be an angel who selects you to do certain things, if the things suggested be not in keeping the Word of the Lord possessing the spirit of the Master, then let it alone.

In this day when there are so many things appealing to the believer because they are "good," we need to be on our guard, or we shall find ourselves putting our hands to some work which has the appearance of being good, but is in fact bad—or at least contrary to the spirit and work of Jesus.

Church people have need to be doubly careful. Many an appeal to the Christian is based on the ground that it is "good," but you will do well to be careful or you may find yourself bolstering up some of the devil's sharp work—a work in which he seems to be doing the work of the Christian, but in fact he is doing his own work. How surely we do need to be watchful lest we be found in the role of a Christian, but doing the devil's work. Mrs. Maristan Chapman puts it this way:

"Stand by your Church. Breathe new life into it by living as an understanding member of that great corporate institution. To run after the "new cults," or "practical" Christianity is to chase a will-o-the-wisp that leads to atheism, or despair and deprive the Church of a strong arm of support in the hour of need."

Well said, and that means that you cannot be too careful to keep all your energies in the Church and for the Church.

IT SMELLS VERY BAD.

We refer to the vote recently taken by The Literary Digest in an effort to ascertain the sentiment (!) of the country on the question of Prohibition, or no Prohibition. It smells so strong of the presence of alcohol in the whole thing that we can't help wondering what the "wets" are going to do for The Digest for trying to help them reverse the sentiment of the people of the United States. And we find that we are not alone in this view, and we believe that from this time forward it will be cropping out on all sides that this vote was gotten out in the interest of the "wets" and to help them defeat the will of the people of this country, and if possible put whiskey back on the people of this country.

Do you ask: Why do you think so?

In the first place, there was, so far as we can see, no call for such a vote. In the second place, it seems that the voters were largely, if not wholly selected for a purpose, so that the vote should tell just the thing that is desired, a vote that should show so largely in favor of the liquor men as to induce the people to believe that the United States will soon reverse itself on the matter of prohibition. In the third place, it seems that men who were dry were largely ignored when the ballots were sent out. The men and the women who did not get an invitation and a ballot to vote are as thick as your fingers. The thought is gaining ground, if we do not misconceive the situation, that the whole thing was gotten up in the interest of the liquor men, to help them carry this country against prohibition.

Here is one reason that is very practical: Mr. S. T. Baugh, writing to The Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., says:

The Literary Digest Ballots.

Some two or three weeks ago you had a short article in the Christian Advocate urging all who received one of the Literary Digest's votes on the Eighteenth Amendment to use it.

My Church has a membership of 330 located in a town with a population of 2,500, and I have taken some time and trouble to ascertain how many people here have received one of the votes mentioned, and I can find only three or four. Being a subscriber to the Literary Digest and on their regular mailing list, I thought it strange that I did not receive a vote, and this first led me to make inquiry, and as a result I am confident the Literary Digest is endeavoring to pick their crowd. Having polled a vote last winter on this subject, why should they resurrect it unless it is to give the "wets" another chance? They are doing this to try to bring pressure to bear upon Congress for wines and beer. If you can secure any further evidence to this effect, I am sure you will put it into the Advocate that our people may take notice and show the wets where we stand.

S. T. BAUGH.

(We have received several letters similar to this, and many complaints of this kind are appearing in various religious papers.—Editors.)

The same is true of this editor. We subscribe to The Literary Digest; so making it certain that our name is on their list, but no vote came to us—The Digest was so anxious to get the people to vote for liquor, as it would seem, that where men were well known to be in favor of prohibition, they were not overrun with invitations to vote, and so it seems that the vote came out in the interest of the wets—just what it was most likely meant that it should do. We venture to suggest that The Digest will not have so many subscribers next year when it undertakes to turn the country over to the liquor interests. We recently heard of a group of forty persons, who were more or less prominent in the city in which they lived, and out of the forty, only two or three persons received an invitation to participate in the giving of this vote. It may be that the vote was taken with a sincere purpose to let the people see just what the real situation is, but if so, then it is strange that the list should have been such a select list and chiefly in favor of the liquor men. Indeed, we Christians had better keep our eyes open and keep close to our work, for there is danger even from an innocent babe, if you keep still and let him grow till he is able to do the work that may be assigned to him. While we delay and hesitate, the child may grow to be strong enough to give us a close call and, it may be, wrest the victory which is now safely in the hands of the "drys" for the "wets." It is time to get busy to keep our country dry. Do not lose an opportunity to do your part to show The Literary Digest that the United States still belongs to the "DRYS."

WHAT TO EXPECT OF THE PASTOR'S WIFE.

I have chosen to give my subject two divisions: First—What we do expect of our pastor's wives. Second—What we should expect of her. Since we expect more than we should, I chose to give that phase of the subject the prominent place, and hope to show thereby that our just claim to the time and talents of the pastor's wife is relatively small.

Usually we expect her to be a woman of many talents; a perfect housekeeper, with a disposition so sweet that half the women of the parish may dictate to her how she shall plan her work, how she shall feed the baby, how to care for the parsonage, where to place the furniture so as best to protect the floors, how to discipline the children, etc. We also desire that she shall accept kindly and heed our suggestions as to whether she may keep chickens on the premises, what outside duties she may assume, how she shall manage the finances so as to be able to live on a meager salary and keep the whole family well dressed.

Of course the children of the pastor's wife are the common property of all the parish. They must be talked to, teased, petted and questioned by all who wish to do so, and thus be denied the quiet, normal life which is every child's legitimate right; and yet they must have gracious and pleasing manners, and no sign of being spoiled. In addition to giving her children such training as will enable them to endure these strains and tests, we expect this great woman of the church to look well to her own and the children's religious life. She is expected to attend every service of the special revival meetings, and to be accompanied by all her children, who are thus kept up till unreasonable hours of the night amid all the nerve strain and excitement often attending such meetings. But this is not enough. We expect her to have the children up bright and sweet tempered in time for school each morning. After from two to six weeks of this kind of living, when the children, with twitching, unstrung nerves, become irritable and unpleasant, everybody will excuse them with the comment, "Preachers' children are always the worst in the world, anyway." I ask you, is it any wonder they should become as uncivil as our own children, under such conditions?

But we have other duties for this all-important woman. She is expected to be treasurer of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Secretary of the Home Missionary Society, and, of course, President of the Ladies Aid Society. If musical, she must assist the choir. It would be out of the question not to have her teach in the Sabbath School, and help with the Christian Endeavor. She should belong to the Civic League, and work actively in that society; and if the town does not have such an organization, she should organize one as soon as she is settled in her new home; and the W. C. T. U. always needs and wants her. She must return calls promptly, assist the pastor in all work and attend midweek prayer meetings.

This is not all. We of the parish have exalted views of this much-talked-of pastor's wife. She is expected to be always neatly attired and immaculate, ready at all hours of the day or night to receive callers smilingly; for her duties are a little different from yours and mine, and can always be postponed. Even if the little ones are hungry, dinner can wait, while she sympathetically listens to a tale of woe, and, of course, she is ever able to properly advise on all kinds of domestic trouble.

All this does not include the church socials, bazaars, bake sales and many other things which, as a pastor's good helpmeet, she must engineer. We have not time to enumerate the interminable list.

In studying the last division of this subject—What we should expect of our pastor's wife—let us apply the Golden Rule, and expect no more of her physically than we ourselves can do. Spiritually, she may outgrow us; but let us remember that she can be no more than a real human woman and mother, with optimistic faith in her husband (taking it for granted that he is worthy of her faith), in her children, in humanity at large and in her God. Let us remember that her children need the mother and home life, as yours and mine need them; that her brain and nerves tire as yours and mine do; that she is sensitive to insult and injustice, just as you and I are. She has household duties, and her body needs rest as yours and mine.

Therefore, were I a pastor's wife, I should, applying the Golden Rule, live just as I do now, performing my duties as I see them, regardless of what others may unreasonably expect, strengthened and cheered by the knowledge that I have to account only to my God for what I do and why I do it, and that "He knows the storms that would my way oppose,

And tempers every wind that blows."

VIRGILINA LETTER.

We have just closed a splendid revival meeting here at Virgilina under the auspices of the Christian Church. Evangelist Eastes of Norfolk and Julian P. Mourman of Bristol, Va., were here. The former did the preaching and the later had charge of the singing. After the second service we moved into one of the warehouses and provided seats for seven hundred. The Methodists and Baptists joined heartily with us and while not so planned, it was a real union meeting. There were eighty professions of faith and more than fifty to unite with the different churches. One thing unusual is the large number of adults among those who united with the church. Mr. Eastes is not sensational. His doctrine sound and methods of conducting a meeting appealing. He deals largely with the practical things of life, is free from abuse of the non-christian and reaches through a message of love. Mr. Mourman is a refined and sincere christian gentleman. Each of these men made a fine impression and did lasting good. Seven hundred dollars were contributed during the fifteen days meeting for the evangelists and local expenses.

WINCHESTER ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The First Christian Church of Winchester has been highly honored recently by the visit of a number of our leading workers from a distance. Prof. A. L. Hook, Dean of Elon College spoke for us on Sunday evening, August 13th, and gave us a fine account of the work our college is doing. His address was very much enjoyed by all present. In fact we had a regular Elon College service.

Professor Hook is a son of Mrs. R. C. Hook, and the late R. C. Hook of this city, and as a most beautiful memorial to his father, he has given to the Winchester church a scholarship in Elon College for the freshman year, which means that one boy or girl going from this church to Elon, will get free tuition for their first year in college. The scholarship is to be known as the "R. C. Hook Scholarship." The church and pastor thoroughly appreciate this generous gift from Professor Hook, and hopes it may be the means of her having a representative at Elon real soon, and that this representation may be continuous.

Dr. W. T. Walters preached for us on Sunday evening, August 20th. He is the founder of our church here, and was her first and only pastor for the first ten years of her life. Dr. Walters did a great work here, and his many friends are always glad to have him visit them. He is always welcome, and his presence among us always proves a great blessing.

The work in this church is moving on fairly well, and we desire the prayers of the entire brotherhood that we may move forward in the interest of the Kingdom of our Christ.

J. F. MORGAN, Pastor.

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER.

The other day I was conferring with a devout and active layman of our Brotherhood relative to another matter. He is an executive head in a great business corporation that has connections with all parts of the world. His view of any question is far from parochial. He is accustomed to considering any proposition from the standpoint of its ultimate issues.

He is a big business man, but he is first of all a Christian. And so conversation with him inevitably, naturally, drifts to the Church and how to promote the interests of the Kingdom of God. He believes in a world-wide evangel just as he practices a world-wide business policy. He is missionary through and through. The world is the Kingdom's parish he thinks. He knows too the necessity for united action.

Speaking about Christian Education, he expressed regret that sometimes our most successful laymen have been so shortsighted and so unappreciative of the religious values of life as to send their sons and daughters to other than our own college. To this big-businessed laymen the Christian life give flavor to every other consideration or enterprise of living. For him the spiritual interests are first. No inducement could be strong enough to wrench him from his determination to support and patronize his own Elon. He lamented the sad fact that some of our remarkably successful laymen had evidently allowed other considerations to influence them to withhold their patronage from their own college. "If our leading young people do not patronize our college," he said in substance, "We will hold our own at a losing rate. We cannot expect denominationally to go forward unless we get our most favorably situated youth in line in their college days with our own work and policy as a people."

"Then," changing the subject to a new phase, he continued: "We need to unify our various programs and line up our local churches in harmony with the scheme as a whole. He illustrated his point by citing his own business. He named a dozen or so plants which they were operating and told how the general officers acting on the authority of the directors standardize the business and gear all its several parts together so that a weakness at any point is readily detected by the keen eye of the skilled executive. "That is how our business grows," he concluded, "and that is how our church will grow."

Pressed for a specific plan by which a democratic body, such as ours, could be brought to such a program, he modestly tried to evade the responsibility, but eventually I gathered from his answers to my many queries that we should proceed somewhat as follows: The heads of the various departments of our Southern Christian Convention work should meet with the Convention president in executive session for the adoption of a program. Preceding this executive session each department head, such as Missions, Orphanage, Publication, Education, Religious Education, and the rest should have secured the approval of his board relative to his program, for the year, with the understanding that the executive session to follow might change it to harmonize with the general program. After the program's adoption, it should be played up in The Sun and in suitable pamphlets and co-operated in by all pastors and congregations."

"I would expect in this way," he went on to say, "to eliminate all seeming competition between the various enterprises of the church and, positively speaking, I would correlate and unify their work in such a way that every enterprise would receive due and adequate support. I dislike to hear of some church as being a missionary church, or of some Sunday school as being an Orphanage Sunday school, or of a third group as being for Elon. Every church, every organization of every church, every individual member of every church, should be for every enterprise of our denomination because only as all departments flourish can our denomination really make consistent and permanent progress."

I have thought deeply on this layman's suggestions. The more I have thought on them, the surer I am that he is right. We need to work together, our boards do. Our every enterprise constitutes a single work and should be included in a denomination-wide program. The various heads of our several departments will find that better results will accrue from co-operative, geared-together action than by our present method. What does President Smith say relative to the matter? What do you say, reader of these lines? It is our work. Let us speak our mind.

A LOOK INTO THE FUTURE

From August 17th to 19th, this writer was highly honored with the privilege of attending the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference at Joppa church, in Shenandoah County. Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., Minister First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., was re-elected president, for the eighteenth time. Brother Walters is a man of unusual intelligence and natural ability, a fluent speaker and a fine presiding officer. The business of the conference worked smoothly from the start to the close. President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, made two fine addresses. Chas. D. Johnston, of the Orphanage, spoke Friday morning, giving at length a fine picture of the great work the institution is doing for the church. Rev. J. F. Morgan, the Minister of First Church, Winchester, is a new addition to the conference, and a valuable one too, for he is what this writer considers and all round complete preacher, always ready to engage at any time in the King's business. If he is not a Doctor of Divinity, and I was Manager of a College, I certainly would want the honor to confer such an honorable degree upon one so well qualified to do the Master's work. He preached a great sermon Thursday night. Delivered a stirring address Friday night, and Saturday morning. To be sure his Winchester people feel proud of this good pastor and spiritual man, who can sing the gospel, preach it, and live the gospel. Rev. R. P. Crumpler, of the Page work, is doing a fine work, and one of the rising young men of the conference. Rev. W. C. Hook, who has just accepted the Rockingham charge, near Harrisonburg, Va., was present and read a great report on "Moral Reform" which was just the straight and unvarnished truth, needed today in Christian living. He made a stirring address on Missions. Rev. A. W. Andes, the popular secretary, and traveling pastor, who traveled last year to his appointments eight thousand miles, and had time between to make five hundred and sixty-seven pastoral visits. Preaching as he went more than two hundred sermons, and received thirty-five members into the church. Rev. W. M. Clem, was licensed to preach, and goes to Yale University this fall to take three years' work in that great institution. From the observations of a visitor at this conference session, the future prospects and growth for the Valley Conference is fine.

This conference functions in the great Valley of Virginia, Hampshire Co., West Virginia, Green Co. and Albemarle, east of the Blue Ridge. Some of the most wealthy farmers in the great Valley are members of the Christian Church, and when they are led to lay their wealth upon the lap of the Church for Christ and the blessing in their own lives, the Conference treasury will be enlarged, larger salaries, and more pastorates, and a new spiritual vision will come to the people. With the abundance of wealth, if these good people, will right their giving by the Word of God, and become tithers, untold blessings will be their's. Then Charlottesville, Harrisonburg, Staunton, and other cities in which this Conference works, will have Churches established. The Spirit Filled life will solve many of the problems, which are unsolved now.

Prayer is essential to a Spirit-Filled life. Many people when first saved neglect this one thing and as a result soon find themselves in a back-slidden condition. Prayer is the key that unlocks the door of heaven. Prayer feeds the soul. Paul said pray without ceasing. Meeting the enemy with such a powerful weapon as prayer, you will be sure to conquer even in the hottest fight. Reading the Word of God is another important factor in the spiritual life. Christian Friends, if you do not enjoy reading God's Word, ask Him to so fill you with his Spirit that you shall be eager to read the precious Scriptures. Both prayer and the reading of the Word are essential to a spiritual life, and so is meditation. The heart and the head, should be linked up with Christian Education, which when completely consecrated with each faculty, with the burning love of God, and the Holy Spirit. With Isaiah when completely cleansed, we can say, "Here am I, send me." There are many today who do not believe the Bible, and therefore the saved Christian must do all he can to help the blinded by sin. Cunning plans of the devil, read in between the lines false interpretations of the Scriptures greatly hinder the work. A young preacher was teaching a Training Class. They were discussing lessons in the Old Testament when the young preacher was asked, if the leading of the children of Israel across the Red Sea was a Miracle? The young preacher, explained: "No this was no Miracle, the winds blew so hard that its mighty force blew the water aside and they passed over on dry land. Said he, if you should go to Palestine in this day, and go down to the Red Sea, on a day when the wind blew hard, you could just walk across on dry land." Brethren, with such new theology being taught and sent out today to befuddle the minds of those who are holding to the Church with name on church roll, what can we expect? This is good reason why we need to preach and teach loyalty to the Book of Books, and its divine inspiration. The Holy Ghost in the heart and complete transformation of the whole man, will stem the tide of this new theology and worldliness which is sweeping our country. The same preacher mentioned above, also said in reply to a question, that where he was Educated they no longer believed the Bible, and insinuated that a certain kind of culture, brought a man out into the bigness of this new theology, that after a man received so much of this new doctrine and minus the heart life, that in his blindness he would chase a frog, around for a thousand miles, he had discovered that he was mistaken, that there was no such a thing as a frog. Oh, for men who love the dear Old Book, with God's mind, love and grace shining forth to His saved children. Please, readers, do not misunderstand me, I am a firm believer in Education, and my advice to every young man called to the Ministry is to thoroughly prepare himself for this holy calling. I well remember how I burned the lights for seven years until twelve and one o'clock at night for the Education, and if I could call back twenty years would not stop until I had gone through the University. Christian Education, in some safe and Christian school, where the Gospel is still believed, and men love God. This is why we need to live a spiritual life. God desires a life that will glorify him. Will a sinful life do this? Will carelessness or indifference please the Lord? God wants our best. He will not be pleased with anything that comes short of that." We are His for life. We have surrendered to him ourselves and all we possess. Our conversation and conduct should be in keeping with a holy life. Give God the glory in all things that through you he might be glorified. God wants his children to be so filled with the Holy Ghost that they will be able to help others. Many souls are going to destruction and ruin. What are we doing to save them? Hundreds of people are on beds of affliction, suffering from pain, discouraged, and without Christ. They are just waiting to hear an encouraging word. New converts need to be guided into fellowship with the Holy Ghost. The majority of people are seeking worldly pleasure with little or no thought of God. Many are hungering for the Truth. Thousands of children are outside of the Sunday School. The red light districts of many of our cities have been put upon rubber tires, and taken out to the woodlands, and into the country. Millions of heathens are groping in darkness. They are just waiting to hear the sweet story of Jesus. Will we give them Christ? Yes, when the Church brings all her tithes into the storehouse of the Lord?

Are we then led by the Spirit, filled with the Spirit? If the Churches, and our conferences are to win souls in the future, she must be like the burning bush Abraham looked upon, and was not consumed, she must be a flame with holy spiritual fire, burning sin, and purifying folks' minds, that they may think the thoughts of God. With Dr. J. Pressley Barrett, editor of the "Christian Sun," with its enlarged form, we prophecy that before two years five thousand subscribers will enroll to have this safe religious paper shine in their homes. For twenty-five years we have known the good editor, a man who believes the Bible, a Christian. When Mrs. Baugher heard Dr. Barrett was elected editor of the "Christian Sun," she said we will have to subscribe for the "Sun." He has preached in my Church, and broken bread with us around our table, and prayed and gave us spiritual advice in our humble home. Brethren, help him and Prof. Kernodle, managing editor, to reach the five thousand mark. Your friend and brother.

THE EMPLOYER AND THE EMPLOYEE.

In the Columbus, Ga., Ledger of July 9th, there appeared an address by Rev. R. F. Brown, pastor of the Rose Hill Christian church. It was delivered to the striking members of the Shop Crafts. It is published here because the subject is one of special interest at this time. Mr. Brown spoke as follows:

"The laboring man is an essential factor in the welfare of the world. And the man who does his work wisely, judiciously and honestly is worthy of the esteem and honor of not only his employer, but of all who are benefited directly or indirectly by his labor. In the past, the rights, the justice and the common good of the employee has not always been recognized and conceded by the employer. As an honest, painstaking employee, he is entitled to some of the profits, some of the good ensuing from his labor. The wise man said, "In the Divine economy, all true labor ends in advantage. Labor means industry, diligent devotion and conscientious attention to conditions that demand our thought and serious consideration. And it should be remembered by both employer and employee that whatever we possess in life should be the result of some form of true labor; it may be the hand or the head, but it must in some sense be true labor. In thinking of labor and its advantages, it would be well to bear in mind the fact that profit is sometimes as truly found in labor itself as in the material advantages which it brings. With every stroke of the hammer the muscles are developed. With the formation of every great program of life there comes the blessing of satisfaction and contentment.

Such is the testimony of every employee. And the right of the employee to organize to promote the advantages of his labor are beyond question. If that organization does not supersede the law or infringe upon the rights of others.

DAY OF RESTRICTIONS.

This is a day of restrictions. While it is a well recognized fact that there are certain well defined rights and constitutional liberties, it is also true that the American of today is sharply restricted with reference to his employment. Some of these restrictions are enforced by the government itself, while many of the restrictions are enforced by public sentiment and need. An American has a right to work only at such jobs, for such people and at such times as will not interfere with the plans of the government, or prove detrimental to public interest and welfare. No one has a right to brew, distill, and sell intoxicating liquor. No one has a right to work for Germany or soviet Russia when his own nation is at war with them. No one has a right to open his place of business or picture show on Sunday, and this will not be tolerated by those who love the sanctity of the Sabbath.

On the other hand an individual does have the right to quit work when the conditions of his employment fail to mete justice to himself and family, and prove detrimental to his health and happiness. But no great profit can come to any group of men who on the ground of their rights and freedom, practice abstention to obtain their individual advantages and at the same time willfully ignore the interests of the people in general who may be detrimentally effected by their action. Agitation for justice and fair play is legitimate; but a strike which thrusts distress and hardships and sufferings upon thousands of innocent people who are not in as good circumstances as the strikers themselves and who do not profit from the advantages of the strike, is wrong. In a controversy a person may obtain a temporary right, but in obtaining this right he may inflict a tremendous wrong upon someone else. Peace of conscience, the love of one's fellow man, and a contented mind are more valuable than material possessions. The greater should never be sacrificed for the less. Too often the substance is lost in seeking the shadow. Men are intricate parts of each other. Study, devotion, painstaking virtue and work are their own reward. If we could apply this truth to all conditions of life, there would be less misunderstanding, less trouble and less suffering in the world.

COMPETING AGENCIES.

Capital and labor are competing agencies. They both possess great power. Capital employs the best legal talent, keeps the best executive ability at the front, and demands the right to have the last word in all things. The chief weapon of labor in its struggle for victory is the strike system. This is often followed by persuasion. But when these fail, labor's only recourse is violence. The methods employed by these agencies do not approach the solution of the problem. Brains and money accomplish the same unwarranted ends that the strike system, followed by violence, accomplishes. The course of their procedure defeats the purpose of their beginning. Class antipathies breed disorder and desolation.

It seems to the speaker that there ought to be some way by which the differences between the organized employers and the organized employees could be amicably settled. In justice to my convictions I am constrained to offer the following solution to this perplexing problem:

It seems to me that conciliation is the first step in the solution of this problem. This is the Christian way. This is God's method. The golden rule may find ample opportunity here. But this method can never be effective until each party weighs his contentions in the light of the other party's circumstances. It may not be pleasant to love those who would spitefully use us, but that is the Divine way. It sometimes humbles our pride to be compelled to retire from a controversy without being acclaimed victor. On the other hand, it is an insult to our reason, our dignity, and our better selves to persist in a contention when we are only marking time and hindering others in their pursuit of happiness.

COURT OF ARBITRATION.

This solution is not a mere theory. It is a possibility to be realized. The only means by which this possibility can be made a realization is through an industrial court of arbitration. In such a court each side can be brought to realize the other side's point of view. It is a lamentable fact that at present labor has no other defense or recourse than the strike system. And so long as this condition obtains one strike will follow another, no matter what the law is, or how incessantly public opinion asserts itself. Justice and equity are principles for which men and nations pitch battle. And not until the government sets up industrial court of arbitration will industrial differences be settled with any measure of satisfaction to both sides. It is readily conceded by any rational mind that the employer has no mere legal right to exact unfair terms of employment than the employee has to exact unfair terms for his employment. This point can be made obvious and emphatic only by an industrial court of arbitration. I can have no kindlier wish therefore than that there shall be established in the near future such a court so that disaster may be averted and humanity saved from desolation and distress.

That is an interesting question. Seven Senators, all dry have been renominated and all the new nominations for Senators are "dry." That is very good, and what is better is the fact that in 21 States the "drys" were in the lead, while the "wets" suffered a net loss in every state primary election thus far held. The "wets" are desperate in their losses and there is no sign of a change of the sentiment of the country as to prohibition. In the late primaries only one "dry" congressman was defeated, while the new nominations are only about one-third "wet," leaving two-thirds "dry." The efforts the "wets" are making show clearly that they are desperate, and they see no hope of winning. All this betokens a new Era of real prosperity for the United States. Really we think the outlook for permanent prohibition was never better than it is now after two years of actual trial.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

HIS WORK IS HONORABLE AND GLORIOUS.

It is supposed that David wrote Psalm one hundred and eleven. For David was a "man after God's own heart" and as such highly exalted the works and ways of the Lord. Not that David never sinned, for he did and that very grievously. But having sinned in the weakness of the flesh, and made aware of his sin, he repented in sack cloth and ashes. But more than this. In all his ways David sought to honor and exalt the name of his Lord. David believed in God, in His power to save, and then David counted it good and glorious and honorable to work for God in every way he could. Be it understood that our good works do not save us. Salvation comes first; works follow.

"For by grace ye are saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Ephesians 2:8-10.

We do not work then to be saved. We work because we are saved, and because, as David says in Psalm one hundred and eleven, "His work is honorable and glorious." (Verse 3).

It is an honorable and a most glorious thing to work for the Lord, provided we do it, not to buy our salvation with, nor to be seen and honored of men, but to the glory of the Lord and because of our love to Him.

As I read these scriptures and meditate on them this morning I am thinking of that vast host of men and women in our Christian Church who have been given the opportunity of working for the Lord, and thus of doing an honorable and glorious work, through our Men and Millions Movement. Here is undoubtedly a work of the Lord. He has divinely pointed us the way to it, and graciously revealed this great task. In every church there have been selected a Captain and a Woman Leader to carry forward the work in the name and strength of their Lord. These men and women are not working for pay or honor or glory; they are working as David worked, because "His work is honorable and glorious." Such work brings a joy and peace and satisfaction that the world can neither take away nor give.

Since Men and Millions is the one movement looking to the progress and development of all that our Christian Church stands for; we know it is of the Lord, if our Church is. He who works for Men and Millions works for the Christian

THE CHURCH FOUNDED AND FORWARDED THROUGH REVELATION.

TEXT: Mat. 16:17. Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

Fragments of truth are given us by reason; whole truths, big truths, are given us by revelation. The Church is no fragment of truth. It is a big truth and so it was given through revelation. The disciples were giving the definitions of Christ arrived at by speculation, by reason. Of a sudden there burst upon the mind of one of them a great revelation. It was as true and as accurate and as comprehensive as God Himself could make it, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Flesh and blood, that is to say, study and research could never have discovered that. It was a truth greater than mind and matter could grapple with, discover and lay bare. Only the mind of God could discover that only a revelation from God could make it known to men.

Here was a revelation of unusual proportion and character. For something in it suggested to the mind of Christ the Church. This is the first time He had used the word Church, or had ever spoken of or hinted at founding a Church. When God revealed to a man the true nature of the Christ then for the first time the word Church leaps to the lips of the Christ and the thought of the Church is first mentioned by Him. Evidently the character of this revelation was such as to suggest the founding, the beginning, the building of the Church. The character of this revelation was manifested in its making known to man the real nature of the Christ. Evidently, then, the Church was founded as an institution through which the revelation of Christ's character should be made known to and expressed in the world. Therefore the business of the Church is to express to the world the revelation of Christ's real being and character.

The Church was not only founded through revelation. It has always grown, made progress through and by revelation. From time to time God has revealed some great truth to some individual, as He did to Peter, and then the Church has gone forward. God revealed to John Wesley the great truth of free grace. At that time the Church was suffering from stagnation, spiritual paralysis. Out of that revelation a wave of evangelism began and to this day it has not ceased. Every branch of the true Church began from some impression or revelation which God wished expressed in the world.

One day a man had a revelation, (or a divine impression, which is the same thing) that Christian was a sufficient name for the Church. He expressed that with which he had been impressed. One somewhere was impressed divinely, that is, had a revelation that Christ was the only head of the Church. One was somewhere impressed, had the revelation that the Bible was a sufficient rule of faith and practice. Another was divinely impressed, had it revealed to him, that Christian character was a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership. And then one was impressed, had the revelation, that private judgment was a right and a privilege that belonged to and should be exercised by all. Out of these revelations of divine truth our Christian Church was born. And on these revelations of divine truth our Christian Church was born. And on these revelations of truth our Church has stood for more than a hundreds years.

Now from time to time this Church has sought to express to the world the revelation that it had received. It felt once that its ideas and ideals, its desires and doctrine, should be expressed to the world through the printed page. Then religious journalism was born amongst us and we began printing, at first monthly, and then weekly, The Christian Sun, and other Christian publications. Again an impression came that we should train our youths in Bible study and the works of righteousness. From that divine impression our Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor were born. Through these enterprises we seek to express our Church life in the minds and hearts of our youths. Then our ancestors in the Church were impressed, had it revealed to them, that we should express the ideals and doctrines of the Church, through Christian education, by training our young in a Christian institution. Out of that impression Elon College was born, and our other Christian colleges. Then we were impressed with the fact that if we were to fulfill the ends and purposes for which the Church was founded we must carry the character of the Christ into far off and near by districts where He was not known. Out of that impression Missions were born, home and foreign. And then we had the impression that if we were to express the pity and compassion of our Lord to the world we must as a Church care for the fatherless and motherless ones. Out of that impression and the attempt to express it our Christian Orphanage was born. One day God impressed us with the idea that we should express our gratitude to our aged ministers and their widows. Then our superannuated fund was born. But God had impressed us long ago with the thought that we should have one enterprise that would mother all these movements and nurture into strength and activity all the interests and enterprises that should be given us with which to express our Church life to the world. Hence He gave us the Southern Christian Convention. Friends and beloved, these are the seven channels of expression God has so far given us through which we make known to the world the revelation, the divine impression, our ancestors in the Lord received. Just seven and no more.

And now, thank God, there has been revealed to us in these latter days a Movement whose only object and sole purpose is to aid all these seven enterprises are expressions of our Church life, and carry them to greater efficiency. This is our Men and Millions Movement. This is our greatest, this is our one great missionary movement because through it we seek to send the gospel out through all the seven channels of our church life and reveal to the wide world the character of the Christ as God has given Him to us. This is the first time, the only time in all our history, that God has summoned all of us to show our love, loyalty and devotion to all the seven enterprises of our Church at one and the same time. Surely our Men and Millions Movement has come into the Kingdom for just such a time as this. The world war called us to loyalty and devotion to our land and other lands, too. Now God is calling us to show a loyalty, a love and a devotion to all the interests and enterprises of His Kingdom. This call is our men and millions. Think of it, dear friends. He who contributes a dollar next Sunday to Men and Millions, in that one act he makes a contribution and expresses his devotion and concern for all of the interests and enterprises of the Kingdom as God has seen fit to make known that Kingdom to us.

Our Men and Millions Movement is the five cardinal principles of the Christian Church expressing themselves in terms of the seven enterprises of the Church. Rightly understood one can no more object to or oppose Men and Millions than he can object to or oppose the enterprises God has given us to declare and manifest those principles to the world.

And then God's hand and power was manifested in another and still more marvelous and marked manner. In a time of plenty we made our pledges to help further the interests of His Kingdom. That time of plenty is gone. Now he is trying us to see if we have faith. We must pay those pledges not out of plenty, for that would not have tested us; but out of our need and want and poverty. That tests us and proves our faith. And so, beloved, as we show our love and loyalty and devotion to all that God has given us in our Church life, and stand the trial of our faith by meeting and paying our pledges, there will come to us as a Church a victory we had not dreamed of, and a joy, glory and growth we have never known.

Let us be faithful, true and loyal is these testing times and God will bring great things, even the glory of His salvation to pass before our very eyes. Through men and millions we are seeking to declare to all the world that which Peter declared through revelation that, "Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God."

WITHIN OR WITHOUT GOD'S KINGDOM.

It is possible to be almost within and yet be without God's Kingdom. Jesus told the questioning scribe, "Thou art not far from the Kingdom of God," yet he was without. He knew there is one God, and he knew to love Him "with all the heart, and all the soul, and all the mind, and with all the strength," was more than to offer up burnt offerings and sacrifices. Yet there is nothing to tell us that he obeyed Jesus—"this do and thou shalt live." Woe unto that man or woman who knows and does not. Woe unto those who neglect to use their knowledge and opportunities." "How shall ye escape if ye neglect so great salvation?" How shall ye escape if ye neglect the opportunities which the Lord gives you for service, be they great or small?

In keeping with what our Lord said was the first and greatest of all the commandments, we keep all. People can refrain from lying and swearing and stealing, they can live a clean, moral life without the love of God in the heart. But no one can love God with all the heart and soul and mind and strength, and desecrate His day, or His house. One who so loves Him could not take His holy name in vain, nor could the heart be filled with covetousness toward their neighbor's possessions. Neither could they lie, or steal, or kill, or live an unclean life. They could not do it because their love for Him which is so great that it has taken possession of their whole being, would not let them do the evil deeds which He has forbidden. Their supreme desire is to "keep His commandments and do those things that are pleasing in his right." "The love of Christ constrains us,"—drives us with overpowering force to do His will. It also restrains His followers from doing the things which our Lord has forbidden.

The Lord's people are not only commanded to love Him with all their heart, soul, mind and strength, but they are also commanded to "serve Him with all thy heart and with all thy soul." The words which He has commanded they are to "teach diligently unto thy children, and thou shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." Thinking upon our duty, our relation to our loving heavenly Father the last thing at night and the first thing in the morning. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." If we love God with all the heart, we are going to talk much about Him and His goodness. We are also going to try to please Him. We are going to cleave fast to Him and abide with Him in faith and the practice of His will, persevering unto the end.

The true Christian is in the world but not of the world. His home is in Heaven. He is a pilgrim and stranger on earth. He is an ambassador here on business for the King. We know very well if an ambassador to England, France, or any country, would neglect our country's interests, they would be called to account. The Word very plainly tells us the King of kings is going to reckon with His servants, rewarding the faithful and casting out the unfaithful. Are you today walking in all His ways? Do you love Him with all your heart, and soul, and mind, and strength?

Or, does money, pleasure or prominence in worldly affairs, or doing your church work for the prominence it gives you, have first place in your mind? Do you know you have a place within God's kingdom? Do you know you would go to "be forever with the Lord," if He should come today? Oh, there are so many searching questions we need to ask ourselves, and we had better face them here than in the judgment. The judgment is sure, and the Judge of all the earth will do right. When He says "come ye blessed of my Father," or "depart from me," it is for all eternity. No one wants to spend eternity in "outer darkness." Have you made your "calling and election" sure by paying the price, renouncing the world to follow Jesus, that you may spend eternity with your blessed Redeemer?

AUBURN AND AMELIA CHURCHES.

The writer has just returned to his desk from two meetings with two of our best Country Churches in North Carolina, Auburn and Amelia. He was assisted in both meetings by Mrs. Knight, and Mr. W. B. Johnson of Raleigh, N. C., who had charge of the music through both meetings. They kept the big crowds singing, and in fine shape for the services. Brother Johnson is an all-round worker. In addition to playing and singing for the services of the meetings he tuned Pianos over the communities between the services. He endeared himself to the people. He is a second Sam Davis at the Piano, and in addition holds the crowds with his Solo work. Everybody fell in love with "Bill."

Our first meeting was with the people at Amelia. This in many respects was different from any meeting we ever held. Our Church is located in one of the greatest Church going communities I know anything about. Everybody turned out, and this was a great church meeting. Not more than five unsaved people attended a single service of the meeting. The whole community took hold of the meeting, and was greatly revived—quite a number of professions and reconsecrations. One united with the local church and two or three others will come later. This church has suffered through the division and organization of the Clayton Church, but is beginning to regain its strength. It is a great people to work with, and they are always ready to do their part.

Our next meeting was with the Church at Auburn. Here as in the case of Amelia, we have served until the people could get a pastor. Our greatest need here is room, the church being about half large enough to accommodate the crowds that came. The building was literally packed, and great numbers crowded the windows and doors—with some returning home for lack of accommodations. Two special features of this meeting were: A dedication service for young people, in which about thirty dedicated their lives to active service for Christ; and a Home Call service, in which nearly a hundred older people best year in the life of the community. The pledged themselves to make the next year the bases will be Bible study and prayer, for more pious lives everywhere. We were favored here with a visit from the "South Side Singers," a triple quartet of young men from the South Side Baptist Church of Raleigh. Their selections were great and most highly appreciated. So far there have been three additions to the church from the meeting, and others yet to come.

Since the work of the writer with the Raleigh Church will cease October 31st, both Auburn and Amelia are on the outlook for a pastor, and the man who takes either of these churches will find a congregation of the most loyal and devoted workers in the denomination. I have never yet seen a congregation more loyal to their pastor than these two churches have been since we first met them. They are in fine working shape, and the writer is trying to help each of them secure a man who will keep the work going in fine shape. Both churches have a fine bunch of young people who are loyal to the work.

VALLEY LETTER.

I have been too busy to write any news of my work for some time, and these few lines are a bit out of date. I held a revival meeting at Maryland in May resulting in four conversions and five additions to the church.

Immediately following the Maryland meeting I held a meeting at Timber Ridge. Here I was ably assisted by Rev. J. F. Morgan, of Winchester who did the preaching. Mrs. Morgan was with us also much of the time and rendered valuable assistance in music. The people at Timber Ridge soon became very fond of Bro. Morgan and wife. There were twelve conversions, and sixteen additions to the church.

I have held only about half my revival meetings this year, and expect to continue holding only about half of them each year as long as I have nine churches in charge. That will give each church a meeting every two years, which is not as often as they need a meeting, I know, but I must have some time and strength left for other departments of the work.

All my churches were able to report all conference apportionments paid in full at the recent session of our conference. To have this department of the work in first class shape requires much time and expense in writing and traveling. Most of this time and expense could be saved to me if church members were always as prompt and liberal as they should be. One great need of churches is that they put energy, business, forethought, and promptness in to their work equal to that which they put into the work of the world. Surely the work of the church is equal in importance to any other work in the world. Let us work at it as if we really thought so. To make the work of the church and serving the Lord a mere unimportant side issue while business and pleasure become the main things in life is to be guilty of a grievous blunder and a great sin. But how numerous are these blunders, and how common is this sin! People of the living God it ought not so to be.

A. W. ANDES.

Harrisonburg, Va., Aug. 23, 1922.

Some one thinks that the pledges of the Men and Millions Movements will not be paid in the Christian Church. Why, why not? Because some could not do it exactly when it was due? That is only what all the denominations have found to be true, but then they keep right on collecting, and of course, they will collect the larger portion of it. Yes, the Christian Church we think is not one whit behind the other churches in collecting this fund, and we hope the day may come when the most of it, if not all, will be collected. Let us persevere in every good work. Do your part and that will make you feel better.

More and more let the people of the Christian Church lay stress on Christian education—we must have that, or we prefer not to have any. Yes, we would prefer to have Christian education, or not to have any.

Present History of Haiti

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

NOTES: By invitation of the Editor, it gives me pleasure to supply THE SUN with a few articles on Haiti. My present plans are to give them in a series with subjects as follows:

Haiti—An Historical Sketch.
Haiti—Today.
Haiti—Her People.
Haiti—Her Agriculture.
Haiti—Her Religion.

For the facts of my information I am indebted to Mr. W. P. Davis, the President of the American Sugar Company, who has been here six years and has devoted much of his time to collecting material in preparation of an authentic history of Haiti, and he is an authority.

HAITI—HER PRODUCTIONS.

No. 4.

From the beginning of European occupancy unto the present, Haiti has been thought to be rich. It was first thought to be rich with its gold, but aside from a little of this found in Santo Domingo, none of any consequence has been located. The French discovered rich loam of the valleys and plains and even on the hillside and believing that there was hidden there great possibilities, with the use of a great many slaves, which cost them but little, during the century of their occupation they did grow very rich.

Their produce consisted mainly of cotton, coffee, sugar cane, indigo, produce for the markets, mahogany and dye woods for the world. All their labors, it appears, were centered in the production of these things. It was said that there was not a country in the whole world more suitable for agriculture than Haiti. They thought so, but experience, though enriching, proved that they had to work for it and under great disadvantages. There is a rainy season and there is a dry season; and though the soils in the plains is loamy and rich, there is but little subsoil. Thus irrigation was necessary and this no doubt was one of their greatest tasks. But from the old signs appearing here and there, they must have spent much time, pains and money in making the scheme a success. The old dams and ditches indicate an extensive irrigation system to meet all the demands of water.

The system varied. That is, there were large estates and small ones. The large ones were situated in the plains, and the small ones, operated by the peasantry, were in the mountains. These were the chief sources of their exports and wealth.

The Peasantry grew large amounts of garden produce, some grew rice and Indian corn, but not in sufficient quantities to supply the market. But when the French disappeared and revolutions took place, everything else disappeared. The estates were left, slaves became free and hated everything that had the semblance of their former experiences. Earthquakes took place and rent things terrifically. What was once vast estates now is ruin and jungle. To this day, I am told, many will not work in the cane fields because of their prejudices. Ask them to come and work in the cane fields and many reply "Moue pas asclave" (I'm not a slave).

But things are much changed again. One of the first things attracting our attention is the Hasco Sugar Co., an American firm who owns vast tracts of land in the plain known as the Cal De Sac. Here thousands of acres of sugarcane is grown every year, and their mills, in the months of December to May are busy converting the cane into raw material, and shipping it to the northern markets. They have irrigated and are making it a normal success. They own about one hundred miles of railroad and this is doing business enough to keep them going. There is an experimental farm near Port au Prince, in charge of a competent man, a Jamaican. Young men are given agricultural courses here with the hope of improvements. I have not heard it spoken of as very successful. Aside from this the farming is by the peasantry and limited to gardening which is of extreme primitive type.

The women do the most of the work, and as a result we see in the markets: tomatoes, sweet potatoes, (but they never grow sweet), yams, turnip, cabbage, pumpkins, squash, melons, lettuce, radish, peppers, water-kress, pine-apples, Indian corn, pistache (small peanuts), onions, rice, egg-plant, watermelons, cucumbers, muskmellons, strawberries, chickens, turkeys and eggs. Other fruits are: Mangoes, avocads (alligator pears), oranges, limes, bananas, coconuts, and plantains. There are other fruits the names of which I do not know which are of but little importance. Other more staple products are: cotton, coffee, a little tobacco, charcoal (besides wood this is the only fuel used), indigo, castor bean, rum, lime, hides, molasses, rhappadoo (brown sugar).

Of the above, very little is planted. Nearly everything grows naturally and the natives harvest that which grows itself. The coffee reproduces itself and they continue to pick the coffee berries from the semi-wild plants left by the French. Almost everywhere these may be found. The export of this product amounts to quite a nice business during the course of a year. Cotton is produced in much the same way. It grows wild. Is harvested from the bushes, which are almost trees, and used both for native purposes and for exporting. Other employments are: mahogany, dye, raising cattle, making furnitures, salt from the shore of the sea, shoes made from hides, baskets of every description made from grass, and fishing, et cetera.

There is no middle class in Haiti. There is a goodly group of shoemakers and tailors in the various towns, some carpenters, masons, and other so called skilled workmen. Since Prof. Kelsey puts this question so well, I will quote from him: "The visitor notices, however, that if he finds a little cigar factory he will discover a cuban or Dominican as its head. If he seeks to have his glasses repaired he finds a man from Jamaica or Martinique. He finds many Haitians in charge of small shops but he also finds that nearly all of the larger enterprises are in the hands of foreigners, most of whom are Europeans. Even in the higher business circles he is freely told that in days gone by all big money was made not by taking a legitimate profit on merchandise bought or sold, but by speculating in local money by dodging customs duties with the aid of dishonest officials, or by financing revolutionary and anti revolutionary movements. Any real investment in enterprises which would be of permanent value to the country, whether by natives or foreigners, has been almost non-existent. The foreigner has sought to make his money in the quickest and easiest way possible and then to get out, while the native who prospered has preferred to go to Europe to spend his accumulation. 'Why should I visit the interior of the country?' said a man to me: 'there are many more interesting places if I have the time and the money.' Has your imagination supplied the many details which I have omitted? If not, let me summarize a bit. There are two Haities, not one, though their geographical boundaries are the same. The one is a pagan world from Africa covered by a very thin veneer of Christianity. It has lost the tribal ethics of Africa, and has not gained a concept of national life save in the sense of unity against the outsider. It has the virtues and defects of primitive man. Its critical judgments are rudimentary and its thought is really centered on the problem of existence. Boundless superstition typifies its mind. It has possibilities.

The second, upper, smaller Haiti, has reached a point described by the poet in the line:

'We are going to live in cities,
We are going to fight in wars,
We are going to eat three times a day
Without the natural cause,
We are going to wear great piles of stuff
Outside our proper skins,
We are going to have diseases:
And accomplishments; and sins.'

This group has appropriated unto itself the language and law, as well as the wine and dance of France. It has added bacon and automobiles, as well as poker and bridge from the United States. It seeks in other words to be one of us. With this desire we must be very sympathetic and yet we must not allow our sympathies to blind us to the fact that it takes a long time to change the ideals of a group. This higher class wants to build first the superstructure. It has not learned the lesson of 'Noblesse oblige'. It thinks of itself as the master of the mass. Until this upper class is ready to sacrifice itself for its country instead of seeking to secure a life of ease for itself, democracy in Haiti, will remain but a term. Outsiders may help or hinder this process, but the real change must come from within."

Notwithstanding all that Haiti isn't, understanding what it has been, and beholding what it is, we are amazed. First, a volcanic island, most likely, thrown up from the depths of the sea, the most of it barred rocks. Second, French civilization which grew to riches and power. Third, all of it lost and in chaos. Fourth, a land of fruits and a few staple products for the world, with a harbor and a port that should challenge the commerce of the world. If the French had not taken into their bosom the viper that destroyed them, no one can tell what the past century would have made of Haiti. Port au Prince, no doubt, would have been one of the greatest ports of the world. There seems to be no reason that it should have been otherwise.

What it may be in the future, no one can tell. It matters not what their natural possibilities are, unless they can be educated from the bottom, in everything, there is no hope. It matters not what they can produce, until they have money modern intelligence, at least ordinary, ways and means, irrigation for the drought and farming implements for the land, something more than a machette, with which to cultivate the soil, they are hopeless. It cannot be done without the white man engineering it. This is their hope.

THE GREAT BATTLE

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 16, 1922.

To My Fellow Men in the Great Cause of Christ and Humanity:

I am but one in a great world of people, but I am that one, and while my ideas alone may be of little value, the knowledge of mankind is made up of little assembled together, therefore I am persuaded to add my mite to the great mass and possibly some good may be accomplished.

It seems that we have thought antagonism, talked antagonism and acted antagonism until we have developed an antagonistic spirit and feel that every man is arrayed against every other one.

Labor has talked and thought and acted as if capital was arrayed against it; likewise capital has looked upon labor as antagonistic and the public, which, by the way consists of both, considers each arrayed against them, and in the final analysis we are all arrayed against ourselves. For when labor strikes at capital, labor is hurt as much as capital and when capital presses down on labor, capital is likewise injured, for capital is merely the savings of the frugal, whether of labor or of whatsoever calling in life—The so called capitalist is simply one who assembles it together to work for all of us.

Why not, for a while at least, realize our interdependence and talk brotherhood, spreading the propaganda with that same zeal and earnestness as we spread union and association ideas. The man with money is no less human than the man with physical skill, nor is the laborer any more grasping because he is not a capitalist. The man with money invested today was only a few years ago ploughing the fields or wielding a hammer and some of those who are today toiling with brawn and sinew have been men of means or have had equal opportunities. Our nation has led the world in its great principles of equal rights for all, let us keep that place and show to the world that we still possess that heritage.

Our Declaration of Independence seems to me broad enough for all to stand upon but since there seems to be a tendency to disregard it, why not let us call another great convention of representatives of all contending factions and interests and see if it is not possible to formulate an agreement to "form a more perfect union" so that our rights to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" may be better safeguarded.

Strikes and similar devices were unknown in the early days of our Nation, neither were great corporations and associations of capital and possibly our fundamental laws need revising to more clearly define our rights and duties under present conditions. I think it is a recognized fact that these devices have reached such proportions as to present an extreme danger to our people and ought to be eliminated as a relic of barbarity, when right was subservient to might—To say that there is no other means of properly redressing our wrongs or asserting our rights is a reflection upon our intelligence.

We need some of our great men to arise to the need of the hour and lead us, not into a battle of physical endurance whose ultimate end is suffering and sorrow with victory to none but to an enlightened plan which will assure to all those equal rights vouchsafed by a loving God and the fundamental laws of our land.

Won't you help us to keep this matter before our people until it shall become a fixed principle?

J. O. WIGGS.

NORFOLK, VA., AUGUST 6, 1922.

To the Representatives of the U. S. in Congress Assembled:

Greetings:

In the midst of the great holocaust of War, Mr. Wilson conceived the idea of a League of Nations; Mr. Harding following out the same idea, invited the Nations into a conference for the reduction of armament; each having the definite aim in view of conciliatory adjustment of differences among the peoples of the earth without resort to arms.

Peoples composing the nations of the earth, have, by similar co-operative effort, made it possible to live at peace with their neighbors, erecting courts for the adjudicating of differences arising in the social order of existence.

In building the great constitution of our United States, all of the people were called into conference, and through their representatives, agreed upon fundamental principles which were to be the basis for their future relationship, and being parties to the instrument created by themselves it has commanded their respect.

If the Nations can agree upon principles which will minimize the hazard of war and the people of a nation likewise agree upon principles which will minimize the hazard of armed conflict, is it not possible for integral parts of the Nation to agree upon principles which will safeguard their respective rights without continuously jeopardizing the lives and liberty of the people as a whole, disturbing their peace of mind and causing untold suffering to the innocent. The constantly increasing strikes and stoppages of labor calls for heroic action. If the Nation can require its citizens as individuals to compose their differences without resort to armed conflict, is it reasonable to expect any body of its citizens to be less amendable to its laws. Shall we admit our impotence to cope with the situation now confronting us. We have tried Commissions on Arbitration and Labor Boards and they have failed. Perhaps we have failed to recognize the principle that "Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." A principle which applies to the body of the people as a whole ought to apply with equal force to any smaller constituent body. True there are conflicting interests between the constituent bodies but there is an interdependence creating a vital relationship. Why not call upon the interested parties themselves (Capital and Labor) to formulate such agreement and set up their own machinery for determining the differences limiting such agreement, however, to such remedies as will determine only issues vitally effecting themselves without detriment to the interests of the public; in other words, eliminating strikes, boycotts and similar devices.

We, therefore, urge upon the Congress of the United States the immediate passage of a resolution calling together all interested parties for the purpose of formulating such an agreement and the enactment of such legislation as will give force and effect thereto.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH,

By J. O. WIGGS,
President Official Board.

Whereas, This great American Republic was founded on the principle of equal rights and justice to all and has made its way to the front ranks of the nations of the earth as an exponent of these principles,

Believing in the great principle of the brotherhood of mankind and that all men are created equal, we firmly believe that there is a common ground of justice to all which the great mass of our people are anxious to reach.

The constantly recurring strikes and threatened stoppage of labor have stifled industrial pursuits and denied to many the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness vouchsafed to them by our great Declaration of Independence causing untold suffering among our people.

Our present governing bodies seem impotent to cope with the situation. Firmly believing that there is a remedy and that this remedy can be ascertained by a fair and impartial discussion of the situation.

We most earnestly urge upon the President of our Nation the calling of an immediate conference of representatives of labor, of capital and all other interested parties urging a full and free discussion of their rights and duties toward each other and to the people of the nation as a whole to the ultimate end that a fair understanding may be reached and their differences composed in an orderly manner without resort to strikes and other similar devices and that we urge upon Congress the enactment of such laws as will give force and effect to such agreement as may be reached, properly safeguarding the interests of the public.

Resolved Further, That such conference be urged to provide such adjustment of present pending differences as will assure justice to all and that upon call of such conference all such employees return to their respective posts of duty and that all employers re-instate such employees pending action of such conference.

Resolved Further, That we invite all Religious, Social, Industrial, Civic and other interested organizations to join in this appeal.

With a firm reliance upon Almighty God we earnestly urge all believers to earnestly petition His over-ruling Providence in this crisis.

Adopted by the Men's United Bible Class of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., this 6th day of August, 1922.

ROSE HILL CHRISTIAN CHURCH TO BECOME SELF-SUPPORTING

At a business meeting of the Rose Hill Christian Church, August 20, 1922, the following report was given by the Board of Deacons:

"It is the duty of every member to take an active part in the work of the church. We, therefore, charge you with an earnest endeavor to assist wherever possible in the work of the Church and the advancement of the Kingdom.

"Under our present pastor there has been great progress made. He is a man of progressive ideals and has commanded a place of leadership in the church as well as in the city. The movement forward has been all that could have been desired.

"This meeting has been called for the purpose of calling a pastor and to that end we will shortly call for a vote of the members present. Let us state that the suggestions we are about to make are suggestions that will insure a larger measure of success in the future than we have enjoyed in the past.

"Looking only to the success of this church we offer the following recommendations: 1. That our present pastor, Rev. R. F. Brown, be re-elected as pastor of the Rose Hill Christian Church for an indefinite period of time, with the understanding that a three months' notice shall be given if a change is desired by either the pastor or the church. 2. That steps be taken to increase the contributions to the local church budget at least $100 annually, looking to self-support in five years."

J. E. COMPTON,
Chairman Board of Deacons of the Rose Hill Christian Church.

The meeting began at Patterson Grove on the second Sunday in August. Rev. J. M. Allred preached during the meeting.

There were four professions and seven united with the church. The church seems to be in perfect harmony and good working shape.

Brother Allred is an earnest and a devoted Bible student.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for September 10th, 1922. "Teaching the Law of God."—Nehemiah 8:1-18.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Teach Me, O Jehovah, the of Thy Statutes; And I Shall Keep It Unto the End."—Ps. 119:33.

The Time: 445 B. C. The Place: Jerusalem

LESSON TEACHINGS:

After the task of building the wall around Jerusalem was completed, Nehemiah placed his brother, Hanani and Hananiah, governor of the castle in charge, commanding them not to open the gates until the sun was high and to keep all on guard for there were few houses, and enemies were active. The Nehemiah took a census, or made a survey of all the people and their servants and beasts as well. And the people came to live in their cities.

Then the people who had built and labored together, came "as one man" to request the reading of the Law of God. Here we see a complete demonstration of the actual methods of Bible instruction in the earliest of "Sunday Schools." Here is the record of a great open-air Bible School in Jerusalem. Ezra was the superintendent. On his right hand were six teachers who are all named, and on his left were seven more. The "School" opened with a service of true worship, when Ezra led in prayer and the people responded. The Book of the Law was read and explained to those gathered including men and women and the children who were old enough to understand. And as they heard and understood the commands of Jehovah they wept as they realized their own negligence and wandering. They were ready to confess, and so learned the great lesson which their leaders had for them "For the joy of Jehovah is your strength." And they became happy and thankful. Sorrow and confession must precede the joy of forgiveness. First must come penitence, and then peace. And the Christian life is a joyful life. "Peace on earth, good will to men" is the message Christ came to bring. The happy Christian is the true Christian as he expresses his joy in loyal service and becomes an asset to the Kingdom of God.

The people spent seven days studying God's Word. Christian statesmen, who have a vision which extends into the days before us, are coming to demand that more time be given to teaching religious truth. They recognize that teaching is the power which determines the future. As our boys and girls are learning the laws of their nation in order that they may be intelligent citizens, should they not also have the opportunity of learning the laws of the Kingdom of God, that they may be godly citizens? "Teaching the Law of God" is one of the greatest tasks facing the church today, and upon it depends much. Is your church taking that task seriously?

"Lord, give the teachers of the world
More love, and let them see
How baser metals in their store,
May be transformed to precious ore
By Love's strange alchemy.
And let them daily seek to find,
The childish heart beneath the mind."

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC

(For September 10th)

God's Commands and Our Obedience.—Ps. 119:33-40.

Biblical Thoughts on the Topic—Ex. 19:5; I Sam. 5:22; James 1:22-25; Heb. 5:8; John 15:10; Luke 6:46; Jer. 26:13; Deut. 11:13,14; Isa. 1:19; Rom. 5:19; Rom. 6:17; Eph. 6:5; Col. 3:22; John 14:23; John 8:51.

James Terry White tells the story of the time when war broke out with Spain. It was necessary to deliver immediately a message to Garcia, the insurgent leader in the mountains of Cuba. Nobody knew where he was. A man named Rowan was ordered to deliver the message. It took three months of the most incredible difficulty, hardship and danger, but he delivered it. This deed has become historic. Some such situation is met in every life. Most of us have a message to deliver to some Garcia. The thing for us to decide for ourselves is whether the message will be delivered, whether we can do our duty in the face of difficulty, hardship, and perhaps danger and often discouragement. This decision is the turning point of many a life, and may mean success or failure.

"There is but one real life for men, the life of union with God and of obedience to His commandments."—Maclaren.

"Laid on Thine altar, O my Lord divine,
Accept this gift today, for Jesus' sake;
I have no jewels to adorn thy shrine,
No far-famed sacrifice to make;
But here within my trembling hand I bring
This will of mine—a think that seemeth small,
But thou alone, O Lord, canst understand How when I yield thee this, I yield mine all."

TO OUR WORK!

September with most of our churches is a rallying time. Vacation days are over, and we settle down to the regular every-day life. The interruptions which come so often in the summer are over, and we can adopt a definite program of work and endeavor to carry it through in all of our church organizations.

During this summer we have held five Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions in our Southern Christian Convention. In all five of our conferences, there has been a gathering of the men and women most interested in our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies to learn how to do better work in the local churches. Each of these Conventions elected a corps of officers to carry on its work until the next meeting time. Too often have such officers believed that all their work was to frame a brief report for the next Convention, and have been content with doing that, but one such officer saw farther than this, as she declared in her report last July: "I felt that if the Convention saw fit to elect such a person there must be some duties attached." There are duties attached, and if you have been honored and trusted with a position in your Sunday School and Christian Convention this year, why not write to your president, or the Field Secretary, and find out some of the things you can do in that office? Both you and your Convention will be blessed.

Furthermore, every one of these Conventions passed worthy and progressive resolutions. But resolutions merely spread on the minutes mean little. Resolutions put into effect mean progress. Nearly every Departmental officer recommended advance steps, and it remains with the officers of the Convention and of the local churches whether these forward steps are to be taken. Our Conventions have endorsed the action of the Southern Christian Convention in making the Men and Millions Forward Movement a Forward Movement, and have pledged their support in carrying its work on to a glorious and successful conclusion. Our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies are "honor-bound" to help in this great work and by so doing, to develop the spirit of devotion and loyalty to all the interests and enterprises of our Church. And our Teacher Training Departments have recommended more classes for training the teachers in our Sunday Schools. Other Departmental superintendents have urged for more Cradle Rolls and Home Departments, a more aggressive work among our "teen-age" young pupil. Our reports next year, should show that the resolutions of this year were passed in good faith and were put into real action in our Sunday Schools as we start in a new year of work. Your work next Sunday helps to determine your report for the next Convention. What will your report be? Your very best, we are sure.

"I will not serve my Saviour in a poor or selfish way,
Nor with a life of idleness His tender love repay.
I want to do the utmost for His glory that I may—
I want to do my very best for Jesus."

"My very best for Jesus is the least that I can do;
And into service there must go my steadfast love and true;
And all that I can render is not half that is His due—
I want to do my very best for Jesus."
W. C. MARTIN.

ARE YOU GOING TO ELON COLLEGE?

If you are a young man or woman and a member of the Christian Church you should go.

1. Because you owe it to yourself, your church, your community and your God to make the best preparation possible for the duties and responsibilities of life. One of the essentials in this preparation is a college education.
2. Because you should get your education where the heart is educated with the head. Elon College does that and does it so well that only one graduate has gone away from its halls without having accepted Christ.
3. Because Elon College is the property of the Christian Church, and is therefore yours.
4. Because you want to get your education where you will keep in touch with your church, its leaders, its organizations and institutions, your own college, and no other can do this.
5. Because Elon College has a right to depend upon your loyalty. She must look to the Christian Church for her support.

THE LITTLE MISSIONARY.

A little girl, when her father was sick, went to the postoffice and said, "Please give me my father's letters," with a sweet childish voice.

"Who is your father?" said the postmaster.

"Don't you know my father?" she said with astonishment.

"Of course I don't," he answered. "Why should I?"

"Everybody knows my father," she answered.

"There is certainly one person that does not," he replied.

"Don't you go to meeting Sunday?" she asked.

"No, I don't go to meeting."

"What! Never go to meeting? That's why you do not know my father. He is the minister, and everybody knows him."

"If you will tell me his name, I will see if there are any letters.

She did so, and when he said there were none, she said, "Did you say you never go to meeting?"

"That's what I said," he answered, turning away. He had become worse than careless about such things. The little girl walked away, looking sad.

Next day the postmaster told her there were no letters yet, and turned away.

But she was not to be foiled in her purpose, and said, "You never saw my father, did you?"

"Not to know him," he replied.

"Everybody likes him that knows him, and they say he is a nice preacher."

The postmaster laughed and said he did not doubt it.

"Don't you ever go to meeting?"

"You would like to hear my father. Everybody does."

The question became too close for him and he again turned away.

Next day he offered her a letter directed to her father, saying, "It has come at last."

"He will be glad to have it," she said thanking him; then with earnestness continued, "I wish you knew my father; you would like him."

"I have no doubt I should if he is anything like his daughter."

"I wish you would come next Sunday and hear him preach. I know you will be pleased."

"I don't know any one there; I should feel like a stranger."

"You'll know me, and I shall be so happy to see you. You can come to our pew."

He objected again and again, but she persisted in her childish way until at last he promised to go. He did not look entirely pleased, but she ran off, pleased enough.

Sabbath morning she anxiously looked out of her window to see if the day would be fine. She was early in her pew, and turned nervously a great many times toward the door, and at last beckoned with her little hand. A tall man came awkwardly forward and entered the pew. She nestled up to his side and placed her hand in his.

She thought her father never preached better; God certainly helped him. She looked up into the gentleman's face and saw tears starting from his eyes, and then she pressed his hand in hers. He hurried out of the church, after thanking her for the seat.

The next week, however, he came to see her father and had a long talk with him. The door was shut, but there were sounds of a person in prayer. After the man went, the minister told her that she had brought a soul to Jesus, and that he had found rest and peace.—Author Unknown.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our friends could help us very much by giving us things that go to waste on their farms. Some days ago our good friend Mr. Robert Fitch wrote to us if we could come for them he would give us some apples to can.

We borrowed a truck and went over and he carried us to his orchard where the ground was covered with apples and told us to help ourselves and get all on the ground that we could use. He was busy and went back to his tobacco patch and left us to help ourselves. We picked up all we could get and started for home and on our way another good friend who lives just on the other side of Union church gave us five bushels and we reached home about two o'clock and got our canning force to work and before noon the next day we had canned more than a hundred and twenty-five gallons of apples. We are well fixed to can fruit and if we could get the fruit we could take our little folks here and put up lots of apples.

I often think so much fruit goes to waste on farms where fruit is abundant and people don't realize how glad we would be to have it to can. It would be such a blessing to us and the little children. Nothing is better for children than good fruit. To have apples to make pies in the winter is an untold blessing to us. It would be so easy to carry a few bushels of apples to the railway station when passing that way and ship to us. It would not cost the party who ships them much but it would be a blessing to us.

Our good and faithful friend Rev. P. T. Klapp gave us a barrel of flour to help us in our work.

Circle No. 7, Mrs. S. A. Horne superintendent, of the Burlington Christian church, filled us 28 half-gallon cans of fruit and twenty-two jars of jelly. This will make the little fellows smile. I truly hope that many of our good friends will fill us many cans of fruit to use this winter. We now have eighty-five children in all and several will come in within the next two weeks. Forty little folks are in the baby home. They are fine little fellows and we are proud of them.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Elon College, N. C.

The work in this pastorate has been moving along nicely this year. We have had our trials, our joys and our sadness.

Our revival meetings began on the fourth Sunday in July at Apple's Chapel, where Brother J. G. Truitt, of News Ferry, Va., preached his first great sermon there, to a large audience. In this first sermon Brother Truitt won his way to the hearts of his congregation by preaching in such a way that all could understand it, as well as enjoy it.

There were two services for each day ending the fifth Sunday in July. As the result of this meeting the church was much revived, and lives were dedicated anew to the Lord. And thirteen were added to the church.

Our meeting began at Hines Chapel the first Sunday in August, when Brother Truitt preached again to a very large audience twice Sunday, and there were two services daily though our attendance was not as large as we had expected because of sickness and other unavoidable causes, but, the interest was fine. Many rededicated their lives to God, the church was much revived and seven added to the church.

The meeting began at Monticello the second Sunday in August and closed on Thursday night following. The attendance here was large, attention fine and the interest very good indeed.

Brother Truitt preached simple though powerful sermons here to a good acceptance. As a result of this meeting there were six added to the church, and the church was much revived.

We were very glad to have Brother Truitt come to our work and every one who heard him is anxious to have him come again. May God bless him as he continues in the work.

C. E. GERRINGER, Pastor.

The late Jas. J. Hill, one of the greatest railroad men this country has produced, in this or any other age, has said some things which the church may afford to appreciate. He presents his view of the denominational college in a rather striking way, when he says: "There is something about a denominational college that appeals to me. It is a character builder. I believe in keeping the boy in the religious paths of his ancestors. Too many young men are sent to the non-sectarian school. No one is by to guide them, and they gather a great many ideas that lead them astray. In the denominational college they stay by the old precepts, and the foundations which were laid in the home are builded upon to the great benefit of the student." Mr. Hill's ideas do not harmonize with many of the teachers of this day, who claim to believe that the best thing to do is to throw a great thought, or a great book, out to the student and tell him to think for himself, but Mr. Hill is right, for the student to whom this privilege is given, goes out without the guiding hand of a matured mind to revel in the thought of some erratic one, and does he think for himself? Ah, no. He has been given a book which is by no means safe and told to read it and think for himself. He reads for himself, but the author he is reading is doing the thinking for that boy and then when he is turned loose, he is full of these erroneous ideas, put out by this erratic teacher. So the boy thus turned loose with the thought of the day does not think for himself. He lets the author he is reading think for himself, the other man is thinking for him, and shaping his life and thought according to other ideals, and bad ideals at that. We believe the youth of the land ought to be helped to do their thinking in right paths till they are more mature, and to this end the professor to whose care a devoted father and mother committed their boy, had better help that boy to do his thinking, following him as he goes through the book, to error as well as truth, always throwing out the error. Many a boy would be saved to truth and the church, if they were only guarded carefully through their reading and thinking, instead of being urged to do his own thinking in that critical moment. His teacher can better help him than that erratic one.

Some great things are taking place in the world, and as yet we cannot forecast the outcome of many of these things. For instance, the Dead Sea is 1,300 feet below the Mediterranean Sea, and now it is planned to have a sluice way between the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea, filling the Dead Sea with water from the Mediterranean, and so giving that wonderful sheet of water the life which nature has denied it for all of its history of the past. Then another company has planned to harness the River Jordan, which empties into the Dead Sea, and make of it one of the great water powers of the world. Verily most unexpected things are coming to pass and we know not what to expect next. We are living in one of the most wonderful periods of the world's history, and in many respect a new day is dawning. The people who may be living in the second half of the twentieth century will behold wonders, as the result of the genius of man under the permissive power of God. The Lord is at the head of this world, but man, His servant, is doing some wonderful things in the realm of nature.

Henry Ford.

One of the most remarkable men in public life in the United States, and may be in the world, is Henry Ford. He is at once a mystery to the average financier. Whatever he undertakes is a success financially, and men stand and look on and say, How does he do it? He is the owner of many millions as the result of building Ford automobiles, and it is said that he pays his cheapest hands each $5.00 a day—nothing less than that is offered to any person who works for Mr. Ford. Then he has offered to take what is known as the Muscle Shoals property in Alabama and make it serve the interest of the farmers of the country, and quite a number opposes his having the opportunity. Now he is asking for the privilege of going to Mexico with factories and giving the Mexicans something to do, as a means of stopping them from continual warring among themselves. If he can do that, do give the chance and let him bless old Mexico by giving her a right appreciation of industry as a means of making the people of that war ridden country live in peace and get to making a living. Henry Ford is a Financial wonder and a blessing to the people.

Called Home

ALSTON.

Caroline Matilda Alston, daughter of Dr. Robert E. and Virginia Kearney Williams, was born at Myrtle Lawn (the ancestral home) Warren county, N. C., June 20, 1854, and died at her home in Vance county, N. C., August 6, 1922.

She was converted when young and joined Shady Grove M. E. Church. About ten years ago her membership was transferred to Liberty Christian Church, near her home.

On December 19, 1877, she married Dr. Bennett Perry Alston, of Warren county. To them were born ten children. Two of these died in infancy. The surviving children are: Mrs. B. L. Bell, Macon, N. C.; Mrs. George Macon, Epsom, N. C.; Mrs. William G. Anderson, Hughes, S. C.; Bessie Lee and Margaret, of Epsom, Bennett Perry, Richmond, Va.; and Walter J., Epsom, N. C. Dr. Alston, her husband, died October 31, 1908.

The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Mitchiner, of the Baptist Church, from Liberty Christian Church on the afternoon of August 7th, and the burial was by the side of her husband in the Church cemetery.

Sister Alston was in my estimation one of earth's noblest women, possessing all of the finer qualities of a great soul. The home has lost its dearest treasure, the community feels a great loss and the church a true communicant. My heart beats in sympathy for the children that mother is with them no more in the home and at the same time there is thankfulness in the consciousness that the influence of such a life as hers will ever be a benediction to them.

C. E. NEWMAN.

N., at Haiti. He leaves a devoted wife, one daughter, Mrs. Thomas Smith, of Portsmouth, Va., one step-daughter, Miss Emma Skeffington, one sister, Mrs. Parker Mitchell, of Suffolk, Va.; one brother, Mr. J. T. Rountree, father of Rev. H. E. Rountree, of Cypress Chapel, Va.; three grandchildren, many relatives and friends. Funeral services were conducted at his home and his remains were laid to rest in the Church Cemetery at Bethlehem Christian Church, the Lord bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

DIED.

Mrs. Samantha Zirkle died at her home in Timberville, August 5, 1922. Sister Zirkle's maiden name was White, and she was born March 8, 1857. At the time of her death, therefore, she was 65 years, four months, and twenty-seven days old. Sister Zirkle was a consistent and faithful member of Concord Christian Church. She was a woman of splendid Christian character, and well thought of by all who knew her.

Funeral services were conducted at the Reformed Church in Timberville, August 6, 1922. A large congregation of relatives and friends attended the services, thus showing the high esteem in which sister Zirkle was held.

A. W. ANDES.

DIED.

Jeremiah F. Lineweaver was born December 24, 1848, and died August 16, 1922, making his age, therefore, 73 years, 7 months, and 22 days. Brother Lineweaver was a member of Antioch church for many years prior to his death, and, although living too far from his church to attend often, remained faithful to the end. He is survived by his widow, one son, and three daughters. Funeral services were held at the home near Cross Keys, August 18, 1922, and the body taken to Antioch for burial. Brother Lineweaver was a good man, and was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him. May God comfort the bereaved.

H. H. BUTLER.

FROM ALABAMA.

Lineville, August 22, 1922.

If you will allow me a little space in The Christian Sun, I will try to give in brief an account of our meeting at New Home. The meeting began Saturday, August 1st, and continued for seven days, until the night of the 17th. The Holy Spirit was with us in great power. The power of God was manifested in such force that even some who did not attend the meeting were forced to get up out of bed at mid-night and spend a while in prayer and praise to God. The preaching was done by the writer with some help by local preachers in the community.

We had four accessions to the church, and the church greatly revived. We believe this meeting will result in much good to the local church and it will not be so hard for us to raise a little money for the Orphanage and for the cause of the church in every good work. We desire the prayers of the church at large that the good work now beginning in this church and community may continue.

And may the Lord be praised for it all.

S. R. WALDROP.

AN APPEAL TO YOUNG PEOPLE

It is time when boys and girls are thinking of going to an academy, college or university. Some hesitate and are impatient to get into business or other form of active life. Some have no vision of the value of education. Some have not thought about it seriously. Many do not appreciate how important education is to any high achievement. I would beg the boys and girls who read this page to consider the following things:

One day a great opportunity for service and success will come to you. An education will fit you to meet that opportunity. Every boy and girl should pray this prayer: "O God, make me equal to my opportunity."

One day a great crisis will come in your affairs when wisdom and strength will be required. Education will give you the intelligence to meet the crisis. Many a man goes down in defeat because he cannot meet the crises of life.

One day a great testing time will come to your character. Temptation will assail you. False views of life will be presented to you. Alluring prospects will be held out to you. You will need the intelligence and strength which training will give to prepare you for such a testing time.

One day you will suddenly awaken to the fact that you are competing in the battle of life with other educated men and women, and that you are at a great disadvantage unless you have an education. You will see others well trained outstripping you.

One day you will be looking back upon your youth with the wisdom of age. Today you are looking forward to age with the unwisdom of youth. When you look back you will regret that you did not fit yourself for everything which life might bring to you. If you neglect the opportunity today, it will be too late then. Your life is God's. Make the most of it for Him.

THE WORLD'S BIBLE

Christ has no hands but our hands
To do His work today;
He has no feet but our feet
To lead men in His way;
He has no tongues but our tongues
To tell men how He died;
He has no help but our help
To bring them to His side.

We are the only Bible
The careless world will read;
We are the sinner' gospel;
We are the scoffer's creed;
We are the Lord's last message,
Given in deed and word;
What if the type is crooked?
What if the print is blurred?

What if our hands are busy?
With other work than His?
What if our feet are walking
Where sin's allurements is?
What if our tongues are speaking
Of things His lips would spurn?
How can we hope to help Him
And hasten His return?

TITHING THE MINT, ANISE, AND CUMMIN

In thus obeying the law of the tithe the Pharisees were doing nothing deserving censure, and our Lord does not mean to censure them. He really commends their faithfulness. "These ought ye to have done," He said. What He did censure was their being content with these acts of obedience, and forgetting the greater and more serious part of their duty.

There is some danger of our earnest men falling into this same disregard of proportions in judging their Christian duty.

The different clubs organized by the famous Billy Sunday for the purpose of personal work among men are to be commended, and we give them all praise. They are a rebuke to those who are at ease in Zion, and we would to God that their number could be multiplied. There is something inspiring in the men of the pew at work in the highways and hedges, compelling men to come in. There is danger, however, to guard against which every care should be taken. These clubs as means of Christian work are good, but it should always be borne in mind that they cannot take the place of the church.

One is designed by man, and can claim no divine commission except upon the ground that it is a part of the church, trying to do the work of the church. The church was founded by God. She works under a divine commission, such as no other institution enjoys. Because of the weakness and frailty of those who constitute the church, her work has not been what it should have been, and men have therefore been tempted to substitute some human machinery for the church. Let us remember that the legally constituted church is God's plan for saving men, and that no work can stand the test by fire that does not recognize this truth.

Have as many human agencies as you please, but let them be subordinate to the church. In these days we need to recognize as never before the divine origin of the church and the fact that God dwells in her, even as He dwelt in the Holy of Holies.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Germany and Prohibition.—

Even in Germany the straws are showing the wind as blowing in favor of Prohibition. It will be a new day for Germany when she gets her people under prohibition laws. If Germany had been a prohibition country before the war, we doubt that we should have had the late world war, and Germany and all the rest of us would have been so much better off. Let Germany fall into line and then a new day will dawn, we believe.

The Irish Free State.—

Ireland is still in trouble. After the concessions England made to her a few months ago, unrest grew worse, if possible, and the fight since then has been between Irishmen and Irishmen. There has been no let up in the struggle and the outlook for poor Ireland has been most discouraging. Now it is reported that the end of the republican insurrection seems to be near. The Free State Troops have recently captured Cork and the beginning of peace for Ireland seems to be near at hand. In Cork before the irregulars fled they blew many valuable buildings and did much other damage—may the day of Ireland's peace soon come, or Ireland is ruined.

Big Protestant Gains.—

The various churches in the United States are reported as making great gains in membership during the last year. Dr. Chas. L. Goodell, General Secretary of the Commission of Evangelism of the Federal Church of Christ in America tells us that the following churches made great gains during last year as follows: Congregationalists, 78,355; the Disciples of Christ, 125,000; Methodist Episcopal, 92,301; Northern Baptists, 90,000; Northern Presbyterian, 169,788; Southern Presbyterian, 42,258; United Presbyterian, 22,892; Protestant Episcopal, 59,706; Reformed, 24,542; United Brethren, 41,104; Friends, 424; Moravians, 1,718. That is a most gratifying report in so far as it is correct.

More Good News.—

It was a little less than startling to read in the press dispatches that Germany is turning over and it looks as if it is going at no distant day to roll itself into the dry column, but the news is yet more startling, for the press dispatches now tell us that India is going to step over into the dry column. We are further told that were it not for the "wet propaganda" and influence coming from England, India would soon be "dry." Alas, and has it come to this, that a Christian country will step in and stand in the way of a heathen country giving up strong drink? What must be the doom of such a Christian country? We would rather take the place of the heathen country in making efforts to deliver itself from the curse of strong drink than to have a place in the Christian country that is so using its powers and influences to pull down a heathen country, and all for the sake of money-making. We believe the great influence of the United States will stand with India in such a crisis, and it is a crisis of no ordinary magnitude. How England can take such an attitude toward a heathen people is surpassingly strange. God pity England in this deplorable situation.

A Great Disaster in China.—

Swatow, China, has been visited by a terrible tidal wave which swept many people to their death. It occurred early in August and resulted in the death of many thousands of the people. At first it was reported that 5,000 people were drowned. Later the report came from the Swatow Chamber of Commerce to the effect that 28,000 people had perished in the awful disaster. About half the entire population went down to death in the disaster, leaving the city a heap of ruins. The survivors were scarcely enough to bury the dead. The tidal wave came dashing in great fury and swept over the city almost before anything could be done to afford any relief. Everything in the way of food was swept out and famine followed the destruction of the tidal wave. God pity the poor Chinese and hasten the day of relief for the thousands of sufferers.

A Remarkable Record.—

Islam (the Mohammedans) number about 250,000,000 persons and they are strongly entrenched on three continents. They have held their own for more than 1,300 years. It is said that the near neighbors of the east estimate the different nations after this manner: Two Jews are equal to one Greek; two Greeks are equal to one Armenian. This is considered as indicating that one Armenian is equal to four Jews. Do you ask, what is Islam? Sir T. Morison in his book, England and Islam, tells us what Islam is, when he says: "The truth is that Islam is more than a creed, it is a complete social system; it is a civilization with a philosophy and culture, and an art of its own; in its long struggle against the rival civilization of Christendom it has become an organic unit, conscious of itself." Some one has declared that "Islam stands as a challenge to the Protestant church. Christendom can never overcome Islam by means of the sword, but it can be influenced by a purer faith which expresses itself in noble deeds. There is no danger that Islam will ever become Greek, or Roman in faith. Islam's challenge should therefore be met by the best there is in Christendom."

The "Drys" Win in Ohio.—

The most desperate and protracted battle ever witnessed in this country is now taking place. The men and women on both sides are determined to win or die in the effort. Of course we refer to the battle now being fought between the "Drys" and the "Wets." They have just made a determined onslaught in Ohio. In the choice of a candidate for Governor the fight seemed to be between the candidates for Governor. Mr. C. Homer Durand was the candidate for the "wets" and Mr. Carmi A. Thompson, who polled 100,000 more votes for Governor than did the closest of his rivals, was the candidate for the "Drys." Ex-Congressman Simon D. Fess, strongly endorsed the Anti-Saloon League, polled more votes for United States Senator than did all three of the candidates who were opposing him. That looks as if Ohio is going to stand by prohibition. The liquor men are dying hard and will hold on and fight just as long as they can wiggle, but Prohibition is here to stay.

The Crops of 1922.—

It may be that in some places the crops for the year 1922 will be short, but taking the whole country, we are told that this will be regarded as a "bumper crop year." The Government's August report, recently issued speaks in strong terms for the general prosperity:

For the fourth time in the history of farming in the United States it is predicted that we shall have a 3,000,000,000 bushel crop.

The total wheat crop is forecast at 805,000,000 bushels, 542,000,000 winter and 263,000,000 spring.

A record crop of hay estimated at 93,100,000 tons, is being harvested, surpassing the record made in 1919 by 1,300,000 tons.

The second largest crop of white potatoes ever grown was reported in prospect, the total production being forecast at 440,000,000 bushels, or 2,000,000 bushels less than the record crop of 1917.

Sweet potato production this year will probably make another record, according to the August forecast, which equals the record crop of 1920.

The fourth largest crop of tobacco ever grown is forecast, with a total production of 1,425,000,000 pounds.

Peaches are a plentiful crop, with a total production this year second only to the record year of 1915.

The great corn crop made vast improvement during July in the leading producing States, the improvement in Kansas having been 30,000,000 bushels over the July forecast; Missouri, 25,000,000 bushels; Illinois, 26,000,000, and Nebraska, 17,000,000.

NOTES - PERSONALS

R. F. Brown, Columbus, Ga., we understand is likely to remain another year with the Rose Hill Christian church in that city

Windsor, Va., Mount Carmel and Bethlehem, two excellent near by churches are still without a pastor, or were the last we heard from them.

Our work in Porto Rico is doing well, only we have not enough force there to man the field, so as to do work there which needs to be done.

The Chautauqua at Elon opened Monday evening, August 28th, and continued throughout the week. The report in this issue shows that it was a success. Read it.

Brother John King, Suffolk, Va., is in Europe attending as a representative of Virginia a great conference made up of commissioners from several different countries. We shall hope to hear from him in letters to The Sun.

Yesterday we had a hundred and forty-four in Sunday school and about 100 persons in our evening service—Rev. D. P. Barrett, Ponce Porto Rico, under date of August 21, 1922. That is good news from Porto Rico. Let it come often as good as that.

Rev. J. G. Truitt, News Ferry, Va., believes that our church in Danville, Va., under the labors of Rev. P. T. Klapp, is doing well and has a fine outlook for the future. Brother Klapp has done a good work there in the few months that he has served that church as pastor. He continues another year.

Rev. H. Russell Clem, pastor of our Greensboro First church, with his family is spending a vacation at the Blue Ridge Springs, N. C. Brother Clem was reported in these columns a few weeks ago as in the hospital, but he has recovered we take and is now recuperating in the mountains, drinking good water.

Our young brother, Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, Box 284, West Point, Ga., has been very active in the work of the church during the summer as an evangelist, and we trust he has had much success in soul-winning. We hope he may return to Elon College next week for the further pursuit of his studies as a minister of the gospel.

Hon. E. E. Holland, Suffolk, Va., is now in south America, representing Virginia if we mistake not, in some governmental function. What a fine opportunity he has now to write and tell his friends of what he sees by sending his letters to The Christian Sun. Send them along, Colonel, we will put them up for you in good shape, or we will try.

Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., Burlington, N. C., was in Reidsville last week and gave The Sun's editor a call, which was much appreciated. He is looking well, but carrying a heavy load in the Welfare Work of Alamance county. He is doing almost double work in preaching and serving as Welfare officer. You may think his work as Welfare officer is very light, but it is far from it.

Rev. J. V. Knight has tendered his resignation as pastor of the Christian church at Raleigh, N. C. We do not know his plans, but we trust he may be kept in the pastorate by some of our churches which may be in need of a pastor. His address for the present is Raleigh, N. C.

Rev. P. T. Klapp declines to serve the church at Pleasant Ridge in Guilford county, N. C., for the coming conference year. We understand he is to give his entire time to the work at Danville and Meban. These two churches are very promising in good fruitage for the future.

Referring to his vacation season in Porto Rico, Rev. D. P. Barrett, says: "We have just had nearly a month in the hills of Porto Rico—got back to the work August 16th. We found it to be a great treat to be away from the work these hot days. The church kept along nicely while we were gone. The weather is more bearable these days since we are having occasional showers. We are hoping the fall work may open up as good as we could expect it to do—present indications intimate as much."

We regret to hear of the death of Brother Jas. H. Bridger, who was for some years superintendent of the Sunday school at Antioch Christian church, in Isle of Wight county, Virginia. He was for many years a teacher in that Sunday school. He was a very peaceable and quiet citizen and active in the work of the church at Antioch. His death was very sudden, due to the breaking of a blood vessel. He leaves a family and many friends who mourn his early and sudden death.

I wish the Convention at Burlington may be a great success and a blessing to the cause we all love and for which we labor. I have never attended a session of the Quadrennial Convention. I did very much wish to do so this year, and for various reasons, but it does not seem possible to do so, so I must stay by the work here. There will be many friends and acquaintances there I should be so glad to meet. My vacation came just at the wrong time to make it possible for me to go.—Rev. D. P. Barrett, Ponce, Porto Rico.

Brother Chas. D. Johnston has quite a fine report of the Orphanage in this week. A Burlington friend, of another denomination, has done a good thing in making the orphanage a present of a most valuable character. Brother George R. Maynard, who passed away a few weeks ago, left the Orphanage a gift of one thousand dollars in money. That was like his life—devoted to doing good. And this gift was especially timely, not only for the good of the Orphanage, but also a splendid example for our whole church, as its members may be able to leave a part of their estate to the Orphanage.

The first of June report blanks and receipt books were sent to all ministers of the Southern Christian Convention, with requests to solicit for the "Sun." About 12 per cent. have reported, and if the remaining 88 per cent. had approximated like results the goal would not be far distant. To supplement this 88 per cent. this campaign which is named the "Layman's Subscription Campaign" for new subscribers is announced in this issue of the "Sun." Ministers are requested to name persons from their churches who can do this work. The Convention and Publishers of the "Sun" are alike committed to the work of circulating the paper.

Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Suffolk, Va., has been taking his vacation in the mountains in Virginia and North Carolina. He spent the last ten days or so, at Moores Springs, not far from Winston-Salem. He says that in the last day or two of his vacation in North Carolina he discovered what he had never seen before in any state or any other place. Would you like to know what it was? Well, when you meet him ask him to tell you what it was.

We met in Greensboro a few days ago Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of our church at Newport News, Va. He is closing his first year's work with them and is expecting to remain another year, as the church has already given him a call to do so. It is a real pleasure to see a pastor and people get along so well together that they like to remain together. That is as it should be, though it is often otherwise. It is a pity that pastors and people generally cannot stay together working in harmony for years, as no preacher can do his best work in the first year, neither can he do much for permanent progress in a short pastorate. Take the hint, and keep your pastor as long as you can, if he is any account, for being well acquainted with the people, he can do more for the church than most new men can do. Do not change pastors often. We give this advice in the interest of the churches. The church is the suffering party usually in any change of the pastor. There may be exceptions, but as rule this is true.

We ran over to Elon on the day of the opening of the Chautauqua, but we were disappointed. The Chautauqua we had supposed began in the morning, but it did not begin till evening, and as we could not remain, we had to miss the opening. We ran in to see Dr. Harper as President for a few minutes. And what do you suppose we found him doing? Guess. He was at work. We also ran into see Dr. J. W. Wellons also. He is looking very well we think for a man of his age and just as much interested in his church as ever. He has been serving as Chaplain in the Old People's Home in Greensboro of late and very much enjoyed the work. He expects to go back to Greensboro, now and then, and give the venerable friends in that home some assistance in trying to live right, but he says he cannot go to live there regularly, as he cannot give up Elon. The other side of that question is true, too, Elon does not wish to give him up, and we think they will not have to do so. Dr. Harper says he has done the hardest work of his life this summer. He has been seeking to intensify the relation between Elon and our people. He wants us all to feel like we and Elon belong to each other, and that is the right view to take of it.

NOTICE OF BOARD MEETING.

The members of the Board as elected at the last session of the Southern Christian Convention are:

Lieut.-Governor J. E. West, Chairman, Suffolk, Va.; J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va.; W. W. Staley, D. D., Suffolk, Va.; K. B. Johnson, Cardenas, N. C.; Rev. W. H. Elder, Richland, Ga.; C. H. Rowland, D. WHAT A MISTAKE.

Some people do not like Christianity. What a mistake! There are many features in Christianity which are of such a high and holy value that we would like to live the life of sacrifice which it requires, if only one feature were all there is in it for us. For instance, a few days ago we read of the comfort the blessed hope had been to a grandfather on the occasion of the death of a grandchild. There were two little girls—twins. Both were beautiful and lovely, but one day little Alice was taken ill, and she was called away to her eternal home. Then the grandfather wrote to his church paper after this manner: "They were beautiful little girls, looking so much alike that even the members of the family could scarcely distinguish them. Dear little Alice, your parents, your sisters, and your grandparents, and other kindred hated to give you back to God so soon. Your vacancy has left a vacancy that can not be filled, but He who called you doeth all things well, and by His grace, and by the merits of Christ, we will see you again in that great city, where there is no sickness, no sorrow, and no more parting." How beautiful is the Christian life! If there were nothing else in the Christian life but just the comfort for such an occasion as the one given above, we should like to make all the sacrifice it requires that we might receive the comfort it can give in such time. We pity the man or woman who can see nothing of value in Christianity, when in fact it is a blessing to us through every day we possess it, and then it gives us untold and unmeasured blessings for the life which awaits us on the other shore.

CONTINUANCE IN SERVICE.

If we are professing to follow the Lord, we ought to be known as servants of the living God. Our lives and service ought to be such that they inspire those about us with confidence in the God we serve. It was the continuous, unbroken, faithful service of Daniel, which inspired king Darius with confidence in Daniel's God, so he could say: "Thy God whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee." How much there is in that one word, "continually." It tells the whole story. It is continuous, unbroken, faithful service which insures God's continuous, unfailing protection and deliverance in every trial. He can do nothing for the wavering, unfaithful man or woman. "He that waveth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed." "Let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord." That is God's own word for it.

God is always ready to forgive and receive His erring, wayward children when they repent and return to Him. But it is the faithful ones who serve continually that He is able to deliver in times of severe trial. It is the "continuers" who hear His "well done," and receive the rewards for service. All through the Bible we are warned that if our hearts turn back, if our steps decline from His way and turn aside to crooked ways, if we break with Him and wickedly depart from Him if we forget the name of our God and His works, or stretch out our hands to a strange God; "shalt not God search this out?" Never have I been impressed with the solemn warnings of the Lord to His people, and the judgments visited upon them for disobedience, as during this year while reading through my Bible day by day. Be careful, for God does not lie. Punishment for evil doing is just as certain as reward for faithfulness and obedience.

On the other hand how the promises do pile up and up, bigger and bigger, better and better, for those who "keep his law continually," those who "seek the Lord and his strength," those who "seek his face continually," those who "wait on the Lord, and keep his way" are the ones He exalts. Eternal life is promised for patient continuance in well doing. As we read through His blessed Word, noting the faithfulness of the Lord in caring for those who have trusted and obeyed, we are led to exclaim in the words of the Psalmist: "Oh, how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee; which thou has wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men." His eyes are ever upon His own. His ears are ever open to their cry. In the time of trouble He is their strength, none of them that trust in Him are ever left desolate. We could not possibly enumerate the many promises which He has given to the faithful and obedient, but we do know they are always sure of His presence, His care and protection anywhere, every day and hour until they go to be forever with the Lord. Then comes the crowns—symbols of rewards earned through faithfulness in ministry, faithfulness under trial and faithfulness under suffering. The Rewarder is just, and He never forgets our labor of love.

King Darius knew Daniel as a "servant of the living God." Oh, that those about us might know us as such! Oh, that we might be sure of Divine protection in the testing times as was Daniel, "because he believed in his God." That is the secret of power with him. Believing "that he is, and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him." Oh, that we, too, might be so faithful that even our enemies might not be able to find either fault or error in us! Let us continue in the faith, grounded and settled. Let us stand fast in the Lord. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering. Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, remembering that if we do His commandments, then may we have "right to the tree of life," and enter through the gates into the city."

THE LEVEL-HEADED BRETHREN—WHAT COULD WE DO WITHOUT THEM?

Thank God for the level-headed brigade! It is all right to have plenty of "pep," but sometimes "pep" doesn't work well except in single harness. It is all right to be a "live wire," but sometime one gets a terrible shock from these "live wires." It is nice to watch the rockets which tear their way into the heavens and finish with a magnificent shower of sparks; but rockets don't plough a field well. Quite a proportion of even sanctified humanity is of the excitable type, easily moved and easily discouraged. And whenever a new scheme is broached and some good brother proposes to build a railway to the moon, or tells us that no one should eat more than one meal a day, or proceeds to show us how all the ages have blundered and everything has gone wrong prior to his arrival, but now the earth is to be rejuvenated; it is a great relief to know that though all the giddy-pated, shallow-thinking, non-reasoning part of the crowd may go trooping off after the new evangel, there will always be left a solid substratum of sober, level-headed men who can always be depended upon not to be carried off their feet by any new-fangled movement or idea, and who can be equally depend upon to stand loyally by every movement which fully appeals to their reason and common sense.

This contingent of well-balanced humanity is really the chief dependence of the race. If it were not for them the world would be continually chasing all kinds of will-of-the-wisps, and socially, economically, politically, and religiously, we should never be out of the bog. There never was a fanatic so crazy but he could get a following; there never was a wild-goose chase so helpless but men would undertake it; there never was a delusion so transparent but thousands would grasp at it; and it needs, and will always need, the level-headed members of society to keep us from rushing into all kinds of extravagances and folly.

And yet often the level-headed fellow is not very greatly admired. The men who are peddling moonbeams have no use for him. He is an "obstructionist," a "reactionary," a "stick-in-the-mud," an "old fossil," an enemy of all progress and a drag upon the community. And it often happens that the visionaries are good talkers, even orators, and the level-headed fellow has no great gift of speech.

And the crowd, charmed by the silver-tongue, look but coldly upon the man of slow speech, and led away by the vividness of the orator's language they are mostly ready to tear to pieces this slow-spoken fellow who dares to suggest that the orator is wholly and utterly mistaken. The level-headed fellow surely has his hard days, when everybody looks askance at him and mutters, "old crank."

But invariably "wisdom is justified of her children," and when the bright visions have faded and the dreams of sudden wealth and miraculous prosperity have been rudely shattered, men turn slowly back to the man whose words of warning they had despised and at whose wisdom they had openly scoffed. And he does not fail them. He formerly told them they were unduly confident; now he tells them they are unduly depressed. Before, he warned them that things were not nearly so bright as they believed; now he comforts them with the assurance that things are not nearly so dark as they had feared.

And as the years pass men slowly learn to respect and to trust these quiet fellows with the level heads, who are not so easily swayed by emotional appeals nor carried away by glowing promises as the rest of us, but who keep their heads even in times of wildest excitement, and who are the sheet anchor of church and state in periods of supremest unrest. Thank God for the men and women who are able to use their sober reason even when the whole community is seething with excitement. They are surely God's gift to the world.—Christian Guardian.

We had a pleasant visit to the church at Mt. Bethel in Rockingham county, on Sunday, August 20th. It revived the memories of the long ago. About twenty-two years ago we were there and aided in a meeting in which there was much interest manifested. Several came up to greet me, after several years absence, but their faces were shining and they said it was due to what they then received as a gift from God and that it was still holding, and it did look like it, for they were very happy in the hope they have in Jesus. The glory that comes from God holds and when men and women seek gifts from God, He does not disappoint their faith, but he still keeps them in the midst of life's burden. How many of the Mt. Bethel friends are still true to the profession they then made, we do not know, but we saw a number of bright and happy faces. One Sister, now the wife of a minister, declared that her husband got his start in the divine life in that meeting, and she said from that her husband entered the ministry, and that she herself had been led out from that same meeting to give her life to the cause of Christ—they have a happy home, not because of their earthly possessions but because of the Christ life they have been able to live. We met a number of old friends who still remember the meeting. Brother Price came to Reidsville and took us out on his most comfortable Buick. We had dinner with Brother and Sister Simpson. It was an occasion, as we trust of blessing not merely to the preacher of that occasion, but we hope the people of the church were blessed.

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Reidsville, N. C.

DID YOU EVER GET THE WINDOWS OF HEAVEN OPEN?

Perhaps you recall the fact that in Mal. 3:10, God promised to open the windows of Heaven. Did you ever stop and wonder why God did not open the windows, according to His promise? And did you give it up as a mystery, unexplained and unexplainable?

You prayed for the windows to be opened and they were not. Of course, the windows were locked and unless you would use the key that God has given for unlocking the windows, then you could but expect the windows would remain closed. God made the window, placed it there and then gave you the key to unlock it. Now if you did not use the key, how could you expect the window to be opened?

You say God promised to open the windows and so you were disappointed, because the windows did not open when you prayed, asking Him to open them. Yes, God did promise to pour you out such a blessing as there should not be room to receive it, but He also gave you the key to the lock which opens the window, and His promise was to open the window, as soon as you would unlock it, and pour you out a blessing till there should not be room enough to receive it. Now the question is did you unlock the window before you prayed. If you expected an answer, you ought to have done so, for then you might have seen the answer to your prayer in the shape of great blessings from Heaven, filling your life till there would not have been room enough to receive the abundance of God's gifts.

If we understand the proposition God made He did not promise to unlock the window. He told you how to unlock the window and when the window was unlocked, then he would open the window and do as He said he would do by pouring out a blessing more than there was room to receive it. Every now and then we hear some one get almost wild in prayer, asking God to open the windows of Heaven and pour out a blessings upon the prayer who was pleading and upon His associates, but the blessings did not come, and as best we could understand, the reason no answer was given was because the person praying would not unlock the window so that the Lord would open the window and give that for which he had been asking. The man had the key to that window in Heaven, but he did not use it, and not using it, the window was not opened and the promised blessing did not come.

Now Who was to Blame for This Failure?

Was it the Lord, or was it the man who was praying, to whom the Lord had given the key, so that he might have a blessing whenever he chose. The man had the key but he did not use it. He might have had Heaven's great cornucopia opened and emptied, if he had only unlocked the window so that it could have been opened. Many such prayers have been offered, but the promised gifts were not poured out. The Lord is ready and has been for a long time to bestow the gifts, if the person who was praying would only have used the key and unlocked the window. But those prayers will never be poured out until the window is unlocked. You see God gave you the key and so He must wait until you would unlock the window. He does not ask that you will open the window He only asks that you will unlock it, so that He may open it, and at once pour out the blessing, but before you would use the key He gave you, you chose to stand still and so miss the blessings He meant to give you.

Did you say: I know nothing of such a key for unlocking the windows of Heaven? Yes, but you are mistaken, for when He told you to offer such a prayer, in the same verse He gave to you the key that would unlock that window. You chose to offer the prayer, but refused to use the key to unlock it. Now why did you use one part of God's plan and not the other part? You say you did not see any key. That may be true, but if so, it was not because the key was not there, for it was and is there yet.

Would you like to see that key?

Indeed, I would.

But if I should show it to you, would you use it hereafter?

Well, I think I would—I think I would be glad to do so.

All right then—get your Bible and turn to Mal. 3:10, and read and you will see the key with which you might have unlocked the windows of Heaven and so have received the blessings God has promised you.

That passage reads:

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of Heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Mal. 3:10.

Do you see the key now? What did the Lord say you should do before he would open the windows of Heaven and pour out a blessing, so large and full that you would not be able to receive it?

Well, I can't say that I do exactly.

Look again, and let me show you the key.

The very first thing in the sentence is the key—bring all the tithes (the tenth of your income) into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of Heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room to receive it.

Now it is plain enough. You bring all the tithes into God's storehouse, the tenth of all your income and give it to the cause of God, and that unlocks the windows of Heaven and then He will pour out the blessing in great abundance, till you will not have room enough for it.

Oh, brother, sister, do not close your eyes and refuse to see the key with which you are to unlock Heaven's windows in order that God may pour out such a blessing as your little life shall not be able to receive it. That is the secret of these great gifts from God—do as He has told you and the blessings will come in great abundance. Try it in your own home life and see if He does not keep His promise and then your life will be flooded with His precious gifts, and the joy of the Lord will become your strength. Are you willing to use the key? You can see the key now, for it fairly shines in that text. Indeed it is the first thing in the text, and God says if you will use that key properly, that then He will give as He has promised to do, but if you will not use it, then you must not expect any answer to your prayer for opening the windows of Heaven.

OUR BAPTIST BRETHREN ARE "GOING FORWARD."

In what respect, did you say? Well, in many ways, but in some of their practices. For instance, we see it announced in the press that the Fayetteville Baptist church at Syracuse, N. Y., has decided to admit members to its fellowship without requiring them to be immersed. The same was but recently decided by a two-thirds vote of the membership in its annual meeting. We are told that this is the first time that a Baptist church in that section of our country has modified the rule which insists on immersion as the sole method of baptism.

That is a long step away from their ancient rules. To say the least of it, it is significant. A baptist church in a great center like Syracuse, N. Y., giving into such a liberal idea seems almost unbelievable, and yet the statement has been given to the public, and so far we have seen no contradiction of the fact. We therefore take it for granted that the report is true, and if so, it marks the beginning of an innovation, and what will come to pass as the outcome of such a step is far from certain.

Another innovation comes from another extreme point of our country, viz; San Jose, California, where the First Baptist church has ordained a woman to preach the gospel, by name, Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson. She had been a lay preacher in one of the smaller denominations and had gained some prominence as such. Then she claimed that her views had changed so as to put her in accord with the Baptist denomination. She joined the church and applied for ordination and her application was accepted and she was ordained. The action of that one local church is final, so far as this day's ordination is concerned. If such an innovation had been accomplished in almost any other church, it would have been subjected to review by higher church authorities, but with the Baptist Brotherhood there is no higher authority than the local Baptist church, and so it may be said that Baptist usage sanctions the ordination of women preachers and along with it, Baptist usage authorizes the reception of members without immersion. That is so and it must so stand, since it is authorized by the highest authority in the Baptist denomination—the local church.

Indeed our Baptist brethren are getting ahead in their new departures. Such things as these were unknown in the denomination even five years ago, but now they have gotten a start in the direction of liberalism there is no telling where they may land. As likely as not they will get to sprinkling for baptism in the not very distant future, and we say so because they now cease to require immersion as a condition of membership and then allow the ordination of women to the Baptist ministry. Brethren, your fence is down and we see no chance to put it up. The start having been made it will spread. Of course, there is an element among our Baptist brethren which will seriously object to such innovations, but what can they do since the highest authority in the Baptist denominations has authorized these things. They can do nothing, as we see it, but to fall in line and do likewise, for no Baptist church would think of pulling down the work of the highest authority in that denomination.

We confess that this departure is coming away ahead of what we expected, but it has come, and we dare to believe it has come to stay. But what will our conservative Baptist brethren do about it? They must fight their own brethren, or they must surrender to the new way of doing things—which shall it be, brethren?

A GREAT MIXUP IN CHINA AND—ELSE- WHERE.

Most likely there has not been a time since the beginning of the Christian Era when so many unexpected things turn up and so unexpectedly. For more than one hundred years the churches of this and other countries have been sending missionaries to the heathenlands, such as China, India, Japan, the Islands of the Sea, etc. Now just as we are getting started we are turning on what we have been teaching through these hundred years and in a way destroying the foundations we have been laying, and the end is not yet. Our Modernists are trying to introduce evolution, materialism and the new theology in the lands of darkness. This is especially true of China and our Presbyterian brethren are seemingly bearing the brunt of the battle so far. They find their work greatly hindered in China by the introduction of the Modernists ways of thinking and believing. So much of their teaching is directly opposed to the conservative way of teaching that not a little trouble is brewing. Indeed, they are having considerable storms already, and what the outlook is to be none of us can tell as yet. To give our readers a fair presentation of the matter, we quote from a writer in the Presbyterian of The South, as follows:

Have a Heart; Do.

Or to express it in better words, esteem the brethren "very highly in love for their work's sake." These brethren in China are jealous for the Lord our God, working heartily to preserve His holy Word intact. They are comparatively few among the millions who know not a thing of the Gospel. It is hard enough to get them to believe anything they tell them, how much harder then to get them not to believe error, but to believe the Truth.

In the "Report of the Standing Committee on Foreign Missions" we read, "While we are confident of the doctrinal soundness of our own missionaries and of the majority of all the missionaries on the foreign field, and while we make allowance for some exaggeration on this subject," etc. This is an unfortunate statement. Some reading this may really think there has been exaggeration and some may check their efforts to assist in this great work of giving the Gospel to the heathen in all its purity and entirety.

Consider the subject. For one thing we are told that Jesus was not born of a virgin. Can too much be said about such a rank error? They say it flat-footed, how can it be exaggerated? Trying to cut out the mystery of our Saviour's birth and make Him a mere man, thus denying God manifest in the flesh! We wonder why some missionaries are sent to China, when as teachers, Bible in hand, they deny its reading. If we see some people snapping strand after strand of a cable at sea, on which the lives of all on board depend, because they think them worthless, should we not protest vehemently and continue to do as long as they keep up their suicidal policy? In justice to them, we say, "It was enough to make all panic stricken," even though those snapping the strands are only an insignificant minority of radicals and free thinkers."

In the Presbyterian of the South of July 12th, "Orthodoxy in China" has these words—"Creating an impression in the Church at home that things are so much worse than they really are."

A strange statement for the writer, seeing he takes Mr. White to task for making mention of things when he is so far away from what has occurred!

These people that pick the Bible to pieces also deny atonement and the miracles of Jesus and they exist in at least three different denominations in China. It looks as if this evil business is spreading, does it not? Now can anything be worse?

Consumption of rice nourishes the body, but when it has been polished, a most necessary element is withdrawn (the vitamin) producing ill nourishment and fatal disease. In like manner polish the Word of God with your intellectual ideas (higher criticism, etc.), and you withdraw the spiritual vitamin and the result is the soul languishes and dies. No work of the devil against our Lord and His Word can be 'exaggerated' nor worse than it really is; it speaks for itself, it is appalling. Read what a Baptist brother wrote on this subject in the N. Y. Times a short time ago:

"By all means let the Church at home know the heinousness of the sin in China, where some missionaries are rejecting part of the Bible they are sent to preach and let us line up with the brethren, realize fully existing errors and help them combat and remove them. Deal generously with them in our prayers, our sympathy, encouragement and means and may the Lord bless us all and help us, whatever we do, to hold on to the whole World of God and live it."

A SERIOUS DEFECT IN OUR MODERN CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

The defect is of course on the human side, but that only makes it, if possible, the more serious. Many have come to believe that religion is more of the head than of the heart, resulting in a joyless and a powerless sort of Christian life. To such lengths has this sort of life gone that many believe that Christianity is of the head rather than the heart. Taking this view, many have come to regard all emotion as having no place in the Christian life. Indeed, many speak of emotion as a most hurtful factor in the Christian life. As we understand the matter God never meant the Faith of the Christian should rest only on the head or wholly on the heart. He meant it should find a lodging place both in the mind and the heart, thus making the Christian life to gain support on the human side from both the head and the heart. That is the natural way and it is the spiritual way also.

We cannot conceive why any man wishes to make his religion a purely intellectual matter rather than to have the blessings of both the head and the heart working in the life. Religion without the head would have some serious defects, but it is just as true that a religion without the heart life in it, would be a failure also.

The truth is God undoubtedly meant that both the head and the heart should be working factors in the Christian life and experience, and whoever undertakes to eliminate the one, does so at the expense of the other. It takes heat and water to make steam, and so I think it takes both the head and heart, thoroughly consecrated to God, to make the Christian life a real power for God and for humanity.

The religion which has all head and no heart in it can not be of any great value, but rather a curse, and for the reason that it leaves out the real power which is to move and control the head. The head can devise many things, but it takes the heart-power to execute the plans of the head.

If you leave their execution to the head you will soon find out that the head is helpless and powerless, and it is so because the head and the heart are complementary—the one supplying the lack of the other. The head gives intellectual power to Christian thought, but the heart supplies the steam by which the life is brought to real life and active usefulness. The head is the machine and the heart is the steam to make the head go and go right.

Almost all phases of religion which is dominated by the head only goes astray, while almost all phases of religion which is dominated only by the heart are liable to lose the balance wheel and go off at a tangent, but when head and heart both dominate the life, then you will see the power of God as He gave it to man for the preservation of the spiritual equilibrium, and then you get a Christian life that means a power for good, and not for evil. It amazes us to see men try to do away with the heart power in religion. You may possibly do away with it, but the results will invariably be that you will have only the religion of a weakling, and therefore it will be of no great force in the world.

If the joy of the Lord is the strength of His people, then we must have very little joy, since we show but little strength in our daily life and service. Let us get more joy to serve as steam for the heart in the work of winning the world to Christ. We have no account of any very active soul-winning when the head alone is in control, but when the emotions of the heart are in full swing, but directed by the head under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, then we expect to see a display of power from above, and whenever that is the case, we shall see men and women yielding to the call of God and dedicating their lives to the cause of Christ. For one we stand for the head and heart uniting in the service we seek to render unto God, the Father of us all. We are not afraid of the vaporings of the head, when the heart is working with the heart, neither are we afraid of the work of the heart when the head is given the right of way to co-operate with the Spirit of God in winning souls to Christ and in the establishment of the church as a divine institution among men, and for their development in the life which God gives. The one is a balance wheel to the other, and so both are needed to bring the Christian life to its best. Dear reader, if you cannot find anything better to do than to believe either the work of the mind or the work of the heart, through the emotions, we must say in all kindness, you had better quit the field till you can get yourself to stand in right relations with God. Which will you do? Shall it be the one or the other, and if so, which shall it be? Will you work with both the head and the heart and so find the way of truth and power in doing the Lord's work? How can you hope for good results, if you eliminate either the head or the heart, when God gave them both, the one to direct and the other to make effective in service.

It is reported that on one occasion a brilliant lawyer spoke to a prominent minister, asking him if he really believed that Jesus Christ actually rose from the dead. The minister then replied that he did, and asked the privilege of presenting the proof to the lawyer. The lawyer took the material offered in proof away and studied it. After a while he returned the proof to the minister and said: "I am convinced that Jesus really did rise from the dead." Then he added: "But I am no nearer being a Christian now than I was before. I thought the difficulty was with my head, but now I find it is really with my heart." Alas, when the head and heart get right with God, then there is no difficulty in becoming a Christian. When the head and heart get right with God then the life will be right with Him also.

Some one has said that the belief which is merely intellectual conviction has never saved a man yet, but the belief which means the surrender of the whole life to Christ is the belief which brings life and salvation. Two boys stood on the edge of a frozen pond. One of them said to the other: "Billy, I believe it will bear." "Do you?" said the other. "Yes." Then you get on." "No, said he: no, I don't want to." Then said the other, "You do not believe it will bear." He was right. If a man stands outside the finished work of Christ and says: "I believe that, I believe its philosophy: I believe that is enough to save a man, that man is never saved."

No doubt Paul was right when he said: "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." The head and the heart are both needed in the matter of saving the soul of a sinner. With the head he understands and with the heart he believes unto salvation. Now if the head only acts, then the man is not saved, for it is with the heart that man believes unto salvation. Let the head understand and the heart believe truly and the work of salvation is an accomplished fact.

ELON LETTER.

There is a new attitude abroad among the denominations respecting their schools and colleges. Ten years ago the denominations were content to leave the creation of sentiment for and support of their schools as well as their active administration with their respective boards of trustees. Naturally the membership was glad when reports of prosperity were circulated, but they did not feel themselves personally charged with the duty of seeking that such reports were forthcoming.

All this is changed now and the denominations have assumed toward their institutions of learning an attitude of aggressive support and likewise of duty to create sentiment therefore. The boards of the Church, not simply the Board of Education, but all the boards, feel a community of interest in the cause of Christian Education. The wonder is that the denominations were so long in arriving at this sensible conclusion. The Christian College is basic in its relationship to all the departments of the Church work. Not only are the trained lay-leaders in local congregations supplied by the denominational colleges, but the ministers, the missionaries, the college professors, the board secretaries also must be recruited from the output of the denominational schools. The future of each denomination is mirrored in its schools today. The past and the present demonstrate this.

Elon is a typical illustration in this regard. Our lay-leaders have been wonderfully visioned for service by having studied here and our ministerial workers have been given a solid preparation for their labors in the Church. The first are eloquent in their testimony on the matter. In 1889 we had two college graduates among our ministers. We now have fifty-eight. In 1889 no licentiate in our Church held a college degree, now two do. Our general Church benevolences have grown from $1,609.35 in 1889 to $169,280.47 in 1921. The salaries paid our ministers in the same period have increased from $10,338.71 to $74,224.19, and should be twice that amount now. You can never pay a minister what he is worth. That is no excuse however for stingy laymen to withhold a liberal support from the Lord's servant.

Right in line with this new attitude toward her colleges on the part of the Church is the fine work being done by the Board of Education of the American Christian Convention, Rev. W. G. Sargent, D. D., Secretary. His advertisements in our Herald of Gospel Liberty are classics. And now comes a poster, beautiful by an impressive picture of Defiance College and handsomely printed in large type and ready for posting in our churches.

I wish to quote this poster in full. It is a masterpiece. It is entitled:

"WHAT WILL WE DO WITH OUR COLLEGES?"

Before us are three possibilities.

First. We can fail to support them. The unquestioned result will be the death of our church. That church will grow most rapidly that provides the best equipped leadership in pulpit and pew. It is a question of divine power in human life—that is the one unchangeable factor in the building of the Kingdom.

Second. We can support them half-heartedly. Small doles will not suffice for success. Meagerly supported schools and colleges will produce indifferent results.

Third. We can support our schools and colleges enthusiastically and adequately. Every aggressive Protestant church is doing that now. Hence, their increasing growth. The Christian church is competent to provide for her Educational Institutions if she will.

Which of these possibilities will we accept?
W. G. SARGENT, Secretary."

IMPRESSIONS OF THE NEW ORIENT.

BY ROBERT E. SPEER, D. D.

(Extracts from an address delivered at a dinner given by the Federal Council of the churches to Dr. Speer, as its President, upon his recent return from the Orient.)

We have been gone nearly a year and most of that time we spent in India and in Persia. We had also glimpses of other parts of Asia as well. Perhaps I can use best this opportunity by speaking briefly about each of the lands through which we have gone and saying a short word about the conditions each of the peoples face today in their relationship to the great human movement which is central to our thought and our life.

Each time I have visited Japan before I have felt, first, the rigidity and bondage of the thought of the Japanese people, and second, the sense of an almost boundless physical vitality. This time both of these impressions were reversed. The last time, six years ago, it seemed like passing into a stifling atmosphere in coming from the Philippines into Japan. Out of their perfect liberty and freedom of thought and action, one plunged into the rigid institutions and stereotyped spirit of the Japanese nation. But now in this new day one has a feeling of moving among great and free thoughts. Indeed in Japan today this is the common word—"thoughts" of all kinds—and thoughts are very dangerous to a governing class which does not like anything that tends to a full freedom of the people. One does not see in Japan now the same strength of the old institutions binding like strait-jackets the minds of men. But now in Japan, as everywhere else around the world, one does find the deep feelings that are stirring the spirit of all mankind.

The other impression also of which I spoke,—that of boundless physical vitality,—is now overturned. One has the feeling of looking into a sick face in Japan today, and the Japanese are beginning to feel it too. They realize what influences are sapping the vitality of their people. Their educational systems are solid, competing intellectually with the best educational systems of the world. They are raising the standards that they may meet any other nation. But the effort and strain have weakened the vitality of the nation. Twenty per cent. of the young women, sucked up in the great maelstrom which streams everywhere out of the village life of Japan into the large industrial centers, entering the great industries, go back marked with tuberculosis. School teachers complain about the health of their school children and urge the impossibility of their meeting the mental strain of the physical conditions under which they have to live and work.

There is much to see in Japan of the old days—the ancient shrines and temples testifying still to the power of the great ideas which have shaped, Japan side by side with the incoming of the fresh forces which are to control Japanese life. A symbol of this one finds in Tokoyo in the new Imperial Shrine. One would have thought it had been built for thousands of years. Engineered into a place of patriotic preeminence in defiance of modern tendencies, it seemed to be the rallying cry of the old Shinto conceptions, intended to buttress the ideals upon which Japan has tried to build the security of her national life. And not far from this Imperial Shrine are the buildings of the new Women's Christian College—the beginning of the new day next to the receding echo of the days gone by. Side by side with the great effort of dying ideals comes in this symbol of the mightiest force in the world. I mean the force of what woman's life can mean, has meant, in the whole life of the world. The greatest undeveloped resource is the capacity of the still unemancipated womanhood of Asia, and the great force releasing woman and preparing her for the leadership.

We had a little more opportunity to see the drift of the great changes which are under way in China. Many who look at China today are despondent, seeing no hope for China as a continuing political unit. But such despondency forgets the deep and indestructible unity of the Chinese people and it forgets the good purposes of God. I found on my desk on returning home a letter from Miss Gollock, one of the editors of the International Review of Missions. There was a sentence in it I could not make much out of. It read, "Mr. Oldham is now on his way to China which, in spite of all the physical evidence to the contrary,—is en route for home." Obviously the stenographer had left out some words but ordinarily omissions do not work out so happily—"China in spite of all physical evidence to the contrary is en route for home." I believe that indeed it is, and that the home of humanity is incomplete until the Chinese people at last push their massive way into it.

But it will be a hard and painful road. Each time we have gone back to China, I have gone to see the great industrial mills. I went back this time to see some of the same mills I had before to note whether conditions were changed. One still sees hundreds and hundreds of little children stoop-shouldered and hollow-chested, stooping over steaming pots of water in the silk filatures or before the bobbins in the cotton mills; hundreds of women toiling heavy-eyed at too heavy tasks; and one realizes that there is a long hard road of industrial struggle still ahead of China before she at last pulls through to the goals beyond. The old days are drawing to an end; and new days and new experiences lie before, days and experiences like our own in the West, full of confusion and pain.

For three happy, fascinating months, we traveled the length and breadth of India, from Colombo to Landlour and from Calcutta to Goa and Bombay, visiting all the main provinces, the great cities and, best of all, the country villages and the great masses of the outcaste people and all kinds of folk from government officials to peasant, from the high-caste to the sweeper. India is a fascinating country today in a fascinating period, a period of political life which Great Britain has been making inevitable ever since she took hold of this great mass of races, never bound together by a common religion, with no unity even of language with which to discuss their wrongs save the language imposed upon them by the supposed oppressors; and putting forth ideas such as never crossed their dreams until those ideas were brought to them by those against whose influence they now make complaint. The difficulty in India today is that its problems of national personality are as complex as those of individual personalities. How much more simple if Great Britain were one personality and India one personality! They could then work out their problems with patience and sympathy and understanding. With so many personalities each counteracts the influence of the other. One group of Englishmen treat and deal with the people on the highest and worthiest plane; another group speaks of the people as "niggers." If the problem could be left with the high-minded Englishmen it would be worked out as well as any such mixed human problem can be. But in dealing with India England is divided. And India is divided in the demands and in the spirit with which she meets Great Britain. Some Englishmen are in favor of saying to India, "by December 31, 1926, every Englishman will have left your shores." Others believe that no such policy would be either possible or just, that a situation which has grown up organically can only slowly be resolved into something better. Meanwhile it will be painful business for Englishmen who remain; but many must remain to see India through the difficult times, through which Great Britain recognizes that India must be helped forward on her way.

The problem is complicated on the other side by the type of leadership offered to India. There are radicals and moderates of many different types. People are divided in their allegiance to Gandhi. To some he is a saint or more and they constantly compare him with Christ. Others regard him as a wild man. And still others think that he is a saint in personal character but a wild man in his economic ideas. There were many in India who thought Mr. Gandhi should have been dealt with long before but they were afraid that his influence had grown so great, and that the Movement had penetrated so deep, that the Government would not dare put its hands on him. Others thought that it would be sacrilege and tyranny to interfere with him. But people who knew, if anyone could know, dismissed the idea of the probability of a violent revolution as a result. The Ali brothers, with whom Mr. Gandhi had been associated, men of very different character from him, had been arrested in the fall and all through India anxiety as to the outcome was felt, but these men were arrested, tried and convicted, and India went quietly on its way.

There has been great growth in the Christian Church in India, both in numbers and in nationalistic temper. It was there, in the church, that we spent most of our time watching the effects of the Gospel on the highest and lowest levels of human life; seeing here just what the Gospel can do. If I had never believed in the Resurrection before I should believe in it now. It is the greatest living power in the world. We saw this power which raised Christ from the dead operating today. There must be reality back of that; realities in history, in the moral facts of the world.

We went on from India at Christmas time to Mesopotamia and then into Persia. I have been in my mission stations which made a strong appeal, but never one that made a stronger appeal than Mosul in Upper Mesopotamia. No one can deny that it will be a difficult field. Here Arab and Turk and Kurd and Christian meet.

It is one of the great border cities of humanity. I can not imagine any place in the world which presents a more appealing challenge to the hearts of the young men who have something to give, who like the spice of dangerous and difficult work and who want to serve their fellow men and God.

In two respects Persia is a very different land from the one which Mrs. Speer and I visited twenty-six years ago. It was poor then. It seems to be poorer still today. There is a great deal of poverty all over Asia in the lands where we have been; but poverty in the tropics is one thing and poverty in the cold and snow of winter is another thing. The collapse of Russia wiped out most of Persia's trade and no replacing industry has been developed inside the country. But the nation's currency is sound silver money. It has great natural resources still undeveloped. It is eager for help from America. If it is poor it is full of friendliness and of desire for assistance in conquering its poverty. This new spirit of kindness and hospitality and tolerance is the second thing we noted everywhere. I never believed a Mohammedan land could be as free as Persia has become. There is ample tolerance and liberality. One half the boys studying in Mission schools are from Mohammedan homes and nearly a third of the girls. Converted Mollahs and men and women, Mohammedan converts, from homes high and low, openly preach Christ. Persia wants our help both in education and in trade and industry. And the door is open also for our religious sympathy and help.

On the eleventh of April we left Persia, going from Tabriz through the three Soviet governments of trans-Caucasia. If anybody wants to down what has been established before he is sure that he can put something better in its place, let him go into the Caucasus. If anybody thinks that the dissipation of a nation's accumulated wealth is a desirable thing, let him go over to the Caucasus and see for himself some of the consequences—and the pitiful efforts of the people to rebuild their shattered economic and industrial life.

Of the Turkish situation we saw just a little. I venture to say that we found not one of the Americans whom we met sympathetic with a settlement of the Turkish problem on the basis which had been proposed for the armistice between Turkey and Greece. To reestablish Turkey without checks or control seemed to them the certain end of the Christian races, of the movement of education and enlightenment and of the hope of good government and progress even for the Turkish people themselves. The men who knew the Near East best did not believe that it was conceivable that such a settlement could be admitted by the world. They believed that at least four limitations were inevitable: (1) the international control of the Bosphorus, (2) such control of the foreign financing of Turkey, including the debt and all future loans, (3) the limitations of Turkey's military establishment and (4) the continuance of the capitulations. With these limitations they believe foreign help to Turkey would still be possible and life in Turkey be still a conceivable thing.

Looking back over the year one outstanding impression is the hope of the peoples of the world in the good will and help of America. It makes an American almost ashamed to see the way so many of the Asiatic people have idealized his country; how they have pinned their hopes and expectations to it. He wonders whether even part of these hopes of theirs will be fulfilled. One cannot go where we have been, if he is an American, without having people high and low gather around him for sympathy and hope. If I could but tell you of the groups with whom we talked all over Asia, back in the remote corners and in distant cities—all hoping that somehow America was not going to fail the rest of the world at this time. They cannot understand how we can sit here in comfort and plenty so far away and not lift our hands to help them in their poverty and need. They are thankful for what we have done for starving babies. But, as said some young men in Mosul, "Our minds and hearts are starving too."

Another vivid impression is the need of more and fuller co-operative action by our churches. I wish we could unite ourselves in wise and more efficient ways to accomplish the great task. We ought to try to help one another more in our territorial allotments of missionary responsibility. For instance, in Southeastern Asia I believe that the Methodist can care for the problem of Singapore and the lower Straits Settlements. If others of us have the power or inclination to share the burden let us discharge our sense of responsibility by working with and through the agencies of our Methodist brethren. Likewise, in Southwestern Asia, in Arabia and Mesopotamia the Reformed and Presbyterian churches can handle the problem if we will all support and work with them. It is a huge task we have before us and there is a rich brotherly spirit among us in its doing. Let us give that spirit ample room for practical and trustful action.

One other great impression with which we have come home is the impression of renewed confidence and hope. There are difficulties enough and the chariot wheels drag heavily but any one who takes the long view can see more than the difficulties and the hindrances. He can see the sure and steady gains, the strengthening of the energies of Christianity throughout the world, the weakening of the resistant forces, the seepage of the ideas of freedom and justice through the thoughts of men, the ever clearer recognition of our Lord Jesus Christ as the supreme moral judgment and the only adequate Savior of mankind.

The Editor of The Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., in issue for August 18, 1922, says: "We do not take much stock in the poll taken by The Literary Digest. It cannot mean much unless it be known whether the bulk of the voters live in the large cities or in the smaller cities, and rural sections, or whether the voters are predominantly Catholic or Protestant. It must be remembered that the wet sentiment is stronger almost to predominance in the larger cities and among the Catholic population. The surest "straw" showing which way the wind blows is the fact that only a comparatively few members of Congress, who, above all men, know the sentiment of the country, can be mustered against the Eighteenth Amendment or the Volstead Act. Do not pin your faith to any poll in which the voters are unknown." To all of which The Christian Sun says heartily, Amen!

You are not to let your right hand know what your left hand does, but that does not mean such secrecy as will not do the thing at all. You are not to parade your charity before men, but that does not mean that you should not do it at all. Rather, it would seem to say, but be sure and do it.

Let us make up our minds to stand true to the Bible everywhere and all the way. Let no insinuation, not threat, let nothing keep you from standing true to the Bible. It is God's revealed will to man. If you give up the Bible you have nothing else to take its place, and what would man be in this world, if left without a guide, given by higher authority than man. Indeed, if you have no Bible, what are you going to do for information, you need and must have, giving you the Way, the Truth and the Life said in John 14:6, that He is all of these in one. Keep the Bible, revere its teachings, yield to its authority and obey its commands.

Too much talking is dangerous to the spiritual life of the individual—you can destroy all you have gained by talking too much in a very short time. Hold on to the truth, but do not say more than is needful.

You know if you talk too much, you will be apt to say some foolish thing and that always hurts. Be slow to speak and that will save you from a multitude of troubles. Let us be wise and slow of speech rather than rapid talkers in foolish conversation. If you speak rapidly in ordinary conversation, you will almost surely say too much, and saying too much always leaves the talker weaker than when he begun.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

WHAT IS A REVIVAL.

We talk much of revivals, as if we knew what a revival may be. Before you read further stop and tell yourself just what you think a revival is, and then read what Rev. Chas. G. Finney said is a revival, and then compare your thoughts with his and see wherein you missed the true idea of a revival. We dare to admit that Chas. G. Finney knew as much, and may be more, of a true revival as any other person of his day. He says in his book on Revival Lectures, published by Revell Company, New York, this in telling what a revival is:

"It is the revival of the first love of Christians, resulting in the awakening and conversion of sinners to God. In the popular sense, a revival of religion in a community is the arousing, quickening, and reclaiming of more or less backslidden church and the more or less general awakening of all classes, and insuring attention to the claims of God."

"It presupposes that the church is sunk down to a backslidden state, and a revival consists in the return of a church from her backslidings, and in the conversion of sinners."

1. "A revival always includes conviction of sin on the part of the church. Backslidden professors cannot wake up and begin right away in the service of God, without deep searchings of heart. The fountains of sin need to be broken up. In a true revival, Christians are always brought under such convictions; they see their sins in such a light, that often they find it impossible to maintain a hope of their acceptance with God. It does not always go to that extent; but there are always, in a genuine revival, deep convictions of sin, and often cases of abandoning all hope."

2. "Backslidden Christians will be brought to repentance. A revival is nothing else than a new beginning of obedience to God. Just as in the case of a converted sinner, the first step is a deep repentance, a breaking down of heart, a getting down into the dust before God, with deep humility and forsaking of sin."

3. "Christians will have their faith renewed. While they are in their backslidden state they are blind to the state of sinners. Their hearts are as hard as marble. The Ruths of the Bible only appear like a dream. They admit it to be all true; their conscience and their judgment assent to it; but their faith does not see it standing out in bold relief, in all the burning realities of eternity. But when they enter into a revival, they no longer see men as trees walking, but they see things in that strong light which will renew the love of God in their hearts. This will lead them zealously to bring others to Him. They will feel grieved that others do not love God, when they love Him so much. And they will set themselves feelingly to persuade their neighbors to give Him their hearts. So their love to men will be renewed. They will be filled with a tender and burning love for souls. They will have a long-ling desire for the salvation of the whole world. They will be in an agony for individuals whom they want to have saved—their friends, relations, enemies. They will not only be urging them to give their hearts to God, but they will carry them to God in the arms of faith, and with strong crying and tears beseech God to have mercy on them and save their souls from endless burnings."

4. "A revival breaks the power of the world and of sin over Christians. It brings them to such vantage ground that they get a fresh impulse toward Heaven. They have a new foretaste of Heaven, and new desires after union with God; and the charm of the world is broken and the power of sin overcome."

"When the churches are thus awakened and reformed, the reformation and salvation of sinners will follow, going through the same stages of conviction, repentance and reformation. Their hearts will be broken down and changed. Very often the most abandoned profligates are among the subjects. Harlots, and drunkards, and infidels, and all sorts of abandoned characters, are awakened and converted. The worst among human beings are softened, and reclaimed, and made to appear as lovely specimens of the beauty of holiness."

Now that is what the greatest revivalist of his day said is a revival of real religion. If he was right in this view, as he most likely was, then will you write out your convictions and tell us if your church has had such a real revival in the last ten years. What say you? We are in earnest—we wish to know which if any our churches have had a revival, which will honestly come within the limits of what Mr. Finney has laid down as his conception of a real revival of true religion. Do not be harsh in your judgment of what your church has had in the way of such a revival in the last ten years, but just tell us if you think your church has had such a revival, a revival in which the fruits of a revival, as laid down by Mr. Finney, have appeared?

No doubt many of our churches have had such a revival in appearance, but have the genuine fruits remained. When a revival goes away almost as quickly as the fog of an August morning, you may be sure that it was not a revival, but just an imitation of a revival, and the fewer of these imitation revivals our churches have, the better it will be for the cause of Christ in the community of your church.

We recall at this moment a revival of which we had knowledge several years ago, in which there were almost one hundred professions of faith. When we again went to this church just four weeks later, it looked almost as if a cyclone had passed over that community, sweeping away every vestige of a revival. We stood amazed as it seemed to be all gone. Now to the extent that it was all gone, we may safely say that that revival was only one in appearance, and therefore not a genuine revival. In answering our request above, we wish you would tell us how the after affects stayed with your church following the season of awakening. We wish some one competent in each church, the pastor or some member thereof, will tell us the plain truth, as to how it seems now that your revival is over and gone—has it gone in fact, or does its influence and power remain, giving blessings to the church and to the community. When you send in what you have to say along this line, you must furnish the editor your name that he may know who does the writing, but you need not give your name to the public unless you choose to do so. However, you must be willing to give your name to any one who objects to what you say and on that account wishes to know who was the author of what was said of the revival which you describe. We ask but one thing of the writer and that is: Be careful to tell the truth and nothing but the truth.

Every man or woman, young or old, who can be induced to become a reader of the "Sun" will receive benefit as well as aid a church enterprise.

THE CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION FOR 1922.

The Southern Christian Convention in its regular session at Suffolk, Virginia, in May, 1922, gave the responsibility of providing for the Chautauqua and School of Methods over to the Board of Religious Education. This Board of Religious Education, of which Rev. Dr. W. F. Walters, Richmond, Virginia, is chairman, has for its Field Secretary, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, also of Richmond. It was decided to hold the 1922 session of the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College. Since the College plant is the property of the Southern Christian Convention and is not in use during the summer vacation, it was thought by the Board of Religious Education wise to make use of the plant for holding the Chautauqua here. Since the Chautauqua had not been held at the College before, it was somewhat of an experiment and the Board together with other interested persons of the church, were anxious to know how the experiment would result. The Chautauqua covered the dates August 28th to September 3rd.

The Board of Religious Education provided a plan of work that if carried out would result in benefit to the entire church. This program was found to be workable in almost all of its details and was successfully carried out. It was essentially as follows:

The Chautauqua started the day with morning worship from 9 to 9:15. Following this fifteen minutes, was a period of forty-five minutes devoted to devotional Bible Study under the leadership of Rev. Dr. J. U. Newnman, and was held in the college auditorium, and included all members of the Chautauqua and visitors. The writer of these notes heard more than one very complimentary comment on these sessions. At least one person, who had come from some distance, was heard to say if he got nothing else from the Chautauqua he regarded these devotional Bible study hours worth the time and expense the Chautauqua had been to him. There was one regular class hour. This was from 10 to 11. Four regular classes were conducted throughout the period of the Chautauqua. The pastors' class was under the direction of Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Professor A. L. Hook, head of the Department of Physics in Elon College, who is also an efficient Sunday school man, conducted a class in Sunday School Organization and Administration. There was a class for adult workers which was conducted by W. P. Lawrence. The class in Elementary Work was under the direction of Mrs. Fred E. Bullock, Field Secretary of the Sunday School Board of the American Christian Convention. These classes all did regular work which seemed to be regarded by members as helpful in many instances at least. Following this recitation hour was the Conference Hour from 11 to 12. The Pastors' Conferences were presided over by the following ministers and were exceedingly interesting: Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D.; Rev. C. B. Riddle and Rev. J. H. Lightbourne. The Sunday School Conferences dealt with the following subjects: First day, Building and Maintaining a Membership, under the leadership of Rev. W. T. Walters, President of the Chautauqua; Second day, Making the School a Spiritual Force, leader, Dr. T. C. Amick, head of the Department of Mathematics of Elon College; Third day, Teaching Missions and Benevolence in the Sunday school, led by W. M. Brown, superintendent of the First Christian Sunday School of Burlington, N. C. Two general conferences were conducted, one on "The Whole Church at Work" by Dr. Atkinson, and one on "The Real Church School, led by Rev. S. M. Lynam, a ministerial student at Elon. Attention was paid to missions in a mission study hour that came from 12 to 1 each day. The theme for this hour was "The Bible A Missionary Message," Dr. J. O. Atkinson, being the leader.

One of the most valuable parts of the Chautauqua and School of Methods was the Daily Vacation Bible School from 11 to 1 each day. No fewer than fifty children attended each of these sessions which were highly inspirational and instructive. Some of those who helped to make these meetings the success that they were, were the young lady members of the music faculty of Elon College, Misses Kirkland and Braxton. The following ladies each taught daily Bible classes, Misses Minnie Edge, Fannie Pearl Dawson, Mary Swanson and Mrs. C. M. Cannon. Handwork or object formation work was very well directed by Miss Essie Cotten. In these meetings Miss Lucy M. Eldredge was the leader in very inspirational devotional services for the young folks, and Mrs. F. E. Bullock who is an artist in story telling contributed also very materially.

Lunch hour came from 1 to 2 in which all took part and from all evidences enjoyed. The afternoons were given over largely to recreation, rest, and social enjoyment.

The music hour was under the leadership of Rev. J. F. Morgan, of Winchester, Virginia, with Miss Mildred Kirkland, of the College music faculty at the piano. Brother Morgan is one of the best song leaders I have ever seen in action.

The first evening of the Chautauqua was given over to a brief song and devotional service, followed by a "Get-Acquainted Hour." Tuesday night was "Radio Night." The big amplifier that the Department of Physics had just installed failed to amplify, so the big audience that had gathered to hear the Pittsburgh musical program of the evening failed to connect with Pittsburgh through that amplifier, but did not fail of high appreciation and no end of laughter for Dr. W. W. Staley's impromptu jokes and ever rich and rare philosophy when he was called to the platform and told to entertain the audience until the radio machine should put him out of business.

We must not forget the fact in these notes that among the most enjoyable contributions to these evening programs were the following three features. One evening the Young People's Missionary Society of the First Christian Church of Burlington presented a very enjoyable program which might be entitled "Flashes of Missionary Truth and Teachings." On another evening the Junior choir from the First Christian church of Greensboro lent inspiration and life to the Chautauqua by its highly inspirational and devotional music. At the close of their program Rev. J. F. Morgan told them that if they would come to his Winchester church he would allow them to sing with his adult choir. Then there was a very excellent program of songs and recitations rendered by the children of the Christian Orphanage, under the direction of Mrs. L. M. Cannon. Mrs. Cannon is herself a gifted and trained leader and was called for at the end of the program. She responded with some very enjoyable selections.

The Sunday services were under the direction of the college pastor, Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., At the morning hour, Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., spoke on "The Fruits of the Reformation," or "The Progress of Christianity," while Mrs. Bullock spoke at the evening service on the theme "As The Twig Is Bent."

Briefly, I have given some facts of the 1922 Chautauqua. We had gone only a little way in this session until it was evident that it would be wise to continue it as an annual affair at the college, so it was decided that it should be held annually, beginning each year on the Monday evening following the last Sunday of July, and close the first Sunday evening in August. One determining fact connected with this Chautauqua was the financial question. My understanding is that financially it was successful enough to warrant its repetition as an annual affair. My understanding is that the officers of the Chautauqua, Miss Eldredge and Dr. Walters, will not have to call on the Board of Religious Education for any funds whatever.

I am of the opinion that this Chautauqua will develop into one of the most helpful means of touching all parts of the Convention known to our church, and it is nothing but wisdom, it seems to me, for every pastor and working layman, or prospective working laymen or pastor to begin now to plan to attend the next Chautauqua. If we can successfully finance any enterprise in our church, and at the same time help each other as this Chautauqua is destined to do, it is hardly short of our privilege and our duty to take advantage of what the Board of Religious Education is able through this medium to offer us.

VALLEY LETTER

The Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference met with the church at Joppa, Shenandoah County, Va., August 17-19. The opening devotional service was conducted by the President, Dr. W. T. Walters of Richmond, Va. The pastor of the church, Rev. A. W. Andes, welcomed the delegates and visitors, and Rev. J. F. Morgan of Winchester, Va., responded.

The subject "Conference Problems and their Solution" was discussed in a practical way by several of the delegates present.

Dr. A. B. Kendall was elected to deliver the Annual Address this year, but as he was not present at the conference the Annual Address was delivered by his alternate, Rev. R. P. Crumpler, and it was a splendid address too.

Prof. P. J. Kernodle, the publisher and managing editor of the Christian Sun attended the conference, and made several talks and addresses of a very practical and helpful nature.

Bro. C. D. Johnston, Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, made two fine addresses concerning the Orphanage. At the close of each address an offering was taken for the Orphanage amounting in all to $43.72.

All regretted very much the absence of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, which absence was caused by the illness in his family. However, Dr. Atkinson wrote an excellent address on "Our Greatest Missionary Movement" and sent it to the Conference, and it was read by Dr. W. A. Harper. Dr. Harper also made a splendid address of his own upon the same subject.

Rev. J. F. Morgan was elected to deliver the Annual Address next year with Dr. W. T. Walters as alternate.

Bro. Wm. M. Clem, a recent graduate from Elon College, and a member of Dry Run Christian Church has been preaching for several churches in the conference since his graduation, but will not continue with them longer as he expects to enter Yale University soon and further prepare himself for the ministry.

Rev. D. B. Seal, an ordained minister of the Regular Baptist Church requested to be admitted into the Conference. Owing to our limited acquaintance with Bro. Seal, and his limited education he was received on probation for six months, during which time he is given the privilege of preaching for any of our churches that may call him. At the end of the six months the Executive Committee is to decide as to the next step.

Dr. W. A. Harper addressed the Conference in his characteristic eloquence and scholarly manner upon the subject, "Some Mistakes or Misconceptions of Education."

The Friday night session was given over to the Woman's Missionary Board, which rendered an inspiring program consisting of reports, a solo by Rev. J. F. Morgan, addresses by Rev. J. F. Morgan and Rev. W. C. Hook. The Board raised last year, $322.57. This, however, was far from the goal, which was $750. Their goal for this year is the same as last.

The Conference Missionary Association turned over to the Conference Treasurer $155.25, which had been collected in membership fees.

The committee to select place for next session reported Timber Ridge as the place selected.

The time for the meeting of Conference was changed so that hereafter we will convene Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday before the third Sunday in August.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Dr. W. T. Walters; Vice President, Rev. J. F. Morgan; Secretary, Rev. A. W. Andes; Assistant Secretary, Rev. R. P. Crumpler; Treasurer, Samuel Earman. Officers for the Woman's Board: President, Mrs. B. R. Richards; Vice President, Miss Ora Scott; Secretary, Mrs. B. F. Frank; Treasurer, Mrs. R. A. Larrick; Superintendent of Young People's Work, Mrs. A. W. Andes; Superintendent of Literature and Mite Boxes, Miss Ella Pickering; Superintendent of Cradle Roll, Mrs. R. P. Crumpler; Superintendent of Woman's Work, Mrs. N. M. Hasler.

Rev. J. F. Morgan, the new pastor at Winchester, made a very favorable impression upon the Conference by his sermon on Thursday night, and addresses and talks during the session.

The Treasurer's report showed $1,184.58 collected on conference apportionments from all the churches. The apportionment upon the churches was $1,700. We lacked $515.42 of paying up our full apportionment this year. The apportionment for this coming year is practically the same as last. The following churches paid up their full apportionment, and are therefore, banner churches: Bethlehem, Concord Dry Run, East Liberty, High Point, Joppa, Mayland, Mt. Olivet (G), Palmyra, St. Peter's, Whistler's Chapel, Winchester, Wood's Chapel.

The ministerial reports show 62 conversions, and 71 members received into churches of the conference during the year.

Rev. W. M. Clem preached on Saturday night Dr. W. T. Walters and Bro. C. D. Johnston filled the pulpit Sunday morning, and Rev. R. P. Crumpler Sunday afternoon.

Let us work and pray for a good session at Timber Ridge next year.

THE WORK IN ALABAMA.

Wadeley, Ala., August 29 1922.

I will take a little time this lovely morning to write a few lines for The Sun: This is the first attempt since you became Editor. I desire to express my appreciation for the Sun, I pray the Lord to bless the Editor and the Business Manager with heaven's richest blessings—you are giving us a great paper.

I began my revival work at New Hope church on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in July. Brother Jesse Dallar came on Sunday P. M., and took charge of the music for us. Our people were glad to have him with us—he preached for us at one service—Rev. R. F. Brown was with us and did the preaching after Tuesday night. Brother Brown gave us some good sermons and everybody enjoyed having him with us; we had a good meeting, ten members were received to fellowship and the church was greatly revived.

The week following, fifth Sunday, I worshipped with the Baptist church at home where we had a good meeting. First Saturday in August our meeting began at Beulah church. Brother W. T. Meacham was with us and did some good preaching. We were glad to have him with us. Brother Meacham is one of our young men in the ministry with a bright future before him.

We had a great meeting at Beulah, our people were very much interested from the first service and eleven new members were added to our roll. I am now rounding out my thirty-first year with this church. And have been living in the community twenty years truly the Lord has been good to me.

Our meeting began at Antioch, second Sunday in August, Rev. H. W. Elder came Monday, and did the preaching for the remainder of the meeting—which was well done and a great meeting was the result. Ten members received to fellowship and the whole community moved toward heaven and duty.

This meeting was a great inspiration to all who attended. My last meeting was at McGuires chapel church—Rev. J. H. Hughes assisting. This old church has been somewhat handicapped for some years, many of its best members moved away and some have died—but the power of God came upon us during the meeting and great rejoicing among God's people—souls were converted and seventeen joined the church. Our hearts were rejoiced at each service and it was no trouble for men and women to praise God.

We now turn our faces toward our Conference. And may we be just as joyful in the Conference meeting as we are in the revival season.

In many localities our people are very much out of heart on account of the drouth and poor crops, but brethren let us trust God and push forward—do the best you can and God will bless and provide.

GOOD NEWS FROM DANVILLE, VA.

Some things one sees are worth passing on to others. The work I saw at our Christian church on the out-shirts of North Danville, Va., was encouraging and inspiring. Brother P. T. Klapp came to that field a little less than a year ago and found it badly broken to pieces. He found former friends cross with each other and church officials bitter in their denunciations of their own colleagues. He entered vigorously upon a program of plain, convicting, Gospel preaching. Being led by the Holy Spirit he played no favoritism and the Word did the work. When I was there for a few days meeting in May I found a church united, victorious happy. I found a people eager for Gospel messages and a church working earnestly to lead its community to God. Although it rained most of the time the meeting was in progress the audiences were large, the singing was fine and the leaders were faithful. Fathers and Mothers, and sons and daughters came weeping to the altar for prayer. More than forty made professions of Christ and twenty-two of them were happily received into the local church. Good reports continue to come out of that community. Different organizations of the church are holding wide awake prayer-meetings out of which conversions come. A band of young men have covenanted together to win a soul each to Christ before the next evangelistic campaign. The pastor is happy and his people loyal to him and faithful to Christ, are a real power for good. I feel sure the Conference which met with this people last fall will rejoice to know of this happy solution of a difficult problem.

TURNER'S CHAPEL.

We have just closed a very interesting meeting at this church. Rev. J. D. Wicker organized it and had served as its pastor for many years. He still holds his membership here, and was present at every service during the meeting. It is a real pleasure to serve such a willing people. This church is ready with its finances to go to the Annual Conference, and I think will pay its pledges to our Men and Millions Movement. There were three accessions.

QUEER BIRDS ARE GETTING TOGETHER.

This is a day of the happening of unusual things. The truth is you do not know what is to happen next. The Harvard University Divinity School is known to be highly Unitarian while the Andover Theological Seminary is equally highly Trinitarian. Now these two schools have been combined, and they are going to undertake to teach both lines of thought from the same school. We do not expect to see any good come from it, as water and fire will not mix, except in destroying each other, and that is about all we think can be expected from the combining of these two schools into one. If the people have any convictions as to truth, they cannot stand it to see their own thought so ruthlessly butchered and destroyed. We do not expect anything much, unless it be evil, to come of this movement, as neither one side nor the other can be satisfied with such an arrangement, unless they have lost all conviction as to Unitarian and Trinitarian teaching. But let us wait and see.

SUNDAY A PERPLEXITY.

With many people the disposition of Sunday is a perplexity. They do not know just how far to go in their amusements and recreations on that day. They are frequently confronted by the question, What should a man do on the Sabbath day? What should he permit himself to enjoy? How far should he go in his pleasure on that day? Many men seem to think that the day belongs to them. Consequently they act as though they felt they were justified in doing anything that promotes their own recreational interest. There is a day of let-down, of loosening up, of changing the course of life and of recuperation. It is expected on that day that a man will so restore his lost energy that he can go back the next day to his business a new man. Anything that will contribute to this end is justifiable. For the average modern man thinks that Sunday belongs to him. But does it? Whose day is the Sabbath day? It is the Lord's day. Is it man's day? Not if we understand ourselves. Not if we properly interpret it. Just how to give God his day and just how to get as much out of it for ourselves as possible that we may better serve him is our perplexity.

Recently a commercial man questioned, his minister replied: "Would you play golf on Tuesday?" That was Exchange Day in the city, and one of the most important of which the man would never think of absenting himself from the gathering to which his business interests were vitally related. The man drew back in horror. "Play golf on Tuesday? My friends would think me mad should I do that." The minister answered: "The business of the exchange is all in all to you. If Christ were all in all to you, would you not keep the Lord's day for him?"—Western Christian Advocate.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

One person may take two or more subscriptions and have his time extended. All persons in arrears as much as one year should pay up, and then aid the solicitor in securing a premium. The name table indicates the time to which subscription is paid.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

AN APPRECIATION OF "FATHER"*

All honor to "Mother's Day" for a mother is the noblest thing on earth except father, that is if he is a father after God's own heart.

He should be honored the same as mother for they are "no more twain but one."

Why wait until your loved ones are gone to send the flowers or speak of their good qualities?

My father had a great longing to be a christian when but a lad, but an ungodly father kept him from the protracted meetings and in those days people only had an opportunity once a year to publicly profess Jesus Christ.

But father promised himself when he became of age he would go to church and there seek for the "Pearl of Great Price," and in the summer after he was 21, he heard that a big meeting was in progress at the little country church.

And in imagination I go back to that day while he and an older brother were pulling fodder in the hot sunshine, he remembered that he had promised himself to go to the first meeting after he became of age.

But in those days work was not so easy to get and he knew what it would mean to him to incur the displeasure of his father by professing Christ. But he said, "Brother let's go to meeting today and get religion."

"Now, Dan, you know our "Daddy" would never let us come home again if we got religion."

But the words kept ringing in the lad's ears. "He that forsaketh father and mother for my sake," etc. After a little while he says again, "But brother, we ought to make our peace with God. I can't be satisfied until I am saved." "Well you go on, lad, and I'll finish the work and then I'll come."

"But I don't want to leave you, brother come go with me now, maybe he will not be so likely to hold out against two of us."

But after much persuading the older boy agreed to go and after the service was over he returned home and never went again, but the younger in bidding him good bye told him that he wouldn't be back until he had the blessed assurance that God had forgiven his sins and with a sorrowful heart he saw his brother depart, still unsaved. And in the neighborhood of this little country church he stayed until he sought and found pardon full and free. Then he decided to go home and tell the wonderful news to his christian mother and see if his father would be angry at him, and see if he would still give him employment on the farm.

It rejoiced the mother's heart to know her boy was saved, but she knew the stern father would not let him remain at home and that made her sad.

The lad spoke to his father but got no reply but he still hoped he would forgive him.

But after a day and night of silence toward the boy the father bade him leave, leave the only home he had, leave the dear mother who bore him and yearned for him. With a heavy heart he bundled up his scanty wardrobe and kissing his mother farewell, he turned his back on home and started out into the world penniless and alone. Alone did I say? No, not alone, for "He that forsaketh father and mother for my sake," etc." was ringing in his ears and we think he heard a still small voice say "Lo, I am with you always." No he was not alone for all the angels in Heaven watched the lonely lad as he stumbled down the rough country road with eyes blinded with tears and they comforted him.

In fancy I can see the heartbroken mother as she stands on the porch and with sobs uncontrolled she shades her eyes to feast them on her boy as he goes slowly out of sight.

And I can see her clasp her hands and her lips move and I can hear her whisper, "Father, watch over my boy, keep his young feet in the right road, keep him faithful to thee. Be a father and mother to him for Jesus sake."

And the Father in Heaven comforted her. The young boy finds work with a neighbor farmer and was kindly treated. But soon the great civil war broke out and he enlisted to fight for his country and through eleven big battles he went through and came out without a serious wound. The Heavenly Father was watching over and protecting him. At the close of the war, without anything to start on in a devastated South, he won and married a noble girl, and they side by side began the struggle of making a home (a home I said, not a house).

They bargained for a farm and by hard work and economy paid for it.

The boy now grown to a handsome young man (The very best looking in the community, so my mother always said) felt as Paul did, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel."

And with the sympathy and encouragement of his young wife, he entered the Ministry.

Leaving her to manage the farm (which she did well) God wonderfully blessed his ministry for he was instrumental in leading hundreds of souls to Jesus Christ. He organized and built more than a dozen churches, here in North Carolina, and has held most of the most important offices in the Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference:

In his gentle, sympathetic manner, he stood by the death beds of his flocks and comforted the bereaved ones. He married their young sons, daughters and hundreds of young people today, all over North Carolina, lovingly call him "Uncle Wicker." For over 40 years he has preached every sabbath, usually twice, and rarely missed an appointment. He is the devoted father of 9 living children, two having passed to the beyond. He learned early to "rejoice in the Lord."

For if he had troubles, no one knew of them, for he was always of a cheerful happy disposition.

Always rejoicing in our joy, grieving with us in our sorrows, always gentle as a woman with us when we were little, and as we grew up, when we were sick, he ministered to us and bathed our fevered brows and held us so gently in his arms and soothed our troubled sleep, waiting on us and watching over us, so mother could rest, always lovingly rebuking us when we did naughty and praising and encouraging us when we did well.

When night came he got down the much worn Bible and would gather us around his knees and read and pray with us.

We always were sure fathers prayers reached the throne of Grace, for we knew, as no one else did, the life he lived and knew that Christ dwelt in him, and today as his step's get more feeble, his hold on God grows stronger.

Almost home at last.

"He has fought a good fight, he has kept the faith," and won a crown there. We will not wait as do others to send the flowers when he is gone, but send them today. For we have a Prince among men living here in Sanford.

A man who never did a mean or immoral act in his life, always paid his debts, owes no man a dollar, always cheerful and full of fun, always sympathetic and loving.

If you honor a good clean up-right christian gentleman, you will always find him by the bedside of his helpless wife, patiently uncomplainingly caring for her every day.

So friends of his, send the flowers today for the time grows near when we will miss him, for like

Enoch who walked with God, we will say—"He is not, God took him."

He has been with us 82 years and has 88 direct descendants, and we hope God will spare him to us many more.

A LOVING DAUGHTER.

The Message Of Malachi. Mal. 3: 1-4: 3.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith Jehovah of hosts." Mal. 3: 7.

The Time: 520 B. C. The Place: Jerusalem.

LESSON TEACHINGS:

"The subject of greatest importance dealt with in this last book of the Bible is the subject of offerings unto the Lord. It runs throughout Malachi's message. God's people had grievously failed in this. They had robbed him, bringing polluted bread, and blind, lame, sick and blemished offerings to the altar. In short, they had not met their obligations to God in the right spirit. A fit closing message indeed! The prophet waxes truly eloquent as he speaks of bringing the "whole tithe into the store-house," and the opening of "the windows of heaven." Surely it is an unforgettable message. God forbid that any of us should bring a broken or blemished offering!"—Edgar Whitaker Work in "The Westminster Teacher."

In the broadest sense, your Christian Endeavor Society is an organization for Christian education. Every prayer meeting, every business session, every social gathering should help to develop your powers, mentally, spiritually and socially and every one should teach you something worth practicing in your life. Education is growth. The supreme aim of Christian Endeavor is to promote the Christian life of the youth of the church and community and prepare them for more efficient service for the church and the world.

"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom
And the man that getteth understanding.
For the gaining of it is better than the gaining of silver,
And the profit thereof than fine gold."

CHAUTAQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS.

The first Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods had a good beginning Monday night, August 28th. After an informal program in the college chapel, the guests were entertained delightfully by the Junior Christian Endeavor Society, under the direction of Mrs. C. M. Cannon, their efficient superintendent. Regular class work began Tuesday morning and much interest is being expressed in all of the work. The children's Daily Vacation Bible School opened the same morning with a splendid attendance and much enthusiasm. While it is too early to give the record of the week the beginning assures that the week will not be one spent in vain, but a week whose work will be felt in many of our churches for weeks and months to come. Fourteen pastors attended the first pastor's class, and others are coming in. Sunday school workers and Christian Endeavorers are studying the principles and methods of their work. Elon has welcomed the Chautauqua in true Elon-style.

WHAT IS YOUR CHURCH DOING FOR ITS YOUNG PEOPLE.

We have just closed the regular revival meeting season among our churches. Numbers of young people have joined the church and placed themselves under our care. What has the church to offer them? Is she prepared to give them the means of spiritual development and if so in what way?

The parents to whom God entrusts the little babe, feel that they are placed under the obligation of caring for the physical and mental development of the child.

Can the church receive the child without assuming a spiritual obligation? The child must have the opportunity for normal spiritual growth.

The young people's Society of Christian Endeavor provides this opportunity. Now is a good season to start this organization in your church. Give your young people a chance to develop into future workers for your church.

BOOKS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL FOLKS.

Field Secretary of Sunday Schools of the American Christian Convention, Dayton, Ohio, Mrs. Fred E. Bullock has very kindly furnished us the following book reviews, which suggest many books and supplies which will be helpful to your workers.

"Story Telling for Teachers of Beginners and Primary Children," by Katherine Dunlap Cather. Story Telling is coming more and more to be accepted as one of the greatest ways of teaching a remarkable truth, a fact long ago discovered, but seemingly forgotten in the years when printing made it easier to read for one's self. Miss Cather's book will be found helpful, not only to the beginner but to the more experienced teller of stories. Published by the Caxton Press for sixty cents.

"A Study of the Little Child," by Mary Theodora Whitley. The Pilgrim Elementary Teacher says of this Beginners Child Study Book, "It is a fascinating introduction to little children by one who sees them as they are, who understands what has made them so, and who possesses many a secret to insure their well being." It is a book to recommend to fathers and mothers as well as teachers of little children.

Presbyterian Board of Publication, Price 60 cents.

"The Training of Children in the Christian Family," L. A. Weigle. If you are looking for an elective course for your adult class or a book to recommend to parents, this will meet your need. Professor Weigle has built the thirteen chapters of his book around the thirteen topics prepared and released by the International Sunday School Lesson Committee under the title of "Hints on Child Training" as one of its elective courses for adult classes. The "Modern Home," "The Christian Family," "The Home's Atmosphere," are understandingly discussed, while chapters on the child "At Play," "At Work," and "At Study," "With His Friends," lead up naturally to chapters on "Doing for Others," "Training the Devotional Life," and "The Child and the Church."

Published by the Pilgrim Press, $1.50 net, postage ten cents.

"A Little Kit of Teacher's Tools," by Phillip E. Howard. One might suppose that this book was a list of materials with which the teacher is to work, but it is really the 'tools' which the teacher has in his own mind and the minds of his pupils. The following list of chapter heads will give some idea of the scope and purpose of the book.

1. How to prepare a lesson for teaching;
2. How to study your pupils;
3. The fine art of getting attention;
4. Regaining lost attention;
5. Finding and using illustrations.
6. The neglected art of asking good questions;
7. How to secure the pupil's co-work;
8. Can a review be made interesting?;
9. What is real discipline in teaching?;
10. Leading your pupils to Christ.

Sunday School Times Company. Price 75 cents.

"The Church and the Immigrant," Georgia E. Harkness. Miss Harkness is an instructor in Boston University School of Religious Education and Social Service, a graduate herself of two universities. She has had personal and practical experience with the immigrant problem. Her book is practical and clear. We recommend it to every pastor and social worker in every community where there are immigrant problems, and this is everywhere in America today. George H. Doran Co., Price cloth $1.00, paper $.60.

Talking of a low motive, we heard the other day, or rather we read the other day of a very poor motive. A woman entered a book store and told the clerk that she wished a book. Well, said the polite clerk, what kind of a book do you wish. "Well," she said, "just anything to kill time." What a motive for a woman made for high and holy ends. Anything to kill time. Well such a book would come nearer to killing all that is good in the woman than otherwise. Why do you wish to kill time? Oh, no doubt the lady fancied she had nothing to do, and so as she thought time was hanging heavy on her hands. Change your motto a bit. Instead of killing time, get something to read which will teach you how to use your time for high and holy ends.

Vacation is about over. Now for getting home and back to hard work. The vacation period is a most important part of the year's work, for it said that all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy. Well, the same is true of a minister. If he works all the time and takes no vacation, he will soon come to be a broken down and worn out old horse.

CHILD'S HOUR

PETER THE POLITE.

On the day that Peter Oliver was six years old his big brother William was going to drive up to Kipton for farm supplies, and the family decided that Peter should go with him. Kipton was twenty-five miles away, and as Peter had never been there he jumped for joy.

It was a bright spring morning, and they started very early.

"Now hold on tight, Peter," his mother called from the door.

"Yes'm," Peter answered.

"And mind William."

"Yes'm." The horses were pawing and eager to go.

"And be polite," mother said, as she waved her hand.

"Yes'm," said Peter, and the wagon went rumbling off.

All the way to town Peter was thinking about one thing; he fully expected to buy a watch; in fact, he had gone so far as to tell his younger brother, Thomas, that he would be allowed to wear the watch for ten minutes when the travelers returned.

Still he thought he had better make perfectly sure. "William," he said, looking at the big bright quarter in his hand, "twenty-five will buy a watch all right, won't it?"

Now, William's mind was on fertilizer, and he thought that "twenty-five" meant twenty-five dollars. So he said, "Of course it will," and went on whistling under his breath.

That settled it; Peter leaned back in his seat quite satisfied and clutched the coin closer than ever. There were a great many people passing on foot and in vehicles, and Peter, remembering his promise, bowed pleasantly to each one. Most of them were friends and neighbors, and they looked pleased to see Peter Oliver going to Kipton for the first time.

As the wagon drew nearer to town, however, more and more people passed, and a great many of them seemed to be strangers. But Peter kept on bowing courteously; he wondered why William had stopped bowing. He wondered, too, why some of the people looked at him curiously, and why very few of them returned his greeting. He had no way of knowing that town customs differ from country customs, and that he was not supposed to speak to every one now. He went right on bowing and smiling, just as he had done on the country road.

"Sleepy, Peter?" asked William, presently.

"Thought you seemed to be nid-nodding," replied William.

"I wasn't either!" Peter said indignantly. "Me nid-nodding!" What could William be thinking of?

Fifteen minutes later Peter was marching down Main Street in Kipton by himself, with his hands in his pockets. He had promised William that he would not turn a corner. "There'll be plenty to see on one street," William had said.

Peter knew well enough what he wanted to see. He walked slowly, keeping a sharp lookout for a window with watches in it. As he went along he wished with all his heart that there were not so many people in Kipton. It was hard to have good manners and at the same time to attend to the important business of buying a watch. But Peter was faithful; every time he caught a passer's eye he bowed. He did not stop even when a rough little boy called out rudely, "Hey, there, rubberneck!"

At one crossing an old gentleman on crutches passed him. Peter nodded pleasantly; and the old gentleman, after halting just a minute, hobbled on with a surprised expression under his bushy eyebrows.

Peter decided that the jewelers' windows must be on the other side; so he crossed the street and started back toward the place where he had left William. "Maybe there are not so many folks on this side," he said to himself. But there were and they did not seem any more polite than the people on the other side. All at once Peter came to a window full of watches. He turned his back on the crowd and stood very still for a long while, staring at the beautiful things with all his eyes. While he was trying to make his choice among them he heard a tap-tap behind him, and there was the lame old gentleman again. Peter looked up and bowed to him courteously.

The crutches stopped. "I don't believe I remember your name, exactly," said the stranger. "No, sir," said Peter politely. "You don't remember it at all. You never heard it." Then he told his name and what he was busy about. All the while they talked, Peter was managing somehow to bow to all the passers-by.

The stranger watched Peter narrowly with his keen, bright eyes. "You seem to know nearly every one in Kipton," he said.

"Oh, no sir!" was Peter's answer I was never here before in my life. Will you excuse me a moment, sir, while I go in and buy that watch with the dog's-head fob?"

Again the old man looked surprised. "How do you know you can buy it?" he said.

For answer Peter held up the bright quarter. Then he stepped briskly into the store. Three minutes later he came out looking very red. His face was sober, but he held his chin well up. The lame old gentleman was waiting.

"He says I made a big mistake about the price of watches. He says"—Peter's voice shook a little and he blinked so hard that he entirely missed bowing to three ladies in succession. "I think my brother must be looking for me," he said suddenly. "Good-bye, sir." He gave his new friend a handshake. Then he walked off with his head still high, bowing right and left. The old man, after watching him out of sight, turned and went into the store himself.

Peter was glad when the long dismal drive came to an end late that evening. To be sure, it was hard to face Thomas, who had sat up two hours past bedtime waiting to wear the watch ten minutes.

"I didn't get it," whispered Peter hoarsely and hurried to bed in silence. He felt tired and very stiff.

"William," said Mrs. Oliver the next day, "what in the world did you let that child do yesterday in Kipton? His neck is so stiff this morning that he can't turn his head."

"I didn't let him do anything," answered William. "There was something the matter with his head all the way up there. He never kept it still a minute."

When the mail was brought in at noon, some one called out that there was a package for Peter. Poor Peter was sitting in a rocking-chair by the window with a hot mustard plaster on the back of his neck, trying not to mind the pain. The only way he could look to right or to left was by rolling his eyes. He rolled them now at the package.

In was addressed delightfully to Peter Oliver, Esq., and when Peter had torn off the wrapping a little square white box tumbled out. On the back of the box was written, "For Peter the Polite." Inside, ticking away for dear life, lay a bright silver watch with a dog's head fob.

Peter forgot his mustard plaster. He rose from the rocking chair and gave three leaps into the air and three cheers.

"But who sent it? And what does that funny name mean?" Asked the family in chorus.

Peter was too excited to remember anything. He compared the watch with the mantel clock; then he slipped it into his pocket. "Does any one want to know what time it is?" he asked.

And to this day the Oliver family often puzzle over the question where the watch came from, and why it came, and what can be the meaning of that peculiar name, Peter the Polite.—Nancy Byrd Turner, in The Youth's Companion.

PAULINE TO THE RESCUE.

Little June was unhappy, more unhappy than she had thought it possible for any little girl to be. Now she sat by the window and looked listlessly out at the sun pouring a rich glory over the world outside, a book dropped in her lap.

"June dear," said mother, anxiously, "are you not well? Surely my little girl does not want to stay in on such a beautiful day; see, here are Bessie and Pauline coming for you." She smiled pleasantly at the eager little girls. "Yes, June may go with you. June dear, run and get your hat." But June did not move. Her face flushed. "I—I got a—my head aches." This was true; her head did ache.

Mrs. Dickinson laid her hand on June's hot brow. "Rest here, dear," she said; "perhaps, it is the spring weather. I will get you a glass of nice, cool milk, and you will feel better." She pulled down the shade, shutting the light from June's eyes, and left the room.

The little girl looked after her miserably. No, she didn't deserve the nice milk; she didn't deserve her mother's love any more. It was true her head ached, but not from any bodily ailment. It seemed as if the hurt of her conscience had divided itself between her head and heart. It had all started that morning with the dime in the little brown jug on the kitchen shelf, but, no, further back than that it had started with the stick of red candy in the window of the drug store around the corner. It was like tracing one's sin back to Adam. June had wanted the red stick, but mother had forbidden it. "No, June, that candy is painted and unwholesome; it will make my little girl sick. Mother will buy you a cake of milk chocolate."

But June had refused the chocolate. She wanted the red stick of candy and not all of the milk chocolate in the world could make up for it. She knew that once mother said no, she meant no and further appeal would be in vain; yet how the thought of the red candy stuck and stuck and stuck. Then that morning, while her mother was tying up her lunch she had caught sight of the brown jug. She wondered if it still held the dime, and then everything seemed to happen at once; her mother left the room for an instant, and in that instant she had climbed the chair, thrust her small hand into the jug and secured the dime. She hadn't actually meant to steal—she couldn't tell now exactly what motive prompted the deed. She was really an unusually good little girl, but that was because, perhaps, she had never been tempted in just this way before. Kissing her mother a hasty and guilty good-bye, she left the house, and somehow, when she had finally arrived at school, the red stick was in her pocket and the dime gone. She was a thief; she had stolen her mother's money, and had been disobedient as well, for had not mother forbidden her to have the candy? The coveted stick no longer appeared tempting and inviting; she did not even try it with a lick of her tongue. Mother had said it would make her sick, and mother was always right. Oh, why had she bought it? She didn't want it, she didn't! She wished it was back in the window and the dime safe again in the brown jug. At lunch she threw the red stick under the school's porch steps and when school was over went soberly and miserably home.

"Mother! I—I think I will go out, anyway, and," she added breathlessly, "I'd better not drink the milk, perhaps—it might scramble inside of me jumping and playing about."

Mother smiled at the quaint idea, and set back the milk. "You shall have it for supper, then, dear," she said. "And, June, as you are going out stop by the drug store and get mother five two-cent stamps; there are several letters I must mail tonight." June anticipating her mother, sprang upon the chair and seized the brown jug. "I'll get—" she mumbled.

"Yes, dear, the dime will just pay for the stamps. Tell Mr. Willis I want a dime's worth of stamps; it will be easier for you to remember, and now, little girl, run out and play. I won't need the stamps until this evening. You can get them on your way back."

Outside of the house June hesitated, and then, turning rushed off to the deserted school lot. She wanted to get away from every one. She wanted to be alone with her misery. Oh, how one sin had led to another. She had pretended to mother to take the dime from the jug when she had known it was not there. She was surprised and somewhat disconcerted to find Pauline in the school yard. "I left my pencil-box on the steps," explained the little girl. "Has the headache gone? Did you leave something, too? Why, June, how funny you look! Are you—scared?" June's white face sent a funny little shiver up and down her spine.

June's reply was a husky whisper: "Pauline, you won't want ever to play with me again. I am a—thief."

Pauline was so startled that she let her pencil-box fall and didn't even notice that her cherished pencils were scattered upon the ground. It wasn't nice of June to upset her so. What could she mean?

"Yes, Pauline," insisted June, as Pauline only stared, "I stole—from mother!" Then the overburdened little heart gave way, and June flung herself on the grass, sobbing frantically.

And, coaxing and soothing, Pauline drew the story of the red stick and the dime in the brown jug from June. She couldn't understand how June could have done it, but June's grief and repentance, so sincere and overwhelming, took away from the awfulness of the deed and drew her closer to her little friend.

"Don't cry, June," she repeated. "You are sorry and threw the candy away. Let me wipe your face; it is all streaked and dirty; and, June, you must go straight home and tell your mother everything, how sorry you are and how you are never going to do it again, never, never!"

June shivered. "Mother won't love me any more," she cried. "I—I am afraid to tell her; oh, Pauline, she might not love me any more!"

Pauline was indignant. "June Dickinson," she exclaimed, "mothers aren't like that. They are like God you know. They forgive anything and keep on loving you just the same. Why, June, you know mothers are like God!"

"Pauline," whispered June, holding her very tight, "will you go with me, will you?"

Pauline couldn't understand either how June could hesitate to tell her mother, but June was so evidently in need of her support that she could not refuse it.

"Yes, June, I will go with you. Bessie will wonder what has become of me, but that won't matter." She gathered up her pencils and restored them to the box, and together the little girls returned to Mrs. Dickinson.

She was busy in the sitting-room writing the letters she had mentioned, when Pauline and June walked straight up to her.

"Here is June, Mrs. Dickinson," she said. "She has been a very, oh, a very bad girl and she wants to tell you about it, but she is afraid you won't love her anymore if you know." She gave June a nudge, but June did not move, her eyes fixed breathlessly upon her mother's face, and Pauline continued earnestly. "But you will love her just the same, won't you, Mrs. Dickinson, even if she has done something wicked?"

"My little girl," exclaimed Mrs. Dickinson, snatching June to her heart, "my own, precious darling! How could you doubt it! Mother will always love you just the same, always and always, no matter what you have done—no matter what you do, always and always; tell mother, darling, what has happened; mother will forgive you!" And, for the second time June sobbed out the story of her wrong-doing, and her mother held her tight and wiped the tears and kissed away the shame and the hurt of the wicked deed, until the old peace stole back again. She felt that Pauline was right. Mother were like God, forgiving and loving you just the same, and that never, never, again would she be afraid to tell her anything.—Amanda Cordes, in Richmond Christian Advocate.

HOW WALL STREET GOT ITS NAME.

If there had not been war between Holland and England there is no telling what would have been the name of Wall street, New York. The financial center of America might have borne any other name and have been just as powerful as it is.

The wall that gave to it its name was put up by Peter Stuyvesant. The old peg-legged autocrat had his own intelligence service and he became convinced that the New England and Connecticut colonies were going to attack him. His town north of the fort was unprotected and he threw a wooden wall from the East to the North rivers. It was built of logs that were used as palisades, with the upper ends spiked.

It was not a wonderful defense, as we look at things now, but against an assault by men armed with blunderbusses it would have taken some sacrifice on the part of the attackers to have carried it.

But the old wooden wall stood for a half-century and cramped the growth of the town. There was a ditch alongside it, and at night the gate was closed and bolted and guarded. When you got outside the wall you were in the suburbs of New Amsterdam with no commutation service to kick about. It, however, named the street that ran a side it and which is, perhaps, the best known thoroughfare in the United States.—Selected.

BELOW THE SURFACE.

"Tom's a good boy all right," remarked an old man, evidently a seaman, to his friend. "He's as good a boy as ever there was, if I do say it. But he's something like that there little craft of mine out there that I've been overhauling. She's bright an' clean an' spick an' span to look at, but she'll never budge an inch as she is. Why? No propeller."

We wonder if the reason many apparently attractive and promising lives do not forge to the front very rapidly is not found in a lack of the same thing—a propeller. Most of us are so constituted that when we fail to have some definite goal or purpose to strive for we find ourselves drifting helplessly with every current of popularity or pleasure or selfishness we encounter. The propeller does not have to appear upon the surface, its presence need not be announced or proclaimed, but it is none the less necessary for all that.—Forward.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

When our income runs low and far less than our expense account, we sometimes feel discouraged: We have eighty-five little children looking us in the face expecting us to see that they get three meals per day and clothes to keep their little bodies warm. But this week has been more encouraging to us—one of our Burlington friends came to see us last week and we took him through the "Baby Home" and let him see the children. He asked me what did we need more than anything else. I told him we needed a table, chairs, and drugget for the front room. When he got home he sent us five nice rocking chairs, a library table, and a nice drugget. It is a wonderful addition to the looks of our front room. This man is not a member of our denomination. We have a thousand dollars' item to report in our financial report this week. Mr. Geo. R. Maynard, who was one of the best citizens in Alamance county, died a few weeks ago and left the thousand dollars to be used for the uses of the Institution. We are glad Mr. Maynard made this investment to help give the helpless a home and training. It was no more than we expected he would do; because all through his noble life he had much sympathy for the poor and was always glad to lend a helping hand. We hope many will remember us when they write their last will and testament. It is a good way to build a monument in little human beings.

McCauley-Lewis.

Clinton, N. C., August 15th.

A quiet but beautiful wedding took place at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lewis, when their daughter, Bessie Allene, became the bride of Rev. Joseph Early McCauley. Rev. George Matthews, pastor of the bride's mother performed the ceremony in the presence of a few relatives and most intimate friends.

Prior to the service, "O Promise Me," was sung by Miss Varo Hairr.

To the strains of the wedding march from Lohengrin rendered by Miss Thelma Peterson at the piano and accompanied by Miss Vivian Hairr with the violin; Rev. Matthews entered and stood in front of the artistically arranged arch entwined in ivy, asparagus and bamboo, lighted by candles placed in candle holders that were used at the wedding of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Laura Butler, of Clinton. The shaded lights seem to cast a soft glow over the entire occasion, carrying out the color scheme of pink and green.

The groom entered with his best man, Mr. Harold Lewis, awaiting at the altar for the bride accompanied by maid of honor, Miss Lela Floy Butler, attired in a lovely canton crepe dress embroidered with the steel cut trimming wearing a black picture hat, while the bride was beautifully dressed in a three-piece navy-blue pairt will combined with periwinkle embroidery of contrasting colors. Her hat, gloves and accessories carried out the color note of her costume, an artistic corsage of bride's roses completed the effect of youth and beauty. The only ornament she wore was the wedding ring of her grandmother Lewis.

The groom and best man wore suits of conventional black.

During the impressive ceremony Traumeri was softly played, after which Mr. and Mrs. McCauley left amid showers of rice by way of automobile to the western part of the state, where they will spend their honey moon.

The bride is a most lovable and attractive young woman. She received her education at Elon College, after which she taught in the Shady Grove High school, where she became a very popular teacher.

The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew McCauley, of Chapel Hill, and a descendant of Mr. C. M. T. McCauley, one of the donors of the State University. He is a member of the 1922 class of Elon College also a very promising young minister.

The bride and groom received many useful and attractive presents of cut glass, silver, etc.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. JNO. A. MILLS.

"Sunset and evening Star,
And one clear call for me;
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea."

This call came to Mrs. Jno. A. Mills. of Raleigh,, the night of August 10th, at 10:30 o'clock. Peacefully and unafraid, the gentle spirit, loosed from its moorings, set sail o'er the unknown sea to the unknown shore; back to the God who gave it.

Mrs. Mills had been seriously ill for several weeks; faithful loved ones had watched with unabated interest—skilled physicians had worked untiringly but the frail and tired body failed to respond to the heroic treatment and so her death came, not unexpected.

Reared in a country home in Wake County by Godly parents, she was taught early in life to have implicit faith in a higher power, her young life was so impressed with noble thoughts and ambitious that her ideals were always of a lofty nature. That simple child-like faith that God heareth and answereth prayer, clung to her through life, and never more manifested its self than during her last illness when she realized she was nearing the end. She frequently assured us of her willingness to go, and as expressed in her own words, "None could be more reconciled than I." She spoke of passing away as she would of taking a pleasure trip when well and showed no fear or dread for the life beyond.

Those who watched for the last flicker of her pulse and leaned nearer to catch the last faint whisper could instinctively feel that white robed angels were gently bearing her spirit away, and that loved ones gone before were watching and waiting to give her the glad hand of welcome as she entered the pearly gates. Having lost a son and daughter some years ago, the grief was too much for her already frail body, and she never fully recovered from the shock.

Being an invalid for years, she was kept close in the home and only her most intimate friends knew of her wonderful intellect and abundant knowledge in many lines. She was a close student and kept in touch with all the leading issues of the day. Her clear insight into human nature, and far sightedness in business matters qualified her as a business woman of unusual ability, a woman of much energy but of a timid and retiring nature consequently she was not always understood. Her usefulness was known and most appreciated by those who knew her best. Mrs. Mills has gone, but the influence of her upright life will live on and be an inspiration to her friends, and a sign board on the highway of life so that her noble sons may steer straight for the city eternal. To the ever faithful and devoted husband and loving sons we extend deep sympathy.

A FRIEND.

JESUS WAITING FOR YOU

In a recent service our young preacher dropped a thought that has been in my mind considerable since that time, and I want to pass it on to you. It is this: "Jesus Christ died for all the world, and then told His disciples to 'go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature,' and while there is one person who has not heard it, He is waiting for someone of His disciples to go and tell that person."

It took hold of my heart and I wanted you to thing of it also. How anxious Jesus must be for someone to go and tell those who have never yet heard that He died for them and has opened a way into Heaven for them all if they only knew it. How sad to think that one soul may be lost when it is not at all necessary, and the whole reason and responsibility rests upon the fact that one of His disciples who has heard the good news and enjoys the blessed hope of salvation has not thought of the other one who has not heard and does not know anything about it. Could you picture the dark despair and the horrible blackness of a soul without the least ray of hope in Jesus and no opportunity of finding the light, I think you would do something desperate to get the wonderful good news to that soul.

Jesus is waiting for you to go and tell someone about His great love that caused Him to die for that one. Perhaps someone you know, one of your neighbors, is still without the knowledge of the Saviour. Have you thought to tell him, or have you thought of it and have neglected to do such a kind deed to one in darkness and despair? What will be your excuse at the judgment for having let one be lost for the lack of the help you might give?

Jesus is waiting! Waiting for you! Oh, the yearning of His heart touched with compassion for the thousands who have not heard of His love! And oh, the blackness and despair of those without the light! They are hungry and thirsty and blind and hopeless. Their hearts are sad and dark, the burden is too heavy to bear, and Jesus is waiting for you to tell them of a Friend who will make their hearts glad by taking away their darkness and sorrow, their sadness and gloom. Oh, will you tell them?

and truth is, that the soul that sinneth shall die. Death, then, is God's just appointment to man in consequence of sin. The only way, therefore, of putting away sin was by death; and that no sinful man could die for another is evident, because he must die for himself. The Son of God, on whom death had no claim, was able to die for others; and He in matchless Grace died for us, the Just for the unjust, and thus a perfect and eternal salvation has been completed for man.

It is the Blood which justifies, Rom. 5:9; which sanctifies, Heb. 9:13,14; and glorifies, Rev. 1:5,6; and it will be the theme of the redeemed in heaven to the glory of the Savior's precious name forever.

Still with Thee, O my God,
I would desire to be,
By day, by night, at home, abroad
I would be still with Thee.
With Thee when dawn comes in
And calls me back to care,
Each day returning to begin
With Thee, my God, in prayer.
With Thee amid the crowd
That throngs the busy mart,
To hear Thy voice, when time is loud,
Speak softly to my heart.

"IT IS THE BLOOD THAT SAVES"

Recently a young man of singularly attractive appearance was called to die after a lingering illness. He had been reared almost wholly without the knowledge of the Gospel; but when its precious invitations and assurances were first read to him he listened with the most intense interest. In a very little while the Spirit of God led him to trust in Jesus for salvation with a childlike confidence and a cloudless hope seldom equalled.

From the moment until the hour of his departure he never once wavered, but with increasing joy and eagerness awaited the summons to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord.

During the three or four weeks that elapsed before he fell asleep the truth of God's Word, or the certainty of his salvation as already accomplished, did not present itself to his mind for a single moment in the form of a doubt; and he frequently gave utterance to expressions that seemed at times to fall from the lips of one who had been caught up into paradise, and had heard unspeakable words.

On a certain occasion his father, who had not attended a place of worship for many years, was standing at the foot of the bed, watching the smiles that played like sunshine on the pale face of the sufferer, and listening to the wonderful testimony that was borne to the loveliness of Christ. At length the strong man bowed his head, and with streaming tears exclaimed, "Oh, if I were as happy as that boy, I too would wish to die." "Father," said the dying youth, "it is the Blood that saves;" and then with tender exhortations he urged those who were so dear to him to trust in Jesus, to trust Him only, to trust Him wholly.

Yes, it is Blood alone that saves; and there is no sin man has ever been guilty of however enormous in magnitude, or however painful in remembrance, but the Blood of Christ can cleanse away.

The salvation of sinners has always been connected with blood-shedding and death. The reason is obvious, "For sin's wages is death." The law of holiness

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

A Most Regrettable condition in Germany.—

The conquered country finds it most difficult to recover itself from the financial shock of war. They are unable to keep their finances in a stable condition. Recently the German mark fell from 1,432 to 1,950 to the dollar within the limits of twenty-four hours, causing the closing of many shops, and came near to producing a panic in which men and women tried to convert their money into something more tangible and safe.

Quite a Complex Question.—

Secretary Mellon of the United States Treasury declares that the finding of the $4,135,000,000 war debt owed by the British government to the United States, has no relation to war loans made by the United States government to Great Britain and other governments, or to questions arising in connection with reparations payment of the former Central Powers. No doubt the settlement of this matter will have to go further than to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Quite a Debt, Indeed!—

We are told that the state governments of the United States have a total bonded indebtedness of $1,071,506,981. That is equal to $10.18 per capita. New York has the largest individual State debt, while Kansas, Kentucky, Nebraska, and Wisconsin have no bonded indebtedness. If to this should be added the debt of the United States government, then we should see what would stagger most of us, for few could take in the idea of the extent of this indebtedness, and yet no one seems to be uneasy about losses. However, debt is an eating burden, continually growing into larger figures, and therefore, it should be paid at the earliest moment possible.

Fresh Milk Always.—

A report comes from London to the effect that a way to keep milk fresh has been discovered. It was accomplished by the Jules Neilsen system of pasteurization in South Africa. As a proof of the fact a ten-gallon can of fresh milk has been sent from that country to England, and when it arrived, after a searching chemical examination and also a bacteriological examination, the milk was declared to be equal in flavor to the best English milk, being free from any trace of bacterial danger. Exhaustive tests proved that the fat content rose in the cream in a thoroughly normal manner, and that the keeping qualities not only of the milk, but also of the cream were not affected after seventy-two hours exposure to the heat and atmosphere of London. This looks as if the world is moving, certainly in the way of new discoveries. If the process is not too expensive this find will prove a boon to the human family.

A Generous Offer.—

Our people, as a country, are getting much interested in the cure of tuberculosis, pneumonia, cancer, epilepsy, or demontia praecox. As an evidence of this fact the United States Congress has offered as reward $1,000,000 for a remedy to cure those diseases. Let us hope in behalf of suffering humanity that some one may receive that one million dollars by finding a real remedy for the diseases named.

The Episcopal Convention.—

The Episcopal Church in the United States is to hold their Convention in October in Portland, Oregon. The revision of their Prayer book seems to be the one absorbing theme of interest among them, judging by the discussions now going on in their church papers, especially The Southern Churchman, Richmond, Va. They speak of it as the World's Conference on Faith and Order. The Prayer book in the Episcopal church is a great part of their worship, or rather the instrument through which they give expression to their worship.

A New Day for Catholic Priests in Spain.—

The report reaches this country that in France a new organization has been formed whose purpose is to allow Roman Catholic Priests to marry. Its president, a young ecclesiastic, has recently married. It looks like the hinges of the world are breaking loose. It has been said that the Roman Catholic church never changes, but this report, if true, will show that the Church of Rome can no longer boast of this fact. They are now saying in justification of this departure that the priests in the Latin Church had a right to marry. They say that celibacy is not based on Bible teaching, dogma or tradition. It is, they claim, simply a disciplinary regulation. Well, if it is gone, we say let it go in peace and never be brought back.

A New Day Dawns in Ireland.—

Yes the locks and hinges of human regulations are breaking loose and doors long since closed are opening to this new day. Not long since the Protestant ministers and the Roman Catholic priests met in Belfast, Ireland, and agreed on a pronouncement in favor of peace to be made in all churches and chapels. They mutually agreed to discourage discriminations and misrepresentations and to admit the guilt of offending parties, no matter to what side they belonged. This step is a basis of fair play and justice in a most encouraging degree for troubled Ireland. Evidently a new day is dawning for the Emerald Isle. Let us hope that peace between the churches may be the herald of the coming of a new day of peace and prosperity for that people.

Too Many Mercantile Establishments.—

It is stated in the public prints of recent date that the United States have entirely too many merchant—we have one merchant for every twenty-two families. It is also stated that we have twenty-eight gainfully employed persons for every store, that is, an average of twenty-eight persons to the store. That is to say that of our 105,000,000 population one and one-fourth persons from every family in this country are employed in the mercantile business. These are nonproducers. They simply handle what others produce. Of course, there must be many failures in the mercantile business, as long as this state of the business exists. The thing we seem so much to need is a reduction by half of the stores now trying to do business.

Viscount Northcliff.—

Only two or three weeks ago the death of Viscount Northcliff was announced in England. He was regarded at one time, and if we mistake not, till the time of his death, as the most influential man in all England. Even Lloyd George, England's Prime Minister, did not feel very safe, if Viscount Northcliff were against him. He was only fifty-seven years old when he died. He was great as a journalist. It is claimed for him that he had done a work in journalism which had affected journalism for good throughout the whole world, and at the same time he had reconstructed journalism. That is quite enough for one short life to have done, and he has gone to his reward while his sun was yet in the meridian of life. He was a great sufferer in his last days, but it is said that he bore up bravely in the last great struggle of his life.

A Shameful Assassination.—

On August 22, 1922, Michael Collins, the commander in chief of the Free State forces in Ireland and provisional head of the Free State Government and financial minister of the Dail Eireann, was assassinated. Again and again attempts have been made upon the leader of the Irish Free State, but till this time, without success. The last attempt on his life before the one that was fatal, resulted in the death of his chauffeur, who was sitting by his side. Mr. Collins was a man of high character and of great ability to serve his country in such a time as the present. He was one of the organizers of the Sinn Fein movement, and it was he that forced England to adopt a course which meant really the complete autonomy for Ireland, thus bringing to pass the practical independence of Ireland, the dream of the Irish people for centuries. This work of assassination as a means of getting people out of the way ought to be punished in the most fearless manner, as a means of breaking up any such course in the political world toward one's political enemies.

NOTES - PERSONALS

Is the fast young man ever a real success? If not, why not?

What are you doing to build up the circulation of The Christian Sun?

The Father who spoils his son by over indulgence is cruel to himself.

Are you trying to live a prayerless life and be a Christian? It cannot be done.

Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., Burlington, N. C.; reports having had fine meetings at Haw River and at Old Union recently.

Are you trying to live a Christian life, while you could, but do not read your Bible? Then one thing is certain—you will fail.

Here is a wonderful thought. God never places you where His grace cannot keep you. Live on that statement and so be ready for whatever may come.

Learn contentment. Paul did not come to his best till he learned to be content in whatever state he was. This is graduation in the primary school of Christ.

Do not seek to learn just simply that you may know, but learn that you may be able to point your fellow men to the way of life. Then knowledge will be power indeed.

The Bible is man's guide-post to point him to the right way. Heed it at every turn in the road. You need divine guidance in so important a matter as living for Eternity.

Canon Farrar is quoted as having once said: "No soul can preserve the bloom and delicacy of its existence without silent prayer," and you cannot live the Christian life at all without prayer.

The wisest Man the Church has ever had in its work has said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." Then certainly we ought by all means to follow Him even unto the end of the journey of life.

Writing from Elams, N. C., Dr. D. A. Long says: "Closed the meeting at Antioch, August 30th. There were ten converts, and ten united with the church. I will begin a protracted meeting at Bethlehem next Sunday."

Can you manage yourself when under trial? If you can, you have reached a high and most excellent achievement. If you cannot, and most likely you cannot then your only help and your only hope is to turn to Christ and beg Him to manage you for His glory.

Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, pastor of the Holland Christian church attended the Chautauqua at Elon recently. He took with him a couple of young men from the church and gave them the advantages of attending the Chautauqua; a good example.

Rev. Jno. G. Truitt, of News Ferry, Va., will soon return to his studies in Princeton Theological Seminary, where, if we mistake not, he will graduate in the spring of next year. He has done a good work this summer in protracted meeting work among the churches. We wish him great success.

The rank of virtue is not measured. The free man does not crave to do what his passing whim may suggest. Such a man is anarchist, and anarchy is the despair of liberty, its antithesis. The truly free man craves to do, not what he may want, but what he ought.—President W. A. Harper, LL. D., in Southern Churchman.

The great Scripture commentator, Matthew Henry is quoted as having once said: "It is an excellent thing when men's religion makes them generous, free-hearted and open-handed, scorning to do a thing that is paltry or sneaking." That is truth is a nut-shell. Keep it and use it when ever you have a chance, and that will likely be often.

Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., gave a course of lectures at the recent Chautauqua to pastors. No doubt it is well worth while for our pastors to have attended these lectures. We should like the same to be published in a pamphlet form, or if that is impracticable, then in the columns of The Sun. We need more literature along that line, and Dr. Staley is the man to furnish it, if he will.

We begin in this issue a series of papers on the late reunion of the Helfenstein Family in the west. Squin (Rev. S. Q. Helfenstein, D. D.,) is well known to many of our Southern people through our Sunday school literature of which he has been editor now for almost sixteen years. It will be interesting to read of his family his brothers and sisters and their families.

It does some people good, physically, to work hard. When Dr. L. E. Smith was only a pastor, now and then his friends were afraid of a breakdown but now, though he is still serving as a pastor of a large congregation, he is also building the handsomest church building in our denomination, North or South, and is also serving the Southern Christian Convention as its President, he is gaining physically, weighing now 174 pounds. Work of the right kind and a plenty of it contributes its part to good health and Dr. Smith is a living example of this fact.

Dr. D. A. Long informs us through a clipping from a local paper that Mr. S. C. Vann has donated to Franklinton, N. C. one hundred thousand dollars to build a fine school house for the public school work in that city. That is a handsome gift. We see Dr. Long had the honor of presenting resolutions at a public meeting in Franklinton, thanking Mr. Vann for his noble generosity in making such a gift. Dr. Long expects to begin a series of meetings in Franklinton the third Sunday in September. We wish he may have a meeting of blessed fruitage and accomplish much in the building up of the cause in the name of the Lord. Let the good work go on everywhere.

When you see a man of 75 or 80 years of age, toiling to preach the gospel on a salary of five or six hundred dollars a year, why do you not call attention to it, just as you do when you hear of some minister who is enjoying a fine salary and preaching the gospel. There are many men who are toiling to do the Master's bidding when they are old and decrepit, nearing the grave, but still busy in the Lord's vineyard. I say, why is it that you do not make any remark of commendation in a case of that sort, while you are sure to say some pretty uncharitable words of the man who is preaching on a fat salary? Let us give up uncharitable words, for even if they are deserved, we cannot mend matters by talking against it—let us leave it all in the hands of the Masters, while we go along doing our best to serve Him.

Bishop Warren A. Candler is quoted as having put in a new setting that Scriptural passage which says: "My house is a house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves." Bishop Candler says: "God's house is a house of prayer, and not a cheap lunch counter. How true! A lunch counter in the house of God indicates that the people are so near to starving as to reflect on the preaching of the pastor. Christians need something far better than a lunch counter.

We are among those who mourn the death of the late Geo. R. Maynard, of Alamance and one of the leading members of the Old Union church. We met him only a few times some twenty-five years ago, but the friendship formed in these few meetings lasts till now and will be continued as we trust on the other shore. It is not fulsome praise to say that George R. Maynard was a true and noble man. God bless his memory.

Here is an item from The Southern Churchman which is so applicable to most of us. Read it an see if it suit your case. If so, profit by it.

"If you feel moved to criticise a person, suppose you see him first. Talk over the matter in question, and discover his point of view. Probably it is a different angle from that which presented itself to you. Perhaps, after all, it is the right angle and you may be spared the ignominy of doing him an injustice. Perhaps he can tell you things you did not know. On the other hand, perhaps you can enlighten him and lead him to see the error of his way."

We have received from Brother Franklin Babb, Lost Creek, Ohio, a copy of song from his pen. It is called Longing For Mother. The music is by Luther A. Clark. We are not a judge of the music, but the words have merit. Babb calls it A Song From the Heart. That is the sub-head, and we have no doubt that it is from the heart, and as such, it beautifully expresses the emotion of the heart when we sing of mother. It is what we call sheet music and it very nicely gotten up. Price is 25 cents. Address, Franklin Babb, Lost Creek, Ohio. To this editor Brother Babb is an old friend of other days. We are glad that he is still busy trying to get others to go right and to do right. This song is fine for the home, and it will suit well for this day or next year.

Prof. Amos R. Wells is quoted as saying: "I believe that recreation is a Christian duty, and that all Christian duties fall within the province of the Church." Well now that does look reasonable, and it might be all right, were it not for the fact that human weakness tends to over do the thing which being classed as a Christian duty, is yet of the flesh, for the flesh is opposed to the Spirit. Keep the flesh under, but are you pitying the world today because of its unrest? Well, that is kindly and sympathetic, but the thing most needed today on the part of the world is to be taught how to rest, and that cannot be done in such a time as this except as we have Christ within. It was He who said: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." He is the source of true rest and there is no other.

Found.—A valuable stick pin was found at the Chautauqua, Elon College, September 3rd. The owner can get the same by writing, W. T. Walters, 108 North Stafford Avenue, Richmond, Va., and giving a description of the pin.

Are you getting ready to attend the American Christian Convention which is to meet at Burlington, N. C., October 17th? It is a rare opportunity to have a meeting come so near to the homes of the people of North Carolina, thus giving them a fine opportunity to attend and to enjoy in its varied programme. When the Convention met at Norfolk, Va., in October, 1902, we had about seven hundred people come from a distance to attend. To take care of such a body was a Herculean task, but it was accomplished with comparative success and so far as we know the people went away pleased with a Southern reception. The Burlington church will do a fine piece of work in entertaining that body, we believe, and the people from the east, north and west, will go back to their homes with a higher appreciation of the South than they have had because of the royal entertainment they will receive and of the larger conception they will have of Southern people, morally, socially and spiritually. Burlington will give them a welcome of the right kind.

One thing that often cause trouble in a church and often results in driving the pastor out is the "church boss." Now the "church boss" may have his place, but that place is certainly not in the business meeting of the church, and for the reason that he wishes to carry every question as it may please him, no matter whether other people are pleased or not. That is not the way for the work of the church—the whole church needs to be present and the vote of every man and woman should count. The "church boss" can tear the church to pieces and wreck the usefulness of the church. We have known of cases of that sort, but we have rarely known a church to prosper under the rule of a "church boss"—no, a "church boss" may know how to run politics, but he does not know how to run a church. God pity the poor preacher whose lot has fallen at the displeasure of a "church boss." It is too bad that any church should have to labor under such a person. The Christian Church is not in favor of the one man rule—in the Christian Church the majority rules. Let it be so, and let all men and women govern themselves accordingly, and the work will go better.

IN PRAISE OF DREAMERS.

A practical and matter-of-fact age is not likely to give them due appreciation, and yet what would any age be without them! Even the great inventions of a day like this are the products, not of the "practical" people, but of the dreamers. Would we have any literature at all worthy of the name if it were not for the people who think long thoughts, who see visions and dream dreams! Are not the great benefactors of our race the people who have commerce in thoughts and ideas and ideals rather than in mere things! Has not the man who has created a great poem done more for human progress and happiness than the man who has built a great city or founded an empire! These creations of the mind—we speak slightingly of them sometimes—but are they not after all the things that endure, the things that are vital and creative and all-prevailing! In all ages men have slighted and despised and killed the dreamers, but at a later day have worshipped at their shrine and rejoiced in the vision which they cherished. Can we say too much in praise of the people who insist that there is more in life than appears upon the surface and that the things that can be seen and handled are not the great things; who will persist in shutting their eyes and looking far away to distant days and deep into the heart of things! What each age does with the dreamers will decide its destiny.—Christian Guardian.

DIMINISH NOT A WORD.

The Lord and one weak man fully yielded to the will of God, will still cause people to be amazed at the mighty power of God. When Jeremiah received his call to service, he remonstrated, saying, "I am a child." But what did the Lord say? "Say not I am a child; for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak." Then comes one of His many promises, "for I am with thee." Our Lord never has, never will, send one of His faithful servants into a hard place to declare His truths without a "be not afraid," and an "I am with thee." The same Lord who said "all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," said, "I give unto you power over all the power of the enemy and nothing shall by any means hurt thee." Why is it men let the fear of man take possession of them? Is it because they do not know the Scriptures or the power of God?

After the Lord had commanded Jeremiah to "speak unto them all that I command thee," what a promise of strength was given him: "Behold I have made thee this day a defenced city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls against the whole land, against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against priests thereof, and against the people of the land." Kings, princes, priests and people on one side, fighting against one weak man on the other side, but unable to prevail against him, because "I am with thee," saith the Lord, to deliver thee." He is with every messenger He sends forth who speaks all the Lord commands: Kings, princes, priests and people may fight against them, but they cannot prevail until that has been accomplished which the Lord as sent them forth to do.

The Lord strengthened His command to Jeremiah by telling him to "stand in the court of the Lord's house, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, which come to worship in the Lord's house, all the words I command thee to speak unto them: diminish not a word." The diminishing of God's word today is the secret of so much sin, even within the church. This is set aside, and that is left out, and people are allowed to fix up their own code of morals until we wonder sometimes that they do as well as they do. Oh that the diminishing of God's word might cease, and that all the words which the Lord has commanded might be taught in the Lord's house, so they who are professing to follow Him might know the way more perfectly. The Pauline epistles are filled with instructions for the church, its order, its discipline and what its officials shall be. But how many pastors instruct the church in business session in regard to what is required of its officials, as to character, before nominations are made. Or, how many churches today deal with disorderly members at all? At our conferences every year, the divorce question is discussed and resolutions are passed, but how many preachers and Christian workers have the courage to face the people and teach them that our Lord allows just one cause for divorce, and nowhere does His word give permission for either to remarry while the other lives. Or, how many have the courage to refuse to officiate at the marriage of divorced people?

Failure to declare the whole truth, to teach all He has commanded is to diminish His word, just as much as to set aside the story of Jonah, the Flood, the miracle, or any of the fundamental truths of the Bible. May the Lord forgive us if we have been guilty of diminishing His word by shunning to declare the whole counsel of God. May the fear of the Lord take possession of us so completely that the fear of man is all taken away. May we ever remember that though they fight against us, they shall not prevail, "for I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee." May we remember God not only stands back of His word but He stands by His faithful messengers who speak all that He has commanded, who "diminish not a word." If only we would take Him at His word and let Him fill our mouths with His words, once again all might be amazed at the mighty power of God.

ALABAMA.

On Saturday morning, August 19th, this writer, with Brother Mearham started to North Alabama with Brother C. H. Russell and his family in Brother Russel's Ford.

We intended reaching our destination Saturday night but owing to some car trouble and being thrown off of our road a time or two, we reached Brother F. L. Jeane, at Liberty Grove Church in Cullman county, Sunday at one o'clock P. M. Brother Mearham and myself went to engage in revival services at two churches in this section. Brother Mearham is pastor of Liberty Grove church, Rev. W. C. Carpenter is pastor of our other Cullman county church. Services had already commenced at Liberty Grove, conducted by Brother Carpenter. The people seemed glad to have us come.

We held our first service Sunday night. Congregations were good from the start.

This is not a strong church, having only a few members, but interest grew from the start and when we closed the following Friday night. The interest seemed intense throughout the entire community. We received five members at this place (Liberty Grove.) And the church was greatly revived and are more hopeful for the future of the church than hitherto.

We held our first service at the new church Sunday at 11 o'clock, of 27. This is the church that Rev. E. M. Carter organized the fourth Sunday in last May. We have no church building here; but the good people of the M. E. church threw their building open to us and came with a hearty co-operation. We shall not soon forget the kindness, hospitality, and co-operation of these good Methodist brethren.

Our little band here must have been praying for this meeting, in fact it seems that they were not alone in their prayers, for this meeting started well and got better each service until Thursday when the services seemed to reach their climax in one of the greatest meetings that it has ever been my privilege to witness.

Here we received twenty-two members, eleven for the Christian church, nine for the M. E. church and two for the Baptist.

We completed the organization of the church by ordaining a deacon and naming the church which will be known in the future as Bryons Chapel.

This is a consecrated and plucky little band at Bryons Chapel. They have no church building but are planning to build at an early date.

My visit this time convinced me of many things, but two things especially one is our church is badly needed in this country and another is it is meeting a warm welcome upon the part of many.

I returned to my home feeling very much blessed. The situation in our north Alabama work is hopeful and I feel too that we should rally in an experienced way to their support, just now as their burdens are great, and their number is few. We are now laying the foundation for our future church in that country, let us lay it well.

THE WILL OF GOD.

The highest ideal of any person is the doing of the Will of God. Even in the Scriptures this ideal is emphasized and urged upon the people, and yet we are slow to do His will—we are slow even to make an effort to do His will when that should be the first purpose of every living soul, and especially since only the will of God must be the ultimate power over every heart.

In Prov. 5:10, we read: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: and the knowledge of the holy is understanding." That seems to indicate the acme of human thought. The desire to have our own way and to do as we please seem to have held a large place in the human family for generation after generation, almost, if not altogether, from the beginning.

Nehemiah, the faithful, devoted and brave servant of God, faced his enemies and declared a great fact to their faces when he said:

"It is not good that ye do: ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God because of the reproach of the heathen.—Neh. 5:9.

The worldly element, even in the Church, stands opposed to doing the will of God. Their blindness in spiritual thought is responsible for their lack of the fear of God. How few of our people can say with enthusiasm: "I delight to do Thy will, O my God: yea, Thy law is within my heart."—Psa. 40:8.

No wonder David prayed: "Teach me to do thy will; for Thou art my God; Thy Spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness."—Psa. 143:10.

Doing the will of God is a spiritual tie of kinship. Mark (3:35) says: "For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother."

Jesus took delight in doing the will of God. He declared "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish His work.—John 4:34. Jesus in John 5:30 presents the matter of giving up our wills to do the larger and better thing for us all: He said:

"I can of mine own self do nothing; as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me."—John 5:30. Then He further shows the advantage of doing the Father's will, when He says: "If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7:17. That is plain enough. Doing His will enables us to know the truth.

Again it appears that doing the will of God is the sure way to win others to the light and truth. In I Pet. 2:15 we read: "For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men."

Akin to this idea of doing the will of God is that of fearing the Lord. Great blessings are promised to them that fear the Lord. Let us turn to Prov. 9:10, and we may read thus: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom; and the knowledge of the holy is understanding." These seem to be strong elements in human life and as such they should command our hearts and minds to complete obedience.

What we wish to say is the fact that in this day there does not seem to be much of the fear of God before the eyes of the people in general.

We seem to have lost sight of the fact that these late days for men to show practically no concern as to what the fear of the Lord is or what it is to do His will, and both are vital factors in human life, yet many disregard the Lord's doings and seem to think there is nothing marvelous in His mighty works, and therefore they seem to think it is not at all important that they should fear Him, or do His will. This is some of our modern weakness cropping out here and there to show our superiority. Beloved, it ill becomes the creature to set himself up as above the Creator, or to go into such rebellion as shall prompt him to say that he cares not what God may wish, he will do as he pleases.

It seems to us that men are now bent on having their own way and doing their own will, regardless of what the Lord wills. The highest success in the life we are living now will be to learn how to do God's will and then fearing in such a high degree as shall move us to do His will. We need to think and pray before we decide to take matters in our own hands by doing as we please. God help us to awake out of our sleep and get into line for fearing the Lord and diligently doing His will. Will you try? If so, when? Now is the day of salvation, if you will lay hold upon the idea of salvation.

IF THEY ONLY COULD, THEY WOULD.

No doubt about that—they are most anxious to do the thing, only they cannot. They are not quite tall enough to reach the coveted apple. As they see it, it is so near and yet so far. Its nearness, as they think, sets them almost wild with desire, but even this desire does not, and cannot, enable these "new eyed" people to reach the acme of achievement and so there they are—waiting for something to happen in their favor, and yet the thing does not happen, and because of that fact, they do not know what to do with their desire, and so they keep waiting and hoping that something will turn up to save their claims—claims which never have been realized and most likely never will be.

Every now and then some man starts out with the avowed intention of doing some wonderful thing, such as has never been done before in the history of mankind, but it is not often, if at all, that he succeeds. He wants too much, he is greedy of both achievement and fame, but the imitations of human wisdom keeps this would-be famous man from attaining the end of his desire. Now and then he sends out the wonderful announcement—Eureka!, I have found it, but he is only dooming himself to confusion and failure, for in fact he has not found it.

We refer to men in the medical world who seem to be so anxious to live in history as the man who did something that it was supposed only God could do. Two things have attracted these men with a vehement desire. The one is to cure leprosy and the other is to keep men living through the many years and all the while enjoy the youth which belongs to the man of 25 or 30 years of age, but they have not done it yet. Not a great while ago it was announced in the papers that some man had discovered a cure for leprosy, and we are all waiting yet to see the man who has been cured, but some how he does not show himself, but there is likely a good reason why he does not—he simply cannot show himself, and he cannot, because he does not exist. The only power that has ever cured leprosy is the power of God. He can cure and He has done it again and again, but no one else has. Yet these dear fellows keep on trying. Their perseverance would be most commendable, if only they would work in a field which is open to human skill, but their ambition leads them beyond depths, and the result is, they do not succeed. Leprosy is a type of sin, and since nothing but the power of God can cure sin, we may conclude that nothing but the power of God can cure the type of sin, at least no other power has done so, so far.

Another field in which these men, who are stretching their necks, love to labor is the effort to discover some means of keeping man and women always young. Only a little while ago a man by the name of Varanoff, of Vienna declared that he had discovered a surgical process by which he could keep men and women in their youth by means of a certain use of the glands of a monkey, transferring the same to the human body and in that way he would secure eternal youth for the human family. How foolish he was! When this new discovery was called to the attention of Dr. William McCallum, professor of Pathology at John Hopkins University, he looked into the matter and then he ridiculed it, saying: "They have hypnotized themselves into believing in their theory, and after they had hypnotized themselves, it was easy to gain followers. They have not, however, taken off a minute from the age of any man except by the inspiration of hope for renewed vigor, and so will these men continue to fail in every case where they undertake to do the thing that God has reserved for Himself alone. Some men are so vain of their powers that they keep on believing that they can, in one way or another, yet accomplish the impossible in dealing with human life. If nothing else will satisfy them, let them keep on trying, but they will come short when ever they try to enter the domain which God has reserved for Himself.

God gives us a way to renew our youth, and yet these men do not like to take that way to renew youth, they wish to do something that has not been done before. Well, if nothing else will do, let them keep on drinking their disappointment. Do you wish to know God's way of renewing youth? Then turn to Isaiah 40: 31 and Psa. 103:5. The directions there given will renew as nothing else will the youth of men and women.

A RIDICULOUS POSITION.

The theological world is badly upset. We do not mean that the truth of God is badly upset, or that it is upset at all, but that what men are saying is badly upset. We are deeply interested in the situation because the truth concerns us all.

Did you ever notice how surely error, when it is trying to hide, dodges the main point and in doing so, almost surely mixes up itself till it is ludicrous? That is just what is going on now, more or less, in all denominations but especially in the ranks of our Baptist brethren. There is a great fight on in the theological world at this time. It is waxing warmer as the days come and go.

In the last session of the Northern Baptist Convention, held last Spring in Indianapolis, Ind., the two issues, which are now dividing that Convention came to a battle royal and the fighting was done with great courage and more or less, with great skill, and after a prolonged discussion, the Radicals seemed to get the best of it, best of it only in the sense that they had a larger number of sympathizers than did the Fundamentalists. The Fundamentalists were seeking to get the Convention to reaffirm its allegiance to the Fundamental Doctrines, as ordinarily held by the Baptist people.

The Radicals did not wish to reaffirm their allegiance to this faith. The motion was to endorse the New Hampshire Confession of faith, that was the motion made by the Fundamentalists. The Radicals did not wish this faith to be reaffirmed and so the main thing with them seemed to be to find a way to defeat the Fundamentalists. They made a motion to the effect, that "the New Testament is the all-sufficient rule of faith and practice." That motion prevailed.

Now comes the tug of war. Having affirmed that the New Testament is the all-sufficient rule of faith and practice among the Baptists, they put themselves in a ridiculous attitude by refusing to confirm their ancient faith and then declaring by vote that the New Testament is a sufficient rule of faith and practice among the Baptists. Now listen. Rev. I. T. Shields, pastor of the Jarvis Street Baptist Church, Toronto, Canada, says through The Canadian Baptist, while denying every fundamental doctrine of the New Testament, the Radicals continue to affirm that they stand on the New Testament." Then Mr. Shields proceeds to class such action as deception, and really can it be anything else? Think of it, denying every fundamental doctrine of the New Testament and yet proclaiming that they stand on the New Testament. What deception! It is already said that this battle will be fought over again in the near future, and we believe it will. If the Christian Faith is not worth standing for, then what need have Christians to stand for anything?

Some people do not like controversy. Who does? But sometimes the peril of truth makes it necessary to contend earnestly for the faith which was delivered to the saints, and we believe our Fundamentalist brethren are doing a high duty when they are contending for the Fundamental Doctrines as taught in the New Testament, and for these they will stand, and may God give them courage to stand, till they shall come forth with the victor's crown upon their brow giving glory and honor to Jesus Christ, the Beginner and the Finisher of their faith.

In such a conflict some one will becloud the issue most likely, so that the average man will not be able to see what it all means and on that account he may fail to stand for the truth as it is in Jesus. Standing for the truth however, is the first business of the Christian man or woman, no matter what others may say as to the truth. The most precious thing in the Universe is the truth, not merely with man, but equally so with God Himself.

These Radicals, or Liberals, as they call themselves, have put forth a plea for tolerance. Speaking to the Baptists, they say:

"We wish no factions in the denomination, whether they are called Liberals or Fundamentalists. Let us be Baptists and immediately they say: "Any who feel that they cannot be Baptists in that broad spirit of love and toleration, which has always marked the body, are welcome to go where they will."

Shall we tolerate a denial of the fundamental doctrines of the Bible? And we believe they will go rather than to submit to such pleas for error. "Let us," say they, "all be Baptists." Yes, that is the point which our Fundamentalists object to, and we do not blame them. If the Liberals all, or even their leaders, repudiate the fundamental doctrines of the New Testament, then we do not see how it is possible for all to be Baptists, or as Mr. Shields puts it:

"That is to say, if there are Baptists who cannot maintain a broad spirit of love and toleration toward those who deny the divine inspiration and authority of the Scriptures; who deny the Virgin birth, and, inferentially, essential diety of Christ; who sneer at the doctrine of the vicarious atonement as "crassly material"; and who are not sure of the corporeal resurrection and coming again of Christ—all who cannot regard the denial of these fundamentals of the faith in a broad spirit of love and toleration are told that they are welcome to go where they will.

We believe it would be more suitable if these men who repudiate, as Mr. Shields says, the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, would go off to themselves and form a new body—go where they please, and for the reason that holding that the vital doctrines of the New Testament are not true, they ought to get out of the body which holds these doctrines to be true, and then go into whatever body they may please, since their repudiation of the fundamental doctrines of the New Testament clearly puts them outside of the fold of the Church of Christ. Where it is a difference of mere human opinion, we are tolerant as the Liberals would ask us to be, but where it is repudiation of the thoughts of God as He has revealed them to us in Jesus Christ and the New Testament, we are not ready for tolerance. There is no place for the toleration of error as against the expressed and revealed will of God—Never!

A FEARFUL TRAGEDY.

Civilization is making marvelous strides forward in some directions, but in others we seem to be going backward. We once heard of a person who made two steps forward and one backward. That seems to be about the shape of our modern forces. We are going forward with a speed which may well make us think, but our forward movements are somewhat checked by our backward movements. In wealth we are creating great fortunes and building fine homes. That is forward apparently, but these are checked by the fact that we are having so many divorces as to practically nullify all the advantage we get in riches and fine homes. What is a fine home worth, if the biggest ornament in it is a grass widow, or if the father is taking care of his home and children the best he can with the mother gone. We once saw a picture of a similar scene, It was on the road side. Going one way was the mother; going the other way was the father, while midway between the two stood a dear child, as if crying his eyes out, because he wished to go with both his father and his mother, but that was impossible because one was going in one direction and the other in an opposite direction. These scenes are really taking place in American society in hundreds of cases, leaving behind them the wreckage of what might be, and ought to be, Christian homes. Our forward movements are not worth much till we may remove from the social fabric the divorce evils, for they are practically destroying the life and happiness of our country.

If there is not arrest of this evil in some way, we may expect to find our country crumbling, for the divorce is radically breaking down our homes, and for the reason that a Christian home, with father and mother and the children dwelling in peace is the strongest support our country has in its stand for righteousness and truth. If the father and mother have separated and left their children in the hands of others, then we know that home can do but little, if anything, for the sustaining of our government in its noble stand for the welfare of our country. The divorce evil is already breaking down the bulwarks of the Republic in more ways than one, and here we are face to face with one of the most dangerous factors in our modern society, and it is affecting not merely one line of human welfare, but practically all lines of real human progress. If the divorce evil is not arrested and stopped, the day is not far away when we shall see our progress arrested and turned back to the ways of darkness and doom. If the reader of these lines has a spoonful of influence, we beg him to turn that influence in favor of breaking up this divorce business and getting, if possible, our people to make laws that will not permit divorce except on Scriptural grounds. We are permitting this evil to live and flourish in our midst to the overthrow of many of what ought to be the best homes in the country. Let us arise and face this enemy and do our best to drive it back into darkness. Be sure not vote for any man for office who does not pledge himself to stand against this awful divorce evil. Of course, some people are going to get hurt and hurt pretty badly when we stop the divorce business, but they are getting hurt very much worse now while the divorce mill is running at such a rapid state.

One of the most alarming signs of the times, as to this evil, is that we find in one of our exchanges with reference to what is going on in the city of Chicago. That our readers may get a better idea of the extent of this divorce evil, we ask you to read the following from The Religious Telescope:

Judge Joseph Sabath, of the court of domestic relations in Chicago, according to news reports, has broken down under the strain of his taxing and melancholy duties. He has had to act upon 6,500 divorce cases within the past two years. In the majority of these cases the custody of children was a matter that also had to be determined. It is said that his concern for these innocent sufferers more than anything else cause his physical collapse. The wonder is that any conscientious person could last two years in such a position. In the most favorable surroundings, one may see enough to break his heart again and again. Then what must it mean to the person who constantly must look upon the morbid, seamy side of life, and listen to the stories of infelicity, cruelty and heartache? The most conscientious person is the one upon whom these things will weigh the most heavily; and the fact that the judge broke under the strain shows that he saw the tragedy of it all, and that his heart remained warm toward the erring ones, especially toward the children in the case, the innocent victims of the tragedy.

THE COST OF THE WORLD WAR

The World War in money alone cost $223,000,000,000, according to the figures compiled by the Banker's Trust Company. Premier Lloyd George says these figures are authoritative. He so stated when before the Allied Conference in London, Aug. 7. Of this sum the Allies and the United States spent about $140,000,000,000, while Germany and the other Central Powers spent about $83,000,000,000. In these totals the inter-allied loans are eliminated. The war-cost table, as compiled by the Trust Company shows the following facts:

Entent Allies, at par of currencies:

France, $37,588,000,000; Italy, $14,794,000,000; Russia, $20,500,000,000; United Kingdom, $48,944,000,000; other active participants, $8,500,000,000; United States, $33,456,000,000; Total, $163,782,000,000.

Deduct inter-allied loans, $23,658,000,000;
Net total, $149,124,000,000.

Central Powers:

Germany, $49,362,000,000; all others, $33,985,000,000; total, $83,347,000,000.

Grand totals, all participants, $223,471,000,000.

Those figures are both startling and astounding. Really no person can take in their meaning at a glance, and they show what this sin-mad world is willing to do in its selfishness for its own destruction. It is true that not all of this money was so spent. If that money could have been spent wisely to give the Gospel to the whole world, we believe it would have accomplished wonders. When will the peoples of the earth learn wisdom and learn how to exercise it wisely.

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER.

I am happy to number among my friends an able layman who has thought deeply on the genius of the Christian Church. We have frequently exchanged views and only recently have had occasion to do so again. In concluding his letter he adds; "I trust our friendship will remain the same." Of course it will, beloved brother. I could not be a consistent member of our Church and out-fellowship a brother who disagrees with me. That is my brother's view, too. But I hasten to quote.

"It does not seem to me that Dr.——'s attitude is quite consistent with the principles of our denomination. It was through recognizing the right of individual judgment in matters of opinion that our denomination came into being. I agree with you that thorough agreement is not necessary. In fact, in the long run, it is difference of opinion rather than unanimity of thought that makes for progress. For so long as men progress, so long will we differ with regard to what is essential and what non-essential. The old adage, 'In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty,' disregards, it seems to me knowledge of human nature, and the law of human progress."

This quotation indicates the type of man my correspondent is. He is troubled about the things that have divided the Christian world into sects and "insects," more than two hundred of them, and fears the disintegration of our Christian Church on the rocks that have split the other Protestants asunder. In another part of his letter he goes on to say, "That is why I am not specially interested in Church union in the sense of one organized Church. Such an organization would result either in the stifling of individual expression of opinion, or the starting of new organizations by dissenters. In other words, the price of the organized Church is the denial of liberty."

These two excerpts from my friends very stimulating letter serve to get the issue clearly stated. Uniformity of thought is conceived to be the basis of organized religion. The Church in other words is the authoritative ultimate in spiritual matters. It might be well to consider this point, since it is a vital one in the Christian Church.

The Catholics recognize the pope as Christ's vice regent. The ultimate authority therefore inheres in as well as resides in him. The Episcopal Church recognizes the seat of authority as residing in the general council of the Church. The Disciples of Christ make the local congregation the ultimate source of authority. The Christian Church places it in the conscience of the individual believer, though the conscience is properly expected to be enlightened by a searching of the Scriptures and a due respect for the experience of the brethren. It seems to me that our position is the Biblical one. The Scriptures teach the kingship and priesthood of the individual soul. That is to say, each Christian is sovereign and has direct access to God. I have no right to pronounce judgment on any brother. He is accountable to the same Father that I am accountable to. Who am I that I should judge another man's servant? To his own Master he standeth or falleth.

Now it seems to me that my brother either does not accept this position or that accepting it, he is not willing to follow it to its logical consequences. If he is free to interpret the Scriptures as the Holy Spirit leads him and is willing to accord every other brother the same right, why should there not be one Church? If that fundamental principle of "the right of private judgment or the liberty of conscience," for which the Christian Church has stood, yes, and suffered, is assured, why should not all Christ's followers unite their forces for the efficient achievement of those things which must be done in common? Missions, the ministry of healing, the service due the orphaned and the aged, Christian Education, the preaching of the Gospel itself all are hindered today by our hopeless, helpless division. A non-Christian world is the price we pay for a divided Christendom.

Beloved, let's follow our noble principles to their logical and proper conclusion. Let's grant the liberty of conscience to each and to all. Let's practice the kingship and priesthood of each believer for ourselves and for each other. We need not then fear the union of the Churches. We will rather pray for and rejoice in the hope of its consummation. We need not then fear the Church itself is limiting our right to think for ourselves. The Church will guarantee us and all others that inherent spiritual right.

BISHOP DENNY IS RIGHT.

The End of the Tether.

In the late session of the General Conference of the Methodist Church, South, held at Hot Springs, Ark., in addressing the Conference one morning, Bishop Collins Denny made a most forceful appeal to the Church in which he is a Bishop. He declares the Methodist Church has come to the end of the Tether. He is reported by The Christian Advocate to have said:

There are dangers of seeking for power. There are dangers of assumed knowledge; and the emptiest thing we face today is self-asserting scholarship. I do not need to tell this General Conference, after having spent the best part of my life in the chair of a professor, that I have nothing in the world but thankfulness to God for all the scholarship that exists. But something more than the assertion that it exists on the part of anybody is necessary in order to have an established foundation. I do not know anything in the entire history of the Christian Church that has been so soul-destroying to men as asserted scholarship. In 178 A. D., Celsus published his attack on Christianity. We have it largely reproduced in the writings of Origen. He laughed at the ignorance of Christians—"fullers and bakers" he called them. He compared them to frogs in a pond who croaked about their god being a great frog who was coming down to lift them up into heaven. Voltaire made the assertion—and I had the pleasure of standing in front of the house in which he wrote it—"It took twelve apostles one hundred years to establish Christianity. I will destroy it within twenty years." And that very house, at the time I stood in front of it was a depot of the British and Foreign Bible Society, stacked with Bibles from its cellar to its roof. Do not misunderstand me. One of the disappointments of my life has been that I could never be a scholar. I have wanted to be, and I promised the good Lord long ago that if he would give it to me I would bring it as a freewill offering and lay it on the altar and let it burn for his glory. But he saw I could not be trusted with it. I have not a word to say against real scholarship. But, in the name of God, I am not going to be driven out of any position of truth by the cry that this scholar or that scholar or all scholars have overthrown the truth of God. The apostle says: "Believe not every spirit." Put them to the test. Paul goes further than that. He says to test everything, try everything. What are we going to do? Here comes Christian Science—save the mark, both on "Christian" and on "Science." Here comes Russellism. Here come all the "isms" and all the myths and all the legends. Some of them are beautiful. Not long ago one of the leading men in the Protestant Episcopal Church said that he believed that if we could ever get our people to cultivate architecture we should have a Church in a high spiritual state. I think of the statement of Epaminondas when he spoke of bringing the propylæa to Grecian homes. We are copying Greek art today. We are copying ancient buildings today. You are thrilled aesthetically by standing in front of its great buildings. Brethren, believe not every spirit. There are many nostrums, many foms. Put them to the test. How are you going to determine? 'Hereby know ye the spirit of God.' Notice, we translate it "hereby." Every other passage in that Epistle in which that occurs is connected with a direct statement. John does not deal in the abstract. He does not get out of the circle of personality. He holds himself within that circle and pretty strictly within the circle of experience and observation. He started out with observation, "that which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the word of life." He made a test. And then he has tested this in his own experience. It is a question whether you are going to read the imperative or the indicative. If you read the imperative, you have a new test, untried to the present time. If you read the indicative, John is referring to your experience into which you have entered—"Hereby ye know the spirit of God: every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God." Let me take a moment or two. We have gotten at the core of the gospel. I believe, founding my belief on a statement made by men who had a right to speak, that what John wrote was this: "Every spirit that confesses Jesus, Christ come in flesh, is of God." I will just make one other grammatical statement. "Jesus" is predicate. "Come in flesh" is the appositional predicate. Perhaps the emphasis will bring it out, "Every spirit that confesses Jesus"—who is he? "Christ come in the flesh"—"he is of God." He is the one being that ever did come in flesh. Mere men are begotten of flesh. But it is not said of any man anywhere that "he is come in flesh." But Jesus—I know some people start to bar him out at the beginning, and say "O, we cannot accept the Virgin birth." Why not? The record says it. But so many people say: "There is no doctrinal point involved." How do they know? What kind of person are we dealing with? An ordinary human person? One said to me the other day who never had gone fifty pages in biology: "My biological knowledge makes it impossible for me to accept the Virgin birth." I suppose they call that scholarship. What are you going to do about his resurrection? If you begin with the shears at the beginning, what will you do at the end? Athanasius spoke the truth when in his exile he wrote back to the people of Alexandria about the deity of our Lord and the nature of his person: "We are content with our Lord; for there is nothing else that we have." If Jesus fails us, we have got nothing. I cannot take your time further; but, O brethren, he does not fail us! No man has ever trusted him and found him to fail. I have read in my life, and have been able to sing in my life:

"The opening heavens around us shine
With beams of heavenly bliss,
When Jesus shows his mercy mine,
And whispers I am his."

He is the only one worth living for. He is the only one worth dying for. And there is none other name under heaven given whereby we must be saved. I believe in my soul the statement of the Apostle Paul: "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel than that we have preached, let him be Anathema, Maranatha." Methodism gives plenty of room for the honest man to move around in. If you want to believe in immersion, you can; if you want to believe in sprinkling, you may. If you want to believe that Paul wrote the Epistle to the Hebrews, you can believe that. If you want to believe that Apollos or anybody else wrote it, you can believe that. But Methodism comes to a point where it says, "This is the end of the tether"; and the man who is false to the Son of God has no place in the Methodist Church. I cannot be an honest man and stand up as a Methodist preacher unless with all my heart I believe the faith given once for all unto our fathers. I used to hear them sing, when I was a boy:

"I am happy, I am happy, O wondrous account!
My joys are immortal, I stand on the mount;
I gaze on my treasure, and long to be there,
With angels, my kindred, and Jesus more dear."

I have yet to find a man whose life is lived in the atmosphere of peace, who looks out with undimmed eyes toward the opening gates of the throne of God, who has not committed his entire life to Jesus Christ in the flesh. John gives us the test. God help us to be true to the Son of God.

A SCHOOL TEACHER IN WUHU.

The pastor had said that he was a "sure-enough tither"; that is, that he really gave a tenth. You sort of hold your breath to think of it. He receives from the church a salary of $72 a year, with the permission to get as much more from the fees of his pupils. Altogether he has about $12 Mex., or $6 gold per month to feed and clothe himself, his wife, and three children. It is too little, alas, but all there is for him. Formerly his home and school had been marked with poverty and was none too clean. But on his last trip the district superintendent noticed that the schoolroom was especially clean and remarked about it. Then he went around and looked at the hands and nails and heads of each of the pupils and showed where there should be improvement. When he had been all around, he said, "Now, that boy over there has the cleanest hands, nails, face, head and dress of any pupil here. What is his name?" To his amazement the teacher replied, "That is my son." How pleased were teacher, boy, and district superintendent! His wife and home and other children, too, had never before looked so clean, and when later in the day there was preaching to outsiders, he also gave a testimony of what God had done for him. Rice and fuel are very high, and one scarcely sees how the family gets along. But God has sometimes marvelous ways that man knows not of. Friends or neighbors or relatives prove unexpectedly kind or helpful.

Dr. George L. Davis contributes these miniature pictures of some Peking friends:

Liu Yuin An is a member of Hwashih Church in Peking, and supports himself by buying old broken lamps, repairing them and selling them again. It is with the greatest difficulty that he makes sufficient money to support his family, and often they are obliged to endure many hardships; but in spite of this he has faithfully set aside his tithe for the Lord's work.

Yao Chen T'ai is a teacher in a small school in Peking and earns $8 or $9 a month. He has one child and a sick wife. She has been ill for more than a year, so that she has required constant care and attention on his part and has been in need of medicine and good food. In spite of these difficulties he has faithfully kept his tithe money and given it to the Lord.

Chen Cheng Tseng is a man who makes a living by making scissors and tweezers and other small tools. He has a large family dependent on him—ten in number. Working from early morning until late at night, he is never able to earn sufficient money to feed and clothe his family properly; but since he has promised a tithe he has kept his pledge, and has used for the Lord the money which, under ordinary circumstances, would have been spent for clothing.

Li T'ien Kwei is a man who promised to give a tithe last year. He has been ill and unable to work for a long time, and his wife has supported the family by sewing, and yet in these distressing circumstances, where the double burden of housekeeper and support of the family has been thrown upon her, they have faithfully given their tithe.

Meng Ku Hsiang is a man who earns a living by drawing water in a wheel-barrow here in Peking, and it is extremely hard for him to get along, but by working overtime he has been able to get enough money to give his tithe to the Lord.

Wang Wen Hsun was a member of the church who was injured in an automobile accident, and although he is supposed to be well, he can never again do any hard work. His family is making paper flowers for a living; but even under these hard circumstances they are giving their tithe.

Wang T'ong is a chapel keeper in one of our Peking churches and earns about $3 a month. He has a wife and three children to support, and in these hard times it is difficult to make both ends meet; yet he faithfully kept his tithe.

Hsin Jui Tseng is a bookseller, who earns $4 a month in addition to the sale price of the books, and under ordinary times he has great difficulty to make ends meet, but has conscientiously kept his pledge of giving 10 per cent. of his income to the Lord.

I am writing about these poorer and humbler church members because it shows real sacrifice. Naturally for people who are well-to-do to give one-tenth of their income does not mean anything in the way of sacrifice and devotion, for many of them were giving more than that before the question of stewardship was put before them.

A LEADING LAYMAN.

Twenty years ago one of Hinghwa's leading laymen was a very poor man. Dr. Brewster, of the mission, recommended him to the Standard Oil for the Hankong agency. He has prospered since then and does not forget where he got his start. Several years ago when Hinghwa was having its jubilee he decided to give a tenth of all he owned at that time—that is, one-tenth of the principal. He estimated that he had about $30,000, and accordingly subscribed $3,000. Since then he has always given liberally. Only this year he has subscribed a thousand dollars towards a boys' school building which is to be put up in Hankong as soon as the gift promised in the Centenary reaches the field.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

One person may take two or more subscriptions and have his time extended. All persons in arrears as much as one year should pay up, and then aid the solicitor in securing a premium. The name table indicates the time to which subscription is paid.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

AN ENCOURAGING WORD.

Our pamphlets recently sent out in a limited way are finding favor, and this is encouraging. One faithful pastor writes: "I can use 200 or 300 copies each of "Principles and Program of the Christian" and "The Work and the Workers" if you have them to spare." We were glad to be able to send 100 copies of each out of the limited supply on hand.

Another pastor writes: "I shall be glad to use in my field 100 copies each of the pamphlets "Principles and Program of the Christians" and "The Work and the Workers." Crops in our section are good and I shall encourage the people to pay at least one installment this fall on their pledges to Men and Millions." I was glad to send this pastor 75 copies each, and as soon as we have others on hand will supply his further need.

If other pastors or Captains or Women Workers should desire copies gratis of either of the two pamphlets I will be happy to furnish them on demand.

"Principles and Program of the Christians," by Dr. Staley, is certainly valuable and should be read by every member of the church, and this writer has tried to set forth in "The Work and the Workers" something of the nature of the work that the Captains and Women-Leaders are seeking to do through Men and Millions. These pamphlets will certainly help to clarify the situation wherever they are read.

I realize more and more that our people only need to understand Men and Millions and they will meet their obligations, or do their best. All who love the Christian Church will naturally be loyal to Men and Millions if they understand, because the one means the progress and the development and the growth of the other. Every loyal member of the Christian Church will love and will also be loyal to Men and Millions when that term becomes to be thoroughly understood. Again let me say that Men and Millions stands for and seeks to promote all that the Christian Church stands for, has, and seeks to do. What a tragedy indeed that such a glorious conception ever came to be misunderstood by any one. However, this seems to be the fate of every movement adopted looking to the progress and enlargement of the Church and Kingdom.

REQUESTS ENVELOPES.

A subscriber to Men and Millions in one of our churches inquired of the writer recently how she was to secure envelopes in which to make her payments, asserting at the same time that she had to request the envelopes whenever she did secure them. I wonder to what extent this prevails in the churches and among subscribers. So many of the Captains did not care for the envelopes that we stated that they would be sent out to any church whose Captain requested them. Is it possible that some of our good Captains have been negligent in this matter or overlooked sending in their request? Dear Brother or Good Woman Leader, do please send us your request for envelopes if your congregation uses them in collecting Men and Millions. We will send the envelopes without charges but feel that we should have the request as it will be a great loss to send the envelopes to all the Captains when so many do not use them. We do not wish to send envelopes or printed matter where the same are not used, but we are anxious to send both where there is need and where they will be used. We beg, therefore, that the requests for the envelopes come forward so that no subscriber can complain at not having them.

Gratefully,
J. O. ATKINSON.

ENCOURAGING.

One of our Captains of Men and Millions writes these encouraging words:

"The literature you sent me recently on the "Principles and Program of the Christians," and on "The Work and the Workers," has been read with much interest. I don't see how any one can read them without being encouraged, animated and inspired for better, nobler purposes in life. You may send me about twenty-five copies and I will distribute them among our people.

May heavens blessing rest upon you and all others whose hearts are yearning and throbbing for a glorious victory in this wonderful Movement. I love to read every week in the Sun the page on 'Missions.' You give us facts and figures that are so helpful and inspiring that we feel ourselves getting stronger in His service and becoming more enthusiastic in the battle for great achievements.

As ever, Yours in His service."

As we stated previously, if the people will read the small amount of literature sent out it will be more than worth while unless read it is dear at any price.

WHAT ARE YOUR YOUNG PEOPLE DOING FOR THE CHURCH?

Has your church recognized the value of young people? Have you given an opportunity for an expression of that stirred up energy, which is a part of the life of every normal young person? Many churches are finding that many true members are to be found among the young people. They are willing and anxious to do something if you will but give them an opportunity and direct them in their activities. To get the best results from this group of church members, it is necessary to have them organized into a working force. There should be an organization which meets their needs; giving them an opportunity for spiritual development and experience in taking part in meetings and in doing real active church work. The young people's society of Christian Endeavor meets this need and if properly encouraged and directed will prove a wonderful help to your church. With the renewing of the work in your church this fall, you should give your young people a part in the work. Start a Christian Endeavor society.

FALLEN ANGELS.H. S. Mekeel in Alliance Weekly.*

The first question that will be asked is, Who are the angels?

"For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak." (Heb. 2:5).

"Are they not ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" (Heb. 1:14).

Here we have a complete statement from God's word that angels were created to look after the planetary system, and to minister to mankind, who were made partakers of the salvation through Jesus Christ. All angels have their own bodies, and have no need for our bodies.

"How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning. How art thou cut down to the ground which didst weaken the nations." (Isa. 14:12).

Here we have a statement concerning the most beautiful angel God ever created, Lucifer. And he fell and carried with him one-third of the angelic host of heaven. "And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth." (Rev. 12:14).

In this statement we are told how the angels fell from their place in glory but were still in authority over the planetary system. You will see this as we go on through the word in its harmony.

"That the Sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took themselves wives of all which they chose." (Gen. 6:2.)

Here we have the statement of the word that a portion of the angels committed a still more heinous crime by consorting with the daughters of men. Thus they lowered themselves to man's level and were not able to return to their former estate. "There were giants in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bear children to them, the same became mighty men which were of old, men of renown." (Gen. 6:4).

"The Hebrew word Nephilimis translated "giant" and this is mentioned only three times in the Bible. From this union came a race of men who were giants in intellect and stature, but were absolutely rebellious against God.

Therefore man could not cope with them and they corrupted all flesh, and God was obliged to shorten the days of man on the earth, cutting it to 120 years. It was this progeny of the fallen angels that caused the flood.

The question may be asked, Do angels marry?

"For in the resurrectin they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven." (Matt. 22:30).

Angels never marry, but these fallen angels who did consort with the daughters of men, were unable to return to their former estate and were cast down to hell. "For God spared not the angels that sinned; but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into the chains of darkness to be reserved unto judgment." (Pet. 2:4). These angels were cast into the pit of Tartarus, the lowest dungeon in hell and will be judged by man because they lowered themselves to man's estate.

A part of these fallen angels are still in authority in the heavens. "But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days. And, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me and I remained there with the kings of Persia." "Then said he knowest thou wherefore I come unto thee? And now will I return to fight with the prince of Persia; and when I am gone forth, lo, the prince of Grecia shall come." (Dan. 10:13, 20).

They are in rebellion against God, and are opposing the answering of our prayers, and hindering the righteous angels of God when on their errands of love and mercy.

"Nephilim; giants, these are fallen angels, and God dealt with them and their progeny in judgment through the flood, and in Gen. 9:11 he hints that this condition will arise again, but He will not use a flood of water to deal with it.

"And there we saw the giants, the sons of Anak, which come of the giants; and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers and we were in their sight." (Num. 13:33).

Here we have again the appearance of fallen angels consorting with the daughters of men, and bringing on a progeny which if not checked would again ruin the human race. This is the real reason for the destruction of the seven tribes of Canaan. God dealt with this condition by ordering the destruction of all the Canaanites.

"And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycoania, the gods are come down to us in the likeness of men. And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker." "Then the priests of Jupiter, which was before their city brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would have done sacrifice with the people." (Acts 14:11-13).

Why did the people call Paul and Barnabas gods, if the fallen angels had not appeared unto them and received homage and worship from the people? Also why were the priests of Jupiter maintaining a temple near the city gates with sacrifices ready? If they were not in the habit of offering sacrifices to the gods or fallen angels, why this continual preparation?

If you will carefully consider Greek lore concerning the appearance of the gods, you will find much reason for a real foundation rather than a myth in many of these writings.

"For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head because of the angels." (I Cor. 11:10).

Here again it is mentioned in Scripture concerning the fallen angels, that woman should have a covering or protection against the fallen angels. While God has given woman a head covering (her hair) this covering here mentioned is her husband, which will be a sufficient protection for her against the fallen angels.

"But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." (Matt. 24:37).

Here we have a statement by our blessed Lord, that there shall be a repetition of the same condition that existed before the flood, before the coming of our blessed Lord Jesus. As Jesus expressly stated that the same conditions would exist before His return, why should not we rather expect to hear strange doctrines expounded by seeming men of great intellectual power but lacking in any spiritual life whatsoever?

And there seems to be a power back of these great movements of thought, to drive them on, and cause the human family to receive them without comparing them with God's Word to see if they measure up to the Word of God. While there will be many other conditions which existed before the flood and will be repeated before the return of our blessed Lord Jesus, we are tracing only the one of fallen angels.

"Know ye not that we shall judge angels? How much more these things that pertain to this life?" (I Cor. 6:3).

All of the fallen angels who consorted with man shall be judged by man at the Great White Throne, because they lowered themselves to man's estate. Therefore man becomes their judge. But those angels who fell from heaven, but did not consort with man, shall be judged by Jesus Christ at the judgment of the great white throne.

A MESSAGE FROM WOLFSBORO, N. H.Wolfsboro, N. H., Sept. 2, 1922.

August has been a busy month with the "little white church." Things have been coming so fast we have not found time to write of each event.

difficulty in filling our church when Dr. Follanbhee of Portsmouth, N. H., was with us at the evening service, and spoke to a crowded house on "Weeding out Life's Garden." We find no difficulty.

The first Sunday in August, Dr. Follanbhee is announced.

The following Tuesday our senior C. E. society gave a Japanese lawn part.

On Wednesday evening, August 9th, about forty of the boys from Camp Wyanoke gave an entertainment at Brewster Memorial hall for the benefit of our church. The hall was filled to capacity. The entertainment was delightfully novel, being a resume of a regular camp day with music by the Wyanoke orchestra. We are certainly much indebted to Mr. Bentley and his boys for this very material help.

The following Sunday evening the service was conducted by Mr. Conlon from Camp Belknap state Y. M. C. A., camp. There was an orchestra of eight pieces, and a boys' chorus. The church was again crowded, and the service was thoroughly enjoyed.

Wednesday, August 16th, our annual summer sale was held. This was well patronized, and a good sum netted.

The attendance at all services through July and August has more than doubled that of recent years. Our pastor, Rev. B. F. Black, is making many friends amongst our summer colony, as well as with our town's people.

Their many friends in the south will be glad to know that Mr. Black and his family are well and happy in their New Hampshire home, and thoroughly enjoyed our cold winter.

Last week Mr. Black attended the G. A. R., and American Legion reunion at Weirs, N. H., and was elected state historian for the Legion, and alternate delegate to New Orleans.

August 27th, Rev. P. W. Caswell, of Manchester N. H., president of Rockingham conference was with us, and preached most acceptably, both morning and evening.

MARGARET W. ROGERS.

"JUST FOR ME."

"I am always so glad when mother gets a letter from father," said a little girl gleefully, "for he always prints something at the bottom just for me. He knows I can't read ink writing, so he prints them out so I can read them for myself and know he has not forgotten me."

Can a child of God read the Bible carefully without saying in his heart many times, "The good Father wrote those lines just for me?" The Bible is a bold Book and it takes up courageously the greatest problems that men can face—life, death, heaven, hell. They are all there. Much of its language is symbolical, much of it gives every evidence of having been written by an infinitely wiser mind than man's. But again and again as we read it we instinctively say: "Why, that is just what I want! I can easily understand that. It must have been written just for me." It is the one Book of the world that has something in it for all of us.—Ex.

"Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light" (II Cor. 11:14).

There is nothing that makes an enemy so dangerous as the fact that he remains hidden or forgotten. Of the three great enemies of the Christian—the world, the flesh, and the devil—the last is the most dangerous, not only because it is he that, strictly speaking, lends to the others what power they have, but also because he is not seen, and, therefore, little known or feared. The devil has the power of darkness: he darkens the eyes, so that men do not know him. He surrounds himself with darkness, so that he is not observed. Yea, he has even the power to appear as an angel of light. It is by the faith that recognizes things unseen that the Christian is to endeavor to know Satan, even as the Scripture has revealed him. In the Revelation the victory over Satan is ascribed to the blood of the Lamb. Satan readily retreats when we appeal to the blood by which we know that sin has been entirely expiated, and we are thus wholly freed from Satan's malignant power.

DR. ANDREW MURRAY.

"I wrestle not now, but trample on sin,
For with me art Thou, and shalt be within;
While stronger and stronger in Jesus' power,
I go on to conquer, till sin is no more."

Monday.

"Fight the good fight of faith" (I Tim. 6:12).

The reason why the victory is only by faith and why the fight of faith is the good fight, is this: It is the Lord Jesus who purchased the victory, and who, therefore, alone gives power and dominion over the enemy. If we abide in Him, and surrender ourselves to live in Him, and by faith appropriate what He is, then the victory is in itself our own. We then understand: "The battle is not yours, but God's. The Lord your God shall fight for you, and ye shall be still." Just as we in opposition to God can achieve nothing good of ourselves, but in Christ please Him, so also is it in opposition to Satan: in ourselves we achieve nothing, but in Christ we are more than conquerors. By faith we stand in Him. By faith we know that the enemy can make no progress against our fortress. The wiles of Satan all go forth on the line of enticing us out of our fortress, of engaging us in conflict with him on the open plain. There he always overcomes. But if we only strive in faith abiding in Christ by faith, then we overcome, because Satan then has to deal with Him, and because He then fights and overcomes. "This is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith." Our first and greatest work is thus to believe.

"By all hell's host withstood,
We all hell's host o'erthrow;
And conquering them through Jesus' blood,
We still to conquer go."

Tuesday.

"He (chastens) us for our profit that we might be partakers of His holiness." (Heb. 12:10).

"Let the aim of trial be clear to you. Holiness is the highest glory of the Father, and also of the child. He "chastens us for our profit that we may be partakers of His Holiness." In trial the Christian would often have only comfort. Or he seeks to be quiet and contented under the special chastisement. This is indeed the beginning; but the Father desires something else, something higher. He would make him holy, holy, for his whole life. When Job said, "Blessed be the name of the Lord," this was still but the beginning of his school-time: the Lord had still more to teach him. God would unite our will with His holy will, not only on the one point in which he is trying us, but in everything: God would fill us with His Holy Spirit, with His holiness. This is the aim of God; this also must be your aim in the school of trial." Seek not comfort in trial in connection with men. Do not mingle too much with them: see to it rather that you deal with God and His word. The object of trial is just to draw you away from what is earthly, in order that you may turn to God and give Him time to unite your will with His perfect will.

"The ills we see,
The mysteries of Providence deep and long;
The dark enigmas of permitted wrong
Have all one key:
This strange, sad world is but our Father's school,
All chance and change His love shall grandly overrule."

Wednesday.

"I verily dedicate the silver unto the Lord from my hand" (Judges 17:3).

The deepest deliberations of the heart and its most spiritual activities can manifest themselves in the way in which we deal with our money. Love to God, love to our neighbor, victory over the world by faith, the hope of everlasting treasure, faithfulness as stewards, joy in God's service, cheerful self-denial, holy discretion, the glorious freedom of the children of God, can all be seen in the use of money. Money can be the means of the most glorious fellowship with God, and the full enjoyment of the blessed of being able to honor and serve Him. John Wesley always said that there were three rules about the use of money which he gave to men in business, and by which he was sure that they would experience benefit. Make as much money as you can. Be industrious and diligent. Save as much money as you can. Be no spendthrift, live frugally and prudently. Give away as much money as you can. That is the divine destination of money; that makes it an everlasting blessing for yourselves and others.

Lord God, make me rightly to discern in what close connection my money stands with my spiritual life. Let the Holy Spirit lead and sanctify me, so that all my earning and receiving, my keeping and dispensing of money may always be well-pleasing to Thee and a blessing to my soul. Amen.

Thursday.

"Be opened. And straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was looser, and he spake plain" (Mark 7:34, 35).

"The ears must be unstopped before the mouth is opened. Effective speaking for God depends upon right hearkening to God. It is by hearkening that the heart is filled. And it is out of the abundance of the heart that the mouth speaks. Jesus said: 'Ephthatha—be opened., and both the ears and the tongue were set free. That act was symbolic of the whole Christ's ministry. He came not only to redeem the soul, but to liberate every power and faculty we possess, and which God originally created for His glory. Satan's great aim is to enslave and carry into captivity. He seeks to close every avenue which brings the soul into intercourse with God. Christ has come to open the prison door—to burst the fetters that keep the soul in slavery to sin. The effect of His ministry was one continued emancipation of every moral and spiritual power from the deadening and enslaving tyranny of the disease of sin."—EVAN E. HOPKINS.

"He speaks, and listening to His voice,
New life the dead receive,
The mournful, broken hearts rejoice,
The humble poor believe."

Friday.

"If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed" (John 8:26).

"Free expresses a condition in which nothing hinders me from being what I would be and ought to be. In other words, free is to be able to do what I would. The power of sin over us, the power of the law against us, the power of the law of sin in us, hinder us. But he that stands in the freedom of the Holy Spirit, he that is then truly free, nothing can prevent or hinder him from being what he would be and ought to be. As it is the nature of a tree to grow upwards, and it also grows as it is free from all hindrances, so a child of God then grows to what he ought to be and shall be. And according as the Holy Spirit leads him into this freedom, there springs up the joyful consciousness of his strength for the life of faith. He joyfully shouts: "I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me." "Thanks be unto God which always leadeth us in triumph in Christ."

"Since the Son hath set me free,
Let me taste my liberty:
Thee behold with open face,
Triumph in Thy saving grace;
Thy great will delight to prove,
Glory in Thy perfect love."

"Be not conformed to this world" (Rom. 12:2).

"Be not conformed to this world.' But what is conformity to the world? The opposite of conformity to Jesus; for Jesus and the world stand directly opposed to each other. The world crucified Him. He and His disciples are not of the world. The spirit of this world and the Spirit of God exclude each other: the world cannot receive the Spirit of God, for it sees Him not and knows Him not. And what is the spirit of this world? The spirit of this world is the disposition that animates mankind in their natural condition, where the Spirit of God has not yet renewed them. The spirit of this world comes from the evil one, who is the prince of this world, and has dominion over all that are not renewed by the Spirit of God. And in what does the spirit of this world, or conformity to it, manifest itself? The Word of God gives the answer: 'All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the vain glory of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.' The craving for pleasure or the desire to enjoy the world; the craving for property or the desire to possess the world; the craving for glory, or the desire to be honored in the world: these are the three chief forms of the spirit of the world."—DR. A. MURRAY.

Jesus alone can bless, Jesus is mine!"

THE HELFENSTEIN REUNION.

CHAPTER I.

Dayton, Ohio, August 29, 1922.

DEAR COUSIN JABEZ:

Two years ago, after attending the Helfenstein family reunion held at my sister Mary's home in Nebraska of which I gave you an account, I told you that I wanted you to be at the next one as I did not expect to write you in regard to it, but there are two reasons why I am going to tell you about the reunion just held at the home of brother Watson in Des Moines. First, because the members of the reunion asked me to do so, and second, because of your disappointment in not being able to attend. At this point, let me state that these family reunions grow better and more interesting with the passing years, and I hope I can stimulate you to begin now to lay your plans to be present at the next one.

On the 11th of August at 10:25 P. M., I took the train over the Pennsylvania line to Chicago. The next morning I boarded a train for Burlington which I left there about three o'clock as it did not stop at Lockridge, so I took the local and reached Lockridge about five o'clock.

Earnest met me and took me to brother Jesse's in his car. The crops along the way, especially through Illinois were fine, not many orchards, but what I saw had fine looking apples. I had not been at Jesse's long before we went into the orchard and saw peaches and plums galore. He has an apple tree just like the one that stands in our yard, the Wealthy, but they are two weeks later than ours as ours were nearly all picked before I left home. Jesse has a compos cheery tree, the fruit looks like a plum, has a pit like a plum, is about the size of a cherry and has the cheery flavor. It is a very fine fruit. He also has a fine melon patch but they were not ripe so I did not sample them. In passing through his corn patch, I pulled an ear of sweet corn which I had for my supper in its natural, uncooked state, and it was delicious.

After a good night's rest, Earnest took us to Ebenezer, that dear old church on the prairie. It seemed singular as we started on dry roads, to run through mud before we reached Ebenezer and come again to roads where the dust was barely laid. I preached from the text, "I know whom I have believed." It was a joy to give the message to that dear people and from the expressions of their appreciation, I know they enjoyed it.

Our two cousins, Richard and Peter Fisher, also Peter's wife and her sister Hattie Monfort, came out from Fairfield to attend the service. I was glad to see them. They are both holding their own and looking very well. The brethren did not forget the minister for they gave him a collection which was duly appreciated, one that did credit to those present. Brother Jesse and family had been invited to the home of Brother and Sister Homer Tracht. You will be interested to know that this was formerly the home of Mr. Mouck, the father of my sister Marcella's husband, also the father of my brother David's wife. We took dinner and supper in that home which we enjoyed much, both because of the excellent quality of the food and the hospitable spirit in which it was served. In the afternoon we enjoyed a walk to the corn field where we saw the promise of a great crop.

In the evening, Brother Tracht took us and his family to Lockridge where I preached in the Baptist church. The house was well filled and the attention as good as I ever knew a congregation to give. There were many expressions of appreciation of the message and I was glad, cousin Jabez, that brother Jesse had made the appointment for me.

Frank, Jesse's second son, and his wife with their dear little one stopped at Jesse's for a visit on their way to Fairfield after services. I don't know whether you remember Victoria Stewart. Her name is now Graber. She and her husband had heard of the appointment and came from beyond Fairfield to be present. It was a pleasure to meet them all.

As you said you wanted to hear about all that I saw and heard, perhaps I am going into detail more than I otherwise would. Monday morning I was to take the train at nine o'clock for Sandusky, but before going Jesse and I went into the orchard where he gathered a sack of peaches to send to brother David. Earnest took me to the station where I bade him and Jesse goodby and went to Sandusky via Burlington. David met me and took me to his home where we soon enjoyed a sumptuous dinner as they had waited dinner for me. In the afternoon we made a few calls and then visited the melon patch where we found a large nutmeg and two water-melons.

We ran the buggy out of the barn, hitched up, took the melons home and called at brother Atterburg's. Perhaps you remember that he was a student at Palmer College. He has a fine peach orchard where we found him gathering ripe peaches. He took us over the orchard and feasted us on ripe Albertas and a variety of white peach that is even better than the Alberta. After returning home, I went with David to milk. He has a wonderful cow, gentle and gives milk of excellent quality, from the cream of which you can produce butter by shaking it in a quart can or whipping it with a fork.

The next morning found us all ready for work. My work was easy—cracking walnuts, hickory-nuts and hazel-nuts at which I spent part of the forenoon. In the afternoon I went with David to the barn, helped him oil the buggy and hitch the horse to it. We came back to the house and got the can of cream and went to Keokuk. On the way down to the creamery, we called on Will Howell, an old school mate. Will is looking well and I was glad to hear him say that he had no kick coming for God had been good to him. Parsons' College boys all have a deep interest in one another. Will had just been to Fairfield to a Board meeting as President Montgomery had resigned. The Board chose Professor McDonald, former dean, president of Parsons College.

David had to hurry as he had some business at the bank which was to close at two o'clock, so we went on soon. After attending to the business and taking his cream to the creamery, we went to see the dam. Jabez, that dam is a wonderful structure. It was thirty miles up the river to where the water began to rise from the effects of the dam. Here again we had to hurry for no one is admitted after four o'clock. We hustled along and reached the office just as a party was about to be conducted through the plant. We filled out a card, registered and then followed the guide. The first interesting object he showed us was a dynamo of ten thousand volts. He explained that to each turbine there are four gates of the dam supplying the water. The fall is some thirty feet so with that quantity of water you can imagine what power is generated. We saw two or three more of the same size and then came to one that was one hundred and ten thousand volts. Power is furnished to St. Louis and to a number of cities in Iowa and in Illinois. Some of the property holders of Keokuk thought they had a cinch and when companies went there to locate their factories, the prices asked for land were so high that the manufacturers went to Ft. Madison with their factories. Greed often defeats itself, Jabez, and those who would grab all are often prevented from grabbing any. After viewing the machinery of the dam, we went to see the machinery that manipulates the locks. We descended thirty feet below the river bed and I must say it made me feel a little shaky to be so far down and not feel absolutely sure about the working of the machinery, but I decided there was no danger. After viewing the wonders of that underground machinism we ascended to the realms of light and I was glad to breathe God's own pure air once more.

We were soon upon our way home and ready for the appetising supper that Bell and Anna had prepared. The next morning we were to arise at four o'clock as we had to reach Keokuk in time to take the train to Des Moines. Our conveyance was to go first but the car that took Bell and Anna came earlier and we saw them off and they were taken right to the depot through the courtesy of the man who took them to town. A man who does business in Keokuk and lives beyond Sandusky goes in every morning and he gave David and me a free ride, so we also reached the station in ample time to get our tickets. Anna and I spent a good part of the day in picking out nut meats which were utilized in making nut squares and nut fudge at the reunion. David and Bell helped us.

At four o'clock our train pulled into Des Moines. Watson met us at the station and took us to his home. On reaching the house we saw so many that we asked Watson to drive up the back way. There on the porch were Sale, Charley, Kitty, Maud, Claire Edith, Harriet and Annie. This is the first time that Annie has attended a reunion. You remember eight years ago James Helfenstein her husband, attended the reunion at Mountain Grove, Missouri.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

On account of the fact that the American Christian Convention meets October 17, 1922, it is thought best by the Executive Committee of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference to change the date of this Conference October 17, 1922, to October 3, 1922. This is done in order to avoid a conflict in dates. The Georgia and Alabama Conference will meet with the East Lagrange Christian Church, Lagrange, Ga., October 3, 1922, instead of October 17, 1922. All who are interested in this Conference and expect to attend its sessions will please make a note of this change of the time of meeting.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

September 24, 1922.

LESSON TEACHINGS:

Review: "The Exile and the Restoration."

GOLDEN TEXT: "Jehovah hath done great things for us Wherefore we are glad."

For this hour of review of God's guidance and direction of His people, Peloubet's Notes suggest a helpful plan. The lessons of the past quarter have presented seven leading characters in the history of the Jewish people. We have studies of Ezekiel, Daniel, Zerubbabel, Ezra, Esther, Nehemiah, and Malachi. Peloubet suggests that these seven characters be assigned to seven pupils asking each of them to come prepared to tell the story of the hero or heroine assigned to him. Then for a fit symbol fasten to the blackboard or a large sheet of pasteboard, a picture of Jerusalem or of the temple and over it build up a rainbow, adding a new color as the heroes are described, until the seven colors are in position. The rainbow symbolizes promise, and shows how God's promises for his people were worked out, in part, through these seven lives.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

September 24, 1922.

"How Can We Help Our Mission Work?"—Isaiah 6:1-8.

Make this Christian Endeavor meeting a very practical and personal meeting. Write today to the Mission Office of the Southern Christian Convention, Burlington, N. C., or to the Mission office of the American Christian Convention, care Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio; and ask for information about how you can help.

In the very helpful little book "Making Missions Real," by Jay S. Stowell and others, the following suggestions are given on Life Investment. (Isa. 6:8):

"The world's needs are today so great that for any young person to shape his life without due regard for them is to insure failure at the beginning of the race.

"We have been engaged in a great war to make the world safe for democracy. In our own country, where democracy has succeeded best, we have been dependent upon the Christian home, the public school, and the church to build up those qualities of character without which democracy will ever be of little value.

"Today, however, almost two thirds of the people of the world have either never heard of Jesus Christ or have a misleading conception of him; one half the world's population over six years of age cannot read or write any language, and throughout much of the world anything corresponding to a Christian home is unknown.

"These are some of the conditions which you and I now face. And the biggest job in all the world just now is to help to set some of these wrong conditions to rights. Will your response be 'Here am I. I will work, I will study. I will prepare myself, and I will spend and be spent until people everywhere have a fair chance at the good things of life'?"

"Is it nothing to you who build God's shrines
And array them with golden glow.
That millions are dying without the light
Because we have failed to know?"

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION NOTES.

Rev. J. H. Hughes, of Roanoke, Alabama, is the president of the new Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, and L. H. Huey, of Wedowee, Ala., is the secretary. Mr. J. W. Payne says of the Alabama Convention held at his own church, Noon Day, "We had a splendid convention, and I think we are going to do some good work during the coming year." That is the test of a good Convention—the work accomplished during the following year.

The following were elected officers of the Virginia Valley Central Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention this year:

President, Roy A. Larrick, of Winchester; Vice-President, R. Roy Hosaflook, of Linville; Secretary, A. P. Liskey, of Harrisonburg; Treasurer, B. C. Deavers, Harrisonburg.

Department Secretaries.—Organized Classes, Mrs. Roy A. Larrick, Winchester; Teacher Training, W. C. Wampier, Harrisonburg; Missions, Nelson F. Richards, Winchester; Cradle Roll, Mrs. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg; Home Department, Mrs. N. M. Hasler, Harrisonburg.

Alabama has two new Christian Endeavor Societies at New Hope and Antioch churches. Christiana has also been planning to organize.

Bethel Christian Church, New Hill, North Carolina, held a special service in which the surrounding churches joined the second Sunday of September. Mr. W. S. Johnson, the superintendent of the Bethel Sunday School is a wide-awake Sunday School man, and is working and praying for much progress in the work for young people in that field.

THE CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS.

The interest in the Chautauqua and School of Methods held at Elon College August 28th to September 3rd, was gratifying to those who had it in charge. The faculty and others selected for certain phases of the work rendered splendid service which was highly appreciated by the classes. We feel that we have made a good beginning with the movement in this new field. This was indicated by the presence of twenty-four ministers in attendance.

Plans are already being made for a stronger and better arranged program for 1923, and with a more convenient date, it is expected that the attendance will be largely increased.

The Board of Religious Education is deeply grateful to all who contributed to the success of the institution this year.

A LETTER TO DAD.

DEAR DAD:

I have just been reading about Mother's Day one of the most sacred days of the calendar. Too much cannot be said in praise of our mothers, God bless them. My mother, although just an ordinary country woman, as some would say, was one of the best mothers that God ever gave to the world. From her I learned much that has been invaluable in life; but, Dad, I have learned a great deal from you also. Where did I learn to believe the Bible as the inspired Word of God, and where did I get a faith in God that has stood out not only during college days, but also during the years that have followed? It was from you, Dad. Who made the sacrifices, even to the mortgaging of the home, to give me an education? It was you, Dad. By example as well as by precept you taught me how to live. Today I thank you for it. You may have made mistakes at times, we all do, but they were only stepping stones to things higher and nobler. Dad, I have always appreciated your love and sacrifices for me, although I may not have told you often.

Some of the most beautiful pictures of love in the Bible are pictures of a father's love. For instance: Abraham's love for Isaac; David's love for Absalom; and the Prodigal's father for his wayward boy. It has been said that to describe a mother's love the pen would have to be dipped in the humid colors of the rainbow and dried with the dust from a butterfly's wing. But, Dad, to describe your love the pen would have to be dipped in the sweat of the brow, illuminated by the sparkling gems of the morning dew, and dried with the breath of sacrificial oil.

With love, your grateful son,

I. L. S.

CHILD'S HOUR

HE DARED TO TELL THE TRUTH.

Mr. Jones was accounted as a hard employer. He never kept his boys; they ran away or gave notice they meant to quit. So he was half his time without or in search of a boy. The work was not hard—opening and sweeping out the shop, chopping wood, going on errands and helping around. At last Sam Fisher went to live with him.

"Sam's a good boy," said his mother.

"I should like to see a boy that has a spark of goodness in him," growled the new master.

It is always bad to begin with a man that has no confidence in you, because, do your best, you are likely to have little credit for it. However, Sam thought he would try. The wages were good, and his mother wanted him to go. Sam had been there but three days when, in sawing a cross-grained stick of wood, he broke the saw. He was a little frightened. He knew he was careful, and he knew he was pretty good sawyer, too, for a boy of his age; nevertheless the saw broke in his hands.

"Mr. Jones never makes allowances," said another boy who was in the woodhouse with him.

"Why, of course, I didn't mean it, and accidents will happen to the best of folks," said Sam, looking with a very sorrowful air on the broken saw.

"Mr. Jones never makes allowances," said the other boy. "I never saw anything like him. And Billy might have stayed, only he jumped into a hen's nest and broke her eggs. He daren't tell of it; but Mr. Jones kept suspecting and suspecting and laid everything out of the way to Bill, whether Bill was to blame or not, till Bill couldn't stand it and wouldn't."

"Did he tell Mr. Jones about the eggs?" asked Sam.

"No," said the boy; "he was afraid. Mr. Jones has got such a temper."

"I think he'd have better owned up at once," said Sam.

"I suspect you'll find it better to preach than to practice," said the boy. "I'd run away before I'd tell him." And he soon turned on his heel and left poor Sam alone with his broken saw.

The boy did not feel very comfortable or happy. He shut up the woodhouse, walked out in the garden, and went up to his little chamber under the eaves. He wished he could tell Mrs. Jones but she wasn't sociable.

When Mr. Jones came into the house the boy heard him. He got up, crept downstairs, and met Mr. Jones in the kitchen.

"Sir," said Sam. "I broke your saw, and I thought I'd come and tell you."

"What did you get up to tell me for?" asked Mr. Jones. "I should think morning would be time enough to tell of your carelessness."

"Because," said Sam, "I was afraid if I put it off I might be tempted to lie about it. I am sorry I broke it, but I tried to be careful."

Mr. Jones looked at the boy from head to foot, then, stretching out his hand, he said heartily: "Sam, give me your hand; shake hands. I'll trust you, Sam. That's right; that's right. Go to bed, boy. Never fear. I'm glad the saw broke; it shows the mettle in you. Go to bed."

Mr. Jones was fairly won. There never were better friends after that than Sam and he. Sam thinks justice had not been done Mr. Jones. If the boys had treated him honestly and "above-board," he would have been a good man to deal with.—Selected.

WHAT'S THE MATTER, ELIHU?

Elihu is our neighbor. He is quite a clever fellow. He is polite, as he understands politeness but politeness by itself is a wandering star that is of little service to any one. Our friend Elihu seems good to everybody, but the chief point in his goodness is he is good for nothing. This seems all the more strange when we remember that he has had every necessary advantage in early life. He was in a good home, with plenty of this world's goods to meet his every want. His parents were very kind to him, they indulged him in almost every imagined need, and yet he has grown up to be almost no good and a nuisance in the community, so the people are asking: Why is it so—why is it that Elihu has turned out so badly in life? What's the matter with him anyway? It is our purpose to tell you what is the matter with Elihu, and all we charge you for doing so is that you will keep a lookout as you go along the journey of life, and if at any place you find another such young man, that you will take him aside, take him to himself, and there try to show him what is the matter with himself. In doing this, if you will look to God for help and do it with a sincere desire to help the young man, then you may become, in the hands of God, an instrument of blessing and save some young man through Christ to a better life. That would mean so much, not only to Elihu, but to his parents, his friends and to the community generally.

Now as to the question, "What is the matter with Elihu?" Let me say there are a good many things which go in to make up his trouble, and the worst of it is, he does not know that he is so terribly afflicted, that he is so badly diseased, and that even now it will be the fight of his life to "come back" to be a normal man and a character that is worthy of the name of a true man. Let us look at this man and see what is the trouble in his life. In the first place, he has paid too much attention to his diamonds and not half enough to his alarm clock. He has worn too many silk shirts and he has never worn half enough blue flannel shirts. He has worn too many patent leather shoes and not half enough brogans. He has worn too many fine clothes and has never become acquainted with overalls. He has driven too many limousines, and never followed the plow as he should have done. He has consumed on himself too much for any young man and has never produced enough to feed a cow. He has spent too much money, but it was not from his savings account. You need not take our word for it—ask the banker. He has considered himself above hard work, but he has taken delight in spending that which other people have saved. He has put forth too much effort to get rich by some dishonest methods, but has never considered it his duty to go to hard work and make that his method of getting rich. He has shown too much of a disposition to get rich, honestly if he can, but get rich "while the getting is good," whether you get it honestly or not. Instead of going to some honest toil for an honest living, he has counted on his father to furnish him the money he thought he needed, and the result is Elihu lacks precious little of being no account at all. And that is what some overfond parents can do for their children, and in some way they manage to do it all before they seem to know what they are doing. What Elihu needs, and he needs it very much, or as some would say, he needs it very bad.

Elihu is a little too old to be given just what he needs in view of the fact that his father and mother over indulged and pampered the child till the man into which he developed is an overgrown and a badly spoiled young man, worth nothing to himself or any one else. The best thing that can be done for him, as we see the situation is this:

Have him arrested for loitering and take him before a Juvenile court, and let the judge take care of him for a few years, and then he will get a sentence somewhat like this to begin his life under the judge. Listen to the sentence of the court and see if you do not think the judge understands the needs of the young men. The Judge says:

Elihu Smith, stand up and receive your sentence, and Elihu arises, and the judge proceeds somewhat as follows:

You must give up a fast life and go to work or go to jail.

You must give up driving automobiles and learn to drive the ox cart.

You must quit wearing diamonds and put on your overall and go to work.

When you go to see your best girl, you must leave promptly at nine o'clock in the evening. Late hours will do you harm. You need to get a plenty of good sound sleep. You must be in bed every night not a minute later than ten o'clock. You must be regular in work. You may have half of each Saturday afternoon as a holiday, providing the man for whom you work is willing. If your employer is not willing, then you must work six days in the week."

Then the judge looking at the young man said: "You have been badly spoiled, and now I am going to try to unspoil you and see if a man, a good descent man, can be made out of the present idle brained fellow. You must do all or you must go to jail as a vagrant. Which sentence will you take?" Elihu looked up and said: "I have been spoiled by my father. It was not my fault, and yet I must pay for it. I think the least your honor can do to be just is to send my father along with me and make him serve at the same trade to which I am to give my time. I am guilty, but he is, too, and I do not think it is fair to make me pay the whole penalty myself. There was a day when my father commanded me to do thus and so, but I flatly refused to obey and he let me go. There was a time when I took my father's car and used it for joy riding. He knew what I was doing, but he let me go, and now here I am to take the sentence of this court. If you send me to prison by myself I shall be lonely and homesick. I ask as a matter of justice and of pity for me, that my father be sentenced to go with me to prison and to labor and to be confined as I am confined. This is but justice, as he is responsible for my present plight. If he had made me mind him and made me work, then I would be today a very different character from what I am. He is guilty with me for my present condition and I do not think it is right to make me pay the whole debt by myself.

Is there not in this incident a real lesson for many parents now living and spoiling their children by over indulgence and by allowing their children to be disobedient to father and mother, when if they were made to be obedient, the lives of these wild boys would be very different. There is one rule all parents should honor, viz.: Never under any pretext let a child disobey them, for disobedience is the beginning of such a life.

He who does justice and loves mercy and seeks the good of others no less than his own, will bring the right spirit to his public as well as his own private duties. If ever that spirit pervades a whole nation, it will be a Christian nation as none has ever yet been.—James Bryce.

Every man or woman, young or old, who can be induced to become a reader of the "Sun" will receive benefit as well as aid a church enterprise.

MEET THE FOLKS.

(Intimate pictures of some interesting Chinese Christians.)

Miss Helen Griffiths, of Shanghai, China, has written and sent to The Western Christian Advocate a most interesting account of certain phases of the work in China, especially of Christian progress of the work in China as shown in the lives of certain individuals. She writes as follows:

The woman who came back to the city before her two weeks at the Fresh Air Farm was up, giving as her excuse, "I'd rather look at people than stumps," had a big idea, after all. People are more interesting than stumps. They are more interesting than great walls, sacred mountains or temples of heaven. I have brought together some lifelike portraits of some real Chinese Methodists in order that back in America you may catch a glimpse of the quality and fiber of Chinese Christianity.

These pictures have not been "retouched." They are not flattering "art studies." They are honest snapshots in words made by different missionaries who know the subjects well.

Now for the portrait gallery.

Chi Hwa—A remodeler of Standard Oil Cans.

Chi Hwa was a tinner in Peking who made his living by making little teapots and dustpans from old Standard Oil cans. He earned fifty cents, or seventy coppers a day and spent fourteen coppers a day for whisky and cigarettes. One day he heard the preaching of the gospel message in the Chu-shih-k'ou chapel and decided to become a Christian. About the first thing that was impressed upon him was the fact that he would have to give up his whisky and tobacco. Did he show himself Pliable and give up his new adventure rather than the things he loved? He had become a slave to whisky and tobacco, and it was with great difficulty that he could escape from his two evil masters. But by constant prayer and by the efforts of his Christian brethren he grappled with them manfully and was able to break away. He found to his surprise that whereas in the old days he thought he could not work unless he had wine and cigarettes, he could now do a great deal more than he had ever before dreamed possible. He could work longer hours and do more accurate work.

On another day in the church he heard the preaching of the gospel of stewardship—all Christians were asked to give 10 per cent of what they made to the church to help on the Christian causes. How did it strike our poor old man? He said, "Why, that is not enough, for in the past I gave nearly 20 per cent to the devil every day and not only received no benefit, but great injury; and now you ask me to give but 10 per cent. to the Lord, who is not only making my heart happier and more full of joy, but who is making me a better workman! It is certainly cheaper to be a Christian, and I gladly give this sum." And he has been giving it very loyally and faithfully. Evidently no Pliable about him. His actions have impressed a great many of the older and stingier church members and shown them a more liberal interpretation of what it means to be a real follower of Jesus Christ.

Chang Hsu I Shuan The Chapel Keeper.

Chang Hsu I Shuan is the chapel keeper at Chu-skhi-k'ou, and when we started our campaign for tithing last year he gladly signed a card. He was earning a salary of $8 a month. Some people thought that eighty cents a month was a great sum for him to give, but he has given it cheerfully. Hear how poor he is! His son came to join him in Peking nearly a year ago on account of the hard times at home, for their home was in the famine district. The boy was willing to work and found a position for one month. Nearly ten months he was idle, and his father had to feed and clothe them both on $7.20 a month—that is, $7.20 Mex., or $3.60 American money. Yet he never wavered but kept on giving the eighty cents each month to the Lord, for he said he had made the promise, and he certainly would not break a promise to the Lord. Out of this meager sum he even saved some money to send to his wife at home so that she would be able to get a few things which the farm could not produce.

This he has done cheerfully and gladly. We have heard many criticisms in China that the church is hindered by chapel keepers who are fiercer than lions; but if all the chapel keepers had the cheerful, winsome spirit of Brother Chang, the church of Christ would advance more rapidly than it ever has in the past

HOLLAND ITEMS.

On September 3rd a Union Service of the Holland Baptist and the Holy Neck, and Holland Christian churches, was held at the latter church. In the morning Rev. S. K. Emurian, pastor of the Park Avenue Presbyterian Church, Norfolk, an Armenian, told the story of his sister's experiences in Armenia with the Turks during the war. This proved both thrilling and effective. In the afternoon Rev. James A. Crain, Secretary of the Norfolk Council of churches, a disciple, preached on unity. As basket dinners were brought and eaten on the grounds a sociable hour was possible. We feel this was a great day for the churches and churchmen of the Holland community.

THE MEBANE MEETING.

We came from Damascus to Mebane the fourth Sunday and continued services for four days. The congregations were very fine. The new house was crowded. There were several professions. All of them members of some church. Brother Truitt was with us, and consented to stop over and spend a few days, with the Mebane people. One year ago he was with us in our meeting at this place, and while there he made himself many warm friends, and they were glad to see him again. While he was with us he preached some strong sermons, Our new church is not finished. We have struggled hard to get this house to where it is. We have gone to the limit of our strength. The house is not ceiled over head, nor the folding doors put in. We had only fourteen members when we took up the work a year ago, only four of these members were men, and one was a boy about thirteen or fourteen years of age. Since that time, the membership has been doubled. The cost of this building up to this time is near three thousand dollars. And we are not near the finishing touch yet. We hope some big hearted brother and friend, may be led to give us a good lift, and if you are, you may send your check to the pastor of said church. We are hoping to hold another series of services later, if we can heat our house so we can keep warm in it. Pray for us.

MAKING WORDS WEIGHTY.

A light bow cannot shoot a heavy arrow, nor a light-weight man speak a heavy-weight word. In artillery, it is said to be the rule that a cannon must weigh, roughly, a hundred times as much as its projectile; some one has said that the same rule applies to oratory: the weight of the speaker's character must be about a hundred times that of the speaker's word, in order to make effective eloquence.

Paul writes, "Those things, which ye have heard, and seen in me, do!" That is why his words were so weighty; there was a character to be seen behind the words which were heard. So it shall be with all of us; the best part of our speaking must be done before we open our mouths.—Scottish Reformer.

CALLING, CALLING!

Calling. Calling. Can you hear them calling? The man of Macedonia, the child-widow of India, the starved soul of China, the demon-tortured heathen of Africa, the neglected Indian of South America, they are calling, calling you.

A vision appeared to Paul, and there was immediate response. Oh, that the young people of the church might see the vision of the lost souls—four thousand heathen dying every hour, ninety-five thousand every day swept out in blackness without God and without hope! Paul saw one man calling him; today there are over a billion calling us. We have ears to hear the latest song, and eyes to see the new styles in clothing; must we confess that we are blind to the vision of millions marching on unwarned to hell, and deaf to their entreaties?—S. S. Times.

YOU CANNOT GO!

But you say you cannot go to where they are. They are too far away and I cannot go. That is true of some; they cannot go to the field in person, but there are other ways of getting this work done, and meeting the hope of a waiting Saviour, and the waiting lost soul. The most effective way is to take these souls on your heart, and bring them in the arms of faith to the loving Father in prayer. He loves them and is waiting for you to do your part in making that love known to them. Ask the Lord to give you a real compassion for them, a real interest in their salvation, and some effectual prayers of faith for their souls to be saved.

These lost ones are reaching out their hands to you for bread, the bread of life. They are pleading for a cup of cold water to slake their terrible thirst, a drink of the water of life. They are groping in the dark, hoping for a ray of light on their path to light their way to the Eternal City of light. Put yourself in their place and then think what you would want them to do if they were in your place. Make this a definite matter of prevailing prayer and God will make it possible for you to light some of them on their way to the City.

This calls for sacrifice. Jesus gave all, how much will you give? If you can give yourself, it will require that, nothing less will do. God will not be satisfied with less, you will not be satisfied if you give less. Jesus is waiting for you. If you can give money, it will require that. Some people want a $100 blessing for a 2c. investment, but that is selfishness. How much will please the Lord for you to give? But if you can neither give yourself nor money, how much time will you give in prayer for the salvation of the lost? Jesus is waiting for you. Be an intercessor.

THEY ARE ALL MINE.

An atheist going along a country road overtook a woman poorly clad, who seemed strangely excited. Her face was glowing with a calm and radiant joy.

"What were you talking about as you walked along?" he asked.

"I nebbber knowed I was talking; 'pears like I didn't notice myself. I was thinkin' as I look on de worl' an' de sky, an' took 'em all in, dat they is all mine—all mine, 'cause I is Christ's and Christ is God's!"

He was a learned man, but this was a kind of learning he had never heard of. He was a successful man, but here was such triumph that he had never dreamed of. He listened, full of curiosity, to what the woman had to say; he went away, but the heaven worked, causing him so much thought that he never rested he also could say: "They are all mine, for I am Christ's!"

This kind of influence counts. God owns it. It makes its impression upon the unsaved. The results are a blessing to the one who gives and the one who receives. No apology is needed because of any adverse effects. The earthly end of such a being is peace and joy and satisfaction.—Central Christian Advocate.

HEART KEEPING.

"Heart-keeping," says Dr. Cuyler, "is very much like housekeeping. There must be a continual sweeping out of dirt, a daily washing of dishes and a perpetual battle with all sorts of vermin. If heart-cleaning could be done up once for all, then the Christian might have an easy time of it. And just because the assaults of subtle temptations are so constant, and the task of keeping the inward man what it ought to be is so difficult, many a one who begins a religious life gets discouraged and makes a wretched failure. The question with every Christian is: "Shall these accursed Amalekites of temptation burn up all my spiritual possessions and overrun my soul? Shall outward assaults or inward weakness drive me to discouragement, and disgrace me before my Master and before the world? Or shall they drive me to Jesus, who will give me the victory."

THE OPEN ROAD

O, many open roads there be,
And some lead East and others West,
Some to the mountain, some to sea,
And each is best.

Straight roads, whose concrete beds along,
The trucks of traffic rushing hie
To reach the towns, whose marts men throng
To sell and buy.

And there are curving roads, wherein Lovers and loiterers choose to stray;
From sordid trade and deafening din
They lead away.

Inviting roads, that tell us where
The meadows and the woodland meet,
That tell of brook, and flowers fair,
And fields of wheat.

Across the landscape of the heart
Back o'er those roads we glance,
and lo!
To reach "God's Acre," set apart,
And school and church.

O, ye whom we have loved and kissed,
Back o'er those roads we glance,
and lo!
Like shapes that vanish in a mist,
Ye come and go.

A road there is before me lies,
It is the path by just men trod;
Its slope leads upward to the skies,
To home and God.

THE SOUL'S VIEW OF GOD.

Here is Boehme's idea of the soul's view of God:

"Behold, thou beloved soul, if thou wilt attain the light of God, and see with the eye of God, and wilt also enjoy the light of this world, and sustain thy body, and seek the wonders of God, then do it as God himself doth it.

"Thou hast in thy soul two eyes, which are set together back to back; the one looketh into eternity, the other looketh backward into nature, and proceedeth therefore always, and seeketh in the desire, and always maketh one glass after another: let it be so, it should be so, God will have it so.

"But turn not this other eye back into the longing, but with the right eye always draw the left backward to thee; and let this eye with the will of the wonders grow from thee, viz. from that eye which is turned into the liberty, but draw to thee its wonders which it hath manifested and wrought."

In recalling the life and record of General U. S. Grant there are many things that should be forgotten; but there is one emphasis that increased in his life that should ever be impressed upon the succeeding generations of his countrymen. We recall this statement of his faith made at the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence: "Hold fast to the Bible a sthe sheet anchor of our liberties. Write its precepts upon your hearts and practice them in your life. To its influence we are indebted for the progress we have made in true civilization, and to this we must look as the guide for the future." Many of our public men in the past held in high regard the Holy Scriptures. Their lives did not always conform to its precepts, but somehow it had been placed so permanently in the background of their thought that all the various vicissitudes of life could not destroy or remove it. Verily, it is true that the nation that holds fast to the Bible will not lose the anchorage of its liberties.

GOSPEL MEASURE.

(Matt. xxii. 39.)

BY CHARLES R. FORSTER.

My neighbor as myself?
Must I his burden bear,
And with a warm and generous heart
Bestow on him my care?
And must I love him, too?
Render to him the part
That I would have him to me do,
Responsive o my heart?

Must I his keeper be?
Safeguard his name and weal?
Reprove, rebuke, or comfort him?
When wounded, must I heal?
Lord, 'tis a trying part:
Myself am so enshrined
Within the precincts of my heart,
To love so uninclined.

Only as thou, my Lord,
Outpour thyself on me
Can I upon my neighbor pour
A Christly charity.
For I must be like thee,
Large-souled, unfeigned, and clean.
Show, Lord, thyself in all I do,
Thyself supreme within.

NUMBER 38

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

The League of Nations.—

Mr. Raymond B. Fosdick has published a review of the history of the League of Nations for the past two years. Its achievements have been considerable, great enough to justify its existence and to inspire the hope that its usefulness will grow greatly in the future. Fifty-one countries are now enrolled under its standard. The smaller nations are its warmest supporters. More than four-fifths of the world's population and nearly three-fourths of its territory are represented in the League. The countries that have not entered the League are Abyssinia, Afghanistan, Ecuador, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Mexico; Russia; Turkey, and the United States.

Mr. Fosdick points out a number of benefits and advantages secured to the world by the League. First, it brings the world together in conference, and thus prevents misunderstandings, conflicts and wars. The Assembly the keystone of the organization, will hold its third annual meeting in Geneva this September. The League's Council, representing eight states, has held 19 sessions. The passport conference in Paris in 1920 to expedite international travel was called by the League. In 1921, 43 nations met in Barcelona to promote international business. In 1920 35 nations met in Brussels to deal with financial questions. In Geneva last year 30 nations considered methods for the suppression of the international traffic in women and girls. In Warsaw this year 27 nations planned together to check the spread of typhus fever. "In addition to these more formal gatherings the League has promoted a steady succession of international conferences and committee meetings to deal with a great variety of problems, such as the standardization of international statistics, the suppression of the international traffic in opium, the unification of standards of anti-toxic sera, the feeding of Russian refugees, the return of prisoners of war, the reduction of armaments, the private manufacture of arms, the deportation of women and children in Asia Minor, and a score of other topics which represent the legitimate concern not of one nation, but of the family of nations."

The League has provided permanent machinery for dealing promptly with situations that may arise in the future. It took nine months to assemble the first Hague Conference after the Czar's call. Over two years passed after Roosevelt's appeal for the second Hague Conference was sent out before the conference convened. But when the Jugo-slav-Albanian boundary dispute arose last year, the Council of the League met in nine days.

"A word is due in regard to the Secretariat. Too little is heard of this branch of the League's organization, but it is scarcely a secret that it is the moving influence behind the scenes. Permanently located in Geneva, it is made up of more than three hundred people from over a score of nations, who are working together not as national representatives, but as impartial experts. Despite differences in tongue, race and tradition, this medley of nationalities does its work quietly and effectively provides the necessary expert service, prepares for all meetings, carries on the day-to-day work of the League and executes the decisions of the Assembly and the Council."

An extremely important part of the League's machinery is its international court of justice. This differs greatly from the old Hague Court of Arbitration. It has its fixed personnel elected for the term of nine years with adequate salaries. It meets at least once a year and oftener, if necessary, and the President of the Court must reside continually at the Hague. Thus far 18 nations have agreed to give the Court compulsory jurisdiction over all disputes that may arise between them.

Several disputes, some of which would almost certainly have led to war, have already been settled by the League. The Jugo-slav-Albanian boundary dispute was referred without any show of force to a League Commission which is now at work on the case.

A long-standing quarrel between Finland and Sweden over the possession of the Aaland Islands received the attention of the League's Council and an independent commission was appointed to decide the question. The decision was accepted by both nations.

The serious question of Upper Silesia was another to receive attention from the League's Council. Their decision was accepted by the Powers of Europe and peace was maintained.

The League also intervened in the case of the threatened war between Poland and Lithuania and brought about an agreement to settle their dispute without resort to force.

When the League was organized one of the stipulations was that no treaty entered into by a member of the League should be binding unless registered and published by the League at Nations. Thus far 263 treaties have been received, filling five volumes and affecting almost every country in the world. The treaties growing out of the Washington Conference will have to be registered and published by the League of Nations before they become binding on the other powers.

The League can function not only in the preservation of peace but also in bringing about needed co-operation among the nations. In dealing with mandated territory such co-operation is necessary. The League may also protect racial minorities. It may be responsible for administration in such cases as the Danzig Corridor and the Saar Valley Basin. It may facilitate international trade. It may promote international good will. It may take effective measures to prevent the spread of disease.

In short, there is so very much that the League can do for the world that it would be an immense step backward to abolish the League. And the nations in the League already appreciate its great worth.

When will the United States become assumed of its position beside Turkey and Germany and Russia, and step over into the ranks of the truly progressive nations?

The Universal Language.—

English, some people say, is to be eventually the universal language for the whole world. Its use is spreading very rapidly, and it is now more generally used than any other language. But one of the most remarkable things about it is its rapid growth in the number of its words. It now has 260,000. What this means will be seen when it is compared with other languages. We are told that the German has 80,000 words, the Italian 75,000, the French 30,000; the Chinese 30,000, the Turkish 22,000; the Spanish 20,000. This gives a total for the six leading languages of the world, except English, of 260,000, or exactly the same number of words which the English has. This shows a great flexibility and power of expansion in the language itself, but it shows even more clearly the feverish and restless search of the users of English for new words to express new ideas. God has given us such a language that it may be used for the good of the world and the advancement of His kingdom.—Presbyterian of The South.

For the Cause of Righteousness.—

Prohibition has its heroes, as well as other forms of war. Probably the most popular humorous periodical in this country is "Judge." The editor of that paper is paid, we understand, a pretty good salary. But when the owner insisted that the editorial policy of the paper should be "wet," its editor, William Allen White, resigned his position and gave up his salary. Notwithstanding all that the liquor propaganda may say, there are many men in this country who would do likewise under similar circumstances. Such men deserve the highest praise and support of the good citizens of the country, as they are the real ground of hope for this country. It is upon the lives and work and character of such men that the foundations of a free country and a free people will be built. All honor to William Allen White. It is hoped that, when our readers see "Judge," they will remember what it forced him to do for the cause of righteousness.—Ex.

NOTES - PERSONALS

It is no use to try to save sinners until you first learn to love them as our blessed Lord loved them.

What is the matter, Brother Foster, as we hear so little from you and your field of labor? Surely you have not forgotten how to write.

We need to build up our publishing interests by giving it a large patronage, and that can be done, if only all will lend a hand to that end.

The Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference, according to notice published, will meet at the East LaGrange church, Tuesday, October 3, 1922.

The articles by Rev. H. E. Rountree, of the United States Navy, now located in Haiti, have been interesting. We hope to have other communications from him.

The Alabama Christian Conference will meet at Mt. Zion Church Tuesday, October 10, 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M. Rev. G. D. Hunt is president and Rev. E. M. Carter, Secretary.

It is said reward sweetens labor; so if you are interested in building up the enterprises of your Church, begin at once to solicit subscriptions for the Sun and secure one or more premiums.

Our Reidsville church had a pleasant visit from Rev. L. L. Wyrick on Sunday night, September 10th. He was returning from his work at Happy Home. He is a young minister of much promise.

The article in a recent issue of this paper entitled "An Appreciation of Father," was the loving tribute of a daughter to her devoted father, Rev. J. D. Wicker, Sanford, N. C., who is very worthy of this tribute to his life and service.

The churches at Pleasant Hill and Broadway, Ind., have called Rev. J. Cleveland Barrett, to serve them a second year, and he has accepted, and will continue to prosecute his studies in Defiance College, during the present scholastic year.

The Christian Sun is now offering a premium to those who will work for its circulation. The subscription list must continue to grow. Don't put off sending in your name till some one gets ahead of you in your community. See the "Layman's Subscription Campaign" in this issue.

The many friends of Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, N. C., will be pained to hear that he is not at all well. He is very weak from general debility, we infer. Brother Holt has long preached and labored for the Master's cause in the Christian Church. We wish for him yet many days of usefulness in the Lord's vineyard.

We have several ministers without employment for the coming conference year. Do you need a minister? Then you will do well to be on the look out, or they may all be employed and your church will still be without a pastor. There are few institutions so helpless for really aggressive work as the average pastorless church? Every church needs and must have a leader, if it means to do real work in building up the kingdom of Christ.

To Rev. Chas. M. Sheldon, Editor of The Christian Herald of New York City, is credited one of the most thoughtful short sentences we have seen. It is this: "The prayer offered in the morning should be lived throughout the day." That is a fine thought and so timely, as a suggestion of much force to us all. Do not forget the idea and let us try to make it helpful to ourselves in daily life.

The Suffolk, Va., Christian church is on a task they have not had on their hands for the last forty years—that is the securing of a new pastor. Dr. Staley has stood by them in all sorts of weather, and now is closing his fortieth year on a high tide. Well, done brother—we rejoice in your success and the success of your church, and now after forty years of such faithful service, they will not call him again, as only a few weeks ago, they gave him a call for life as pastor emeritus.

The Rev. Richard Baxter, who was born in England in 1615, once said: "To see a family live in love; husband and wife parents, children and servants doing all in love to one another: to see a town live together in love, without the envyings, brawlings, or contentions lawsuits, factions or divisions but every man loving his neighbor as himself, thinking they can never do too much for one another, but striving to go beyond each other in love, how happy, how delightful a sight is this." That is well worth thinking about and emulating as far as possible.

The Reidsville church has had three baptismal services since our protracted meeting in June. In March it cleaned up the last of the debt on the church building. There was also a debt which had been allowed to accumulate of more than $300 on church expenses. They are now cleaning that up and expect soon to hold their heads up and say, "not a dollar of debt against us." We wish them great success in cleaning up all debts against the church, and when that task is finished, it may be the church will be able to do more for the cause at large. The Reidsville church is not rich and its members are few, but they surely do move to their tasks with a courage that is most commendable.

There are times when we lose something out of our life that makes us restless and ill-content. The lost cord in music makes the oratorio a jangle of discord. When we lose the sense of a divine fellowship it is like that. Mary haunted the garden of Joseph, and her cry was "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." Even the loss of what she believed was a dead Christ filled her soul with an infinite discontent, but to lose a living Christ out of your life—there can be no peace then. It is like a garden without a rose, a sky without a star, a home with no fire on the hearth, a broken heart hungry with its longing.

The Christian Orphanage is one of the institutions of the Christian Church which so far as I know, has not an enemy anywhere. It seems to us it would be a little hard to have something against the Orphanage, and for the reason it would seem to be against little children, at least against their highest and best interests. Brother Johnston, the superintendent is doing a noble work and certainly deserves the high appreciation of all of our brotherhood for the success of his labors. The people generally like to help the orphans, and well they do, for it is one evidence that some good remains in the hearts of most of our people. Help the orphanage every time you get a chance.

The Southern Churchman, in a column under the head of "Thoughts for the Thoughtful," has this paragraph, which we think is true, but we are somewhat surprised that The Churchman believes it is true: The sentence is this:

"Christ takes away sins, but more than that, He takes away sin, that is the common corruption out of which the separate sins spring." That is very good and we approve it heartily, but we are a little anxious to know if the common corruption out of which the separate sins spring, should be taken away; whence would any more sins come? We think The Churchman is right, but we are anxious to have the answer of The Churchman to this last question.

We received from Mr. and Mrs. Waverly S. Barrett, Dendron, Va., announcement of the marriage of their daughter, Susie Virginia to William Eugene Harward, 3110 East Fifth Avenue, Knoxville, Tenn., on September 5, 1922. Mr. Harward is the son of Rev. W. D. and Mrs. Mollie A. Harward, of Dendron, Va. The marriage was solemnized by Dr. Harward, the father of the groom. Young Harward is the manager of a store in Knoxville, Tenn., for The Fuller Company, a concern which is doing business in many sections of this country. This is a most promising couple, starting out with fine prospects for large usefulness. May the blessings of God be upon them in their ways and labors for good.

Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., now of Dendron, Va., has been called to the Second church of Portsmouth, Va., and has, we understand, accepted and will begin his work there early in the new Conference year. The second church, Portsmouth, has, we believe, been most fortunate in its choice of a pastor for the coming year. Dr. Harward has had much experience in both city and country work, having served the church at Newport News, Va., Madrid, Iowa and a number of other places. He is an Elon graduate, as also a graduate of the University of North Carolina. He is in the prime of life and well qualified for the work to which he goes in November. We look for a great work to be done with the Second church, Portsmouth under his labors. The man they have had during the present year is an untiring worker, but feels that he is called to another field. We wish both of these pastors the greatest possible success under their future labors. We understand the present pastor, Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, will soon enter the evangelistic field.

I have just gotten back from the Eel River, Ind., Christian Conference, which was held as usual at Winona Lake, Ind., where we had a fine conference. We were there for a week. I rented a cottage at the Lake for a week and took my family along with me. In this cottage resided for the week myself and family and the delegates from my two churches Pleasant Hill and Broadway churches. The churches whose delegates occupied the cottage with me paid half the rent, sent us lots of good things, in fact they were so liberal in sending that we had little need outside of the abundance they sent us. Outside of our own speakers, I heard the Hon. William Jennings Bryan speak of "Tampering with the Mainspring." He spoke in the Tabernacle during the great Bible Conference, the week preceding the Bible Conference. His address was a masterpiece in the defense of the Bible as the Inspired Word of God. About 5,000 persons were present to hear him. He spoke for two hours and a half. At the close of our Conference last Sunday afternoon at four o'clock the Disciples of Christ, the Progressive Brethren and the Christian Conference united in a single meeting to hear Billy Sunday, the famous evangelist, on the Bible the Inspired Word of God. Of course Sunday sent the enemies of the Bible to their long home. I have heard quite a good deal on both sides, and as best I can understand the matter referring to the great controversy between the Fundamentalists and the Liberals, if I had to stand up and takes sides with one or the other, I would surely take my stand with the Fundamentalists. Judge Whitelock was present during the sitting of Conference. He had served the Conference for thirty-one years, but was unable to preside, (he has been ill for several months) so he resigned. In appreciation of his services the Conference presented him with the finest Bible The Christian Publishing Association had. He greatly appreciated this thoughtful act on the part of the Conference. The Winona Temple is a monument to his service as rendered through these thirty-one years of faithful service. It is a building that any communion might truly appreciate in any locality.—Rev. J. Cleveland Barrett, Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio.

In one of our exchange we find this small paragraph: "If we do not live down error, I am sure we shall never dispute it down." That is a queer streak of human nature, this objection to contending for the truth. But contending for the truth, as against error, is enjoined in the Bible, and it therefore becomes a Christian duty. We are to give wings to truth and hold error in check, and this we are to do for the liberation of the Church of Christ. Did not Jesus Himself contend for the truth? Did not John also contend for the truth? Paul was a regular fighter in Christian warfare and he seems never to have thought of such a thing as giving up his contention for truth, just because some one is opposed to discussion. Live down error and so build up truth. That is good doctrine, so far as personal matters are concerned, but when the truth of revelation is denied, then it becomes us to arise and stand for the truth as it is in Christ. Did Martin Luther live down the errors of popery, or did he fight them down? Did he go around and say I am living down error, or did he go around and nail his theses to the door and declare that to be the truth, and then for it contend till it dominated Christian thought. Brethren, if you cannot do any more for the truth than to speak and write against standing up for it, well we think you will do well not to say anything in that case. Men and women must stand for the truth. It is not to be a matter of personal controversy, but it is to be a matter of boldly upholding truth and giving it power over the lives of men and women of today, that they may be kept in touch with the vitals of Christianity. If this be not right, then why did the Holy Spirit instruct Jude to say in the third verse of that Epistle:—"it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints?" You can live down reports that tend to blacken your fair name, we grant you that, but what would happen if all friends of the Bible should try to live so as to convince its enemies of it as the truth of God, but say not a word in its favor, or not a word against the terrible errors which its enemies are circulating to the detriment of Christianity and to the breaking down (in the minds of many of the great bulwark of the Christian Faith, the BIBLE? Brethren, if the Lord will give the Church a new revelation from Himself and tell us that we must not say a word against the enemies of the Bible and their work in their effort to pull it down and to destroy its influence for righteousness, well then we will listen, but not till then. We must contend for the faith!

WHAT THE CHAUTAUQUA MEANT TO ME.

The Chautauqua and School of Methods held at Elon College, August 28-September 3, meant very much to me. I had seen and felt the need for better Sunday Schools and better prepared workers for sometime and since attending the Chautauqua this need has been felt more keenly than before.

I realized more vividly than ever before, while I was at Elon, just how little we are really accomplishing in the Sunday Schools and what a great field the Sunday School is for "Service," and how important it is to train our young people in and for Christian service.

The Daily Devotional Bible Study. "The Book of His Presence-Revelation," conducted by Dr. Newman, alone was worth more than the time and expense of attending. I only wish every worker could have heard Dr. Newman's explanations.

During class periods, Prof. Hook very ably instructed the superintendents on Sunday School organization and administration. This was indeed beneficial. I am sure the other classes were just as helpful as this. I was only sorry that I could not be in more classes. There were so many helpful points during "The Sunday School Conference Hour," and I enjoyed every one of them.

"The Missionary Messages," by Dr. Atkinson, were very inspiring indeed.

It would be well for every Christian to hear Dr. Atkinson's messages. It would cause us to feel ashamed of doing so little for missions, and arouse us to greater missionary activities.

The evening programs were beneficial as well as enjoyable. The entire week was a real inspiration to me, and I am looking forward to and expecting to attend the next session and I sincerely hope that more of our people will attend next year. Nothing can do the good intended without the support of the people.

LACK OF SPIRITUALITY IN OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

(From Wesleyan Methodist.)

It has seemed to me as I have come to consider it seriously that there is no greater lack in our Sunday Schools of today than that of spirituality. In this day when everything has a substitute, I fear we have gradually and perhaps unconsciously come to substitute human "pep" and big organization for real spirituality.

The Master has said, "Not by might, nor by power but by my Spirit." Then the human element called "pep," that is being talked of so much today, will not do unless there is accompanying it the Spirit of the Almighty God.

In a daily paper I found a little article that read something like this: "Some of us can remember the time when judgment was respected in business manners counted in social intercourse, and dignity seemed proper in the church. Now the first thing they ask of a man is, 'Has he any pep?'" The courteous self-contained gentleman seems dull and old-fashioned in comparison with the exuberant spirit, who is hailed as "the life of the party." The kindly benevolent preacher of years ago, is fast giving place to a militant person who delivers addresses on the popular questions of the day instead of preaching the old-fashioned Gospel. A dash of pepper adds a fine flavor but too much spoils the dish."

This mania for "pep" has substituted jazz for music and sensational stories literature. It is responsible for short skirts, extremely low-necked dresses and bobbed hair and yet it has become a popular saying that the greatest need in the Christian world today is "pep."

The command issued by the seemingly progressive "up-to-date," religious leaders of today is to organize more solidly and then to stir the people to life, to push and to pull as one man. Team work," you know is the demand of the hour.

We certainly will concede to the idea that more activity is needed in the church world today, but if it is to be effective it must be God-inspired. Old-fashioned reliance on the Almighty seems to be fast falling in the background. It is considered by the multitudes to be out of date.

Most of us remember the day when the church was recognized to have power, and when she wielded a mighty influence that she does not possess in these modern times. There never was a time when there was so narrow a line between the church and the world as there is today, and the line is getting finer and finer, until even now it is almost invisible.

Oh, for the good old days when men "waited on the Lord, fasting and praying. Now it is feast and pray. The power of prayer has been minimized in this advanced age of the world. The spirit of push has been substituted.

We hear very little of consecration and sacrifice. The church is no longer revered with godly fear. Children in the olden time were taught to honor and respect even the church building. As they entered it a hush descended upon them. Not so in these days, when social revelries are carried on under its sacred roof. Forms and ceremonies unattended by the Spirit of the Lord, are an abomination to Him. He cannot accept that sort of worship. Except the Lord build the house they labor in vain who build it.

Sunday School workers are sharpening their wits and working hard to develop plans for a better system, for better methods for the increase of interest, but what special plans are being made for securing the help and direction of our Father in Heaven? Are we fully conscious of the fact that all is without foundation unless we have builded on the rock Christ Jesus?

No human being however gifted, can devise ways and means for bringing about success so well as He who knows the end from the beginning. The simple pure Gospel of Christ is by far the sweetest story ever told. Who can improve upon it? Has it lost any of its power and sweetness since the day humble disciples climbed the mountainside to sit at the feet of Jesus and hear it from His own lips? Is it any less worth while than in the days when martyrs gave their lives on the cross, the gallows, or in the flames? or since the days when in the caves of the mountains of Europe it was told to the persecuted and hunted faithful in whispering tones?

Oh no! It is the same old Gospel of the same dear Christ, who is the same yesterday, today and forever.

Then why all this clamoring for worldly pomp and show? Why so much fuss and commotion to attract and hold men and women into the house of the Lord when He has said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me"?

I fear the churches of today are thinking too much of themselves and the big showing they may make in the world today, and not nearly enough of the crucified Christ for whom it was all begun.

Competition and rivalry hold too big a place in our ranks. It matters not under what name we go. If we are a sincere church, we are all a part of the "church triumphant," or will be if we are faithful to the end.

And now finally let me say again that spirituality that comes through fervent continual prayer is our greatest lack today.—Cora Gilley Howlett.

TRUE INTIMACY WITH CHRIST.

If there be any one great need of the Church today above another, we know not what it more needs than a true knowledge of Christ—not a mere head knowledge, but a heart knowledge, that which is the outcome of a heart experience. The man who has a genuine heart experience in knowing Christ is the man who is best prepared to hold up the truth of the Gospel. It is hard to explain why so many men oppose a real heart experience in knowing Christ, and yet, if we are not badly mistaken, it is a fact that a real heart knowledge of Christ is very objectionable to many men, yea, even to many people who are already in the Church. We do not see how it is possible for man or woman to have salvation from sin without a real heart experience. It is true and we are glad not only to admit it, but to claim it as essential to salvation—men and women cannot be saved as we understand it through a mere head religion—that is, by means of a mere intellectual knowledge of salvation. Thousands have that, but they seem to know nothing of the saving power of Christ, nor does it seem that Christ is working in and through them to the saving of the lost.

Paul teaches very plainly and emphatically that with the heart we believe unto righteousness. Hear his plain words:

"For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."—Rom. 10:10.

Then he adds, as if in explanation of that expression of divine thought, this: "For the Scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on Him shall not be ashamed." That is evidently a heart belief that he is emphasizing, for he had just declared that it was with the heart that man believeth, and so he must have referred to the same kind of belief as that he had just mentioned in the preceding verse, and if that be true, as undoubtedly it is, then the matter of heart belief in religion is very vital and as we see it, no man has any right to believe with the head only, for as it seems to us, head belief only lacks much of meeting the needs of the soul of man. Head knowledge has a place in the salvation of men and women, but it is secondary as compared with the belief of the heart. It is nowhere said that with the head man believes unto salvation, but it is said: "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness."

Head religionists do not believe in giving the heart so much power in the saving of the people through Christ. They wish it to be a mere matter of the head. That is really why men have so much to say against emotion. Emotion is of the heart, and while it is possible for emotion to go far afield, yet when emotion is but the expression of a genuine work of grace in the life, then it is of the highest possible value in Christian experience. The men who decry emotion do so on the ground that it often leads people astray, going into rank fanaticism and so bringing the truth into disrepute, but that is another mistake of the head in its efforts to rule the heart out of the genuine work of grace. Emotion is a gift of God, and He gave them both to man to use well and wisely in serving God. Neither intellect nor emotion is complete in itself, but both working together means the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes with the heart. Intellect baptized in ignorance is just as liable and much more so, to lead us into shameful abuses of the truth than is emotion, while emotion under the power of a consecrated intellect is a veritable fountain of good. You see emotion itself is a great power, and when it is under the power of this consecrated intellect, then the two work in harmony, as God evidently meant they should do, and they bring forth a great harvest of fruit in the divine life. The intellect apart from the emotion soon gets to be dry and a poor producer of the fruits of the Christian life.

Paul was overburdened with the thought of his lack of a knowledge of Christ. Hear him as in Phil. 3:10 as he so truly outstrips himself in his thought by saying: "That I may know him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death." That is a clear case of the craving of Paul's heart life to know Jesus in His fulness, and this ought each believer to have. A real and saving knowledge of Jesus is the one essential in the heart life of each believer. Indeed, we scarcely get into the kingdom by a head knowledge which has not heart experience. However, a head knowledge and a heart experience mean much when working together for the glory of God.

Much is said now and then by a certain class of writers as to saving the people by the wholesale, that is by communities, but as we understand it Jesus' plan is to save them one by one, as each one for himself believes the Gospel of the Son of God, and being saved one by one, then He brings them together for co-operation, for pulling together as a Church and laboring together with God for the winning of the world to Christ.

We must have individual experience in order to do individual work, and not only so, but we must have individual experience in order to our salvation in Christ. It was to the individual that Christ revealed the fact that we must become the light of the world. We must know Christ as individuals, and when we truly know Him in that way we may become a great power in His name. Some one has said that when individuals know Christ, then their lives will commend the gospel to a sinful and dying world. Again it is said that when the Church knows Christ, she will become His real and glorious body, and then when the nations come to know Christ there will be peace on earth and when there is universal peace on earth, Christ will rule and reign to the glory of God and the saving of His Church. Let us pray for the incoming of a real heart knowledge of the men and women who today constitute the visible Church. Then with head and heart, working together, we shall rejoice as the redeemed of the Lord. May God hasten the day of this marvelous transformation from life in sin to life in grace.

AN IMPRESSIVE INTERPRETATION OF THE TEN VIRGINS.

In the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held last May at Hot Springs, on the morning of May 18th, Bishop W. B. Murrah addressed the Conference and spoke on the Parable of the Ten Virgins. In part he said:

"The key to the interpretation of this parable is supplied by the third and fourth verses: 'They that were foolish took their lamps and took no oil with them, but the wise took oil in their vessels.' 'Oil in their vessels, with their lamps.' Reserve strength, something from which to draw in times of stress and strain. A wise man in advising a young friend about the purchase of bank stock said: 'Look well to the surplus; scrutinize with great care the reserve.' Almost any institution can get along pretty well in ordinary times. It is the sudden, the unexpected incident and startling confusion, cries at midnight, which test foundations and will tell of what sort they are. This parable used to trouble me a great deal. I couldn't understand it. The more I reflected upon it, the more it perplexed me. It seemed to me a mere trifle, a simple inadvertence, the basis for the harshest kind of judgment. I knew it wasn't so, and yet it seemed that our Lord was commending a most despicable piece of selfishness, and that is where I went astray. What at first seemed a small matter appeared upon reflection to be fundamental, radical, illustrating the operation of a law inexorable and all-prevailing. After all, it is a sad picture, these unfortunate creatures standing out in darkness, shivering in the cold, peering through the windows at their happy sisters reveling in the joys of a great festive occasion, begging to be allowed to go in, and yet the door ruthlessly shut in their faces. Why shouldn't they have been allowed to go in? Does not every instinct of generosity suggest, "Yes, open wide the door; let them come in and share our joys"? So you say if you give the parable a merely sentimental or superficial interpretation: "It cannot be reconciled with our Lord's teachings elsewhere or with his Spirit anywhere." I never understood it until I asked myself the question: "Isn't it all true? Isn't it necessarily true; not true because our Lord said it, but our Lord said it because it was essentially true and would require a reconstruction of the universe for it to be otherwise?"

See how the law operates everywhere. Take the matter of health at the very base of being. A friend looks into the pale, cold, lifeless face of a friend and turns away with a sigh and says: "Poor fellow! He might have pulled through. The disease was not necessarily fatal, but he had no constitution." He had wasted the energies of his being in riotous living, by dissipation and disregard for health. He could not meet the crisis, and all the watchful vigilance of a strong father, the sweet, tender ministries of a loving mother, and the skill of a physician could not avail. He goes out into the darkness of death, and there is no mysterious providence about it. Just over there is a happy group with radiant countenances wreathed with smiles. In their midst is a convalescing friend with the advance signals of health appearing. The lights are all burning, and everything is bright and radiant. Some one says: "O, it was a terrible attack! I do not see how he stood it." But he had such reserve strength, he had lived such a rational life, with such regard to the laws of health it would seem that through his whole life he had been storing up resources for just such an hour as this.

I do not know that the thought of the parable can be better illustrated than by the business world. Here is a man who lives up to the very margin of his income. Occasionally he steps over it. Debt begins to eat into the principal; disintegration sets in. Here is another man who husbands his resources and guards all the economic laws.

Suddenly is "a cry at midnight," a panic, confusion everybody startled. One goes down into the darkness of bankruptcy and desperation and suicide. The other by the very conditions which work ruin to his neighbor goes on to fortune. Here are two men. They have both had the same advantages. What scientists sometimes with rather high-sounding phraseology call heredity and environment have operated alike in both places. They have had the same school advantages, the same college advantages, the same home training. But one, under the idea that it is the real true philosophy of life to have a good time neglects his opportunities and fritters away the energies of his life. The other by toil and sacrifice and hard work accumulates resources. One has gone into the silence of obscurity. We do not know where he is. The other is in halls all lighted up and brilliant. O, my brethren, there is no realm where the law of common sense operates more certainly than in the realm of religion! Why should it be thought a thing strange that a man who neglects all the means of grace, who indulges in sin and frivolities and dissipations, in the customs and habits which sap the very life of the spiritual nature should go down before temptation's slightest breeze, while another rich in spiritual resources, with the courage of a Job even in the darkest hour, says, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him"? The Church is "the bride of Christ." That is the New Testament symbol. Our blessed Lord in the developments of his kingdom is certainly coming. It is our duty as his disciples to be attendants of the bride to keep her ready, always ready for these royal receptions.

WHO IS WHO AND WHO KNOWS?

We have been much interested in reading the following article by Bishop H. M. DuBose of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It first appeared in The Christian Advocate. It is well worth reading. Even the scholarly may stop and drink from this spring. Indeed Bishop DuBose wrote this article to put the scholarly to thinking and to seeing the truth in the light of truth, and that is what we all need to do. Brethren, let us give Bishop DuBose a careful, a fair and unprejudiced reading. He writes as follows, and he is writing to students chiefly:

Through all its course destructive criticism has leaned upon the staff of an exaggerated theory of evolution. Monistic evolution lay at the base of the most radical form of nineteenth century criticism of the New Testament. The books of its canon, one by one, triumphed against the onset; but the chief doctrines of the New Testament system are still the objects of attack. We have considered the case of the touchstone of these doctrines, that of the Virgin birth; but the doctrines of the atonement and the resurrection are equally involved. The lightness with which these are sometimes discounted in so-called religious teaching is quite appalling. The claim is broadly urged that these doctrines cannot be accepted at their traditional value, but that they must be subjected to a scientific test, which will show that Christian consciousness has so evolved since the emergence of these doctrines as to leave them impossible of adjustment to our present-day rational attitudes.

It constantly happens that speculative and pragmatic statement overreaches itself and lands in pure negation. This is uniformly the case when pragmatism undertakes to deal with the fundamentals of the Christian religion. The basal doctrines of Christianity were not produced by evolution; they are the content of revelation and miracle. It is equally true that these doctrines can never be subjected to evolution; they are steadfast, eternal, and it is the concern of men to evolve toward them and not from them. But here, of course, is the crux. The folly of men is the folly of their supposed wisdom. The wise of this world have not yet learned the meaning of the words: "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Such is human pride in what is called science that its measuring line must be laid against that which is recondit and eternal. Evolution is a convenient covert for the quixotic mind, not less in theology than in the other sciences. But the books of revelation and their doctrines are equal to a true scientific test and can hold their case against the proprietary claims of selective evolution.

The difficulty of all the issue of evolution is the absence of proper definition. There is an evolution and there is a revelation. And yet who has cultivated a knowledge of the difference? Certainly not the ordinary opponent of everything that passes under the name of evolution, and by no means the ordinary critic or would-be critic of orthodoxy and tradition. The grounding sees in the theory of evolution nothing but pretense and impious assertion; the pragmatist sees in it everything, an almighty something that displaces or disjoins the older belief in a personal divine immanence in truth, creation, and providence. The opponent of any theory or doctrine of evolution will seek no answer of religion to its claims; the advocate of a radical theory of evolution cannot make his contention against religion go on four legs, and so the case generally stands. The issue must be met by those who are willing to let evolution have its due in its own field, but who put revelation and its doctrines in the categories of a purpose which transcends the things represented in or derivable from the teachings of evolution. I trust to be able to help the student reader to see how this may be done.

The phrase, "theistic evolution," has come into extensive use. It is intended either to indicate an important change of view concerning evolution as to its physical and material hypotheses or it is meant to indicate that the old-time Darwinian evolutionist has decided to admit God at the beginning of generation and selection. The phrase defines nothing of value so long as a definition of the word "evolution" itself is wanting. What is evolution? What is its process throughout? Is it monistic and continuous, or is it varying and confined to periods and cycles with lacunas and completed stages? Specifically, did it complete the lower orders or organic life and then take up as a crowning task the realization of man? Did it strike a new and higher level of movement in this last process, the uttering of man? These are questions the evolutionist must answer if his theory is to work out its own salvation. It is the field for the spirited scientific exploitation of the future. The old evolution dicta are a dead language. This is the state of evolution as a physical hypothesis. Its hope of coherency is in a future readjustment.

Of course for our present use we are asking the question: "How is evolution related to Christianity and the doctrines which constitute Christian belief?" In seeking this answer we naturally would not be expected to deal with evolution in the realm of biology, but only in the realm of revelation and faith. The subject is, however, of such implications that I do not wish to leave my own position in doubt, and what has gone before is dialectical rather than categorical. The matter of evolution is not one to be lightly dismissed. The homologies of the biological orders cannot be doubted; the physical unity of life is on its face a scientific verity. No informed mind can undertake to deny it. This is the aspect of protoplasm, cells, and species. But our present interest is summed up in the single question: the evolutionary problem alike. It is the problem "Is man descended from the ape or any other order of lower animal life?" For myself and not out of religious prejudice or party antipathy, but as the result of years of study and thought, I answer with an unqualified "No." I will not undertake here to say through what processes I have traveled to this conclusion; they have been various but open-minded, and the final conviction is steadfast and grounded in the safest proofs of both science and revelation.

I am not unmindful of the astounding organic likenesses between the human species and the higher order of simians exhibited in embryology, craniology, and general anatomy; but, as above indicated, I take my stand in this particular upon the testimony of a veritable science and more effective than that of biological likenesses, the science of the higher fact of the intellect of man and the absence of any data that connect the thinking animal with the animal of instinct. And this I know is the view held today by the men of science to whose authority one would care to become committed. There is no "link" between man and the lower orders; there is no fossil man and none can ever be found. Man's creation came too late to have representation in the fossiliferous series. Again, there is no evidence and never was in the highest forms of simian life to indicate even a latent tendency toward that "natural selection" which the theorist would point to as the path of man's descent. As one has said: "The chasm between the lowest order of human beings and the highest order of apes is bridgeless, impassable." The physical likenesses referred to above do not prove the unity of the origin of man and apes, but only indicate adjacency, or at most a locative relationship, and that not as to coincident time. The highest proofs put man in a class apart from and above the other orders and emphasize the miraculous emergence of his intellectual being. The scientific question concerning human genesis turns on the intellect and not on the physical body. Whatever exhibit it may make of biological development in the latter, science is dumb when it comes to the origin of the human intellect. It must admit through the force of its own proofs an overt miracle or else utter a note of materialistic babble which is a confession of its own impotence. The very cells of the human body after the briefest stage following fetal integration testify that they have been under the restraint of a separating and miraculous influence. Human biogenesis and spiritual palingenesis are on the same divine plane. Only a subtle thing called sin divides between them. The Spirit who breathed into the nostrils of man the breath of life is the same spirit who kindled the fire winds of Pentecost.

The pragmatic critic turns aside from this because his theory must needs show the new birth itself to be the result of an evolutionary process. For the same reason he must elide from the gospel the doctrine of the Virgin birth, because it demands a bodily and miraculous resurrection of the Crucified, and the resurrection isolated from the Virgin birth, loses its value as also its believeableness. The vicarious atonement stands with the two and falls if one or the other be set aside.

Let evolution or biological development, or whatever term be employed, therefore be defined to signify the advance of life toward the finalities and goals of the universe of mind and spirit. The first of these finalities is the creation of an order of intellectual beings. Man is the type of this order.

ATTENTION.

To the Women's Missionary Societies of the Eastern Virginia Conference:

As you have noticed our Woman's Missionary Conference meets about three weeks earlier this year than heretofore. We are to gather with the society at Berea, Nansemond, on October 6th. We trust that all of our organizations will be ready when the time comes and that there may be no falling off but rather an increase in members and money. It is going to take an effort to do this but we must not let the work suffer. There is great need for increased effort every where. Let us bend our energies to make this our best Conference.

ELON LETTER.

The question of the inspiration of the Scriptures has been the occasion of endless discussion through the Christian centuries and today troubles many professing Christians. Many also remain out of the Christian fold because they cannot understand.

This issue was settled long ago for me and has never troubled me since. It came about as naturally and as inevitably as my faith in God. In fact my faith in God made inspiration natural and inevitable.

God is a person. He is our Father. He is present with us in every experience, though often times we do not realize it. I talk to Him through prayer. He answers me by the still small voice of conscience within. It is my duty to pray to Him. It is likewise my duty and certainly my privilege to listen to Him. Inspiration is as essential in the Christian life as prayer and as normal.

So it comes about that the Bible is the record of inspiration that came to men called of God in a special and authoritative way to speak for Him. They did speak for Him and their utterances are the basis of the Christian life. Any unprejudiced study of the Bible will result in the conclusion that it is inspired. Experience too proves it.

We have other methods too of knowing God than through inspiration. Among these are observation of the lives of others, personal experience, and our reasoning powers. Formerly psychologists accepted only these three. Today even the best psychologists recognize the validity of inspiration or, as they prefer to call it, intuition also in the realm of religion. In other words, psychology today grants what the Bible has always presupposed—namely, that God is present in His world and able to speak to His children.

The Bible gives us a test for inspiration. We find it recorded in 2 Tim. 3:16—"All Scripture, given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." The Biblical writers recognized that a man inspired at one time might not be at another, as Paul in 2 Cor. 11:17 when he says—"That which I speak, I speak it not after the Lord," and also in 1 Cor. 7:12—"But to the rest speak I, not the Lord." We too have had this same experience. There are times when we are absolutely clear respecting the Lord's will for us. At other times we cannot for one reason or another hear the divine voice speaking in unmistakable tones the message needed for our guidance.

Let us wait on the Lord. Let us listen for His voice. He is anxious, yearning ever to speak to every child of His creation. What a blessed fact inspiration is! What a privilege we have to hear our Father speak to us!

MUNCIE, IND., LETTER.

It may be of some interest to our Southern friends to get a line from the work out here in the Middle West. It was my privilege to attend the first session of the Boys and Girls Congress of the Eastern Indiana Conference, which met with the Farmland Christian Church last Tuesday. On the first day two hundred and twelve registered and a very large majority of them were boys and girls and young people. The Congress was presided over by Miss Margurite Strong, a member of our Muncie Church, who dispatched the business and carried out the program of the Congress with ability and credit to herself and the occasion. It was indeed interesting to see so many boys and girls together managing the affairs of the Kingdom, under the careful eyes of older persons. Addresses of an educational and inspirational character were delivered by Dr. W. S. Alexander, of Union Christian College and Rev. A. E. Kemp, D. D., of Troy, Ohio and others. In late afternoon of the first day the great congregation of young people marched through the main street of the town and then out to the Park where a social period was enjoyed before the evening service. The writer left them at the Park and could not attend the services and sessions following. The Woman's Mission Board of the Conference met the following day and enjoyed a good program which closed with a Pageant at evening. I am advised that interesting addresses were made by Rev. D. R. Lusk, Rev. J. R. Cortner and Rev. A. E. Cortner. The idea of the Congress was conceived by Rev. A. E. Cortner and took its inception at a quarterly Conference held at our Muncie Church early in the year, and the plan has been worked out by Mr. Cortner and Miss Strong and others. The occasion looked like a real bow of promise against the clouds of present day conditions. The next generation then successive generations, and human destinies, are to be affected and influenced by our attitudes, spirit, and service in the present and all is held in youth of today. Their training now must determine future conditions. The church should see to it that the education of the youth of today is imbued with Christian ideals of life.

The State is doing a splendid piece of work in the physical and intellectual training of the young but if the seat of motive, desire, and impulse is left untouched and unrenewed by divine grace and the life of Christ then the world must continue to stagger on tottering to its ruin. The church has always taken the lead in the training of youth. The first colleges of this country were founded by the church. Harvard, Yale, William and Mary, Brown and hundreds of other more recently established were by the Church of Jesus Christ. Our public school system is the logical outgrowth of the work of the Church in the founding of our first colleges. We should now lose no time in following up all secular education and give to the young not only Christian and moral ideals for the shaping of character, but lead them into the Kingdom of Christ. One of the primary functions of the Boys' and Girls' Congress is the training and development of the young for Christian leadership and to bring to them Christian ideals and inspiration for their places in the Kingdoms work.

BROTHER KING IN PARIS.

We are now in Paris having been here for three days. We tour the battle fields of northern France tomorrow, then on to Brussels. Our Commercial Congress has been well received here by French diplomats and I think we have established splendid relations as to international trade relations.

France is still sad from her recent conflicts and is still under the expectation of having war again with Germany any moment. Germany has refused to pay to France her repereative indebtedness and France is demanding payment. Germany has repudiated and sent all of her securities to foreign countries and she is today bankrupt. The Minister of Commerce said to our Commission that they are anticipating Germany to attack them from the air. With all this terrible suspense. Paris is still gay Paris. I was informed on our ship across that the recent war had brought France to her knees and she was improving spiritually. If this is true, I am assured she was something awful before the war.

If we have another Whiteman's War it will practically mean the annihilation of the white race. During the past war between the white races, the black, yellow and mongal races stood off and said, see these Christians, how they love each other. They cannot understand why Christian nations who teach the love of Jesus Christ can continue to be engaged in war. Our party will go to Germany on our tour for investigation and I trust we will find conditions better than they are pictured to us here. It would be a great sacrifice to destroy the beautiful architecture laid out by Napoleon in Paris. In my own mind I never admired Napoleon's bloody drive to destroy all nations, but he certainly did a great deal for France and he still lives in the hearts and minds of these Frenchmen. The present low rate of exchange has put the cost of living to Americans very much below our home prices. The American dollar certainly looks good to these people. The cheapest things to get are wine and beer. The most difficult is water. They will almost give you wine and beer, but you buy water.

Their foods are very dainty and look to be very delicious, but I think a corned herring and piece of hoe cake would look more delicious to this "down homer" than any of their dainty dishes. You can travel fairly well in Europe if you know a little French and fairly good English, but when I hear all these conglomerating tongues—I can understand when the confusion of the tongues were first ordered that the attendants carried mortar to the masons when they called for bricks. France is still loyal to the U. S. A., as we were told today by the Minister of Commerce the principles of France and our country are the same.

I believe they are very hopeful that the U. S. A. will come again to their rescue in the expected conflict again with Germany. I hope our country has seen her last war, with herself or any other nation; but Germany must be kept under subjection. If she is ever victorious, she will certainly look for the western hemisphere. More later.

CARRYING ON IN OUR DAY

The good world moves on. We begin our tasks faithfully and lay them down reluctantly to be taken up by those following the upward faiths of progress. Three hundred years ago America was begun by Cavaliers at Jamestown, and Puritans at Plymouth Rock. Very big ideas—and glorious visions had those ancient fathers and mothers of ours, but only a little could they do toward realizing their fondest dreams! Sons and grandsons, daughters and granddaughters had to carry on and carry out there plans and purposes. The Good Book says, "Other men labored and ye are entered into their labors."—(John 4:38).

We have come to our day, dear friends, Socrates and Plato have played their parts; the Caesars have had their victories and triumphs; Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson and George Washington have had the glorious day—yea even your fathers and mothers of yesterday are today gone, and ye stand in their stead. The stage is ours. Three centuries of American history looks down upon us! Sixty centuries of progress lies at our feet. Sixty centuries of trial and error, of invention, of learning, of faith, of hopes, of dreams. What shall we do with the vast responsibility which is ours now? What disposition shall we make of the learning which has been left us?

In the light, loomy, lands of North Carolina I used to play—a barefoot boy. There was a little wet-weather stream which we use to dam with our hands. And within several hours of a summer's day many barrels of water could be retained behind our little sand bank. Later we would let the water loose and follow it as it made its way over the warm dry sand becoming less and less as the thirsty sands drank it up, and as it lost its way in little holes here and there. I cannot forget the manner in which the dry sand used that water up. Are we passing on the hard-earned favors of our fore-fathers? or are we ruthlessly using them up and thus forgetting those who are to follow? Is the day of the noble type of fine "Virginia gentleman" going and if so is there anything better coming in its place? It is ours to answer that question and generations yet unborn must suffer or rejoice according as we answer it.

The way in which we train our children shall be our answer. Solomon, the wise man, said (Psa. 127), "As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man; so are children of the youth. Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them; they shall not be ashamed, but they shall speak with the enemies in the gate." What is the figure and the meaning thereof? It is that of a strong man—a hunter or soldier—let's say a hunter, standing in his field he sees an eagle fly over his head high in the air above him. He is strong and able to kill the eagle if he could only reach him, but he is helpless unless he has his bow and a quiver of arrows. With his keene eye and strong hand and the aid of the bow and arrow he can capture his prize and go home rejoicing.

Why and how are children like a quiver of arrows? Because they lengthen the arms of their fathers and mothers. They being the otherwise impossible ideals of their lives to within their reach.

The Cologne Cathedral was 632 years in building. What architect could possibly live long enough to do that sort of work. St. Peter's Cathedral at Rome was 120 years in building. Solomon's Temple was the dream, desire, and hope of David. He began to gather the material for its erection, but Solomon was at work on it forty years before its completion.

An American tourist asked an old English gardener how he grew such beautiful lawns. He told him a good soil was well prepared, the seed is sown and the coming grass is carefully tended for 300 years! What gardener could follow those instructions alone? Ten generations might be able to meet those demands!

And thus must we labor and plan and pray, not for our day only but for all time to come. Our passing on of the torch should be done in such unselfish manner as to cause those taking it to feel a keener sense of honor and pride in having it from our hands. Our Lord Christ is yearning to make it so.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

HOW DOES THE SINFUL NATURE OF MAN SHOW ITSELF?

That man has a nature full of sinful tendencies we think no man of sense can deny. If you wish an interesting, as well as an instructive and helpful study take an hour or two some day and study the sinful nature of man and how it shows itself in one's daily life and walk. All of the symptoms may not show themselves in the life of every man, but every man is likely to have his share of these outcroppings of the sinful nature. The following are some of the sinful manifestations of human nature:

1. Self-will which is contrary to the will of God.
2. Pride, which arrays man against God.
3. The Love of the world—it sets man against God.
4. Inordinate action, which chokes the heart against God's love.
5. The desire for sinful things as seen through the eye.
6. The love of praise—the praise of men.
7. Fear of censure which makes us shirk the right.
8. Ashamed of that in which we ought to glory.
9. Jealousy, the green-eyed monster of the human heart.
10. Sensitiveness.
11. Evil Surmisings and Suspicions.
12. Malice, the very essence of hatred.
13. Hatred which the Bible classes as murder —See I John 3:15.
14. Bitterness.
15. Envy.
16. Resentment.
17. Revenge.
18. Covetousness.
19. Love of money.
20. A heart bent to backsliding.
21. Uncharitable conversation.
22. Unprofitable conversation.
23. A desire to injure others.
24. A wish to make yourself most important.

There are at least twenty-four enemies of the spiritual life of men and women—enemies that are on hand at practically every corner in life. May God help to make a good fight such an one as Paul declared he had made, after which he was ready for the crown which the Lord the righteous Judge would give him in that day of final accounts.

These twenty-four outcroppings of the sinful nature are the most persistent and dreadful enemies the man has in his earthly life.

Some may be more dangerous than others only because they show themselves in the weakest points of life. Watch them, for some of these sins do so easily beset us and destroy our peace of heart and mind. We need to set a watch over these enemies all the way of the journey of life. We can not meet them in our own strength—we must have help from above, if we would come out the victors in the battle with the enemies of the Soul. Bible study and prayer are necessary to enable the Christian to get and keep to mastery over these twenty-four enemies of the Christian life, and for permanent cure man needs the sanctification of the human life. Do not forget that as a fact.

Two preachers, one a senior in college soon to graduate and the other who had been a faithful minister many years, were seated together engaged in conversation. The young man simple and earnest in manner was drinking in the wisdom that fell from the lips of this sage. This minister in his young manhood had attended college, but his limited means prevented his taking the regular course required for graduation. After a prolonged conversation on various topics, the young man quizzically propounded the following question to his venerable brother: "Brother ———, where were you educated?" The good brother replied, "No where, I weren't educated."

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

One person may take two or more subscriptions and have his time extended. All persons in arrears as much as one year should pay up, and then aid the solicitor in securing a premium. The name label indicates the time to which subscription is paid.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE NEW KNOWLEDGE AND THE CHRISTIAN FAITH.

It has sometimes seemed that many of our people feel that we are over concerned about the work of the enemies of the Bible, since we often endeavor to show the dangers which are confronting and oppressing the cause of Christ. We have no fears for the outcome, as it affects the final victory of Christianity, but we feel very much concern as it may and most likely will affect the lives of individuals in the Church—they may lose all and go out into the darkness of unbelief. If we can say any word of warning that may turn the people from error to truth we shall be more than glad to say it in the name of the Lord.

In The Presbyterian Standard of August 30th, one of its editors writes the following editorial, and believing it is so timely and so much needed, as an offset to the teaching that is so widespread against the validity of the Bible we are constrained to give it here and ask for it a careful and prayerful reading. It will show you that truth often has to face error and fight its way to victory. You will also see that your editor is not standing alone in his attitude as to these things which seem to be blocking the way to the victory of the Cross. If the repudiation of the fundamental doctrines of the Christian Faith does not call for a stand on the part of the people of God, then we have wholly misunderstood the thought as brought out in June 3. In discussing The New Knowledge and The Christian Faith, The Presbyterian Standard says:

Such is the title of a recent sermon by Harry Emerson Fosdick, D. D. It was aimed at the Fundamentalists. The gist of it is that many Christians have outgrown the traditional interpretation of the Bible; in the light of Twentieth Century knowledge they can no longer accept the doctrines accounted as essential by the Fundamentalists; and the question is, What is to be done about it? Shall they be driven out of the Church? They are very devout and reverent, very loyal to Christ and very much concerned that "men in their personal and in their social relationships should know Jesus Christ."

Dr. Fosdick pleads for tolerance, and deplors the disposition to divide the Church over such insignificant and puerile matters as the virgin birth, the vicarious atonement and the inspiration of the scriptures.

The trouble is the Church is already divided. The breach is made. The two parties are formed. They are antagonistic, and the antagonism is finding expression by both parties. It does not help matters that the line of cleavage is inside the denomination. Division is division whether the line runs within or between denominations. There is a widespread opinion that if you could only get all parties, no matter how greatly they differ, in one organization and keep them there you would have accomplished great things for Christianity; you would have consolidated its forces and healed its breaches. To us it seems an utterly baseless opinion. The hurtful divisions of Christianity are those born of different convictions. Owing to these divisions, some are preaching for truth what others regard as dangerous, or fatal error. Such divisions are not healed by putting the preachers in the same organization. They are rather aggravated, and the friction between parties made more painful.

What Dr. Fosdick really wants is that the Fundamentalists should look with favor on the Liberals, treat the differences between them as of no importance, and regard the Liberals as valuable allies. In other words, he would have his adversaries cease to be adversaries by changing their convictions, or by suppressing their convictions. He commends to them Gamaliel's advice: "Refrain from these men and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will be overthrown; but if it be of God ye will not be able to overthrow them; lest haply ye will be found even to be fighting against God." Here the Fundamentalists might retort: "You take the liberty of calling in question the inspiration of Peter and John, we will take the liberty of calling in question the inspiration of Gamaliel." Certainly if Dr. Fosdick subscribes to the doctrine of Gamaliel he must think it a foolish thing on the part of the Christian Church to be fighting against Mormonism, Eddyism and such like. In deed, why not say about Mohammedanism, Buddhism and all forms of Paganism, "Let them alone; if they be of men they will be overthrown." If we are going to fight at all, we must draw the line somewhere. Perhaps even Dr. Fosdick regards some things as fundamental.

We cannot encourage Dr. Fosdick to hope that the Fundamentalists are going to let him and his kind alone. It would be contrary to all the history of the past. He must first change their convictions about what the Fundamentals are. Doubtless he cherishes some hope of being able to do this. The necessity that the Church should shift its position touching the matters in dispute seems so clear to him that he may persuade himself that he can make it clear to others. He mentions "the great mass of new knowledge that has come into man's possession; new knowledge about the physical universe, its origin, its forces; its laws; new knowledge about human history and in particular about the ways in which the ancient peoples used to think in matters of religion and the methods by which they phrased and explained their spiritual experiences; and new knowledge, also, about other religions and the strangely similar ways in which men's faith and religious practices have developed everywhere." Then comes the explanation of how this new knowledge gives birth to liberalism and makes necessary the scrapping of old creeds: "Now there are multitudes of reverent Christians who have been unable to keep this new knowledge in one compartment of their minds and the Christian faith in another." Flood the whole mind with the new knowledge and the Christian faith must either perish or suffer modification. Of course, it is the business of the Liberals to furnish the new knowledge and they naturally cherish the hope that more and more men will open their minds to it.

Unfortunately for this hope, much of this new knowledge is old enough to have been tried out. All the considerations that Dr. Fosdick brings forward to discredit the story of the virgin birth have been familiar to the Church since the days of Origen and Celsus. They have hitherto had little effect. The uniformity of natural laws used to discredit miracles has gained no added force since David Hume framed his ingenious arguments. So we doubt if this "great mass of new knowledge" is going to swing any large part of the Church away from its old moorings.

Dr. Fosdick thinks that new knowledge has done this in the past. He refers to what took place when it was discovered that the earth was round and revolved around the sun; and indulges in this generalization: "Whenever such a situation has arisen, there has been only one way out: the new knowledge and the old faith had to be blended in a new combination." If Dr. Fosdick will only pause to consider, he will find that the "new combination" contained all the fundamentals. Science has never constrained the Church to alter her creed touching any of the evangelical doctrines, any of those doctrines which are now giving the liberals trouble. The utmost new knowledge has ever done has been to necessitate a new interpretation of a few passages of scriptures, passages having no bearing on the doctrines of redemption. New knowledge has always left the Church holding to the Bible as the very Word of God, the only infallible rule of faith and practice. We venture to predict that the "great mass of new knowledge" will repeat the history of the past. It will create a flurry, but it will leave the Church standing with unshaken faith on what Gladstone called the "impregnable rock of scripture." We pin our judgment to Dr. B. B. Warfield: "Destructive criticism," he says, "is great and vigorous; it is learned and acute; it may possibly have just cause for its open contempt for the learning of the defenders of the Bible's trustworthiness. But it does not reckon sufficiently with one fact. It has the Bible against it, and the Bible is always with us. When these criticisms have been forgotten, the Bible will still be head."

PRAYING THE BIBLE INTO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS—PRAYERS DISTINCT VICTORY.

In many of the States of this Union the Bible is not allowed in the public schools. Even in some of our cities it has no place, and yet there are many who feel it ought to be there as the influence of the Bible in shaping and forming the character of the youth of the land must be inestimable. The question in many sections is: How can we get the Bible into our public schools? Five praying men of Kansas City put the Bible into the Public Schools of that city—they did it by prayer, and the same might most likely be done all over this land, if we had men of faith bold enough to undertake it in the name of the Lord.

In Kansas City the Bible was not allowed in the Public schools, but there were five men in that city who were praying men. They met every day at noon for prayer. Among the things they undertook to do by prayer was the putting of the Bible into the Public Schools of that city and they did it. By prayer they got the unanimous consent of the School Board. All they did, we are told in an effort to answer their own prayers, was to go before the school board and offer the following resolutions:

1. "That you will allow the Kansas City noon prayer meeting group to place a plain, readable copy of the King James Version of the Bible on every desk in the public school rooms of Kansas City.
2. "That you will give permission to each teacher to read out of the Bible during each school day, but that such reading will be optional with the teacher.
3. "That you will not allow any teacher to discuss the Scriptures or explain the meaning of them to the students, but confine it only to the reading of it.

4. "That our group will pay all expenses connected with the purchase and the delivery and the placing of the Bible on the desks.

5. "That the Board will not anticipate any trouble or difficulty connected with this matter, but we are asking that these Bibles be placed on the desk with your permission and without obtaining of permission before from any of those whom we may suspect of not being favorable to this precious Word of God, and that thereby the whole burden will be placed on the enemies of the Scriptures and it will be their place to force its expulsion."

This was last November, and the praying group continued their praying. Many who knew of the effort were withstanding it, including many ministers and some members of the faculty of the schools. In April of this year a member of the praying group, Mr. Walter L. Wilson Vice-President of the Baker-Lockwood Manufacturing Company, received the following letter from the Secretary of the School Board:

"I am most happy to officially notify you that at the meeting of the Board of Directors of the School District, held on the 6th inst., which was the last meeting to be held by the present Board, your petition of the 10th of November for permission to place a readable copy of the King James Version of the Bible on the desk of every teacher in the public schools of this city was thoroughly discussed and granted upon the unanimous vote of the entire Board."

The praying group were not slow to carry out their part of the agreement and on the 1st of May, 1,460 Bibles were placed on the desks of the Kansas City Public Schools. Later Mr. Wilson wrote to the Sunday School Times: "We have been getting splendid reports from the schools concerning the use of the scriptures the teachers generally are reading it to the pupils, and perhaps it is more used in the high schools than in the ward schools. I have also been told that some of the teachers read the scriptures through periods when they do not have classes, and when the children are studying, and the children also are found reading the scriptures at times they are not taken up with studying."

Of course, one blessed result of it all to confirm and stimulate faith in the efficacy of prayer. That praying group does not have to go back to Elijah for proof that prayer is a mighty force in God's universe.

THE REUNION OF THE HELFENSTEIN FAMILY.

CHAPTER II.

The clans were gathering and only one brother was yet to come. We had just finished supper when the blast of an auto horn told of his arrival. The table was soon vacated and a joyous company rushed to the car to give Jesse and Laura, Earnest and his wife and little girl a hearty welcome. I was the only one of my family present then but Lulu and Ruth and Joseph were on the way and about seven o'clock we met them at the station and I tell you, Jabez, I was glad to see them, and more particularly so as I was not certain about Ruth's and Joseph's coming. The family of sisters and brothers were all there, mighty glad and thankful, and in our hearts and with our voices we gave praise to God for having brought us all together in our glad reunion.
