Colleges and universities can and should teach religion, Dean Herbert E. Hawkes of Columbia College, New York, told the delegates to the Association of American Colleges at their annual meeting in New York. "There is a close analogy," he said "between instruction in religion and in the fine arts, the esthetic and religious being two aspects of the human spirit which should be discussed and studied."

If any of our churches need a supply during the summer, or if our pastors wish evangelistic assistance they will do well to correspond with Rev. H. Jennings Fleming, who is open for such services and is anxious to be engaged in pastoral or evangelistic work through the summer. Brother Fleming is a well trained and capable minister, who will render valuable services to those who may engage him.

An interested pastor writes that some SUN readers have been wondering if it were possible to have Uncle Wellons sermon, delivered January 1, 1926, on his hundredth anniversary, put on a phonograph record. We agree with this pastor that it would be a most popular record, but fear that it would not be practical, as it would require at the very least, ten of the largest size double faced records to record the sermon.

Rev. D. F. Jones, our first missionary to Japan, sends us a line from San Francisco, where he now lives, saying, "Love to all of you dear ones in the South. I am seventy-seven years old, but thank God, I want to serve Him till the end." CHRISTIAN SUN readers greatly enjoyed the sketch of Brother Jones in THE SUN of April 1st. Though he has been from us many, many years, Brother Jones is held in highest respect and esteem by those who knew him before he went away as our first missionary.

Miss Margaret H. Morey sends the Emergency Fund offering on behalf of Mrs. H. T. Rigney, treasurer of our Rocky Ford Church, Carroll County, Va. This offering is $8.00, and the same is appreciated because we know something of what a sacrifice was made in order that this newly built church might show its loyalty and its gratitude. Both our Elk Spur and our Rocky Ford Churches, though struggling to get on their feet, are doing the right thing in lining up with the interests and undertakings of the Church.

We are receiving many contributions for Missions that are much appreciated. One in particular is of interest. The letter that brought it says: "Enclosed you will find ten cents. I would like to pay more, but this is all I have got. Grandpa gave me five cents. I sold marbles and got five cents. When I get to be a man I hope to pay more to help send the gospel to the heathen. I wish I could right now." This fine boy did not give us his address, but his name is all right, Jesse Wicker, and the spirit of him is pure gold. One could wish that we had a hundred thousand of his sort in the Christian Church, who would grow up in the faith and the hope of Jesse.

Miss Aylmer Goodwin, secretary of our Rose Hill Christian Church, Columbus, Ga., in sending in a check of $24.72, offering for the Emergency Mission Fund, adds this interesting line: "Third Sunday was our Mission Day, and we had a perfect day so far as weather was concerned. Our Missionary Society presented a pageant, 'Two Masters,' at the evening service. Some of our friends from another church assisted us with the music, and thus helped to make the program a success. We had a good audience, and we regret deeply that our offering was not larger." This offering is gratifying, coming as it does from a church that we know is making a great effort to live and get on its feet. The faithful ones in the church have a deep concern for the advancement of the Kingdom of our Lord, and are the leaven that will leaven yet the whole lump.

The proposal for a Department of Education, with a secretary in the President's Cabinet took an important step forward when it was heard before a committee of Senators and Representatives of the United States. A notable list of educators, representing every section of the country and every branch of the service, brought before the Joint Committee an impressive array of facts to show (1) the widespread character of the movement for the Department, (2) reasons why the present Bureau of Education cannot meet the need, (3) the opposition of the advocates of the new Education Bill to any form of federal control of education, (4) the importance of coordinating the existing educational activities of the federal government in the interest of efficiency and economy, (5) the need of national leadership and fact-finding in education if the $2,500,000,000 spent annually for that activity is to be used wisely. As a result of these hearings the case of the advocates of the measure has been greatly strengthened. The various elements of the opposition have been brought clearly into the open and are on record.

Rev. A. H. Sheppard, with a check of $33.66, offering for the Emergency Mission Fund, sends the following: "We had a good day at the North Highland Christian Church, Columbus, Ga., on Sunday. We had a sermon on Missions at the 11:00 o'clock service. The Woman's Missionary Society arranged an interesting program for the evening service. At the close of the program, we took an offering which is enclosed. We will begin our Spring Revival the second Sunday in April, with Rev. G. D. Hunt to assist us. I covet an interest in the prayers of the Brotherhood, that this may be a great time with us. I am hoping that the churches of our Convention may raise more than the amount asked for, and that the hearts of many may be made to rejoice." Nothing has been more striking and edifying in our Emergency Mission Fund offering than the loving co-operation of our pastors and churches. While the offering is not as large and as liberal as is so much needed and desired, the spirit of pastor and people, and their interest in the Mission cause, evokes profoundest gratitude, and betokens great things for the future of the Church and the work committed to us.

A PASTOR'S OUTLINE.

Dear Brother Atkinson:

Yesterday, I did my best at Reidsville at 11 A. M., and at Monticello at 3 P. M., using John 20: 21 as a text, "As my Father hath sent me, so send I you," dividing the subject, which was as I interpreted it, "The Mission of the Son and of the Servants," into the following heads: "The Sender," "The One to Whom Sent," "The Sent One," and "The Commission to be Fulfilled," by the sent one on behalf of the Sender, and for the benefit of those whom he visits.

I tried to show that of all the missions of life, this was the "Great Mission," and that it was the purpose of God to establish such a mission from the early dawn of creation, until the plan of redemption was completed on Calvary. This was because He loved to the extent of giving "all" for our good and salvation.

Second. It was to a lost world that the Mission was given.

Third. The "Sent One," His faithfulness through life, and the final sacrifice—the perfect Example.

Fourth. That this Commission would not be prayer, "Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven," and that it would be established according as we put forth the "greatness" and the "urgency" of the task. I closed with the thought of the benefit derived from this Mission in bringing lost souls to a knowledge of the truth, giving as my best illustration of the reward, "The restored Prodigal" in the home with the arms of a loving Father about his neck, shoes on his tired feet, a robe upon his wearied body, the ring, an emblem of unending love and the symbol of authority, upon his finger. Home at last.

Our work, though hindered by weather and illness, is moving with an increased interest in the Mission cause, and I am confident that Mission Month will have a lasting effect on our church here, as well as upon myself.

With my daily prayers that God will bless you in the work, and assuring you that I am doing my very best, Fraternaly

"WHITE PILGRIM" MEMORIAL WINDOW.

On the third Sunday, April 18th, there will be special services at the Haw River Christian Church. The beautiful memorial window to Rev. Joseph Thomas, the "White Pilgrim," will be unveiled with appropriate services, consisting of sermon, special music, old hymns, and appropriate addresses.

The window is beautifully wrought out in art glass with the likeness of Joseph Thomas, the "White Pilgrim," in the center. He is represented as having an open Bible in his hand and is dressed in white, the apparel he wore on his itineraries.

In early life, he preached, more than a hundred years ago, in a walnut grove at Haw River, across the river from where the Haw River Christian Church now stands.

Thomas' relatives, connections, and friends, placed the window in the church, and deacon W. A. Cook, who married a Thomas, had charge of the work of in putting the window in the building.

A great niece of the "White Pilgrim," two great, great nieces, and a great, great nephew are on the programme; and a great, great niece will preside at the organ.

At the close of the morning services, lunch will be served to out of town visitors in the basement of the church.

THE REASONABLENESS OF CHRISTIANITY.

"The Reasonableness of Christianity" is the self-explanatory title of the $6,000 Bross prize book from the pen of Dr. Douglas Clyde Macintosh, Dwight professor of theology in Yale University. Charles Scribner's Sons publishers. Price, $1.50.

The fact that this book won the Bross prize in competition with a large number of other volumes, being declared by the judges to be the greatest contribution to Christian thought during the past ten years, this fact in itself makes the book of unusual interest. The fact that the author is recognized on both sides of the water as one of the leading authorities in the philosophy of religion also makes the book of more than ordinary interest.

It was my happy privilege to study theology under Dr. Macintosh when I was a student at Yale, and later to study under the leading theologians in the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, and of the New College in Edinburgh. This experience convinced me that Dr. Macintosh of Yale, the author of "The Reasonableness of Christianity," was making a uniquely original and helpful contribution to the Christian thought of our day. After reading his Bross prize volume, I realize more than ever the great privilege which every student studying under Dr. Macintosh, and every reader of his writings enjoys.

His latest book, "The Reasonableness of Christianity," comprises, to my mind, the cream of all his contributions up to the present time. His originality of thought and of style, his logic and clarity of expression, his absolute sincerity of purpose and fine Christian spirit which are manifest on every page make the book one that every ministerial student and every open-minded pastor will want to read and reread. I predict that there will be few up-to-date pastor's libraries that will not possess this remarkable volume within the next year. Especially will the college and seminary trained pastors of all denominations be securing this book for their libraries. Progressive-minded laymen too will take great delight in the book, especially in the first ten chapters.

How inviting the following table of chapters which the volume contains will be to all who delight in reading a book that is freighted with the weightier matters of the mind and the soul: (1) "Apologetics Old and New," (2) "Christian Morality," (3) "Moral Optimism," (4) "Freedom," (5) "Immortality," (6) "God," (7) "Providence," (8) "Revelation," (9) "The Historic Jesus," (10) "The Person and Work of Christ," (11) "Knowledge in General," (12) "Religious Knowledge," (13) "Reality."

The fact that these chapters present the thought and convictions of one of the leading American scholars of the present generation is all the recommendation the book needs. The volume is filled with irrefutable arguments to support the Christian faith. It is the kind of book that puts new courage and new purpose into the preaching of men who have lost the positive note, and those who are seeking a convincing apologetic for the student mind of our high schools and colleges will find the book to be the answer to their quest.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

LOOK TO THE CHILDREN.

It has been written that the eighteenth century discovered man; the nineteenth century discovered woman; and the twentieth century discovered the child. This is quoted to bring to the fore the fact that we have not yet, even in this twentieth century, discovered the child, and the child's real worth. Many of our communities look yet to saving and directing manhood and womanhood, but let childhood go without much attempt at religious training. Without diverting in this direction, this fact must be faced in our Christian Church, namely; we are not carrying to the mind, and heart, of our youth the most important factors of Church life and existence. One of our observing laymen, writing the Editor recently, had this significant line in his letter, "It seems that the majority of the older members of our Church have been raised up to hold on to the dollar when it comes to the call for Missions. The greater part of what I am sending you for Missions in the enclosed check was given in our Church by the young members. So I suppose we will have to look to the children for the carrying of the Gospel to the uttermost parts." That brother has struck the nail on the head, and here is hoping that others will help hit that same nail until it is entirely driven down. We will have to look to the children, and train them in giving their dimes and dollars to the Lord's work, and also seek to give them the Missionary vision and method. The great trouble with many grown-ups in the Christian Church now is that they did not, in youth, receive Missionary training, and it is simply too late now to give them the enthusiasm and the fervor of youth in any task. We are going to have fervent, zealous missionary workers and recruits and givers, when we train them in early childhood.

Some of the most capable and renowned missionaries ever going out to the foreign fields were those who received the impression to do so in their early years, either at home or in the Sunday School.

The missionary task is big. It is many-sided and involves many activities. It touches life at many angles. On this account, older people will doubt and hesitate and call in question the advisability of such a task. While maturity staggers before a big and doubtful task, youth is challenged, and embraces the venture. Big things attract childhood and youth. It is the bigness of the missionary task that many of the doubters and close-fisted stumble at. But this same bigness fills the imagination of youth and carries impressions that abide forever.

Our correspondent is right. We will have to look to the children. Are we doing this in our homes, in our Sunday Schools, in our Christian Endeavor Societies? Are we teaching them there that one-tenth of all their earnings is sacred to the Lord and should be given to His cause? And are we teaching them that the cause dearest our Saviour's heart, and that for which He founded and is building His Church in the world, is to be missionary—to send, and to carry the Gospel to all the world? If the youth fail of this training, the Church of the future will suffer as has the Church of the past.

THE EMERGENCY MISSION FUND.

The most gratifying fact about our Mission Month and the Emergency Fund, is the universal interest among our churches and pastors in this undertaking. The offerings are not as large as was desired, and as we have a right to expect. But scarcely has there come a check without a letter from the pastor or the treasurer, saying, "We only wish we could make our offering larger," or "there is regret that our check is so small." The list printed in THE SUN elsewhere will show something of the range of the offerings. True, many of the churches have not yet reported, but the Mission Secretary has been assured by pastor, or church secretary, or treasurer, that the offering has been taken, or will be taken. The majority of the churches that have taken the offering are still working, or waiting, with the hope and expectation that some who did not have the opportunity of contributing, will add their donation and so swell the amount of the offering. Some of our pastors have certainly taken advantage of a great opportunity, and used it to wonderful effect in giving much-needed instruction, and enthusiasm, to their congregations. Certainly during no one year in all our experience, has there been as much missionary preaching and as much missionary discussion and instruction, as our people had in February and March. Some offerings which may appear small in the columns of THE SUN represent real sacrifice on the part of those who made the offering, and a real consecrated effort on the part of those who brought about the same in the local church. One of our devoted ministers declares that he never got as much out of the effort and ministry of one month in all his experience as he did during March, which was Mission Month with him. He further declared that only a beginning had been made, and that our people were ready and willing, if they only had the message carried to them and the opportunity afforded them, of going forward in missionary activity and endeavor.

Mission Month has certainly proven a valuable asset in our Church history and experience. This writer has never seen or known of an undertaking that has as completely and universally enlisted the loyalty and co-operation of our ministers and people as has Mission Month.

Our people have not been trained to missionary activity and giving, nor have we had the burden and the blessing of missions brought home to our minds and hearts. This will explain, as nothing else can, the indifference that has prevailed in many quarters. While many may not have given at all, and very few have given as much as they might have done, all have approved the effort to increase our missionary interest and donations, so far as this writer is aware.

In some sections, the weather in March was severe and prevented congregations. In these sections and churches, pastors are advising that their offerings will be taken in April, and it is believed that many will add largely to the contributions thus far taken before the work is closed.

There have been some joyful experiences, and many pastors and people are rejoicing because of the work done and the results achieved.

THE MISSIONARY RALLIES.

The Missionary Rallies put on by the women in Eastern Virginia and a Liberty, Vance, North Carolina, last week were of deep interest, and manifested a growing devotion by the women for Kingdom enlargement. Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Virginia, is the superintendent of her district, which met Tuesday, March 30th, at Windsor. All the societies and nearly all of the churches of the district were represented in the meeting, and the day was thoroughly enjoyed. Rev. F. C. Lester of Franklin, Va., and Rev. J. G. Truitt, of the First Church, Norfolk, Va., were both on the program, and delivered very appropriate and able addresses. Mrs. W. H. Andrews, Mission Superintendent of the Suffolk Sunday School, gave a talk and a program that was exceedingly suggestive and helpful. Mrs. Andrews is evidently doing a great work in our Suffolk Sunday School, and will not live long enough to see the full benefits resulting from her untiring and zealous efforts for her Lord's cause.

The good women of Windsor spread a bountiful luncheon, and all present were made feel sorry for those who were not present. This district voted, at the suggestion of the superintendent, to put on a system of visitation among the societies during the coming year, in which the stronger society is to be "Sister" to the weaker society. It was a day of real enjoyment.

Mrs. B. E. White, Waverly, Va., is superintendent of her district, which held its Rally at Burton's Grove, Wednesday, March 31st. In addition to the speakers at Windsor, a quartette from the Dendron Church added to the inspiration of the occasion. Brother Lester and Brother Truitt were in fine trim for the occasion, and their addresses were both eloquent and enthusiastic, and Mrs. Andrew's part of the program was carried out without a flaw. All was thoroughly enjoyed. This district also adopted the system of visitation, dividing the churches of the district into three groups. Mrs. C. A. Brittle of Burton's Grove gave a most interesting and cordial word of welcome, and, as president of the local society, made all feel comfortable and happy for the day. A bountiful luncheon was spread in the church grove, and was a feature of the day enjoyed by all present, and especially by the several pastors who always enjoy a good dinner on the church ground.

Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle is the wide awake and capable superintendent of her district, whose Rally was at Cypress Chapel, Thursday, April 1st. Mrs. Hardcastle opened the convention by reciting the salient features in a great editorial appearing recently in The Christian Century. This editorial gave a view of the necessity for world-wide missions, and on a scale hardly heretofore dreamed of. If we are to measure up to the demands of a world wide program, we have hardly made a beginning in our deeds and donations for missions. The president of the local society at Cypress Chapel, in her address of welcome, recited the history of her society and its work, and gave a view of missionary effort and struggle for achievement. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle gave a most instructive talk from charts and maps, showing the where and the when and the how, both in the home and the foreign fields of our present missionary endeavor. Brother Hardcastle had on his tongue the information about our missionary work that enlightens and inspires. Rev. J. G. Truitt delighted his audience and edified them, in his exhortation to the good women to keep faith with the devout women of the past years and centuries, who have ever pressed forward for their Lord. He declared that our Lord goes forward, and unless we go, He leaves us behind. We must keep with our Lord in His advancing march upon the forces of darkness and evil in the world. Several pastors were present and participated in this service. Mrs. Andrews showed the others of the district what Suffolk is doing to interest the young people in missions. Cypress Chapel is beautiful in its new building, and the occasion was a happy one. The women of this district carried their luncheon, and while the meeting was largely attended, there was food in abundance for many more than were present.

Mrs. J. E. Cartwright is the superintendent of her district, whose rally was held at First Church, Portsmouth, Friday, April 2d. Mrs. Cartwright was sick in a hospital, and in her absence Mrs. M. L. Bryant was called to the chair and presided during the day. Although it was Good Friday, and a holiday with the schools, the meeting was fairly well attended, and the exercises were certainly enthusiastic and inspiring. Mrs. Bryant read a most helpful address on how to interest the young people in missions, showing that here is a task thrilling enough in its adventures, and being wide enough in its scope to interest all young people, if proper steps are taken in the home, in the Sunday School, and in the church. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle and Rev. J. G. Truitt both delivered addresses, and Rev. H. W. Dowding, D. D., pastor, conducted the devotional service. Rev. J. F. Morgan was also present, and helped the occasion by his leadership of song. The women of this district are certainly interested in missionary work, and are doing their part in building up the cause of missions in their churches and communities.

On Saturday, April 3d, the first Rally of our North Carolina Women was held at Liberty, Vance. Miss Margaret Alston is the superintendent of this district, and she had worked very faithfully to secure representatives from the various churches. She saw her labors rewarded by the presence of more representatives from the churches of the district than had heretofore answered the roll call. Only two or three of the churches were without delegates. One church, Bethlehem, in Warren County, which has no society and no Sunday School, and has been without a pastor until lately, was represented by five delegates. The interest on the part of this church was greatly appreciated, and was helpful. Miss Alston, with Mrs. R. J. Newton, had gone to this church and to several others in the district and urged their attendance at the Liberty Rally. This is personal work that counts, and it means more for the future than can be told in words. Owing to other attractions in the community, the audience was not as large here as was expected and desired, but those present were deeply interested, and a fine program was rendered. Mrs. Bryant came from Norfolk, and delivered an address that was thoroughly appreciated, and was very helpful. Miss Gertrude Browne presented the goals on behalf of Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, who was unable to be present. The women spread a wholesome luncheon, which was much enjoyed.

These Rallies prove from year to year that there is a growing interest in our missionary work, not only among the women, but in the churches. They are worth while. They help to develop leaders in districts and in societies, and to carry the work right to the workers. It is the consensus of opinion that the pastors who attend these Rallies are themselves benefitted, and render a great service by their presence in encouraging the women in their work. All pastors should certainly endeavor to attend one or more of these Rallies.

Our missionary work is developing capable leadership and competent, consecrated workers among our women. It is indeed glorious to see how they go about their work for their Lord, and make it go in His name and for His sake.

A NATIONAL PROBLEM and THE INDIVIDUAL CITIZEN'S PART IN ITS SOLUTION.

As loyal American citizens, we believe that the United States is the richest nation in the world. Our natural resources, our fertile fields and broad expanses of uncultivated lands could feed the whole human family. Our forests and quarries could furnish sufficient material to shelter the people of the entire world. The power of our waterways, if properly harnessed, could furnish enough light to dispel the darkness of every city and hamlet around the globe. The wealth of our mines of coal, copper, lead, silver and gold, and of our wells of oil has scarcely been touched. With pride we point to these unparalleled material assets.

We point with equal pride to our public schools, our colleges and universities as an indication of the educational advantages America offers her youth. Such pride in our educational institutions, and in the attitude America takes toward her youth is entirely justifiable, for no other nation ever approaches the democratic spirit of our nation in offering the poor boy of moral purpose and worth the same chance for distinction as is offered the rich man's son. America says to every child: "Live right, prepare yourself, prove yourself worthy, and I will let you climb as high on the ladder of success and fame as your powers will take you." In the old world, the youth discovers that society assumes he will be content to remain on the same social strata which was the portion of his parents. In America, children are expected to advance beyond their parents in economic independence, in culture and in social preferment. In the old countries such is the exception.

As American citizens, we have ample reason for being proud of our nation's natural resources, the democratic principles of American society and government, the great educational system of our States, and the religious freedom promised and, in most instances, granted. But these assets which create within us a feeling of pride, have blinded us to certain social and national liabilities that are occasion for real shame. If we are true Americans, we will be just as truly ashamed of our failures as we are proud of our achievements—just as free to acknowledge our liabilities as to declare our assets.

Most of us experience a sense of shame akin to disgrace when we think of the crime wave that has been driving across our country the past eight years, and the utter contempt which many hold for the sacredness of human life. Then again, our shame has been increased by the laxity of the courts in failing to bring the guilty to justice, excusing the offenders of the law and the enemies to society on the most farcical pretexts and technicalities of jurisprudence. The increase of Sabbath desecration, the loathsome disrespect for law, and the utter contempt for authority as manifest not only among the rank and file, but frequently even among the leaders in State and national life, causes every true American to feel a keen sense of shame that such is tolerated. These conditions, so familiar to us all, constitute very real national liabilities.

But our nation, each State, and practically each community, has a liability of which the average citizen is absolutely unconscious. The liability to which I refer is the great group of illiterate men and women scattered throughout the country. The problem of illiteracy is a very real problem, and yet one which is unrealized by most of us. The illiterate person is the person who can neither read nor write. The problem of illiteracy deals with those who have intellectual capacity unrealized—people who have never had a chance.

How many of us have ever realized that our nation stands tenth from the top among the nations of the world in percentage of literacy? How many of us realize that, according to the latest authoritative statistics, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Germany, Holland, Norway, Scotland, England and France all stand above us in the table of literacy percentages? Some of those nations are so far in advance of us that our right of comparison is almost forfeited. For instance, in Norway there is only one person out of every hundred who can neither read nor write, whereas in the United States there are six out of every hundred who can neither read nor write. It is a sad reflection on our application of our vaunted principles of democracy to permit nine of the other nations, where autocracy is the dominant voice, to maintain a higher percentage of literacy than does the United States.

According to the last census, there are more than five million illiterates in the United States. Of this number, only 1,763,000 are foreign-born. Contrary to the popular idea, most of our illiterates are native-born. This number does not include the mentally defective or feeble-minded. It refers only to those who have, no doubt, the average mental capacity, but simply have never been taught. There are enough illiterate people scattered throughout the forty-eight States to populate Idaho, Montana, Utah, Nevada, Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, Oregon, Delaware, North Dakota and South Dakota combined with a number equal to their present population.

Think of it, five million men and women voters in this country who are blind to the printed page! Five million of our citizens who have no contact with the thought life of generations past, and no contact with the world of ideas and ideals of today! Some authorities declare that the number of illiterates is even greater than the census report indicates, as often census takers accept the word of those they count without requiring of them an examination. Some of our sociologists declare that if a careful examination were given we would find that the number of illiterates in the United States reported would be doubled, and that in fact there are more than ten million men and women in the United States who are unable to read or write.

The tragedy of the whole situation is that illiteracy has been on the increase in this country for the past twenty years. No true American can be indifferent to this situation. No Christian man or woman can fail to desire to have a definite part in helping to wipe out illiteracy, and making our nation take her rightful place among the nations of the world at the head of the list in literacy.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The leaders all feel that the Southern Christian Convention, which will meet in Durham, North Carolina, April 27th to 30th, of this good year 1926, will be one of the most important sessions in the seventy years of its history. The Durham Christian Church and its pastor, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, are doing everything in their power to welcome and provide for the welfare of all who attend. They have made one wise request: that all who plan to attend, notify pastor Harrell of their purpose. The absence of such notice leaves out provision for their entertainment.

There are several reasons why this session of the Convention is more important than previous sessions.

The increase in membership increases obligations and ability to do more for the Kingdom. There has been a corresponding increase in wealth in the church. People live in better houses, wear better clothes, travel in better vehicles, spend more on luxuries, and in every way, do all other things on a larger and more extensive scale. This makes it obligatory on the church to do more for the cause of Christ. Paul's order for collections was, "as God hath prospered him." I. Cor. 16: 1-2. Put Paul's order and present prosperity together and the obligation for increase in money contributions for church purposes becomes not only plain, but binding, upon members of the church.

The work of the church has increased with even greater proportions than prosperity; for there must always be room for faith. If church enterprises and institutions did not outgrow our means, church work would be possible without the help of God; but the undertaking of the church is always larger than human means, and that means faith as well as gifts and work. When the Lord said unto Moses, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward," that meant more than they could do themselves. Up to that point they could make their way; but now they must "walk by faith," and the sea opened for them. The Convention has reached the sea. The church must now do all she can and trust God to open the way for deliverance. To stop, means to be overcome of the world. To lose faith means failure of all that has been done. "Have faith in God," and then move forward. The necessity for funds has increased beyond receipts. To provide for the institutions and the enterprises already in operation will require the faith, the wisdom, the business judgment, and the liberality of a generous people. To meet the missionary, educational, and benevolent requirements of the Convention will tax the whole convention in its aggregate and the constituent membership to "go forward."

In order to make the Convention meet this supreme need, it is important for all the ministers and many of the laymen to attend; to be present at the opening and remain to the final benediction, that they may carry back to their local churches not only the action, but the spirit of the Convention. This Convention is a great obligation, a great privilege, and a great history-making session. The churches should pay the way of their pastors and delegates to the Convention.

ELON LETTER.

The Music Department of the College has enjoyed a splendid growth this year. Prof. C. J. Velie, its director, is not only a capable musician, but an executive as well. He has built up the musical standards of the College, and next year a major is to be offered in music leading to the A. B. degree. Heretofore those who elected music and the supporting theoretical subjects had to pursue them as extras or count them toward the Ph. B. degree.

Prof. Velie has endeared himself to music lovers not only of the College, but of this entire section, by his organ vesper services each second Sunday afternoon and for the oratorios he has given—so far—the Messiah at Christmas, and the Seven Last Words of Christ at Easter. His work with the choir and the glee clubs, and at the daily chapel services has been of a high order, and has won for him the appreciation and approval of a growing number.

At the recent State Federation of Music Clubs, he won large recognition for himself and the College by his masterful accompanying of the famous artist, Irene Williams, and others, playing without notice for many who appeared on the program, but especially by his own piano concert given on the last evening of the convention. A press report declared that North Carolina had discovered a musical genius in the talented and cultivated director of the Elon College Music Department.

Prof. Velie is a tireless worker, and has accepted invitations from various music clubs to appear on their programs. He is a member of the State Organization of Glee Club Leaders and of the State Organ Guild. He is much in demand, too, at the civic organizations, such as the Kiwanis and Rotary. His peers in his own profession acknowledge his fine ability.

He is himself a composer, and several times at the Organ Vesper services has rendered his own compositions, which reveal a highly musical soul and spiritual aspiration.

And best of all, he is a rare and forceful teacher, successful in inducing his pupils to do their best.

His activity in the College life is not limited to his own department. He is a diligent worker in the local church and a member of its Finance Committee.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

Character in education, is a diamond that scratches every other stone; it stands behind and backs up everything—the sermon, the poem, the picture, and the play. Character is power, is influence; it makes friends, creates funds, draws patronage and support, and opens a sure and easy way to wealth, honor and happiness. Character is a mark cut upon something, and this indelible mark determines the only true value of all people and all their work.

I know of no great men, except those who have rendered great services to the human race. Men are measured by what they do, not by what they possess. No man deserves to be crowned with honor whose life is a failure; and that life is a failure who lives only to eat and drink. There is in the man who gives his time, his strength, his life if needs be, for something not himself—something more truly Christian than all the ascetic fasts, humiliations and confessions that ever have been made.

It was character, not ability, that elected Washington and Lincoln to the presidency; while Webster bid high for it and failed. These men conquered before they spoke; they exerted an influence out of all proportion to their ability, and people wondered what was the secret of their power. We can only find the smallest part of Washington's personal weight in the narrative of his exploits. The authority of the name of Schiller is too great for his books.

The greatness of a country does not depend upon the extent of its territory, but on the character of its people. There should be something in a man's life greater than his occupation or his achievements; grander than acquisition of wealth; higher than genius; more enduring than fame. If there is any one power that will make itself felt, it is character.

Character will live on through the ages. Is Michael Angelo dead? Ask the hundreds of thousands who have gazed with rapt souls upon his immortal works at Rome. In how many thousands of lives has he lived and reigned? Are Washington, Grant, Lee, Jackson and Lincoln dead? Did they ever live more truly than today? What American heart or home does not enshrine their characters?

Picture to yourself, if you can, Egypt without a Moses, Babylon without a Daniel, Athens without a Demosthenes, Phidias, Socrates or Plato. What was Carthage, two hundred years before Christ, without her Hanibal? What was Rome without her Caesar, her Cicero, her Marcus Aurelius? What is Paris without her Napoleon, and Hugo, and Pere Hyacinth? What is England without her Newton, Shakespeare, Milton, Pitt, Burke, Gladstone?

With me great men rank first, heroes last. He is the greatest to me who emancipates me from the imprisonment of my surroundings and environments, who loosens my tongue, and unlocks the floodgates of my possibilities. He is a lens to my defective vision. I see things in a broader light; my horizon extends, my possibilities expand, my nerves thrill with the consciousness of added force, and my whole being vibrates with the magnetic currents from another soul.

This epataph was found on the tomb of an Egyptian ruler who lived in a pagan age more than forty centuries ago: "Not a child did I injure, not a widow did I oppress, not a herdsman did I ill treat. There were no beggars in my day, no one starved in my time. And when the years of famine came, I plowed all the lands of the province to its northern and southern boundaries, feeding its inhabitants and providing their food. There was no starving person in it, and I made the widow to be as though she possessed a husband." What ruler can say as much in our enlightened age. No man has come to true greatness, who has not felt in some degree that his life belonged to his race, and that God gives him, He gives him for mankind.

A right act strikes a cord that extends through the whole universe, touches all moral intelligence, visits every world, vibrates along its whole extent, and conveys its vibration to the bosom of God.

Fundamentally he is not savage; he slays for food, or in defense of himself. His face is his true misfortune. INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Lesson IV.—April 25, 1926.

"THE STORY OF CAIN AND ABEL."

GOLDEN TEXT: "Am I my brother's keeper?"—Gen. 4: 9.

LESSON: Genesis 4: 1-26.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I. John 4: 16-21.

"And Adam knew Eve his wife; and she conceived, and bare Cain, and said, 'I have gotten a man with the help of Jehovah.'" or as another version has it, "I have gotten a man from the Lord." It is no mere coincidence that the story of the first family begins with these words; it is a part of the divine plan. The first function of the family is to beget children. It is a sweet and noble thing when a man loves a woman sincerely and purely, and it is the normal thing for them to give themselves to each other "for better or for worse." Marriage is a holy estate, being instituted by God in the time of man's innocency. It commands the blessing of the Almighty himself when it is entered upon soberly, discreetly, and in the fear of God.

But marriage is not the end. It is but the beginning. The love of man for woman, as pure and sacred as it may be, is a means to the end God had in mind from the first. Marriage is incomplete without children. Again I repeat it—the function of the family is to beget children. The childless home is an incomplete home, and it can never be anything else. Even where a home is childless by the providence of God, it is incomplete, as those who have childless homes will testify. It is through the family life established by the union of one man and one woman who love each other that the race is to be perpetuated. The homes which are childless because of circumstances are to be pitied; the homes that are childless because of wilful choice are condemned already. It is therefore no mere chance coincidence that the writer of this lesson says through Eve, "I have gotten a man from the Lord," or "I have gotten a man with the help of the Lord." God himself is a worker together with men and women in the creation of new life. There can be no holier or higher form of worship or devotion than participation with God in the perpetuation of the race.

"And again she bare his brother Abel." There is a special advantage in having more than one child that more than outweighs any disadvantages. The home is the great training school of God for the training of brotherhood and service and democracy, and all other things being equal, children have better, all-round development in the things that make for the kingdom of God when they come from homes in which the presence of other children in the home make co-operation and unselfishness and service and sacrifice, factors in the every-day life of the child. And it might be added, the life of the parents, for parents probably get as much from children as children get from parents.

"And Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground." Men have different aptitudes. The Almighty has not created them alike, even if He did create them equal, as our Declaration of Independence asserts. One of the first and most striking characteristics of life in its lower stages is the division of labor. Certain cells are set apart to do one thing and other cells to do other things. It is so with man. We are all members one of another, but we do not all have the same office. Society moves forward because there are those who can do one thing and those who can do another. This is becoming increasingly true in these days of specialists.

"And in process of time, it came to pass that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto Jehovah. And Abel also brought of the firstlings of the flock and the fat thereof." There was no Mosaic law as yet. It is not beyond the range of truth to say that there was no written law of any kind as yet. But there was a law written in the hearts and consciences of these men that bade them recognize a sense of stewardship. It was probably a growing conception—the scripture itself says, "In the process of time"—but even early men felt that God had a claim upon their material possessions. It is a striking commentary upon our so-called civilization that there are so many today in Christian America who have little if any sense of stewardship.

"And Jehovah had respect unto Able and to his offering; but unto Cain and his offering he had not respect." The Book emphatically states in other places that God is no respecter of persons, but it would seem that he has respect of persons here. Here are two men bringing their respective offerings, and He has respect unto the one while He does not respect the other. If one looks closely, however, he will see that here as elsewhere and always Jehovah runs true to form—He looketh at the heart. It was not a matter of respect for men. It was not a matter of preferring one kind of offering to another. It was all a matter of motive and spirit. Better a widow's mite offered in the spirit of genuine devotion and of sacrifice, than an abundance from the rich offered grudgingly and of necessity. "Not what we give but what we share." As the writer of Hebrews says, "By faith Abel offered a more acceptable sacrifice than Cain."

"And it came to pass that when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother and slew him." This was the natural outcome of the state of mind of Cain as recorded in verse 5, "And Cain was very wrath, and his countenance fell." Murder is not simply the mere act of taking an axe and hacking a man to pieces; murder is the malice and hatred in the heart, the angry thought that would jump into action if it were not afraid of the consequences. None other than the Master said that one must get back of the outward act to the inner heart if he would know the real meaning of the commandments. Keep thy heart with all diligence. Do not allow feelings of hatred or malice or revenge lurk therein, for out of the heart are the issues of life.

"And Jehovah said unto Cain, 'Where is Abel thy brother?'" If even a sparrow does not fall to the ground that the Father does not see it, shall not the Father miss His children? "And he (Cain) said, (he lied, too, by the way) 'I know not.'" Then he added, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Ah, Cain, your off-spring is legion. There is little likelihood that your family tree will die, for its tap-root goes deep into the ground of human selfishness. There are those today who ask the question in the same kind of brazen and ironical way. And there are those who answer it by an absolute disregard for any but their own immediate loved ones and their interests. Nineteen centuries after the Master we still find thousands who have no sympathy for the "submerged tenth"; thousands who "pass by on the other side" from all human suffering and sorrow. Whether the question has ever been answered in a single verse or not, it has been answered once and for all in the Master's teachings. Christianity at its best always assumes that it is its brother's keeper.

"A fugitive and a wanderer shalt thou be in the earth." He who takes human life, thereby cuts himself off from that which is best in life. As Cain said, "It shall come to pass that every one that findeth me shall slay me." The murderer meets a thousand deaths. Like all the wicked, he fleeth when none pursues. The wages of sin is death. Be sure your sins will find you out. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord and He will have mercy, and unto his God and He will abundantly pardon.

Leader's Talk.

The Christian Church has more churches in the country than in the cities throughout its bounds. Does this mean that we as a Church should be any less interested in the cities of America? At one time country people lived to themselves and city people to themselves. Now a large number of people from the city spend at least a part of their lives in the country on vacations, and a large number of country people spend a part of their time in the city. People are moving into the cities from country places by the hundreds and thousands, and the city problem becomes the problem of the country as well. It may be their problem even though they live in the country, with the automobiles and good roads which bring the city so near. The Christian Church has lost from its membership hundreds of people who have moved to the city where there were no Christian Churches. Any of us can cite examples of this.

Great cities where people are constantly going and coming, where often people are "following the crowd" and seem not to know where they are going, need sorely the influence of the Church. It would be an interesting thing for us to find out something about the activities of some of our large down town churches in our largest cities. Tremont Temple, the largest down town church in Boston, Mass., with a very large membership, ministers not only to the spiritual needs of people who come and go, but to the spiritual needs also. The Salvation Army in cities looks after the poor and the depressed where ever they are to be

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

WARREN H. DENISON, Secretary.

RAISING THE LEVEL.

Last week we stated that in the per capita giving to denominational benevolences we stand twenty-third down the list among the twenty-five leading denominations in the United Stewardship Council. That giving runs from $2.30 to $14.95 per capita with an average of $4.11; that only two are below us in their per capita giving for denominational benevolences.

This week we call attention to the giving for all benevolent purposes. For such, the same twenty-five denominations gave a per capita average of $5.71. This includes all benevolences—denominational, local, and outside. Our per capita giving for the same is $3.78, about two-thirds of the general average. The denominations varied from $2.32 to $16.18 per capita. We are nineteenth down the list.

Is it not time for our pastors, churches, conference officials, to give this matter serious consideration? Are we going to do a worthy part in the Kingdom work? Are we going to sit still and let others carry on the work? "Moses said unto the children of Gad and to the children of Reuben, 'Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here?'" Occasionally we hear some one speak as if our giving were large and generous. Surely they are not informed. Our people are as able to give as others. We are now giving less than one-fourth of our tithes of income. It is high time for larger giving on the part of all of us. It is time for us all to become at least tithers now. It is time for the church to actively enlist all its members in the giving. Two-thirds of all the members on our church rolls give nothing to our benevolent work. It is time to unite our efforts. It is time to cease excuses.

ORGANIZING FOR STEWARDSHIP.

Stewardship will not get very far in your church unless someone is definitely made responsible for pushing and developing the matter. There should be a Stewardship Secretary chosen in every church. He should have a real interest in the subject and know something of its importance to the spiritual life of the people. Stewardship is not a method of raising money; it is God's school for building character, for raising men and women. Churches should be careful in choosing this official and it should be done at once. As conferences soon begin to hold their sessions, we would call attention to the great importance of choosing an active Conference Stewardship Secretary. There needs to be one who will function. He should be a regular conference officer. Much of the success or failure of this work will depend on the kind of local church and conference Stewardship Secretaries chosen.

A NATIONAL PROBLEM.

The illiterates in many instances are not to blame for their condition. Many of them have never had a chance. If we knew the background of their lives, we would be impelled by a sense of pity and of duty to render every service we could to free them from the shackles of ignorance.

In nearly every community of any size there are such individuals to be found. One of the greatest satisfactions that can come to a person who has had a chance and has availed himself of the opportunity to learn to read and write is to help some person, groping in the darkness of ignorance, find his way out into the light of knowledge and understanding. One cultured Christian woman of my acquaintance accepted the challenge recently to teach a man past sixty years of age to read and write. She told me that to see the eagerness the man exercised in trying to learn to read and write and the satisfaction he experienced when he was actually able, after four weeks of effort, to read from the Bible and write his first letter to a more fortunate brother in the West was one of the greatest joys in all her life.

One man fifty-eight years of age, in Dale County, Ala., was unable to read or write. He was censured and criticised and labeled as a "numbskull" by people who were more fortunate. He heard of a school teacher who was giving three weeks of her vacation in conducting a class for men and women who could not read or write. He joined the class, and told how his father had died leaving the mother with a family of seven little children and a heavy mortgage on the farm. He being the oldest boy, it was necessary for him to assist his mother in every way possible to support the family. Hence, he was deprived in childhood of all opportunity for an education. When he became grown he was ashamed to go to school, and hence all through life had been transacting his business by making the letter X instead of writing his name. Under such conditions there was more to his credit than to those who condemned him because of his ignorance.

Illiteracy is not synonymous with incapacity. Many of the illiterates have just as great capacity for learning as have any of us. With them, it has not been a question of capacity for learning, but of opportunity. The mentally defective and feeble-minded are not included in the group to which I refer. The illiterates that constitute the problem which we as a nation must face, and about which every true American must be concerned, are those who have average mental capacity, but who have never had that capacity developed by the magic wand of learning. What a tragedy that thousands of men and women in our country should be thus handicapped for life, when a little personal interest on the part of the more fortunate would liberate them from the handicap.

I know personally a prominent educator who, at the age of twenty years, could neither read nor write. He was ill from birth until ten years old, and unable to go to school. A false sense of pride kept him from starting at that age. His mother also being an illiterate did not realize the need of insisting that he attend school. Thus he was permitted to grow up without any knowledge of reading or writing. At the age of twenty he was learning the painter's trade. A young clerk in a grocery store heard of his sad plight and offered to teach him to read and write. His progress was so rapid and his thirst for knowledge became so intense that he started to school with children in the primary grade. He finished the grammar grades in three years, high school in three years and college in three years; received his doctor of philosophy degree at the age of thirty-two, and is today one of the ablest ministers of his denomination, and at the head of a large university. The young clerk who unlocked the mind of this intellectual giant has remained at his humble station in life. But in his kind act of service he lighted a mind that has passed on the light of learning to countless thousands. What a tragedy that the powers of any life should be unrealized because we withhold from it the mystic torch of learning.

There are men and women in nearly every community who are illiterates because of misfortune. They haven't had a chance. Their illiteracy is not necessarily their disgrace. The disgrace is upon the people who, not so handicapped, are living in the same community where these illiterate people live and permit such conditions to continue. Every person of us who has the advantage of being able to read and write should realize that but for the hand of a more kindly providence, we ourselves might be among the handicapped. If we had never had the proper contacts in life, we would be no better off than they. How could they have learned without a teacher? Never having had the privilege of being taught, the printed page remains a blank page to them, the same as a printed page in the Chinese language is a blank to us because we have not been taught to read Chinese.

Every literate person has a moral obligation toward the illiterates. The Golden Rule impells us to do by them as we would have them do by us, were their and our conditions in life reversed. Our Master's declaration, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me," should incite within us a determination to respond to this challenge of service. Moreover, we are morally bound to be interested in the problem because of the consequences of indifference. There could scarcely be a greater tragedy come to a life than to have to live in an enlightened community without the blessing of enlightenment in one's own life.

We individually have a social obligation in helping to solve the problem of illiteracy. Every literate person in this country shares in the responsibility to stamp out the curse of illiteracy. We owe our interest and assistance to those who are handicapped by the curse of illiteracy. We owe it to society to do what we can to increase the efficiency of the handicapped. Statistics show that the efficiency of common laborers who are illiterate is increased on an average of twenty-five per cent when they are taught to read and write. Think of the enormous waste of potential power—power that could be realized and utilized for the common good!

The problem will become more baffling with the passing years. Illiterate parents are apt to bequeath to society a family of illiterate children. Illiteracy increases at an alarming rate unless society launches a systematic crusade against it.

Early in the nineteenth century the French republic realized that it had an illiteracy problem, but the government did not take the problem seriously. Not until in 1844 did the government become alarmed at the situation. At that time it discovered that illiteracy had been reproducing its kind until 44 per cent of the people of France were illiterates. Realizing then that the situation was a source of weakness, and a menace to all of France, the government set itself to the task of educating its illiterates. Urgent appeals were sent out to every organization and society to make their major task that of wiping out illiteracy. In one year more than a million men and women had received instruction. In six years France reduced her illiteracy from 44 per cent to 4 per cent.

If the United States will face its problem squarely and approach the task seriously, illiteracy in our country can be reduced to the very minimum within four years. Every social-minded person who can read and write will seek to do a worthy part in this work in appreciation of the contacts in life that have saved him from the curse of illiteracy. Why should we keep our knowledge to ourselves? Why refuse to let some other life light its candle of learning at the lamp of our knowledge, when we lighted our lamp of learning at the light of some other life? Why should any one be so unsocial as to keep knowledge to himself that could be shared with another and leave him none the poorer? A thousand torches can be lighted from the same torch, and that torch still will burn as brightly. A thousand minds can be lighted from one consecrated mind and that mind itself be the richer. Gruber, in his poem on "Roses," expresses the social obligation that rests upon every literate person toward those who can neither read nor write.

"The roses red upon my neighbor's vine
Are owned by him, but they are also mine.
His was the cost and his the labor, too,
But mine as well as his their loveliness to view.
They bloom for me, and are for me as fair
As for the man who gives them all his care,
Thus I am rich, because a good man grew
A rose clad vine for all his neighbors' view.
By this I know that others plant for me,
And what they own my joy may also be;
So whv be selfish when so much that's fine
Has been grown for you upon your neighbor's vine."

There is, moreover, a patriotic obligation resting upon every citizen to assist in the campaign against illiteracy. A sense of pride in having our nation in the first ranks of literacy should stir each individual with emotional zeal. The peril of having more than five million voters who are unable to keep informed upon the current issues in the various elections is occasion for real alarm. Think of the waste of time and money the nation experienced in the World War when it found that seven hundred thousand men in the first draft were illiterates, and the government had to make provision for their instruction. Literacy is the primary basis of efficiency in war as well as in peace. The problem of illiteracy is a challenge for every person interested in reform to rally to this great need.

Every great reform requires agitation, organization and mobilization. Some of the States have already led the way and blazed the trail in this great work. The story of Mrs. Cora W. Stewart's moonlight schools in Kentucky reads like a thrilling romance. In the evening hours of twilight thousands of men and women of Kentucky have been freed from the bondage of illiteracy through the moonlight schools Mrs. Stewart has organized for this purpose.

An intensive campaign has also been launched in North Carolina and Alabama to wipe out illiteracy. The Governor of Alabama issued a proclamation for "Anti-Illiteracy Day," calling upon every literate citizen of the State and every organization to observe the day in recognition of the State's obligation towards its illiterate citizens. North Carolina launched an intensive campaign against illiteracy, and in one month gave instruction to 10,000 illiterate men and women, which enabled them to read and write. Delaware has this year launched an intensive anti-illiteracy campaign. Several other States have done the same.

Practically every community has some illiterate citizens. One man in a town of five hundred population said he knew there were no illiterate people in his town, but investigation disclosed the fact that there were seventeen men and women of his town who could neither read nor write. Another town of six thousand population was surprised to find that it had two hundred and eleven men and women of voting age who were illiterates. This pathetic problem of illiteracy can only be reduced by the individual citizens dedicating themselves to the task.

Every literate individual can have a part in this crusade against ignorance by showing a keen interest, by assisting in taking surveys, by volunteering to assist in conducting, or in assisting in promoting schools for illiterates, or by teaching some illiterate person privately. There could scarcely be a greater joy than one experiences in introducing an adult mind to the new world, the new opportunities, and the new hope embodied in the knowledge of reading. One teacher in Kentucky taught eighty-two illiterates in six weeks. Every literate man and woman and child should dedicate themselves to the task of helping in some way to wipe out illiteracy from the nation. The slogan of each individual should be:

"I am only one, but I am one;
I cannot do everything, but I can do something.
What I can do, I ought to do,
And what I ought to do,
By the grace of God, I will do."

No greater opportunity for genuine social service can be found than in the crusade against illiteracy. The interest of the Churches, of the Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, brotherhoods, Rotary Clubs, women's clubs, commercial clubs, lodges, press associations, bankers' associations, etc., should be enlisted. It is a problem for society to solve, and the responsibility for its proper solution rests upon the individual citizens who lament the situation.

If England, Germany and all the Scandinavian countries have reduced illiteracy to a negligible figure, confined chiefly to mental incompetents, no man or woman of us will fail to assume our individual part in assisting our own America to wipe out its illiteracy. The national slogan, "No illiteracy in the United States by 1930," can be realized.

In behalf of our national honor, in behalf of our national pride, in behalf of social justice, in behalf of the more than five million men and women in the United States who are unable to acquire knowledge from the printed page, unable to develop their personalities in the fullest way or to come to their largest self-realization, unable to record their thoughts or express their love to those who live away, in behalf of justice to them, every man and woman whose life has been blessed with an education should accept the challenge to have a worthy part in this great program of reclamation.

ROSEMONT REVIVAL.

Pre-Easter evangelistic services were held at the Rosemont Christian Church from March 28th to April 4th. The pastor was assisted in these meetings during the week nights by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, the popular and successful pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, whose sermons were interesting and helpful, and were well received by our people, all of whom will be delighted to have him visit this community again.

The meetings resulted in twenty additions to the church, and much other good to the community as a whole.

The work here is moving along very nicely. Some changes have been made recently in the Sunday School, which will enable the children to receive greater attention, and the adult department to be more efficient. Mr. H. R. Morrison, general superintendent, and his faithful corps of officers and teachers are doing great work in the school, with which the pastor is most delighted.

Dear Friends:

Our report for this week carries us over the five thousand dollar mark. One more rung in the ladder reached and passed. Climbing from the fourth to the fifth rung in the ladder was pretty hard climbing. It is always hard climbing when you don't push hard. But it is easy if you are good pushers.

This week starts off our Easter offering nicely, and we thought we would reach the $500.00 mark, but we just lacked a little. Let us make it more next week. Our goal is $4,000 this year. Help us reach it. It always makes us happy to reach a goal. I know it makes you happy to see your Church and Sunday School stand head of the list. Don't forget the Easter offering in your Church. This is one time we want every Church and Sunday School to take a part.

Our new building is nearly finished. Just a few more touches with the paint brush and the floor to lay and it will be done—and it is a beauty, too! We want you to see it. A first class job, and nicely arranged. Don't you want to mail us a check to help us finish paying for it? We will appreciate it.

LET'S TRY OUR BEST.

My own talent may be so limited that I can render, personally, but one or two kinds of service, and they of the humblest kind. I may never be able to teach, nor preach, nor serve as a missionary; and yet by the giving of my money, I can support those who can do these things, and I thus become a partaker in all kinds of service for the Kingdom and in all parts of the world. And the best of it is, that I am not rewarded according to the amount of money I am able to give, but to the amount I am willing to give. With God, it is not the amount that counts, but the spirit and the sacrifice behind it.

Each of us has a great work to do and a brief time in which to do it. May we feel that we are stewards in this world, put in trust for Thy glory.

So true is each member to this good cause, that when one can't meet with us they send their dues. That shows a most loyal disposition to one another and to God. We love to meet together, to mingle with friends socially. The so many little kindnesses we show for one another show more love for Christ and strengthen us in this good and precious work.

May we all press forward to the mark of the high calling in Christ Jesus. Let us encourage others to come and worship with us; let us "boost" our Society; let us visit one another more and talk over new plans; let each of us find something to do. To give our thought, our love, our talent, is just as important as to give our money. I believe with Paul that prayer is the greatest force in the world. So let us pray without ceasing.

One sister gave me her dues to take to the Society last month. She wanted to be with us, but could not go. Her face was radiant with joy helping in that way, and I feel that her heart and her prayers were with us. May each of us catch a glimpse of the heavenly light in this little work for Christ. I think it one of my greatest pleasures to know I can be of a little service to my Lord in this Society. I am glad to be able to serve in my humble way. So little I have done, that I want to render more thanks to the Lord.

Let's find each member some work to do in the Society; and let each one do their best when called upon. Don't say that you can't do it, but say that you will try the best you can with God helping you. We must surrender all things to Him. He will help those that ask help of Him. Some others can do things better than I can, yet that cannot prevent me from trying to do my best.

Let's make our meetings of much importance, meeting promptly, and then after the service is over, take time to converse socially with each other.

MATTHEW.

A bruised reed is a broken contrite heart; such a one the Lord will deal tenderly with, and those warm desires will be kindled to a flame.

Our Lord spake of the unpardonable sin being against the Holy Ghost! In the loose opinions of fallen man, he might be brought to suppose, if there be three distinct persons in the one God, that the Holy Ghost must be the greatest; but let it be remembered, that the Holy Ghost is God in operation. God is a spirit, and there is one Holy Spirit, and that the Lord Jesus possessed without measure!

NOTE. Through this eternal spirit he offered up the great sacrifice to his divinity. Thus, for a person convinced by light in his understanding, yet bitterly to resist the truth, which he feels to be pointed against him, he is offended at the light, which is truth; his opposition rises to malice in the heart, ambition in his will; his carnal enmity, by giving place to the devil, genders into infernal hatred against God, His ways and His people; ready to attribute the work of God to the devil—despitefully resists the Spirit, and cries against his enlightened soul! Such infernal wickedness can never be forgiven in the law-world that then existed, nor in the gospel world then to come. Christ died not for that sin; neither intercedes for such. A man in that state is illustrated in the following parable, viz: When the unclean spirit, even the spirit of idolatry, with other filthy desires, is gone out of a man, he (the spirit) walketh through dry places—that is Jejune, dreary, barren, no moisture; not a drop of consolation—seeking rest in vain; gloomy, dismal. I have seen the like of this in a human creature, much deranged, and in black despair; when hope is fled, and Satan helps on despair, they sink into the nature of Satan; they hate God and every thing that's good, and are totally emptied of all divine impressions. But to return to talk about the unclean spirit, who explores this fallen world, as high as the air, as wide as space, as deep as hell, in perpetual torments; every where he goes he feels hellfire, always full of great wrath.

If there be any sort of satisfaction that such a spirit can feel, it is when he can be venting his infernal malice on man; or even a beast, or ever on the lost souls of the human family. In the days of vore, demons could torment men's bodies, before the gospel dispensation took place. The text reads as if the unclean spirit went out of the man of his own will; but we may expect when light and truth enters, darkness and the spirit that works in the children of disobedience is obliged to depart, and can never return, unless we give space. The unclean spirit discovered the situation of the man's soul where he in operation once dwelt; he views the house swept of all gracious impressions, garnished with vainglory, self-righteousness: Christ shut out, and rejected; an open door, no watch kept; the unclean spirit, knowing that he was too weak alone to keep that place, he collects seven wicked spirits (seven is a perfect number), these more horribly wicked than the unclean spirit; concluding, if they all could enter, they could so fortify themselves that such a man was sure. They entered without resistance—so the last state of such a man was, and is, worse than the first. So was the miserable state of the Jews, who resisted doctrines as clear as light itself, and saw miracles, that God only could effect. Some men suppose that the unclean spirit gathered these seven spirits by reason the place was hard to take. I think when the evil spirit makes his first attempt, it is not with sword in hand, but temptations, flattery, lies and deceit; if he is resisted with prayer, he flies. The conclusion is, if we give no place to the devil, God will never give him power to take us by storm. The similitude of such an apostate exactly fitted the ambitious Jewish nation; those wicked spirits keep the Jews still in hatred and unbelief. Note: sweeping is outside work; not like washing.

CHAPTER XIII.

There are several remarkable subjects to be observed in this chapter. First, the sower and the seed. The good seed is the pure word of God, the sowers were Christ Himself, and those whom He sent. The seed was kept pure during the life of the apostles, and some time after; but the pure word has been woefully corrupted since; yet not so corrupted but it yet makes converts. The different kinds of earth have an allusion to the different state of men's minds. The enemy sent out false teachers, who sowed corrupt seed, and produced false professors, who opposed the truth. The disciples asked if they might have liberty and power to root them up, as the enemies who despised Moses' law were put to death; but the Saviour would not allow it. Let all grow together in the field, or the world, until judgment; the angels will gather them for the fire. The Lord said to His disciples, to you it is given to understand the mysteries of the kingdom, and the meaning of parables, but not to others. Why so? Because the former became His scholars, and prayed Him to teach them, but others would not. So it is now. Reader, how is it with you? Another parable put He forth, saying, a woman hid a piece of leaven in three measures of meal, and it stirred and swelled till the whole was leavened. Reader, dost thou know the meaning of this? A little grace put into the heart, if nourished and improved, will sanctify body, soul and spirit: for believers, by faith in the promises, by divine influx partake of the divine nature. And that can increase. Another corresponding doctrine, we will observe: the treasure hid in the field, the wise, seeking merchant bought the field, but it cost him all he had. The merchandise of divine wisdom is better than the merchandise of gold. Reader, if ever you gain heavenly wisdom, it will cost you all you have, little or much. I expect you understand it.

Now, learn the parable of a learned scribe. He is a man versed in the old Levitical law, and being translated into the new kingdom, being acquainted with the mysteries of both Testaments, he can draw precious things out of the Old and the New, whereby he is able to feed, edify, and build up the Church of Christ. Paul was one such, and almost none such. The parable of the net cast into the sea, gathering in and drawing out many fishes, both good and bad, some preserved, the rest were cast away. This is like great revivals, many profess and become members of Churches, yet the great dep of the heart being never broken up, they become nominal Christians, dwelling in some Church where they carry religion in one hand, riches and honor in the other; who at the end of the world will be cast away! Reader, have you seriously considered these sayings? Notice the last verse, how that none are saved irresistibly, though the Lord Himself should be the minister!

Unbelief is not the only damning sin, as some men assert. Sinners are condemned or damned by the law, and unbelief prevents the saving effects of the gospel.

CHAPTERS XIV AND XV.

Peter, venturing to walk on the water to Jesus, feared when the seas raved. Here observe there is no safe walking but by faith, and as faith fails we sink; so it will be with every poor soul who leaves the body without saving faith, he will sink like a stone to its center. Note xv. 13, people in Churches are planted, as Paul calls it; but many are added to Churches that the Lord added not, and all who are not planted by the spirit of truth will be rooted up!

In the fifteenth chapter, notice how prevailing persevering faith and prayer is. The woman of Canaan followed Jesus; would take no denial, and if counted as mean as a dog, would not in the least resent it, but prayed the Lord to give her the dog's portion, even the crumbs that may fall from the children's table. The answer was reviving, viz: O woman, great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt! Reader, follow the example, it is worthy of imitation.

CHAPTERS XVI AND XVII.

I shall illustrate on four cardinal points. First, the nature and danger of false doctrine, compared by the Judge, to be of the nature of leaven, which may spread through the whole Church in succession. People in our day think too favorable of false doctrine, even such as they themselves believe to be false; and ministers are counted rigid and uncharitable who warn people to beware of error—or leaven.

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

EVERY CHRISTIAN A PREACHER AND MINISTER.

"In all things approving yourselves as ministers of God."—2 Cor. 6:1-7.

As has been said, some preachers may not be Christians, but every Christian is a preacher.

Every Christian is responsible for proclaiming the gospel, for revealing to the world the spirit of God and the power of Jesus Christ, for showing that kindness is better than hatred, and that God is mighty in mercy and forgives all sins. If Christians do not live the life they profess and do the deeds of human love and kindness, preachers will be terribly alone and the world a sorry aspect.

We are also ministers. To minister is to apply preaching. Ministry is applied religion. "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." "Inasmuch as ye did (do) it unto one of the least of these ye did (do) it unto me."

Are we thus qualifying ourselves? If we are not, we are not doing our share of soul-saving which the Lord has placed upon us.

Prayer.—Our Heavenly Father, help us not to receive the grace of God in vain. We indeed pray for our pastor, and for all the preachers who bear the burdens of the Church. Grant unto them the leading of many into Thy kingdom, and may they ever be kept close to the source of spiritual power. We pray for our own poor souls that we may not fall short of our responsibilities and that we may preach by our own lives and our daily ministry and that we may minister indeed to those who need, especially the unsaved. Amen.

TUESDAY.

FOR LOVE'S SAKE.

*"Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin the that which is convenient, yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee. * * "—Epistle to Philemon, vs. 8-18.

The letter of Paul to Philemon is the record of a magnificent experiment in Christian love. It is the only one of his letters which is addressed to an individual on a private matter. When Paul was engaged in his three years' ministry at Ephesus, he went to Colossae, where the converts included a wealthy merchant, Philemon. Being a generous man, he allowed the little Church to meet in his home. A Phrygian slave, among the lowest group of all, Onesimus, robbed his master and ran away. In some manner while in Rome he met Paul and was converted. Then began an interesting discussion on a matter of Christian action.

Ought Onesimus to return home? It is so decided, and Paul writes this letter for him to carry to his old master, Philemon. It is a model of frank, courteous, and loving appeal. The more you meditate upon the story, the more you will think of its application to law and conscience and current action. "For love's sake!" This is the miracle of the gospel. Love transforms the slave, gives him a new motive and a new sense of his duty. Love transforms all human relationships. It can do so today if given an opportunity.

Love transforms masters. It changes the emphasis from our rights to our duties. It is the magic of love which makes a mother do gladly what you could never hire her to do. It is the motive of the teacher, serving his pupil. If love is in your heart and mine, it will enable us to do anything for any man of any race, at any time, in any way!—Ernest Bourner Allen.

Prayer.—That we may learn from Jesus' example and teaching, the beauty of forgiveness for love's sake, remembering that our Heavenly Father so loved us that He gave His only Son as a ransom for us.

WEDNESDAY.

RELIANCE UPON GOD.

"God will surely visit you and bring you out of this land."—Gen. 50:22-24.

Joseph had reached an honored old age. Through all his checkered life an invincible faith had supported him. The God of his fathers would not fail—could not fail. The children of Israel were in the land of Egypt; but Jehovah would not overlook them, nor would His memory fail—"God will surely visit you."

This is faith—to trust God for the present and for the generations that are to come. Some while ago, we visited a country Church in another State, a Church of precious boyhood memories. Great was our joy to find a thriving, prosperous congregation, bent on good works. There came a recollection of an old-fashioned prayer meeting held twenty-five years ago. That night the older members had fallen into a melancholy strain. They were outspoken in criticism of the young folks of that day. "What will become of this Church when the older members are gone?" they asked.

On our recent visit we found that all the older members had passed away. The thriving Church of today is upheld by what was the young group of twenty-five years ago. Certainly the Church is not neglected. It is the keeping of the promise—"God will surely visit you." God has not forgotten this generation. The God of Abraham and of Isaac and of Jacob is the Eternal Father; He will not slack until the last willing son of Adam has found the habitation of the redeemed.—Rev. John Harrison Allen.

Prayer.—That our faith in our Heavenly Father may grow stronger with the passing years, and that our little ones may learn the inestimable value of His promises to those who trust in Him.

THURSDAY.

WILLING TO BE STRONG.

"Quit you like men, be strong."—1 Cor. 16:13.
*"Be strong and of good courage * * * for there is a greater with us * * * With us is the Lord our God to help us and to fight our battles."*—2 Chron. 32:7, 8.

"I love the man that can smile in trouble, that can gather strength from distress and grow brave by reflection. It is the business of little minds to shrink, but he whose heart is firm and whose conscience approves his conduct will pursue his principles to death."—Thos. Paine.

"Rembrandt's domestic troubles served only to heighten and deepen his art, and perhaps his best canvases were painted under stress of circumstances and in sadness of heart. His life is another proof, if needed, that the greatest truths and beauties are to be seen only through tears. Too bad for the man! But the world—the same ungrateful, selfish world that has always lighted its torch at the funeral pyres of genius—is the gain-cr."—Jno. C. VanDyke.

"The courage we desire and prize is not the courage to die decently, but to live manfully."—Carlyle.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou art our strength of whom shall we be afraid. Let come what will we will trust in Thee. Oh, may we draw near to Thee that we may have Thy grace and mercy in every need and be bold to acknowledge Thee in all our ways. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

AN EXAMPLE OF PERFECTION.

"Ye shall be perfect as your Heavenly Father is perfect."—Matt. 5:48.

*"Be perfect * * * live in peace * * * and the God of love and peace shall be with you."*—2 Cor. 13:11.

"The highest study of all is that which teaches us to develop those principles of purity and perfect virtue which heaven bestowed upon us at our birth, in order that we may acquire the power of influencing for good those amongst whom we are placed, by our precepts and example; a study without end—for our labors cease only when we have become perfect—an unattainable goal, but one that we must not the less set before us from the very first. It is true that we shall not be able to reach it, but in our struggle toward it we shall strengthen our characters and give stability to our ideas, so that, whilst ever advancing calmly in the same direction, we shall be rendered capable of applying the faculties with which we have been gifted to the best possible account."—Confucious.

Prayer.—Our Heavenly Father, in Thee we live and have our being. May we not forget Thy word and thereby perfect Thy love in us day by day. May we hunger and thirst for Thy word and be filled with Thy life. Make our little prayer hour sweet and our whole life throughout the day an attainment unto the unity of faith, knowledge of Jesus, growing in grace until we shall measure unto the fullness of Him.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"TUNING IN" ON HEAVEN.

"Again I say unto you, That if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 18:18-20.

A violin lying silent in a room where conversation is going on, suddenly gives out a distinct note. No hand touched it, but the pitch of some spoken word had corresponded in wave-length to one of the strings on the violin, and it had leaped at the sound. They had symphonized.

In a certain "upper room," a group of people are gathered, and as one leads in prayer, he asks for the release of Peter from prison on this the last night before his appointed execution, and every heart throbs "Amen." "If two of you shall symphonize," says Jesus, "it shall be done" (such is the Greek). It was done.

There are wave-lengths in prayer, as in radio. How shall we tune in? There must be harmony among ourselves. Prayer-waves from unforgiving hearts are blurred. Agree in petitions—yes, but in spirit above all!

Tune in with God, on the wave-length of faith in Jesus Christ—the only Mediator (or wave-length) between God and man. If we ask anything according (chording) to His will, He heareth us.

Radio may be used to convey ideas, guide airplanes, and to transmit power. Similarly, by keeping our hearts in symphony with God, we, too, shall receive consolation—"My grace is sufficient for thee"; guidance—"Go join thyself to this chariot"; and power from God!—Rev. D. Raymond Taggart.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SUNDAY.

"THE PRIZE OF LEARNING LOVE."

"If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and His love is perfected in us."—1 John 4:8-12.

An extremely strong statement this! It is easy

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Hey Kiddies:

The sun is shining so brightly and the breeze is so warm, it seems everyone should be happy!

Here is a game to play, though, if the sun quits shining and there comes an April shower!

Try it, Kiddies; its the most fun.

YOUR EDITOR.

HUCKLE, BUCKLE, BEAN STALK—A GAME TO PLAY.

A thimble, a cork, a ring, or other small object may be used for hiding. All of the players leave the room but one, who places the object in plain sight, but where it would not be likely to be seen, as on the edge of a picture frame, in a corner on the floor, etc. It may be placed behind any other object, so long as it may be seen there without moving any object. It will be fun if you can find some place to hide your object that is almost the color of what you are hiding. For instance, if you are hiding a thimble, hang it on the key of your door.

When you have your object hidden, call in all the others and let them all begin to look for it.

When anyone sees it, he doesn't say anything, but turns away so no one will see where it is. He does and sits down and says: "Huckle, buckle, bean stalk."

This tells everybody that he knows where it is. The next one who sees it goes quietly and sits down and says: "Huckle, buckle, bean stalk." You must be careful not to give it away by looking toward it. This game is lots of fun, for sometimes several are calling "Huckle, buckle, bean-stalk," at once. The game keeps on until all the players have seen the object. The first one to find the object hides it for the next game.

GORDON'S WISH.

"O, dear me! I wouldn't have lost it for half the farm!" sighed grandma for the dozenth time. "I'd do anything for the one who found my precious gold wedding ring. Why, I've worn it for half a century, and I feel so lost without it."

How it happened grandma did not know. But sometime that morning her ring had slipped off and lost itself somewhere. Jack and Bess, the lively visiting grandchildren, and Gordon, the quiet cousin, had hunted and looked till there couldn't be another place left.

"My eyes are squinty from looking," yawned Jack. "I think I'll go to the field with Collie."

"I'm afraid your ring is gone for good, grandma," declared Bess, peeking under the stove and shaking the rug and looking on the kitchen shelf again. Then she chased the little gray kitten around the porch and finally climbed up in the apple tree playhouse.

"I wish I could have found that ring," Jack said to Gordon as he started off to the field. "Grandma said she'd do anything for the one who found it, and I'd have asked for saucer pies for supper."

Gordon was still poking around the back steps and everywhere grandma had been that morning. As he searched the garden where he had helped grandma pick lettuce and peas, Bess called down to him: "If I'd found it, I meant to ask grandma to let us picnic down by the brook where the tadpoles live."

While Jack and Bess were playing, Gordon went on hunting; and by and by he came to the back steps again. A pailful of scraps and parings stood there, so Gordon picked it up and started down the path. "I'll feed the cute little pigs myself," he thought. He loved to see the roly-poly pigs root around and nudge each other away from the trough as they scrambled for their dinner.

"I'll give the littlest pigs these nice potato and apple peelings," decided Gordon as he set the pail down by the pen. He found a forked stick and fished out the peelings from under the wilted lettuce and pea pods. The pigs had come trotting as if they were starved, and stood there poking their noses through the fence, squealing loudly.

But Gordon paid no attention to their greedy "Quee, quee!" He cried out, "O, my!" then, snatching up a curly brown peeling, simply raced for the house.

Grandma thought a cyclone was upon her as he burst in shouting: "I found it, grandma! It was in the pail around a potato peeling! Look, here it is."

"Well, I declare!" Grandma sat down in the little rocker with the gold ring in her hand. "It must have slipped off in the water when I was paring the potatoes. I looked in the sink too. I must watch out after this, for my ring is a little large for my finger." Then she smiled and gave Gordon an extra big hug.

In ran Jack to hint for a cruller, and after him came Bess to have grandma tie up her mashed finger. When they saw Gordon and saw grandma holding her precious ring, both children forgot what they had come for.

"What are you going to ask for, Gordon?" cried Jack, while Bess hopped about excitedly, saying: "You said you'd do anything for the one that found your ring, grandma!"

"So I did," grandma remembered. "Speak up, Gordon."

Gordon was shy at first, then with a grin he told her: "I—think I'd like—if it won't be a bother—some cherry saucer pies and a picnic down by the brook where the tadpoles live, grandma, please."

Bess and Jack shouted for joy, and grandma nearly laughed her glasses off. "I declare, the fairies must have told you!" she accused. "Your saucer pies are right on the lower pantry shelf. I meant to surprise you."

"Put things in little tin pails, grandma, for the picnic," begged Bess. "They taste better." And she gave Gordon a thank-you smile for asking for what she wanted.

"And say Gordon, let's take along twine and pins and fish a while," suggested Jack as Gordon remembered his unfinished errand at the pig pen.

"Quee, quee!" each little pig scolded hungrily.

"All right, I'm coming!" laughed Gordon. "You may have all the peelings you can eat; but I don't believe gold rings would agree with fat little pigs."—Daisy D. Stephenson, in Boys and Girls.

"I wonder where the sun goes
When it slips down out the sky?
I think it hides behind the clouds
To watch the stars go by.

"I wonder where the stars go
When they fade from out our sight?
I think they slip into the blue
To make the day more bright."

to find many such statements in our New Testament, both in the words of our Lord and in the writings of the one who leaned on his Master's breast and in the letters of Paul. With one accord they point to love as the first fruit of the Spirit, the one sure evidence of discipleship, the proof of the presence of God.

This love, as John so well points out, is not directed toward God only, but toward our fellow-men. "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." Again a very strong statement, and one all need to ponder.

As the days pass and the years come and go there is an evergrowing love in our hearts, a love for all those round us, far and near. Mr. Brown- ing was right:

"For life, with all it yields of joy and woe

And hope and fear * * *

Is just our chance o' the prize of learning love."

Is it too much to say that that prize is God Himself? John surely did not think that too strong a statement when he said: If we love one another, God dwelleth in us.—Rev. John A. McAfee.

Prayer.—Our Heavenly Father, open our hearts to the appreciation of Thy wonderful love for us which passeth understanding. Teach us to number our days in wisdom, filled with good deeds, and with tasks that bring no regret or remorse. In His name we ask it. Amen.

found. They would often go unnotified if this group of Christians were not looking for those who need help.

Immigrants in the Cities.

We Southerners think we have a tremendous race problem, but some man from one of our Northern cities has said that "where the South has one race problem, the North has seventeen or more race problems." It might make us more sympathetic with our own race problem, if we studied the problems of some of our large Northern cities. Miss Margaret Youmans, in Haverhill, Massachusetts, is attempting an "Americanization" and "Christianization" work among the immigrants of that city. She is responsible for the religious training of the boys and girls of one section of a large city, and to her are coming for help, boys and girls, and men and women, of many nationalities. In the crowded cities, the immigrants live under most unsanitary conditions, large families huddle together in the smaller houses, while in larger houses there are several families. The mothers have no way of learning to speak English, while their husbands learn to speak it in the business world and their children in the American schools, and so they are kept forever in the background.

Questions for the Meeting.

1. What do we mean by Christian citizenship?
2. How may we build up a strong Christian citizenship?
3. What advantages are there to be had in the city that people who live in the country do not have? How can these be used in building up strong churches?
4. How can Christian officials in cities help to make a Christian city?
5. Why and how are the city and country so closely connected now?
6. Give several great needs of city people for the spirit of Christ.
7. Explain why home life in the city is often weaker than in the country.

Some Quotations.

"The city cannot be saved while slums exist, while evils are allowed to flourish. They destroy what we build up. The outside as well as the inside must be changed."—Anon.

"Newspapers can help to make a city Christian, or they can lead it down to the pit. Some are doing that today. Christians must clean up the press, or the press will destroy Christianity."—H. L. Perkins.

"One room is not a home. It is a breeding place of vice. We must make better homes if the city is to be Christian."—G. B. Ray.

"We still have slums that are like the shore of a sea, where wreckage gathers. Slum missions are salvage stations, greatly needed, that should be supported."—R. P. Anderson.

sion debt of $1,813,000 to $1,100,292, which is to say their Love Offering amounted to $712,708. This was a huge sum given as a general free will offering to keep the Mission work going, though the indebtedness was left exceedingly heavy. The request sent in by the missionaries on the field was for $2,183,726.37, which request the Board cut to a budget of $1,479,- 715.21. The Western Recorder, in reporting for the Board, says, "The cuts have been made as impartially as the Board knew how to make them, but they affect the work of every missionary. We have for the fourth year cut out all requests for buildings of every character, and have appointed no new missionaries. Besides appropriations have been denied for any school, native workers, greatly needed literature, etc." It is indeed a strange phenomenon that while Christian America is piling up multiplied millions of wealth in banks, and is spending other multiplied millions for needless luxuries, our Mission work at home and abroad, suffers in every direction and in all denominations. One very liberal and large denomination

RAILROADING a man's job

THERE is no occupation in the world which is more exacting in its demands on the individual than railroading. That is why the world over the term "railroad man" denotes men of character, trustworthiness and useful citizenship.

But if the demands on the individual railroad man are great, so are the opportunities. The men with the responsibilities of leadership on the Southern today have grown up with the railroad.

To handle the greater traffic of the growing South expeditiously, economically and dependably, the Southern needs the best men of the South.

Railroading has always attracted the best type of citizenship. And it always will. It is a man's job.

curtailed its missionary work this year by 40 per cent, and another is this year only undertaking 75 per cent of what it did last year.

One wonders if this nation of ours, which owes its wealth to God who made us, and the Gospel that redeems us, is in its wealth and luxury, going like other rich nations have gone? It has always been riches, and not poverty, that have proven the destruction of nations. As the nations grow rich, their hearts become hardened, they give themselves to idleness and luxury, and forget their God, and what they owe Him in carrying the Gospel that has made them what they are and were.

In the early days of the automobile, it was common to see cars stalled part way up a steep hill. They were able to make the easy grades, but not so the hard and steep ones.

Most of us are like those cars. Occasionally, if not often, we find ourselves at the foot of the steepest part of some grade, and no courage to go on!

There is no common cause for this failure of our spirits. In the case of some hard and uninspiring work may be the cause. In others, sickness, or age, or disappointment, or trying circumstances. We hesitate before the steep part of the grade for various reasons.

But there is a common remedy for this hesitation. What all of us need is a religious faith that accounts for both good and bad in life, both success and failure, both happiness and sorrow. And such a faith can be had by our trying to see life whole—see those dead and those unborn, as well as those now living. Each is part of an age-old process, and God rules over all.

Hesitation in the steep places is helped, if not overcome, by remembering that many others have gone the same way, by the grace and help of their heavenly Father.—Exchange.

And forsake not the law of thy mothers
Bind them continually upon thy heart.* —Proverbs 6: 20-21

Sister Octavia Ireland, daughter of the late Samuel and Mary Ireland, departed this life on April 2, 1926, aged 70 years and 2 days. She professed faith in Christ in early girlhood. She was a charter member of the Berea Christian Church, Alamance County, N. C. She told her sisters she was ready to go. She leaves to mourn their loss, one brother, three sisters, and a host of relatives.

The funeral took place at her church, and was attended by a host of people. The floral offering was abundant.

God bless the bereaved brother and three sisters that she leaves behind. She was a motherly sister to all her brothers and sisters, as she was the oldest one of the children, which were in number ten.

The funeral was conducted by the pastor. P. T. KLAPP.

In this booklet, the dam itself, the nitrate plants erected by the United States Government, and the general scheme for the improvement of the Tennessee River, are described by Captain L. R. Lohr of the Corps of Engineers of the U. S. Army.

The booklet consists of twenty-eight pages and contains an excellent map of the Muscle Shoals district together with photographs showing the Wilson Dam at various stages of construction, and interior views of the nitrate plants.

By REV. S. M. LYNAM.

A Measure of Protection.—

The British Parliament is considering a resolution to prohibit wealthy Americans from purchasing historic buildings in England and transporting them piecemeal to the United States. We ourselves wonder if they might not better use their money, preserving our own historical scenes?

Lays a Cornerstone.—

President Coolidge recently laid the cornerstone of a ten million dollar press building in Washington. His address on that occasion dealt with the press as a cornerstone of liberty, but also contained a recapitulation of the foreign policy. He said, among other things, that "It is useless to love liberty unless we establish laws. It is futile to cherish justice unless we provide courts." Earlier in the day he spoke to the first Congress of the Pan-American Press.

Baptist Teacher Dies.—

Another one of the famous group whom Dr. William R. Harper brought with him to establish the University of Chicago thirty-five years ago died recently. Dr. Albion W. Small resigned the presidency of Colby College, Maine, to accept the head of the theological department in the new school. In that position he became the best-known sociologist of his time. Years ago he retired from active teaching, but he remained the editor of the American Journal of Sociology until the end of his life.

Deeds Farm to Jesus.—

The authorities of the State of Arkansas are perplexed by a deed recently recorded at Evening Shade, transferring from Clarence Powell, Jefferson, Iowa, to "The Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" 160 acres of land. There is a large tract of land near Eagles Mere, Pa., on which a religious enthusiast attempted to found a communistic colony about sixty years ago. At the death of the owner the land was bequeathed to Jesus Christ. The State recognized the validity of the will, but finally regained the land and sold it upon the failure of the owner to pay taxes.

Two Negro Leaders Die.—

Dr. Philip M. Watters, president of Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta, Ga., died in New York City on March 30th. Dr. Watters was for years a pastor in New York before he went to Gammon. Gammon is considered the leading seminary for the training of ministers for the Colored Methodist Church. Bishop George Lincoln Blackwell, of the African Methodist Zion Church, died at his home in Philadelphia recently. He was considered one of the ablest preachers of his race. He was born of slave parents in 1861, educated at Livingston College, Salisbury, N. C., and Boston Theological Department, University of Boston. He has two brothers who are also ministers.

Rome Has Its Troubles.—

Ever since 1921 the case of Abbe Ernesto Buonaiuti has been before the holy see because the Father was charged at that time with disseminating modernist teachings from his chair of history in the University of Rome. He has now been entirely excommunicated. Announcements from time to time have been made that the abbe recanted, but evidently his teaching never became acceptable to the Pope. This excommunicated priest announces that he will continue to wear the priestly garb, and will continue to teach. What, after all, has the Church of Rome accomplished? All the Churches seem to be having their difficulties with theological thinking within their midst. We are of the opinion that it is not theological theory, but vital Christianity with which the Church should concern itself.

Pays Tribute to Elderly.—

Dr. James H. Snowden, editor of the Presbyterian Magazine, and formerly professor in the Western Theological Seminary, Pittsburgh, Pa., preaching in the Fourth Presbyterian Church, New York City, paid a glowing tribute to the old men. He declared that the greatest work of the world had been done by men who had reached the western slopes of life. He conceded that their work might not be so fiery nor so public as that of youth, but affirmed that the most priceless heritage of the Church was its white-haired men whose lives of experience had taught them sanity and righteousness. How true this is we have only to think of our own Uncle Wellons to know. The Church would have been poorer by far had we not had through the last half-century the benediction of his presence, his faith and hope, his sane counsel and his vision.

Rumblings Among the Methodists.—

The Methodist Church, so far, has been comparatively free from the theological discussions which have vexed other religious bodies, but a stirring in the direction of theological thunderings is to be noted. Not so long ago an article was written by Bishop Edgar Blake, resident in Paris, in which he suggested that the doctrine of the virgin birth was not an essential one. This article was widely published in the Methodist press, and a recently organized conservative element in the Church, known as the Methodist League for Faith and Life, is using Bishop Blake's article in a campaign to clear the Church of liberal leadership. More theological discussion is promised among our Methodist brethren, therefore. The Methodists have never been, however, a doctrinal people, and the war between the liberal and conservative elements may not be so bitter as in some other bodies of Christians.

Put Bibles into Hotel Rooms.—

Recently 250 Manhattanites marched down Fifth Avenue, cheered by a band of musical orphans and the Salvation Army, and each of the 250 carried approximately twenty-eight Bibles. These Bibles were presented to the managers of fifty-three hotels for distribution in bedrooms. These 7,000 Bibles brought the number distributed for this purpose by the New York Bible Society up to 77,000. The Gideons, an association of Christian traveling men, have been putting Bibles into hotel rooms since 1909. They began their organization one night in 1899 in a small Wisconsin town when two men, John H. Nicholson and S. E. Hill, were forced by overcrowding to occupy the same room. After Hill was in bed, Nicholson begged pardon for keeping the light burning in order to read his Bible. Hill declared himself to be a Christian and asked his friend to read aloud. "If we had belonged to an order we would have worn its insignia," Hill said, and out of this little meeting of two grew the Gideons, who now number scores of thousands of Christian traveling men. They now wear their insignia, a dark blue pin with a pitcher and a flame coming out of it. They are preachers of righteousness as they go about the business of every day.

A Rector Raps Himself.—

The rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Jacksonville, Fla., recently preached on prohibition and law enforcement. In his sermon he dealt himself a severe blow. He said in part: "Substantial and respectable members of the Church, vestrymen, deputies to the general convention, leaders in lay activities, yes—and I say it with shame for my own calling—even clergy of the Church, have openly, persistently and flagrantly violated the laws of their country, and thereby have deliberately placed themselves on the level of the murderers and pickpockets and highwaymen and forgers with whom our penitentiaries are filled today. When I say that, I am accusing myself. I admit that I have been just as guilty as many of the other clergy of the Church. I have accepted drinks in the homes of members of the Church without asking questions, and I know that that has made me just as guilty as any one else. It is only recently, I admit, that I have been converted, and so I may be arguing with the enthusiasm of a new convert, but I am sure that the clergy have not been giving the leadership that the laity have a right to expect of them in this." This rector is certainly honest, and we need more like him who will both keep it and exhort others to do likewise.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Southern Convention meets at Durham next week, beginning April 27th, at 7:30 P. M. Are you planning to be there? If not, why not?

Dr. C. C. Ryan, pastor of our Richmond, Va., Church has been, with his wife, in Ohio for the past week. He is expected to return Friday.

The pastors, for the most part, have done fine work during mission month, and this is a source of comfort and encouragement to the whole Church.

Rev. and Mrs. H. M. Gray, of Lanett, Ala., announce the engagement of their daughter, Ona Lula Gray, to Mr. Posey Sorrell, of Lanett, Ala. The wedding will be solemnized at an early date.

President L. E. Smith is calling "an emergency meeting" of the committees, together with the heads of the Convention departments, to be held in Durham Christian Church, Tuesday afternoon, April 27th at 3 o'clock.

The last of the Woman's Missionary Rallies of the North Carolina Conference was held at Ramseur, Sunday, the 18th. They were all largely attended and were certainly worth while. These one-day schools of missions our women put on in the spring each year are proving of inestimable worth in missionary teaching and training.

Rev. H. E. Rountree, Chaplain in the United States Navy from the Christian Church, preached at both services in Richmond, Va., last Sunday. Due to the very inclement weather the congregations were small, but those who attended were amply repaid. Brother Rountree is still under hospital care, but is on leave at this time. We hope for him a full recovery.

Miss Margaret H. Morey, Cana, Va., writes on April 10th that she has received for the work at Rocky Ford, Carroll County, Va., the following during February and March: Young People's Missionary Society, Springfield, Ohio (valentines); Mrs. W. B. Wood, Norfolk, Va. (clothing, two boxes); from Burlington, N. C., no name, (hats, one box).

"Our government rests upon religion. It is from that sources that we derive our reverence for truth and justice, for equality and liberty, and for the rights of mankind. Unless people believe in these principles, they cannot believe in our government. These are the two main theories of the government of the world. One rests upon righteousness, the other rests upon force. One appeals to reason, the other appeals to the sword."—Calvin Coolidge.

What Rev. R. C. Helfenstein, D. D., pastor of our Dover Church, says, in remitting his offering, as many others are saying, and the same can be said of even more: "While the offering is not as large as I had hoped and prayed it might be, still it is very gratifying in the fact that it represents the gifts of many who never before had a part in missions." This has been the most gratifying and outstanding event of our Emergency Mission Fund offering. Hundreds have given who, heretofore, had never done so.

The opening day of the new and beautiful Church, Cypress Chapel, Va., Sunday, April 11th, was one long to be remembered. The rain kept many away, but the main auditorium was comfortably filled. There were three services during the day. The Church is a credit to the good people who have sacrificed so nobly and unselfishly to build it. The provision in the building for Sunday School classes and work is very commendable indeed. The building and equipment have cost more than $22,000, and it is a strikingly beautiful and appropriate structure.

"I hope this will be our best Convention. If we as a Sunday School and Church, want to progress we will have to train the younger generation missions and tithing. Because we as a denomination have not been missionary, God has not prospered us as He has others. We have just about held our own in the last fifty years, numerically. We cannot hope to win as many tithers and missionary supporters from the older and grown-up folks as can be had from teaching the youngsters and intermediates." The above lines are not about our forthcoming Southern Convention, but they might well be. They are from the pen of an observant layman in the Valley of Virginia, writing about the forthcoming session of that Convention.

A PERSONAL LETTER.

Dear Brother Managing Editor:

I passed through a section of Alabama a few weeks ago. Our Church is not known very well there. I found a family of fine people who had been members of the oldest Church of our denomination in Alabama before coming to this, the northern section of the State. I spent the night in the home of these good people, and we talked until very late at night. I answered many questions about the late workings of the Church and we all enjoyed its success together.

One of the things which seemed to bear heavily upon their hearts was that they were so far from their Church that they often grew lonesome and hungry for some news. At once I was able to recommend a regular visitor with the assurance that it would bring them many inspiring sermons about our Church and its work. The head of the house handed me two dollars and said they would like to have THE CHRISTIAN SUN come to their home regularly. I would have given you their name and address earlier, but have waited until they were located, because they were planning to move.

Please find enclosed check for $2.00, and send THE SUN to Mr. G. E. Landers, Albertville, Ala., R. F. D. 3.

GREAT HYMNS THAT INFLUENCED GREAT MEN.

BY REV. H. H. SMITH.

All Christians, doubtless, will endorse the following words of Dr. Wilbur Fisk Tillet: "The hymnal of the Church, in its religious and moral value to Christian believers, is second only to one other book—the Bible."

This is saying much, but not too much, for the influence of Christian hymns upon the lives of all believers.

While all classes are debtors to the songs of Zion, the object of this paper is to note how great hymns have influenced the lives of some great men.

Matthew Arnold considered the hymn of Isaac Watts, "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," the greatest hymn in the English language. The author of the Methodist Hymnal Annotated, to whom we are indebted for many interesting facts concerning our great hymns, referring to this hymn, says: "Among those who counted this the greatest hymn in the English language, we may also name Matthew Arnold, the eminent English author and literary critic—and he was especially severe in his criticism of many Church hymns. It so chanced that the very day he died he heard this hymn sung in Sefton Park Presbyterian Church, Liverpool, of which Dr. John Watson ("Ian Maclaren") was pastor. As he went to luncheon after the close of the service, in the home of his brother-in-law, he was heard to repeat to himself softly again and again the opening lines of the hymn; and it was only ten minutes before he died that he declared it was the greatest of all the English hymns. That one who had defined God as 'the Eternal Something that makes for righteousness—from whom Jesus came,' should not only sing publicly, but repeat to himself privately words like these:

"Forbid it, Lord, that I should boast,
Save in the death of Christ, my God,
All the vain things that charm me most
I sacrifice them to His blood."

Makes it possible for us to hope that this eminent poet and man of letters admired and loved this hymn not for its literary qualities alone. The critic's head-creed may have been defined in his 'Literature and Dogma,' while his heart hungered for a creed embodied in a hymn like this, and found joy in singing:

"Love so amazing, so divine, Demands my soul, my life, my all."

"This incident recalls John Wesley's earnest plea that hymns should have not only religious and devotional value, but also high literary merit, 'such as would sooner provoke a critic to turn Christian than a Christian to turn critic.'"

Who can estimate the influence of a great hymn? Wesley had no use for "namby-pambical" hymns as he called them, and exercised great care to exclude them from his hymn books; but in our day sensational evangelists and publishers of cheap song books have introduced into many Churches "namby-pambical" hymns and "namby-pambical" tunes.

"Sun of My Soul," by John Keble, is one of our best-loved and most popular prayer hymns. Dr. Nutter says: "A visitor once asked Alfred Tennyson what his thoughts were of Christ. They were walking in a garden, and for a moment the great poet was silent; then, bending over some beautiful flowers, he said: 'What the sun is to these flowers, Jesus Christ is to my soul. He is the Sun of my soul.'" Consciously or unconsciously, he was expressing the same thought in the same language used by John Keble years before when he gave to the world his great heart hymn, 'Sun of My Soul.'

Any comment on a hymn by the great Christian poet Tennyson should be read with peculiar interest, for, to receive favorable comment from such a source, a hymn must have both literary merit and devotional impressiveness. Tennyson regarded Reginald Heber's hymn on the Holy Trinity, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty," as "the finest hymn ever written."

Joseph Addison's great hymn, "The spacious firmament on high," is said to have been a favorite with Dr. Samuel Johnson, who used to repeat it with great delight.

"Rock of Ages," by Toplady, one of the greatest of all our hymns, is a universal favorite. "The British Premier, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, made a version of it in Latin and another in Greek. Many persons, and among them Prince Albert, of England, have used it as a dying prayer." Concerning this hymn, Dr. Nutter remarks: "The merits of this hymn are confessedly great. It is saturated with the spirit of prayer, and it brings out clearly the utter dependence of the soul upon Christ alone for salvation. To write a hymn so popular and so useful is a privilege an angel might covet."

Among the most popular of all our hymns is Charles Wesley's great hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." Henry Ward Beecher said: "I would rather have written that hymn of Wesley's, 'Jesus, Lover of My Soul,' than to have the fame of all the kings that ever sat on the earth. It is more glorious. It has more power in it. That hymn will go on singing until the last trump brings forth the angel band; and then, I think, it will mount up on some lip to the very presence of God."

Dr. Richard Watson, a theologian of the Methodist Church, during his last illness found comfort in Watts' hymn, "How sad Our State by Nature Is!" A visiting minister related "with what pleasure the suffering divine spoke on the subject of Christ crucified. He dwelt for some time on its infinite importance as the only foundation on which to rest for pardon, acceptance with God and eternal life. He spoke then of his own unworthiness and of his first reliance on the atonement, and repeated with solemn and deep feeling this verse:

"A guilty, weak, and helpless worm,
Into Thy arms I fall;
Be Thou my strength and righteousness,
My Saviour and my all."

President McKinley died with the words of the hymn "Nearer, My God, to Thee" upon his lips. His last words, spoken to his physician, were, "Nearer, my God, to Thee, e'en though it be a cross, has been my constant prayer."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

A PULPIT ALOOF FROM GOD.

There are preachers and pulpits in our Christian denomination who are struggling to build up a strong Church at home, regardless of giving the gospel to those who have never had it. Dr. J. F. Love, of the Baptist Mission Board, asks this pertinent question: "Is it not a tragedy that a congregation which is struggling with the case-hardened sinners of the community should not know that there are men and women in multitudes, yea, millions! to whom the gospel is still good news, and who receive the truth gladly when it is preached to them?" This writer has in his acquaintance ministers almost worn out in their earthly ministry striving to build up a strong Church at home, disregarding the cry of the multitudes beyond, who have never had an opportunity of the gospel. It is a difficulty, almost impossible, in fact, to disillusion such ministers. They will tell you that they have no objection to foreign missions, and that they expect to do something for foreign missions when they get about them a Church, and a congregation strong enough to do something worth while.

It is a pity, not to say a tragedy, that there are such pastors yet preaching in pulpits that they hope to make strong, when, if they would stop to think of the matter thoroughly, they would see that they are undertaking the impossible. Our Saviour would not wait till the disciples had built up strong congregations and erected good houses of worship to give them His great commission, "Go, ye, into all the world." The Church was planted for one purpose, and one only, and that was to make Christ known in all the world, and from the day that our Lord gave His program down until this good hour, no Church has ever become great or strong that limited its program, its plans, its activities to its community. The thing cannot be done. Yet, strange indeed to say, there are ministers without a vision who will keep on trying to do that which Jesus Christ never intended they should do. If we are going to build Christ's Church, then we can only do so by putting on Christ's program.

That program is very simple, but exceedingly comprehensive: "Ye shall be witnesses of me in Jerusalem, in Judeah, and in Samaria, and to the uttermost parts." That was spoken a long time ago, and yet there are pastors who curtail that command by stopping at Jerusalem, their home town, their locality, and refuse to enter into a program that will go any farther. They are fighting a losing battle, and while they may seem to flourish for a season, it can be but a season, because they will not follow the program laid down by Him who said, "I will build my Church."

In addition to his question, Dr. Love makes this declaration: "A pulpit in America which is silent on missions is aloof from the ways of God in this generation." Is this declaration too strong? Is it too emphatic? Are there pulpits in our Christian denomination today aloof from the ways of God?

Dr. Love points out that we spent on the home "base" last year five hundred million dollars here where Christianity is so strong, and yet the thirty million Church members making up this constituency on the home base only gave forty million dollars to foreign missions. "We spent on ourselves twelve dollars for every dollar we spent on the whole world in this urgent and extraordinary foreign mission hour." He raises the further inquiry, which it seems to this writer is certainly worthy of pause and consideration: "Do 225,000 evangelical Churches of America now have the consent of the Spirit to go slow on foreign missions until every Church has a "plant," a parsonage, a pipe organ, is able to pay a choir, and every thing round about is comfortable for the saints? There are thousands of Churches in America which may very well institute an earnest inquiry as to whether they are not grieving the Holy Spirit by the disparity between the religious luxuries which they are providing for themselves and the amount which they are giving to send the first knowledge of the gospel to others. Is there any danger that some of our great Churches are by the soothing comforts which they are providing for themselves and the necessities which they are denying to others, doing despite to the Spirit of grace, cheating their own souls as well as God out of the richest joys which our religion yields?"

The world plunged into a terrible war, having on our lips that "this is a war to end war." But the World War did not end war. It never does. War always sows the seeds of more war. Only the Prince of Peace, and the gospel which He preached, can bring peace and abolish war. There is only one hope of avoiding future wars, and that hope lies solely in the willingness of Christians to send or carry the gospel to the uttermost parts, that men and women may be guided and governed by the sovereign will of the Prince of Peace. For us to boast of our increasing numbers in the home Church will carry us nowhere, unless these increasing numbers are used with their increasing resources to give the gospel to those who are without it. Let's contemplate one more question put by Dr. Love.

"Boasted institutions and fabulous endowments, elaborate and ornate temples shall be for any evangelical denomination in America which fails to heed the call of God in this hour but symbols of vanity and monuments to its shame. What means it to boast of increasing numbers in our home Churches, great buildings, fine choirs, and even large activity, if the service for Christ in the lands which most need Him is not correspondingly great?"

THE CAUSE OF "EMERGENCY."

Many writers and thinkers are doing their best to discover what is the cause of the great falling off in the various Churches and communions in the gifts since the war to foreign missions. It has been pointed out in these columns that all the mission boards are struggling beneath indebtedness, while our banks are piling up unheard-of millions in their vaults. It is a strange phenomenon. Mr. Sherwood Eddy has pointed out that we burned up $9,000,000 an hour, or $215,000,000 a day, during the war, or the equal of $20,000 an hour from the birth of Christ until the end of 1925. At the call of war this staggering sum of money was furnished, and even now we are piling up unheard-of millions in the banks. How insignificant our missionary offerings at the call of Christ, and a lost world, compared with these figures! Christian missions is the antithesis and only effectual antidote to war, and unless this antidote is applied there will come another war more destructive than the last one. But this is not answering the question, "What is the cause of the present emergency" and why are the mission boards with their indebtedness having to appeal to the people as never before? The Watchman-Examiner, a great Baptist paper, makes this comment in explanation:

"The emergency exists not because we do not have the money, but because the money has us. Slaves to the demands of the cost of high living, we have given up the higher life. Eager for creature comforts, we have shunned the call to heroic service, and fearful of the cost of the best, we have spent our labor for that which satisfieth not."

Commenting on this situation, Dr. J. F. Love, in a wonderful volume just from the press, entitled "Today's Supreme Challenge to America," says: "We need homes for our families, but we do not need palaces. We need food, but we can dispense with many luxuries. We need dress, but God calls us to forego a thousand extravagances. We need houses of worship, but we do not need cathedrals. The denomination which has surpassed all denominations in the erection of great temples, the display of ornamentation, the exhibit of stained-glass, and clamored for the front place on the public squares of the great cities is today spiritually the deadest thing that bears the name Christian! Then let us keep ourselves under guard, lest love for show and comfort run away with us, and we run away from our supreme duty and opportunity."

The emergency exists, and if there ever was a call of need in behalf of a lost world, that call comes now. What are we doing, how much are we sacrificing to give the gospel that has made us what we are to the millions who have it not and never will have it unless we give it to them?

BUILDING TOGETHER.

The theme of the Birmingham session of the International Council of Religious Education was "Building Together a Christian Citizenship." Time and time again speakers declared that the first word in the motto would be fruitless without the second. We must build together or our structure cannot endure.

Adults and youth were told that they could not get along working independently. The men were told they needed the women in their efforts at kingdom building and vice versa. Women and youth both appear to be in revolt against adult masculine leadership in Christian social building. The youth are endeavoring to start a youth movement strong enough to demand recognition for themselves, with young men as leaders and spokesmen for the most part. The women are flocking to the U. D. C., the D. A. R., the music federations, and the women's civic clubs, into which they are investing the energy they formerly gave so unstintingly to their local Churches. The way out is easy—to give both youth and women responsibility in making as well as serving the plans of the Church and kingdom.

But this motto has wider application also. Capital and labor must work together. The races must co-operate on Christian basis. The world must become associated governmentally, so as to prevent war and relieve the intolerable burden of taxation now required to support the armament programs of the nations. Other problems requiring co-operation and team work also emerge out of the general social situation of our time. Think them over, reader.

But the Church must especially work together. All the educational work of the Church must be unified. All financial appeals must be budgeted and prorated as to money raised. And the denominations must unite, even as Jesus prayed.

The Church cannot win the world divided as she is. The denomination cannot do its work divided in its methods of work as it is. The local Church cannot function adequately without a unified program. We must build together on Christian citizenship. We must—that is all!

THE ELON CHAUTAUQUA.

Dr. W. T. Walters, president, and Miss Pattie Coghill, secretary, Henderson, N. C., officially advise that the Chautauqua will be held at Elon College July 26th to August 4th. The Chautauqua has gained from year to year in influence, interest, and numbers, and the officials who are planning the present program are hopeful and expecting that the 1926 session will be the best yet. "We are trying to make the strongest and most practical program of any yet made." The total cost for registration and board for the session will be $11.00. Certainly this charge is exceedingly modest, and is explained by the fact that there is no charge made for housing either the Chautauqua itself or individuals attending, and all other items are put at actual cost.

There will be institute teaching, teacher training classes, daily vacation Bible classes, Sunday School credit courses, Bible classes, mission study, community song service, varied evening programs, etc., among the attractive features to be offered this year. The program contemplates instruction and help for pastors, Sunday School officers and teachers, missionary leaders, and in fact all who are interested in any line of Church work. Each year should show an increased number in attendance, as those who attend can testify of the value and worth of Chautauqua.

THE INTERPRETATION OF CHRISTIANITY TO YOUTH OF THE PRESENT DAY.

"Any theory of evolution that may ultimately be accepted cannot exclude God from His universe," W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, Elon, N. C., declared Wednesday afternoon in addressing a young people's conference in connection with the International Sunday School meet.

President Harper discussed this much debated question in his address on "The Interpretation of Christianity to the Youth of the Present Day."

"Youth must see, if they accept evolution as God's own chosen method of creation, that real evolution is fundamentally theistic," he added. "That God has spoken to men's hearts and that He continues to do so, rests on too solid a testimony in human experience to be set aside by any theory of the universe that is founded on purely mechanistic bases."

The speaker also decried the tendency of human nature to regard youth as entirely frivolous.

President Harper declared:

"Youth, like the Spring, is perennial. That is why it is so engaging. Youth is open-minded. There is more hope of a fool than of a man with a closed mind. Youth is courageous. Nothing can daunt its daring spirit. Youth is confident. Youth's confidence sometimes leads to tragedies, but even these are preferable to the ridiculous comedies of calculating age. Youth is enthusiastic. We do not lose our enthusiasm when we grow old. We grow old when we lose our enthusiasm. Youth has the spirit of service. Energy is its middle name and this energy must have outlets of expression. It will find them or make them. Youth is whole-hearted. Youth's loyalty has never been successfully impeached.

"Enough has been said to suggest that youth is not the awful thing it is represented to be. The disparagement of youth is not modernism. It is fundamentalistic fundamentalism. It is as old as the rocks. An ancient Assyrian stone carved 28 centuries before Christ laments the follies of youth and predicts the decadence of life as a consequence. This monumental dirge disposes thusly:

"Our earth is degenerated in these later years; there are signs that the world is speedily coming to an end; bribery and corruption are common; children no longer obey their parents; every man wants to write a book; and the end of the world is evidently approaching."

"And here is the present day sentiment of a fine teacher, Prof. Edward Dickinson, of Oberlin, a famous professor of music:

"Youth always prefers sensations to ideas. The beginner in life must be allowed certain follies. The way to steady him is not to lecture him but to keep before him models of strong thought and clear vision, trusting them to exert a subtle, transforming influence in their own good time."

"This is modern orthodoxy, according to which our adult ideas are of more value than all the engaging charms of youth, whose very excellencies are follies shortly to be transformed.

"I am sometimes inclined to think we owe youth a sincere apology for our assaults on it and that our method of aiding young people religiously should consist in a genuine desire to introduce them to Christ as a living person whom they can trust confidently and then as the missionaries recommend, leave matters of interpretation to them. We would on this basis not ask youth to believe certain doctrines and dogmas, but to trust Christ and, trusting to follow Him wheresoever He may lead."

The speaker continued, touching on the influence of scientific theories on the minds of youth.

"Science is a tremendous force moulding the life and character of youth. The romance of man's progressive understanding of the material universe is a brilliant chapter in the progress of the race. Electrons and protons are familiar concepts to the youth of today, concepts entirely foreign to present day adults in their days of youth. Complexes and synapses are familiar too in the realm of man's mental life. Our youth today understand the world's history in the eocene age better than the race of men who lived then and enjoyed it. Science increasingly renders the material world the servant of man's life. To you through education science is an open book, a fountain of inspiration, a beacon of hope, a challenge ever to achieve a more helpful use of nature in the service to man. Christ must be credited with this marvelous advancement in scientific discovery.

"Social religion is the current coin of the youth of the day. It is not a new gospel, but, rightly understood, the inevitable outcropping of the teachings and the life of Christ.

"Closely allied with the teachings of social religion is the lure of the world view, which appeals to the soul of youth with irresistible charm.

"Youth does not hesitate to affirm its conviction that unity underlies all life and experience and inheres in all truth. It has set out on the quest for this unity. It is emboldened in its determination to find the object of its quest because of the undoubted unity of the physical universe. Psychology, too, in abandoning its faculty view of the human mind has added the weight of its authority to youth's confident expectation that ultimate unity is demonstrable."

The speaker then turned to the subject of evolution, in which he declared in part:

"We must demonstrate to the youth that mechanistic evolution and behavioristic psychology are passing phases of scientific hypothesis unable to account for the facts they essay to explain. Any theory of evolution that may ultimately be accepted they must see cannot exclude God from His universe. They must, if they accept evolution as God's chosen method of creation, understand that real evolution is fundamentally theistic. That God has spoken to men's hearts and that He continues to do so, rests on too solid a testimony in human experience to be set aside by any theory of the universe that is founded on purely mechanistic basis. It is our privilege and duty to make this clear to our youth. Failure to teach them will be disastrous for them and for Christianity."

In conclusion, President Harper declared:

"The youth of former ages have not been so happily situated with reference to these five major elements in the social milieu of our time. Democracy was a fancified theory in the judgment of many peoples until recently, and of doubtful odor, but now 'tis become the passion of the race. Science is coming into its own, despite the wild denunciations of a few belated spirits surviving from the Dark Ages of ignorance and fear. Through universal education it is liberating the life and thought of man. Social religion, the world-wide vision of mankind, and the quest for the unity of life and truth are gripping forces in the outlook and culture of our day. These mighty forces have given us a new youth in our day, and out of these forces the new youth is destined to construct a superstructure of high hopes and noble endeavor in the days that lie ahead, using as the foundation stones of its rising life edifice these splendid qualities which have all the ages characterized the exuberant spirit of the world's young life. I believe in youth. I am satisfied they will interpret Christianity in terms of Christ."

—Birmingham News.

"What the famishing religious world of today needs is contact with God. It is silently pleading with the minister to lead it back to God. Unless the 'yod' and the 'horn' are neglected and the religious value of the Bible is seized, there will come failure. Only the religion of the spirit can solve the religious problems of the new time. Man, religious in his construction, must respond to the religious experience deposited in the Bible. And when the perplexed man of today asks for bread, for food that will sustain him in his struggle against fear, suspicion, doubt, selfishness, that will enrich him with God, he should be directed to this excellent record of religious experience which we call the Bible."—Conrad H. Mochlman, in "The Unknown Bible," Geo. H. Doran Co.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

April eleven, nineteen twenty-six, added another historic date to Cypress Chapel Christian Church, in Nansemond County, Virginia. It was the formal opening of the new and modern church. It stands on historic ground and adds another church building to those that made that ground sacred. James O'Kelly, the most outstanding leader of the Christian Church, and Isaac N. Walter, the most outstanding pulpit orator, both preached in Old Cypress. The first regular session of the Southern Convention was held in Cypress Chapel, in May, 1858. The history of Cypress Chapel will be given when the new church is dedicated. Last Sunday was simply the opening, or first regular service in the new building, which has cost some $25,000.00.

The Cypress High School and Teacherage adjoin the splendid church grounds, and the church and school make the place a real community center. It is only a few hundred yards from the highway that leads from Suffolk to Edenton, North Carolina, on the west; and not far from the Norfolk and Southern Railroad, on the east; and about ten miles from Suffolk, in one of the best Nansemond County districts. It is historic, accessible, and now a fine new church, with agricultural and educational advantages that ought to make it one of the best parishes in Eastern Virginia.

Rev. J. M. Roberts, a graduate of Elon College, is the pastor. He has that one charge only, and is in a position to give Cypress the very best of his mature life. He has had extended experience as pastor of other churches, and teaches English in the High School. This keeps him in touch with the young people, and he seems to have the full confidence and love of the community.

There were three full services on Sunday, with everything favorable, except the weather. It was a cold, rainy day. This, of course, prevented a full attendance; but the auditorium was fairly well filled at all three services. The music consisted of hymns, anthems, solos, and duets, and all was good. Miss Annie Laura Holland and Mrs. W. T. Brinkley sang solos at the forenoon and afternoon services, and Miss Martha Snead and Miss Laura Holland sang a duet at night. Miss Helen Williford was at the piano and was in good trim all day.

At eleven o'clock, Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Secretary of the Board of Missions, of Elon College, preached a great sermon on the church. A woman in the choir fainted, but the sermon did not cause it; and a whiff of fresh air soon relieved her. Fresh air is a great tonic. Dr. Atkinson's sermon was spiritual fresh air, and the audience left the church with a new sense of the value and work of the Church of Jesus Christ.

At three o'clock in the afternoon, this scribe filled the appointment, and the people came, notwithstanding the rain. The spirit of worship characterized the whole day. People were reverent, attentive, and seemed to enter into the occasion earnestly, sympathetically, and gratefully.

Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., pastor of Holy Neck Christian Church, of Holland, Va., preached at night a fine sermon, appropriate as a climax to the great day. The spiritual atmosphere of Old Cypress seemed to fill the New Cypress, and the congregation now enters upon a new era for all departments of church work.

ELON LETTER.

It was officially announced that five thousand delegates registered at the Birmingham Convention of the International Council of Religious Education, and most of them remained for the full week. We had thirty delegates from our Church there whom I met, and no doubt there were others who registered through State rather than their denominational office. At Kansas City we had six. There has evidently been some growth in interest in religious education in our Church the past four years. Our people held a rally on Thursday afternoon, at which Mr. Hermon Eldredge presided and where the spirit of sane optimism prevailed.

On Friday, Saturday and Sunday a congress of young people was held simultaneously with the convention. About a thousand young people came for it, and so the total registration ran up to six thousand. We had only two registrations for this, though our regular delegates could attend by sitting in the gallery. The gallery was always full. I can also say that those who occupied the gallery were filled with inspiration, and likewise appreciation for our youth. Of course in the open forum following the addresses, there was evidence of crudity of thought and of unacquaintance with the facts of the situation under discussion, but there was never a possibility of doubt as to the sincerity of our youth nor as to their primal interest in the Christian life. And they were, as a group, far less radical than their own leaders, and their elders who had been asked to speak to them. It was decided to make this a permanent feature of the International Convention and to turn the management and program of the young people's group over to the young people themselves. This time it was all planned for them, but I do not believe that fact altered in any appreciable way the attitudes and findings of their congress. They voted to abolish the Jim Crow cars.

Our Church was given every consideration through its representatives. We were represented on the executive committee, on the program committee, on the resolutions committee, on the lesson committee, on the education committee, in the several professional advisory sections, and several of our members were on the program for addresses. Many more took part in the general discussion groups of the advisory sections. I record these matters to encourage our people by knowing that our Church is fully recognized by this great organization.

At Kansas City four years ago the International Sunday School Association merged with the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations to form the International Council of Religious Education. The Birmingham Convention was the first meeting of the united body since the merger. Alarmists had freely predicted the disintegration of the merger at this session. There was not a word to suggest even such a possibility. On the other hand, the organization known as the International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools gave up its charter and became an integral department of the International Council. Eventually the Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts, the Camp Fire Girls, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Christian Endeavor and other young people's societies and other organizations will do likewise. Then we shall really be able as a Protestant religious education group to work out a consistent and unified program of religious and Christian education.

One thing I regretted to sense—the denominational as opposed to the territorial control of things. The old International Association, under the leadership of Marion Lawrence, that princely Christian democrat, was purely democratic. Denominational consideration did not enter into the program nor the plans of the convention he presided over. But the International Council was particularly solicitous to give every denomination due recognition, with emphasis on the numerical sense of "due," which does not necessarily bring forward the ablest leadership. On the other hand, the territorial leadership was sadly neglected. They were there, but on the side lines and in the back seats. The future, no doubt, will rectify this defect. The International Council needs the voice both of denominational and of territorial or community leadership.

W. A. HARPER.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

The Church can give a new generation a new vision, if it has a trained leadership. The future of the world will be largely determined by the success of the appeal which Christianity makes to the younger generation through this leadership; for the men and women who have made our present social order, have about finished their work. A few more years and the world will be in the hands of those who were young enough to fight the battles of the World War.

If a church is to be religious, it must be led by religious men—men who have both goodness and good sense, who take Jesus Christ seriously, and who believe Him as well as believe in Him. Such leaders must be intelligently honest and possessed of a social-mindedness that does not fear sacrifice. A minister must be more than a master of methods, in all forms of community service, and in all forms of religious education. His religion must be more than a philosophy; it must be a life of trust in God and sacrificial service to man.

The church will not be more intelligent than its pastors and teachers. Religious training must keep pace with the development of higher education. The religious leader lives in the same world as the scientist, engineer, lawyer, and doctor, and his vocational training should be as complete as theirs. It goes without saying, that a church whose leaders are intellectually inferior and untrained, will have little influence among men and women of significance.

An effective pastor is a combination of scholar, saint, and social engineer. He must, first of all, know from personal experience the power of the gospel. He must preach at least one good sermon a week, make innumerable addresses, visit the sick, bury the dead, administer a church, share its social reforms, help in the Sunday School and Young People's Societies, know how to put on a pageant, and be a judge of church music. He studies as much as a doctor, argues as much as a lawyer, delivers more public addresses than a chautauqua lecturer, manages finances like a merchant, shares human tragedies and joys like a priest.

Because of his varied occupations, the minister is more like an apostle than a prophet. He is the herald of the gospel, but he is also a promoter of an institution—the pastor of a church. He must organize other people's activities, direct other people's thinking, inspire other people's faith. He is a shepherd of souls, a physician of the spirit, an advocate of righteousness, a minister of God, a leader in the vicarious tenth of society—those earnest souls who serve the world rather than exploit it.

Radicals are almost inevitably men who are

GOD'S COVENANT WITH NOAH.

Golden Text.—"I do set my boy in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth."—Gen. 9:13.

Lesson—Gen. 5: 28-9:29.

Devotional Reading.—Psa. 89:8-16.

The story of the flood is not original with the Hebrews, for it appears in many old world literatures. But it is superior to all the other stories, for it is written on a higher level of thought, and it has a finer moral tone. As a matter of fact, it has been shown again and again that wherever stories of events recorded in the Bible have been found in other literature, the biblical account is always superior. The idea of God which the writers of the Bible had purged the stories of the cruder things as recorded in other literatures.

It appears that the world had come to a bad state. Wickedness had thrust itself up and spread itself abroad until the whole world was a place of moral stench. The writer of Genesis in a child-like way says that things had come to such a bad state that God was sorry He had made man. Perhaps there are mothers and fathers who have given expression to the same thought as they have seen their children depart so far from the ideals which they, as parents, had set up for them.

In the midst of all this wickedness and moral filth, there was at least one man who was righteous. It seems that Noah followed Jehovah and led an upright life, even in the midst of widespread evil. Bad environment does have its general influence. A saloon or a gambling hall or a house of ill fame is not a good place to rear a boy or girl. But bad environment is not all-powerful. A man can be righteous even in the worst situation. It all depends upon what is inside the man and how far he depends upon and trusts God. After all is said and done, bad environment does not make bad men; it only helps to make them. There are those today (their name is legion) who are living in conditions of modern life that cause other men to go down, and who are keeping themselves unspotted from the world. Some of the girls who are obliged to work on "starvation wages" do go out to become street-walkers and harlots, but not all of them, nor indeed the majority of them. Some business men become dishonest in the grim competition of modern business life, but not all of them, nor indeed the majority of them do so. One can go down the line of human life and the results will be the same. Let a man think twice before he blame outside forces. Noah was righteous under conditions that the modern world does not approximate, and he walked with God.

God warned Noah about the wrath to come, and bade him prepare an ark for himself and the members of his family and for at least a pair of every living thing on the earth. God has a way of warning men of the wrath to come, and unless he has changed His way of doing things He warns the wicked as well as the righteous. The wicked of Noah's day as well as the wicked of our day have been warned of the penalty of wrong-doing. And the men of Noah's day probably scoffed at the idea as do many men of today. Be not deceived; God is not mocked. Let a man be sure that his sins will find him out.

The flood came. It always does. It does not always come as a great flood of waters. It may be sorrow, misfortune, trials, bereavement, remorse—a hundred and one things—but sooner or later the flood comes upon those who have chosen the way of the wicked. One reads with some dismay that the flood blotted out every living thing except the family of Noah and the animals he had with him in the ark, but it is a parable of life itself. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. God cannot do otherwise than punish sin if He is to be true to His moral nature.

When Noah came out of the ark he built an altar unto the Lord and offered a sacrifice of thanksgiving. The account is very child-like. It pictures Jehovah as smelling the burnt-offering and being well pleased therewith. He thereupon makes an everlasting covenant with Noah. There is in this simple story an abiding truth. The altar established from a sense of thanksgiving for mercy and goodness from God is well pleasing and acceptable unto Him. One wonders if the failure to receive blessings in abundance is not often due to the failure to return thanks for blessings already received. Noah was the first, so far as we know, to build an altar of sacrifice unto the Lord. It would seem that there would be more of us building them unto Jehovah today in the light of His goodness and His lovingkindness.

The people of Noah's day thought of God as a covenant-making God. They had already come that far in their religious experience. They were beginning to see that He would enter into friendly and intimate relations with men. And in the lesson today with its reference to the rainbow they came to understand in at least a partial way that the processes of nature were orderly and therefore to be depended upon. The rainbow was a sign of promise. It was most fitting that it should be chosen by these people as a token of the sealing of the covenant.

Let no one despise these simple stories from the childhood of the race, for they were written for our instruction, that we, through them, might come to a larger understanding of the ways of God with the children of men.

Some Teaching Points.

1. Wickedness brings God's wrath upon itself.
2. Righteousness is possible regardless of environment.
3. God warns men, both the good and the bad.
4. God makes provision for those who would do right.
5. God's care extends even unto the animal kingdom.
6. A believing husband may be the means of saving an entire family.
7. God is pleased with an expression of genuine gratitude.
8. The laws of God are dependable.
9. God enters into personal relations with His children.
10. Troubles in life may be only the background against which the rainbow of promise may shine the brighter.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, May 2, 1926.

TOPIC: "The ten most important kinds of work: How make them Christian?"—Exod. 20:9; 2 Thess. 3:6-13.

(Consecration Meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

God has set His approval on work. He Himself is the Great Worker.—Exod. 20:9.

When one is able to work, there is disgrace in accepting support from another's labors. Independence is a Christian virtue (v. 8).

Work greatly varies. Intellectual or spiritual work is sometimes harder than physical labor (v. 9).

The lazy man needs to be forced to work. It is false pity to support him (v. 10).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The Ministry.—Without prophets the soul dies and man becomes a slave. We can do without luxuries, but not without prophets.

Intellectual work.—The man with ideas is tremendously valuable. He is an originator, a creator, indispensable.

The Farmer.—Man must have food. The importance of farming is seen if we imagine all farmers out of business. The race would die. Service is Christian.

The Weaver.—If mills were abolished weaving would have to be done at home, as in the past. Man must be clothed. The business must pay a living wage.

A Few Illustrations.

Who can tell the value to the world of the man that first discovered how to make fire? Without that discovery, progress would have been impossible. Ideas are priceless.

The men that found how to smelt metal from rocks, to make first bronze, then iron, then steel, and so on, gave to the world gifts whose value is beyond words. Such free giving is Christian in principle.

Merchandising.—Goods must be brought from manufacturer to consumer. The man that sells to the consumer is merchandising. What profit shall he take? What will be a Christian profit?

The Stock Market.—The Christian service of the stock market is to secure capital for business enterprises. The un-Christian element is to get money for worthless stocks. What can be done about it?

To Think About.

What un-Christian tendencies exist in my business?

How can we apply in business the principle, "What would Jesus do?"

What businesses are un-Christian? Why?

Lifting Our Standard.

As a matter of information, to which our people are entitled, and as a challenge to both large and small givers, we have been setting forth in recent issues our giving as compared with others, both in denominational benevolences, total benevolences, and in local current Church support. We note that the total per capita giving for all Christian purposes—benevolences and Church support—for the twenty-five denominations ranges from $10.44 to $38.32, with an average of $21.06 per capita. Our per capita giving for all purposes was $13.49. So if we are just average Christians in giving, we must increase our annual per capita giving to Christian purposes nearly eight dollars. These matters are vital. Is our work to grow and develop? Are we to increase spiritually? Missionaries cannot be sent and supported without money; colleges cannot be maintained, and Churches cannot be built, repaired or enlarged without money. Our pastors and Church workers are not now receiving adequate compensation. New fields cannot be surveyed and opened. It must be borne in upon us with an added emphasis that the kingdom of God cannot be extended without raising money. Only two of the list of denominations are below us in per capita giving for all Christian purposes. We do not believe our people want it so. Let's change it. It will take our steady efforts. Will you help?

That is our per capita giving for all Christian purposes. That is a tithe only of a per capita income of $134.90. The per capita income in the United States is variously estimated from $586 to $629. Dr. Bert Wilson, author of that valuable book, "The Christian and His Money Problems," accepts for calculation the lowest figure $586. There is no doubt but that the average Christian's income is more than that of the non-Christians, but we will hold to the low figure and the general average of $586. If our people are just average folks, and who would say that they are less, the tithe would be $58.60 per capita, while our Christian giving is $13.49, or considerably less than one-fourth of our tithe for the Lord's work. Is it not time for every pastor and leader among us to give a needed emphasis to tithing? And the principal reason for tithing is not that of money either, but of a deeper spiritual life. It is putting God first in life.

Giving a Vital Function.

(a) Frequently we fail to treat giving from a right standpoint. It has been classed among the business affairs of the Church and treated from a commercial viewpoint. It should rather be treated as a vital function of the soul, vital to the soul life of individual and Church.

(b) Systematic givers attend more regularly and are more dependable in Church activities. Generally worship, giving, doing, go together.

(c) In our Church finances we should use the Church's best business powers, but we must remember that we are dealing with more than business matters—a vital spiritual function.

(d) It is most profitable to study how Paul, in those great spiritual heights which he reaches, links so closely what we have called a common duty, a secular matter, our giving. What heights he reaches in I Corinthians, fifteenth chapter—the resurrection; to be followed immediately with "Now concerning the collection," exhorting them to come to the assistance of the brethren; and again in 2 Corinthians, ninth chapter, how he links in closest terms "Thanks be to God for His unspeakable gift" and almsgiving.

Many Churches have not yet sent in, holding their check till all have been given an opportunity of contributing something. This is well, but as soon as all the offering to be had is in hand, it will be greatly appreciated if remittances are made by Church treasurers promptly.

Our deepest gratitude is expressed to all who have helped and are helping to increase this so-much-needed Emergency Fund.

A SPECIAL GIFT OF LOVE.

From a sick room comes this letter:

"I have been reading, thinking, and praying about the pressing need of our mission work and the shortage of funds to carry it on unless we rally around the cause of Christ in a special way.

"At present I am in, and my nurse is writing for me.

"The thought has come to me that many of us might be willing to contribute something to a fund which would represent a special sacrifice, a gift over and above the amount we have contemplated paying into our local Church treasury before April 1st. To start such a fund I am sending you the enclosed check for $100. This represents the approximate difference between cost of room with private bath and one without during the period of five weeks.

"I am glad to make this special gift of love to Christ and our missionaries."

One Sunday morning in late October I presented foreign missions in one of our Virginia Churches. The next day, visiting in a humble home, I was amazed when the husband and wife handed me a check for $100. Knowing their meager income and that they had four children to provide for, I objected to taking it. But they pressed it on me. When I left, the wife accompanied me out to the porch and said:

"Husband and I have been saving up money for months to get new winter clothes for ourselves and the children. The old ones have gotten thin and ragged. But you told us yesterday of the millions over yonder in their darkness, without any knowledge of a Saviour. So husband and I went home, and after talking and praying over it, we decided to give this money to you and make our old clothes last another winter. We thought the people over there needed Christ more than we needed new clothes."

"The people over there need Christ more than I need"

(In the silence of your own heart, in the presence of your Master, think, and pray, and fill in this blank.)

He who "sat over against the treasury and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury" is looking to see what special sacrifice you will make.

"Brethren, the time is short." Write your check now!—Presbyterian Standard.

MISSIONARY RALLY AT CYPRESS CHAPEL.

The one-day school of missions of Nansemond and Gates Counties was held at Cypress Chapel April 1, 1926. The meeting was called to order at 10:30 by the superintendent, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle. Hymn, "Safely Through Another Year," was sung, after which Mrs. E. T. Holland led the devotionals. Scripture lesson, Acts 10:1-34. Sentence prayers were called for. Mrs. B. D. Jones led these prayers, and Mrs. I. W. Johnson closed them, a number taking part.

Mrs. C. W. Rountree, president of the Cypress Chapel Missionary Society, gave, in a very gracious speech, the welcome address. Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. Two letters, one from Mrs. Russell Bradford and one from Mrs. M. L. Bryant, were read. They extended their regrets at being absent, and wishing that the day be full of inspiration and information. The superintendent brought a stirring message, "The Unfinished Task." It was full of help and gave us thoughts to take home with us.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle then gave an address on "Our Missionary Work," explaining by maps and charts just where our missionaries are located and the work they are doing. The list of Churches in this group is fourteen, and nine were well represented.

Address by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, "The Imperative Need of the Hour." The appointment of committees were as follows: Plans and Place, Mrs. Y. C. Byrd and Mrs. J. E. Corbitt; Nominations, Mrs. B. D. Jones, Mrs. C. W. Rountree, Mrs. C. R. Fulgham; Resolutions, Miss Lillye Holland, Mrs. I. W. Johnson. An offering was then taken, to be used for the Emergency Fund. Adjournment for lunch.

Afternoon Session.

Hymn, "Come, Thou, Almighty King." Devotionals were led in a very effective way by Mrs. Charles Daughtrey. Solo, Mrs. Annie Laurie Holland. Mrs. N. H. Andrews gave an illustration of making missions attractive to young people, it being both instructive and interesting.

A favorable report was made on our mountain work by Dr. J. O. Atkinson. Address, "If We Do Not Advance, Why?" by Rev. J. G. Truitt. A discussion of plans "How to Organize Other Societies" was had. A committee of three was appointed to work this out. Mrs. B. D. Jones, Mrs. Charles Daughtrey, Mrs. W. H. Andrews were appointed on this committee.

Reports of Committees.

Plans and Place: Holland Christian Church extends an invitation to this body to meet with them for the 1927 session. Adopted.

Nominations: We, the Nominating Committee, beg to submit the following report: for superintendent, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle; assistant superintendent, Mrs. Charles Daughtrey; secretary, Miss Lillye Holland. Committee: Mrs. B. D. Jones, Mrs. C. W. Rountree, Mrs. C. R. Fulgham. Adopted.

Resolutions: Resolved, first, That we record our grateful appreciation of the kind hospitality extended by the Woman's Missionary Society of Cypress Chapel; second, that we extend our sincerest thanks to Dr. J. O. Atkinson and Revs. H. S. Hardcastle and J. G. Truitt for their excellent and inspiring addresses, and to all those who rendered special music; third, that we express our high appreciation of the service rendered by the officers of the district and thank them for the same. Committee: Lillye Holland, Mrs. I. W. Johnson. Adopted.

The closing hymn was then sung, and the 1926 one-day school of missions was brought to a close by Dr. J. O. Atkinson.

MRS. H. S. HARDCASTLE,
LILLYE HOLLAND, Secretary. Superintendent.

MATTHEW.

Secondly: View the believer's sure foundation, that on which the primitive Church stood, which is Jesus Christ, as Lord and God, revealed to the soul which is translated into the gospel kingdom. This foundation stands sure. Those who continue in this most holy faith will abide for ever. If Jesus be our sure foundation against the powers of earth and hell, then Jesus must be the "Mighty God, the everlasting Father, and Prince of Peace." Amen.

Thirdly: How about the keys? A key is an instrument to open locks, whereby we gain admission into the cabinet of hidden treasure; signifying spiritual knowledge of the mysteries of the gospel and the kingdom. Our Lord said, when the spirit of truth is come, He will guide you into all truth (John 16:13). This is the key of knowledge (Luke 11:52) that the lawyers took away from the people by false interpretations; they entered not into the true light themselves, and hindered others. Therefore, what the apostles wrote on earth, the same is recorded in heaven. Nothing must be added to or diminished therefrom; then it must be intended by infinite wisdom to be the only and unalterable rule for the faith and good economy of the Christian Church forever. Amen.

In this chapter we find the strongest evidence of the divinity of our Lord God, by the testimony of three respectable witnesses, viz: Peter, James and John, who were chosen apostles. O ye Arians, that brightness which appeared, was the same eternal Jesus, the Word or Logos, before He assumed a human body; the same that said, "Lo, I come, and a body hast these prepared me." Thou, i. e., the whole of the divine council of God, and the Holy Ghost was God in operation. Jesus is, was, and is to come the Esse; by reason, he that hath the Son hath life; and His words are, "And ye will not come to me that ye might have life." This shekina, or emanation, is divine life, and divine light, which constitutes the Esse and essence, and is truly the most high and mighty Lord God! Jesus dwells in that increased light, not accessible. The witnesses knew Moses and Elias; perhaps Moses died fifteen hundred years before our evidences were born; Elias was not known to them before. Reader, if thou art on thy way to heaven, believe to thy comfort, thou wilt be no stranger there.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A certain man asked our Lord who was the greatest in His kingdom. The way He answered was by calling a little child and placing him in the midst, and informing the people that unless they experienced converting grace and became translated into the kingdom, to which that child belonged, they could not be saved. If children belong to the kingdom, who can, with propriety, forbid their being baptized with water? Children do never come under condemnation until they are capable of choosing, and then do wrong presumptuously. Adam's guilt cannot cleave to the souls of his offspring, and his own soul be exonerated. When his soul sinned, the soul of all souls sinned; and this is recorded to be the sin of the world. And so it was. And when Adam repented, we all repented—by reason his whole soul repented; so, also, and when his soul believed, did ours: all souls believed. So John the Baptist exclaimed, saying, "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world." In this chapter we find a rule of discipline delivered by the Lord Himself, viz: If thy brother trespass against thee, etc., finally, if the two first rules fail, tell the Church, or that sister Church, where thou and thy brother are in particular membership. Remember, it is the Church, or that Church collectively; and if the Church shall judge him guilty, and he will not take conviction, let him be expelled. Then follows the doctrine of forgiveness. Whenever thy brother repents, forgive him from your heart. Then follows a parable, the pure interpretation thereof lies deep. The debtor perhaps was debtor to his landlord; the debt is heavy, the law was rigorous—for if the debtor had no money, he, his wife, his children, and all he had must be sold. The debtor owned the account to be just; and he humbled himself and prayed, and it moved the lord to pity him; therefore he loosed him, and forgave him the whole debt. But for his unmerciful conduct toward his poor debtor, his lord called him to his bar the second time, ordered him to be put into prison, and charged him with the old and new account. From this parable we learn that a believer's first justification is not irrevocable; but its continuation appears conditional. Men are lost for unmerciful conduct, as well as acts of injustice. The same measure we meet shall be measured to us again.

CHAPTER XIX.

There appears to be nothing here very hard to understand, so as to need the interpreter. There is a mystery in that of a man and wife being one flesh; this is a mystical oneness: but in their children they are in fact one flesh. Why, then, are people so hard to believe that Jesus Christ possessed two natures in one person? Let him that readeth understand. In verse 18, our Lord enjoins obedience to the sacred decalogue, written by the finger of God, and handed to the people by His servant Moses. Some hold to the Jewish Sabbath on the authority of the holy decalogue; but the Christians hold the Lord's day for their Sabbath, being the first day of the week, in commemoration of our Lord's resurrection and the great work of redemption, knowing that Jesus is Lord of the Sabbath. Our Lord receives sinners, by faith and repentance; but he receives little children without such preparation. And as He receives such, should not His ministers receive and baptize them in His name, to whom they belong? We further learn here, that no sinner can ever inherit a place in heaven unless he will sacrifice every earthly kind of pleasure, honor, ease and earthly treasure, i. e., comparatively.

Notice our Lord's answer to the man who addressed him with the honorable title of "Good Master." The answer was, why callest thou me good? There is none good but one, and that is God. It is a very general and correct impression that God is one, for two superlatives cannot exist—God is over all, blessed for ever. He is the Lord thy God, worship thou Him! The Deity can be but one, i. e., Deus, one. This most high God is altogether virtuous; divinely, morally, infinitely, and absolutely good, in the superlative; in and of Himself, in His own eternal, immutable, divine and perfect attributes. No God but one is undeniable, and consequently none can be originally, in the absolute independent sense, perfectly good, but the one God. Then, according to the theology of some men, Christ is considered the Son, in the abstract, and not the most high one God; therefore, according to such an idea. Jesus is no God, and could not be considered as the object of worship and adoration, trust or soul dependance. He could be no more than a good creature and a great prophet, but not good as God is good.

Reader, if you are under the influence of the Arian faith, you may look to it! You contradict the written word, and seem to produce an idea that Jesus was a deceiver. The word recorded by John says that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. And He Himself exclaimed that the Father and He were one—even the one God incarnate; the one God manifest in the flesh. I, Jesus, who speak, am in the Father, and the Father in me, i. e., reciprocally. In His state of humiliation, He humbled Himself, and personally acted as a servant, for the redemption of sinners. His person was despised, though He was Lord of all—but His God-head honored. Thus the divinity was in a higher state of exaltation than the person of Jesus. Sometimes he would answer people according to their folly, and their thoughts. The man who called him "Good Master" looked upon Him as only man, and he answered Him accordingly. But now his humanity is glorified equal with the divinity.

CHAPTERS XX AND XXI.

The parable respecting the laborers in the vineyard is just calculated to teach us that if the Lord rewards His holy servants, it will be the reward of grace, and not of debt. There appears to be no meritorious exalted seats in heaven—the saints will be equal to the angels, and who would desire more? In the twentieth chapter, we have an account of the spirit of episcopacy, making an early attempt. Two ministers desired the Lord to grant unto them supremacy, or the highest seats of power and honor in the Messiah's Church, or kingdom. Hear the answer, saying, "You know not what you ask." Can you be next to me in my kingdom? They answered in the positive. He granted their petition, according to His wisdom, whereby they were answered according to their folly, viz: that they should drink of the cup of his sore affliction, and have the honor of his bloody baptism; but there should be no lordly prelates in the gospel kingdom, and unless there be some private interpretation in our Lord's word, the order of ministers above a presbyter is from the corruption of the assuming human heart, and is repugnant to the divine orders of Jesus Christ, saying, "It shall not be so among you." It appears the holy, inspired apostles left the care and charge of the Churches with the elders, with orders for them not to think of acting as lords over the people of God; also charged the people at large to take heed how they heard, but to prove and hold fast only what they found to be good. In verse 44, Christ is held under the similitude of a rock, on which some stumbled, and were broken; but on whom that rock falls, it will grind him! Those who stumble at the word through unbelief, they are sufferers thereby; but when the executive vengeance falls on a nation, or on an individual, it is the heavy vengeance of Almighty God falling on the obstinate unbelievers. From such a storm, good Lord, deliver us! Dear reader, pause!

CHAPTER XXII.

Here we have an account of a supper, a call, and the need of a wedding garment. The supper is the saving, nourishing, living substance of the precious gospel. The call is the merciful invitation to come to Christ for life.

But it appears there must be a preparation previous to the participation; and not only an external reform, but a preparation of the heart.

What this wedding garment is, becomes a subject of serious consideration. This dress is given under the similitude of white raiment (Rev. 3:18), and in Rev. 19:8, this dress is compared to fine linen, even the righteousness of the saints. A saint signifies one who is sanctified in Christ Jesus. Isaiah 42:1 and 49:10 calls this garment the garment of salvation, or the beautiful garment, i. e., holiness. The way to state it is to call it the righteousness of saints. As saint signifies one sanctified, and those who are sanctified are justified, therefore it appears to be justification by faith, and sanctification through faith in the promises, whereby the soul, by a divine influx, partakes of the divine nature in a measure; and so far they are sanctified and feel peace with God. Some of the former expositors have introduced the way of righteousness, which, if correct, I am utterly in the dark respecting this robe. It is published that this robe is the righteousness of Jesus Christ; that is to say, his active and passive obedience being imputed to the believers. To this doctrine, I have four principal objections. First, this robe could not be defiled (see Rev. 3:4). "Who have not defiled their garments," etc., and our Lord's righteousness cannot be defiled. Secondly, the righteousness of Christ is divine, and cannot be improved, and it is written that those who are admitted into glory have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb (Rev. 7:14). Thirdly, should I accede to the doctrine of this imputed righteousness, I must be an Arian in principle, believing that Jesus and the Father are not one, but two; and that the great God imputes the righteousness of the Son, as the subordinate being, to the creature man. Whereas, the Son sayeth, the Father and I are one. Fourthly, the divine Saviour thought it not robbery to be equal with God (Phil. 2:6). Therefore, there must be two Gods of equal dignity, and then there would be no Supreme. If the righteousness of Christ be equal to the Father, he who claims such a righteousness must be as righteous as God, by imputation, which is blasphemy. If one divine attribute were imputed to a creature, it would sink him in a moment. But if he could live under it, he would stand in no need of divine intercession, nor would his conduct make against him, nor for him, nor would the believer be judged according to his, but the Saviour's works. It is written, "The Lord our righteousness" (Jer. 23). But it is written in the original, "Jehova justitia nostra," i. e., "Jehovah our righteousness." For by and from Jesus Jehovah, we receive all the wisdom, grace and righteousness that we possess, yet we need continual intercession. David gives us light on this subject, where he thus speaketh of God, "I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart" (Psa. xl:10). I presume that the Baptist Church holds the doctrine of Christ's righteousness imputed to believers, and their sins were imputed to him. They lay a great stress on believer's baptism by immersion, as an indispensable duty, and as a preparative to the Lord's table, after obtaining the divine favor. Let a man examine himself, and so eat (Paul). What, examine himself whether he be in the faith, or if he ever was immersed under water! Judge ye. Water baptism cannot be the wedding garment. This is saying too much about common water. He who is unworthy of a seat at the Lord's table on earth, were he to offer to take a seat in the high Church above, would soon be ousted. Yet they encourage those whom we refuse to feed, by assuring them that if once justified, that justification is irrevocable. Moreover, if believers have Christ's righteousness imputed to them, so is His baptism. Notice what He said to John the Baptist, as before observed. Towards the close of the twenty-second chapter, there stands important points of doctrine, even the grand essentials of the Christian religion, viz: the pure theology, that the Lord calls the foremost of all His commands; which is the law of faith, the pure faith, a foundation for the additional improvement of Christian virtues; and therefore it need be a very pure faith: and thus it stands on record, viz: the Lord thy God is one Lord (Deut. 6:4; Mark 12:29). Therefore, the divinity and humanity constitutes one adorable Lord God. God and his Christ are one, like the soul and body of a man. And this one Lord must be loved supremely, with the whole heart, soul and strength. But if you divide the Father and Son, you cannot love both with the whole heart; then your heart must be divided. But when you firmly believe the divinity in the humanity, and the humanity in the divinity, then may you love the Lord thy God with an undivided heart. As to thy fellow-creature, do by him as you would have him to treat you—this doctrine is constitutional. But where is the Holy Ghost called the third person in the trinity? That Holy Spirit is the Lord in operation. These are the three grand essentials of the one Lord God. Jesus calls Himself the root and offspring of David. The God of David and the son of David.

CHAPTERS XXIII AND XXIV.

These sections contain the prophecies respecting the ruin of poor Jerusalem, after their days of grace were past. The divine Judge had to announce the sentence which the divine law awards against rebels, gospel slights, and murderers—this the blessed Redeemer did with tears. The fall of the Jews, and the end of the world, appear greatly to correspond. The Son coming in awful clouds of wrath—stars, or leading men, falling—lights, as wandering stars, sinking into darkness—these were emblems of the last day. Many imposters did Satan send out in those days, if possible, to deceive the very elect. Read Josephus upon that dreadful day. As it was, so it is; he that endures faithful to the end, was, and will be, saved. Many who professed the Christian name, through fear, like Peter, denied the Christian name when life was at stake, which was denying of Christ. Paul caused the saints to blaspheme (Acts 16:11). The "History of Martyrs" says, when one of Christ disciples were brought out of prison to the stake or gibbet, they were examined for the last time, and the last interrogation was, "Art thou a Christian?" If he answered in the affirmative, death was his portion. Our Lord observed that those who denied Him before men, they would He deny before angels; for whoever thus sought to save life, should lose it forever. It was a bold step to be baptized in Christ's name, wherein they put on Christ, or the Christina name.

MONDAY.

OUR DIVINE FRIEND.

"Ye are my friends if ye do the things which I command you."—Jno. 15:14.

The word "friend" is one of the greatest words known to us. There are lots of good words, but none of them mean quite so much. "Sweetheart," "lover," are pictured by passion and natural desire. "Husband," "wife," "mother," "father," "brother," "sister," "child," are fine, but they depend for their character largely on natural relations and circumstances and are by volition and choice; perhaps mother comes closest to that of "friend" than any other.

"Companion," "comrade" and "associate" are good words, but they are casual and transitory, have but little depth or fineness of meaning, or have reference to but little more than some particular event or an association.

The word "friend" is sweet and deep and beautiful and rich. More than any other word in all the world it indicates the drawing together of two natures, without passion, artifice, ulterior motives, or selfish consideration.—Thoughts from Ralph M. Jones, of "The Baptist."

Prayer.—Our Father, as we go about our duties today, O help us to remember Thy friendship and that we are Thine. May we not simply know Thee as Lord, Saviour, our Redeemer, but as "Friend." In His name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE PROMISES OF A FRIEND.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."—Matt. 11:28

This friendship adds sweetness to our living as we trust in Him. It gives us needed strength and power. It rests us when we are weary. It takes up the load when we can go no farther.

"Let not your heart be troubled * * * I go to prepare a place for you."—John 14:1. Our friend is busy going along with us and preparing for us what we need, not for our living, but for what we shall need at the end of the road. This helps us sing, "What a friend we have in Jesus, all our sins and griefs to bear."

"We shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—John 3:2. Friends often become like each other in ideas, in spirit, in tendencies, and sometimes even much in appearances. We absorb the tastes, desires, dispositions and love of each other. We think certain traits and thoughts we have are our own until we think back and decide that we got them from some friend with whom we spent much time.

How wonderful that God's thoughts may become ours, His desires ours, our affections transformed into His, His will ours, His love ours, and His perfection in us more and more; all because of daily companionship with Him and that we have come to love and desire the things that He desires and loves.

Prayer.—Our Father, open to us the door and compel us to come in and sup with Thee, that we may have daily fellowship with Thee and partake of Thy nature. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CONQUERING SIN.

"Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth."—Col. 3:1-7.

That is the way to conquer sin. Our attitude toward all wrong must be total intolerance. It is not sin to be tempted. Christ was tempted in all points as we are, but He was without sin because He would not tolerate it. Sin begins in us when we consent to it. Stain your purity, dull your sense of right, and immediately your sense of right relations with God is broken. But, thanks be to God, that "If any man sin, he hath an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ." He restoreth my soul.

Prayer.—Our Father, come Thou and live in us and with Thy fullness counteract all sin in us. Give us Thy grace and vanish all evil. Fill our souls with Thy glory and make our scarlet souls white. Inspire our living and lay us on the altar for service. Save us from the coldness of a faith that never warms at the cross. Hide us in Thee forever, and thanks be to Thee who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

THURSDAY.

GOD'S WILL AND OURS.

"Not my will, but Thine be done."—Luke 22:41, 42.

"For whosoever shall do the will of my Father, the same is my brother, and my sister and my mother."—Mark 3:35.

"My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to accomplish His work."—John 4:34.

Whatever may be said about us being grown and mature, it remains that we are children still in a great many ways. Like children, we like the glitter, the glow and the thrill, and we strive much for the thing of little value, disregarding our highest well being and lasting happiness. We are absorbed in things of the senses and pleasures that soon pass away. Health, peace and happiness do not come from these, but from righteousness, holiness, love and right character.

Thus the Lord, wise and loving, refuses often our prayers, or takes away that which we so eagerly grasp. Pain or grief may come, and if resented it means disaster, but if taken trustfully and submissively it opens our hearts to the kindness of His direction and the riches of His storehouse. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."

Prayer.—Our Father, "Thy will be done in us as it is done in heaven," we pray Thee. Make us at all times submissive to Thy will, and sympathetic with all the sorrows of others and able to chase with Thee in their grief. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

KEEPING HIS WAYS.

"Blessed are they that walk in His ways."—Prov. 8:32.

Wisdom here calls us to a way of light and life today because it leads to God. Only those who walk that way can understand the blessedness of keeping that way. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the thing that God hath prepared for them that love Him." Neither can those on the outside, or traveling the ways of the world, see, hear or understand. Jesus says I give unto you all that has been given unto me, but "not as the world giveth" it.

It is not easy in His path. The world does attract us. Its ways do seem good. Fears arise, or our vision and understanding grows dim and vague. There are times when we can't hear the "still small voice." Real success is not easy in any true walk of life. This is our hope: God's way is always the right way. On His way, no matter what rises, we shall come out at last conquerors.

Prayer.—Our Father, forbid that we shall go along recklessly or blindly in any old way until disaster comes and opens our eyes by pain and suffering and the shame of defeat. Help us to cast all on Thee in whom is no element of chance, but assured victory. Forgive us our sins and save us this day. Amen.

SATURDAY.

BIG LITTLE THINGS.

"And as Jesus passed by, He saw a man which was blind * * * and He anointed the eyes * * * with clay * * * and He went * * * and washed, and came seeing."—John 9:1-7.

"And greater works than these shall ye do, because I go to my Father."—John 14:12.

When the people tried to make Jesus their King He refused. When they called upon Him to exercise His power to show forth the power of heaven He turned away. When He was tempted to exercise His power of miracle to satisfy selfish desires He turned His back upon it. These things had no fascination for Him. But He opened the eyes of the blind man, unstopped the ears of the deaf, sat by the woman of Samaria and forgave her sins, pitied Mary of Magdala and saved her soul, had compassion on bereaved people and gave comfort, helped obscure and nameless beggars, etc. He always had time to pause and lift his hand of blessing on the needy.

Jesus put ordinary human goodness, which is the genius of divinity, in things that others would pass by unnoticed. "He went about doing good."—Read Luke 10:30-37.

Jesus takes children in His arms when others push them outside. He uses the lunch of a nameless boy to feed the hungry and He tells us to be like that. "Go then and do likewise," and our work shall be greater than that, for to open the eyes of the spiritually blind, unstop the ears of those who are deaf to the gospel, and to raise the morally dead to life in Him, which is our task, is greater than physical service.

Prayer.—Our Father, give us vision to see the bigness of the little things. Give us renewal of faith in Thee which will strengthen the whole Church in Christian service. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

OUR UNSEEN FRIEND.

"Lo, I am with you always."—Matt. 28:16-20.

God is invisible, and the most things of Him are invisible. Sunday is the Lord's Day, and brings to us our opportunity to draw away from the material and live in a realistic way with the glory of His invisible self.

I know a certain blind man, see him almost every day, who walks the streets of this city amidst traffic and all that is going on, attends to his own counter and cash register, directing himself and his business better than some men with two good eyes. He even knows everybody by name who speaks to him. How can a totally blind man do this? The finer senses of his being are tuned completely to his environment, and his soul walks with an invisible friend that sticketh closer than a brother.

Amidst the tumults and troubles of this world we walk much like a blind man. Our path is often dark before us. We do not see the perils on our way, but we will walk straight, unafraid, boldly, rightly and with confidence, if we take Jesus with us and follow Him. No harm will come to us if we train our conscience and finer senses to His will.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for constant invisible help that makes no mistakes. We are ashamed that we do not rely on this as we should. Forgive us and lead us on our way. We ask it in the name of Christ. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our Easter offering is coming in very nicely. This week carries us on toward the first thousand dollars. We ought to have reached the first thousand this week and we had hoped to, but sometimes we get disappointed. I wish every member of our Churches and Sunday Schools could be an orphanage superintendent for just one week. In the future contributions would be cheerfully given and our hair would not turn gray so fast thinking how to meet our bills at the end of the month.

Don't forget the special Easter offering in your Church.

IN THE IMAGE OF GOD.

Creation is invisible, formation visible. We know not how long it was between the sovereign acts of human creation and formation. Certainly, as time now is computed, it was generations; it may have been ages. We do know that "all our members * * * in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them."

God is Creator, Father, Spirit. God is God. The Word says, "In the beginning God." That is enough! Jesus, the Son, the express image of, and eternal with, the Father, when He came to earth was given human form. Besides being our propitiation and Redeemer, Jesus was given for our example. He is our inalienable elder brother, our exact pattern, whose outward image we bear and whose perfect inward likeness, our having lost in the fall, through His coming to earth by way of nature even as we ourselves and His going back to God by way of atonement and the cross, we, by faith in that "new and living way," may regain.

Since sin came into the world, the natural, unregenerate life of every human being is a probation to the end sought and found in regaining the likeness of God and His Son when, for us real life begins. "When we awake with Thy likeness" need not mean when this life is over; it may mean any time, even now, or as soon as we will put ourselves in the attitude before God to receive and appropriate His grace in its fullness.

Through faith in Jesus now, who was made "like unto His brethren" and who once and for all, for every man, "put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself," we are restored to our original blessed estate in the image of God like unto when as yet there was "no rain upon the earth and there was not a man to till the ground."

MRS. J. J. LINCOLN.

Lawrenceville, N. J.

THE SILENT MISSIONARY.

"A number of years ago, when I was examining candidates for baptism, I became interested in an aged gentleman among them. I asked him how he came to know Christ. He replied that over twenty years ago, when at the age of sixty, he was taking the examination for a classical degree in Chengtu, each candidate on leaving the examination halls was presented with copies of the Gospels and another Christian book. Upon his return home, he read the books with great care, and became convinced that they told of the way of eternal life. Now, at the ripe age of eighty-six, he was uniting with the church. It was the Scriptures that led him to Christ; in due time the Word had borne its fruitage."

Mr. Lawrence says further: "I have come to consider Scripture distribution as an essential part of evangelistic work. As I travel extensively through the towns and villages, I sell the Gospel portions. I know of no other way in which the masses, conjointly with preaching, can receive the message of the Gospel. I carry such with me on every trip, and consider I have not done my duty unless I sow as I travel. The high prices of food and semi-famine conditions, with the flame of anti-foreign feeling that shot up in the summer, made many difficulties; but in spite of them the work of Scripture distribution has gone on.

"A boy of ten years, in one of the private day schools, purchased a portion of Scripture and took it home to his father. He was very angry, and reprimanded the son for buying a book that was of no value to him, and for spending money lavishly without the consent of his teacher and father. After the boy had returned to school, the father examined the book, and found so many helpful promises and invitations in it, that he sent word to the school to have the boy find the bookseller and purchase the other three Gospels. Now the entire family is reading the Bible, and they observe the family altar. 'And a little child shall lead them.'

"An old faithful Christian mother of seventy-eight years studies her Bible daily. She rented a chapel in which she worships daily and invites others to converse about the Word of God. A non-Christian school teacher became so interested in the Bible, that he purchased forty Gospel portions to distribute among his forty pupils. Daily they have Bible-reading and prayer. God's Word is being glorified. 'My Word shall not return unto me void!—My Word shall not pass away.' 'The entrance of Thy Word giveth light.'"—The Bible in China.

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Dear Kiddies:

A good friend of yours and your editor's has been sick. His name is Mr. Junius Harden, and his address is Burlington, N. C.

Now, dears, I want my Kiddies to write him a little letter—just like you wrote your editor when she was sick! Please do.

But I know you will, for Mr. Harden is one of our bestest friends! He loves our nice "Kiddie Korner" and you; and you are the Kiddies that make the Korner happy.

Here is a May-time story! And here comes an April shower. Run dears; don't get wet!

THE MOUSE RAN UP THE CLOCK

BY ETTA MAI RUSSELL.

Did you like "Jack Be Nimble" that you made from this page? Well, here is another Mother Goose picture to make. I know all girls and boys like Mother Goose and all her children. Here is

Hickory, dickory, dock,
The mouse ran up the clock;
The clock struck one,
The mouse ran down,
Hickory, dickory, dock.

There is a nice game about this mouse. Ask your teacher at school or kindergarten to teach you the game.

Before you begin you must have a pencil, some crayons, a pair of scissors, some drawing paper and a sheet of colored paper or a clean piece of cardboard.

Cut out first the patterns on this page. Trace around them on your drawing paper. Color the frame of the grandfather clock brown with black crayons. Color the pendulum brown, too. Color the face of the clock white with black figures for the hands. Color the mouse black.

Now cut them all out. Paste the frame of the clock on your colored paper. Paste the pendulum marked A at the place on the frame marked B. Put a little paste on the back of the face of the clock and paste it on B over the pendulum. Paste the mouse on the spot marked C. Now you have a picture to hang in your playroom with "Jack Be Nimble."

HELGI CARVES A REINDEER.

BY EMILY H. CHASE.

Helgi and his little sister were sitting on a large, flat stone which hung over a tiny waterfall. Helgi had a piece of reindeer bone clutched in his hand, and he was trying to draw on it with an old boat nail. He worked and worked and tried so hard to make a picture that the big red tassel on the top of his tight blue cap bobbed up and down with his effort. Helgi's little sister was just as busy. In the full, short skirt of her blue tunic, that was trimmed gayly with red and yellow embroidery lay a huge bunch of buttercups. She was twisting a chain of the flowers as she watched Helgi work.

"I don't think that looks like a reindeer," she advised. "It ought not to have so many legs."

"But those aren't legs," Helgi said between strokes. "See, the reindeer has his head down. He is eating grass. I shall draw some mountains behind his head. That will show that he is at his summer grazing place."

"That's right," his sister said. "The reindeer do go high into the mountains to feed now. The grass is fresher there than around the tents."

"Perhaps if all the reindeer had not gone to the mountains, I could draw one better." Helgi puzzled over the bone he was carving. "If the reindeer were here now, I could look hard at one of them, and then draw what I saw, couldn't I?"

"Yes, and perhaps it would look more like a reindeer. But why don't you draw buttercups?"

There are plenty of them right here." The little sister held up her bouquet.

"I like reindeer better; flowers are for girls," said Helgi.

"O look!" the little sister said suddenly, grabbing Helgi's arm.

"A reindeer! In the water! Why, it's old Snorre, father's best one. What do you suppose he's left the mountain pasture for?"

Maybe he was lonesome for us, Helgi."

Most of the men who enter Southern Railway service make it their life's calling

a man's job

THERE is no occupation in the world which is more exacting in its demands on the individual than railroading. That is why the world over the term "railroad man" denotes men of character, trustworthiness and useful citizenship.

But if the demands on the individual railroad man are great, so are the opportunities. The men with the responsibilities of leadership on the Southern today have grown up with the railroad.

To handle the greater traffic of the growing South expeditiously, economically and dependably, the Southern needs the best men of the South.

Railroading has always attracted the best type of citizenship. And it always will. It is a man's job.

"No, I think he wanted to eat buttercups. See, he's eating all of yours that fell into the brook."

The children called to the big old reindeer, who came out of the water to them, and together they led him into the very center of a huge field of buttercups.

"Were you really lonesome in the mountains, Snorre?" Helgi's sister put her hands up and stroked his short new antlers.

"Now eat as much as you want," said Helgi, "and when night comes we'll take you home to the tent and father will lead you back to the mountains where the grass is fresh and tender in the morning."

"Here is a buttercup chain for your antlers, Snorre. Now it's on a real reindeer, not just a shoe. And Helgi can carve you with it on."

So the two little Lapp children sat down again on the flat stone. Helgi worked and worked, and his sister watched him and told him when the drawing did not look like old Snorre.

Helgi tried to draw his reindeer just as Snorre looked, then he cut away all the bone from around the drawing. Finally the bone was shaped into a spoon with a grating reindeer for a handle. If you looked at it hard, you could see that the carved reindeer was very much like Snorre.

When it was all finished and white, Helgi and his little sister rode back to the tents on Snorre's back. Helgi had his precious spoon clasped tight in his hand, and his little sister was leaning forward sleepily on Snorre's broad antlers, from which the chain of buttercups still hung. When his mother saw the spoon Helgi had carved, she said she was sure that some day he would be one of the greatest sculptors in all Lapland.—Boys and Girls.

There is no waste in nature. When a material object has served its purpose, it passes into another form to serve some other purpose. God Himself is economical. Let us take a lesson from God and nature and learn to make use of the things that God has given us—to use them and not to misuse them or waste them.

untrained for leadership. They have revolted, but they have not reconstructed their thinking. They are vigorous in criticism and denunciation, but do not know how to achieve efficiency. The real leader of the church must be taught how to study the actual conditions which he confronts. He should be familiar with the facts and laws of social change. Without being an expert scientist, he should have at least a knowledge of what science is doing for human welfare. He must lead men and women who are doing things. He is no champion of outgrown causes. He cannot persuade the members of the rising generation to live the lives of their grandfathers, and they could not if he should.

Bethlehem College has no interest in producing dilettantes—it seeks to train its students for spiritual leadership. It has no desire to dominate their beliefs or to force them into predetermined piety, but it seeks to show them the way to the development of a strong, individual, religious experience. The work of the classroom, while as rigorously intellectual as possible, is intended to minister to the religious life. The religious leader whom the college seeks to produce is one trained in a sense of reality, in efficiency, and contagious faith.

Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in speaking of Dr. Scott's new book, published by The Macmillan Company, New York, says: "I have greatly enjoyed Dr. Scott's 'First Age of Christianity.'" Dr. Scott has rare skill in showing how various historical factors relate themselves to one another. His discussions of the early days of Christianity is so well-proportioned that the reader feels himself carried along by the total movement of the Church's early life. I think of this book as sound and wholesome in every way. It is a marvel not so much of compression as of compendious and succinct statement, which makes the reader feel that he is standing some where near the center of that early church life as it moved along from one stage to another."

The League of Nations Advisory Commission on Child Welfare, has adopted a resolution providing for the creation of central censorship boards in each country having League membership, to protect children from undesirable moving-pictures and to encourage films which develop the child's education.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. S. M. LYNAM.

Radio Census.—

Recently, a check-up was made by city employees of the Borough of Queens, a division of New York City, and it was found that in this borough alone there were 34,994 radio sets. In 1920, there were less than half a million people in this division of New York; so figuring on that basis, how many radios are there in the United States.

Some Alarming Figures.—

The public must revel in sensational slush, if the declared circulation of three New York sensational sheets are to be accepted as correct. The News claims a million daily, and the Mirror asserts that it circulates to the extent of three hundred and thirty thousand, while the Evening Graphic comes last with only a hundred and ninety thousand. When we think of the stuff these sheets are feeding the American public, it is enough to alarm the most tolerant person.

Summing Up a Pastorate.—

In summing up the work of a pastor just leaving a field, the writer declared that during his stay he had wrought well. He had received six hundred, married a few more than eight hundred, and conducted the funerals of a thousand. That was all. If the man did nothing else, had he wrought actably? That is a question which many of our pastors need to face. We are of the opinion that it is not enough to preach to the living who come to church, to marry those wishing to be so involved, and to say the service over those who die. A pastor must do more than that, good as that is, and his tasks cannot be enumerated, but certain it is that they are broadening out over vast fields of service and interest.

The Installment Business.—

Governor Norris of the Philadelphia Reserve Bank points out that 85 to 90 per cent of all furniture, 80 per cent of all phonographs, and 75 per cent of all automobiles and washing machines are now being sold on the installment plan. It is now possible to purchase an automobile by paying an initial installment of twelve dollars. The Federal Reserve Bank of Boston shows that the installment accounts in that district last November were 110 per cent larger than they were twelve months earlier. It is pointed out that keen competition, easy money conditions, and over production are causes for this condition. It is easy, under the present conditions, to overload oneself with accounts on easy terms. It may have its advantages, but it certainly has its dangers as well, and against to much debt the individual must carefully guard himself. This is particularly true as it applies to the luxuries of life.

Yet Unexplained.—

The recent death of the beautiful actress, Barbara LaMarr, cost her producer about a quarter of a million dollars. Her pictures have been carefully folded and laid away in the studio, because the producers know that the public will not look at a dead actress's pictures. This aversion of the movie going public has been demonstrated time after time in the case of other actors. John Bunny, the old time comedian was the first to demonstrate it. The Vitagraph interests thought sure that his reputation would carry him on in public favor, but the public would have no more of him. Wallace Reed shared a similar fate, and so did poor little Olive Thomas. The public just will not look at the shadowy smiles of a departed presence. Which brings about the thing which is still unexplained. The public will listen to a dead man's music, will read a dead man's books, will admire a dead man's painting, and in other ways enjoy the works of those who are dead, and this the movie men cannot understand, but they know that things are as they are, and so they laid away the costly picture in which Barbara LaMarr had been starred, and listed its cost under the profit and loss column.

God, the Creator.—

Despite all of the predictions that man is fast travelling the way of perdition, and despite all of the imaginary differences between science—true science—and religion; the world and man are coming to know God more intimately than in times past. John Archibald MacCallum, in his new book, "The Great Partnership," attempts to find why we have been so backward in our search for God. He says: "One of the great weaknesses of the human mind is to seek for a resting place and when it is found to look upon it as final. Thus the idea has been widely accepted that the creation was finished long ago. The truth is that creation is an endless process. God is still making man, and a little reflection will show that the divine Artist has yet far to go before he can look upon his work with thorough satisfaction. In the movement of the wind and tide, in the change of the seasons, the growth of flowers, the flight of birds; in the development of the horse from an animal no larger than the fox in far-off prehistoric days, the creative impulse is at work. God is the ground of every prayer and aspiration, of every struggle for purity and moral worth, no less today than when man first became a living soul." We may not agree with all that this author says, but his thoughts may well be considered. If you wish to read the book, you can obtain it from the George H. Doran Company.

Would Eliminate Drones.—

Prof. E. A. Ross of the University of Wisconsin would, if he were president, eliminate the loafers from that university, he declares. It would take two thousand, he declares. It would take two thousand might be induced to work. In other words, according to Prof. Ross, the University of Wisconsin has in its extraordinarily large student body about three thousand loafers. He would put out the flask carriers also. Prof. Ross thinks that as he would conduct the University he might last possibly three months. Whether he would last or not, it would be an excellent thing for our colleges and universities if we could secure presidents with his convictions and who dared to put these convictions into practice. We used to spend our time urging young people to go to college, but now we do not have that to do. To go to college is the proper thing, the fashionable thing, and every body goes who possibly can. It may be well, but it is likewise dangerous, for too many as well as too few may go to college, and the worthless elements of a student body should some how be eliminated as Prof. Ross suggests. Unless they go to school with a serious purpose, they should be out in the world producing something, or, at least not hindering the work of those who would make the most of their opportunities.

League of Nations Adjourns.—

The League of Nations has adjourned until September. It seems to have experienced considerable embarrassment over the proposition to admit Germany to membership. Brazil is understood to have objected, and Poland, whose safety was assured only a few years ago, clamored for special recognition. However these things are only on the surface, and we think the hidden hand which has always tried to rule Europe has had its part. A successful league of nations means a world committed to democratic methods. That, of course, is against the views that have so long controlled and brought so many scars to Europe. The temporary embarrassment of the league has brought glee to the opposers of it in the United States—but they are not all. Mussolini sent out a statement in which he declared in substance that it marked the failure of the democratic principle in Europe and opened the way for the methods of the dictator and of war. Whether this happening to the league will really be a back-set remains to be seen. But if it should prove so, it will force Europe to go back to the old "balance of power" methods. It will halt the disarmament program of the nations and destroy the only effective check to war in sight. The World War will be disappointed. However we do not expect the League of Nations to fail. Great causes cannot be killed.—Exchange.

NOTES-PERSONALS

We are sorry to learn of the sickness of our brother, Rev. J. D. Wicker of Sanford, N. C., We wish that he may be speedily restored to health and strength.

The booklet by Dr. D. A. Long, entitled "The Place of Jefferson Davis in History," has been placed on library list for South Carolina by the State Board of Education for that State. This is recognition of a very meritorious production.

His wounds are wounds of honor, made beautiful by the great love they prove. When we see how true this is, it gives us great courage, too. A young French soldier lying in a hospital said, as he looked at a picture of Jesus crucified: "I do not feel my wounds when I look upon His."

The address of Rev. D. P. Jones, our first missionary to Japan, is 3259 Encinal Avenue, Alameda, Calif. Should any CHRISTIAN SUN readers write him it will be appreciated. Brother Jones is now seventy-seven, but active in the service of the Lord, and hopes that he may visit the South some time this year.

The Southern Convention is more of a business body engaged in financial interests and investments for the kingdom than it is a legislative and deliberative body. The delegation is not large—not even as large as it should be—but some feel that it is large enough in proportion to its constituency, because it is a business body and has much routine business to transact.

Dr. W. A. Harper gives a glowing account of the great Birmingham International Convention, and feels that some constructive work was done not only in behalf of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavors, but in behalf of religious education in general, as it pertains to the life of youth in particular. Our Christian denomination had about thirty representatives present, though Dr. Harper felt that it would have been far better for the Church if we could have had at least one hundred present.

The Southern Convention is in session at Durham this week. This body owns THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the Christian Orphanage, Elon and Bethlehem Colleges, and promotes missionary work at home and abroad. Since great financial interests are at stake and the Convention has large investments both in men, women, institutions and enterprises, its sessions are of far-reaching import to the Church and mean much in the history and progress of the Church. If it plans well and wisely, the Church prospers; if unwell and unwisely, the Church suffers.

A kind personal letter from Rev. D. P. Barrett, Ponce, Porto Rico, contains these words of interest to SUN readers: "Glad to say we are on the job. Prospects for a good year seem pretty good. Our Sunday School in Ponce averaged 208 attendance during January, and we are in a good way to average about the same number in February. We are about as well as usual, although the malaria has been and is still in some parts of our field, Salinas especially." They do not have blizzards, and freezes in Porto Rico, but they have that which is worse, mosquitoes at Christmas time, and malaria always."

The following from our good brother, Rev. J. E. Franks, Route 4, Raleigh, N. C., is so typical of many experiences, we give it: "We will send up at least a small offering from each Church of my charge for the Emergency Mission Fund. There offerings, I am sorry to say, are shamefully small, and yet I have made the effort of my life in trying to lay the matter on the heart of our people. I trust, however, that the awakening which our dear Church so much needs on this great subject (so much neglected) is in sight. Otherwise, the growth and development of our cause must continue to be very slow." Brother Franks gets at the heart of the matter in that.

Brother Lafayette Curling, in writing of the South Norfolk work, has the following to say: "Now, to Brother Scholz: When I met you, I did not realize what good organizing a Christian Church in South Norfolk would do but we did organize a Christian Church in South Norfolk. Then came Brother Cox, followed by Brother Keys, and after him, then, Brother Lassiter. Then came Brother Poythress, and by the help of the Lord we have been compelled to build a church to accommodate the congregation. It was a big undertaking, but we have been blessed in many ways in building our church. By the help of the Lord and the hard work of Brother Poythress and the good people throughout the community, we expect to have our opening services on Sunday, May 9th. Brother Poythress has had a hard struggle, and if he had not been red-headed, I expect he would have been gray-headed by now." Brother Curling is right. Brother O. D. Poythress has had an arduous struggle; but he himself will testify that it has been well worth while. He has done a wonderful work for the local church, for his city, his State, and the whole Christian Church

SHE GAVE HERSELF.

A Highland widow, unable to pay the rent, was threatened with eviction. She set out one day with her only child to walk ten miles over the mountain to the home of friends who were able to help her. When she started the weather was warm and bright, but on the mountain she was caught in a terrible snow storm. She never reached her destination. She was found the next day at the summit of the pass, where the storm was fiercest, lying in the snow, stripped almost to nakedness, dead. In a sheltered nook near by was her child, safe and well, wrapped in the clothes his mother had taken from her own body.

Many years later the son of the minister who conducted that mother's burial service, himself a minister, was taking the evening worship in a Glasgow church. The night was stormy with snow. The congregation was small. The circumstances of the weather recalled the story he had often heard his father tell of that mother's love, and instead of preaching the sermon he had prepared, the minister told the story, and I suppose, dwelt upon its lessons.

Some days later he was called to the bedside of a dying man, whom he did not recognize. The man, however, said to him: "You do not know me, but I know you. I have lived in Glasgow many years. I have never attended a church. The other day I happened to pass your door as the snow came down. I heard the singing and slipped into a back seat. There I heard the story of the widow and her son." Then with great emotion, he added: "I am that son. Never did I forget my mother's love, but I never saw the love of Christ in giving Himself for me until now. It was God made you tell that story. My mother did not die in vain. Her prayer is answered."

The day came when, in his sore necessity, that seed germinated; and the divinity of her sacrifice came home to him and led him to understand, as he had never done before, the love of God which is in Jesus Christ our Lord.—Norman Macleod.

SOUTH GEORGIA.

Dear Brother Editor:

Monday night, April 12th, we began a revival at Ambrose, with Rev. J. D. Dollar assisting us. He brought to us a message each evening with his usual ability, simplicity and directness. We are very grateful to this worthy and consecrated man of God for his untiring and devoted efforts put forth while in our midst. He made many friends while here, as a man of his type usually does, regardless of where he may labor.

Attendance and interest were real good throughout the meeting, but due to the fact that just now is a very busy season with the farmers in this section, attendance was not as good as it might have been at other seasons of the year. I feel that much good was accomplished and that the seed sown during the meeting will spring up and bring forth fruit to be harvested before the year shall come to a close. The services were concluded last Sunday night. There were no additions to the Church.

I am greatly enjoying my work here in South Georgia. Many new experiences have come my way since I came here, and among them all, not one has been very unpleasant. I greatly appreciate the many kindnesses shown me and my family by the people of this section. We have been kindly remembered in purse and eatables. May God richly bless every one who has contributed to our needs in any way. I am resting assured that a goodly number of people in the Southern Christian Convention are remembering us in their daily petitions to the Lord who loveth and hearth all.

We are trying to do our bit towards the enterprises of our Church. We have not yet been able to do anything in a large way, but we hope to be able some day to measure arms with some of our stronger Churches. It was a real pleasure for the Churches here to contribute to the Emergency Mission Fund and to the Easter offering for the Orphanage.

Interest in the work at Enigma is growing steadily. The bad weather has hindered us some there, but I have fairly good attendance at preaching services on Sundays. We have been trying to have three services there each month—every first Sunday and Saturday night before.

I am very much pleased with the work at Vanceville. Attendance is always good there. We have a real live Sunday School with an average attendance of about sixty or seventy. Another thing that interests me there is that the young people of the community are regular attendants at Church and Sunday School. They meet once a month in the singing society. I always feel at home when I go to Vanceville, for remember that the community is made up largely of alabamians. It is a real pleasure to be in their midst.

Our Sunday Schools have already appointed delegates to attend our S. S. & C. E. Convention, which convenes at North Highlands Christian Church, Columbus, Ga., May 29th and 30th. We hope to be well represented from South Georgia.

I regret that I will not be able to attend the Convention at Durham, N. C. I feel the need of being there, but cannot. I pray that you may have the best session ever.

May God bless you and the dear Christian Church with all of her laborers. Remember us in South Georgia.

Yours for service,
S. D. LANKFORD.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CHURCH ASSETS AND DIVIDENDS.

All of us invest whatever funds may fall into our hands in some institution, enterprise, or interest. "We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out." We invest all that we ever get in something. We speak of "giving" to the Church, but never speak of giving to our bank, or to our grocer, or to our factory. We make investments in these. If we bring the matter to the last analysis, we invest also what we claim "to give" to the Church. We are really making an investment in the Church, and we expect returns in some form, either here or hereafter. Our Lord was speaking of this when He said: "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal, for where your treasure is there will your heart be also." He wanted us to invest something in the Church and in the kingdom in order that our heart might be put there also.

Have we ever considered how absolutely safe all these investments are that we make in the Church? Have we ever rightly considered what a safe and secure enterprise the Church is as an institution in which we may safely invest?

There is no other institution or enterprise on earth with such sure and safe assets as the Church. When we put our money in a bank we like to feel that the assets are there; are safe and secure. There is no institution as safe and secure as the Church. For of this, and this only, is it said: "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." When we invest in the Church we place our money in an institution that will not "go broke." One may not feel that one can invest much in the Church. This is the only absolutely safe enterprise or institution in which one can invest. It has not been said of any business, a bank, the home, the school, or the State "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." But it has been said of the Church. The Church does not "break" and will never "fail."

Through the assets of the Church one is able to become world-wide in one's benevolence and benefits. The Church makes every individual in it a world figure. It permits personal power to go out from each person to all the world. God was so moved by the love of the world that He made it possible for me also to be so moved—and to give to all the world.

One may not be willing to invest much of one's earnings in the Church, but God invested His only Son in it, and then that Son in turn invested His only life in it. God deemed it worth His while to invest His Son in it! The Son deemed it worth His while to lay down His life for it—to invest all He had in it. This is a greater asset than any other institution on this earth has had. How much of the reader's life, love, service, assets are being invested in the Church?

Moreover, the returns have been larger than those from any other investment in the world. "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" It was through the Church your soul was won to Christ. And it is through the Church we are winning the whole world to Christ. The assets of the Church are invested in world-wide salvation and will draw larger, greater dividends than any other holdings or dividends on this earth. No! what we "give" to the Church is not gone from us to make us the poorer. It is an investment we have made in the soundest and most unbreakable institution on this earth; and it yields for us larger dividends than any other investment we ever have made or ever will make. OUR EMERGENCY MISSION FUND.

Remittances for this fund are still coming in, and there are many Churches yet to report. The report to April 15th was in last week's Sun and we will give the report to April 30th in next week's SUN. In remitting from four of his Churches, Rev. A. W. Andes, who is always faithful in the discharge of pastoral duties and activities, writes: "I have been very much disappointed that these amounts from my Churches are not larger. Bad weather and roads have hindered very much, but, of course, the lack of a missionary vision and passion have hindered more." Brother Andes, in this statement, reveals a situation that many, if not most, of our pastors have discovered. We are yet lacking in missionary vision and zeal. There are some two or three pastors from whom we have not yet heard, and it may be that they are working to increase the offering in their Churches.

It is difficult to believe that there is a pastor in the whole Convention so completely without vision and the spirit of missions as to be unwilling for his people to take an offering of some size for missions. The most helpful feature in our Emergency Fund Campaign has not been the total amount of gifts sent in, but the universal expression of interest and good will on the part of pastor and people.

Our people have not had an opportunity of missionary information. They have been willing, many of them, to sing with heart and enthusiasm, "What a friend we have in Jesus." But they have not yet learned that unwritten song which every Christian should have in his or her heart, "What a friend Jesus has in me." This is that which our Lord wants most of all in the world. He knows already that He is our Friend; we do not have to sing that nor tell it to Him as a matter of information. What we do need to sing and to tell is that Jesus has in us a friend that may be counted on to help make His friendship known to the world.

Jesus asked Peter three times if he loved Him. Peter answered each time in the affirmative, but with each answer there followed the command, "Feed my sheep." That is to say, "Since with word of mouth you profess to love me, prove it by going out and making me known to others, that they too may love me." It is easy to say that Jesus loves us, and equally as easy to say that we love Him; but what Jesus demands is the proof. Now, missionary endeavor simply means proof positive that we love Jesus, in that we are seeking to give others the same privilege of loving Him and being loved by Him that we ourselves have had. Through our Emergency Fund we are seeking to prove our love to Jesus and to show Him that we are not selfish in our friendship; but, as He was given to save the world, we, as His friends, are willing to give also to make Him known to the world. MISSIONARY RALLIES.

The missionary rallies in the various districts of the North Carolina Conference for women were well attended and much was accomplished. A previous editorial gave an account of the one at Liberty, Vance, April 3rd. The one following this was at Sanford, N. C., Sunday, April 4th, which we learned was exceedingly successful and largely attended. The editor was not privileged to be present, greatly to his regret. Ingram Church entertained the Halifax, Virginia, District Saturday, April 10th. More societies were represented in this district than heretofore. Mrs. T. W. Chandler was the superintendent of this district, and Miss Pattie Adams acted as secretary. Rev. Fred Wright, pastor of Pleasant Grove and Ingram Churches, was present and added interest and service to the occasion. Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, president of the North Carolina Woman's Board, and Miss Gertrude Browne, secretary, were both present and gave splendid addresses and much helpful information and many suggestions. The women of the Church spread a bountiful luncheon which was greatly enjoyed. A letter was read from Miss Elsie Bray, now teaching at Rocky Ford, Carroll County, Va. Miss Bray is a member of this district, and this was the first rally she had missed. The women were delighted to hear of the good work she is doing in Carroll County. An executive committee was elected, whose business it will be to endeavor to increase the attendance at the rally next year, and to carry out the program that may be planned by the State board.

On Wednesday, the 14th, Shallow Ford was hostess to the Alamance District. The day was very inclement, and there was a funeral at the Church in the afternoon. However, the attendance was good and the meeting was interesting. Mrs. J. B. Montgomery, Graham, N. C., is the superintendent of this district and is deeply concerned for the woman's missionary work both in her own Church and throughout her district. Mrs. L. L. Vaughan and Miss Browne were present and made addresses. Dr. G. O. Lankford, of Burlington, N. C., and Dr. W. S. Alexander, of Elon College, N. C., added to the occasion greatly to the delight and gratitude of the women of the district. Though the session was brief, the women felt that much was accomplished. The Shallow Ford women were delighted. We have here some very faithful ones who are exceedingly interested in every missionary endeavor.

On Thursday, April 15th, the Guilford-Forsythe District met at Pleasant Ridge. Mrs. Wicker, of Greensboro, is the very capable and enthusiastic leader of this district, and Mrs. Harden, of Greensboro, is equally as interested and adds much to the work not only in her official capacity as secretary, but is ambitious for the success of the work in her district. An executive committee of three was elected in this district to carry out the purposes and plans of the State board and to seek through publicity and visitation to secure attendance at the missionary rally from every Church in the district. Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro, and Rev. R. A. Whitten, of Reidsville, than whom we have no pastors more deeply interested in missions, were present and gave many helpful thoughts and suggestions. Mrs. Vaughan and Miss Browne were also present and added much to the joy and delight of the day.

The Pleasant Ridge people spread a sumptuous feast, and all present regretted that the entire district was not there to enjoy the feast of good fellowship with those who were there. Pleasant Ridge has a local society not a year old that has done wonderful work, and its president, Mrs. MacFarland, added much to the services of the day by her presence and discussions. It was a great, good day at Pleasant Ridge.

On Saturday, the 17th instant, the Wake-Johnson District met with our Raleigh Church. Mrs. L. L. Vaughan acted as president, and Miss Ruth Johnson as secretary. Rev. S. C. Harrell, of Durham, N. C.; Dr. W. D. Parry, of Raleigh; Rev. B. J. Harward, of Chapel Hill, N. C.; Rev. P. T. Klapp, of Elon College, N. C., were the pastors present who very much encouraged the women, not only with their presence, but with very timely talks and discussions of the programs. The Raleigh Society entertained the delegates and visitors at a beautiful luncheon in the dining-room of the Church. The reports for the societies represented showed lively interest in the work. This district, while it has some very enthusiastic societies, has a very large number of Churches not organized. An executive committee was elected, charged with the duty of trying to interest the Churches, not now having societies, in missionary work. It is an evident fact that no Church, seemingly, can have the missionary vision and activity that does not have a Woman's Missionary Society. This may seem strange, but the facts in the case will substantiate this statement.

The North Carolina Conference was at Ramseur on Sunday, the 18th. It was regrettable that no pastors of this district were present. The meeting on Sunday, they were doubtless at their various appointments; but the women greatly desire and appreciate the presence of pastors in these annual meetings. Prof. L. L. Vaughan, of Raleigh, and Mrs. Vaughan, assisted in the work of the occasion and helped to make the service informational and worth while. Mrs. Cornelison was the superintendent of this district, and her message at the opening of the session was certainly timely and showed her deep concern for the welfare of the work. Miss Gertrude Browne acted as secretary and also made an interesting address. The Church bountifully entertained the rally and all present seemed to get much out of the services of the day.

These rallies that the women are having are working in the right direction and for a great and good cause. It is the leaven that will leaven the lump. It carries the work to those who need and desire it most, and in the years to come will be a great feature in our Church life and activity. Our faithful women have discovered that the power of the Church is the power of Jesus Christ which supports and sustains His great commission, "Go, ye, into all the world." The women are fighting the battles of the Lord through their missionary endeavor in the Church, and we will discover one day, if we have not already, that the Woman's Missionary Society is not only the right hand of the pastor and the Church, but is the very heart and soul of Church life and activity.

CREDITABLE GAINS.

We are now passing through the period set by the General Board of the Christian Convention for emphasis on the work of the Department of Evangelism and Life Service. Since the inauguration of this department at Burlington three years ago, creditable gains in membership have been made, as the graph will show.

Not only has this gain in membership been reached, but the subject of evangelism has a new place in our thought, and one of the finest of evangelistic programs has been developed to be found among any of the denominations. Our program is highly commended by those who have had an acquaintance with it.

The statistics in the columns below show the Southern Convention to be alive to the subject of evangelism. They are taken from The Christian Annual, 1926, showing gains and losses in membership for 1925.

A goal should be set at the next quadrennial convention worthy of great faith in the saving power of Christ and commensurate with the needs of lost men. In persuading men to accept Christ, we are not only instrumental in saving their souls, but we multiply propagandists for our glorious principles, and create a larger field for Kingdom work, more givers for missions, more families from which to secure students and funds for our colleges, a larger constituency to use our publications, and in fact to do a bigger business in every way for the Kingdom of Christ in the world.

"IF 'TWERE DONE WHEN 'TWERE DONE."
BY OUR ORIENTING EDITOR.

This is the cry of disappointment, if not of despair, which rises after every human achievement, with the realization that the fortune is as hard to keep as it was to gain, that the election won this year must be won again in one, two or four years, that the temptation overcome today must be reconquered tomorrow and the day after and every day.

The minister, the missionary and the mother are the especial successors in our day of Sisyphus, without his guilt. If only the five hundred or fifteen hundred members of the congregation would "stay put" and let the preacher concentrate his energies on winning other souls! Even those who neither get offended nor grow cold finally die or move to other communities. Most critics of

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The most universal and the most useful thing is money. One does not go far in line before the financial question forces itself upon human necessity and responsibility. More people strive after money than any other one thing. The question pops up at every turn of the road of life, and all values, including service, are measured by the simple medium of exchange. The individual, the home, business, industry, the State, the nation, the school, the Church—all are not only interested, but forced to deal with this simple, complex, world-wide question. Of all the problems, finance is the most perplexing, no matter whether concerned with large sums or small sums, large obligations or small obligations. In fact, it takes hold of those who have none. "The love of money is the root of all evil." (1 Tim. 6:12.) It is not the possession of money, but the love of money that "is the root of all evil"; and one can love money without having a cent. People sometimes think of rich people as loving money—and some of them do; but poor people love money, too. Children seem instinctively to love money, and age does not destroy such love.

The question of finance grows in importance with the growth of the Church and the growth of business and the nation. Luke says in 16:8: "The children of this world are in this generation wiser than the children of light." It may be that the people of God do not give thought enough to finance, while the children of this world pay more attention to this universal claim. The Church may learn from the world, and the world may learn from the Church. The Church may learn from the world how to make the Church a real business institution; and the world may learn from the Church how to make the business of the world religious. Each may teach the other, and then both will be improved.

The predominant question for the Southern Christian Convention at the present time is the financial question. How can the Convention raise money to meet its missionary, educational, and benevolent obligations? That all want to see this question solved may be admitted, and more—it is the thought and the prayer of all who sense the situation and love the Church. Let us learn from the government which may represent in the above quotation the children of this world.

The total debt of the United States at the close of the year will be twenty billion dollars. Estimate the population at one hundred and twenty million. Divide the debt by the population and you have the per capita debt $166.66. This, at 6 per cent, means that the per capita interest charge on the nation's debt is ten dollars. Now make the Church charge the same per capita, and the thirty thousand members in the Southern Christian Convention would pay three hundred thousand dollars for the membership per year. Reduce the 30,000 members to 25,000 members and the financial result would be $250,000. Now take half of that for local current expenses and there remains for the Convention $125,000 per year. That would take care of interest, current expenditures and curtail indebtedness, and within a few years put the Church on a sound financial basis. People ought to give as much, on the average, to the Church as they do on the average to the United States. In this, State taxes are left out. The Church can do it if she will.

W. W. STALEY.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

I have just returned home from attending the Quadrennial Convention of the International Council of Religious Education, which was held at Birmingham, Ala. This is a delightful city. No other city in America of its size has as many beautiful Churches and modern Church school buildings as Birmingham. The greetings to the International Council of Religious Education from a quarter of a million people and two hundred and fifty Sunday Schools were unsurpassed.

The Churches of Birmingham have interpreted their task to be that of helping to make and keep the world Christian. They recognize that the wrongs of the world will never be righted by unregenerate humanity. They extended to us a hearty welcome and expressed their appreciations because they believe that the program that is being propagated by the International Council is making a worth-while contribution to the development of Christian character.

The theme of the Convention was, "Building Together a Christian Citizenship." Under this theme were discussed some of the leading questions of our day, such as "What is Religious Education," by Luther A. Weigle"; "Protestantism's Contribution to Character Building in a Democracy," by Walter S. Athearn"; "The Place of Religious Education in Building a Christian Citizenship," by Joseph M. Artman; "The Challenge of Christianity to Our Generation," by A. W. Fortune; "The Spiritualizing of Public Education," by Mary McSkimmon; "Facing Together the Impelling Task," by Hugh S. Magill; "The Evangelistic Opportunity in Childhood," by Nan F. Weeks; "The Evangelistic Opportunity in Young People," by Cynthia Pearl Maus; "The Program of Religious Education for the Local Church," by John H. Suter; "Youth's Challenge to the Church," by Stanley High; "The Call of America to Her Young People," by Edmund D. Soper.

Notes were taken by most of the delegates so that the benefits of the convention might be passed on to the local Churches and communities. The following departmental and sectional conferences were very interesting and beneficial to all who attended them: adult work, children's work, Church school architecture, denominational editors' section, denominational publishers' section, Church school evangelism, Church and Sunday School publicity, directors of religious education, leadership training, fine arts in religion, missionary education, pastors' conferences, superintendents' conferences, vocation Church schools, week-day religious education, young people's work. The music was very ably conducted by H. Augustine Smith, who has an international reputation as a music director and song writer.

We attended several of these sectional conferences and heard many of the excellent addresses, but none were more interesting and helpful than the address by our own Dr. W. A. Harper on "The Interpretation of Christianity to the Youth of Today." He said we should take the youth into our confidence and consider their possibilities, desires, inclinations, hopes and aspirations, in the light of Christianity today, and give them a chance to work out their salvation in their own way, for the youth is the hope of the world. His subject was discussed from the following viewpoints: democracy, science, social religion, world view of life, quest of unity of life,

Dr. Harper, it may be said without undue praise, is one of the foremost educational leaders of the hour. A man of sterling worth, with a keen insight into the real problems of education and their logical solution; he is forging ahead of his time, pointing the goal, and preaching the gospel of true sense and correct interpretation in matters educational. A forceful writer, in his books he kindles the holy fire and disseminates the good word. He is striking out boldly along new lines and is blazing a trail others must follow if they desire to meet the needs of the hour.

They say that Dr. F. G. Coffin, president of the General Christian Convention, gave an excellent address on the subject "What is Evangelism," but we did not get to hear it, as it was delivered at the same hour of Dr. Harper's address. May the convention's principles and inspiration long remain in the hearts of its attendants.

S. L. BEOUGHER.

- Christianizing the modern world (one unit).

Administration Department Specialization (Four Units).

Required (three units):

1. Church school administration (one unit).
2. The curriculum of religious education (one unit).
3. Supervision in religious education (1 unit).

Elective (one unit):

- The administration of leadership training (one unit).
- Tests and measurements in religious education (one unit).
- The administration of week-day Church schools (one unit).
- The administration of vacation Church schools (one unit).
- History of religious education (one unit).
- The educational task of the local Church (one unit).

Our own Board of Christian Education, in company with many other similar boards, has felt that we needed a course on a high school level, but was not satisfied with the so-called elementary courses to be had. They were too elementary to be worth anything. At Birmingham a high school course was projected to meet this need, to consist of nine units, as follows:

A. Suggested Required Units (7).

1. Life in the growing (one unit).

Problems: What is the significance of growth for the individual and society? What are the factors or elements that enter into the life process? How does personality emerge? How does growth in character take place? What are the laws of the educative process? What is the relation of religious experience to growth? How can we stimulate and control growth in appreciations, attitudes, ideals, and skills?

2. Growing a Christian world (one unit).

Problems: What is the message of Christianity to our generation? To what extent has Christianity succeeded in making a Christian world? Wherein has Christianity failed? How can the religion of Jesus recreate society in terms of the kingdom of God?

3. Vocational ideals and guidance (one unit).

Problems: Why should one, before making a life choice, consider carefully the various vocations? What constitutes a call to any particular form of life service? Are people as truly called to one type of work as another? What ideals should govern the choice of life work? What are the requirements of the various vocations?

4. Youth and the Church (one unit).

Problems: Is my local Church necessary? What is the place of youth in my Church? What is my Church doing in the community? How can it do more? What types of work should it carry on? What is the relation of my Church to the Churches of other denominations? How is my Church related to and co-operating with the program of my denomination? Does my Church, and the Churches of the community, have a world vision of the kingdom?

5. The science of leadership (one unit).

Problems: Is leadership necessary to human progress? What constitutes a leader? Are leaders born or grown? What types of leadership do we need? How can we get leaders? What are the qualities of leadership? What are the principles of leadership? What are the methods of leadership? Who are our leaders today? Political? Educational? Religious?

6. The life and work of Jesus (one unit).

Problems: How did Jesus meet life problems? What was the source of His power? How did He think about the meaning and value of life? The kingdom of God? What were His methods of winning folks to His cause? Are His methods applicable today?

7. The Bible and its use (one unit).

Problems: What is our Bible? How has it come down to us? Can we believe the Bible? Wherein is the authority of the Bible? Are all parts of it equally valuable? How can the Bible be made of most value for personal use? For use in helping others? For use in group activities and discussions?

B. Suggested Elective Units (2).

Studies in the Acts (one unit).

Messages of the prophets (one unit).

General Church history (one unit).

Denominational history (one unit).

The senior department at work (one unit).

Christian home life (one unit).

Interracial relationships (one unit).

International relationships (one unit).

Inter-Church relations (one unit).

Religious pageantry and dramatization (one unit).

Recreation (one unit).

In addition, to meet the needs of those of senior college grade, a graduate course to consist of eight units of twenty-four hours each, or 192 hours, was also projected at Birmingham. Respecting this course, we can most profitably quote a paragraph or two from the report of the Committee on Education, submitted to and approved by the Executive Committee of the International Council. This report says of the graduate course the following:

"An increasing number of persons, capable of doing advanced work, are graduating from the Standard Training Course. For such there is need of a graduate course. Not all who graduate from the Standard Course will be capable of fulfilling the requirements of the Graduate course, but those who can should be encouraged to make more thorough preparation for their educational tasks.

The Purpose of the Graduate Course.

"The Graduate Course is designed to furnish professional and semi-professional training for part-time and full-time workers, such as directors of religious education, conference superintendents, secretaries of State, county and city councils of religious education, teachers and supervisors in Sunday, week-day, and vacation schools, accredited instructors in the Standard Training schools, etc.

Standards of the Graduate Course.

"1. Prerequisites of all who register for the course are: The completion of at least the junior year in college, or its equivalent, and the completion of the Standard Training Course or its equivalent.

"2. The curriculum should be organized on the basis of units of two hours each, and should aggregate not less than 192 hours of work.

"3. Class periods should be not less than fifty minutes each.

"4. Students should be required to devote not less than two hours of preparation to each lesson.

"5. Textbooks and source materials should be of at least senior college grade.

The Development of the Graduate Course.

"The graduate curriculum should be developed gradually, and on the basis of careful experi-

PREPARING THE CONGREGATION.

The every-member canvass is a great occasion in any Church. The Church not yet using this standard plan does not know what it is losing from its program. The members of the Church, as well as the canvassers, need strong preparation. Their relation to God, their relation to the program of Christ, the fact that they are stewards must be made real and challenging. Great emphasis to strengthen the morale of the Church for weeks is important, so that every one may do his full duty. Prayer is very important. Praying for the Church and its local task, praying for the missionaries, for a sacrificial spirit, for our colleges, for the canvassers. This should be done in the pulpit, in the homes, in midweek services, in pastoral calling.

Publicity by addresses, sermons, letters, charts, graphs, mottoes. People need the facts. See that they get them. Sermons on stewardship, the compassion of Christ, missions and other benevolent causes, the Church, should be given. Laymen should be enlisted to speak of the work of the Church and its various causes. They should see that all meetings of the several departments of the Church are addressed explaining the causes and the canvass. Charts in the Churches setting forth all the items in the budget are helpful. The mind of any congregation that uses a budget must be kept on the causes. The finance department and pastor may well send out a series of well-worded letters.

The whole Church should be present on the Sunday morning of the day of the canvass when the canvassers are publicly set apart to their glorious task and given an appropriate charge by their pastor. It is well to use the Church calendar, the blackboard, the local press for interesting facts. Few people ever realize the work done by an average Church in a year, or on your mission fields. This is a time to give your congregation a vision of the work and all its needs.

ELON LETTER.

mentation. To attempt to outline the curriculum in detail at this time is not advisable. The leaderships schools of the International Council and of the co-operating denominations should be experimental centers for this type of work. Instructors secured to teach graduate units should be thoroughly trained, and should be recognized specialists in their subjects."

Thus we have three courses for training leadership, designed for high school, for normal school, junior college or the freshman and sophomore years of the Standard College; and for senior college or the junior and senior years of the Standard College. These courses will be taught locally in Churches or by communities, in summer schools and in colleges. The future looks bright for attaining the objectives of leadership training adopted for Church schools, which are as follows:

1. That the teachers and leaders in our Church schools should be as well prepared, grade for grade, as are the teachers in the public schools.

2. That the minimum training required of teachers be at least that represented by a Standard Training diploma.

3. That all teachers who do not hold a Standard diploma should take not less than two credits annually until they shall have secured the same.

4. That current periodicals and journals of religious education make a larger provision for the publication of articles dealing with the program of leadership training as administered through all types of agencies.

5. That carefully prepared pamphlets and leaflets bearing upon the ideals, materials, methods, and agencies of leadership training be prepared and widely distributed throughout the constituencies of the co-operating forces of the International Council.

6. That workers' conferences, conventions and institutes make larger provision in their program for the presentation of the subject of training for leadership for all types of educational service.

"IF 'TWERE DONE."

Churches and pastors fail to take into account this large annual turnover of Church members. Each congregation, the whole fellowship and the Church universal must actually "run fast to stand still."

As this is true in a Christian land where social customs, laws, literature and art are all more or less favorable to the prevailing religion, how much more striking are its results in non-Christian countries? The marvel is that, more generally than at home, the members of mission Churches continue steadfast unto the end. They have purchased their freedom in Christ at a great price, and will not easily let it go. To fill their places and then to make a net gain from generation to generation—even in some fields to multiply in spite of sin and death and the powers of age-old prevailing influences, is the marvelous record of modern missions.

Not different is the problem and the task of the mother. Though she and the babe's father may be lineal successors of fifty consecrated forebears, their child begins life with all the instincts of a primitive savage, as well as all the possibilities of a glorious saint. Everything is discipline, of forbearance, of instruction and of regeneration required by each of his ancestors he also must have before he can show in his life the grace and power of the risen Christ.

Most, if not all, of the tragedies of Christendom are due to our failure to recognize this elemental fact. The parents were so completely committed to Christian life and service that they took it for granted that their children could not be different. The character established through forty years of devotion and discipline was accounted so secure that the supreme Source of its strength was forgotten. Too late came the realization that there is no "once for all" in God's living universe.

Why not realize in advance that this principle of everlasting effort and perpetual progress is a glorious fact as well as a solemn reality? There is nothing melancholy about it.

To no one but our Redeemer Himself do we owe a greater debt than to the long succession of mothers, each doing over again and gladly striving to do better, what every preceding mother had pledged her very life to do. While voicing with song and sermon, flowers and prayers, our gratitude on Mothers' Day to the mothers whose work is nearly or quite done, let us not forget a generous meed of cheer to the young mothers who are in the beginning or the midst of rearing a better generation of men than the world has yet seen.—World Call.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

The week day school of religion for the community held its commencement exercise on Wednesday evening at 7:30 o'clock, in the Whitney Auditorium, Elon College, N. C. The director of the school, Prof. S. A. Bennett, was in charge of the program. The invocation was offered by Dr. W. A. Harper, president of the college. Prof. J. A. Hornaday, superintendent of the town schools, was introduced and made a very appropriate address, expressing his appreciation of the work of Prof. Bennett and of the week-day school. He considered it, he said, a rare privilege to have the week-day school of religion work in harmonious co-operation with the town graded and high school.

The departments of the closely graded school gave their programs in order. First, the beginners, who were greeted with prolonged applause, being especially costumed for the occasion. The primaries, juniors, intermediates, and seniors in regular order each rendered exercises representative of the work done in the respective departments. The approval expressed by the applause indicated the appreciation the community felt for this work.

The week-day school of religion is the laboratory of the Department of Christian Education. It holds its sessions in the Mooney Christian Education Building, and is directed by Prof. S. A. Bennett. He is assisted by the four other professors in his department as superintendents and by sixty-four college students who are doing practice work in connection with their professional study in religious subjects. "The week-day school of religion is designed," says Prof. Bennett, "to equip leaders for the conduct of religious education in local Churches, either as volunteer workers or as all-time professional workers." Under the directorship of Prof. Bennett, the school has enjoyed a splendid growth, and the average attendance in the week-day school of religion is slightly higher than the average attendance in the public schools. This goes far to indicate the lively interest the children themselves feel in this work.

For an hour and a half preceding the commencement exercises, the Mooney Christian Education Building was open for inspection. The work that had been done in the various departments was on exhibition. The work in the manual training department and in the manual arts department was particularly interesting to the visitors who came.

"ABRAM AND THE KINGS."

GOLDEN TEXT: "In all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us."—Romans 8: 37.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 61: 1-6.

The Bible goes back to the beginning of time as history, and as one reads the early chapters of that history, he comes across the record of wars and rumors of war. It seems that man is a "fighting animal." One sometimes wonders whether all the talk of the outlawry of war and the establishment of world peace is not the idle fancy of dreamers and sentimentalists. But the Christian dare not compromise his position on this issue. The prophet of old foresaw that with the coming of the reign of the Prince of Peace, nations would not rise up against nation. When the Christian forces of the world actually assert themselves, they can outlaw war and eventually eliminate it.

All of this is by way of introduction to the lesson of today, for it is the outgrowth of a war. It seems that the King of Elam had held several nations as vassals for twelve years, but that they rebelled and attempted to throw off the yoke. From of old, men have sought self-government. There is deeply rooted in human life a desire for self-expression in government. One of the striking things of the era preceding the present one was the way in which the peoples of the world threw off monarchies and demanded representative government. Democracy may not be the final form of government, but it is a step in the right direction.

The king of Elam planned a punitive expedition against the rebellious nations and came along his way victoriously. Finally in the valley of Siddim, he engaged the forces of the Kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, and decisively defeated them. His army then plundered as it went. Among the spoils of war was Lot, Abraham's nephew, and Lot's goods.

I like this fellow, Abraham. The story of his call has always appealed to me. "By faith," says the Scripture, "he went out, not knowing whither he went." That appeals to me. He had a spirit of high adventure. He was willing to blaze new trails. He believed that life was a high adventure. He believed in the ultimate supremacy of spiritual ideals. There is something stirring in the account of his call and his response. He was a man of large faith. But he was also a man of courage and "grit." He was no sissy that people could run over with immunity. When he heard that Lot had been taken, he armed his servants, set out on the march, overtook the enemy, displayed some fine strategy, and recovered Lot out of the hands of the enemy.

One of the interesting things about the story is the fact that from the general, selfish standpoint, lot had practically no claim upon Abraham. It will be recalled that when Abraham, a lover of peace, found that his herdsmen and Lot's herdsmen were becoming quarrelsome, he suggested that division be made of the land, and that each go his respective way. In keeping with this agreement, Lot had quickly chosen what he thought was the better part. He had pitched his tents toward Sodom and Gomorrah. He had broken away in a sense from the high ideals of his Uncle Abraham, who had been so kind to him, and to whom he owed so much. It would have been so human, therefore, for Abraham to say in so many words that it served Lot right. "He had his choice." He might have said, "He made his bed, now let him lie in it." This is often the philosophy of many people today. How often do we hear the statement, "It serves him (or her) right."

Abraham was made of sterner stuff. He was the representative of a God whose attitude toward his erring children was best expressed in the story of the Prodigal Son. No matter how deeply stained by sin Lot may have been, he represented a challenge to Abraham. In this as in the matter of faith, Abraham is our example.

When Abraham returned from his victorious expedition, he was met by the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah. Melchizedek, the king of Salem—afterwards Jerusalem—met him and brought forth bread and wine, for he was a priest of the most high God. Abraham rendered tribute to this man of God in the form of tithes of what he had taken. Furthermore, he showed his generosity by turning over to the king of Sodom all the spoils he had taken, although he might well have kept them for himself. Here was a man that was above price. If one reads the story of Abraham and does not feel that he wants to be a better man, there is something wrong with him.

"BUILDING HAPPY HOMES."

(Mother's Day.)

TOPIC: "How to Build Happy Homes."

SCRIPTURE LESSON: Eph. 6: 1-10.

Lessons for the Week.

Monday, May 3—Build with love. John 13: 35.

Tuesday—With forbearance. Gen. 45: 24.

Wednesday—With discipline. Prov. 13: 24.

Thursday—With courtesy. Rom. 12: 10.

Friday—With helpfulness. Luke 10: 38-42.

Saturday—With truthfulness. Eph. 4: 20-25.

Some Bible Hints.

Obedience is a splendid way to avoid friction and create happiness.

Honor and respect for parents create an atmosphere of happiness. Disobedience is fatal.

Parental or other nagging makes for misery and should be curbed with firm hand.

When every one in the home feels that Christ is there, and seeks to serve Him, there will be joy in that home.

Suggestive Thoughts.

"With good will doing service" is the divine principle that each person in a home should follow. Service without good will is not worth much, and good will without service is vain.

"Forbear threatening" is a word that older persons should take to heart. Threats destroy peace and concord in any home.

One way we can make home happy is to be happy ourselves and let our happiness shine out at home. It is contagious, just as a grouch is.

Reduce to a minimum your demands on others in the home, and increase to a maximum the help you can render others, without coddling them, and the chances for happiness grow.

A Few Illustrations.

A mother may establish in the home a fireside council where all matters of interest to the family are discussed. This is home democracy.

If you carry a baby all the time, it never will learn to walk. If you do everything for any member of the family, you create selfishness and dependence. Mix love with justice and right.

Family worship tends to create happy homes. Despite difficulties in modern life, the Bible can be put back into our homes and all the family may be united around the throne of grace.

A home can be selfish as well as an individual. It is selfish if it thinks only of its own members. It should bring in other children and visitors and will find happiness in making happiness for them.

To Think About.

What can we do to make our homes cherry?

What lessons have we learned in the home?

What if all homes were abolished and we lived in institutions?

"Bound up with the home is the housing problem. Happy homes are impossible in too cramped quarters."—Anon.

"We have careful thoughts for the stranger

And smiles for the sometime guest,

But oft for our own

The bitter tone,

Though we love our own the best."

—Margaret E. Sangster.

"Happiness is something we must earn. It is the reward of toil. It comes from duty, self-renunciation, unselfishness, and forgetfulness of personal rights."—W. A. Atkins.

"The habit of moving away is becoming the habit of running away. It is easier to break up a home than prayerfully and patiently to work together."—Wm. B. Ayers.

THE ELON CHAUTAUQUA.

It is not too early to begin preparations for attending one of our Chautauquas this summer. The workers in our local churches need the training and good fellowship which cannot help but impress upon them at these sessions.

Dr. W. T. Walters, president, and Miss Pattie Coghill, secretary, Henderson, N. C., officially advise that the Chautauqua will be held at Elon College July 26th to August 4th. The Chautauqua has gained from year to year in influence, interest, and numbers, and the officials who are planning the present program are hopeful and expecting that the 1926 session will be the best yet. "We are trying to make the strongest and most practical program of any yet made." The total cost for registration and board for the session will be $11.00. Certainly this charge is exceedingly modest, and is explained by the fact that there is no charge made for housing either the Chautauqua itself or individuals attending, and all other items are put at actual cost.

There will be institute teaching, teacher training classes, daily vacation Bible classes, Sunday School credit courses, Bible classes, mission study, community song service, varied evening programs, etc., among the attractive features to be offered this year. The program contemplates instruction and help for pastors, Sunday School officers and teachers, missionary leaders, and in fact all who are interested in any line of Church work. Each year should show an increased number in attendance. It is well worth while for our Sunday Schools and other organizations to see that their superintendents and other officers go to the Chautauqua this year.

BROKEN CISTERNS.

"My people have . . . forsaken Me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns that can hold no water."—Jeremiah 2: 11-13.

What an expressive contrast! A fountain, a spring of living waters, cooling and refreshing, the very thought of it renewing to the thirsty soul on a hot summer day in the East; the cistern water, drained from the roof, tepid and inferior. Even that is not the whole story. The cisterns are hewn out of rock, and the hot sun cracks them, so that they will not hold even the rain water. In short, says the prophet, your own gods and devices are utterly unworthy and unsatisfying. Forsake God and you will be led to seek inferior substitutes.

The prophet was speaking to people who had known "the joy of the Lord." Israel had been holiness unto Jehovah, but had now forsaken Him. It is today just as foolish as it was then to forsake God.

Moreover, the prophet continues, they have hewed out broken cisterns that hold no water. They had been trying to feed on husks. Isaiah had the same idea when he declared the people were "feeding on ashes." We have our modern "broken cisterns." Money is one, if it usurps its rightful place. "He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase." Pleasure is another. Sated and restless and dissatisfied people go from pleasure to pleasure, as a bee from flower to flower.

Let us heed the prophet's passionate pleading and repent. Get to our knees. Break up the fallow ground. Beneath the surface, the power of God is at work. Give it a chance!

—Rev. H. D. Rams.

Prayer (by one of the parents)—That the wickedness and folly of the chosen people in forsaking God, and what befell them afterward, may be an object lesson in the results of apostasy. Pray that the people of our land who have wandered into the wilderness of unbelief, may be won back, that their faith may be restored, and that the soul of the nation may be aroused to the need of a great spiritual cleansing. Ask in Jesus' name.

RELIGIOUS HONOR.

"I will not . . . offer burnt offerings without cost."—I Chron. 21: 24.

David has trespassed against the command of God in numbering Israel. And God was displeased!

But now the real spirit of this man of God asserts itself. Without doubt, a sacrifice should be offered, and when Ornan offered his threshing-floor and his implements to the king that he might make the needed sacrifice, David insists on paying like a man for these things. And pay he did—a price that must have looked like a fortune in those days. How could he do otherwise? He could hardly retain his honor as a man, much less a king, if he were to shift the burden to other shoulders.

It is saddening in our day to see many who should be responding gladly to the claims of God, shirking this duty which would bring them so much joy. Give God a chance! Don't cramp your soul! Breathe Heaven's atmosphere! Pay the price.

—Rev. I. D. Lyttle.

Prayer (by one of the parents)—That as no blessing can follow the sacrifice which costs us nothing, we may be led to give of our best, both in money and service, when God calls.

WEDNESDAY.

THE DIVINE LAW OF KINDNESS.

"Be ye kind one to another."—Eph. 4:32.

We have all noticed what a happy atmosphere exists where kindness reigns. We have also noticed how hard and tense and undesirable is the atmosphere where the spirit is: "Look out for no one." "A man must live," "Business is business." Isn't that enough? Are we so selfish that we forget general happiness of all? "Be kind." A child can do that. It is the profoundest philosophy of life. Attending a sick child while the mother rests; leaving a duty for a higher one to minister to a dying comrade; cooking a meal for one who is unable to do so; giving where the gift is needed, and doing hundreds of little things to help those in need. The chance to practice this may be near by. It may be the next person you see. What will you do with it? "Be kind."

Prayer—Merciful God, we ask Thee, guide our steps aright. Keep us in the footprints of Jesus, who went about doing good, and may we forgive one another even as Christ has forgiven us. In Christ's name. Amen.

THURSDAY.

GOD'S WAYS NOT AS OUR WAYS.

"The patient in spirit is better than the proud spirit. . . . Say not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these?"—Ecclesiastes 7: 8-10.

A touring party turned into the grove surrounding an old country church. What a melancholy sight! It was the desolation of abandonment. No religious services had been held there in months. The lock was gone, the doors grated on rusty hinges, and there was an accumulation of dust on the "old timey" hand-hewn pews. Beholding this melancholy scene, one of the party said: "You can see that religion is on the wane, even in the country. It held out better in the rural districts than in the cities but now the tide has changed in the farming districts also. As civilization advances, men feel less need of religion. Here is convincing evidence."

About a mile further on, they came upon a modern, two-story, brick church, with a community house adjoining. Many automobiles were parked on either side of the road. A banner proclaimed a county Sunday-School convention. Tables were set under the trees, and many women were preparing a noon repast. Through the open windows and doors, one could see that every seat in the church was occupied, and there was a ruffle of boys sitting on the edge of the pulpit platform.

The old church down the road was one of several gathered up into the membership of this large and beautiful community church. Every age has produced its scoffers; but the Church of Christ moves on in spite of them.

—Rev. John Harrison Allen.

Prayer—That we may remember the Master's words regarding the sure growth and ultimate triumph of the Kingdom, and that each may do his part with joyous confidence in its triumph.

FRIDAY.

FAITHFUL WITNESSES.

"Ye are my witnesses."—Isa. 43: 1-13.

I have seen helpless cripples in invalids' chairs rolled into the church for divine worship. They were broken in body, but sound in spirit, and shared heartily in the devotions. A striking fact about these is that no time, as a shut in, however long, is long enough for them to say, "I have gotten out of the habit of going." If we are the Lord's can one get out of the habit of loving and worshipping Him?

There are such as these everywhere. They give testimony of unbreakable faith, and prove to others the presence and power of God. When the well and the sick all do this, the church will take on new power and fulfill Christ's mission on earth.

Prayer—Our Father, May we hear Thy call, yea even by our names to be living witnesses for Thee. May we be found faithful in every opportunity and bear His love always, that others may know and love Him. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE DIVINE SOURCE OF POWER.

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."—Phil. 4: 8-13.

Can a man do all things through Him? That is the cry of an humble heart. This is not a claim to personal glory or power, but rather a statement of dependence, in which Paul asserts that he is able to meet life, and to meet it successfully.

This confidence Paul recommends to us. What is your life? What are your problems? What are the things possible to you? What is your call? The answer is in your attitude toward Christ. Lean on Him and He will strengthen you.

Prayer—Our Father, Teach us to make the most of circumstances through Jesus Christ, the Lord. Spare us from losing our ideals in the hurry and the noise of the world. Teach us to lean on Thee and find Thy strength for our tasks. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE POWER OF DIVINE INFLUENCE.

"O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! Then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea."

A quotation found in an old, well-worn volume, read as follows: "Of two young men or women, of equal ability and like circumstances, one may attend divine worship on the Sabbath constantly, and the other may not attend at all. The former becomes far more intelligent than the latter. His intellect is sharper, so that the difference is apparent to every observer. The explanation is that the mind of the first has been taxed in the house of God by the discussion of higher and grander themes. He has been prompted to think and reflect on a higher plane, while the other has groveled in that lower life that characterizes those who neglect public worship."

These words state an important truth. The intellect of the boy or girl who is faithful in church attendance is not only sharper, but the life is nobler. Every American who has long held the esteem and the honor of our people, has been a church goer. And the reason is that their young lives found a climate in the church which gave them a mental, moral and spiritual growth they never could have possessed without the church.

—Rev. Vincent G. Burns.

Prayer (by father or mother)—That the young hearts of every home in our land may learn to know by personal experience, the value of the preached Word as a guide through life.

MATTHEW.

Hear Paul's saying, "Let us hold fast our profession," (Heb. 4:14). Those faithful souls in the siege of the city who owned Christ as Lord God denied not His name in the most violent persecution.

At a providential opportunity they made their escape, as the Lord had foretold them to do. When the Romans took possession, Josephus says, that not one Christian was found there—all had escaped in a hasty flight to the mountains, etc. This was called the coming of the Son of Man. This was the coming of Christ that the apostle John lived to observe.

CHAPTER XXV.

Here we have the parable of the Church of God compared to a company of virgins, pure from idolatry; some acted wisely, but others did not. This corresponds with the preceding chapter. Those virgins, or saints, were and are espoused to Christ, waiting for the full consummation. They took their lamps and moved on, and waited for the call. Those who acted wisely, took oil with them besides what was burning, lest the burning oil should be exhausted. This is going often to the throne, to beg grace to help in time of need; laying up in store; giving diligence to make their election sure. Not acting as fools, but as wise; redeeming time, in perilous days. But the foolish depended on their first stock to be sufficient—once in grace, always in grace. The perseverance of the saints, as some say, is sure. The wise slumbered, but some slept. I observe, the wise and prudent had no righteousness to spare. Read Rom. 11. The old kingdom fell, and the Gentiles were grafted in the new union, into the old Abrahamic covenant; and Paul warns the Gentile converts not to be high-minded, but fear. Some authors say, the foolish virgins had lamps, but they never were lit; if so, we can prove they never went out. David gives some Scripture light on the spiritual sense and use of a lamp, viz: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path" (Psa. 119:105). But David's wise son, Solomon, gives us a full explanation of the similitude, saying, "The commandment is a lamp, and the law is light" (Prov. 6:23). The true interpretation is this: the command of God points out to the Church every part of her duty toward God and man, in her economy, discipline and government; as the Lord ordered His apostles, after planting Churches, to teach them all things whatsoever He had commanded them. Last chapter. The spirit in the word is the light. The law of the spirit of life in Christ, frees the believer from the law of sin, and the just sentence of the law of death (Rom. 8). The letter and spirit comprehends it. To have the form of religion only is to be ignorant of the law and gospel. The entrance of the word giveth light (David). The word of the gospel is spirit and life, sayeth the Lord. To walk in the true light by faith, is to walk with God. The spirit giveth life; the spirit of a man is the candle of the Lord (Prov. 20:27). When the spirit of man is illuminated with the spirit of the word, it discovers to him the secret wickedness of his heart; and when the soul is translated, the glorious light of the gospel shines unto him, giving rest. The pure Church lives in the spirit, walks in the gospel commands, and hath nothing to do with bishops' laws, as having no light nor life in them. Therefore, thus saveth the Lord, watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the alarm cometh! Whoever is kind to one of His people, the Lord takes it as done to Himself. A cup of cold water given to one of His people in distress shall be rewarded here or hereafter.

Reader, have you considered all these things? and, above all, remember those who enter heaven are a prepared people for that place, holy, pure in heart, and heavenly minded.

CHAPTERS XXVI, XXVII AND XXVIII.

Note here, the Jewish passover was in full authority during the Redeemer's public ministry, substantiated by the best authority. Then how, say some of you, that John the Baptist lived under the gospel dispensation? A capital mistake!

The Lord's supper superseded the passover, as baptism superseded circumcision, for Jesus came by blood and water. It appears here that the Lord's supper was received while sitting at the table. The twenty-eighth verse fully substantiates the glorious doctrine of atonement. Let Mr. Stone write on, and deny our Lord's penal sufferings, with his Greek phrase at-one, instead of atone; and what hath he gained by that, only that God and man are at one—or reconciled through the blood of His cross. Thus sayeth the Lord, "This is my blood of the New Testament, shed for the remission of sins." What is sin, but the transgression of the law? and what could remove that guilt but Christ's atoning blood? Thus it is, that blood and water are the two significant seals, for this signifies the fountain opened in the house of David, for sin and uncleanness (Zech. 13:1). These figures are and were necessary, but not to be considered as substances. As the Jews boasted in circumcision, and despised others, so the Baptists glory in baptism by immersion, and reject all others. The Hebrews and Egyptians could converse together, labor together; yet an Egyptian thought it an abomination to eat with a Hebrew.

The gospels written by Matthew ends with the sufferings, death, resurrection and ascension of Christ, and the descent of the Holy Ghost. The glorious Emanuel, the Lord from heaven, the quickening Spirit, assumed human nature in order to suffer for lost sinners. The whole of his travels in this unfriendly world shows that he was a man of sorrow, and acquainted with grief. When the cloud drew near, he was in the place called the garden—seeing our fall was in the garden; here the eternal Word being made flesh, entered the miserable conflict against all the powers of death and hell, men and devils, in a violent confluence, or united conflux; besides the bitter cup of unmixed wrath presented to His choice. Here His love was tried to the uttermost. God's dear humanity, i. e., the Lord's Christ, must drink this cup, or the earth must be smitten with a curse. The day of vengeance was come; the awakened sword was drawn. (See Psa. lxxv:8; Zech. 13:7.) "Awake, sword" (Isai. li:17). The cup of trembling appeared; He entered into an agony, excessive, exquisite, unnamed distress, so that it forced great drops of blood and sweat through the sacred pores of His body. Reader, must it not be a desperate heart that can feel no warm meltings of love and gratitude to the Redeemer? O that doleful night, and until nine in the morning, he bore the insults, and corporal punishment inflicted by cruel men, under infernal influence! And the third hour, which was nine in the morning, he was stretched and nailed to the cross, between heaven and earth, as though unfit for either! suffering, the just one for the unjust human family. The Holy One became a sin-offering to redeem a lost world! Jehovah had no need of such a bleeding, suffering victim to appease his wrath, but to reconcile His just law; nor did His holy law need it, for it was well able to execute vengeance on daring rebels, and be glorious in His proceedings. But then no soul could have been saved; and here divine love and mercy interposed. Judgment and justice are the foundation of Jehovah's throne; but on account of this great sacrifice, mercy and truth goes before, and proposes conditions of peace to rebels; yea, loudly exclaims, and entreats sinners to submit. God, in His divine order and government, could never countenance rebels, without contradicting Himself, which thing is impossible. He will never pardon rebels without discovering His abhorrence to the audacious and filthy works of the flesh and devil. His glorious dignity will not admit of the display of His love and mercy without asserting the prerogatives of His divine holiness. God delights in His own divine perfections, and therefore must delight in order; for out of order He cannot act. Thus the divine humanity must bleed, suffer and die, or no soul could ever be pardoned. He hung on the tree in exquisite torture until the sixth hour, even noonday. The Jews, the Romans, the devil, death and hell exerting their forces, trying to cause Him to faint before the work was finished. Besides all this, the Redeemer must drink in divine law-wrath, for He bore our sins, or the miseries due to them, in His own body on the tree. Behold and see, was ever pain like His. He cried, "I thirst." No friend to give Him drink; but an enemy gave Him a mixture of vinegar and gall. A total eclipse took place; the earth trembled to her center; rocks split into innumerable pieces; graves bursted, and many saints arose—and as it is appointed for man once to die, I expect they died no more. Reader, for a moment think, what must a sinner feel who dies without an interest in Christ! About the ninth hour, or 3 o'clock, Jesus cried, bowed His blessed, bloody head, saying, "It is finished," and gave up the ghost. The eternal principle of divine life, which was the soul of Jesus, withdrew for a season; yet the body was God's holy body, which could not see corruption. The Jewish rites were nailed to the cross, then buried for ever. The third day He arose. After laying in the tomb thirty-six hours, He took up His eternal life again, and dieth no more. This resurrection effects the believer's justification. Men and devils strove hard to prevent His resurrection, and to prevent its being believed. He tarried with His disciples and ministers forty days, teaching them how to proceed, and speaking comfortable words to them; telling the apostles that after the new kingdom came down, and they were inspired, to go out among the Gentiles, gather disciples from all nations, plant them in Churches, baptising them with a new ceremony, never heard of before, viz: "Baptize them in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." Then His orders were to teach the Churches to observe all things whatsoever He should command by the Spirit to them; whatever He whispered in the ear, to proclaim it on the house-top. He blessed them, and ascended to glory; then in ten days sent down the promised kingdom, and the down-pouring of His Spirit—but you will have more of this in its right place. Friendly reader, I have followed Matthew, and you have traced me—what think ye? I wish you to observe two points more, and so it ends. First, if ministers will teach the Churches His commands only, He will attend the ministry to the end of the world. Does this prove the Redeemer to be God as well as man? May the Lord pardon my mistakes, and prepare me for what may follow. Amen.

MARK.

We have passed through the sacred writings of the holy apostle Matthew; and Mark bears witness to the very same in substance. The apostles were not always eyewitnesses together of the same things that happened, but all spake by the same spirit. Reader, cast thine eye upon the ninth chapter and thirty-seventh verse, and own that Christian people's little children should have a visible seal of a gracious covenant by baptism, as well as the children of the Jews by circumcision. That they should be received in some manner, who will deny? The way I proceed, in the fear of God, is, when the parent with a babe requests the gospel baptism to be administered on their little child, after an admonition, I receive the child and baptize it with water. This puts the name Christian on; and as every child born in Christendom is born a nominal Christian; why not seal them? Children whose given names are not confirmed in baptism are not bound to keep that name. To receive little children is receiving Christ; and what shall we say to those who reject and forbid them? They are his.

LUKE.

Luke published his declaration, and assures the reader that they all believed the same things. He rehearses the history of John the Baptist; the nativity of Christ, which the civil world calls Christmas, or birth of the Redeemer—a time which a majority keep in abominable idolatries. Shame! shame! shame!

In the third chapter and sixteenth verse, John observes that he was not worthy to stoop down and loose the Saviour's shoes. If we are rightly informed, this was performed to a high priest before he stepped into the water to be baptized, or consecrated. But here I must beg my reader's attention while I return back to the second chapter and forty-sixth verse, where it is written, "And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom; and Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." Here it was that one of the elders of the Christian Church, whose name was Arius, of Alexandria, in the fourth century, took shelter against the rebukes of the Christian Church that he had left. He exclaimed that Jesus Christ, though a great being, was inferior to the Father, seeing He could wax stronger, and grow wiser. He soon gained proselytes, and after converting the emperor and civil powers, like Mahomet, he undertook violence. This raised a bloody persecution against the Church. He grievously vexed the primitives. Some were banished, and their property confiscated; some were tortured, and others put to death. This doctrine was of the devil then, whatever it may be now! Dr. Priestley exclaims that Jesus was fallible. If so, he was no God. The Arian heresy reduced the Christian cause and name to disgrace, for they were divided in other points of doctrine in many particulars, but, by denying Christ to be God, they kept up some kind of union for a time. The great Council of Nice checked Arius, and established another new theology, to-wit: three distinct persons in the undivided Godhead! Yet, as they say, the Father is God, Jesus is God, the Spirit is God—yet those persons are not three Gods, but one only! We hold no hard disputes with those who confess Jesus to be very God. Jesus, as man, was of the line of David, which was an elect royal line, made or formed of a virgin. As this precious body was produced by the great eternal Spirit, His soul, as from the Sire, must be a divine soul, which is the divinity itself. Thus the two natures being united in one person reciprocally, the two natures did act in vicissitude, alternate, mutually; therefore Jesus Christ was God in the flesh, possessed of human feelings; which produces an idea in men that our Lord had a human soul. But could it be proven that His soul was truly a mere human soul, it would prove He was a mere man—yea, it would overturn the faith of the Christian Church. As the humanity advanced to the full stature of man, even so did the divinity increase in the Lord until He received the eternal Spirit in full, without measure, which is infinite. For thus it is written, "God is glorified in Him; God shall glorify Him in Himself." "Glorify thy Son, that thy Son may glorify Thee." Here the reciprocal union between the two natures is fully substantiated, as the body and soul of a human creature constitutes the man external and internal. The soul of Christ was His life, and that life was eternal life, which assuredly is the divine Esse, or existence of Jehovah. That was the life which He laid down, and hath taken up again, and liveth forevermore. Amen.

The divine child growing in favor with God and man may be illustrated as follows: With respect to man, previous to His public ministry, He was much admired for His beauty, His virtue, humility and wisdom, a display of which, in the twelfth year of His humanity, astonished the great doctors of Jerusalem. Thus the Deity favored the humanity, until the perfect humanity received the fullness of the Godhead bodily; and thus, being perfect God and perfect man, He became a full and complete Saviour. He was the great Emanuel. Not a demigod, but the all-wise God, our Saviour. He was the divine emanation, proceeding from the divine center of eternal perfection, but being incarnate, God in the flesh, possessing both natures, He was prepared to feel trouble, sorrow and distress.

What is written may suffice, out of the abundance that may be advanced, that Jesus Christ is both Lord and God in one exalted person, who at length will show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, dwelling in light which no man can approach unto; to Him be honor, and power everlasting. Amen. (1 Tim. 6:15-16).

Friendly reader, let me entreat thee to weigh this subject with all your sense, and pray daily to the Great One to illuminate your understanding, that you may believe in Christ as Lord God, and have power to trust in Him as your all-sufficient, loving Saviour. I testify against all those who view Jesus less than God; therefore, if any man refuse to give Him equal honor with the Father, He will lightly esteem that man, if not utterly reject him.

TIMMY'S MAY BASKETS.

BY MARGARET WARD.

"May is coming!" said Timmy to Aunt Lu. "And May is for Maying. My mother told me a story of when she was little. It was about the time you found the little wind flowers in time for May Day."

Aunt Lu nodded. "Up along the stone wall in Mr. Brown's south pasture. There always early there. But the best May flower is the trailing arbutus, and the latest, pinkest ones, grow up in the pines near Miss Electa Appleby's."

"Then we'll look there first," Timmy decided. "But how did you manage about the baskets?"

"We made ours out of paper," Aunt Lu told him. "Mine were generally green to match the leaves, but your mother liked pink."

"I want both," announced Timmy. "Will you find the paper and show me tonight?"

So Aunt Lu bought rolls of pale pink and soft green crinkly paper—much prettier, she told Timmy, than the shiny kind they had when she was little—and a tube of paste. And that night Timmy screwed his face into a knot and found that his fingers were all thumbs, trying to make May baskets.

Timmy hated to "try and try again." He liked things to come easily. "Couldn't you do the baskets and I go with you to get the flowers?" he asked.

"No, sir!" said Aunt Lu. "If they're your baskets, you must help."

After a while Timmy found that if he was careful enough, the paste didn't smear, and when he pulled the top edge of the paper into a frilly ruffle he didn't need to tear it.

"I see that trying is useful," said Timmy, "but I shall be glad when we get to picking flowers."

"There is a try there, too," Aunt Lu warned him. "The trailing arbutus will die if you pull up the roots. You must cut it with scissors—O, so carefully! I couldn't take you unless you promised."

So Timmy promised, and so on the last afternoon of April, he and Aunt Lu climbed the hill to the pine wood near Miss Electa Appleby's and gathered their flowers. And next morning, the minute timmy woke up, he called Aunt Lu, and they began filling the baskets.

When the baskets were done, Aunt Lu packed them all in the big market basket. "I'll carry them and you can run and hang them on the doors," she said.

At Jack Brown's house Aunt Lu stopped. "Going to leave one here?" she asked.

"No," said Timmy, "cause he has daffodils in his yard. I like Jack, but he has daffodils for his may."

At the next house, which was little and shabby, Timmy took out a basket.

"Who lives here, Timmy?" asked Aunt Lu.

"I don't know that," returned Timmy, "but I think this house needs a basket."

And when the gay little baskets were all hung and they had started home for breakfast, Aunt Lu declared, "You know how to hang May baskets better than your mother and I did."

"Well, I didn't have to try. I seemed to know they must all find May right outside."—Selected.

Most of the men who enter Southern Railway service make it their life's calling

RAILROADING a man's job

THERE is no occupation in the world which is more exacting in its demands on the individual than railroading. That is why the world over the term "railroad man" denotes men of character, trustworthiness and useful citizenship.

But if the demands on the individual railroad man are great, so are the opportunities. The men with the responsibilities of leadership on the Southern today have grown up with the railroad.

To handle the greater traffic of the growing South expeditiously, economically and dependably, the Southern needs the best men of the South.

Railroading has always attracted the best type of citizenship. And it always will. It is a man's job.

DICKEY.

Mrs. Parmelia Dickey departed this life April 9th, at her home in Fayetteville, Ark. She had been living for some months in the home of her son, Dr. J. A. Dickey, a former Elon man, but now a Professor in the University of Arkansas. The body of Mrs. Dickey was brought home for burial, and the funeral services were held from Union Church, Union Ridge, N. C., Tuesday, April 13th. Mrs. Dickey was about eighty years of age at the time of her death, and was preceded to the grave several years by her husband, Mr. J. A. Dickey, Sr., a prominent citizen and former Treasurer of Alamance County. Mrs. Dickey made her home with her son at Elon College for several years. The family left for Arkansas last August. She was a good woman and much beloved by a large circle of relatives and dear friends. She was a sister of the late George Maynard and the late Charles Maynard of the Union Ridge neighborhood. Dr. Gregson of the faculty of the University of Arkansas, accompanied the remains to Union Ridge, Dr. J. A. Dickey being ill and unable to make the trip. Dr. Gregson and Dr. P. H. Fleming assisted the writer in conducting the funeral services. The floral tribute was strikingly beautiful. A noble soul has gone to her reward, and the world is richer for her having lived in it. J. O. ATKINSON.

TROLLINGER.

Mrs. Annie E. Trollinger, relict of W. H. Trollinger, departed this life in the City of Raleigh, April 12, 1926, in her 88th year. One sister survives her. Her husband preceded her to the grave about ten years ago. She was a member of New Providence Christian Church, Graham, N. C., and had been for a number of years. For some years, she had not been convenient to her church and had not attended its services. But when near and in health, she attended the church and was interested in its welfare. She served her day and generation well. Sweet be her sleep till the Master bids her awake. She was buried in the cemetery at Union Christian Church, the writer conducting the burial services. P. H. FLEMING.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly Father, in His wisdom and righteousness, to call to the great beyond, our brother and co-worker, E. L. Cullifer, and in his going the church, Sunday School, and Ladies' Aid, have lost a faithful member, the community a real friend, and his wife a devoted husband;

Therefore, be it resolved:

First, that we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

Second, that we extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved family and pray that his memory may ever be richer and sweeter to them, until all are reunited in that home of the soul.

Third, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one to The Christian Sun for Publication, and a copy spread on the minutes of the Ladies' Aid of which he was an honorary member.

VOLUME LXXVIII.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1926.

NUMBER 18.

By REV. S. M. LYNAM.

A Goddess Dies.—

A goddess died recently in Philadelphia. Few who carried her image about with them as their most treasured possession suspected that their divinity had a mortal existence. This was Anna Williss Williams, who in 1878 posed for artist George Morgan as the Goddess of Liberty used on the silver dollar. Although wished her identity kept secret, it was revealed two years later by a newspaper man.

Unreasonable.—

The Bishop of London is coming to this country. As a part of his entertainment for his short stay, five hundred speaking engagements have been provided already. If the good Bishop escapes with his life, it will be remarkable. He may have to recall the methods of the late Mr. Bryan, and use the rear platform of a train at every stop on a cross country tour, and stop at every station. This sort of "entertainment" is unreasonably hard on the Bishop.

Southern Methodists to Support Missions.—

The Mission Board of the Southern Methodist Church, at its meeting in Nashville, Tennessee, decided to spend more than two million dollars in mission work. This money goes to twelve lines of home mission work, and sends missionaries into eleven foreign countries. The Southern Methodists number more than any other denomination in the South, and their expenditures for missions and other benevolences in such a large way probably accounts for a part of their growth.

Salvation Army Head Here.—

General Bramwell Booth, head of the Salvation Army, is in this country conducting territorial conferences in Chicago and New York. More than two thousand commissioned officers of the army will participate in these conferences. General Booth is accompanied by the head of the Salvation Army in Japan. Commander Evangeline Booth is taking part in the meetings. The Salvation Army was organized by General William Booth, and members of the family have been at its head in this country and in England from the beginning.

Break in "Cambridge Seven."—

In 1885, seven 'varsity athletes from Cambridge embarked for the mission field. Their going stirred the world to profound missionary thought. That was forty-one years ago. Until recently all the seven still served either on the mission field or in the offices of mission boards. One of the seven died the other day. Bishop William Caswells was the first to go. He was in West China, and died of typhus fever. His wife survived him only a week. As we think of this famous seven setting out forty-one years ago, and of the marvellous things which have been wrought since then, we have reason to be profoundly grateful.

World Christian Endeavor Convention.—

The world Christian Endeavor Convention is to meet in London next July. Some notable speakers are scheduled for the program. Mr. Lloyd George is to speak on "The Youth of the World for Peace and Good Will," and the other British speakers include the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, and Mr. Ramsay MacDonald. The Americans named for the program include Dr. Francis E. Clark, Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, and Amos R. Wells. Christian Endeavor is now one of the great international religious organizations, and it is doing much to bind the nations and the denominations together in peace and good will.

American Wins Huxley Medal.—

For the second time an American has won the Huxley Medal given by the Huxley Anthropological Society, and the highest honor in the anthropological field. The winner of the honor is Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, a Bohemian by birth, and now curator of physical anthropology of the National Museum of the Smithsonian Institute. The other winner of the medal was Dr. William Z. Ripley of Harvard University, in 1908. During the twenty-six years it has been offered, the medal has gone three times to Frenchmen, once to a German and once to a Swede. All the other winners have been British subjects. Dr. Hrdlicka will go to London in November, 1927, to deliver the lecture before the society and to receive the medal. Dr. Hrdlicka is probably the greatest authority on the anthropology of the original inhabitants of this country. He has worked in nearly every State of the Union, and in most of Europe, and other parts of the world.

A Contribution to Learning.—

The combined generosity of Johannes Gennadius, the Greek Government and the Carnegie Foundation has made possible a great contribution to learning. Dr. Gennadius gave a library of fifty thousand items, all dealing with subjects relating to Greek culture, to the American School of Classical Studies at Athens on condition that the collection be properly housed. As a consequence the collection has been transported to Athens from the London residence of Dr. Gennadius and housed in the Gennadion Library building erected at a cost of $250,000.00 by the Carnegie Foundation on land provided without cost by the Greek government. The building is constructed of white marble quarried on the island of Naxos, and is a reminder of the architecture of old Greece and the glory that was hers.

It is to be dedicated at an early date, and for that occasion fifty-five American institutions of higher learning have sent representatives to Athens. The collection is remarkably comprehensive, and is one of the great contributions to learning of our times.

The Cadman Meeting Disturbed.—

While Dr. S. Parks Cadman was delivering his regular Sunday afternoon address at the Bedford branch of the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A., some U. S. reserve officers attempted to raise a disturbance and were ejected. Dr. Cadman was speaking on disarmament and world peace, and while he repudiated the pacifist view, he also declared himself opposed to compulsory military training in high schools and colleges. After summing up the arguments in favor of the present system, he said, "Those who oppose it, as I do, contend that it ingrains in the mental and moral structure of our students the conviction that preparedness for war and war itself are normal relations of nations; encourages belief in violence as the final resort in international differences, and discourages the efforts now in progress to settle such differences by arbitration." After the meeting, Dr. Cadman did not seem perturbed in the least. "I think it was great fun," he remarked. The sort of behavior of which these men, all of them in important positions, exhibited in the meeting, will not do their cause any good. They, and not Dr. Cadman, are the losers.

To Make Scientific Research Possible.—

The American Academy of Science took steps recently to provide twenty million dollars for scientific research by which they hope to place America at the head of the scientific world. Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, and head of the committee, announced that three million dollars for the fund was already available. As an example of the things which research has given the world very recently, the whole business of radio broadcasting and receiving was cited as growing out of research into the nature of electrical discharges into gases at a low pressure. Adrenalin, thyroxin and insulin are also discoveries growing out of research into the field of pure chemistry. These elements, which in the glands of animals control health, growth and intellectual and emotional development, have been produced in the pure state. This is a great boon to civilization. A committee has been appointed to collect and administer the fund. Herbert Hoover is chairman of this committee, which includes Elihu Root, Andrew W. Mellon, Charles E. Hughes, Edward M. House, John W. Davis, Julius Rosewald, Cameron Forbes, Albert A. Michaelson, Gana Dunn, Felix Warburg, Owen D. Young, John C. Merriam, Simon Flexner, and others.

NOTES-PERSONALS

"Mother is the name of God in the lips and hearts of little children."—Thackeray.

"That man may last, but never lives Who much receives, but nothing gives."
—Thomas Gibbons.

Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., was in Richmond this week and made a brief visit to the office of THE SUN.

The Elon Letter this week represents a part of the Convention's proceedings. It shows also the value of our educational plants. Read it.

A visitor to Africa said, "The Bible is out of date in my country." Said an African, "If it had been out of date here, you would have been eaten long ago." The Bible saves.

"Who ran to help me when I fell,
Who would some pretty story tell,
Or kiss the place to make it well?
My mother!"—Jane Taylor.

The Convention at Durham last week was enjoyed by everyone. The hospitality of the good people could not have been surpassed. But now that it is over, let us get down to business to carry into effect the good resolutions.

Delegates to the Southern Christian Convention were present from Delaware, Maryland, Ohio, on the north and from Georgia and Alabama on the south, and points between. Virginia and North Carolina were well represented.

While you are thinking over the Convention plans do not forget THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Your neighbor needs the church paper, and if he does not take it, you can be of service to both him and your Church by seeing that he subscribes..

The right of the public schools to dismiss pupils one afternoon a week for the purpose of attending religious instruction has been upheld by Justice Staley of the Supreme Court at Albany, N. Y. The decision dismissed an application by the Freethinkers Society to prohibit the White Plains board of education from excusing school children for religious teaching.

What is probably the first Radio parish, a non-sectarian church, has been formed at Portland, Me., with the Rev. Howard O. Hough as pastor. Nine denominations were represented at the organization meeting. The services will be broadcast by Station WCSH, and the congregation will consist of invalids and others unable to leave their homes Sunday mornings for church services. Business men of Portland pledged financial support for the Radio church.

How few of Christ's words about Himself have found any place in the theology of the Church. We call Him King, which he never called Himself, instead of Friend and Brother. We call His Church an Ark of Safety for those who fear the storms of life, a House of Refuge for those who fear the vengeance of God, none of which figures our Lord ever used. And we have forgotten the first name the Church gave itself, suggested by the Master Himself. He said, "I am the Way."
—Percy Sylvester Malone.

President Coolidge, in an address to the Congress of Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, declared the failure of American citizens to participate in elections is a growing menace which threatens to place the government in the hands of practical politicians and selfish persons. He cited the fact that only 50 per cent of the voters cast their ballots in the last national election as supporting his statement. The President said also there is great danger in the prevalent lack of reverence for authority and increasing disobedience to law.

Dr. Burke Culpeper has just brought out a book of interesting sermons under the title "Put God First." In speaking of them, Geo. S. Slover, the president of Clarendon College, says: "These sermons are replete with apt illustrations. The matter is vital to the Christian life. The manner of presentation is all his own, unique and forceful. These sermons are from a heart and mind all aglow with the holy enthusiasm of a divine call to preach a great gospel to a lost world. They breath with a passion to save men from sin." The book is issued by Pentecostal Publishing Co., of Louisville, Ky.

Apparently as an answer to the wet demand for legalizing the sale of wine and beer, General Andrews and the administration are sponsoring five new bills designed to make the Volstead Act airtight. The bills provide for extending the powers of the rum blockading fleet at sea, an increase in the Prohibition Department's authority over the issuance of liquor permits, authority to the customs department to refuse licenses to vessels suspected of rum-running, the prevention of release under bond of vessels seized for violation of the prohibition laws and that retired Army and Navy officers may serve as prohibition administrators without losing their retirement pay.

We are sorry to learn of the sudden illness of Rev. Milton W. Sutcliffe of the Webster Church. The following comes from Miss H. E. Cooley: "Rev. Milton W. Sutcliffe was taken quite ill Sunday evening, May 2d, and was taken to the Havre de Grace Hospital Monday morning and immediately operated upon for appendicitis. At this writing he had just come from under the anesthetic, but was doing as well as could be expected. We all hope and pray for a speedy recovery and ask our Christian brethren to pray with us. Mr. Sutcliffe, accompanied by Rev. T. D. Wingate of New Jersey and Mr. Isaac Stuart of Havre de Grace, attended the Southern Christian Convention at Durham, N. C., last week, returning home late Friday evening. Rev. Richard Sutcliffe, associate pastor of the Webster Church, preached at both morning and evening services Sunday."

Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in speaking of one of the latest books from the press of The Macmillan Co., says: "'Science, Religion and Reality,' is the best survey of the various approaches to the essential problems of religion that I have seen in a long time. If a young preacher can buy only one book in the next six months, he ought to buy this, for every man who writes gives a distinct angle of approach to an essential religious question, every man has a suggestiveness of style which makes utterances dropped in an apparently casual fashion the richest of nuggets. The essay which at the outset I would have been least interested in, namely the one on magic and religion, proved to be one of the most fruitful to me because of the suggestiveness of remarks which the author drops on a sort of by-the-way fashion. Books of this sort very often leave the impression of a lack of unity, but this particular collection of essays naturally arrange themselves into a consistent whole."

THE GREATEST OF THESE.

"When Paul was a little child at his mother's side, and began to interpret her heart throbs as she drew him to her breast, and began thus to understand that there was such a thing in the universe as Love, even that love which seeketh not its own and suffereth long and is kind—when little Paul did this, he began to lay hold upon something more than the outward seeming of things; he began to attain to something which belonged to the essential, eternal side of things; so that in all his later years (and, we may dare to say, even after that final sword-stroke cleft the way for him through all this mortal shadow play into the supreme light) he had never to unlearn that lesson about Love, or drop the idea of it as a lost illusion, or as a symbol of something other than itself. Love is Love; and even in its earthly manifestations it offers us an experience which passes beyond all the seeming of things into the eternal substance of life. It lasts on; it leads us into the Arcanum, into the secret places of the Most High."—G. O. Griwth, in "St. Paul's Life of Christ," published by Geo. H. Doran Co.

MOTHER'S SOUL.

"Sometimes I think God grew tired of making. Thunder and mountains and dawn redly breaking—

Weary of fashioning gorges and seas, Weary of planting great forests of trees. Sometimes I think God grew tired of heating The earth with the sun—and of fully completing

The whole of the world! God grew tired, and so

He took just a bit of the soft afterglow, He took just a petal or two from a flower, And took a song bird from a sweet scented bower.

The dewdrops He took from the heart of a rose, And added the freshness of each breeze that blows

Across long, green meadows—He took all the love

Left over from making His heaven above. His kind fingers mixed them—God's hand, and no other—

And made, for the first time the soul of a mother."

"O God of mother hearts, whose boys Have gone from home to school or shop, Where once their whistling, romping noise— A silence, as if life would stop! Be with them, God of tenderness; As they are Thine, their young lives bless, And in temptation's trying hour Give them of Thine all-conqu'ring power; O God of love, be with our boys."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CONVENTION.

The Southern Convention which met in its regular biennial session at Durham, April 27th to 30th, and the Woman's Missionary Convention which met at the same time, in the Duke Memorial Methodist Church, were largely attended, were exceedingly interesting, and sought in a very strenuous way to make history. Elsewhere in THE SUN is given a running account of the Convention from the hand of Mr. C. M. Cannon, who reported the proceedings to the daily papers. No account, however accurate or elaborate, can give an adequate conception of the spirit and outcome of the Convention. Those present realized that we faced a crisis in our Church life. We have, as other denominations, to face the difficult matter of readjusting the financial policy of the Church and to seek to establish a polity and a precedent for Church and Kingdom growth and development. The Church is growing. All the enterprises of the Church are growing. All the interests of the Church are growing. This is as it should be. Our Colleges are larger and more expensive than they once were. Our orphanage has more children to care for and more buildings to keep up than heretofore. Our Mission interests are spreading in many directions and demands multiply with great rapidity. In fact no enterprise of the Church is carried on as it was a decade ago. This is not only true of the Church, but of every industry and department of life. The man who farms or merchandises now as he did twenty-five years ago, is not getting anywhere.

Our Convention realized full well that in order to evangelize, to educate, to promote, to care for the larger demands and obligations now upon us, there must be adjustments to new and enlarged requirements and conditions. We do not know just what plans are adopted. No one fully comprehends the decisions reached and adopted by the Convention. These will have to be worked out and explained and studied before they are comprehended. It is exceedingly doubtful if committees in charge of reports can themselves tell the meaning of their reports and recommendations when applied to actual conditions as they now obtain. This may be said, the Convention made an honest attempt to face its great problems. There was certainly great diversity of opinion. There always is in the matter of handling practical problems, especially when those problems have to do largely with financial and economic conditions, and are the raising and expenditure of funds. Just what plans were laid down or mapped out by the Convention THE SUN's Editor certainly cannot tell its readers. He was present and heard the papers read and the questions debated and the votes taken. He is unable to tell, however, the meaning of it all as applied to the practical work of the Conferences and through the Conferences in the local Churches. A great attempt was made to work out a plan that will produce greater results than heretofore and also to properly allocate both the efforts in securing funds and the distribution of funds when secured.

Whether the plans as adopted will financially do, this is to be seen. Pastors and business men and heads of departments labored and explained and counceled together in the spirit of optimism and determination for best results. What this united council will produce or has produced, we cannot tell. We are satisfied of this, however, that nothing radical or revolutionary was adopted and that the wisdom of the Church and the good fellowship that obtains throughout the Churches will prevail and that the outcome of these honest efforts made in Convention will be far more satisfying than the various advocates, from the heat of debate, might be led to believe.

The Convention opened with a great banquet at a local hotel, and this brought together members of the Convention in happy and delightful fellowship. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle of Suffolk, Va., brought a message of real vital Christian instruction and edification in his opening message to the Convention. The Convention certainly had a good start, for Brother Hardcastle's message was true gospel and wholesome food for the soul. The Durham choir welcomed the Convention with holy and heavenly song. The message of the president, Dr. E. L. Smith, on the second day, was forward-looking, appealing, timely and packed with progressive ideas of a wholesome and Christian type. The reports from the various departments were never so filled with facts of progress and growth at any session of the Convention that this writer has attended. The Orphanage had expanded and gone forward and brought to the Convention a report that gratified every heart and met all the demands of a liberal and loving constituency. The report on education showed a growth in our Colleges and Sunday School and Christian Endeavor life that cheered all in the Church who care for construction and progress in life for our youth. The Mission report showed a large increase in membership—3,247 during the past biennium, giving the Convention a total Church membership, now, of 31,882, over 28,635 reported two years ago. It showed, also, more activity in Church building and progress and the growth of Mission interests and spirit than any previous Mission report.

There were many interesting, edifying and thrilling addresses, but that which this Editorial is intended to portray is that the Convention had a great session and has undertaken greater things for the future, with a hope and a courage based on real progress and achievement of the past few years. The Christian Church as represented by this Convention goes forward and faces the future bright with plans and prospects. J. O. A.

SOME RECORDS WORTH WHILE.

At the Southern Convention in Durham last week, THE SUN's Editor fell in with three friends who, it seemed to him, had church attendance records of unusual interest and import. Rev. H. W. Elder of Richland, Ga., has missed only seven Sundays in fifteen years from attending regular Church services and was prevented those seven Sundays by sickness and death in his own family. Brother J. L. Cash of our Durham Sunday School has not missed a Sunday from his Sunday School in twenty-six years. Brother Everett W. Neville of our Chapel Hill Church has not missed a Deacon's or a business meeting in fifteen years and has not been absent from his Church a single Sunday since Church services began in his Church at Chapel Hill twelve years ago. It would indeed be difficult to find three men more faithful than these, not only in attendance upon Church and Sunday School services, but, it may be added also, in attendance upon all duties and services that require their presence and attention as Christian citizens.

According to the philosophy of Dr. W. W. Staley, these three men are well educated now. And they are. The Editor once heard Dr. Staley say that those who attended Church services regularly received a fine education, because they heard men teach who used good language and good logic as well as good morals and religion. People who attend Church regularly will get, in a very definite and practical way, that which the schools give, and more than the schools give, because the Church is really the founder and builder of schools. THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

By C. M. CANNON, Convention Reporter.

Tuesday and Wednesday.

The sermon, "Jesus the Disturber of Men," by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of the Suffolk, Virginia, Christian Church, opened the three-day session of the Southern Christian Convention, meeting in twenty-seventh biennial session at the Main Street Christian Church, Durham, N. C., at 8:00 o'clock P. M., April 27, 1926.

Preceding the official opening of the Convention, a welcome service was given to the visiting members and delegates by the local church, with the local pastor, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, presiding, who spoke words of greeting from Durham and the Church to all visitors. Special music was rendered by the Christian Church choir, including a violin solo by Miss Myra Alcorn and vocal solos by Miss Jennie Turner and Mrs. W. T. Young.

Following this welcome service Rev. Mr. Hardcastle spoke, using as his text Matt. 10:34, "Think not that I am come to bring peace to the earth." He spoke briefly of the different phases in which people are accustomed to thinking of Jesus, such as the teacher of men, the master of men, the Son of man, and the Saviour of men, and the superlative characteristics exhibited by Him in these roles, but stated that his purpose then was to discuss Jesus in a new role, as "The Disturber of Men." He based his sermon on several selections from the Book of John.

Mr. Hardcastle declared that to accept Him was not to make life smooth, but more often set to work energy and influences that make men dissatisfied with the old order of things and bring about disturbances. He spoke of Jesus as "a Disturber" in the realm of personal life, charging the congregation with the fact that too many people were satisfied with themselves and their ideals. "To get even a glimpse of the Christ life and ideals," he said, "will make it so that one cannot ever go back to the lower levels of living."

He next spoke of Jesus as a disturber of men in the realm of business, and in the realm of government, and finished his sermon with the thought of Jesus as a disturber of religious ideals. In this realm, he believed that the greatest disturbances had occurred and are still occurring. Jesus came at the time when the old Mosaic system was especially elaborate and intricate in rules and ceremonies, saying that they had robbed religion of its life and power just as many people today are doing. The influence of the teaching of Jesus on the religious ideals of that time was the greatest disturbance to the old order of things, and that this influence is carrying on today in our modern conceptions of the meaning of religion. He closed his sermon with a plea that the ideals of Jesus be accepted in the personal, social and religious relationships of the people today.

Preceding the evening service of the Convention, the executive committee met at the church at 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon, and at 6:00 o'clock a banquet was held in the Washington Duke Hotel. The main speaker of the banquet occasion was Col. J. E. West, Lieutenant Governor of Virginia, who made it plain in his speech that it is his thought that the Church's real problem is evangelical and includes personal and social solution. The public schools must aid in producing Christians as well as citizens or the people will cease to support them, he declared.

Dr. Warren H. Denison of Dayton, Ohio, led in prayer, and Dr. W. W. Staley of Suffolk, Va., spoke, using the subject, "Why We are Here." President W. A. Harper of Elon College, spoke on "Our Colleges," Dr. J. O. Atkinson on "Our Mission Work," and W. K. Holt on "Our Orphanage."

Dr. L. E. Smith, president of the Convention, presided over the meetings. There were about 125 delegates present on the opening day, who, with the local congregation which turned out in good numbers, made a large audience for the opening session.

The feature of the Wednesday morning session of the Convention was the address of the president, Dr. L. E. Smith, on the subject, "Our Problems."

Dr. Smith began his address by stating that never before in the history of the Convention had it faced such problems as are now before it. "This Convention," he declared, "by faith and the power of God, will go down in our history as the greatest session ever held by our people."

"I want us to think of our problems," he continued, "not in regard to ourselves alone, but in regard to ourselves plus God." He then spoke of the problems of atmosphere, saying that the thoughts, words, and actions of the delegates would determine the atmosphere of the Convention, of organization, stressing the need of a central board for the control of all departments, of emphasis, so that emphasis should not be unduly placed in any one particular, of the problem in finance, and the problem of spirituality.

W. K. Holt of Burlington, presented the report of the orphanage committee. This showed the addition of a $30,000.00 building to the orphanage at Elon College, bringing the total value of the plant up to $150,000.00, the fact that 110 children were being cared for in the orphanage, and that it took $252 per year for each child.

Dr. W. C. Wicker, treasurer of the Convention for twelve years, presented his resignation at this session.

The report of the board on superannuation showed a total of 13 grants amounting to $4,250 for aged ministers:

Following the president's address, a communion service was held by Drs. W. W. Staley, D. A. Long and P. H. Fleming.

The afternoon session consisted largely of mission emphasis. Col. J. E. West gave the report, which showed a substantial increase in mission offerings over former years. The money sent to two foreign mission points, Porto Rico and Japan, in the last year for this Convention was more than $25,000.00. Col. West then made an address on the subject of "Men and Millions." He stated that he was exceedingly encouraged over the outlook for missions in the Convention and that it was brighter now than it had ever been before. He complimented the women on the great part they were taking in the mission work, and urged the men to match the mission activity of the women of the Convention.

One item he especially stressed was the assistance the mission board is giving in building great churches in the cities and centering their efforts in these strongholds. "Our greatest need," declared Col. West, "is men who have caught the vision of missions and of their opportunities and responsibilities."

Dr. Warren H. Denison of the Department of Stewardship of the American Christian Convention followed with a great speech on the subject of "Stewardship," saying that he believed Christian stewardship was the solution of the problems the Church is facing today, that stewardship means personal responsibility. He spoke of group stewardship being necessary to enlist the 50 per cent of the church membership who are inactive, stating that at present all the funds for benevolences were raised by one third of the church membership.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson in his address on "Our Missionary Progress," stressed certain items of the mission report, and interpreted them, and spoke fervently on the plea for a greater mission program.

"The Pastor's Part in the Modern Program of Evangelism," was the subject of a masterful address by Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, pastor of the People's Church of Dover, Del., and chairman of the Convention committee on evangelism. Dr. Helfenstein stressed the point that the program of evangelism in every church today depends primarily upon the pastor, and also the point that the life and perpetuity of every local church depends upon its program of evangelism.

The Women's Convention, which met in separate session on Wednesday morning, heard Mrs. J. A. Williams in her address on co-operation in the woman's work. Mrs. Dan C. Brummit spoke of woman's work in the home, in the community and in the world. The important item of this session was the announcement of the fact that the Woman's Convention had more than reached its goal of $20,000.00 set two years ago, and the women are very proud of this attainment.

A large audience assembled for the evening session of the Convention. Three addresses featured this part of the program: that of Mrs. Dan C. Brummit, a visiting member of the Methodist Church, from Chicago, Ill., who had during the day addressed the women; the address of Mrs. J. A. Williams of the Woman's Board, and that of Dr. W. P. Minton of the general mission board.

Dr. G. O. Lankford of Burlington, N. C., opened the session with a very impressive devotional service, the local choir again furnishing special music,

Mrs. M. L. Bryant, president of the Woman's Board of the Eastern Virginia Conference, introduced Mrs. Dan C. Brummit to the congregation. In view of the fact that Mrs. Brummit had to leave early in the evening her address was shifted to the first place on the program.

Mrs. Brummit gave a masterful address and held the intensive interest of the audience. Her speech was effective and straight from the heart. She spoke intelligently of the mission work of the home and foreign fields of all denominations, and her plea to the parents of today to look carefully after the training of their own children as well as the children of foreign lands was one that carried weight and conviction. In the beginning of her address she declared herself for the young people, and her confidence in them. She advocated that each person do that thing well for which they were best fitted and that a call from God comes not only to ministers of the gospel but to all laymen as well, and included all professions and businesses.

In discussing the work of missionaries on the foreign fields, she stated that they were intermediaries between nations, and that the people at home as well as the missionaries must not take the attitude of better-than-thou toward the other races, but must recognize the background and previous training of the foreign peoples and extend them the hand of Christian fellowship of full equality before our mission program can be a complete success.

She next spoke of the race and immigration problems in connection with home missions, and also the great part education plays in this program. She brought out the fact that seventy-five per cent of the youth of today were not touched by any church, and charged the missionary societies to set about pulling up the religious standing in the estimation of the youth of the land, the parents set an example for their own children, and for America to set an example in Christian living for the whole world, declaring that when we did this the other nations would follow.

Dr. W. P. Minton of Dayton, Ohio, foreign mission secretary for the Christian Church, followed Mrs. Brummit on the program and spoke of the specific work of the Christian Church in the foreign fields and its relation and standing in comparison with the other denominations. His conclusion was that the Christian Church, while it was giving liberally per capita, was not doing near what it should, and that the cause for this was to be found in the fact that its people as a whole did not have a real missionary passion. He claimed that the numerous ills of the church could be traced directly to the lack of an intensive missionary zeal, and his plea was that the people take missions into their hearts and make it a vital part of their religion. Having made his plea, he expressed his faith in the future of the foreign mission work, and his confidence in the membership of the Christian Church to wake up and do big things in this line in the future.

Judge Jesse F. West at this point on the program presented the report of the committee on memorials, setting forth plans and specifications for the erection of a monument on the spot where the original Christian Church stood, the Old Lebanon Church of Surry County, Virginia, and also a monument on the Elon College campus to Rev. James O'Kelly, the founder of the Christian denomination. Both of these monuments are to be of granite, costing a total of $2,125.00.

Mrs. Williams report of the work of the women, was a review of the items and reports brought out in the Woman's Convention during the morning.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

In one of Dr. J. O. Atkinson's addresses at the Southern Christian Convention in Durham, N. C., this week, he stated that the Christian Church was the first denomination to organize the colored race into a conference after the Civil War. That incident in the Christian relation of the white and black races gave me a new suggestion along historic lines. The Christian Church has led in so many good causes that I have decided, after hearing that address to call it "The Plantbed Church." A plantbed is a small place where plants are started and then transplanted into larger fields. Now, "stop, look, and listen."

The Christian Church issued the first religious newspaper in the world, the "Herald of Gospel Liberty," in September 8, 1808, 116 years ago. That paper is still published by the Christian Publishing Association in Dayton, Ohio.

The Christian Church was the first denomination to open the doors of a College to women on equal terms with men. It planted the first co-educational college at Yellow Springs, Ohio, in 1849, with Horace Mann, the real founder of the Public School system in America, as its president.

The Christian Church was the first denomination to admit women into the regular ministry of the church on an equality with men.

And now we learn that it was the first to assist the negro race in organizing themselves into a real church after they were set free. Freedom to that race meant more than release from slavery; it meant freedom of mind, and freedom of soul; for "whom Christ makes free, are free indeed." James O'Kelly, who was the outstanding leader and founder of the Christian Church, was religiously and politically opposed to slavery.

In these moral, intellectual and spiritual plantbeds, the seeds were sown, the plants were watered and protected, and now they have been transplanted in large fields and bear great harvests to bless the world. Religious journalism covers the civilized world, and is a mighty agent in the enlightening and progressive agencies of human progress. Who has not seen the tender plants carefully started, and then seen the wide field of cabbage or the great orchard transplanted from the little nursery where the tender sprouts were nourished.

Not only Public Schools and Christian Colleges and new co-educational institutions, nearly all the State universities and professional schools admit women to their graduate courses. The heart of Antioch College throbs in every co-educational institution in the world.

Think of the first woman licensed to preach the gospel! It must have shocked the best of people, who thought women must keep silent in the church. But now that tender plant is in every communion in some form of public service for Christ. Even in Durham, where the Convention was held, April 27th to 30th, the "Woman's Missionary Convention" was held at the same time in the Duke Memorial Methodist Church, the Convention in the Christian Church and the missionary women of that Christian Convention in the Methodist Church; and the Woman's Convention had registered 101, while the Convention had 100. Mark you, the Convention represented all the departments of the Church, while the Woman's Convention represented Missions only. The little plantbed of ideas is filling the world with fruit. Nearly all Protestantism has incorporated these seed-ideas into the activities of their work, and yet many are wont to look upon the Christian Church as "small." "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Bethlehem was an obscure village where the Babe was born. It was a small bed where the Prince of Peace first breathed and slept; but that new life is filling the world. Bethlehem is still small; but the spirit that was born and nourished there continues to gain the hearts and service of mankind. The plantbeds may remain small, but the truck farms feed the great cities. The nurseries may be obscure, but the great orchards bend with fruit.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

A person cannot fully realize the real pleasure of being with a people who are so deeply interested in religious enterprises as they are here, without being in their presence.

I can truthfully say that I have enjoyed my work here better than any I have done before. One wonders how that can be. It is found in these words. I take my work to heart. The people are kind and love their pastor. They have nothing in reason they would not share with him and his devoted workers, which have meant so much to us. The keywords of loving these dear people are: "The latch string hangs on the outside." I have always found them to be every bit of this. At all times they are ready to help us. If a doctor is needed and some one to wait on you, regardless of conditions, they offer their assistance without price. I can say, no people could be better to their pastor. You read of pastors getting one or more poundings a year, but ours are daily. If I need any hauling or errands about the place, their service is free. Truly we love these people, and why not?

My readers are asking, What is the future? It is the past and even more. What do I mean, the past? I simply mean, people deeply interested in the work. I would not attempt to give the large number that have accepted Christ. Along with this a large number have united with the church. The growth of our church has only begun. The people had first to realize what the Christian Church was; how long had it come to stay; was it here for the benefit of the people or for profiteering.

These problems have been slowly, but truly solved. I see no reason why within the next twenty years, this work here could not be self-supporting and helping to support the enterprises of our Mission Board. The growth can clearly be seen in the statistics of the past year. I will quote the following: "Elk Spur and Rocky Ford have sent in fruit and money to our Orphanage about twenty-five dollars. Special Emergency Fund, $4.61. Twenty-five dollars for Sunday School literature. Help in revival work, $40.00. In work and contributions for upkeep of buildings and the building of our new Rocky Ford Church, $500.00." If the help that has been given to the workers was pricer, it would be at least $300.00. The county was so well satisfied with our work that it gave us $400.00; making a total of $1,304.61, or an increase over last year of about $700.00. This has been done with less than one hundred members. What would we do with five hundred members, which I think we will reach within less than ten years. Surely they will be self-supporting.

The interest is growing very fast. The average of our Sunday School attendance has tripled over last year, and our church services are doing equally as well. This of course has been due partly to our new building. Instead of averaging thirty for the day school, it has gone to sixty or more this year.

Our Rocky Ford Sunday School has voted to send one Sunday's offering each month to Brother Johnston to help in his work at the Orphanage.

Our work has only begun here. Some may ask what more we can do in the future. It may be stated in the following: We need a High School equally as bad as we did an elementary school. Since we do not have a Church High School in the Southern Christian Convention in the mountains, surely we must have one here in the near future. As to our religious work, the scope and territory are not limited. We could put up a half dozen churches that are all as badly needed as Rocky Ford and Elk Spur were, providing we were able. I am sure, while our good people have been so faithful in helping us thus far, they are going to continue to do so. We must get those interested in our work more and more as to its great needs that have not yet been realized and the opportunity for service as offered here.

THE STORY OF A BIBLE.

Rev. Paul Penzotti, of the American Bible Society, who was recently in Chile on business, tells a strange story of the Bible: "A little while back I returned from Chile, where I visited many of the evangelical churches. In one place, the pastor of the church told me the following incident: A colporteur took a trip to the south of the country to sell Bibles. He met a woman who was about to go on board a little steamer that was leaving for a place named Imperial, and sold her a Bible. This she read on board to pass the time away. After a while, a priest, who was also traveling, came and asked her what she was reading. On being told that it was the Bible, he roughly snatched the Book from the woman's hands and threw it into the river. A fisherman near by saw the Book and picked it out of the water. He took it home to his house and, excited by curiosity, began to read it. He and all of his family accepted the truth which had in such a strange way come to them. Soon they could not keep it to themselves, and they invited several neighbors to read with them the precious Book. The interest began to grow, and others obtained Bibles, and they organized a Bible class and sought the help of an evangelical pastor. Later, a church was organized, and now, in that town, a beautiful building has been consecrated to the worship of God by a congregation which had its beginning in this truly remarkable fashion."

ELON LETTER.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Education is a continuous process. The years spent in school and college are most valuable in developing habits of thought and attitudes of life. In Christian Colleges, these years should prepare us to live with and for each other and unto God as revealed in Jesus Christ. Particularly speaking, they should lead to the understanding of the persons whom we seek to influence for Christ; enable us to develop the resources for character building which the gospel puts at our disposal; and help us find the most effective point of contact for the Christian message in circles with which the church is now practically out of touch. The ultimate goal of Christian Education is a redeemed humanity and a social order completely dominated by the spirit of our Master.

The Universal Christian Conference of Life and Work issued a statement for the world from which we quote two paragraphs, as follows:

"Christian Education to be effective must begin at home. On this we all agree. If we have failed in the larger sphere, it is because we have first of all failed there. We have spoken of love, and too often our conduct has given our words the lie. We have preached brotherhood and lived as strangers, sometimes even as enemies. Much has been said, and rightly, about the impossibility of a Christian society apart from the Christian individuals who compose it, and doubts have been expressed even in this conference as to whether such a society is really possible. But may it not prove that one reason why the Christianization of society as a whole seems so impossible is because we who call ourselves Christians have made so poor a showing in the sphere in which we profess to believe that the Christian life is possible? With one heart and mind we confess our common sin; and pray for that life-giving Spirit which is able to renew and to transform each surrendered soul.

"We recognize the present need of education. The individual must be educated by the Church so that he may be expected to experience a Christian discernment in all things. The churches must educate themselves by study, conference, and prayer, so that being led by the spirit of truth into all truth, they may be enabled in increasing measure to apprehend the mind of Christ. We recognize that the root of evil is to be found in the human will, and we, therefore, desire to re-emphasize our conviction that this will must be surrendered to the high and holy will of God, whose service is perfect freedom. Even Christian ideas and ideals cannot save the world, being separated from their personal source in the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and unless these are taken up into the personal life of the believer."

ELON AND LEADERSHIP TRAINING.

The Mooney Christian Education Building gives Elon College an unique opportunity of service to the Church. It is the first instance of a Laboratory Building in Christian Education in an American college. The course of study given in Elon's Department of Christian Education is designed to train young people to be directors of religious education in local churches, to prepare for seminary and graduate work in the same subjects, and to qualify a much larger group for efficient work as volunteer lay workers in our churches. Those who complete the courses Bible I and Religious Education I are awarded the International Certificate in Teacher Training. After this work is completed, those who desire to go further in the department are given advanced courses in both Bible and Religious Education and used as teachers in the Week Day Religious School maintained at the laboratory of the department. Prof. S. A. Bennett is the director of this work.

THE EMERGENCY BUILDING PROGRAM.

Soon after the fire of January 18, 1923, the Board of Trustees of the college created two committees which will become historic in the history of Elon. These were The Emergency Fund and The Building Committees. The members of the Emergency Fund Committee were Col. E. E. Holland, chairman, Dr. I. W. Johnson, recording secretary, Col. J. E. West, P. J. Carlton, J. D. Gray (deceased), Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Hon. K. B. Johnson, Dr. W. H. Boone, Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. E. L. Moffitt, and W. A. Harper, field agent. The Building Committee consisted of W. A. Harper, chairman, D. R. Fonville, secretary, Dr. R. M. Morrow, Chas. D. Johnston, Col. Robert L. Holt (deceased), and Col. F. L. Williamson. These committees functioned if ever committees did, and a new Elon is the result. The new building program has cost $787,121.10. The details are given herewith.

Total Indebtedness to date		$432,779.00
Less Real Estate Bonds belonging to the Emergency Fund		15,000.00
Net Indebtedness		$417,779.00

ASSETS OF ELON COLLEGE.

Building and Equipment after the fire	$ 399,690.80
New Buildings, Equipment and Material	787,121.10
Endowment	430,679.45
Southern Christian Convention Bonds*	500,000.00
Total	$ 2,117,491.36
Less Indebtedness	417,779.00
Net Assets	$ 1,699,712.36

As a protection against its debt the College and its friends are carrying $215,000.00 insurance on the life of the president. The insurance carried on the buildings and equipment is $600,000.00. During the year 1925-26, the College has reduced its indebtedness $85,000.00.

Elon has enrolled her full quota of 400 students for the year 1925-26.

ELON'S FINANCIAL NEEDS.

Elon has asked the Special Committee on Finance for $36,750.00 annually, which includes interest on the note of $112,500 given the college several years ago and which has been paid by the Conference Apportionment. The College's asking is for 6 per cent interest on this note. The remainder of Elon's asking, $30,000.00, is to aid in caring for the balance due on the Emergency Building Program.

Elon needs to bring her endowment speedily to $1,000,000.00, and to secure large gifts for the liquidation of the indebtedness. All payments on the principal of the indebtedness will be credited on the Convention Bonds, and bonds in corresponding amounts surrendered to the Convention Treasurer.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., is doing an educational work for Georgia and Alabama. Rev. H. W. Elder is financial agent to secure funds for a much needed Administration Building to cost $50,000.00 on which work has already begun. We understand that they have pledged to meet the expense of this building. We congratulate them and hope their constituency will see them through with the proposition. Dr. S. L. Beougher, as president, and his faculty are doing a fine work for the Church in their efforts and sacrifices for Bethlehem.

Bethlehem's assets are $29,200, invested in buildings and equipment, and the Convention note for endowment of $12,500.00, making a total of $41,700.00. There is a mortgage indebtedness of $11,050.00 and current indebtedness of $6,356.00, making a total of $17,406.00 indebtedness. This makes the net assets $24,296.00. This however does not include the $100,000.00 of Convention Bonds voted to Bethlehem two years ago and which were returned to the vault of Elon College, awaiting the Convention's further instructions. We recommend that these bonds be given to the Board of Trustees of Elon College on the same terms as the $400,000.00 they already hold.

Bethlehem asks the Special Committee on Finance to include them in the budget for $10,000.00 next year for current expenses. The enrollment this year has been 116, and there are ten members of the faculty.

President Beougher says he must secure for endowment shortly an additional $250,000.00.

We recommend nine additional trustees be allowed Bethlehem College at this time.

DRS. LONG AND BARRETT AND MR. CORWITH.

Dr. W. S. Long, a member of this Board, has passed to his reward since the last session of the Convention. Dr. Long was the first president of Elon College and led in its founding. His death came as a shock to a host that loved and honored him.

Dr. J. Pressley Barrett died while the Convention was in session two years ago. He was a trustee of Elon College and did constructive work in creating sentiment for the College's founding. His death removed a valiant and trusted friend of Christian Education from our active leadership.

Elon has done what she could to express its appreciation for these distinguished leaders. Bronze tablets on the walls of the rotunda of the Alamance Building memorialize them and their great labors. We beg leave to quote these tablets in full as follows:

REV. WILLIAM SAMUEL LONG, A. M., D. D.
Oct. 23, 1839—Aug. 3, 1924

Founder and First President of Elon College

Christian Minister, Christian Educator, Christian Statesman
Christian Gentleman. A man great in faith, whole hearted in consecration, consistently energetic, and possessed of rare personal charm and grace.

REV. JOHN PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D.
Feb. 5, 1852—May 1, 1924

Minister, Religious Journalist and Author

As a man, pious and devout; as an editor, a staunch defender of the truth; as an author, concerned only for the highest deals; as a minister, loyal to the Gospel and to Jesus Christ. A Trustee of Elon College from the beginning and an unwavering friend. As editor of The Christian Sun, he created sentiment that made the founding of Elon College possible.

Since the last session of the Convention, Mr. William F. Corwith of Brooklyn, N. Y., a trustee of the College and generous friend, has passed to his reward. He was a man modest but devout and profoundly interested in the program and future of the College, of whose Board of Trustees he was an honored and generous member. The Convention should adopt suitable resolutions at this time and forward them to his family.

We call upon the Convention to stand to its feet in recognition of the lives and services of these three stalwart friends of Christian Education, and that a prayer of thanks to God and of sympathy for the bereaved relatives and friends be offered.

TRUSTEES TO BE NOMINATED AT THIS SESSION.

The term of office of the following trustees expires in May, 1926: J. E. West, M. L. Gray, A. T. Holland, P. H. Fleming, Chas. D. Johnston, E. L. Moffitt, C. H. Rowland, J. M. Darden, and Joe W. Stout.

In addition to this, Rev. W. T. Walters, upon becoming field secretary, resigned from the Board and Mr. W. F. Corwith has died. It will, therefore, be necessary for the Convention at this session to nominate twenty-two persons, from whom the trustees at their May session this year will elect eleven.

We call upon our people to support our institutions of Christian Education by their patronage, by their gifts, and by their prayers.

W. A. HARPER,
W. W. STALEY,
E. L. MOFFITT,
J. G. TRUITT,
Board of Education.

*The Convention is to be asked to vote the full $500,000.00 in bonds for Elon at this session. Two years ago only $400,000.00 of them were specifically voted to Elon.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

WARREN H. DENISON, Secretary.

LIFTING OUR STANDARD OF GIVING.

In recent issues of our papers we have shown that last year our giving for denominational benevolences was $2.52 per capita, while the general average for twenty-five principal denominations was $4.11 per capita; also that our per capita giving for all benevolences was $3.78, while the average for the twenty-five was $5.71 per capita. In the first case we are twenty-third down the list, and in the second we are nineteenth down.

Today we call attention to our giving for current local expenses. This has nothing to do with benevolences but is what we spend for ourselves in our local churches. Our per capita giving for our local church work is $9.71, while the average for the twenty-five denominations is $15.35 per capita or more than fifty per cent higher than ours. Again, we stand twenty-one down the list.

We believe that when our people fully understand our present record in giving for denominational benevolences, all benevolences, and local current expenses, that they will lift our standard. We urge our pastors, church boards, stewardship secretaries, to give this information with an earnest plea to raise the standard. Our people are just as worthy, able, and generous as the average Christians of America if they are properly informed and encouraged. Many of our good people actually think that we are giving generously, while the truth is that we are standing almost at the bottom of the lists in giving in all lines. Our people do not want it so. They need not have it so. Where our leaders lead our people will follow.

Dr. A. F. McGarrah, that great and nationally known Church Finance authority, the author of "Modern Church Finance," says in that splendid book that "not one church in fifty tries to raise as much money as it should and could."

MISSIONARY RALLY.

The One-Day School of Missions of the Wake-Harnett-Johnson District met at the Raleigh Christian Church, April 17, 1926. The meeting was called to order by Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, district leader. "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," was used as the opening song. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell of Durham, conducted the devotions. The central thought of his theme was the vision and power that comes to us by walking with Jesus.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted. The following churches responded to the roll call: Piney Plains, Chapel Hill, Durham, Raleigh, Wake Chapel, and although Auburn has no society, there was one representative.

The Chapel Hill, Durham and Raleigh Societies made splendid reports on money raised, visits made, and spiritual growth.

The Raleigh church reported $1,237.25 raised on the building fund from October to April. Durham church reported $140 offering raised on mission day in March.

Mrs. Vaughan expressed deep appreciation of the addition of the Durham church to the district group.

The number of pastors was an inspiration to the meeting. There were present the following: Dr. W. D. Parry, Rev. S. C. Harrell, Rev. P. T. Klapp, Rev. B. J. Howard.

Rev. P. T. Klapp spoke for a few minutes on the importance of realizing our greater responsibilities.

The following sketches of the lives and works of our missionaries were given: Porto Rico—Mr. and Mrs. Barrett, by Miss Mildred Bennett, Piney Plains; Japan—Mr. and Mrs. Woodworth, and Mr. and Mrs. Fry, by Miss Lucy Branch, Auburn; Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Gowon, Misses Stacey and Crews, Mrs. J. Lee Johnson, Wake Chapel.

Dr. Parry offered prayer for our missionaries and their work.

Song: "From Greenland's Icy Mountains."

Dr. Atkinson gave a most inspirational and comprehensive address on "The Imperative Need of the Hour." An offering was taken for the Emergency Fund amounting to $12.55.

The appointment of committees was as follows: Nominations, Mrs. W. C. Whitaker, Mrs. J. P. Avent, Mrs. C. H. Stephenson; Place, Mrs. Daniel Stephenson, Mrs. A. F. Smith, Mrs. B. J. Howard; Resolutions, Mrs. W. H. Boone, Mrs. E. W. Boshart, Miss Lucy Branch.

The meeting was adjourned for lunch. The Woman's Missionary Society of the Raleigh Church served a most delightful lunch.

The afternoon session opened at two o'clock with hymn, "Jesus Call Us O'er the Tumult."

Devotionals led by Rev. B. J. Howard.

Mrs. Fred Wheeler sang, "The Lord Shall Wipe All Tears Away."

In presenting the goals for the coming year, Mrs. Vaughan made an appeal for more earnest effort in the societies.

A discussion of our problems was led by Mrs. W. H. Boone. The presentation of more missionary pageants was urged.

The nominating committee submitted the following: Leader for the district, Mrs. L. L. Vaughan; Assistant Leader, Mrs. J. P. Avent; Secretary, Miss Ruth Johnson. By vote the same were elected.

The place of meeting for next year was left open. An invitation came from the Piney Plains Church.

The committee on resolutions submitted the following report:

"We, your committee on resolutions, beg leave to submit the following resolutions: First, that we wish to express our appreciation to the good people of the Raleigh Church for their generous hospitality and the delicious and bountiful luncheon served. Second, that we extend to Mrs. Vaughan our deep appreciation for her splendid service and her untiring efforts in mission work. Third, that we express our gratitude to Dr. Atkinson for his inspiring message of the morning. Fourth, that we as a board of women working together to promote the cause of missions desire the prayers, sympathy and co-operation of every one present, that we may have courage and wisdom for the task. Respectfully submitted. Mrs. W. H. Boone, Lucy E. Branch, Mrs. E. W. Boshart.

By vote, a motion was passed to the effect that the executive get in touch with every church in the district and urge the women to attend the Missionary Rally.

"Publish Glad Tidings," was sung as the closing song. Rev. Chas. B. Howard of Youngsville, led in a closing prayer.

MRS. L. L. VAUGHAN,
District Leader.

RUTH JOHNSON,
Secretary.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

This week's report carries us above the sixth rung of the ladder, and liked to have gotten us up on the seventh. That is fine, isn't it? It is beautiful to see how our people enjoy helping the orphan children and giving them a chance. Children are the most interesting things in the world. It is great to stand and look at a great mountain or perhaps a river or it may be a beautiful landscape with all its grandeur; but when you behold a little child and take in the hidden possibilities there, nothing compares with it. We may behold a Governor of a great State, a United States Senator, or perhaps a President of this great nation, who knows. This same person may now be in the form of a little orphan boy in some orphanage. They are worth the price. When our Master was on earth, He went about doing good. He healed the sick, He made the lame to walk, He opened the eyes of the blind and He even raised the dead to life. He went about doing good. It was the little kind and loving acts He did that reached the hearts of the people. I wonder when we contribute our money to care for orphan children if we are not following His footsteps. Little acts of kindness done in a loving way. It is living down by the side of the road and being a friend to man.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

"Call upon me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not."—Jeremiah 33: 3.

MONDAY.

A REBUKE TO THE PROUD.

Lesson, Psalm 75.

"I said unto fools, Deal not foolishly, and to the wicked, Lift not up the horn."

"Promotion cometh" from God. "He putteth down one and setteth up another."

"In the hand of the Lord there is a cup . . . full of mixture; and he poureth out the same; but the dregs thereof, all the wicked . . . shall drink them."

"The horns of the wicked shall be cut off; but the horns of the righteous shall be exalted."

The Psalm is a fine commentary upon itself. Elucidation or explanation is useless. The use of the word "horn" may be explained. In oriental lands the horn was worn on the turban as an insignia of honor. The greater the honor bestowed, the higher the horn. It was an ambition of the most of folks to merit a horn. However, this honor carried with it, as such does today, the temptation to be proud, to forget to be humble and give God the praise, and to exalt one's self among the people and in public places. The Psalmist rebukes this and points them to God, who exalts horns and cuts them off; who rewards and punishes according to the heart of the wearer.

Prayer.—Our Father. O teach Thy servants to render unto Thee thanks and praise for all that we have and enjoy. Teach us to accept and wear life's good with humility and love. Teach us never to forget the Giver of every good gift. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

STEWARDSHIP.

"Moreover, it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful."—I Cor. 4: 2.

Stewardship is a high and responsible office that comes to us from God. It is a question of employer and employee. It implies unlimited wealth and resources on God's part, His love for us, faith in us, and His willingness to trust us with what belongs to Him. On our part, there is required faithfulness. We are to know our places our abilities and responsibilities, and we are to take orders from Him and obey Him. God's business is the biggest thing in the world. There is a worthy place for all. It is a life job, and there are no vacations. The wages for faithful service is life eternal through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The true steward acknowledges God as owner of all and controller of all. His time, his skill—even his body, belong to God. The proceeds of whatever investment and the products of whatever toil are not his, but God's. The eye of God is ever upon the steward and unto Him must he render strict account for his office.

If a steward is faithful, there is advancement in responsibilities, in greater and larger things; but if unfaithful, there is the danger of losing the office of stewardship, and to be cast entirely out.

Prayer.—Our Father, We thank Thee that Thou hast not taken from us our stewardship. Forgive our unfaithfulness. Impress us with the greatness of Thy power and resources and with Thy willingness to bless us with greater blessings, if we are faithful. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen.

MATTERS WITH THE WORLD.

"Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."—Deut. 6: 7.

If you or any one ask the question, What is the matter with the world today? think of the following answer given by James W. Wise, author of "Liberalizing the Liberal Jew."

"Parents today are not themselves vitally interested in Christ. Living well is no longer conceived of as synonymous with regularity of attendance at a place of worship. Men and women think they can live their own lives quite satisfactorily without the help of religion. Consequently they take less interest in the church personally and less interest in the religious education of their children. What parents prize for themselves, they are likely to prize for their children, and what they themselves deprive they can hardly be expected to commend to their children. When men and women draw real strength, help and inspiration from religion, they desired with their whole hearts that the children should have the same. If they feel, as many have come to feel of late years, that religion has little to offer them, it is but natural to question its value for their children whose destiny it is their duty to shape. If they grudge the Sabbath hours of freedom from workaday tasks, which religious devotion demands of them, they will resent the claims of these hours."

"The Sabbath and the Sunday service is the most helpful part of the religious life, and is a basic hope of a better world; but if parents do not think this an important matter, we grow up a generation which will ignore it entirely, and educators are bereft of a great advantage—the active interest and assistance of parents."

Prayer.—O Father, Forbid that we shall miss Thee and the power of Christianity in our lives. May the zeal of Thy spirit and Thy house consume us and reproach us for our failures and sins. Our prayer is unto Thee, O Lord. In the multitude of Thy mercy, hear us and give us Christ now and always our guide. In His name we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE CEMENT OF CIVILIZATION.

Lesson, Luke 4: 15-20.

"And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up; and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read."

These words show clearly that Jesus supported the church of His day. At many points He found Himself at variance with the institution. Some of His most caustic criticisms were of churchmen, if not of the church. Many and bitter were the experiences He had, and yet, in spite of all its shortcomings and weakness and failure, we find the Master going, as His custom was, into the synagogue on the Sabbath day. There is for us a wholesome lesson in this attitude.

The church has been called the "cement of civilization." Without some form of organized religion, no civilization could long endure. It is just the qualities the Church brings that make possible a civilization.

REV. JOHN A. MCAFEE.

Prayer.—Grant us Thy peace, O Father, that in a world not yet in accord with Thy will, we may in our own hearts be at peace. In the Peace-Maker's name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

TAKE TIME TO BE THOROUGH.

Lesson, Acts 12: 7-11.

"And the angel said unto him (Peter), Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And so he did. And he said unto him, Cast thy garment about thee and follow me."

This incident of the angel coming to the prison to release Peter, rebukes the fevered haste of men to get out of their troubles. How leisurely the divine always is. The angel said, "Put on your belt, bind up your shoes," and Peter all excited did so. Before the angel said, "follow me," he said "put on your coat." In a word, do everything that is needed, yet without hurry. One can imagine Peter wishing to rush out at once, fearful lest the keepers should wake up before the angel could get him away. But there is no need to do so.

Jesus was never in a hurry. He moved with His Father in the leisure of infinite care and forethought. He took time to fellowship with God in prayer; He requested that His disciples make the thousands sit down before He fed them. He slept in the ship while the storm raged, because He had perfect trust.

Prayer.—Ever gracious and tenderhearted Father of all mankind, we draw near in full assurance of Thy grace. Reveal to us Thy mercy. Through Jesus Christ we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE GREAT ACCEPTANCE.

Lesson, Acts 9: 4-7.

"Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Somewhere, sometimes, the pathway of every unsaved life is crossed by Him who is still "despised and rejected of men." Out of that meeting may come the Great Refusal, as in the case of the rich young ruler, or the Great Acceptance like that of Saul of Tarsus.

Saul was on an errand of persecution as a commission of the Sanhedrin, when he met Jesus on the Damascus Road. As he lay prostrate and overcame on the ground, he quickly accepted the challenge from the sky and his responsive heart echoed back, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

It is related by the historian that, unsheathing his sword, Pizarro on one occasion drew a line from East to West. Then turning his face southward, he said: "Friends and comrades, on that side are toil, hunger, nakedness, storms, desertion and death. On this side, ease and pleasure. Choose each man what best becomes a brave Castilian. For my part, I go to the south."

Saul, in his great adventure, had come to the drawn line. On the one side was the tribulation way, with probable martyrdom as its terminal. On the other side popularity, applause and exalted leadership. But Saul quickly chose "affliction with the people of God, rather than enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." His acceptance was notable because of what it was in itself. It was the supreme hour when a human heart opened its door to admit the King of Glory.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

Lesson VII.—May 16, 1926.

"ABRAM AND THE STRANGERS."

GOLDEN TEXT: "All the nation of the earth shall be blessed in him."—Gen. 18: 18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 133.

LESSON: Genesis 18: 1-8, 16-19.

This eighteenth chapter of Genesis contains some fundamental truths that need to be emphasized in our modern life. Back of this story of three men or strangers (one of them was Jehovah) appearing to Abram, and of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, there are abiding truths that are vital and life-giving.

1. God reveals himself and enters into the closest friendship with men. "And Jehovah appeared unto him (Abram) by the oaks of Mamre, as he sat in the tent door in the heat of the day. And he lifted up his eyes and looked, and lo, three men stood over against him." In these words the writer of this story gave expression to a conviction that is still ungrasped by many professing Christians, the conviction that God is not far away, that He reveals himself, and that He enters into close fellowship with men. Back of the simple story is this fact. This man of the long ago had gone far beyond the experience of many modern men—he had found God and had had intimate fellowship and friendship with Him. Our modern church life needs to emphasize this truth. We need to remind men again and again that the heart of religion is not in creeds or in churches, but in intimate friendship and communion with God. God does reveal himself to His children. They can have fellowship and friendship with Him.

2. The supreme place and importance of the home. "For I have known him, to the end that he may command his children and his household after him, that they may keep the way of Jehovah to do righteousness and justice; to the end that Jehovah may bring upon Abraham that which He hath spoken of him." Let us keep in mind that God was building a nation. He had in mind to bless the world through the nation which He should call. And in looking out for a man who would be the head or father of this great people, He picked out a man from an obscure and small tribe, because "He may command his children and his household after him, that they may keep the way of Jehovah to do righteousness and justice; to the end that Jehovah may bring upon Abraham that which He hath spoken of him." The home is not only the unit of the nation; it is the most important one. The family is the key to every situation. Nothing can take its place in God's program. When we remember that the home has the child first and has it in its most impressionable years, that there is such intimacy of contact between parents and children, that the home offers such unparalleled opportunities for training, that forces both direct and indirect, conscious and unconscious are always at work upon the child's life, that the child spends so much time in the home, and that example is as powerful and perhaps more powerful than precept, we begin to see the strategic place and the supreme importance of the home. When one thinks of the character of the average parental control, or the lack of it, when he thinks of the tendency to transfer the responsibility of religious training in the average home, he begins to see that this lesson has a message for our own day and time. Abraham was chosen because he was a man who would command his children—that does not mean that he was a tyrant and a czar,—and because he was a man who would teach his children the way of Jehovah and do justice and righteousness. A noted educator recently said in an address that what we need most in our modern life is a new set of parents. However true that may be, it is not too much to say that we do need parents with a new sense of responsibility, and with a new measure of devotion to the cause of real home life.

3. The immense significance of a few righteous men in a community. The story goes on to tell how Abram, with a deep concern for a community, which alas too few people have in our modern times, asked Jehovah to spare the wicked cities if fifty, forty-five, forty, thirty, twenty, even ten, righteous men could be found therein. Ten righteous men might have saved Sodom! Ten righteous men may save any community. Thank God that it is so. This old world would have gone to destruction long ago, had it not been for the few men here and there who with a sense of civic pride and with a high devotion to high ideals, have been a saving element in society. God does not depend upon majorities. "There is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." Let us not become weary in well-doing, but let us give ourselves with devotion and consecration to the things of the Kingdom, for in doing this, we shall save both ourselves and others.

Teaching Points.

1. He who entertains strangers often entertains angels unaware.
2. The man or the thing which inspires a man to higher living or nobler service is an "angel of Jehovah."
3. Hospitality is not the exclusive possession of Christianity, but it is a characteristic of a genuine Christian life.
4. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him.
5. Life has no higher gift than that a man should so live that he shall be a blessing to others.
6. God fulfills His purposes through men when men allow Him to use them.
7. "When a man takes thought for the life of a community and begins to intercede on its behalf, his faith in the divine mercy grows by leaps and bounds."
8. God is a God of justice.
9. God is a God of mercy.

"HOW TO USE THE BIBLE."

TOPIC: "How to Use the Bible."—Acts 8: 26-35; Psa. 1: 1-6.

Daily Readings.

Monday, May 10. The Bible in Worship. Ps. 119: 97-104.
 Tuesday. The Bible for Food. I Pet. 2: 1-8.
 Wednesday. The Bible for Light. II Pet. 1: 16-21.
 Thursday. Memorize the Bible. Col. 3: 16-17.
 Friday. Bible-Study. I Cor. 10: 1-11.
 Saturday. Teach the Bible. Acts 20: 25-32.

Some Bible Hints.

Read the Bible, even parts that are hard to understand; light will be sent sometime.

Read the Bible with others, for instance, with a teacher. Others may understand what is dark to you.

Bible reading should not be a duty but a joy. It may begin in duty, but it will end in joy.

Read thoughtfully; meditate; do not rush ahead. Look for treasures.

Suggestive Thoughts.

Use the Bible first of all to learn God's will as revealed in Jesus. Then conform to that will.

Make the Bible a companion. Carry it with you and read in leisure moments. It whispers only to those that love it.

Use the Bible with discrimination. We do not expect to find a full revelation of God in Genesis. God revealed Himself gradually. Jesus is the high point of God's revelation of Himself.

Use the Bible to win others to Christ. Scripture, not argument, is the determining factor. Therefore absorb scripture.

Some Illustrations.

If it is difficult to master a science, how much more difficult it must be to understand God, the author of all sciences! Hence we must give time and study to our Bible.

Voltaire, the sceptic, read the Bible to find flaws in it. Moody read it to find God. Which method is best?

To Think About.

What system have we for reading the Bible?

What help have we gotten from the Bible?

What truths have we learned from the Bible?

"No seeker after God can turn to the Bible and be disappointed. He may be puzzled; he may be given tough material to deal with; but if he is in earnest, he will find at last the light."—J. L. Marshall.

MOTHER'S COUNSEL.

Lesson, II Timothy 1: 3-14.

"That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep."

"Whenever I wanted real sound counsel, I used to go to my mother." Such were the words of Dwight L. Moody in an address which he delivered at his mother's funeral. Wise man! Yet this is an experience which many have shared.

"Mother, watch me, I'm going to run." Hearing those words, Elijah P. Brown turned and saw a little crippled boy, whose frail limbs were supported with steel braces. Hobbling along, he presented a pitiful spectacle, but his mother encouraged him at every step.

"Very well, darling. Let me see you run," was her cheerful reply. The little lad took a few steps and then caught one foot against the braces of the other limb. Headlong over the curb he would have fallen had not his mother caught him.

"That was fine! That was splendid! You can do better next time!" Such were her words of counsel and comfort.

REV. WM. J. HART.

Prayer.—Help us today, O Lord, to grow in wisdom and in favor with God and man, even as the Master Grew. Amen.

LUKE.

Here is a stumbling-block to Arians—that they should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father, which they refuse to do.

God did the Testament enjoin,
And then He seal'd it with His blood;
The man who did His life resign,
Was perfect man, and perfect God.

But man, vain man, must thou conclude,
That all is false beyond his skill?
How low his thoughts, how rash and rude,
To contradict the Master's will!

If Jesus be divided from the Father, so are all believers in Christ. The only way that fallen man could ever be in union with God, was effected by the divinity and humanity becoming one. If Christ be not God, then being grafted into Christ availeth nothing. Facts are stubborn things. If God and Christ be not the same, how can believers who are grafted in the Vine, partake of the root and fatness? Read D. Jarret's first volume.

From Luke 6 to the end, I discover no great difficulty in understanding his writings. He bears witness to those who wrote before. I advise my reader to pay close attention to the nineteenth chapter and twenty-seventh verse. Christ being King as well as Redeemer, all men are bound to obey Him, in order, as subjects of His visible kingdom. He hath established His Church, or kingdom, in this civilized world. All those who, from corrupt principle, refuse to live under His written government, are deemed His enemies, and at the last day will be treated as such, saying, "Bring those mine enemies, who would not that I should reign over them, and slay them before me." O reader, be reconciled to the Lord. (See chaps. 22, 24, 25.) There note that episcopacy is expressly forbidden; therefore, why will men contend with God.

JOHN.

CHAPTER I.

The gospel by John comes next, of course. This holy apostle strikes at the deepest mystery in the sacred book, saying, in the beginning (of time) was the Word, and the Word was with God, eternally, and the Word was God. Furthermore, all things were made by Him and for Him. In Him (the Word) was divine life and divine light, which are the esse and essence of Deity. Read on, all who received Him then, as their Lord God, He gave them power to become the sons of God. What manner of man is this, that can give condemned sinners, children of wrath and hell, power to be adopted sons of God? Reader, He holds that power still on earth, and if you will receive Him as your teacher, Saviour, Lord and Master, He will give you that power. Christ's humanity and His divinity was the glorious Emanuel, or God with us. The wisdom of this world, with all its philosophical notions, have found themselves lost in a crowd of difficulties, from thence have drawn false conclusions, and cannot comprehend truth. Reader, O reader! if your mind still wavers, I would advise you just now implicitly to believe the word, and pry no further into the divine mystery without a light, lest your intellects should be impaired, and you may wade out of your depth. Think no less of Christ than Himself hath declared, that the Father and Son were one. What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder.

You may read on now and understand, until you enter the third chapter, where it insists on the new birth. Not only gross sinners need the new birth, but many a blind teacher, as Nicodemus was. When children arrive to the knowledge of moral good and evil, by a divine light, they are tempted by fleshly lusts, inticed and drawn, until the soul is prevailed on, and yields, and the soul is condemned; then the seed is sown and soon takes deep root in the heart, from whence issues out all wickedness that is committed on earth by men. Therefore, all the outward forms and reformations in the world can never change that evil, wicked and deceitful heart, and root out the evil seed; but this heavenly birth can effect it. So let sinners try to understand the mystery in a speculative point of view, and strive, hope and pray until they understand it by a happy experience. Notice the thirteenth verse, how our divine Saviour was in heaven and on earth at the same time! He is now personally in heaven, and yet upon earth, moving amidst the Churches. Yea, he was, and is always in the world, for lo, He filleth immensity, and every point of duration. He is the same yesterday, today, and forever! Amen.

CHAPTER V.

There appears no great difficulty in understanding this chapter, in its literal sense. Sinners are considered spiritually dead in sin, being dead by the law, and strangers to quickening grace.

Reader, thou art solicited to look well into the twenty-fifth verse. Here stands divine orders, that you, as a professor of the Christian religion, must honor Jesus, equal with the Father. Thus you must suppose two Gods of equal glory, and have no supreme; else acknowledge the divinity and humanity to constitute one incarnate "Lord God." Amen.

CHAPTER VI.

In this blessed section, there is a gracious, glorious and interesting mystery that needs an experienced and a gifted interpreter; that is, respecting the body and blood of the Lord Jesus to be the spiritual meat, drink, and life of the soul. Moreover, that this bread came down from heaven. He saith in the positive, yea, in the strongest terms, "My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed." A question arises, viz: how could His flesh come down from heaven when made of a virgin here on earth? First, this was decreed in the eternal mind, as "a lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. 13:8). The divine Word in its divine essence was eternal with God, and was God, and is God; for the Father, the Word, and Spirit, are three grand essentials of the one adorable Lord God, who holds the records in safety. Thus it came to pass that this divine Word descended in emanation from the center of the eternal mind, or bosom of Deity, or Divino; but not considered in the abstract, no more than the beams of the sun are abstracted from the body. The Word was made flesh. This is incarnation; the flesh begotten by and became of the very same nature—thus the union is reciprocal. Just like the seamless coat, there is no division. And thus it appears the soul ingrafted into Christ by faith, partakes of the root and fatness, feeding by faith on the virtue of Christ's blessed body and blood! Thus it appears that the humanity of Christ is and was a divine humanity. When a soul feeds on the Word, he feeds on Christ.

CHAPTERS VII AND VIII.

Let us carefully look into these sacred sections, and look up to the Fountain of light for a right understanding. Notice the twenty-fourth verse, and know that people make capital mistakes respecting religion, truth and error by judging according to the appearance of things; but our Lord teaches us to judge righteous judgment, by the law and testimony.

In the seventh section, we are told that the Holy Spirit was not then given in the fullness of the new dispensation, by reason that humanity was not then glorified. How say some of you that John's baptism was the Christian baptism, when Christ had not ascended, and the great spirit was not given.

My reader may see clearly in the eighth chapter that he who lives in the practice of sin is not only a servant of sin, but a child of the devil! Nevertheless, if a sinner believes that Jesus is the only and true Saviour, and consequently will abide in His word as a learner or disciple, the Lord will surely have mercy on him; by the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus will free him from the law of sin and death by the saving knowledge of the truth. Then, why will you die a sinner?

CHAPTER IX.

This section abounds with notable miracles, and among the rest, Jesus displayed His almighty creating power in giving sight to one who was born blind. This one blind man became a disciple and worshiper of Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER X.

First. Jesus compares his faithful followers to a flock of sheep, Himself their good Shepherd. He calls, they follow; He leads, but never drives. He feeds, guards and protects all those who obey His voice and follow His holy footsteps. Such He will feed who are called, chosen and faithful. Whoever desires to be one of His sheep and feed in His pastures must come in by the one door. "I am the door of the sheep," sayeth the Lord. If any one enters in by this door, he will find pasture in every apartment of duty. How say some that baptism by immersion is the door into fellowship and Church communion? It is not so. It is spiritual baptism that unites believers. Water baptism is but an outward sign, or figure, of the uniting baptism. Simon was baptized, but remained in the gall of bitterness.

In verse sixteen, our Lord spake of other sheep He had who were not of the Jews—they He should bring in and make one fold. This may allude to what is called the vocation of the Gentiles. There were several among the Gentiles who, like Cornelius, feared God and wrought righteousness; who when the gospel was sent among them, gladly came in. After the Jews rejected the gospel, the apostle turned to the Gentiles, and as many as were thus prepared, appointed, or ordained, quickly believed and embraced the gospel. They also were baptized in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. This baptism made them nominal Christians. If Christ's flock will obey His voice and follow Him, He will protect, defend, feed and save them forever. Reader, mind the terms—obey His voice and follow Him, and He will give unto thee eternal life. Jesus said (verses 27, 28), "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not."

CHAPTER XI.

In this chapter we have the history of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus. They were godly, poor people, living in a little village, where the humble Redeemer often resorted and partook of their plain homeware. Jesus loved Mary, who once washed His feet with Her tears; He also loved Martha, and her brother. Notice a few observations in this chapter. First, how the blessed Lord loves His true disciples, let them be ever so poor, and visits such now in spirit. Again, notice how He was possessed of sympathy, mutually feeling the distress of the human creature, for as He saw Mary weeping, and the friendly Jews also weeping, Jesus groaned—yea, Jesus wept! Although the great Redeemer is now in His glory and cannot feel trouble, He can feel pity and divine compassion. Let this excite us to love Him and trust in His goodness and power.

Hear with attention the Redeemer's proclamation, saying, "I am the resurrection of the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead (in sin) yet shall he live (be quickened); and he that liveth a life of holy faith shall never die." Reader, believest thou this? Notice the contents of the proclamation, saying, "I am the resurrection and the life." The interpretation is this: I am the eternal life—that is, the esse, or existence of Deity; that is my life and my divine soul, for I am God, and there is none else, as being one with the Father—not two, but one; and I am the almighty power which raiseth the dead. The general resurrection at the last day is a solemn and awful certainty. The rest of this chapter seems easy to understand.

CHAPTER XII.

There are a few particulars in this sacred chapter that calls our attention. Our dear Redeemer rode into the great city on a colt, to fulfill the saying of one of His prophets, calling on the daughters of Zion to behold their King coming, meek and lowly, riding upon an ass. O what amazing condescension—a lesson to humble the pride of His creatures! His despised followers, in their simple manner, gave every mark of honor to their divine Prince, making use of the natural beauty of the boughs of trees, with the loud acclamations of Hosanna, which word abounds with the designation of the highest encomiums. The children joined the loud Hosannas, according to what was long foretold, that out of the mouths of babes and sucklings (comparatively) the great Redeemer should receive perfect praise. The impulses of His spirit raised such united shouts that the city echoed and vibrated in return to their exalted strains until the hypocritical men of order, who were not able to quell the triumph, called upon the Lord Jesus to rebuke His disciples and teach them order. The Lord said unto them, as the divine impulses by which they were influenced were such, that if they were irresistibly silenced, it would so frustrate the grand design that it might cause the very stones in the street and in the walls to cry out; that such a phenomena might appear as would terminate in the destruction of the city.

Reader, you need the interpretation of the twenty-fifth verse. Thus sayeth the Lord, "He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal. These sayings respecting love and hatred in diverse places are not to be understood according to the general idea we take up relative to love and hatred; but it is to be considered comparatively, like that of a man hating his father, mother, wife and children, and God hating Esau, an innocent babe. But God prefers one before the other for certain purposes, according to foreknowledge, and we must love the Lord above all in heaven and earth. Let him that readeth try to understand. Thus sayeth the Lord, walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you.

There were several of the ruling men in Jerusalem who believed on the blessed Redeemer, but through fear of the people they would not confess Him, nor be baptized in His name. Such believers will have their lot with infidels. Sinners may stop their ears, and shut their eyes, until they appear spiritually dead, deaf and blind. It is a dangerous thing to resist the light. Those who choose darkness, and die in that channel, may expect to sink into the blackness of darkness forever.

CHAPTER XIII.

Jesus loved His own, even to the end—that is, to His death. If my reader will inquire, saying, but who are His own? the answer is ready, viz: those who are not of this world, but are chosen out of the world, and led by His spirit; those who follow the Lamb wherever He goeth.

About this time, one of the apostles, by the name of Judas, gave place to the devil, who entered into him after receiving the sop. Judas had a weak place, which was covetousness—Satan entered there. If Judas did feel malice in his heart, as well as light in his head, I must suppose his sin was unpardonable. But if he was influenced by the love of money, the sin was not unpardonable. By way of strong supposition, we may take up the following idea, which is my impression, he had seen the miracles wrought by his Lord, that His wisdom and power were superior to all the world, and believed that himself would get the money, and the Lord would make His escape. This appears like a correct impression from the writings of Matthew 27:3. When Judas saw that his Lord was condemned, he repented.

In the thirty-fifth verse, we have the sure mark of our Lord's true disciples—that is, love to each other. This is most convincing to men of the world. O how destructive are divisions to precious souls, and how it weakens our spiritual armies and cools our brotherly love. This seems to be the general lamentation among all spiritual Christians. But who can show the original cause, and how the evil may be removed? Perhaps we read of near, if not quite, two hundred separate and distinct bodies of people professing the Christian religion, all exclaiming: lo, here is Christ! If one minister attempts to shew what he judges to be errors in such a Church, even should his judgment be correct, he is counted an enemy to that people for telling it. Here we are chained and fettered by each other. People in general seem to dislike that any preacher, however moderate, should speak in any way against what they consider corrupt doctrine or discipline. Just like a law that once existed in pagan Rome, that no one should speak against the idols of another.

Then send it to your editor, with the story written about the picture. Do it all your own self. Let it be your very own work. Of course, Mother may help you dears. That's always the best anyway—and Mother just loves to help us, doesn't she?

The contest will last till the first of June—so between now and then, try and try and try! Oh, won't we all have lots of fun trying to decide which one is the very best, and the next best, and the next, next best, too. I want to see those precious pictures and read those lovely stories now—but I'll try to wait dears.

Hurry now, and get yours in first.

A QUEER CALL.

Ethel ran down the front steps and peeped under the piazza. She was looking for the thimble that her mother had dropped. There it lay in plain sight. She stooped to get it, but she jumped up again with a little scream; she had nearly put her round nose into the middle of a great cobweb.

"Mother," she called, "I can't get it! There's a big spider in the way."

Her mother laughed. "How long has my daughter been afraid of a cobweb?"

Well," explained Ethel, "I do believe there's a big spider right near it somewhere."

Mrs. Spencer put her sewing aside and came down the steps.

"Good!" she said. "Let's call on him."

"Call on him!" echoed Ethel, who was much puzzled. "How can we? I don't even see him. And, besides, if he sees us, he'll run away."

She had never called on a spider, and she could not imagine how she should act.

The web was one of the wonderful great wheels that certain kinds of spiders spin new almost every morning. They are always alike, yet no one has ever found out how their owners learn to build them. The owner of this particular wheel was nowhere to be seen.

"He isn't very polite," said Ethel, thinking of the rhyme that begins:

"'Won't you step into my parlor?' said the spider to the fly.

'It's the prettiest little parlor that you ever did spy,'"

"He ought to come right down and ask us in."

"Perhaps he's in his own room," answered her mother. "Do you see that little thread that starts from the very middle of the web and runs up and backward to the under side of the piazza?"

Ethel had not seen it before, because, like other little girls and boys, she did not observe carefully. But there it was, and as she followed it up she saw at the very end right under the piazza floor, Mr. Spider himself.

"Why, he's upside down, mother!" she cried. "Don't you suppose it makes his head ache? And he has kept his feet on the line that runs to the web as if he were coming down."

"No," said Mrs. Spencer, "he's waiting for his doorbell to ring," and she picked up a tiny piece of grass and gently touched the edge of the web; she took care not to break it. The spider became alert at once. He felt of his telegraph line two or three times with his foot as if to make sure of the message, then down he rushed to the middle of his web and out to the edge where the tip of grass was. He felt of it for a minute and then decided that it was not good to eat, then hurried back to wait for a fly to come along.

"You see," said Ethel's mother, "when the fly gets caught, it shakes the web and signals to Mr. Spider that his dinner has come. Then he runs down and makes sure of his meal by tying the poor fly all around with his strong, sticky web, until he has his prisoner safe."

And Ethel acknowledged, as she picked up the thimble that it had been a most interesting call.—

Most of the men who enter Southern Railway service make it their life's calling

RAILROADING a man's job

THERE is no occupation in the world which is more exacting in its demands on the individual than railroading. That is why the world over the term "railroad man" denotes men of character, trustworthiness and useful citizenship.

But if the demands on the individual railroad man are great, so are the opportunities. The men with the responsibilities of leadership on the Southern today have grown up with the railroad.

To handle the greater traffic of the growing South expeditiously, economically and dependably, the Southern needs the best men of the South.

Railroading has always attracted the best type of citizenship. And it always will. It is a man's job.

SCOTT.

After a lingering illness of two months, Mrs. Emma Ann Scott, relict of the late Rev. J. A. Scott, passed from earth's labors to her heavenly reward, on April 9, 1926, at her home near Linville, Va. She was 71 years, one month and 29 days old. She is survived by five daughters and one son, seventeen grand children, one great grand child, and one brother, Mr. James G. Holt of Burlington, N. C. Besides her relatives, Sister Scott leaves a host of friends in this section. She was one of the kindest, most sympathetic and unselfish persons this writer has ever been acquainted with. She was, furthermore, an affectionate Christian mother, and succeeded well in training her children and bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

She was a member of Shiloh Christian Church of the Western North Carolina Conference—having united with that church at the age of thirteen. She was a devout, Christian, far more interested in the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God than in self or earthly things. During her two months' illness, she made plans whereby, should she have recovered, she hoped by the labor of her hands to have raised some money for the cause of foreign missions this summer. That seems to have been her chief desire for living longer.

Sister Scott was not only the wife of a Christian minister, who preceded her to the glory land by ten years, but she was also the daughter of a minister of the Christian Church, the Rev. John R. Holt.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. W. Clegg of the United Brethren Church, in the Linville Christian Church; and the interment was made in Woodbine cemetery, Harrisonburg, Va., Monday, April 12, 1926.

R. PERRY CRUMPLER.

"One is truly great who, when the last call has come from the great beyond, can look the grim reaper in the eye and say, 'I am ready to go, my work here is finished and I have fought a good fight for the honor of my Lord.'"

ALLISON.

Mrs. Lou Dora Allison, wife of William Allison, Haw River, died April 12, 1926, in her 52d year. She was united in marriage to William Allison on March 13, 1895, and to them were born six children. Her husband and five children survive her. In early life she confessed Christ and united with the church. She died in the faith that she had lived. A good wife, mother and friend has fallen asleep. Sweet be her rest till Jesus bids her awake. The funeral services were from Long's Chapel Christian Church, conducted by the writer; and her remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

God has called our young sister, Hallie Selma Underwood, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. I. T. Underwood, from this life. She was much loved in this community, and her death was a great shock to her many friends and relatives. She will be missed much in the church and Sunday School, for she was faithful to attend both. We especially miss hearing her voice in the choir, as she was an alto singer and she always sang that part in the special songs at the home church, and had sung in special songs at other churches, as she was a member of the singers convention of this township. It was hard for her parents and friends to give her up, as she was so young and sweet and was just budding into young womanhood. She was almost sixteen years of age. But God never makes a mistake. We wish to express our sympathy to the bereaved ones and to express our loss. Therefore,

Be it resolved:

First, that we bow in humble submission to the will of God, realizing that He has a purpose in all His doing, and we rejoice that Hallie had the hope of eternal life abiding in her.

Second, that we feel that the church has lost one of its most promising young members but her influence is still with us and is leading our young people to a higher plane. And we thank God that He lent her to us for a while.

Third, that we offer our love and sympathy to the family, realizing that they have faith in God who is able to sustain them and to bring them to where she is; where there will be no more parting in that home.

Fourth, that a copy of these resolutions be entered on the records of Concord Christian Church, a copy be sent to the bereaved family, and a copy sent to the Christian Sun for publication.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. S. M. LYNAM.

Dr. Coffin Made President.—

Dr. Henry Sloan Coffin has been elected to and has accepted the presidency of Union Theological Seminary, New York City. He has been for twenty-two years professor of homiletics in that institution, and for twenty-one years pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church. He has been forced by his new duties to resign the pastorate.

Historic Seminary Moves.—

The Southern Baptist Seminary at Louisville, Ky., has completed its transfer to the new home on the outskirts of the city. The new plant includes an administration building now housing the library and the chapel, and a dormitory for single students. To this is to be added soon, apartment houses for married students, a library building and a chapel.

The Late Epidemic.—

The United States Bureau of Health estimates that during the late grippe epidemic more than two million people, or two per cent of our total population were at one time confined to their homes and unable to attend to their duties. This means that the epidemic must have been a very expensive one for the nation as a whole. Every precaution should be taken to keep well. To be sick is costly in more ways than doctors' bills.

A Meat Eating Nation.—

The people of the United States ate seven billion pounds of beef and nine billion pounds of pork during 1925. This is an average of 63 and one-tenth pounds of beef and 77 and one-tenth pounds of pork for every man, woman and child in the United States. These figures show that Americans are a meat eating people, and physicians believe that could the amount of meat consumed be cut down that the life span would be lengthened.

A Good Plan.—

North Carolina believes in letting the users of the excellent roads in that State pay for their maintenance. That State will receive between thirteen and fifteen million dollars this year from its automobile licenses and a four cent gasoline tax. By imposing such taxes, the users pay for the roads. Practically all of this amount will go to the upkeep and improvement of roads. It is a most excellent idea, and the users of the roads ought not to object to paying for them.

A Changed Purpose.—

Very frequently of late years, things which were made for military purposes have been changed and used in peaceful pursuits for the benefit of the race. One of the latest of these is artificial fogs discovered by a Scandinavian scientist. Mrs. N. T. Farmer 1-1 fogs are being used in Norway now to save plants from being killed by frost. The vapor serves as a blanket over trees, vines, and other growing things, and freezing cannot occur. The thing intended for the destruction of men is now made to serve them in a most helpful way.

A Charge Against War.—

Many arguments against war are being offered now, and there are many to be offered. The Congress added eighteen million dollars to its pension appropriation. This money is to go to the veterans, widows and helpless children of the Spanish War. This never ending pensioning is one of the aftermaths of war. If the thing were done when 'twere done, it would be bad, but it is worse when the tax payers of the country must be burdened always with great pension appropriations. It is one great charge more against war.

What Will It Mean.—

Recent statistics show that twenty-six per cent of the female population of the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., or nearly three women out of every ten, are engaged in some occupation out side of their homes. This is a little more than a fourth of the women, and viewed through a pessimist's eyes, it may mean something serious. Certainly it brings up the question of whether or not a woman can have a home and a career. New freedom for women was certainly needed, but whether it is being used wisely may sometimes be questioned.

Unusual Insurance.—

John S. Stevenson, a young lawyer and war veteran, died at Vineland, N. J., April 4th. He left a note for his five year old son telling him that he was leaving a package of letters for him. One of these would be delivered to him on each birthday until he was grown, and still another on the day he was married. He believed that this advice would profoundly affect his son's life, coming as it would after his death. This is a very real kind of insurance, and an unusual kind. It may mean much more than a steady income could have meant to the son.

Wives Go on Strike.—

Many new things have been coming out of Russia during these last years. One of the latest is the news of a strike by the wives of a village near Orel, Russia. The women of the village struck because of the ill treatment of their husbands. They met and marched to the village school where they issued an ultimatum to their husbands. It took the form of a contract that no husband should abuse his wife by word or act, nor should he demand too much work from her. The

Will Attempt Election of Caliph.—

The Moslem World will hold a convention in Cairo, Egypt, during the present month for the purpose of electing a Caliph. This office carries with it the leadership of the Moslem world. The position has been vacant since the present republican government of Turkey brought about the deposition of the Sultan and abolished the office. Under present conditions the Moslems of Syria will not be able to participate in the convention, and are not likely to recognize anything done there. The last attempt to choose a Caliph failed. King Fuad of Egypt was then the principal candidate. His election is not favored by Islam, however because of his supposed subservience to Great Britain. It is felt that the actions of this gathering will be nothing more than a nominal election if it is that.

A Radio Discovery.—

Now that so many people own radios, everyone is interested in every discovery made about them. Much money is being spent in experiments for improving radio service. A number of tests carried on by the General Electric Company has convinced the experimenters that radio signals are heard best at a distance of six hundred miles. After a distance of three hundred miles the signals seem to increase in strength. A message by radio was recently sent from this country to the Argentine during the day and with a very short wave length. This had never been done before, and radio authorities believed that the longer the distance was to be covered, the longer must the wave length be. The sending of the message to the Argentine convinced radio experts that it could be made of great commercial value.

A New Cause for Dispute.—

The Presbyterians now have a new cause for dispute. Sometime ago the Presbyterian Board of National Missions voted to discontinue their country life work and so dispense with the services of Dr. Warren H. Wilson and his assistants. At a later meeting held recently the board reconsidered its action and voted to retain the work. The fundamentalist branch of the church charges that the board took advantage of the absence of some of its evangelical members and continued to spend the church's money on cattle raising and farming, instead of preaching the gospel. It is a fight between the rationalist liberal branch of the church and the fundamentalists. The latter charge that the liberals are seeking to split the church by driving a wedge of infallible human wisdom into it. The country life work has meant much to the Presbyterians, but some cannot see how it harmonizes with the task of the church.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. H. W. Elder, financial agent of Bethlehem College, has an earnest appeal for the college in this issue of THE SUN. Read underneath and down back of the lines. It has soul and life behind it. Success to his efforts.

THE SUN'S Editor extends sympathy to our dear brother, Rev. E. A. Watkins, D. D., Urbana, Illinois, whose wife after an illness of many months passed away recently. We assure our brother of our sympathy in his sorrow.

Mr. L. T. Cates of Burlington, N. C., offers his services as Evangelistic Singer to pastors and churches that may need his services. He has open dates for a part of June and the last two weeks in July. Write him at Burlington, N. C.

Rev. I. W. Johnson, Secretary of the Southern Christian Convention, has placed the copy of the proceedings of the Convention in the hands of the printer. The manuscript will make a considerable booklet. It is now being put into type.

"I am writing to say that we are moving south in August, locating at Elon College. We will make Elon our home, and I shall be very glad to serve churches within reach of the College. Please state these facts in THE CHRISTIAN SUN." Churches that desire to change pastors will write Rev. R. F. Brown, Pleasant Hill, Ohio.

"The purpose for which the church exists is Missions. Take out of the church the Missionary Idea and you have a ship without a port . . . a soldier without an order, a life with no objective. You have a barren vine that cumbars the ground, an empty house over whose door is written, 'The Glory of the Lord hath departed from it.'"

—Geo. W. McDaniel.

The 1926 Christian Annuals have been mailed out according to the directions of the Conference Secretaries. If there should be some one who does not get a copy, we should be glad to send him a copy. It contains the proceedings of the conferences of the Southern Christian Convention, also the Women's Missionary Societies of the various conferences. The price is 50 cents, 152 pages.

We acknowledge with gratitude an announcement of an invitation to the commencement exercises of Christian College, Franklinton, N. C., May 20th to 26th. Mr. W. A. Robinson, supervisor of High Schools, State Department of Education, Raleigh, N. C., will deliver the annual address on Wednesday, May 26th. We congratulate President Henderson and his faithful co-workers for their successful year's work.

Rev. H. M. Gray, pastor reporting the collection for the Emergency Mission Fund from his church at Lanette, Ala., says, "I only wish our offering could have been more, but I have done the best I could under the circumstances. Our church here is laboring under indebtedness of about $1,000.00, to finish paying for our pews and our people seem to be doing all they are able to do." This is a proper spirit to manifest for even though our church may have its indebtedness and its burdens to bear, it is a glorious privilege to try to share with those who have it not, the Gospel which has been given us and which the Church is trying to send to the uttermost parts.

Always in helping to send the Gospel to others, we at the same time enjoy it the more and do the more for it in our own church and community.

The following is from 3259 Encinal Ave., Alameda, Calif., and is signed, "Your beloved brother 'Little Davy Jones.'": "Strange after leaving the City of Brotherly Love (following that revival of 1876 in which Moody and Sankey were the instruments God used) fifty years ago, some of us met in homes, churches and were co-workers and Dr. Daniel Long said, 'Brother Jones, you need us and we need you.' And you nor I have forgotten yet the showers of blessings we got, even some dropping before we ceased talking, and who can say what new churches, converts, more used workers, deeper interest in their fellow creatures, salvation at home and abroad, have been the outcome of that blessed work of the Holy Spirit. Thank God, not only in Home Missions, but we are co-workers with God in the glorious work in foreign countries also. Can you or I tell how many in Japan have lived and died in Christ, and even in China how many men are with the Lord! I would love not only to see you but to join your prayers and help in the good work to the end. Hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may, and press on in the glorious work of helping win men and women to Christ in all the world."

FACTS ABOUT BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

We are now nearing the close of the third year. We haven't done what we would like to have done. Two reasons are the causes that have hindered us.

First. The lack of equipment. Second. The lack of money.

We are hoping to make the next year the best yet. The school has meant much already to our people. Quite a number of boys and girls have obtained a two year's college course that possibly would never have seen inside a college building.

The foundation for the new Administration Building has been laid, and material is being purchased and placed on the ground. We are hoping to have the building ready to enter by the first of September. The building will contain thirteen large class rooms, two offices, laboratories and auditorium. It will be, when completed, a beautiful and well arranged building.

We have in Georgia and Alabama about forty-five churches. I have asked ten churches to pay for the windows and frames, eight churches to pay for the doors, eight churches to pay for the flooring, eight churches to pay for the ceiling, and eleven churches to pay for the roofing. I have written to all the pastors and asked if they would try and get their churches to do this, and all except three have already agreed to do it or try.

Now the material has been purchased, and some of it will be on hand in fifteen days, and we want the money to pay for it when it comes. Come on pastors, and let's do it. One man says he will pay for one-third of a car of cement if two others will do the same. The car will cost $225. It's on the ground, who will be the other two men? Write me or wire me. Be quick, it is urgent.

Friends, far and near, we want your prayers, your sympathy and your money to help us. Do not put it off, but make haste to help us. We cannot do it without the co-operation of the people.

I love the Kingdom of our Christ and I believe in the Christian Church. I have confidence in our people. I am looking for every mail to bring a letter of good cheer and a check to assist us from those who read this letter. Who will start the ball? I have full church work, and my health is not good. Please don't let this load rest too heavy upon me. Won't you help lighten it? Say "Yes." Bricks cost us laid down at the college lot about $12.00 a thousand, and it will cost us $10.00 a thousand to put them in the walls. Would you like to pay for so many brick or have so many brick laid in the walls in your name. Just say how many.

More anon. Yours for Bethlehem College.

Richland, Ga. Financial Secretary.

INDOCTRINATING OUR PEOPLE.

The Southern Christian Convention assembled recently in Durham, authorized its Board of Publication to take steps thoroughly to indoctrinate our people in the principles, history, and programs of our Church.

1. A Catechism giving our principles and history is to be prepared for the children's division of the Sunday School, and all church institutions having children from birth to eleven years inclusive are to be required to have the children taught this catechism as a part of their religious education.

2. For young people from 12 to 24, a course is to be prepared covering a quarter's work or thirteen lessons. The same ground will be covered as in the catechism course of the children, though in a more extensive way, and the programs of the church will be added.

3. For adults, the study of our Principles and Government, and the Life of James O'Kelly, by MacClenny is especially recommended. Our colleges are urged to offer these subjects, and no doubt they will.

There can be no doubt that such knowledge of our Church, its principles, history, and programs, as the Convention had in mind when it provided these courses of study, will go far to increase the love and devotion of our people for their Church.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

AFTER THE CONVENTION.

The Twenty-seventh Regular Session of the Southern Christian Convention held its biennial meeting in the Durham Christian Church, Durham, N. C., April 27-30, 1926, with one hundred delegates present. By the courtesy of the Duke Memorial Methodist Church, the Woman's Missionary Convention met at the same time; they had one hundred and one present. The two meetings totaled two hundred and one delegates, besides visitors and local people.

Pastor Stanley C. Harrell and his good congregation entertained their guests hospitably in their homes, with dinner and supper in the dining room at the church.

The weather was ideal, the interest was unabated, the reports were constructive, the discussions tense at times, with the Christian spirit balancing the entire session. No previous Convention had questions so large and difficult of solution; and no previous session worked as hard to care for all the departments without preference to any one department. One thing was plain, that members had the most interest where they placed the most thought, had done the most work, carried the heaviest responsibility, and given the most money. If all the pastors and members of the church could do as much for the church as the heads of departments, all financial questions would solve themselves in the course of regular service; but as this is not the case, the great task is "After the Convention." There are three agents that must co-operate in the execution of the plans formulated by the Convention; and all of them must be loyal to the expressed will of the Convention.

The official heads of departments, in harmony with heads of the Convention, must endeavor to carry out what the Convention has done. This means that the conferences must have presented to their sessions this summer and fall, in the clearest possible way, just what the Convention expects them to do; and this must be done as a whole, for it was the mind of the Convention to put all departments on an equitable basis. This is the task of the president and heads of departments.

Here is work for pastors that will require study, to find out what the Convention passed; and that will appear soon in the printed minutes. Then the pastor will have an obligation to the local church membership to make the whole matter plain to the thousands who did not read the Minutes. That is no easy task; but pastors will fail, as pastors, unless they undertake to inform their members of what the Convention did, and what the members should do. It is money, money, money, just what it is at home and in the nation. The money question among the nations after the world war is harder to settle than the war itself. The money war takes longer than the fighting war. It is the hard question with the Church, and pastors must help to engrave this money obligation upon the minds and hearts of all the members.

Active laymen, who were delegates to the Convention, and willing men and women who were not, must co-operate in loyal and liberal fashion to make the financial program a success. Adverse criticism and indifference can kill any good cause; and indifference is the worst enemy the church has to meet. The membership should attend, listen, heed, and then say: "It can be done, and we will help do it." W. W. S.

SINKING SIMONS.

There is a very unique and appealing story related in the fourteenth chapter of Matthew. The story is as follows: But the ship was now in the midst of the sea, tossed with waves; for the wind was contrary. And in the fourth watch of the night Jesus went unto them, walking on the sea. And when the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; and they cried out for fear. But straightway Jesus spake unto them, saying, Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid. And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water. And he said, Come. And when Peter was gone down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus. But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me. And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?

There is much in this incident that is symbolic of the experience of the Church in all ages. The Church has always sailed a stormy sea. Like the little craft of the disciples, it has been many times tossed with waves. And the wind has been contrary. Perhaps it is divinely ordained that it should be so. What would be the need of able seamen if the water were always smooth, and the waves were always favorable? We might go a step further, and enquire, Would there be any able seamen if there were no storms to be encountered, and no dangers to be overcome? Is it not the glory of the Church that she sails so stormy a sea, and yet manages to move on when the winds are so contrary?

When the storm was at its worst, and when the strength and courage of the company were all but gone, then came Jesus unto them, walking upon the water. Their first reaction was that of fear. Men are always fearful when they become aware of the super-natural, until what they have called the super-natural has been shown to be but the power of God operating in and for humanity. And herein is another truth that we should always remember. When God's children are in the midst of the stormiest seas of life, Jesus is sure to come. He may or may not be recognized, but he is sure to be there.

When Simon Peter recognized the voice of Jesus, he said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water, and he said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water to Jesus. Now surely all is well. Jesus has come over the stormy waves. He has quickened the faith of the discouraged, and in response to the Master's Come, Peter is actually walking on the storm-tossed waves. We are about to see the glorious triumph of faith-quickened humanity. When Lo, he began to sink. The sinking Simon cried out, saying, Lord, save me. And the out-stretched hand of Jesus bore him up.

Too many of us who read the story, remember only the fact, that he began to sink. But there are two facts that are a thousand fold more significant. They are; he actually did walk on the water; and when he cried, Lord save me, Jesus stretched forth his hand and caught him.

In this brief story, the entire record of Church History is epitomized. There is the bold launching forth, in response to the command of Jesus; the sinking, when faith begins to waver; and the out-stretched hand of Jesus that saves. There are those who read Church history and see only the sinkings. You will find the counterpart of this picture in the third chapter of Acts. There you will see another picture of the Simon, who beginning to sink, cried, Lord, save me. This time he is standing at the Beautiful Gate of the Temple, by the side of a man who was born a cripple, and who had never walked a step in his life. Again Peter cries out. But this time he says, In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk. And stretching forth his hand he lifted him up. And the man entered the temple, walking, leaping, and praising God.

If Simon had not begun to sink that day when he walked on the water, who knows but that he might have decided that he could walk anywhere in his own name and in his own strength. And he might never have come to say, In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk. If the Church could perfect an organization, or launch a movement, that would work perfectly and function efficiently, who knows but that the Church might believe it could walk in its own name. If there is any criticism that can in justice be brought against the Church today, it is, that too much is being done and said in the name of the Church, and too little in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth.

Within the last quarter of a century, three notable church undertakings have been launched. The Laymen's Missionary Movement, the Inter-Church World Movement, and the Forward Movements of the various denominations, have all been launched, as I believe, in response to the command of Jesus. They have all actually walked upon the storm-tossed seas of human passion, human weakness, and human sin. They have wrought untold good, which a skeptical world is little inclined to credit to them. And seeing the wind boisterous, they have begun to sink. But their very sinking has driven Christian men and women nearer to Jesus. The very failures of the Church are teaching her how to walk, hand in hand with the Christ. There are many things that try the heart of the Christian world today. Apathy and indifference, debts and deficits, half-hearted and meager support from many of those who have pledged their loyalty to the Lord, have caused the failure of most cherished plans and undertakings. But the day is not lost. The Christ is standing by. The Christ who walked the way of sacrifice and self-denial, who knew the depth and power of intercession and agony, has not forsaken his own. Perhaps he is still saying,

O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?
When we learn to walk with him, hand in hand;
when we learn to see with him, eye to eye and heart to heart; then shall the Church be able to say to a halt and sin cursed world, In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk.
The out-stretched hand shall lift them up, and they shall enter into the Temple, walking and leaping and praising God. S. C. H.

THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

By C. M. CANNON, Convention Reporter.

Thursday and Friday.

The subject of education held full sway on the Convention program on Thursday night, in the three principal addresses under the titles, "Christian Education in the Home," by Prof. S. A.
Bennett, Elon College, N. C.; "Christian Education in the Church," by Dr. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C., and "Christian Education in the College," by Rev. F. C. Lester, Franklin, Va. Following a brief devotional period by Dr.
W. S. Alexander, these subjects were taken up in order, President Harper opening his address with an explanation of what was included in the term, Christian Education. He said:

"Christian Education includes every experience which qualifies us to live with and for each other and unto God through Jesus Christ. This is the comprehensive conception of it. Specifically speaking, to most people it means the Sunday School. In these latter days and among those of prophetic insight it means such additional educational and training agencies as Week-Day
Schools of Religion, Campfire, Daily Vacation
Bible Schools, Christian Endeavor, Boy and Girl Scouts, the home, all that is briefly connoted by the recent term, The Church School. The Church School means the educational and training work of the Church and parish taken as a whole.

"Our interest at this time lies not so much in the inclusiveness of the term, Christian Education, important as that is, but rather in the method by which we are to make it efficient through organization and administration, and evaluate it as to its results by certain tests.

"The first step in the direction of organization in the local church is a committee on education.
This committee should, of course, elect the Director of Religious Education, and he should be responsible to them. This committee should select the course and provide methods by which the school shall give its support to the benevolence and current expenses of the denomination and of the local church.

"In the last analysis, any program for the church must be judged by the results it produces.
Our Master said, 'By their fruits ye shall know them,' and to this general principle the program of Christian Education in the local church is no exception. It will stand or fall by the results it produces, and it ought to be willing thus to be tested. What are the tests by which we are to judge the efficiency of our Christian educational work?" Dr. Harper suggested that they are: universal response; right attitudes toward moral and spiritual issues; unified impression of life;
character; and historical.

In closing he said by way of summary, "That we are not teaching the Bible or ethics or play or any other subjects of the curriculum. We are teaching boys and girls, men and women. With that fact consciously directing our efforts we shall be able so to motivate and attitudinize them that Christian character shall ultimately crown the world with a redeemed and consecrated humanity, redeemed from sin, and consecrated to God and brotherman."

Preceding the speech by President Harper, Prof. S. A. Bennett, head of the Department of Religious Education of Elon College, spoke on the relationship of Christian Education to the home. His general theme was that the home is the basic institution, not only as the earliest in origin but as one that lays the foundation attitudes in the child's life. He stated that in the modern day emphasis on better churches and better schools, with their great building program and their extensive work, that the resultant emphasis on the home has been less. This will necessitate the going back to the original emphasis on the home as the elementary unit.

He suggested several ways in which a program of this nature could be efficiently brought home to the people generally, the chief of which were the teaching by church and Sunday School and the realization that each parent is a teacher, and by courses in college with specific emphasis along this line.

Christian colleges, which in a particular sense means denominational colleges, should produce above all else Christian character, said Rev. F.
C. Lester, in his address on "Christian Education in the College." He stated that the college of the Christian Church, Elon College, was producing men and women of Christian character and trained leadership, but that they could not continue to do this unless every agency in the church should give their full support, which included especially the personal influence and support of every individual of the church.

On Thursday morning, after the usual devotional services, the Convention went into the election of officers.

Dr. L. E. Smith, who has for four years been president of the Convention, was elected to head the body for the next two years.

Dr. W. C. Wicker, who had previously signified his intention of giving up the work as treasurer re-accepted this position after his nomination and election by the convention.

The other officers were reelected to succeed themselves for the next term, as follows: Dr.
N. G. Newman, Holland, Va., vice president;
Dr. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va., secretary, Mrs.
Mary Andrews Rollings, Suffolk, Va., assistant secretary.

The report of the Finance Committee was adopted calling for a budget of $150,000.00 per year for the Convention, and taking away the administration of collections from each individual department and placing the whole finance problem of the Convention in the hands of one committee, who will distribute this in percentages to each of the departments, thus carrying an equalization clause that will make it impossible for one department to succeed or to be impoverished to any undue extent over any other department.
In other words, the new arrangement makes it so that all departments will succeed on an equal and stabilized basis.

Education was the general theme of the afternoon period, in which was included the reports on the educational departments of the Convention and social service, and the address of Rev.
J. H. Lightbourne of Holland, Va., on the subject, "Our Denominational Progress in Christian Education."

"Education is a continuous process," said Dr.
W. A. Harper in his report on Education. "The years spent in school and college are most valuable in developing habits of thought and attitudes of life. In Christian colleges, these years should prepare us to live with and for each other and unto God as revealed in Jesus Christ."

In the training of leadership of students for Christian work in the denomination Dr. Harper described the Mooney Christian Education building which gives Elon College a unique opportunity of service to the Church, stating that this building provided for the very finest advantages in religious training and served as a practical experience laboratory for the college students.

This report brought out the fact that $787,- 121.10 had been used in the reconstruction program for new buildings, equipments, and improvements. The total value of the plant and grounds is now set at $1,699,712.36. The full quota of 400 students, as allowed by the Board of Trustees, was enrolled this year, and the re-

He is chairman of the Commission on Christian Education which is to report at the General Convention, Urbana, Ill., October, 1926.

Dean Shailer Matthews will give the Literary Address on Tuesday morning. Dean Matthews has served as president of the Federal Council, is author of many books, including a life of Christ, and stands out as one of the constructive religious leaders of America and the world.

The Juniors will represent the literary societies on Monday afternoon. The Seniors will conduct their Class Day exercises on Monday morning and six of them will speak as class representatives on Tuesday morning, preceding Dean Matthews' address. The president's final message to the Seniors will come as usual on Sunday evening. There will be exhibits on Monday of the Art and Domestic Science Departments.

The Alumni are to be greatly in evidence on Monday. At 6:00 P. M. their banquet and business session will be held together, with Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, president of the Association presiding and acting as toastmaster. Immediately following Prof. Havilah Babcock, one of Elon's most brilliant Alumni, is to give the Alumni Oration. He is professor of Journalism in William and Mary College, editor of the Virginia Gazette, and a public speaker and lecturer much in demand. The Alumni and everybody else who can should hear him.

And I must not neglect to mention two items entirely unique. On Saturday afternoon Guilford and Elon will play baseball and on Tuesday Elon and Carolina. These features will add zest for the Commencement visitors and Alumni.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

One of the subjects that is attracting much attention at the present time is the teaching of religion in the public schools. Most American students do not regard with favor this action, and to know the reason for this one needs but to study the theory of our government. The founders did not intend that they should in anywise be united, for if they should, one would surely dominate the other; one of them must of necessity have the precedence.

Church and State propagandists have tried to force their dogmas on our legislatures, but more often than otherwise they have met defeat. It is devoutly hoped that any effort to secure ecclesiastical domination in our government will fail utterly. The teaching of religion is a duty belonging to the home and the church. It is neither the duty nor the responsibility of the State; and if it were, the political State is not qualified to teach religion.

We deplore the widespread irreligion of our times. Good people shudder over the situation; but this condition is not to be overcome by turning the teaching of religion over to the State. This conclusion is not a mere theory; for the plan has been tried and found wanting—it has ever bred disaster. Of all the evils that can befall a nation, none is worse than a union of church and State. A legal religious domination has always worked havoc.

The claim is false that the public school denies the child a moral and religious training. The State does not give food and clothing to public school pupils, but it does not deny these things to them. It is not the prerogative of the State to provide these things; it is the office of the parents. The State does not concern itself with matters of religion and the public school does well to confine itself to its proper sphere. Churches are ordained of God to give instruction in religious faith. Let the ten commandments and the golden rule be observed and taught in the homes and churches, and religion will not die out of the lives of the children; but on the contrary, it will flourish and will be seen in their acts, and the nation will be influenced for good.

The political church has substituted legal religion for the masses for a personal evangelism for the individual, and is sending her petitions for aid to legislative halls instead of to the throne of God. A human law should deal only with human affairs. God made all people free moral agents, and endowed each individual with the right of choice in matters of religious concern, and this sacred right should never be abridged.

The supremacy of conscience is mightier than monarch. England endeavored to fight one popedom with another. To the tyranny of the Roman Pontiff, she opposed the force of legal supremacy. Scotland, on the other hand, confronted the supremacy of popedom with the yet weightier principle of the supremacy of conscience. This is the only principle that can sustain the weight of civil and political, as well as of religious freedom. The strongest kingdoms of the world have had to step aside and give to conscience the right of way.

The enemies of conscience may plan against it. Its votaries may be murdered or driven into exile, but conscience triumphs. William of Orange seemed to be fighting a losing battle in his struggle with the Duke of Alva and his Jesuit troops, but William was fighting for liberty of conscience, and in the end he triumphed. Alva went home to die, and today is remembered only for his cruelty, but the cause of conscience lives.

I believe in the separation of Church and State; that the religion of Jesus Christ is founded in the law of love of God, and needs no human power to support or enforce it.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

Dear Brother Editor:

Will you permit me to make the following announcement, to wit:

The annual Memorial Service will be held at Antioch Christian Church on the second Saturday in May. All friends and others interested in the church or the cemetery are invited to come and bring flowers.

Our annual Memorial Services will be held at New Hope Christian Church on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in May. We hope to make this a Home Coming occasion, at which time we mean to take our offering for the Orphanage. We kindly invite all interested friends and people who have an interest in the church or cemetery to meet us that day. Bring friends and flowers.

Rev. H. W. Elder will preach the sermon.

I have been asked to preach the Memorial Sermon at Concord on the third Sunday, and at New Harmony Church on the fourth Sunday. I am planning to accept the invitation.

Our Memorial Services will be held at home on the first Saturday in June. We will meet at 10 A. M. at the cemetery and decorate the graves; then repair to the church for the program. We shall expect to meet a number of our old friends and neighbors at this service. Let every body come and help us honor our departed loved ones.

We had a great service at Zion Grove cemetery on the first Saturday. Bro. Barrett of the M. E. Church South, preached the sermon and the community rendered a fine program.

I have been called away from my church here at home three times recently to attend funerals. I am indebted to Rev. G. H. Veasey and Rev. S. M. Lynam for preaching for me in my absence.

Rev. H. W. Elder and myself are very much indebted to Bros. J. W. Lane and V. E. Kitchens for a trip to the Southern Christian Convention, at Durham, N. C. We made the trip of 550 miles in Bro. Lane's Ford sedan. The weather was ideal, the roads were fine, and the Convention was a joy to us. All of our crowd claimed to have had the best home, and I guess we did, for the hospitality which we received could not have been excelled. We did not have any car trouble, not even a puncture in all our journey.

Certainly our dear old Church has committed herself to a great task, and I pray the Lord to open the hearts of our people to their Christian duty. If we are to carry our different enterprises to success, we will need to bestir ourselves and trust God. If we show our faith by our works, our work will succeed. May we be faithful to the trust. May the Lord's blessings be upon our Zion everywhere. G. D. HUNT.

Competition for the Southern Railway System's corn cup this year will be offered by a greatly increased number of growers, according to advices received at the office of the general agricultural agent for the Southern.

Letters of inquiry have been received from a large number of individual growers, fair officials, boys' club workers, and county agents, asking how to enter the contest.

As was done in 1925, the cup will be offered to the grower of the best ten ears of corn from Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee or Kentucky, exhibited at any one of a list of leading State and district fairs to be designated.

The cup which is a handsome silver trophy, was won last year by Willie Pat Boland, a corn club boy of Newberry County, South Carolina, and will remain in his possession until this year's winner is announced.

One of the strangest things about the widespread distribution of the Bible is the fact that it penetrates into Mecca, the most sacred city of the Mohammedan world. Christian missionaries are not allowed to enter her gates but the Gospel they preach is carried in by many people.

The Bible has been translated into seventy-five languages spoken by more than 200,000,000 of the Moslem faith. Arabic is the language most widely used by the Moslems.

THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

port from the college showed a good year in all respects. The principal need of Elon College, as called for in this report, is the raising of sufficient funds to bring the total endowment up to $1,000,000.00.

Bethlehem College was also considered in this report, showing an enrollment of 116 students for this Junior College at Wadley, Ala., and their need is an endowment of $250,000.00, and a new building to cost $50,000.00 for administrative purposes.

Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, in his address on "The Denominational Progress of Christian Education," said that it was a large subject that had fallen to his lot to present, but that it was an especially vital one: "One though not the vitals of Christianity, yet certainly the vitals of that corporate organization of Christianity, the Church. So vital, friends, that its neglect has stifled the progress of the Church and raised difficulty upon difficulty, problem upon problem before the enterprises that seek to carry on the great work of that Church."

In outlining this program which had already been adopted by the denomination, Mr. Lightbourne brought out especially the emphasis on the correlation and co-operation of all the agencies of Christian Education. He spoke of the many influences entering into the work of Christian Education and implored the ministers and laymen to arouse themselves and take hold of a great program like this. "I am quite convinced," he said in closing, "that when we have rightly sensed the importance of Christian Education and have made it a factor in our church life, we have taken a real step forward toward the accomplishment of these things."

The chairman, Dr. W. T. Walters, of the Board of Religious Education, gave the report of that board. This report showed a summary of the work done in this department for the last two years. Two field workers have been active in the Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, and Daily Vacation Bible Schools, who have promoted teacher training work, the organization of new societies, conducted Chautauquas and schools of method, as well as gathering and furnishing statistical data on the educational agencies.

The Woman's Convention, meeting in separate session at the Duke Memorial M. E. Church, cleaned up all reports and business on hand and adjourned their session. Plans were brought up to change this meeting to an annual affair, but upon discussion it was decided to meet just preceding the Southern Christian Convention and ask the General Convention to give the Woman's Board one night session of their program. Dr. Minton was the speaker of this session. His subject was, "The Place and Power of the Woman's Missionary Society."

Mrs. J. A. Williams, of Franklin, Va., was elected to succeed Mrs. W. H. Carroll of Burlington, N. C., as president of the Women's Convention. Mrs. Williams presided over the meetings of the present session, since she was vice-president, because of the illness of Mrs. Carroll, which made it impossible for her to serve.

Other officers were elected, as follows: Vice-president, Mrs. J. L. Foster, Elon College, N. C.; corresponding secretary, Miss Margaret Allston, Henderson, N. C.; recording secretary, Mrs. Ernest Beale, Franklin, Va.; treasurer, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va.; superintendent of literature and mite boxes, Miss Gertrude Browne, Elon College, N. C.; superintendent of young people's work, Mrs. R. T. Bradford, Suffolk, Va.;

superintendent of cradle roll, Mrs. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va.

The Woman's Board voted a new department to their Convention, designating it as the Department of Spiritual Life and Prayer. Mrs. W. H. Carroll of Burlington, N. C., was elected superintendent of this. It was further decided that the women would center their missionary summer school interest in the Blue Ridge School this summer.

The Friday morning session of the Convention closed one of the most successful of our biennial meetings. Two items coming before the Convention provoked lengthy and intensive discussion on the floor, the items of adopting the budget plan for the Convention finances and the creating of a board of Policy and Finance to administer all affairs of the Convention, as was presented in resolution the preceding day, as follows: "That the Southern Christian Convention at each session shall appoint a board of nine members to be known as the Board of Policy and Finance; said board to be composed of the three members of the Executive Committee of the Convention and six members elected from the body of the Convention. This Board shall execute the policies of the Southern Christian Convention in its various relationships."

Both items were finally adopted with a few modifications of phraseology as originally reported by special commissions.

The Board of Policy and Finance was elected as follows: Dr. L. E. Smith, Col. E. E. Holland, Dr. I. W. Johnson, Dr. G. O. Lankford, K. B. Johnson, H. C. Simpson, R. A. Larrick, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle, and H. W. Elder. This board represents all sections of the country composing the bounds of the Convention, and each conference has representation upon it.

Reports were heard concerning the publication interests of the Convention through the Publication Board, P. J. Kernodle and J. O. Atkinson of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who had been previously reelected as mission secretary, was also reelected editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, P. J. Kernodle, managing editor, and Dr. I. W. Johnson, editor of the Christian Annual, and all publication contracts for the Convention were awarded to the Central Publishing Company of Richmond, Va.

A vote of appreciation was taken by the whole Convention in expression of gratitude for the music furnished by the choir of the local church, for the entertainment of the delegates by the local congregation, and to the news papers for the very liberal space accorded the Convention proceedings, especially the two papers of the city of Durham.

Greetings were brought to the Convention from several members who could not be present, among which were special greetings from Dr. J. W. (Uncle) Wellons, whose feeble condition made it impossible for him to attend the sessions as has been his regular custom.

The report of the Temperance Committee called upon the constituency of the Southern Christian Convention to give all possible aid to every agency that is seeking to carry into effect the 18th amendment, and deplored the fact that in certain centers and sections the press is giving aid to the wet propaganda, and called upon the great agency of the public press to use its mighty power to assist the righteous forces of the nation in upholding the laws of the land.

Before closing, committees were announced by the president for the departments of the Convention, the chairmen of which are as follows: Evangelism, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, Dover, Delaware; Social Service, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va.; Temperance, Dr. G. O. Lankford, Burlington, N. C., and Education, President W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.

THE "HEARINGS."

The "hearings" were rather unnecessary to begin with, but since the "wets" would have them they were granted, and the outcome was precisely that expected. The total result was an exhibition of gross-mindedness against public-spirited decency, and the more observant "wets" must have become aware, long before the hearings were done, that their psychology was as wrong as that of the German General Staff. Even General Lincoln C. Andrews' much heralded "cry for beer" failed utterly. It merely led to the comment: "What can be expected from a man who talks so much about what he is going to do?" That was the occasion of the first public misgiving with reference to General Andrews. Too much promise. Too much palaver acceptable to impressionable "drys." And then, biff! the medicinal beer permit which very few of the States will permit regardless of what General Andrews says. That was a dud. Duly the "wet" press reverberated with the great news that medicinal beer had been permitted. We were invited to behold this first significant crack in the hull of the Constitution. And then the blank silence of public indifference. It was so much of a dud that even the "drys" did not protest. And the "wets" were unable to keep up their cry beyond the second day. Then at the hearings came General Andrews' great word of comfort to the "wets," his "cry for beer," as the "wet" press described it. But again it fell on silence. Why? The people instinctively know that it is not important. It doesn't mean anything. The hearings, with all their attendant circumstances, have simply certified to the American people that the anti-Constitution hue and cry had nothing behind it. The expected revolt did not materialize. The forces of "personal liberty" did not rise. An oppressed people did not seize the opportunity for deliverance.

It looks as if there is nothing left except for General Andrews to enforce the law, or get out.—Editorial in Dearborn Independent.

PLANT BY THE MOON.

Grandad refused to plant potatoes until the moon was just right. Said they wouldn't "do well." Refused to listen to the modern view that it was all superstition.

Now science comes to the fore with the announcement that grandad was right. It seems that scientists now understand the nature of moonlight in connection with plant growth and are able to duplicate in the laboratory the effects of moonlight. Moonlight is reflected sunlight, but differs from sunlight in that it is polarized light, that is, light waves which vibrate in one direction, whereas ordinary light waves vibrate in all directions. It has been found that certain plant growth is increased by polarized light.

So grandad was justified in merely getting the ground ready for planting and then going fishing until the moon came his way in the proper quarter. In ancient times, when human life depended largely on the success or failure of crops, much attention was given to the time it was planted and comparisons made. The originators of the moon-phase idea knew by experience that in certain quarters of the moon they were sure of a bumper crop. They knew the effect but not the cause. Even the early Scripture speaks of "the precious things brought forth by the sun, and the precious things put forth by the moon." Biblical commentators have not known how to deal with the passage. Along comes science, and both Scripture and grandad can say, "I told you so."—Exchange.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

WARREN H. DENISON, Secretary.

A HEART TO HEART TALK.

All Forward Movement and Men and Millions subscriptions were amounts in addition to our regular gifts for the various denominational benevolences. Each annual gift supplemented the work by that much. Our Church is trying to do a worthy part in Christian reconstruction. Each board under such pressing needs planned and undertook reasonable work accordingly.

It can be easily seen that when we completed our five annual payments, that there were but two ways to keep even the present work of the Church on the same basis as it now is; either each and all of us would need to continue our annual gifts as during the five years in addition to our regular giving in the regular channels; or, we would need to give at least the same amount through our local church channels in addition to our usual amounts and for the same purposes for our denominational enterprises for which we are responsible. If one of these two methods is not adopted by all subscribers, the work must be retrenched or the boards go in debt. Some of our people have continued their subscriptions right on understanding the dire results to the work if they did not do so. They have been the solid stays in many cases. Some have increased their giving to the local benevolences in their own church, but the increase is not nearly so much as they gave through our special movements. So the work suffers accordingly. Others give more than they did formerly, but for different purposes, such as local enterprises. Thus again, the regular denominational work suffers. Others have dropped down to their former level of giving and the work suffers still more. Some have not yet paid their first subscriptions. Every Christian needs to face most earnestly the responsibility to the general enterprises of the Church. Our Mission work, our Education work, Evangelism, Convention, and others are vital to our cause. All of us need to study personally the objects for which we give. We are stewards. That means that we are not alone responsible for giving, or for giving generously, but we must study what we should give.

Our work is suffering, our boards are in debt, because our people have not given sufficient thought to the support of our general work. Our entire giving is less than one-fourth of the tithe. Our giving to local current expenses is about four times as much as our giving to the whole work of the denomination.

It is reassuring to know that some of our splendid pastors are putting these things before their people in a most helpful way. It is good to realize that more of our people are studying the matter and feeling the responsibility of their giving. Many are rightfully demanding that benevolences be more than one item in their church budget, and that it be regarded as another part of their budget, to be itemized definitely and with as much concern as they do local expenses, and that its ratio be something of a proper one. Some churches are beginning to feel that they must give as much at least for others as for themselves.

The stewardship message is helping them to study their personal and their church finances from a Christian viewpoint. Canvassers in the Every-member Canvass are being trained to explain the benevolences as clearly and with as much faithfulness as they do local items. Our people are studying church finance as never before.

TITHING A REAL JOY.

Mr. Marlowe R. Kersey, superintendent of the Walnut Hills, Dayton, Ohio, Sunday School, says: "It is a pleasure to be in partnership with my God and to really know what I have been putting into his business in a material way. To do this I have established a bank account for my tithe. The tithe is the plan which God has given us. It is a real joy to watch the tithe account as the weeks come and go. It has been my personal experience that after starting to tithe my income has always been increased more than the amount of the tithe. This has been God's approval, as far as I am concerned." How a superintendent who does that can urge it upon his school!

THE BIRMINGHAM CONVENTION.

BY R. C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.,
Pastor of People's Christian Church, Dover, Delaware.

The recent Convention of the International Council of Religious Education held at Birmingham, Alabama, will no doubt go down in history as one of the greatest religious gatherings to date in this country. It was a unique occasion because of the fact that the nation's leaders in every department of church thought and activities were on the various Convention and Conference programs. Many great Conventions have been held which considered certain phases of Christianity. But the Birmingham Convention, dealing with the inclusive subject of Religious Education, dealt with every major objective of the Church—Worship, Evangelism, Missions, Social Service, Stewardship, etc.

The entire Convention was an emphasis of the fact that the purpose of every church should be to help people live the largest life possible here on earth, and that the teaching ministry of the church should be the supreme concern of every pastor and every member of the church.

The Convention was a forceful emphasis of the fact that if the church is to challenge the present generation, it must seek to raise the standard of its teaching work in the Sunday School, in the program of week day religious instruction, and in the Daily Vacation Bible School up to the same level as that of the Public Schools. Though this ideal cannot be realized at once, it should be the goal of every church.

The Convention was a most impressive emphasis on the obligation of the Church to the Youth of our day. If the world is to be nearer God fifty years from now, it will be so only because this generation shall give to the boys and girls of today a proper conception of God and duty through Christian training. Properly equipped Church School buildings, efficiently trained Sunday School teachers, systematically prepared teaching materials, graded lessons, etc., and the atmosphere of a sympathetic church, are all essential to the church that would meet its responsibility to the youth of today in the work of Religious Education.

The Convention Motto should be the motto of every church and of every Sunday School: "Building a Christian Citizenship Together."

THE LORD KNOWS HIS OWN.

It has been said that the Lord has two distinct marks by which He knows His own. He knows them by their feet, for they follow. They follow wherever He leadeth, and they do not go where He will not go. Feet that be swift in running to mischief, is one of the things God hates. So you see, our feet are being watched by Him who one day will judge our works, and it makes a difference how we use them, and where we let them take us.

Then He knows His own by their ears, for they hear. Three times came the voice from heaven proclaiming Christ as the Son of God. That same voice said, "Hear ye Him." Would we know our duty to God? The Son pointed to what He said was the first and great commandment: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." Would we know our duty to our fellowmen? The Son said, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thy self." Would we know our duty to our brethren in Christ? He said, "Love one another as I have loved you."

As we study the sayings of the Son of God, we find He has pointed out the duty of believers under all circumstances. He has just as faithfully warned of the dangers and temptations which they will encounter. Yes, He has just as faithfully warned of the terrible doom which awaits those who reject Him and His teachings.

Hear what the Good Shepherd has said: "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." What a promise from the One to whom all power has been given! Believe on the Son, hear what He saith, follow where He leadeth, and be kept safely in His hand now and forever.

May our feet follow Him wherever He chooses to lead us, and may our ears ever be open to hear what He saith, and all He saith. Above all, may we not be "hearers only, but doers of the word."

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage is glad to be back at his desk and working as hard as usual. We are very grateful to our friends for their interest in us, not only in our home town but throughout our Church, both in deeds of kindness and prayers for our restoration to health again.

We love our work. We love our large family of children. We want to see all of them have an opportunity in life and make good. We appreciate the loyalty of our people in their support of this work. It is a pleasure to work with a people who appreciate your work. May God bless each and every one who takes a part in helping us to feed, clothe and care for our large family of fatherless children. We are happy this week to pass another rung in the ladder. We have passed the seventh and are reaching up for the eighth. We wonder if we will reach it next week. It would be fine, wouldn't it?

Our new building is nearly completed. The floor to lay and just a few more touches here and there and the contractor will turn over the keys. It's a beauty, too. We want you to see it. We know you will like it. If you have not invested anything in it, when you see it you will want a part too.

Our Rocky Ford Sunday School voted some time ago to send the Orphanage one Sunday's offering each month to help us in our work here, and mailed us a check for $1.03, which was reported last month. Now isn't this a fine spirit in our mountain people, a mission church too. We want to visit this church sometime and tell them in person how much we appreciate this offering. Now, if this little Sunday School up in the mountains, where money is hard to make, can give a monthly offering, don't you think all of our churches ought to join in with them and lend a helping hand? If your Sunday School is not on our list of monthly contributors, dear reader, won't you act as a committee in your church and see if you cannot persuade it to join the list right away. I will be very grateful to you.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

DR. KERR AS AN AUTHOR.

Dr. Alva Martin Kerr, Editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty, has just written a book that should do much to Clarify the controversial thinking in the Church today. The title of this book is "Thinking Through," and it is a constructive volume for the reconstruction period.

Dr. Kerr has in mind the peace and unity of the Church. He believes that the time is ripe to separate the genuine from the confusion and conflict of the present day. Science, he knows, has its limitations. Liberalism is not without its danger. All of the things which fundamentalists fight for are not to his mind fundamental. But from the diverse opinions, he does see emerging the gospel of life.

A well known interdenominational lay reader has written of the articles which make up this volume: "My son, a young medical student in Rockefeller Institute, New York, was greatly impressed by this series. His faith has cost him dearly and he feels that such things as you have written will be of great help to young men who are having such struggles as he has endured with difficulty."

Those, especially of our own Church, familiar with religious papers, need no further introduction to Alva Martin Kerr. The Herald has been so distinguished by his straight thinking, hard thinking editorials that his reputation has extended far beyond our own denomination. While this volume, published by George H. Doran Company, is his first, his name and editorial influence have preceded him wherever men think on religious topics.

The volume is nicely printed and contains 125 pages. The price is $1.25.

"Call upon me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not."—Jeremiah 33: 3.

MONDAY.

THE MEANING OF JOB.

"Godly sorrow worketh repentance unto salvation, a repentance which bringeth no regret; but the sorrow of the world worketh death."—II Cor. 7: 10.

The Book of Job is a divine portrayal of the deepest wisdom lying at the bottom of innocent suffering. Job is a type of our Redeemer, a dim foreshadowing of our Saviour who was to endure terrible agony for others in order to wipe out sin and destroy the power of hell.

The Book teaches us that there are two causes of suffering. First, God's power and wisdom are supreme over mankind and govern their destinies, and that He may allow suffering that He may test us, purify us and reward us for our faith and trust in Him always. For God turns sorrow to our advantage when so borne.

Second, The other cause of suffering is Satan and his influence on mankind. He is dragging us down wherever he can and to the lowest pit possible. When sin is removed by redemption through Christ, the power of hell, and with it suffering, will vanish and be no more.

Prayer.—Our Father. Whatever suffering we may be called upon to bear, let it not overflow or swallow us up, but deliver us from the mire of it that we may see and know Thy lovingkindness and praise The lover of all and vanquisher of sin. To Thee we this day pledge our faith and loyalty. In the name of Christ we pray. Amen.

TUESDAY.

NEGLECTING SALVATION.

"How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation."—Heb. 2: 3.

Salvation is one of the greatest words in our spiritual vocabulary. Its history goes back to the very beginning, when the Lamb was slain from the foundation of the world; and in the distant future, in Heaven, it will still be a glorious theme. There is nothing that has cost so much, and what can mean more? Yet we are liable to limit it to ourselves alone, when in the thought of God it was intended for all people and all time. If God loved all the world, if salvation is for all the world, how shall we escape if we neglect it? Is not our own salvation endangered if we neglect to do our part in the salvation of others? Too much and too long has God's great salvation been neglected! And because of this, there is weakness and sin abounding. Are you neglecting your own salvation, or your children's, or your neighbor's, or those in far distant lands? Not to be interested in the salvation of this world is to be unmindful of God's greatest plan and to be unappreciative of His great love. Our business is the salvation of the world. It is the King's business and requires haste.

Prayer.—Make haste, O Lord, and help Thy people to know Thy great salvation includes all time, all places and all people. Forgive our sins of negligence. Burden us, we pray, for those who are lost; and may we find no rest till we have done our best in doing Thy will. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

READING THE SCRIPTURES.

"The commandment is a lamp; and the law is light; and reproof of instruction are the way of life."—Prov. 6: 23.

Practical experience has demonstrated to enough people of the world that to read studiously, carefully and prayerfully the Bible and extol its sacred truths and points is the source of highest inspiration.

For the saving of ourselves, of others and the world there is in this word and its inspiration the very best help. Dictated by the Holy Ghost, it contains things of deepest importance to our right living and the highest welfare of mankind. God has instructed and commanded that we should teach it to our children with all its saving grace. It is this that has always continued on through the centuries the cultivation and development of His Spirit in mankind and will bring mankind to be like Him.

Prayer.—Dear Father, We will magnify and praise Thy name with our lips in praise and song and thanksgiving that Thou hast not cut us off in our neglect of Thy Word. Turn our hearts and thoughts to Thy Word and humble our souls that we may be glad in it, and finally give us a dwelling place with Thee forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE STATE OF THE GODLY.

Lesson, Psalm 91.

"Because thou hast made the Lord thy habitation; there shall no evil befall Thee."—Psalms 91: 9-10.

We do not always harmonize the promise with actual experience when the most devout soul is caused to suffer great evils and distress in this world. If this be thy lot, remember that "the Lord both made everything for His own end; yea, even the wicked for the day of evil" (Prov. 16: 4), and that we have been called, "not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace" (II Timothy 1: 9); and that our suffering may be a part of our share with Christ's in lifting up Him to the world (Jno. 3: 14-15; 12: 32).

We have to remember also that our ways are not His ways and that our faith is challenged to believe that "to them that love God all things work together for good."

Prayer.—Dear Father, Our souls long to know Thy ways; we crave Thy spirit to endure hardships as a good soldier. Fix our hearts on Thee and Thy ways and be Thou our shield forever.

Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE FORGOTTEN WATERPOT.

Lesson, John 4: 25-30.

"The woman then left her waterpot."

It was inexcusable forgetfulness for one who had gone to the well to come away without the waterpot. It was after the sixth hour. One or more persons in the town must endure the night without water. Such a lapse of memory—even of mind itself! But the woman had seen Jesus, and had had the most genuine and uplifting experience she had ever known. She had seen and heard the Messiah, and a well of water had sprung up in her heart unto eternal life. It would have been has found Christ. One must forget a great deal. Old sins and sinful habits, for example; it is dangerous to forget these part way and to remember them also. It is the peril of half-heartedness, the fault of not forgetting. It must be Jesus only! Else old sins and habits will creep back again.

We thank thee, O Samaritan, for the lesson! That neglected waterpot on the curb of Jacob's well preaches its own sermon. It is a mark of sincerity that is not to be doubted. If we can really forget as the woman forgot, then truly Christ has come in to take his rightful place. Forgetting is a Christian art. Christ must crowd things out of our mind, and fill it with Himself. When a man can say to an old sin, "I have forgotten thee, I know thee not," then Christ has won the victory!

REV. EDGAR WHITAKER WORK.

Prayer.—Our Heavenly Father, Thou who didst speak to men through the lips of Thy Beloved Son, take away our fears and leave in their place that merciful Presence that walked the ways of men beside the Sea of Galilee, and even after the wonder of resurrection, prepared a meal with hands that loved to help. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WALKING IN THE LIGHT.

Lesson, I John 1: 5-9.

"If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another."

One of the conditions which we must meet to enjoy fellowship with God is walking in the light. Walking in the light embraces four things: First, the acknowledgement and confession of sin. Denial that we are sinful by nature and by acts involves self deception, and lack of experimental knowledge of the truth. Acknowledgement of these facts and open particular confession of sin bring fellowship, since guilt is thus canceled and pollution is removed. We are assured of this work of grace because of God's faithfulness and God's justice in view of the provisions wrought for us on Calvary.

Second, keeping His commandments. Obedience to practical requirements is a test of fellowship with God, and an expression of our love for God. The standard of obedience is the life of our Lord. The auu-inclusive commandment is love.

Third, avoiding love of the world. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes and the pride of life, are not of the Father.

Fourth, avoiding yielding to false teachers. A teaching is true that confesses that Christ is the Son of God. This confession evidences the possession of the Father. Our true Teacher is the Holy Spirit whom we receive, who abides in us, and who teaches us concerning all things.

REV. CHARLES CURTIS McINTIRE.

Prayer.—Blessed Companion of all who walk along the way, Hope of those who have been bereaved, we come to Thee, for Thou alone art sufficient for every need of ours. If during this day we need any thing, may we be assured that Thou wilt supply it. In Jesus' name. Amen.

“ISAAC AND HIS WELLS.”

GOLDEN TEXT: “A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger.”—Proverbs 15: 1.

LESSON: Genesis 26: 12-25.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matt. 5 1-12.

Isaac had prospered. His crops had yielded an hundred fold and his flocks had multiplied until he was very rich. Jehovah had blessed him. It does not always happen that Jehovah blesses with material prosperity those who follow Him. As a matter of fact, it often happens that many of God's saints are poor in this world's goods. And it just as often happens that those who have most of this world's goods are far from loyal to the things of the kingdom and are unspiritual. But “godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.” Isaac was one of those whose material prosperity had not cooled his devotion to Jehovah and His way of life as Isaac understood it.

“And the Philistines envied him.” Isaac had become very great; his possessions made him a man of wealth. And the Philistines envied him. How human, and hence how modern it all is. Envy, envy, envy—how it creeps into human life. A man becomes wealthy and a hundred men envy him. A minister achieves success in a pastorate and his fellow-ministers envy him. A girl has pretty clothes and her associates envy her. A young man is popular and his fellows envy him. Wealth, social position, achievement, talents, cause envy, and envy is deadly to the spiritual life. It would be as startling as it would be tragic to know how much envy there is in the hearts of many who are professing Christians and leaders in the church. Happy is that man who can see others surpass him, or who can look upon the superior advantages which others enjoy and still keep envy out of his heart. Keep thy heart with all diligence and do not allow envy to enter therein.

“And Isaac departed thence, and encamped in the valley of Gerar.” An old colored man once told a judge that the only way he could get along with his wife was to be “where she ain't.” There are a great many people in life of that stripe. The only way one can get along with them is to be “where they ain't.” Fortunately for Isaac, there were other places to go, and he lost no time in going. It is a different matter when one, by virtue of circumstances, is obliged to remain where such an one lives, but the old saying that it takes two to make a fuss is true. The man who is determined to get along with folks can usually find a way out. Isaac never did any great thing, as did some of his predecessors and his successors, but he left us an example that we should do as he did in dealing with people who are bent on making trouble. It must be remembered, too, that Isaac was not a coward. He had a great household and he could have stood for his rights, but he preferred peace and he was willing to pay the price of peace. When the Philistines filled up the well which his servants had dug, Isaac moved on and had them dig another. Eventually he found a place where there was “room.” “Blessed are the peace-makers for they shall be called the children of God.”

“And Jehovah appeared unto him the same night, and he said unto him, I am the God of Abraham thy father; fear not for I am with thee and will bless thee, and multiply thy seed for my servant Abraham's sake.” God offered identification—He was the God of Abraham, Isaac's father. He is the same yesterday, today, and forever. He was a God who knew his children personally. And His message was one of comfort and courage. It might be added that it was no coincidence that Jehovah appeared to Isaac in the light of his action heretofore. The angel of the Lord ministers unto those who would do his will.

“And he builded an altar there, and called upon the name of Jehovah, and pitched his tent there; and Isaac's servants digged a well.” Isaac put God first. He builded an altar and called upon Jehovah. He was going to establish his home there and he was going to establish it right. It might be a fine thing if this verse could be burned into the hearts of the parents of our country. There are not wanting signs that would indicate that the family altar is sorely needed in our modern homes. It might make a tremendous difference in a number of homes if, like Isaac, the man of the house should establish an altar. Happy is the nation whose God is the Lord, but the nation can never have God as its Lord until He is the Lord of the home.

Teaching Points.

1. Material blessings come from the hand of Jehovah.
2. Material things are only one test of a man's real greatness.
3. Envy hurts the one envying more than the one envied.
4. Envy usually foments trouble.
5. Blessed are the peacemakers.
6. One of man's chiefest rights is the right to give up his right.
7. To suffer personal inconvenience is far better than to sacrifice one's ideals.
8. A good test of a man's character is the way he treats those whom he regards as his enemies.
9. The meek will God guide in judgment and the meek will He teach His way.
10. The God of our fathers will be the God of their sons.
11. The best foundation for a home is a family altar.
12. An altar has no value unless one uses it.

“CHRIST CHANGING CHINA.”

(Missionary Meeting.)

TOPIC: “How is Christ Changing China?”

SCRIPTURE LESSON: Isa. 61: 1-3.

Daily Readings.

Monday, 17th. Christ brings light. Jno. 1:1-13.
 Tuesday. Transforms life. I Tim. 1:12-17.
 Wednesday. Offers higher ideals. Matt 5:1-12.
 Thursday. Honors womanhood. Jno. 4:1-26.
 Friday. Saves childhood. Mark 10:13-16.
 Saturday. Sanctifies business. Matt. 25:14-30.

Some Bible Hints.

The Spirit of God is at work in the minds of the Chinese, slowly breaking down opposition.

Preaching will never become obsolete. It is a divine method of moving men.

The healer, the physician, is God's messenger, whose work makes a deep impression and wins many hearts.

The time of sowing may be long, the reaping time comes at last. Joy follows long struggle in China as elsewhere.

Suggestive Thoughts.

God uses all human agencies to change China and open the heart to the word. Commerce and politics, which mean contact with the outside world, are working change.

The influence of Christ steals into the minds of a people long before they publicly confess Him. This is happening in China, as witness the improved condition of women.

Christ works through His people. His best contact with China is through consecrated missionaries.

Even world events may help to change China. The return of the Boxer indemnity by America, and the use of the money to educate Chinese, has already worked great changes.

To Think About.

How is the church trying to change China?

What is there in China that needs to be changed?

What effect has the revolution had in changing China?

tered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart.”—II Cor. 3: 2-3.

We can take Bibles to the heathen lands, we can offer the Scriptures by the wholesale at home and abroad, we can plead for more prayer, more Bible reading and more church attendance, but all of these things are vain if men fail to see in us the living Word of the Father. A Christian is an open book. A confessed disciple of the Master bears a great responsibility. He is an epistle of Christ for others to read.

Paul, in his missionary work, early recognized that the best kind of Christian propaganda he could get, was not a parchment of the Scriptures written in ink, but a Barnabas, and Apollos, a Timothy, in whom was transformed life. He wanted to see it, not graven in cold stone, but written in love-warmed lives and sweetened characters and kindlier dispositions.

Christianity is at its best when it is exemplified in a life! Preaching is necessary for inspiration, for devotion, for leadership; but the best kind of evangelism is that which has its source in a Christ-controlled life. Our characters may be compared to Gospels or epistles. We started the first chapter when we came to Him. Did the Gospel stop there?

Folk can read that living epistle if they be of any land or nation on earth. They can tell a right heart and a loving soul. When the Spirit of the living God moves over our little lives, it writes messages far more potent than those of ink or graven on stone.

We are writing now the messages which others must read. Let us write a Gospel which will have Christ in it:

“We are writing the gospels, a chapter a day, In the deeds that we do and the words that we say;

Pray, what is the Gospel according to you?”

REV. VINCENT G. BURNS.

JOHN.

All cry out peace, where there is no peace. Paul was accounted an enemy for opposing the false doctrine in Gallacia, but he observed that they should do nothing against, but for the truth. If the good Spirit should whisper in the ear, must it not be proclaimed on the housetop? Let the people grant that liberty to watchmen.

CHAPTER XIV.

Let us carefully, in the fear of God, look over this section. The first part that calls our attention, are comfortable words from the great Redeemer, concerning the mansions of glory prepared in heaven for all the Lord's friends. The direct way to those bright, celestial mansions is the Lord Jesus, by trusting in Him at all times, by obeying the Word, and walking in His footsteps—this is the direct way to heaven.

Philip besought the Lord to show them the Father, and that would satisfy them. Pay attention to the answer. "Have I been so long with you, and yet hast thou not known me?" Philip thought he knew Jesus, and believed Him to be the Son of the Father; but it was the Father Philip desired to see. Thus sayeth the Lord, in plain words, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father, for I am in the Father, and the Father is in me."

Notice the seventeenth verse. The spirit of Jesus was always in the world, in light and operation; but under the gospel dispensation, the spirit is in the saint. The spirit of Jesus in the soul shows us plainly of the Father, when His divine love in Christ is shed abroad upon the heart; for God is love in His divine nature, and this is the love of Christ and the love of God in Christ Jesus.

In the twenty-sixth verse, the Comforter issuing from the divinity of Christ comes in the name of Jesus. Reader, I expect you consider things respecting the Lord God, as the Reformed Churches do—that is, you confess and adore three distinct persons in the Godhead, and that each person is truly very God; yet they are not to be considered as three Gods (although you thus speak), but one God. I praise you for honoring the Son, even as you honor the Father; but how would you support your theology against an argumental deist who might advance the following interrogatives, viz: If you call God the Father a person, the Son being in the Father, He must be included in the first person. Then to hold up the Son distinct as the second person, you must draw Him from the first person, and this must mutilate the first glorious person. And holding up the Holy Ghost as the third divine person in the abstract, you rob the Son, who has received the Holy Ghost without measure. And, moreover, the most high God is a spirit, and there being but one Holy Ghost, and that is the adorable Father, and the adorable Son possesses the fullness of the Godhead bodily. It appears that the pure light must be found in the following interpretation, viz: The word trinity is not found in the Scripture, but we read of three that bear record, and we need some word to convey our meaning, as we use many proper words not found in holy writ. Then to prevent the inaccurate manner of confounding one thing with another, perhaps the truth lies here: The glorified person, Jesus Christ, is the everlasting Father, and the Prince of peace; therefore, the glorious three divine essentials that we call trinity reside in the one divine person Jesus Christ. "Great is the mystery," etc.

Our Redeemer bears three significant appellations to the one divine person, viz: Christ, the divine light; Jesus, the divine life, for he that hath the Son, whose name is Jesus, hath life; He is the Lord God, that is divine love (John 15:9). Continue ye in my love. Thus it appears that light, life and love count three, but not to be separated. Say Father, Word and Spirit are one God. Rain, hail and snow are one water.

CHAPTER XV.

The contents of this chapter may be illustrated under the similitude of a vine, the invisible root, and the branches, which the root nourishes through the vine.

As touching the parable, note. The invisible root issues forth a tender sprout; it advances to a branch, and progresses to a substantial vine, forcing an ample shade. One exclaims, saying: "I sat down under his shadow, with great delight." The interpretation appears to be thus: This root is the eternal Father; the vine that proceeded and came forth from the root, represents Jesus the Son, as produced by Him; and the outside covering may represent the visible human substance. Observe that vine was eternally in God the root, and therefore was God, and should never be considered in the abstract (John 8:42).

Thus it was, and so it is—the vine was in the root, and the root was and is in the vine; and so it will be forever. Amen.

Again, when a believer—one who believes with the heart unto righteousness, receives a measure of the Holy Spirit; yea, partakes of the divine nature, his spirit is grafted in the vine, and of course partakes of the root and fatness, and bears the fruit of the Spirit.

For a further illustration of this blessed subject, let it be observed, that those believers who improve what God gives are changed more into the divine likeness, whereby they are purged and more refined to bear much fruit; but those who, by negligence, are led away by the errors of people who are accounted men of taste and fashion, they fall from their love. This may be done gradually, almost insensibly, by reason that the spiritual communication seems to cease. Although they hold on their form and name to live, yea they pray daily, yet receive no answer by refreshings from divine presence, so they cease to bear the fruit of love, joy and true peace; the divinity removes them from his precious ones, who are led by the spirit. Such may abide in the visible body of Christians to the last day, as the foolish virgins did, who, by losing the life of religion, the light must decline with the life; then at the trying hour of death or judgment, their faith will fail, the last spark of hope will perish, and those dry branches be cast into the fire.

Let us hear the conclusion of this mysterious chapter. The way to abide in Christ is to live by faith, in a line of holy obedience, whereby your faith is justified before God and men. Let the divine word dwell richly in you; so will you abide in His love: His joy will remain in you, and your joy will be full. The following axioms call our attention: First, if Christ be divided from the Father, so are all His members; secondly, the only way that fallen men could ever be in union with their Maker was effected by divinity and humanity becoming one; thirdly, if Christ be not God, how do believers in the vine partake of the root and fatness?

CHAPTER XVI.

HERE is shown that the Holy Spirit, in that degree as was promised to the gospel age, was not then come, but still promised. The Lord told His little family that unless He went away, the Holy Spirit would not come; but if I depart, "I will send Him unto you." He will reprove the world of sin, etc. The Blessed Spirit glorified Jesus by taking of His, and showing the same to the people. Should any one ask, what are His? the answer is: all that the Father hath at his (verse 15). How are they to be divided into two persons, and each person to be considered very God? The chapter is not very occult or mysterious, for he that runneth may read and understand. The last verse is loaded with consolation for the truly pious. In the world they will meet with tribulations, but in the Redeemer they will enjoy peace. O what are earthly troubles when compared to heavenly joys?

CHAPTER XVII.

To know the Father and the Son, is life eternal. Jesus spake with lips of flesh and man-like voice, saying to His own divinity, the Father, I (in person) have glorified Thee on earth, in my state of humiliation; have finished the work Thou gavest me to do, as is sure to be completed quickly: and now, O Father, glorify Thou me with Thine own self, with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was.

If Jesus existed in, and with, the Father before the world was, He existed before time, which was, and is, and will forever be, eternity. Thus it is written, the Word was with God (before time) and the Word was God, in essence and ease. Therefore, Jesus cannot be inferior, only as He condescended to act in the capacity of a servant, and became thus in the world poor, that through His poverty we might be made rich! In consequence of which, He was not popular among the great, but by such grace and condescension He merited the highest encomiums, viz: that He should be highly exalted, and His name be above every name; and at that name, creation must bow.

Jesus, the highest name that's given,
Filled with the Deity;
No other God in earth or heaven,
To Him all glory be!

To proceed in the illustration of this divine mystery, the author could produce a number of sacred texts to show that the Redeemer is called Jehovah in the Old Testament, and Lord in the New Testament. As for our Redeemer, the Lord of Hosts is His name (Isa. 47:4). It was the spirit of Jesus that spake by the mouth of the prophets, as Peter writes. When Jesus was drawing the business to a close, he appears to make no distinction between his mother Mary and other holy women. He said unto her, while bleeding on the cross, "Woman, behold Thy son." Then addressed His disciples, saying, "Behold thy mother." Whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, my sister and mother. The morning He arose, he saw Mary Magdalene, and said: "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father." There is surely a mysterious sense in this expression. Matthew observes how the holy women held Him by the feet and worshiped Him. Those were suffered to touch His feet. Perhaps the words are to let us understand that when He ascended to the full glorification of the flesh, He put off all that was of Mary the mother, and put on all that was of God the Father. Thus the human substance became all divine, the same as the immaterial spiritual substance. This is substantiated by the person of Christ being glorified with all the Father's infinite glory. The prayer of the holy Redeemer loudly calls our attention. He first prays that the apostles might be kept pure, for the grand purpose of establishing His last will, and erecting the Christian Church. His second request was, for all who should believe on Him through their word (verse 20). Let us labor to believe the apostles, as also to obey, and through that intercession we shall surely be saved.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THIS chapter reports the sufferings of the just one, in order to save the unjust from the executive wrath of the law. No pen can write, no tongue can speak, nor heart conceive what the Redeemer endured. Let a Christian who hath passed from death to life recollect the misery his soul underwent, and the burden he bore when wrath was revealed from heaven against him, when snares surrounded him, and pains like hell took hold on him; then by faith, view the Lord on the cross, bearing the sins of the whole human family, not only by revelation, but in the execution; then let him realize the human family, which was, is, and is to come to the last generation, and all their sins in thought, word, deed, and what those crimes against the Most High justly deserved; then think of the suffering of the great Redeemer, to make our salvation possible. O candid reader, will you still sin on, grieve His spirit and die? Some of our learned authors attempt to lighten the burden, or load, that I suppose the Lord bore; for they assert that He suffered only for a few elected ones. Believe it who can; I cannot.

In verse 36, our Lord informs us that His kingdom, or Church, though in the world, is not of the world; therefore, human work, in constituting, or building up His temple, is nothing but the perishable stuff that the pure fire will consume, yet the word abideth forever.

Here we read of Peter's fall. Let it be observed that Peter denied his Master entirely through fear, and not enmity. The dread of the Jews, and the power of the Roman empire sent terror to his soul, which extorted a lie, and an oath to confirm it. But the Jews did not swear in a common way, as the vulgar men swear in Christendom, viz: by the great and awful God! Nor did they curse, as our miserable men do, who try to sink each other's soul to hell. Any binding word to yes, or no, was swearing; and any bad wish to themselves or others was then, and is now, deemed cursing. Moreover, this happened before Peter was inspired; therefore, he obtained pardon. Then when converted to the Christian faith, knowledge and understanding, he was able to strengthen his brethren.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE crown of thorns, intended to mock and punish the Lord, yet it was allusive to His crown of glory; and His mock-priest's robe, had its signature in conformity to His priesthood.

In verse 24, the soldiers cast lots for his upper garment—coat or vest; as having no seam, the soldiers agreed not to lacerate it, but cast lots. David foretold this very thing (see Psa. 22:8). "For my vesture they cast lots." This seamless coat had a divine significant meaning; even the union subsisting between the divinity and humanity of the Redeemer: this is more than conjunction. The collected wisdom of Jerusalem asserted, the Son of God must be equal to God; and therein they charged our Lord of being guilty of blasphemy! But some have and do acknowledge Jesus the Son of God, yet hold Him inferior to His Father. This impression came at first from anti-Christ, and innocent men may embrace the doctrine, for lack of deeper understanding. In Christ was life, even eternal life, which is the esse, or eternal existence of Jehovah. That life He yielded up on the cross, for He had power to lay it down and take it up again! He is "Jehovah, our righteousness."

CHAPTERS XX, XXI.

NOTE the 20th and 23d verses. Thus the Lord spake to the apostles, that whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them, and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained. As the writers of the gospel wrote as the spirit of Jesus directed, we may judge by the Word as touching our present state of soul; as to our faith, experience and practice.

In verse 28, we read what Thomas expressed respecting his faith in Jesus the Son of the Father, "My Lord, and my God." Christ received the encomium. Attend to a proper examination for a gospel minister to pass through. Lovest thou Jesus more than all your earthly friends? If so, show your love to Him by your zealous regard to his Church, whether in prosperity or adversity. In the close of the apostle John's gospel, we are told that all is not written that Jesus said and did; but infinite wisdom gave us full enough, and no more; therefore, the gospel contains a complete system for the faith and good economy of the Christian Church. If so, then, every addition is human corruption; that is not only defective, but presumptive, and dangerous to society, both civil and religious.

THE ACTS.

CHAPTERS I-V.

REMARKS ON CERTAIN TEXTS.

LUKE wrote this narrative, and dedicated it to a certain significant name, viz: Theophilus, which, being interpreted, is A Friend, a lover of God. He writes as an eye and ear-witness of things said and done by his Master, from the first to His ascension.

In the 6th verse, the apostle publishes their ignorance before Pentecost, in hoping that their Lord would restore the kingdom or government to Israel, who were subjected to the Roman pagan empire. Judas is here numbered with the other apostles. Jesus continued with His people after His resurrection, just forty days, according to order; He then led them a distance, blessed them, and ascended upward beyond sight!

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Dears:

We all went over to Durham to the Convention. Yes, and your editor saw some of your mothers—Yes, and it would be great if we could all see each other some time, together. Wouldn't that be great? And while we are talking about your Korner, a good friend of yours said, "Put the picture in the Korner when it is done—the one that wins the Big Prize, and I will pay for it." Yes sir, really and truly. Now, dears, when you have painted the picture in this contest and its all beautiful, and you have written the story that goes along with it. Wait, look out there! Into the Kiddie Korner it will go—as sure as sure can be, and there will be Your Name, if you are the one who draws the best picture.

Now! Listen again! Here's the Contest. You listen to a good story—a good Bible story—mother will tell you one or your Sunday School teacher—then sit down and draw the picture of that story on drawing paper. Then write that same story in your own words, dears. Sign your name to it and send it to your editor (Miss Madge Moffitt, Burlington, N. C.). The three best ones will be chosen, Kiddies, and the pictures put in our Kiddie Korner. Besides, there will be three prizes—three pretty gifts, to be given away. You understand now, boys and girls?

Away we go now to ask Mother.

YOUR EDITOR.

"The little children in Japan
Are fearfully polite;
They always thank their bread and milk
Before they take a bite,
And say, 'You make us most content,
O honorable nourishment!'
"The little children in Japan
Don't think of being rude.
'O noble, dear mamma,' they say,
'We trust we don't intrude.'
Instead of rushing in to where
All day their mother combs her hair."

MARY'S LITTLE LAMB.

Every one of the children of the Kiddie Korner have heard of "Mary's Little Lamb." Well here is the story of the lamb by one who knows:

I am sitting tonight in the Baptist parsonage in the town of Sterling, Mass., about forty miles from Boston. Through about a foot of snow I went down to the barn and wood shed, which in part is made of the old school-house to which Mary's lamb followed her one day. The poem, "Mary Had a Little Lamb," is as familiar to many children as the letters of the alphabet; and I wish to say here that there was a real Mary Sawyer, who owned a lamb which went with her to school in the house which originally stood about two miles from here, but was later sold, removed, and built into the barn above mentioned.

Mary E. Sawyer was born March 22, 1806, more than one hundred and twenty years ago, and seven years later twin lambs were born to an ewe of her father's flock, but the sheep mother would only own one of the lambs; so Mary took the other and mothered it. Seven months later, the lamb followed her to school one day, and before the teacher came, some of the boys suggested that Mary put the lamb upon her desk, which she did, and the lamb went to sleep. But later it waked up and kicked and scrambled out of the desk. This made all the children laugh, and of course the teacher had to put the lamb out; but she did not scold Mary. She only laughed with her and the other children. The lamb stayed all day and went home that night, never to come back to school again. But fame awaited this little sheep. Several days later a young Harvard student, John Roulstone, who was a friend of the teacher, visiting in the neighborhood and hearing of the incident, wrote:

"Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow;

And everywhere that Mary went
That lamb was sure to go.

"It followed her to school one day,
Which was against the rule;
It made the children laugh and play
To see a lamb at school.

"So the teacher turned it out,
But still it lingered near
And waited patiently about Till Mary did appear."

Fortunate youth

THE educational opportunities for the boys and girls of the South are keeping pace with the leadership of the South in the economic progress of the Nation. This is seen in the following facts:

In the last twelve years more than $125,000,000 has been spent for the construction of new school buildings in the states of the South served by the Southern.

In 1900 there were less than 73,000 school teachers in the states of the South served by the Southern, and the appropriation for education amounted to only 90 cents per person living in these states. In 1922 the appropriation was $6.85 per person, and the number of trained teachers had increased to 139,309.

In 1900 only 64.8 percent of the children of school age in these states attended school, while the average for the nation as a whole was 72.4 per cent. But in 1922, the latest year for which complete figures are available, 81.4 per cent of the children in the states of the South served by the Southern attended school, while the average for the nation as a whole was 81.2 per cent.

The growth in the educational facilities of the South, as well as the number of children that can take advantage of them, is one of the fortunate and direct results of the prosperity that has come to the South.

The Southern Railway System has contributed to the prosperity of the South, as a tax-payer, as a large employer of men and women—and as the transportation agency which carries Southern commerce to and from world markets, regularly, dependably and economically.

OBITUARIES.

BARBER.

On April 11, 1926, Mrs. Sarah Addie Barber departed this life, being 61 years, 8 months and 14 days of age.

She was the daughter of Benjamin U. and Eliza Thomas, and neice of the "White Pilgrim. She married David R. Barber, December 20, 1893,

She is survived by one daughter, Odesa, and two sons, Dewitt and Dan; one step-daughter, Mrs. T. U. Adams of Raleigh, N. C., and six step-sons, L. T. Barber of Palmetto, Fla., P. F. Barber, Helena, Miss., Fred H., Arley E. and William C. Barber of Owaka, S. Dakota, and B. A. Barber of Elon College, N. C.

She also leaves one sister, Mrs. J. P. King, and four brothers, Geo. L., Dan H. and Charlie B. Thomas of Burlington, N. C. and J. Lee Thomas of Spencer, N. C.

She was preceded to the grave by her husband about sixteen months. Truly a good woman has gone. God knows best.

Her health had been failing since the death of her husband. She suffered from bronchial pneumonia in January, from which she never regained her health. She bore her afflictions with Christian fortitude and humble submission.

She was a member of the Presbyterian Church of Burlington, N. C., until her marriage, when she joined Shallow Ford Christian Church with her husband, of which she remained a faithful and devoted member until her death. Her family, the church and the community will greatly miss her.

Though the day was inclement, yet the church was filled with friends and neighbors while the last rites to her memory were being conducted by her former pastor, the writer, assisted by Rev. T. J. Green of Elon College, her present pastor, and Rev. C. E. Gerringer of Ether, N. C.

The grave was covered with wreaths of various design made by skilled hands of beautiful flowers.

"She is not dead, but sleepeth, and shall in the beautiful spring time of the sweet bye and bye, come forth and live forever in the Eternal City of our God."

WILLIAM SMITH.

Brother William Smith fell asleep in Jesus Saturday night before the first Sunday in this month. Brother Smith was 69 years old. He was a generous Christian man, a faithful member of the Christian Church at Pleasant Ridge. On April 3d, in the evening, he ate his supper early, and said to his family that he would step over and see their new neighbors who had just moved in and see if he could help them in any way. He was always wanting to help somebody.

His family retired at their usual time and slept soundly, and on rising next morning, found that he had not returned. They immediately went in search of him and found him lying in the path dead.

So far as the family knew, he was in his usual health.

Brother Smith was a worthy man and the neighborhood sustained a great loss in his death. There was a beautiful account and history of his life read at the funeral by one of his friends.

God bless the memory of this dear brother who was loved by those who knew him.

He leaves to mourn their loss a beloved wife, three sons and two daughters, several brothers and a sister, and a host of friends. God bless the bereaved.

Monday morning the funeral services were held in Colfax Tabernacle, and about twelve hundred people were present to testify by their presence the esteem in which he was held. At noon, his body was laid away in the Colfax cemetery. The floral offering was beautiful and abundant.

The writer was assisted in the ceremony by Rev. T. L. Hill of Colfax and Rev. H. L. Powell of Greensboro.

WILEY.

Mrs. Mary E. Wiley, widow of J. C. Wiley, was born October 9, 1844, and died April 16, 1926, at Charlotte, N. C. She was united in marriage to J. C. Wiley, December 21, 1869. Rev. W. S. Long performing the marriage rite.

To Mr. and Mrs. Wiley were born eight children, four of whom are living. Her husband has been dead about fifteen years.

She was a member of New Providence Christian Church and had been for a number of years. For some years she had not been able to attend services.

A good wife, mother and friend has fallen asleep. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. T. E. White. The interment was in the church cemetery.

Dr. Cadman Gets Gold Medal.—

On May 6th, the National Institute of Social Science presented Dr. S. Parkes Cadman with a gold medal in token of the great services he has rendered as a religious leader. At the same time the institute honored three other Americans—Miss Mary Schenck Woolman for her work in vocational and industrial training; Mr. Stephen Tyng Mather for his services in the national park administration, and Clarence H. Mackay for his contributions to music.

Southern Baptists Believe Genesis.—

The Southern Baptist Convention, meeting at Houston, Texas, went on record recently as favoring the creation theory of Genesis and holding that man is a special creation of God and rejecting all other theories that he evolved from a lower form of life. The resolution was made as a statement by the newly re-elected president of the Convention, Dr. George W. McDaniel, of Richmond, Va., and was passed without a dissenting vote.

Government Gets Art Collection.—

Mrs. Elizabeth Robins Pennell, widow of the artist Joseph Pennell, called at the White House to tender to President Coolidge the art collection of her husband, which under his will goes to the Library of Congress. The collection contains a number of Whistler's paintings and other rare pictures, together with manuscripts and copyrights. At Mrs. Pennell's death the entire Pennell fortune will go to the government for their upkeep.

George R. Stuart Dies.—

Dr. George R. Stuart, one of the most outstanding ministers of the Southern Methodist Church and of the South, died May 11th at his home. He died almost suddenly from a heart attack following a long illness. He had been for the last eleven years pastor of the first Methodist Church of Birmingham, Ala. Dr. Stuart was born in 1857 at Talbot Station, Tenn., and his early life was spent on the farm. He was licensed to preach in 1879. Later he was admitted to the Holston Conference. For sixteen years he was an evangelist, and in that capacity became one of the best-known figures in the American pulpit. Dr. Stuart has served his Church as pastor, evangelist, and college professor. He has stood firmly for the great moral issues throughout the forty-four years of his ministry. He was a leader of the multitude, and beloved by those he led.

Dedicate Tablet for Chaplains.—

A tablet was dedicated in Arlington National Cemetery to the memory of the twenty-three chaplains who lost their lives in the great war. Only chaplains who themselves had participated in the conflict had parts in the dedicatory service. Father Francis P. Duffy, chaplain of the 169th Infantry, of the Rainbow Division, delivered the address; Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, senior chaplain of the second division, read the roll of honor; Bishop John N. McCormick, senior chaplain of the American Red Cross in France, delivered the invocation; Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron pronounced the benediction, and the chief of chaplains, Col. John T. Axton, presided at the service. Varied faiths joined in this service commemorating the heroes of the chaplaincy, and made common cause as all men should, stepping across the man-made barriers which, after all, alone stand between us.

Alton B. Parker Dies.—

Alton B. Parker died suddenly in Washington while riding in his automobile on May 10th. Mr. Parker was apparently in good health until death took him suddenly. It is believed that death resulted from heart failure. Alton B. Parker was the former chief judge of the Court of Appeals and the democratic standardbearer in the presidential campaign of 1904. Alton Brooks Parker rose from the drudgery of an obscure farm boy to the highest judicial position in the State of New York and to the Democratic nomination for the presidency in 1904. He was born at Cortland, N. Y., on May 14, 1852, and was educated at the Cortland Academy and the normal school of his town. He studied law at the Albany law school and was graduated from that institution in 1872. Since 1904 the former chief justice of the New York Court of Appeals has practiced law as the senior partner of Parker, Hatch and Sheehan. He had served as president of the American Bar Association, and held many other places of trust and honor.

Calls for Mass Production in Religion.—

Mr. Edward W. Filene, a prominent Boston merchant and former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, speaking before the central department of the Y. M. C. A., in Chicago, called for mass production in religion to keep pace with the mass production of wealth. He declared that we can not get back what was lost in the war in three generations unless there is a mass production in religion. We do not know just what Mr. Filene had in mind as mass production, but we are prepared to agree with him in so far as to say that never before have we needed a more thoughtful attacking of the problems confronting Christianity. It does not mean getting Church members so much as it means a bringing of men and women to a profounder and more tolerant thinking about the great fundamental issues of religion. We must have an education in great things rather than in doctrinal points which can never do other than divide. We must lay aside our mad fighting of each other and turn our strength into the channels of constructive religious work. We can not win until we make the 60 per cent now not Church folk or Christians respect us who profess His name and the Church which we represent.

Polar Explorers Succeed.—

Three days after the first successful flight to the north pole in the history of the world had been completed by Richard E. Byrd, brother of the Governor of Virginia, on his three-engine airplane, the "Josephine Ford," Raold Amundsen, with the great Norge dirigible balloon, duplicated Lieutenant Byrd's feat. The New York Times and the St. Louis Globe-Democrat received the first radio message ever sent from the north pole. The Norge, in which Amundsen and his sixteen companions made the flight, continued its trip to Nome, Alaska, crossing in the flight an unexplored area of more than a million square miles. Most of the journey lay in the land of the midnight sun, and so the trip was a daylight trip throughout. Twenty-five men have now seen the north pole. These are the six men in the Peary expedition, who discovered the pole in an eight months' dog-sled trip, Richard E. Byrd and his pilot, and the seventeen men on the Norge. Raold Amundsen is a national hero. It was he who first saw the south pole on May 14, 1911, beating four other expeditions from as many other countries to the southern pole.

British Strike Ends.—

The British labor strike which had tied up the entire industry of England since midnight of May 3rd, came to a close on Wednesday, May 12th. The officials of the Trade Union Congress visited Premier Baldwin, at the Downing Street residence, and immediately announced that the strike was called off. The government had previously declared that no negotiations could go forward for the settlement of the miners' grievances which originally brought about the trouble and caused the calling of the sympathetic strike by the Trade Union Congress, until the strike was called off. The officials of the Congress surrendered so far as coming to the terms of the government. The wheels of British industry ceased turning dramatically at midnight of the 3rd, and as dramatically started again. Wires were busy carrying telegrams to the various headquarters of the strikers all Wednesday afternoon, and it is believed that all unions will promptly obey the orders of the congress. Negotiations for the final settlement are to be resumed.

The right to stop work is every man's privilege, but to stand in the way of another's working is a questionable right. The strike is a dangerous weapon, and in using it both sides are sure to lose in the long run. If capital would give justice and labor be content with justice, things could move smoothly along.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Programs and announcements should be sent in at least two weeks before the event is to take place, to insure proper insertion in THE SUN. Recently we have had to omit some things that would have been of interest to many.

His many friends will rejoice to learn that Rev. V. T. Crawford, now R. F. D., Roanoke, Va., is very much improved in health and is ready and willing to take work in the active pastorate again. Here is hoping that some of our Churches will secure his services.

If any SUN readers have unpaid pledges to Men and Millions they should make a sacrificial effort to pay off a part or all now due before July 1st. The Durham Convention ordered the Mission Board to close these accounts then, so far as the Mission Board's management is concerned.

This issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is worth a whole year's subscription to any young person who desires to be something. It contains one article every young person seeking an education should read—not once, but again. Get the spirit of it. Read the "Suffolk Letter," then ponder over it.

Miss Pattie Coghill, Field Secretary of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention, is at the Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va., where she underwent a successful operation for appendicitis on Friday, May 14th. Miss Coghill is doing very well and hopes to be out of the hospital soon, although she will not be able to take up active work for a few weeks.

The following is received with gratitude and will be of interest to many SUN readers who are acquainted with the contracting parties: "Mrs. David Samuel Farmer, Sr., requests the honor of your presence at the marriage of her daughter, Esther, to Mr. William LeGette Blythe, on Wednesday, May 26th, 8:30 P. M., 206 Tate Street, Greensboro, N. C." Miss Esther Farmer, who is an esteemed graduate of Elon College, has our best wishes, and Mr. Blythe our congratulations.

THE SUN's editor, after attending the Virginia Valley Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention at Leaksville, was privileged to ride through the Shenandoah Valley from Tenth Legion to Staunton last Saturday and then by rail over and under the mountains to Charlottesville. This Valley is now one grand, good, glorious sight to behold. The wide-spreading wheat fields, with their deep, dark green, are just ready to burst into head, the light-blushing green of the graceful, bending rye waves a welcome to the passes-by, the barley already in full head is putting on a mantle of pink before bursting into full blossom, the dogwood in its full blossom of white interwoven with a score of hues of green, make the mountains that skirt the Valley a mad revelry of glorious coloring. Beautiful farm houses, great old fat horses, herds of lazy cattle, flock of grazing sheep suffice for a picture to gladden the heart and cheer the soul of man. The great, good God certainly dealt with this Valley out of a generous and a lavish hand. Beautiful at all times of the year, in the springtime it is a paradise for beauty, symmetry and restfulness of scenery and of coloring.

David Jones to Whom it Concerns.

I, David F. Jones, was baptized in the Church of England. Because of convenience went to Sunday School connected with Independence, or Congregational, Church before six years old. Continued till I was eighteen years old. About fourteen years of age on going to a young minister's Bible class and hearing that men of God were praying us to accept salvation in and through the Lord Jesus Christ, I was surprised and yielded to God's gracious entreaty and was a happy believer. Joined the Congregational Church, and with other Sunday School Scholars became a student of God's Holy Word. One has various experiences in learning the Bible and its wonderful teaching and truths, but it is worth all the study one can give it. Various doctors sometimes teach differently. But as time passed on, I was more determined to follow on and to know all I could of the Word. I found a little company whose determination was to follow on and look to the Holy Spirit to teach us. Thus, following on, I learned more and more of God's Word. Staying with them, or some like them, I continued till I came to U. S. A. and found myself at Mt. Auburn Christian Church in North Carolina, and a good friend in Rev. Daniel Long.

BIBLE'S RANGE OF PRICES.

The Bible is not only the greatest seller in all literature, but it has the greatest range of prices. A complete copy of the Bible is published by the American Bible Society and sold for forty-five cents, and yet one of the original copies of the Gutenberg Bible was sold at public auction in New York recently for $106,000.

According to the New York Times of April 16th, this copy was resold at the new high-record price of $120,000, it is said. During 1925 the American Bible Society issued nearly 3,000,000 Scripture portions that sold for 1 cent each.

PENNIES, DIMES, AND REMARKS.

The Mission Secretary, under date of May 17th, received a letter that did him so much good and carries such a truth for all SUN readers, that it would be unjust not to print the letter, withholding the name, as the letter was entirely personal and never intended for print. The Mission Secretary does not have the privilege of a personal acquaintance with the writer of the letter, but realizes that here indeed is a brother with whom he is in full fellowship and wishes to extend the right hand of fellowship to him here and now:
Dear Dr. Atkinson:

I have been a member of _____ Christian Church, Franklin County, N. C., for about twelve years, but as I have been away from there for several years and located most of the time where there were no Christian Churches, I have attended Churches of other denominations. Noticing in THE SUN that our Mission Board, like all other mission boards, is deeply in debt, I am sending my check for $50.00 to be added to that fund, and will try to send more later.

I thing one reason the Church is so poorly financed today is because there are so many people who were taught when children to drop a few pennies in the collection plate and have never gotten farther away from that than dimes. The Church needs dollars instead of dimes.

Yours truly,
P. S.: You may give _____ Church credit for this.

How we wish there were several thousand others of like mind as this brother in our Christian Church! Yes, the Church needs dollars, but is driven so often to get along with dimes.

SUCCESS.

He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often, and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task; who has left the world better than he found it, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty, or failed to express it; who has always looked for the best in others and given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration, whose memory a benediction.—Stanley.

SOUTHERN BUYS NEW RAIL.

Contracts have just been awarded by the Southern Railway System for the purchase of 45,200 tons of new steel rail for delivery during the latter part of the year. This is in addition to 46,200 tons ordered for delivery during the first half of 1926, and makes a total of 91,400 tons of new rail for the year.

The largest share of the new order (38,600 tons), was given to the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, and the steel will be fabricated at its Ensley, Ala., plant; 4,600 tons were ordered from the Bethlehem Steel Company, and 2,000 tons from the Illinois Steel Company.

The new rail will be in the standard thirty-nine-foot length, most of which will be of the 100-pound to the yard weight. It is estimated the rail purchased by the Southern for 1926 is sufficient to relay approximately 650 miles of track.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTION, VIRGINIA VALLEY CONFERENCE.

This Convention met in annual session at Leaksville Church, Page County, Va., May 12th to 14th. Rev. A. W. Andes is the beloved pastor of this Church and opened the Convention with appropriate devotional services. Bro. B. F. McDaniel welcomed the body, and Dr. W. T. Walters, of Burlington, N. C., delivered an inspirational address on "God's Little Ones." Thursday A. M. Rev. R. P. Crumpler, Linville, Va., conducted the devotional services, and reports of departmental secretaries were made, Bro. R. O. Rothgeb leading with a report and discussion on "Teacher Training."

Miss Pattie Coghill was expected at the Convention and was named on the program for several addresses, but it was reported to the body by wire that Miss Coghill was in a hospital at Suffolk, Va., for a surgical operation. There was much regret expressed at her enforced absence. Bro. Roy A. Larrick, Winchester, Va., the very capable and progressive president of the Convention, led in the discussion of teaching problems, and with diplomacy brought out a most timely and wholesome discussion. It was found that some of the teachers taught by the lecture method only, and would have none other. Others taught only by the question method and believed in none other. The body decided that since David could not or would not fight in Saul's armor, each would have to use the method best suited to his or her own personality and taste, but that each and all should and must make thorough and adequate preparation. After a lively discussion on methods of teaching, what to teach and what not to teach, the Mission Secretary of the Southern Convention discussed the "Nature and Necessity of the Missionary Passion."

In the afternoon, Mrs. R. C. Myers gave the report of the cradle roll, and Rev. R. P. Crumpler discussed, with analysis and precision, the necessity of "Pulling Together" if the home and Sunday School are to do their divinely appointed and essential task.

Bro. J. E. Foster, vice-president, conducted a very helpful round-table discussion on the varied problems that confront teacher, officer and pupil in the Sunday School.

This was followed by "Reports and Gleanings from the Recent Session of the Southern Convention," by several who were at that Convention. The great problems that this body faced and endeavored to solve at Durham were presented and discussed.

At the evening hour Thursday, Rev. A. W. Andes led a half-hour song service that was much enjoyed by the large audience present. THE SUN's editor spoke on "The Source and Benefits of Missionary Support."

Friday was a full and busy day, the session opening with reports and discussion of Christian Endeavor. Dr. W. T. Walters, chairman of the Board of Christian Education, delivered a very able and effectual address on "Christian Endeavor Vision." Bro. W. C. Wampler, of the Antioch Church, one of our most consecrated Sunday School teachers, delivered the annual address, having chosen for his subject "Sunday School Problems." Bro. Wampler contends that there are many and varied problems confronting the Sunday School teacher and worker, but all of them can and will be solved well and wisely if only one will be faithful and diligent in pursuit and consecrated to the great task of the Sunday School.

Rev. A. W. Andes delivered a very timely and searching address on "Parental Authority" and showed that the Sunday School could easily accomplish its God-given work if parents in the home would exercise due authority and teach their children the fundamental virtues.

Bro. B. C. Devers, the very faithful treasurer, reported about $150 collected at the session or sent him during the year, and after all expenses were paid the Convention voted to appropriate $100 to the Board of Christian Education. Bro. L. R. Townsend, Washington, D. C., is the efficient recording secretary, and was, with the other officers of the past year, re-elected to serve the Convention the coming year.

The people of Leaksville Church and community entertained the Convention in royal Virginia Valley fashion, and hospitality and good-fellowship abounded.

The Convention voted to meet next year with Bethlehem Church, whose Sunday School won the banner at this session and carried it home with which to welcome and greet the body next year.

NOT SYSTEM, BUT LIFE.

There are two homes of my acquaintance, both Christian, but diverse. Let me picture them for you!

The first is methodical and systematic. Everything moves like clock work. Everything and everybody have a place and occupy it. It never gets perturbed nor disconcerted. As an organization, it is sublime. But you come away from it as if you had been in a giant "frigidaire."

The second is unorganized and unsystematic, topsy-turvy. I had almost said. Neither things nor persons have been assigned definite places. Many are the half hours spent searching for articles laid down where they were last used. Meals are not regularly served. There is plenty of time for neighborly visiting. An atmosphere of opportunity pervades everything. Evidently no thought is taken for the things of the morrow, nor even of the next hour; not because of the evil of the present is sufficient for the day, but from sheer interest in things as they succeed each other in kaleidoscopic order.

The reader has seen these two homes oftentimes repeated—the home of system and the home of life. Let us use them as a parable of the religious life.

These homes typify religion without a doubt. One man reduces his religion to a system, and it becomes theology. Another man conceives religion as a way of life, or something to be lived, letting beliefs and dogmas take care of themselves.

Which type did Jesus exemplify? Why did He come? Read John 10:10. W. A. H.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

The Convention at Durham decided that the Mission Board give all those who pledged the privilege, and an urgent request, to make payment on or before July 1, 1926, and on that date that the Mission Board send no further accounts or take no further steps to collect the pledges. In keeping with such a decision, notices are going out to all subscribers who are yet in arrears on their pledges. It is greatly desired that those who pledged will put their houses in order so far as these pledges are concerned. Surely every department of the Church needs every dollar due Men and Millions, and all departments suffer because these pledges have not been paid. If those who made the pledges could realize what it would mean to the Church and to the kingdom to pay them now, there would be a great outpouring of funds to meet these pledges.

The Mission Board feels that it has done its best to keep the matter before the people, and now makes this last effort with the high hope that many will make a real sacrifice to meet these accounts and pay them off. We only wish that every account could be left squared off and that the records would be clear on every page.

True, circumstances have changed, conditions are different from what they were when the pledges were given, and yet we are persuaded that very many have paid their pledges through real sacrifice and many more can pay them by making a similar sacrifice. When the accounts are cast up, here is hoping that very many unpaid subscriptions at the present will be balanced off by July 1st, and that these funds so much needed will be given to the struggling enterprises for which the movement was begun. Let every one who owes a dollar to Men and Millions make a determined effort to pay all or a part, and through a real sacrifice do this good thing for the kingdom of our Lord.

WHEN CHARACTER IS LOST.

A Talk to Young Men.

BY REV. J. F. BURNETT, D. D.

Every human being is a builder of character, and from the time the child builds with blocks until the last addition is made to human character every day adds something to that which had been wrought the day before. The word character literally means to cut, to carve, to engrave, to furrow, so that when we speak of man's character we mean that which has been cut into human life by every passion, thought, deed, work, association, purpose, desire, influence, ambition and every other thing with which his life had to do through all the years through which it had come. Young man, you are today the sum total, the complete aggregate of every thought, feeling, word, book, prayer, song, play, and every other thing with which your life has been touched. You should keep in mind, young man, that you do not inherit character—you build it. It is never bestowed, never given—always built. You may inherit disposition, you may inherit money, or many other things, but never character—that you build. Every day, every where, by every thing, the silent forces that play upon your life are cutting, carving, shaping, and making permanent that which you call yourself. If these forces be good ones, you will be changed into the likeness and stature of the Man of Galilee, but if they be evil ones, then into the likeness and the form, and the spirit of a demon. As Tupper puts it:

"For character groweth day by day, and all things aid in its unfolding,
And the bent unto good, or evil, may begin in the hour of infancy;
Scratch the green rind of a sapling, or wantonly twist it in the soul,
The scarred and crooked oak will tell of the centuries to come;
Even so mayest thou guide the mind to good or lead it to the moorings of evil,
For disposition is builded upon by the fashioning of first impressions."

The character you build is yourself, and with yourself you must live through time, and through eternity. If you do not want to live with thugs and thieves, with drunkards and libertines, with murderers and outlaws, with prostitute and criminals, then keep thyself pure, for you may become all these in yourself.

And, young man, you should keep in mind that a good character, as valuable as it is, is easily and quickly destroyed. Character is courage; character is dignity; character is the real man, and yet it may be destroyed in the twinkling of an eye. I am now an old man, and have spent all my years in building character. I have built much of it in the memory of the dangers which skirted my boyhood path and hung upon my steps through all my early years, the dangers of which I was at that time wholly unconscious; but it is now well-nigh completed—it is mine; it is all I have; it is my wealth; it is my introduction to society, and my standing in business; I have no worldly possessions, and yet I hold a high head among men, but with the consciousness that by one wicked act, by one vile or vulgar deed I could undermine the work of years, and topple my life into disgrace and ruin. Young man, your character is now in the process of the making, and the material you build into it will determine its strength, its durability, and its value. Now is the time for you to build wisely and well, for one defective piece of material builded into your life now, may, in the end, undermine your whole character. You are now where all the possibilities of manhood center and are at your command; you have a strong body, a clear brain, an untarnished soul, and a name that stands unsullied by any act of yours, and it should be your business to keep them so. Should you at any time be tempted to violate your body, and thus interfere with the formation of secretions, which, if left undisturbed, would build into blood, and your bone, and your muscle, and your sinew, a virile manhood, which would put snap in every movement of the body, and tone of the voice, resist that temptation even unto death. Face it like a man facing a wild, ravenous beast. You must defeat that vile, insinuating, disgusting, loathsome, degrading thing, or it will hopelessly enslave you, and, binding you with thongs, will scourge you with scorpions. Think clean thoughts; think clean things, and of clean things only; listen to, and tell, only clean stories; use only clean language, and select only clean companions. Better to live alone, a pure young man, than to dwell with the multitudes in sin; care for your body, it is the temple of the living God; fight the good fight; keep your body clean; avoid highly seasoned food and poisonous atmosphere.

Fight you must, win you may. There are young men, many of your age, who not only violate their own bodies, but the bodies of young women, and are mean and dirty enough to boast of their foul debauch. Should one of these corrupted souls lay hands on a sister of yours, or even speak an insinuating word to her, you would "knock the stuffing" out of him, and do it quickly, and for this you would be honored. But should not the brother of the girl whom you approach in the same manner, and for the same purpose, take a turn at your head? If you would guard the honor of your sister you must have respect for the sisters of other men. Keep away from impure women; your mother is a woman, and for her sake you should go only with such women as she would be glad to know. Young man, when you are tempted to throw away your life for the song of a siren, remember your mother's vigils which your fretting caused, her tired arms made so by your childish tyranny, her tired back on which you had no mercy, and say for her dear sake: I'll not throw my life away. Your life is the result of a thousand anxieties now forgotten, a thousand prayers that burst out of the mother heart. Your life has been dearly bought and fully paid. No purer love than the mother love, no greater service than hers for you; and if your life is to be disposed of at the price at which it was produced, your days and your strength ought to be disposed of by consecrating them to the noblest possible use. It is well known that the man who once meets an impure woman in sexual intercourse, in a vast number of cases repeats the experience, which fact makes a serious and loathsome disease inevitable, and oftentimes as durable as the life of the man.

Some day you will lead to the altar a fine young woman, who is to be your lawful and wedded wife, and of her you will demand as much. You know that for all the gold of Ophir you would not take an impure woman to your heart and make her the mother of your children. And in this you are wholly right, and for it you should be commended. But why should she be expected to take you for her husband and to be the father of her children if you are not in every respect pure in body, clean in life, and upright in conduct?

That relic of barbarism, when men bought their wives, or forcibly took them from their fathers or husbands—the double standard—has led men into grievous error and hateful sins, one of which is that the wife must be above suspicion and belong to her husband, but that the husband need not be above suspicion, and does not belong to his wife. No greater mistake can be made than the setting up of two standards of virtue, one for men and the other for women. The measure which is meted to women should also be meted to men. A moral leper, regardless of sex, should be socially and domestically ostracized, and permanently banished. Young man, never take a "chance"—never pollute your body, never allow yourself to associate with an "easy," but keep yourself clean; honor womanhood, respect your own manhood, and always be ashamed of that cowardly, mean, despicable act that would lead you to treat any woman in any way that you would not have your own sister or mother treated; and, above all, be too much of a man to offer to your wife a life less clean than that which you demand of her. That old lie, which says that a young man must indulge sexually for the sake of his health and the development of his manhood is false and devilish, as science has declared and experience proved. That lie, young man has caught and held and ruined many a life of both man and woman, and you will show yourself a fool to allow it to lead you from the path of virtuous continence to a life of slime and shame.

Studiously avoid everything that would tarnish your mind, obscure your vision, corrupt your heart or stain your character; avoid everything that draws from the spiritual toward the animal; avoid everything in wit, in literature, in conversation which tends to corrupt the purity of your life. It is a sad comment upon the life of this age that it has so many depraved heads and impure hearts that the shoemaker is compelled to cut the leather, the tailor compelled to cut the cloth, and the dressmaker compelled to cut the silk to suit the licentious tastes of corrupted customers. Many books are written, many stories told, many papers published, many dramas produced, for no better purpose than to satisfy the demands of depraved lives, and tickle the perverted tastes of the public. The impurity of human lives has brought disease, unhappiness, and ruin upon thousands of young men in our own country, and in our own day. Young man, if you would escape the ills of life, keep yourself pure.

I suppose you are wondering why I have given you such advice, and spoken in such plain language, and it may be that you feel that you neither need the one nor the other. Young man, you do not know as much now as you will know when you are old, and if I can save you one pain, one regret, one weakness, it is my duty to do it; and, in after years, it will be your delight to thank me for it. I have lived long enough to know that whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap; and though the harvest be long delayed it will finally ripen, and the sower be compelled to reap. Young man, from that law there is no escape. A hunter has told of finding a moose, weakened by hunger, fastened by his horns to the dead body of another moose, which evidently had been killed as they fought. The live moose could not release himself from the dead body. Always it held him down, and forced him slowly, but surely, to his doom. Paul speaks of being chained to a dead body, and cries out in indescribable bitterness, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Let me tell you that the sins of your life are so linked and fastened to you as to hold you until you die, unless you are released from them by the Strong Man of Galilee.

The things I have mentioned will rot your character, stain your life, ruin your home, and dam your soul, and in the end of your career you will see yourself a horrid form, having traveled over dreary, barren wastes, parched fields, wherein no flower bloomed, and in whose horizon never a star glimmered, and where in all that lonely path you never once found a resting place for your tattered and battered life. Your mouth will be filled with blasphemy, your soul will be rotted with sin, your life gone to destruction, scarred, burned, bruised, polluted, and, as such; you will go forth to reap the thorns and thistles of your early sowing, and that too with the full consciousness that—

When Character is Lost, All is Lost.

Young man, let me put this other fact into your heart. Character is self-revealing. No man can hide himself. What you really are has a thousand tongues, and they all speak at once and tell the same story. Your reputation is the reflection of your real self. Never, I beseech you, lose sight of the opinion others may have of you. When a young man says, "Oh, I do not care what others may say about me, I know what I am," that young man is in danger. Self-deception is common to mankind, and it is altogether likely that others know more about us than we know about ourselves.

Do not make the blunder of thinking you can really live a double life; that you can be one kind of a man and make the people believe you to be another. Such thin veneering is easily rubbed through, and your real self will shine out. If you give your life over to be molded by ugly passions, by the lusts of the flesh, and the corruptions of lasciviousness, you may be sure that that ugly self will make itself known, and that, too, at times when you most desired that it should not. SUFFOLK LETTER.

One of the fallacies of this age is "training for leadership." Education is the "systematic development and cultivation of the natural powers." The schools propose to "train the young for leaders" in all lines of human activity. It is not the function of schools to train leaders, but to develop what is in young people; and all young people do not possess the qualifications for leadership. A music school can develop musicians, but not teachers. Teachers are born, not educated. Leaders are born, too. Many young people pursue their education with the view of being leaders. Such a course leads often to failure. Leadership should be the remotest idea of education. Education undertakes to develop all the latent powers of the student; but leadership should grow out of promotion in service. The primary process in the development of wheat into flour is the first school of education. The kind of bread or cake to be made out of the flour is the next step. True leadership is the result of merit in the field of service, and not the result of school training. The world is full of bogus leaders who were trained in schools by teachers who possessed no gifts or experience as leaders.

The world is suffering today from too many leaders in name and position only. Leaders in politics, in business, in labor, in education, in social life, in religion, keeping society in a state of excitement and disorder. Men leading in booms in real estate, in speculation in farm products, in stocks, in schemes for making fortunes, leading the unwary into losses from which they never recover. Union labor is honest, wants to do right; but leaders create strikes, hardship and ill will among those who would otherwise be friendly. The position of leadership should not be self-chosen, but the result of proven and tested service. The world needs more really educated men and women who are willing to fight in the ranks of real service, and who possess such judgment and character that they will not be imposed upon by the ambitions and self-seeking. Social leaders are generally ambitious for prominence, and care little for the unfortunate. Leaders who win distinction and position by genuine service for mankind help in the field of progress and help to stabilize society, business, government, and religion.

The great outstanding leaders of the world have been those whose inherent gifts were really developed and proved in the field of hard service without any sign of ambition. The great teachers have been great scholars of great character, self-sacrificing in their labors, and winning distinction by serving others.

The chief thing in leadership is character and personality. It is difficult to define a real leader. He is unconscious of it, and others can't tell why it is so. It is better to be a good follower than a poor leader; and of all the human assumptions, assumed leadership, without proper qualifications, is the most offensive. Schools can develop leadership, but they cannot create it. Leaders, like poets, are born. Music teachers can develop musical talent, but they cannot create the talent. There is too much said about "training leaders." It puts wrong notions in the minds of the undeveloped. Education is as much needed for the common worker as for the leader. The main training for a mother is to be a mother. Service is the key to leadership. The world needs a new type of leaders. Sunday School leaders are discovered and trained by faithful work in the Sunday School; and preachers are made in the pulpit.

ELON LETTER.

Dean Charles R. Brown, of the Divinity School of Yale University, spoke at our chapel service last Tuesday. It was the first visit of the great preacher and trainer of preachers since January 18, 1923.

When he saw the wall surrounding our campus, he said he must take off his hat to the idea. He was equally fulsome in his praise of what he was pleased to call the "marvelous metamorphosis" which three years had wrought in Elon College.

But he was particularly impressed with the Christian Education Building. All who visit the college are loud in their praises of this new idea for the denominational college, a building which brings the religious and social life of students together and which serves at the same time as a laboratory of Christian education for students in the department.

Prof. Bennett explained the building and the organization of its curriculum to Dean Brown in detail. He expressed himself as delighted with the whole scheme and as convinced that denominational colleges owed this sort of ministry to their Churches.

Dean Brown was especially impressed with the arrangement we have with our denominational leadership training department and that of the International Council and whereby students completing freshman Bible and freshman religious education receive the International Standard Teacher Training diploma. There is no reason, he said, why these two studies should not run through the entire college course just as mathematics or English.

But I want especially to quote him on "Christian Union." Dean Brown thinks it a tragedy that Christians and Congregationalists should remain separate religious bodies. He felt that each denomination would gain by their union and that the kingdom of Christ would be promoted by it. Do you agree with him? Or is Christian union in our platform merely a platitude?

W. A. HARPER.

P. S.: Dean Brown paid the Elon product as exemplified in H. Shelton Smith, H. S. Hardcastle and F. C. Lester, a most glowing compliment.

OBEDIENCE IS BETTER.

As mission month has past, we wonder if some have not forgot the emergency call? I am sure our Mission Board appreciated every thing that was done, but still we are humiliated as a Church when we see how small the offering has been, compared with what was needed. Perhaps we have failed to catch a real vision of a crucified Saviour and His mission to earth. When we fully realize that Christ died to save the world and we are saved, our desire will be to see others saved. We have failed to obey His great commission, "Go, ye, into all the world and preach my gospel." To obey we must go, and to go we must know. May we study a great missionary book and see why it pays to obey. Take Jonah, "God's runaway," and get a lesson that will help us to obey. God's commission to Jonah was "Go to Nineveh and preach." Christ's commission to the Church is, "Go, ye, into all the world." Jonah failed to obey; typical of our own disobedience, Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshirk from the presence of the Lord. He went down to Joffa and found a great ship going to Tarshish. So he paid his fare and went down with them. But the Lord sent a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest so that the ship was like to be broken. All on board became alarmed, and the ship's master came to where Jonah lay asleep and said, "What meanest thou, O sleeper? Arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us that we perish not."

They that were on board said, "Let's cast lots, that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us." So they cast lots and the lot fell on Jonah. Then they said unto him, "Tell us, we pray thee, for whose cause is this evil upon us?" After Jonah had told them, they knew he was fleeing from God. Then they said, "What shall we do unto thee that the sea may be calm for us?" He answered, "Take me up and cast me overboard into the sea, so that the sea may be calm unto you, for I know I am the cause of this great tempest."

How many of us are willing to bear the blame when things go wrong? So Jonah was cast into the sea and swallowed by a great fish. From within the fish Jonah prayed unto God, promising obedience, and God caused the fish to vomit up Jonah on dry land. Then the voice of the Lord came to Jonah the second time, saying, "Arise, go unto Nineveh, and preach what I bid thee."

Jonah went into Nineveh and sounded the alarm that the city would be destroyed. These people believed and went into a fast, hoping that God would spare this great city. God looked down in tender compassion and spared Nineveh. Then Jonah was disappointed and angry because he really did not want to see them saved. And is not the Church coming to be almost as indifferent as was Jonah? We perhaps sound the alarm that the wicked shall be destroyed, but by our actions we show to them that we do not believe it. Therefore, our actions speak so loud they can't hear what we say. Jonah wanted them to believe that he had preached the truth, but he did not want them to be forgiven.

Are we not inclined to forget what God's wish is concerning the matter? Let us turn to our Bible and see what God's wish is concerning the matter. This is the passion throbbing in our Father's heart. God willeth that all men should be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth. Let us not forget His heart is with the lost (heathen) because Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost. The world is lost; Christ wants it saved.

What are we doing to bring them to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus? Jonah was asleep while destruction hovered over them. We are asleep (spiritually) while the world madly rushes on to destruction. Then Jonah went outside the city and prayed that he might die, but God prepared a gourd to come up and shadow him, that he might be delivered from his grief. After all his disobedience, God still cared for him. Even so today, God forgives us and never brings us to suffer for all our mistakes.

A worm came and devoured the gourd and the sun beat down upon Jonah's head until he fainted; then he again prayed that he might die, for he was angry unto death. Then God said thou did have pity for the gourd, for which thou hast not labored, neither madest it grow, which came up in a night and perished in a night. Should I not spare Nineveh, that great city wherein are more than six-score thousand persons, that cannot discern between their right hand and their left?

Those who can't discern between right and left are not held responsible, but if you know they are in their sins and fail to warn them their blood shall be required at your hands. We, too, like Jonah, are more concerned about the gourd-vine protection than we are about lost souls. We find great joy in temporal things—pleasure trips, fine clothes, recreation, and everything for worldly gain. If all these were taken from us, we, too, like Jonah, would want to die perhaps.

What shall we do under the circumstances? Courageous soldiers do not give up even when the support from behind is uncertain. Jesus said, "Lo I am with you always," and He is with the Church or individual that goes. What are our Churches for, but to make missionaries? What is education for, but to train them? What is money for, but to send them? What is life itself for, but to fulfill the purpose of missions—the enthroning of Christ in the hearts of all men. Cannot we who are Christians rise to heights so noble that we will say, "I love my money and what it brings"; "I love my pleasure," and also "I love the souls of men, for whom Christ died."

If I cannot have pleasure and still give to missions; if I cannot take trips and also give worthily towards saving the lost, then I will let all go and choose sacrificial giving towards saving the nations of the world. In obedience to His great command, "Go, ye—"

Fortunate youth

THE educational opportunities for the boys and girls of the South are keeping pace with the leadership of the South in the economic progress of the Nation. This is seen in the following facts:

In the last twelve years more than $125,000,000 has been spent for the construction of new school buildings in the states of the South served by the Southern.

In 1900 there were less than 73,000 school teachers in the states of the South served by the Southern, and the appropriation for education amounted to only 90 cents per person living in these states. In 1922 the appropriation was $6.85 per person, and the number of trained teachers had increased to 139,309.

In 1900 only 64.8 per cent of the children of school age in these states attended school, while the average for the nation as a whole was 72.4 per cent. But in 1922, the latest year for which complete figures are available, 81.4 per cent of the children in the states of the South served by the Southern attended school, while the average for the nation as a whole was 81.2 per cent.

The growth in the educational facilities of the South, as well as the number of children that can take advantage of them, is one of the fortunate and direct results of the prosperity that has come to the South.

The Southern Railway System has contributed to the prosperity of the South, as a tax-payer, as a large employer of men and women—and as the transportation agency which carries Southern commerce to and from world markets, regularly, dependably and economically.

THE PARSON AND HIS MONEY—SHALL HE TITHE?

BY WALTER R. DAVENPORT.

Is the preacher a man? Then the same laws and obligations hold true with regard to him that are in force concerning any other man. Protestantism never gave its ministry any right of sanctuary, or any immunity from the results of wrongdoing above any one else. And, on the other hand, Protestantism has always rightly held that the preacher has the same obligations to his fellow-man as has any one else. Because holy hands of ordination have been laid upon his head, is no reason why he should not give a definite proportion of his income to the work of the kingdom.

As well might one say that, when he does not have to preach, a clergyman has no obligation at all to attend Church as to say that he does not need to be a "steward of the manifold grace of God" simply and solely because he had dedicated his life to the work of winning the world to his risen Lord.

Just the minute that the parson begins to arrogate to himself rights and privileges withheld from others, just that minute he begins to lose his influence with his parishioners in particular, and with the public in general. He is forever a man of like passions with the rest of folks, and no requirements of any kind are lessened in his case. A Prince Albert coat and a white tie are no passport to immunity from the principle of tithing. Not once in the Old Testament is there any indication that the Jewish priests were released from the requirements of tithes and offerings demanded of their brethren without the garb. One law held for any one and for all alike.

Moreover, the glaring inconsistency of proclaiming to the man in the pew the obligation of the stewardship of possessions, while withholding his own proportion, would at once nullify a preacher's influence and destroy his usefulness. And once it was found that the preacher demanded that his people should tithe and then claimed immunity for himself, just that moment the more discriminating among his congregation would begin to distrust his whole moral character and to think that he was in the ministry for what he could get out of it, and not for what he could put into it. Thus inconsistency in one thing that was known would give ground for suspicion that there was inconsistency in a thousand other things that had not yet been brought to light.

The fact that a preacher gets a salary that is pitifully small, as so many do, has no bearing whatever upon the matter. In the first case, if he has but a small income, the amount asked of him in return is small, as with any one else. In the second case, the promise is for him also, as well as for any one else, that "there is that scattereth and yet increaseth," and the man in the pulpit should expect, as well as the man in the pew, that while he should pay at least his tithe because it is expected and is a legitimate claim, and also because a consciousness of the abounding mercies of God impels him so to do, it is also true that for the man behind the altar, as well as for the man before the altar, to him who gives, the great God will give back in kind "good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over."

All kinds of preachers, including the writer, have tried the experiment of tithing, and have been more than satisfied with it. In the first place, they reasoned that they should be leaders in paying as well as in praying, and that an exhortation to give without the example of giving would be but as sounding brass or tinkling cymbal. In the second place, the demands and the obligations of the Church, and the marvelous opportunities for the expansion of the work at home and abroad have inspired them to give and give until a tenth was left far behind. Moreover, they have learned the joy of sharing, and have reckoned themselves as being in partnership with God as almoners of His abounding mercies, and have only been sorry that they could not offer more. With them, tithing has not been a drastic law, dragging money from unwilling hands, but the rather hilarious pouring forth of funds, large or small, for the conquest of the whole round earth for their risen Lord. They have followed their money with their prayers and their interest. The preacher tithes because he loves to tithe, and because his wife is one with him in believing in systematic payment of money for the Lord's cause, and in the making of that cause a preferred claim over and above everything else.

"Should the preacher tithe?" Might as well ask, Should the preacher pray? or, Should the preacher read the Scriptures? or, Should the preacher love his wife? Of course, he should! He should begin by tithing, and then go on toward perfection, as the increased income and possessions make possible.—Conservation and Advance.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND MISSIONS.

The hope of making the Church missionary is in the Sunday School. The denominations which today are doing most for missions and are growing most rapidly at home and abroad are those who twenty-five or fifty years ago began teaching missions and taking a missionary offering in their Sunday Schools. The reason why our youth knows so little about missions and so few of them volunteer for the mission field is because we have not been teaching and giving to missions in our Sunday Schools.

So far as this writer knows, not one of our schools contributing to missions has been the poorer for its own expense account. And yet there are quite a few of our schools that refuse to give even one offering a month to missions. They enjoy the benefits and blessings of a Sunday School, but are unwilling to share with others these blessings and benefits.

We want to place every Sunday School in the Southern Convention on the list this year of those making the monthly offering to missions. Read the following and see if your school is on this list. If not, please try to place it there.

During the quarter ending March 31, 1926—that is, June 1st to March 31st—the following amounts have been received for missions from schools named:

A RARE EXPERIENCE.

On May 8th it was my privilege to go with Rev. C. W. Carter to Rock Springs Church, Alabama Conference, and conduct a memorial service. It was a most enjoyable occasion. The crowd was large and the dinner served under the great trees was bountiful and delicious.

It is none of these things, however, that I shall remember longest. I have seen great congregations before, and I shall probably see them again. I have eaten excellent dinners before, and I trust I may eat many another. But I had on this day a unique experience, so far as I am concerned, and I believe a very rare one, so far as anybody is concerned.

I met there three ministers representing three generations of the same family. Rev. C. M. Dollar was there; his son, Rev. J. D. Dollar, also attended the service; and Rev. Carl Dollar, the son of Rev. J. D. and the grandson of Rev. C. M. Dollar, was also present. Bro. C. M. Dollar has been in the service of the Christian Church for forty-five years. He spoke in the afternoon and delivered a most thoughtful and satisfying message.

The meeting of these brethren, three of them in the same family and representing three generations of the work of the Christian Church, made me hope that this might often occur when the sons of prophets might also be prophets, and so shall the Lord show mercy unto thousands of generations who love Him and keep His commandments.

Bro. C. M. Dollar has another son in the work of the Church, Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, who is now studying at Vanderbilt University. I shall always be grateful for this rare experience.

A UNIQUE EXPERIENCE.

In December of last year a concrete house was built about one mile from the mission home. The waste lumber used in the construction was offered for sale, and I bought it at a low figure. With the aid of some students it was carted to the mission premises, and I set it down as a part of my task to break the boards with an axe into the proper length for the stove.

One day as I was working away, a student boy came past the house, saw me, came in to help, and we talked religion among other things. When dinner time came, Mrs. W. put on an extra plate, and he ate his first foreign meal with foreigners. He informed us many times that he did not know foreign ways. Toward the close of the meal, he informed us that his abdomen was full. Of course we could not insist on his eating more after that.

A few days later he came to say that he would go to Church every Sunday. I told him to come to my house at nine in the morning and we would go together. The day when he did come was a day when I was to preach. I had prepared a sermon especially for him. As we took our journey on the street car (fare three and one-half cents), he asked me how a person became a Christian and how he joined the Church. It is not necessary here to repeat what I told him.

Arriving at the Church, we found that a Sunday School picnic was planned. Who doesn't like a picnic? In the woods a service was held for the children, and my sermon had to be made over on the spot to suit the children. After this service the pastor came to me and wanted to know whether on such an occasion it would be proper to have a baptismal service. You may guess I told him it certainly was. Two ladies were baptised. When this service was taking place, my student boy showed great interest. Turning to me, he asked the time-long question which the Eunuch asked Philip on the road leading to Gaza, "What doth hinder me from being baptised?" He had told me before this that he believed on the Lord Jesus Christ. I went forward with him to the front where the pastor had just finished a prayer for the two candidates whom he had just baptised, and explained the desire of the young man. So he, too, received baptism.

He stands in scholarship among the highest ten in a class of one hundred and sixty students. His faith is as simple as that of a child. He always comes to the house at nine on Sunday morning to go with me to Church wherever that might be. His own father is dead and he seems to have adopted me in his stead. What is his future to be? Nearly all the bright students aspire to entering some of the higher schools and universities; seldom one of them thinking of becoming a minister because there is no opportunity for worldly advancement. But while in times past the graduates of the higher schools were eagerly sought after, nearly all the business and professional occupations have become saturated with these students until at the present time even university graduates have a hard time to secure salaried positions, many getting no jobs at all. So I am hoping that this boy, now seventeen, may be brought to see that the greatest calling on earth and the happiest and the one which in the end brings the greatest reward is the Christian ministry. Perhaps the job of getting him to see this is largely mine.

HAW RIVER, LONG'S CHAPEL, UNION.

We had delightful services at Haw River Christian Church on Sunday, April 18th, when the memorial window to Joseph Thomas, "The White Pilgrim," was unveiled. The window is a beautiful work of art; the center design is a likeness of "The White Pilgrim," standing by a pulpit with an open book in hand. The interior of the Church had been redecorated, beautiful new lights installed and the pews retouched. The auditorium was filled to overflowing.

Rev. J. W. Wellons, now past one hundred years, was with us and spoke interestingly of "The White Pilgrim." Rev. J. W. Patton was present and took part in the services. He preached at the evening hour. His message was thoughtful and earnest and well received. There were more reported in Sunday School that day than we had on the roll.

On the first Sunday in May we had Mothers' Day at Long's Chapel. The attendance was excellent. There was good interest throughout the day. Dr. W. C. Wicker was with us for the afternoon service and preached an instructive and forceful sermon on "Open Doors." The work here prospers. Interest in Sunday School and Church work is good.

On the second Sunday in May we were at Union, Alamance. We had the largest Sunday that day in the history of the Church, so far as known. There is a nice group of young people here that are much interested in Church work. One member was received into Church fellowship.

Dr. J. U. Newman preached at the morning hour. His was a thoughtful message of hope and good cheer, with a forward look, as all things are made new by a kind and loving Heavenly Father.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

"Call upon me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not."—Jeremiah 33:3.

MONDAY.

ANGER LIKE A GERM.

"Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry, for anger resteth in the bosom of fools."—Eccl. 7:19.

Genuine malice is a rare thing, and yet one of the commonest things of which people are accused.

The looks of a person who is in anger is proof that his wrath is a pain to him. He looks like a man with a fever. When one has a delirium of a fever he is permitted to say things and he is forgiven. They say he is "out of his head." Rupert Hughes says that anger is a walking typhoid and the worms gnaw at the heart so fiercely that one strikes at the nearest and even the dearest one to him. And he doesn't mean it.

The best way to avoid sin is to keep at a safe distance from temptation. The best way to avoid anger is to keep away from the occasions of it and from those who would occasion it.

Prayer.—Our Father, we wish to be Thine in spirit as well as in word. We offer ourselves to Thee this day, praying for Thy spirit, to keep us in perfect peace and harmony with all and to keep our minds stayed on Thee. We offer unto Thee our heartfelt thanks for all Thy blessings. We implore the forgiveness of sins, and for the blessing of happy living. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A WARNING AGAINST ANGER.

"The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God."—James 1:17-23.

Anger is unfair in judging and sentencing. It riots in punishment and revenge. "Wrath is cruel and anger is overwhelming." It can not work the righteousness of God, for its source is of Satan. It is hate. Throwing away self-control, abandoning oneself to passion is moral and mental insanity. Anger may bring not only injury to the other, but destruction to oneself. Therefore, "Let all bitterness and anger and wrath be put away from you." "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."

Impatience is because of our selfishness that demands what is wrong. If we serve others, "in lowliness of mind, each counting other better than himself, not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others"; if we live, not to get but to give, patience and kindness will come easily. Patience is of God, but impatience is of the enemy of souls.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

WEDNESDAY.

PERFECT FORGIVENESS!

"Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered."—Psa. 32:1-7.

Brilliant minds have planned in utmost detail a "perfect crime"; that is, one that leaves no clue. When the crime has been carried out, their hearts say, "Blessed is the man whose sin is covered." David said it when Uriah's name was among those "killed in action." Achan said it when the gold and goodly Babylonish garment were concealed in his tent. Joseph's brethren said it when their father said, "An evil beast hath devoured him." And many more have said it, as they steep their sins in deep forgetfulness.

But sin rots its cover. Murder will out! God in His providence uncovers sin, and our sin is discovered by our fellows. The sin we hide in our hearts cries out to be uncovered. It murders sleep. Our bones waste away, for God's hand is heavy on our conscience. But God be praised, when we uncover our sin, He covers them, and what a perfect covering it is! He imputes not sin; He forgives it, pardons it, blots it out, washes it away, casts it behind His back, and remembers it no more!

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

THURSDAY.

THE PATH OF PROSPERITY.

"Then shalt thou prosper . . . be strong, and of good courage; dread not, nor be dismayed."—1 Chron. 22:11-13.

It is a splendid picture that David paints for the eye of Solomon. He was to have the privilege of building God's house; he would have honor and praise of men; his life would be a life of prosperity; but underlying all this is the proviso: "if thou takest heed to fulfill the statutes of the Lord."

The way of prosperity is also a way of testing. Not every man can be safely trusted with prosperity. Even in material things, prosperity does not come without trial and testing. And in the things of God, if we desire the fatness of soul, and the many things that go to make up real prosperity, we must gladly welcome the preparatory work. As an old Christian said: "Think it not strange concerning the trials."

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, by one of the parents, that we and our children may learn "the way of obedience," and walk in it with assurance that He will keep our feet.

FRIDAY.

JESUS AND THE "COMMON PEOPLE."

"But when He saw the multitudes, He was moved with compassion on them."—Matt. 9:35-38.

All through the gospel records we hear much of Jesus and the multitudes. Wherever He went and wherever He spoke, the multitudes followed Him, curious and admiring. They moved Him to the depths, and His personality and words had for them a remarkable attraction. He spoke "as one having authority and not as the scribes," academically and pedantically, whose words tingled with scorn for the "common people."

The "multitudes" were accustomed to be despised and trodden under foot by the lordly Pharisees, and here they listen to a Rabbi who treats them as men.

This spirit of compassion is the root cause and abiding inspiration for the missionary activities of the Church. It is because we see the need, the pain and the poverty of spirit, in outlying parts of our own continent and in far-away lands that we send out our missionaries to help and bless. "The love of Christ constraineth us."

Prayer.—By one of the parents for the advancement of the kingdom, and that the nations "still in darkness" may be brought into the gospel light and enjoy its blessings.

SATURDAY.

Do it Now!

"Because thou knewest not the time."—Luke 19:41-44.

There is a time to serve and a time to rest. Not to know the time is to be remiss in service; it is to lose our spiritual opportunity. The time to do good in the service of Christ is when we can, and that time is spelled "now!"

Some one once criticized David Livingstone because of his readiness to rush into a new work without knowing what the outcome might be. Said Livingstone in reply: "If we always wait until there is no danger, we will never do anything at all."

What a splendid motto for Christian workers is this word! Is not this word of Livingstone's the best rebuke that might be found for the gross selfishness that restrains us from immediate service? And is it not in full harmony with the warning of the Master who bids us beware lest we wait and wait, and thereby miss the golden hour of our spiritual opportunity?

Prayer.—By one of the parents, that we be kept ready to make use of every opportunity to serve God, and to help build up His kingdom.

SUNDAY.

OUR DIVINE CONSOLER.

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."—Rev. 21:1-4.

There will be no more orphan babies crying for their mothers, no more heartbroken mothers crying over prodigal sons, no more bitter tears raining down on the face of the dead. Tears will be gone; God will wipe them away. And you may be sure if God does it it will be forever done. They will not reappear.

There was a time when mother wiped the tears out of our eyes, and for a while our childish hearts ceased to throb with pain, and the smiles came back; but later on, something else went wrong and the tears came back, and mother wiped them away again. How sweet it was to have mother wipe the tears away! She would gladly have wiped them away for all time if she could, but she could not do that. That is what our Heavenly Father promises to do.

Prayer.—By one of the parents, that we may be privileged to spread the message of divine forgiveness and lovingkindness, that precious souls may be won, and to tell to many the assurance of God's wondrous love.

THE MEANING OF LIFE.

"The fact is, that till we see God, there is no real and intelligible meaning in life. One thing is to be said about the theory of the love of God—even if it be only a theory—it is the only credible and intelligible explanation of the world. But it only becomes convincing when we really find that love working through everything. Life for many people is a thing which is good only in shreds and patches; and for many others a thing of sound and fury, signifying nothing. But when you see God in it, and find Him there, the world becomes the Father's house. It is heaven begun—we have entered, even here on earth, the spiritual country."—James Reid, in "The Key to the Kingdom," published by George H. Doran Company.

JACOB AT BETHEL

GOLDEN TEXT: "I am with thee, and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest."—Gen. 28:15.

LESSON: Gen. 27, 28.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 121.

Two accounts are given as to why Jacob left home. The one says that he fled for his life because Esau had threatened his life because he (Jacob) had by fraud received a blessing from his aged and blind father. The other account says that he was sent away by his father in order to get a wife from among the people of his own race rather than from among the Canaanites. In either case he was away from home, alone in a strange land.

The story implies that it was by chance that he stopped at the place which became the scene of his vision. "He lighted upon a certain place and tarried there all night because the sun was set." Darkness was overtaking him and he was forced to stop for the night, seemingly in an incidental and accidental way. But God moves in mysterious ways His wonders to perform, for it was in this rocky, lonely, out-of-the-way place that Jacob had a vision that was the beginning of a new life, even though that new life did come as a long process and not as an immediate effect.

It is quite probable that the topography of the spot entered into his vision, for the country roundabout is rugged and rough, and marked by stones which might well have suggested stairs. In any event, with a stone for a pillow, the man lay down to sleep far from home and loved ones, and, as he thought, far from God. There is a parable of life here. It is not at all likely that Jacob would have had his dream or vision if he had had a feather bed to sleep on and attendants to wait on him. Luxury and ease are not conducive to the larger manifestations of God. Many a man has found God only as adversity has put him in that mood which made him susceptible to overtures from God. It is a sad commentary on human life that prosperity usually makes a man feel self-sufficient and makes it difficult for God to speak in terms that the man understands.

The dream was rather simple in a way, but it was profound in its suggestiveness. Jacob dreamed that he saw a ladder or stairs set up on earth, and the top reached to heaven, and angels were going up and coming down the stairs. At the top of the stairs stood Jehovah Himself. There was no mistaking that fact, for Jehovah offered personal identification, and repeated to Jacob in an elaborated form the promises which Jehovah Himself had made to Abraham and Isaac, and with which Jacob must have been familiar. When Jacob awoke he was afraid. He felt that Jehovah had been in that place and he had not known it. He felt that the place was none else than the house of God. Two fundamental truths stand out.

In the first place, Jacob learned that Jehovah was not confined to a restricted area. He had thought that Jehovah was a local tribal God. He was surprised to find that Jehovah, so to speak, was away from home. It came to him as a startling revelation that God should be out there in Bethel. He had found God in an unexpected place. Here is the beginning of that long process by which the Hebrews eventually came to realize that the Jehovah whom they worshiped was the God of all the earth. There are still many people who find God in unexpected places. They are continually being surprised when they find evidences of His presence and His power at work in unexpected places of life. Finding God in unexpected places would be a great theme for a sermon.

In the second place, here is the germ truth which is the fundamental principle of Protestantism that asserts that communication between God and man is direct and immediate. Angels were going up and coming down the stairs or ladder that reached from Jacob's resting place to Jehovah Himself. They are still going up and coming down, bearing messages to and from earth and heaven.

One wonders how Jehovah could make such gracious promises to such an unscrupulous schemer as Jacob. Thank God, it is so. If we had to wait until we had come to a standard of perfection we could have but little chance of dealing with the Almighty. But he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust. He will not break the bruised reed nor quench the smoking flax. Wherever He sees even the beginnings of moral aspiration and sincerity of purpose, there He manifests His grace. It is true that there was a scheming, crafty, even unscrupulous Jacob, but there was another Jacob who had in him the possibilities of that fiber of manhood that made him the father of the twelve tribes which gave to the world the Perfect Man, Jesus Christ. There is in every one of us, as in Jacob, two men—the one the lower, the other the higher. A man's destiny is determined by the man who finally gains the ascendancy. He who, by the grace of God, persistently subdues the old man after the flesh and persistently enthrones the new man after the spirit, will come to an increasing approximation of the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ Jesus.

Jacob is still far from being an ideal character. He still tries to drive a bargain with Jehovah. Like many a modern man, he prefaces his petitions and his promises with an "if." There are legion today who will give assent to religion if thereby they could secure some guarantee of material prosperity and security of life and health. It is a far cry from the prayer of Jacob at Bethel, "If God be with me, and keep me, and give me bread, . . . to the cry of Jesus in the garden: "Nevertheless, not my will, but Thine be done," but in that early cry there was the promise of that growing spirit of consecration which trusts God even though He slay one.

Teaching Points.

1. God pity the young man who leaves home without any adequate conception of God.
2. Casual camping places in life may be the stage for a transforming vision.
3. God is everywhere accessible to men.
4. Heaven is not far from earth.
5. God takes the materials of every-day life and uses them in teaching great spiritual truths.
6. Adversity often prepares the way for a new understanding of God.
7. God is a God who knows, and is interested in persons.
8. The providence of God accompanies even those who are not His loyal followers.

9. God is to be found in unexpected places.
10. It is not enough to have a vision; one must act on or be obedient to the vision.
11. The man of the bargaining spirit is not yet wholly within the kingdom.
12. God often finds the material for manhood in very unpromising timber.
13. Giving is a natural fruitage of an experience with God.
14. Material markers are often valuable reminders of spiritual experiences.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

May 30, 1926.

TOPIC: "Lessons from God's Pioneers in All Ages."—Heb. 11:8-10, 17-22.

Some Bible Hints.

The first principle of pioneering is faith. There is no progress without it. (v. 8.)

The next principle in pioneering is obedience to one's vision. We must act as well as believe. (v. 8.)

A third principle in pioneering is patience. Abraham waited long for the promise. Worth-while things are not always near. (v. 9.)

A fourth principle in pioneering is sacrifice. Great things are not attained without great cost. (v. 17.)

Suggestive Thoughts.

Kepler, the astronomer, had to construct his own instruments for the study of the stars. Nothing can stop the man of determination. He makes his own way.

Bacon's life shows us that intellect is a poor guide and is not enough. He was tremendously learned, but was the meanest man of his time. Character is more than culture.

Augustine suggests what a consecrated intellect can do for men. His thought, devoted to divine things, dominated the Church for centuries.

Moody, a modern pioneer of evangelism, shows us what even a common man may accomplish if he is wholeheartedly consecrated to God. God could use us more if we were more pliable in His hand.

A Few Illustrations.

Newton tells us that in studying nature he is thinking God's thoughts after Him. The great pioneers are humble.

Edison is a splendid illustration of concentration and industry. He pursues facts as a hound pursues a scent. Work must be wedded to genius.

Livingstone will always stand out as a great pioneer of missions. His life kindled enthusiasm and his influence in death was greater than in life.

Rockefeller was a pioneer in the business world, and the lesson we learn from him is organization. If the Church were organized for efficiency, as a real business is, it would work wonders.

To Think About.

What is the value of great men to us?

Who is our favorite pioneer? Why?

What pioneering may be done today?

A Cluster of Quotations.

"The pioneer is a breaker of new trails. His work makes it easier for all that come after him."—Anon.

"Don't aim at impossible heroisms. Strive rather to be quiet in your own sphere. Don't live in cloudland. Bring a real heaven down to your fellows."—William M. Punshon.

"The man born with what we call genius, which means with better and larger understanding than others, is the perpetual priest of men, ordained to the office by God Himself, whether man can get him ordained to it or not."—Carlyle.

"It is folly for an eminent man to think of escaping censure, and a weakness to be affected by it."—Anon.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our financial report this week carries us above two rungs in the ladder at one time in the same week. We have now past the ninth rung and reaching for the tenth. Isn't that fine? A check from the Duke endowment gave us a good push and cheered us up. We are happy that our Orphanage is to share in this endowment. Mr. Duke was very kind to make this provision for us, and we are grateful. It will enable us to help quite a number of little children that we would otherwise not be able to help.

The graded school closed May 13th. All of our children have had the joy this year of being in the town graded school for the entire session and have had equal advantages with the other children of the community. This is much cheaper for the Orphanage than trying to run its own school. We have been happy to note that many of our children have stood at the head of their classes and made splendid grades. One thing I am especially proud of, and that is quite a number of our children made an average of 100 on department. Many of them made an average of 90 to 100. We feel proud of this record. The Parent-Teachers' Association offers a medal for the best recitation by a girl and the best declamation by a boy in the seventh grade. This has been offered for the last three years, and the first two years the medal was won by an Orphanage girl.

We feel happy of this record too, and while we did not win this year our children acquitted themselves well, and we feel proud of them. One of our boys won the prize in the tenth grade for making the best progress of any one in the class. One of our girls won the prize for making the best progress in the music class. Our children will work in the home, in the field, in the dairy, and they are on the job in school. They believe in winning.

Let us remember the fatherless and the widows in distress, and help them by giving of our means to help support the Orphanage that we all love, and thereby give a home to the fatherless and relieve the widows in distress.

WHEN CHARACTER IS LOST.

tells us of a shepherd who one day threw a stone and broke the leg of a sheep. Alarmed at what he had done, he besought the sheep not to tell the master that its leg was broken. The sheep replied, "There is no need that I should tell it, the broken leg will speak for itself." Peter, at the trial of his Lord, needed not to tell that he was from Galilee; his speech betrayed him or, as the revised version has it, "made him know." Character is self-revealing—what a man is, that is what will be known. A stained finger marks everything it touches. A life of sin tells its own story on every occasion. Young man, if your life is wrong, if there is about you the stench of impurity, the rottenness of vulgarity, the foulness of profanity, the foolishness of infidelity, you need not proclaim it from the housetop; you need not cry aloud in the street—you are known and read of all men, marked for life with an indelible marking; your mask is transparent; your camouflage has been penetrated; your real self is seen; your character has spoken; your broken life speaks for itself; your speech maketh thee known.

Bad men are cowards in the presence of the eternal; they cringe before the throne of righteousness. When they feel their inner selves speaking, they know their doom. Men who could and who would fight a whole army have their hair whitened in a night by the spectral fingers which touch their hearts in the dark; soldiers that never fear fee nor death, tremble when in the presence of the unnamable, invisible guests that attend them in home and in company, coming uninvited into their rooms when most welcome. That is character revealing itself. Young man, listen to one who has indeed seen years and many sad changes; one who speaks from age and experience and says to you, you can not hide yourself, and if yourself be the result of sin, the price of a good character, when that is gone, you will know that—

When Character is Lost, All is Lost.

And now, young man, you have heard my story, and have given kindly attention to my advice, for which I thank you, but before I say good-by I have one other fact to lay upon your heart, which is, that character, be it good or bad, when completed is unchangeable. It is easily destroyed, but it is not subject to change. The life may be renewed in Jesus Christ and every sin forgiven, the purposes and ideals toward which one strives may be lifted to a higher plain and the whole course of human conduct changed for the better; but what has been done has been unchangeably done. The record has been written, and not a word of it can be rubbed out, not a sentence erased, not a fact changed.

It is said that in the sandstone is registered the course of the wind, the drift of the rain, for all the centuries of its existence. Even so does human life record the result of the good and the bad influences which prey upon it through all its years. Solomon tells us that "If a tree fall toward the north or toward the south, in the place where the tree falleth there it shall lie," the plain teaching of which is the eternal fixedness of things. There is in the human heart a strong desire to change things, and because of this, many things have been changed. Man, by his ingenuity and industry, has changed the whole face of the earth, and a wilderness has been transformed into a garden of beauty; the earth has indeed blossomed as the rose. The primitive forest gave way to well-regulated fields; the fields, in turn, gave way to villages and towns, which were soon displaced by cities; the old straw pile and the log cabin of the pioneer have been supplanted by the big red barn and the Queen Anne residence of the farmer; steam and electricity have eliminated distance and seated the whole world around one common hearthstone; the secrets of the air and the mysteries of the sea are no longer hidden from mankind, but, amid all these marvelous changes that have been wrought by man, death and destiny remain the same, and the records of human lives are as they were written.

Do not think that I do not believe in the reformation of human life, for I do. I believe in conversion, as interpreted by our fathers, but the record of human life remains unchanged. Even though one be born from above, it is written into his character, there to remain forever. And for that reason I counsel thee, O young man, to keep thyself pure. When water is frozen into an icicle, be it clear water, or muddy, or be it either one or the other, that water cannot be removed without destroying the icicle. There is no power on earth that can remove the clear, clean water, and leave the muddy, or remove the foul and leave the pure and leave the icicle as it was. Even so is human character, so intertwines itself, and interlocks itself into life, as to make character unchangeable when once it is finished.

Young man, it is not a rich father, nor a soft job, nor a host of friends, nor a strong pull, nor any set of circumstances that you need to help you to success in life and to purity of character. What you need is manhood under your own hat, and purity under your own clothes. The only man who can help you be what you ought to be and do what you ought to do is the man who walks in your shoes and looks at you when you stand before the mirror. To be true in character, pure in heart, and virtuous in life, should be your highest aim. Make a good character the very crown of your life. Make it your honor, your religion, your life, your all. Set it before you as a coronet set with precious gems. Set it before you as celestial beauty, brilliant with the eyes of love. Make it your masterpiece in literature, your choicest poem and your sweetest melody, and remember that—when character is lost, all is lost!

THE ACTS.

Who can conceive what their feelings were at that instant! They returned, and about one hundred and twenty met, and with sweet accord fervently prayed for direction and protection. Peter gave a lecture on past prophecy, by which he introduced the case of Judas who was guide to them that took Jesus. "He was numbered with us," said Peter, "and obtained part of this ministry." Then relates his dreadful end. (See John 6:70.) There the word of the Lord is recorded thus, "Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?" That is, not was, in the past tense. Judas fell from the ministry by transgression (verse 25), that he might go to his own place, i. e., hell, where all apostate ministers go, who betray their trust by turning aside for filthy lucre, drunkenness, pride, etc., but especially when one destroys his own life. This was foretold by a prophet; not absolutely decreed, and must be so (Psa. 59:10).

Among us men, it is said that Judas was a bishop, meaning a superior order over elders; seeing it is written, or translated, bishopric, which alludes to a certain particular province over which he presides. Judas was not thus stationed. Now, to find the just root of the word bishop, observe, we may work by a kind of backward etymology, and the root will be found overseer, instead of master or lord—the learned say this is the Greek root; let them say. The author is indebted to the wise for his bold assertions, but will submit it. Yet, for fear my judges on this subject should be interested in episcopacy, I will remove my suit to the judgment of Paul, who was a learned and inspired man, and what he wrote is recorded in the courts above. Let Paul be judge, and the author gains his suit. (See the records, Acts 20:28.)

Jesus kept time to perfection. He tarried forty days with His apostles and disciples, teaching them (only) how to proceed in preaching, teaching, uniting believers in Churches, edifying, and enforcing His authoritative commands on His people. He then blessed them, and went up till their eyes of flesh could see no farther. The tenth day after (the fiftieth from His resurrection) was Pentecost, the feast of weeks, and a great year of liberty among the Hebrews. The apostles were in a room, praying, and at the hour of 9 o'clock—the hour that Jesus was nailed to the cross, the same hour of the day—He came down in the Spirit, and then were the apostles inspired with the mysteries of the new kingdom, and in a few minutes, if not in an instant, the ministers could speak perhaps ten or twelve languages, and spake in every language to the people that day. The men mocked at first, but their laughter was soon turned into mourning, for Peter launched into the deep, there let down his net, and caught a multitude. In conformity to order, this exhibition might continue until the sixth hour, which brought noonday; but instead of darkness till the ninth hour, it was a glorious light with the new kingdom. Perhaps it might take up three hours to baptize the three thousand converts, and plant them in the new Church, or gospel kingdom, and that would bring on the ninth hour, or 3 o'clock past meridian.

They were baptized indeed with water. This was gospel baptism, as to the ceremony; that is to say, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Now, if Christ be inferior to God, there must be imperfection in the believer's baptism. That those three thousand people had to give in their experience, one by one, previous to their baptism, then were marched to a certain water, and then dipped, in their clothes or naked, unless it was by a miracle; I am a Thomas in this.

Peter encouraged the Jews to put on Christ, for the promise was unto them and their children first; then to the Gentiles, who were afar off.

In the fifth chapter, we read of a man and his wife, professors, who kept back part of the price they sold their possessions for; both agreed to tell a lie, and both died! Peter said Satan hath filled thy heart. Let liars and half-hearted Christians take the alarm.

CHAPTERS VI, VII.

THE first point that calls our attention is respecting the Scripture order of deacons. They appear to be temporal stewards in the Christian Church, that the spiritual stewards might apply their time to reading, prayer, and preaching. The apostle did not even nominate them, only by character. Paul directed the Church, even the whole Church, to choose out seven; they did so, and the apostles laid their hands on them, not as an inferior class of ministers, for it would not have answered for them to leave the word and serve tables, neither were they called of God to the ministry, but called by the people. Let men blush for thus violating plain truth.

It appears by the words of Stephen that sinners can harden their hearts, resist the spirit, and, like the deaf adder, shut their ears and eyes, stiffen their neck, and refuse the yoke of Christ. Stephen had views of heaven, and Jesus in the vision, at the right hand of glory, devoting his absolute authority to save or destroy. The prayer he made for his murderers showed a measure of the mind of Christ. What an assurance of heaven, saying, Lord, or Jehovah Jesus, receive my soul, or spirit! Reader, here you are taught to believe that departed souls are no longer in time, but in an eternal heaven or hell. Sin, cleaving to the departed soul, sinks it to hell; but the soul prepared by grace flies to heaven with a convoy. The experience of the martyr Stephen is the privilege of every true believer; not only for their privilege, but their safety, and due preparation to be received among the spirits made perfect. If any Christian reader, who looks over my revealed impressions, and thinks perfection not essential, or not attainable, let such humbly pray, and God will reveal this to him, as well as to others. The man Stephen was a perfect man; that is to say, full of faith and of the Holy Ghost. The soul is a recipient, a vessel, or measure, filled with the fullness of God, when perfect. A wicked soul can fill up the measure of iniquity, until it is a vessel fitted for destruction. So a pious soul can be fitted for happiness. When the eye is single, the body is full of light; and as light increaseth, faith increaseth, and as faith increaseth, love increaseth; and perfect love will cast out fear. Thus the soul is changed from glory to glory, by the spirit of the Lord. All who hunger and thirst after this grace, and wisely know that the end is not to be obtained without using the means, all such are persevering saints, and never do fall, but obtain, through faith and patience, eternal life.

We read of great faith. Our Lord said, "I have not found so great faith; no, not in Israel." And again, "O ye of little faith!" The apostles prayed, saying, "Lord, increase our faith." Paul directs the Church, saying, "Him that is weak in faith, receive ye."

In the 8th chapter we read of the bitter soul of a Jew against Jesus Christ and the Christians. Chapter 9:1, the language of the bitter spirit is nervous. Saul breathed out threats against the Christians. Breathing is from the lungs, which directly corresponds with the heart, where the wicked spirit entered. This same disposition, more or less, still rests in an unbelieving Jew against pure Christianity. The situation of the Jews is the fulfillment of prophecy, even what themselves ignorantly and presumptuously predicted when they exclaimed, saying, "His blood be on us and our children!"

CHAPTER VIII.

PHILIP went down to Samaria, and his labor was blessed to many. Among the rest, Simon the sorcerer was brought to believe, and received baptism. We hear no talk of his telling an experience of grace; but was found in a short time to be in the gall of bitterness, and bonds of iniquity. What remarks shall we make respecting Philip baptizing the eunuch; a subject long occupied with some warmth—that is to say, whether or no the eunuch was immersed? It reads so: the eunuch was sitting in his chariot reading the 53d chapter of Isaiah, about the sufferings of Christ. Philip was taken up in the chariot, and preached Jesus to him. They came to a certain water, on the road, and the gentleman being thus proselyted, said, see here is water; what hinders me from being baptized? Philip told him, if he believed with his heart, he might. The experience he told was, he believed Jesus was the Son of God. They both went down into the water; Philip baptized him.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Dear Kiddie Korner:

I wonder if you are really and truly working on your contest. Now, dears, if you can, just begin today— What! How is the contest? Have you forgotten already? Well, here goes again—and listen well, and keep right on trying as hard as you can. We—you could never guess who it is that's interested; but we are going to put a picture in your Korner—the picture that you yourself draw and paint of any Bible story you have heard. Then, Kiddies, oh! oh! won't you tell the story on paper for your Korner? Why, of course, you will. Now, let's begin at once. I can't wait to hear which story you will paint—and see it too! Who will be first to begin?

I know a wee boy who has two rabbits—one is named Peter, the other Cotton Tail—and how they love their little master! He feeds them on the bestest things—things that are good for rabbits; for you know rabbits must be careful what they eat, same as you and I. At night, mother gives you your nice milk and bread and butter (no, sir-e-e! no pie for supper for little folks); and outside in the rabbits nice pen the wee rabbits are eating their supper too. Ask mother what rabbits should eat for supper to keep them from dreaming bad dreams.

One dear Kiddie was out in the street, and along came a big ol' automobile—whiz!—and knocked the little Kiddie down, and now his head is all bandaged and he is lying in bed reading a wonderful Peter Rabbit book that your editor found one day; and the wee Kiddie is better already too. Good stories and bandages and the good doctor were all that's needed for a little boy who ran out in front of a big car. I hope you will be so careful, dears.

HER FIRST LETTER.

Walters, Va., May 1, 1926.

My dear Miss Moffitt:

This is my first letter. I am a little girl ten years old. I go to Mt. Carmel Sunday School. My Sunday School teacher's name is Miss Eunice Gay. She is a very good teacher. I am in the fourth grade at school. I like the Kiddies' Korner page. I should like some of the Kiddies to write to me.

Love to you, from

THIS LITTLE PIG GOES TO MARKET.

VERSES BY WILBUR D. NESBIT.

This little pig goes to market,
And this one to sail the foam;
And this little pig goes a-marching to war,
And this one the world to roam.

But all little pigs, in the twilight,
Turn back from the paths they roam,
And bring you, my laddie, from lands afar,
To Mother, and Rest, and Home.

RIDDLES.

When has a man four hands? When he doubles his fists.

What trees has fire no effect upon? Ash trees; because when they are burned, they are ashes still.

A man had twenty sick (six) sheep, and one died; how many were left? Nineteen.

Which is the best day for making a pancake? Fri-day.

Which is the smallest bridge in the world? The bridge of your nose.

What is that which everybody has seen, but will never see again? Yesterday.

What four letters would frighten a thief? O I C U.—Selected.

Teacher: "Why, Jimmie, is it true that your mother has diphtheria?"

Jimmie: "Yes, ma'am."

"But don't you know you musn't come to school? You might get it from your mother and then give it to the whole class."

"No, ma'am; it's only my stepmother, an' she never gives me nuthin'!"—Progressive Grocer.

The stingy farmer was scorning his hired man for carrying a lantern when he went to call on his girl.

"Why, when I went to call on my girl I went in the dark," said the farmer.

IF AND PERHAPS.

If every one were wise and sweet,
And every one were jolly;
If every heart with gladness beat
And none were melancholy;
If none should ever grumble or complain,
And nobody should labor
In evil work, but each were fain
To love and help his neighbor—
O what a happy world 'twould be
For you and me, for you and me!

And if, perhaps, we both should try
That glorious time to hurry;
If you and I—just you and I
Should laugh instead of worry;
If we should grow—just you and I—
Kinder and sweeter-hearted,
Perhaps in some near by and by
That good time might get started.
Then what a happy world 'twould be
For you and me—for you and me!

THE AWFUL TRUTH.

Mary and Bess were caught one day in a great crowd. Terrified, with their arms tight about each other, at last they managed to push through. Later Mary, in describing it to her mother, exclaimed: "It was awful! If there hadn't been two of us, we just couldn't have kept together."—Selected.

EYES THAT SHINE.

"Dear Fairy Godmother," said the Queen; "will the little child you promised me have sunny hair and eyes that shine like stars?"

"Hoity-toity!" exclaimed the Fairy Godmother; "what's all this? Eyes that shine like stars? Let me tell you, Mrs. Queen, they don't come for the asking. We must do our part if the eyes of the little princess are to shine like stars!" With that she reached down into her wonderful pocket, where she kept all her gifts, and drew forth—

Do you want to know the rest of the story? If every little child could hear it, could know what it was that the dear Fairy Godmother drew forth and what was to be done with it, more eyes would shine like stars, and fewer children would have to learn to live in the great darkness.

Do you want to help to send the story broadcast over the land to the girls and boys of today who will be the mothers and fathers of tomorrow? To sympathize with blindness is divinely human; To prevent it is humanly divine!

MARGIE'S CHARM.

What is it that makes every one love Margie Fitch so?" said Jennie Howard. "She isn't pretty nor stylish. Now, what is it, do you suppose?"

"I think I know the charm. Perhaps you would better set yourself the task this week to discover it," answered her mother, busily putting the sitting-room to rights.

The next day at school Jennie followed Margie like a detective. The first thing she noticed was Margie's kindness to Alice Ross, a shy, new scholar, who stood quite alone, looking wistfully at the others at their gay sports. Margie went over and made her acquaintance, and after a little urging, the girl joined the merry group, and was soon laughing with the rest.

When school was called, Margie laid a rose on the teacher's desk as she passed and smiled a cheery, "Good morning," and received an appreciative smile in return.

About an hour later, Jennie saw the new pupil sitting with head bent forward regarding her work with a hopeless expression. Up went Margie's hand for permission to leave her seat; it was granted, as were all her requests, for the teacher knew they were never of a trifling nature. With a little help in the right place from Margie, the troublesome examples were conquered, and the girl lifted a grateful face to Margie's as she thanked her.

On their way home, a troop of girls were working off their spirits in a game of tag. Margie, in whirling suddenly, came in collision with a gentleman, knocking his cane from his hand.

"Oh, I beg your pardon, sir," said Margie, covered with confusion as she returned the cane to him. "I'm afraid I have hurt you, sir," and she looked up with frank solicitude in her eyes.

"Not at all, my dear," he responded heartily, pleased by her courteous manner. "Go on with your play and be happy. I am proud to doff my hat to so polite a young lady." Which he did with a stately bow, and passed on.

"How did you dare? I should have been too frightened to have said a thing," exclaimed one of the girls.

"So should I," chorused the others.

There was a social in the Church parlors that week. Jennie still hovered near Margie, learning a sweet lesson every day from her. As they sat turning the leaves of a hymn book, finding their favorite songs, a lady paused to speak to them. Margie instantly arose and stood while talking to the lady.

The two girls started for another room where the young people were preparing for games. Just then Margie espied a solitary figure sitting in the corner. This was the deacon's wife, who was deaf. After a handshake and a sentence through the ear-trumpet, people usually left her to herself. But Margie crossed the room to her, and taking the trumpet in her hand, being careful to articulate plainly, she sat and chattered half an hour away, amusing the dear old lady by repeating the pleasantries and jokes which were flying from lip to lip of those around them.

"You have been a comfort to me, my bonnie lass," said the old lady, patting the hand that held the trumpet. "Now, go and play with the rest. I thank you, my dear, for your thoughtfulness to an old woman like me." And Margie went away happy.

"I think I have found out Margie's charm," said Jennie to her mother the next morning. "It is because she is good to everybody."

"Yes, that is it," answered her mother. She is thoughtful, kind, polite, and obliging. I think she must carry the Golden Rule very near to her heart."—Advance.

OBITUARIES.

POYTHRESS.

John Buckner Poythress, son of the late G. W. and Susan Poythress, died at Fuquay Springs, N. C., April 12, 1926, nearing the age of 55 years. Among the surviving relatives are one sister, Mrs. S. F. Loug, of Chapel Hill, and four brothers, C. W., C. J., S. E. and H. M. Poythress.

Bro. Poythress was a constant sufferer from asthma, and for several years had sought health in various parts of this and other States. An attack of influenza which he suffered a few months ago was more than his already frail and weakened body could stand.

His funeral was held at Damascus Christian Church, of which he became a member in early life. The most impressive part of the service, perhaps, was the beautiful testimony which had come from those with whom Bro. Poythress spent the greater part of the last four years of his life. It was a fine tribute to his patience in suffering, his chaste character and conduct, and other evidences that he was at peace with the Lord.

B. J. HOWARD.

APPLE.

Mrs. Ludie K. Apple was born May 16, 1866, and died April 29, 1926. She had been a great sufferer for many months, but she was a patient sufferer. She had been a consistent member of Apple's Chapel Christian Church from early childhood. Her husband, G. W. Apple, preceded her to the grave.

One son, L. W. Apple, Lexington, N. C., with whom she lived; one stepson, G. P. Apple, Greensboro, N. C.; two brothers, Rev. P. T. Klapp of Elon College, N. C., and R. L. Klapp, of Washington, D. C.; and three sisters, Mrs. Mary J. Chrismon, Mrs. G. W. Ellington, Greensboro, N. C., and Mrs. Cicero Huffines, Gibbsonville, N. C., survive her.

The funeral services were conducted from the First Christian Church by the pastor, and the remains were laid to rest in Green Hill Cemetery. A mother's faith and prayers should inspire the son to be true to mother's God. Prayers and sympathy to the bereaved ones.

LAWRENCE.

John William Lawrence, in his sixty-eighth year, after a lingering sickness of several months, passed peacefully away at his home, the old Howe's homestead, May 6, 1926, and was buried in the family cemetery, near the residence, May 27th. He married Miss Dora Holmes in 1901. His widow, one sister and two brothers survive him. The day was clear and bright, the congregation large, the flowers profuse and the singing sweet and tender.

Mr. Albert Cook arranged and carried out the duties of an undertaker in a loving and proficient manner. Rev. Blanton, pastor of the Baptist, and Rev. Davis, pastor of the M. E. Church, officiated.

The writer made remarks—text, "We do all fade as a leaf." As the neighbors and friends dispersed slowly, Dora was still seated by the flower-covered tomb, under the majestic oak.

MARRIAGES

DOCKERY—WALKER.

A very pretty wedding was that of Miss Rosa Bell Walker and John Dockery, at the home of the bride, on Barnes Street, Reidsville, which was solemnized Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock, April 17th.

The ceremony was pronounced by the writer. Both the bride and groom are members of our Reidsville Church, and active in all our young people's work.

The words making them man and wife were spoken in the presence of relatives of the contracting parties and a few friends. Our impressive ring ceremony was used.

Immediately following the ceremony, the happy couple left for a wedding trip to the western part of the State. Following their stay among the mountains, they will be at home to their friends in Reidsville. These young people have a host of friends who join in wishing them many years of wedded happiness.

R. A. WHITTEN.

GERRINGER—SIMPSON.

A marriage of interest to their many friends was that of Miss Ollie Simpson and John F. Gerringer, of Burlington, R. F. D., and of our Shallow Ford Church.

The happy couple, together with a few intimate friends, motored over to Reidsville on the morning of April 3rd, and arrived at the parsonage about 8 o'clock and were soon joined in wedlock by the writer.

We wish for them a long and happy life together.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. S. M. LYNAM.

President Attends Circus.—

At a recent showing in Washington, President and Mrs. Coolidge, Colonel and Mrs. Sherwood H. Cheney, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Stearns occupied a box at the Barnum and Bailey and Ringling Brothers' Circus. On the same day the President received a delegation from a new organization having fifty-five members from thirty-eight States, the Circus Men's Association of America. The President told this delegation that he once walked fifteen miles to see a circus.

Dr. Cadman Snubbed.—

Though Dr. S. Parks Cadman was once the chaplain of the New York National Guard, he disapproves of things military in general. Not long ago he said so frankly, ignoring the fact that he was to be the speaker at the commencement occasion of the New York Military Academy. The other day his was-to-have-been host wrote a curt note to Dr. Cadman withdrawing the invitation. Dr. Cadman was snubbed. We are glad that he has the courage of his conviction, and the New York Military Academy is none the better for their having snubbed the great preacher.

Yale Yields to Students.—

Yale University has yielded to the student liberal outburst and has abolished compulsory chapel attendance. Beginning next autumn the students will worship when they please. For the solace of those who believe that Yale was weak-kneed in yielding to importunate and liberal youth, they may find consolation in the fact that Smith College women have voted overwhelmingly in favor of retaining compulsory chapel. The religious leaders at Yale believe that the abolition of compulsory attendance will make possible a great university church supported by earnest and sincere young men.

An Artist Decorated.—

Tired and sick, Ignace Jan Paderewski lay in a Manhattan hotel, when friends were announced by his wife. Worn out by seventy concerts, and too tired to be interested in more playing, too sick to attend a testimonial dinner planned for him, he nevertheless got up and into a faded bathrobe to receive the friends. It was a delegation from the American Legion headed by Commander John R. McQuigg. They came to pin on Ignace Jan Paderewski a distinguished service cross. The cross was suspended by a ribbon from a gold crossbar containing seventy-four diamonds. The inscription read, "To Ignace Jan Paderewski, artist, patriot, and humanitarian, with the highest esteem of the American Legion, New York, May 10, 1926." The delegation had to wait for several minutes for the thanks of this great man who with tear-filled eyes protested that he had done nothing to deserve this honor.

Coolidge Is Doctored Again.—

President Coolidge and a party including the two Democratic senators from Virginia and C. Bascom Slemm, one time secretary to the President and congressman from the Old Dominion, recently paid a visit to the College of William and Mary, and in front of Wren Hall addressed a large assembly recalling that on that very day in that very town, one hundred and fifty years ago, an assembly including Patrick Henry and many another notable, passed a resolution calling upon the Continental Congress to declare this nation free and independent. There in front of the hall designed by Christopher Wren, who built St. Paul's Cathedral in London, the President received his seventh LL. D. He has had six bestowed previously, but the one from William and Mary was the first from outside of New England. The President has been "doctored" by Amherst, Tufts, Bates, Williams, Wesleyan, and the University of Vermont.

Christ, the Man.—

Somehow the writers of the gospels omitted to say much of Jesus, the man, devoting their space to the teachings and activities of Christ. However, from time to time working among old manuscripts and musty documents in monasteries and other places where forgotten books are stored, scholars have come forward with a little more light on the man. Now, Dr. Robert Eisler has from an old Russian version of Josephus brought forth the following about Jesus, the man: "At that time also a man came forward, if one may call a man one whom his Disciples called the son of God. His being and his figure were quite human, a man of middle size with a stooping back and a long face, a prominent nose and brows which grew together so that those who saw him would get frightened, with very little hair and having in the middle of his forehead a sign, according to the habit of the Nazarenes. His looks were quite simple, only his pose was more than human, because he performed wonders through some invisible power.

"Considering, however, his quite ordinary nature, I for one, shall not call him an angel. His name was Jesus, and he was nicknamed Messiah. By the Gentiles he was believed to be a soothsayer, but some of our people said of him that he was our first law-giver, Moses, and had risen from the dead and was now showing forth many cures and arts.

"He did not observe Sabbath according to our ancestral law. Not that he did anything shameful or criminal himself, but through his words he instigated everything, and many from our folk followed him and accepted his teaching, and many souls became wavering, believing the Jewish tribes would set themselves free from the Romans."

The account goes on and in close accord with the gospels tells how he loved to spend his time on the Mount of Olives, and how the priests plotted against him and eventually secured his crucifixion. This discovery of Dr. Eisler, while it cannot be accepted as fully true, is certainly interesting for speculation.

Camp Edith Macy Opened.—

With representatives from thirty-nine nations present to appear for the Girl Scouts of their countries, Camp Edith Macy was formally opened. The camp is to be devoted to the training of leaders for this large and rapidly growing movement. Mrs. Jane Deeter Rippin, the National Director, Lady Baden-Powell, the International Director and wife of Sir Robert Baden-Powell, who founded the Scout movement, Mrs. Juliette Low, who introduced the Girl Guide movement in America, but the girls wanted to be called Scouts as their brothers were, and so the movement differs in name from the same movement in other countries, Mrs. Herbert Hoover, the United States Chairman of the Executive Board, some four hundred American Scout leaders and some fifty foreign leaders. The meetings were held in a great rough stone lodge on Camp Macy, near Ossining, N. Y., and there a bronze tablet was unveiled to Mrs. Edith Macy, the wife of Valentine Everett Macy, the New York philanthropist who gave the camp. There are at present 370,860 Girl Guides in England, 70,410 in the remainder of the Commonwealth, 115,926 Girl Scouts in the United States, and 56,013 in other countries. This great number is rapidly increasing, so that because of lack of leadership they cannot be absorbed. The gathering discussed problems, witnessed a parade of girls and awarded prizes for stunts. The aim of the movement is to care for the growing girl and to bring to maturity a generation of women who are not nervous wrecks. This movement, along with many of the other movements of youth and for youth, is doing much to mould the world into one common cause of social progress and prosperity. It is hopeful for the future when young men and young women from many nations assemble and fraternize and come to know and understand each other. It means that the world is marching forward to that day when brother can not take arms against brother, for when men and women understand each other there will be no war and there is no better time for this understanding to come than in youth, when to be frank is the most natural thing in the world.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Christian Endeavorers who are looking for an outing this summer will, no doubt, attend the Christian Endeavor Convention at Daytona Beach, Fla., beginning July 1 to July 5, 1926.

We are pleased to know that Rev. M. W. Sutcliffe, Havre de Grace, Md., who was in attendance at the Durham Convention and who on his return home underwent a very serious surgical operation, is much improved and hopes to be back on his work and fully restored in the near future.

Rev. C. C. Ryan, D. D., pastor of First Christian Church, Richmond, is to be at a get-together district meet at Wakefield, Va., the fifth Sunday of this month. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield is doing for his Churches what other pastors should do—this is an excellent plan to bind the Churches together.

Dr. L. F. Johnson, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage at Carversville, Pa., and his son, L. F., Jr., who is a student at Elon College, were in Richmond the first of this week and paid THE SUN office a short visit. Dr. Johnson is interested in all Church enterprises, and lends good cheer wherever he goes.

In their endeavor to secure the best evangelistic assistance for revivals in the Churches this summer, pastors should not forget that Rev. H. C. Caviness, Cary, N. C., has the approval of the State Christian Conference, and is a man of great power and efficiency in evangelistic services. The Churches should keep him engaged in evangelistic endeavors.

Indeed, "Children's Day," June 6th, is our opportunity. Give the boys and girls a chance to make their offerings. Our warm-hearted young people will respond to this genuine appeal of a task worth while. Surely the grown-ups cannot withhold a generous hand. The first Sunday in June should find us at our best in prayer, program and purse.

We are in receipt of the following: "Captain and Mrs. Hugh Alcorn announce the marriage of their daughter, Myra Black, to Dr. William Waldo Boone on Saturday, May 15, 1926, Durham, N. C." We extend our heartiest congratulations to Dr. William Waldo Boone, a very popular and successful practitioner of Durham, N. C., and son of our Dr. W. H. Boone, a former graduate and now a trustee of Elon College, N. C.

Rev. S. D. Lankford, Ambrose, Ga., is giving his hand and heart to building up our cause in South Georgia, and under date May 20th writes: "I am glad to find that interest continues to grow. I am enjoying my work with the people here to the fullest extent." Bro. Lankford writes of his work to THE SUN, as printed elsewhere in this issue.

In the issue of May 20th, the compositor made the article by Dr. Fleming, headed "Haw River, Long's Chapel, Union," read incorrectly in the last paragraph. It should read "Dr. J. U. Newman preached at the morning hour. Dr. Newman, in his scholarly and earnest way, gave a strong message on building after the pattern shown by God. Rev. H. J. Fleming preached at the afternoon hour. His was a message of hope and good cheer, with a forward look, as all things are made new by a kind and loving Heavenly Father."

We are in receipt of the program of the Georgia and Alabama Conference Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention which is to meet this week at North Highland Christian Church, Columbus, Ga. The officers are M. J. Halman, president, La Grange, Ga.; Rev. W. H. Brewer, vice-president, Lanett, Ala., and Rev. Paul House, secretary and treasurer, La Grange, Ga. This most excellent program was received too late for publication, but we shall hope to have an early and complete write-up of the Convention for our readers.

The officers of the Woman's Mission Board, as elected by the Woman's Conference in Durham, for the coming two years are: President, Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va.; vice-president, Mrs. J. L. Foster, Elon College, N. C.; recording secretary, Miss Margaret Alston, Henderson, N. C.; corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. L. Beale, Franklin, Va.; treasurer, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va.; superintendent young people's work, Mrs. R. T. Bradford, Suffolk, Va.; superintendent cradle roll, Mrs. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va.; superintendent literature and mite boxes, Miss Gertrude Browne, Hendersonville, N. C.

The good women of our Alabama Conference are putting forth heroic efforts to have successful missionary rallies in June. Mrs. O. H. Orr, treasurer of the Alabama Woman's Board, Lineville, Ala., writes, under date May 17th: "We are all so glad you are planning to be with us. We board members are doing all we can to make our rallies a success. I believe that it means to us the beginning of a great work in the Alabama Conference. Of course, we are just beginners and cannot hope to do as great things as some of our Conferences are doing. We can, however, put forth an effort that will be blessed, and some day not far off I hope will be crowned with success. I am trusting that we women in the Alabama Conference will be able soon to carry our part of the work without so much embarrassment. We hope to rise above all our difficulties and handicaps as we learn more about how to carry on the work." Our women of the other Conferences may count on it that the women of the Alabama Conference are on their way toward achievement, and, as Sister Orr declares, this will mean a new day in the work of our Alabama Conference. It is a well-known fact that the woman's missionary work has given tremendous impetus to all the work of those Conferences in which they are well organized, and those of us who attended the Southern Convention at Durham know full well what it meant to have even more women present for their missionary conventions than there were delegates present at our Southern Convention. All of this means something for our Christian Church of the future.

The Old Testament opens with five books of history. The New Testament opens with five books of history.

The Old Testament begins, "Where art thou?" The New Testament begins, "Where is He?" (Gen. 3:9; Matt. 2:2.)

The Old Testament closes with the promise of the rising of the "sun of righteousness." The New Testament closes with the promise of the rising of the "morning star." (Mal. 4:2; Rev. 22:16.)

When the law was given three thousand were slain. When the Spirit was given three thousand were saved. (Exod. 32:28; Acts 2:41.)

In the Old Testament holiness is demanded. In the New Testament holiness is provided.

The old covenant was sealed with blood; so also was the new covenant. (Exod. 34:8; Luke 22:20.)

The law says "Be good, and you will be saved." The gospel says "Be saved, and you will be good."

The old covenant is the covenant of works. The new covenant is the covenant of grace. "Ye are not under the law, but under grace." (Rom. 6:14.)—W. S. Bowden.

PROVIDENCE M. A. MEETS.

The Providence Memorial Association, whose officers are Junius H. Harden, president; Mrs. W. H. Holt, secretary, and McBride Holt, treasurer, Graham, N. C., will hold its twenty-fourth annual meeting at New Providence Christian Church, Graham, N. C., Sunday, June 6, 1926. Services will commence promptly at 10:30 A. M. The annual memorial address will be delivered by Rev. G. O. Lankford, pastor of the First Christian Church, of Burlington, N. C.

You, your family, your friends, and all who are in any way interested in the Providence Cemetery, are cordially invited to attend this annual meeting.

The lunch hour of these annual meetings is a real love feast indeed, where kinfolk and friend have the happiest day of the year. All who can do so, are requested to bring baskets of lunch, as in days gone, and thereby help in making the day so happy that its memories will be in us during the entire year.

Signed by: J. Dolph Long, Chairman; Mrs. Walter R. Harden, Walter R. Sellars, Ben B. Holt, and Jos. C. McAdams, Program Committee.

TWICE IN A WEEK.

Twice in a week the north pole has been shadowed by flying men, who did in a day what has previously required almost a year to do. Byrd flew to the pole and back in an airplane; Amundsen did it in a dirigible. Thus is demonstrated beyond peradventure of a doubt that it can be done, and will be done often again until the route "over the top of the earth" is established. Thus a new era in transportation has been ushered in by engineering skill. The event is historic and truly wonderful, but we are too near to feel its wonder. That remains for posterity.—Ex.

Bishop Zarate says the charges cause him no uneasiness. The Mexican government warns all clergymen, Protestants included, of foreign birth, that they will be deported if they fail to comply with the laws and the constitution. This means that no foreign priest or clergyman may exercise his religious functions in Mexico hereafter. Mexico charges that foreign priests have taught Mexican children and others to look upon outside authority as higher than that of the Mexican government. This is denied.

The ancients knew how to temper copper and make it cut granite. Men cannot do it now. Early Christians went everywhere making disciples. Merchants were missionaries. Soldiers became teachers. Slaves were transformed into prophets. Have Modern Christians lost their power to propagate their faith? Are their tools soft, their weapons broken, their message meaningless?—Sel.

Twelve years ago, at a meeting in Paris, that same Pilsudski, ardent Polish patriot, said: "Today, the sword alone weighs in the destinies of nations." Pilsudski has evidently not changed his opinion of the world, and Europe still recognizes the man that comes up, sword in hand. His people have elected him President.

"At heart he is not a bad fellow—the gorilla. He will fight humans only when cornered. His reputation for ferocity is largely unearned. Fundamentally he is not savage; he slays for food, or in defense of himself. His face is his true misfortune. The real danger in the gorilla is that he will be exterminated by over-zealous specimen hunters."—Dearborn Independent.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THINKING THROUGH.

Rev. Alva H. Kerr, the distinguished and versatile Editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, has produced a book for the times. Dr. Kerr realizes that there is much superficial thinking in our day, as we presume there is in every day. This superficial thinking, to which Dr. Kerr has reference, has bearing, at present, on the much mooted question of Science and Religion. In the passion and prejudice and ignorance of the time, Dr. Kerr says we are skirmishing on the out-skirts and that the real enemy is not difficult to find and to conquer if we will penetrate to the center of the field. The book is published by the George H. Doran Company of New York, and bears the subtitle, "Facts and Principles to Clarify the Controversial Thinking in the Church." The cover page carries this declaration. "The time has come when the leaders of the Church, conservative and liberal, should sit at a common table and think things through. Controversy has accomplished about all it can hope to do. The extremist has had the stage, and his work has been divisive and destructive. The day is ripe for the constructive worker. This volume points out the program for the reconstruction."

This is the thesis of Dr. Kerr's volume, which presents the following table of contents: Chapter I, "The Church and Science"; Chapter II, "The Church, and Evolution"; Chapter III, "The Church, the Interpreter"; Chapter IV, "The Supreme Test of Faith"; Chapter V, "The Great Common Heresy"; Chapter VI, "Preach the Word," and Chapter VII, "The Word was Made Flesh."

Dr. Kerr, a firm believer in the Bible as the eternal and invincible Word of God, invites preachers, scholars and learners to seek the truth and lay aside passion and prejudice, penetrating the superficial surface of present day thinking and get down to the bed rock of eternal truth, as well as eternal light and life.

The book is well written in Dr. Kerr's most inviting style, and certainly flings out a challenge that should be accepted by the teachers, preachers and thinkers of our day. The volume can be had of the publisher, or ordered of The Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, at $1.25 the copy. Dr. Martyn Summerbell gives as his conclusion these words: "The book is safe and sane and will prove a decided help to bewildered souls who are seeking for the truth, but are confused by discordant voices. It is especially commended to the young preacher that believes in God, who is speaking to his children both in his Word and in his marvelous world." That conclusion will bear repeating.

Here is hoping that Dr. Kerr's book will have a wide reading among our people, feeling that a careful reading of the same will bring us closer to the truth and to the great Light that is seeking to penetrate much of the darkness and gloom in the superficial thinking of our day. J. O. A.

GIVE THEM WELCOME.

Students from High School and College are going back home by the hundreds now. Most of these boys and girls are members of the home Church and Sunday School, or were members when they left a year ago. The absence of a year has made a big difference with them. The places that they left vacant have been filled by others. Their absence may have erased their names from the Sunday School roll and possibly from the Church roll. They will discover this on their arrival the first Sunday at home. In a measure they will be as a stranger in their own community. A year, or even a few months, makes a big difference and spans a long period in the life of a young person.

Here is hoping that the pastor of the Church, the superintendent, or teacher, or friends, of the Sunday School, will find these young people on their return home and urge them, not necessarily to "take up their old place" in the Church and School (since there is no old place there for them any longer), but to come with heart and soul back to the Church and Sunday School and accept there such place and service as they can render, just as they accepted places and service in other days, but in a more active and determined manner now because of the better equipment which they have received while absent. This does not mean that they should be teachers or "leaders," but good "followers," and good helpers, and that their presence will be appreciated and will prove helpful now.

This writer remembers very distinctly his first vacation after a year at College. He went back to Church and Sunday School the first Sunday after getting home. He was embarrassed. He was ill at ease. He felt like his neighbors and friends were saying, "He has been off to College now and is above the rest of us. Let's see what he is going to do about it." It was a trying day, seeking readjustment in an environment that seemed to be closed against him. It was many Sundays before real cordiality and friendship was re-established. It will be helpful to these boys and girls returning from school, if the same cordiality can be shown them at Church and in Sunday School, as is shown them in the home. It really takes a day or two at home for the absentee feeling to be eradicated, but it is done, nevertheless, because there is a real effort on the part of all in the home to wipe out such a feeling.

These boys and girls may have learned many things at college, but the folks in the home Church and Sunday School have been learning many things also through the year, and the boys and girls on their return home need as much as they ever needed, maybe more than they ever needed, the religious teachings, precepts and fellowship of the Home Church and Sunday School. They have been studying books and had their attention absorbed in many things during the school year. They can now, with great profit, be brought to a deeper knowledge of the one Book and experience of truth and persistent religious faith and teaching. It will be nothing less than a tragedy for the Church and Sunday School at home not to exert themselves to winning back to their ranks the boys and girls who have been away for the school year. Do not let them escape because they seem indifferent and unconcerned, but be more determined to win and to hold them because they may seem to show, superficially, an indifference and an unconcernedness.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

As THE SUN stated last week, the Mission Board is sending out its final statements to those who pledged to Men and Millions. The work is to end, so far as the Board is concerned, July 1, 1926. The Secretary of the Board (who is also Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN) is exceedingly anxious to leave these pledges and books in perfect condition, thoroughly understood by every subscriber, and the accounts left as the subscribers themselves would have them left. It could be wished that pastors and former Captains of Men and Millions would urge publicly that as many as could do so pay these pledges before July 1st. Several are making a real sacrifice and are beginning to send in their final payments since statements began to go out last week. If a proper effort is made and if all will make the sacrifice that some are making, a very large per cent would be squared off before July 1st, when the books will be closed.

In such a large number of accounts, it is unthinkable that some errors would not creep in, and some misunderstandings occur. However, since the accounts were taken over by the Mission Board a full word of explanation has been given every one who has made complaint, and some agreement has been reached by way of understanding with all who have written us or sent in their complaint. A supreme effort should be made now to do what we can do in paying off these pledges that they might not stand against us, and that the money may be used to relieve a situation, which has been precipitated by failure to pay these pledges. The Mission Secretary has no other desire than to leave the books in the best possible condition and to turn over the same with every pledge paid that is possible to be paid, and every account balanced off that it is possible to balance off. To this end here is hoping and believing that all who can do so will make a real sacrifice and pay off their pledges and wind up the agitation, the expectation, and the pleas for Men and Millions.

LITERARY HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIANS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL, A. M. B. D.

[This paper was prepared and presented before the North Carolina Christian Conference, in session in Greensboro, N. C., on December 10, 1925.]

It is almost impossible to decide how to stay within the limitations of our subject. The subject limits us to North Carolina, but writers do not always spend their entire lives within certain geographical boundaries. As an instance in point, Dr. J. Presley Barrett, Dr. W. W. Staley, and Dr. W. A. Harper are among those who have made the largest contribution to our literary heritage. Dr. Barrett was born in Virginia, yet his work took him even outside the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. Some of his very finest work was done as editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty; while engaged in that work he was a resident of Ohio, yet at the time of his death he was residing in North Carolina. Dr. Staley was born in North Carolina, and though the most of the years of his ministry have been spent in Virginia, the piquant and charming savor of the Old North State lingers about him still. Dr. Harper is a Virginian by birth, and in his character and personality may be easily traced the influence of the fine traditions and lofty ideals of the Old Dominion, yet the major portion of his life-work has been done in North Carolina, and essentially he is more North Carolinian than many who were born within the confines of the State. In the light of these facts, if we do not confine ourselves within the limits, which to some might seem proper, it will not be because we desire to claim that which rightfully belongs to others, but because our workers have not been confined within State borders, and because we are not quite sure just what makes a man a North Carolinian.

LITERATURE IN PAMPHLET FORM.

The Christian Church came into existence while what might be called the "Pamphleteering Age" was still flourishing. That age is now rapidly declining, or even well-nigh dead. Most of the pamphlets that are published today are printed in that form merely for convenience in distributing them. Among the many reasons why pamphlets abounded in the eighteenth century and the first of the nineteenth, two stand out very clearly. First, it was an age of controversy in the field of religion. Men felt called upon to vindicate and to declare to the world their individual beliefs. It was a doctrinal age. Second, the only way to reach the ear or eye of the public was by means of the pamphlet. There was no religious press that made it easy to get a hearing for the individual of strong religious convictions and ideas. Today practically every denomination maintains one or more religious periodicals, through which its adherents may convey their messages to their constituency and to the general public. Many even of the daily papers of the secular press frequently carry contributions from both the readers and editors on religious themes.

Much of the early literary production of the Christians was in pamphlet form. Rev. James O'Kelly wrote quite a number of books and pamphlets. Among them we have records of the following: "The Author's Apology for Protesting Against the Methodist Episcopal Government," issued probably in 1798 and reprinted in 1830; "Vindication of an Apology," issued in 1801; "Divine Oracles Consulted," issued in 1800; "Christicola," issued in 1800; "Church Government"; "The Christian Church," issued in 1801; "Annotations on His Book of Discipline," issued in 1809; "Letters from Heaven Consulted," issued in 1822; "The Prospect Before Us by Way of an Address," issued in 1824; "A Tract on Baptism," issued in 1810; "A Pamphlet on Slavery," which Mr. W. E. MacClenny has recently discovered in the possession of a man in Baltimore. There is also a copy of this pamphlet in the Duke University library. O'Kelly also issued an hymn book, entitled, "Hymns and Spiritual Songs Designed for the Use of Christians."

DEMAND FOR HYMN BOOK.

Among the contributions to the field of hymnology by the Southern Christians, the hymn book by O'Kelly has been mentioned above. In 1815 Rev. Joseph Thomas published his "Pilgrim's Hymn Book." In order to meet the demand of the Churches in Virginia and North Carolina, Rev. Mills Barrett collected 222, which collection was printed in Norfolk, Va., in 1828 under the title, "Hymns and Spiritual Songs." A second edition of Rev. Mills Barrett's hymn book was later brought out by Rev. Nat P. Tatem. In 1870 Rev. W. B. Wellons published the Christian Hymn Book, which was recommended by the General Convention at Mt. Auburn in 1867, and which was probably financed by the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference. These hymn books seem to have met the needs of the Christians, or the demand was supplied from outside sources, until the publication of "The Christian Hymnary," by the American Christian Convention.

Many books and pamphlets were written in defense of and for the purpose of clearly setting forth the doctrinal and governmental organization of the Christians. Many of the writings of O'Kelly, as indicated by their titles, bear upon this theme. Doubtless, the very titles of many of these have been lost to us. Among those of which we know, we mention the following: "Union of All the Followers of Christ in One Church," written by Rev. Rice Haggard and printed in 1804; "Pamphlet in Vindication of the Christian Doctrine," written by Rev. Daniel Stringer; "Episcopacy Unmasked," and a "Pamphlet in Vindication of the Christian Doctrine," written by Rev. Benjamin Rainey; "A Scriptural Description of the Live Church," written by Jonathan Foster.

LITERATURE PROVOKES DISCUSSION.

Rev. John West wrote several tracts, one of which bore the title, "Key to the Mystery of Iniquity." This provoked a very spirited reply from Rev. Peter Culpepper, who wrote, under the rather lengthy title, "A Key to the Mystery of Godliness, to which is added some remarks on an impartial view in behalf of the Christian Church Below." Rev. Jesse Cole wrote "Principles of Christian Union," which was published in 1842. "The Five Cardinal Principles of the Christian Church Defined," was published in 1886 by Rev. M. L. Hurley, who later published "Christians Not Disciples." These two books were the last to be issued in advocacy of the Principles and Doctrine of the Christian Church, but they are by no means the least vigorous.

In the realm of history and biography, some most valuable books have been written. The authors of these books have brought the entire denomination greatly into their debt. Rev. William Guirey, one of the early ministers of the Christian Church, wrote "The History of the Episcopacy," a book of 381 pages, containing much valuable data of the early history of Methodism. This book was written between 1800 and 1810. In 1910 W. E. MacClenny published "The Life of James O'Kelly and the History of the Christian Church, South." This was the first history published, dealing exclusively with the origin and development of the Christian Church, South. Mr. MacClenny has perhaps done more than any other one individual to discover and establish the facts of the historical development of the Christian Church in the South and to create an interest in and appreciation of the history of the Church.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES OF MINISTERS.

In 1909 Prof. P. J. Kernodle published the "Lives of Christian Ministers." This book is in the form of short biographical sketches. It does not purpose to be a history, but in the number and value of historical facts it contains it will be found a veritable gold mine to one interested in the history of the Christian Church. In 1894 Dr. E. L. Moffitt published a book entitled "The Origin, Principles and Government of the Christians." In 1860 Rev. W. B. Wellons published "A Reply to Rev. John Paris." In 1881 Rev. J. W. Wellons, in collaboration with R. H. Holland, published "The Life and Labors of Rev. W. B. Wellons." This work is a biography, but because of the many-sided life of Rev. W. B. Wellons and the power and influence he exerted in shaping the destiny of the Christian Church, it is also a history of much of the Christian Church life in the South. Rev. Joseph Thomas wrote an autobiography. And in 1795 Rev. William Glendenning published a book entitled "The Life of William Glendenning, by Himself."

When we turn to the work of individual authors, in addition to the books we have enumerated above, we find that there are many men among our people who have made distinct and valuable contributions to our literature. Dr. P. H. Fleming is the author of a book which bears the title "Mother's Answered Prayer." This book exhales the atmosphere of vital faith and deep spirituality.

Dr. J. W. Wellons has five books to be credited to his authorship—"Life and labors of Rev. W. B. Wellons," which has already been discussed; "Wellons' Family Prayers"; "Family Devotions"; "The Wellons Family," and "Vital Truths for Hungry Hearts." These books clearly reflect the spirit of "Uncle Wellons," which has been so long and so well known to our people. If one were called upon to compress the spirit of the hundred years of Rev. J. W. Wellons' living and serving into a single phrase, that phrase would have to be "Faith in the Power of Prayer"; and that phrase is the outstanding note of his books.

BARRETT MAKES VALUED CONTRIBUTION.

Dr. J. Presley Barrett made a contribution to the literature of the Christian Church, the value of which is beyond question. His "Iola, or Facing the Truth," is a masterpiece of its kind. It is written in the form of a story, but it is one of the most convincing examples of the power of what might be called "veiled argument" that it has ever been my privilege to read. Dr. Barrett's "Garden Spots of the Old Testament" and "Fruit-Bearing Truths," and a leaflet entitled "Individual Interpretation," show the author's fine appreciation of the Scriptures, his loyalty to their truths and his ability to set them before his readers with living force and vital application. Dr. Barrett compiled and edited "The Centennial of Religious Journalism" and "Modern Light-Bearers." The first contains a wealth of historical material gathered in connection with the centennial of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, and the second contains the addresses that were delivered at the centennial celebration, which was held at the Court Street Christian Church, Portsmouth, N. H., on September 15-17, 1908.

Dr. W. W. Staley has given to the world a little book under the unassuming title, "The Minister." I have called it a little book because every other book I have seen on the subject exceeded it in length. But no book on the same subject which I have seen surpasses it in the wealth of material

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It is easy to make the mill too large for the business. A fifty-barrel roller mill for a small neighborhood is too large to succeed. A sixteen-driver engine is too large for a little narrow-gauge railroad. An organization may be too large for the work to be done. This is the reason why the Southern Methodist Church has reduced its secretarial force. The overhead expense was too large for the income. This is suggestive, to say the least, for all denominations and all organizations. Most business fails when it outgrows its capital, its customers, and its capacity. This is true of men. The tonnage of a ship must be considered before loading the cargo. Rough seas may meet the vessel on its way, and it must load within its capacity. Business should be organized and conducted on the basis of the dullest periods. Reserve power is the safety of men and capital. This principle is universal as to time and place; and it does not eliminate faith—it husbands it, for faith rests upon sure foundations. "Have faith in God." To overplant is to underharvest. A blind faith cannot see the way.

The World War put the world on a boom. Reaction fills many financial graves. The high prices, which meant cheap money, led the Churches, as well as business, into many wild schemes for raising money by term subscriptions, and laying out plans of operation on the basis of successful collections. It is a well-known fact that small credits are poorly paid. The chain stores grew out of this experience, and put their petty trade on a cash basis. Even the Church must move along sane and honest lines. That does not mean that Church members should not contribute to all the causes of the Church; but it does mean that they should give as the Lord prospers them; and that those who handle the Lord's money must spend in the same way.

It takes wise men to spend other people's money, and it takes wiser still to spend the Lord's money. It requires more sense to spend money than to earn money. Children jump up several steps at a time, but mature people step up the stairway step at a time.

"The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night."

The danger is that many want to make things bigger instead of better. The Church is not an institution to make a bigger world, but a better world. The aspiration of young people should be to be better rather than bigger. There are many big people who are worthless, and there are many small people who are useful. There are some ministers who are not satisfied in a small Church, and there are lay members who feel the same way; but it is better to serve in a small Church, if it is better, than in a large Church not so good.

It is easy to fail by looking for something bigger. No one ever fails by looking for something better. It is better to make ten acres richer than to make twenty acres poorer. If we make ourselves better, we will grow bigger. If we make our college better, it will grow bigger. If we make our paper better, it will grow bigger. If we make our Church better, it will grow bigger—bigger in the estimation of Him who judges the "quick and the dead."

ELON LETTER.

Absorption in the trivial and inconsequential things wrecks many a young life. As I write, we are in the midst of examinations. A small group is not disturbed by these tests of the year's achievements in scholarship. These students are sure of themselves. They have studied consistently throughout the year and approach the final test like triumphant warriors.

But there is another group, and sad to say, larger. It is feverishly busy with studies and nervous as to the consequences of their finals. This group has regarded classes as interferences with the real thing on the college campus. It has specialized in the side show of college life and neglected the main tent, to quote Woodrow Wilson's characterization of the Princeton of his presidency. Social life, good fellowship, "week-ends," athletics, pictures, etc., have engrossed their major interests throughout the year, and now they are greatly exercised. Because they are bright and highly endowed originally, they can "cram" enough for the most part to slide through. But some will fail. They will not be allowed to return next fall. It is sad.

But before we come down on the youngsters too severely, let us examine the adult world. It, too, is engrossed in a wild scramble after the things that are seen. It has not much time for the enduring objectives of life. Money-making, indulgences, ambition, sports—these make up the major portion of concern for most of us adults. We are pitifully absorbed in mere living. The world thinks more of getting than of giving, more of rights than of duties, more of the exercise of power than of service, more of success through competition than through co-operation and brotherhood. The world is tyrannized by the trivial and the inconsequential, and this in spite of all the rich and wise experience of the ages testifying to the futility of such devotion to the transitory and temporal.

Don't be too austere, then, in judging the young. They lack our experience and flout our advice oftentimes. But eventually they will profit by their errors, and honestly I suspect they will do better in their day of responsibility for the world's life and ideals than even we are doing. There can be no doubt that the general direction of humanity is forward, upward, and onward for the better. It is to the young that we must hopefully look for the redemption of the future.

SOUTH GEORGIA MEMBERS.

Dear Friends:

As time will not permit me to write to each of you, I take this method through the columns of THE SUN to let you know that we are doing our best in South Georgia to honor and glorify our Lord and to bless humanity.

The second Sunday in May was a good day for us at Vanceville. The day began with Sunday School at the regular hour with good attendance, being followed by a short song service. Then the pastor addressed the congregation, taking for his subject, "Mother." Following the address was a program prepared and arranged by the ladies and children of the community, the same being well and effectively rendered. Many good things were said about mother, and we cannot say too much about a good mother, for the greatest earthly gift to man is a good mother. And, too, the highest compliment ever paid to mortals was when divinity condescended to incarnation through the Virgin Mary.

After the program, several short talks were made by way of appreciation, love and respect to the mothers. This brought the morning service to a close. We then gathered around a table laden with refreshments, again being reminded of God's goodness toward us. A very enjoyable hour was spent during the noon recess. Everybody seemed to be carefree, lovable and friendly disposed.

At 1:30 o'clock we assembled in the Church building and engaged in a song service. Several splendid leaders were present from other communities and helped us. Several numbers were rendered by a quartette from Enigma, Ga. Thus the service came to a close and the pastor, for one, felt that the day had been spent very profitably.

Our meeting begins at Enigma the first Sunday in July, and at Vanceville the second Sunday. Rev. H. M. Gray, of Lanett, Ala., has kindly consented to help us. Pray that Christians will become better Christians as a result of the meetings, and that the Lord may use His children for the salvation of many souls. We covet an interest in your prayers and sympathy. The Lord's blessings for spiritual strength rest upon all of you and every interest of His in all the world.

Yours in the Master's service,

S. D. LANKFORD.

A GIRL'S LESSON IN GEOGRAPHY.

Youth is sometimes so sketchy in its formation that to many girls Turkey is a large country where some one originated Turkish paste; where girls cover their faces with veils when on the street, and men wear bright red caps that look like grandmother's "teapot cosy," an invention of many years ago for slipping over the teapot to keep the contents warm. So that, to the girls, there is the delicious paste, no one ever sees a girl's face, and the men suggest a teapot of such delicate health it must always wear its wadded dressing gown. This is their picture of Turkey.

But the fezes were abolished by law last October, and this the girls may know, in an equally sketchy fashion, is not the first time in the history of the world when a change of headgear denoted progress. If there is any Turkish paste there or not it is never evident in reports received from Turkey. Folks do not seem to always get enough to eat in Turkey, but never is this near-starvation averted by Turkish paste. And as for the veils: gradually, they are being thrown back, and the incredible thing is that it is becoming possible for a girl to appear unveiled in a room where there are men without suffering any diminution of their respect.

It is interesting to learn that girls in State schools have had to adopt hats—willy nilly, they must wear hats. Which order will make some girls wish they lived in Turkey, for in this country it has become the popular thing to go bare-headed in the summer time, a fashion which father approved. This order is another evidence of the zeal for reform, and the marvelous changes that are taking place in Turkey. For it is not the Turkey it was a decade ago.

The women are coming out from a seclusion which is no longer enforced, and Turkish girls, sometimes with veils thrown over their faces, it is true, take part in such unheard-of activities as basket-ball, volley-ball, etc., in the Young Woman's Christian Association in Pera and Stamboul, both in Constantinople. The girls in the Pera center are chiefly Greeks and Armenians, with a sprinkling of Turks, and a few of many other nationalities. They are grouped in a good many vocational classes—English, French, Turkish, gymnastics, dressmaking and commercial. There are girl reserves among them, and so cosmopolitan is the personnel of the center at Pera that English and Prussian girls teach the English classes; a Greek girl has charge of the information desk, and an Armenian girl runs the employment bureau.

There are more Turkish girls in the Stamboul center, and a great deal of the work is being carried on by Turkish secretaries. It is hoped to train more and more Turkish girls into the work.

The girls of Turkey are enjoying their liberty, and they are not abusing it. Their one desire seems to be of service, and from the doors under the Blue Triangles they go out, singly and in groups, to open classes among the refugees; to care for little children in the orphanages, never forgetting that their motto is "Love and Serve."

They are not the pampered hot-house product that an inaccurate information represented them to be. That might be the Turkish girl of a generation ago, but not the Turkish girl of today.—From Frances L. Garside.

THE DOMINION OF MAN.

"Could we but get the right angle, regarding all work as co-operation with God in the guidance and control of what are really divine forces in the development of the world, there is no work or calling that would not then be holy, and the place wherein the worker was standing holy ground. In the degree in which man subdues the earth and secures dominion over the creatures, grows his measure of responsibility to the inanimate and animate alike. There is a conduct towards the earth itself, not merely in relation to the fellow-man of today in our own and other lands, but to posterity, that is only less important than conduct towards the lower animate creation.

"Dominion here does not mean irresponsible ownership to do therewith as one likes, in all recklessness and wastefulness. The Lord God 'took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it,' not to tear it up so as to leave great mounds of ugly waste, like the slag-heaps that disfigure so many landscapes. Some day a public conscience will be developed upon these matters."—J. Y. Simpson, in "Landmarks in the Struggle Between Science and Religion," published by Geo. H. Doran Co.

Capitol Hill Church, Des Moines, Ia., has insured the pastor for $28,000. In the event of death, the Church will receive the face value of the policy, and in the event the insured is living, at the end of a ten-year period, the Church will receive the cash surrender value of the policy which will be $10,356.75. Warrant for this action is thus set forth by the board: "In revising the plans in the department of finance, the Capitol Hill board came to feel that the Church should have the same benefits from life insurance as other business enterprises. This plan is, therefore, business life insurance applied to the business of the Church on a sound business basis."

The American Society for the Promotion of Aviation offers one thousand dollars to the first boy or girls under eighteen that flies from Boston to San Francisco. Almost any normal boy or girl could win that prize if the right flying machine were available. It is as easy to run a flying machine as an automobile, about one hour to learn flying, seven hours to learn how to land. Young people, possessing perfect balance, will fly better than their elders. Before long, boys of fifteen will fly across the continent, to and from schools and colleges.

Fortunate youth

THE educational opportunities for the boys and girls of the South are keeping pace with the leadership of the South in the economic progress of the Nation. This is seen in the following facts:

In the last twelve years more than $125,000,000 has been spent for the construction of new school buildings in the states of the South served by the Southern.

In 1900 there were less than 73,000 school teachers in the states of the South served by the Southern, and the appropriation for education amounted to only 90 cents per person living in these states. In 1922 the appropriation was $6.85 per person, and the number of trained teachers had increased to 139,309.

In 1900 only 64.8 per cent of the children of school age in these states attended school, while the average for the nation as a whole was 72.4 per cent. But in 1922, the latest year for which complete figures are available, 81.4 per cent of the children in the states of the South served by the Southern attended school, while the average for the nation as a whole was 81.2 per cent.

The growth in the educational facilities of the South, as well as the number of children that can take advantage of them, is one of the fortunate and direct results of the prosperity that has come to the South.

The Southern Railway System has contributed to the prosperity of the South, as a tax-payer, as a large employer of men and women—and as the transportation agency which carries Southern commerce to and from world markets, regularly, dependably and economically.

GIVE YOUTH A SQUARE DEAL.

BY DANIEL A. POLING,

President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

Challenge the insinuation, and brand as false the charge that prohibition has corrupted American youth. I have seen drinking from hip flasks in public places. I have dealt personally with some miserably sad cases of juvenile delinquency in which booze has figured; but God pity the man who, on such a foundation, would build a general indictment! We do not indict bankers when one banker, or several, default. We do not indict labor leaders when one union officer, or several, abscond. We do not indict preachers when one clergyman, or several, betray their trust. It should take more than one hip-pocket flask, and more than thousands, to cause any individual carrying any measure of leadership responsibility anywhere in our social order to suggest that any law has made the sons and daughters of the republic dissolute and drunken.

Shame on the adult mind when a man in such a hearing as this tells the story of boys and girls he has seen drinking together in lavatories and allows that to stand as an argument for prohibition modification!

American youth, with many short-comings, with many individual cases of juvenile delinquency, is as intrinsically fine today as youth has ever been. The real problem that the youth of America faces is not so much his own problem as it is the problem of his adult associates. My observation convinces me that it is not so much the juvenile flapper as it is the grown-up flapper who needs the attention of psychologists, religionists and officers of the law.

Stop slandering youth! Let labor leaders, clergymen, United States senators, and educators become constructive rather than destructive. Our boys and girls need today, not preachment and denunciations, but good examples!

An outstanding collegian of two years ago said, speaking in a committee meeting at which I was present, "Conditions at our place were decent until the alumni came back at commencement, and then the campus went drunk." Gentlemen, let us put that into our moral test-tube.

The headmaster of one of the famous preparatory schools in this country, a school located in New Jersey, at the holiday season two years ago addressed a letter to the parents of his boys. The letter called attention to the honor system to which the boys were loyal and asked those parents to assist their own sons, while at home through Christmas, to remain true to their anti-drinking creed. The resentment of some of the parents was bitter.

There have been witnesses before this committee who told of promiscuous drinking in public places by girls and boys; witnesses who in another time defended the saloon with its wineroms, beer gardens and "wet" dance halls, which were covered, high-walled places where all the evils, real and fancied, recited here took place vastly multiplied. I venture that I have seen in one beer garden in one night before prohibition more drinking by young people than any man has seen from flasks in lavatories since the eighteenth amendment was written into the Constitution. But did these advocates ever cry out over these other conditions? I am not inclined to accept seriously their concern now for America's wayward youth, nor am I ready to embrace, for my children, their moral leadership, nor accept seriously the anti-prohibition testimony of men who did their best to keep the saloon open and who defended its practices, nor of politicians who are associated with organizations which functioned largely in bar-rooms and which in the more recent past have obstructed the law enforcement efforts of police commissioners.

I concede the right of those who have entered these statements upon the record, which brand youth as corrupted by prohibition, to speak only for young people with whom they are acquainted. They do not represent the young people I know; they do not represent young people generally. The statement, unrestrained, unsupported by any body of facts warranting a general conclusion, grievously misrepresents our sons and daughters.

I have the honor to serve as president of an organization enrolling in the United States more than two million, five hundred thousand young men and young women. I am acquainted with representative young people in every State, in every county and in every considerable community. These are not lawbreakers. These are law-observers. Increasingly they will be found supporting law enforcement and registering against the law's nullification, modification and repeal. They belong to an organization that was the first to adopt the slogan, "A Saloonless Nation by 1920"; an organization that pledges now its ardor, its patriotism and its influence to an honest and complete trial of American prohibition.

When I learned that I was to appear here, I addressed a questionnaire to the presidents of our State and local unions. Replies have been received from the presidents or general secretaries of every State union, including the District of Columbia, of every large city union, such as New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Denver, Seattle, Portland, etc., and of scores of others.

There were four questions, as follows:

- (1) Do you believe that beer and light wines should be legalized?
- (2) Do you believe that prohibition should be repealed?
- (3) Do you believe that prohibition has bettered conditions financially, socially and morally?
- (4) In your opinion, are a majority of the people in your community and State (a) For or against modification? (b) For or against repeal?

The 538 replies are divided as follows:

Question No. 1—No, 531; yes, 7.

Question No. 2—No, 532; yes, 6.

Question No. 3—No, 16; yes, 529.

Some "50-50" entered on both lists.

Question No. 4—(a) for 103, against 413; for 29, against 480.

Some said "50-50" and appear on both lists.

Generally, the poll against prohibition and for modification comes from such States as New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, though there are scattering returns from Virginia, Texas and Vermont.

The great question is: Can democracy survive the application of its own principles of law and government?

I submit to you that murder is finally not the great crime. I submit to you that finally the great crime is anarchy, which is all-inclusive. The logic of the arguments made in support of the modification proposals now before Congress and in attacking the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act, if I understand logic, is essentially the logic of anarchy. Again and again the statement has been made that prohibition which is the law of the land, is a failure; more—that it cannot be enforced—that it, the law, is responsible for lawlessness, and therefore should be changed or repealed.

Whenever this or any other free society consents to law revision by those who violate the law, or by those who propose repeal because the law is violated, we concede the failure, not of any one law, but of the processes of democratic government itself. I submit to you that the only man who has the right to propose the law's repeal is the man who has obeyed the law himself and supported its enforcement. These certainly have the legal right to argue here for prohibition modification and repeal.

But whenever we concede to any others their prerogative, then the argument of a Gerald Chapman against that other Volstead act which society has placed upon the statute books to make effective "Thou shalt not kill" must have its day in court.

The great question is not Will it cost seventy-five million dollars to make prohibition effective in New York? The great question is, Shall democracy die at the hands of its own citizens? Shall free government fall of its own weight? Whenever a clamoring ministry or a clamoring majority, can achieve its purpose on the basis of the arguments entered upon the records of this hearing for the modification of prohibition, then this country is headed straight for Bolshevism or Fascism. Gentlemen, neither Bolshevism or Fascism in America!

I want to know whether prohibition is to be at last a success or a failure. Conceivably, it may fail. Should it fail, we must find something better, for all agree that the problem it was enacted to solve is very real. I want to know whether prohibition is a failure, but how may I know? Only by giving prohibition a fair and a complete trial.

LITERARY HISTORY OF CHRISTIANS.

it presents and in the practical advice and sound sense it sets forth. Dr. Staley has written few books, but his weekly "Suffolk Letter" has endeared him to thousands of readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Books, even from the most prolific writers, appear at rare intervals, while the "Suffolk Letter" has brought its message every week for years. What a book it would make if all those "Suffolk Letters" could be printed in one volume! As Mark Twain said of the dictionary—it would change the subject so often one would never get a chance to grow tired. And with all the wit and wisdom, philosophy and piety, the chronicling of events, and the calling to faith loyalty and heroic action in the name of the Christ, they would certainly be wonderful reading. Let us hope that some day we may have them in book form.

Rev. C. B. Riddle is the author of three books: "College Men Without Money," "Trailing the Truth," and "Thirty-Six." These books are in an interesting and vigorous style, and present a striking variety of subject matter.

OUTSIDE WORLD IS ATTRACTED.

The books by Dr. W. A. Harper have had a wider circulation, have drawn the attention of the outside world, and have called forth more favorable comment than the work of any other author of the Southern Christian Church. They are: "The New Church for the New Time," "The New Layman for the New Time," "Reconstructing the Church," "The Church in the Present Crisis." These books were all called forth by the crisis that faced the kingdom in a time of change and reconstruction. There is a unity of thought and purpose that binds all of them together. They were written to call the attention of the Church to the changing times and conditions, and the dangers they brought, in time for the Church to prepare and meet the emergency before it should be too late. They embody an earnest purpose to set forth what can and should be done. Of greater interest perhaps to future generations than the books themselves will be the history of the man who wrote them. For after calling attention to the crisis and the dangers that attended it, and after suggesting in broad outline the things that must be done to meet the situation, he then flung himself into the task of shaping a policy for his own Church and shaping the plans whereby it might meet the situation, and is even now in the very forefront of the struggle leading the forces of his Church from conquest to conquest. This is a unique spectacle in the literary world. The man who writes literature seldom makes history, and certainly not in the order named.

There have been several literary productions which have profoundly affected the development of the Christian Church in the South. In so far as we have been able to ascertain, previous to the Civil War there was no written principles and government of the Christian Church which had been approved and adopted by the entire body of Christians in the South. Certain leaders had set forth their beliefs in principles and the practices in government, and these had their following. Various representative gatherings had from time to time adopted resolutions on certain points of doctrine and discipline. But there was no written declaration that was universally accepted.

MOVEMENT MADE BEFORE WAR.

Certain actions had been taken in the Convention which was organized at Union, Alamance County, N. C., in 1856, but the work was not perfected before it was interrupted by the war. After the close of the war the Convention met in 1866 at Mt. Auburn, Warren County, N. C. The forces were scattered and broken, the work everywhere was disorganized and impoverished, but a few courageous souls met and faced the task of reorganization and reconstruction. Rev. W. B. Wellons was elected President. Rev. John N. Manning was appointed chairman of a committee to prepare a Declaration of Principles, form of government and directory for worship suited to the Christian Church. The beliefs, principles and practices held by the organization were fully discussed and agreed upon. They were then referred, with instructions, to a special committee composed of Rev. W. B. Wellons, Rev. John N. Manning, Rev. Solomon Apple, Deacon Thomas J. Kilby, and Deacon Alfred Moring, to be revised and prepared for publication. Their work was ratified in the Convention of 1867. Many revisions and re-printings have been made, but the Principles and Government of the Christian Church remains substantially the same as was originally adopted. It is impossible to estimate the value of this action in making the work of the Christian Church in the South uniform, sound, Scriptural and permanent.

The Christian Church has always laid great emphasis upon the work of the Sunday School. It is, doubtless, known to all of you that in the early days of the Sunday School, the material presented was such portions of Scripture or texts as the individual teacher might select. About 1871 Rev. C. A. Apple published his "Manual and Catechism," which was being generally adopted by the Sunday Schools of the South. The first International Lessons were used in 1872, and gradually they attained their present use among our people, doing away with the necessity of providing our own teaching material. When the Sunday School world became awakened to the necessity for teacher training, the Southern Christian Convention appointed a committee, consisting of Drs. W. A. Harper, W. P. Lawrence, and W. C. Wicker, Dr. Harper serving as chairman, to prepare books on teacher training. This committee brought out Volume 1 and Volume 2 of "Training the Teacher." This work compares very favorably with any teacher training books issued by other denominations. But here again the International Sunday School Association has standardized the material for training courses, doing away with the need of denominational initiative.

PREPARE FOR "MEN AND MILLIONS."

When the Men and Millions' Movement of the Southern Christian Convention was launched, a large body of literature was prepared by men and women of the South, setting forth the needs, objectives and methods of the Movement. This material was printed in pamphlet form and given wide circulation among our people. Much of this material has a permanent value and deserves to be preserved. The complete list is as follows: "Our Women and the Men and Millions Forward Movement," by Mrs. W. A. Harper; "Why," by Dr. W. W. Staley; "The Objectives of the Movement," by Dr. J. O. Atkinson; "To Your Knees, O Christians!" by Dr. J. Presley Barrett; "A Call to the Ministry," by Dr. W. A. Harper; "What Shall I Do with My Life," by Rev. H. S. Smith; "Recruiting with Life," by Rev. H. S. Harcastle; "God's Method of Financing the Kingdom," by Dr. A. B. Kendall; "A Study in Stewardship," by Dr. L. E. Smith; "The Winning of Souls," by Dr. C. H. Rowland; "Personal Work for Christ," by Rev. F. C. Lester; "The Duty of Personal Work," by Rev. George D. Eastes; "Where the Christian Church has Led," by Dr. W. W. Staley; "The Christian View of Money," by Dr. J. O. Atkinson; "Master, We are Here," by Dr. W. A. Harper.

Several ventures have been made in the field of literary journalism in the South. In 1845 Rev. L. C. Madison, who was employed in the office of Rev. D. W. Kerr, who had begun the publishing of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, published on his own initiative a small religious paper called Christian Light. In 1874 Rev. W. B. Wellons and Rev. J. T. Whitley were engaged in publishing a religious periodical called The Little Christian, but for a number of years the strength and resources of the Southern Convention have been centered in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

In the early days of the Christians in the South, several of the leaders became interested in the Christian Palladium, then published by Joseph Marsh, in the State of New York. It was this interest in the Christian Palladium that apparently gave birth to the idea of a religious periodical that should serve the interests of all Christians in the South.

CONFERENCE PROPOSES NEWSPAPER.

In 1833, at Kedar, now Mt. Auburn Church, in Warren County, N. C., the North Carolina and Virginia Conference proposed to begin the publishing of a Church newspaper, to be known as the Christian Intelligencer, and voted that the Treasurer "be and is hereby authorized to pay out of the treasury, if there be a sufficient surplus, $50.00 to the support of said paper." And that Bros. Elijah Lewelling, Thomas Reaves, D. W. Kerr, and John Lemay be, and that they are hereby, appointed an editorial committee to conduct the publishing of the same.

Here the matter rested until nine years later. In May, 1842, at a called session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, at Union, Orange (now Alamance) County, N. C., a session called especially to consider the establishment of a Church paper. Here a motion prevailed that a monthly periodical newspaper be established amongst us to be denominated THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Motions prevailed here to appoint twelve men as a Southern Christian Publishing Committee, who should select an editor and arrange for the publishing of the paper at once, and to make THE CHRISTIAN SUN auxiliary to the Christian Palladium.

In February, 1844, the January number of THE CHRISTIAN SUN appeared, with Elder D. W. Kerr, Junto, N. C., as editor, and Dennis Heart as publisher. Kerr continued to edit the paper until his death in 1850. In 1847 it was transferred to the Southern Christian Association. It was then published at Pittsboro, N. C., where it was printed by Major Alexander Dismarks. Elder H. B. Hayes succeeded Rev. D. W. Kerr as editor, and the paper was published in Raleigh, N. C. Later, Rev. W. B. Wellons became editor and moved the paper to Suffolk, Va. It has been edited by Rev. J. T. Whitley, Rev. W. T. Walker, Rev. J. P. Barrett, Rev. W. G. Clements, Dr. E. L. Moffitt with Rev. M. L. Hurley as traveling manager, by Rev. J. O. Atkinson and Prof. W. P. Lawrence working in conjunction, and later by Rev. J. O. Atkinson alone, by Rev. C. B. Riddle, by Rev. J. P. Barrett with Prof. P. J. Kernodle as managing editor. At present, Dr. J. O. Atkinson is editor, with Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, and Rev. S. M. Lynam serving as contributing editors, and with Prof. P. J. Kernodle as managing editor.

CENTENNIAL NUMBER A LIVE ISSUE.

In 1894, Dr. E. L. Moffitt and Rev. M. L. Hurley brought out a special issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, known as the "Centennial Number," in celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Christian Church. This number was filled with valuable material concerning the history of the Church. Rev. P. H. Fleming reported at the recent session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Salem Chapel that he has in his possession a facsimile copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Vol. 1, No. 1, Hillsborough, N. C., January, 1844; an original copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Vol. 1, No. 2, Hillsborough, N. C., February, 1844; an original copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, "Centennial Number," 1794-1894; also a facsimile copy of the first issue of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, by Elias Smith, Thursday evening, September 1, 1808.

It is impossible to review here the contribution that has been made by THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the cause of the Christian Church. It has served as a medium of expression for all our people, as the ally of every pastor, and the indispensable promoter of every enterprise of the Church. Into it has gone the finest products of heart and brain of some of our ablest and most consecrated leaders. It has been an expression of the thought and achievements of the Christian Church, South, and in turn it has served as the medium of inspiration and promotion of our most valued institutions. Especially should mention be made here of the present editor, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who has given to THE CHRISTIAN SUN the full benefit of his rare gifts and abilities.

The writer of this paper is indebted to others for the facts herein presented. No claim of originality of investigation is made. Credit is given to Mr. W. E. MacClenny, Prof. P. J. Kernodle, and many others, who by their careful research and painstaking investigations, have brought many facts of the history of our Church to our present knowledge. It is our only regret that this paper is not a more adequate appreciation of the literary achievements of the leaders of the Christian Church, for it is an heritage of which we have just cause to be proud.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"Call upon me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not."—Jeremiah 33: 3.

MONDAY.

TRULY THANKFUL.

"I will give thanks with my whole heart."—Psa. 138:1.

I once knew a very godly and devout man (now gone to his reward), who three times each day prayed God to make him "truly thankful" for all blessings. It was a burning desire in his heart to feel the thanks he should have and never take things too much as a matter of course. His life was an inspiration to men and his memory is a greater one.

It is hard to realize a genuine passion of thankfulness until we are placed where we can realize what a blessing the gift is. Here is a fellow who, because of illness, was deprived of food for a long time. He recovered, and when able to eat again, a tray of delicious provisions was put before him. All alone, he beamed with joy and gratitude, and all unconsciously for the moment he looked up and said: "I am certainly thankful."

It takes privations, pains, sufferings and sometimes calamity to make us aware of the things that forestall them. But we can read God's word closely on thanksgiving and follow Christ's example, and be sincere and be truly thankful always for his blessings.

Prayer.—Our Father, forbid that we shall be so dumb or thoughtless to forget Thee. Show us how each day we may appreciate the blessings of life, even those in disguise, and be thankful. In His name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

WHAT IS CHRISTIAN CHARITY?

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren."—Matt. 25:34-40.

A great deal of our so-called Christian charity will hardly bear the search-light of close investigation. Only too often our own self-aggrandizement is the moving power behind it, rather than a genuine desire to do good after the manner of Jesus Christ.

How did Jesus help men? Did He not invariably seek to help those, first and most of all, whom the world in its selfishness passes by? Those ten lepers whom Christ healed—were they not wretched outcasts, living apart from society and, in the minds of all, the kind whom people regarded as more desirable dead than alive? That woman taken in adultery—how many friends and protectors had she on that dark day when her sin found her out? Yet these people were the ones that Jesus helped!

Do you desire to perform deeds of true Christian charity? Go, seek out some lonesome sufferer whom every one else either despises or forgets. Give that person your tender solicitude, showing him that you, for one, mean to forgive and to forget, and to help him on to a new and better life.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, we draw near in the assurance of faith because our need is great and Thy mercy supreme. For every want and every need we turn to Thee, because Thou art able and eager to supply what we lack. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

WISE COUNSEL TO YOUTH.

"Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting may appear to all."—1 Tim. 4:14-16.

There are four young men in the New Testament to whom Paul stood in the relation of guide, philosopher and friend. They are John Mark, Paul's unnamed nephew, and Titus and Timothy. Of these perhaps Timothy is the one who has the greatest charm.

First, there is a plea for reflection. "Meditate." Second, there is a plea for entire devotion: "Give thyself wholly." Third, there is a plea for a complete religion: "That thy profiting may appear to all." The marginal reading here is, "in all things."

The implication is that faith has a wider relationship than appears upon the surface. Religion is not a matter of opinion only. It affects the whole of life—domestic, social, occupational, recreational. We who have the interests of youth upon our hearts would do well to study this counsel of Paul to Timothy and to pattern our advice after it.

Prayer.—By one of the parents: that our children may be so taught by both precept and example, that they may grow up to be faithful in the Lord's vineyard.

THURSDAY.

THE HEART'S CRY TO GOD.

"Yea, the work of our hands establish thou it."—Psa. 90:14-17.

With our hands we are building our house of life. The common tasks that begin and end with the day are all, in a spiritual sense, brick or mortar that we are putting into our house.

Recently I stood beside the casket that contained all that was mortal of my dear old mother. As I looked upon the cold hands resting on the lifeless breast, I thought how they had touched away my fears and my fever in childhood, how they had ministered to needy lives and had done their full share in building the sanctuary. When I looked into that face, in its indescribable sweetness, it seemed to me that the Good Shepherd, when He met His home-coming sheep down where the great roadway of life dips into the ravine of death, had left a beam of light to beautify the crumbling tent of clay. I could not help seeing a wonderful connection between these ministering hands and that light that lingered in the face. After all, those hands had been weaving garments of beauty for the soul.

Prayer.—By one of the parents: that we may learn more and more of the lovingkindness of our Heavenly Father, and find greater joy in serving Him.

FRIDAY.

THE HIDDEN WAY.

"Why is light given to a man whose way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in?"—Job 3:20-23.

Can you give a satisfactory answer to the question of the text? Can you tell why it is that God often leads us along a hidden pathway? For lead us in this way He surely does, and sometimes we are tired with the journey, and sick with the seeming meaninglessness of it all.

I think the light is given us that we may have something to which we can cling when all else seems to have been, for the time at least, hidden. Once the Light is given, there is always a ray that guides one through the darkest experiences and safely along the hardest paths.

And so for each one of us, the big question is not as to the hidden way, or the hedged path, but "Why the Light?" And another thought is that the Light is given in order that we may see that the hedges are God's hedges. God's hedges are for our protection. We are not hedged out, but "hedged in."

Prayer.—We long this day, dear Lord, for the Spirit's blessing and for light to illumine our darkness. We cry aloud for the Spirit power within our daily experience. Wilt Thou not pour out upon us now Thy signal testimony that will gladden our hearts? In Jesus' name. Amen.

SATURDAY.

HOLDING FAST TO THE FAITH.

"That ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."—Jude 1:1-3.

The revised reading of these words is more explicit than the King James text. It replaces "once" with "once for all," thereby suggesting the finality of the form of religion to which reference is made. There is no doubt the world is ailing. Today it needs religion more than it needs anything else—needs it more now than ever before.

We must pass by every religion which fails to recognize the unity of the race. We must omit every religion that fails to deal radically with sin. When we have done this, what religion is left?

We may be, prudentially or traditionally, Baptists, Methodists or Presbyterians, but deep in our hearts is the desire to be true to the mind that was in Christ. This and this alone is Christianity at its best. This alone can supply the needs of humanity. The faith that sustained a world in its agony can guide the world in the process of upbuilding.

Prayer.—That God, in His abundant goodness, may send a widespread revival to refresh and strengthen His Church throughout our land, and bring multitudes to know Christ as Saviour.

SUNDAY.

GOD'S PROVIDENCE OVER ALL.

"A man's heart deviseth his way; but the Lord directeth his steps."—Prov. 16:9.

We live in an age which challenges the supremacy of God over men. It is a time when discovery after discovery enlarges the scope of human knowledge and power, and a natural consequence is that man thinks himself independent of his Creator.

The Word of God shows this to be a fatal mistake. It is reasonable that One who made man and the universe would never surrender His sovereignty. It would impeach both His power and righteousness. Hence, God in Scripture declares His providential curb, rule, restraint and guidance over the world He has made.

"The steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord," but of the wicked, He has said: "Their steps shall slide in due time." This same Providence, too, is exerted over kings, rulers and nations. It is written: "O let the nations shout for joy, for God will judge the people righteously and He is governor of the nations."

Yet in our fallible human judgment, how often we are tempted to doubt this divine interpretation! In a world of uncertainty and danger, never knowing what a day may bring forth, what a blessed truth that "God covers us with His feathers, and that under His wings we can trust" and be safe!

When tried by continued trouble and deferred answers to prayer, we have but to remember that the ways of a timeless and omniscient God are not the ways of mortals; that He is true to His Word and His gracious nature, and that in due time we shall own His deliverance and rejoice. The trying of our faith may work patience, but ever will God intervene and deliver before we are utterly undone.

JACOB AND ESAU.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you."—Eph. 4:32.

LESSON: Gen. 25:19-34, 26:34-28:9, 32:3-33:17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matt. 6:9-15.

Jacob's past was looming up before him. A man's past has an inevitable way of doing that. As a matter of fact, a man cannot get away from his past. Whatsoever he sows, that he also reaps. The harvest may be delayed, but it comes. A man may be sure that his sins will find him out. He is never safe until they have been brought to light and forgiven.

Jacob had a rather shady past, too; one that gave him little comfort as it loomed up before him. First of all, he had taken advantage of his brother Esau and bought his birthright for a mess of pottage. It is true, of course, that Esau should have had better sense. Esau had done wrong himself. But two wrongs do not make a right, and Jacob knew that after all had been said and done he had "put over" a shady bargain on his brother. He must have known that Esau could not have forgotten that dirty trick and it is no wonder that he felt uneasy when he heard that Esau was coming.

Then there had been another transaction even worse. Abetted and aided by Rebekah, Jacob had stolen—there was no bargain about this—Esau's blessing from the aged and blind and dying Isaac. Much water had passed under the bridge since that day, but Jacob had not forgotten the incident or Esau's threat when he discovered Jacob's trickery. And Jacob knew that Esau had not forgotten the incident either. Thus it was that Jacob faced an unpleasant situation as he approached his former homeland.

Jacob was still shrewd and tricky. He sent messengers ahead to let Esau know of his arrival. Imagine his consternation when he learned that Esau was coming to meet him with four hundred armed men! Remembering as he did his meanness of other days and Esau's threats, he felt sure that Esau was coming for revenge and coming for it in capital letters. There had been nothing refined about his brother in other days, and it was hardly to be hoped that he would be tender and gracious and kindly now after years in a rough and ready life in the deserts.

Jacob plays another card. He divides his herds and flocks into parts and sends them on ahead with his servants to meet Esau. They are to be presented as gifts from Jacob "thy brother and servant" to Esau. Jacob knew his man. He knew that Esau thought that a man's life did consist in the abundance of the things that man possesses, and it would go far toward reconciliation in this particular case to give a few material possessions to him. Furthermore, he divided all he had and those with him into two bands, reasoning that if Esau should be rather unresponsive and stubborn, Jacob and his favorites could make their escape while Esau was taking vengeance on the first band.

There is one more scene before the real drama of the meeting of the brothers is enacted, a scene that marked a turning point in Jacob's life and produced a change in his character. He had sent his goods and all that he had, including his wives and his children, across the brook Jabbok, and he was left alone. The story says that "there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of day," which probably means that there Jacob fought through the whole thing and came to a "right-about-face" with God. He became conscious of a new power and a new character. He named the place Peniel, for he said, "I have seen God face to face." It is a great day or night in any man's life when he comes face to face with God and receives the blessing direct at the hands of the Almighty. It is quite probable that the churches would have more power if there were more of the members who had their Peniels.

"And Jacob lifted up his eyes and looked, and behold, Esau was coming and with him four hundred men." Jacob now was no coward. He himself went over before his wives and children, whom he had divided into groups with those most dear to him last in line. It is an index into the man's changed character that if there was to be any violence it was to come on him first who deserved it. He was not unctuous, however, for he bowed and "kowitzed" to Esau, calling him lord, and referring to himself as servant.

The meeting was not what Jacob expected. Esau received him with open arms and forgave him or had already forgiven him. Furthermore, Esau was unwilling to accept any of the gifts from Jacob and did so only under pressure. It is difficult to know what factors entered into Esau's change of attitude, but the writer believes that it is simply a case of where one finds even in a man who is a so-called "bad man" qualities that might well be emulated by the so-called "good men." There are many professing Christians today who do not have as much of the Christ spirit toward those who have done them wrong as did Esau. Woe unto that man who has an unforgiving spirit!

Teaching Points.

1. Physical weakness makes one especially susceptible to temptation.
2. Be sure your sin will find you out.
3. Every man must face his past.
4. A man is never done with a sin until it has been forgiven, and even then he may not be done with the effects of sin.
5. Every life should have a Peniel.
6. Vital experiences with God change character.
7. Those who often seem the worst have good qualities.
8. A forgiving spirit is a mark of real character.
9. Every man must stand alone before God.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

June 6, 1926.

TOPIC: "How May We Create and Spread Happiness?"—Matt. 5:1-12; Acts 8:4-8.

(Consecration Meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

Happiness does not depend on any outward thing; it is a condition of heart (v. 3).

Unhappiness is often caused by our impetuosity. The gentle are quietly happy (v. 5).

Those that can show mercy and kindness are also capable of happiness. There are hearts incapable of it (v. 7).

To know the truth about Christ and about God is a source of unending joy. It means companionship with the Eternal (v. 8).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The powerhouse of happiness is in our own souls. A cheery spirit radiates inspiration.

By being uniformly helpful, we can lighten the burdens of others and create happiness for them. Friendship is a happiness-maker.

Make the home tidy, clean, neat, and the effect is happiness. An untidy home is depressing. Our environment influences us.

Life would be dreary without humor. The person that can see the funny side of things, and make others see it, is a real friend. But humor must not be horseplay or carry a sting.

A Few Illustrations.

A camera that is not properly focussed will produce a blurred picture. So with the mind. What we see depends on how we focus the soul.

Every one knows the bad effect of saying "I can't." But who thinks of the good effect of saying, "I am happy," and tries to feel and act that way? That is effectual.

There is one family that took four orphan children to keep and educate. How is that for creating and spreading happiness?

Remember the forgotten. Visit the almshouse or old people's home and show an interest in the people. Little visits, little gifts, little kindnesses go a long way with such folks.

To Think About.

What is happiness?

What can our society do to make our community better?

How may we serve neglected people?

A Cluster of Quotations.

"Each person has two sides—a sunny and a dark. Look at the sunny side. Do not blame and criticize and judge. Remember the Golden Rule."—A. B. Leland.

"One kind of happiness-maker is the employer who finds work for many and pays a living wage. Think of the misery that would follow if all employers were suddenly to die."—James B. Riley.

He that has light within his own clear breast

May sit in the center, and enjoy bright day;

But he that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts,

Benighted walks under the mid-day sun;

Himself is his own dungeon.—Milton.

"The cheerful worker makes happiness. It is a joy to work beside him. Who wants to work with a grumbler? Joy is easy to create, and it is always appreciated."—Anon.

While Daniel Webster was once addressing the Senate on the subject of internal improvements, and every Senator was listening with close attention, the Senate clock commenced striking, but instead of striking twice at 2 P. M., continued to strike without cessation more than forty times. All eyes were turned on the clock, and Mr. Webster remained silent until the clock struck about twenty, when he thus appealed to the chair: "Mr. President, the clock is out of order! I have the floor."—Christian Union Herald.

The French war in Morocco shows what the flying machine means in modern warfare. Abd-El-Krim's capital is taken, he is in flight. Interior tribes, hearing the hum of flying machines above, surrender without a struggle. Without the flying machine that war might have lasted ten years, or longer, with Frenchmen marching over hot sands to be shot down.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our children are looking forward to the meeting of the trustees of the Christian Orphanage, which is always held on commencement day at the college. By having it on that day it gives the members of the Orphanage Board an opportunity to take in the commencement exercises as well as the board meeting. Our children are always interested from the fact that we always have ice cream for the noon meal on that occasion. Ice cream is an interesting and much cherished article at an orphanage. Owing to the large number of children and the amount it takes, it is a luxury we cannot indulge in very often. Then, too, we have chicken for the occasion. Another article of food every child likes. But who ever saw a child that did not like ice cream and cake, chicken and pie! Our little folks even like green apples and cherries, and will put salt on them and eat them half grown and seem to relish them. That is a child, and they will do childish things. But we would not have them otherwise. They get so much enjoyment out of being a child, it would be a sin to change their program. All human hearts should have a warm and tender place for the child.

Our Easter offering is still coming in. We want to ask all Churches that have not sent in their Easter offering to mail it in as early as convenient. It is not too late. It will help us whether it be early or late. We want your Church and Sunday School to have a part.

Let There Be Light.

"Now, children, we will cut out figures of a sky with a moon in it," said the kindergarten teacher to her class in a Brooklyn school. Merrily the little hands set to work amid the clatter of baby tongues. Soon the result was submitted to the teacher. Paper skies were cut to represent patchwork squares with the moon and stars drawn in.

"But the sky is a bowl, children," remonstrated the teacher; "and you have drawn sharp angles and square corners."

"No," said the little ones; "it can't be. Look out the window."

She looked and saw. In Lower Manhattan and Brooklyn the sky is a square, triangle or other form of angle filling the space between skyscrapers, elevated railways and bridges.

Now a new era in building comes in. When the height of skyscrapers began to run to twenty-five, thirty, forty and more stories it became plain that they could not rise straight up from the ground. If this were permitted it would only be a question of time before the streets would become gloomy canons with little or no daylight penetrating to their depths. The building authorities in New York and other modern cities are, therefore, regulating the character of new buildings in accordance with their height and the width of the street on which they are to be erected. When the skyscraper reaches a certain height there is what is termed a "setback," the floors above this point being set back to admit more light and air to the crowded street below. New buildings will be more pyramidal and irregular in aspect than the old straight-walled edifices. Then little children will know that the sky is something more than a crazy-quilt pattern.—Dearborn Independent.

THE ACTS.

It appears from the 16th verse, he did not baptize in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, for the spirit had not fallen on the Gentiles in that quarter (till after that), but they baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. If Christ was less than God, that baptism would appear not valid. Whether the eunuch changed clothes, or was baptized naked, we know not. Philip, perhaps, had not a second dress; but take it as it reads: if one went under water, so did the other. I expect they stood in the brink of the water, and the element was applied.

CHAPTER IX.

IN passing through this section we read how the merciful Jesus stopped the violent persecutor Saul. The glorious brightness from his divinity blinded the eyes of Saul, in mercy to his disciples, which terminated also in the salvation of Paul. His call to the ministry was not a money call; but that he would certainly suffer from Jews and infidels. Saul conferred not with flesh and blood, but in humble submission asked, Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do, etc. Ananias was sent. Saul was praying, blind, three days and nights, fasting. Paul's baptism should be closely observed. He received sight forthwith, arose and was baptized; he was then no longer the persecuting Saul the Jew, but Paul the Christian. These words "forthwith" he arose and was baptized. My impression is, it was done upon the spot, in the house, after which he took some food, and was strengthened.

CHAPTERS X, XI, XIII, XIV.

HERE we have the sacred history of Peter, Cornelius, etc. Previous to this, Peter was a national predestinarian; but God showed him by the vision that he was no respecter of persons. Being now fully persuaded that salvation was free for all, he went with the messenger. Cornelius met him, fell at his feet! Peter took him up, saying, stand up, I myself am a man. No mere man must be worshiped, and if Christ Jesus is only man, distinct from the Father, it is idolatry to worship Him. But He is Lord God.

Reader, be candid: Jesus must be Creator or creature, God or man, or angel, or God and man in one divine person—now draw your conclusions. God can create a chain of beings in links of gradation, one above another; but God did not create the Lord Jesus, but begat Him, and never another. Could Deity beget a Son inferior to Himself? Impossible. But the Lord Jesus thought it no robbery to declare Himself equal with the Father, even in the days of his humiliation. Therefore, all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father.

The gracious visit Peter made to the house of Cornelius, where he preached the gospel of Christ to the Gentiles. The report alarmed the Church in Jerusalem, fearing their dear apostle had gone beyond inspiration; and consequently, Peter was called upon to give the Church satisfaction, who humbly submitted to his trial. We may call it a session, before which Peter was tried; for the true Church is the court of the Lord's house. This corresponds with the words of our Lord recorded by Matthew, chapter 18. This shows the beauty, order and simplicity of the golden days. The two grand points of the constitution of the primitive Church are the same as in heaven above, viz: justice and judgment. There were no high courts and low courts, composed of bishops and presbyters, to try souls in Scripture times; for the ministers, even apostles, were members of the Church in those days. The Church, yea any sister Church, have a Scripture right to select a committee to try causes and make the report (1 Cor. 6) or try offenders before the whole body. But as for Peter, he made his defense, rehearsed the matter by order; and the Church glorified the Lord, that there was salvation for the Gentiles (chapter 13:48). Here stands a text somewhat difficult for us to understand; some suppose it supports the doctrine of partial election; but that idea would contradict many plain texts. Some say it is not a plain translation; but let the Scripture interpret itself; thus, refused eternal life, behold we turn to the Gentiles. This made the Gentiles glad, and they glorified the word of the Lord. Being thus prepared by grace, chosen in the mind of the Lord, they only wanted light and were easily brought to believe, being thus prepared. Therefore, as many of the great concourse as were thus qualified believed that day. when the apostles told the Jews how they had despised and

CHAPTER XV.

PAUL and Barnabus went round, confirming souls, persuading the Christians to continue in the grace or favor of God. Why did he not tell them they could not fall from grace? Answer: because he spake by the spirit of truth. People may depart from the faith, saith the spirit. Men may turn from the holy commandment, as Peter saith.

Look forward. The distress which arose about circumcision caused the great council to be called in Jerusalem, in that one case of emergency. What calls our attention her is, whether this was a new revelation, as it was a new thing; or only a case of emergency. I suppose it necessary only in cases of the like, not to make laws, but to settle disputes. We have a people in our civil union who hold the Christian name, and undertake to hold religious union, though every one is to enjoy his own liberty, and preach and teach his own doctrine and his different faith. One may preach Christ a creature, the other may preach Christ the Creator, yet break no union! One holds John's baptism, which existed under the law; another holds the gospel baptism, which commenced at Pentecost—yet all in union! One will preach infant baptism, the other deny its validity; another holds the right mode to be immersion, the other baptizes by effusion; and another tells his hearers that water baptism is obsolete—yet all in good fellowship! They aim at a work as hard to accomplish as to illustrate and show thee perpetual motion. They answer the inspired prophet Amos in the affirmative, that two can walk together, though not agreed! They aim to reconcile light and darkness. Our Lord affirms that a house divided against itself cannot stand; but they suppose it can. Paul wrote that there must be no scism in the body. They hold, all may be schism, yet all be in union, though the joints be so dislocated. Truth says, "be of one mind," "speak the same thing." They say, all is union, though different faiths! God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for them. In order to finish the story respecting the great council at Jerusalem, we ask, who composed the assembly? The answer is, apostles, elders, and laity, even the whole Church. The decision was by inspiration; therefore the minutes of that council are pure Scripture.

CHAPTER XVI.

IN the 14th verse my reader will see the propriety of household baptism. Some people say, Lydia's household were all believing adults; we wait for proof. The next subject that calls our attention is a subject of dispute; that is, the story of the jailer, his baptism, with his household. This report, as to the true order of it, is still in dispute; it requires serious attention. First, it is well known, and men of reading are my witnesses, that in those days, the cities were well walled in against the enemy; iron gates, or brass gates, with locks and bolts, at least two sets of guards round the prison walls, besides watchmen going about the city, evclaiming the hour of the night. Secondly, those jails had several departments, besides the jailer's house, joined to the prison, with his necessary rooms. Thus Paul and Silas were cast into the inner prison, and their feet made fast in the stocks. Thirdly, the preachers prayed and sang praises; and other prisoners in their departments heard the ministers praising God, with their bloody backs. See here, my honest friend, what a proof of the propriety of vocal singing. Who art thou thus to gainsay?

Fourthly, their prayer reached heaven, and God shook the earth, and the foundations of the prison were made to quiver. The jailer's part also shook, which awakened him and his family—all the doors flew open—the city awfully alarmed—guards deeply affected! But how did they know what hour of the night it was? Answer, the watchmen cried aloud the hour. Midnight, says the word.

Lamp Shades:

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.
I make my little lamp shades,
Of gold, or rose and gray,
To counterfeit the sunset,
And dawning times of day.
I like them to be jolly,
These little shades of mine,
As fluted up and ruffled
As any valentine.
A lamp shade may be pretty,
And useful, too, I think;
I like to make mine mostly,
Of gold, or gray and pink!

A university professor was calling at the home of a friend, and the latter's small daughter apparently felt called upon to entertain the guest. So she announced she would tell him a story.

"There was once a man named Columbus," she began, "an' a queen sent him on a voyage, an' his ships were named the Nina, the Pinta and—"

"Santa Maria," prompted the professor.

"Yes; and the queen's name was—"

"Isabella," suggested the professor.

"Say!" said the child, with sudden suspicion; "I'll bet you've heard this story before."—The Continent.

"No; going to rest up at home. See these packages?"

"Yes; what's in 'em?"

Bobby was sent to the dairy for some eggs. A little later he came back with a crushed paper bag held tightly in his arms and splashed all over.

"Bobby," exclaimed his mother, "what has happened?"

"It's all right, mother," gasped Bobby; "I let the eggs fall, but I only lost the juice out of them."—The Methodist Protestant.

An Orchard Policeman.

There is a busy little fellow who does police duty in the orchard. His uniform is a coat of slate blue, a white vest, and a black cap, and he is called the topsy-turvy bird. The eyes of this little bird are constantly in search of bugs and tiny worms which do so much damage to the fruit trees. He catches the criminals of the insect world between his sharp bill, and he does not waste any time in taking them to the police station; he catches, tries, and judges them on the spot, and death is the penalty always. This police bird is small in size, but his appetite is large, so during the hours of a day he deals out punishment to ever so many crawling robbers that sap the vitality of fruit trees in the orchard.

Instead of climbing up a tree and backing down, like a woodpecker, this bird in the slate-colored coat and white vest turns around and descends head first, which is, no doubt, the reason why he is called the topsy-turvy bird. His book name is the white-breasted nuthatch.

However, if he does travel downward instead of upward, he seldom misses an insect while he is on police duty, for he hunts them out tirelessly, no matter how carefully they hide. He even can travel the under side of a limb, like a fly, and peep into every crevice with his bright eyes and punish every insect thief with his sharp bill.

Sometimes he takes a vacation—the best of policemen are allowed some playtime—and visits the "sugar bush" when the sap is running to sample the sweet juice. This vacation is always taken in the spring when the maple sap is at its best. And it is in the same season of the year that he takes time to sing. His song is not at all musical, although Mrs. Nuthatch seems to enjoy his caressing, wooing note. However, as he is busy usually doing police duty, his song is seldom heard.—Jane V. Roach, in Child's Gem.

THE MASTER'S PLEA.

BY ARCHIBALD RUTLEDGE.

I have no hands save your own hands
To lift the burdens, loose the bands
Of pain; to bear my banner on.
Only by you my work is done.
I have no feet save your own feet
To carry far my message sweet;
If they should fail, to every coast
My steps are halt, my way is lost.
I have no voice save your own voice;
Through it alone shall hearts rejoice
To know my tidings. If your tongue
Be silent, all my truth's unsung.
I have no heart save your own heart
To beat for me; to act love's part.
O child, though I am throned above,
I have no power save your love.
Your feet alone my race can run;
By your own hands my deeds are done.
Your voice must speak, or mine is still:
My heart's great task yours must fulfill.

The British royal family, which has common sense and uses it, is popular in Great Britain and in all the English-speaking colonies. If any Britisher is more popular in the empire than King George, it is his son, the Prince of Wales. While we want no kings here, we are bound to admit that royalty is a cheap institution. It makes Englishmen do their best for their country all their lives for the sake of a title that costs nothing. And the whole royal family doesn't cost, in a year, as much as any first-rate grafter costs the United States.

SIZE NOT A CRIME.

We are no longer afraid of big business merely because it is big.

Long enough we tried to prevent business from growing. Each sought to make his own concern the largest ever, but we wrote Sherman anti-trust laws to prevent the other fellow from getting too large.

We have at last experienced a change of heart. The Federal government, reflecting the revolution in public sentiment, has announced its acceptance of the new order.

Years ago, long-headed men saw the change coming. Federal judges understood the drift and refused to punish the "good trusts." Congress at last awoke and celebrated the event by ordering the large railroads to become larger by consolidation.

Business is big because size pays. Increase production and lower costs. Everybody benefits. It does not now matter how big a business is so long as it deals fairly.

The safety of the new condition lies in the wide distribution of stocks. Professor William Z. Ripley estimates that share-holders have increased from 4,500,000 in 1913 to 19,000,000 today. Big business is becoming public property. We do not fear our own.

THINGS THAT NEVER DIE.

The pure, the bright, the beautiful,
That stirred our hearts in youth,
The impulses to wordless prayer,
The streams of love and truth,
The longing after something lost,
The spirit's yearning cry,
The striving after better hopes—
These things can never die.
The timid hand stretched forth to aid
A brother in his need;
A kindly word in grief's dark hour
That proves a friend indeed;
The plea for mercy softly breathed,
When justice threatens high,
The sorrow of a contrite heart—
These things shall never die.
Let nothing pass, for every hand
Must find some work to do,
Lose not a chance to waken love;
Be firm and just and true;
So shall a light that cannot fade
Beam on thee from on high,
And angel voices say to thee—

POWELL.

B. F. Powell was born April 27, 1857, and died March 31, 1926, aged 68 years, 11 months, and 9 days. Besides the widow he leaves six children (two daughters and four sons)—Mrs. Staley Babb, of Suffolk; Mrs. C. A. Johnson, of Buekhorn, and Sydney, Charlie, Willie and Bennie Powell, all of the county—and ten grandchildren. He also leaves three sisters and one brother—Mrs. Martha Oliver, Mrs. C. J. Smith, Miss Mamie Powell and Charlie Powell, Sr., all of Nansemond County.

He was formerly a member of Antioch Christian Church. He attended Bethlehem Christian Church. The funeral service was conducted at the home, the writer being assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley. The burial was in the family cemetery.

W. D. HARWARD.

MULLENS.

Mrs. Maggie O. Mullens, wife of Felston Mullens, was born October 4, 1899, and quietly passed away April 18, 1926, at her father's home. She leaves to mourn her going her husband, father and mother (Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Edge), four brothers—Willie, Harvey, Herman and Clyde; three sisters—Lala, Mrs. Minnie Hook, and Mrs. Arrie Childers, besides a host of friends and other relatives.

Interment was made in Benton Cemetery, services being conducted by the writer, her pastor, assisted by Revs. G. D. Hunt and T. E. Beddingfield. She was a teacher of high rank, a favorite among her friends, a loving daughter, a devoted and faithful wife, a true friend. She was a member of Pleasant Grove Christian Church. A beautiful life has gone out. The beautiful floral tributes and great congregation bespoke the high esteem in which she was held.

Let us work to enter into that rest into which she appeared to be entering so beautifully when she left us.

BY REV. S. M. LYNAM.

Community Organization.—

This organization, of which C. V. Smith, Harrisonburg, is secretary and business manager, has had broad activities and has met many needs of its members. The membership has grown from 368 to nearly 1,000 during the past four and one-half years. In addition to functioning for educational, recreational and legislative purposes, this organization is doing a business of buying and selling for its members amounting to about $250,000 annually. It has also served as a medium through which to perfect several large commodity marketing associations.

Jefferson's Monticello.—

Monticello means "little mountain" and was the name Thomas Jefferson gave to his home which he planned and built on a wooded hill, on the Rivanna River, near Charlottesville, Va. Monticello is one of the most "picturesque and famous relics of colonial days," and one of the best architectural examples in America. It has a beautiful setting, with the University of Virginia visible nearby, and a "panorama of valleys, plains and hills" in the distance. Because Thomas Jefferson lived there and loved it with a great devotion, it is to become a perpetual shrine for the lovers of that political and religious freedom to whose establishment in this country he contributed more than any other man.

Farming in Armenia.—

"In Armenia," says Henry Ford, "ten tractors plowed one thousand acres in eleven days." In the old Armenian way, that plowing would have required one thousand oxen, with five hundred Armenians saying "gee-haw" in Armenian.

What a blessed change that must have seemed to Armenia.

For centuries, since the days of Caesar and long before, Armenians were accustomed to having people come from all over the earth, expressly to butcher them.

At the mere appearance of Xenophon and his remaining handful, the Armenians dived down through holes in the earth to their queer houses underground. They never expected kindness.

If Henry Ford succeeds in feeding all the people that are born in Asia, he, with his food, and the Rockefeller Institute with its medicine, will soon add several thousand millions to the yellow population of the earth.

New Discoveries.—

They say the frontiers are all gone. That may be true of earth—and yet who knows? Has geography been completed? Pardon us, but we have a few dark spots in our belief on that proposition.

But should it be true that the frontiers of earth have been discovered, the frontiers of the heavens have scarcely been sighted. They are endless. Possible great discoveries are inexhaustible. From the observatories they are telling us wonderful stories.

Astronomers in Germany have discovered a star 10,000,000 times as bright as the sun, and Harvard observatory confirms the discovery. Our whole solar system shrank into relative insignificance when it was learned that Betelgeuse, at the shoulder of Orion, had a diameter equal to thrice the distance between the earth and the sun.

Who would undertake to combat the idea that the rapid development of the flying machine may not lead to events and discoveries so great we have never yet even dared to think of them. There are greater things to be done by science and invention than prepare for future wars. The universe will forever remain a challenge and an opportunity.

Primary Voting Developments.—

The Republican primaries in Pennsylvania must have been a great disappointment to the wets, for while Mr. Vare, their candidate, was nominated for the Senate, it was plainly due to the split vote of the dries, whose strength was divided between Senator Pepper and Governor Pinchot, both of whom belong to the dries. Pepper polled 494,240 votes and Pinchot 325,934, thus making the dry vote 820,174. Vare, the candidate of the "wets," received 584,908. That was the wet strength. The dry vote exceeded this 235,266. Mr. Fisher, candidate for the governorship, who was classed as dry, carried the State. This keeps the popular vote of the Keystone State in the dry column.

In Oregon the primaries, which were held this week, and from which complete returns have not yet been reached, the last United States senator, Stanfield, wet, is running in fourth place, while the wet who sought the nomination for Governor was defeated four to one.

It has undoubtedly been a good week for prohibition. A dry senatorship was lost by a fluke in Pennsylvania, while on a fair vote a senatorship was gained in Oregon. There is no doubt that the eighteenth amendment is here to stay. All decent citizens will abide by it willingly and gladly. As for the others, the Constitution is mighty and will prevail.

Airplane Mail Service.—

Those who "can hardly wait for their letters," mostly, we suppose, lovers and people who think business is all, likely feel good over the rapid development of the air mail service. For that matter, everybody does. We like progress, and the air service promises it. How rapidly that branch of the postal service is growing may be seen in a news note in the New York Times. That paper tells its readers that the National Air Transport, Inc., put "mail trucks" on the Chicago-Dallas route, and cut the time to twelve hours. The schedule took two planes through Moline, St. Joseph, Kansas City, Wichita, Oklahoma City and Fort Worth. The machines weighed 3,500 pounds and were equipped with 400-horse power Liberty engines. They flew at a speed of 100 miles an hour. Letters mailed at New York will be delivered in Dallas the next day. On June 7th a contract service will be started between Chicago and Minneapolis. A letter posted in New York at 8 P. M. will reach St. Paul and Minneapolis before noon the following day. One hundred miles an hour seems to be a high rate of speed for the carriage of mail matter between Chicago and Dallas. But on March 18th mail pilots covered the distance between Chicago and New York, 726 miles, in four hours and thirty-five minutes, or at the rate of 158.04 miles an hour. A speed of 150 miles on all routes can be made where planes of the latest models are used.

Civilization and Science.—

Dr. Harlan, the principal speaker of Tuesday evening before the Medical College of Virginia, had as his subject, "Civilization and the Scientific Spirit."

Declaring that civilization is both an instinct and an achievement, he said, "those people who have not had high-powered, well-balanced instincts have been brushed backward into remote places in the march of civilization. The primitive man says civilization is not worth the trouble it costs. There are people today who fail to realize that civilization involves increasingly difficult tasks.

"The price of civilization," he continued, "is the sum total of all the efforts of men who have toiled and labored to bring about advancement—men who have put scientific advancement ahead of their personal comfort.

"Science has had a significant part in the building up of any civilization worthy of the name, and any disparagement or belittling of the functions of science in civilization is a great disservice to civilization itself.

"We in the South must learn not to heckle our scientists out of this part of the country. We must realize the need for more science and more freedom for men to study and examine everything in nature from the simplest to the most complex organism."

It was Dr. Harlan's opinion that the present is the verge of a truly enlightened age and that accomplishments of the past have prepared the way for truly startling progress in the future if science is not hampered.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Monday was all-day Memorial Day in the city.

Rev. H. E. Rountree was in the city the first of this week. He is much improved in health.

Dr. I. W. Johnson, of Suffolk, Va., was in Richmond Tuesday on a special errand, and made a brief call at THE SUN office.

A revival began at East LaGrange, Ga., Church Sunday, May 30th, and is to continue for two weeks, Rev. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., doing the preaching.

The report of the Special Financial Committee on Budget appears in this week's issue of THE SUN. It will be of interest to the committees who are to plan for its execution.

Mrs. J. W. Patton, of Elon College, while on a visit to Biltmore, N. C., met with a serious accident today a week ago, and had to be carried to hospital for treatment. She has since been removed to her home.

Rev. A. W. Andes is assisting Rev. M. T. Sorrell in evangelistic meetings in Carroll County, Va., having been with him the past week at Rocky Ford. Brother Sorrell reports that prospects are good for the meeting.

Brigadier General Barrett, of the Salvation Army, preached for Dr. C. C. Ryan last Sunday morning in First Christian Church. The congregation was well pleased. Dr. Ryan attended services at Wakefield in Rev. G. C. Crutchfield's charge. He returned in time to fill his pulpit at night.

THE SUN's editor is this week attending the Woman's Missionary Rallies in the Alabama Conference. Mrs. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Ala., is the president of the Woman's Board of this Conference, and is making persistent effort to organize a Missionary Society in every Church of this Conference; and if she, with the coworkers of her board, succeed in this, the Alabama Christian Conference will make and write a greater history in the future than it has ever in the past.

We acknowledge with gratitude the following: "Mr. and Mrs. John Edwin Corbitt invite you to be present at the marriage of their daughter, Margarite Christine, to Mr. Mills Allen Riddick, on Saturday P. M., 12th of June, at 7 o'clock. At home, Sunbury, N. C." We extend our best wishes to Miss Margarite, who since her graduation from Elon has been a most successful teacher at Cypress Chapel and Drivers, Va. She has a host of friends who will join us in this felicitation. Our congratulations are extended to Mr. Mills Allen Riddick.

Here is an example of love to mother and loyalty to Church that is worthy of emulation. "I am enclosing check for $25.00, this amount being subscribed by my mother for the Men and Millions Movement, through Holy Neck Christian Church, of which she was a member. She died in August, 1923, and as it was unpaid at that time I desire to pay it for her. With best wishes for your work." I have no doubt but that this daughter, devoted to her mother and Church, feels better for making this sacrifice in her mother's name and memory.

Every pastor and lay worker who attended the Southern Christian Convention at Durham, N. C., should begin at once to lend his influence and material aid to the carrying out and making effective the great plans inaugurated at this Convention.

The offerings on the Emergency Mission Fund are still coming in—the Churches but recently organized in North Alabama having sent in their offerings the past week. Only a very few Churches in all the Southern Convention have failed to report, and we have no doubt that these few have taken the offering and are waiting to add to it, or mean to do so yet. This is appreciated beyond measure.

CHRISTIAN SUN readers who know him will take genuine delight after this in writing it Doctor James H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va. Elon College, at its recent commencement, honored itself in conferring the degree of doctor of divinity upon this cultured and worthy brother. The college recognizes the constructive work, the honorable service and the accurate scholarship of this esteemed pastor, and does well to recognize his merit and achievement as a student, scholar and thinker.

A letter from "Uncle Wellons" May 27th says: "I was so much disappointed that I could not attend commencement this year. I did not think I was in condition to attend. Am so glad to learn that you had such a nice commencement and that all went well. I received a box of cherries forwarded me from Elon during commencement from Mrs. Dick Ayscue, of Henderson, N. C., and enjoyed them so much. It is good to be remembered by my dear friends."

Rev. W. M. Jay, D. D., will be welcomed as a valuable accession to the teaching force of Elon College. When previously working in the South as pastor of Holland, Va., Christian Church, Dr. Jay made a host of friends and built for himself an honored and enviable reputation. He has a large circle of acquaintances among the readers of THE SUN, and they will be glad to know that, with the beginning of the next school term, his lot is to be cast with us as one of the esteemed professors in our college faculty.

It is said that one of the most splendid gestures ever made in the interest of Church publicity will be effectively carried out at Philadelphia Sunday, June 20th. A hundred laymen and visiting clergy will occupy that many pulpits in the Centennial City, and their theme will be "Church Advertising." The annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World opens in Philadelphia the following morning, continuing until June 24th. Many of the Sunday speakers will be prominent advertising men—delegates to the convention. Others, clergymen who have made a success of Church publicity, and business men specializing in this line; the Church department of the convention will bring together speakers from all over the country, as well as their special conference in the chapel of the University of Pennsylvania Tuesday and Wednesday, June 23rd and 24th. Clergymen and laymen and women are welcome to attend these conferences.

PROF. FLOWERS IN FLORIDA.

To show their appreciation of Prof. A. R. Flowers for the great interest he has manifested in them, and the splendid lectures he has delivered, the young people, together with the senior and junior classes of Harmony Sunday School, at Dukes, Fla., pulled off a splendid social feature on the evening of May 25th, under the direction of Miss Pearl Brown, at the Brown home.

The time was spent in instructive social games, suggested mostly by Prof. Flowers, and carried out under the direction of Miss Pearl Brown and Miss Virginia Miller. Cream and cake were served in plenty and fully enjoyed by all present.

Just as the group was seated in waiting for refreshments, Miss Virginia Miller, daughter of Rev. G. F. Miller, Methodist minister, was asked for a toast, to which she responded in a splendid manner and with appropriate words. In substance, Miss Miller said: "Friends, this occasion is an expression of our appreciation for the interest that Prof. Flowers has shown in us. His lectures to us, and his gentle manner among us, both of which are second to none, merit our esteem and our good wishes. About five years ago, when many of us here this evening were but little more than children, Prof. Flowers spent about six months in our midst, and was our leader in Endeavor work. We learned then to esteem him as a real Christian gentleman, and, too, we learned that he was our friend, and this friendship has been kept alive all along through the passing years, for we have been reminded many, many times, by beautiful cards, bearing appropriate sentences and verses, which came from Prof. Flowers, in distant States, that we still live in his memory and in his best wishes. The past two weeks has served only to make us more certain of the abiding interest he has in us, and as he leaves us this evening we wish to reassure him of our growing appreciation. We shall think of him as a real constant friend, and as one who is ever ready to assist us in any way possible."

After Miss Miller's appropriate words we partook of the refreshments which had been made ready for the occasion; then shook hands with Prof. Flowers and returned to our homes.

MISS MAMIE HOWARD.

DR. JAY JOINS ELON FACULTY.

Dr. W. A. Harper,
Elon College, N. C.

My dear Dr. Harper:

The association instructed me to send you a copy of the resolutions adopted in appreciation of the services rendered by Rev. W. M. Jay, D. D.

Resolutions.

The Rev. W. M. Jay has been the able and efficient pastor of the Christian Church of Everett, Pa., for three years. At the time of assuming charge of his present pastorate, the Christian Church in Everett was at a very low ebb. Believing Everett to be a strategic point, the Christian Conference cast about for some "Moses" who could lead them out of this "wilderness." The task fell to the lot of the Rev. W. M. Jay. He gave himself to his task with dauntless courage. By his arduous labors and capable leadership the transformation that has taken place witnesses to the wisdom of the choice of those who were responsible for his coming to this charge.

His pleasing personality, his brotherliness, his able and scholarly sermons have evoked general commendation. The Sunday School has grown from a mere handful until now it taxes the capacity of the Church. The attendance on the preaching service compares with that of the Sunday School. Having wrought as a wise master builder in these accomplishments, he has won for himself widespread esteem.

We regret to note that by the middle of June we are to be deprived of his wise counsels and much-cherished fellowship. While we record our regret that he is leaving our midst, we shall cherish the memory of his friendship and follow him with our hearty good wishes for success in his new field of labor as a teacher in Elon College, N. C.

We also record our esteem of his cultured and estimable wife, Mrs. Jay, who has wrought side by side with her husband and has proven herself a true helpmeet.

Therefore, be it resolved, that we, the ministers of the ministerium of Everett, Pa., of which body the Rev. W. M. Jay was a member and served for one year as its honored president, express our appreciation of their excellent work in our midst and most heartily commend them to the faculty and students of Elon College, N. C.

GRADUATION.

Graduation time is here, and in every part of the country high school boys and girls are looking forward with eager expectation to the moment when they will be presented with that cherished diploma, which signifies that they have completed their work in high school. Is there ever a time when one feels more important than when he receives his diploma and knows that out in the audience his mother, father and best girl are looking at him with pride? No matter as to the accomplishments of later life, nor the subsequent honors conferred upon one, it is doubtful if any outstanding event later occurring in the human experience is longer or more fondly remembered than graduation night.

It is a changing point in the life of the boy or girl. Up to this time they have been carefully sheltered and the stumbling blocks pointed out. Even the majority of the courses in school have been chosen for them by some one else, and they have had to rely very little on themselves.

A certain number of the graduates will go to college to continue their studies. Others, through necessity or lack of ambition, will start out in life to earn their own living. Once away from the protection of their home, they soon realize that they must depend almost entirely upon their own initiative. The ones entering college find they must step down from the "lofty" position of high school seniors to that of "lowly" freshmen, whose ignorance and incompetence are duly impressed on them by the "mighty" sophomores. They learn that they must rely upon their own ability, and the degree of success that they attain largely depends on the preparation they received in high school. If they have been imbued with the right principles, inculcated with lofty ideals, inspired with ambition, the temptations that arise are quickly overcome and the progress of the student is assured.

Those who for various reasons do not enter college find practically the same thing true. As the others are freshmen in college they are freshmen in the "university of life," where honesty, character and hard work are the principles which lead to success. If they are to graduate with honors from this university, the foundation which they received earlier must necessarily have been of the best material possible.

Since the future of the nation is dependent on these students that are now graduating; since they are the ones who must guide the progress of our country in later years, it should be the paramount thought of every citizen to furnish them with the best possible advantages, to the end that they may be inculcated with the principles of altruism and patriotism, so that the continuation of American ideals shall be assured.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

ELON COMMENCEMENT.

Elon commencement is an event in our Church life, and marks the years in our educational progress and development. Tuesday, May 25th, closed the thirty-sixth annual event, and with it thirty-two of our fine young men and young women went back to their homes, communities and Churches with their diplomas in their possession and four years of college training in their minds and hearts. It has cost the Church many thousands of dollars over and above what these young people have paid as individuals, or their parents have paid for them, to give them this training and equipment. No young man or woman pays by half what it costs at college to teach and train; and either the Church or the State must pay the rest. However, both the Church and the State have long since discovered that it is an investment well made, doubly so when these young people devote their time and talent, when so trained, to the constructive work of learning, of morals and of religion. As these thirty-two young men and young women go back to the State and Church from which they came and which bore such a large part in the expense of their training, they will more than repay for all that their training has cost, provided they lend themselves, with energy and soul, to the upbuilding of character and the shaping of the destiny of others. "Christian character first and always" should be not only the slogan of an institution, but of life, for in no other way can one discharge the debt one owes to society.

Three of the graduates are ministers of the Christian Church, two of whom are already in the pastorate, the third being ready now to take a pastorate. Several others of the class will give their entire times to religious activities. Their worth and weight in the Christian world should, and in all probability will, be of inestimable value in the constructive work of the kingdom.

Elsewhere in THE SUN a report of the exercises for commencement is given. The report, however accurate and elaborate, can in no measure portray the meaning of commencement and the value of another year's training to the fine young men and young women who came to Elon College and spent the months here in pursuit of knowledge and the development of character. In the thirty-six years of our college history some of the outstanding leaders of the Church at the present have graduated and gone into the active work of the Church, and all Church activity has been quickened into renewed and more intelligent activity for kingdom service.

The outstanding features of the college commencement are the baccalaureate sermon, the baccalaureate address, literary address, the alumni address and the speakers of the graduating class on commencement day. All of these this year measured up to the high standards of previous years, and added more stars to the glorious crown which loyal Christians have lovingly placed on the brow of Alma Mater—Elon College—our Elon.

THE CHURCH AS A GENEROUS INSTITUTION.

The Church is the most generous institution among men, when all tests are applied. By such tests is meant the relation of the Church to all other human interests and conditions. In fact, most of the other generous institutions are the product of the Church. Even the Christian State is the child of Christianity. Some of the evidences of the Church as a generous institution may be presented as proof of such a claim.

It is more generous in its attitude toward the world. Its doors are open wider, its welcome is more universal, its interest less selfish, and its love larger than any other human institution. It not only welcomes the world, but, like its founder, seeks the world. In this respect it is not partial. It does not seek the rich, the learned, the influential, but all sorts and conditions. Its secrets are open to all who will come and accept Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour. Lodges, clubs, social circles, financial institutions are not open to all; but the Church doors are open to all. Its meetings are open, its privileges are free, its altars are invitations, and its ministers extend the glad hand to all who will enter its doors and accept its welcome.

The attitude of the Church toward its members is parental. It is home for the family of believers. No preferences, no exclusions, no pride, no stinginess, no ill will; but the motherly heart, the fatherly protection, the brotherly associations, and the place of rest for tired and worried pilgrims. No other institution exercises toward its members such patience, such forbearance, such tolerance, such forgiveness. The Church is as tender as a mother, as indulgent as a father, and as friendly as a brother or sister. There is not such liberty anywhere as members of the Church enjoy, though they often abuse it. Nothing flows from the altar of the true Church to corrupt or defile its members. Its moral standards are the highest, its spiritual character is the purest, and its purposes are the sincerest known to mankind.

In its attitude toward thought, it encourages investigation, personal convictions, individual liberty, and all efforts at progress. True science is her daughter, and all research after truth has her sanction. The greatest scientists have been her defenders, and her severest critics have aroused her to deeper study and more loyal allegiance. The Church as an institution is tolerant of honest effort to discover and propagate truth. Think is one of her big words, and thought is one of her big assets. She is not afraid of thought, but she is afraid of indifference. Jesus asked, "What think ye of Christ?" (Matt. 22:42.) After naming six good things, Paul said: "Think on these things." (Phil. 4:8.)

In its contributions to human need, the Church is generous in its plans, its services, its financial support, and its auxiliary institutions, such as hospitals, orphanages, old people's homes, and help for the poor. According to its means, it gives more good instruction, more sympathy, more money, more flowers and more love than any other human organization. Whenever any independent benevolent organization is created, and they need money, they make their first appeal to the Church. The Church contains more poor members than any other organization, and yet she responds more liberally to human necessity and all sympathetic appeals. Her response is most generous, and she lives upon what she gives.

ORTHODOXY OF HEART.

Orthodoxy has been defined as "my doxy," and heterodoxy as "your doxy." Usually the trouble about any sort of "doxy" is that it is made a "doxy" of the head and not of the heart. Our time seems to be peculiarly affected by the "doxy" of the head. We have shifted the emphasis of religion from the heart, where it belongs, to the head, where it usually gets in trouble.

Now, the chief glory of the Bible, as well as the supreme strength of Christ, is the fact that the chief place is given to the heart.

Deut. 6:5—"Thou shalt love Jehovah thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might."

Matt. 22:37—"And He said unto him, thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind."

Lev. 19:18—"But thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself; I am Jehovah."

Matt. 22:39—"And a second like unto it is this, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

John 13:34-35—"A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; even as I have loved you; that you also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another."

Now, there is orthodoxy for you. If one loves God supremely, that is orthodoxy toward God. If one loves "thy neighbor as thyself," that is orthodoxy towards one's neighbor. If we love one another as He loved us, that is orthodoxy toward all mankind. And this orthodoxy is in each instance based on love.

The circuit court of Christianity may be the head; but the supreme court is the heart. "So a man thinketh in his heart, so is he * * *"—not in his head, which today has one thought and tomorrow another; but in his heart, the depths and soul of him which speaks.

REASON OR RATIONALIZE.

It makes all the difference in the world whether we approach the problems of life as persons who reason or rationalize. The reasoner is open-minded, broad-minded, and looks every situation clearly in the face, the while he searches for its inner meaning. His conclusions are tentative and subject to readjustment as new facts and experiences arise.

The rationalizer, on the other hand, adopts certain attitudes and concepts and looks for facts and experiences to justify them. If facts and experiences arise that collide with his tenets, he rejects them and brands those who accept them at their face value as dupes, fools, and heretics.

There comes a time in almost every man's experience when he becomes "fixed" in his concepts and attitudes. Living after that is an amassing of evidence in their support and the enjoyment of the "fixities" of the heart. But youth is not thus situated. The conservatives of age are the radicals of youth. Time and experience and responsibility change the tendency to reason into the tendency to rationalize for most of us.

Age finds it hard to understand youth because their methods of approaching life and its issues are different. It would be a wonderful asset for the race of men if age did not change reason into rationalization. Does the Holy Spirit find the heart's door of age locked when He seeks admission? It is the mission of the Spirit to lead men into all truth. We should be alert not to block that potential leadership, either in ourselves or in others.

Those adults who are able to maintain continuously the attitude of reason with reference to life have been the prophets, the inventors, the builders, the positive statesmen in human development and progress. The rationalizers have added nothing in advance of what they have received. They serve a useful purpose, that of enabling the race to continue its existence; but progress and achievement have always come in spite of them. And, too, those who are most strenuous in rationalizing their views and attitudes have the least support, generally speaking, for those views and attitudes. Truth does not need defense—it needs only proclamation.

THE PERNICIOUSNESS OF DOGMATISM.

Dogmatism is the most audacious and incidious foe that human progress encounters. It locks the door of the mind to all new truth. With smug complacency, its victims declare their superiority over all others. This bane to social comity builds insurmountable barriers between individuals and between groups. It refuses to concede any truth outside its own pre-emption. It brands as untrue, if not ridiculous, every idea and every principle which is not in agreement with its declarations.

Dogmatism and positivism are not synonymous. The positivist, like the Apostle Paul "knows" what he believes and why he believes it. All dogmatists are positivists, but all positivists are not dogmatists. The positivist may be a dogmatist, but on the other hand he may not be. Every Christian teacher and every minister of the gospel should be a positivist—he should "know in whom he believes." He should know what he believes, and why. But to be positive in one's faith does not require that one shall be dogmatic. Far from it. The dogmatist is one who not only thinks that he is right, but who insists that every one who does not agree with him is wrong. The dogmatist tries to force his opinions upon everybody else. He mistakes opinion for faith. He sees the world through the glasses of his own personal prejudices, forgetting that no one else can use the same glasses.

Thus the dogmatic attitude of mind has pitted brother against brother, parent against child, friend against friend, and group against group. Unconsciously every victim of dogmatism pits himself squarely against the larger realizations of society.

Dogmatism permits no investigation that in any way endangers its position.

Theological dogmatism locks with suspicion upon all who do not embrace its dictums, and brands all its opponents with the stigma of "unorthodox," "irreligious," "insincere," "unenlightened," "untruthful," "unsafe," "traitorous," "dangerous," "contemptible," "malicious," etc. ad infinitum. The dogmatic attitude of mind even in religion is thus unbrotherly, unsocial, and un-Christian, regardless of whatever claims it may make to being the divinely ordained defense of truth.

Dogmatism has thwarted the progress of the Church in every generation. It has repelled thousands of noble truth-seeking souls from the fellowship of the Church down through the centuries. The darkest days of the dark ages were when the arrogancies of theological dogmas were at their height.

No student of Church history can fail to recognize the pernicious opposition theological dogmatism has made against the advancement of scientific knowledge. Because of lack of appreciation of the possibilities and testimonies of science, leaders in the Church a few generations ago opposed scientific investigations and forbade all pronouncements of scientific discovery that in any way contradicted the time-worn dogmas of the Church. For centuries, any discovery in science was made at the peril of the discoverer's life.

The dogmas of the Church were final. In order to be orthodox, one was compelled to accept without questioning and without any mental reservation anything and everything that was taught by the Church. The theological scepter held absolute sway over the thought life of the world. The dogmas of the Church dared not be refuted. Men were afraid to investigate or question the dogmas of theology for fear of excommunication from the Church, and because of the danger of being repudiated even by society itself. It was a mark of piety and good breeding for one to accept in toto every theological dogma pronounced.

Naturally a reaction against such a state of mental subservience was bound to come. The light of scientific truth could no longer be suppressed. Men refused to close their minds to new truth. As the truth of science was revealed, these truths were compared with the dogmas of theology. When the dogmas of theology did not square with the proved facts discovered by science, men gradually had courage to disclaim the validity of these dogmas. When some of the theological dogmas that were claimed to be infallible were proved to be untenable, men began to question the validity of every declaration of theology, to ascertain which were based upon truth, and which were based upon tradition. Finally, even theologians themselves, and conscientious, open-minded laymen refused to accept any theological pronouncement that would not stand the scrutiny of scientific investigation. And all this we believe to have been fitting and proper.

But many scholars of religion have so reacted against the conservative dogmatism in theology that they have swung to the opposite extreme of liberal dogmatism. One can be just as dogmatic in his liberal views as one can be in his conservative views. And one type of dogmatism is equally as pernicious as the other. Open-mindedness, charity and tolerance are the only safeguard of the Church and the only basis of progress in religious thought and life.

However, there is another type of dogmatism that is even more sinister and more pernicious than either of the forms of dogmatism in theology, and the tragedy of the whole situation is that the victims of this type of dogmatism are absolutely unconscious of their attitude, and its dangers. The dogmatism referred to is the dogmatism of science.

No theological dogma has claim to our endorsement merely because it has been handed down to us from the past. No teaching of the Church has demand of our acceptance merely because it has been thought to be of fundamental consequence in the history of a creed. No teaching of Christianity has claim to our allegiance that cannot prove its authenticity in the light of investigation, and that cannot demonstrate its merits and its value in the crucible of human experience. Human experience must ever be the final test of all truth, whether in the realm of theology or of science.

It is difficult to understand how any one who reads and who thinks can fail to appreciate the benefit of the scientific attitude of mind in theology, the whole has reduced theology to an empirical science. And yet that very attitude of mind which has saved society from the thralldom of ecclesiastical tyranny and theological misjudgments and superstitions, has led us into another situation which is equally obnoxious and indefensible, namely: the thralldom of scientific bigotry and materialistic insanity.

Science declared that dogmatism in religion was inconsistent and unscholarly in demanding that its teachings be accepted without question and without investigation. And science was right in its protest. There was no reason why students should not turn the searchlight of investigation upon every teaching of religion. Any teaching in whatever realm that cannot bear the light of investigation ought speedily to be discarded. And no one should call himself a student who lacks the interest that prompts him to investigate for himself.

That is where many students of science today are making the same blunder for which the students of theology a generation ago were criticized. Theological dogmatism brazenly and unpardonably declared any one to be unorthodox if not irreligious, who did not accept its dictums. Our college and university students rightly rebelled against such intellectual tyranny, and refused to accept anything given in the name of religion or theology without first investigating it from every angle, as the dogmatism of the Church had caused them to be sceptical toward everything that was offered in the name of religion or theology. The same is true of our college and university students today. They should not be criticised for exercising this attitude, because it is the natural attitude of the student, exercising the God-implemented instinct of inquiry. Every subject worth studying ought to welcome investigation. Every subject worthy of one's consideration will bear the most rigid and the most scrutinious research. Religious teachings should take their chance along with those of every other field of thought. Religious truth will bear any and all investigation. It has no fear. It is its own defense.

But the students and many of the professors in our colleges and universities today are inconsistent in their questioning everything given in the name of religion and theology, unless they likewise question everything given in the name of science. They have a right to do both and should do both. There is no excuse for them not to be just as closely and just as sceptically critical of what is offered them in the name of science as they are of what is offered them in the name of theology.

The pathetic thing of it all is that just as dogmatic theology in the past branded its questioners as unorthodox and irreligious, so dogmatic science today brands its questioners as unscientific and unscholarly. As in the former case, many questioners of the theological dogmas proved themselves to be the most religious because they were most determined to ascertain the truth, so may it not be today that the questioners of the dogmatism of science may be the most scientific and the most scholarly in their demand to know the truth. What right has any one to pose as a student of science and accept any pronouncement of science without applying the scientific attitude of mind in investigating its authenticity? True, the laboratory makes this challenge, and furnishes this opportunity. But think of the hundreds and thousands of propositions made in the name of science that every college student is expected to accept as self-evident or as satisfactorily demonstrated truths, without any question whatsoever.

Many professors of science would laugh out of court any student in their class-room who would

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Intuition is the act of seeing truth without the aid of reason; logic is the science of accurate perception of truth through a process of reason. Intuition is more primitive and more universal than logic, and, no doubt, safer as far as it goes. The most primitive people knew that the ocean would drown those who went too far into it; but they did not know that steamers could be constructed to carry people and products from one land to another. Intuitive opinions are more positive than the opinions of reason, and that is why it is more difficult to reason with uneducated people. Before the days of co-education, women were firmer in their convictions, and clearer in their statements than men; education has put them more on a par with men. That accounts for the change of views with reference to government in the home.

In the early days, right was right, and wrong was wrong, in home authority. Obedience was the law. "Do this, and not do that" controlled. Now mother reasons with her child. "Is this right?" "Is that wrong?" That law applies to the school and the State. Government was originally autocratic, because home-life was autocratic. The tendency is toward democratic life in the home and democratic government in the State. The home and the State act and react in each other through the Church and the school. In fact, the Bible Church, in its Old Testament and New Testament history, reveals this very situation. The ten commandments was the heart of the Jewish Church: "Thou shalt and thou shalt not" was the rule of life. Jesus Christ is the heart of the Christian Church: "follow me." It shifts from a law to a person; from a rule to a life. Under the old order, children were obedient; but were they better? Were their own powers more capable of deciding, choosing and acting in their relation to others? Obedience is one thing, choice is another. Inmates of a prison obey; members of society choose. Obedience to law determines outward conduct; choice determines inward character. Schools and Churches are largely responsible for correct moral and spiritual teaching in this present age; and the personal in these institutions is the most important teacher. The essential thing in Christianity is personality. Jesus said: "Follow me." That includes all that enters into Christian characters, which is crystalized Christian life. It is more to follow Jesus than to keep the commandments; though one cannot follow Him without keeping them.

The chief thing in parents is not to issue laws, but to set an example. Human beings are like sheep; they will follow others rather than obey rules. Advancing civilization creates a larger world and it requires a more intelligent Christian life to fill the true place of an individual than it did when people lived in small neighborhoods, came in contact with few people, and when temptations were few compared with this complex age and new moral questions. Intuition is better than logic, but it cannot take in the progress of this century. The question is not whether children and grown people do as they did a generation ago; but whether they are adjusted to the conditions of this age as well as they were adjusted to the age of which you are thinking. The increase of population, as well as the increase of conditions, must be considered in trying to arrive at a fair conclusion as to the social, moral, financial and religious life of this generation.

ELON LETTER.

"The builder of the universe is God." So declares the author of Hebrews in the fourth verse of the third chapter. The building is not yet completed. We have only to look around us to discover the verity of this situation. Change goes on all the time and everywhere. Some of this change we observe and some has to be revealed to us by powerful microscopes or telescopes. The scientist tells us unequivocally that the world is not in state of stable equilibrium, and it never will be.

Jesus, the spiritual Prince, witnesses the same thing. He says, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." God has not deserted His world nor His children. Jesus also indicates His love for us when He tells us, in what I regard as the greatest verse in the Bible: "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life." God loves the world He is building. What a glorious thought this is!

The opening sentence in Genesis says: "In the beginning God created." He caused the world and all that in it is to be, and He has been building it into a better world by His own methods of work and His loving concern ever since. There is no evidence or reason to believe He will ever cease to improve it or to love it.

It is an inspiration to me to think of my Heavenly Father as creator and builder of the universe and of the honor He confers on me and my brethren through sharing with us the responsibility of improving and saving the world He created, is building, and passionately loves. And I have the hope, the conviction, that in the world to come I shall have opportunity through His beneficence and love and gracious provision of continual growth and development. So this life is a service challenge to us, and the life to come is a larger door to a service we cannot now comprehend. But we can be satisfied, because we shall awake in His likeness.

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The thirty-sixth annual commencement exercises of Elon College began May 22 with the usual commencement musical concert. The musical feature of the commencement program this year was a piano ensemble concert, in which sixteen players performed at one time. Special numbers were rendered by Miss Mary Addie White at the organ, and Mr. David B. Harrell at the piano.

Three appearances were made by the piano ensemble, two numbers being given in each group, "Waltz and Chorus from Faust," by Gounod, and "Bridal Song" by Jensen, composing the first group. Two numbers by Schubert, "Ballet Music" and "Military March," composed the second group, and the "Grand Valse de Concert" and "Marche Slave," by Tschaiikowsky, closing the concert. This is the first time a piano ensemble has been heard at Elon College, and drew special interest, and under the direction of Professor Velie of the music department it proved a decided success.

The students taking part in the ensemble concert were Bruce Cates, Susie Elder, Elizabeth Gatewood, Annie Ruth Harden, Maxine Holmes, Edith Holt, Agnes Judd, Ruth Klapp, Edith Lockey, Kathleen Paschall, Hallie Stanfield, Pauline Schoffner, Alyse Smith, Mary Stout, Mary Addie White, Mildred Walters, and David B. Harrell.

Student marshals chosen from the literary societies are assisting in handling the large number of alumni and friends at the college for the commencement services. These marshals are M. A. McLeod, David Harrell, Fernando Bello, Alberta Atkinson, Alma Rountree, Emma Wrenn, E. W. Auman, Hermon Edge, Estelle Kelly, and Esther Brookshire. The services are being held in the Whitley Memorial Auditorium Building, and though this building accommodates a large audience, it was taxed to its capacity the first night and is expected to be filled for all occasions for the next three days.

The second day of the Elon College commencement, which was baccalaureate day, began with the sermon, "At the Point of Destiny," by Rev. Raymond G. Clark, B. D., Huntington, Ind., pastor of the First Christian Church there, at the morning service. A special organ vesper service was held in the afternoon by Prof. C. J. Velie, and President W. A. Harper spoke at the evening service on the subject "Spiritual Athletes."

President Harper presided over the morning service and introduced the speaker, saying that Rev. Clark had made a splendid record at Yale University as a student in biblical literature, and is doing a wonderful work at Huntington. He also spoke of his work as chairman of the Commission on Education of the General Convention of the Christian Church, and his activity in all denominational matters. Special music was rendered at this service by the music faculty at the college.

Rev. Clark, in his baccalaureate sermon, used the Scripture text Matt. 26:39, "And He went forward a little." He said in the introduction of his sermon, entitled "At the Point of Destiny," that the destiny of the race belongs to the few. Moments of rare anxiety come to all peoples. Somebody has to make a decision of far-reaching significance, and upon such decisions hangs the destiny of the masses.

The preacher discussed three prominent points of destiny—the question of discipline, the point of destiny in social contacts, and the point of religious destiny. In speaking of the question of discipline, he said: "We have gone about the problem of discipline in various ways. Once monarchy was the method. It stifled the initiative elements of life, and thus delayed progress. For a considerable time the American nation has been trying to discipline its citizens by making laws and by law enforcement. Eradication and annihilation have crept into our philosophy of government. We have sent men to jail, penitentiaries and put a few of the worst to death. Now, many of these institutions are filled, and the crime wave remains unabated. The nation needs some men to teach her that crime cannot be prevented neither by law making nor the enforcement of law alone. Since this is the case, another set of radicals have cried, 'Away with law and order!' We must still have laws and enforce them, but we need a law teacher to show us how to write principles of conduct upon the hearts of our children.

"Our dim visions of religious education all need to be nurtured. Moses wrote a song and taught it to the children of Israel and prophets came out of Israel. The religion of the Hebrews depended upon educational methods."

In his second point, Rev. Mr. Clark declared we hear a constant demand for leaders. "Let these new-hailed leaders not forget," he said, "that they must live one half their lives in advance of the age. Leadership cannot be disjoined from the masses. Leadership is fellowship.

"Most college students are thought to be impractical. The world looks at them with eyes that resemble twin moons. We have, by our institutional life, kept them apart from the world by a philosophy which says, 'When you get out into life.'

"There is a most pitiful lack on the part of clergymen and teachers in the art of making social contacts. The minister neglects his calling, while most teachers teach subjects and ignore students unduly."

And in his third point, that of religious destiny, Rev. Clark stated that "The Church today is facing a serious problem of employment. People become good, bad or indifferent because the Church employs, or fails to employ their good impulses. Knowledge of God and the Bible and good will may be disastrous unless we major in skillful living. The pulpit flames must not die. The need was never greater. Religious education is not a substitute for voice culture, physical fitness and truth searching on the part of the modern clergymen. There are undiscovered deeps in the Bible. The world needs some young prophets to come to this point of destiny."

And in conclusion he asked, "Where can we look for men to guide our destiny, if not to the Christian college? Every leader must live ahead, and often alone," he said. "The three with Jesus didn't go all the way. The situation is not changed for us. No son of Elon has gotten the most significant thing Elon has to give if he leaves here without the imprint of Jesus Christ upon his life."

The vesper organ recital in the afternoon was well attended, and concludes these monthly vesper services for the present year. Prof. Velie used eight selections in this service, and his performance on the four-manual Skinner organ was indeed pleasing to the audience. "Solemn Prelude," by Noble, opened the service, and "Early Morn," by Bartlett, followed. "Meditation," "At Twilight," and "Eventide" were especially beautiful in his rendition.

The subject of President Harper's baccalaureate address tonight was "Spiritual Athletes," and he chose as a text for this discussion 1 Tim. 4:7, "Exercise thyself unto godliness." As introducing his message, he said: "There is no problem before the American public today more important than the use of leisure. We used to say that five institutions embraced all the interests of life—the home, the Church, the school, industry, and government. We have learned, however, in these latter days that there is a further institution with wonderful possibilities of uplift or the opposite for the individual life and for the social order. This sixth institution is leisure, and the most important item of our leisure time is concerned with athletics, sport and the various forms of amusement, entertainment, and recreation."

He confined his remarks chiefly to the athletic situation, saying that the indication is that we face a time of reconstruction in college athletic policies. He mentioned the very unfavorable report of the American Association of University Professors regarding athletics in college and other groups for college men—criticisms so sweeping in nature as to cause concern as to whether athletics might not eventually be eliminated from the college life if drastic reorganization is not had. His opinion was that it would be a regrettable loss to outlaw athletics from the college curriculum, and that it was his conviction that they were entitled to a worthy place. He credited the overemphasis of the athletic situation to the fact that college presidents and professors in the past had considered the leisure hours of their students as of too little importance to engage their attention, and that the real need now is that those who are charged with the responsibility for creating and administering the college curricula should appreciate the paramount importance of the students' leisure time and of athletics as constituting an important item in that time.

He catalogued the advantages of athletics to the college and students as loyalty of alumni and students, rigid training, co-operation, teaching of sacrifice, and playing the game according to the rules. He was particularly concerned with the methods by which the advantages could be conserved in the life of the college and students, and said that is why he chose the subject "Spiritual Athletes," for his address.

"First among the foundation qualities of a spiritual athlete," he said, "I would place the necessity for a strong and vigorous and pure physical life. The spiritual athlete, in the second place, dares not neglect his mind. The social gospel, and the spiritual interests of men, are the other two requisites."

"Continually train yourself for the contest of godliness," was Dr. Harper's last message to the present senior class. "Exercise yourselves, build yourselves up physically, mentally, socially, and spiritually, let the emphasis, the motive, the purpose of your life be on the concluding phrase of Paul's fine sentiment, 'Unto godliness.' In this way you will become true spiritual athletes with the ability to play the game of life with satisfaction to yourselves, with profit and uplift to your fellows, and with the approval of Christ Himself upon all you undertake and achieve. Colleges, too, will have nothing to fear, and everything to gain, from athletics, which includes the proportionate development of the fourfold life, the life that increases in wisdom and in stature, and in favor with God and man."

The alumni banquet, and the alumni oration by Prof. H. Babcock, of the class of 1918, Williamsburg, Va., featured the second day of the Elon College finals. Two hundred alumni returned to the college this commencement for the banquet and alumni reunion. This number is about one-third the total alumni.

Prof. Babcock spoke on the subject, "How Liberal May a Liberal Education Be?" Since his graduation from Elon College in 1918 with the A. B. degree, Prof. Babcock has received his Ph.D. degree from the University of Virginia, and is now professor of English and journalism at William and Mary College, holding the William Parks chair of journalism.

"The American college has been dehumanized and deromanticized," stated Prof. Babcock in the outset of his address. He emphasized the fact that the colleges have been reduced to a mechanical efficiency, and are, therefore, accompanied by all the ills which accompany so-called big business.

"We have succeeded in making culture hum," he continued; "but we cannot grow poets and artists and novelists in such an atmosphere. Creative genius is developed in an atmosphere of leisure and reflection."

Prof. Babcock deplored the incessant demands on the vitality and time of the students by organized work and play, with the resulting consequence of inferior academic work. "Colleges appear to have lost the power of inspiring students," he charged, and stated that "Every good course should be infectious, inspiring a desire for more. There is a great lack in American academic life—there is lacking the unreckoning generousities and the real enthusiasms, the richness and the fullness of life that goes with the pursuit of some compelling ideal—there is lacking a Holy Grail, an El Dorado, a beckoning gleam. A man's reach should exceed his grasp of what's a college for."

He laid particular stress upon the work of the small college, and a quotation from this part of his oration serves to give his direct conviction in this line. "The small college that has the courship and academic chivalry."

"A public education is a public responsibility, a public trust," continued Prof. Babcock. "The college graduate has given an 'I O U' to society, and ought to redeem that pledge as soon as possible. The willingness and the capacity of a man to make some return to society is a measure of that man's eligibility to receive an education. An education is not a private fortune that may be exploited or squandered with impunity."

Prof. Babcock closed his address with a splendid tribute to President Harper, of Elon College, in these words: "The famous dictum, 'an institution is the lengthened shadow of one man,' is magnificently illustrated in the case of Elon College—the lengthened shadow of Dr. W. A. Harper and a measurable evidence of his contributions to higher education."

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle acted as toastmaster for the banquet. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, gave the invocation. Prof. J. W. Barney, president of the local unit of the alumni, gave the address of welcome, which was responded to by Col. J. E. West on behalf of the trustees, and by Dr. W. D. Harward on behalf of the alumni.

A business session was held in conjunction with the banquet, with Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va., president of the Alumni Association, presiding. Two very interesting and entertaining features of the banquet were the reading by Miss Eunice Rich, of Graham, and a vocal solo by Miss Mary D. Atkinson, of Elon College.

In the afternoon the literary society representatives gave their orations and essays as follows: H. Richardson, "Armageddon's Hero"; Kathleen Paschall, "The Silver Cord"; D. M. Spence, "Opportunity"; Marie Nobles, "Flapping Wings"; Alice F. Baldwin, "Glimpse of Fairyland"; Robert Hook, "The Challenge"; Judith Black, "Dreams," and J. D. Gorrell, "Mother." During the service, Miss Shoope gave two violin solos—"Romance," by Viouxtemps, and "Polichinelle," by Kreisler. The speakers in this program represented the various literary societies of the college and spoke in competition for honors.

The board of trustees met in annual session at 10 o'clock and were in session during the day.

For the morning session of the commencement program the senior class held its class day exercises, which consisted of a welcome address by W. A. Lindley, Saxapahaw, N. C., president of the class; their history by Miss Arline Lindsay, the class poem by Miss Lillie Horne, the class prophecy by Geo. D. Colclough, the last will and testament by E. C. Brady, the delivery of trophies by Lyde Bingham, and the delivery of the senior man to the juniors by W. L. McLeod. Mr. E. W. Auman received the mantle on behalf of the junior class.

The officers of the class are W. A. Lindley, president; Margaret Joe Ballentine, Fuquay Springs, vice-president; Lyde Bingham, Farmer, N. C., secretary, and T. V. Huey, Roanoke, Ala., treasurer. The class has thirty-four members.

A very interesting feature to the many visitors for the commencement occasion was the splendid exhibit of the domestic art and fine arts students in the Literary Society in the Alameda Building. On display there was a great collection of paintings, chinaware, dresses, and fancy work that the students had made during the session. Miss Deloris Morrow and Miss Lila Newman, teachers of these subjects, were in charge of the exhibit.

The conferring of degrees and the literary address by Dean Shailer Mathews, of Chicago, dean of the divinity school of Chicago University, brought to a close the four-day session of the thirty-sixth annual commencement exercises of Elon College this morning. The ball game with the University of North Carolina in the afternoon completed all activities for the year, and the students and visitors have all left for their homes.

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

President W. A. Harper introduced Dean Mathews as an educator and editor, and as a writer of many books on history and religion. We recalled the McNair lectures which Dr. Mathews gave at the University of North Carolina in 1918.

Preceding the literary address, six members of the senior class spoke in competition for medals, the young ladies giving essays and the men orations. Homer L. Two honorary degrees, that of Lit. D., on B. B. Dougherty, Boone, N. C., for distinguished work at the Appalachian Training School, and the D. D. degree, upon Rev. James H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va., were conferred by the board of trustees at the commencement exercises this morning.

Dr. Shailer Mathews, in giving the literary address on this occasion, spoke on "The Moral Tasks of Youth." The tasks he discussed were the building up of a morality in these days of equality, the building up of morality in the exploitation of the natural resources, and the building of a morality among the relationship of nations.

Dr. Mathews stated that the students today were busy about these tasks, and the situation now was one of creating equality. He described the underlying principles of change in social customs and ideals, balancing the old against the new, stating that the change had come only within the lives of the older people, and that the younger generation accepted conditions as they found them without any understanding of the preceding conditions.

He stated that the situation today had been made by the older generation, and not by the new. That the older generation had handed down the liberty which the youth of the country enjoys today, but that the youth would now begin to build a liberty of their own and to make the rules and customs of the social order. "Morality," he said, "had been handed down by the ruling classes," but that in the future morality must be built up by the peoples who live under those customs.

In speaking of the exploitation of the natural resources, he said that each invention and discovery led to further power, and that we have not reached the point to understand how to use all the power in the natural world that we have discovered; that humanity was not good enough to utilize it to its highest purposes, and that nations and peoples have not come to the point where they can see national problems unbiased.

He had no fear but that the youth of today would readily and satisfactorily adjust itself to right attitudes toward these questions. He charged the class with the responsibility of each member toward those ends, and stated that there is nothing greater than in helping make the world and the social order better and passing it on to the coming generation.

Honors won by students at the commencement were: Stanford orator's medal, by G. D. Colclough, Durham, N. C.; Moffitt essayist medal, by Miss Lyda Bingham, Farmer, N. C.; the J. J. Summerbell scholarship, by Miss Gladys Yates, Suffolk, Va.; the scholarship medal, by Miss Ruth Crawford, Mebane, N. C., and the thesis medal, by E. C. Brady, Bennett, N. C.

The alumni in their business session elected the following officers of the Alumni Association for the coming year: Rev. F. C. Lester, Franklin, Va., president; Rev. O. D. Poythress, Norfolk, Va., vice-president; Miss Pattie Coghill, Henderson, N. C., secretary and treasurer; Mr. R. T. Bradford, Suffolk, Va., alumni speaker, and J. L. Crumpton, Winston-Salem, N. C., alternate.

An item of especial interest for the final service of the commencement was greetings sent from Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., who is 101 years old, and who has not missed a meeting of the board of trustees of Elon College or the commencement exercises in thirty-six years until this year, when his feeble health would not permit him to come from Greensboro to the college. His greeting was brought to the friends by President W. A. Harper. Dr. J. O. Atkinson offered prayer in thanks of the life and service of this man.

THE educational opportunities for the boys and girls of the South are keeping pace with the leadership of the South in the economic progress of the Nation. This is seen in the following facts:

In the last twelve years more than $125,000,000 has been spent for the construction of new school buildings in the states of the South served by the Southern.

In 1900 there were less than 73,000 school teachers in the states of the South served by the Southern, and the appropriation for education amounted to only 90 cents per person living in these states. In 1922 the appropriation was $6.85 per person, and the number of trained teachers had increased to 139,309.

In 1900 only 64.8 percent of the children of school age in these states attended school, while the average for the nation as a whole was 72.4 per cent. But in 1922, the latest year for which complete figures are available, 81.4 per cent of the children in the states of the South served by the Southern attended school, while the average for the nation as a whole was 81.2 per cent.

The growth in the educational facilities of the South, as well as the number of children that can take advantage of them, is one of the fortunate and direct results of the prosperity that has come to the South.

The Southern Railway System has contributed to the prosperity of the South, as a tax-payer, as a large employer of men and women—and as the transportation agency which carries Southern commerce to and from world markets, regularly, dependably and economically.

MONDAY.

THE MORNING MESSENGER.

"Hast thou commanded the morning?"—Job 38:12-15.

These lines—"Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty! early in the morning our song shall rise to Thee"—which are particularly appropriate for the opening of morning worship, set forth the value and joy of sacred song early in the day.

Time is born anew every morning. Rev. Thomas Nightingale reminded a London congregation of this when he preached from Job 38:12-13.

He used as an illustration the summons of the wake-up in Lancashire factory towns. "He goes and tingles at the windows," said the preacher, "and soon we hear the music of a thousand clogs (wooden shoes) as the workers hasten to the mills. Similarly our 'divine messenger' comes every morning, tingles at our windows and calls us to duty."

"The morning is the time to stamp the day with specific intention and determine what mark it shall bear. When this is done, in thought or prayer, and a man with new alertness and new precision faces his work, then he commands the morning."

Early in the morning, the householder went out to hire laborers (Matt. 20:1). In the early morning our Lord arose, went forth "into a solitary place, and there prayed" (Mark 1:35).

Prayer.—"Sustaining sleep, O Lord, has refreshed us, and once more we come in its renewing to ask for the continued proof of Thy daylight gifts. As we go out to our appointed tasks, let us take with us the joy of Thy complete kindness, for without Thee we shall walk in darkness. Amen."

TUESDAY.

MYSTERY OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

"How can these things be?"—John 3:5-15.

"Does any one find difficulty in believing in the doctrine of conversion because it rests upon the doctrine of atonement?" was the question William Jennings Bryan asked at the first convention of the Presbyterian Brotherhood. Then he told how he was impressed with the beauty of a fruit of which he had been eating. Keeping some of the seeds that he might plant them, he discovered that it took five thousand seeds to make a pound.

"I found," he continued, "that one little seed, put into the ground under the influence of the warmth of the soil, would gather from somewhere two hundred thousand times its own weight, and form a fruit the outside of which was green, with a lining of white and a core of red, and all through the red seeds scattered, every one of which was capable of doing the same thing over again. Where did it find its flavoring extract? Where did it gather its coloring matter? Unless a man understands how a little seed can build a watermelon, he should not be too sure that he can place limitations upon the arm of the Almighty."

Many men since Nicodemus have been puzzled by the statement of the experience of those whose lives have been transformed by the spirit of God. The natural cannot understand the significance of the spiritual. Yet "twice-born men" can bear testimony that Bryan was right when he said, "A heart can be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and a change in the life follows a change in the heart."

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

WEDNESDAY.

GOD'S LOVE IN SEARCH FOR SOULS.

"The word of the Lord came to me, saying, Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem."—Jer. 2:1-4.

In obedience to this command, Jeremiah gives himself over to the great task of leading the people of Judah out of sin into the righteousness that saves.

How shall we account for the life of a man like Jeremiah? Does not the above verse suggest the answer? God is in love with men. He desires to save them from their sins—and Jeremiah, sacrificing himself for them, is a living testimony to the effort that God is willing to put forth for this purpose.

There is nothing more real than this divine love, as it is displayed in its search for souls. Do you, who read this, have a father or a mother, a teacher or a preacher, some one who is seriously concerned for your welfare and who pleads with you and prays for you, lest you should go astray? If you have, then in that person God's love has touched your life, even as in the person of Jeremiah it reached out after the rebellious souls of the people of Judah. This person who pleads with you and who prays for you—do not spurn him; do not turn from him; do not disobey him!

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

THURSDAY.

THE HIGHEST COMPANIONSHIP.

"They took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus."—Acts 4:12-18.

We are told that a small portion of attar of roses placed in a drawer will give such a fragrance to every garment in the drawer that the wearer carries the haunting impression of just having come from a rose garden. So with these men—something about them suggested close acquaintance with Jesus! They had been with Him and He had left His stamp upon them. What an experience!

They took knowledge of these men that they had been with Jesus. But why? Because they had been with Him. There was reason for the influence. They had walked with Him, talked with Him, lived with Him, stood by Him as He hung on the cross, seen the glory of His resurrection. It was no unreal likeness the others saw reflected. There is no substitute for this. If we would be like Him we, too, must have been with Him. But thank God, we as well as they can be with Him; and if we truly are, as it was long ago, they will take knowledge of us also that we have been with Him.

Prayer.—That we and our children and all whom we can influence may seek this sweet companionship, and value it above all others.

FRIDAY.

TRUE WORSHIP.

"In Thy fear will I worship toward Thy holy temple?"—Psa. 5:7-8.

Comprehending a little God's loathing of sin and the peril of those who bar Him out of their life, the psalmist turned his thoughts to the blessedness which is the portion of God's children.

True worship is the approach of the soul to God in deep reverence and devotion. It is an attitude of the soul that bows to the sovereign will of God, and finds a rest unspeakable on the heart of eternal love. We worship when the soul prostrates itself before God and pours out its adoring love at His feet. True worship begins and continues in the fear of God.

The eye of the soul in worship must be fixed on God—"Toward thy holy temple." The psalmist was looking beyond the frontiers of earth. As there was no temple at that time, the singer doubtless was thinking of the upper sanctuary, the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, God was there and He was on His throne. His vision of the King made him a worshiper. Queen Victoria it is said once expressed a wish that she might be living when Christ should come, so that she could lay her crown at His feet.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SATURDAY.

THE LOVE THAT CONQUERS.

"Love doth not behave itself unseemly."—1 Cor. 13:1-7.

In connection with these verses read Phillipians 4:8, with its emphasis upon "whatsoever things are lovely," and also the exhortation of the apostle in Titus 2:10, "that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things."

I have been rereading the "Life and Letters of Phillips Brooks," and reading for the first time the "Life of Alexander Whyte" and the "Life of Bishop Handley Moule." There is immense help in such biographies. These men were among the leaders of the Church and they saw life clearly and as a whole. They kept their feet on the ground, the while their hearts were in heaven.

How eminently sane was Christ, and is not sanity an inestimable gift? In nothing is sanity more needed than in the realm of mystical religion.

It is a great thing to hold steady, to keep the right sense of values, to see things in their proper relations and to serve God with sweet reasonableness. "The heart hath reasons that reason never knew."

Prayer.—That we and our whole household may learn the greatness of loving service in the daily Christian life, and apply it in practice.

SUNDAY.

PAYING THE PRICE.

"When he had found one pearl of great price, he went and sold all that he had, and bought it."—Matt. 13:46.

A tunnel through a New England hill cost the State fifteen million dollars. It is one of the longest tunnels in the world. It has been of inestimable service since it was built. The State recognized its value and was willing to pay the price.

It is a principle that we must pay for everything we get in life. Upon the counter of the universe we must lay down the price. A good life, radiant, serviceable, eminently victorious, was never yet secured without self-denial. We must surrender our sins; we must discipline our lives often in pain and patience; we must sell out all that we have of worldliness, of wrong thinking, of scheming selfishness, if we would have the treasure of a happy, God-filled life.

But let us not think that taking the bad life entails no denial. Here, too, prices must be paid. It is a life that demands a terrific price! For the discontented, unsatisfying, empty life of tawdry worldliness, they are surrendering the pearl of a happy home, a peaceful conscience, a good reputation, a lofty mind, a sweet personality, and a useful ministry to men.

God alone can reveal to us the pearl of precious price. That pearl is the kingdom of heaven in one's own soul. Though we gain all the world and lose that, what we gain will profit us nothing. Jesus came that men might gain the precious jewel of peace, and joy and love in the soul, for that is what He means when He speaks of the kingdom of heaven.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

JOSEPH'S FIDELITY.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings."—Prov. 22:29.

LESSON: Gen. 39:1-23.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Prov. 4:10-18.

Joseph had been sold into slavery. His brothers could not stand his "put up" with his overbearing ways, and when he fell into their hands out in the open spaces away from home, they sold him into the hands of a roaming band of Ishmaelites, who in turn brought him down to Egypt, where they sold him to an officer of Pharaoh's, the captain of the guard. This was quite an unexpected turn to the fortunes of the one who had prophesied that his brothers, and even his father should bow down to him. It would seem like a case of pride going before a fall.

If one reads the story of Joseph, however, he finds that Joseph rose to a position of high rank—it seems that he was second only to Pharaoh himself—and he rendered distinguished service to the great empire of Egypt as well as to the peoples of the surrounding countries in the time of a great famine. The sale into slavery was but an incident; there were forces and currents in his life that enabled Joseph to sweep on into fame and usefulness. There are certain qualities about Joseph that challenge young people seeking to make their lives count for something worth while. Let us look at them briefly.

1. Joseph was a dreamer. Joseph saw things, not simply as they are, but as they ought to be and as they might be. He refused to accept as the status quo either his own life as it was or the world in which he lived. He saw things in the light of the ideal. He had vision. Here is the secret of the difference in men that is so readily seen in the final results of their lives—it is largely a matter of vision. One man sees himself as he is, his work as it is, the world as it is. Another man sees in his own life the tremendous possibilities of that life. He catches a glimpse of his better self. He sees something of the capacities and talents of manhood and of life. He sees something of the possibilities of his work. He believes that there is a better way of doing things, and that the possibilities of his job have not been exhausted. He believes that the world is still in the making, and he believes that he can have a part in making it better. The difference in men is a matter of vision. Joseph dreamed his dreams and saw his visions. God pity the young man or young woman who in the days of youth is not dreaming of better manhood and womanhood, better and larger efficiency, a better world.

2. Joseph was a doer. Dreaming in itself is not enough. The world is suffering at the hands of impractical dreamers. We need people who can do as well as dream. It is difficult to say which is the worse, a man who plods away at his work without dreams or visions, or the man who dreams all the time and never works. Dreams have value only as they are translated into action. Joseph applied himself diligently to the things at hand. He was willing to work to make his dreams come true.

3. Joseph did well what he had to do. It was a long ways from the pampered son of a Hebrew patriarch to a slave in Potiphar's household, and many a young fellow would have sulked. But Joseph had that rare faculty of doing well whatever fell to his lot. It was just as far from the servant of Potiphar to a mere prisoner, but in prison Joseph served and served well. There are a great many young people starting out today who would like to start at the top and do only the "white-collar" jobs. They feel that hard work and details are beneath their dignity. Let all learn that the secret of promotion in life is to do well what one has to do.

4. Joseph was dependable. He was so dependable that his master did not bother to know what was committed to his trust. The keeper of the prisoner found him to be just as trustworthy. More and more, big business is realizing that the security of business rests upon fidelity and trustworthiness. Happy is that young man who has that sense of honor which impels and compels him to be faithful to everything that has been committed into his hands. The Master's words have significance here. "Thou hast been faithful in that which is least; I will make thee ruler over much." He that is faithful in that which is least shall have more over which to be faithful.

5. Joseph "went straight." Potiphar's wife was "crooked." She would have had Joseph commit an act of immorality and also to break the faith with his master. But Joseph, like Daniel, had purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself and he broke himself loose from the passionate grasp of the woman and fled from the house. "How can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?" the young man asked. It were well if the young men of today would have such high ideals and such mastering purposes that they would turn in horror from the baser things of life. He who would make a success of life in the highest and best sense must keep himself pure.

God was with Joseph because Joseph was with God. He who cleaves unto Jehovah and follows him all the way will find that he will come into good favor with sensible men, and God will prosper him, not so much in material things, but in those finer qualities of mind and heart which are the real measure of a man's life.

More Teaching Points.

1. No ultimate disaster can come to the man who has set his heart on the Lord.
2. Adverse circumstances are often opportunities in disguise.
3. He who follows God will find favor with men.
4. The reward of work well done is more work.
5. Service is a real test of a man.
6. Dreams or visions ought to find expression in action.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

TOPIC: "How to Get Things Done."—Neh. 1:1-3; 3:28; 4:1-6, 16-23.

Some Bible Hints.

If we are made conscious of a deep need, we begin to try to do something to help (v. 3).

Organization and co-operation yield fine results; each doing the nearest task—"over against his house" (v. 28).

When people really put their minds into their work, things are done. We need to be awakened (Neh. 4:6).

The people's attitude spoke of determination. They could not be intimidated or turned aside. We need more earnestness (v. 17).

Suggestive Thoughts.

There is much energy stored up in young people, so our task is to arouse it and direct it. This calls for leadership.

We get others to work when we ourselves are workers. Example is infectious, especially cheery example.

Offer large tasks to be done. Small things have no challenge in them. Work should be worth while, really important.

Set a goal and outline a plan. Work needs an architect as well as a house. Without a plan we stumble stupidly along.

A Few Illustrations.

Furnish a motive for work, as you must furnish steam for a locomotive. In daily life, hunger forces us to work. We must eat. What is our motive in Christian work?

George Miller prayed first and then acted in faith. For half a century he fed hundreds of orphans, relying on God through prayer.

Inventors know that concentration is necessary to get things done. The wandering mind, the wandering aim, got nowhere. We must fix the goal and drive toward it.

Ford employed a blind man along with two men with good eyesight to count nuts of various sizes and separate them. The blind man did twice as much as the others. He stuck exclusively to his job.

To Think About.

- What tasks challenge our society?
- How may we all be helpers of the work?
- Why should we tithe our time?

A Cluster of Quotations.

The hive that has fewest drones makes the most honey.—Anon.

Too much talk makes us imagine that we are doing something worth while. It is action that counts. We must learn to be doers.—Charles Acton.

The big man creates the idea, thinks, plans, lays out the work, looks ahead, sees an ideal, and strives for it.—Griffith.

If you've been tried out in some place in the organization and have failed—it's no disgrace. Try something else. Everybody is fitted for something. Do not give up.—Griffith.

TO GLORIFY MY GOD.

To glorify my God—no lesser aim
My God-given life shall henceforth claim;
My body, soul and spirit, Lord, are Thine;
The joy to give them back to Thee be mine.
His father's glory Jesus ever sought;
To do His work and will his only thought;
About his father's business He must be;
Lord, may that business be as much to me.
How best can I my Father glorify?
Nought can be added to His majesty;
But I can let His glory through me shine
And shed on all around His light divine.
And like the legend that they tell of one
Who thought to build a temple to the sun,
And reared the chiselled stone and burnished gold,
But still the splendid walls were dark and cold
Until another architect appeared;
A temple of transparent glass he reared;
And lo, the sun came down his work to own,
And with his glory through the temple shone.
So let my soul be flooded with Thy light;
So let my heart be opened to Thy sight;
So glorify Thyself, O Lord, in me,
Till all my being answers, Lord, to Thee.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our board of trustees held their regular annual meeting on the 25th of May and had a real pleasant meeting and all seemed to enjoy the day.

It being commencement week at the college, we also had many visitors to call and look over our plant and see the little children they are helping to give a home and an opportunity in life.

I don't know of any cause that should appeal to the hearts of our people more than the fatherless child. If we love Jesus Christ and believe in the religion He taught, is this not living after His teaching?

"He went about doing good." When we take a little fatherless child in our institution and make it possible for it to have an opportunity to grow up under Christian influences and be a useful citizen in our great country and a child of God, can we do better with our charity than to invest in little children.

We had two little girls to come to us last winter when the weather was cold and chilly, and I wish you could have looked at them the day they came and saw the pitifulness of the condition of these two little souls—God's little ones! I wish you could see them today! It would make your heart glad to know you could invest your charity money where it would do so much for the benefit of helpless humanity.

It fills my heart with joy to be in a work where we cannot only live in "a house by the side of the road and be a friend to man," but where we can daily help lift the burdens of others and make life brighter for them. Jesus helped those who needed His help. Let us live the religion He taught. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, . . . ye have done it unto me."

THE PERNICIOUSNESS OF DOGMATISM.

accept without reservation and without investigation what is offered him in the name of theology, and yet those same professors would ridicule those same members of their class-room who would have the audacity to question any of the so-called demonstrated facts and discoveries of science. They expect the student to accept many of the dogmas of science on blind faith. And thousands of students in our colleges and universities thus accept the hypotheses of science as if demonstrated facts without any questioning or investigation whatever. They will put a big red question mark after every statement of theology and every teaching of religion, but will "swallow hook, sinker, bobber and all" of every statement and every teaching of science. They are afraid not to do so for fear of being branded as unscientific and unscholarly. And thus the dogmatism of science is thwarting the very cause of science itself, just as the dogmatism in religion thwarted the cause of religion. Even the teachings of science have their day and pass away. Scientific theories of a generation ago have been relegated to the ash heap, and many of the scientific theories of today will be thrown to the ash heap tomorrow. Religion has no apologies to make to science because of the new interpretations that have come with new light and a larger understanding, for science too is compelled to deny its dogmatism of yesterday if it is to advance to a larger field of operation tomorrow. Consistency demands that dogmatism in science and in religion be denounced, and that freedom of thought, open-mindedness, the spirit of inquiry, and a passionate desire for the truth be encouraged in every field of thought.

There is absolutely no excuse for a person to insist on using his mental freedom in rejecting one set of dogmas while at the same time he accepts another set of dogmas equally open to investigation. The arrogance of dogmatism in religion is unpardonable. But equally as unpardonable is the arrogance of the dogmatism of science. Prejudice, bigotry, and intolerance have no place in true religion, nor in true science. There never can be a conflict between true religion and true science, for they run on parallel lines. Though many irreligious declarations have been made in the name of religion by untheologically minded religionists, so also have many unscientific declarations been made in the name of science by pseudo-scientists. But such does not discount the validity of either science or religion. Both are indispensable to the happiness and progress of the human family. Each should supplement the other.

The need of the hour is that our colleges and universities shall give as much recognition to the reality of religion as to the reality of science, and that the spirit of inquiry be encouraged among the students in their reading of science as well as in their laboratory work, the same as is exercised in their personal reactions relative to their religious experience and to what they read and hear about religion.

"O consistency, thou art indeed a jewel!"

THE ACTS.

Fifthly, It tells of the jailer's condition and sudden conversion; and also of his orderly conduct. He brought the preachers out of the stocks into a room, perhaps his dwelling, and they preached Jesus to all in his house; if he had infants they were part of the family; if they were not capable of understanding, they were capable of being seated. And the same hour, the jailer washed their stripes, and he and all his, straightway, during the hour of twelve, a little before 1 o'clock, were baptized.

Sixthly, then he brought them into his dining-room, it is probable, and fed them; he rejoiced in and with his family. Soon as day appeared, the affrighted 'squires being informed that the preachers were safe, sent the sergeants of the guards to order that those men be let go; not knowing what had privately happened. Paul refused to go out, saying, let the magistrates come and fetch us out. They, through fear, did so, and bid them leave the city, etc.

If any man in his senses can believe that the family were carried, at that hour, through guards and gates, in the dark or with lamps (the city alarmed) to a suitable water, with garments on or naked, were dipped, and went back through all, undiscovered—and Paul also, to play the hypocrite, even refuse to go out in the morning; to believe in the doctrine of immersion from this report, is to read one way and believe another.

CHAPTER XVII.

IN this chapter you will find remarks on three particular points. First, the noble conduct of the noble Berians. They heard Paul preach the faith of Christ, the doctrine of the resurrection; but they could not understand him, and they were of too noble a principle to condemn what they could not understand, and they were too careful of their souls to risk their salvation on a mere implicit faith; therefore they acted under the influence of wisdom and prudence, memorized the substance of the doctrine, searched the Scriptures of Moses and the prophets, from whence Paul drew his proofs, and many were converted and joined the order.

Secondly, the heathens were under an impression that there was a Supreme, but knew Him not, as the inscription testified, viz: "To the unknown God."

The third point is, we are all the offspring of the Creator God, as the God of nature. Adam was the created son of God, and his soul was breathed into him; thus all bodies and souls come from the first body and soul; as God saith, "All souls are mine." And God in essence fills all duration; and therefore the way to come to the knowledge of Him is to feel after Him by faith, in spirit, till happily your soul may find Him in love, peace and joy. As our life is in his hand, I think it strange we are not more afraid of Him.

CHAPTER XVIII.

CANDID reader, notice how the Lord, according to His foreknowledge, speaks of things before they are seen by us, as though they were. Paul was encouraged to speak on, saying, no man should hurt you, for "I have much people in this city." He saw their willing, teachable, coming souls. Some will urge that these were partially elected from the foundation! Observe, election is of grace, and grace appears to all, teaching us. Those who will come to the light become the elect, through the sanctification of the spirit, unto obedience; but those who refuse the light, and choose darkness, do remain reprobates concerning the faith.

The next remark is this, the story of Apollos, an eloquent speaker, proving that Jesus was the true Messiah, agreeable to the prophets; he being versed in the prophecies respecting Jesus, answering the description of the true Messiah. But Luke observes, he knew only the baptism of John. This is the interpretation: Apollos was one of John's disciples, and he joined the Christian Church as John intended. He knew that John baptized unto repentance, as a preparative for the new kingdom. The gospel baptism, and the mysteries of the new kingdom, he did not comprehend. As great an orator as he was, private members could teach him. The Church gave him a recommendation, and he did much good. Notice the 27th verse. The people believed through grace. The divine light is saving grace, it teaches and produces faith; but those who choose darkness can never come to be believers.

CHAPTER XIX.

MY reader will see in this section, unless he closes his eyes, that the baptism of John was not, and therefore is not, the gospel baptism. John lived just in the close of the old dispensation, and in course ought to have ended near eighteen hundred years ago. Some of John's disciples joined the Christian Church in the town of Ephesus. Paul in his travels found them there, and asked if they had received the Holy Spirit since they believed? They answered, saying, we have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. This appeared strange, that people should come out from among Jews and infidels, and take the new name, and never hear of the Holy Ghost. But they only had received John's baptism.

CHAPTER XX.

THE primitive Church is here called "the Church of God"—purchased with His own blood; by reason, the humanity was God's humanity, which must be divine, for "God was in Christ." Emanuel was God with us. Again: Paul called the preaching elders together, and gave them a solemn charge to take heed to themselves, and to the Church, the flock united under care and government. Paul predicted what would certainly come to pass if those ministers disregarded the apostle's counsel; and it came to pass as the man of God had said. Many among the elders (prelates were not born) were overseers to feed and lead the flock, not lords; they were the successors of the apostles, some of whom, who thirsted for dominion, wrested the Scriptures, perverted the sense, and drew off disciples from the simplicity of the gospel, and made divisions contrary to the doctrine which they had learned. Perhaps not over fifty years after the apostles, the evil began; but the most fatal of all the innovations was that carried on by an elder of Alexandria, whose name was Arius, who exclaimed, saying, Jesus Christ was a mighty one—but not the Supreme. He gained proselytes rapidly, and having gained the emperor with the civil power on his side, he raised a desperate persecution against the followers of the old primitive track, who adored Christ as a very God, manifest in the flesh. These Arians held the Christian name, but bore the fruit of savage cruelty—wolves in sheep's clothing, called Christians. Socinius denied the resurrection of the body, but was hard set to wrest the first of John's gospel, that the word that was made flesh was God. He perverted it, by saying that the word was with God in unity of affection, but not in essence; and that Jesus was God only by office. But those greatly differed in other notions. A late company of people, low down in Virginia, near Norfolk, whose circular I have read, hold the Lord Jesus to be a great creature, but not equal to God the Father. They exclaim that their brethren may be part arians, part socinians, part trinitarians, yet remain in perfect union! Every minister may preach his own faith, baptize any way, or no way, yet all is union. Among the rest, I saw the name of Mr. Tate, and was made to wonder and to sorrow. They exclaim, "the Christian Church." They went out from us. We pray for them, that they may return. Those people are trying to reconcile light and darkness, truth and error; and to answer the prophet Amos (2:2) that two can walk together, though not agreed—as observed. Paul directs us to be of one mind, in unity of faith, and have no schisms in the body; but those men tolerate all schism. Jude writes thus: Build up each other in the most holy faith. Those build up in unholy, or corrupt faith. One builds, the other pulls down! How is their Church to be edified? Our Lord says, a house divided against itself cannot stand—it is a Babel. Those are found in the north, east and west. Let all men know, that those who call themselves "the Christian Church," but refuse to honor the Son, even as they honor the Father, are not of us. Some of those in the west make light of the doctrine of atonement and intercession; but all pretend to be united in one body, though dislocated.

A New Kind of Mouse.

BY EMMA FLORENCE BUSH.

"I am going to catch a mouse," said Mother Cat.

Fluffy, Buffy, and Cuffy pricked up their little ears. They did love to have Mother Cat catch a mouse. After she had tossed it and tossed it and made it all tender and nice, now that they were getting to be big kittens she would give them each a little taste of it. Not all they wanted—O no! It seemed as though they had just had a taste when Mother Cat would say, "No more," and if they tried to take one more little bite she would cuff them with her paw until they ran away. Mother Cat knew that too much mouse was bad for little kittens.

"How good a whole mouse would taste!" said Cuffy. "I would like just once to eat all the mouse I could."

"Yes," said Buffy; "I dream of catching and eating mice every night. I can hardly wait until I am big enough to catch one."

"I don't see why we have to wait," said Fluffy. "Three kittens ought to be as smart as one Mother Cat. We might try to catch one."

"How do we do it?" asked Cuffy quickly, wiggling her whiskers up and down in her excitement.

"First you find a hole," said Buffy. "I know that. Then you stay and stay and stay, and by and by a mouse comes out. Then you pounce and catch him."

"Let's find the hole," said Fluffy, and they all scampered away from the basket where they had been lying.

They ran upstairs and downstairs, here and there, through the hall into the bedrooms, down the stairs into the kitchen, and back into the sitting room, but not a hole could they find. So at last they all met again in the sitting room.

All was quiet. Mother Cat was at the barn, and the humans were all away. Suddenly they heard the front door shut hard, and then Marion and Margery giggled in the hall. Then the door of the sitting room opened softly and as softly closed again.

"O dear!" sighed Cuffy, "I am tired of thinking about a mouse. I wish Mother Cat would come back or the children would come in and play or something."

All at once Fluffy spied something moving over the floor. "O," she cried, "here is a mouse after all; look there!"

Sure enough, slowly over the floor a little mouse was creeping. Slowly but surely he crept nearer and nearer, and although all three kittens were fairly trembling with eagerness, he did not seem to see them at all. No, he was making straight for the other side of the room and did not notice the kittens at all.

All at once Buffy felt that she could not stand it another minute. She gave one jump and landed squarely on poor mousie, who never even squeaked.

But what was the matter with Buffy? Was she going crazy? She rolled over and over holding the mouse, kicking with her paws and doing all kinds of queer antics.

Fluffy and Cuffy sprang for the mouse, too. O how nice they felt! They began to kick and sniff and all three little pink tongues began to lick up tiny dust that came out of the mouse onto the carpet.

Mother Cat came in at the door.

"See," said Fluffy; "see the mouse Buffy caught."

"Yes," said Mother Cat; "the kind of mouse that is best for kittens. My dear Fluffy, did you not know that this is not a real meat mouse? No, my dear, this is a catnip mouse that Marion and Margery bought for you to play with."

Fairy Who Loved Her Neighbors.

BY DOROTHY ARNO BALDWIN.

For weeks and weeks no rain had fallen. There was scarcely any water in the ponds and streams, and everything was thirsty.

"How I wish I had a bottomless well!" sighed Fairy Who Loved her Neighbors, "so that I should have plenty of water to give to those who need it."

She looked at the little half-filled bucket which contained the last bit of water from her well. "If I am careful, perhaps I can make this last until tomorrow," she thought. "Rain may come by then, so that I shall have plenty."

As she turned away from the well she saw Cock Robin looking so hot and discouraged. "Will you give me some water to take home to the children?" he begged. "I can't find a drop anywhere."

"Of course I will!" said Fairy Who Loved Her Neighbors. "Do take a drink yourself. You look thirsty."

She gave Cock Robin all the water he could carry in a pitcher plant leaf, then started back to her oak leaf house. Before she had reached it she came upon Wee Meadow Mouse, panting as he lay under a tuft of grass.

"A hawk—chased me—and I had—to run!" he gasped. "Have you—any water?"

"I have plenty for you," said the Fairy, filling an acorn cup for him.

Wee Meadow Mouse drank the water gratefully and went his way, while Fairy Who Loved Her Neighbors again started home. She soon found a wild rose with leaves drooping from lack of water, and she stopped to sprinkle it. Then she gave a drink to a thirsty beetle and to some wilting grasses, and by the time she reached her door there was just a little water in the bottom of her bucket.

"I must save that for myself," she declared. "There isn't another bit in my well, and I'm really afraid that it isn't going to rain tomorrow."

She put the bucket containing the precious water carefully away where it would keep cool and then looked anxiously out at the sky. It certainly didn't look like rain, for there wasn't a cloud in sight, but in front of the window she saw a baby oak tree whose leaves were withering. "Poor thing!" exclaimed Fairy Who Loved Her Neighbors; "it will die if it doesn't have a drink soon, but it would take every drop of water I have to save it."

She turned away from the window and tried to forget the baby tree, but she couldn't help thinking about its drooping leaves and of what a fine tree it might make some day if it could only be saved. At last she took her bucket, and hurrying out to the young tree, poured the last of the water around its roots. The baby oak drank thirstily, and soon it began to lift its head and to hold up its leaves again.

Fairy Who Loved Her Neighbors went back to her house with the empty bucket. As she reached the doorstep a beautiful butterfly fell to the ground at her feet.

"Water!" it gasped.

"I have none," replied the Fairy, sadly. "I have given the last I had to a baby oak that was dying of thirst."

"There must be some in your well," insisted the butterfly.

"Surely there must be enough for a butterfly," agreed Fairy Who Loved Her Neighbors; "I will look and see."

She hurried to the well, and to her surprise it was brimming with bubbling water which was overflowing the mossy sides and flowing away in a sparkling rill. The Fairy stared at it in amazement until she heard a voice at her side and turned to face, not a butterfly, but the Fairy Queen, who had come to her in that disguise.

"Because you have given water to all who were thirsty, you shall never lack for water to give," promised the Queen. "I have touched your well with my wand, and it will never again be empty."

Cock Robin has told me that wherever you find a bubbling spring, there has lived a Fairy Who Loved Her Neighbors.

THOMAS.

After a week's illness with pneumonia, Mrs. Margaret Lambeth Thomas, widow of the late Hughe Chalmers Thomas, passed away at her home in the New Elam neighborhood, Chatham County, April 8, 1926, at a little more than 81 years of age. She is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Julia Farrell, of Fayetteville, and Mrs. Emma Marks, of Lee County; also by four children, Mrs. G. L. Mann, with whom she lived; Mrs. C. B. Thomas, Siler City; Mrs. O. M. Goodwin, of Sanford, and Mr. C. L. Thomas, of Moncure.

A few hours before she passed away, Sister Thomas expressed her readiness for the approaching change. She had faithfully, patiently and lovingly followed the Christ for more than sixty years of her pilgrimage upon the earth; and thus, without fear or faltering, she followed him into the great beyond.

Funeral services, conducted by Rev. G. R. Underwood and the writer, were held at New Elam Christian Church, of which the deceased had been a member for more than half a century. Many were the sorrowing relatives and friends who gathered there from various sections to pay last respects to one whom they had known and loved for so long. Interment was in the Church cemetery. The significance of the bunch of perfect calla lilies which lay upon her casket was entirely in keeping with her faith in a glorious immortality. Other floral offerings were numerous and beautiful.

May the comforting Christ be very real to the bereaved.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst our sister, Mrs. Addie Barber; and

Whereas, Sister Barber has always shown a deep and abiding interest in the woman's work of the Shallow Ford Christian Church, and particularly in the activities of the Woman's Missionary Society, and by her many Christian virtues of heart and hand has endeared herself to the members of her society, Church and community; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Alamance District of Missionary Societies, in session at Shallow Ford Church, note her passing with sadness, but not as those who sorrow without hope, and commend her example as worthy of emulation by all and tender our sincerest sympathy to her family and her society, praying our Heavenly Father's richest blessing upon them in their irreparable loss.

Resolved, further, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our society, a copy be sent The Christian Sun, and a copy to the family.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. S. M. LYNAM.

Samuel F. Patterson Dies.—

Samuel F. Patterson, newly elected president of the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association, died recently at his home at Roanoke Rapids, N. C. He had been in ill health for several years, and his recent trip to Atlanta is thought to have hastened his death. He had for years been most active in the cotton manufacturing development of North Carolina. His keen judgment of cotton conditions was highly prized by leading cotton men all over the country.

No Life in Polar Basin.—

Frederick Ramm, the correspondent of the New York Times and the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, aboard the Norge on its momentous flight across the North Pole from Spitzburgen to Teller, Alaska, reports that none of the Amundsen-Ellsworth expedition saw any sign of life on the polar ice in the vicinity of the pole. Nor did the party find any land other than some rocky islands which could hardly be called land. There was much open water at the north pole.

Eight Thousand Invitations Issued.—

Eight thousand invitations have been issued to the reception to be given on Sunday afternoon following the wedding of Miss Ailsa Mellon, daughter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. David K. E. Bruce, son of the Maryland senator. The wedding will be solemnized in the Bethlehem Chapel of the National Cathedral on Mount St. Albans, at Washington. Bishop James E. Freeman, of the cathedral, will perform the service. The Episcopal service will be used, including the woman's promise to obey. An entire floor of one of the largest hotels of the capital has been reserved for the Bruce-Mellon parties and members of the wedding party. The reception on Saturday afternoon will be one of the largest social events of the season in Washington.

Clemson has Big Fire Loss.—

For the second time in thirteen months, Clemson College has been afflicted by a great loss by fire. This time it was the engineering building, valued at three hundred thousand dollars. The fire occurred on May 27th about 4 o'clock. The students fought valiantly to curb the fire and to save the other buildings of the institution which were threatened. Three cities sent aid, but nothing could be saved of the building. Clemson, according to the president, had protection to the extent of $118,000. The agricultural hall of the institution was destroyed, entailing a loss estimated at one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars about thirteen months ago. In spite of the loss of the engineering building and equipment, the work of that department will carry on in the coming session, arrangements having already been made, according to the president of the college.

Educational Gifts Increasing.—

It is a hopeful sign that gifts to educational institutions are rapidly increasing. According to a report given out by the department of the interior, the benefactions in 1923-24 amounted to nearly eighty-two million dollars, and 147 institutions received in gifts or legacies the sum of one hundred thousand dollars or more. Harvard received approximately eight million dollars, Yale and Northwestern reported five million each, University of Chicago and Western Reserve received above two million each, and Johns-Hopkins, University of California, and Leland Stanford, Columbia, Cornell, and Carnegie Institute of Technology received more than a million each. Princeton, Hamilton and Vassar got a little less than a million. Of the colleges for women exclusively, the largest gifts went to Vassar, followed by Wellesley, Smith, Radcliffe, Agnes Scott and Salem College.

Most of these institutions are in the North, but the Southern people are recovering from the destructive war of the sixties and are masters of the richest portion of the nation. They are beginning to answer the great educational call and to make the mind of the new South worthy of the spirit of the old. Such money provides educational opportunities for those who could never otherwise have them, and is a most excellent investment.

Stephens' Institute Celebrates Centennial.—

Stephens' Institute, named for Alexander H. Stephens, has just celebrated its one hundredth anniversary of usefulness. The school is a preparatory institution at Crawfordville, Ga. It stands within a stone's throw of the old Liberty Hall, where Governor Stephens lived. It was natural that this celebration should incidentally be a celebration of the life and works of Alexander H. Stephens, Vice-President of the Confederacy, senator from Georgia, Governor of the same State, author, historian, and one of the most prominent citizens of Georgia in its history.

The celebration was a unique one, having representatives of various graduating classes back to perform as they did on their graduation day and in the same costumes of those days. The newspaper correspondent was taken to see Charles Bergstrom, who was Governor Stephens' tailor, and he recalled many interesting stories of the Governor. He always kept a well-appointed guest chamber at Liberty Hall for the use of tramps. No tramp was ever turned away from the door. He bore in mind constantly the Bible injunction about entertaining angels unaware. He was entertaining a tramp when he was called to Atlanta to be sworn in as Governor. A private car stopped at the crossing near to Liberty Hall, and Governor

Stephens took the tramp to Atlanta in his private car. An effort is to be made to raise funds for the erection of new dormitories much needed, and to provide a more adequate endowment, so that other boys and girls may enjoy the helpful work of the institution.

The Children's Cathedral.—

A unique Church has been established at Walden, N. Y., a manufacturing town in the Ramapo Mountains. It is the Cathedral for All Children, and originated in the mind of Dr. J. Bret Langstaff. The inspiration came to Dr. Langstaff several years ago while he was director of the David Copperfield Library in London. The people of Walden have manifested their interest in the project by giving their time to building the cathedral. Walden's bricklayers, plasterers, carpenters, painters, and other workers labored shoulder to shoulder in the erection of the cathedral. It does not follow any creed, but bases its service on an old mass of the catacombs. Dr. Langstaff has appropriated the things from all Churches which he feels will appeal to children. The whole service has been simplified, so that the children may better understand religion. The purpose of teaching children how to worship is carried out by giving the children full charge of the service, preaching and all. The officers of the Church are changed frequently in order that all the children may have an opportunity to serve as senior warden, junior warden, members of the vestry, and minister.

There is a miniature pipe organ played by child players, there are two choirs, one of thirty boys and one of thirty-five girls. These choirs sing antiphonally, one singing one verse and then the other responding. This attracts the attention of the children and overcomes the tendencies to fidget.

Though the Cathedral for All Children is still quite young, its congregation includes Roman Catholics, Orthodox Greek Catholics, Hebrew, Dutch Reform, Methodists, and Baptists. The service is held at 9:30 and lasts only half an hour, enabling the children to attend Sunday School at their own Church afterwards. Though Dr. Langstaff is rector of the Episcopal Church of Walden, the Cathedral for All Children follows no creed. It brings the children together for genuine worship. The rector emphasizes the fact that the idea is still in its infancy, so far as practicability is concerned, and that from time to time the necessary changes will be made as they become apparent. There is a tentative age limit of from five to fourteen. The project seems to promise much in many ways. It gives the children a service of worship which they can understand; it provides helpful activities for them; it brings the adults into closer contact with each other in the various Churches, and, last, but not least, it makes possible the breaking down of denominational barriers, and better religious understanding in the next generation.

Rev. R. F. Brown, of Pleasant Hill, Ohio, requests us to announce that he has decided not to move to Elon College this summer.

Some of the most important committees of the Southern Christian Convention are arranging to hold meetings. This is a sign of new life. May the work "go forward."

Rev. H. C. Caviness, evangelist of the North Carolina Christian Conference, is assisting Rev. R. A. Whitten in a series of meetings at Reidsville, N. C., this week and next.

The Sunday School of the First Christian Church, Richmond, will go on its regular annual picnic to Buckroe Beach next Wednesday, June 16th. The train is scheduled to leave Main Street station at 7:30 A. M.

The Providence Memorial Association held its twenty-fourth annual meeting at New Providence Christian Church, Graham, N. C., Sunday, June 6th, Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., Burlington, N. C., delivering the annual memorial address.

Dr. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, N. C., in writing of his work, says: "We are having the best Church and Sunday School attendance that I have ever known in my field. I am hoping for a good and great year." Bro. Fleming is one of our busy and consecrated pastors.

Dr. W. H. Denison has been for some time at South Norfolk helping Bro. O. D. Poythress and his people in their new Church's financial campaign, preparatory to their opening services, and in the opening services themselves, which took place Sunday.

Work is progressing rapidly on the administration building of Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., the foundation being already finished and material on the ground for the walls. Rev. H. W. Elder is making heroic effort to secure funds with which to pay cash for materials and labor.

Rev. F. C. Lester, Franklin, Va.; Dr. W. D. Parry, Raleigh, N. C.; Revs. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham; R. A. Whitten, Reidsville; J. A. Ledbetter, Greensboro; C. E. Geringer, Ether, and H. J. Fleming, Burlington, N. C., were among the visiting ministers at Elon last Friday to attend the funeral of Dr. W. P. Lawrence.

Many of his dear friends were glad to see Rev. J. W. Wellons at Elon last week and to know that, though he approaches his one hundred and first anniversary, he is still able to go about, and his mind is still active. He came to Elon to attend and take part in the funeral of his dear departed friend, Dr. W. P. Lawrence.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN acknowledges with gratitude and appreciation the following: "Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Wood Penny announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary Franks, to Mr. Joseph Paul Shaw on Wednesday, June 2, 1926, Raleigh, N. C." Our heartiest congratulations and best wishes are extended to this happy and popular couple.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., writes of the Woman's Missionary Rallies in the Alabama Conference, all of which he attended and in which he rendered such valued service, the following personal line: "I feel like we are approaching a better day for our work in this section of our Church. It seems that we have been a long time coming to our privilege, but I pray that our Church may go forward in our Master's name. We have passed the experimental stage of our existence. It is a solemn reality with us now."

Dear Dr. Atkinson,—This is just a personal line to tell you the Young People's Missionary Society at Antioch, near Harrisonburg, is still on the job. They held their special mission program, including some exercises by children, a pageant by the young people, and an address by the pastor, Rev. R. P. Crumpler, last Sunday night, and took up an offering to be divided between Carroll County and Porto Rico. The amount of $14.12 will be sent in through our Conference Treasurer. This program was to have been given several months ago, but has been delayed by weather and sickness. Wishing you well, I am, sincerely, (signed) Mrs. B. F. Frank, Mt. Clinton, Va.

(But good Sister Frank will pardon us for printing this "personal.")

The report of the Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention, and the incorporation of the Convention are given in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN as matters of extraordinary interest to members of the Christian Church. Thus, the main official body is placed before the world as an institution to do business for the Master's kingdom. Every member of the Church should assume his part of the responsibility and contribute of his substance as the Lord has prospered him. By this new mode of directing the interests of the kingdom, it is hoped that every department of Church work will receive proper recognition and its equitable proportion in the administration of the Redeemer's kingdom as represented by the Christian Church.

Under date May 28th, Rev. B. J. Earp, Newport News, Va., writes: "I am inclosing you a copy of my resignation read before our people Wednesday night, 26th instant." In presenting his resignation, Bro. Earp says: "So far as I know, the Church is at this time in the best shape materially and spiritually in its history, and to God should be given all the glory. Feeling as I do that the time has come when I should stand aside for another and give place to one who shall, we trust, in the name of Christ, lead you on in this Christian career, I hereby tender my resignation as pastor of the Church, to take effect at the close of this Conference year, with a heart brimful of brotherly love for one and all. May God bless you and guide you in the selection of some one worthy of your fellowship and faithfulness. In all my experience as a minister I have never found a more faithful band of Christian workers than some of you." So far as we know, Brother Earp has made no definite promises for next year, and any Church desiring to secure his services would do well to correspond with him. He has done fine work in Newport News, and is much beloved by the Church and people there. Brother Earp should be engaged for full-time service, and we presume he will be, as he is one of our most consecrated and efficient pastors.

The sudden and unexpected death of Dr. W. P. Lawrence, at High Point, N. C., on the morning of June 2nd, carried grief and sorrow to his unnumbered friends and acquaintances. He was found dead in bed, and dying as he did from heart failure, the supposition is that the end came without pain or struggle. Dr. Lawrence had not been well for some days and was spending the night at High Point, where he had recently accepted a position. His death away from his family, who were unaware of his condition, made his going a sad one indeed and hard to be borne. The funeral was conducted from his home on Friday afternoon, June 4th, the services being in charge of Dr. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va. Those taking part in the same, besides Dr. Newman, were Dr. W. W. Saley, Suffolk, Va.; Drs. G. O. Lankford and P. H. Fleming, Burlington, N. C.; Rev. J. W. Wellons, Masonic Home, Greensboro, N. C., and J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C. A great company of friends and loved ones gathered to pay tribute of respect, and the floral offerings and designs were strikingly beautiful, appropriate and abundant. As a good brother pastor attending the funeral appropriately remarked: "It is given to few men to make in a lifetime so many and such true friends as had been the lot of Dr. Lawrence." Having served as professor of English in Elon College for more than thirty years, his life touched hundreds of lives who learned to respect, to love, and to honor him. Rev. N. G. Newman, who was in charge of the funeral service, is to furnish THE SUN with an appropriate sketch of the life and labors of Dr. Lawrence. Our deepest sympathy goes out to dear Mrs. Lawrence and the two splendid children, Miss Mary Graham and Phalti. May God's blessings abide with them and His wisdom lead them into paths of peace and righteousness.

ALCOHOL INJURES BODY.

Alcohol injures body, ability, and wages, affirms Henry Ford, one of the greatest captains of industry the world has ever known. He writes as follows:

"Any thinking person knows that prohibition is a good thing. The only question is one of enforcement. The present law is the kind of law which accomplishes the purposes for which it was enacted—if it is properly enforced. When I say I am for prohibition, I mean, of course, I am for the Volstead act, too. That is the crux of the matter.

"If they really want to enforce this law, and cannot in any other way, why not utilize the army and navy? Prohibition is a part of the Constitution, and as such ought to have the benefit of every available enforcement agency.

"The human system cannot possibly assimilate more than a very small amount of alcohol in any one day, and it gets that amount through other agencies than the distillery. More than that amount results in physical injury, reduced ability to work, and consequently lowered earning capacity—not to mention the social phase of the question, which is obvious.

"Prohibition is no longer a debatable question. The passing of the commercialized liquor trade is as final as the abolition of slavery."

AN UNUSUAL OCCASION.

About six hundred people congregated Sunday, May 30th, in a beautiful grove at the home of Rev. John A. Blanton, of Surrency, Ga., bringing filled baskets which they placed on a table prepared for the purpose, and after an appropriate address delivered by Prof. A. R. Flowers, of Wilson, N. C., the contents of these baskets were placed on the table and enjoyed by all present.

Rev. Blanton has been an active minister for forty-seven years. His life has been one of unselfish service, and these people of different denominations and from half-dozen counties chose to express their appreciation to this aged veteran of the cross on his seventieth birthday.

Rev. Blanton was born in Pender County, N. C.; came to Georgia when a young man; married a Georgia lady, and here they have together made a name for which they are loved and honored by all people, regardless of rank or creed.

H. G. NICHOLS.

A RELIGION OF POWER.

There have been many ways of regarding religion, and different persons today think of it differently. It is very common to speak of it as something which one "gets" or "accepts." "He got religion," the neighbors say, or "he has always kept his religion through every trial." It is not uncommon to think of it as a statement of belief or faith which a person holds. "I accept the doctrine of the trinity, of the atonement, and of eternal life, and eternal punishment; therefore I have religion"—thus many a person explains his religion. To such a one it consists largely of correct definitions. Another class of persons care nothing for definition; they consider religion to be a good life. They say: "I do about right, I live up to my light, and I do not believe God will be hard on me."

There is still another way of reviewing religion. It is the power of God manifested in life. It does not begin with definitions; it does not consist of living about right; it is not something one "gets." It comes and gets the person. He does not keep his religion, but his religion keeps him. It is a power, a force, just as real and just as persistent as that which we call gravitation, and its effects are just as sure. No definitions of electricity would ever light a man's house, or move a trolley car. The first step is to let the current in and the house becomes light, or the car moves. Everything bases itself on the ultimate, invisible power, which is simply received. This is true of religion as it is of mechanics. There is no religion apart from God, and until a man comes to God and God gets him, the man is not truly religious. It consists first and last of possession—God's possession of us and our joy in the sense of His ownership. A religion without power would be like a gravitation which did not draw anything, or like electricity that had no force. Religion is spiritual gravitation. It draws the soul away from everything else to its true Central Sun. The first effect of it on a person is to beget love. Love is the unfailling sign of religion. A loveless religion is as impossible as a waterless ocean, or a treeless forest. If a man's religion does not flood him with love, it is the wrong kind of religion.

We have been speaking of what religion seems to us to be. Now a word about how it comes. There has been in our world but one Person who was perfectly divine and perfectly human. He revealed God and He showed what it means to be a son. He also showed how to be a Son, and He plainly said to the whole race, "I am the Way." Religion means getting to God; Christ is the way, and love is the sign.—Rufus M. Jones.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE ALABAMA WOMEN AND MISSIONS.

Last week the women of our Alabama Christian Conference put on their missionary rallies. It was glorious indeed to be there. In all parts of our Christian cause there are now women consecrated, alert, intelligent, willing to take up the cause of their Lord as handed to them of their Church, and champion that cause enthusiastically and successfully. The woman's missionary work in the Alabama Conference is comparatively new, these being the first rallies that the women have put on; and yet in every district there were women superintendents, secretaries, and other officials who could and would take the work assigned them and carry it on beautifully and effectually.

Mrs. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Alabama, is the president of the Woman's Board of the Conference, and she is not only capable, but competent and enthusiastic in carrying out the full work of the board as the duties of her office requires. She attended every one of the rallies and carried the welfare and work of every meeting on her mind.

Mrs. G. L. Stephens, Wadley, Alabama, is vice-president of the board and also attended all the rallies, taking lively interest in the proceedings, reading a fine paper on the work, and did much to encourage and help in the meetings. Mrs. W. M. Melton, Wedgwood, Alabama, is secretary of the board. She attended two of the four rallies and did much for the success of the meetings.

Mrs. O. H. Orr, Lineville, Ala., is the treasurer of the board, and is also superintendent of her district. She read a splendid message as superintendent and presided over one of the rallies. The board members certainly set a fine example by their deep interest in the rallies. Then the leaders of each rally were loyal, faithful and willing; they did their work beautifully. It takes neither a profit nor a son of a profit to see and to say that a new day is dawning in the Alabama Conference. Not only are the women waking up to their missionary obligations and privileges, but they are undertaking their tasks in a spirit of fellowship and Christian devotion, which means success and power not only in their own societies, but in the Churches to which their societies belong. It is the leaven that will leaven the whole lump. No Church grows very strong until it has a strong and active and vigorous Woman's Missionary Society. It takes the missionary spirit to develop the power in a Church, and that Church in our day that is trying to get along without a Missionary Society is to be pitied. These women in Alabama are the strong right arm of the pastors, and many of the pastors recognize this fact.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, a great leader of a good people and a most beloved pastor, attended every one of the missionary rallies, and, besides, delivered an address before each rally and took a lively interest in all of the proceedings of the day. His assertion was that all too long had the Church neglected to develop the greatest power latent in its membership, and that the women-folks, through their Missionary Society, constituted the force and the factor most necessary and constructive in building up a strong Church.

Revs. E. M. Carter and W. C. Carpenter, two of the other active pastors of the Conference, were each present at two of the rallies and helped much with their counsel and presence. It was a great and a good week in the Alabama Conference. The women have discovered that there is a work for them to do, and they have also discovered that, by the help of God, they can and will do this work.

Although it was an exceedingly busy season of the year, the rallies were well attended. Each of the four Churches served an abundant luncheon at the noon hour, and it was a time of real fellowship and good cheer. We feel that a new epoch has begun in the Alabama Conference. This Conference is building in the right direction. It is putting on a constructive program of enlightenment, of intelligence, of education and of growth. It will be heard from more and more in the years to come, because its face is set in the right direction and it has adopted and is adopting a constructive policy and program. It was indeed a joy on the part of the Mission Secretary to have a part in the rallies and witness the interest and enthusiasm of the women in doing the work that their hands are finding to do for their Lord and Master.

MODERN MIRACLES AND FAITH.

Neither ancient faith nor the day of miracles has passed from the earth. Any reader of authentic missionary volumes now pouring from the presses of the world will run up with accounts of faith as strong as Paul had and miracles as marvelous as in the days of the first apostles.

"Take the case of Syngman Rhee. He had been accused of being a revolutionary and had been thrown into prison by the Korean government. In his unspeakable sufferings and deprivations, he had longed for the peace of God. He had heard many Christian sermons, he had studied in a mission school, but he could not recall all he wanted to know of the way of life. A New Testament was smuggled into the prison and there, bound and with his feet in the stocks, he would have a fellow-prisoner hold the book open before him, while another mounted guard to warn of the keeper's approach. Rhee was converted. He began to witness to those around him, and several of the prisoners were converted also. Even the jailer asked, 'What must I do to be saved?' like the Philippian jailer of old; and he too believed. When Rhee was moved into better quarters, he formed a class of thirteen boys and taught them to read, then a class of forty adults, including the jailer. One long-continued revival went on in the prison."

So records a recent writer (J. Lovell Murray) in writing of the "romance of the printed pages." The Word of God is still sharper than a two-edged sword, and is doing its wonder work in the world. Those of us who have access to the Word do not appreciate, as we should, its wonder-working power, its revelation of faith that abides, its record of miracles which is still being written, and its safe finger pointing to that city which hath foundation and whose builder and maker is God.

THE WORST THING ABOUT BOYS.

Of the many wise things said and written by B. A. Abbott, this writer remembers best this arresting statement, "The worst thing I know about boys is that they grow up into men." Even more revolutionary was Christ's declaration to one of the best men of his day, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except one be born anew, he cannot see the kingdom of God"; and his challenge to his own disciples, "Verily, I say unto you, except ye turn, and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven."

The talk with Nicodemus about the new birth we have left largely to the theologians, and the repeated exaltation of childhood we have abandoned to the painters and poets, but both must be taken seriously into our every-day life before we can enjoy our Christian birthright of happiness and peace.

Charles Dickens continues to be the best-loved English novelist, largely because of his perfect portrayal of childhood, and this he achieved because he himself was a child to the end of his days. Theodore Roosevelt has a secure place in the affections of the American people, not merely because of his statesmanship, but chiefly because he never ceased to be a boy. His courage, his keen enjoyment of life, his ardent enthusiasms, grew with the years, instead of being lost in the prudence, the care and the ambition of maturity.

Men dread nothing more than old age and death. The one sure way of avoiding them is, like Peter Pan, to refuse to grow up. This is possible only under more perfectly Christian conditions than we have yet provided, even in the most advanced communities. What else are we here for, if not to establish and maintain such conditions? That we have failed to do so until now is due primarily to the prevailing feeling that the reverse process is the ideal one. We have deliberately sought to make men out of boys instead of endeavoring to preserve and perfect the divine gifts of childhood, and where these have been lost, to restore them by making boys out of men.

Rotary clubs and similar organizations are doing just this in a most heartening way. Schools are making play a part of the curriculum. Cities are attaching as much importance to their parks and recreation grounds as to their city halls and courthouses. Even rural communities are awakening to the necessity of restoring the old swimming-hole and providing playgrounds to take the place of the lost woods and uncultivated bottoms. Cautiously, but certainly, the Church is taking an active part in this general movement, as well as giving tacit encouragement to outside efforts.

Any who doubt the scriptural soundness of building a larger recognition of childhood on the long-established foundation of Christmas and the later success of "Children's Day," Sunday School picnics and daily vacation Bible schools, with liberal provision for play, need only read the Bible again with this question in mind.

The Twenty-third Psalm is the most universally loved and used because it is the most childlike. The Beatitudes exalt the childlike graces. The thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians glorifies the virtue which childhood and God most perfectly exemplify. Yes, it is perfectly safe to take literally Christ's goal of child-likeness as the standard for manhood's aspiration and endeavor. And we can do no better than to combine all of our educational, political and religious activities to the one end of making the world safe for childhood.

Immediately and practically, to magnify "Children's Day," with a glorious service of songs and flowers and the largest possible offerings, is a sublime privilege as well as an inescapable duty.—World Call.

A COLLEGE EDUCATION.

BY REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, M. A.

More and more society is demanding a college education, which implies holding a degree from a standard college as a minimum requirement of young men and young women aspiring to positions of leadership. It is well that the young people of today consider carefully that fact, for the phrase "or its equivalent" never has been taken very seriously by educators when used in connection with "a college degree or its equivalent," insisting that there is no real equivalent to the experience embodied in a four-year college course.

It may seem unfair, in the mind of some of us, that the lines are being drawn so closely by the Church and school in their educational requirements of leaders. And when we advance the argument of "the personal equation" in defense of some of our friends who quit college before graduation, the answer comes, "There is no excuse for any young man or young woman not having a college education who aspires to a position of leadership. And the person who has refused to assume the sacrifices and hardships involved in completing his college course, has thereby forfeited his or her right to hope for a large place of leadership in the affairs of Church or school, as thousands of young men and women have faced every handicap and courageously finished their course of study in college." Those who make the exacting requirement that a person have a college education which carries with it a degree from a standard institution, declare that indifference to the benefits of an education in early life, or the lack of opportunity in early life does not excuse one who expects to be trusted with the responsibility of leadership for not taking advantage of the opportunities of the present to meet the requirement. The fact that there are literally hundreds of students in our colleges and universities who have passed their fortieth mile-stone in life, they declare, should be a challenge to those much younger who, for any reason, quit college to try some short-cut path to leadership.

Only recently while in a conference with a group of men representing various denominations, the question of certain positions of leadership to be filled was being discussed. The man who had the authority to pass finally upon the applicants said: "Gentlemen, I am not in favor of our considering any applicant who is not a college graduate." We all agreed that such was the ideal qualification. But I ventured the age-old argument, that of course the personal equation should be taken into consideration—that there were some who might not have a college degree, but who were as well qualified as some others who did have." The answer came quickly, but in kindness: "We do not want to consider the others either." And then he went on to explain that in his wide experience he had found very few people, if any, who, without a college education, could measure up to the qualifications embodied in a college education plus native ability." Then he went on to say, "Too many have made the mistake of assuming that native ability" has been given merely to those who have not had technical training, when the fact of the matter is that the best evidence of one's native ability is the importance the individual has placed upon the need of having his native ability directed by wiser minds than his own. "Native ability is more often found among college graduates than among any other group," he declared.

Then, the argument given by this man who places hundreds of young people in responsible positions was in substance as follows in favor of a college education as the minimum requirement: "Either a college education is indispensable as a qualification for leadership in our day, or it is not. If it is indispensable for some people, it should be for all. Grant that some people who quit college before graduation have unusual native ability. Thousands of others with just as unusual native ability have completed their college course and taken graduate work in addition. These are the people who are best qualified for leadership. If native ability plus a little college training has given an individual whatever power of leadership he has, it stands to reason that another individual with an equal amount of native ability plus a complete college training would possess a greater power of leadership. There is not a standard college in all the land that has on its faculty a professor who is not a college graduate. There is not a bishop in any Church of the land who is not a college graduate. There is not a teacher in any accredited high school in the land who is not a college graduate. There is not a prominent physician or surgeon in the United States who is not a graduate. The prominent pulpits of every denomination are filled by college graduates. Some denominations will not even ordain a young man to the ministry until he has a college degree."

These and other arguments were presented in the conference, every member of which was a college graduate. Whether we all thought that the speaker was sufficiently generous or not in his recognition of the possible merit of some non-college graduates who aspire to leadership is not the question. Though personally I believe that every emphasis should be laid on the need of a college education for every person who is to occupy a position of leadership in any phase of religious thought and life, the same as is demanded by society for those who occupy any place of leadership in secular education, still I believe consideration should be made for exceptional cases. The speaker's answer of course to this would be that the strange thing is that all who did not meet the requirement inevitably believe that their case is exceptional.

But, I am writing the review of the conference in question, neither to oppose nor to defend the position of the speaker's contention. No doubt his contention is its own defense. The logic of his argument cannot be refuted. We cannot deny the fact that in this present generation and in the generations to come, society will be more and more exacting in its demands of those who would occupy places of leadership in Church and school. My purpose in writing these lines is to emphasize the importance of playing fair with the youth of today by making plain to them the imperative need of securing a college education if they aspire to positions of leadership. There is no short cut. One's personal appreciation of his own superior native ability is not enough. No young man should be so conceited as to think that his native ability is so great that he can measure arms in life's competitions tomorrow with his companions of today who may have just as much native ability as he has, but who add to their native ability the discipline, training, and re-enforcement of a college education.

Parents owe it to their children to emphasize the importance of a college education. Sunday School teachers owe it to their pupils to emphasize the importance of a college education. Public school teachers and pastors should be living examples of the benefit of a college education, and by word of counsel should make plain to the youth the advantages of a college education in preparing them for places of leadership in society. It is manifestly unfair to the youth to take it for granted that they will intuitively appreciate the importance of a college education. If they fail to appreciate it now, and order their lives along other lines for the next ten or twenty years, then to realize their mistake they will be justified in laying the blame at the door of us today who fail to do our part, our duty by them in stressing the supreme importance of college training.

During these commencement days in our public schools is the logical time for all who believe in college education to lay special emphasis upon the fact that society will expect young people to secure a college education if they expect society to trust them with positions of leadership.

Christian education is the hope of the world. Society is demanding an educated leadership. It is for the Church not only to welcome with enthusiasm that demand, but also to see to it that the educated leadership shall be Christian.

Dover, Del.

THE JOY OF SOUL-WINNING.

Even if I were utterly selfish, and had no care for anything but my own happiness, I would choose if I might, under God, to be a soul winner; for never did I know perfect, overflowing, unutterable happiness of the purest and most ennobling order till I first heard of one who had sought and found the Saviour through my means. No young mother ever so rejoiced over her first-born child, no warrior was so exultant over a hard-won victory. I am afraid there are some ministers who hardly think that the gospel is intended to come personally home to the people. They talk, as I read of one the other day, who said that when he preached to sinners he did not like to look the congregation in the face, for fear they would think he meant to be personal; so he looked up at the ventilator, because there was no fear then of any individual catching his eye. Oh! that fear of man has been the ruin of many ministers. They never dared to preach right at the people. We have heard of sermons being preached before this and that honorable company; but preaching sermons before people is not God's way; we must preach sermons at the people, directly to them, to show that it is not the waving of the sword in the air like a juggler's sport, but it is the getting of the sword right into the conscience and the heart. This, I take it, is the true mission of every minister of Christ.—Charles H. Spurgeon.

THE MINISTRY OF AFFLICTION.

I am old and blind!

Men point at me as smitten by God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted of my kind,

Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;

I murmur not that I no longer see;

Poor, old, and helpless, I the more belong,

Father supreme, to Thee.

O merciful One!

When men are farthest, then Thou art most near;

When friends pass by me and my weakness shun,
Thy Charlot I hear.

Thy glorious face

Is leaning towards me; and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling-place—

And there is no more night.

On my bended knee

I recognize Thy purpose clearly shown;

My vision Thou hast dimmed, that I may see Thyself—Thyself alone.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Lieutenant Joseph Nicholas Harrison Clendenin was born in Alamance County, N. C., January 22, 1841. He was the fifth child of George and Mary Albright Clendenin, his father Irish descent and his mother German. He volunteered and entered Company H, 15th North Carolina Regiment, of the Confederate Army, at the beginning of the Civil War. He continued in active service during the entire war, belonged to the cavalry, and was at the surrender at Appomattox, Va., April 9, 1865.

While at home on furlough, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Catherine Long, daughter of Jacob and Jane Stockard Long, by John R. Stockard, July 31, 1862. Mrs. Clendenin was born June 2, 1837, and died December 11, 1918, at the age of 81 years, 6 months, and 9 days. She was an only daughter, with seven brothers. Her brother Joseph fell at Chancellorsville May 2, 1863. Other brothers became distinguished men. W. S. and D. A. as ministers and college presidents; J. A., as lawyer and legislator; G. W., as physician; and B. F., as judge.

Lieutenant Clendenin made an honorable and brave record throughout the four years of the Civil War, and returned to his native county and his wife on the 12th of April, 1865. His death came suddenly while quietly sleeping in the home of his eldest daughter, Mrs. Mabel Peterson, 930 Lexington Avenue, Greensboro, N. C., where he had gone to celebrate with her her birthday, the next day, January 8th. When she called him for breakfast, he did not answer. She went in and found him in his final sleep. He just lacked fifteen days of being eighty-five. He never missed an annual meeting of the Confederate reunion from the close of the Civil War to the time of his death. At the time of his death he was commander of Camp Ruffin, United Confederate Veterans, of Alamance County, and was also chairman of the prison committee of the county.

For many years after the war he was a successful farmer on Haw River, between Graham, the county seat, and Swepsonville, a mill town on the river. It was on that farm where "Uncle Joe" and "Aunt Bettie" lived happily together and reared their family of five girls and two boys—Mabel (Mrs. J. F. Peterson), mother of three girls and three boys, a widow, living in Greensboro, N. C.; Mollie, died unmarried; Kate, wife of Rev. Dr. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va., mother of two daughters and one son; Frank, not married; Ava, wife of Rev. Charles M. Lance, Methodist minister, but deceased; Esther, married C. C. Thompson, and they have two sons; George, married Ada Boyer, Charlotte, N. C., with four sons and two daughters. The whole number is: children, 7, two dead and five living; grandchildren, 19, 2 dead and 17 living; great-grandchildren, 4, living, making a total descendants of 30, four dead and twenty-six living. The family tree has many branches bearing good fruit in honor of good parents.

Lieutenant Clendenin was a good son, a good Christian, a good man, a good soldier, a good husband and father, a good citizen, a good neighbor, and a good friend. He became a Christian when a boy, lived up to his profession through war and peace and passed over the river leaving a good name. His life was full of good humor, a pleasant word with and for all others, and he obeyed the injunction, "Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile" (Psa. 34:13). One of the fine elements in his attitude toward others was that, though his young days were spent in a four-year war, he never lost that urbanity of manner that made him a favorite with all who came in contact with him. He laid him down to sleep, and, in the quiet of the night, his spirit went to join Bettie in the eternal home. He lacked fifteen days of being eighty-five—"The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is there strength, labor and sorrow, for it is soon cut off and we fly away."

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

Bethlehem College is taking on new life since the meeting of the Southern Christian Convention. The folks of this section are very much pleased over the financial plans of the Convention, especially the part pertaining to the financing of Bethlehem College. Never before was there such a challenge thrown cut to the Churches, and never before was there such faith manifested on the part of the officials of the Church. It is hoped that all the Churches of the Convention will come to the help of the Lord in financing the institutions of His great Church.

Our people are becoming enthused over the progress of the administration building of Bethlehem College, and this is what is needed in the case of all our enterprises. Enthusiasm often enables a man to accomplish the seemingly impossible, just because it won't permit him to see anything ahead but success. Goethals and the men under him dug the Panama Canal. Their enthusiasm enabled them to transform a plague-spot into a health resort; to get real work out of the lazy West Indian negro; to fight the floods and landslides with which nature opposed them.

Enthusiasm will win for any man in his struggle against circumstances. The greater the obstacles to be overcome, the greater will be the man's enthusiasm, if he is sincere in what he is doing. It was not the number of cubic yards of earth and rock to be moved at Panama that made the feat worthy to be called "big"; it was the tremendous obstacles of past failures of an unfriendly climate, and of man's sloth. So it is in any undertaking—the obstacles that hinder success only make its attainment that more worth while.

Enthusiasm keeps a man always on the job; not only during working hours, but also during his own time. I do not mean that he is always hard at work, but that he is always on the alert for any hint as to how he can improve his work and increase his knowledge. Many men have no enthusiasm for their work, because they have no real knowledge of it.

There are two ways of taking your work home with you. One is to worry over it—to mull it over when you should be forgetting it in recreation or sleep. This is letting your work master you instead of you mastering it; it is not the way of successful men. The other way is to remember that your advancement depends on what you do during your own time just as surely as on what you do during working hours. It is only the untrained man who worries over his work. He has cause to worry, because he never knows when something is going wrong that he cannot put right—when he is going up against some new problem that he will not know how to handle; when he will have to stand aside for the man who knows.

To the person with ambitions, there are few things which cannot be made to further his ambitions. Books and home-study courses will quickly give him specific knowledge of any subject. Newspapers, trade papers, daily conversation—all hold some suggestion which the wide-awake man can turn to account. The suggestion may be slight, the idea may seem to be common property; but the man who is not afraid to do a little overtime thinking can pick up much information of advantage to him, simply by keeping his eyes and ears open. Originally, screws were made blunt-nosed; the man who thought of pointing them made a fortune from the idea. Do you suppose that idea came to him during his working hours?

In its heart, the world loves the willing worker—the enthusiast—even while it fears him. It loves him because he does the things that have to be done, because he accomplishes what he sets out to do. Without enthusiasm, no man can accomplish anything worth while, whatever his opportunities. In her generous heart, Success has a special regard for the man who wins by pitching in. When he comes to her for his reward, she flings wide the doors of her treasure house and, smilingly, bids him: "Help yourself."

ELON LETTER.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPORT—1926.

Inasmuch as the deans, the business manager, the librarian, the registrar, and the visiting committee will each make written reports, much of the detail as heretofore contained in my report will be omitted.

Death of Trustee Corwith.

Since our last session, Trustee William F. Corwith, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has died. He gave the college $35,000 for endowment as a part of the Standardization and Emergency Funds. In addition to this, he gave pledges for $25,000 to the Emergency Fund for buildings. Part of these pledges were paid prior to his death. The others have been paid by his son, Lester F. Corwith, executor. An appropriate resolution should be adopted at this time.

Trustees to Be Elected.

At this session it will be necessary to elect eleven trustees. The term of office of nine trustees expires. Rev. W. T. Walters resigned as trustee when he became field secretary, and Mr. Corwith has died. This makes it necessary to elect eleven trustees at this time. The Southern Christian Convention has nominated twenty-two trustees, whose names are herewith submitted and from whom these trustees will be chosen at this session.

Gifts During the Year.

Aside from the regular collections on Standardization and Emergency Funds and the money collected through the efforts of Rev. W. T. Walters and Rev. W. T. Scott on behalf of the Southern Christian Convention Fund, the college has received gifts this year as follows:

Palmer Fund	$ 3,150.00
B. N. Duke	20,000.00
P. J. Carlton and family	50,000.00

The Duke gift was used to liquidate a part of the indebtedness incurred in the construction of the Science Building. The Carlton gift was used to retire a note of $50,000 held by the Virginia Trust Company and given to secure funds with which to complete the construction and furnishing of the Library Building. We have reduced the indebtedness of the college this year $87,178.74. We have also added $7,593.87 to the plant's value this year.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our little boys are out of school and are enjoying their vacation very much. For a number of years during the summer months when they were not in school it was their job to graze the cows in places we did not cultivate; but very often they would, childlike, get to playing or go to sleep and forget the cows, and in the cornfield they would go. Of course, when we found the cows in the corn and the little boys asleep, it was very hard to laugh and keep in a good humor, and we sometimes thought we had more vexations than anybody. But not so. We visited an orphanage last year in the middle of the summer, and after we got on the orphanage grounds we saw some little boys playing under the shade of some nice oaks, and a dozen fine large cows marching into the cornfield. We could not help but stop and take in the situation, for it reminded us of home, and we realized other superintendents had the same troubles. Last winter we built pasture fences and the little boys now have a ball game and the cows don't get in the corn.

Our larger boys do not have such a good time, especially on the farm. All of them just out of school and the oats ripe and ready to cut; corn, acres of it, to replant, as it has been so dry we got a poor stand. Potatoes to work and potatoes to plant. It keeps them busy. It takes much more work to farm in dry weather than when we have seasons.

But Wilson Collier is the worst out-of-heart of any. He is our poultry man, and has taken on turkeys this year. He has had real bad luck with his turkeys. He lost quite a number before he found out what was killing them. He powdered the hens and the lice went to the little turkeys, and now he is putting lice powder on the little turkeys, and I guess the lice will go after Wilson next. But Wilson is one who never gives up, and I feel sure he will get rid of the lice. And we will have turkey for Thanksgiving yet.

I wish you could see our new building. You would feel proud of it. I wish we could pay every dollar the day it is finished. We would feel happy indeed.

To save life and limb

THE peril of the road crossing has become a national problem with the multiplication of automobiles.

The Southern Railway System has eliminated 800 grade crossings, and is eliminating more every year, but over 6,000 remain to be separated on this system alone. The total cost to complete the work is a stupendous sum—probably half as much as the cost to build the railroads.

Even if the money were available, and the public willing to pay the increased freight and passenger rates necessary to provide a fair return on it, many years would be required to do the work.

Protection from the peril for the present generation at least must be found in some other way. Trains cannot stop at every crossing if they are to be run at the sustained speed expected by the public and required to carry the commerce of the country. The train crosses a highway about every mile. The motorist encounters a railroad only occasionally.

It is necessary, therefore, for the automobile driver to stop in order to avoid risk. No one who did this was ever killed.

It is better to save a life than to save a minute.

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

By WARREN H. DENISON, Secretary.

"I Feel it to Be Right."

That is what a friend said to me the other day about tithing. Have you any doubt about it being a blessing to tithe, or any question about it being your duty and privilege? Then it is worth sixty cents to find out more about it. J. E. Crawford has fully answered that question in his book, "The Call to Christian Stewardship." Are you wandering in the wilderness of perplexity and indecision? Then read these six chapters:

1. The legal route to tithing stewardship; or the voice of command.
2. The efficiency road; or the summons of an empty Church treasury.
3. The prosperity path; or the lure of financial success.
4. The grace highway; or the entreaty of love.
5. The call of a complete gospel.
6. The appeal of Pentecost.

Is it a good thing to be a tither, or is it not? Have you faced the tithing matter fairly and squarely as a Christian? Is this teaching of the tithe an indefinite something in the Bible? If it is a good thing to be a tither, you and I ought to be tithers. Dean Brown, of Yale Divinity School, says it is; Dr. J. H. Jowett says so too; Robert E. Speer says so. So does Roger W. Babson, Senator George Wharton Pepper, etc. Wouldn't it be fair to study the matter earnestly by getting a book like the above from our Christian Publishing Association? If it is a duty and a blessing, are you justified in being unsettled in the matter, or in failing to practice it?

Every Church Enlisted.

There is a growing realization for the need of every Church helping in all of our Christian Church enterprises. We cannot get along without every Church co-operating. Every Church needs for its own sake to share in every offering, every program, every enterprise of the Church. No Church should, for any reason, fail to have a worthy part in the evangelism offering, the stewardship program, the mission offerings, and the things that make up our work as a people. We are growing in loyalty, and we still need more of it. Every Church, every pastor among us, every institution we have, every agency needs to heartily co-operate in loyalty to the Christian Church in this time of her great mission to the world.

Some Plain Questions.

How long has your Church been in existence? How many ministers of the gospel has your Church given to the world? How many missionaries? How many life workers in some form of Christian service? Many Churches have never faced this matter squarely. They want pastors. They ask for trained men, able preachers, good pastors, ministers who can enlist the young, good mixers, etc., yet they have never sent out from their Church a single life worker. And sad to say, they have never given the matter much consideration. The need of the stewardship message is sorely needed by all such Churches until they create an atmosphere in the Church from which some of their finest sons and daughters will offer their lives for life Christian work.

It Would Bear Good Fruit.

It has been our conviction that great good could come to our cause if our Conference Presidents would visit other Conference sessions than their own. An exchange of such visits would be most helpful. It would give inspiration, information, new suggestions of method, and create a stronger fellowship.

STATE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

Clippings from the Dover, Del., papers speak in enthusiastic terms of the State Sunday School Convention recently held in our Church at that place.

On the 6th and 7th of May, what was declared to be the most successful State Sunday School Convention ever held by the Delaware organization was held in People's Christian Church. Speakers of State and national reputation were on the program. The speakers and delegates were enthusiastic in their appreciation of the splendid plant and equipment which provided accommodations for all the various conferences and committee meetings to be held without disturbance to each other, many declaring the building to be the most modern and efficiently planned in the East. The pastor's secretary had charge of our denominational book and supply table, the Christian Publishing Association also furnished free note-books to the delegates as an advertising medium.

Eight denominations were represented in the convention, 124 schools, and a registration of 432 delegates. A large number of visiting delegates were also in attendance.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Church served cafeteria luncheon to the large company at the noon hour each day. The Lend-a-Hand Society of the Church served an elaborate banquet one evening of the convention.

The State general secretary declared that our Mr. John B. Hutton, superintendent of our Sunday School in Dover and general chairman of the committee on arrangements and the publicity chairman, Mayor J. W. Woodford, superintendent of our Young People's Division in Dover, and the chairmen of the other sub-committees had done their work in the most efficient manner of any local organization entertaining the convention during his ten years of experience with the State convention.

BETHLEHEM COMMENCEMENT.

The commencement exercises of Bethlehem College were well attended and greatly enjoyed by the people of the town and surrounding community.

The baccalaureate sermon was delivered Sunday night, May 23rd, by Rev. R. M. Archibald, presiding elder in the Methodist Church; subject, "God's Word is Truth." This was an able message and was greatly enjoyed by a large audience.

On Monday night, May 24th, the graduating class of the academy gave their exercises, which did credit to themselves, their principal, Mrs. Lynam, and Bethlehem. There were fourteen in this class, all of whom received their diplomas.

On Tuesday night, May 25th, the graduating class of the college had their exercises. Rev. F. J. Ingram, pastor of the Baptist Church, delivered the literary address. There were eleven in this class, all of whom expressed a desire to go to a senior college next September, and part of them will go to Elon.

We regret very much the going away of Prof. and Mrs. Lynam. However, we hope them great success wherever they may go.

The board of trustees and faculty and student body have wrought well thus far, and we are expecting brighter days and greater accomplishments in the near future.

G. H. VEAZEY.

MORE ABOUT BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

The third year is now a matter of history. A good commencement was enjoyed. The exercises were well rendered, and everybody seemed to be happy and a real good time was had. Arrangements are already being made for the next year. Let's work and pray that we may have the best school next year ever. We have the concrete foundation up to the first floor in, and we are ready to start the brick work. The walls will be going up before these words are read in print. We are putting up a splendid building, and we ask and expect the co-operation of our people to make the work go. I hope the pastors in Georgia and Alabama will get busy and raise the funds which they have been asked to raise. Brother pastor, can I depend on you?

I hope friends far and near will see our need and come to our aid. I know many are planning to help us, and will later, but, friends, we need that help now. A good sister sent me $50.00 the other day. She made a great sacrifice to do it. God bless her, and wonderfully bless her! A brother—I mean a real good brother, sent me $75 on the load of cement I had asked for. Others are helping—won't you?

Your servant and brother,

H. W. ELDER.

FROM WALTERS.

Our work at Mt. Carmel is not what we would like to have it—very far from it—but we are glad that we have some things to encourage, and trust we may have more and more of this nature. Last Conference, the Treasurer reported all bills paid for the year 1925, with a balance in treasure.

We have just added to the beauty of the Church by giving it a new painting. This gives us a very beautiful, well-equipped, well-located Church.

In a district Sunday School convention a few Sundays ago our school won the Bible for having the best record in the district. However, the pastor and many of the members feel assured that the spiritual life is not what it should be, and are hoping and praying for a real revival.

To this end, we have organized a midweek prayer meeting, and we are looking forward for a real spiritual awakening this coming year. I feel that the great need every where is that the prayer life of the individual, the home, and the Church should be developed, less we stray and lose our power for God and right. Let all Christian people every where pray, very earnestly, for a great spiritual awakening.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Oh, oh! my, my! what beautiful, beautiful pictures these are that are coming in every day. Here's a little girl from Alabama, writing a letter and sending a picture—that's wonderful; really I am delighted, dears! You are all precious. I can't wait till the great prize day. Just think! It's soon, too; and you may be the one who wins this time.

What about our Kiddies' Korner anyway? Do you like this contest? I am sure you do, though, for it's wonderful! These pictures that I have here in my little desk, I am saving them so you can see them in your Korner.

Let's see, now. Two more weeks is all we can give—then, what? Why, of course, three prizes for three little people to enjoy! Come on now, Kiddies; hurry up—work as fast as you can.

What's this I hear about daily vacation Bible school? It's most time for all the little boys to take their Bibles and their hammers and saws, and come to Church every morning—what for? Oh, yes, it's Bible School time again. What a good, good time that means to all. The little girls are going to make some underclothes for our orphan friends. The boys are to make some chairs, and bookcases, and, oh! but I can't tell you all of it, for it would take so much paper to write it on—can't you come over to Burlington and see for yourselves?

Here comes our ice man, all loaded with ice cream and bells that make us feel so chilly—and in the hot sunshine, too! Come on, run quick! Let's get some ice for our cooler. Little boys and girls get thirsty when they are working.

So long.

YOUR EDITOR.

A New Member for the Korner.

Route 1, Roanoke, Ala.

Dear Miss Moffitt:

Will you admit a little Alabaman into the "Kiddies' Korner?"

I am a little girl twelve years of age. My birthday was May 18th. I go to Handley High School and was promoted to the ninth grade. I enjoy my school work so much, but I look forward to the happy days of vacation. Sister and I have received a perfect attendance certificate for four successive years. Oh, my! the "bad measles" caused us to lose our perfect certificate this past year. I am so happy to say that we have never had to take final examinations.

Inclosed you will find a Bible story and picture for the contest you have on. We enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN so much!

I'd better hurry on before my letter gets too lengthy.

Affectionately,
NELLIE REA SLEDGE.

The Red Feather.

By GLADYS C. CARPENTER.

Along the sunshine-spattered path in the cool woods the Indian brother and sister wandered with baskets on their arms. They were looking at every pretty thing in the woodland, hoping that they could find some red and blue berries and plenty of strange strong grasses and ferns, and maybe some colored feathers that the birds had dropped.

At home the Indian mother was going to make some baskets, so she needed berries to stain slender strips of bark and strong grasses and fern stems to weave into the baskets. While some colored bird's feathers would be very pretty woven in also. The children's mother, like all other Indian mothers of her tribe, first thought of a story; then the pattern she wove into her basket told the story. No two Indian baskets were ever alike.

Now the little Indian brother's name was Give-Much, while his sister's name was Stingy-One. For a long time they wandered through the forest until their baskets were full, then they started home.

When they came in sight of the wigwams, Stingy-One sat down under a big tree. "Wait, I'm going to keep some of the nicest things for myself. I want to make a basket of my own," she said.

Taking off her small Indian shawl, Stingy-One spread it on the grass. Then she began sorting the queer things in her basket. "This bunch of berries is too pretty to give away," she said. So that bunch she put on her shawl.

She sorted everything, placing all the best in her shawl for herself and all the poorest in the basket for the Indian mother. Finally all was divided except three feathers. Two were black and one a beautiful red. Give-Much had allowed his sister to have the best of the things they had found; so now he looked eagerly at the feathers, hoping that Stingy-One would take the red one to the mother. But she saved it for herself and, gathering her shawl up like a bag, hid it near the tree.

When they reached home the Indian mother was ready to weave a basket, for the warrior had brought her some nice thin strips of white bark that had been soaking in the creek.

The mother gave Stingy-One some bark for a little basket of her own, and she hurried back to the tree and began to weave the basket. "Now," she thought to herself, "I will crush some of those lovely berries I saved and will stain some of these strips a pretty pink." But lo! when she reached to get them she found that some birds had picked at or eaten all the berries.

"Well, anyway, I can weave some of these long grasses and fern stems into my little basket," she thought. Lo! when she tried to break them the proper length, they were too tough. At home she could have cut them with a stone knife.

"I can weave that bright red feather into the handle anyway," thought Stingy-One. But just as she reached for the feather a gust of wind caught it, and away it sailed.

Stingy-One sprang from the ground and followed it. Up it floated, then nestled on a tree branch. The tree branches were low, so the Indian girl climbed and caught the feather. Then she tried to get down, but it did no good, for her dress had caught on a branch. There she hung, and all this while she had nothing to do but think. Soon she heard her brother's voice calling her. She answered him, and he freed her from the branch.

When they were going home Give-Much said: "At the wigwam the big, new basket is finished."

"Is it pretty?"

"No, not very."

"It is a story. I think it must look like a stingy story, like somebody had kept the best. I'm going to give this red feather to the squaw mother to weave into the handle."

The arousing of sympathy for bodily suffering is comparatively easy. A New York newspaper secured the co-operation of more than 50,000 of its readers in an endeavor to save from capital punishment a fifteen-year-old boy in Pennsylvania who had murdered his grandmother. The same number of men and women working for the salvation of the boys and girls of this country from spiritual death would do much toward making civil punishment for crime unnecessary. "A child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame" (Prov. 29:15). "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it" (Prov. 22:6).

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

MONDAY.

BE NEAR ME, LORD.

From Tennyson's "In Memoriam."

Be near me when my light is low,

When the blood creeps and the nerves prick
And tingle, and the heart is sick,
And all the wheels of Being slow.

Be near me when the sensuous frame
Is rack'd with pangs that conquer trust;

And Time, a maniac scattering dust,

And Life, a fairy slinging flame.

Be near me when my faith is dry,

And men the flies of latter spring
That lay their eggs, and sting and sting,
And weave their pretty cells and die.

Be near me when I fade away,

To point the term of human strife,
And on the low, dark verge of life
The twilight of eternal day.

Be near us when we climb or fall;

Ye watch, like God, the rolling hours
With larger o'er eyes than ours,
To make allowances for us all.

I falter where I firmly trod,

And falling with my weight of cares
Upon the great world's altar stairs
That slope through darkness up to God.

I stretch lame hands of faith and grope,

And gather dust and chaff, and call
To what I feel is Lord of all,
And faintly trust the larger hope.

So runs my dream; but what am I?

An infant crying in the night;
An infant crying for light,
And with no language but a cry.

TUESDAY.

THE HIDDEN PORTRAIT.

"Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip?"—John 14:8-10.

Philip had sat at His feet, had listened to His teaching, had seen the aureole about His life. He had seen the loaves and fishes multiply at the touch of His hand and had often been with Him in His prayer-retreats. He had known that nearness to the life of His Lord that discipleship implied. Yet there was a need for the question and a touch of pathos in the very words.

And what of much of our avowed discipleship of today? Are there not many who gather about the sacred emblems of His torn body and shed blood to whom the Master would say, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me?" We have our altars and rituals, our canonical laws and system of Christian ethics. We have our temples and cathedrals. But is not the true portrait often hidden beneath a multiplicity of organizations and the accumulation of glittering things? Oh, that all might find Him and get a new vision of His face!

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

WEDNESDAY.

A CHRISTIAN AND THE LAW.

"Ye are not under the law, but under grace."—Rom. 6:14-18.

Jesus repudiates the Pharaisaical idea of the law, which was to strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. He disliked intensely undue stress on law and ritual and special observances when they lacked heart-life or were lax in the living of great issues. He Himself refused to give laws either in practical affairs or in religious; but He always uttered great principles and left the individual understanding that he was called unto and into a higher freedom—a standard above the application of the law, and left him to make the application himself.

The liberty a Christian has in Christ challenges to the highest life, and Christians to live righteously, that they do not have to think of the law. Their living challenges the law's application—"ye become servants of righteousness."

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, help us to realize the immeasurable greatness of divine love and to devote our lives to loving service for His sake who gave His life for us. Amen.

THURSDAY.

MIRACLES BEYOND DISPUTE.

"For that indeed a notable miracle hath been done . . . is manifest to all, and we cannot deny it."—Acts 4:16.

The story of the Bible brings us face to face with many undeniable miracles. The transformations that take place when man comes in touch with God is the greatest of them all. Multitudes of people who have been narrow, provincial and selfish, but when they touch Jesus they become broad, universal and then exclaim with Paul, "For me to live is Christ."

One of the undeniable miracles is the mystic power some have to remain faithful to Christ in spite of the temptations to desert the faith. A minister said recently, "The world never had greater power to tempt the Christian than it has today. But the faith was never more triumphant than today." We may have no martyrs, but there are innumerable witnesses who cry, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust Him." "To whom shall we go. Thou hast the words of eternal life."

Prayer.—Our Father, make us witnesses of Thy blessings. The fruit of Thy Church is for the healing of the nations. O may we abide with Thee. Let come what will, may we be found faithful. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE KINGDOM OF LOVE.

"Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets."—Matt. 7:7-12.

In the growing complexity of our civilization, when men are complaining that there are more than a million laws on the statute books of our States and nation, it is refreshing to remember that in the law of Moses there were ten simple precepts that summed up all the rest; that Micah reduced these to three—to "deal justly, love kindness, and walk humbly with God"; and that Jesus further simplified them in the one word "love." He epigrammatized the whole law and the prophets in a single golden sentence.

A certain manufacturer operated his factory in conformity to this law, and was astounded at his immediate prosperity. Not only was the quantity and quality of the product greatly improved, but the spirit of brotherly kindness permeated the whole establishment until mechanical organization gave way to living organism. The world is chaotic, nation against nation, employer against employee, rich against poor, because we are not co-operating. "Just the art of being kind is all the old world needs."

Prayer.—That we may learn to apply in our own lives the great principle laid down by Jesus, that love is the fulfilling of the law, that God is Love. Pray that the spirit of love may rule in the household and in all our outside affairs. Amen.

SATURDAY.

BE CAREFUL.

"Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." "Him that thinketh, he standeth to be held lest he fall."—1 Cor. 10:10-13.

"Two men had made the point of the Matterhorn, the highest peak in the Alps. Their garments had been waved from a pole to the villagers below. It was a wonderful hour! Now the descent—the two joined four others of the party at a lower level and started the perilous movement. One man was turning to step downward when the other slipped and fell, knocking over the man nearest him. One by one, four of the six went flying through the air, falling from precipice to precipice down to the Matterhorn glacier four thousand feet below. The other two wept. Then one of them asked to see the rope, and to his horror, he found it was weak and never should have been brought. It had broken in mid-air."

Many a one is trusting to a flimsy rope, or building on sinking sands. When the test comes, then what? Paul urges us to take heed constantly, "instant in season and out of season," lest we fall. He cites instances to prove that even the strongest may fall in a careless or thoughtless moment.

Prayer.—Our Lord, when we look back over our past we see what narrow escapes we have often made. Impress us more and more with the perils of life into which we may fall if we are not watchful. Save us, Lord, by Thy grace. Amen.

SUNDAY.

SUNDAY AND EVERY-DAY CONVERSATION.

"Our conversation is in heaven."—Phil. 3:13-20 (v. 20). R. V.: "Our citizenship is in heaven." M. S. V.: "We are a colony of heaven."

1. Can our speech always be heavenly?
2. What is heavenly speech?
3. How can this be realized?

Answers: (1) yes; (2) heavenly speech is that conversation that is in harmony with heaven's purpose for man and in accord with the well-being of man, which is the glory of God. By understanding that we are citizens of the heavenly. (3) By a thorough belief in the heavenly. By a thorough consecration to the heavenly. And by a constant carefulness about our speech.

Peter's speech once betrayed him. After that he was more careful.

We all talk most about the things we are most interested in, and about the places where we are going. If we are followers of and workers for Christ it would seem to be the most natural thing that our conversation turn to things of Him. Our conversation reflects our citizenship and there is nothing in the true and noble relations of our temporal life with which God has nothing to do and which is not to be treated according to His divine purpose, and in that sense thoroughly heavenly. In all we ought to be able to realize that—

"There's a land that is fairer than day,
And by faith we shall see it afar."

Every-day conversation ought to be heavenly, and Sunday should mean so much to us that its inspiration would make it so.

Prayer.—Our Father, turn our thoughts to Thee this day. Fill us with Thy heavenly spirit, and inspire us continually to the true motives for living. Amen.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

JUDAH'S PLEA.

We must know something of the background of this lesson to understand it. Judah's plea and the subsequent events are but the working out of certain forces which had their rise when Joseph was sold into slavery, and their culmination when Jacob and his household came into Egypt and there began that development which made the nation that sprang therefrom a blessing to all nations and peoples.

There had been a dire famine in the land of Canaan, and Jacob hearing there was corn aplenty in Egypt—not because of abundant crops, for there was a famine in Egypt, too; but because of the foresight of Joseph—sent his sons down into Egypt to buy corn. He kept Benjamin, his youngest son, at home with him, for he could not take any risks with this boy in the light of what had happened to Joseph. When the men came into Egypt, they had to deal with Joseph, their brother, but they did not know him. Joseph had not forgotten his old home or his loved ones. He asked about his aged father and especially about his youngest brother, and as he heard about them he scarce could restrain himself. When the brothers returned, they left Simeon behind as a pledge of their good faith, for Joseph, in order to test them, had charged them with being spies. Furthermore, when they opened their sacks when they returned home, they found the money which they had paid for the corn in the mouths of the sacks. They recounted in detail to Jacob all that happened to them and of their dealings with the men of affairs.

The famine waxed worse and worse, and Jacob was forced to send again into Egypt for corn. The brothers refused to go unless Benjamin was sent along, for Joseph had told them that it would be useless for them to come unless they brought the youngest child. Jacob was unwilling to let the boy go, but the extremity of the situation, and Judah's pledge that he would be personally responsible for Benjamin, and forfeit his own life in case he failed to bring Benjamin back, finally overcame Jacob's objections and the sons went again into Egypt and got corn. Joseph, yearning to make himself known to his brothers, and yet eager to know whether they were worthy of confidence, had his cup put into Benjamin's sack. When the men were overtaken on the way back and charged with stealing Joseph's cup, they stoutly denied the charge and hastened back to establish their innocence. They were so certain that they were innocent that they were willing to die in case the cup was found in their possession. Joseph suggested that it might be better if the one in whose possession the cup was found was simply retained as a slave, and they agreed. Imagine their surprise and their dismay when the cup was found in Benjamin's sack. He was, of all of them, the least suspected and the one that they could least spare. This is the background of Judah's plea.

Judah's plea is a fine example of the art of making a plea, and every lawyer might well study it in all its details. With an earnestness that was manifest to all and with a passion that moved his hearers, he told of the events that had led up to that fateful hour. He told of the aged father's reluctance to allow his favorite son to come. He told of his own pledge for the boy's return. He pictured the aged man's grief if perchance they should return home without the boy, and he boldly declared that it would cause the old man to die of a broken heart. It would have been difficult for any man to have withstood such a plea, and it was impossible for such an one as Joseph to withstand it. He waved his servants aside, and, in sobbing and broken voice, revealed himself unto his brothers. When he saw their consternation and fear, he hastened to assure them that he had freely forgiven them and that they had nothing to fear. Furthermore, he asserted that they had been unwitting instruments in the providence of God which had manifested itself, not only in their lives, but in his life as well. And he told of his plans for the future, whereby his father and his household was to come into Egypt and live as his charges.

It is a glorious ending to a story that had an unpromising beginning. Here is the foreshadowing of that glorious doctrine which found its fullest expression in the vicarious suffering and death of Jesus Christ, the doctrine of the atonement. Here also we find that spirit of forgiveness which found its highest expression in that same Jesus Christ. Let him who reads this lesson think not that it is simply a story of far-away days. It is fresh and human and up-to-the-minute, for it deals with eternal principles. Think over some of the truths here involved.

1. There is a strange providence that rules over our destinies, rough-hew them as we may.
2. Be sure your sins will find you out.
3. The innocent suffer with and for the guilty.
4. God often uses men all unbeknown to them in working out His purposes.
5. To err is human; to forgive is divine.
6. A true son manifests an abiding interest in his father's welfare and, as far as possible, looks out for his father unto the end.
7. Material things may kill the finer qualities of a man's life, but it need not do so.
8. We are our brother's keeper.
9. We should forgive others because others have so much to forgive in us.
10. The ways of God are past finding out.
11. The fact that God overrules evil is no reason why man should do evil.
12. To be forgiven ought to be an incentive to holier living and more earnest service.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

June 20, 1926.

TOPIC: "How Much of a Goal Should Money Be?"—Matt. 6:19-24, 33.

Some Money Thoughts.

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth (v. 19).

Life does not consist in the abundance of one's possessions.

A man's "worth" is not measured by the value of his property.

A man's attitude toward his property nearly always is his attitude toward the kingdom of God.

Jesus taught stewardship of money as among the first tests of stewards. (Read "Money the Acid Test," by McConaughy.)

The vital question is not how much property one has, but how one uses what he has for the Lord.

Money is sacred stuff. It is so much of ourselves. It is our sweat, toil, energy, strength turned into coin. We have no more right to misuse it than we have our life, person or time.

We should definitely set aside a certain portion of our income first for the Lord. The tithing (tenth) is the least that any one should set aside for his use.

Money is not an evil thing in itself. Money is not to be despised, but Christianized. It is not to be hoarded, but used for worthy purposes. Property is a great asset for the kingdom. God gives us power to make money, and we are to use it to advance His purposes on earth.

To have is not to hold or keep, but to owe. Read Luke 16:9-10.

Our money is for use and not for power. We are not to accumulate to have and to hold, but to use and be a blessing in the world.

They that are minded to be rich fall into a temptation and a snare and many foolish and hurtful lusts, such as drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil: which some reaching after have been led astray from the faith, and have pierced themselves through with many sorrows.—1 Tim. 6:9-10.

"That the Southern Christian Convention issue its bonds executed in behalf of the Convention by the President, countersigned by the Secretary, under seal of the corporation, to cover the indebtedness and financial requirements of Elon and Bethlehem Colleges, providing, over a term of twenty years, for the retirement of interest and principal of the same, thus replacing these schools on a safe financial basis. This would require $500,000—$400,000 for Elon and $100,000 for Bethlehem."

met in Suffolk, Va., today at 11 A. M., with all members present. Dr. W. W. Staley was also present, and Col. J. E. West for part of the time.

After discussion, the following form of bond was prepared, to be submitted to the Board of Trustees of Elon and Bethlehem Colleges and to the Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention for approval, to-wit:

MINUTES OF EXECUTIVE BOARD AND HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS.

Minutes of the meeting of the Executive Board and heads of departments of the Southern Christian Convention, held in Suffolk Christian Church, September 22, 1925:

ELON LETTER.

Field Secretaries.

The board of trustees in its last annual session authorized the administrative committee to employ one or more field secretaries to canvass the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention in the effort to raise $24,000 as interest on the bonds given the college by the Southern Christian Convention. For this purpose, Rev. W. T. Scott and Rev. W. T. Walters were employed. Rev. W. T. Scott began his work in June and resigned in January to enter Yale University.

Rev. W. T. Walters began his work the first of October. They will make report of their work to the board, as will also the business manager, covering the financial side of the matter.

Cost of Rebuilding Program.

Last year the board of trustees desired that a detailed statement of the cost of the rebuilding program be submitted at this session. I have been aided in the preparation of this report by estimates made in the office of the general contractor, Joe W. Stout, and by the auditor who distributed the item of overhead amounting to $44,283.96 to the various accounts of the rebuilding program.

The following results appear now covering these items on the books of the college:

Account.	Cost.	Paid.
Alamance (administration).....	$139,946.09	$ 40,590.65
Whitley (auditorium)	89,549.36	50,000.00
Duke (science)	87,269.32	70,000.00
Carlton (library)	91,500.00	*100,000.00
Mooney (Ch'n education).....	110,176.27	100,000.00
Porticoes ..	10,560.00
Campus, grounds, walls	47,036.34
Fence and grandstand (athletic)	5,000.00
Furniture and equipment	145,662.50
Powerhouse equipment (outside)	43,867.95
Books for library (not including 1925-26)	16,553.27

Raised for general purposes.....	123,501.45
Totals	$787,121.10
Balance due on rebuilding program.....	303,029.00
	$787,121.10

*Includes remittances covering the cost of the equipment of this building.

The distribution of these items is slightly different from that reported to the Southern Christian Convention because the auditor at that time had not distributed the overhead item, but the total is the same.

Refinancing.

The banks and individuals who hold the college obligations have been especially kind in their willingness to continue to carry these obligations. There is a strong feeling, however, that the time has come to refinance, funding the obligations over a term of years and so being in position to weather any financial storm that may overtake the country. With this purpose in view, several overtures have been made to financial agencies during the year. Details covering these matters are herewith submitted.

The liquidation of the indebtedness of the college is a major concern. The Southern Christian Convention voted to raise for us through the benevolence budget $36,750 a year—$6,750 of this money is 6 per cent interest on the endowment note which we have held for many years, and the $30,000 is interest on the $500,000 of bonds which the Convention has voted the college. The raising of this money will enable us to pay the interest on the indebtedness and to meet the current expenses of the college, including the increase in the salaries of the professors, but it will not liquidate the indebtedness. It is the purpose, with your approval, to endeavor to increase the endowment of the college by large gifts and to use the income on this increased endowment to curtail the indebtedness of the college. In this way, over a term of years it is hoped that the college will be able to free itself from its present indebtedness. This matter is laid before you for your earnest consideration.

Dr. W. A. Harper reported that provision has been made for a memorial to Dr. W. S. Long at Elon College.

It was moved and carried that the President submit to the next session of the Western N. C. Conference the matter of the increased apportionment.

It was moved and carried that it is the sense of this body that restrictions made against general appeals during the term of the Men and Millions campaign terminated May 1, 1925.

It was moved and carried that no appeals for funds by departments be made to the constituency of the Convention until authorized by the Convention or Executive Board.

The board met, with the following persons present: L. E. Smith, President; I. W. Johnson, W. W. Staley, C. H. Rowland, J. H. Lightbourne, W. A. Harper, C. D. Johnston, Mrs. J. A. Williams, J. O. Atkinson, N. G. Newman, J. E. West, W. T. Walters.

Called to order by L. E. Smith, President. Prayer by W. W. Staley. Minutes of last meeting read. Dr. J. O. Atkinson reported that plans and specifications for the Lebanon Memorial had been prepared and accepted. He also

It was moved and carried that it is the sense of this board that the action of the Convention relating to the issuance of $500,000.00 in bonds included the authority of Elon College Board of Trustees to handle the bonds in all details in the sum of $400,000.00, including the collection of interest on same; and that the Board of Trustees of Bethlehem College handle the $100,000.00 allotted to Bethlehem in the same way.

It was moved and carried that the President appoint a commission of finance to study and submit to the next session of the Southern Christian Convention such matters as pertain to the financial policy of the Convention.

It was suggested that the next session of the Convention deal largely with matters touching finance, principles and polity of the Christian Church, mission, evangelism, etc.

Adjournment. Prayer by Dr. N. G. Newman.

L. E. SMITH,
President.
I. W. JOHNSON,
Secretary.

Your board elected Dr. C. H. Rowland, Secretary of Evangelism. We accepted the invitation of the Durham Christian Church as a place for holding the 1926 session of the Convention.

We have prepared a program for this session, which we submit herewith for your approval.

L. E. SMITH,

E. E. HOLLAND,
Executive Board.

tedness of the college. In this way, over a term of years it is hoped that the college will be able to free itself from its present indebtedness. This matter is laid before you for your earnest consideration.

Internal Government of the College.

For the past several years the internal government of the college has been shared with the students under the constitutions granted them, with by-laws approved by the faculty. There is a feeling on the part of certain students that student government should be independent of faculty initiative or control. This disposition also finds expression with regard to student publications. There is a feeling that the faculty advisers for student publications should be withdrawn, and that these organs of student sentiment and expression should be entirely free. Inasmuch as the board of trustees determines policies for the government of the college, I am presenting these matters to you for consideration.

A certain section of the student body opposes the compulsory chapel attendance and compulsory attendance on Church and Sunday School. These are trustee requirements, and I am submitting the matter to you for consideration.

These attitudes are not local merely, but are general in the college life of today. In some colleges the presidents of the student government organizations are asked to sit with the faculty in its regular and called sessions, and the deans of the college sit with the student governments in their regular and called sessions. This suggestion is referred to you for consideration in connection with the whole question of the government of the college in its relationship to students.

The faculty committees and the deans, as has been our custom for several years now, handle the details of the internal management of the college and its several departments. The deans and these committees make regular reports to the faculty.

OBITUARIES.

THOMAS.

Charlie C. Thomas was born November 4, 1854, age 71 years, 7 months and 6 days. He was married to Foster Watson, October 26, 1876, and to this union was born nine children—Robert, Jones, John, Oscar, Stacy, William, Artemus, Jerome, and one daughter, Lizzie Thomas Clark. One son, Artemus, departed this life December 16, 1924. Had he lived until October 26th, he would have been married fifty years.

He joined the Shallow Well Christian Church in middle life and has been a faithful member for thirty or more years. He leaves to mourn their loss a wife, eight children, two sisters, thirty grandchildren, one great-grandchild, and also a host of friends.

Interment was made in Shallow Well Cemetery, services being conducted by the writer, assisted by his former pastor, Rev. R. L. Williamson. He had been afflicted for the past few years, but was able to be up until the day he died. He attended the memorial service on Saturday, May 9th, and Mouday the 11th the summons came.

May the God of all comfort, sustain and uphold by His free grace the bereaved. Let us labor to enter into that rest into which we have a hope that he has entered.

J. W. KNIGHT.

LOHR.

Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Lohr, a member of Mayland Christian Church and a resident of the Mayland community, died May 25th, after a long, lingering illness. The funeral was preached in Linville Creek Church of the Brethren, near Broadway, Va., and the body laid to rest in the cemetery adjoining on Thursday, May 27th.

Sister Lohr had reached the age of 65 years, 2 months and 27 days. In the absence of her pastor, Rev. A. W. Audes, who was away assisting in an evangelistic meeting at Fancy Gap, Va., the funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Elder D. H. Zigler, of the Church of the Brethren.

Ask to Elect Governor.—

A delegation from the Porto Rican Legislature visited Washington recently to urge the President and Congress to allow that island to elect its own Governor. At present, the President appoints the Governor of Porto Rico, and he must be a citizen of the United States. The Porto Ricans feel that they should have a voice in choosing their chief executive.

A Year of Tornados.—

During 1925 there were 115 tornados in the United States, resulting in the deaths of 853 persons and the destruction of twenty-five million dollars worth of property. The worst one swept over parts of Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri on March 18, 1925, killing nearly eight hundred. Nineteen twenty-five was a year of tornados, one of the worst years in history.

Inconsistency.—

Congressman Davey, of Ohio, has recently called attention to the fact that, in spite of the talk of reducing government expenses, twenty thousand civilian employees have been added to the government service since January 1, 1924. This fact standing alone seems out of harmony with the economic professions of the party now in power. To add twenty thousand to the pay-roll of the government means more than a small increase in government expenditures.

Another Radio Step.—

Radio which is the newest invention to claim a nation-wide enthusiasm, is still in its infancy, and every forward step is watched with a great interest. One of the last of these was the sending of the photograph of the British Prime Minister Baldwin from London to New York within the hour of its taking. This rapid transmission of Premier Baldwin's photograph has become one of the wonders of modern progress, and leads one to expect almost anything from radio.

Still Inventing.—

Some thirty years ago the chief of the Patent Office in Washington resigned because he believed that everything had been invented, and no more patents would need to be granted. That was thirty years ago, and last year the Patent Office had the busiest year in its history. It granted forty-five thousand patents, and Americans maintained their tradition as an inventive people. There are yet many things to be invented, and another commissioner need not quit. It is possible that this year may break the record set by 1925.

Broadway's Curfew Law.—

Since Jimmie Walker, the one-time writer of popular songs for Broadway, has become New York's Mayor, Broadway is threatened with a thorough cleaning up. A curfew ordinance has been passed in New York which closes all the shows and night clubs at 2 A. M. Broadway is protesting, and begging for another hour, but let us hope they lose one more instead. Apparently, New York has had enough of such parties as that of Earl Carroll's, and the police are closing those shows which depend on lack of clothing by their actresses for their appeal. We wish New York's "singing" mayor much success in his clean-up efforts.

Another Notable Career.—

From stable boy for Russian Cossacks to Shah of Persia. Riza Khan crowned himself Shah on April 25th with a ceremony of Oriental splendor. He had been the virtual ruler of Persia for several years. After leading a successful revolution he made himself prime minister, and last October, through his efforts, the Persian National Assembly deposed Shah Ahmed Mirza. At that time, it was reported that Persia might become a republic, but not long ago the Assembly voted to make the former stable boy to Russian Cossacks Shah, and the former stable boy crowned himself with due Eastern pomp. It is a story of a remarkable rise from a lowly position to that of a high place, but so different from that of our Lincoln. Riza Khan learned well from Russian Cossacks, and by revolution and bloodshed rose to power, using it when it was his to glorify himself and not his people.

A Modest Inventor.—

There is a great man in Washington who is retiring, and will have none of the blare of trumpets so much desired by his near neighbors, the politicians. On May 20th he had a birthday. It was his seventy-fifth birthday, and Washington wanted to give Emile Berliner—for it is Emile Berliner who is this modest, great man—a great birthday celebration, but he would not have it. He was too busy for such things, there was too much to do. It was this quiet man in Washington who helped Alexander Graham Bell to perfect the telephone just fifty years ago. He created the first microphone or telephone transmitter. This same invention, with a few modifications, is now used in broadcasting by radio. The latest invention of Mr. Berliner is the acoustic tile which will revolutionize the architecture of great auditoriums. By the use of the acoustic tiles the voice of a speaker modulated to conversational tones can be easily heard more than a thousand feet away. This will keep many an auditor awake, and save many a speaker vain efforts to make his audience hear what he is saying. Mr. Berliner, like Thos. A. Edison goes on inventing, and allowing others to snatch the applause and blare of trumpets. He does not care for that side of the business.

Huge Social Charities.—

The opening of the headquarters for the Council of the welfare organizations of New York City, which includes most of the fifteen hundred charitable organizations at work in that city, gave opportunity for the announcement that the sum expended in welfare work exceeded two hundred million dollars only thirty-one million of which was appropriated by the city. The remainder of this huge sum is raised by voluntary contributions. The Jewish and Catholic welfare work was singled out for especial praise in the report.

A study of the welfare work in a number of the great cities of the country revealed the fact that Cleveland, Ohio, with a budget of thirteen million dollars, had the best method for collecting and expending its money for social welfare. This is a great country, a rich country, but a thought of the poor who must have these huge sums expended in charity for them in order that they may exist, is proof that the economic arrangements in the nation need a complete reorganization. We ought not to need charity in a land so rich as ours, but an equalized opportunity by which every person would have a chance to be self-supporting and self-respecting.

Scientist Talks About Religion.—

A rally on behalf of religious freedom held in Unity House, Boston, Mass., was addressed recently by Professor A. Robert Milliken, a Nobel prize winner and director of the physics laboratory of the California Institute of Technology. In reporting the address of Dr. Milliken, the Boston Herald said: "Dr. Milliken classed the development of religion into four stages, beginning with pagan and barbaric forms of worship, on through the coming of Jesus, with a backward move following, in which religion became incrustured with superstition through which the life and teachings of Jesus had to shine, and so to the present and fourth stage. In this stage he declared that an utterly new conception of God came to man, a religion which was inextricably linked up with the increase in scientific knowledge and advance, the stage whose outstanding feature was the definite increase in the power of moulding environs, with probably limitless possibilities ahead in the use of the scientific method for the development of the human race. Religion today, he declared, was of two sorts—first, the dogmatic type, which he further divided into atheists and fundamentalists; and liberal religion, which in contrast to the others was that which kept its mind open and was capable of adapting itself to an ever-changing world, and," he concluded, "modern science walks humbly with the Lord its God." If the world could understand and adhere strictly to Dr. Millikan's definition of liberal religion, it would be a happier world.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. W. A. Harper gave the baccalaureate sermon at Defiance College on June 13th. He also gave an address before the Defiance Alumni on June 14th.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson is to take two courses at Blue Ridge Missionary Conference this summer. Dr. Atkinson is being recognized as a leader among the mission secretaries of the country.

Rev. S. M. Lynam, editor of THE SUN's "Observatory," has given up his professorship at Bethlehem College to become pastor of our Church at Toronto, Canada. He will continue to write the "Observatory" for THE SUN, in which he is doing a fine piece of work.

THE SUN's editor, J. O. Atkinson, was summoned by wire to Cambridge, Mass., to the bedside of his son, J. O. Atkinson, Jr., Tuesday, the 8th, where the latter was in school at Harvard University. After a serious surgical operation, his son is reported as improving and is now thought by his physician to be out of danger. The editor hopes to be back at Elon College by Tuesday night of this week.

The minutes of the Southern Christian Convention and of the Woman's Missionary Convention have been printed and distributed. The endeavor has been to send a copy to each minister and layman, also to each member of committees of both Conventions. No doubt there have been some omissions, but any one sending a post-card addressed to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, will receive a copy. The supply, however, is limited.

The editor of THE SUN met by accident, and most pleasantly, on the train recently a good brother of the Church who, though not in touch with his local Church for some years, felt interested in the Orphanage, and the conclusion of our conversation was that he was ready to give a donation of at least $100.00 as a starter for a real library at the Orphanage. We learn from Bro. Johnston, the superintendent, that they have some books which are old and much worn and read, but that this donation means the beginning of a real library, and he is indeed happy for the children who are there. The name of the good brother who conceived this fine idea and is to make the donation will appear under the Orphanage report at an early date, with the desire that other names shall appear, following his, of those who shall wish to build up at the Orphanage a library of real worth-while books. This is certainly one channel of blessing and benefit to our children at the Orphanage, and we are indeed grateful to the friend we met and with whom for an hour we traveled most happily as we discussed together needs pertaining to our Christian cause and the work we are trying to do.

VISITORS AT WAKEFIELD.

The people of the Wakefield pastorate enjoyed a great feast May 30th. It was our annual get-together day in this charge. Dr. N. G. Newman preached the morning sermon, and I think it was one of the best I ever heard him deliver—it was great! Dr. Newman was at one time pastor of a part of these Churches, and it was a joy to all to have him come back and preach for us.

Following Dr. Newman's sermon, Dr. C. C. Ryan conducted a very fine Communion service, making it very, very impressive. Then came the lunch, and, as it is always characteristic of these good folk, there was more to eat than could be consumed, but all seemed to enjoy it.

In the afternoon, Dr. Ryan brought to the congregation a very stirring message, which is nothing unusual for him to do; it was great, and every one enjoyed it very much. Then Rev. H. E. Truitt spoke briefly on the Elon summer school. Then Dr. W. A. Harper spoke on Christian education. All of these addresses were well delivered and well received. We know that by bringing men like the above mentioned together always helps a field and gives the people a large and truer conception of a greater scope of work. We cherish the day when these men will be with us again.

ALABAMA S. S. CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Alabama Conference met at Rock Stand on Saturday and Sunday, May 29th and 30th. On Saturday morning the main features were the business session, in which Rev. J. H. Hughes was re-elected president, and Carl Dollar elected secretary-treasurer. The president's address reviewed the things done the past year and told some of the needs for the coming year; and a talk was made on "Our Duty to Our College," by Rev. G. H. Veazey.

In the afternoon, Dr. Atkinson was with us and spoke on "Sunday School and Missions." His talk was the main feature of the Convention. The young people held an interesting session in the school building. Some of the subjects discussed in this session were "The Church and Young People," "Sunday School and Young People," "Evangelism and Youth," and "Missions and Young People." Some visiting members told us of interesting things that are being done in the B. Y. P. U. The young people decided to organize a mission study class in every Church and to raise a fund to be used in furthering Christian Endeavor.

On Sunday morning after Sunday School, Dr. Atkinson made a short speech, which was followed by a powerful sermon by Rev. G. D. Hunt, on the subject of "The Church."

We are looking forward to greater things the coming year.

CARL DOLLAR,
Secretary.

REV. HUNT CONDUCTS RALLIES.

Dear Bro. Editor:

It has been my good pleasure to attend all of the Woman's Missionary Rallies in our Conference, beginning with Mt. Zion, May 31st. It was great to be there and observe the faith and courage of these good women. Their zeal and devotion was an inspiration to me.

June 1st the rally was held at New Harmony Church. Here the rain interfered somewhat with the services, but a good crowd gathered and we had a fine meeting, presided over by Mrs. O. H. Orr.

June 2nd, the meeting was at Beulah Church. Here the rally was very well attended and a fine service. Mrs. Lois Melton presided over the meeting. Much enthusiasm was manifested in the discussions of the day.

The last rally, June 3rd, was held at Antioch, presided over by Mrs. V. E. Kitchens. This was indeed a fine meeting, good attendance and much interest manifested in all lines of work. It seems that our Church has waited a long time before giving the good women a chance to assist themselves in a missionary program. But they are equal to the emergency. I trust that something may be done to get the women organized in every Church, and may it soon be accomplished.

Dr. Atkinson was present at three of our meetings, but was summoned away to attend the funeral of Dr. W. P. Lawrence, of Elon College, and, therefore, could not attend the last meeting. We were all inspired by his timely and eloquent addresses, and we were saddened at his departure. We trust he may be able to come this way again at no distant day.

MEETING AT LANETT, ALA.

Dear Editor and SUN Readers:

I have not let you hear from me in some time through THE SUN. I am still living at Lanett, Ala., and am working hard trying to do something for my Lord. We have just closed a two-weeks' meeting here at Lanett Christian Church. Rev. J. D. Dollar did the preaching, and he gave us some great messages, and the people enjoyed them very much. The Church was greatly revived, and backsliders were reclaimed and sinners were converted and sixty members were added to the Church and there are more to follow next Sunday. It was indeed a great revival. I organized a band of workers a few months ago, and we held prayer meetings in the homes of the people and prayed for a great revival, and the Lord heard and answered our prayers.

I want to tell all of you pastors, when you want a revival in your Church, if you will get a band of your Church members to work with you and have about three months' prayer meetings in the homes of the people before the revival begins, you will succeed. I have never seen it fail yet.

Dear brother pastors, let us all pray more and work harder than we ever have for a great revival in all of our Churches. The people will accept Christ if we will hold Him up before the world. We must become burdened for lost souls, and we must lay this burden on the hearts of our Church members. When we meet and pray for lost souls God will save souls and add them to the Church.

Dear pastors, let us preach the full gospel of Christ and preach against sin in all of its forms, and keep ourselves unspotted from the world, and God will bless our Churches and make us happy.

Rev. J. D. Dollar is a good preacher, and if any of you pastors need help you will do well to get him to help you in your revival meetings. I am going to help Rev. S. D. Lankford at Enigma Church and at Vanceville, and I am going to help Bro. Carpenter at Mount Zion Christian Church and at Coves Grove. Pray for us, that God may give us a great revival at all of these Churches. I am expecting the Lord to be with us in these meetings and get to Himself great glory. God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.

MT. OLIVET (R) REVIVAL.

Mt. Olivet (R), Virginia Valley Conference, has recently experienced by far the greatest spiritual awakening this Church and the people of the community have ever known. This revival began on Sunday, May 16th. While the series of evangelistic meetings closed Thursday night, June 3d, we are glad to say that the spirit of revival has by no means ceased to be manifested.

Rev. J. L. Early, Jr., of the M. E. Church, South, Bridgewater, Va., did most of the preaching—did all of it the first two weeks. Bro. Early is a gifted, spiritually minded pastor-evangelist; a man of great spiritual power, who preaches with wonderful effectiveness the old-time doctrines of sin, eternal punishment, repentance, faith in Christ's atoning death, shed blood, etc., regeneration, and eternal life and heaven.

Rev. M. G. Lilly, of Hinton, Va., a licentiate of the M. E. Church, South, did the preaching May 30th to June 2nd, and rendered very efficient service during the most of the meeting by doing personal work, conducting testimony meetings and otherwise assisting.

Then, too, Bro. A. S. Turner, a consecrated layman of the Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth, Ohio, and who spends his summers in the Mt. Olivet section, was with us and rendered very valuable assistance after the first week. Mr. C. Tusing, of Harrisonburg, Va., had charge of the singing a part of the time. Besides these, friends of the Mt. Olivet, East Point, Elkton and Swift Run sections, representing the Christian, Methodist, United Brethren and other Churches, favored us with good and appropriate special music from time to time during the entire series of meetings. In fact, this writer has never seen a finer spirit of Christian brotherhood and a more whole-hearted co-operation manifested any where than was shown by all the people of all the various denominations represented in the Mt. Olivet and the surrounding communities. Every one entered into the spirit of the services and worked as enthusiastically as though it had been his own meeting—better than many people often do.

Notwithstanding the facts that the nights were rather short and the people were busy working in the daytime, and although the McGaheysville High School held its commencement exercises during the time, the handsome and commodious structure which Bro. E. Herring gave to the local congregation a year ago was "packed and jammed" with overflowing congregations almost every night.

The social, moral and spiritual results of these evangelistic efforts have been marvelous—wonderful! The Lord gave us a veritable pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Spirit. This and the adjoining communities were deeply stirred. There were more than one hundred conversions and reconsecrations, many of these being people who came from a distance to attend the services. A very remarkable feature of this revival was the fact that the most of those who were converted or reconsecrated were adults. Many who are parents and grandparents who had never before made a profession of faith in Christ were genuinely transformed—all kneeling at the altar for prayer, praying for themselves, and giving ample evidence by their changed countenances and by bright testimonies and personal work subsequent to their conversion. This was an old-time spiritual revival; not a card-signing or whirlwind, "latest method" campaign. Forty-nine people—for the most part, grown people—united with the Mt. Olivet Christian Church as a result of this wonderful revival.

On Sunday, June 6th, the writer baptized thirty-five of the new members. Many of the new members are people who came to our Church from other Churches. So far, fifty new members have been received into Mt. Olivet Church this year; and we have the promise of others joining with us soon.

Heretofore, Mt. Olivet (R) was only a weak, struggling little Church, composed mainly of young people. Now, since the majority of the older people in the community have become Christians and united with the Church, we feel that the Church has been placed on a solid footing. Not only were there many conversions during the recent revival, but, as is almost always the case, the spiritual life of the entire Church has been greatly strengthened. Our Heavenly Father has been mighty good to us. To Him we give all the glory.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

HARD TIMES AND GREAT SOULS.

From every side comes the note of difficulties encountered in the work of the kingdom. Temptations are embodied in more subtle forms. There is a widespread and persistent effort to portray virtue as prosaic, if not positively stupid; and to paint vice as beautiful, alluring and thrilling. Then, too, life is keyed to such an exacting pitch. There are so many things to take one's time and engage one's attention. Those who are actuated by the noblest intentions find the time slipping away, leaving a host of good intentions unfulfilled. Moreover, there are evidences of grave weaknesses developing within the Church. A blighting apathy has stolen over large numbers of the membership. Many are entirely indifferent in the matter of attending the services of the Church. And of those who attend, many are developing a marked weariness over the persistent and insistent calls for service.

There is always a temptation in such a time to take the easiest way. There is a temptation to drift along on the strength of the momentum already acquired, and to wait for more favorable occasions for the putting forth of great effort. At this present time there will doubtless be many congregations as well as individuals who will be content to excuse their inactivity and indifference by calling attention to the difficulties in the way. But hard times are not entirely an unmixed evil. For out of them are born and developed the great souls, who not only overcome the difficulties of the times, but having conquered the difficulties in the way, they lead the people of God on to greater heights of righteousness, and to nobler achievements of service than have ever been dreamed of before.

The great souls of the Old Testament were invariably the product of most trying and hopeless times. Noah, the first preacher of righteousness, lived in a very evil age. Moses, the deliverer and law-giver, was called to his task when it looked as if the people were hopelessly enslaved. Samuel was born in a time when even the priesthood had fallen into evil ways. Every one of the prophets came with a flaming message to light up a dark and despairing day. Even the Master Himself was born at a time when the ship of righteousness was hopelessly becalmed. The same thing has been true throughout the Christian era. The Augustines, the Luthers, the Calvins, the Knoxes, the Wesleys, and all the great Christian leaders have been born in periods when the lamp was burning low and when it looked as if the forces of righteousness were to be completely overthrown by the forces of evil. If the times are as evil as many writers seem to think, then we may soon begin to look for the appearance of preachers and leaders of heroic stature and colossal faith.

For great faith is always the product of difficult times. The Bible tells us that we walk by faith, and not by sight. But it would seem that many of us will walk by faith only when we can no longer walk by sight. When times are easy, to use the common expression, men are prone to think that they are equal to the demands of the times, and there is little calling and relying upon God. Prayer is perfunctory, and service is of the earth earthly. But when the waves of difficulty appear overwhelming, then men are afraid to launch out upon the deep without God. And when men do begin to venture out with God, we always see the achievement of what has heretofore been considered impossible. If the times are hard, then they can only be met with increased effort. If the task is too big for our resources and strength, then let us invoke the help of Jehovah. There has never been a task too big for his strength, if there were men and women with enough faith to become workers together with him.

One does not like to dogmatize, but it may be that we have gone as far and accomplished as much as is possible with the sort of leaders that are produced in easy times. It may be that God is bringing us face to face with hard times, in order to raise up men of such faith, of such heroic confidence in God, and of such perfect willingness to place themselves and their all into the hands of God, that through them God can lead the Church to such achievements as the past or this present age has not dared to attempt. It may be that God is now, by the very difficulty of the times, raising up leaders that shall accomplish kingdom triumphs that we have not yet even dreamed of. History certainly records that at the times when it has seemed that God's forces were hopelessly outclassed, it was but the falling back of the skirmishers that the real battle might begin. And when God leads His hosts to battle, the issue is never in doubt.

OPPOSITION.

But for the conflicts of our life, we would doubtless be imbeciles, some of us any way. And so there has grown up the notion that opposition of whatever sort is good and wholesome. We are particularly told that man's conflict with nature has led to man's progress and development. And thereby hangs a tale.

There is no willful opposition to man on nature's part. The conflict we have with her is in the necessary effort to master her laws and make them our servants. Then her opposition becomes our strength. To oppose her laws is folly. To co-operate with her laws is highest wisdom.

But this is a far different thing from what the average man understands by opposition. A distinguished leader in our Church once publicly declared it has chosen service to put the brakes on his forward-looking brethren. Politics is unsavory, because, irrespective of the merit of a proposal, the opposition finds fault with it.

Dr. Cadman gave a good answer to a man who wrote him for advice. His wife was nagging him, he said, to the point of desperation. He felt he just must get a divorce. "No, don't," urged Dr. Cadman, "you and your wife just need separate vacations for a few weeks. Try that." He did, and it worked like a charm. The opposition ceased.

It is so easy to find fault, and so difficult to give helpful counsel. But it may be said, in a general way, that most of us thrive best on praise. Opposition causes us to desire to fight back, and this is war; it may be in miniature, but it is war just the same.

It has been found that this is particularly true in dealing with young people. Getting on with young Americans today is a real proposition. If some strong point in a youth's character can be found which can be conscientiously praised, and usually there can be, the offending young friend can be led around to sanity of life, conduct, and attitude. Out and out opposition always does harm, even though outwardly a victory is won. It is a peace achieved by force, which is no peace, but a solitude, volcanic, and destined to erupt at a most unexpected time.

Men should not think they are rendering God service and truly helping their fellows by opposing something. If we are born in the accusative case, let us change it to the vocative, and let the vocative be that of approval rather than that of opposition. It will be so much better for us and for our brothers to help in this constructive way. No Church ever prospered except through brotherly co-operation and good-fellowship.

THE CHURCH IN A CHANGING WORLD. ARTICLE IV.

One may deny the theory of evolution, but it is pretty hard for any rational person to blind himself to the fact. All life is constantly outgrowing its former state. The evolutionary process, the fact of development is everywhere in evidence. Old customs are giving way to new; old industries are giving way to new; old ideas are giving way to new; old philosophies are giving way to new; old institutions are giving way to new, where the old institutions are not willing to take on new life and adapt themselves to the new times. Within the past thirty years, scores of new philanthropic and social organizations have sprung up, simply because the Church has not embraced its opportunity for a larger life. The very life of the Church as an institution is threatened unless it takes on a new and larger life. Jesus was not referring to the institutional life of the Church when he said the gates of hell could not prevail against it. He was referring to the fellowship of the family of believers.

But thank God, the Church as an institution is already entering into the new and larger life. It is insisting that religion should be given room in every relationship in life. It is rapidly developing better methods of propaganda, and is seeking by every device possible to interest people in religion, and cause them to want to make the investment of faith.

No doubt, there will always be those who will oppose anything new—people whose eyes are in the back of their heads, looking at the past instead of the future. But the great rank and file of Christian believers will see to it that anything that makes people think about God and causes them to want to invest in Christian faith is legitimate for the Church to foster, such as accommodations for a social center, a gymnasium, a motion-picture equipment, club rooms, etc., etc. It takes time for religious prejudices to have their day and pass away, but they are bound to pass; for, of all people, Christian men and women should believe the most sincerely in progress.

There was a time when it was considered wrong to have seats in Churches, it being thought that the comfortable position of sitting on a seat would take the worshiper's mind off God. I had the privilege of worshipping in a Church of that kind in Europe, where the worshipers had to stand throughout the service. But there are few Churches indeed today that do not have comfortable seats. Time was also when it was considered to be absolutely out of place to have a stove or any kind of heating device in a Church. Artificial heat for a house of worship was thought to be the devil's delight. Even within the past hundred years there have been congregations in our own country that protested against having a stove or fireplace in the Church, but allowed the worshipers to carry their individual "warming pans," as a sort of a foot-rest. And in some of the old countries, even to this day, no provision is made for heating the Churches. I worshiped in such a Church in Scotland one Sunday in December a few years ago, and the chill which I experienced convinced me that the devil was in the cold more than he possibly could be in a stove or furnace. But, though, years ago no Churches had provision for artificial heat, thinking that the comfort from such would detract from the spirit of worship; now practically all Churches of all denominations have their heating systems.

Again, time was when it was thought sacriligious to have a musical instrument in the Church. An organ or a piano, and especially a violin in a Church in those days would have been the same as giving the devil full sway. Some few Churches even to this day protest against the use of musical instruments in the program of worship. But the great majority of Churches—in fact, all the progressive Churches that are making an impression upon the life of the day—permit the use of musical instruments of every type in their program of worship. And if the Churches today would go clear back to the old custom of having no pews, no heat, no music, few indeed would be the worshipers, if any. All these devices have been adopted in the interest of making the worship of the Church attractive, and to make it easier to "sell religion," if you please; to cause people to want to invest in Christian faith.

Today we find a great many Churches that are opposed to bringing the motion-picture equipment into the Church. But hundreds of Churches are beginning to realize the wonderful possibilities of the motion pictures to promote religion, and to make people want to invest in Christian faith. The Catholic Church is realizing this great opportunity of religious education, and is spending millions of dollars, through the Catholic Art Association, dramatizing the great teachings of their Church and reproducing the same on motion-picture films, so that the films may be sent to every city and town where Catholics live. They show their pictures in public halls or in their parish houses rather than in the Church building. But protestants realize that if the motion pictures can portray the blessings of faith in such a way as to cause men to want to know God, and to want to serve Him, that such has a right to be shown in the Church, for that is the business of the Church, namely: to cause people to want God and to want to do His will.

The function of the Church is primarily to "sell religion to the community." The pastor is the head salesman, and every member of the Church should be a free lance advertiser, keeping constantly in mind that he should never lose an opportunity to advertise by his manner and attitude of life the grade of goods which is handled by the house he represents.

The whole Church should be alive to the proposition of denouncing sin and popularizing righteousness and justice. In short, the whole program of the Church is a program of salesmanship and service—first, get people to want to invest in the Christian faith and to get former investors to invest their personalities and talents more largely in the spiritual verities of life; and, second, to direct the combined power of all believers in right living, in a program of service to the world in which men live now.

LIBERTY (VANCE) CONFERENCE.

A special session of the Eastern Carolina Christian Conference met with Liberty (Vance) Saturday, May 29th, continuing through the evening of May 30th. The Conference was called to order Saturday at 2 P. M. by the president, Rev. H. C. Caviness. A small delegation of ministers, committeemen, and delegates was present. Dr. W. C. Wicker endeavored to make known the object of the called Conference. The president presented various things that must claim our careful and prayerful consideration if we are to go forward as a Church. The suggestion of consolidation among Churches when thickly settled was offered.

The president having declared all present members of the Conference, with the liberty to suggest plans, a lively discussion followed. Some thought the plan of consolidation ideal, as it would give the preacher time to do pastoral work and be a real pastor to them. Our Churches are served by devout men of God, who want to do their best for the Churches, but are so overworked with the number of Churches in charge they have no time for pastoral service. Others opposed this idea, and after several hours of deliberation, a committee was named. This committee was asked to get together and recommend to the Conference the best method whereby the problem might be solved.

Sunday, May 30th, at the close of the Sunday School hour, Dr. W. T. Walters briefly presented the college and its present needs; also the summer school at Elon College July 26th to August 4th, where any one might attend and be greatly benefited. The 11 o'clock hour was given to Rev. J. Lee Johnson, who brought a very deep message from the Word of God; theme, "The Christian's Hope." From beginning to the close he unfolded the word that gave new light on the Christian's hope. Bro. Johnson proved that our hope is not Christ, for a Christian already has Christ abiding within, and has no need to hope for a thing already obtained. Hope that is seen is not hope, for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope? (Rom. 8:24.) Then, if Christ has been enthroned in heart and life, why should one hope for him? The Christian's hope is not salvation, for if ye have been saved by grace, through the atonement on Calvary's cross, why do you hope for salvation? The Christian's hope is not heaven, because heaven would not mean much to us if we did not have some possession there. Then the Christian's hope is His appearing the second time to claim his own. Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ (Titus 2:13). "If I go, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also," is the Master's promise. If He fails to come, what can we hope for? Bro. Johnson is one of our deepest consecrated Bible students, and his message was a revelation and inspiration to us. At this hour, Bro. Johnson, in a very timely and impressive manner, reminded the Conference that, as Rev. H. C. Caviness was our evangelist and work was scarce at this season of the year, we should take an offering for him. A free-will offering was then taken. In passing, we desire to urge all pastors to use our evangelist if possible. Those who desire the best evangelistic services will find in Rev. H. C. Cav-iness more than hoped for. May the active pastors be ever mindful of the fact that our evangelist has no means of support, only as we give him support. We highly recommend him to any field.

This brought the morning session to a close, and we gathered around the long table laden with refreshments, reminding us of God's goodness to us. At 2 P. M. we assembled in the house for a short business session. The committee on recommendations rendered the following report: "First, we recommend that all the strong rural Churches secure the all-time pastor, hoping that the pastor can arouse interest, get inactive members busy, thereby build up a strong force for Christ. Second, that the smaller Churches form associate pastorates, with the hope of consolidation in the future.

We regretted very much that our Mission Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, could not be here, and in his absence Rev. J. E. Franks was given the 3 o'clock hour; theme, "Christ as the Broken Loaf." In this study we were made to realize that Christ could never have filled His mission as the whole loaf. It was not until after He had been persecuted, rejected, forsaken, and finally His body broken in Calvary's tree, that He was enabled to say, "It is finished." Even so with Stephen, Peter, Paul, and all those down the ages that would live godly Christ-like lives must suffer to be broken. The spirit of pride must be broken and become humble, able to suffer persecutions, if we are to follow the Master's example. Bro. Franks truly lives what he preaches. At the conclusion of this service a Communion service was held, Dr. W. C. Wicker and Rev. J. W. Patton having charge of same. This was a very impressive part of the day's program.

At 8 P. M., Rev. H. C. Caviness brought the much-needed message of the hour, "Men's Responsibility to God, and His Money." In keeping with his rule of using double texts, he chose these for the hour: "For the love of money is the root of all evil" (1 Tim. 6:10); twin verse, "For the love of Christ constraineth us" (2 Cor. 5:14).

Bro. Caviness, under the power of the Spirit, proved that the love of money is the root of all evil. Since the time we were saved, bought with that awful price, if we had failed to render unto God the things that were God's, surely we had robbed Him. After realizing the true situation, we found ourselves "embezzlers," since no one could stand as one that had not robbed Him, and only a few who were tithing now. The evangelist said he was not surprised at the dry, parched earth in this section. He plead earnestly to let the love of Christ constrain us—to at least be honest with God. By the tithe (tenth), all beyond this we can give ourselves credit for giving. This message excelled any one we ever heard on this subject.

Oh, if our Church would wake up and be real stewards of God, our mission cause would not have to suffer longer. Awake! awake, for the call is meant for you. We are assured that this message was not in vain, as several say they will keep books with God hereafter. We trust that the whole lump will become leavened. We enjoyed so much having these dear people with us again, and while no definite plans were made for constructive work, the people are interested, and something shall be done.

In behalf of this Conference, we request every Christian to be much in prayer, that the Holy Spirit may lead and direct in all that may be said or done to open up the way by our next meeting wherein something may be done for the good of the Church and to glorify our Lord. Through His leadership, may we undertake great things for Christ and His Church.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

June 6, 1926, was red-letter day in South Norfolk Christian Church. The new hundred thousand dollar Church, with forty rooms and an auditorium seating six hundred, was opened on that day with three full preaching services and full houses at each service. Hymns, prayers, Scripture lesson; anthem, "Ponder My Words," by the choir; solo, "Sometime, Somewhere," by Mrs. O. D. Poythress; anthem, "Trust in the Lord Forever," by the choir; a great sermon by Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D., of Dayton, Ohio, and a closing hymn, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds," and the benediction. The great congregation entered sympathetically and thankfully into this hour of worship; but, in addition to this holy hour, a great service was added. An offering and subscription was taken to help meet the demands of this great building, and the response to this call was not only liberal, but an example of generous giving. The sum total of cash, checks and pledges was more than fifty thousand dollars at the three services. The day will be long remembered in South Norfolk Christian Church.

At the afternoon hour, Rev. Leon Edgar Smith, D. D., pastor of Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., brought a great message to a great congregation. The choir sang the anthem, "His Saving Grace Proclaim"; Mrs. L. W. Vaughan sang "Only a Little Way," and the congregation sang "Come, Thou Almighty King" and "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The offering was continued and the people continued the liberal financial support begun at the morning hour. South Norfolk Christian Church is not a rich congregation, but a liberal congregation, and that is the best kind. All giving some is better than some giving all. It was a service in which prayer, song, preaching and giving conspired to glorify God. Dr. Smith was at his best, and the congregation hung upon his words as a real message from God. Congregations could improve the preaching very much by regular and enthusiastic attendance and worship. It would be a poor choir or orchestra with only twenty-five per cent of the members present. Poor preaching is produced by poor attendance and poor attention.

At the evening hour the choir sang the anthem, "In the Silence of His Presence"; the choir and congregation sang "Day is Dying in the West," "Faith of Our Fathers," "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," and Pastor Poythress preached a fine sermon on "Our Faith in Thee." It was the close of a memorable day in which the community took part by their presence, their prayers, and their gifts. No such day has ever been known in that Church. It was the answer to their prayers, their plans, their labors and their gifts.

Monday night continued the Sunday celebration in what the program called "Christian Church Night," with song service led by Rev. J. F. Morgan, minister of Rosemont-Berea pastorate; and greeting from First Christian Church, Berkley, by Pastor John G. Truitt; greeting from Rosemont-Berea, by Pastor J. Frank Morgan; duet, by Revs. Morgan and Poythress; greeting from Christian Temple, Norfolk, by Pastor L. E. Smith; friendly words from Pastor Sawyer, of the Baptist Church, and congratulations and a few words from this pencil-pusher, and closing prayer by Rev. J. N. Cutchin.

ELON LETTER.

As was stated last week, the deans and committees of the faculty handle the detail work. They keep written records of their transactions, and whenever they desire any item naturally coming under their jurisdiction to be considered by the faculty, a called meeting is held.

Mr. C. M. Cannon, who has served so many years as secretary to the president, has been designated as registrar, with particular reference to recruiting the student body and the certification of graduates to outside agencies. He has shown a splendid aptitude in his work.

Enlisting Our Constituencies.

The constituency of a college is made up of several times. I have already spoken of the relationship of the college to the students. There is the general public to be considered; also the Church, the alumni, and particularly the women.

I think that the general public is rather favorably disposed toward Elon. I think also that our Church is. The board of trustees are the direct representatives of the Church, and in their legal capacity own and control the institution and determine its policies.

The alumni of the college are represented on the board of trustees, but not through representatives of their own choosing. It would require an amendment to the charter of the college to permit the Alumni Association to nominate trustees in twice the number, from whom the board in session should select alumni trustees. I mention this matter for your consideration.

At the recent session of the Southern Christian Convention, a motion was made indorsing the idea of an advisory board of women and leaving to the board of trustees itself final action in regard to this matter. Several years ago, with your approval, we had a woman's advisory committee of local graduates of the college. We kept their names in the catalogue for several years and finally they requested that their names be dropped because they had found nothing to do.

However, there is a feeling on the part of certain women that they should be given a voice in the control of the college. Whether this should be done by electing women as trustees or through an advisory board, is a matter that will require your careful attention at this time.

The Cost at Elon.

Last summer I made a careful study of the cost of education at Elon College per pupil. From this study it was discovered that we pay for the education of each student $110.09 more than the student pays the college. This study also revealed that, while we lose $22.02 on each student course in the literary department, we lose $42.48 on each student course in the science department. An hour of instruction in the literary department costs $.259 per student, while the same instruction in the scientific department costs $.298. You can readily see, therefore, how wise the trustees were several years ago when they fixed the enrollment of the college at 400. It would be unwise to go beyond this limit until we have added endowment to cover the difference between what the student pays and what it costs the college for his education.

Present Tendencies in College Administration.

There are several pronounced tendencies in college administration today. I cannot cover them all, but may briefly set forth the major tendencies for your consideration.

1. The Curriculum.—We have been familiar with the elective system in colleges for many years. The tendency now is to require a student to select one major and three minors, pursuing the major for the entire college course and each minor for at least two years, and to make all other subjects freely elective. We have in our new catalogue not gone the full length, but we have endorsed the system of majors and minors, with certain requirements in addition which we consider fundamental. For example, every student is required to take the course in Bible I. Every student is required to take a course in history. Every ministerial student is required to study, in addition to the above requirements, a course in Church history and another in Church principles and polity. Greek is also required as a minor for ministerial students. Bible is required as a major for ministerial students.

Some colleges have introduced what they call "honor courses." At the end of the sophomore year students who have made a certain record in scholarship are allowed to select a field of knowledge in which they will do individual investigation and research. Regular classes are not required for them, and they may find it necessary to leave the campus and often the country in the pursuit of their specialty. It is found to be a very expensive method of instruction. It will be a long time before we shall attempt to undertake it at Elon.

2. Laboratory Method.—The laboratory method has been known in the colleges for many years, but as particularly applying to the scientific courses. The present tendency, however, is to include it also in the psychological, historical, sociological, and religious departments as well. It encourages initiative on the part of students. Our laboratory in Christian education at Elon is the first of its kind in an American college. I have been asked during the past year to present its work before the Council of Church Boards of Education in New York City, and before the biennial convention of the Disciples of Christ in St. Louis. In addition to this, we have had a stream of visitors from seminaries, universities, colleges, and various departments of the International Council of Religious Education, both State and national, investigating the work here. I may say, for your encouragement, that they have given their approval to our plan. Our building has been selected by Dr. Robert L. Kelly as one of fifty outstanding college buildings in the country.

3. Practical Education.—The tendency to make education vocational and practical continues to grow in our colleges. The old-time commercial departments are giving way to departments of business administration, and engineering courses are being demanded even in the smaller colleges. We are planning next year, with your approval, to continue our commercial department without giving college credit for its courses and to add a full professor of business administration. This is in accordance with the fundamental idea that underlies the denominational college, that it should prepare its alumni to function as Christians in any department of life.

4. Athletics.—I now speak of a very important tendency, and that is to put athletics under the control of the faculty. There is no tendency more pronounced in the field of college administration at this time than this. President Pritchett, of the Carnegie Foundation, vigorously comments upon alumni participation in intercollegiate athletics. He bases his criticism upon the results of an investigation into the condition of intercollegiate athletics in the colleges of the South. The excessive expenditure of money, commercialism, too great insistence on a winning team, "scouting" for athletes in preparatory schools, too great emphasis on the training of athletes, the tendency of smaller institutions to try to rival the larger ones in athletics, the overemphasis given by the alumni and the general public to the relative importance of athletics, the great newspaper publicity, and gambling are the abuses which he charges to the account of intercollegiate sports. A special committee of the Association of American Colleges has this to say:

"The colleges have outlived the days when intercollegiate athletics were but the amusement of the undergraduates, and the later days when they were the plaything of the alumni. We have reached the time when college athletics, intramural and intercollegiate, are recognized as but the final development of a system of athletic exercises for all students under the strict supervision and instruction of the faculty. . . . By faculty control is meant not merely the general supervision of students and of the games which a faculty exercises as standing in loco parentis, but specifically the control through faculty officers (professors or directors of physical education), or through committees, over the appointment or tenure of office of coaches, the making of schedules, the eligibility of athletes, and the expenditure of funds."

The National Collegiate Athletic Association has passed the following five recommendations:

"Control. Intercollegiate athletics should be entirely within the control of the faculty. The faculty may be aided in the details of management by undergraduates, and advisory bodies of alumni may prove helpful, but the last word in all matters should be with the faculty.

"Coaches. As in intramural games, so in intercollegiate, players should be taught by men of fine character, college graduates with the ideals a college teaches. Their appointment should be for at least a year. If appointed to a grade higher than assistant, they should have membership in the faculty. Their salaries should not be greatly in excess of the amounts paid teachers of similar grade in other departments, and in no case should exceed the highest salaries paid to professors in other departments.

"Finances. All receipts and expenditures for athletics should pass through the college treasury. Gifts from alumni or others for athletic purposes should not be accepted if there is any condition expressed or implied which limits the freedom of the faculty in matters of athletic personnel or policy.

"Abuses. Gambling by students should be rigorously repressed. To avoid the appearance of evil, members of the staff in physical education should not be sent out to solicit students. No scholarships should be promised except by the president, or a scholastic committee of the faculty.

"Eligibility. The migrant rule and the freshman rule should both be enforced, and the amateur rule also, so far as public opinion will support it; when it does not, the public should be educated on the subject."

The new system of coaching which the administrative committee has recommended for Elon next year is in accordance with the best thought and tendency in intercollegiate athletics. It is felt that with college professors giving part time to coaching, athletes will have a higher ideal and desire for scholarship and that the best qualities of character development will come from athletics.

In this connection, too, I should say that the North Carolina College Conference and the Southern Association of Colleges have taken very decided action relative to the control of athletics by the faculty as such.

5. The Alumni.—There is a growing tendency on the part of alumni of the colleges to contribute regularly to the current operating expenses of their colleges. The stronger universities have been enabled to escape heavy deficits in these latter years only through liberal gifts each year from their alumni. This is particularly true of Yale, Harvard, and Princeton. We don't have among our alumni many persons who have accumulated large sums of money. Most of our alumni are engaged in preaching, teaching, and housekeeping. However, I don't think you will find a more loyal group of alumni than our own. We should encourage them to organize local associations, to recommend and work for suitable students, and to contribute to the current expense account of the college each year. The alumni Association, as the official organization of the alumni, should be encouraged to initiate methods by which it can help the college in its larger work of ministry and service.

6. Standardization.—For a number of years now there has been a decided tendency on the part of certain voluntary agencies to erect standards for colleges, touching finances, preparation of faculty, equipment, and other items. The State Department of Public Instruction in North Carolina has virtually adopted the standards of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. We are anxious to meet the requirements of this agency for admission to their membership. From certain correspondence which we have had with this association's officials, I wish to make the following quotations:

"It is my opinion that the bonds of the Southern Christian Convention wipe out the debt of Elon College and leave an endowment of slightly more than $500,000, and that the college is free of debt."

"So far as I am personally concerned, I see no reason why the bonds should not be used in meeting the requirements of the association."

"The standards and regulations of all institutions applying for admission must have been in operation for a considerable time before they will be regarded as vital and permanent."

You will see from these quotations that we are headed toward ultimate admission to the Southern Association. We have the physical plant and equipment entitling us to enter. By using the S. C. C. bonds to offset the indebtedness and to increase the endowment, we are in line from this standpoint. The salary we are paying our professors and their professional equipment are the vital elements affecting our application for entrance at this time.

Dr. T. C. Amick attended the 1925 session of the Southern Association in Charleston, S. C. He had a very satisfactory interview with the Commission on Higher Institutions, and was encouraged to believe that our application will receive favorable consideration in the not very far distant future.

Of course, we could assume the attitude of indifference toward this or any other standardizing agency, but it would be with devastating effect upon our academic rating and also upon our student enrollment. Our alumni, too, would suffer in the public estimation, and Elon would be unable to render the increasingly large service which evidently it is her privilege to render and which it is at the same time the expectation of the public that she will render.

President.

VALLEY LETTER.

My revival meeting season opened this spring with a good meeting at Concord. The congregations were better than usual. A good interest was manifested, and there were twelve conversions and eleven additions to the Church.

My next meeting was at Bethlehem. Here the congregations were rather small, and the meeting discouraging until the last night. Then there were seven conversions, among them a mother and her two children, and a man of eighty-three years of age. When I opened the doors of the Church the seven new converts presented themselves for admission, and along with them came seven others, some heads of families and all splendid people. I understand there are several others who expect to unite with the Church there soon.

Immediately after this meeting I hastened away to be with Rev. M. T. Sorrell in a meeting at Rocky Ford in our mission work in the mountains of Carroll County, Va., a brief account of which appears elsewhere in these columns. While trying to do my bit for the work in Carroll County, I was deprived of the privilege of officiating at four funerals and one wedding in my own field. Mail and messages from afar travel slowly in that section, and it was with real sorrow that I learned all too late of the calls that began to come to my home for me soon after I left. Bro. John W. Shiflett, a faithful member of Antioch, was one of the number. I preached his wife's funeral several years ago, and he had often told me that he desired that I perform a like service for him when the time came. I had often found congenial companionship and splendid entertainment in the Shiflett home years ago when I was pastor at Antioch.

At Mayland for months lay Sister Sarah Lohr suffering from a grievous affliction. Her death also occurred during my absence. It was my privilege to visit her occasionally during her illness, and I always found her trusting fully in the Lord for eternal salvation and bearing her affliction with Christian fortitude. Rev. R. P. Crumpler conducted this funeral service, and also that of Bro. Shiflett.

Sister Regina Gray, wife of Henry Gray, of Sedan, W. Va., died May 24, 1926, at the age of 71 years. She was a faithful member of the Timber Ridge Christian Church, and was held in high esteem by all who knew her. She is survived by her husband, one son and two daughters. Funeral services were held at Timber Ridge May 27th. In my absence, the services were conducted by Rev. Wheeler, of the Methodist Church.

Evan R. Johnson, for many years a prominent member of the Timber Ridge Christian Church, died at his home at Hook's Mill, W. Va., May 27, 1926, in the ninetieth year of his age. In the days of his strength, Bro. Johnson was a great worker in the Church. He is favorably known by a host of friends who regret his passing away. Funeral services were held at Timber Ridge May 30th, and in my absence were conducted by Rev. C. H. Anderson.

It was my privilege to attend the Southern Christian Convention at Durham, N. C., April 27th to 30th. It is always helpful to attend these Conventions and get information and inspiration, and a great pleasure to meet with brethren and friends.

Our Sunday School Convention at Leaksville, May 12th to 14th, was an excellent one. The attendance was good, though perhaps not the best we have ever had. Dr. J. O. Atkinson added much to the pleasure and profit of the occasion, especially from the missionary standpoint, as he always does. Other speakers also were especially good. Bro. Roy Larrick, of Winchester, is the president, and a good one he is, too.

I am now in a meeting at Timber Mountain, Hampshire County, W. Va. This will be my last meeting for this Conference year.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

By WARREN H. DENISON, Secretary.

GROUP STEWARDSHIP.

Every Christian has a two-fold stewardship responsibility. There is first of all his individual stewardship of life—time, talent, property, business ability. All these are entrusted to us as stewards, and we are not to consider them as our own, but are to render an account of our use of them for God. Then we have a corporate responsibility. We are associated with others in the home, in business, in Church. We live in groups, work and worship and have responsibilities with others. We have certain responsibilities as Churches, and for which we must account. Among them are these on Church finances:

First, as only one-half of the members of the Church are helping to support the average local Church, the Church as an organization has a stewardship responsibility to the other half. The local Church dares not spare any reasonable Christian effort to teach and to plan to enlist those nongivers and to do it in such a way that their whole interest will be enlisted. The Church needs their financial support, and they need to give for their own sakes from every spiritual and financial standpoint. The Church should not neglect this corporate responsibility.

Second, only thirty-five per cent of the members, if your Church is the average Church, make any gifts of record to the general work of the kingdom, its missionary, educational, and other extension agencies outside of the local Church. The local Church has a corporate responsibility toward those other sixty-five per cent of its membership. It must teach, organize, and otherwise enlist them in the whole work of the whole Church. The needs are overwhelming for their assistance, and they need to have a worthy part in it just as badly as the work needs their help. There is a great need for the Church to feel its group responsibility to them and the kingdom work.

Third, the Church has a responsibility to enlist its membership in tithing. The Scriptures stress it. Tithing is not a method of securing funds, but is for basic spiritual purposes primarily, so that men will put God and the kingdom first in their lives. It is to help develop their worship. Young people have an inalienable right to be taught it as a character-builder. All people need to be tithers. There is a great ignorance on the subject. The people want to know about it. In stewardship institutes, more questions are asked about it than about any other subject.

Fourth, the local Church has a group responsibility to see that its financial records are faithfully and accurately kept; that all funds are properly credited and go for the purposes for which they are given, are carefully handled, reported, remitted and audited. Every Church has a group stewardship as to this vital matter of records, using and accounting.

In view of these reasons that a Church render a faithful stewardship in business and financial lines, there should be a department of stewardship and finance in the local Church, with a head, or chairman, to be called a stewardship secretary. With him should be several associates. It is better for these associates to be appointed by the official board, so that proper care be given to choose at least one from each department or major organization in the Church. Then the financial secretary, current expense treasurer, benevolence treasurer should be ex officio members of this department. The Church auditor may or may not be a member of the department. This department has four primary duties:

(A) Plan for and raise the local and benevolent budget of the Church.

(B) Train the entire congregation in Christian stewardship.

While we are profoundly grateful to the schools named above for their liberal offering, and to the other schools which contribute monthly to missions, it is noted, with regret, that there are quite a few schools in the Southern Christian Convention not yet sufficiently interested in enlarging the kingdom and building up schools and Churches elsewhere to make a monthly contribution. It is devoutly hoped that many of our schools not already doing so will vote for and send us one offering a month for this most worthy and needy work of the kingdom.

Respectfully,
J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

A VISIT TO CARROLL COUNTY.

It was my privilege to spend from May 25th to June 4th with Rev. M. T. Sorrell in a meeting at Rocky Ford in our mission work in the mountains of Carroll County, Va. Congregations were good and the interest fine. I could not stay to the close of the meeting, but there had been nine conversions when I left.

Bro. Sorrell is doing a great work among the people in that mountainous region. Everybody seems to like him, and I heard many expressions of regret because he thinks he must leave them soon to complete his course at Elon College. Bro. Sorrell is a busy man among them, visiting in their homes, marrying the young, burying the dead, preaching two or three times every Sunday, distributing to the necessities of the poor, going to town in cases of sickness and death, starting bally cars and trucks, and in a general way making himself useful to the whole community for miles around.

In his work of educating and uplifting the community, he has been ably assisted by his wife and by Miss Margaret Morey and Miss Elsie Bray, and by others who preceded them. These helpers have been teaching day school and Sunday School, doing personal work, and helping in every way possible to advance the interests of the kingdom in that part of our Zion. Miss Morey feels that she is no longer physically able to do the work there, and is leaving about this time for her home in Pennsylvania. Her going will be a very great loss to the work there, and her place will be hard to fill, but I am sincerely hoping some consecrated, capable young woman can be found who can take up the work she is laying down. Miss Bray has proven herself to be a capable and consecrated worker there, and I am hoping she can give them many more years of service such as she has been giving.

Every field of work doubtless has its peculiar problems. There are problems in our Carroll County work which are not easily nor quickly solved. It will require time, labor, money and prayer to do the work that needs to be done there. Bro. Sorrell is seeking not so much to make a great show as to do real constructive work and lay a solid foundation for the future, and with this I am in hearty accord. Although our work there is scarcely more than five years old, yet I was told by several who are in a position to know that there has been a great improvement there educationally, morally and spiritually. I asked them to what they attributed this change, and without exception they replied, "To the Christian Church." It is a great work, a worthwhile work, and well deserving of a much more whole-hearted support than we have given it thus far.

We have two good Churches there now—Rocky Ford, near the foot of the mountain, and Elk Spur, on the top. There are at least four or five other places within a few miles around where we ought, by all means, to begin work and build Churches. Bro. Sorrell has been begged by people from some of those sections to come and begin the work, but before he can branch out very much beyond his present limits he will have to have re-enforcements in the form of workers and money from the home base.

My little study of the field there was a real pleasure to me, and has deepened the interest I have had in the work there from its beginning. Personal contact with the work there will, I think, awaken the interest of any one. Our investment there is yielding good returns, and yet we have only begun. May we hope and work and pray for better things in the days to come.

FAREWELL SERVICE.

On Monday evening, May 31st, the members of the Earleston Christian Church held a farewell service for Rev. and Mrs. Wm. M. Jay, who are closing a successful pastorate of two years and nine months with their Church. Appropriate music and recitations were followed by fitting and appreciative remarks of the work accomplished during the pastorate by representatives of each department of the work. Rev. A. R. Turner, of the Methodist Church; Rev. J. E. Sheetz, of the Reformed Church; Rev. E. E. Spousler, of the M. E. Church, and Rev. King, of the Episcopalian Church, each spoke feelingly of their association with and appreciation of Dr. and Mrs. Jay. Following the program, refreshments were served to all present.

Dr. Jay has accepted a position as teacher in Elon Christian College, N. C. This is one of the best equipped colleges in the South and will give opportunity for great service in the future. Dr. Jay has won the esteem of not only his own Church, but of the Conference and his fellow-townsmen. He leaves with all bidding him their best wishes for success.—The Everett Press.

THE SLEEP SHEEP.

BY ALICE M. N. WHITE.

Once upon a time there was a dear little boy named Paul. He was a very good little boy, except at bedtime.

Every night, Mother Dear would say, "Come, Paul, it's time to go to bed."

And then Paul would say, "But I don't want to go to bed! I'm not sleepy."

One day Paul's aunt came to see him. She came a long way and was going to stay two whole weeks. When bedtime came, Mother Dear said, "Come, Paul, it's time to go to bed."

And Paul said, "But I don't want to go to bed! I'm not sleepy."

Then Paul's auntie said, "Let me take Paul to bed."

She took Paul's hand and led him up the stairs.

"Oh, my, what a pretty room you have to go to sleep in," said his auntie, and she helped Paul to undress and then she heard him say his prayers and tucked him into bed and kissed him good-night. "Pleasant dreams, little boy," she said.

"But I'm not sleepy," said Paul.

Then his auntie sat down beside him and she said, "Can you count, Paul?"

"Oh, yes, I can count—one, two, three, four, five."

"And do you know what a nice woolly sheep is?"

"Oh, yes; I have often seen them in the park."

"Well, if you shut your eyes and lie still, and think about nice white, woolly sheep jumping over the wall, and if you count them as they jump, I expect that tomorrow morning when you wake up you'll find that five nice white woolly sheep have jumped over the wall right onto your window-sill."

So Paul shut his eyes and lay still, and he counted, "One nice white, woolly sheep jumping over a wall; two nice white, woolly sheep jumping over a wall; three nice white, woolly sheep jumping over a wall, four nice white, wool—" but he never got any further, for—what do you think? He went sound asleep and slept, and slept, and slept, until the next morning when the sun peeped in his window and kissed him on the tip end of his nose.

The minute Paul opened his eyes he thought of the nice white, woolly sheep, and he looked on the window-sill, and what do you think? There were five nice white, woolly sheep that had jumped right over the wall onto his window-sill.

Paul dressed very quickly and ran to tell Mother Dear and Auntie about the five white, woolly sheep and then he had his breakfast. After breakfast, Paul went back upstairs and all the morning he played with the nice white, woolly sheep on the window-sill.

He was so busy that he could hardly believe it was lunch-time when Auntie came to call him, but he went down and had his lunch and then ran back to his room, and there was the window-sill just as he had left it, but the five nice white, woolly sheep were gone. They had jumped back over the wall.

Paul ran downstairs to tell his Mother Dear and Auntie about the sheep, and his Auntie said, "I guess they were hungry, too, but I expect they'll be back tomorrow if you lie still and count them tonight."

So when Paul's bedtime came and Mother Dear said, "Come, Paul, it's time to go to bed," Paul said, "All right, Mother Dear." And he took mother's hand, and went up the stairs and along the hall and opened his door.

And Mother Dear helped him undress and heard him say his prayers and tucked him into bed and said, "Good-night, dear little boy."

And Paul said, "Good-night, Mother Dear," and he shut his eyes and lay very still and counted, "One nice white, woolly sheep going over the wall; two nice white woolly, sheep going over the wall; three nice white, woolly sheep going over the wall; four nice—" but he never got any farther, for he went sound asleep and slept, and slept, and slept until the sun peeped into his window and kissed him on the tip end of his nose.

The minute Paul opened his eyes he thought of the nice white, woolly sheep, and he looked on the window-sill, and what do you think? There were five nice white, woolly sheep that had jumped over the wall right onto his window-sill.

After that, Paul always went to bed like a good little boy.

THE SNOWFLAKE TWINS.

BY M. WILMA STUBBS.

"Thank you, Golden-Locks, so much for our good breakfast. Mostly we don't need help—we were born in Winterland, you know. But when the snow is extra deep, it is thoughtful of boys and girls to furnish us with a meal of tasty seeds or crumbs. To repay you, we will tell you our story—you will like to hear it, I know.

"You may call us whatever you please, Snowflake or Snow Bunting, or just Snowbird, though we share that last name with another winter bird quite unlike us, the Slate-Covered Junco. See how, in our dress we match the winter fields—the brown of the weedstalks, the white of the snow, with glimpses of what will be a beautiful shiny, jet-black when we go North in our wedding suits.

"We like your snowstorms. When the wind whistles through the leafless branches and blows the snow in drifts, it seems to us as if it were meant for us to frolic with. Warm in our winter coats and quite used from babyhood to tempest and cold, we laugh at folks who think they must stay in the house in winter weather. All we ask is plenty to eat when the snow covers the seedstalks.

"And now about our real home up in the Northland. We left it last fall because we shouldn't have been able to find food there in winter. But we shall go back in April or earlier. The place where one is born is always home, you know. It is a long journey. For, strange as it may seem, we were born, and our parents before us were born, only a few hundred miles from the North Pole. Now, you do believe we came from Winterland, don't you?

"But there is a summer even in Winterland. There are flowers and grassy fields and mossy tundras, there are birds and bees—and snow and ice, plenty of both. The sun shines far into the night; for a time there really isn't any night.

"Our homes are hidden in the moss or sometimes in crevices of the rock. They are made of dried grasses and are warmly lined with feathers. Usually there are four or five of us in a family. But dangers are many, and of our family only my sister and I lived to grow up and travel southward.

"You say you like our merry twitterings on a cold day. Come to the Polar North and visit us and we will sing for you a really beautiful song. We sing it up there in the spring sunshine, before the other birds have come, while the North is still ice-bound. And brave men you call Arctic explorers have heard it and have been cheered by it."

GRANDMOTHER'S WAY.

BY M. D. TOLMAN.

Oh, lovely wrinkles my grandmamma has,
And pretty white hair in curls,
And the pleasant smile that ever you saw;
And I know that she loves little girls.

And grandmamma has the pleasant room,
With flowers and pictures and books;
And she is as happy as she can be—
You can know it just by her looks.

So yesterday when I came home from school,
And was feeling quite cross and sad—
For, oh, I had missed in the spelling class,
And that always makes me feel bad!

I went right up to grandmamma's room,
The door was open a crack,
And I said, "Dear grandma," and then ran away—

But she called to me, "Alice, come back!"

So I told her all the trouble I'd had,
And the words that I couldn't spell—
I couldn't spell queue, and I missed on view,
And I couldn't spell dwell nor knell.

I couldn't spell biscuit, hard as I tried,
I couldn't get it right with the "u";
I spelled it with "i," and I spelled it with "k";
I think it's a puzzle, don't you?

Then grandmamma smiled, and almost laughed,
And she said, when she was young
She had the same trouble in spelling a word;
She said that her word was tongue.

She didn't see the use of spelling that way,
When t-u-n-g would do;
But she said she studied it over and over,
Until she had learned the cue.

And after she learned it she never forgot
To put in the letters just right;
And then, she said, to spell that word
Was always a real delight!

And so, grandma said, it is always best,
When we've anything hard to do,
To try and try, till we find the way—
I think she is right, don't you?

FAT MRS. MOUSE.

BY META O'CONNOR.

'Twas when the moon was shining bright
That sober Mrs. Mouse
Once spied a crack within the wall
And gnawed herself a house.

And through the open cupboard door
She'd jump upon a shelf,
And of the cheese and pies and cakes
She'd freely help herself.

She grew so fat that Mr. Mouse
Would sit and laugh and tease,
When through the small door of her house
His wife tried to squeeze.

So while she shook her head she sighed,
"I see it is no use,
I'll have to let up on the cheese;
I really must reduce!"

The report of the president of Elon College deserves a careful reading by every one interested in education, and especially if interested in Elon College. It points to the changes taking place in college development which the present-day college must meet. This report was started in last week's SUN and is completed in this issue.

REVIEW—WHAT WE HAVE LEARNED FROM THE BOOK OF GENESIS.

GOLDEN TEXT: "We know that to them that love God, all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to His purpose."—Rom. 8:28.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Heb. 11:22.

We have been studying lessons during the past quarter from the book of Genesis. These lessons were made up for the most part from stories which came from a period many centuries removed from our own era, and they concern men who lived under circumstances much different from our own setting of life. But there is an element in these simple, and in some cases, child-like stories that has insured their preservation and given them abiding value. They deal with certain fundamental principles in regard to God and man, and life and duty and sin that have given them not only an appeal, but a power in human life. No matter how far we may go, we can never outgrow these stories, for back of and underneath them all there are the basic facts of life. As Dr. W. H. Bennett in his introduction to the book of genesis in the New Century Bible, says: "It is the human, the representative character of these narratives which have preserved them, and procured for them a place in Scripture. Many generations felt that they expressed real experiences, and, therefore, handed them on as their own testimony also to the righteousness and love of God." In this review we will simply emphasize a few of the more important truths from each lesson. We will begin at Lesson II, for that is the first lesson taken from Genesis.

2. The Story of Creation.

- A. God created the world.
- B. Man is the crown of creation and was created in the image of God.
- C. God had purpose in the creation of the world.

3. The Beginning of Sin.

- A. Sin is disobedience to divine commands.
- B. Sin has power to make us tempt our fellowmen.
- C. Sin robs a man of happiness which God has made possible for him.

4. The Story of Cain and Abel.

- A. Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life.
- B. True worship is a matter of spirit.
- C. A man is responsible for his fellowmen.

5. God's Covenant with Naah.

- A. Sin eventually reaps a tremendous toll.
- B. God enters into covenants with those who trust Him.

6. Abram and the Kings.

- A. A true Christian cannot be really at ease when his fellowmen are in need.
- B. Tithing is God's approved way of acknowledging stewardship.

7. Abram and the Strangers.

- A. Hospitality is an opportunity to unsuspected possibilities.
- B. One righteous man may be the means of saving a whole community.
- C. God appears unto His children in ways adapted to their understanding.

8. Isaac and His Wells.

- A. The way of peace is the way of God.
- B. Riches need not be a barrier to entrance into the kingdom.

9. Jacob at Bethel.

- A. God is often found in unexpected places.
- B. Man has immediate access to the spiritual world.
- C. A vision of God brings corresponding obligations.

10. Jacob and Esau.

- A. To err is human, to forgive is divine.
- B. Those who often seem worst have much of the good in them.
- C. A man's past always finds him out.

11. Joseph's Fidelity.

- A. Obstacles and handicaps cannot permanently keep a man of purpose down.
- B. God overrules the sinfulness of man to work out His purposes.
- C. Faithfulness in what one has committed to him is one of most dependable factors in success in life.

12. Judah's Plea.

- A. Unsuspected heroism and sacrifice are often revealed in crisis of life.
- B. The innocent suffer with the guilty.
- C. As oft as a man repents of his sin, so oft ought he to be forgiven.

TOPIC: "What May Japan and Korea Expect from Christianity?"—Mic. 6:6-8. (Missionary Meeting.)

Same Bible Hints.

All peoples are religious at heart and want to know how to find God (v. 6).
 God Himself is man's greatest treasure, and man is willing to do anything to possess and please Him. Witness what the heathen do (v. 7).
 Other nations may demand justice first of all. If we do not give them all, all else is vain (v. 8).
 A Christian nation would "walk humbly" and leave arrogance and boasting to others. Are we Christian in this sense? (v. 8).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Many Japanese students, as they look on un-Christian American life and industry, give up their faith. They have a right to expect better things of us.

Foreigners find here great philanthropy. Hospitals, homes, refuges, and so on. Good! But, they ask, why are these things necessary? Why not live so that they are not needed?

Japan has learned from Christian nations the secret of work and material organization. She has not taken, as she should, their ideals, their faith, which create the prosperity she desires.

Japan and Korea may expect from Christianity a new way of life, the Christ way. We can help by living that way in our dealings with them.

A Few Illustrations.

Christianity implants ideals of independence and democracy. Japan has independence; Korea not yet. But nothing can hinder its coming.

Japan, we are told, has planted all over Korea houses of ill fame. Christianity must clean up this evil and lead Korea to high ideals.

New power. It is not enough to know what is right. We must have power to do it. Only Jesus can give that power. Neither Japan nor Korea can rise without the Christian power.

Both Japan and Korea need to learn the Christian lesson of love. All nations need this. Then all persecution in Korea would cease and a new spirit would arise.

To Think About.

Why do people interpret Christianity from what they see in us?

What are Japan's and Korea's greatest needs? How is Korea receiving the gospel?

A Cluster of Quotations.

A Japanese woman said of a sister who was a Christian: "My sister has no money and no beautiful clothes as I have, but I envy her the peace of her eyes."—Maude Soper.

Even the Emperor of Japan declares that the once-forbidden Christianity is a great benefit to the people. It raises the level of morality.—Irvin H. Correll.

A Korean woman had stolen little pieces of cloth. She was converted, and worked hard to be able to buy a whole roll of cloth to give to the person from whom she had stolen. A changed heart was the cause.—H. Roswell Bates.

Korea! Nowhere in the world is there a more marked illustration of the vitality of the truth, the joy of the believer in Christ, and the value of personal work for souls. The gospel is light.—Arthur Judson Brown.

MONDAY.

SELFISHNESS AND ETERNITY.

"Now, we . . . ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and not please ourselves."—Rom. 15: 1-2.

"He that giveth to the poor shall not lack; but he that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse."—Prov. 28:27.

"It is possible to live such a meager life on earth that living has in it no deep satisfaction.

Life can easily be made a burden and a bore. When one lives solely for himself and remains ignorant of the joy of living for others, the vision of such an existence indefinitely extended fills the soul with terror. In order to enjoy the prospect of living forever, one must live day by day like an immortal. It is those who live most as Jesus lived who look forward with brightest anticipations to the life beyond the grave. Paul had tasted so long the joys of companionship with Christ in self-sacrificing work that he was eager to enter upon those completer satisfactions which he knew must come from still closer companionship with Christ in the spirit world."—Jefferson, of New York.

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, forbid that we shall become so absorbed in self that we shall be oblivious to or ever forget consideration for others, but show us how to study the welfare of others and make every relation a consideration or courtesy that makes for their betterment and unto edifying. In Christ's name. Amen.

TUESDAY.

HOW TO BELIEVE AND REALIZE IT.

"With the heart man believeth unto righteousness."—Rom. 10:9.

"The righteous shall live by faith."—Gal. 3:11.

One cannot believe in immortality simply by an exercise of the will, nor can one wish for immortality simply by wishing that he could wish for it. The only thing to do in this case, as in every case, is to do right, to perform one's duty day after day with fidelity, to seek for truth, and to accept it just as rapidly as it becomes clear. He who does this is moving in the right direction. He is moving toward the light. He may be for a while in darkness and may often stumble, but if he is sincere and perseveres, he will some time, somehow, come out in'o the light. Even should he die before the light falls upon his eyes, he will have on the other side of death the glad surprise of entering into unanticipated joy which God has prepared for His children.

Prayer.—Dear Father, thou art our helper. Give us faith, that we may not fear. Send us forth to do righteousness, that our faith fail not. In Christ's name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

DIFFICULTIES IN BELIEVING, AND HOW TO OVERCOME.

"They were not able to enter in because of their unbelief."—Heb. 3:19.

"He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life."—Jno. 3:16.

"Belief cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of Christ."—Rom. 10:17.

For centuries the deepest thinkers have felt that another life is necessary to make this life intelligible and rational. But many find difficulties in a firm belief. There are so many inequalities and unsolved problems here, so many injustices and unredressed wrongs, that it is difficult to retain one's belief in the righteousness of God unless there be another world in which all things are set right and human existence is completed. If there is nothing hereafter to believe in, everything ends up wrong. God is unjust and "we are of all men most miserable." The world is ephemeral and the universe a riddle.

But we have the crowning evidence of the immortality of the soul in Jesus, who had no doubt of the life beyond. He was sure of it, and He was equally sure that His followers, like Him, would rise again also. By His resurrection He made us know that the grave is not the end.

Faith in this is secured only by the turning of ourselves to the mind of God and allowing His spirit to come into our hearts. No one who has trusted Him has ever been disappointed.

Prayer.—Our Father, help our unbelief, but lay our all on Thee. Turn our minds and hearts to Thee and make us like Him. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

TEMPTING GOD.

"They tempted God and limited the Holy one of Israel."—Ps. 78:41.

In our own weaknesses and limitations we are inclined to limit the power of God to our own sphere of thinking, thereby tying His bonds by ascribing unioin fetters to Him. The Scriptures teach us that we are not to do that way. Christ says that what is "impossible to man is possible to God."

We think that some sins are so heinous that they are unpardonable, forgetting that God's lovingkindness and mercy is not bound by human standards, and that He would clasp hands with the vilest sinner who comes to Him.

We do not pray for things sometimes because we cannot see the possibility of an answer. But Christians of faith do not thus limit God's power.

Prayer.—Our Father, if it is faith that is needed that we may cast our souls beyond human limits and find out God, O give us that faith. Overcome evils, drive away our clouds and doubt, and fill us with Thy truth. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WORKING FOR GOD.

"How is it that ye sought Me? Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business?"—Luke 2:49-51.

The fundamental business of Jesus was not in the carpenter's shop, although that was an honorable trade. The work for which He had come into the world was not primarily that of making houses, yokes, tables and chairs. This was the work of Joseph, and it was worthy and useful work. Jesus was there in that little shop until He was about thirty. He carried forward the work faithfully, but carpentering was not His fundamental business. God had given Him some work to do, and He was some day going to take it up in earnest!

Now, all of us are like Jesus—at least in one way. We have a business by which for a time we are engaged. It may be carpentering, or selling, or working in some of the professions. This is the way we earn our daily bread, our living. But whatever our worldly business may be, each of us has a fundamental business, the business of serving God.

What is this fundamental business? I think we can put the fundamental business of Jesus into two words—helping folks! The great thing about this fundamental business is that our work in it goes on forever. Look at Jesus! The carpentry work He did is lost and gone. But the help He has given and is still giving to folks will go on forever!

So with us—our fundamental business is to do what Jesus did—to help folks! That is the Father's business, of which Jesus spoke. The end and purpose of our living is helpful service for the largest number. The business which deserves our best attention is that which ministers most to the souls of other people.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SATURDAY.

GROWING A PERSONALITY.

"I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."—John 10:9-16.

This verse is a good definition of the purpose of Christianity. Its major business is the production of a full, rich life. Life itself is a product of growth. It is constantly changing, and herein is encouragement. In our Christian thinking, "abundant life" is the goal of education and experience. That man is really educated who has developed a rich life.

In our better moments, we all make great plans for our lives. We are full of good intentions. If we "keep life's rendezvous," we must always look ahead and keep our purpose sharply in mind. What do we expect to become as the years go on? If we try to visualize ourselves, as we shall be in ten or twenty or thirty years, what quality of personality are we seeking? We know that God's purpose for us is an "abundant life," but with His purpose we must co-operate.

This will take courage. Samuel Johnson was right when he said: "Unless a man has that virtue, he has no security for preserving any other." No coward ever develops into a sturdy Christian personality. And one must cultivate the inner life.

Prayer.—That we may share in this abundant life, and follow the example of the Master in bringing others into the fold.

SUNDAY.

THE INDWELLING WORD.

"Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly."—Col. 3:15-17.

Let the word of Christ make its home in your heart. We are to treat it, not as a stranger, nor as a casual visitor. It is to dwell in us. This involves familiarity with the Scriptures and a friendliness to the only infallible rule of faith and practice; let nothing take the Book from you. It is the instrument God has given through which He speaks to men—a channel which carries into our lives the enlightening and energizing grace of our Lord. It came by inspiration and is profitable for doctrine, reproof, correction and instruction in righteousness, that we may become perfect, thoroughly furnished for every good work. It is to guide our lives, to control them and make them to become all they ought to be.

This calls for faithful ministers of Christ, fitted to preach that which is able to make sinners wise unto salvation, and capable of building up the Church in the faith. It demands the type of teaching in the Sunday Schools that opens the

Dear Friends:

You will notice we have reached and passed the eleventh rung in our ladder for the year. More than one-third the way to our goal for this year. Isn't that fine?

The Christian Orphanage is very much in need of 150 opera seats for our auditorium. For a number of years our auditorium has been used for a school room and filled with school desks, and when we made arrangements to send all of our children to the graded school we had to furnish our desks, and that leaves our auditorium empty. If we had it seated we could have religious exercises for the good of the children. We can seat it for $450.00. Where is the big-hearted man who will seat it for us? It will be a blessing to 110 little children every day. Who will be the first one to mail us a check?

The following has been sent in since our last report: Class 5, First Church, Burlington, N. C., 1 dress, 1 pair of shoes; Class 11, Mrs. E. L. Gray, teacher, Waverly, Va., 8 dresses for Easter; Ladies of the United Christian Church, Lynchburg, Va., 16 dresses, towels, pillow cases, 14 suits, 14 pair overalls, 4 blouses, etc.; Bethlehem Christian Church, 1 quilt; Mrs. A. M. Johnson, Norfolk, Va., 1 suit; Woman's Missionary Society, Dover, Del., 3 dresses for girls; Mrs. H. E. Hurdle, Berkley, Va., 4 dresses, 4 blouses; a friend, Steeds, N. C., 1 featherbed, 7 quilts; Mrs. Ben T. Holden, Louisburg, N. C., 2 white middy blouses; Mrs. Nannie Parrott, Newman, Ga., 16 blouses, 53 dresses, 43 pairs of underwear; Mrs. H. W. Philipps, Hardeeville, S. C., 19 suits, 4 pair underwear, 3 pair overalls, 1 hat, 2 caps, 3 pair shoes; Mr. J. P. Montgomery's Class, Burlington, N. FAMILY ALTAR.

Word. It requires individual study of the Scriptures, in recognition of the fact that its messages are revelations of Christ's personal will to you. The more you welcome the word of Christ to make its home in you, the more fully will you experience the blessedness of His fullness.

Prayer.—That all may be led to consecrate our lives to the highest and best purposes, and that the young may early be led to make their lives tell for usefulness and helpfulness.

CLAUDE RICHARD CLARKE.

By some unaccountable accident to his car, Claude Richard Clarke, thirty-three, was instantly killed near Windsor, N. C., May 24th. For several years prior to 1916, Claude was a faithful member of my Sunday School class of nine young men at Wakefield, Va. Soon thereafter he accepted Christ publicly under preaching of Evangelist Victor Lightbourne, and joined the Methodist Church. He remained true to his profession and to the Church, intending shortly to remove his membership to Norfolk, Va., where, since 1922, he was associated, as traveling salesman, with the business of his brother-in-law, T. O. Gwaltney, Jr.

Claude's life of unstinted service to others attested the genuineness of his Christian character. He served twenty-one months in camp and overseas during the World War. June, 1924, he married Miss Louisa Glassel, daughter of Dr. Robert Glassel, Bowling Green, Va. As a loving husband, a dutiful son, and affectionate brother, he was a worthy example of young manhood. Memory of his youth, when, by their side until 1922, he was daily their hope and inspiration and joy, with assurance that God called and owned him even in this life, will be the precious consolation of his parents, W. R. and Mrs. Clarke, of Wakefield. And to his wife, through the very spirit which was his—a legacy than which there could be none more cherished—with gratitude for the nearly two years of blessed companionship, will come peace and resignation.

"God occasionally shuts one door, that He may open a hundred other doors," in order to bring outside ones into His fold. Through this dispensation, may the saving power of God's grace fall upon many young lives.

Interment was at Wakefield, Rev. Mr. Ritter, Baptist, by whom Claude and Louisa were married, conducting obsequies. Dr. W. D. Harward was called to assist. The five sisters and two brothers all were present. These, with the wife, parents, and innumerable other connections and friends, paid loving floral tribute.

OBITUARIES.

SKINNER.

Javan W. Skinner was born January 31, 1851, and quietly passed away May 9, 1926, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. W. Faison, Dendron, Va. He leaves to mourn his going five daughters and one son—O. L. Skiuner, and Mrs. A. C. Gregory, of Florida; Mrs. A. W. Faison and J. R. Bishop, of Dendron, Va.; Mrs. C. B. Lovelace, of South Boston, and Mrs. D. F. Jackson, of Norfolk, Va., besides a host of friends and other relatives.

Funeral services were conducted by his pastor and Dr. W. D. Harward, assisted by Rev. C. H. Williams, of the Methodist Church, and S. Y. Craig, of the Baptist Church. Interment was made in Cypress Chapel Cemetery, Revs. J. W. Roberts and W. W. Staley taking part.

He was a citizen of high rank, and a favorite among his friends, a kind and devoted father, a true and faithful Christian. He was a member of Cypress Chapel Christian Church for quite a number of years, later in life moving his membership with him to Dendron Christian Church. A beautiful life has gone out. Let us work to enter into that rest, which he appeared to be entering so beautifully when he left us.

W. B. FULLER.

McDUFFIE.

Malissa Ellen Bailey, daughter of the late John and Elizabeth Bailey, was born December 22, 1869, and died rather suddenly May 29, 1926, age 56 years, 5 months and 7 days. She was a member of a family of eight children—six boys and two girls. At the age of sixteen she united with the Methodist Church at Eagle Springs, and remained a member until the end.

On September 8, 1891, she was married to M. C. McDuffie, and to this union was born five children. Mrs. McDuffie was a regular attendant at Big Oak Christian Church. She showed her love for her Master by the interest she manifested in the young people, who loved her so much.

She is survived by her husband and three children, three stepchildren, seven grandchildren, nineteen step-grandchildren, four brothers and a host of friends. She was preceded in death by her parents, two brothers, one sister, two children, one grandchild.

The funeral was held from Bensalem Presbyterian Church, in the presence of friends and sorrowing relatives, Sunday afternoon at 2 P. M., and the body placed in the family plot of the cemetery under a mound of flowers. May God's richest blessing come upon those who weep.

C. E. GERRINGER.

DENSON.

Mrs. E. T. Denson was born May 1, 1875, and died June 5, 1926, age 51 years, 1 month. Mrs. Denson's husband preceded her to the grave more than three years ago. She leaves behind to fight life's battles all alone save with the help of her Master, three children. She also leaves three brothers and three sisters.

Mrs. Denson has been a member of Burton's Grove Christian Church for many years, and was always loyal so far as she was able to be. Her body was laid to rest in the family plot of the cemetery near Burton's Grove. Services were conducted by the writer. May God bless the family.

G. C. CRUTCHFIELD,

BROOKS.

Mr. James B. Brooks, a citizen of Lynchburg, Va., was recently called to his eternal reward. He leaves to mourn their loss the widow and several sons and daughters and grandchildren.

Funeral services were conducted by Dr. P. T. Harman, of the Baptist Church, assisted by the Rev. Babcock, of the Methodist Church, and M. F. Allen, of the United Christian Church of Lynchburg. One son, T. A. Brooks, is financial secretary of the United Christian Church. The bereaved have our sympathy.

M. F. ALLEN.

To save life and limb

THE peril of the road crossing has become a national problem with the multiplication of automobiles.

The Southern Railway System has eliminated 800 grade crossings, and is eliminating more every year, but over 6,000 remain to be separated on this system alone. The total cost to complete the work is a stupendous sum—probably half as much as the cost to build the railroads.

Even if the money were available, and the public willing to pay the increased freight and passenger rates necessary to provide a fair return on it, many years would be required to do the work.

Protection from the peril for the present generation at least must be found in some other way. Trains cannot stop at every crossing if they are to be run at the sustained speed expected by the public and required to carry the commerce of the country. The train crosses a highway about every mile. The motorist encounters a railroad only occasionally.

It is necessary, therefore, for the automobile driver to stop in order to avoid risk. No one who did this was ever killed.

It is better to save a life than to save a minute.

FOGLEMAN.

In memory of Mrs. Millie Fogleman, wife of Cicero Fogleman, Liberty, R. R. 3, N. C.

Whereas, on May 13, 1926, God, in His infinite love, sent the death angel and bore above the spirit of our dear sister, Mrs. Millie Fogleman, we, the members of the Ladies' Missionary Society of the Pleasant Hill Christian Church, wish to express our appreciation of her.

Resolved: First, That we hold a grateful remembrance of her faithfulness to duty, and commend to all her beautiful life, trusting that the influence of her life may draw us all in closer touch with God and the divine things which we are to do.

Second, That while we realize we have lost a faithful member and deeply mourn his loss, we bow in humble submission to him who doeth all things well.

Third, That we extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family, praying that our Heavenly Father will give comfort when earthly friends fail.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy put on the missionary secretary's book of Pleasant Hill Church, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

MRS. M. L. HARNADAY, Recorder.

HANCOCK.

Miss Caroline Hancock was born February 19, 1844, and died March 8, 1926, age 82 years and 17 days. In early girlhood she professed faith and united with the Church at Christian Union, and when that organization ceased she did not unite with any other Church, but lived out that quiet life that was characteristic of her. Her friends speak of her as a most unselfish person, always preferring to do for others.

For many years she had lived with Mrs. R. L. Auman, Steeds, N. C., and it was there the end came after a brief illness. She is survived by one brother, one half-sister, a number of nephews and nieces, and other relatives.

The funeral services were conducted from the home in the presence of a large group of friends, neighbors, and sorrowing relatives, and the body placed in the family cemetery nearby. God bless those who sorrow.

SHIFFLETT.

John Wesley Shifflett, of near Singers Glen, Va., died Sunday, May 23, 1926, at the age of 73 years, 10 months and 16 days. He had been in feeble health for the last three or four years. Bro. Shifflett was a member of Antioch Christian Church (Va. Valley Central Conference), and was faithful until the end.

The funeral services were conducted in the Menonite Church at Mt. Clinton, Va., on Tuesday, May 25th, by his pastor, assisted by Elder N. D. Cool, of the Church of the Brethren, and the body was buried in the cemetery nearby.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

LAINE.

Miss Lucy A. Laine was born January 4, 1854, and departed this life June 5, 1926. Early in life Miss Lucy professed Faith in Christ, and united with Barrett's Christian Church. To this Church Miss Lucy was loyal and faithful and did all she could for her Master and her Church while she was permitted to do so. For many years, Miss Lucy has been a constant sufferer, but in all her troubles and sufferings her faith only seemed to grow stronger in her Lord.

On June 6th Miss Lucy's body was laid to rest in the presence of a host of friends and relatives, who had learned to love her for her devotion and fine spirit. May God bless the family. Services were conducted by the writer, and interment made in the old family burying-ground. I think Miss Lucy's life very forcibly interprets the words of the poet—

Let faith exalt her joyful voice,
And now in triumph sing;
O grave, where is thy victory?
And where, O death, thy sting?

MARRIAGES

MADREN—GILLIAM.

On May 19, 1926, at 7:30 P. M., Mr. Silas E. Madren and Miss Ruth Gilliam were united in marriage at the home of Mrs. W. H. Gilliam's, the bride's mother, Altamahaw, N. C. The ceremony was performed by the writer in the presence of a number of friends and relatives. Both parties are prominent members of Bethlehem Christian Church. Mr. Madren spent last year in Elon College studying for the ministry. Their many friends wish them a long, happy life together. May God's blessing be upon them.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JUNE 24, 1926.

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

BY REV. S. M. LYNAM.

Drys Name Candidate.—

A coalition of dry organizations in New York State has designated Franklin W. Cristman, a former State senator, to run for United States senator at the November election in an effort to defeat Senator Wadsworth, who is to be renominated by the Republicans, and who is an avowed wet.

North Carolina Next.—

The Bible Crusaders of America, a fundamentalist organization, has announced North Carolina as the scene of the next campaign to bring about legislation to prohibit the teaching of evolution in tax-supported schools. A committee of one hundred, headed by Judge Walter H. Neal, of Laurinburg, is named to direct the campaign. The organization recognizes Dr. W. L. Poteat, of Wake Forest College, as the leader of the forces opposed to such legislation.

Princeton Gets Endowment.—

Edward W. Bok gave one hundred and fifty thousand dollars to Princeton University the other day to found a Woodrow Wilson chair of English literature. Mr. Bok and Mr. Wilson were as much alike physically as if they had been brothers, and they had a great admiration for each other. The purpose of the new Wilson chair of English literature is to commemorate the facile use of spoken and written English which Mr. Wilson possessed, and to further appreciation of English literature.

Northfield Schools Change Head.—

William R. Moody has been forced by the condition of his health to give up the position of head of the Northfield Schools, and in this critical time the trustees turned to Rev. Eliot Speer, eldest son of Dr. Robert E. Speer, who has been chaplain and professor of Bible at LaFayette College. He has accepted the new position. These two schools now number about eleven hundred students who are about equally divided between the girls' seminary and Mount Hermon—the first for girls, the second for boys. The schools were founded some fifty years ago by Dwight L. Moody.

Busts Unveiled.—

Recently, at New York University, where stands the Hall of Fame, nine busts of the immortals were unveiled. This does not mean that these nine men had not long been recognized as members of the American immortals, but only that just recently have busts been provided by admirers and descendants. The nine busts thus unveiled were those of Daniel Boone, Edwin Booth, Jonathan Edwards, James Kent, George Peabody, Augustus St-Gaudens, Daniel Webster, Roger Williams, and Eli Whitney. This group of names is a strange, but interesting combination of the old and the new American genius.

Changing New England.—

A recent survey of the Yale Divinity School strikingly illustrates the changing religious conditions in New England. There was a time when the students in this divinity school were in preparation for the most part for the Congregational ministry in New England. Now, most of the young men in that great school are from the West and South. In the 277 men now enrolled, Methodists lead, Disciples hold the second place, Baptists the third, and Congregationalists come in a bad fourth, with only twenty-seven men.

An Experiment.—

The students of the University of North Carolina have shown great faith in their professors. They recently petitioned for a new course to be added to the more than a thousand already offered. The North Carolina students wanted a course on marriage. Their petition was granted, and now twice each week specialists lecture on the social, economic, medical, and psychological aspects of marriage, and toward a hundred students take notes and discuss. Who the specialists are, what their experience has been, and what the tenets they hold was not revealed. The University of North Carolina has sought no publicity for this unique experiment.

Another Wife Tries It.—

Some two years ago John W. Langley was elected to serve in the present Congress as a representative from Kentucky. He never took the seat for which he was chosen, because he was convicted of conspiracy to violate the prohibition law and is now serving in the Federal prison at Atlanta instead of in Congress. His wife let it be known recently that she would stand in the August primary for election to her husband's seat in Congress. She maintains that her husband is innocent, and, like Governor Ferguson, of Texas, she is going into the fight to vindicate her husband. Such a procedure seems to have become a popular one. It is just a case of another wife trying it.

For Jews.—

Many a wealthy Jew has heard the question, "Have you no reservations?" and been turned from the desk of many a hotel which discriminates against Jews. Many hotels will give no reservations to Jews if they know it. Now, there has been built in New York a hotel more luxurious than anything in Babylon or Rome, or anything yet known in rich America. The motto of this luxurious hotel is "For Jews." It will cater to the wealth of Israel and to the Asiatic sense of luxury and ease. Christians may hear the question so many Jews have heard, and they must ask for reservations in this Orientally luxurious and Orientally perfumed hotel where the grandest public bath the world has ever known is, if they enter. The stock in this magnificent hotel is held by twenty-five thousand Jews. It is called Libby's, from a term of affection which the manager applied to his mother.

Proud Fishmongers.—

Some days ago there came to Billingsgate, the home of "Billingsgate" (gutter slang and plebeian profanity), His Royal Highness Albert Frederick Arthur George, the Duke of York and second son of England's reigning monarch. He was met there and conducted to Fishmongers' Hall and entertained at luncheon by the Fishmongers of Billingsgate, an organization which flourished in the days of Robert Bruce, three centuries before Shakespeare was born. At that luncheon, the Duke of York was made an honorary Fishmonger, and lusty Fishmongers cheered him and drank his health. In his speech of thanks for the honor so conferred he said that he and his brother, the Prince of Wales, represented the fourth generation of his line to be Fishmongers, and he hoped that his daughter, recently christened Elizabeth Alexandra Mary, would be the fifth. At the State christening, this young heir to the throne will wear the lace robe worn by her grandfather George V, and uncle Edward of Wales.

Phi Beta Kappa Celebrates.—

The representatives of the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa met in Washington recently to celebrate the coming one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the organization in this country. One year after Paul Revere took his famous ride in New England John Heath and four of his companions met and formed a secret fraternity into which in the next four years forty-five others were inducted and which chartered chapters at Harvard and other great colleges, and so Phi Beta Kappa began at the College of William and Mary, at Williamsburg, Va., where this famous assembly will again gather next December to dedicate a headquarters building on the campus of the college of its birth, the corner-stone of the building they laid last June, and the members, forty thousand of them, have been contributing a million dollar endowment to it. Keyman John D. Rockefeller, Jr., gave one hundred thousand dollars to this endowment recently. Phi Beta Kappa is a scholarship fraternity, and numbers among its members many of America's notables. John Heath's Chapter's brothers initiated Sir Esme Howard, the British ambassador, into its ranks, Causa Honoris, at its Washington meeting, and now the ambassador is entitled to wear a key with three stars and a pointing hand on it dangling from his watch-chain.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, is on the faculty of the Reynolda religious education this week. From there he goes to the summer schools at Lakemont and Craigville for two weeks.

The type made us say last week what was not intended. Dr. J. O. Atkinson will teach two courses at the Blue Ridge National Missionary Conference this year, and is also to preach the closing sermon following the teaching of his two courses.

In the absence of Dr. C. C. Ryan last Sunday, the pulpit of the First Christian Church, Richmond, was supplied by Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va., for the morning service. Many were glad to welcome him. In the evening the pulpit was supplied by Bro. C. E. Chryslip, who gave us a good sermon.

The following is received and appreciated: "Mr. and Mrs. John R. McNally announce the marriage of their daughter, Edna, to Mr. Paul K. Walp on Thursday, the 7th of June, Charlottesville, Va." Mr. and Mrs. McNally lived at Elon and their daughter was a student here for some years and made many friends who will join THE SUN in wishing for her all the joy of a happy wedded life.

We extend our best wishes to Miss Jennie D. Gunter and to Mr. Lloyd Bray, both graduates of Elon College and, since graduation, very successful teachers and popular and highly esteemed everywhere as they both were in college. The following is acknowledged: "Mr. John D. Gunter requests the honor of your presence at the marriage of his daughter, Jennie D., to Mr. Lloyd Jones Bray, on Wednesday evening, June 30, 1926, at 8 P. M., Sanford Christian Church, Sanford, N. C."

Rev. Sion M. Lynam, writing from Wilkesboro, N. C., June 8th, says: "I have been called to and have accepted the pastorate of the First Christian Church of Toronto." Bro. Lynam is one of our brightest and ablest young ministers, and has had two years of popular and successful experience as teacher in Bethlehem College. Our Canadian brethren are to be congratulated on securing the services of Brother Lynam. This arrangement, for the present at least, will not interfere with THE SUN'S "Observatory," of which Bro. Lynam is the very capable and efficient editor.

Dr. D. A. Long, former pastor at Franklinton, writing June 12th, from Franklinton, N. C., where he was on a hurried visit, says: "Mrs. Long and I expect to hear Dr. Wicker at Mt. Auburn tomorrow. Rev. Bro. Brady and his wife are much loved by the people here. The death of Prof. Lawrence has caused deep sorrow, especially among his students, who loved him dearly. I went with Rev. Mr. Davis to the residence where the first Methodist conference in America was held."

Dr. L. E. Smith, president of the Southern Christian Convention, spent last week in Toledo, Ohio. He is a member of the committee on Christian Union from our General Convention, and met with a like committee from the Congregational Church. The object of the meeting in Toledo was for committees from the Christian Church and the Congregational Church to discuss the possibility and practicability of the union of the two denominations. Dr. Smith is much interested in this proposition and went to represent the Christian Church at this important meeting.

Owing to the fact that her physician has advised residence in a higher altitude, we learn that Mrs. H. E. Truitt is spending the summer with her parents at Elkton, Va., and that her husband, Rev. H. E. Truitt, Waverly, Va., has notified our Waverly Church that he will not remain as pastor there longer than the end of the present Conference year, October 31st. Bro. Truitt is one of our well-trained and consecrated young ministers, loyal to the Church and faithful in his pastorate. It affords an opportunity for some of our Churches in the hill country to secure an efficient and worthy pastor.

The Woman's Missionary Board of the Southern Christian Convention was in all-day session at Franklin, Va., Monday, June 14th. Members present were Mrs. J. A. Williams, president; Miss Margaret Alston, secretary; Mrs. E. L. Beale, corresponding secretary; Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle, treasurer; Mrs. R. T. Bradford, superintendent young people. Members absent: Miss Gertrude Browne, superintendent literature, and Mrs. I. W. Johnson, superintendent cradle roll. Mrs. J. L. Foster, who had been elected vice-president, resigned, and Mrs. C. H. Rowland was elected to take the place. It was a busy day, and the work was well planned for all the Conferences the coming year.

We are advised by Mrs. G. L. Stephens, Wadley, Ala., that the Woman's Missionary Society of the Wadley Church has recently organized, through the leadership of Mrs. E. M. Carter, a young people's missionary group, with the following officers: Miss Lois Adamson, president; Miss Regina Carter, vice-president; Miss Teresa Carter, secretary and treasurer. Our woman's societies in Alabama Conference are certainly making commendable effort to develop the work of missions in all Churches and to organize societies in Churches not having them. This means much for the work of the future in this Conference.

It is surprising that the sale of Bibles not only continues from year to year, but shows an enormous increase. This is true of no other book. It is no human document. The American Bible Society, in session recently, gave out the statement that it, on its own account, to say nothing of the scores of other Bible-distributing agencies, has, during the 110 years of the society's existence, circulated 174,121,599 volumes of Scripture in more than 237 languages and dialects and in sixteen languages and systems for the blind. The final figures of the issues for 1925 are 9,214,423, which is over two and a half million more than in 1924. The biggest demand for the Christian Bible last year came from the Chinese, where nearly five million volumes were obtained from the China agency of the society. The Japanese and Philippine agencies doubled their 1924 circulation.

The following from Dr. A. D. Woodworth, 26 Kashumi Cho, Ababu, Tokyo, in a personal letter is of more than passing and personal interest: "It may interest you to know that there is a very large and increasing demand for religious books in Japan, that the Japanese papers say that heretofore the Japanese have been depending on the foreigners for books, tracts and other religious literature, but now they ought to undertake it themselves and translate the Bible without the help of foreigners and furnish all their own literature. Last year there were more than a million copies of the Bible sold and distributed in Japan. Considering the number of Christians at 300,000 (counting the Catholics according to their statistics), this shows that an enormous number of non-Christians are interested in the Book. In your wildest dreams I think you would never dream that the keeper of a brothel has brought out a dictionary of the Bible. The book was originally published by the tract society, but, as it was needing a revision, the tract society had it revised ready for printing when the earthquake and fire destroyed it. It was after this that the brothel-keeper took a copy of the original work and had it reprinted. Nobody can explain it. So far as my work is concerned, the adverse Japanese legislation in the States does not affect my relations at all. The boys want to go to moving pictures with me, to musical entertainments. I have been invited by one of the boys to go with him to the military aviation training grounds to take a fly in an airplane. The boys could not be more friendly to me than they are. This morning there were about forty boys who came to hear the morning Bible lesson. So I have written to my friend that, so far as I can see, there have never been finer opportunities to do Christian work in Japan than there are at the present time. The opportunities in connection with the twelve hundred students of the middle school are far beyond all the time and strength I have to give them. The fields are white and waiting for reapers. It seems to me always a remarkable thing that Jesus should seem dependent on us to pray workers into His vineyard. Why could He not do it without our help? But while He has put on us a great responsibility, He has also put on us a most wonderful honor corresponding, to think, to the wonderful glory that shall be ours at His right hand in the other world."

It is welcome news that the lower house of Congress has passed a bill providing for fifteen additional Federal judges. There was a filibuster against the measure on the part of the House farm bloc because the Haughen bill was rejected. The opposition finally dwindled to a Tammany drive against it to obtain the pledge of at least one Democratic judge out of the fifteen. The bill merited passage. These additional judges will help to end the congestion in the Federal courts and, at the least, will prevent that congestion from becoming worse. They were especially needed to help the courts keep pace with liquor law cases that have piled so high on the dockets of many courts. Possibly enforcement will be most sure and speedy in the future and that reproach against prohibition can be removed. At the same time, other cases no less important can be given their day in court.

DEADLY PLANT GROWS IN DARK.

There is a little poisonous gray plant growing in dark places without sunshine or fresh air that is liable to kill one out of every fourteen and infect one out of every fifty persons in North Carolina. This little poisonous gray plant is the tubercle bacillus.

The plant is different from most plants. It thrives only in damp, dark places, in animals, and particularly in the lungs of little boys and girls and grown men and women. It is shaped like a lead pencil and is so small that, through a hole made by a pin in a sheet of paper, a thousand of these little germs could pass side by side without touching each other or touching the sides of the hole.

The little gray plant cannot move about without being carried any more than a geranium can move without being carried. On a particle of dust many of these little gray, led-pencil-shaped plants can ride as safe and snug as if in a private car. Another peculiar thing about it is that, while damp, this little plant can't get into the air unless in a very strong blast of wind. Keep the plant moist and it won't have an opportunity to get into the air and ride about on its private car of dust. Moist sweeping and moist methods of dusting are best in your home. It keeps the poisonous gray plants from being carried about.

These poisonous plants come only from what is expectorated from the lungs of some one who has tuberculosis. These little plants growing in the lungs cause tuberculosis. If everybody who coughs, whether they know they have these little gray plants growing in their lungs or not, would cover their mouths with a gauze or napkin when they cough, burn this gauze or napkin and burn what is coughed up, the chief source of the distribution of these little poisonous gray plants would be destroyed. Exposed to light and sunshine, they cannot live. Let plenty of fresh air and sunshine into your home.

THE PURITY LEGION.

My dear Fellow-Workers for Christ:

May the rich blessings of Christ be yours. By the grace of God, and unexpectedly to me, not having the means myself, in February last I was granted the great privilege of visiting Jerusalem and the Sea of Gallilee—"Gallilee, sweet Gallilee," most precious memorable of all seas of the earth! Upon its waters the divine Saviour of men walked, and from a boat and upon the mountainsides in sight of Gallilee, to His chosen disciples and to the vast multitudes, He talked. Of great eternal principles He spake as never mortal man could speak.

His "Sermon on the Mount," the greatest sermon ever uttered, and his other most precious teachings are more and constantly more precious to me now.

I dipped my hand into that sacred sea, bathed my brow, and upon that shore I knelt and prayed for the salvation of dear ones in America and for the success of Christ's great cause every where. I asked for means for the wide extension of the sadly needed great Christian mission—the world-wide Purity Legion, for which He has called me to give freely my especial labor for human betterment in His dear name. This is a department of the International Purity Association.

How I wish I might talk to you, and to many, face to face of this great, all-important Christian mission, as all great Christian missions depend for greatest and lasting success upon genuine purity of heart and life. Christ said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." See also Matt. 5:27-32; also 19:12, the last part of which is to be taken spiritually. Note again what Christ said through Paul (Heb. 12:14), "Try earnestly . . . to attain to that purity without which no one will see the Lord." That is the twentieth century translation.

Oh! the vast unexpansive gulf between the pure in heart with unsullied thought, lip and hand, and the vile, impure ones who do not keep the thought clean by Christ's help.

You may have a part in this World-Wide Purity Legion, so highly recommended by Rev. Parks Cadman, D. D., and other well-known ministers and laymen. Send a gift to help publish the excellent "Graded Purity Booklets," or at least write a word of encouragement. God will bless you and He will extend the work for the good of the home, the Church and the nations. God direct all to His glory and the salvation of many. The excellent booklet, "When Character is Lost, All is Lost," should be read by millions.

Tenaffly, N. J. ALBERT GODLEY, Sup't.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CARDINALS, CATHOLICS AND THE CONGRESS.

Last week the Catholics held a very largely attended congress in Chicago. It is reported that thirty-four nations were represented and over a million Catholics attended one or more of the various celebrations. It was termed the Eucharistic Congress, designed to celebrate the broken body and shed blood of our Lord's Christ. It is one of the three great Catholic movements of the nineteenth century, and owes its origin to a woman, Mlle. Marie Martha Tamisier, who years ago became convinced of the need of a spiritual movement which she thought would center about the celebration of the Lord's Supper. The first congress held, as a result of her preaching and propaganda, was in 1881; the meeting in Chicago last week was the twenty-eighth session of this congress, this being the first ever held in the United States.

There were thirteen cardinals from the various parts of the world in the congress, one of whom came as the representative of the Pope. Of course, the Pope himself could not come, as he is held captive in a prison called the Vatican, at Rome, from the time he is made Pope until his death. The only way he can go beyond the confines of the Vatican is through emissaries whom he blesses (as best he can) and sends forth under a red hat to carry out his will and commands.

It was a great demonstration at Chicago, and, in fact, during several days prior to the meeting of the congress. The first assemblage of the cardinals was in New York, and a special train was chartered for the chief cardinal, the Pope's representative, which train was draped in red and went under cardinal colors from New York to Chicago. The intention of the Catholics, we presume, was very fine, provided they were seeking to carry out the ambition of the originator of the congress, namely: to give some spiritual touch and tone to the celebration of the Blessed Sacrament. It is always in order for every Church and Christian to do everything possible to bring about a spiritual regeneration. However, one wonders how such intention could be carried out amid such pomp, luxury, indulgence and splendor as were everywhere manifest on the part of the thirteen men who came to our shores wearing their red hats. One cannot help contrasting all this noise and bluster and display with the life, conduct, and humility of the lowly Nazarene. Surely times have changed, and the Christian world has adorned its heroes and potents and leaders in strange new vesture. Try to think of the representative of Jesus, and the successor of Peter (according to their claim) riding on a special train, bedecked and resplendent with red ribbons and scarlet draperies, from New York to Chicago!

IRRESISTIBLE FORCES IN CHRISTIANITY.

Silent forces in nature, in man, and in truth, are the mightiest. Gravity and crystallization, magnetism and heat, thought and "still small voice," all tell eloquently of giant forces at work, almost as silently as the motion of the stars. But in all these, and above them, there is a spiritual agent "who upholds all things by the word of His power" (Heb. 1:3). He is the Founder of Christianity, "the Author and Perfecter of faith." "He shall not cry nor cause. His voice to be heard in the streets" (Isa. 42:2; Matt. 12:19). His great victories were won without noise or show, yet His life was an irresistible force, which was transferred to Christianity by the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. There are certain elements in Christianity absolutely irresistible, and these forces are mighty in the hands of the Holy Spirit.

Christianity is unselfish. "God so loved the world," and Jesus Christ, "though He was rich, yet, for your sakes, He became poor." "Moses, when come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God." David met the giant of Gath for Israel's sake, and John lived upon locusts and wild honey to prepare for the telling of the coming of the Messiah. Paul exposed himself to imminent danger for the gospel, and Jesus gave Himself for all. The great obstruction in men and the Church is self. No person or institution can be large or strong while laboring for self. The absence of selfishness gives unconscious power. Here is the undefinable, the irresistible force in Christian men and Christian institutions. When you see the disinterested thought and service in men, resistance dies and you feel yourself in the sweep of a mighty, invisible force. Christianity, when pure, is a tree dropping ripe fruit into the lap of society, a river turning a desert into a garden, a sun flooding a dark world with light. One of the richest illustrations of this is in the history of the Moravian Church, originating in Bohemia in the middle of the fifteenth century among the followers of John Huss, the reformer and martyr. Nearly two centuries later, overthrown by Ferdinand II, a Roman bigot; but a hidden seed remained in Bohemia and Moravia, and in the early part of the eighteenth century arose again in Saxony into a flourishing settlement, and soon entered upon missionary effort in St. Thomas, an island of the West Indies, where Leonhard Dober and David Nitschmann were willing to go and be sold as slaves, though the latter had to leave a wife and children to accomplish it, in order to preach Jesus to the negroes of that island. From 1732 till the present, the Moravians have been the greatest of all missionary people, and they give more money per capita than any other denomination. Their mission "field is the world," as Jesus taught.

If the entire Church of Christ was given over to missions in that large way, without self-interest, every human being might hear the gospel by the end of the first quarter of the next century. Selfishness longs to build up our Church. Pure Christianity longs to propagate the gospel of salvation and peace among the nations. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me; for whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it" (Matt. 16:24-25). Or, as the poet puts it: "As the marble wastes, the statue grows."

A FATHER'S LETTER TO SONS AT COLLEGE.

To THE SUN's editor it is exceedingly interesting to dig up from the past vital facts which affect our day and influence the present. There has, by accident, fallen into our hands copy of a letter written many years ago by an honest, faithful man of God who toiled away on his farm that his sons might be educated and prepared for life's duties and tasks.

A word about the three boys to whom the letter was written: "Johnnie" is now a successful man in the town from which the letter was mailed forty-four years ago. "Jesse" is now Judge J. F. West of the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, and "Junie" is Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West of Virginia. These three boys had been sent, a few days before the letter was written, to the University of North Carolina, and this seems to be the first letter the good father, who has long since gone to his reward, wrote to his boys at college.

"Waverly, Va., Sept. 11, 1882.

"Dear Johnnie, Jesse and Junie:

"John, your second letter was read with interest. Was glad to hear from you all, but sorry that you seem to be despondent and home-sick. I hope you will soon recover and be all right at Chapel Hill. Remember, there is no reward without labor. I want you and all of you to do your best to get value received for every dollar that I may spend to keep you all at college. It is a high privilege that you all now have, one that each one of you ought to appreciate with feelings of pride and delight, at the same time putting forth your best efforts to improve yourselves mentally, morally and religiously. I want you all to take suitable exercise to secure or preserve good health of body and mind. I am sorry that there are so many bad boys at the college, but you must not follow the bad, but try to do as good as the best—never get under the influence of bad men, but try to follow the best until you have mapped out your own future for good. If you do this, you may live to be proud of your past life, with hopes brightening for your future, and be an honor to your sainted mother and a comfort to humble father in declining years. Read your Bible and follow its teachings in all things. Dare to do right, because it is pleasing to your Heavenly Father. If you thus live and pray to the Lord for His guidance you all may be good men in society, useful members of the Church on earth, and thereby be prepared to join the Church with all our loved ones in the better land.

"May heaven help you all, is the prayer of your devoted father, H. T. WEST."

We doubt if any father now living on our many farms here in the South could improve upon the counsel given by this father to his sons at college forty-four years ago.

CHEWING GUM.

The Department of Commerce at Washington has issued some very interesting statistics with regard to chewing gum, not the least interesting of them being the fact that we Americans spent $90,- 000,000 last year on this necessity or luxury or indulgence of life—which ever it may be. There were forty-one factories devoted to the manufacturing of chewing gum, which factories required 2,181 persons to operate them, necessitating the use of 7,700-horse power in the annual production. Material purchased and used in the product cost $1,968,000, and the price of the output was $47,124,000 wholesale. Eight of the factories are located in New York, five in Illinois, four each in New Jersey and Ohio, three in California, and the others are scattered over twelve States.

It is presumed that chewing gum has come to be a necessity, and adds much to the gayety of the nation, as well as to the manners and culture of refined society. Admitting all of this, one could wish that a nation made great and rich by the gospel of the Son of God would contribute as much in any one year to giving that gospel to other nations yet struggling in superstition, darkness and poverty, as it devotes to the industry and enterprises of chewing gum.

SPIRITUAL ATHLETES.

[Address of President William Allen Harper, Elon College, to the graduating class, Sunday, May 23, 1926.]

There is no problem before the American public today more important than the use of leisure. We used to say that five institutions embraced all the interests of life. These institutions were in the order of their importance—the home, the Church, the school, industry, and government. We have learned, however, in these latter days that there is a further institution with wonderful possibilities of uplift or the opposite for the individual life and for the social order. The sixth institution is leisure. We have learned that what we do in our free time very largely determines our ultimate destiny in achievement and character.

The most important item of our leisure time is concerned with athletics, sport and the various forms of amusement, entertainment and recreation. It is impossible for us to discuss all these items in detail in the time at our disposal. Our remarks, therefore, will be concerned chiefly with athletics, and since we are a college community, with special reference to their place in the college life and program. That we have a real problem here, no one acquainted with the facts can for one moment forget. No group of college executives or teachers of any importance has met in the past several months without issuing some sort of pronouncement in regard to the athletic situation. The indication is that we face a time of reconstruction in college athletic policies and the adoption of a method of control of athletics in the interest of the colleges as institutions of learning, rather than as groups of rooters on great athletic occasions.

One of the most influential professional educational organizations in the country is the American Association of University Professors. Their April bulletin for 1926 charges intercollegiate athletics as being conducive to drinking and dishonesty in colleges, as a distortion of values that remains with college men throughout their lives, and especially as causative of neglect of systematic work which is a fundamental purpose of college education. They demand reform at once, and describe their aim as "a curb of hysteria." With particular reference to football, these university professors would allow no college men to play more than one season, with only four games during the season, and with faculty coaching. They would particularly eliminate the alumni and the fraternities from influence in college athletics.

Muggsy McGray, the hefty manager of the New York Giants and one of the outstanding baseball men of the world, has this to say in a recent interview: "I have discovered that 90 per cent of those who break their word as to contract agreements are young college players. I don't mean, of course, that all college players are guilty of sharp practice, but as a whole they run second to sandloters in the matter of keeping their word." A criticism so sweeping from such a source as this gives us occasion to pause and to consider whether athletics ought to continue as a part of college life, or whether there is sufficient advantage in its retention to warrant the effort at reconstruction.

Personally, I am of the opinion that it would be a most regrettable loss from the college curriculum to outlaw athletics from college life. I use the word "curriculum" in this statement to mean all the influences that in a controlled situation are useful through truly educational processes in shaping and directing the growth and development of character. It is my conviction that athletics is entitled to a worthy place in the college curriculum and that the faculties and administrators of colleges are in duty bound to take steps to integrate the athletic life of the students with the more formal educational processes of the college course. Viewing their duty in such a light, college professors will no longer be able, with a poor show at wit, to say, as an outstanding one of them has been reported to have said: "We teach the men and women who come to us the courses of our several departments, but their fellow-students educate them and particularly their athletic leaders." There is no doubt there have been abuses in the matter of college athletics and its conduct, but these abuses do not inhere in athletics as such, but arise out of the fact that high-brow college presidents and learned professors have considered the leisure hours of their student bodies as of too little importance to engage their august attention. There is no need to engage in wholesale denunciation of college coaches and of college athletics, to say nothing of the thousands of college rooters who exhibit hysteria when the great games of the season are being played. The real need is that those who are charged with the responsibility for creating and administering the college curricula should appreciate the paramount importance of the students' leisure time and of athletics as constituting an important item in that time.

Positively, it may be stated that there are great gains to be had through athletics. On the part of the student body as a whole, athletics furnishes a splendid opportunity for cultivating loyalty and college spirit. There is no doubt that one of the largest assets which any can have is the loyalty of its alumni and students feel for its growth and development. College spirit is a subtle influence, persuasive, determinative of attitude, and ultimately of character. Athletics can be so arranged as to cultivate and conserve the proper sort of loyalty and college spirit, and, as such, offers an open door of opportunity to college administrators to serve the lives and interests of their students.

The rigid training which athletes must undergo is a most valuable lesson for any student, and even those who take part only in the cheering must be trained for their work. The athlete can certainly not be fooled into believing that a short-cut method can be depended upon to qualify for the best service. Long and exacting hours of training in which the diet enters as well as equally long hours of systematic rest and sleep are the price athletes must pay for success in their work. There is no lesson for life more needed than this in our time.

A third benefit to be derived from athletics is cooperation. Athletes know that the individual player is a nuisance. The team must function as a unit, or defeat will stare it in the face. The idea of cooperation is a prime consideration not only in college life, but likewise in the life of the nation today. In the church, we are cursed with the sectarian and denominational spirit. In international life, we Americans find ourselves unable to cooperate with so promising an organization as the League of Nations, and could not enter the World Court without nullifying reservations, indicating our distrust of other governments. It would be a mighty good thing for the United States Senate to use part of the time it spends in useless debate in athletic sport and, if the senators could be induced to play games with the legislative bodies of other nations in the spirit of true sportsmanship, we might eventually come to the point in our national life when we would exhibit the spirit of cooperation with other nations.

Athletics, too, teaches sacrifice. I have spoken of the necessity for team-play or cooperation which makes it necessary for the team to work with the precision of a well-regulated machine. But times come in every game when it is necessary for the individual player to sacrifice himself for the sake of the game. The baseball player who makes a sacrifice hit for the sake of the team has learned a most valuable and useful lesson in living. We cannot escape the fact that we are our brother's keeper, though it must be admitted that the tendency is to shut our eyes to any situation that calls for practical expression of this social obligation. There is no doubt that athletics does teach this valuable lesson not only to those who participate, but to those who look on.

I shall speak of but one other advantage to be had from athletics, and that is the gain that comes from the fact that the game must be played according to the rules. If there is one outstanding weakness in our social order today, it is the inability on the part of the people generally to appreciate the need for rules and regulations for the game of life. We are said to be becoming as a people lawless. This is true of only a section of our population. However we do seemingly resent authority in the home, in the church, in our social relations, in our governmental and international life. Such an attitude strikes at the heart of democracy. It may be true that the majorities have always been wrong and the minorities have always been right, as is contended in certain highly intellectual quarters, but when it comes to practical living, the advice Paul gave to the Roman Christians with reference to obedience to "the powers that be" is a sane and necessary principle for individual and social conduct. The athlete who will not play according to the rules is soon out of the game. He can readily understand why rules are necessary for the organization and successful conduct of sport. Athletics, therefore, ought to make those who participate and those who observe better citizens because of the appreciation that must necessarily be engendered for rules and regulations as lying at the base not only of all sport, but also of all life.

But I am particularly concerned at this time with reference to the methods by which we can conserve these wonderful benefits that inhere in athletics. I am aware that the cynic can derisively charge that the very opposite of every one of these wholesome benefits has been the resultant of athletics in the colleges and that disloyalty, lack of training, the opposite of cooperation and sacrifice, and disrespect for the rules of the game have been the disappointing fruits of college athletics in many places. While we cannot deny successfully the truth of these charges, we are able to say that athletics as such is not at fault for these facts, and that we are under obligation to see that a situation so doleful is speedily changed, and so I have ventured to choose as the subject of this baccalaureate address "Spiritual Athletics."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Mayor of Suffolk has passed over the river. Col. Joseph Henry Macleary was born in Philadelphia, Pa., March 10, 1849, and died at his home on Bank Street, Suffolk, Va., June 16, 1926, at the age of 77 years, 3 months and 6 days.

He was married to Miss Esther Ann Cupps of Dover, Delaware, July 21, 1870. Their happy married life lacked only thirty-five days of fifty-six years. They had resided in Suffolk forty-three years. Col. Macleary had been a member of the City Council for twenty-three years, and was serving his second term as Mayor. For sixteen years of the twenty-three he never missed a Council meeting. That was a good example for men and women in all relations in life. During the period of his incumbency in office, great improvements were made in paved streets, electric lights, gas and water mains, and sanitary conditions. During that period, Suffolk grew from a town to a city with all the modern necessities and conveniences of city life.

For many years he was a member of the Suffolk Christian Church, chairman of the committee on house of worship, regular in attendance at Church and the Baraca class of which he served as president for some time. He was a gentleman in manner, a citizen in service, a Christian in sincerity; as husband and father, a model.

He is survived by his wife, two children, and four grandchildren. His son, Harry M., married Miss Susie Gardner, and they have two daughters—Mrs. Charles L. (Myrtle) Clark, of Norfolk, Va., and they have one daughter, Patricia Clark; Miss Esther, married James T. Chapman, Jr., and they reside in Smithfield, Va. Col. Macleary's daughter, Minnie M., married Charles F. Honeycutt, and they have two sons, Charles F. and Harry Honeycutt. All of the surviving members of the family live in Suffolk.

Mayor Macleary had been sorely afflicted for seven months. He had an operation for prostate trouble, but high-blood pressure and kidney complications made the condition fatal. He bore his long illness with Christian fortitude and was hopeful of recovery to the very last. This, of course, modified the situation in his favor and that of the family. Everything that family service and medical skill could do for his comfort and relief was used. His companion for nearly fifty-six years must now lean upon God, her children, and her friends for comfort in this saddest of all human experiences. The saddest verse in the Bible, "the only son of his mother, and she was a widow" (Luke 7:12). Over against widowhood is that sweet verse in Psalm 68:5, "A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in His holy habitation." Many widows and children have found this true in experience after the form is gone and the voice is no more heard. Memory does the rest, and faith looks forward to reunion in the heavenly home.

The funeral services were conducted from the Suffolk Christian Church at 4 P. M., June 18th, 1926, by Revs. W. W. Staley and H. S. Hardcastle. Church members, Baraca class members, city officials, fire department and Masonic order attended in groups to pay tribute to the man they honored in life and loved in death. A group of colored citizens added to the tokens of respect expressed for this civic head of the city.

The flowers were piled up in banks of beauty and in beautiful designs, and the Church was filled with their fragrance. When words fail, sympathizing friends express it with flowers.

W. W. STALEY.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

The school year of 1925 and 1926 has hastily come to a close. To each of us it has brought a variety of experiences. To some of us has come sickness, to some good health. To some has come severe testings of faith in sorrow and loss. To others has come sunshine and joy, with evidences of success in our various tasks.

We enter 1926 and 1927 with almost an entirely new faculty. Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Lynam, who served Bethlehem College and Academy for the past two years, have gone to other fields. They have both wrought well and will long linger in the thoughts of those whom they have labored with and mingled among and served. In the course of coming years, faculty members will come and go, but never again will the college be served by more competent, capable, trustworthy folks than they. May they accept the thanks and appreciations of the college and ever feel that the best wishes of the institution follow after them in their larger fields of future service.

Mrs. Thyra Swint, who served the Academy well as teacher for the past three years, will not be with us the coming year on account of failing health. We are hoping, that while we will lose much as a school, that the long rest from the strenuous work of the school room will bring back to her the health of other years. Her hope is bright for the future of Bethlehem College and her interest and loyalty increases with the passing years.

Prof. R. M. Satterfield and Miss Cecile Clardy have served in the capacity of teachers in this institution for the past year, with great credit to the school, the cause of education and to themselves. Prof. Satterfield will long be remembered for the interest he has taken in the beautifying of the campus and athletics as well as his work in the school room. Miss Clardy's general college training and sweet disposition have both been evidenced in the manner in which she executed her work, in the midst of many handicaps brought about by necessary changes, in vacancies of which she was not responsible, but was willing and competent to fill. She has accepted a position in the high school department for the ensuing year.

Prof. O. C. Fincher and Mrs. J. F. Bishop deserve prominent mention for the manner in which they carried on their work. Prof. O. C. Fincher, who has taught and who has had general supervision of our music department for the past two years, has labored untiringly in and out of the school room. He is a "second-miler"—ever willing and ready to do much more than he is paid to do. He is deeply interested in community welfare, which is seen in his public musical recitals—glee club and band music. He will serve in the same capacity another year. Mrs. Bishop completed the work which Mrs. Swint was compelled to give up on account of the condition of her health. She filled the place with no observable break, although she was kept in suspense not knowing what day she would have to give up her work, thus being unable to organize or lay special plans for her work. She is to be commended for the way she handled her work under such unavoidable conditions.

Rev. J. H. Dollar and wife will be among the new members of our faculty for 1926 and 1927.

He is a native of Alabama, a graduate of our own beloved Elon College, and will receive his M. A. from Vanderbilt University at the close of the summer term of school. He will teach history, English and biology. We believe he will be a great asset to this institution, because of his training, knowledge of the people with whom he will labor and his deep interest in the Christian Church and its institutions, especially Bethlehem College. Mrs. Dollar will have charge of the girls' dormitory, which is another hopeful omen for the college. Her experience in this class of work and her sweet and cheerful disposition will be a great help to her in her work.

The board is looking for a man who is qualified to teach mathematics, chemistry and French, and possibly coach athletics for a price the college can afford to pay. Any one desiring to qualify may address the president, Wadley, Ala.

S. L. BEOUGHNER.

LAWRENCE.

Dr. Walter Phalti Lawrence died of heart trouble at High Point, N. C., June 2, 1926, aged 58 years. The funeral services were conducted at his home, Elon College, N. C., by the writer, assisted by Drs. W. W. Staley, P. H. Fleming, J. O. Atkinson, G. O. Langford, and J. W. Wellons. Prof. G. F. Alexander, of the Greensboro College for Women, Greensboro, N. C., sang "Lead, Kindly Light" and "Crossing the Bar." The pallbearers were Dwight Davidson, D. R. and C. C. Fonville, D. J. Walker, J. B. Gay, Jr., Prof. J. A. Hornaday, and Dr. N. F. Brannock. The body was laid to rest in Elon College Cemetery beneath a rare wealth of beautiful flowers.

Dr. Lawrence was the son of Rev. John S. and Annie Covington Lawrence, of Randolph County, N. C. He received his preparatory education at Shiloh Academy and Richmond Training School, and graduated from Elon College in 1894. He received the degree of A. M. from Yale University in 1906, and the honorary degree of Litt. D. from Defiance College in 1911. Dr. Lawrence also studied in the University of Chicago and of Oxford, England. Excepting a short interval, he had been professor of English in Elon College from 1894 until his resignation about two months before his death. He had taught in the summer schools of the Appalachian Training School and Wake Forest, and taught as supply in the University of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio.

During a public career of more than thirty years, he filled many positions of honor and trust. He was at different periods president of Elon Banking and Trust Company, director of Alamance Bank and Trust Company, director of the Standard Realty and Security Company, mayor of Elon College, commissioner of Alamance County, member of the town council of Elon College, and chairman of the School Board. Dr. Lawrence also represented Alamance County in the State Legislature and was instrumental in securing certain legislation for the county that will be a perpetual monument to his memory. He was a prominent layman in the Southern Christian Convention and had been President of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference and treasurer of the Mission Board of the North Carolina Conference. He was much sought after for addresses on educational and other topics, not infrequently filling some pulpit on Sunday. He always spoke with good attendance, being earnest, logical, and forceful in his style.

It was as an educator that Dr. Lawrence did his life work. Coming to Elon College as a student when its doors were first opened, and later as professor of English and for a period dean, he gave to his alma mater nearly thirty years of loyal, loving and efficient service. He enjoyed the highest esteem of the students and wielded a large and wholesome influence over them.

Dr. Lawrence married Miss Annie Graham, daughter of Dr. J. H. and Mary Dickey Graham, of Union Ridge, N. C., an alumna of Elon College, '93. Mrs. Lawrence survives, with two children—Mary Graham, a graduate of Elon College, '24, and a student at Boston Conservatory of Music, and W. Phalti, a student in Elon College. He also leaves three brothers—J. T. Lawrence, Austin, Texas; O. D. and T. W. Lawrence, Seagrove, N. C.; and three sisters—Mrs. J. A. Auman and Mrs. J. B. Black, Seagrove, N. C., and Mrs. H. C. Lowdermilk, El Centro, Calif. He also has a nephew, J. Clyde Auman, a missionary in Japan and president of a college of nearly one thousand students; another, W. C. Lowdermilk, in the forestry service in China, and a third, R. H. Lawrence, a geologist in South America.

Dr. Lawrence was a leader. As a student, he was a leader in college activities; as a teacher, he was a leader among his fellow-faculty members. He was a leader as a deacon and worker in his local Church, and as a citizen was a leader in the civic and business affairs of his town and county. The genuineness of his character, his high ideals, his pure life, his loyal friendship and large service won for him a lasting place in the affections of his community and the larger circle his life had touched. This was evidenced by an unusually large gathering of friends at the funeral—friends whose silent suffering sympathies could be felt without word of utterance.

May some worthy successor be raised up to take his place in our Church and educational activities, and may the God of all peace comfort and keep his suffering companion and children and other loved ones in their trying ordeal.

FAITH, LOVE AND CHARITY.

At the time of the prophet Isaiah, which was about 700 years B. C., were these words spoken, viz: "All we, like sheep, have gone astray and have turned every one in his own way" (Isa. 53-6).

The old prophet was grieved at the backslidden state of his people and at the drying away of their faith. Now, as it was in the time of Isaiah, so it is today among the Gentile race. Today we are flooded with pride, formality, fashions, societies, heresies, doctrines, isms and tisms.

We are now in the state of modern thought, ideas and invention. Modern schools and foolishness, modern books of folly, modern games and plays, and science and error; modern society, dress style and exposure. Those together, in connection with other sinfulness, have largely crowded out the spirit of righteousness and truth. Civility, gentleness, modesty, moral refinement and godliness is today being depressed more than at any time in the history of man.

Surely we are neglecting the ways of truth, and are gone in a way which seemeth right unto man; but the end of the way thereof is the way of death. Sin is progressive in its nature, and wickedness is raging. Men are learning more and faster now than ever before, but, as the apostle puts it, are they not ever learning and yet not able to come to the knowledge of the truth?

Now, be ye not deceived, for those things are not a false alarm; and remember, too, that it is not what we know, but what we are that counts in judgment. Don't get the idea that you are no sinner nor need a Saviour, simply because you have not ridden an express train nor embezzled the national treasury. Don't get the idea that you are good enough. Don't get the idea that you have done no chargeable sin; for, remember, it's the little things in life that count most, and are those generally unseen by him that do them.

The world has been under the yoke and bondage of sin from the day and hour that Adam and Eve partook of the forbidden. God, in His goodness, has drafted a plan, and a way by Him has been instituted by which all men may have eternal life; but they must first come to the terms. We Church people have dabbled too much and too long with modernism. We have, from time to time, took on a little now and a little then until we have tainted the institution of God.

Jesus cleansed the temple back yonder about 1900 years ago, and He will one day in the future sift and cleanse His Church. We are doing many things now, but there isn't anything to do, that we may be lost, but a lot to be left undone to be saved. We cannot divide ourselves nor our institution (the Church) between God and the devil—no! no! no! God demands the whole heart, while we might compromise with the devil for a part. We shall love the Lord God with the whole heart, and Him only should we serve at any time.

Paul tells us that without charity we are as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. Well, if you will think for a moment, you will see a great deal of brass and hear many cymbals. The apostle James describes to us the character of pure religion. Pure religion is founded upon love one towards another, and God greatest of all.

Charity is the practice of love one to another, and therein love becomes the fulfillment of the law. Faith, love and charity are the fundamentals of the Christian life. You will agree with me that the manifestation of those are becoming flimsy. What's the trouble? Well, it's because we are drifting down the current of modern sinfulness. I, for myself, sincerely wish for all pride, and all things not agreeable to God were set at naught. My desire is that the Church return to its former customs, learnings, hymns, preaching and to the old-time religion.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

BY WARREN H. DENISON, Secretary.

Dr. L. E. Smith Appeals for a Tithing Church.

In his great address as president of the Southern Convention at Durham, N. C., Dr Smith made a most eloquent appeal for a tithing Church. He told of the great and growing work of our Church and of the great needs of all her interests financially; that the Church has no funds save the resources of the individuals constituting it. He sees but one solution, and that is that the whole Church commit itself to the biblical plan of giving. Let every one upon the first day of the week lay aside for the Lord's work as the Lord has prospered him. With the appeal of conviction and eloquence he urged every member of the Church to tithe—give one-tenth of his income to the Church—saying that the financial problem would be solved. He urged every delegate to commit himself to the plan and to go back home to really preach it and practice it, and to have the Church become known as a tithing Church. He strengthened his appeal by going back to his own official board of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., and presenting it as a plan for his own Church. After discussion the official board voted to do what it could to make Christian Temple a tithing Church for one year, beginning October 1st.

It will bring a great blessing to any Church and individual who will practice faithfully this Bible plan of giving.

Field Work.

Recently your secretary has conducted stewardship institutes, and helped in every-member campaigns at Fidelity, Woodington, Trotwood, Riverdale, and Houston Churches in the Miami, Ohio Conference; at the Eastern Indiana quarterly, at Montpelier; at Muncie and Albany, Ind.

New Church Opened.

The South Norfolk congregation, Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor, has completed its new Church, and opening day was June 6th. A special financial campaign was conducted June 1st to 6th by your secretary. On opening day, $50,061.00 were secured in cash and subscriptions. It was a great occasion.

Great Conference Themes.

There are a number of important themes that it would be well for all the Conferences to consider. If the President in his annual message would discuss them and then have the Conference discuss them and act upon them, much good might result. Among them we suggest a few practical ones. They are not theological or controversial, but for the progress of the kingdom through our Church.

1. The planting of at least one new Church this year in the Conference. If we would be Christian and grow, we must establish new Churches.

2. Challenge some Church to give as much this year for benevolences as for current expenses—as much for others as for self. We are looking earnestly for the Church that will be the first among us to be a 50-50 Church. Many are doing that in other denominations.

3. Some whole Conference co-operative effort such as is urged by the general board—a simultaneous every-member canvass. A number of our Conferences are working to it. Why not yours?

4. Every Church in the Conference carrying out the request of the General Convention in increasing its benevolences 15 per cent annually.

5. That every Conference organize itself constitutionally and departmentally so as to include the points of the Christian Church program: (a) devotion, (b) evangelism and life service, (c) Christian education, (d) missions, (e) stewardship and finance, (f) publications. Many Conferences are so organized. If yours is not, why not complete it?

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

We began our revival meeting at Rocky Ford May 23rd. Rev. A. W. Andes assisted me in the meeting. We had a good congregation all the way through, and very good interest was manifested during the entire meeting. Bro. Andes delivered splendid sermons, and they were greatly appreciated by the people. We felt that his presence meant much to our Church and a great deal to our community.

The last night of the meeting was characterized by a very sad experience in the life of all of us. The meeting closed on June 6th. Since this was the last night Sister Morey would be in our services in the mountain, more than three hundred people came to express their appreciation for the good work, and their love for her. At the close of the service, Sister Morey gave a very good and appropriate talk on her joy and disappointment of being in the work. She stated that she had enjoyed the work from the beginning and would go away with a prayer for the work. She stated, however, that she was very sorry that she had not been able to see more visible results than had been seen. The congregation then stood and sang while the people shook hands with her and left with her their name, address and some words that they hoped would linger with her. It was a very sad parting when the people, both young and old, dropped a tear while they clasped her hand for the last time. Then on Thursday afternoon quite a few went with her to the train.

Sister Morey's life had been a blessing to the people here and a credit to our Church. She loved the work and was at all times ready to do what she could to promote the work in some way. She counted no task too heavy or out of her line of work, but that she was ready to do what she could by it. Her sweet Christian life and influence was always a blessing to those that knew her and could be in her presence. She carried a smile into every home and always left one. The people, as well as us workers, feel at a great loss without her presence.

Sister Morey did not state definitely her plans for the future, other than she was going back and build near her old home place. After the building had been completed, she would spend some time in the west for a much-needed rest, and afterwards she would spend her time with her old home Church endeavoring to help build it up. To the dear people that may get her time and service, what a blessing to them—but, oh, what a loss to us!

Our prayers and best wishes will follow her and her presence and work will never be forgotten, but will linger long in the mind and hearts of all of us.

Any one wishing to correspond with her will address her at Fredericktown, Pa.

M. T. SORRELL.

RALLIES IN ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

When I learned that you could not attend the last of the four missionary rallies I regretted it very much, but when we had begun and there was such a large attendance I wished so much that you could be there. The fact is, every one of them was good—better than we had expected, as it was such a busy time; but the interest increased all the time. The Antioch rally was the best of all.

It was an effort to get ready for the rallies; so many things to do, and the fact that it is a new thing comparatively in this section, but I feel that the effects will tell in the future for the good of the cause of missions. New societies will spring up as a result, and the old ones will get larger. Our women are better acquainted with what the work stands for, and they will be more encouraged to continue the work. Last year I organized societies in two of my Churches, and I feel that my Churches will be a hundred per cent this year.

In the discussions as to the problems of the work this idea was advanced as to the young people joining the society of the adults; that is, where they use the group system, let the young people have a group of themselves. This might cause them to feel that they are more responsible for that part of the society, and they could be interested the more. So that idea was advanced at the Antioch Rally.

Fraternally yours,

E. M. CARTER.

RALLY AT NEW HARMONY.

The Woman's Missionary Rally met at New Harmony, near Cragford, Ala., June 1, 1926. The following program was rendered:

Orr; enrollments; reports from societies (only one had a report, which was Spring Hill); "The Value of Co-operation," Alma Mitchell; address, "The Imperative Need of the Present," Dr. J. O. Atkinson; special offering, $2.57; appointment of committees; adjournment for lunch.

Afternoon session: Devotional, Rev. C. W. Carpenter; "Introduction to Our Missionaries," Alma Mitchell; "Reaching Our Goal," Mrs. E. M. Carter; "Beginning of a Great Work," Rev. G. D. Hunt; "Our Missionary Need in the Alabama Conference," Rev. C. W. Carpenter; "Training Our Young People for Service," Dr. J. O. Atkinson; discussion of problems in our societies, led by Mrs. E. M. Carter; report of committees; the following officers were elected: district leader, Ruby Orr; vice-president, Mary Edmonson; secretary, Ione Young; adjournment.

The following resolutions were submitted:

1. We desire to thank Dr. Atkinson for his able address and for his counsel with us during our deliberations; also thank our pastor and all other ministers for their presence and help.

2. We also wish to express our appreciation to New Harmony Church for their entertainment of the rally.

3. We recommend that the pastor co-operate with the women and render them all the assistance possible in making their work a greater success.

4. We recommend that each Church put on a missionary program some time during the year.

5. That our people pray definitely for the mission cause, our Mission Board, and for the missionaries in the foreign fields.

6. That all our missionary societies be urged to study the book, "Prayer and Missions," in connection with the Bible.

7. That more of our people subscribe to the Christian Missionary and THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

It was recommended that our next missionary rally be held at Shady Grove Church, and the time of the meeting be decided by the Mission Board.

ALMA MITCHELL,
Secretary.

WADLEY, ALA.

The third year of Bethlehem College has come to a close. Amid all of its failures and successes, it is now history, and I am sure the successes have far outstripped the failures. I realize this school, though yet an infant, has already accomplished a great deal for the betterment of this section of the country, and especially for the Christian Church. Some have finished their work here this year and are planning to pursue further courses elsewhere, who would never have received any college work at all had it not been for Bethlehem and the vision it has brought to us.

We have so many things to be proud of. First, we have a board of trustees who are sacrificing their best thought and time to the great task. Second, an efficient faculty who have exemplified a great deal of patience with the students and are greatly loved and admired by all of them. Third, in our own beloved Rev. H. W. Elder, the builder, who never fails. He is managing the building project, and we feel sure of his success if God will give him strength and men will give him money. To this end, the whole Church in the far South is faithfully praying.

The building is well under way, and more material is being put on the ground. When this building is completed, it will not only be a credit to Wadley and the surrounding territory, but the whole Church, and more especially this part in the far South.

Brethren, pray for us.

G. H. VEAZEY.

AN APPRECIATION.

Resolved, That the members of the Newport News Christian Church, in special conference assembled, on this the 13th day of June, 1926, have heard, with regret, the decision of our pastor, the Rev. B. J. Earp, to leave this field at the end of his pastorate year.

That we wish to record our appreciation of his unselfish ministry to us and this community during his five years of service. We feel that he has been a spiritual force in this city, and that his leadership in our local Church has been a blessing to us and contributed greatly to the strengthening of our work. In his preaching, he has always proclaimed the faith of our fathers, and striven to teach us the highest Christian way, and, withal, his own life among us has conformed thereto.

Mr. Earp has taken a most active part in promoting not merely the work of the strictly Church organizations, but every one of the auxiliaries has found him a most enthusiastic supporter. In consequence, we feel that the splendid growth of these may fairly be credited, in some measure, to him. He has given us a better understanding of our obligations in a financial way to our Church, and the various boards of the Christian denomination, and in this way has developed an interest in our general Church program that is gratifying. This latter accomplishment is a difficult one in mission Churches.

In all of this, we have had the very splendid co-operation and sympathetic help of Mrs. Earp, and they leave us with our heartiest good wishes and prayers that they may be directed to some field of even larger usefulness, and that their joint lives may be spared to many years of service in His name.

MRS. W. H. BAKER,
Secretary.

SPIRITUAL ATHLETES.

The fate that overtook Greece when athletics became a popular craze also suggests our careful attention to the problem that we face in America today. What then is necessary to constitute a spiritual athlete? This is the issue that confronts us at this time.

First among the foundational qualities of a spiritual athlete I would place the necessity for a strong and vigorous and pure physical life. The body is described in our Scriptures as the Temple of the Holy Spirit. The body is, therefore, sacred as being the dwelling place of the Divine. A spiritual athlete will not indulge in any practice that in any way militates against the efficiency of his body. But this is not enough. Not only must the spiritual athlete refrain from practices that undermine physical vitality, but he must engage positively in the methods and procedures of living which will develop the body systematically and make of it the fine instrument for the service of life it is capable of becoming. An athlete must have a good physique. This is the basis upon which his success is absolutely conditioned.

The spiritual athlete, in the second place, dares not neglect his mind. While a strong and vigorous body is necessary, that body must be governed by a strong mind in order to achieve worth-while results in any direction. So many times at a critical point in a game, where alertness of mind is necessary, the man with a fine body, but who is mentally sluggish, fails to function and the game is lost. So is it in all of life. Our bodies are not all we need to develop in order to make our lives count. The mind, too, needs and must have development and culture.

Ability to get along with our fellows, too, is a fundamental requirement of successful achievement for the spiritual athlete. We hear much in our day of what its advocates are pleased to call "the social gospel." The social gospel, however, is nothing new. It is the sermon on the mount in action. It is recognition of our common fellowship and brotherhood with humanity, and not only the recognition of this fellowship and brotherhood, but the practical living of the same in every-day life. Such a social gospel is required of the spiritual athlete.

The fourth requisite item in the life attitudes of the spiritual athlete relates to the soul life in its entirety, to what we are pleased to call "the spiritual interests of men." In a sense, every experience is spiritual, so that from this viewpoint, whatever relates to our physical, mental, and social well-being may be regarded as an expression of our spiritual attitude. Much may be said in support of this view, but there should be included in the term, spiritual, in addition to what is included in these three other concepts, the attitude of the soul of man to God, and perhaps this justifies us in making a special category in which to give due expression to this added element so essential to the truly successful and efficient life. I am not unaware of the fact that God is interested in all our life, in what makes for our physical, mental, and social well-being as well as for that which contributes in a special way to the cultivation of our intimate personal relationship with Him. The spiritual athlete will endeavor in every legitimate manner to relate himself and his life to the ideals and purposes of God in the creation and orderly conduct of the universe, and he will understand that the rules and regulations according to which he may accomplish this integration of his life with the purposes of God are to be found in the Scriptures to be interpreted to him through the medium of the Holy Spirit, who is the Umpire in the Christian game of life.

We have a beautiful illustration of the spiritual athlete in a child that was born in a manger, brought up in a carpenter's shop, and, in the very prime of His life, crucified by those who failed to appreciate Him and the rules by which He was playing the game of life. We are told that this young man, this fine spiritual athlete, incorporated in His life and its experiences the four splendid elements which we have found to underlie the growth and development of true spiritual athletes. Luke says in that fine and much-quoted Scripture relative to His growth and development: "And Jesus increased in wisdom and in stature, and in favor with God and man." That is to say, our Master, as a man, increased in wisdom (mentally), in stature (physically), in favor with God (spiritually), and man (socially). These are the four foundation-stones for the edifice of life and character. The building cannot be complete with any one of these component parts absent. Christ was the true spiritual athlete, developing, through exercise, the functions of His life according to the four-fold program—bodily, mentally, socially, and spiritually.

In writing to his spiritual son, Timothy, the great apostle Paul wisely enjoins the young minister to exercise himself, and adds the significant phrase, "Unto godliness," or, as the Centenary Translation gives his injunction, we find Paul saying to Timothy, "Continually train yourself for the contest of godliness." That is my admonition to you as you bring your college careers to a happy and successful conclusion. Exercise yourselves, build yourselves up physically, mentally, socially and spiritually, let the emphasis, the motive, the purpose of your life be on the concluding phrase of Paul's fine sentiment, "unto godliness." In this way you will become true spiritual athletes with the ability to play the game of life with satisfaction to yourselves, with profit and uplift for your fellows, and with the approval of Christ Himself upon all you undertake and achieve. Colleges, too, will have nothing to fear, and everything to gain, from athletics which includes the proportionate development of the four-fold life, the life that increases in wisdom and in stature, and in favor with God and man. To this worthy and commendable achievement, "exercise thyself unto godliness," for, to quote Paul again, "Physical training is of some small service, but godliness is of service in everything." Therefore, make of yourselves true spiritual athletes. Colleges and the world in every realm of its life are in sore need of such full-orbed men and women.

ROSES AND CLAY.

Attar of roses and common clay—
Side by side I laid them;
All glorious one, the other mean—
So infinite wisdom made them.
But, lo, the rare perfume that day
Full half of its sweetness gave the clay.

God sent the Rose of Sharon down
Right by my side to lay it;
The price was more than a world could pay
And only God could pay it.
But the richest fragrance of heaven's art
Was shed on the clay of this poor heart.

Still nothing but wretched clay am I,
No grace of my own pretending;
But let me draw close to some sordid soul,
The breath of Sharon lending.
Then he who such blessing has ever missed
May lift up his soul to the great Alchemist.

GOD OF ALL NATIONS.

God of all nations,
 We pray for all the peoples of Thy earth—
 For those who are consumed in mutual hatred and bitterness,
 For those who make bloody war upon their neighbors,
 For those who tyrannously oppress,
 For those who groan under cruelty and subjection.
 We pray Thee for all those who bear rule and responsibility,
 For child-races and dying races.
 For outcast tribes, the backward and the downtrodden,
 For the ignorant, wretched, the enslaved.
 We beseech Thee, teach mankind to live together in peace,
 No man exploiting the weak, no man hating the strong,
 Each race working out its own destiny,
 Unfettered, self-respecting, fearless.
 Teach us to be worthy of freedom,
 Free from social wrong, free from individual oppression and contempt,
 Pure of heart and hand, despising none, defraud-
 ing none,
 Giving to all men in all the dealings of life
 The honor we owe to those who are thy children, Whatever their color, their race or their caste.

RUBY AND THE GREAT DARK.

By EMMA FLORENCE BUSH.

Ever since she had been a little girl, Ruby had been afraid of the dark. Even when father took her in his arms and showed her the stars shining in the deep blue sky and told her how they shone in the heavens to guide the sailors on the great sea and travelers over the great desert, she only clung closer to him and hid her face in his shoulder.

Now she was eight years old, and still she had to have some one go with her into an unlighted room.

The whole family had been spending the day at Aunt Elizabeth's and were driving home now in the dark.

At last they were home, but when father asked mother for the key to open the door, she said: "Why, I thought you took it. I left it on the kitchen table."

What should they do? Every window was locked, and they had no other key. Ruby listened sleepily while they talked it over.

"The cellar window is unlocked," said mother. "And if you could lift Paul in he could open the door for us."

Paul looked down ruefully at his fat body. "I couldn't squeeze in, mother," he said. "None of us are small enough but Ruby, and she is such a baby and so afraid of the dark."

"Yes, indeed," said father, and Ruby felt a little sigh in his voice. "If only she wasn't so afraid of the dark, I could lift her in and she could open the door. As it is, you will have to wait here un'il I see if I can find a locksmith."

Ruby gave a gasp. If only she wasn't so afraid of the dark! Then all at once into her little head flashed the Bible verse she had heard the minister read last Sunday. She remembered it because it sounded so comforting. "Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night."

Surely if God said that it must be so. Quickly she slipped her hand into her father's. "I will go," she whispered softly.

Her father looked down at her. "You," he said doubtfully.

"Yes," Ruby whispered; "lift me in the window, father dear."

Her father lifted her in carefully. "I will be just outside," he said.

Slowly and timidly Ruby took a step along the cellar floor. All at once she bumped into something which tipped and sent a shower of hard, roly things under her feet. Her heart almost stopped, but all at once she laughed. She had stumbled against the apple barrel, and it was apples that were rolling around her.

She started again through the blackness and nearly tripped over a pile of squashes, but she was almost at the foot of the stairs now.

All at once something soft and furry brushed against her foot. Ruby clapped her hands over her mouth to keep from screaming. The "terror by night" had come. Then she heard a soft little purr and knew it was her own little kitten, Firefly, that had come to greet her. She stopped and, gathering her in her arms, started for the stairs. And at the touch of the soft little body all her fear left her. Firefly was such a little kitten, but she wasn't afraid. She ran swiftly up the stairs, through the hall, and opened the door.

"Darling, was it very dreadful?" asked father.

"No," said Ruby decidedly; "I shall never be afraid of the dark again." And she never was.

BEATRICE CLARISSE.

By MATILDA McCLURG.

I am a big French doll, and I used to be dressed in a lovely pink silk dress. I had white slippers and a big white hat. I suppose I was very handsome, for I heard everybody say: "What a beautiful doll!" I could move my arms and legs and also close my eyes, and my hair was all in golden curls. My name is Beatrice Clarisse. Still I was far from happy, and I knew there must be something wrong somewhere.

I was brought, so I was told, by Santa Claus last Christmas to a dear little girl called Betty Anne, and I am almost as tall as she is. In fact, she thinks it awfully queer that Santa Claus should have found one of her own little fine petticoats and put it on me.

But there was something wrong somewhere. I didn't seem to fit in anywhere. I was quite jealous of a doll that Betty loved better than any of the others. I couldn't see why she loved her so. She called her Raggedy Ann, and she surely looked like that, but Betty never went to bed without Raggedy Ann in her arms. How I did envy her!

Then when Betty gave a tea party for her dolls and put us all around on little chairs and stools at her table, there never seemed to be any place where I could fit. I lopped all over the little chairs, and I had to be bolstered up with pillows if I sat on a big chair; and it generally ended in my being carefully laid down on the bed in the spare room and left during the party.

At times Betty took her family all out on the lawn or rode us around in a little red wagon. As she was very anxious not to slight any of us, we were all tightly squeezed together in the little wagon. But soon she saw that such travel was not very good for my dainty pink silk dress and big white hat, so I was again brought in and carefully laid on the couch or bed and the rest of the dolls had all the fun.

Raggedy Ann fell out two or three times, but was cheerfully picked up and stuffed in again, looking not a bit worse than when she started on her journey.

The other day Betty's little dog Tige came into the room where I was taking my usual afternoon nap while the other dolls were frolicking around out in the sunshine. Whether Tige, too, was lonely, or whether he thought I was having a very pokey time and he would try to liven me up, it is hard to say. However, we certainly had a lively time of it, and when Betty came in she found us both on the floor and Tige looking rather ashamed of himself for playing so roughly. My pink silk dress can never be worn again, and one of my slippers is chewed to a pulp. In fact, I also have a little chip off the end of my nose. But somehow I do not seem to mind at all. The world seems rather a nicer place to live in since that all happened, for grandma has made me a nice serviceable gingham dress just like one of Betty's, and the big hat is discarded forever.

Mamma tells Betty that she need not be so careful of me any more since my beauty is somewhat spoiled, and now I can take all the pleasures with Raggedy Ann and the rest of the family. Even if I am squeezed into the bottom of the little red wagon, and nearly all the other dolls pushed in on top, so that I can scarcely see daylight, I do not mind. And even if dear little Betty Ann is too tired to put us away carefully and leaves us all stuffed in the wagon, it is much better than to be left alone on the spare-room bed. Indeed, I think my accident was very fortunate. I am quite happy now.

EARLY LEADERS OF ISRAEL—FROM MOSES TO SAMUEL.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Jehovah will not cast off His people."—Psa. 94:14.

LESSON: Ex. 1:1-14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 94:10-17.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Acts 7:17-21; Heb. 11: 23-24.

"Now, there arose a new king over Egypt, who knew not Joseph." This probably means that the new king did not acknowledge or recognize the authority or influence of Joseph, who, of course, was dead, but who was entitled to a place in Egyptian life because of the outstanding service which he had rendered to that empire. Human nature is all too prone to forget its benefactors. Nations often fail to give due recognition to those who have rendered signal service to the nations. More and more, people are demanding that every man be judged on his own merits. The son of a President of the United States should not have any special privileges which are not accorded to any other young man. Favor should not be shown a man simply because his father has been a great man. In a way, the descendants of Joseph did not have any special claim on the Egyptians, for, as a matter of fact, the Egyptians had been their hosts when they came to Egypt.

"And he said unto his people, Behold, the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we; come, let us deal wisely with them, lest they multiply, and it come to pass that when there falleth out any war, they also join themselves unto our enemies, and fight against us, and get them up out of the land." It is an old story, but it is being worked to death right now. As a matter of fact, the children of Israel did not outnumber the Egyptians, nor were they mightier than the Egyptians. Pharaoh was simply developing some powerful propaganda, and he was using one of the surest means of doing it—appealing to prejudices and making a "bogey-man" of war by an enemy country. In that day, as in this, nations were suspicious of each other, and war was very frequent. Then, as now, nations maneuvered for the balance of power. Pharaoh knew his stuff. He could not have selected a better slogan to stir up feeling on the part of the Egyptians and to stimulate oppression and persecution. The writer may be wrong, but he believes that it is this same king of pernicious propaganda that is back of a great deal of the agitation for a greater army and navy. There is always the sinister suggestion that our enemies—imaginary enemies as a matter of fact—might attack us.

The Catholics are not as great a menace to this country and to the world as many seemingly zealous Protestants might be led to believe or might lead others to believe. The same thing is true about the anti-Japanese propaganda. Much of it is wholly unwarranted by the facts in the case.

"Therefore, they did set over them taskmasters to afflict them with their burdens. And they built for Pharaoh store-cities, Pithom and Raamses." The ruling classes always have a difficult time in keeping from the abuse of the power that is committed into their hands or usurped by them. The old idea that might makes right persisted for a long time, and the idea is not safely buried even to this day. Pharaoh was simply doing in a crude and rude way what the ruling classes are doing or trying to do in a more polished, but nonetheless deadly, way.

"But the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and the more they spread abroad." It usually happens this way. People who are called in the providence of God for His purposes seem to thrive on persecution. It is impossible to get them permanently out of the way. In fact, persecution and hardship usually offer the very challenge that brings to fullest development the very qualities that enables God to use such men and races. This experience in Egypt was simply an experience in God's school which was a factor in preparing His chosen people for the mission to which He had called them. Let no man of God fear opposition half so much as patronage.

"And they made their lives bitter with hard service, in mortar and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field, all their service, wherein they made them serve with rigor." Human life was very cheap then. The kind of work the Hebrews were doing and the conditions under which they did it must have exacted a terrible toll, not only in physical suffering, but in life itself. But it made no difference to Pharaoh or the Egyptians, for life had but little value for them so long as it was the life of a Hebrew. We live in an age when human life has taken on a higher value. Twenty centuries of the teaching of Jesus Christ have brought higher values to human life, but we still have a long way to go. It is not being untrue to the facts to say that to a degree surprisingly large, profits still take precedence over human life. Industrial concerns, under the compulsion of law, and under the impulsion of the spirit of Christ working in society, are safeguarding their employees and providing welfare agencies for them, but, after all is said and done, mammon looms higher than man, and fair profits often crowds out fair play. There is perhaps no place where Christianity faces so imperious a challenge as here. The Christianization of wealth and industry, the elimination of exploitation of men, women and children, the application of the Golden Rule to business life are things which call for something more than high-sounding resolutions and pronouncements; they call for an aggressive Christianity that dares to be crucified, if need be, for its convictions.

TOPIC: "My Country: its Past, Present, and Future."—Psa. 33:1-22.

(Consecration Meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

America is not an accident. It is part of a divine plan for the uplift of the world (vs. 9, 10).

America is as much chosen as ever Israel was. And our responsibility is as great as theirs was (v. 12).

The all-seeing eye is upon national as well as individual acts, and nations, like individuals, reap what they sow (v. 15).

America's future and her security are in God. If we reject Him, we shall fail. If we follow righteousness, we cannot fail (v. 22).

Suggestive Thoughts.

For many centuries America was hid from Europe, as if God in His providence intended in the fullness of time to make here His great experiment in democracy.

America had the good fortune to be colonized by men of faith, of deep conviction, men who loved God and liberty. It takes stern men for stern tasks.

Our present is both full of promise and danger. The danger comes from irreligion and lawlessness. No nation can live without religion. The promise lies in natural wealth and ability.

The future will be what we make it. If we wink at lawlessness, it will be black; if respect for law and love of God prevail, the future will shine like the stars.

A Few Illustrations.

Columbus discovered America. This is the one big thing he did. America rose out of a man's faith and courage, and it lives only by faith and courage.

Washington helped to make America free. We see in him the spirit of the past, unflinching courage in the face of difficulties, honesty, faith, perseverance, belief in God. These things have made America

A nation never gets to the place where it has no problems. Today we have law-enforcement, prohibition, habit-forming drugs, dangers of the automobile, child labor, and many others; enough to challenge thought.

We live for the children of the next generation. What we make them now in our homes and schools, they will be for half a century or more. We are building for eternity.

To Think About.

What has America done for us?

What is one of our local problems, and how treat it?

How can we make America's future better?

A Cluster of Quotations.

America's future will be determined by the home and the school. The child becomes largely what it is taught; hence we must watch what we teach it and how we live before it.—James Adams.

Three times this country has staked its life for its faith. Three times it has spoken through a great son—Washington, Lincoln, Wilson.—Angelo Patri.

Our present free-school system is chiefly due to the public spirit of the men and women of a hundred years ago.—Albert Bushnell Hart.

The American people have been changing all the time, and are changing now. They will continue to change, becoming better, let us hope, more humane, kinder, more generous, and more faithful.—M. M. Lord.

THE SECRET.

It isn't in doing your work, my boy;

It isn't in doing the thing you must
That you win the honor and gain the joy,
Or claim the profit or earn the trust;

It isn't in laboring long and late,
And it isn't the hurry and noise that tell—
The smallest thing that you do is great,
If you do it well.

It isn't in getting it done, my boy;

It isn't in getting it out of the way;
It is not in the methods you may employ,
And not in the price that your masters pay;
It isn't in squandering precious time,
And it isn't in rushing ahead pell-mell!

If the thing that you do is to be sublime,
You must do it well.

THE SECRET PRESENCE OF GOD.

"The secret place of the Most High."—Psa. 91:1.

There is not always open and manifest proof of the presence of God in creation about us, nor in the events on personal life, personal experience, nor the destinies of nations. But we are taught to believe that His presence is always with us in light, glory and power ineffable; that there is an inner shrine where we may approach Him at any time. This is what David so often sang about and cried, "My heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God."

The most of us realize His presence in special seasons of uplift, in trials, in spiritual ecstasy, or despair. But what all of us want to learn is that any of us at any and all times may find His living presence in the sacredness of the inner shrine of the heart and in holy prayer, and there "abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

It is only by having supreme aim, by persistent, patient seeking, by saying, like Paul, "this one thing I do," that we can find "the secret place of the Most High."

Prayer.—Our Father, give unto us a persistent yearning for Thy continual presence. Give us visions of Thy blessings, such as cannot be altered. Forbid that we shall cease searching until we find Thee. We will try to make Thee the supreme quest of our lives. Until we shall know the peace that passeth understanding. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE WANDERER'S RETURN.

"His father saw him, and had compassion."—Luke 15:20-22.

Not long ago a man entered a Bowery lodging-house in a spirit of utter desperation. The clerk behind the counter handed him a letter, which he received with shaking hands. The handwriting was that of his father, whom he had not seen for many years; not since the hand that wrote that superscription had driven him from home and closed the door behind him. Across the envelope was written the word "immediate." He opened and read: "My son, come back! Let us bury the past; the door is open for you."

It is such a message as this that comes to every one who has wasted the opportunities of life. A voice from the cross calls, "Come back, and the past shall be buried! As for your sins, I will remember them no more against you." This done, there is hope for betterment. But otherwise, there is no more prospect of building an upright character than there is of an athlete winning an Olympic race with a ball and chain on his foot.

Prayer.—Hear us, O Father of grace and forgiveness, as we meet again around this circle of praise. Shine upon us with Thy mercy, hold out Thy strong hand to keep us from stumbling, and give us wisdom to do the best when we are in doubt. We ask all in the Redeemer's name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE SIN OF NEGLECTED DUTY.

"To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—Jas. 4:17.

"Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness."—Matt. 25:28.

Is this in keeping with the Spirit, gentleness and tenderness of our Lord? They are His words. It is condemnation of a man who knew to do good and didn't do it. And as the parable is one of faithfulness in good works, as we see it, his only guilt was that he had done nothing—just nothing—and because he had not used the power that God gave him—utter darkness was his doom.

How much are we in this danger? What are we doing with our talents that we should escape the same condemnation?"

"By their fruits ye shall know them," said Christ, and we reap what we sow.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we tremble to contemplate the results of doing nothing with our talents. Send Thy Spirit or some heavenly angel to make us up to our talents and usefulness. For the good of man and the glory of God we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

BORN AGAIN—MADE NEW.

"Seeing that ye have put off the old man with his doings, and have put on the new man, which is being renewed unto knowledge after the image of Him that created him."—Col. 3:9-13.

If we haven't changed—put on the "new man," with new deeds—we are still lost and without God. If the Church is not producing in its ranks regenerated men and women, it is doomed to failure in doing what Christ the Head has designed it should do. The only proof of it is changed men and women.

It is not enough to put off the old man, not enough to stop sinning, but we must put on the new—replace the old life with the new. Being new, we cannot accept the standards of the world about us. We can live the new only by putting the measuring rod of Jesus to the ways of the world.

Prayer.—Our Father, may we remember that life in Christ is a continuous process, daily renewed in His grace. In giving our lives to Thee, make us conscious that we start an open life campaign for good, God and glory. Forbid that we shall lay down or stack our arms. To this we dedicate our lives. In Christ's name. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"Ye are the light of the world"—men do not "light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick, and it giveth light unto all that are in the house (others around you)."—Matt. 5:14-15.

The apostles are shining examples of this kind of religion. Each, when called to follow the Lord, went and brought others. Paul loved to tell the story and in telling it he brought it to others.

How often do we find Christ in our conversation? Can He be very real to us when we leave Him out so much? He certainly can't be very real if we leave Him out of our living.

The following is quoted from a pastor:

"We received this letter in our mail one morning: Dear Pastor,—My little daughter is a member of your Sunday School, although I have no religious faith myself. The children of the neighborhood attend. She wanted to go, and I allowed her. She came home with certain verses to memorize, and the promise that she should have a Bible as a prize when she was able to recite them. One Sunday she did not return as soon as usual, and I went for her. I found her reciting her verses, while her loving teacher helped her with her arm about her. Oh, sir, if some one had only done that for me when a child, how different my life would have been! Late as it is, that sight led me to start to be a Christian today."

Prayer.—Our Father, we arise from the night's rest grateful to Thee who never slumbers nor sleeps. Fill our day with Thy presence. We yearn to be living witnesses, known by others as living with Jesus. At the close of the day breathe on us the healing balm of Thy approval and blessings. Amen.

SATURDAY.

LIFE'S INTERRUPTIONS.

"A woman which had an issue of blood . . . touched His garment."—Mark 5:25-34.

We all are interrupted at times. No matter how carefully we lay out our own work, something happens to interrupt us. What attitude shall we take toward these interruptions? Some look on them as the pest of life, a source of irritation, and they fret over them. Some look on them as the zest of life. In the unexpected they develop interest. But, in reality, they form the test of life. The unexpected thing is what shows us for what we really are. It is a test of our self-control. See how the Master stands this test. He shows no haste. He is not flustered. He stops and does the task well. He rises about the interruptions with a peace that passeth understanding.

How easily He might have passed her by! But what an opportunity for real service He would have missed if He had not seen in this interruption a call for service. He did, as a side issue, almost as big a piece of service as He did on the main errand. We cannot avoid interruptions. Our only choice is what attitude we take when they come. Let it be the Master's attitude and let us take them as an opportunity for service.

Prayer.—All-glorious One, who dwelleth in heaven and also walketh beside us along the earthly road, show us the glory of Thy face in the face of Jesus Christ. Accept the praise we bring, O God. Amen.

SUNDAY.

A DAY OF FAITH.

"When Jesus heard it He marveled, and said to them that followed, Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel."—Matt. 8:5-13.

Let the Sabbath day turn our minds and hearts to faith in God wherein we shall strive to strengthen our faith in Him for our daily living.

Jesus marveled at two things: the unbelief of His own people (He came unto His own and His own received Him not), and the belief of some who were not trained in religion and not of the chosen race.

The centurion was an example of kindness, brotherliness and humanity, but he said, "I am not worthy." This makes him worthy. Jesus seized this opportunity of faith and commends it.

Prayer.—Our Father, give us the courage of confession and implicit trust in Thee. Fill the hours this day with Thy praise, sanctify us and Thy Church to deeping of Christian piety and profound trust in Thee. Bring the day to a close with Thy "Well done," and we shall be satisfied. Glory be to Thee. Amen.

HOW EVA HELPED.

It wasn't much to do. Eva didn't think it was anything. Every single morning she went out with her little toy broom and swept all the leaves and sticks off the piazza. It wasn't much, but mother said it helped a lot when she picked up all the windfalls under the apple trees two or three times a day and brought them in to make apple sauce. It wasn't much, but six people in Eva's house say that the errands she runs for them save so many steps in a day that they could not bear to think of trying to live in a house without her. Not any of these things took much away from Eva's play-time, but each one of them helped some one to be happier as the days went by.—Sunshine.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

It has been very dry here through the entire spring. The farmers who took advantage of the early rains and broke their land were in luck from the fact that they were able to work it and plant their crops. But it has been a problem to get a stand of anything in the fields or gardens. The weather has been so dry seed would not germinate and poor stands of corn, beans and peas, have resulted. The situation had become critical and people had become discouraged from the fact that we had such an extremely dry year last season and very little was made.

Our people in many communities were gathering themselves together in union prayer services and praying to God to send us rain. On Saturday, June 19th, rain began to fall in the morning and gently almost through the day it continued, and through Saturday night and Sunday showers continued to drench the earth and we have been most wonderfully blessed with a magnificent season. Our hearts are filled with joy and Thanksgiving knowing we have a God who will hear the prayer of his people and will answer with His abundant blessings. It makes us very happy at the Orphanage from the fact that having more than a hundred children to feed and not being able to raise vegetables made it a serious situation. We truly hope from now on we will have good seasons and that we will have good things to eat from our garden.

POUNDED.

In giving the account a few days ago of the recent revival held at Mt Olivet (R), the writer overlooked the fact that a midweek prayer meeting had been organized at the close of the revival. On Thursday evening, June 10th, the pastor was called to the Church to attend the prayer services that evening. This prayer and praise service, which was conducted by Bro. A. S. Turner, was a live, spiritual service—one of the best of its kind this scribe ever attended.

After the regular prayer services, Bro. Turner publicly informed the pastor that, as a token of their appreciation for his services, the members of the Church and other friends of the community had provided a "pounding" for him and his family. And such a pounding it was. The grateful recipient of this generous donation feels that "loading" would be a better name for it.

After the sixty-five pounds of sugar and the twenty-seven different varieties of other articles for the parsonage pantry had been placed on the parson's ford, the entire back seat and one running-board of this "tin Lizzie" were loaded to their full capacity. This is the second pounding these good people have given their pastor this year. We have been "pounded" a good many times before, but this is the largest one yet. Besides the carload of groceries, a small amount of money was contributed as a free gift. In addition to the generous donations, the pastor was handed thirty-five dollars on his salary. A little more than twenty dollars more was pledged.

For all of these tokens of love and esteem, the pastor and his family are profoundly thankful. These good and sympathetic people have placed us under many lasting obligations to them.

As a further result of the Holy Spirit having so fully awakened this entire community, in addition to the many evidences previously mentioned, these people gave, as free-will offerings during the series of meetings, ten dollars to Bro. C. Tusling, twenty-four dollars to Rev. M. G. Lilly, and one hundred dollars to Rev. J. L. Early. Heretofore, the people of this community had been accustomed to contributing only small amounts for the propagation of the gospel. The writer hopes they will be able to secure an able and consecrated man as pastor for the next Conference year.

TO AID ROAD BUILDING.

The Senate has passed the Federal-aid road bill, which carries $165,000,000 appropriation. It had already been approved by the House.

The bill, slightly amended by the Senate, continues Federal aid to States for road building until July 1, 1929, at the present rate of $75,000,000 annually for the general construction, and $7,500,000 annually for roads in the national forests and parks.

Good roads are the expression of progress. It presages good for our country to see such fine highways creeping out in every direction throughout the land.

OBITUARIES.

FINCH.

On Saturday, June 12, 1926, the death angel claimed the spirit of James Madison Finch. He was born March 12, 1865, having passed the sixty-first mile-post in life. He professed faith in Christ at the age of fifteen and joined Rocky Ford Baptist Church. At the age of twenty-five years he married Miss Willie Horne, and unto them were given eight children. After his marriage he joined Liberty (Vauce) Christian Church.

In his late years he was interested in and loved the Church. He was for more than ten years a loyal member of John H. Mills Lodge, No. 624, A., F. & A. M.; also a devoted member of Wellons' Chapter, No. 167, Order of the Eastern Star. Our brother loved both orders and stood for the virtues and principles set forth by them. He had been under a physician's care for four years and confined to his bed the last two. During this time he proved to be a patient sufferer, and one who had strong faith in Christ Jesus. He talked freely of crossing over the river of death, with joy unspeakable and full of glory. With him the call to go would be welcome, or to stay here if it was to glorify his Lord. Often he would say, "Not my will, but Thine, be done, O Lord."

Being afflicted with internal cancer, his suffering was intense. Five weeks before he died, the suffering became so severe that his brain was affected, causing great mental suffering. His suffering then was a scene of sadness. We believe God, in His infinite wisdom, gives us (the living) the privilege of a foretaste of the sinner's home, that we may be warned and escape that awful punishment. Before the end he was given peace of mind and passed out quietly.

All his children were near, except the youngest daughter, who is a nurse in the Mission Hospital, Asheville, N. C. She spent the last five weeks with him and had returned to her work only the day before the end came. It was a real joy and inspiration to visit and talk with this man of strong faith while he was mentally able to converse with one. Instead of carrying cheer to him, you went away having obtained a blessing.

The funeral was conducted from his Church on Sunday, at 4 P. M., by his former pastor, Rev. J. E. Frauks, assisted by Rev. J. U. Teague, Dr. W. C. Wicker, and Rev. C. D. Malone. The Masons and the Order of the Eastern Star had charge of the burial services, Dr. Wicker having charge of Masonic service and Mrs. P. A. Duke, Eastern Star. The large crowd of people gathered to pay the last tribute of love and respect, with the beautiful floral offering, was an evidence of the high esteem in which he was held.

He leaves to mourn their loss a devoted wife, eight loving children, a number of grandchildren, four brothers, one sister, and a host of friends. In the measureless realm of time, how brief is our earthly stay! May we resolve to place our affections upon heaven and heavenly things, centered around Christ Jesus, the Son of God.

MRS. R. J. NEWTON.
Henderson, N. C.

GUYNN.

Brother and Sister Mart Gynn lost their baby, which was only a few days old, April 3, 1926. The writer conducted the burial service. The large crowd that attended the service was a full expression of the sympathy they had for them in this hour of bereavement.

May God keep their lives so that they will some day go to be with him.

M. T. SORRELL.

We need Thee, O our Heavenly Father, on account of our weakness and fears, our temptations and passions. Come to us with healing, and stay with us in the trying tasks of our life. And we beseech Thee, show us that even as we need Thee, Thou art pleased to accept our love and obedience. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

To save life and limb

Grade crossing accidents can be prevented if you will approach the zone of danger determined to exercise caution For Your Own Protection.

THE peril of the road crossing has become a national problem with the multiplication of automobiles.

The Southern Railway System has eliminated 800 grade crossings, and is eliminating more every year, but over 6,000 remain to be separated on this system alone. The total cost to complete the work is a stupendous sum—probably half as much as the cost to build the railroads.

Even if the money were available, and the public willing to pay the increased freight and passenger rates necessary to provide a fair return on it, many years would be required to do the work.

Protection from the peril for the present generation at least must be found in some other way. Trains cannot stop at every crossing if they are to be run at the sustained speed expected by the public and required to carry the commerce of the country. The train crosses a highway about every mile. The motorist encounters a railroad only occasionally.

It is necessary, therefore, for the automobile driver to stop in order to avoid risk. No one who did this was ever killed.

It is better to save a life than to save a minute.

ELLIOTT.

Alfred Apple Elliott, son of Levi and Betsy Elliott, was born in Halifax County, Va., April 18, 1852, and died May 17, 1926, age 74 years and 29 days. On December 23, 1873, he was married to Miss Nannie G. Tuck, who lived about eight years. To them were born three children—Mrs. Lula Etta Boyd, Mrs. Nannie Adel Tuck and Mrs. Hattie H. Tuck.

On December 19, 1882, his second marriage was to Miss Lucy Pendleton Tuck. This marriage was blessed with five children—Charlie Clarence, Levi Leslie, Karl Wesley, George A. L., and Mrs. Eliza May Bray, of Lambert's Point, Va. All of them are living except Clarence and Levi. There are twenty-five grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Bro. Elliott's occupation has been farming and mining. He was a man who knew people and conditions of his community, and took a keen interest in the same. On the day of his burial, his companion, who had been afflicted for three years, was too ill to understand what was taking place, and survived him only sixteen days.

Lucy Pendleton Tuck Elliott, daughter of John Wesley and Eliza Tuck, was born February 5, 1857, and died June 1, 1926, age 69 years, three months and 26 days. She leaves three children and ten grandchildren. Sister Elliott was always known as a good woman. Both she and her husband, before the call to come up higher, expressed their faith in God and hope of eternal life.

The funeral services of Brother and Sister Elliott were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. E. R. Harris, of the Baptist Church, and each were buried at the old home, near Virgilina, the one on May 18th, the other on June 2nd. A large number of friends were present on each occasion and many were the expressions complimentary to the lives of the deceased.

I have been acquainted with and visited this family with its numerous branches for nearly twenty-two years. Many of the members I have received into the Church and administered the ordinance of baptism. To each my heart goes out in sympathy, and for each my prayer goes up for comfort and blessings till all meet above.

AYERS.

Bro. and Sister J. J. Ayers departed this life March 16, 1926, their departure being two hours apart, Sister Ayers being first. They lived in this section all of their life until about four years ago when they moved to Maxmeadows, Wythe County. Sister Ayers, before her marriage, was Polly Jane Strickland, the sister of Bro. West Strickland.

Brother Ayers served through the Confederate War. While they were not members of our Church, yet they were devout followers of God. Bro. Ayers was about 90 years old, while sister Ayers was about 85. They leave to mourn their loss two sons, J. J. Ayers, Jr., Laurel Fork, Va., and J. D. Ayers, Maxmeadows, Va., and several grandchildren.

They were buried in the Elk Spur Cemetery, the writer conducting the service. The writer had never witnessed just such a service. They were both placed in the same vault.

May God bless those that mourn their loss. M. T. SORRELL.

EDWARDS.

Morgan Edwards was born February 9, 1897, and died June 14, 1926. He was the son of Bro. and Sister Washington Edwards. The death came very unexpectedly to all and was a great shock to the community. On Monday afternoon two men went to his place and shot him nine times. He had served about one year in the navy and about eight years with the detective force and as a Federal officer. He was well thought of by the people and had a large number of friends.

At the time of the tragedy he was getting up a petition to present to the Home Mission Board, asking for a Church in his community. He had secured a large sum in donations towards what he had hoped to see put in a Christian Church in the future. He was indeed a friend to our Church and a special friend to the writer.

He leaves to mourn their loss, a wife in very poor health and four sweet children; three sisters—Mrs. Oscar McMillian, Miss Ellen and Victoria Edwards; five brothers—Walter, Raleigh, Bud, Tom and Oscar Edwards, and a host of friends.

The large crowd that attended the funeral was an expression of sympathy for the bereaved and love for the deceased. The writer was assisted by Judge Bolen, Rev. Morris, and Rev. Pauff. The remains were laid to rest near the old home. May God's richest blessings rest and abide with the bereaved till they meet again. M. T. SORRELL.

Some French Movie Figures.—

Statistics recently made public by the French moving-picture industry reveal the fact that France has but one moving-picture theater to every thirteen thousand population. Paris is, in that respect, worse off than the provinces, having but one movie palace for every sixteen thousand five hundred of its inhabitants. There are 450 cities of two thousand five hundred population and up which have no moving-picture theater. Paris has 176 theaters showing pictures. None of these are in the first ward, while the ninth ward has nineteen. These figures show that the people of France have not yet adopted moving pictures to any great extent. To those who hold that the morals of France are low, and that moving pictures tend to lower morals, these figures may seem to confuse matters.

Having it Returned.—

It is reported that Mr. Charles Edward Russell, the Socialist candidate for Governor of New York in 1910, has been refused admission into England at the port of Plymouth. Mr. Russell sailed for England on the President Roosevelt some time ago. Mr. Russell, on the refusal of permission to land, which purported to be from the home office, proceeded to Cherbourg. The British office has made no comment on the incident. The Civil Liberties Union called the attention of the State Department to the incident and asked that a protest be filed, but this has not been done, since no official information has been received. Senator William E. Borah, in commenting on the refusal of the British to allow Mr. Russell to land because of his Socialist views, declared that we had no right to complain, since the affair was similar to the action of our State Department's refusal to allow Shapurji Saklatvala, the Communist member of Parliament, to land in this country to attend an international parliamentary congress held here last fall. The United States seems to be getting some of her high-handed actions returned, and we may discover that some of our citizens are just as undesirable in Europe as some Europeans are to us.

Great Publisher Dies.—

During the recent British strike, a great benefactor of mankind died in England. J. M. Dent, the creator and publisher of "Every Man's Library," died at the age of seventy-seven. He had never been honored by his country with knighthood nor by any of the great universities of the world with honorary degrees, and yet the poor man who loves the best books in the world has had cause to bless him many times. Mr. Dent never thought of profit. His was a work of love—love for books and for the men and women who loved books. This great benefactor began his career sixty years ago as a printer and book-binder. During his life he issued a number of series of books, but his best-known creation is the "Every Man's Library." When he began, his plan for the library included the publication in a form which was beautiful and of which every man could afford to buy one thousand volumes. Before his recent death, his plan had matured to the extent of 780 volumes, and the sales have numbered more than twenty million volumes. He made possible the owning of the world's best books by thousands who otherwise could never have known the joy of books of their very own. He died not having been honored by university or State, but having bestowed upon thousands of homes one of the richest gifts a home can know.

The Best Selling Preacher.—

Father Sanson, preacher at Notre Dame Cathedral, in Paris, preaches to thousands, and his published sermons sell by the tens of thousands. He is probably the best selling preacher in the world, if we are inclined to think in the terms of publishers. He frequently sits at his desk and reads his sermons, and, according to a Protestant observer, he seems more like a professor lecturing a handful of students than a preacher addressing a throng of six thousand people. Writing about his visit to Notre Dame to hear Father Sanson preach, this Protestant says: "He might have been a professor in his desk lecturing a handful of students, rather than a preacher addressing six thousand people. But it was intensely dramatic preaching. He was discoursing each day upon John the Baptist's message of repentance, and many of his home thrusts were terrific. Once he rose from his seat and cried, 'O Jesus Christ, I implore you, grant my prayer; pierce the consciences of these my brethren. Of what use is all this preaching unless conversions are forthcoming!' Pere Sanson is a phenomenon to be explained. It is true, he has not succeeded Lacordaire, nor Monsabre, nor Janvier; but my Protestant soul divines that he is in the succession of John the Baptist. I heard from him little that was 'Catholic,' and much that was Christian. He loves Christ and he loves men. He is out to recapture unbelievers. To them he addresses his main appeal, and they have responded to him in thousands. Taking it as a whole, I have never heard such preaching in my life."

Our Sesqui-Centennial.—

In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, there is being held in Philadelphia, where the declaration was penned, a great exposition comparable to those of St. Louis in 1904, and Chicago in 1893. Five great exhibit buildings house the major part of the exhibit. The Palace of Liberal Arts and Mrs. N. T. Farmer; the Palace of Agriculture, Food, and Civic and Foreign Exhibits; the Palace of the United States Government, Machinery, Mines, Metallurgy, and Transportation; the Palace of education and Social Economy; and the Fine Arts Building. There is a stadium having a seating capacity of one hundred thousand and standing room for another hundred thousand, and an auditorium with a seating capacity of twenty thousand.

These great structures will be the scene of many pageants and patriotic events, as well as some of the world's greatest sporting events. There is a Gladway, with a Treasure Island imported from Wimberley for the purpose which will have in it all the story-book scenes of childhood from Noah, Robinson Crusoe, up to Long John Silver, Peter Pan and other childhood favorites. There is a real island on which to hunt pirate gold, and a model of William Penn's ship large enough to carry them abroad on the ocean. Foreign villages will be transplanted and will sell there the best viands of the old world. There is to be a whole street of old houses such as Washington lived in and the one in which Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence. Exhibits from every land are there, and the history of the evolution of the race from prehistoric times to the making of all the great inventions of the world is to be traced in exhibit and performance. The Fine Arts exhibit is the best ever collected on this side of the Atlantic, and music will furnish a great amount of entertainment. There are wonderful electric displays visible against the clouds in New York and hundreds of miles out at sea. America is celebrating the sesqui-centennial in a magnificent way. A thousand and ten acres of land is being used for an exhibit ground. This is 132 acres less than at St. Louis, and more than three hundred more than at Chicago in 1893, while only 285 acres were used as an exhibit ground at the centennial in 1876. This exposition will cost $23,320,000, which is about three hundred thousand dollars less than at San Francisco. Thirty-six million people will visit the exposition, it is believed, which will be twice as many as attended the expositions at St. Louis or San Francisco.

On the Gladway will be a watermelon patch, with the color scheme carried out fully as though transplanted from the old South. Polite servitors from the South in the form of darkies clad in spotless white will wait upon those who try this old Southern delicacy. The various States have exhibits, and all the foreign countries. Such expositions do more than merely entertain and celebrate—they act as a great stimulus to trade and promote international harmony and good will by bringing the world closer together and promoting understanding.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, D. D., of Holland, Va., was in Richmond last week and made a brief call at THE SUN office.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Western North Carolina Christian Conference will meet in session at the Ramseur Christian Church, Ramseur, N. C., on July 21st and 22nd.

Rev. C. E. Geringer, pastor, writing under date June 19th, says: "New Center Church has voted to hold a memorial service for Dr. W. P. Lawrence August 22 or 29th, out of a sense of appreciation for him and his services."

Evangelistic services, beginning July 1st, are being held in the Franklinton Christian Church by Evangelist Herman C. Caviness. Mr. J. Charles Yelton conducts the song service. The pastor, Rev. E. Carl Brady, is fortunate in securing these gifted workers.

Miss Ruth Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C., goes as a delegate to the World's Christian Endeavor Convention in London in a few days. THE SUN is happy to report that Miss Ruth will write a description of her trip and of the Convention. We are sure our readers will greatly appreciate and enjoy her papers.

Dr. and Mrs. Roy C. Helfenstein, Dover, Del., are greatly rejoiced and are very happy. Harrison David Helfenstein, so the announcement reads, arrived on June 20th, weighing eight pounds of real health and happiness. Our best wishes are extended to the boy, and heartest congratulations to the happy parents.

A committee from the Suffolk Christian Church last week made an inspection visit to a number of Richmond's most up-to-date Churches. This committee is seeking the best plans for modern Sunday School equipment. We understand the Suffolk Church has sufficient funds already subscribed to build and equip this new plant.

The discovery at the University of Wisconsin of a new local anesthetic whose effects are said to last two and one-half times those of the usual anesthetic, and which has only one-tenth the poisonous quality of cocaine, will create interest in these days when pain is an outlaw. It marks another movement in man's war against suffering. The earliest form of anesthetic was pressure exerted on the carotid arteries of the neck. The ancients used opium—Cannabis indica, our modern hashish—and alcohol to stupefy the patient.

Early in the nineteenth century the discovery of a general anesthetic was made by American physicians, which opened the way for the art of local anesthesia by the use of cocaine and its derivatives. In giving man a blessed oblivion of suffering at supreme physical crises, wider fields have been opened for curative surgery.

Prof. A. R. Flowers makes his first address, on his return from Florida, in Bethel Missionary Baptist Church. Churches of different denominations who know Prof. Flowers give him a cordial welcome in their Churches. He is a man who has never allowed a few denominational differences to destroy his usefulness as a servant of the Lord. His address to the young people of our Church and community on Sunday, June 27th, is certainly one that will be remembered among the best in the minds of our people. Our pastor extended Bro. Flowers a cordial invitation to pay us another visit at his earliest convenience. We understand that Bro. Flowers expects to spend July in North Carolina, August in Virginia, and return to North Carolina in time for the opening of Elon College in September.—D. M. Stancill.

A news item from South Hadley, Mass., says that all students at Mount Holyoke College, with the beginning of the academic year next September, will be considered as having given their word of honor not to smoke while under college jurisdiction, according to a new rule just promulgated and signed by the president and dean. Failure to comply with the regulation will result in the offending student being requested to withdraw from college.

This is good news. Other schools should follow, as no doubt they will. There are few sights in society as disgusting as a woman smoking. There is simply nothing to justify it, and no girl is at her best in such a practice.

Sir William Dawson, president of McGill University and the greatest geologist of his time, stated: "I know nothing in regard to the origin of man apart from what I read in the earlier chapters of Genesis, and, more than that, I do not know of any person who does."

John Burroughs, the naturalist, wrote in the Atlantic Monthly (August, 1920), as follows: "Darwin has already been as completely shorn of his 'selection' doctrines as Samson was shorn of his locks."

Dr. Thomas Hunt Morgan, department of science, Columbia University, wrote: "Today the theory of evolution has few followers among the trained investigators, but it still has a popular vogue that is widespread and viciferous."

"One of the members of the President's Cabinet is very nervous," said a traveler from Washington. "No, I don't mean the Secretary of the Treasury nor the Secretary of State. They call one of them 'Nervous Nellie,' but it is not a well-chosen name. The Cabinet member I know carries a quite different front. You would think he had the hide of a hippopotamus. But he is very thin-skinned as a matter of fact. His nervous and fidgety state is indicated by the number of people he has reporting to him the things they hear—a sort of private espionage system on people's opinions of the particular Cabinet member. He frequently gets reports that this or the other paper is going to attack him, and then through devious channels he finds means to let the paper learn that he is aware of its intentions. The funny thing about it is that, so far, the reports have been wrong. But it has set the papers thinking that perhaps this man who gets wind of so many projected attacks, that are not projected at all, may be in need of some one looking him up and telling a few salutary facts, just for the purpose of keeping public opinion in balance. I have just seen the last flurry this Cabinet member had. He was told very circumstantially what was going to happen. Upon inquiry, I found it was not going to happen at all. No one had even thought of it. Somebody seems to be feeding him fidget flakes."

PROF. W. P. LAWRENCE AS A RELIGIOUS MAN.

RESPONSE BY DR. J. U. NEWMAN.

[Presented to Citizens Bible Class, Elon College, N. C., June 14th. and printed by request of same.]

A man in Israel has fallen, not on the field of mortal glory, in a ripe old age, surrounded by his friends and loved ones, but he went as one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams.

We must, as a class, do honor to the memory of a modest, faithful, cheerful Christian. For thirty and six years he had lived in our midst—a busy, useful life. I attribute this to his faith in God, love for the old Book, diligence in business and a cheerful spirit. To him faith was an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, unmoved by modern doubt. To him God was a Father, loving His children; a Shepherd, herding beside still waters and into green pastures, and if sometimes into the valley and shadow, his rod and staff comfort and His goodness and mercy follow. To him Jesus was a precious Saviour and a loving friend, the Holy Spirit an abiding presence, and the house of many mansions as real as his own happy home. To those who know him intimately, we need not say he loved his Bible. To him it was a living inspiration. Its oracles and voice of God, its promises messages from his Father, its teachings, the chart of his life and the polar star of his hope. This Book kept him off the reefs and shoals and gave him a long and prosperous voyage over the restless sea of life into the haven of eternal calm. This example of child-like faith is his greatest legacy to us. It inspired confidence and hope, sanctified his buoyant spirit, gave him a kindlier consideration for others and ennobled him in his own quiet way to do faithfully the daily tasks of life too often neglected for more daring achievements and showy ambition.

Such a life as his must be judged by its total impression, rather than by a few bold details. It is never fully appreciated and cannot be described. The few bold strokes which some men make on the canvas of life at once arrests our attention, but the man who blends the light and the shade and combines life's many colors into a Christian character does a greater service and evinces a more skillful workmanship. In life we see only the more salient features. Only when the angel of death hangs on the walls of memory the picture of our loved ones do we get the right perspective. During his earthly life, even to his most intimate friends, Jesus was only a teacher from God, the prophet which was to come, the Jewish Messiah. After the resurrection morn and the ascension day they saw in Him the Son of God and the Saviour of the world.

A Motion.

Dr. Lawrence is not dead, but sleepeth.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Memorials have been the custom from time immemorial. This is true in war, in education and in religion. In war, to a Washington and a Lee; in education, to an Aycock and a McIver; in religion to a Latimer and a Luther.

Jesus Christ, in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper, was anointed by a woman who had an alabaster box of very precious ointment which she poured on His head as He sat at meat. Christ declared that this was for His burial, and He said: "Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her."

Having just heard the beautiful eulogy on the character of Dr. Walter Phalti Lawrence by Rev.

J. U. Newman, D. D., and having confidence in the Christian integrity and vital piety of our late teacher, W. P. Lawrence, I, therefore, move:

That we, members of this, the Citizens Sunday School Bible Class of Elon College, N. C., in business session assembled, being desirous of doing honor to his memory and of expressing our appreciation for his noble spirit for his knowledge of the Bible and his inspiration as a teacher—

First, That our class be named the Lawrence Memorial Bible Class.

Second, That a copy of the eulogy by Dr. Newman and one of this act be sent to the family of Dr. W. P. Lawrence, and also to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication.

Third, That the eulogy by Dr. Newman and this motion be recorded in full in the minutes of the class.

J. W. PATTON.

Culture fails in making an all-round manhood. It increases power. It opens the treasures of the arts and sciences. It discovers new worlds of enjoyment and achievement. But the great task before the individual and before society is the making of a man, the development of personality. Keen and accurate thinking does not insure lofty character. One may be accomplished and yet brutal; brilliant and at the same time vicious. More than once has genius led a dissolute life. John Stuart Mill, apostle of modern culture, before the close of his career came to the strong conviction that life needs religion. There are "evils that culture cannot cure; there are blessings it cannot bestow. It cannot give peace to the conscience; it cannot shield life from sorrow; it cannot lessen the anguish of the human heart or dispel the shadow of death."—Pres. Geo. R. Grose, in Adult Bible Class Monthly.

It is part of our duty to give pleasure to those compelled to meet us, and if, unhappily, nature or disease has bestowed upon us features that unpleasantly affect beholders, it is obligatory upon us, so far as may be possible, to spare them such discomfort. Thus when my eyes beheld a lady who has carefully powdered and roughed her face, I feel grateful to her. She would not have done so, I feel sure, unless she was convinced that her natural face was unfit for the gaze of the world; and while I pity her for her disfigurements, I applaud her thought for others.—"Ezra," in the Methodist Recorder.

Cho Cho.

Cho Cho tells us what to do,
And I am trying it, aren't you?
If you will follow Cho Cho's plan,
You'll be a strong and healthy man.
All good citizens follow him,
For Cho Cho knows what's good for them.

Drink a pint of milk each day,
And you'll feel just right for work or play.
Eat some soup and oatmeal too,
For Cho Cho says they're good for you.
Play out of doors part of each day;
Cho Cho says he does that way.
Don't forget that window at night—
If you leave it open, you'll sleep just right.

Brush your teeth three times a day
To sweep the dangerous germs away.
Take a bath at least twice a week
To keep you clean and nice and sweet.
I've given you a part of Cho Cho's plan—
Won't you obey him? I know you can!

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE PRICE OF FRIENDSHIP.

Friendship cannot be bought with money. It comes only at the price of love and loyalty. A certain farmer down in Texas struggled along for years on his small farm to make a living. His plain wife struggled by his side as they worked to pay off the mortgage on the property. She went into the field with him, worked out in the sun, and sacrificed much of the beauty and charm that belonged to her sex. But what was the difference—they were paying for their home. In a few years, oil prospectors came in that vicinity and bargained with him to bore for oil on his land. They struck a rich vein. He was made a millionaire in less than a year. As his wealth increased, he lost interest in his home, and his affection for his humble, plain wife began to wain. He left her and went to New York and married a beautiful actress, or rather a beautiful actress married his money. The plain, humble wife in Texas was given plenty of money to provide for her material wants, but her heart was broken. The decent people of New York would have nothing to do with the man when the truth was learned. And you and I would say that such a man ought to be banished from respectable society. But he gave elaborate banquets, fine balls, and theater parties to members of the so-called "upper crust," and bought his acquaintances with money. But such a man could not buy friendship even if he had all the money in the world, for friendship cannot be bought. It is given only in exchange of love for love, honor for honor, soul for soul, life for life.

But money or wealth need be no barrier to friendship. Queen Victoria numbered among her best friends some of the poor people of London.

In a certain western city I have two friends. One of them is the president of the bank and one of the wealthiest men in the county. The other is a day laborer, and because his father died when he was a lad twelve years old, leaving four younger children and a widowed mother for the young lad to provide for, he has never had a chance in life to make money and is working hard to pay for his little cottage. Both are my friends. I shall never forget the day when, in response to an invitation to men to become friends of Jesus Christ and begin to live the Christian life, the banker, the richest man in town, came forward and took my hand and said, "Yes, sir, I want to be a Christian," and then the laboring man, one of the poorest men in town, came and took my hand and said, "I, too, want to be a Christian." Jesus seeks the friendship of the rich and the poor. All men need His friendship. Those two men are miles apart in their financial standing, but they are together in friendship with God. I enjoy the companionship of the poor man just as much as that of the rich man, for both are my friends. We have a common interest in life, namely: the kingdom of God, the love of truth, justice, right living and manhood.

So in all friendships there must be a common interest. Friends must agree in the deeper things of life. You do not necessarily have to agree with every whim and fancy your friends may have. For instance, you may like sugar in your coffee, but you don't care whether your friend does or not. You may like the winter better than summer, your friend may like summer better than winter. You may be a Republican; your friend may be a Democrat. You may be a Methodist; your friend may be a Baptist. But friendship strikes deeper into life than these surface interests.

For instance, if you have high ideals of honesty, you will refuse to have a dishonest man for your friend. If you have high ideals of purity and morality, you will refuse to have an impure or immoral man as your friend. You may be friendly to such, but to be your friends you insist that they accept the same standards of manhood or womanhood that you possess. If you place a premium upon truthfulness, and pride yourself that no man ever caught you in a lie, or ever will, because of your hatred for a liar, you will refuse to have a liar for a friend. You know that if a man lies about others, your own name would suffer sooner or later. If you despise the practice of getting money under false pretense or of stealing, whether under the cover of darkness by a thief who enters his victim's home or whether it is done under the cover of so-called shrewd business, if you despise thieving you will refuse to have such a man as your friend. There is a difference in your interests of life. Honest men want honest men for their friends. In fact, only an honest man can be a real friend. Others may be associates, but not friends. The hobo wants a hobo for an associate. The thief wants a thief. The man who has no regard for the virtue of womanhood, no reverence for the sanctity of the home, no regard for the principles of manhood wants just such a person as himself for his associate. "Birds of a feather flock together." So the man who is determined to be every inch a man seeks men who believe in the glory of manhood to be his friends. The cautious man wants men who are cautious as his friends. The man who is brave finds it impossible to enter into the friendship of a coward. Those who walk the pleasant paths of friendship have in common the deeper, nobler interests of life.

So for friendship with God—it is not a mysterious thing that drops down out of heaven and breaks in upon a man's life, but rather it is a relation that goes out from a man's own life toward God. The man who is interested in the things in which God is interested is a friend of God. The man who believes he should live such a life as will be a good example for every boy in town to follow is a friend of God. The man who is determined to stand for what is right in his business, in his lodge in his community is a friend of God. The man who really wishes that justice may be done in all social relations, and who not only would rejoice to see every place of sin destroyed, every bootlegging joint, every gambling den, every place of vice closed, but would rejoice more to see all men and women living on such a high moral plain as to make such institutions impossible—such a man is a friend of God. He has something in common with God, for that is what God wants too. Sin is man's worst enemy, and every man who fights against sin in his own life and in the life about him is a friend of God. Such friendship makes him strong in his fight.

Acquaintances spring up like a mushroom, but friendship is like the sturdy oak on the hill. It takes time to grow. But when it is grown it stands foursquare to every wind of criticism and trial. An acquaintance, like the mushroom, will wither and waste away beneath the hot sun of adversity. But a friendship, like the sturdy oak, simply sends its roots deeper to draw from the hidden springs of life.

"The friend in need is the friend indeed." No other is a friend. The time to prove whether a man is your friend or not is the time when you need him most. One true friend in fact is worth more than a thousand in name only.

There is no joy greater than the joy of friendship. Such friendship is often of slow growth, but the leaves of the tree of friendship are for the healing of human hearts. So friendship with God takes time. Too many people are mere acquaintances with God—scarcely acquainted with Him at all. They met Him face to face in the experience of conversion. But it takes more than the introduction of conversion to know the joys of friendship with God. One must live with Him month after month, year after year, and then friendship with the loving Heavenly Father will ripen more and more even unto the perfect day. Friendship with God makes every earthly friendship more worth while. The only truly happy person is the one who knows the blessings of true friendship with God and with one's fellow-men. It is into such a friendship that Christ calls the men and women of today. And after such a friendship in this life, when the time comes that one has to say good-bye to all earthly friends, he feels the friendly hand of his loving Heavenly Father taking his hand and saying, "Well done; come up higher and enter into the eternal friendship of those redeemed through the friendship of Christ." The word that most nearly defines heaven is the word friendship. For the joy of the one is the joy of the other. Let's be friends!

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION AND DEMOCRACY.

BY PROF. J. W. BARNEY.

We say that our government is a democracy—a government of the people, for the people, and by the people. Each recognizes and respects the rights of others, or is supposed to do so. We profess to believe in the principle of each for all and all for each.

To paraphrase the words of a great leader of the past, we are in the midst of a great struggle to determine whether this democracy shall perish from the earth. The centuries past are strewn with the wreckage of nations that have come into existence, waxed great, exercised power, have fallen, and passed into oblivion. Shall this be the fate of our own America? There are many students of history who think they see at the present time the signs of decay and disintegration of our national life. There are others, just as sincere and patriotic, who speak more hopefully of our future. Regardless of which we agree with, we must acknowledge the existence of two evils which seriously threaten the life of our democracy—neglect of the franchise on the part of the citizen and the selfish use of power and privilege on the part of the office-holder; and one is the co-efficient of the other.

If these and other evils and dangers of today are to be eliminated, it must be through the awakening, the enlightenment of our citizenry—through education. As a people, we believe in education. We gladly accept, or impose upon ourselves, taxes for the purpose of improving our educational systems. We pride ourselves upon the costly and magnificent buildings dedicated to the cause of public education.

In our high schools we offer to our boys and girls equipment, courses, and faculties superior to those of the average college of a quarter of a century ago. We invite them to enter the fields of science, of art, of literature, of history. We attempt to encompass the world of time and space with our offerings in education. We deny to our students nothing except the knowledge which is of greatest worth, that which has most value here and the only value hereafter—the knowledge of the Book of books and of its author, the King of kings.

In considering the end of education, one of our educators says: "What is the true end of American education? Is it life or a living? . . . Neither life nor the getting of a living, but 'living together'—this must be the single 'public' end of a common public education hereafter." Another writer has said, "If everybody should live in accordance with the Golden Rule, there would be no need for government as a means of repression, but only as a means of performing service."

If these sayings be correct, the greatest need of our educational system is the provision for definite religious instruction. Only through such instruction will the Golden Rule ever become our guiding principle in conduct and we learn the secret of living together happily and successfully. If ours is to be a democracy in deed as well as in name, we must recognize our common brotherhood; and to recognize that we must first recognize our common Fatherhood. The ideal in earthly government, both ecclesiastical and civil, has been stated by the Master in the words "That ye might be one, even as I and the Father are one." Toward this ideal, Church and State have been groping blindly, haltingly, painfully; but the ideal still persists, and the method of attainment grows clearer.

Educate in philosophy alone, and we obtain the thinker, the critic, the recluse. Educate in science alone, and we obtain the cold, exact statistician or scientist who is willing to apply his knowledge to the discovery of more deadly methods of destroying his fellow-man. Educate in art or literature alone, and we obtain the dreamer, the iconoclast, the sensualist. Educate in any or all fields of knowledge, apart from the Word, and the product is an incomplete, selfish, harmful being. Truly educate in the Word, and we obtain the servant, the friend, the comforter, the guide, the help of all mankind.

In youth lies the promise of tomorrow. If youth be properly educated, tomorrow promises to be fair. If youth be partly educated, if self be developed and soul disregarded, tomorrow looks dark and stormy. In religious education lies the hope of youth, of tomorrow, of democracy. "The nation that forgets God it shall die" is divine prophecy; and divine prophecy is certain of fulfillment.

JAMES O'KELLY MEMORIAL.

We are pleased to present herewith a cut showing something of the design of the proposed James O'Kelly Memorial, to be erected on the campus at Elon College. The Southern Convention, in session at Durham in April, adopted this memorial and directed that same be erected as soon as the money shall have been contributed.

The cut itself gives but little idea of the beauty and size of the memorial. It is of Egyptian type, and all engraving and ornamentation is Egyptian. It is to be built of the best Winnisboro granite, by the Palmer Marble Works of Albemarle, N. C., one of the most successful and noted marble workers of the South. The cap of the memorial is to be four inches wide, fifteen inches thick, one foot six inches high. There are two pilasters one foot and one inch wide, one foot and three inches thick, five feet and six inches high. A large vase of the same material, one foot thick, one foot wide, two feet four inches high is placed between the pilasters. The base is five feet five inches long, two feet three inches thick, two feet high. The total height from top of cement foundation is eleven feet, the weight of the memorial is sixteen thousand pounds. The cost of erecting same is $1,275.

The committee to raise the money and have the same erected is composed of Judge J. F. West, Waverly, Va., chairman; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C. Any one desiring to make a contribution will send same to the treasurer. Any amount will be appreciated and acknowledged. The work should have been completed long ago, and our people should not wait in contributing funds for this worthy memorial.

COMMITTEE.

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES.

While thinking, as I returned home this evening, I gleaned over THE CHRISTIAN SUN of June 10th. What a wonderful change now has been brought about since I first came to the South in 1876 and now. How the brethren took me in, a humble servant of the Lord, and stayed by me, notwithstanding the efforts of Satan, who most likely stirred up many to give me the cold shoulder, taking advantage of my having only letters from individuals, and no preacher's license. The Lord knew it all. Our far-seeing brother, Rev. D. A. Long, the then pastor of Auburn Christian Church, threshed it out, even sending to England, and his opinion was thoroughly satisfying, assuring the brethren this servant of the Lord was no fake, but had been with Needham, Moody and Sankey, and already had some experience in the work of the Lord. And they also had themselves seen proof that the Lord still was using him, etc. The brethren with Bro. Long took it up, quietly getting a little fund for him to get to Graham High School and believing the Lord would be no man's debtor. Just here Davy Jones was wandering whether he was doing the right thing to stop the work to have a year or two to enable him to be better equipped for the future. However, I ventured, and Dr. D. A. Long was correct when he said, "We need you, and you need us." Above all, God used their united love and discernment, coupled with their money and faith; so God, who is no man's debtor, paid us all back, endorsing Bro. Long's faith, gave your humble servant plenty of work in the gospel, and the two years more or less work among the happiest of our life.

Just think today, in reading your paper as I returned home, how the faithfulness of God has been and is being brought out before those who really know what wonderful changes have come about; look, in spite of the foreign mission work you are doing (though you ought not to stop, at that); seeing what you have been and are now being used of God in doing. Among other things, think of our dear old friend and brother Wellons, near his 101st birthday—he is a living fact that God has not forgotten your work of faith and labor of love. It seems he is used to sympathize with those bereaved of their near loved ones; that you find this about him: "He came to Elon to attend and take part in the funeral of his dear departed friend, Dr. W. P. Lawrence." Not only have you a treasure, a living proof in him of God's blessing, but in the many ways that dear brother has shown his love to the brethren. I will never forget (I think even though I am now 77 years old) what real, not talk, but fact, how our hearts cheered and wondered at the welcome. We (that is, my real sister in the Lord of years in the past and myself), when we arrived after marriage in England. In the goodness of God she was worth it to you, and Him, and me, especially when she, true to God, this Church, the world, to the heathen, etc., like a true soldier, no flinching. (Just here, let me tell you the woman.) My boy Alex had passed through an operation, the doctor said a trip with me on a journey would do him good. Also the indications were the boy's trouble was near be watchful. I told my wife, saying what I learned, and told her I could not attend to my work and him too. Then she said what about her going too. Here she straightened up and said and did what before and since never. Saying as she looked me right in the eye, "Can you go?" I answered, "Yes." She answered, "So can I." A true soldier! Be cheered and encouraged, my dear brethren, the Lord is at hand, still many unsaved, and pray for us.

Your old friend,

DAVY JONES.

Did you ever notice that some men's thermometers always register lowest in cold weather and highest in hot weather? They have a chronic disposition to make the weather worse than it really is. Floods and storms, according to their stories, invariably beat heaviest upon their houses. But you never hear of the sun's shining brighter upon the lawns and flower gardens than upon those of their neighbors. In fact, such people do not, as a rule, have lawns and flower gardens. They are kept busy with their grouches. Why be a prophet of gloom or a nesting place for imaginary troubles?—Christian Advocate.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"There are two sides to every question," is a common saying among men; and one might say, "There are two sides to every counter." This is not only true of the counter between the merchant or clerk and the buyer, but here is a counter, though it may be unseen, between the merchant and the wholesaler from whom goods are purchased to fill the store. And this is true, in a sense, of every kind of business and every human relation and intercourse. So far as this universal relationship exists in all spheres of life, the counter divides men, and both sides are equal. The man behind the counter is no more important and deserves no more consideration than the man before the counter. The counter divides equals. One cannot exist without the other. They are essential to each other. Their rights, when understood, are equal and the counter is the pivot on which both interests hang.

In business, petty trade should be done on a cash basis. Credit in small matters is dangerous. "Little drops of water, little grains of sand" put in the form of small purchases makes the debt so large that it is often unpaid. This works on both sides of the counter. It robs the buyer of the confidence others had in him, and it robs the seller of what is his due. The basis of credit, confidence, is the biggest asset in business. When the storekeeper loses confidence in his customer he loses his money and his friend. The question arises, which side of the counter is to blame? Sometimes it is one side, and sometimes it is the other. The merchant is anxious to sell and he persuades his customer to buy beyond his means, and then blames the customer for not paying his bills. In that case the merchant is to blame. Sometimes the customer buys upon the strength of what he believes will come to pass in his future receipts. In that case the buyer is to blame. It is better to give offense before the transaction than after it is done. It is too often the case that when a customer gets behind with his bill that he will go to another store to spend his cash. Nothing but a square deal can make the counter a friendly line between two men in any relation of life. All small business should be done on a cash basis. Great business cannot be done on a cash basis. A railroad must be built on borrowed money. In fact, all great things must be done on credit. Great credit builds up; small credit tears down.

This is true not only in business, but it is true in religion. When members who pay small dues to the Church get behind, they get slack in Church attendance. It is a rare case for those who pay their Church dues promptly not to be regular in attendance. Finance enters into religious life and worship as well as in trade. The customer who pays cash does not shun the merchant nor stay away from the store. There is a good feeling between them. Church members who keep their dues paid up feel better, look better, and enjoy themselves more in the house of God. What the world needs today is more religion in business, and more business in religion.

ELON LETTER.

THE 1926 REYNOLDA CONFERENCE.

Report of Findings Committee.

[This report was presented following a three-day session and unanimously adopted. This Conference numbered some of the greatest workers in religious education in America.]

On behalf of the Conference, we would first of all express hearty and approving appreciation of the idea underlying the Reynolda Conference. It is our firm conviction that the open and frank presentation of the various views and attitudes respecting any problem in our modern world is a promising method not only of mutual understanding, but of ultimate solution. The Reynolda Conference idea we regard as a major achievement in religious educational statesmanship.

The 1926 Reynolda Conference, the third in succession, is agreed that no more compelling problem challenges the Christian statesmen of the world today than religious education. While our general theme has been "Religious Education in America," and has been treated by churchmen, we have had the world-view ever before us and at the same time have recognized the inseparable relationship that Christian character building through the Churches must sustain toward the political state. Adhering strictly to the principle of the separation of Church and State as organizations, we nevertheless cannot interpret this to mean that the State, in its educational functions, can only present a godless view of men and of the social order. Christian public school teachers are positive character builders in our national life.

We hail with deep heart-satisfaction the rapid growth of the week-day religious school idea and the equally gratifying spread of the daily vacation Bible school. These extensions in the field of religious instruction, we are agreed however, should be integrated with the regular teaching programs of the Sunday School. We congratulate the subcommittee on international curriculum of the international lesson committee of the International Council of Religious Education on its decision to produce such an integrated curriculum. The local Church should institute a complete program of religious education, and not be content with the Sunday School alone.

The curriculum is, we rejoice to note, undergoing serious examination and appraisal at this time, both as to content and as to method of approach. The Conference has conceived the curriculum as including all the agencies, methods, and materials by which changes in the direction of the fruition of Christian character are achieved in the lives of pupils. We cannot conceive of Christian character other than as a growing process of spiritual becoming, and so the religious education program must cover the entire life from birth to the translation experience of death. We affirm our conviction, too, that the process will continue in the ampler life of the spirit that awaits the redeemed of the Lord in the world to come.

Every influence that bears upon the life, psychology affirms, leaves its precipitate in character, and so a complete program of religious education must aspire to Christianize every realm of life and experience, particularly the home, the Church, the school, industry, government, and leisure. The preaching of the Christian gospel constitutes a great part of this effort at Christianizing the social order, but there must likewise be definitely conceived programs of agenda as practical methods of applying the gospel principles to these six great institutions of our modern world and its life.

We appreciate the inestimable value of the Bible as supplying the chief source material for religious education, culminating in the life, character, and teachings of Jesus Christ, but the fountain source for fruitful living must be the experience of the learner himself. Knowledge arises out of experience as meaning and, through the teaching process, should return with enrichment to experience as purposive control for conduct. We cannot agree with the idea that only actual personal experience or situations are capable of yielding purposive control for conduct. Experiences typical of the age group through the employment of the constructive imagination are equally valuable and, skillfully handled, oftentimes more valuable for character motivation than the barren desert of limited personal experience. Travel stories, for example, are always gripping to people even who have never ventured further than their own country, not to say township. We have not availed ourselves properly in religious education of the marvelous possibilities of the constructive imagination, through which we may profitably use in teaching the tested bodies of character-building truth.

We appreciate the desire to serve and uplift the life of man which has brought us the almost bewildering wealth of agencies, denominational, inter-denominational, and non-denominational, now engaged in the field of religious education. Every one of them arose out of a felt need, and likewise out of a sincere desire to supply that need. But with this multiplication of agencies have come certain major problems to whose solution we must adjust ourselves. We find that our present situation is complicated and handicapped by over-organization, duplication of effort, heavy and needless overhead expense, and inefficiency. We have begun active measures of co-operation and correlation of these agencies. The ultimate step is their integration, so that a unitary impact may be made on the life and character of those who are the subjects of our religious education programs.

Integration is the final goal. It is to be approached by gradual processes and not in revolutionary manner, but eventually it must come. It must apply to denominational, interdenomination, and nondenominational agencies alike. It should and will conserve every good we now possess, eliminate duplication of effort, consolidate every interest and so integrate our homes, our Sunday Schools, our Christian Endeavor and other young people's work, our week-day religious schools, our colleges and other institutions of higher learning, our public school system from the lowest to the highest grade, our recreational, social, and benevolent organizations and institutions that a unified impact may be made on the religious problems of our times and a coherent view of the religious life presented our children, our youth, and our adult population. In this work of integration our concern is to be primarily for the unfolding of life. The human factor must be determining. We do not feel called upon to save organizations or methods, but to adapt them and administer them on behalf of the persons involved. We must never forget that the indivisible unity of each person points to the wisdom of an educational process that shall include the physical, mental, social, and spiritual phases of the unitary life. The very constitution of our life, therefore, in the judgment of the Conference, necessitates the integration of the forces, agencies, and programs of religious education.

Firmly convinced as we are of the absolute necessity of integration, we recognize that the fate of such a procedure rests with local Churches. They must be left free to adapt the integration idea to their immediate situations, our general agencies rendering any assistance desired or feasible in the way of suggestion. We would also caution them to go gradually about this most delicate undertaking, involving as it does the spiritual interests of their constituents.

We respectfully suggest that Dr. D. Clay Lilly take up with the Institute of Social and Religious Research or some similar research agency the propriety of an inquiry into the whole field of the integration of religious education agencies, and at least of an exhaustive study of the overhead expense of the duplicating agencies now engaged in religious education in America with definite recommendations for their integration. We would also express our sincere appreciation of the splendid research work now being done in our field by the various research organizations and hope the practice will become more general and the methods more effective. Research is a primary need in religious education at this time.

Finally, the Conference maintained in all its discussions the concept of religious education as the process by which we learn to live with and for each other and unto God as revealed in Jesus Christ and interpreted by the Holy Spirit. In this view of religious education, the Conference is convinced, place is found both for evangelism and for Christian nurture and training.

PROF. DARWIN'S LAST DAYS.

We wonder how many of the disciples of Darwinism know anything about Prof. Charles Darwin's last days? The story of the visit of Lady Hope to Mr. Darwin, written by herself, is not only interesting but enlightening. In Mr. Darwin's younger days he was a materialistic investigator of science; in his latter years he went back to the "Old Book." Here is the remarkable story of that remarkable Lady Hope, of Northfield, England:

It was on one of those glorious autumn afternoons that we sometimes enjoy in England when I was asked to go in and sit with the well-known professor, Charles Darwin. He was almost bed-ridden for some months before he died. I used to feel when I saw him that his fine presence would make a grand picture for our Royal Academy; but never did I think so more strongly than on this particular occasion.

He was sitting up in bed, wearing a soft, embroidered dressing gown of rather a rich purple shade.

Propped up by pillows, he was gazing out on a far-stretching scene of woods and cornfields, which glowed in the light of one of those marvelous sunsets which are the beauty of Kent and Surrey. His noble forehead and fine features seemed to be lit up with pleasure as I entered the room.

He waved his hand towards the window as he pointed out the scene beyond, while in the other hand he held an open Bible, which he was always studying.

"What are you reading now?" I asked as I seated myself by his bedside.

"Hebrews!" he answered—"still Hebrews. 'The Royal Book,' I call it. Isn't it grand?"

Then, placing his finger on certain passages, he commented on them.

I made some allusion to the strong opinions expressed by many persons on the history of the creation, its grandeur, and then their treatment of the earlier chapters of the Book of Genesis.

He seemed greatly distressed, his fingers twitched nervously, and a look of agony came over his face as he said:

"I was a young man with unformed ideas. I threw out queries, suggestions, wondering all the time over everything; and to my astonishment the ideas took like wildfire. People made a religion of them."

Then he paused, and after a few more sentences on "the holiness of God" and "the grandeur of this Book," looking at the Bible which he was holding tenderly all the time, he suddenly said:

"I have a summer house in the garden, which holds about thirty people. It is over there," pointing through the open window. "I want you very much to speak there. I know you read the Bible in the villages. Tomorrow afternoon I should like the servants on the place, some tenants, and a few of the neighbors to gather there. Will you speak to them?"

"What shall I speak about?" I asked.

"Christ Jesus!" he replied in a clear, emphatic voice, adding in a lower tone, "and his salvation. Is not that the best theme? And then I want you to sing some hymns with them. You lead on your small instrument, do you not?"

The wonderful look of brightness and animation on his face as he said this I shall never forget, for he added:

"If you take the meeting at 3 o'clock, this window will be open, and you will know that I am joining in with the singing."

How I wished that I could have made a picture of the fine old man and his beautiful surroundings on that memorable day!—Selected.

If I am at hand when the new day of a united Church comes, I hope that Church will be of such a nature that I can be a Quaker in some moods, sitting silent to await the stirrings of the Spirit, and a ritualist in other moods, entering into a subtle communion with the souls of the past through the use of words dear to the past, and a crusader rejoicing in Christian conquest in other moods still, listening to stories of gains in great cities or in far-away missions fields.—Bishop McConnell.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

CAN YOU ANSWER THIS QUESTION?

Is the effect likely to be wholesome or otherwise on our work in Greater New York if the Vanderveer Park Christian Church is compelled to stop its building operations at the street floor?

Our local people have given heroically. The people of the community have responded generously. About fifteen hundred people outside of our own denomination have given something. Their gifts have ranged from 10 cents to a thousand dollars. Subscriptions to the amount of $33,015 have been secured to date from all sources.

Building for the Future.

A Lutheran Church has just been located in a wonderfully promising field. But the general criticism is, they have blundered in the plans adopted. They have built as we may be compelled to build, only providing a basement floor. But this is not the point of the criticism. Great enterprises have started this way. Their mistake has been in laying an inadequate foundation to provide for future growth. Their ground area is insufficient to allow for later expansion to any advantage. Our dimensions are 48x86. We shall have more than two and two-thirds their floor space.

To carry out the architects' plans later, when we come to rear our superstructure, requires that we spend over $50,000 before we can make full use of even our basement. That is to say, to build and furnish just the basement will cost us more than $50,000. The cost for this entire first permanent unit, including furnishings, will be about $85,000. But the completed structure will give us nearly forty rooms.

Why We Need Such a Large Plant.

More than four thousand people have moved within ten minutes' walk of our Church within three and a half years. Nearly fifteen hundred of these people have shown their interest in our work by contributing to our building. Eleven of our own people outside of Brooklyn have given something.

Inspiration.

Will these people be likely to receive great inspiration from the "glorious principles of the Christian Church" if I should take them into my confidence and tell them how our people have responded to the appeal to establish here in this great metropolis a Church whose platform is broad enough to permit any lover of Jesus Christ to stand upon it?

Our Progress.

Others must tell of the progress in this particular parish if it is told. I want to speak of the progress of the work—our work—in the greater city. From April 1, 1925, to March 31, 1926: growth in Church membership, 136 per cent; in Sunday School enrollment, 74 per cent; in finance, 119 per cent.

Assurances.

Assurances have come to me from scores of people that, with better facilities for working and the spirit of progress manifested thereby, our work is destined to grow by leaps and bounds in the next year or two. These assurances have come however on the assumption that we would go ahead with the architects' plans for the completion of our first unit.

Without being authorized to do so, the secretary of the Brooklyn Federation of Churches, who is a Disciple minister, assured the people in our campaign for funds that our denomination would stand back of the enterprise. Being a Disciple, and accustomed to that sort of support from his brethren in that communion, he took it for granted that our people would do it too. Questions are being asked about how far our people are going to help us. I am embarrassed. What would you tell them? What do you want me to tell them? Do you want me to say to the people of this community that the appeal has been made to our people, but only eleven out of 116,000 have responded? Well, I wonder!

CHAUTAUQUA AS A TRAINING SCHOOL.

The Chautauqua and School of Methods, which meets at Elon College, July 26th to August 4th, is designed as a leadership training school for the Church. The courses are selected, the faculty and speakers secured, and the program arranged with that end in view.

This year there will be classes for Sunday School teachers, for officers, for mission workers and for young people. There will be courses in the Bible, a course in stewardship, a class in the mission study books which the women's societies will use the coming year, a group study of the Church program, a daily group study with young people, and a period given each day to a study of the Church, led by prominent ministers and laymen in our Church.

The evening programs will be varied and interesting. One feature of this will be a forty-five-minute song service. The athletics and recreation will be under the direction of a competent committee. The half-hour devotional service each morning will be a fitting start for the day's work.

We shall also have the daily vacation Bible school, or junior Chautauqua. We have tried to make this the strongest and most practical program we have yet presented. We want to help the leaders in all lines of Church work to get a larger vision and be able to render a greater service.

Your Church and Sunday School officers, your teachers, and bright young people will be benefited by attending. Your pastor will find these courses and these days of fellowship helpful to him in his work. We want him with us. The cost is $1.00 for registration and $10.00 for board. Enroll now by sending your name to Miss Pattie Coghill, secretary, Henderson, N. C.

THE SPIRITUAL LIFE IN OUR SOCIETIES.

[The following resolution was presented to the Woman's Missionary Convention which met in Durham, N. C., April 28, 1926. It was "voted that we add a new department to be known as the Department of Spiritual Life to our Woman's Mission Boards, with Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C., superintendent for the Convention Woman's Mission Board."]

The two most important factors in the spiritual life are prayer and Bible study.

"Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee."

"And this is the confidence that we have of Him, that if we ask anything according to His will, he heareth us."

Thus far in the work of our Woman's Mission Boards, two things have been particularly emphasized—membership and funds. Both absolutely necessary for the life of our missionary organizations. Let us broaden our work through the cultivation and development of the spiritual life of the women of our Churches by adding a new department of work to our Woman's Board, and call it the Department of Spiritual Life. This department should have a superintendent, whose duty it shall be to see that every local society has a superintendent of spiritual life. Write the president, asking her to appoint this officer until next election, when the superintendent should be regularly appointed. Show her the importance of the office and the loss to her society in neglecting to appoint her. Get a superintendent of spiritual life in every society.

Local Superintendent.

It is in the local society that this work will function and to the local superintendent of spiritual life is given under God's guidance and wisdom, the wonderful opportunity of leading the entire membership to higher spiritual living. "Of ourselves, we can do nothing, with God all things are possible."

The superintendent's work may be outlined under certain general heads:

1. Prayer Life of the Society.

(1) The officers of the society should always covenant together for a daily prayer for each other for God's blessing on the society, the local Church, the pastor and the Church at large.

(2) Every missionary circle should be a prayer band, praying daily for each other and for the advancement of God's kingdom.

(3) The regular circle meeting should open with a circle of prayer, every member taking part.

(4) Prayer meetings for special calls and special days should be arranged, remembering the promise to those "gathered together in my name."

(5) Strive to make prayer a vital living factor in the life of the society. "Lord, teach us to pray."

2. Bible Study.

(1) In every way possible, enlist the women in studying God's word.

Urge the society to open the meeting with a studied devotional. The Christian Missionary and THE CHRISTIAN SUN both give good suggestions for Bible study.

If possible, have Society members take a regular course in Bible study at the Chautauqua, which is held annually at Elon College, or Blue Ridge, N. C.

"Search the Scriptures."

(2) Personal evangelism.

Several weeks before your yearly evangelistic services, organize a class in methods of personal work, with your pastor as leader and teacher. Personal soul-winning is the Christian's greatest privilege.

3. The Family Altar.

Let every woman resolve: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

If we are to bring higher levels of spirituality into the lives of our women, we must begin in the home by gathering the family daily around the throne of grace. Through the printed page and spoken word, the responsibility for family religion should be driven home to the hearts of the women of the Church.

4. Tithing.

The superintendent of spiritual life will confer and co-operate with the treasurer in promoting tithing. She will also bring the important subject of the life enlistment before the society.

It is our firm conviction that a department, such as we have endeavored to outline, will fill a much-felt want in the lives of our women and in our woman's mission work.

Our members will be developed spiritually, membership increased and our treasuries filled.

OUR ROCKY FORD WORK.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

Miss Morey and I had an agreeable and pleasant school term at Rocky Ford, which closed the last of April. We had such school problems and hindrances as are common to all schools; but fewer at this place than other schools I have taught. Our attendance was good, considering the distance and other hindrances. The children are as good and appreciative as can be found; the parents are co-operative and pleased with the work of the school.

Our Sunday School and Church services are well attended. Our revival was much enjoyed; Rev. A. W. Andes did splendid preaching, and our people were well pleased with him.

Some of the pupils and their parents united with the Church, we are very happy to report.

Miss Morey left for her home in Pennsylvania the 10th of June, and she will be greatly missed by all of us. Her place cannot be filled. All who knew and loved her will ever remember her and the good work she did here for them and the Master's cause. I feel that I miss her more than any one else, because we talked over and planned

THREE WISE MEN FROM THE EAST.

While Joseph and Mary, with the Child Jesus, were still staying in Bethlehem, the city of Jerusalem was stirred by the coming of some men from a land far away, with a strange question. These men were not Jews, but were Gentiles, which was the name that the Jews gave to all people except themselves. These Gentile strangers who came to Jerusalem were asking of everybody whom they met this question:

"Can you tell us where is to be found the little Child who is born to be the King of the Jews? We have seen His star in the East, and we have come to do Him honor?"

We are not certain as to their land, but it is generally thought to have been the country now called Persia—then known as Parthia—a land about a thousand miles to the east of Judea. Although not of the Jewish race, these people, the Gentiles, were like the Jews in one respect—they never bowed down to worship images which men had made. They worshiped the one God of all the earth, and they prayed with their faces toward the sun. They said that they did not worship the sun, but the one God who was like the sun, the Light of the world.

Among these Parthian people were men who studied the stars in the sky. They did not have telescopes, as we have, to look at the stars, to bring the heavenly bodies nearer. They could only use their eyes, but by long study they had learned much about the stars, tell of their movements and where in the sky to find each of them. The men who gave their lives to this study of the stars were called magi, a word meaning "wise men"; and these strangers who were seeking the Child-King in Jerusalem are sometimes spoken of as "the wise men."

The people of that time believed that when great kings were born, or before they died, strange stars suddenly appeared in the heavens. A year or perhaps two years before Jesus was born in Bethlehem, such a star, very bright, that had never before been seen, appeared then. It came to the minds of these men that this star pointed out the coming of a great King, who was to rule over all the lands and to be found in the land of Judea.

These wise men at once made up their minds to go to the land of Judea and see this Child-King. It was a long and hard journey of more than a thousand miles. They would go through high plains and then down into the lowlands. Their journey was long and trying, lasting a year, traveling most of the way on camels.

From the story as told in the gospel by St. Matthew, it appears, as these men came into Jerusalem, the star was no longer shining. The loss of the star did not matter much, for they supposed every one knew of their Prince that was born. To their surprise, nobody seemed to have heard about the newly born King.

They thought that at one place they could surely learn where to look for this young Prince. That was the king's palace in Jerusalem. Herod was still living; although old and very feeble, yet as fierce and cruel as ever. Herod did not live in Jerusalem, but in Jericho, twenty miles away. He might have been there when the wise men came.

As soon as the old king heard the question of these strangers, and learned that they had been led by a star to his land, he was filled with alarm. A Child born to be King of the Jews! If there was such a Child, what would become of Herod's own throne and crown? If he could find where this Child was, he would send his soldiers to the place and soon kill Him, as he had killed many others whom he suspected of seeking to take away his kingdom. Herod hid his cruel purpose and spoke kindly to these strangers. He asked the wise men when the star appeared, how it looked, and how they knew it showed a King had been born.

Herod then sent for the wisest men in his lands—the teachers of the law who lived in Jerusalem. "Can you tell me," asked Herod, "in what place this great King is to be born?" The scholars were ready with their answer. They said: "In Bethlehem of Judea, the city of David, this King who springs from David's line shall be born. This is what the old prophets have said."

Herod sent again for the wise men and asked them to give him the exact time when they first saw the star. When he learned the time, he thought at once that this long-looked-for King must have been born in Bethlehem less than two years before.

"Go to Bethlehem and search through the town until you find this Child; and when you find Him come and tell me, for I wish to do honor to this King." That was what Herod said; but what he wished to do was a very different thing, as we shall see.

The wise men at once started for Bethlehem, which was only six miles from Jerusalem. They went over one mountain, and then one said to the other: "Look, there is the star once more! See it in the sky just before us!"

The star stood over the road leading to Bethlehem and over the house it seemed to pause. They knocked at the door, and when it was opened they went into the room, where they found a Baby lying in its young mother's arms. They bowed down on the ground to show Him the high honor in which they held Him. They opened the treasures which they had brought from their own land, such as presented to kings. They gave Him gold and fragrant gums that were used in offerings and were very costly. Few people showed their gladness at the coming of their King—the strangers from a distant country came to pay Him honor while in His own land. We would have thought that some of the learned Jews, who could tell King Herod where the King was born, might have come with the wise men to see Him. These great scholars really cared very little about Jesus. They stayed at home and soon forgot the men of the East, their journey, and their questions.

NELLIE REA SLEDGE.

Roanoke, Ala., Rt. 1; Age 12 yrs.

An Argentine woman who had bought a Spanish Bible was so much afraid of her husband that she read it every day in his absence, as he was an enemy of religion. One night, however, she had omitted to hide the Book, and her husband saw it on the table. Without saying anything, he began to read it, and then remarked to his wife that it appeared to be a good Book; and every night, when he returned home he went on reading his wife's Bible.

Shortly afterward, his wife suggested that they should go together to see her parents, to whom they had not spoken for about two years. They went, and asked forgiveness, and now both families are following the Lord.—The Bible in the World.

CHILDHOOD AND EDUCATION OF MOSES.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and even when he is old he will not depart from it."—Prov. 22:6.

LESSON: Exodus 2:1-10; Acts 7:22.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Prov. 3:11-18.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Acts 7:17-21; Hebrews 11:23-24.

"Careless seems the great Avenger; history's pages but record

One death grapple in the darkness twixt old systems and the Word;

Truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne—

Yet that scaffold sways the future, and behind the dim unknown,

Standeth God within the shadows, keeping watch above His own."

Thus wrote Lowell in that inspiring poem, "The Present Crisis," and as I thought for a few minutes about this lesson I thought of these words which I had learned during my college days. How appropriate they seem to me in connection with the lesson for today!

The people of God were in dire straits. Joseph himself was dead. The present Pharaoh knew not Joseph. The Hebrews were leading bitter lives because of bondage. It did seem indeed as if the Great Avenger was careless. It did seem as if right was on the scaffold and the power of wrong was on the throne. But it was not so. Within the shadows there stood a God of righteousness and justice and mercy who was keeping watch above His own. He was guiding the destinies of His people and incidentally of the human race. He that keepeth Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps. His justice does not miscarry. He delivereth His people in due season. Then, as now, evil cannot triumph ultimately. Any sovereignty it may have is only apparent and temporary.

The babe Moses came from such a time as this. In spite of the fact that mighty Pharaoh had commanded that every male baby be cast into the Nile River, the mother of Moses determined to keep him. She, therefore, hid him for three months. But the time eventually came when she could no longer keep him, and with a mother's ingenuity she prepared a little ark, and after making it as dependable as possible she put the babe in the ark and put it in the marsh grasses or flags along the river's bank. Either because she dared not be connected with the incident or because she could not stand to see what might happen, the mother did not tarry to watch subsequent events. But she did leave her daughter to "know what would be done."

Bathing in the Nile, the sacred river, was a religious act, and the daughter of Pharaoh came down to bathe. When she saw the ark floating along the bank, she sent her maid to fetch it, and when the babe wept upon being disturbed, she determined to keep it in spite of her father's decree. The sister of Moses was near at hand to suggest that she could get some one to take care of the babe, and upon receiving permission went and called a nurse, who was none other than the babe's own mother. Thus did a divine Providence rule in the affairs of the babe, and hence in the affairs of the Hebrew nation and of the human race.

The babe's mother kept the baby for some time, we do not know how long. When the child had grown, he was brought back unto Pharaoh's daughter and turned over to her, and she took him for her own son. And in keeping with the custom of the ruling classes, she saw to it that Moses, as she named him, had a thorough education. "Moses was instructed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians."

There are a number of striking truths that can be adduced from this lesson, but I want to present three important ones. First, the unsuspected possibilities, and hence the infinite worth of a baby. It is true, of course, that some children give more promise than others. It is true that all babies are not born equal if they are born free, the Declaration of Independence to the contrary. But it is true that one never knows the unsuspected capacities that are enfolded in the life of a new-born baby. Moses did not come into every family or in every century—we do not need them—but one never knows what the tiny babe is going to mean to the world. Child conservation is not the idle dream of a few sentimental women or idealizing men; it is simply a manifestation of the divine plan for saving babies because of their infinite possibilities and capacities.

In the second place, one sees the supreme importance of the early years of child life in character formation. Moses was trained in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and that wisdom was pagan, be it remembered. He lived practically throughout his youth under pagan influences, but he was, in spite of it, one who followed Jehovah. When he became of age he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. And why? There may be several reasons, but the writer feels sure that the real reason was the godly influence and the sound training which Moses received in the early, the very early, days of his life. We do not know how long that mother had that baby boy, or what she taught him, but it is no idle word to say that in the precious few years during which she had him she grounded deeply into his life those fundamental truths, and inspired those ideals which made him a man of God and a saviour of his people. Here is the great truth of this lesson for those who are parents. Covet earnestly those first few years of your child's life. Leave nothing undone to surround your child with the best influence and to bring to bear upon his life the finest training, and when he is old he will have that reserve of character and that idealism that will enable him to weather the storms of life. Train up a child in the way that he should go and even when he is old he will not depart from it.

In the third place, the lesson shows the importance of proper training and preparation for life's tasks. Moses spent nearly two-thirds of his life in getting ready to do his great work. Those who would drop out of high school, or who would take short cuts to education will do well to study closely the lives both of Moses and Jesus.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

July 11, 1926.

TOPIC: "What Does Jesus Teach About Humanity?"—Matt. 18:1-14.

Some Bible Hints.

We think much of greatness, but little of humility, which is the true greatness (v. 1).

Our thinking must be reversed if the joy of heaven is to be ours. Our cunning wisdom is vain (v. 3).

Humanity is happy in doing small tasks—just receiving a little child and helping it. How different from man's composites (v. 5).

The humble soul sees values in others that are hidden from the proud, because the proud can see nothing but themselves (v. 10).

Suggestive Thoughts.

To be humble is not to cringe. It is to be courteous, kind, deferential, unassuming, and modest; the opposite of arrogant, boasting, pretentious, proud, haughty.

Humility is control of temper. Men who have made great progress in prayer and in many Christian activities, often fail here. Temper shows self-will, self-seeking, and is the opposite of humility.

Jesus teaches that no man can do much good in the kingdom who is concerned about his own position and honor.

The humble do not judge others. They cover up faults. When wronged, they forgive (Matt. 18:15-20).

A Few Illustrations.

By paying the temple tax, Jesus gave a demonstration of His teaching about humanity (Matt. 17:24-27). Though He was King, He refused to stand on His dignity. He quietly paid.

Mary 9:38-41 shows us Jesus' humility in action. The disciples became angry. Humility is tolerant of others, charitable, and thinks the best of people.

John 13 shows us Jesus serving in humility, teaching men that Christians must perform the meanest tasks gladly, thinking only of the welfare and well-being of others.

Humility is doing things, serving. It is not merely a passive grace. It is love in action, as Jesus showed in the foot-washing.

To Think About.

Why should Christians show unpretentious child-likeness?

In what ways can we show true humility?

Why are selfishness and humility incompatible?

A Cluster of Quotations.

The child of a king will play with the child of a beggar without a thought of rank. It is unpretentious; that is, humble.—James.

Beware of forming hasty conclusions about the spiritual condition of others. Christ may even have friends outside the Church.—Booth.

He that is down need fear no fall;

He that is low, no pride;

He that is humble ever shall

Have God to be his Guide.

Bunyan.

The little man, even when well-intentioned, is ever consequential and scheming, ever thinking of himself, his honor, his dignity. He always studies to glorify God in a way that will also glorify himself.—A. B. Bruce.

HE WHO CAN'T BE JEALOUS.

"Be not overcome with evil, but overcometh evil with good."—Rom. 12:21.

It is said of Charles Gounod, the great musician, that he was instinctively jealous of others who rose to imminence to shine with him, but he diligently faught this weakness by saying, "Only mediocre souls hate more easily that others do. The good are never injured. The little only are injured." He killed his weakness by drowning it in love for the good in others.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we pray Thee for Thy love as it is in Jesus Christ, our Saviour, that our passions may be for good and that we may bare no petty jealousies to mar Thy spirit in us. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

DELIBERATE GOODNESS.

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report—if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Phil. 4:8.

"Whatsoever a man seweth that also shall he reap."—Gal. 6:7.

The good and the beautiful certainly ennoble life and inspires to the higher standards. Goethe, the musician, said: "An intelligent being should never go to bed without having read a beautiful picture or listened to beautiful music, so as not to allow to sleep within him for a single instant the sensation of perfect beauty."

The sublime spectacles of our experience impress us nobly and translate themselves spontaneously in everything we are about to do. It is a good motto to avail ourselves of every opportunity, as far as possible, to escape the wrong and the ugly and the prosaic; the sway of the artificial; to go, at hazards, to famous sights, visit great folks, and spend much time with the beautiful and the good, that we may become like Him.

Prayer.—Our Father, bless us this day with a longing desire for the good, and with a life service that is good and beautiful for Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

NEVER FRIENDLESS.

"Every one deserted me, but the Lord supported me and gave me strength."—2 Tim. 4:16-18.

Paul often found himself alone from human friendships, but each so sharp a contrast gave him a new opportunity to understand more clearly that God was with him and never deserted him. He was one who could, out of his own experience, say, "God will never leave thee or forsake thee."

We are reminded of the young man who stood alone with the prophets on the mountain and was so disturbed that the enemy was great in numbers, and there were only two of them. But the prophet assured him that "they that be for us are greater than they that be against us."

Though alone, Paul realized that the Lord stood with him. Do we realize the full meaning of this? God does just the very thing that man fails to do—whatever the cause, if it be of the Lord, "we shall come off more than conquerors." Friends may forsake us; co-workers may cease; lions may be there; giants may be there; hosts of enemies may be against us—but the blessed assurance of a Christian is: God is also there, and He is more than them all.

Prayer.—O Lord, deliver us from every evil way and evil work. We pray that we may do the best that lies in us to bring others into the kingdom for Thy everlasting care and blessing. In Christ's name. Amen.

THURSDAY.

AN ADOLESCENT CHILD AND HIS SACRIFICE.

"And He went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them."—Luke 2:46-52.

The finding of Jesus among the doctors of divinity in the temple indicated that a mighty change was taking place in His physical nature. It was a boy they brought with them to the temple, and a boy they had lost; but it was a young life standing on the threshold of manhood, they found when they returned.

The incident reminds us that in the period called change or adolescence, a young life is capable of great spiritual feeling and thought. There is a desire to serve God, to remain near the Church, and attend to the more important business of the soul and the life. The attitude of Christ is beautiful. It is really sacrificial, for He obeys His parents and goes back with them, sacrificing His own wishes to become obedient unto them. This is the first recorded act of self-sacrifice in His life. A child is capable of sacrifice. In spite of the much-discussed theory of natural behavior in the child, there may be angelic behavior. A newsboy will give the skin of his body and die in pain to restore a girl to health.

The list for a children's excursion had been made. No more could go. One little girl had cried because she could not leave her housework. Next morning, the train was ready to start, and Mamie came dashing along, saying: "I can go. A neighbor will do my work today." The women in charge knew not what to do—they had one hundred and sixty now. One of the ladies made a little speech: "Yesterday, Mamie could not go; now she is here. She has never had a day in the country. What girl will stay at home and give Mamie her place?" There was a great silence, and then—nine girls stepped forward. That was the spirit of sacrifice.

Prayer.—That our little ones may learn the beautiful lesson of obedience to parents from the example of the Saviour.

FRIDAY.

LIFE'S GOLD AND SILVER PICTURES.

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."—Prov. 25:8-14.

A governor of one of our States tells this incident of his own life: "When I was a young man, I thought my father was compelling me to milk too many cows; so I ran away from home and turned up in St. Louis. I fell in with two young men there, and went down to the levee one evening with one of them. I myself did not drink, and while my companion was not drunk, he had enough to be funny. He made a slighting remark about one of the girls of the Salvation Army, who was singing there. She came over and put her arm on his shoulder, and said, 'Young man, you ought not to drink. Your mother would be very sad indeed if she knew you were here tonight in this condition.'

"I went uptown the next day and hunted up a firm from which my father had often bought machinery, told my story, and asked them to advance the money to take me home, and I am here today because of the words spoken by that woman. But I often wonder where I might have been had it been another kind of woman that spoke to us that night."

Probably the woman went home disheartened, believing she had toiled all night and caught nothing for the Master. How little did she dream that she had spoken the word that saved a Governor for a State.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SATURDAY.

THE HABIT OF LIVING WITH GOD.

"If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come in unto him and make our abode with him."—Jno. 14:23.

Read Psa. 63:1-8.

As Christians, we should get the habit of living with God. If this is vague to us and we do not know how, turn to the story of the life of Jesus. He gave us the example. He was always talking with His Father and He consulted Him in every thing which He was about to do. It was His habit to feel constantly for the Father's presence. This is so simple that such a habit is entirely possible to us all.

The radio reveals to us the presence of persons, powers, and things of beauty in the air all around us, even the things of other countries are thus made present with us; and we are cultivating this radio to its highest development that we may more and more be conscious of mere presence of life in the air. Without this instrument we would never sense these things. How much are we habituating ourselves to the instruments that reveal the divine presence? We have the instrument of faith, the Word, Jesus the Lord, the Holy Spirit, and by tuning in our souls in harmony with Him we discover the continued presence of the living Father. Apart from these we are deaf and dead to His presence.

Prayer.—Dear Father, Thou art our God, early and always we desire to seek Thee. Help us. Let us walk with Thee. Vouchsafe unto us Thy abiding presence. Overshadow us by Thy love. Inspire us to do kindly acts and to follow in the steps of Him who ever went about doing good. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE CROWNING JOY.

"My Father's house is peace."—Gen. 28:20-22.

The end of life's way is to rest in the Father's house in peace. To this end we have the Sabbath for our good, and to this end we have the Church, and to this end we are called to live His life.

But this house is for only those who crave and claim it, which means that if we wish to obtain it we must live in filial nearness to Him day by day, and continually aspire to those things that make for peace.

There are cares and trials that drag us down and would keep us from it, and, when struggling with these we need the same Lord to help us who helped Jacob. He who knows thy weakness and thy failure will grant His unfailing presence, unfading vision and unsparring help.

With Him for our guide, what stronger arm do we need to lean upon? In Him is compassed all my need and fulfilled all my hopes. However troublesome and difficult the way, He traveled a rougher one before me, and with him beside me, it will be the same as though He led me into His peace.

Prayer.—O Lord, Thy banner o'er us is love. With Thy presence we are not lonely. The end of the way is blessed. Be with us, and lead us to Thy house in peace. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We have had a number of blessings for the last week to make us happy. We have splendid seasons for more than a week and our corn, beans, garden vegetables and all other crops are looking fine and taking on new life. We hope now to have many good things to eat from our garden in the next few weeks.

Our good friend Mr. Herbert A. Carlton, of Raleigh, N. C., shipped to the Orphanage from his farm he is developing near Mullins, S. C., for the benefit of the Orphanage three hundred and ninety-six bushels of oats for the use of the Orphanage. Bro. Carlton has a very warm place in his heart for the little homeless and fatherless children at the Orphanage, and is always happy to do something to help them.

Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Carlton, of Richmond, Va., sent to us this week a check for $2,225.90 to furnish complete the upper floor in our new building. Mrs. Carlton visited the Orphanage a few weeks ago and was so pleased with what our Church is doing for the fatherless children, through its Orphanage, that she and Mr. Carlton wanted to have this opportunity of expressing their appreciation and at the same time help make a happy home for the homeless children who have been deprived of the comforts of a home and the joy of having an earthly father and mother to whom they could lean on and look to for the comforts of life.

No one knows the joy it brings to us in our busy life to have friends so generous, so sympathetic, and so loyal, who are glad to come to our rescue and contribute to help in this work of love and charity. If our people could only come in touch with fatherless children who are in great need, as we do from day to day, their hearts would be so touched that they would be glad to give a part of their income to help support the little children in need. Then, too, if they could just look in the faces of the boys and girls who have come to the institution fatherless and motherless, and have been reared and trained here and have gone out in life as trained nurses, teachers, mechanics, civil engineers, stenographers and many other vocations of life, making good because this institution was a father and mother to them when they had none to whom they could go or to say a kind word to them when their little hearts ached, they would be happy that they had had a part in making this institution mean what it has to those who have had a home here.

May God bless with His richest blessings those dear friends who have been so liberal in helping us to make this work mean something to the lives of the fatherless children.

our work, and it was a joy to work with her. I know that she loves the work and people at Rocky Ford so much that her prayers and her thoughts will still be with us.

We are very grateful for the playhouse sent to us from Elon College, and know our children will be delighted with it. We appreciate all kindnesses, favors and interest shown in so many ways in behalf of our work here. Our Church building is well located and travelers are often heard to remark about it as they pass. Maybe it is some one who has not passed that way since it was erected; some others ask what Church it is—so we feel proud of it, and it is indeed a credit to our whole Church and denomination, and we should be glad it has been erected here. It has been equipped with seats for main auditorium, and the school rooms have been equipped with nearly enough necessary articles.

Miss Laura Clemmer, of Eaton, Ohio, recently sent two large lamps, and the lighting is good. A small bell has been placed in the belfry. Mr. Landith, who spoke at Rocky Ford, a lawyer of Carroll County, gave $5.00 towards paying for the bell.

Our Church is unpainted, and here in the mountains the winds are so severe, and when it rains it seems to fall so hard that our building should, by all means, be painted. So I am wondering if some Young People's Society of our Church or any one will be willing to paint the building which I suppose will be not over $200. If you wish to give to this cause, just write Dr. Atkinson. We will greatly appreciate your donation and believe God will richly bless you.

Please remember us in your prayers for the growth of the Rocky Ford work.

Cana, Va. MISS ELSIE BRAY.

At a recent Masonic banquet, Rev. Montague, pastor of the Methodist Church of Monrovia, made a speech, the subject of which was "Mussolini and the Masonic Order in Italy." He stated that the reason the premier was fighting Masonry in Italy was because Masonry has always stood for individual freedom and universal education. The better educated people of Italy, he pointed out, are opposed to the dictatorship as expressed by Mussolini, and feel that democracy is being destroyed not only in Italy, but other European countries.

PATRICK HENRY'S DEATH.

Patrick Henry spent one hour at the close of the day in prayer and meditation, and during it no one was suffered to intrude upon his privacy.

On the 6th of June, 1799, his kindred being sent for, found him sitting in a large, old-fashioned arm-chair, peacefully awaiting death.

His physician, Dr. Cabell, was about to administer a preparation of mercury. Taking the vial in his hand, the dying man said, "I suppose, doctor, this is your last resort."

"I am sorry to say, governor, that it is."

"What will be the effect of this medicine?"

"It will give you immediate relief, or—" the doctor could not finish the sentence.

"You mean, doctor," said the sick man, "that it will give me relief, or will prove fatal immediately?"

"You can live only a short time without it, and it may relieve you."

"Excuse me, doctor, for a few moments," said Patrick Henry, drawing over his eyes the silk cap he wore. Holding the vial, he prayed aloud for his family, his country, and for his own soul. "Amen," said he, and swallowed the medicine.

Dr. Cabell, who greatly loved the old patriot, had gone out upon the lawn, where he wept bitterly. Mastering himself, he returned to the house, and found his patient calmly watching the blood congeal under his finger nails. The old orator fixed his eyes on Dr. Cabell, with whom he had held many a discussion about Christian religion.

"Doctor," said he, with great tenderness, "I wish you to observe how real and beneficial the religion of Christ is to a man about to die."

He then breathed so gently for a few minutes that those around him knew not when he breathed out his spirit.—Sel.

One who believes that Jesus Christ is the Son of God with full authority in heaven and on earth, is not apt to become panic-stricken in these days that try men's faith of what sort it is. One may be deeply grieved, but to doubt the prevailing power of the Church is evidence of a faith that rests on the wisdom of men and not in the power of God. The gates of Hades shall never prevail against the Church built on apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the Chief Cornerstone. False teachers may deceive many, but never the Spirit-filled believers in Jesus Christ.

Another big helium gas well is flowing in Texas. This, as you know, is the gas ideal for balloon-type airships because it doesn't burn or explode. Gas men used to curse when their drills struck helium. They thought it useless. But nothing is useless. Helium, up to 1917, cost as much as $2,500 a cubic foot. We have it underground in six States, and the cost soon will be about three cents a cubic foot. No other country has a known deposit of helium worth developing. Quite logical for Zeppelin-making headquarters to move to America.

To save life and limb

THE peril of the road crossing has become a national problem with the multiplication of automobiles.

The Southern Railway System has eliminated 800 grade crossings, and is eliminating more every year, but over 6,000 remain to be separated on this system alone. The total cost to complete the work is a stupendous sum—probably half as much as the cost to build the railroads.

Even if the money were available, and the public willing to pay the increased freight and passenger rates necessary to provide a fair return on it, many years would be required to do the work.

Protection from the peril for the present generation at least must be found in some other way. Trains cannot stop at every crossing if they are to be run at the sustained speed expected by the public and required to carry the commerce of the country. The train crosses a highway about every mile. The motorist encounters a railroad only occasionally.

It is necessary, therefore, for the automobile driver to stop in order to avoid risk. No one who did this was ever killed.

It is better to save a life than to save a minute.

CIGARETTE-SMOKING GIRLS LOSE.

A referendum of the parents of present students of Boston University on cigarette smoking by girls has been taken. The vote was against the practice, 700 to 1. Consequently, cigarette-smoking girls will not hereafter be admitted to the College of Practical Arts and Letters of Boston University. Dean Lawrence T. Davis said: "We are trying to uphold an ideal which does not permit the young women of refinement to smoke."

This is a strong argument against an indefensible social habit, though there are several arguments equally strong. It is a very fateful hour for any young woman, when she takes a cigarette in her mouth. She can never thereafter feel quite as comfortable about her standing in society. And that kind of thing is also fatal for society. All honor to the College of Arts and Letters of Boston University.

MOTOR CARS INCREASE IN U. S.

Constant increase in the use of motor cars is noted in the United States. There are now 20,000,000 registered. New York leads with 1,625,583, then comes California with 1,440,541, Ohio with 1,346,400, Pennsylvania with 1,330,433, and Illinois with 1,263,177. Nevada has fewest, the number being only 21,169. Not so much danger of being run down out there! The States with big cities have the big auto populations, the big Churches, the big crime lists, the big moral storms. How long will it be until we quit walking? Then, according to the evolutionary hypothesis, our legs ought to disappear and wheels come instead. We do not look for this in our day.

RICH AMERICANS IN EUROPE.

When there is so much good that might be done with their time and money in the United States, one wonders what the rich are doing in Europe? Many of them are doing good over there, but all sorts of unpleasant and uncomplimentary stories get to us in the news. Here we are reading that Americans lost $1,163,400 in the Riviera last year. A large sum was dropped also at Monte Carlo. No one will regret the lost money, but what about our "black leg gamblers?" Gambling is one of the worst evils. It seems to contain something of all the rest—a witch's brew that excites, poisons, degrades, hardens and deceives.

PARKS.

J. R. Parks died suddenly May 10, 1926, at his home, three miles south of Greensboro, at the age of 77 years, 5 months and 15 days. He leaves to mourn their loss a wife, who before marriage was Miss Melisse Jordan, and three children—E. B. Parks, of Kernersville, N. C.; J. R. Parks, of Greensboro, N. C., and Mrs. J. C. Lane, of Siler City, N. C.; also seven grandchildren and a host of other relatives, including one brother, L. T. Parks.

Burial was at his home Church, Parks Cross Roads, where he had been a life-long member and deacon for many years. The writer was assisted in the services by Rev. Mr. Porter, Dr. C. H. Rowland, and Rev. Mr. Fountain, ministers, respectively, of the home town of each of the children. A large congregation attended the burial, and the floral offering was abundant and beautiful.

May the Heavenly Father comfort the hearts of his loved ones.

NELSON.

Wyatt Nelson was born May 31, 1907, and died June 19, 1926. Wyatt was the son of Mr. J. F. Nelson, of Wedowee, Ala. He never made any profession of faith, but gave evidence of going to rest before he died. He was conscious to the end and called on the writer to pray for him just a few hours before he died. This should be a warning to his friends and associates not to neglect salvation until the last hours.

Wyatt was laid to rest June 20th, at Levins Chapel. A host of relatives and friends mourn his going. Our hearts go out in sympathy for them.

The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. C. Carpenter. J. E. AMASON.

THOMAS.

Mrs. Mary Stoue Thomas was born July 20, 1848; died June 21st. Her husband, Mr. W. C. Thomas, preceded her several years to the spirit land. All of her immediate family, and most of her childhood friends had also gone before. For several years she had been a consistent member of Shallow Well Church.

"And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. S. M. LYNAM.

Send Pictures by Radio.—

A commercial radio picture service has been inaugurated between London and New York, and more than a score of pictures were received in New York during the first twenty-four hours of the service. Despite a storm in mid-Atlantic, the pictures reproduced in American newspapers proved successful and pointed to a new epoch in quick transmission not only of photographs for newspapers, but of advertisements and designs.

French Debt Agreement.—

In a week marked by great progress in clearing the slate of unfunded international debts, the American Debt Commission and Ambassador Berenger, representing the French government, reached a final accord on the French war-time debt of about $4,000,000,000. The agreement was signed after President Coolidge had approved its terms. Under the pact, France agrees to pay a total of $6,847,674,104 over a period of sixty-two years. The agreement is subject, of course, to ratification by the French and American legislative bodies.

Musical America.—

Last week manufacturers and dealers in musical instruments gathered at Manhattan from all parts of the United States. More than 1,000 of them came for their annual convention and sat in session for five days, talking music, the while, statistically. They were told that there are ten million pianos in use in the United States alone today and that "more than a billion dollars is spent each year by the people of the United States on music in all its phases." They declare, as a sign of more general culture, that pianos are no longer bought as a mark of distinction, but entirely for a love of music.

The musical dealers elected Benjamin Franklin as their patron saint in spite of the fact that the Saturday Evening Post already perpetuates his memory. Franklin was an amateur composer and played the guitar and violin. His versatility was shown also in the invention of a now long-obsolete musical instrument called the "armonica," which was not a mouth-organ, but consisted of hemispherical glasses, resembling wine glasses mounted on an axis.

Gustavus Adolphus Guest of Church Leaders.—

Crown Prince Gustavus Adolphus, of Sweden, was an honor guest at a luncheon held in New York City recently by the continuation committee of the American section of the Stockholm conference, the Church Peace Union, World Alliance for International Friendship, and the Federal Council of Churches. Addresses were made by Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Dr. Arthur J. Brown, and Mr. Robert Fulton Cutting. Dr. William P. Merrill presided, and Bishop William T. Manning pronounced the invocation. The prince gave high praise to the work of the Federal Council, and spoke of the great influence of the Stockholm conference upon the Scandinavian countries. He said: "In Stockholm I had the opportunity of saying that, as far as I could see, unity and co-operation does not imply uniformity. On the contrary, the manifold gifts represented by so many countries and traditions and confessions make the whole aspect of such a co-operating Christianity more true, more like a beautiful harmony enriched by many parts. But the walls of narrow sight, of prejudice, of misunderstanding must be pulled down." These are wise words.

Large Gifts.—

Friends and officials of Northwestern University recently met at the north edge of Chicago to lay four corner-stones for a new unit of that institution. Mr. and Mrs. George A. McKinlock had given the campus in memory of their soldier son. The medical-dental fourteen-story Gothic building was given by Mrs. Montgomery Ward in memory of her merchant husband. Mrs. Levy Mayer had given a half of law; Judge Elbert H. Gary, of Manhattan, a law library, and W. A. Wieboldt, a hall of commerce.

Mayor Dever, of Chicago, expressed his city's appreciation, and President Walter Dill Scott that of the faculties and students. Dr. Charles H. Mayo, famed surgeon and graduate of Northwestern, said that Mrs. Ward, by her gift, had opened the door on a new era of medical teaching, an era in which medicine will lead society out of an impossible situation. He declared "The struggle for bread has given place to the struggle for luxuries. The struggle to keep on living, the fear of age with its limitations of pleasure, are encouraged by our skill. We actually encourage impurity of stock in spite of nature's effort to maintain it. . . . How to accomplish our good without evil is a harder problem than how to accomplish our good."

Humanity to Man.—

Man, for all his inhumanity to man, makes countless thousands rejoice to read a report which shows such tender humanity as the following summary of the medical work of the Rockefeller Foundation:

Last year it spent over nine million dollars through its international health board, China medical board, division of medical education, and division of studies. Recently its president, George E. Vincent, preparing his 1925 report, made public the following figures: (1) Hookworm—aided eighteen governments, treated nearly 1,500,000 victims, erected or rebuilt thousands of latrines. (2) Rural health—aided 220 U. S. counties, 18 districts in Brazil, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Austria and France; (3) yellow fever—eliminated it through both Americas, there being only 3 cases in the year; (4) malaria—proved that Paris green prevents breeding of malaria-carrying mosquitoes; (5) medical education—gave money to U. S. or schools at Toronto, London, Copenhagen, Prague, Warsaw, Belgrade, Zagreb, Budapest, Trinidad, Sao Paulo, Cambridge, Edinburgh, Brussels, Utrecht, Strasbourg, Beirut, Singapore, Bangkok, Montreal, Peking; (6) nursing—gave help to training schools in U. S., China, Brazil, France, Jugo-Slavia, and Poland; (7) Biology—aid to Johns Hopkins, Yale, Iowa State; (8) Fellowships—to 842 men and women from 44 different countries; (9) League of Nations—traveling expenses of 128 health officers from 58 nations studying away from home, aid to league's information service on communicable diseases; (10) surveys—of health conditions, medical education, nursing, biology, anthropology in 34 countries; (11) experts—staff members loaned for instruction in foreign countries.

California Mission Play.—

The California Mission Play, after a run of fifteen weeks, has recently concluded its fifteenth season at the Mission Playhouse, in San Gabriel, a suburb of Los Angeles. The mission background of life under Spanish rule, the attempt of Fr. Junipero Serra and others of the Franciscan order, to bring Christianity to the Indians of California.

Frank Miller, while viewing the Passion Play at Oberammergau, in 1911, conceived the idea of a pageant based on the early beginnings of civilization in California. He was then proprietor of the Mission Inn, at Riverside, and an earnest student of early California history. Dr. Henry van Dyke, of Princeton, was asked to undertake the writing of the play, but was unable to do so. Dr. David Starr Jordan, of Leland Stanford Junior University, finally suggested the name of John Steven McGroarty, historian and poet-laureate of the great Pacific State.

McGroarty locked upon the time during which the twenty-one missions of California were built along the King's Highway from San Diego, in the south, to Sonoma on the north, each a day's journey on foot from the other, as the true golden age of California. He secured leave of absence from the editorial office of the Los Angeles Times, combined drama and pageant, and wrote such an elaborate play that he could find no producer for it. He borrowed money, built his own theater, hired actors, trained them and produced it himself. In the fifteen years since then almost two million people, including many critics, have seen it. The author has recently transferred all rights to a foundation to hold it in trust for the people of California. The proceeds are to be used for the restoration and preservation of the old mission ruins.

Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies should see that their full quota of representatives attend the Conventions. Reports should be promptly made out and forwarded to the Convention secretaries.

A beauty parlor announced its willingness to contribute to the erection of a Church at Kansas City, Kans., 10 per cent of the money earned by bobbing the hair of the feminine members. The pastor, Rev. C. A. Finch, issued this bulletin: "While you're building up your beauty and marceling all your locks, you'll be adding to the building fund a stream of golden 'rocks.'"

During the months of July and August, the First Church of Richmond joins in union services with other Churches of the community. The schedule of union services held at 8 P. GIVE THEM WORK.

The man in prison should have a job. No punishment is so cruel as compulsory idleness. Yet prison work should not be used to further degrade the convict. It should be made a means to his self-support, and then a means to the support of his family if he has one. In few places is society more cruel than when in sentencing a criminal to prison; it also sentences his family to starvation. Let him be made to support his family by his prison labor. Let prison management be of such a high quality that he can support them. And it would be well to go even a step further; in property crimes, let the convict's labor restore the value stolen and unrecovered, and the cost of his infraction of social order. And where his crime has deprived another family of its breadwinner, let his labor be used to repair that economic destruction also. Men should be made to give economic reparation for their crimes, but in order to do this they should be given economic evaluation as prisoners of society.—Ex.

STATE CONSTITUTIONS.

The States in existence at the time of the drafting of the Constitution of the United States had constitutions of their own and it was upon these that the Federal one was patterned. The States developed their documents from colonial charters, which in turn were modeled upon the charters of mercantile companies of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. Massachusetts is the only State which retains the constitution framed in that period, but it has been revised and amended. All the States, however, in their modern constitutions retain many of the principles and much of the framework of the other documents.

EXHIBITS AT SESQUICENTENNIAL.

Exhibits to be made in the name of religion at the Sesquicentennial Exposition, Philadelphia, will have two prominent features. One feature will be made by religious bodies themselves, to illustrate their work. Recently some of these bodies have increased their space, and bodies not already applying for space have done so. The other feature will indicate, in as graphic way as possible, what contributions have been made by organized religion to American government, education, charities, and other forms of progress during the one hundred and fifty years since 1776.

The American Board of Applied Christianity, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, chairman, and Eugene M. Camp, president, Bible House, New York, has been asked by the committee on religion of the Sesquicentennial to assist in preparing exhibits in the last-named classification, and desires suggestions concerning the features of such contributions. Religion has helped education in marked degree, and one suggestion already made is to illustrate the contribution by a model of a little red schoolhouse of a century and a half ago. It has contributed to art and architecture, and application has been made to those in charge to exhibit, as illustrative of such contribution, the models of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, the National Cathedral at Washington, the First Methodist Church at Chicago, as showing a radical change in planning of Churches, the Basilica of the Immaculate Conception now building in Washington, and the synagogue which American Jews are erecting in Jerusalem, to be a center of the religious worship of the Judaism of the world.

The wonderful work which a Presbyterian missionary suggested and carried out in introducing reindeer from Lapland into Alaska and changing conditions of all Esquimaux is to be illustrated and explained. The desire is to present graphic exhibits, with full explanations of the work done, and by whom. The board will be glad to receive suggestions, both concerning forms of co-operative work, done perhaps by religious bodies in common, and the method by which facts may be made to stand out among many other exhibits. It is well known that Quakers are erecting a meeting house of the pattern in use many years ago.—Ex.

OLD-FASHIONED LAZINESS.

Most of us are in the clutches of a spiritual creeping paralysis due to inherent laziness. Common sense teaches that no man or woman can succeed in the ordinary occupations of life who is not "up and doing," but when it comes to the interests of the soul, we are perfectly willing to trust to chance, "to dream, to drift," to procrastinate and postpone. In Ibsen's "Wild Duck," Hjalmar Ekdal appears as the easy-going, lazy idealist who is constantly fooling himself about his own greatness and the possibilities of achievement in some far-off, hazy future. Meanwhile, however, he dilly-dallies with life, always judging himself superior to the common round of duties and excluding himself from purposeful activity on the grounds of illness, or the demands of his own unusual genius. Hjalmar is a type all too common in our modern world.

Is not the spiritual life under the reign of law? Does not moral accomplishment require a plan and a purpose, an intelligent insight, and the application of persistent energy? Why, then, do most of us gamble with this great issue? Why do we trust moral development to chance, and pursue it in such haphazard fashion as to frustrate the very end in view? Why do we put off until tomorrow what should be done today? Why are we tossed about by every wind that blows? The trying need of the hour is for a moral resurrection, new vision, new aspiration, new strength of will!—Zion's Herald.

STATES' EDUCATIONAL OBLIGATIONS.

The poorest families often have the most children. This means that they are faced with the greatest educational burden and are often least able to meet it. This same statement holds for States! A bulletin entitled, "The Ability of the States to Support Education," issued by the Research Division of the National Education Association, is just off the press. This bulletin takes the number of children aged six to thirteen years, inclusive, as a measure of the size of the educational task faced by a State. According to this measure, South Carolina has the greatest educational obligation of any State in the Union; and California has the least. In fact, California's educational job is but half the size of South Carolina's, since the per cent of total population in California, aged six to thirteen, inclusive, is 12.68, and in South Carolina it is 21.67.

Are all States equally able to support public schools? They are not. This same issue of the research bulletin of the National Education Association shows that the amount of wealth per child in the several States varies from $45,664 in Nevada to $5,777 in Mississippi; and the average annual current income per child varies from $7,693 in California to $1,317 in Mississippi.

A. R. BROTHERS' LICENSURE REVOKED.

Brothers was revoked by order of the Executive Committee of the Conference, and the Secretary was requested to publish this action in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. This action was taken because A. R. Brothers has united with the Baptist Church, and his name is dropped from the roll of ministers in the Christian Church.

IS THERE A CRIME WAVE?

We have heard so many disturbing things about the crime wave that it seems like a sensational negative even to ask the question, "Is there a crime wave?" But this has been asked recently by the Department of Research and Education of the Federal Council of the Churches which has brought forth figures and statements from various sources in reply. The Legal Aid Society of New York in its report for 1925 makes this interesting comment concerning crime trends:

"The crimes that still are predominant in our statistics involve burglary, larceny and robbery. It cannot be said that the numbers in our records indicate an unusual wave of such crimes at this time. Perhaps the character of robberies rather than their number has resulted in the popular feeling that we have passed or are now passing through a crime wave—so-called."

This statement is borne out by Dr. George W. Kirchwey's analysis of crime data for recent years published in the Survey Graphic for March. He reiterates the statement, which can scarcely be overemphasized, that our crime statistics are quite inadequate. After noting the decrease in many of the major offenses in certain of our larger cities during the last few years, he says:

"What this analysis of the evidence brings us to is that robbery, with murder as a frequent incident, is the phenomenon that has brought all this clamor to our dulled senses. Robbery is the crime wave. Not because of its frequency. Notwithstanding its increase in the country at large and the shrinking of the burglary rate, the number of robberies is still little more than one-third the number of burglaries. Fifteen years ago it was only one-fifth. It is the sensational character of the crime that has given it its glamorous and terroristic effect."

The whole subject needs a most careful study, but it seems clear that any inferences drawn from the gross figures of crime in America are very misleading, and there is good reason to believe that offenses against the traffic laws and certain of the most important misdemeanors account for practically all the increases in crime and that there is no general increase in felonious crime.—Exchange.

RIGHTS AND DUTIES.

The Supreme Court of the United States has refused to declare unconstitutional the action of residents to protect their neighborhoods from undesirable invasion. The case in question was the protest of certain Washington property owners against the sale of a nearby residence to a negro purchaser. Much interest and some resentment will be caused by the decision. On the whole, however, it will be found that negroes will be wisely guided in not insisting upon raising the question generally. Legally, there are certain rights beyond question, but we are not living in a legal vacuum; we are living in the midst of many mingled circumstances, and we must always recognize the practical tendency as itself a part of social law. Many lamentable things have followed invasions of neighborhood, often with motives that would not bear scrutiny. On the other hand, respectable colored families do not find it difficult to obtain suitable residences within their rights and also within the limits of racial good will. These are matters which are better conducted according to the dictates of common sense than according to high notions of "rights." Rights are always checked and balanced by duties.—Ex.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

IRRESISTIBLE FORCES IN CHRISTIANITY.

Christianity is benevolent. This is the fruit of the unselfish flower, the outworking of the new life, the manifestation of divine love. This is not simply the bestowment of material gifts, but of thoughts, inventions, arts, character, civilization, and saving institutions. Moses sweetened the bitter water of Marah, Elisha healed the fountain at Jericho and cured Naaman the leper; and Jesus expelled all sorts of diseases and evil spirits from men, and fed the five thousand in their hunger. Out of His benevolent spirit and example have sprung medical science, hospitals, skilled nurses and consecrated physicians. He taught the nations to heal the sick, clothe the naked, and feed the perishing. Medical missions, ship loads of food for Russia's starving, and aid for Armenia's suffering believers all fall as ripe clusters of good grapes from this vine of God. Thousands of poor people enjoyed good dinners in New York on Thanksgiving Day in 1896 under the inspiration of Christian benevolence; while Cooper Union resounded with the gospel, and was crowded with worshippers, under the leadership of Dwight L. Moody, the century's greatest evangelist. The world was never so well fed in body, mind, and heart as under Christian benevolence. Christianity spreads a feast for earth's hungry millions. God clothes the grass, feeds the fowls, and much more His own children who trust in Him.

In old Japan severe famines were expected once in twenty years, and vast ash-heaps still remain where the victims of starvation were cremated. But railroads, steamboats, and Christian civilization, the benevolent inventions of Christianity, will not prevent local famines, but will prevent starvation. The first in history to relieve the stress of widespread famine was Joseph, who was a type of Christ, and inspired by God Himself. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." Christianity is the great reservoir that receives the stream from the divine fountain and sends it out in many smaller streams to cleanse the world and relieve the thirst of the nations.

Christianity is educational. It takes childhood in day and Sunday Schools and fixes in life energy, facts, principles, aspirations, seeds that grow like acorns into forests and become irresistible human forces; subduing nature and compelling latent energies to speak and work. The printing press sends out papers and books, Bibles and music as armies too great to be checked by physical or legal force. The silent throb of truth in human society is mightier than the pulse of the ocean that beats against two hemispheres by day and by night. Christianity is the greatest educator of all time. It has never set up its banner where it did not open a school, and it has translated the Bible into more than seven hundred languages.

It has taken pictures and made maps of the globe. Old institutions and false philosophies gradually yield to the educational processes of Christianity, as the great volcanic upheavals around Japan have been worn into beautiful islets of fantastic shapes by ages of wave-actions. The northern horde that swept down upon Rome and conquered the mistress of the world were themselves conquered by the quiet, spotless Christianity that dwelt as a virgin among the lords of lust and power.

WHAT MAKES A NATION GREAT?

A nation's greatness is not measured by its natural resources, by its material wealth, or by its capacity for development. A nation's greatness is not measured by its navy, its standing army, or by its traditions. A nation's greatness can only be measured by the ideals of its citizens today as those ideals are expressed in their home life, their social life, their business life, their political life, their religious life—and in every other realm of life.

We are living in a time when there are many spurious types of patriotism, and counterfeit brands of national loyalty. We need to reflect over the true meaning of patriotism, and the real demands of national loyalty.

The Fourth of July should give every American citizen opportunity to take inventory of his or her personal life to see what claim they have to be known as patriotic.

The Church of Jesus Christ calls men and women to the highest and truest patriotism. Patriotism and religion should always go hand in hand. And the person who is the most truly religious ought to be the most truly patriotic. The reason some people have such a low type of patriotism is that they have no religious consciousness.

Every true patriot has respect for the law of God and for the laws of man. No true American will show lack of respect for his nation's constitution. All true patriots realize that respect for law is the basic principle of patriotism.

The idea that a person has the privilege of obeying only the laws he chooses is but a subtle expression of anarchy. The full-fledged anarchist says, "To hell with all the laws!" The anarchist in embryo says, "If I do not like certain laws I do not have to obey them."

In these days of open defiance of certain laws by certain groups, every loyal American citizen should stress the importance of exercising respect for every law upon our statute books. Reverence for law is one of the highest expressions of righteousness. And disrespect for law is one of the major sins against society.

The Fourth of July should give opportunity to us all to stand back and watch ourselves march by in our every-day attitudes toward the Constitution and laws of our nation. If our government is protecting our lives and our property interests, we are duty bound to protect the honor and good name of our government.

Every loyal American has a right to boycott any man who refuses to respect the American flag, the American Constitution, and the American ideals. Every loyal American should look with disfavor upon the unscrupulous business man who uses the stars and stripes as an advertising medium. Every loyal American will resent the lack of good taste expressed by any one who uses the American flag merely to attract attention in advertising their wares. Service stations and farmers' stands along the highway which put a display of American flags along in front of their places of business merely to notify the motorists that they are on hand for business is a contemptible practice that merits the reproof of every loyal American. The flag is too sacred an emblem to be used in any way as an advertising medium. Because of that fact, the law against using it for such purposes should be strictly enforced.

Every patriotic American citizen will exercise sincere respect for the flag, and for the republic for which it stands. He will respect the Constitution and the laws it embodies. The great Americans of the past have been great because of their loyalty to their nation's Constitution. They exercised sincere reverence for the laws of their land. Patriots always have respected law. Anarchists never have.

And as patriotic American citizens, it is our supreme responsibility to obey the laws ourselves, and to insist that all others who are protected by our government shall obey the laws of our government.

That greatest of all Americans, Abraham Lincoln, insisted that obedience to the laws of the nation was absolutely imperative, and that the nation's life and perpetuity depended upon the respect the people of the nation exercised toward the nation's laws.

In one of Lincoln's addresses at Springfield, while he was still a young man, he gave voice to this conviction which strikes a responsive cord in the heart of every true American:

"Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher to his posterity, swear by the blood of the revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country, and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of seventy-six died to support the Declaration of Independence—so, to the support of the Constitution and laws, let every American pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books, and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice. In short, let it become the political religion of the nation."

Would that every citizen of our nation could catch something of the spirit of reverence for law that filled the soul of the immortal Lincoln! Obedience to law gives a nation strength and greatness, but disrespect for law makes for national weakness.

What makes a nation great?

"Not serried ranks and flags unfurled,
Nor armored ships that gird the world;
Not hoarded wealth, nor busy mills;
Not cattle on a thousand hills,

Not sages wise, nor schools, nor laws,
Not boasted deeds in freedom's cause—
All these may be, and yet the State
In the eye of God be far from great.

"That land is great which knows the Lord,
Whose songs are guided by His word;
Where justice rules 'twixt man and man,
Where love controls in act and plan;
Where breathing in his native air,
Each soul finds joy in praise and prayer—
Thus may our country, good and great,
Be God's delight; man's best estate."

THE CHRISTIAN COLLEGE AND CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT.

It was a matter of no little concern to that mother who had prayed for her boys and girl all through the years when she saw them leaving the old family altar to launch out into a land of higher learning. She was first and last a Christian, and her children she wanted to be first and last the same. Hers was a common problem—if she keep them at home she hampered their education and hindered their progress, if she sent them forth from herself and her sweet Christian influence she ran an awful risk. No wonder the lines grew a little about her eyes as one by one, year after year, she bade them go; and no wonder she prayed the more, and sometimes moistened her pillow with tears of anxiety for the heretofore shielded sons that now she sent so hopefully and anxiously forth.

Had not the same longings that linger in the heart of every Christian mother lingered and lived in her heart throughout all the years? Did she not fear that foreign influences might fill the minds of her growing children with false philosophies of life? She wanted them every one to know more than she had known, to be more than she had been, and do more than she had done; but only a mother's heart could understand how anxious she was that the learning they should receive might deepen their devotion to honesty, their respect for righteousness, and their love of the Lord, who had been her own hope and stay through all the years. She knew there were learned ones who did not love honor; that sometimes, at least, much learning had led just such lads away from the Church, and away from the Bible, and away from God she was certain. What could her hope be?

Was there not some college somewhere with a group of teachers who would themselves be able to understand to some far-reaching extent the desires of her heart? Was it not just possible that on the faculty of such a college there sat men and women who were themselves fathers and mothers with Christian characters, pious lives, and yet deep and rich learning in the fields of science, literature, history and art? Or were not they the producers of Christian homes such as her own, and their own lives the answer to Christian parents' prayers? Would they not be honor-bound to learn the truths in their respective fields and then relate those truths to their own lives and to the lives of their pupils as a sacred trust? Could they not know the facts, or teach an honest seeking of the same without lessening scholarship, and with the strengthening of faith? If such a college could be found, would she not be, of all mothers, most happy?

Taking into her confidence educated Christians, she hopefully sought their counsel. She asked them for a Christian college, which would logically be the producer of Christian character. Now, what would be the requirements of her college?

Would it not be under the self-same influence which had made her home a Christian one, namely: the Church? Would it not have the self-same motive as her Church had had, namely: the saving of life? yea, the giving of life, and that more abundantly? Would not the same Christian practices prevail and obtain in that college, namely: the practice of prayer, the feeding of faith, and the finding of truth? All of this plus wholesome environment, happy associations and Christian culture, must be in and about the place everywhere apparent. Those who worthily shared her confidence rightfully referred her to such a college. The college was not perfect, but neither had been her Church; the college had imperfections to be sure, but so had her Church; the college was criticized, but so was her Church—but, in the main, and that mattered most of all, the college recognized Christ as its greatest Teacher, just as had her Church. To it she entrusted her children.

The mother has lived to rejoice, and thank God for answer to her heart's sincere prayer. And it is an awful thing, is it not, to have the responsibility of that mother, or that Church, or of that college? She asked for a reasonable thing in the matter of the unfolding life of her children. A Christian college is possible, a college with a Christian character, and the patrons have a right to demand that the college steadfastly maintain a Christian character, and to a very great extent produce its kind. A college does not have to shout its piety to be Christian. It is not its business to boast character, but to build character.

After all, is not the function of a Christian home, and a Christian Church, and a Christian college much the same? In the ultimate, parents of children are going to answer this question, and they are going to answer it in the affirmative, for if they should answer it in the negative it would mean the final ruin and wreck of each of these, and such is not the course of Christian civilization. These lines are addressed to a people who will rally to Christian colleges with their support, their prayers, and their patronage, in confident trust that they will produce in their sons and daughters Christian characters.

"THESE SAYINGS OF MINE."

The last book from the pen of Dr. Lloyd C. Douglas bears the above title. The book is a series of most illuminating interpretations of the sayings of Jesus. Dr. Douglas is well known to all readers of the Christian Century, in which publication articles from his pen have appeared regularly for the past seven years.

Dr. Douglas has one of the most original and pleasing literary styles of the present-day writers. While pastor of the University Congregational Church at Ann Harbor, Mich., he won a nationwide reputation by reason of his successful work among the students of that great institution and of his masterful contributions to the religious press.

Several years ago, when Dr. Douglas was secretary of the University of Illinois Y. M. C. A., I was in frequent contact with him, and on occasions when he would supply my pulpit in my absence, the congregation was unanimous in its appreciation of his stimulating messages.

His last book is a series of interpretations of the sayings of Jesus. He brings the parables of Jesus to bear upon the interests and relationships of present-day life. It is a book for laymen as well as for ministers. The unique style of the author, and the fresh and original thought embodied in every chapter make the book one of unusual value and interest.

As an illustration of what practically every page promises, take this quotation from the chapter considering the parable of the hidden treasure—"Hidden treasure!" What a phrase to conjure with! Confide these words to whomsoever you will—sage or savage, sinner or saint, graybeard or school boy—and instantly you have his attention. Doubtless it is the hope of discovery that contributes the main eagerness of life. No man need ever think himself old so long as he is stirred to quick interest by a hint of something to be disclosed. It is this quest of things hidden that keeps us keyed up to concert pitch, as we endeavor to play our part in the symphony of life, and whenever existence has become flat and stale—as it does, undeniably, for many people—perhaps this means only that they have lost the joy of discovery, either because they have been uniformly disappointed in their quests or have quite too easily found everything their tastes required."

You will be delighted with the book. It is published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, with excellent binding, and sells for $1.50 a copy at all book stores.

COLOR LIGHT SIGNALS.

Color light signals, declared by Southern Railway engineers to be the last word in electric automatic block signal protection, are now in service on the entire Washington-Atlanta double-track line, 637 miles, replacing signals of the three-position semaphore type.

The color light signal is a recent development, consisting of a series of three lamps mounted vertically behind colored lenses on a mast with an oblong sheet-metal background. These lamps produce a light which can be easily distinguished at from 2,500 to 3,000 feet in bright sunlight, giving an indication which enginemen can recognize even more easily than the position of the semaphore.

The color light signal is considered a distinct advance in signal practice, since the same indications (red for stop, yellow for caution, and green for proceed) are used both day and night. As there is no mechanism, the color light signal is less subject to failure than other types. Another advantage is that the lights are placed directly in the engineman's line of vision.

The Southern was a pioneer in the introduction of color light signals, having installed them on the Atlanta-Birmingham line in 1924. In order to extend them over the Washington-Atlanta line, it was necessary to replace 821 signals. The entire line from Washington to Birmingham, 800 miles, is now equipped with this most modern type of signals, operated by alternating current, fed from a power transmission line of equal length. This is the longest continuous installation of this kind in existence.

Another Home.

I have no palace on a great high hill,
No vast estate which I can call my own—
Mine's but a cot which nestles in a vale,
Unpainted is the wood and rough the stone.

I have no far-flung view from my front door
As some may have from castles built on high;
But I can see as far, and maybe more,
By gazing up into God's endless sky.

And I thank God for these four walls of stone,
For here within I make my earthly home.
And I thank God again that I can see,
When looking up—another home for me.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

This is an age of "ready-mades." Ready-to-wear clothes, ready-to-eat foods, ready-to-use tools, and ready-to-take medicines. The world has come to feel that one can get anything and everything without hard work; but if the finished product is traced back to its source and followed through all its winding way, it will appear that hard, honest work produces all ready-made goods. The dress that is ready-to-wear goes back through the store, the railroad, the factory, the cotton field or the mulberry orchard where the silk worm toiled and spun; or the forest from which the pulp-mill gets its trees, on through the dye works and the loom where human energy spends itself in producing that fine dress. Advanced civilization works more than savage stages of civilization. The Indians did not work as hard as the men in the coal and iron mines, in steel mills, in the forests and lumber mills, and the women in the cotton and silk mills. The activities of this age are not all in the speeding automobiles, but much of it is in the factories where the machines are made. It looks easy when you go into the restaurant to set down under an electric fan on a hot day and order your dinner; but back in the kitchen somebody is sweltering under the heat and honestly striving to please that delicate, sensitive thing we call appetite.

This ready-to-wear idea has gone too far in its application to education and religion. Books are made to make learning a matter of memory. Many of the subjects that required hard study and individual thought have been dropped out of college courses, and easy elective studies put in their places. The result is that great scholarship is fading out from human society. There is, however, compensation in this. While great scholarship has been reduced, great numbers in scholarship have been increased. This is true of wealth. The rich man in the community or town in other days was an outstanding person; but there are so many more in good circumstances that only the very rich attract attention. In other words, there is a wider distribution of wealth and of education; and this is a gain for both.

Religion is a deeper and more vital thing, and is not so easily made ready for use, though modern education has undertaken to reduce religion to questions and answers, to beliefs and rules, to doing instead of being. Character cannot be put on a blackboard or a picture card, though these may help to express sentiments and teachings in the field of religious education; but religion is an experience, and not a creed. "Ye must be born again" is the vital thing in religion, and that experience must be realized by the individual who is saved. There is no ready-to-wear character that is reached by personal repentance and faith in God.

WILLIAM STALEY CHEATHAM.

William Staley Cheatham, our young friend in Washington, who has not only won distinction as a page in the United States Senate, but while doing so is winning his spurs in the literary world also. William Staley pages in the Senate during the day and then attends night school for improvement. He has kept a diary since being a page in the Senate, a part of which diary recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. For this article, the Post paid him the neat little sum of $600.00. Recently the Washington Times sponsored the "Brown of Harvard Contest" for Washington, offering a prize of $100.00 to the boy in any Washington high school who would write the best essay of a hundred words on "Why a Boy, after Finishing High School, should go to College." Ycung Cheatham entered the contest and won the hundred-dollar prize.

The Washington Times says in a recent issue that all the pages in Congress are now keeping a diary, and a great literary product may be expected as a harvest in the next few years. Our young friend, William Staley Cheatham, is the son of Mrs. Bessie Staley Cheatham, a graduate of Elon College, and a grandson of Dr. W. W. Staley, for eleven years president of Elon College.

Here is hoping that William Staley will keep up his literary activities and his quest for self-improvement until he shall be one day an illustrious graduate of Elon College. The hundred-word essay presented in the Washington Times "Brown of Harvard Contest" was as follows:

"We go to college to cultivate mind, heart and spirit, as well as learn from books. The better the mind is trained, the more quickly and with greater initiative it functions.

"College drills one in meeting and mixing with many people—an education in itself; offers opportunity of forming friendship, and trains how to keep and value real friendship.

"College breaks persons of fixed, fussy ways and unwise habits.

"It teaches how to receive alike hard knocks and honors; how to be a good loser and a good winner.

"It teaches that success at the finish requires an unending desperate struggle.

INVESTMENT TRUSTS.

An Englishman now living in Connecticut sends in the following letter concerning a type of investment just beginning to make headway in this country. Communications of an educational nature on investment matters are always welcomed by readers.

"It is gratifying to me to notice within the past four or five years," the contributor says, "that America is beginning to recognize the advantages of investment trusts. My father and several other members of our family have been investors in the securities of such concerns for almost half a century. Almost without exception, the investments have proved sound as to principal, and have paid from six to twelve per cent yearly income.

"It is thoroughly understandable why America has never before been interested in this manner of investing money. Only a nation of capitalists, a nation which is thoroughly familiar with securities all over the world, would be fertile ground in which investment trusts would flourish. England held such a position before the war. America is rapidly taking England's place since.

"Investment trusts operate upon several sound principles. The most important is that investing is a business which should be governed by facts, not 'hunches.' The money invested under the soundest English investment trusts was invested only after the most searching inquiry into the facts behind any security proposed for purchase.

"A second sound principle behind the plan was the principle of diversification. Only a limited amount of any one security was purchased, but bonds and stocks were bought all over the world, in countries where money was scarce and interest rates high as well as in countries where money was cheap and interest rates low.

"These trusts started in Scotland and England more than fifty years ago. A few shrewd investors would get together and offer to match their investment brains against the hard cash of their friends. In time corporations were formed, many selling bonds, preferred shares and common shares. By buying high income securities in out-of-the-way markets, making purchases during deflation periods and taking advantage of other favorable market conditions, the best of the investment trusts paid good interest on their bonds and preferred shares and high rate of dividends on their common shares for decades.

"Of course, the success of the honest companies caused some fakirs to try the same plan. Some organizers paid themselves exorbitant salaries. Others used the securities bought for the trust fund as collateral for bank loans and squandered the proceeds.

"The whole investment trust theory simmers down to this: that the purchase of a wide and diversified list of securities and keeping constantly in touch with world-wide conditions affecting these securities, is a task for experts. The ordinary investor cannot afford the time to do this, nor can he afford to hire it done. However, by joining hands with other investors similarly situated he can form an investing company called an investment trust which can compile statistical information concerning securities and employ investment brains to keep the money in the trust working profitably.

"Today England has more than a hundred investment trusts, with combined bond and share capital exceeding $600,000,000. I predict the next ten years will see such trusts increase enormously in the United States. Wise-investors will do well to begin to consider the advantages and disadvantages of using this method of keeping money at work."

Halsey Hammond, one of the best-known Y. M. C. A. workers in America, has retired as general secretary of the Bedford Branch in Brooklyn, after serving the organization for thirty-three years. He recently celebrated his 60th birthday and so reached the age limit for "Y" secretaries. Mr. Hammond for years had presided at the Sunday afternoon meetings addressed by Dr. S. Parkes Cadman.

THE MOTOR CAR AND SOCIETY.

It was said in England that the automobile had made forever impossible the success of a general strike which represented the attempt of a class to hold up all the people. The automobile means a wider range for individuals than is possible on foot. They can draw upon more territory; they have the advantage of more human contacts; they can pack into little time a great deal of fruitful activity; and this mobility and "cruising radius," so to speak, is of inestimable value to a population threatened with economic blockade.

Of similar tenor is the complaint of Socialist leaders in the United States that attendance upon Socialist meetings is suffering a great falling off because Socialists are too busy riding in automobiles with their families, or sitting at home listening to the radio. It is an unconscious confession of the power of economic plenty to satisfy the restlessness of progressive natures. And lest this should seem like the throwing of a sop, like drugging social aspirations with material supply, let it be said that the presence of a plentiful material supply indicates as nothing else can that the social conditions which the best socialistic minds have desired are coming by the way of modern production and management. The first requisite of social well-being is the production of wealth, and this means industry and management. If young Socialists are cut riding in their motor cars, or at home listening to the radio, it is an excellent thing. It indicates that the irritation of life no longer has its center for them in economic matters, but that they are economically free to enjoy the other and higher aspects of life.—Dearborn Ind.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

It is good to remind ourselves of the great end for which Christ's Church exists—the end which is so great, so directly of her essence, that if she misses it, all other success is vain. It is true that the tree cannot go back into the seed again; but it is likewise true that all the energy and life of a tree is engaged in producing countless seeds of the same kind as that from which it sprang. In the same way, though the Church cannot go back to her primitive dimensions, she exists, when all is said, to produce in these actual days men and women of that holy and joyful type. It is good for us to remember that: that God will judge us by the saints.

And so it is good for a man to ask himself whether in the midst of all his engagements he is still a humble man, who hopes only in the mercy of God, who bears, therefore, a loving and forgiving spirit towards his fellow-men, towards these even who may have sinned against him. And it is good for every Church, for our own Church, in this land, to be sure that what we are aiming at in all our ordinances and interests is that we ourselves may become simple and devout worshippers of the true and only God, people who want to know what Christ would have us do in the private business of our hearts and in the region of our public responsibilities.—John A. Hutton, D. D., In As At the First.

FOUGHT FOR JEWISH INDEPENDENCE.

The Maccabees was the name of a family in Syria, which during the second century before Christ, resisted the persecutions inflicted upon the Jewish nation by the Seleucidae.

After the death of Mattathias, the leader of the revolt, in 166 B. C., his son Judas Maccabaeus, defeated the Syrians in three battles, reconquered Jerusalem, purified the temple, and restored the worship of Jehovah, says the Kansas City Star. He was slain in ambush in 161 B. C., and was succeeded by his brother, Jonathan, who was raised to the dignity of high priest, but was afterward treacherously slain at Ptolemais in 144 B. C. by Tryphon, the guardian of the young Prince Antiochus Theos.

His brother, Simon, then succeeded to the leadership of the commonwealth, and completely established the independence of the Jews. After seven years of beneficent rule, he was murdered, together with his two sons, by his son-in-law, Ptolemy, who vainly hoped to be chosen his successor. John Hyrcanus, son of Simon, was the next ruler. He renewed the alliance with Rome, conquered Idumaëa, and took the title of king, 107 B. C. Syria became a Roman province in 63 B. C.

CHIMES DATE TO FIFTEENTH CENTURY.

The ringing of a bell, or bells, to give notice of the beginning of Church services, and at daylight and darkness, is a custom lost in antiquity. The curfew was an ancient custom that has only recently passed away, and we still have the bell for a variety of useful purposes in our present-day requirements. People visiting Europe for the first time are surprised at the melodies and peals of bells they hear. Some peals consist of as many as fifty bells, and the skill with which they are manipulated only comes after long practice in the art.

Historical documents show that there was a set of chimes about the year 850, which consisted of small suspended bells that were tapped with a wooden mallet. Of course, bells are much older than this, but not chimes. Half-swinging chimes were first introduced in the fifteenth century. In most cases, for chiming, the bell hangs dead, and is struck with the clapper or with an outside or free hammer, or they are swung only short distances.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

By WARREN H. DENISON, Secretary.

There is Nothing Like It.

The annual every-member canvass is the best-known plan for financing the local Church and for raising its benevolences. Nothing takes its place. It trains the canvassers. It informs the congregation of the actual needs of the fields. It adds to permanent interest in the work. If you do use it, please use it properly. It never fails when given a fair chance. It will not work itself nor will any plan that has value. We are glad to furnish free upon request a book of instructions for any Church that will follow the plan. If your Church does not use it you are the loser. If you do not follow the plan, do not expect results.

God-Given Opportunity.

Mr. Lelan McReynolds, promotional secretary of our Defiance College, says: "Tithing, like prayer, is a God-given opportunity for well-rounded spiritual development. Failure to use this opportunity is to deprive oneself of proper growth and to deprive God of our fullest possibilities, which, together with the tithe, comprise the minimum just return on His investment in giving us life and on His wealth intrusted to us."

Delegates (No. 2).

We should like to stress again the importance of the conferences sending strong and full delegations to the General Convention at Urbana, Ill., October 20-28. Such a delegation as will worthily represent your Conference. They should be men, women and young people who have the interests of the Church at heart and who are informed about the work and needs of the Church. It should not be a delegation on a mere pleasure trip, not a sight-seeing expedition, not those who merely wish to take a trip, visit some friends, or have a holiday. It should be your best representatives—those who are anxious to see the work of our Church go forward and the kingdom of God advanced. We have many great problems which will need our best brains, consecrated hearts, and need them at every session. It will not do to select just anybody. We should take pride in having every delegation full and most representative. The people you send from your Conference give the whole Church an impression of your Conference.

Forgot Him.

We have learned of several cases where the Conference stewardship secretary was given no place on the annual program to make a report. A number of times he has been entirely forgotten. You should hold him to account. He should be required to make a written report. The Conference should take great care in choosing its stewardship secretary. His work is exceedingly important; all the more so as many do not understand at all what is meant by Christian stewardship. Thousands never hear of it in their own Churches. Multitudes do not know how to apply it. Distorted and fanatical views are heard everywhere. Christians of many years have never had even tithing explained to them. Stewardship is one of the greatest and most vital themes being considered by the whole Church today. Your stewardship secretary has a supreme opportunity. See that he has opportunity for his work and hold him to his responsibility.

Your Church?

What Church of the Christians will be the first to give as much for benevolences as for its current expenses? Will it be your Church?

SPIRITUAL LIFE AND OUR MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

DUTIES OF THE SUPERINTENDENT FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

*"Take time to be holy, speak oft with thy Lord."
"And this is the confidence that we have in Him, that if we ask anything according to His will He heareth us."*

"Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against Thee."

The Superintendent of the Department of Spiritual Life has a very important part of the work of the Woman's Mission Boards and local societies assigned to her, and through her consecrated efforts the spiritual life of the women of the Churches should be developed. These officers of boards, Conferences and local societies should be women "filled with the spirit" themselves, that they may be used of the Master to lead others to a deeper consecration. They cannot successfully urge daily Bible study for others and be careless themselves; neither can they convince others of the power of prayer if they do not experience its influence in their daily lives. Select these officers after prayer and careful consideration and then support their efforts by continued guidance for them as they assume their duties.

I. The Convention Superintendent of Spiritual Life.

The Convention Superintendent should write at least quarterly to Superintendent of Spiritual Life in the various Conferences, calling to their attention new literature which she may have for their help, asking for their plans and seek to encourage them to persevere in this important work. She should always correspond with Conference Superintendents regarding the regular work of prayer for home and foreign missions in January, for the young people in our schools and colleges in February, and other Church-wide prayer observance called for during the year.

At the end of each year, the Convention Superintendent should present a complete summary of the spiritual life of the Convention as far as figures can tell it; at the end of the two years, submit a report to the Woman's Missionary Convention. These facts to be obtained from the reports of her Conference Superintendents, which should be forwarded to her promptly.

II. The Conference Superintendent of Spiritual Life.

The Conference Superintendent should be the assistant and inspiration of the Superintendent of Spiritual Life in the various local societies.

The first duty is to see that a superintendent is elected in each and every local society. Write the President, asking her to appoint this officer until next election, when she should be regularly elected. Show her the importance of this, and the loss to the society in failing to do so.

By all means get a Superintendent of Spiritual Life in every society.

Another duty is to inform, inspire and co-operate with the local superintendent at the close of the Conference year, prepare a complete summary of the spiritual work of your Conference for the annual meeting, and send a copy to your Convention superintendent.

III. Superintendent of Spiritual Life for Local Societies.

It is in the local society that this work will function, and to the local Superintendent of Spiritual Life is given under God's guidance and wisdom the wonderful opportunity of leading the entire membership to higher spiritual living. "Of ourselves, we can do nothing; with God, all things are possible."

The superintendent's work may be outlined under certain general heads:

I. Prayer Life of the Society.

(1) The officers of the society should always covenant together for a daily prayer for each other for God's blessing on the society, the local Church, the pastor and the Church at large.

(2) Every missionary circle should be a prayer band, praying daily for each other and for the advancement of God's kingdom.

(3) The regular circle meeting should open with a circle of prayer, every member taking part.

(4) Prayer meetings for special calls and special days should be arranged, remembering the promise to those "gathered together in my name."

(5) Strive to make prayer a vital living factor in the life of the society. "Lord, teach us to pray."

II. Bible Study.

(1) In every way possible enlist the women in studying God's word.

Urge the society to open the meeting with a studied devotional. The Christian Missionary and THE CHRISTIAN SUN both give good suggestions for Bible study.

If possible, have society members take a regular course in Bible study at the Chautauqua, which is held annually at Elon College or Blue Ridge, N. C.

"Search the Scriptures."

(2) Personal evangelism.

Several weeks before your yearly evangelistic services, organize a class in methods of personal work with your pastor as leader and teacher. Personal soul-winning is the Christian's greatest privilege.

III. The Family Altar.

Let every woman resolve: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

If we are to bring higher levels of spirituality into the lives of our women, we must begin in the home by gathering the family daily around the throne of grace. Through the printed page and spoken word, the responsibility for family religion should be driven home to the hearts of the women of the Church.

IV. Tithing.

The Superintendent of Spiritual Life will confer and co-operate with the treasurer in promoting tithing. She will also bring the important subject of the life enlistment before the society.

It is our firm conviction that a department, such as is herein outlined, will fill a much-felt want in the lives of our women and in our woman's mission work. Our members will be developed spiritually, membership increased, and our treasuries filled.

Superintendent Spiritual Life.

THE UNKNOWN BIBLE.

The Bible is often referred to as a library of sixty-six different books rather than as a single Book. This is the truth of the situation. But the sad thing of it is that so few people really know the Bible. There are many who know large parts of the Bible. They may even boast of knowing entire chapters by heart. They may also know what those chapters mean. But so few know the background of it all—the historicity of the various books, and the conditions that occasioned their being written. How often truth-seeking laymen will say that they wish their pastor would give them more about the origin of the Bible—how the various books of the Bible were selected, why some were chosen for the canon and others left out, and why the Catholics have a different attitude toward and interpretation of the Bible than the Protestants have. These interesting facts about the Bible and its making, and many others, every minister ought to know and thousands of laymen would like to know.

Of course, every theological seminary gives this information to its students in a full and inclusive manner. But many ministers who have not had seminary training and the great body of laymen have had no opportunity to secure these important facts.

The best introduction to this realm of thought is found in a very recent book bearing the title, "The Unknown Bible." Dr. Conrad H. Moehlman, professor of history of Christianity in Rochester Theological Seminary, is the author. This illuminating book which will be welcomed by thousands of ministers and laymen who want to know the real facts is published by George H. Doran Co., of New York, and sells for $2.00 a copy.

The author is a recognized authority on the subject discussed. His style is forceful, and his conclusions convincing. The book will not only be of interest to those who have never made a study of the historicity of the Bible, but will also prove to be of interest to seminary graduates as well, serving as a stimulating review of their courses in Old Testament and New Testament theology, and the history of Christianity.

RUTH, THE FAITHFUL DAUGHTER.

Once upon a time there lived in the city of Bethlehem a man, Elimelech, and his wife, Naomi, and two sons, Mahlon and Chilon. There was a famine in that land, so they moved to the city of Moab. Soon Elimelech died and the sons were married to Orpah and Ruth. The sons soon died also.

It was then that Naomi thought of her own people back in Bethlehem, and she had heard, too, that God had made it to rain. So she, with her two daughters-in-law, started to Bethlehem. After they had gone a little way, Naomi said to them, "Return each to her mother's house." Orpah turned back, but Ruth would not. She said, "Entreat me not to leave thee, nor to turn away from thee, for whither thou goest I will go, and whither thou lodgest I will lodge, and thy people shall be my people and thy God my God." So Naomi took Ruth with her to Bethlehem. And they reached the land in the time of the barley harvest. Ruth worked in the field of a mighty man of wealth, whose name was Boaz. Boaz fell in love with Ruth and married her. The happiest time of all was when God sent a little baby boy, Obed, to Ruth and Boaz.

FLOWERS GO TO BED.

Perhaps some nights when you are tired, and it takes so long to get ready for bed, you almost wish you were a buttercup or some other little flower, and that you didn't have to bother about undressing. But flowers, too, have to get ready for the night.

The buttercups do not have to undress, but they have to get ready for the night. It would never, never do to let their precious pollen stay out in the dampness. So, in the afternoon, when it is almost time for the dew to fall, the buttercups begin to close their petals, so as to make a sort of tent over their pollen to keep it dry.

Many other flowers that face the sky must put up their petal tents at night. The clover puts its leaves to bed, folding the leaflets carefully together. The pea family folds itself away at night, too, and probably, if you were a little owl that could wander around in the dark, you would see that almost any plant has something to do to get ready for bed.—Selected.

A BOY I KNOW.

I know a boy who has a watch,
But never thinks to wind it;
And when he ought to be on time
He's always just behind it.
And when he has a task to do,
He says, "Wait till tomorrow";
And when he cannot find his things,
He simply says, "I'll borrow."

That boy may make a business man—
I know he wants to do it!
But he must mend his careless ways,
Or he will live to rue it.
That boy must do his work today
And plan work for tomorrow;
Good habits, everybody knows,
Are something boys can't borrow.

A SWALLOW STORY

BY LOUISA MAY ALCOTT

A man lay on a pile of new-mown hay, in a great barn, looking up at the swallows who darted and twittered above him. He envied the cheerful little creatures, for though he had many friends, much money, and the beautiful gift of writing songs that everybody loved to sing, he wasn't happy. You see he lived alone and went around with such a gloomy face that no one liked to speak to him. He took no notice of friends and neighbors; neither used his money for himself nor others, found no beauty in the world, and so it was hard for him to be happy anywhere.

As he lay alone on the sweet-smelling hay, with the afternoon sunshine streaming in and the busy birds chirping overhead, he said sadly: "Happy swallows, I wish I were one of you, for you have no pains nor sorrows, and your cares are very light. All summer you live gayly together, and when winter comes you fly away to the lovely South."

"Neighbors, do you hear what that lazy creature down there is saying?" cried a swallow, peeping over the edge of her nest, and addressing several others who sat on a beam nearby.

"We hear, Mrs. Skim, and quite agree with you that it's very little that he knows about our affairs," answered one of the sparrows with a sprite chirp, like a scornful laugh. "We work harder than he does any day. Did he build his own house, does he get his daily bread for himself? how many neighbors does he help? how much of the world does he see? and who is the happier for his being alive?"

"Cares indeed!" cried another; "I wish he'd undertake to feed and teach my brood. Much he knows about the anxieties of birds!" and the little mother hustled away to get supper for the young ones, whose bills were always gaping wide.

"I, for my part, don't envy him," cried Gossip Wing, who was fond of speaking her mind. "Men and women think they are lots better than birds. Now, just look at this man and see how he wastes his life. There never was any one with a better chance of doing good, and yet he mopes and dawdles his time away."

"Well," spoke kindhearted Mrs. Dart, "I quite agree with you that he would be happier if he would stop wearing such a sour face and forget himself a little, but maybe he doesn't know how. I believe he would be glad, Gossip Wing, if you would tell him a few things that he could do that would make him happier."

"Well, well, my dear," answered Gossip Wing, "I have seen a great deal of the world, and this poor man is welcome to my advice if he will listen. He could sing some of his great songs for some poor shut-ins; then he'd see that every time that he made any one else a little happier, he would feel happier too. And besides, one time I slipped into the Sunday School and listened just as carefully as could be, and this is what the teacher said, 'If you wish to be happy, you must try to make some one else happy.' And when I looked around I saw a beautiful sign which said, 'Love one another.' Just think, if we are ever so busy loving each other and trying to make one another happy, we won't have time to be sad."

The man rose with a start. "Thank you, neighbors, and good-night," he said with the first smile he had worn for weeks. "I'll remember what you've said."—In Morning Glories.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

THE CALL OF MOSES.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Certainly I will be with thee."
—Ex. 3:12.

LESSON: Exodus 2:11-4:18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 90:12-17.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Acts 7:22-34; Hebrews 11:24-26.

"Unto whom much is given, of him will much be required." Moses had had much. Life had been good to him. Spared from an untimely death by the strategy of a mother and the sentiment of a princess, trained in the highest culture of the time, given a place of ease and preferment in the court of one of the greatest nations of ancient times, he had received much. By that law which the Master of life announced, but which had been operative since before Moses' time, he was expected to give much. It is to the lasting glory of the man that he was a good steward of that which had been committed into his hands.

Moses' first attempt as a deliverer of his people was not very successful. When he, who had refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, and who chose rather to share the afflictions of his people, saw one of his brethren being maltreated by an Egyptian, his righteous indignation blazed forth with such energy that he smote the haughty Egyptian and killed him. He then buried him and went his way. When he attempted to settle a dispute between two of his brethren the next day, one of them reminded him of his crime, and when later it came to Pharaoh's ears, the young Moses was forced to flee for his life. There were lessons yet to be learned before this young man could deliver his people.

The next forty years of his life were most significant. He lived in Midian with Jethro, who had given him one of his daughters in marriage. It was here, as a tender of flocks, that he had time for reflection and meditation which gave him that sense of mission and that more comprehensive preparation which found their culmination in today's lesson. During those years his heart was with his brethren in Egypt, and he was walking in that deepening fellowship with Jehovah that was to bring him to that open vision of Jehovah which marked a turning point in his life and made him the great leader and deliverer of his people.

The setting for Moses' call was very simple and very suggestive. He had led his flock to the back side of the desert, to the mountain of God which was called Horeb. The point to be borne in mind is the fact that the Hebrews thought that Jehovah was localized. He was supposed to dwell in Horeb, and it was only natural that as Moses, reared by a godly mother, should have had his thoughts turned to holy things as he approached the place where, above all others, Jehovah was supposed to dwell. It was here that Moses had the vision of the burning bush, and it was here that he received his divine call to service. As he turned aside to investigate the unusual phenomenon, he found himself on holy ground. He was in the presence of the living God.

Jehovah's words are suggestive. "I have seen the affliction of my people, I have heard their cry, I know their sorrows, I am come down to deliver them." Here was a revelation of a God who entered into the experiences of His people; a God who cared tremendously. Here was a God who was for mercy and justice, and who could be depended upon to help to right things that were wrong. It was not a full revelation of the God whom Jesus Christ revealed, but it was sufficient for the day and time. Here was that doctrine which arms the social worker today, and inspires all those who are trying to build a new world.

"Come now, therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt." The idea was preposterous, it seemed. Who was this young upstart that he should go to the children of Israel, to say nothing of going before the mighty Pharaoh and demanding the release of a host of slaves? And if, perchance, they should ask him who had sent him, what should he tell them? The answer was forthcoming. The one who had appeared unto Moses was the "I am." He was the self-existent, living God, who had sent His servant. And the guaranty of success was in the fact that this living God was to be with him.

"And Moses answered and said, "But." Men are always saying that when God calls them. They argue and discuss, but they are slow to obey. The Lord knew the limitations of Moses. He knew that Moses was not a brilliant orator, and that he was slow of speech, but the Lord knew that it was not a place for an orator; it was a job for a man of wisdom and patience and human sympathy, and faith. As a matter of fact, when God calls a man He knows the man's limitations better than the man himself. But out of those very limitations is the strength of God made perfect.

Before closing this rambling, jumbled discussion of this great lesson, there are several thoughts that need emphasis. First, Moses' call came in a situation that made it easier for him to hear it. The average man lives in such a hustle and bustle, his life is so crowded with material things that he does not take time to tune in or listen in. One of the best reasons for going to Church in this busy age is just here. The busier we are through the week the more we need the quiet time in the sanctuary and in the place of prayer on Sunday.

Second, the call came in terms of human need. God did not ask Moses to subscribe to a creed, or to systematize a theology; He called his attention to human need and challenged him to do something to relieve the situation.

Third, God promised His resources to Moses if he undertook the mission. The Master Himself said that He was with His disciples even unto the end of the world.

Suggestive Teaching Points.

1. Privileges involve responsibilities.
2. Visions come for the sake of some service that one can render.
3. Jehovah speaks in language that men can understand.
4. God is a personality.
5. God enters into the experiences of men.
6. Oppression and injustice do not escape the attention of the Almighty.
7. Social reform is not to come by glib speaking, but by patient continuance in sacrificial leadership.
8. God pledges His resources to those who undertake His program.

9. It is a great day in a man's life when he meets God.

10. Humility is a mark of a really great man.

11. Let no man think more highly of himself than he ought to think, but let him think soberly.

12. God's programs are to be carried on by human agencies.

13. The ultimate test of a minister is not silver-tongued oratory, but a genuine interest in people.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

July 18, 1926.

Some Bible Hints.

Nature reveals to us the perfections of God, His power, wisdom, care (v. 1).

Without words, both day and night shout to us their story of the works of God—a message heard only by the mind and heart (vs. 2, 3).

Nature's "line," or instruction is universal. God is not without witness anywhere. Are we sharp and eager scholars? (v. 4.)

As the sun yields heat to all, so God seeks to shower His blessings upon us, revealing Himself as the Giver of all good (v. 6).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The outdoors teaches us God's rich provision for all our needs. The earth responds to our labor, not once, but yearly. It is God's storehouse, holding everything for us.

The birds should teach us faith and trust. Instinct leads them to places where they may live. They follow their nature and find what they need.

The stars are immense worlds, much larger than this world. Does not this speak of the greatness of God? How grateful we should be that He is our Father!

The air, so plentiful, so free, tells us that God's gifts and His grace, are all free. All things are ours to enjoy. No one can take the air or the beauty of the earth from us.

A Few Illustrations.

No plants grow without water. No soul can live that does not drink the water of life—daily, continually.

Nature is a constant challenge to us. It hides wealth in the hills and cries, "Come, work, dig me out, and use me!" Nature is God's school.

Roses have thorns. Things are not always what they seem. It may be possible to produce a thornless rose, for nature may be changed. Human nature can, at any rate, and it needs to be changed.

The out-of-doors teaches us patience. The plowman must wait for his harvest. God teaches us that we must wait as well as work. Let us curb impatience.

To Think About.

In what sense is man a "maker of things?"

What lesson have you learned from an outdoor object?

What outdoor study has helped you? How?

A Cluster of Quotations.

The man that does not study some phase of nature, botany, geology, and so on, is missing much joy in life.—James Marrou.

Then bless the shadows, the beautiful shadows, And take this thought as thou goest abroad,

That in heaven and earth

Shades owe their birth

To light; and light is the shadow of God.—Anon.

What lessons the sea teaches us! It is calm, like life at times; then stormy, also like life, causing shipwrecks. If we sail life's sea we should have Jesus with us in the ship.—Morris Martin.

A torrent of rain beat down a spray of roses growing outside the house. Then the rain stopped, the sun shone, and the spray lifted its head. God has given us power to overcome all things.—R. Roberts.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

MONDAY.

THE VALUE OF BEING READY.

"The wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps."—Matt. 25:1-8.

Wisdom consisted in being ready for what they might be called upon to do. They went so far as to prepare even for the unexpected.

He who prepares for the expected only will soon be confronted with the unexpected and with which he is powerless to cope. Abraham Lincoln said: "I will get ready, and some day my chance will come." Daniel Webster was once asked how long it took him to prepare that speech against Haynes. He replied "Forty years."

Life is made up of many opportunities and critical situations which can be met only by those who have prepared for them—taken oil in their vessels.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray that we may learn the value of living near to God, and that we may have the wisdom to take Jesus as our Guide and Companion. May this blessing come to every member of our household and to the world. In Christ's name. Amen.

TUESDAY.

WHAT IS THIS REST?

"There remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God."—Heb. 4:9-11.

The Lord's scheme of the universe, humanity, and all nature is alternate labor and rest. In the universe it is day and night. With nature, it is summer and winter. With man it is work and sleep—of no one and nothing but God. It is said, "He neither slumbers nor sleeps." And it is He who has made the world and all that in it is, and it is He who knew the need of this rest so well that he set apart one day out of seven, in addition to the nights, for man to rest from his labors. It is impossible for man to violate this law of God and not pay the penalty both physically and spiritually.

The text refers to a Christian's life as a struggle—one continuous and constant exertion, sorrows, sufferings, broken hearts, and the miseries of sin. All great leaders have felt it. Moses cried out against his burdens; Paul almost sank under his tasks. But he who bids come to Him and live also promises that the burdens, courageously borne, shall be rewarded with rest, by knowing that his opportunities are improved, that his faithfulness is rewarded, that he comes to an end that is victorious and glorious. What a rest!

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray Thee that we may bind ourselves together and to Thee to work with increased devotion for the cause of God and righteousness in the world. May our lives, whether in burdens or at rest from labor, find ourselves acceptable at the throne of grace. In His name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A GREAT NEED.

"I have need of patience."—Heb. 10:35-39.

Impatience is one of our greatest sins. We all seem to demand that we shall have action now and results right on the dot, and if we do not get it we fret and fume and use "Sunday School" words. We forget that this is a form of unbelief. It takes God's plans away from Him and forgets that He will reward in due time all things rightly done, and "doeth all things well to those that love and serve Him."

We are called upon for a calm, strong, clear-minded and patient endurance, despite the lack of success. Virtue that withstands blows of circumstances is that which wins through to better things.

Haste is bad. It carries nothing through well; it deprives one of thinking properly; it destroys prayer life; it gives no time for essential meditation, and is productive of nothing that really is good! Those who do things well are those who, with comparative ease, are thorough and continuous in effort. "In patience possess ye your souls."

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, increase our faith in Thy goodness, and strengthen us in patience and thorough effort for service and good of the world. Amen.

THURSDAY.

RELIGION IN THE NIGHT.

"Stand in awe and sin not; commune with your own heart and be still."—Psa. 4:4.

Silence, aloneness, uninterrupted quiet, meditation are necessary to realizing the presence of God. There are lots of activities and movements for the Lord, and these are accompanied with much noise often, but He is not so much in the earthquake and the storm as He is in "The still and small voice."

This is a noisy age, and it may be we think it is a godless age because we are listening more to the noise than to the silences; that we are rushing ourselves and never take time to commune on our bed and be still, that we may sin not. We spend our days busy, our nights in pleasure, and catch a nap just before day—no time to commune with the Lord. Thus the tendency is to hide His presence from us. It is in the quiet and deep stillness of the soul that we draw near to God and He draws near to us.

Prayer.—Our Father, open our minds to the soul's highest calls. Bring us to use the darkness of the nights to hide the visible world from our eyes, that the soul may catch visions of the eternal and the infinite, and we may be patient for God. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE PERILS OF GREAT RICHES

"For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"—Matt. 16:24-27.

Just at present our nation is enjoying an epoch of great industrial success and commercial gain. Better to have it said of America that she is advancing in righteousness and gaining in Christian influence. America boasts of 321 billions of dollars. Great Britain possesses eighty-nine billions of dollars. France claims to hold sixty-eight billions, Germany treasures thirty-six billions, Canada has twenty-two billions, and China nineteen billions. Thus America owns nearly half the total riches of the world, with resources and productive powers that may soon make it the owner of more than half.

This cause of national prestige, great privilege and stupendous responsibility should sober our thought. It may spell ruin and collapse. Individuals have been ruined by too much wealth, or by wealth minus righteousness. "Many a man going up the hill of prosperity has met his soul coming down"—many a man and many a group, including nations. We are rich toward Caecar. Are we as rich toward God? We are only as great as the greatness of God is in us.

Prayer.—Ask that our hearts may be cleansed and purified of all mean and selfish thoughts, and that each of us may grow in grace.

SATURDAY.

THE SOUL'S HARDEST TRIALS.

"It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord."—Lamentations 3:22-33.

There are few nobler characters on the pages of history than the prophet Jeremiah. He is called a prophet, indeed one of the major prophets, and rightly so, not only because of the words he uttered, but also because in his life and conduct and sacrificial effort, he so much resembled the Christ who came to save. What earthly reward did Jeremiah receive? He answers that question for us when in the opening words of the chapter he says: "I am the man that hath seen affliction." Like the Master, he received the crown of martyrdom for his efforts.

The life of Jeremiah lays before us a great truth. It says that a good life in this world is not always necessarily rewarded with success and prosperity. It says that a man may lead such a life, and yet in the end be wounded by the very ones who ought to be his friends.

The tragic life of the prophet says more. We must seek goodness for its own sake, because it has an eternal obligation upon our souls, and only by espousing the goodness of Christ through faith do we really claim our heritage as the sons of God.

Prayer.—That God may keep us ever mindful of our duty to Him and to our fellow-men, and that He may give us strength and will to perform it lovingly and faithfully.

SUNDAY.

WHEN JESUS COMES INTO THE HEART.

"He must increase, but I must decrease."—John 3:25-31.

Before Jesus came, the figure of John the Baptist, the stern prophet of the wilderness, loomed large on the horizon. Multitudes flocked to hear him, and they paid him the most extravagant compliments.

If there were ever any doubts as to the bigness of this man's heart, they must needs be dispelled by his noble response. After explaining that this new Teacher was the One of whom he had spoken, he declared: "He must increase, but I must decrease." His joy was made full in the coming of the Messiah.

When Jesus comes into our hearts and takes His abode with us, it means that from that day forward there must be less of self to make room for Christ. No life has more than a limited amount of room. That space cannot be filled entirely by thoughts of self, if Jesus is to enter. When He comes we must decrease. Self dwindles and perishes, while He is exalted and honored.

Prayer.—That all may learn to work with heart and hand for Jesus' sake, at every opportunity, to show our love for Him.

"Sail on, O union, strong and great;
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate.
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea,
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee.
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears
Are all with thee, are all with thee."

"Now suppose a man suddenly fell off the river bank into the river. He can't swim. He cries out for assistance. His wife hears him and runs to the bank. Why does she run to the bank?"

And the bright pupil in the rear piped out: "To draw his insurance money."—Loomis News.

OVERBY.

On June 21st, Mr. J. H. Overby, age 41, was instantly killed by being caught in a brick machine. It was one of the saddest as well as most horrible deaths that has come to this section.

His father is our beloved Henry Overby, a deacon of Wentworth Church. His mother is sister to the late S. C. Hobby. Several brothers and sisters survive him, besides his wife and five children. It was a shock to his many friends as well as to his own people.

Bro. Overby was a member of Wentworth Church, but living in another section only visited his Church now and then. He was superintendent of a Sunday School at Moneure, N. C.

May the richest blessings of our Heavenly Father rest upon all the bereaved and bring them together again in a better world.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

THE CHURCH AND HOME LIFE.

There were a couple of significant sentences in the syndicated story of home life under the Soviet regime by Leon Trotsky that was printed in many American daily papers a few days ago: "The institution of civil marriage was already a heavy blow to the traditional consecrated family which lived a great deal for appearances. . . . The blow to the power of the Church also was a blow to the family."

A truer thing could not be said, nor could the result of tearing down the Church be more aptly stated. The sacredness of family life rests on religious sanctions. When the Church goes, all religious sanctions are undermined, and the family goes. To strike at one is to strike at the other.

And yet in America, where only a minority of the people are actually enrolled as professed Christians, we have countless numbers who wish the Christian family preserved while yet paying no allegiance to the religious institutions that alone can protect the family. The output of the divorce courts is the obvious answer to these. Hasty marriages performed by civil magistrates lead unerringly to those courts. Homes in which no family altar has been erected, in which husband and wives lead selfish lives of pleasure-seeking, prayerless, religionless, godless, must run their short courses of unconsecrated family life, and then come to an end. The hateful, sordid story told to the judge may differ in different cases, but the substance is the same—a marriage, a home, in which God was left out, has banished love and true happiness as well. To oust Almighty God was to aim at the family the same sort of blow that has been so effectual in Soviet Russia. And what government in that distressed country has succeeded in doing on a national scale what is done with equal success by godless husbands and wives in America.

Would we protect our families and our homes? We can do it only by stimulating a real personal religion in the family, and by protecting and building up the Christian Church.

Trotsky speaks as a true philosopher: "The blow to the power of the Church was a blow to the family."—The Living Church.

Every religion in the world can point with pride to certain of its disciples. Assuredly, every Church in Christendom has produced genuine Christians from the standpoint of character and conduct. All that this amounts to is the simple fact that there are a great many people who are better than their creed. On the other hand, not a few Christians fail to measure up to the responsibilities of the program which they have accepted. These people have a good creed, but do not live up to it.

Do not be content merely with holding meetings. Do some work outside the society of your choosing. Help in an every-member canvass of the Church; become responsible for the support of a native missionary; have a clean-up week; organize a junior or intermediate society.

Excepting the Bible, "Pilgrim's Progress" has been translated into more languages and dialects than any other book. The number now exceeds 107.

Four million people in the United States moved into new homes May 1st, at a moving cost of $68,000,000.

The southern home and the Southern Railway

IT is for the creation and preservation of the home that the world's work goes on. And when it is well done and prosperous times come, it is the home that benefits most. Besides being the foundation of the State, the home is the ALL of our civilization.

A myriad of life's necessities—food, clothing and household goods—passes over the rails of the Southern Railway System and into homes every day. And every day thousands of freight cars loaded with products from the South are carried along the rails of the Southern, bound for distant markets. Thus the South grows and develops.

Carrying the world's goods to the South, and the South's goods to the world, day in and day out, is the service of the Southern Railway System to the Southern home. This regular, dependable and economical transportation is the aim and the test of good railroad service.

In the last three years more than $700,000,000 has been spent in the construction of new homes in the states of the South served by the Southern.

ONE OF THE ORIGINAL CELESTIAL BLESSINGS.

The Indian is the real advocate of corn. To him it was the staff of life. Both he and it are distinctly American. The sailing vessels which carried back to Europe news of the discovery of the one bore also samples of the other. Corn has meant so much to the Indian in his economic life that he came to reverence it. It was one of the four original celestial blessings sent down to him from heaven, the Indianapolis News says. The others were squash, beans and tobacco. Corn meal is used by the Pueblos and other Indians in all their religious ceremonies. No tribal undertaking is complete, no official pronouncement is effective, unless they are accompanied, at their reception, by the sprinkling of the sacred meal. The medicine man finds in the meal, blessed and sanctified by his own hands, his chief ally in imploring the blessing of the good spirits which rule the Indian world, or in driving away the evil spirits which threaten to usurp the functions of the good. Growing corn will wither and die, seeds will not sprout, horses and sheep will perish, families cannot prosper and the evil spirits of misfortune and disease will sweep the villages unless the sacred meal is sprinkled at the beginning of all undertakings. The chief fetich of the Pueblo medicine man is an ear of spotless white corn, adorned with a plume of downy white feathers bound to the top. Known as the mother, this ear of corn represents the mother of all mankind. With it the medicine man performs wonders. Pollen of corn and squash, especially among the Navajoes, performs an important function in sanctifying all undertakings. It is to them the most spiritual of material offerings, and no ceremony connected with growth is complete without it. Its symbol, as well as that of growing corn, often appears in the sand paintings made famous by this artistic people. The ancestors of the Indians, the so-called cliff dwellers, cave dwellers and mound builders, used corn. Among arrowheads, pottery, stone implements and other artifacts found in the caves, cliff dwellings, mounds and ruins of communal houses of these prehistoric people, little ears of corn are often discovered. To these people the great American commodity probably was as essential as it became later to their descendants.

BRINKLEY.

Even at this distance from his departure, the writer feels that he would be derelict to duty if he did not pen a line in honor, esteem and admiration of the name and memory of his good friend and brother in the Lord Jesse W. Brinkley. Bro. Brinkley passed to his reward from his home near Driver, Nansemond County, Va., April 16, 1926. He was born February 10, 1849, thus being in the 78th year of a rich, consecrated Christian life. He was married December 20, 1871, and leaves to mourn their loss the faithful companion of more than a half-century of happy wedded life, five sons—Willie, Rowland and Carlton, Norfolk, Va.; Linwood, Chicago, Ill.; Edward, Drivers, Va.—and two daughters, Mrs. J. T. Wilroy, Portsmouth, Va., and Miss Helen, Drivers.

Bro. Brinkley served many years as deacon and Sunday School treasurer in his Church (Berea, Nansemond), and was ever faithful, loyal and liberal to his Church and all needy and worthy enterprises. He was one of the noblest, best, gentlest Christian spirits this writer ever knew, and his life in the community was a blessing and a benediction. Verily, he rests from his labors, and his good works follow him.

J. O. ATKINSON.

Resolutions.

Whereas, on April 16, 1926, God, in His infinite love, took from our Church, Sunday School and community our beloved brother, Jesse W. Brinkley, we wish to express our appreciation of him:

First.—That we remember him as being a most faithful member in all his duties to both Church and Sunday School, his loyalty was not surpassed. We commend his life to all of our members, and may the influence of it draw us nearer to God and heaven.

Second.—While we realize that we have lost a faithful and long-lived member, and mourn our loss, we are submissive to Him who doeth all things well.

Third.—That we sympathize with his dear family, ones who nursed him so faithfully, and may our Father sustain them.

Fourth.—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be put on the records of Berea Church, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Prizes for Hymn Tunes.—

The Homiletic Review offers an annual prize for hymns. The first prize went this year to Prof. H. H. Tweedy, of the Yale Divinity School; the second to Rev. Harry W. Farrington, of New York City, and the third to Mr. H. R. MacFadyen, of Old Hickory, Tenn. The same publication is now offering fifty dollars in prizes for tunes for these hymns. Full details may be had from the magazine, New York, N. Y.

A Dry Swim.—

At the recent quadrennial session of the Southern Methodist Church a commission was appointed to study the question of unity with their Northern brethren, but with the provision that they should hold no communication with any other Church. In commenting on this action, the Northwestern Christian Advocate, published in Chicago, summed the matter up in these familiar lines:

"Mother, may I go out to swim?

Yes, my darling daughter.

Hang your clothes on a hickory limb,

But don't go near the water."

And the Advocate called the action a "dry swim," which it seems to be.

Names the Six Fears.—

After forty years in the ministry, the bishop of London has named the six fears which he says weighs down and oppresses the human race. He names first the fear of death; second, the burden of unacknowledged and unconfessed sin; third, the haunting temptation which goes on year after year; fourth, the darkness of doubt; fifth, the sense of being enslaved by creed; and sixth, an extraordinary and inexplicable melancholy. We might analyze our own minds and see how many of these fears are hindering us from the best of which we are capable. The bishop declared that the fifth fear on his list had all but kept him from being ordained. We all have fears—are they these fears? Some one should tell us how to be free from them.

Figures and a Need.—

There were 144,450 Sunday Schools in the United States in 1922, and most of these were located in the open country or in villages of 1,500 or less. Were all the large schools to be disbanded, the Sunday School enrollment in the United States would not be alarmingly reduced. The average enrollment for the American Sunday Schools is sixty, which means that thousands have from ten to twenty on their rolls and many thousands more with fifty or less. These are the figures. It is a fact that most of the books on Sunday School work are written for the large city school, and the study conducted is centered about the work of these great schools. The need is for a good collection of books on the work of these thousand of little Sunday Schools, and college courses centered about the needs of the Sunday School which the average man or woman will have to attend and work in.

A Rare Occurrence.—

The Euclid Heights Presbyterian Church has had an unusual experience in having had as its pastors a father and his three sons. Rev. Luther B. Cross and his sons Laurence, Robert and Frank have all served or are serving as pastors of the Church. Some years ago Rev. Laurence Cross was called to the pastorate of the Church in Los Angeles, and later his brother Robert was associated with him. Robert went in time to an Oakland, Calif., pastorate, and as a successor to his brother Laurence, the Church called Rev. Frank Cross, and at the last congregational meeting the father of the three former pastors, Rev. Luther B. Cross, was chosen honorary pastor of the Church. The thing which makes this occurrence remarkable is the fact that the sons of prophets are more and more becoming prophets, contrary to the popular opinion.

A Great Gift.—

The University of Southern California, at Los Angeles, was the recipient of a great gift the other day from William Andrews Clark, Jr. It was a gift of five million dollars worth of rare books. In it was a Dryden collection of 882 volumes, Shakespeare in twelve folios and forty-two quartos, one thousand pieces of Oscar Wildeana, and rare editions of Byron, Shelley, and Keats, Dickens, and the Restoration authors. There were in the collection a group of French manuscripts, and a collection of books on Montana and the Northwest. It was a handsome gift, the books are housed in Mr. Clark's Los Angeles home. William Andrews Clark was one time Senator from Montana, and was a connoisseur of books and art. His Manhattan home was sold last year; its art treasures going to the Corcoran gallery in Washington after having been refused by the Metropolitan.

Japan Proposes a Religious Law.—

A law to control the religions of Japan has been proposed, and will probably be enacted. The law will particularly regulate Shintoism, Buddhism and Christianity. Under it the government will have the privilege of prohibiting the propagation of any doctrine or the performance of any rite contrary to the peace and order of the empire or the duties of citizens of Japan. Under the proposed law, shrines, temples and Churches may be used for the teaching of doctrines and the performances of rites according to the regulations of the religious bodies to which they belong, and for educational, charitable and social purposes. It is said that Japanese Christian leaders have taken exception to the law to some extent, but many feel that the law will not in any way hinder the work of Christianity in Japan. Other religions may be brought under the law by imperial ordinances.

A Farewell.—

Not so long ago at Covent Garden, London, three thousand people heard Dame Nellie Melba in her last public performance. Some of that three thousand had stood in line for twenty hours to get a seat. The king and queen were there to hear her, and so were many of the English and foreign nobility. It was a great time. Thirty-eight years before, Dame Nellie Melba had made her debut at Covent Garden, just a year after her debut in Brussels. That thirty-eight years has for the most part been one grand ovation, and now she has brought it to a close in one great flourish at the end. She is not old, only about sixty-one or two, but she belongs to the nineties, and she was the last of that great company. All of them had preceded her into retirement or into the deeper shadow. Madame Melba was born in Melbourne, Australia, as Nellie Porter Mitchell, but she chose the name Melba from her native Melbourne. She was later married, and on the morning after her final performance she woke as just a grandmother. Very recently Madame Melba has published her memories in a volume called "Melodies and Memories," through George H. Doran & Co. Hers has been a remarkable career, and in her passing from it the stage loses one of the finest voices it has ever known.

The First Health Congress.—

Six thousand guardians and sentinels of health gathered at Atlantic City recently in the first Health Congress ever held in this country. A number of able addresses were made by the chief men representing the sixteen organizations coming together. The organizations fall loosely into three groups—first, the public health officials; second, the specialists on child health and disease prevention; and nurses who made up the largest group as third. The keynote of the congress seems to have been struck when an important member remarked that science might discover the hitherto unknown, but unless it was translated into terms of common understanding, its benefits could not be utilized.

Much time was devoted to the discussion of the mental hygiene of the child, and it was pointed out that the methods of mental measurement had been so well perfected that the school might place the work of mental hygiene on a level with the work of physical hygiene being so widely carried forward. Herbert Hoover challenged the congress to discover the 100 per cent healthful child and then to translate the methods of his being so into terms which Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Smith could understand and apply to their Mary or their John in order to approximate a 100 per cent healthful child. This gathering is certainly a forward step in the health work of the United States.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Elon College Chautauqua and School of Methods, July 26th to August 4th.

The announcement that Mrs. W. D. Parry, who rendered such splendid service at the Elon Chautauqua last year, will be the organist again this year will meet with a hearty response from our people.

It is noticeable at Conference sittings that delegates and pastors get very anxious as to how their Churches are "coming up," as they say. Would not a little active work in the meantime be valuable in bringing up the finances of the Churches?

Rev. W. C. Hook, pastor of the Albany, N. Y., Christian Church, was in Richmond Sunday and worshiped with the First Christian Church at the morning service. He was passing through, and between trains called on the pastor. He is cordially invited to come again.

Your Church may have a most excellent clerk, but unless he properly reports his Church to the Conference, he needs to be better. Possibly he does not subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN SUN; certainly he could make himself a loyal member by adding this to his other good qualities.

We wonder if all Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Societies have elected their delegates and representatives to the forthcoming session of our various Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions? This is a vital matter and touches all our young people's work, and should have careful and considerate attention.

Rev. C. C. Ryan, D. D., preached at Westminster Presbyterian Church last Sunday evening. The pastor of the Westminster Church is Rev. W. C. Golden, who directed the services. Next Sunday evening the union services will be held at the First Christian Church, and Dr. A. L. Frank will preach.

Rev. C. J. Felton, Toronto, writes that "The summer school of religious education for our Canadian Conference is being held at Oshawa, Ont., July 10th to 17th, with every promise of a very successful session. A strong program was prepared and able teachers were in charge." Bro. Felton, who has done such splendid work in Toronto, is to become pastor of our new Church at Irvington, N. J., August 1st.

Rev. H. E. Truitt, pastor of the Waverly Christian Church, writes that a large delegation to the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention is expected. Waverly is located on the Norfolk and Western Railroad, between Norfolk and Petersburg. Morning train leaves Norfolk at 8:15 o'clock for Waverly; leaves Petersburg at 7 A. M. and 1 P. M. The convention opens at 10 A. M. July 20th, and continues two days.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the recipient of marked copies of the Dover Index and the Delaware State News, each containing complimentary notices of Miss Cornelia H. Taylor. Miss Taylor is the winner of three prizes, the highest being $100.00, given by State Bar Association, and she is a junior in the Dover high school, just completing her third year. She is the daughter and only child of Rev. and Mrs. Herman C. Taylor, of the People's Christian Church.

The following will be of interest to many CHRISTIAN SUN readers: "Mr. and Mrs. William Elam Bailey announce the marriage of their daughter, Grace Hannah, to Dr. Gilmer Gustave Holland, on Friday, June 25, 1926, Richmond, Va." Our heartiest congratulations to Dr. Holland, of Holland, Va., our good friend, and best wishes for a long and happy married life.

The editor of THE SUN learns that Rev. W. B. Fuller, Dendron, Va., contemplates a change in his present pastorate at the close of the Conference year. Bro. Fuller is open for engagement for next year and will appreciate correspondence with Churches desiring his services. He is one of our youngest men, but of some years' successful experience, and is much beloved in his present field and in the fields previously served.

This item is for the benefit of Church secretaries or clerks. The Southern Christian Convention has had blanks prepared on which to make returns to the annual Conferences. These blanks, properly filled out, will enable Conference secretaries to make uniform statistical tables, which in turn will save time in printing the minutes. Let Conference secretaries supply the Churches with these report blanks, which cost them only the postage.

Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, last week finished a course of lectures and teaching at Lakemont, N. Y., and is this week at Craigville Summer Conference, Craigville, Mass., where he is one of the teachers and speakers. Dr. Harper is a great teacher, and a most engaging and convincing platform speaker and is much in demand. If he were to fill all the appointments and engagements made for him, he would have little or no time for any other work. We congratulate Craigville and Lakemont in having secured him for their respective summer conference.

Dr. M. J. W. White, Jr., is working with Bro. Sorrell, in Carroll County, this summer. He is finding an unlimited field of service and is delighted with his work. The first seven days he was on the work he had seen thirty-seven patients, six of whom were too sick to come to the clinic which he holds at the building. In addition to his work as physician, he is helping in the Sunday School and other religious activities. We believe our friends in the mountain are appreciating the efforts being put forth through Bro. White to make theirs a healthier and more sanitary community.

Dr. W. T. Walters, Burlington, N. C., who already has two living and eternal monuments to his consecrated and well-directed energy, namely: the splendid Church buildings at Winchester and Richmond, Va., has recently visited Washington, D. C., and to his surprise finds conditions rich, ripe and ready for the building of a Christian Church, house and congregation in our national capital. If any man can lead successfully in building such a Church, Dr. Walters is that man. We should have had a Church in Washington half a century ago, and it is to our everlasting humiliation that we today have no Church building there.

Miss Pattie Coghill, the faithful and efficient worker for the Elon Chautauqua, July 26th to August 5th, writes under date July 8th: "I have already received letters from a number of people who plan to attend the Chautauqua this year, and the prospect looks fine." We should have a largely attended session this year, as every year thus far has shown an increased attendance over the previous years. Churches, Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor and Missionary Societies should all interest themselves in securing representatives to attend this important School of Methods. A Church, school or society can well afford to invest its money in sending one or more representatives to this Chautauqua, for what such a representative will learn and carry back for the benefit of the people who cannot come.

Deacon C. D. West, of our Newport News Church, writing the editor a recent personal letter, comments: "I think Rev. B. J. Earp, our present pastor, who has handed us his resignation to take place at the end of the present Conference year, has accomplished a great deal here where he has served for five years, and I will be very happy to write any one of him who may desire an expression from me." As stated in THE SUN two weeks ago, Bro. Earp is one of our loyal and zealous ministers, who works faithfully at his task and never fails to help the people whom he serves, and makes devoted friends wherever he goes. We again express the hope that an inviting pastorate of hard work and large opportunity will open up to him and claim him for the coming year.

We had not known till a letter dated July 9th reached us that our dear brother Rev. W. D. Harward, Windsor, Va., had recently been called upon to mourn the going away of his mother. And this devoted son writes so fondly of her that we quote him: "I spent ten days recently in Durham, N. C., by the bedside of my mother, who left us for the heavenly home June 30th. We took the body to O'Kelly's Chapel July 2nd, where she still held her membership and where the burial service was conducted by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, after which we laid the body away in the Church cemetery beside that of my father, who departed this life thirty-seven years ago the 6th of last May." Truly has a godly woman gone to reap her reward.

One of the special features of the Elon Chautauqua, July 26th to August 4th, will be a daily discussion on various phases of Church life and activities by our ministers and laymen.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

For the last several years the Convention sessions have been held at very convenient and central Churches—Mt. Carmel, Bethlehem, Antioch. This year we go to Waverly; not so central, but very convenient, for it is on the main line of the Norfolk and Western and seven miles off the Suffolk, Franklin and Petersburg Highway. Let us keep up our standard of attendance by having all our schools represented at the Convention by delegates. So if you have not elected delegates do so next Sunday—and delegates who will go.

J. H. LIGHTBOURNE,
Executive Secretary.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

BLUE RIDGE.

One of the outstanding and epoch-making religious gatherings of the year in the South is the Blue Ridge Missionary Conference, held this year June 25th to July 5th. This conference is sponsored by the Missionary Education Movement, whose home office is New York and which puts on five other similar conferences in the United States during the year. Out of this movement, inaugurated several years ago by the Missionary Education Movement, have grown most of our denominational Chautauquas and Schools of Methods which differ from the original in being confined to the communions that sponsors them and cover the whole scope of religious activities and methods of the local Church, whereas the Blue Ridge Conference takes in all Protestant communions who are willing to unite in the conference, and confines its work to the general thought and teaching of missions. This makes this conference unique among all the conferences of our Southern States, since this is the only one held in the South and attracts many of the rare souls of the various communions who are interested fundamentally in giving the gospel to all kinds and classes of the earth who have not been blessed with the gospel.

In the conference are returned missionaries busy in learning more of the great spirit of missions and of teaching from their rich experiences, many wholesome and helpful truths and facts; pastors and clergymen who are anxious that their local Churches be missionary and world-wide in knowledge and in vision; leaders of missionary groups for young and old, women and men workers in mission fields at home as well as abroad, meet in this great conference to consider, through study, investigation, discussion, meditation and worship, not only how to make a new world, but to make this whole world a Christian world and give every part of the earth the opportunity of knowing our Christ as Saviour and Redeemer. Every one who wishes to see the Church and the Christian spirit at its best, where denominational differences do not count, and where all nonessentials are forgotten, and only the great program of our Lord is taught and discussed, and where fellowship with kindred spirit is complete, should attend a Blue Ridge Missionary Conference.

The meeting, with its fellowship, its Christian atmosphere, its high and holy thinking, its divine contacts and attitudes, cannot be described. Two men from the big business world who chanced to be at the great hotel when the conference was being held, told the writer, merely as onlookers and incidental visitors, that they had never been in such an atmosphere and had never witnessed nor experienced such fine spirit among men and women in all their lives. In the great conference one was simply compelled to think more of others than of self, and to act in terms of consideration for others in preference to self.

Hundreds were there in the great conference hotel, but if a door were locked or if a key to a door was in evidence we never saw or heard of it; and if there was any sort of unpleasant intrusion, or petty thefts or dishonest dealing, or unfriendly attitude on the part of any one (while several hundred met and mingled for ten days, sleeping under the same wide spreading roof and ate together in the spacious dining hall) we never heard of it. Robert E. Lee Hall, we presume, will seat six hundred people in its dining room and will give the major portion of that number comfortable sleeping quarters, one to a room, to say nothing of numerous shower baths on every floor, a lobby of infinite proportions and halls and lecture rooms almost without number. And this is only one of the spacious buildings on the beautiful Blue Ridge grounds, high up on the mountain slope, from which one is permitted to look out on the towering peaks of numberless mountain ranges in all directions. Beautiful for situation, glorious in plan of building and development, a comfort to body, mind and soul is Blue Ridge.

All this may be said for the ample buildings only. Fill these buildings with hundreds of eager men and women, young and old, who are seeking the best that life has to offer, and who are bent on giving the best of their study, plans and high pursuits, and one begins to get some idea of what Blue Ridge may mean. To see Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, Lutherans, Congregationalists, Disciples of Christ, Christians, and various other communions meet as one body and receive together the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord and Saviour, brings a joy to the heart and a feeling of fellowship and brotherly love that one does not have very often in life. To sit under the preaching at one service of a leading divine in the Presbyterian Church, at the next service under the earnest preaching of a bishop in the Episcopal Church, and at the next service under the ministry of a distinguished Methodist until you no longer think of denominational differences, but only of the spirit of the blessed Christ and His gospel, gives one an inspiration and a joy that cannot pass away with the day.

We could wish that instead of a half-dozen who were present from our CHRISTIAN SUN family there would be next year at least a hundred, and then as the years come and go an increased number, until all our Church, with all the other Churches, would feel the impact of this united fellowship in Christian service, and a great uplift of that united and glorious gospel which is to take the whole wide world for Christ. Instead of sending a half-dozen to Blue Ridge next summer, let us hope and believe that there will be a hundred at least from the confines of our Southern Christian Convention. It will be money well invested on the part of Churches and missionary societies to have their pastors or group leaders at good and glorious Blue Ridge for one of its missionary conferences.

AN UNJUSTIFIED ATTACK.

It is ugly enough for peoples and papers making no claims to Christianity or religion to give evidence of viciousness, injustice and bigotry, but for those claiming to be religious, and especially Christian, to do so, one hardly sees the remotest excuse. A case in point seems to be the following:

Our esteemed and usually most admirable Western Recorder, of Louisville, Ky., in its issue of July the 8th, made this statement: "The Federal Council has been a spiritual liability to genuine Christianity during all its history. Its meat and drink is to swagger presumptuously to tell the civil government what to do on religious and moral matters, to tell the world how to behave and legislate—in short, to consume and exploit in worldly relationships the spiritual goods produced by the Churches, while it neither has the will or the ability to produce such goods itself."

One would pardon the incorrect spelling and the violence of the English language which that paragraph gives if the spirit of the thing were not so uncalled for. Our bother of the Western Recorder, we are persuaded, has never attended, for a very long time, a meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and, doubtless, has in no way come in contact with the fine spirit of its wonderful Christian fellowship. Our bother is viewing from a distance and writing out conclusions second or third-hand which his preconceived ideas and contacts have not permitted him to form an intimate acquaintance with and knowledge of. It would be difficult indeed, we think, for any follower of our Lord who knows first-hand the spirit of the Federal Council to say with a clear conscience that it "has been a spiritual liability to genuine Christianity during all its history." No evidence is given in the article named and no proof is introduced to show the justice or the excuse for such a conclusion.

We have an idea that such an un-Christian attitude and unbrotherly attack on an organization that has wrought such marvelous results in bringing the Christian world closer together are explained in the closing paragraph of the Recorder's attack: "There is a genuine Christian 'unity' which we should cultivate—the fellowship we have with other Christians than those in our own group because they and we both know the Lord and live for Him." Surely the one who wrote that paragraph does not know the Federal Council and does not care to know the spirit of other denominations, since he knows the Lord and lives for Him more and better than any one else, in his judgment.

The closing line of our brother's concluding paragraph helps to throw further light on this statement and un-Christian attack: "Baptist, perhaps, more than others, should cultivate this 'unity,' for more than most others we have felt we must bear witness against such presumptuous and meddlesome hybrid organizations as the Federal Council of Churches."

To have and to cultivate a spirit from which emanate the declaration that "that was a presumptuous (?) hybrid organization," which includes by their own free choice all the denominations in America, except the Southern Baptist and the Roman Catholic, is manifesting a spirit of the "holier than thou" type of bigotry and intolerance which we did not know existed in our Christian forces at this present hour of grace. How we wish that the spirit of unity and brotherly love that prevails when these various communions come together in quadrennial session could prevail in all the Christian world! and we are persuaded that such a spirit will prevail as the Christ who died for us draws us nearer and ever nearer to Himself and lifts our eyes from our puny, petty differences to Him, the glorified One.

HE THAT DOTHSERVE.

Jesus said, "He that is chief among you, let him be as he that doth serve." He was not giving a rule of life by which He was not willing to live. For this maxim sums up the whole course of His life. The very greatness of Jesus was manifested in the way that He served. He did not command others to serve until He had shown them the blessedness of service. He was commanding a practical rule because he himself practiced it. But do the rank and file of Christians apply this rule to their own lives?

It has been our observation that all Christians are perfectly willing to have this rule applied to the preacher. The very name by which the man of God is called shows what is expected of him. He has been called a "minister"—one who ministers, one who serves. It has also been our observation that the minister accepts for himself the rule of service. He himself realizes that he is not serving as he should serve, nor as he would like to serve. But the average minister is serving with a marked degree of faithfulness, and with a reasonable measure of success. The majority of ministers with whom we are acquainted are honestly trying to prepare for a larger and richer service.

But does the average Christian and Church member think of himself as a servant? And does he measure his greatness by the amount of service he is rendering? Does the motive of service constitute the basic idea of Church membership? We would not be unfair to our fellow-Church members; but if our memory serves us correctly we have met a few who were perfectly willing to say what the Church ought to do; they had very decided opinions as to how the preacher ought to preach, and what he ought to preach. In other words, they were very competent judges, but it never seemed to have dawned upon them that it would be a great thing for them personally to take up the work of a servant in the Church. We frequently hear the women talking about the "servant problem" in our modern scheme of domestic arrangements. But if you desire to hear about a real "servant problem" ask the pastor of almost any Church about those who are expected to serve with him. Let him tell you of how he must try very tactfully to suggest to some brother what a magnificent thing it would be for that brother to lend a little support to the Lord's work. Or let the brother himself tell you of how some preacher actually tried to tell him that he ought to do certain things for the Lord's work, and give him time to tell you what he told the preacher who presumed to tell him what he ought to do. A few talks like that will soon convince one that many Church members think of themselves as anything in the world but a servant.

There are a few great souls to be found in every Church who act as if they thought it a great favor when the pastor, or some Church official, points out to them some definite service they can render for the Master. Such souls are the strength and stay and glory of the Church. No one wants to be lorded over by his fellows; nor are there many who desire to lord it over their fellows. We have noticed that there are preachers who are just as quick to take offense when it is suggested to them what and how they ought to do as are the general run of Church members.

We are all of us very much alike. Human nature is not changed by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. We all need to remember that all of us are brethren, and that one is our Master even Christ. We all need to confess that we have been unprofitable servants, and consecrating ourselves anew we should take sweet counsel together as to how we may best serve in the doing of the things which our Master has commanded us to do.

SERVICE BEFORE SELF.

No. I.

Service to others is the objective of all social-minded men and women. But in every life there is an element of self-interest which, when unduly emphasized or cultivated, is known as selfishness. Self-interest is well and good, but selfishness is unpardonable. In every normal life there is self-interest, and also an interest in others which, when fostered and expressed, is known as altruism. The ideal life is that in which self-interest and interest in others go hand in hand. Every community has its selfish people—the people who are not in the least concerned about what they can do for the good of the community, but only think about what the community can do for them. Their slogan is "to get," not "to give." They expect their community to help them, but they are not willing to help their community. Such people are but parasites on the community life. They want to give just as little in service to the community as possible, and receive all the benefits of good walks, good streets, good fire protection, good stores, good schools, good Churches, and all the rest for nothing. Such people merely live in the community instead of for the community.

But, on the other hand, every community also has its altruistic people—the social-minded men and women who are interested in other people, interested in the whole community life; better business, better homes, better schools, better roads, better Churches, a better town or city. And they are willing to invest their time and their money in expressing their interest. These are the people who do not simply live in the community. They live for the community, and only such really have a right to live in any community.

Selfishness is the tap-root of every social sin. For years our nation was infested with saloons simply because there were selfish men who thought more about the money they could make out of the nefarious business than they did about the lives they would damn. They had no idea of service.

Today, our communities are infested with bootleggers who defy the law of their country, ignore the Constitution, mock at patriotism, and blaspheme religion, simply because selfishness rules their lives. They are willing to damn any man's life, bring disgrace to any home, and make every community a cesspool of sin and shame just for the gain of a few dollars. Every place of vice in a community is there because selfish men want the revenue that such brings. Selfishness causes men to stoop to almost any depth for gain. But interest in others will raise men to almost any height of service. The men who have interest in others will not engage in a business that is detrimental to any life.

In many communities places of low amusement are tolerated that actually curse the community, and those who promote them grow fat in wealth at the expense of the morals of the youth. Theater managers who will show immoral and questionable pictures on their screens simply because such bring the largest crowds are not thinking of others, but only of self. In some communities pictures are shown that are absolutely abhorrent with vulgarity—making piety ridiculous, making light of the sanctity of the marriage vow, winking at law violation, ridiculing the eighteenth amendment and law enforcement, encouraging indecency, and cheapening virtue. Such places become nothing more than schools of crime for the youth, and the only excuse men in charge have for carrying on such a business is that it makes them money. But what about making better citizens? Every man is under obligation to society to help make men. It is not enough merely to make money. All honor to the men in the moving-picture industry who declare that if their playhouse cannot make a living by showing clean pictures they will close their doors. The man who justifies himself in showing immoral pictures because the public wants to see them should realize that as a public servant it is his business to help correct the abnormal desires of the public by educating them to appreciate pictures that are wholesome and helpful. He can do this by showing pictures that are elevating, and that put a premium on virtue, nobility of character, and clean living.

And thus in every line of business and in every trade and profession, the man who has the public good in mind and serves best the public need will profit most. The food producer and dispensers who are interested in bringing down the price of foods as a matter of service in the interest of better health, which naturally comes if food prices are such that no one needs to go undernourished, such men are putting service before self, and in the end will profit most. They serve society by helping all to have a sufficient supply of wholesome food, and thereby increase the efficiency of society's great army of toilers. The laboring man can render more efficient service if he is able to buy plenty of nourishing food. The men who are interested in keeping down production in any commodity, in order to keep a surplus off the markets and to keep prices up, are enemies to society. But men who put service before self are willing to do a larger volume of business for the same profit in the interest of serving humanity. They are determined to do unto others as they would have others do unto them.

A friend who, for years, was captain on a freight steamer, told me that at one time his fleet of ships brought a shipment of oranges from Jamaica to New York. When they arrived in New York harbor, the commission men ordered the oranges unloaded on the docks, notwithstanding the fact that the weather was threatened with frost. That night the thermometer dropped several degrees below freezing, and many of the oranges were damaged, though thousands of the boxes underneath were not. However, the next morning the commission agents had the city inspector pass upon the condition of the oranges, and he condemned the entire shipment and ordered them dumped into the sea. My friend said it was purely a frame-up by the commission men to keep the market from being oversupplied. He said that the commission men had deliberately ordered the oranges unloaded in the hope that they would freeze, so the shipment would be condemned, and that, though not one-third of the shipment was damaged, the entire shipload of oranges was condemned and ordered dumped into the harbor. If that shipment of oranges had been thrown upon the market, the price of oranges would have dropped from 30 cents a dozen to 15 cents a dozen. And simply because there would be as much profit in selling the supply on hand at 30 cents a dozen as there would be in selling the surplus, together with the supply on hand, at 15 cents a dozen, the above-mentioned recourse was used.

"Outrageous! inhuman! unsocial!" you say. Yes, there is no language that can express the contempt society should cherish for such men who think only of gain in money and not of service to mankind.

If those commission men had put service before self they would have been anxious to let the public have the benefit of cheap oranges, even if it did make more work for them to do twice the

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The second annual session of the Daily Vacation Bible School in the Suffolk Christian Church continued for two weeks and closed on Friday night, July 9th, with the "commencement."

The total enrollment was 69, with 42 girls and 27 boys. The average attendance was over sixty. The results were so satisfactory in every way that plans have already been made for a larger school next year.

The faculty consisted of Pastor H. S. Hardcastle, Misses Gladys Yates, Margaret Crocker, Jamie Felton, Lydia Harrell, Evelyn Yates, Dennie Ramsey, Page Jones, Elizabeth Vincent, Violet Andrews, Mrs. H. P. Murphy, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle, and Jefferson Hiltner. This faculty of thirteen were as united in their purpose and their work as the original thirteen States one hundred and fifty years ago; and it may be that the sesquicentennial of the daily vacation Bible school may show that the human race is not on the downward road.

The daily exercises consisted of marches, songs, prayers, story-telling, memory work in Bible and hymns, hand-work, and regular class-work. The faculty was competent, gave themselves without reserve to the work, learned while they were teaching, demonstrated the value of co-operation, and found in the children the natural craving for knowledge and spiritual realities. It was really a Bible school, and in this the young take more interest than in literary studies when they have the right kind of opportunity. The neglect of the Bible in the public school may have suggested the daily vacation Bible school. To leave the Bible out of early education in a Christian nation would mean ethical, social, and spiritual decay. It may be that Sunday school, daily vacation Bible school and the Church will conserve the moral interests of the nation and prevent national history from repeating itself in these United States.

Commencement night was well attended by parents and friends, and the exercises were repetitions of the daily exercises in the school. In that way all could see just what the school was and what it was doing. The very exercises of the daily school were repeated as an essential feature of the commencement, and, in that respect, was different, if not superior, to the commencement of literary institutions. At any rate, the people enjoyed the commencement, and the children and faculty did, too.

The hand-work was on exhibition, and was of great variety and well made, and parents were as proud of the display as the children. Gold stars were won by many for attendance, memory work and good behaviour. Pledges to the American and Christian flags were taken, and, in addition to the regular exercises, the Bible stories of the wise and foolish virgins and the good Samaritan were successfully dramatized by members of the school. Joe Bangle received a dollar prize. Miss Gladys Yates told a beautiful story, and the exercises closed with the usual benediction. An offering was taken, not from the audience, but the school, for the little children in Japan.

Pastor Hardcastle was just as proud of results, and thanked all his helpers and the children and the parents for their co-operation in the work.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

The fall semester will begin at Bethlehem College August 30, 1926. This institution is one of the American schools which believes in humanity, therefore it labors to open its doors to culture to every boy and girl within its jurisdiction. The creed of our fathers was liberty and equality for all. We believe that all men have a right to be of as much use as they can in the world, and to prove our faith in the perfectibility of all we are willing to share their investment in order to give them an education.

The demand of our time is a rational system of education, and this system of education will take account of changes in society and keep pace with their evolution. The true teacher today is essentially a man of the world. He looks about him to see the life for which he must train his pupils and thereby shape his program. Judging by the direction of the most vigorous creative activity of the present day, we may say that we live in the age of industry. As feudalism was the supreme ordering of the ninth and tenth centuries to history, so our industries will be our contribution to progress. Into them go the imagination, the inventive genius, the daring of the American people.

While pedagogues were arguing behind closed doors, the perennial question of the humanities versus the modernities, the facts of life, which have an inveterate habit of keeping in advance of thought, came knocking without and crying, "In God's name, open! Dispute no more whether air or water is most necessary to our children's life, but think you what meat you will set before them, for they are sore hungry and would eat." The facts of life and their good friend common sense demands a school for the plain man. Just such a school you will find at Bethlehem.

Too many are lured into the profession of teaching or some desirable occupation before taking any work in college much less to graduate simply because they can earn a little money "now." If our poorhouses are ever filled with men and women, they will be filled with those who have wasted human resources, by not fitting themselves for anything but a pauper's life by their ill-starred attempts at early self-support through lack of interest in due preparation for larger service.

Our youth not only lack knowledge of suitable vocations, but they need to be stimulated to think of their own qualification for the work of their generation. "Know thyself," said the old philosopher, and surely, in the choice of a vocation, self-knowledge is the beginning of wisdom. Yet it would seem that self-knowledge is a lost art in this romantic age. People are interested more and more in outward, objective things, forgetting that things are important only for their value, and that value is an expression of personality.

An inspiring fact about charitable, neglected and corrective work is that it gives us better methods of handling normal individuals and opportunities, as is true with this hill section of the State of Alabama. These boys and girls have ambitions, ideals, and talents, just as the rest of the world. It is the task of the school to get hold of these, quicken and sustain them till they are lifted through education to a place of honor and service. Who knows what funds of usefulness are yearly squandered in people who come to nothing—good or bad—because their real abilities have never been given proper outlet in activity for lack of cultivation. And who can hesitate to prophesy that the national happiness and prosperity would be a hundred-fold augmented if every human being could find himself and do just that thing he came into the world to do.

AN APPRECIATION.

The resignation of our pastor, Rev. R. F. Brown, was offered on Sunday morning, June 27th, and he will close his ministry here Sunday evening, July 25th. Rev. Brown has served this Church for the past three and one-half years as an efficient and faithful pastor, and under his able leadership the Church has gone forward.

As a citizen in the community his attitude and ideals have been of the highest type, always active in every movement for social and spiritual betterment; and to him the entire community will always be grateful for his optimistic and untiring efforts in establishing week day religious education in the public school here.

It is great pleasure to us to recommend him as a splendid citizen, a Christian worker and an able minister—one whose work is effectual and efficient in the service of our Lord and Master.

As he goes from us, we want to carry in our minds and hearts not only his timely spiritual counsel and the splendid examples he and his family have set before us, but also the beautiful words from his New Year prayer printed in the Herald of Gospel Liberty in January, 1925, as follows:

"Almighty God, with sacred memories and painful regrets we bid good-by to the past years. As we gaze into the future, may we have continued revelations of Thy will, an undimmed vision of Thy love, and a double portion of Thy wisdom. As we wend our way into the future, guide Thou our faltering feet over the valley of sorrow and solitude, through the burning deserts of trial and temptation, over the battlefields of struggle and hardship. Unite our hearts in a common feeling of the Fatherhood of God, a profound consciousness of the brotherhood of man, and establish our souls on the continent of human sympathy and unselfish service. And may we love and serve Thee with all our being until this life is supplanted with that new, higher, and better life, that fuller and sweeter joy made perfect in Thy holy presence."

Done by order of the official board of the Pleasant Hill Christian Church, Pleasant Hill, Ohio.

LYNCHBURG CHURCH.

The men of the United Christian Church, Lynchburg, Va., have done some work that should be a great blessing to the Sunday School. When the Church was erected, the basement was left unfinished and without a floor. Recently twenty-four of our men gathered at the Church in the evening after they had gotten home from their work, and working till about 2 o'clock in the morning for two nights, put down a concrete floor that would have cost at least $200 had we hired the labor. The total cost of material was less than seventy dollars.

Since then several of the classes have provided themselves with curtains for the class-rooms, and we expect that great good will come from this service which has been rendered so enthusiastically.

M. F. ALLEN, Pastor.

Rev. Wm. D. McKnight, missionary to Japan, who is on furlough, will give a daily lecture at the Elon Chautauqua.

Eight full international credit courses will be given at the Elon Chautauqua.

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

By WARREN H. DENISON, Secretary.

Dignifying the Benevolences.

It should always be borne in mind that the benevolences of a Church occupy an equal standing with its current expenses. Benevolences are not merely one item in your budget as the telephone or janitor service. One is as vital as the other. They are as the two wings of a bird. Every individual for his own sake needs to subscribe and pay to each. The Church that lives for self will gradually decline. The Church that dignifies its benevolent budget will do better service with its local needs and equipment. A Church does not gain by making its benevolences as merely one item in a long list of other items.

Nor will it do at all to turn the matter of benevolences over to the various auxiliaries of the Church to give such amounts as they may happen to feel like giving. No Church would think of turning the support of its local budget needs over to the auxiliaries of the Church to give what they desire to give without plan or goal. The mission work, education, colleges and other departments of a great Church should be dignified with their proper position in the local Church budget. They should be planned for by the Church body and as deliberately as are local expenses. No, they are not inferior, nor are they side issues, but are to be placed on a par and level with the local part of the budget. There should be a steady aim to make the two sides of the budget equal. Every canvasser should know the needs of each item of the benevolences as he does of the current expense budget. Every member of the Church should be solicited personally for both benevolences and current expenses. Proper size subscriptions should be pressed for both. It does not do to give a quarter a week for benevolences and three dollars for local expenses. It is a sad day for a Church when, from any source, it gets an idea that its benevolences are secondary. The budget committee should see that there is a Christian ratio between the two parts of the budget. The benevolences must not be left to spasm, the left-overs of our purses, the indifference of canvassers, or attendance on services on a given Sunday. We dare not minimize Christ's other work, nor leave it to chance. It is an important matter to be on the finance committee of a Church. It takes a real Christian to be on the budget committee. Remember, to dignify your Church and honor Christ when you make your benevolent budget.

Forward Movement Obligations.

We have some great souls in the Christian Church. We have realized this very strongly in recent letters. Recently we have been making requests for all Forward Movement obligations to be paid in and settled by September 30th. That day closes the denominational Church year, and all books for the year and for this quadrennium will close that night. Some are paying in full. Others promise to do so before September 30th. Some will borrow funds so that their accounts may be properly closed. They regard their obligations most sacred. They appreciate extension of time. Their letters in nearly every case breathe a fine spirit. Some who at first did not understand the vital meaning of the Forward Movement now see something of its meaning. May God bless every one who has had a part in it and who is now contributing to its continuation work.

Another Superintendent Speaks.

Mr. W. R. Sailer, Milford, N. J., says: "For a long time I have felt impelled to not only tithe, but when the tithe did not seem sufficient I reached a little deeper that the work might be helped along. I feel a joy unspeakable in such service. I am unable to understand why any Church member should fail to support his or her Church, but spend their substance on that which brings no benefit. I refer not only to the Church in which one holds membership, but to our Church at large with its program."

ELON TO WELCOME CHAUTAUQUA.

Elon College is looking forward to welcoming the Chautauqua and Summer School of Methods, which opens here for a ten days' session on July 26th. Everything is in readiness for this school, which is an annual institution conducted by the Christian Church of the South, through its Board of Religious Education, of which Dr. W. T. Walters, Burlington, N. C., is the chairman.

The school will open July 26th and close August 4th. During this period intensive training will be given in Christian work. The program for this session is just off the press and is being distributed by Miss Pattie Coghill, Henderson, N. C., field worker for the Board of Religious Education. It includes eight international credit courses, as well as other courses that will appeal to young and old.

Last year more than 200 students registered for this Summer School of Methods, and it is expected that the registration this year will reach 300.

Some of the speakers on the program are: Rev. McKnight, returned missionary; Mrs. T. W. Bickett, on welfare work; D. W. Sims, State Sunday School Association, and other outstanding speakers. Some of the faculty members are Rev. F. C. Lester, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle, J. G. Truitt, F. F. Myrick, J. O. Atkinson, W. A. Harper, J. H. Lightbourne, and Miss Lucy Eldredge.

The opening session on Monday night will consist of a welcome service and introduction of faculty members. Two new features have been added to the program this year, which are a series of discussions by pastors and laymen and of local Church people on Church work, and a series of community song services led by Rev. J. F. Morgan. There will be a "Musical Night," led by Mrs. W. D. Parry, of Raleigh, and other special nights.

The general and field workers who will be present for this session are Dr. W. T. Walters, Burlington, N. C.; Miss Pattie Coghill, Henderson, N. C., and Miss Lucy Eldredge, Dayton, O.
C. M. CANNON.

THE BIGGEST AND BEST CHAUTAUQUA.

All arrangements are being completed for what we believe is going to be the biggest and what we are earnestly striving to make the best, Chautauqua yet held. The program will be mailed to hundreds of our people before this is in type. Faculty, speakers, musicians and helpers have already been secured. The college is renovating the dormitories and hopes to have everything in readiness for the occasion.

Delegations from many new sections are planning to attend, and from all reports the number, which has increased as follows: first year, 43; second year, 120; third year, 178; fourth year, 237—will be swelled to near the 300 mark this year.

It is a wonderful opportunity, while better equipping yourself for service, to have the privilege of enjoying the fellowship of this body of Christian workers for ten days.

We want all to come who can, and we are especially anxious to have the pastors, Sunday School superintendents, Sunday School teachers, and the Christian Endeavor presidents with us.

Do not forget the date—July 26th to August 4th.

Notice the low cost: Registration fee, $1.00; board, $10.00—total, $11.00. Bring your towels, pillows, sheets and blankets.

Opens with welcome and introduction session 8 P. M. July 26th. Closes with commencement exercises 8 P. M. August 4th.

Join the movement inaugurated in many other Sunday Schools and bring an automobile load of your teachers and interested young people. For further information write the secretary, Miss Pattie Coghill, Henderson, N. C.

W. T. WALTERS,
President.

THE CHRISTIAN COLLEGE AND LIFE SERVICE.

The first Christian college, the one in which Jesus taught, had no series of buildings with individual seats for pupils in which to pursue scientific and religious knowledge; it had no endowment that mounted to the millions—but this college took some fisher-folk, tax-collectors, sons of thunder, sinners, and, after three years of training, sent them into the world with a passion for service. If the buildings were scarce, the campus was large—it ranged from Bethany and Bethlehem in the south to Tyre and Sydon in the north, with most of its attractions centered around beautiful Galilee. If there were no chairs or desks for each pupil of the Master Teacher, there were rocks on the hillside and boats by the sea. The great things in this college were a Teacher who could teach and pupils who wished to learn. And these are the two essentials for any Christian college.

Jesus knew His pupils personally and sought to supply individual needs. "Zachaeus, I must abide at thine house." "Whom do ye say that I am?" "Simon, Simon, Satan hath desired thee, but I have prayed for thee." "Woman, hath no man condemned thee? . . . Neither do I condemn thee. Go, and sin no more." A Christian college is one in which personality is recognized and developed. Certain rules may be necessary, but personal initiative means more. Youth today is restive and critical under gauling authority. It desires liberty, freedom, room for initiative. These should be given, but guidance by understanding age is necessary lest liberty becomes license. The best characteristics in each individual should be educated (led out), while the baser and more reckless are curbed; but through it all the pupil must be free to choose. God lets us choose, and recognizes each individual as worth more than all the world of material things.

The supreme purpose of the Christian college is to fit its students for Christian life service. This means far more than teaching history, mathematics and the languages, and is much more difficult. The body, mind and spirit of each student must be prepared for service in the days that are to follow.

There are choice souls who enter college with a vision of the needs of men and with a burning desire to be of service. With them it is a delight for the college to work. They must be kept true to their purpose and fitted for its accomplishment. It too often happens that in the midst of so-called scientific studies and extra-curriculum activities the visions of youth fade and the burning heart cools. This is tragedy, and such tragedy as the Christian College must never permit. The vision must be made brighter and the warm heart set aflame with desire to serve through the chosen profession.

But vision and zeal are not enough. There must be ability to accomplish. Training for service is part of the function of a college. It is unfair for any institution to squander four years of youth and leave the graduate unfitted for his life's work. The technical school is still a necessity for specialists, but for most college people the training will close when college is finished. They have a right to demand some special preparation for the work they must do, and Christian colleges seek to assist them in this.

Sad to say, the largest group of those who go to college have no intelligent conception of life with its responsibilities and have no definite purpose for living. Here is the hardest task of the Christian professor. This type of student is a drag on the institution, and may be on the world after school days are over. They nibble at a bit of pleasure here or chase a rainbow yonder, and often bleat at the rest because they do not follow, regardless of the precipice that lies ahead.

These wanderers must be brought out of the wilderness. The process is a difficult one, for they will often cry for the flesh-pots of intellectual bondage, and, while the Moses goes to the mountain for greater knowledge, these wayward ones will dance to the golden calf. But the college must stick to its task. This human drift wood must be rescued and sent forth on the high seas of life with chart and compass. Only the Christian college can or will do this. Others teach science and translate the languages, while the weightier matters of purpose and life are neglected.

Finally, the Christian college must permeate all of life with the Christ spirit. There is no aspect of human experience that should not be dominated by the Christian ideal and shot through with the Christ spirit. The boasted scientific spirit seeks for truth, and the Christian college leads directly to Him who is Truth. Youth yearns for life, and should learn to live with Him who is Life and who gives it abundantly. Humanity longs for love, and can never be satisfied until it finds fellowship with Him who is Love. At our best, we are but children groping our way in the dark, and we are lost indeed until we can clasp hands with Him who is the Way.

All of this, and more, the Christian college undertakes to do for those who come under its benign influence. It tries to impart the Christ spirit to all its students, and desires to send them forth as workmen who need never be ashamed. That is why the children of our Christian homes should be the students of our Christian colleges. Christian colleges are by far the best colleges in the world, and you should covet for your self and your children the best.

While we are profoundly grateful to the schools named above for their liberal offering and to the other schools which contribute monthly to missions, it is noted, with regret, that there are quite a few schools in the Southern Christian Convention not yet sufficiently interested in enlarging the kingdom and building up schools and Churches elsewhere to make a monthly contribution. It is devoutly hoped that many of our schools not already doing so will vote for and send us one offering a month for this most worthy and needy work of the kingdom.

THE PASSOVER.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Our passover also hath been sacrificed, even Christ."—1 Cor. 5:7.

LESSON: Exodus 11:1-12:36.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 91:1-7.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Deut. 16:1-8; Luke 22:1-20; Heb. 11:28.

The hour had struck. God had been moving slowly, but He had been moving surely. He was now ready to deliver His people, and to begin that long process of development which was to produce a nation that should be a blessing to all the world, and to which the world should look for its highest moral and spiritual leadership. In fact, He had already begun that process for the bondage in Egypt had been one of those things which worketh a far more an exceeding weight of glory in the life of the Hebrews.

The exodus from Egypt had a dramatic setting. It came as a climax to the preceding events, for it required nothing less than the wholesale destruction of the first born of the Egyptians to break the stubbornness of the haughty Pharaoh, and to secure his permission to go on a three days' journey into the wilderness. It was a dire calamity, but the Almighty must strike down the enemies of His people if needs be to fulfill His purposes.

The event marked the institution of one of the most important feasts of the Jews, namely: the Passover. Every Jewish family or, in the case of small families, every two families, was to take a lamb without blemish, keep it up for four days, kill it and eat it as meat with unleavened bread and bitter herbs. They were to eat it with loins girded for immediate march. One of the most striking features of the event was the sprinkling of the blood of the lamb upon the lintel or doorposts of the Hebrew homes. This was both a sign for the death angel to pass over that home and also a token that Jehovah Himself would pass over the threshold into the fellowship of the family. It was an impressive ceremony and must have made a profound impression upon that great group of people who hitherto had been slaves in cruel bondage. It signified the entrance into a larger life for them and their posterity.

"And Jehovah spake unto Moses and Aaron in Egypt, and said, This month shall be unto you the beginning of months; it shall be the first of the year to you." The event had profound significance for them. It was so far-reaching in its consequences that it was to mark the beginning of a new calendar year, and as a matter of fact it has been the beginning of the religious year in Hebrew life ever since. It was the Fourth of July of the Hebrews; it marked the day when they began their national and religious independence. Inasmuch as we have just passed through a Fourth of July, it is interesting to compare the ways in which the days were celebrated or observed. We Americans, true to form, make a great display on the day. It is a day of sports and travel and display and patriotism. There is but little, if any, quiet, and all too often there is little about the day to remind us of our early idealism as a nation, and little if any religious significance to the day. It is not so with the Passover. In spite of the fact that the Jews have been destroyed as a nation, they still observe the Passover, and now, as then, it is a religious observance. The Passover feast is still kept, and the children are told again of the significant events which the day commemorates. There is something inspiring about the way these Jews have a passion for religion as they understand religion.

It is a good thing to have symbols or memorials to typify or suggest religious experiences or events. Memory is so untrustworthy in matters religious. We are so prone to forget blessings received from God, and to lose the significance of spiritual experiences which we have had. It is not only well worth while, it is necessary to enshrine such experiences in a permanent form. It was because of this fact that Jesus instituted the Lord's Supper, fulfilling in His characteristic way the law and the prophets and putting new meaning into old symbols and ceremonies. He would have us remember Him. He knows how prone we are to forget Him in the rush and bustle of life. He knows, too, how deadly to spiritual life it is to forget Him. The Lord's Supper is His approved method of keeping Him in remembrance, and as oft as we do this we ought to remember his broken body and His blood which was shed for us. The man who has become cold and indifferent is, above all others, the one who should partake of the Communion service. It is in that very act that he will be reminded of Jesus Christ. And the Christian will also find in this new passover richer fullness of life.

The Hebrews have gone out of Egypt. It will be interesting to follow their varying fortunes and to trace out the plans of God as he works out His purposes in their national life. If we do this we shall find that we will be lead eventually to Him who, as Paul said, is our Passover.

Teaching Points.

1. They who are on God's side will eventually triumph over their enemies.
2. God often uses bereavement as a point of contact with those whom He would reach.
3. Profound religious experiences are always worth marking in life.
4. To come to know God through Christ marks a new era in a man's life.
5. The Passover was an evidence of the Jews' faith in God.
6. Religious memorials have abiding value.
7. God enters into the homes of those who keep His commandments.
8. Children should be taught the significance of the great religious days of the Church.
9. National holidays ought to be national holy-days.
10. The Lord delivers all those who put their trust in Him.
11. The man who neglects the Communion service does so at his peril.
12. Deliverance from evil is one of the central facts in religion.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By REV. F. C. LESTER.

July 25, 1926.

TOPIC: "Africa's Need for Christ."

SCRIPTURE: Acts 8:26-40.

PURPOSE: To learn the needs of Africa for Christ, and to create a desire to help meet those needs.

Hints to the Leader.—Africa is too big to pass over without preparation, so begin early and prepare a good program. It might be good to have the meeting in the open, like they do in Africa, and have some one draw a big map of Africa on the ground and make a talk on the geography of that great continent. "The Lure of Africa," by Patton, will give you an abundance of material to use.

Songs that are Suitable.—"Fairest Lord Jesus," "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," "Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun," "The Whole Wide World for Jesus," "Where Cross the Crowded Ways," "From Greenland's Icy Mountain," and "Jesus Calls Us, O'er the Tumult."

Query for Debate.—Resolved, That Christianity, as it is practiced in Europe and America, is bad for Africa.

Topics for Talks.—The geography of Africa; its natural resources; the languages of Africa; the African peoples; the early Christian Church in Africa; the battle line between Christianity and Mohammedanism; what civilization has meant to Africa; missionary heroes, such as David Livingstone, the Moffatts, Greenfel, Mary Slessor, etc.

Comments on the Scriptures.

v. 26.) Philip was a layman who heard God's voice and went, even though the way was desert. This is the kind of Christians we need in our societies, and the only kind that will ever win the world to Christ.

(v. 27.) The desert road often leads to the greatest opportunities.

(v. 28.) Right after worship in the Church, even on the way home, is a good time to read the Bible. Then it will bring a great message to the heart, and a visitor on the way may explain difficult passages.

(v. 31.) Africa is still saying through its small and great, "How can I understand, except some one guide me?" It may be God is calling you to guide some of the African people to Jesus.

(v. 33.) "Who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth." For nineteen centuries the Christ has waited for some one to tell the African people concerning itself, but as yet the Church of which you are a part has never said a word to them about it. Will it do so during your lifetime? You must help to answer that question.

(v. 35.) Philip "opened his mouth" and told this negro of Jesus. Do not stammer or mumble the words when you are explaining the Scriptures and the Christian life. It may be only one that will hear you, but that one is worth all the effort you can give. Christian Endeavorers should have a real message for those they meet concerning Christ.

(v. 37.) Baptism was based on belief in the early days, and our Church recognizes it thus today. The Ethiopian believes "with all his heart" that "Jesus Christ is the Son of God." Can you improve on that statement, or can you even say as much? It sent him on his way rejoicing.

(vs. 39, 40.) When a Christian work is done, the "Spirit of the Lord" is ready to take one elsewhere. Do not sit down as if all the work were finished. Leave the new convert to rejoice while you seek for other sinners to help.

Interesting Facts Concerning Africa.

Africa is next to the largest continent in the world, and is more than three times as large as the United States, including its possessions.

Johannesburg produces one-third of the gold supply of the world. Ninety per cent of our diamonds come from Kimberley and South Africa. The natural wealth of Africa is equal to that of any other two continents.

The people may be divided into five general classes, though there are many tribes. There are the Aborigines of the Mediterranean states, known to the Romans as Lybians, and today call-

LITTLE SAMUEL.

There was a very good woman named Hannah, and she grieved because she had no children. Whenever she came with her husband to God's holy place she used to kneel and pray with all her heart that He would let her have a son, and she promised that if she had one she would lend him to the Lord all the days of his life.

At last God granted her prayer and gave her a son, and she named him Samuel. She was very glad when he was born, and she thanked and sang a song of praise to God for her son. But she had promised to lend him to the Lord all of his life; and she kept her promise. As soon as little Samuel was old enough to be without her she took him to the holy place, that was instead of a Church, and gave him to wait upon the Lord. He lived with the high priest, whose name was Eli, and was taught by him.

Eli was a very old man, and his sons used to behave very badly; but Samuel was always good and obedient to him and used to wait upon him and help him when he served God in the holy place. Samuel wore a little white linen dress like the priest's; and when his mother came to see him she would bring him a little coat. She had five more children afterwards—three sons and two daughters. I am sure you like to think of the little child in his white dress ministering before God in His holy place. But only think! you can be like Samuel, though you live at home. You go to Church and can serve God there if you kneel and stand and sit quietly at the proper times, and try to do good to others. And if you are obedient, God will love you as He loved Samuel.

One night when every one was gone to bed, but the lamp in the holy place was not yet gone out, Samuel heard a voice calling to him: "Samuel!" He sprang up at once, for he thought that Eli had called him, and he ran to Eli and said, "Here am I, for thou didst call me." Eli answered, "I called not, my son; lie down again." And Samuel went back to his bed.

Then again came the voice calling to him: "Samuel!" and again he thought it was Eli's call. He was not lazy or fretful at being roused out of his sleep, but he ran at once to Eli and again said "Here am I, for thou didst call me." But Eli sent him back to his bed again. And there again he heard the call, "Samuel!"

Patiently, he once more rose and came to the old man, but this time Eli knew that it must have been no other than God's own voice speaking to the child. So he bade Samuel go back, and next time he heard the voice to say, "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth."

And so Samuel did. Again his name was called and he made answer: "Speak, for Thy servant heareth." And God spoke to him in the still night and told him to give Eli a fresh warning of the sad things that were coming on him and his sons. Samuel was forced to tell Eli all in the morning, sad and mournful as it was. He was grieved to have such things to say, but he told the truth, and Eli was too good a man to be angry with him, and only said, "It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth Him good."

And after that, God often made His will known to Samuel, and blessed him, and all Israel knew that Samuel was God's own prophet. Think of the great honor and blessing of having God so often speaking to him! But we have that blessing, too. God is nearer to a little Christian child than he was to Samuel, for the Holy Spirit speaks in a Christian child's heart and tells him to be good and dutiful, and to think of God, and pray with all his heart. And that is better than even being a prophet like Samuel. Only we must take great care to attend to that voice or it will leave us, and we shall get worse and worse like those bad sons of poor old Eli.

A HANDSOME APOLOGY.

Ned and his grandmother are the best of friends but sometimes the little boy's tongue is too quick to please the old lady. Then Ned apologizes after a fashion of his own, which his grandmother approves.

"I got tired lugging that wheelbarrow for grandmother while she was changing her plants," Ned said to his mother, recounting the day's events at bedtime, "and I said, 'I wish there wasn't another speck of this hateful dirt in all the world!' But then, afterward, I 'pologized."

"I'm glad of that," said his mother; "did you tell her you were sorry."

"No, that is not the kind grandmother likes best," said Ned. "I got another wheelbarrow and just said: 'Don't you want some more of this nice dirt, grandmother?' And then we were all right again."—Exchange.

ed Bergers. A second group are the Arabs and other people from western Asia, who think that at least religiously the continent belongs to them. The negroes proper constitute a third group and are found principally in the Sudan and the coast of Guinea. The Bantus are scattered over a large portion of the continent. The fifth class is composed of the pigmies of the Congo and the Hottentots and Bushmen of the Cape. The latter are the most primitive peoples of earth.

There are 523 distinct languages, with 320 dialects, making a total of 843 varieties of speech. Many of these are not written and have not even an alphabet. The Bible has been translated and printed in 100 different dialects.

The population has never been counted, but there are probably about 130 million people. Eighty million are pagan, forty million Mohammedan, and ten million Christian. Three million are Protestant and the other seven million are Copts, Abyssinian and Roman Catholic.

In New Testament times, Christianity spread to North Africa, and for five hundred years its influence was powerful. Alexandria, Carthage, and Hippo were important Christian cities. In 411 A. D. more than 500 bishops met in conference at Carthage.

Out of this Church in North Africa came great leaders like Tertullian, Cyprian, and Augustine, to whom the Roman world went to school.

In 640 A. D. a band of 4,000 Mohammedan Arabs overran this territory. The Christian Church faded away like snow before the sun. Only a small remnant remains. There are some 700,000 Copts today, and lost among the mountains of the east are a number of Abyssinian Christians. Both groups have lost the vital Christian life.

For twelve centuries the Mohammedans have dominated North Africa. "Poligamy, easy divorce, concubinage, the seclusion of women, the appeal of the sensual, slavery, intolerance, cruelty," these are some of the things that came with the Arabs, and they have borne their deadly fruit. North Africa has been called "a blighted land, a millstone upon the neck of civilization."

South Africa is largely Christian. Modern civilization has come and has brought with it such evils as gambling, drunkenness, robbery, murder, and diseases of many kinds. The Church is coming to the rescue. Christianity comes from the south, and Mohammedanism is on the march from the north. Central Africa is the battleground between these two forces.

Six Reasons for Taking Christ to Africa.

1. The Coptic and Abyssinian Churches are among the oldest Christian Churches in the world. They need new life.

2. The stronghold of Mohammedanism is in North Africa, and it is seeking to conquer the continent. Christianity should stop this progress by giving the natives something better.

3. Millions of human beings live in dense ignorance, deadening superstition, and gross immorality. They need help.

4. Commercialism is exploiting the natives. To the vices of heathenism are being added the crimes of civilization.

5. Christ is the only Saviour. Africa needs Him.

6. The African eagerly accepts Christianity. Wonderful transformations are taking place where the gospel has gone.

MONDAY.

UNDERSTANDING TO THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY.

"Unto the upright there ariseth light in darkness."—Psa. 112:4.

The Holy Scriptures have been established as a protest against godlessness, and for nineteen hundred years has stood firm as the power of God amidst mankind and has prevailed and endured in spite of all attacks, sects and divisions. We believe that no power in the world will ever succeed in destroying it, for it is as firm as God Himself, and He intends it to be the salvation of mankind.

He who is open to and fathoms its secrets honestly and truly and with consecration, it matters not how illiterate, will understand. Scales fall from his eyes, light floods his soul, and he comes to know God. But he who does not know God as a personal experience and does not recognize the Church and the truth of it, the Holy Scriptures remain to him a sealed book, and he has nothing else to do but criticise and doubt.

It is only to those who believe in Christ that the Holy Ghost gives understanding (Matt. 13:11). Unbelief may proclaim as loud as it will that it has discovered the key to a correct understanding of the Bible, but it is mistaken, as certainly as God is everlasting truth.

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, we bless Thee that we have not been cut off in our neglect and our unbelief. Increase our faith daily in Thy Word and cause us to delight in Thy commandments. To forgive us of our sins and fix our hearts on Thee, that we may fear no evil thing. We pray for the world, that the wicked may be brought to repentance and their wickedness may melt away and perish. This we ask for Jesus' Sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

CONSTANCY.

"Be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."—1 Cor. 15:58.

Steadfastness is that upon which one can depend under any or all circumstances; it is a firm and fixed purpose which nothing can turn; it is firmness and stability.

I admire the constancy of the Jews while in captivity. "How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land? If I forget Thee, if I remember Thee not, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth," saith the writer.

We all look for the fixed stars of the heavens. By them we find our way through any darkness to our destination. By them the mariner finds his course at sea. There are lots of shooting stars, but they mean nothing to us. The fixed stars we look for. How many of us are fixed stars in our loyalty to one another, in our loyalty to the Church, and to God? "Covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet show I unto you a more excellent way." "Then shalt thou lift up thy face without spot . . . and shalt not fear."—Job 11:15.

Prayer.—Father of our souls, make our love and peace and righteousness to shine forth as the morning. Anchor our souls to the hope of heaven, that no storm or wind may blow us away from Thee. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

SINCERITY.

"Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."—Psa. 139:23-24.

The word "sincerity" is interpreted to mean "without blemish." It denotes truth and uprightness and agreement of heart and tongue; freedom from hypocrisy, disguises, deceit, or false pretenses. It evidences honesty and commands the respect of o'hers. It brings the rich reward of a satisfied conscience, and it should characterize our love and dealings with one another.

Let us make a self-examination. Am I willing to be searched? Am I willing for my every thought to be made known? Do I desire that I shall be told of anything that seems to be wrong about me that I may set it right and thereby get a little closer to eternal life? It appears that this is the way the psalmist unbested himself before the Lord.

Jesus said of Nathaniel: "Here is a genuine Israelite" (Jno. 1:37), and Paul enjoined the Christians to let no hypocrisy slip into their life, but live with the unleaven bread of innocence and integrity (1 Cor. 5:8).

Prayer.—Our Father, if there be any wicked thing about us bring us unto mourning about it until we shall be clean, and make us new each day for our fellow-men and God. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

TRIBUTATION'S REWARD.

"And there came unto me one of the seven angels . . . saying, Come hither, I will show you the bride, the Lamb's wife."—Rev. 21:6-10.

These words were spoken at a time when the people suffered plagues of fire, hail, earthquakes, pestilence, poverty, privation, etc. How beautiful and delightful it must have been to John to have one of the angels that held the vials of the plagues come to him and offer, out of them, to show him the bride, the Lamb's wife. Tribulation is transferred into visions of delight and the burden is made easy and the hardships forgotten.

How true to life! The fire that burned the home and swept everything away revealed a whole community of loving friends who were not known before. Sickness that laid us on our backs revealed the star of God's love and the strength of His everlasting arms. The death angel that took away the dearest one on earth has unveiled glorious visions of heavenly relations and brought us close to Him.

Prayer.—O God, make us overcomers of trials and temptations, that we may inherit the verities of eternal life. Show us the greatness of God and of the world that can suffer and die, if need be, and out of it all find the compassionate Son of God, our Saviour, our heaven at last. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE PURE HEART'S GREAT REWARD.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."—Matt. 5:1-14.

The Beatitudes have been called gateways into a blessed life. One Christian finds a blessing through one, another through another; but the sixth is all-inclusive, its meaning going far beyond the limited one often given it. The pure life is the one which in the object of its devotion, direction, progress, is free from things which would come between, weaken, defile it.

"My heart is fixed!" exclaimed the psalmist. "For me to live is Christ," wrote St. Paul. "Follow me," "Abide in me," said Christ. Such is the pure life. Its direction is Christward.

Now, the promise is that such shall "see God." May not this mean that when any one gives himself to Christ, he knows God's forgiving grace, the love which led to the sacrifice on the cross for him? "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world!" Each day brings to the penitent this vision. Then the eyes are opened to see the divine One as Helper, as Guide, Strength-giver, and as the tender Sympathizer and Sharer in one's joy.

They shall "see God" after this life, or as we read the Scripture, "face to face." Stephen, about to die, saw "the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God." "We shall see Him even as He is, and every one that hath this hope set on Him, purifieth himself even as He is pure."

Here is the essential life, with issues eternal. What a joy to win others to make it their supreme choice!

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SATURDAY.

PERFECTION THROUGH PATIENCE.

"The trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing."—James 1:1-6.

There never has been a day when the Church was not terribly damaged by the imperfections of Christians. Wars, inquisitions, diabolical cruelties, bad temper, deceit, lust, these things, say the scoffers, are as often as not to be found within the circle of your Christian civilization. Perfection in individual Christians, the perfect flower of the Christ-life, wrought out by infinite patience, alone will silence unbelief where argument must fail. "Be ye perfect," said Jesus, "as your Heavenly Father is perfect."

We easily see the place of patience in the perfection of every-day affairs. That pupil never knows perfection upon the piano without patient hours of practice. No singer wins favor without the long siege of patient voice discipline. The ability to "take pains" in patience alone leads to perfection.

Jesus wants in His Church men and women, architects of life, building perfect and entire characters by patient, spiritual work. "In patience, possess ye your souls," said Jesus. And James adds to it these wonderful words: Count it joy to face trial, for out of that experience will come the perfect work of patience—a soul whole, complete, entire, lacking nothing!

Prayer.—Our Father, save us from dropping down into the routine of old tasks without enthusiasm, and make clear to us the divine purpose of the common work of the human hand. Make us all new creatures in Christ Jesus. Amen.

SUNDAY.

NEIGHBOR TO EVERY MAN.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Mark 12:29-34.

A material body, however solid, has motion continually going on within it. A block of granite is simply a mass of motion, in which every atom is moving upon the next atom.

And therein we have a picturesque definition of society. You are in influential relations with your neighbor and you cannot help it. The law of social life is noblesse oblige, which is simply another form of the Golden Rule: "Do unto others as you would be done by." You are a child of God, and therefore a brother of all, since He "hath created all men of one blood for to dwell upon the face of the earth."

That makes you neighbor to every other man. And here is the rationale of Christ's word "Go!" I have a brother in the slums; I am his keeper. I have a brother on the western frontier; I am his keeper. I have a brother in mid-Africa; I am his keeper. Christ says, "Go, carry the gospel to him."

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We have had three of our boys with us this week visiting the home in which they spent their young and tender years.

Thomas Andrews, who is now a civil engineer, has spent the best part of last year in Mexico trying to teach the people there how to get in the class with North Carolina in building good roads. Thomas has been with the State Highway Commission for several years and has made road building a study. Thomas is a fine old boy, and says that if he ever makes a million dollars the Christian Orphanage shall have half of it.

Alton Cooper is now working for the Seaboard Railway Company, and is expecting one of these days to pull the lever that turns on the steam to give life and energy to the big Mogul engines that pull the heavy trains. Alton has been working for this company for several years, and says there are a few older men between him and his goal, but he will land sooner or later. Alton always comes to see us during his vacation.

Frank Collier, another of our boys, is with us this week. Frank is a plumber, and works for the Burlington Hardware Company. He was our barber the last year he was here, and learned to cut hair well. This week his old customers are calling on him and having him to give them another hair cut.

We are always glad to have our boys and girls come to see us.

We still lack the kitchen range at a cost of $160.00, and one room at a cost of $115.00, having our new building furnished. Who will furnish this for us? Write us quick before some one else gets ahead of you. Our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Massey, of Durham, N. C., mailed us a check this week for $200.00 to put the furniture in the dining-room. In writing me, he used these beautiful sentences which I take the liberty to quote. "We think caring for the fatherless and motherless children is a privilege that every one should feel proud of. It appeals to us as much, if not more, than any enterprise of our Church. May the Lord's blessings rest upon you and yours."

SERVICE BEFORE SELF.

volume of business to make the same amount of money. Think of the poor people that had to go without oranges because to them the price was prohibitive. What a service it would have been for the health of the poor to have made it possible for them to procure the fresh oranges at a low price! But the commission men were not thinking of the poor people who needed fruit—they were only thinking of themselves.

Commercial combinations that deliberately buy up the fruit crops of any section of the country merely to keep the same from being put on the market; men who buy up any necessity of life and withhold the same from the market simply to keep up the price are unsocial, inhuman, un-Christian and pernicious, and stand condemned at the bar of business ethics. They are worse than gangs of highway robbers and manifest even less honor.

The slogan "service before self" challenges men in every walk of life to practice the Golden Rule, declaring that there is more satisfaction in serving than in being served.

ELON CHAUTAUQUA.

It has been my privilege and pleasure to attend two sessions of the Chautauqua held at Elon College—the sessions of 1923 and 1925. I thoroughly enjoyed both sessions, and am looking forward to attending the 1926 session.

I think the Chautauqua is fine and is something that our Southern Christian Convention needs. I wish more of our people would attend, and especially the young people, for the Chautauqua gives one training in spiritual education, social and recreational work. And that is what our young people need if they expect to make their lives count for the most and to be of the greatest service. So let every Church, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor Society, and missionary society have at least one representative each at the Chautauqua this year. All will be greatly benefited by attending the Chautauqua, the older people as well as the young people.

I hope that every person who can possibly do so will attend the Chautauqua this year and help to make it the best that we have ever had.

This snow reef is there the year round and is much raved over by landscape painters and camera artists. SEPARATION OF CHURCHES.

Apart from the theological discussions, such as those arising from the addition of the words, "and the Son," in the creed, the separation of the Latin and Greek Churches may be traced to the founding of Constantinople and the political division of the Roman empire. Ignatius, patriarch of Constantinople, had been deposed, and was succeeded by Photius, who summoned a Council of the East in 867, and passed a sentence of excommunication on the bishop of Rome. The Churches became reunited toward the end of the ninth century and remained so until the middle of the eleventh century, when, in 1054, Michael Cerularius, patriarch of the East, renewed the condemnation of the Latin Church, and was in turn excommunicated by Pope Leo IX. Efforts toward reunion were made from time to time, and at Ferrara (1439) the Greek prelates signed a decree of union, but were forced by the people and clergy to repudiate it. Since then the two communions have remained separate.

The southern home and the Southern Railway

IT is for the creation and preservation of the home that the world's work goes on. And when it is well done and prosperous times come, it is the home that benefits most. Besides being the foundation of the State, the home is the ALL of our civilization.

A myriad of life's necessities—food, clothing and household goods—passes over the rails of the Southern Railway System and into homes every day. And every day thousands of freight cars loaded with products from the South are carried along the rails of the Southern, bound for distant markets. Thus the South grows and develops.

Carrying the world's goods to the South, and the South's goods to the world, day in and day out, is the service of the Southern Railway System to the Southern home. This regular, dependable and economical transportation is the aim and the test of good railroad service.

In the last three years more than $700,000,000 has been spent in the construction of new homes in the states of the South served by the Southern.

OUR GOD.

Remember the greatness of God, and be awed; the graciousness of God, and be revived; the sovereignty of God, and be humbled before Him because of your sin; the sympathy of God, and be drawn back to Him in loving self-surrender. the majesty of God, and know the height from which thou art fallen; the mercy of God, and be lifted back again to His own level of purpose and grace; the riches of God's sovereign love, and this unsatisfying, God-dishonoring life should be ended, and a new life, revived life, renewed strength should begin to manifest itself in all our activities.—J. S. Holden.

SUDDEN PRAYER.

I have a thousand times tested the efficacy of sudden prayer in moments of difficulty, when confronted with a little temptation, when overwhelmed with irritation, before an anxious interview, before writing a difficult passage. How often has the temptation floated away, the irritation mastered itself, the right word been said, the right sentence written! To do all we are capable of, and then to commit the matter to the hand of the Father—that is the best that we can do.—Arthur C. Benson.

OUR PLAN OR HIS.

We plan and plan, then pray That God may bless our plan— So runs our dark and doubtful way That scarce shall lead unto the day; So runs the life of man! But hearken! God saith "Pray," And He will show His plan, And lead us in His shining way That leadeth on to perfect day Each God-surrendered man! —Selected.

IMMORTALITY.

Who does not feel that it would change everything if he believed with his whole soul in his immortality? It would supply him with a totally new standard of values—many things which the world prizes and pursues he would utterly despise, and many things which the world neglects would be the objects of his most ardent pursuit.—James Stalker.

Men can climb mountains and get above the clouds. Behold a parable! Those who live with God are above the clouds that shut out vision.

HOLLAND.

Letha May Holland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Holland, Windsor, Va., died early Thursday morning, July 8th, after an illness of four hours, aged two years, seven months and nineteen days. This going so suddenly of the first-born, so bright and interesting, brought deep sorrow to the hearts of the parents. But they find comfort and hope in the words of Jesus that of such is the kingdom of heaven, and in the words of another bereaved parent, 'He never more can come to me, but I can go to him.' The Lord's blessings be upon them.

'THE SHINE.'

A missionary tells the story of a Hindu trader in a market in India, asking a native Christian: 'Perma, what medicine do you put on your face to make it shine so?'

He replied: 'I don't put anything on.' 'Oh, yes, you do,' exclaimed the trader. 'All you Christians do. I have seen it in Agra, and I've seen it in Bombay and all other cities where you Christians come to the market.'

Then Perma's face shone all the more, and he said: 'It is not medicine that we put on, but love and peace and trust that we have within, if we are Christians, that makes our faces shine. Our sacred Book says that a 'merry heart doeth good like a medicine,' and Christians have happy hearts.'—Classmate.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. S. M. LYNAM.

Chosen Professor at Drew.—

Rev. John Newton Davies has been elected to the professorship of New Testament Exegesis at Drew Theological Seminary. Prof. Davies has for some years been a visiting professor at Drew, coming there from Liverpool, England, where he was in the Wesleyan ministry. He succeeds Dr. Henry A. Butts, for thirty-two years president of the institution.

New Head for Seminary.—

Dr. John A. Moorehead, secretary of the National Lutheran Council and president of the executive committee of the World Lutheran Convention, has been elected president of Mount Airy Lutheran Seminary of Philadelphia. He succeeds Henry E. Jacobs. Dr. Jacobs is in his eightieth year, and has been for forty-three years president of the institution. Dr. Jacobs plans to retain his chair of systematic theology.

Chewing it Up!—

The gum chewers of America are sticking to it and gaining recruits. The Department of Commerce took a census of forty-one gum-producing concerns recently and found that their products amounted to $47,838,000, $47,124,000 worth of which was chewing gum. The remainder was made up by breathlets, candy, and vending machines. These figures showed an increase of 17 per cent over 1923.

An Unusual Decision.—

Rev. Tertius Van Dyke, son of Dr. Henry Van Dyke, has caused something of a stir in the Metropolitan ministerial circles by his having recently resigned the pastorate of the Park Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, to accept the pastorate of the Congregational Church at Washington, Conn. He did this, he says, because he believes that constructive pastoral work can best be carried on in a parish like that comparatively a rural work.

The Price of Carelessness.—

According to a report issued by Wilfred Kurth, president of the Board of Fire Underwriters, more than 570 million dollars worth of property was destroyed by fire in 1925. Mr. Kurth pointed out that this loss by fire set a new high record for the United States. He told the public that the total was 21 million dollars more than for 1924 and 35 million dollars more than for 1923. Five hundred and seventy million dollars is a large sum to pay for carelessness, no matter if this is the wealthiest nation in the world. We cannot long remain so if we continue to burn it up at the rate of five dollars per year for every man, woman and child in the country. These figures do not include the enormous loss of life which fire caused.

Four Causes of Church Weakness.—

Rev. A. E. Craig, of Evansville, Ind., has been preaching on the weakness of the Church. He lays down four causes as productive of Church weakness. These are spiritual illiteracy, intellectual confusion, worldly conformity, and moral complacency. The sermon is said to have been suggested by the simultaneous resignation of two of the leading pastors on the grounds of dissatisfaction with the work which their Churches are doing. The four causes named by Mr. Craig are provocative of thought, and the Church must acknowledge their potency and set itself to the devising of plans whereby to eliminate them as much as possible.

The League's First Break.—

Brazil has finally decided to resign her seat in the Council of the League of Nations and to withdraw from it. The trouble arises from the admission of Germany to the League and the prospective giving to Germany a permanent seat in the council, which Brazil thinks should belong to her or to Spain. If Brazil withdraws, as it now intends to do, it will be the first break in the League, and probably the beginning of the end. Germany will probably receive a permanent seat in the Council, since several of the leading European countries favor it. Of course, under the League pact, Brazil cannot withdraw from the League until two years following her resignation has elapsed. The prospect for the League at present is a gloomy one.

Meyer London Dies.—

When Meyer London died in New York recently, the love for him of New York's East Side was manifested by the following of the hearse by fifty thousand men and women, while several times that number crowded the streets to do him honor. Meyer London was of Jewish extraction, an agnostic in belief, a Socialist in politics, a peace advocate, but a patriot in war. He is probably best known because of his service as New York's Socialist congressman. He worked tirelessly for the uplift and betterment of the working people, and won the hearts of hundreds of thousands. He was not re-elected to Congress because of the split in his party caused by war opposition or war loyalty. At his funeral the tributes of men differing in opinion so much as Victor Berger, of Milwaukee, and Morris Hillquit testified to the broadness of his love and loyalties. One speaker said of him: "By temperament, Meyer London was not a good fighter nor a good hater; every blow he struck at his enemies hurt him, but in a world of injustice he was forced to fight, never for himself, but for justice for the masses." What finer tribute could there have been paid him? Men evidently loved him for what he did, not for what he did or did not believe.

Pennsylvania Politics.—

Three men were in the senatorial race in Pennsylvania recently. Governor Pinchot, the present Senator Pepper, and William S. Vare, the boss of Philadelphia politics, as many believe, made desperate efforts to make the Senate chamber in the primary of the State. Mr. Vare won overwhelming on an out-and-out wet platform. The anti-prohibitionists called it a great victory until it developed that tremendous sums of money had been spent, much of it going directly for the purchase of votes.

It is estimated that the Pepper and Vare forces spent above two million dollars in the primary. The friends of Senator Pepper spent more than a million, and Vare partisans and personal friends an equal amount. Those opposed to the Coolidge administration, knowing that Secretary of the Treasury Mellon was anxious to have Senator Pepper returned to Washington, are charging that the administration, through Mr. Mellon, countenanced the spending of such large sums of money. Compared with the Pennsylvania affairs, the famous Newberry case of Detroit, in which only two hundred thousand dollars was spent, seems insignificant. Pennsylvania politicians have perpetrated one of the greatest frauds American politics has known in 150 years.

The Eucharistic Congress.—

The Eucharistic Congress, which has been meeting in Chicago recently, is said to be one of the largest, if not the largest, religious gatherings ever held in this country. Thirteen cardinals, five hundred bishops, five thousand priests, and twelve thousand nuns, together with seven hundred and fifty thousand laymen, are said to have bowed before the Holy Eucharist. The altar was two hundred feet square and contained twelve tons of steel. The gathering was held in the great Chicago Coliseum, and, for magnificence, is incomparable to anything which America has ever known. Cardinal Bonzano was the papal legate, and, therefore, in charge of the festival, together with the two American Cardinals Hays and Mundelein. The Congress is the eighteenth ever held, the institution dating back only to 1881. Such festivals have as their purpose the glorification of the Holy Eucharist, and the winning through display and magnificence of new converts to it and strengthening in the faith of the old members. This is the second Eucharistic Congress to have been held on this side of the Atlantic, the other being held in Montreal in 1910. The Catholic population in this country is estimated at sixteen million communicants. These figures, of course, include all who are born into the Catholic Church, since the children of Catholic parents are considered members of the Church from their birth.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Many of our pastors are busy in their evangelistic meetings now, but there are few congregations we fancy who will not readily agree to postpone their meetings for a week to allow their pastors to attend the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon, July 26th to August 4th.

This is a beautiful tribute, sincere, frank and true, which our dear Bro. Rev. G. D. Hunt pays in our obituary columns this week to the memory of his mother. Surely Bro. Hunt has a goodly heritage, and in his faithful ministry of service his dear mother will live on and accomplish much, even though he will see her face no more in the flesh.

Three of our very busy pastors are Revs. J. L. Johnson and J. Fuller Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C., and Jesse E. Franks, Route 4, Raleigh, N. C., all members of the Eastern North Carolina Conference and serve a total of twenty-one or more Churches. They are in the vigor of youth, zeal, and enthusiasm, and good roads with rapid travel enable them to cover a vast territory and serve faithfully and effectually a very large constituency.

The following from the Daily News Record, of Harrisonburg, Va., July 13th, is of interest: "Approximately seventy-seven persons gathered at Mt. Olivet Christian Church on last Thursday night, the regular prayer meeting night. These prayer meetings, organized since the great revival meeting conducted by Rev. J. L. Early, of Bridgewater, have been growing in interest each week. One hundred and fifty-nine attended Sunday School yesterday, a record for this Church." The pastor, Rev. R. P. Crumpler, adds that the number at Sunday School at Mt. Olivet was forty-nine, but last Sunday, one year later, there were present one hundred and fifty-nine. One year ago there was no mid-week prayer meeting. There were ninety-five people present at prayer meeting and for the business meeting on June 15th. The building is to be wired and electrically lighted by July 24th. Two additional deacons and other Church officers were elected last night. The ladies of this Church recently organized a wide-awake Ladies' Aid Society. Mt. Olivet is rapidly forging her way to the front. We rejoice with Bro. Crumpler, the beloved pastor, in the progress and development of this Church, which he has so faithfully served for some years now.

We learn from several sources that Rev. H. C. Caviness, assisting the pastor, Rev. E. C. Brady, in a series of meetings at Franklinton, N. C., held a most successful revival resulting in accessions to the other Churches of the town and a great moral and spiritual uplift for the whole community. The following is taken from the Franklinton News, July 15th: "The revival services held last week under the auspices of the Christian Church were concluded with the service in the Methodist Church last Sunday night. Hundreds of people from Franklinton, and even from surrounding counties, attended the services during the week and the Church was filled to overflowing on Sunday night. Through the inspiring sermon of the evangelist, Mr. M. C. Caviness, and the songs of his assistant, Mr. J. C. Yelton, many were converted and rededicated to the service of Christ. Rev. Mr. Brown, of Chicago, a native of Norway and a close friend of Mr. Caviness, was present at most of the meetings and made a most interesting and inspiring talk on Sunday afternoon. Mr. Brown, Mr. Caviness and Mr. Yelton left Monday morning for a motor trip to Washington and the mountains of Virginia. They will return in time to begin a series of meetings at Virgilina, Va., next Sunday, July 18th. These gentlemen made for themselves many friends during their stay in Franklinton, and it is felt that not only the Christian denomination, but the entire community, was greatly benefited by this revival. The co-operation of the three Churches—Christian, Baptist and Methodist—was most impressive and served to make the meeting a community revival in every sense of the word."

HOW BETHLEHEM GROWS!

We are in the midst of the good old summertime—peaches, watermelons, revival meetings, and so on. Well, this is a fine country. Lots of good people everywhere. Now and then you come across a black sheep, but they are not all black sheep. I am having an opportunity of visiting the Churches of these Conferences, and also many homes. I am having a real good time out in the interest of Bethlehem College. If you ever had the experience of collecting money for a public enterprise you know what a delightful experience it is. I mean, I enjoy it. Not out for self, but for the kingdom of God and the good of humanity. The people are so kind and want to help, and many are making sacrifices to help.

We are nearly up to the second story with the brick work, and going just as fast as we get the money to do with. Eighteen preachers have sent me contributions from eleven States. Only two laymen from other States than Georgia and Alabama; but we know they are going to help us some time. We hope it won't be long. We rush the building to completion, but we can't do it without money. Want you help us now? Wadley, Ala. H. W. ELDER.

A MESSAGE FROM OKLAHOMA.

I am finding my work here very pleasant. I am located in a small village, Oktaha, in the east central part of Oklahoma. I am about eighteen miles southwest of Fort Gibson, a very historic spot; fourteen miles south of Muskogee, the oldest oil field of Oklahoma; eighty miles south of Tulsa, the oil metropolis of the State, which is per capita the wealthiest city in the world. I am in the western portion of the old Creek Indian nation, just southwest of the Cherokee nation, and about 100 miles from the Osage Indians, said to be the wealthiest people in the world. As would indicate, the pronunciation of these names—Oktaha, Tahlequah, Checotah, Tishomingo, Wewaka, Sapulpa, Sequoyah—are quite a puzzle to a North Carolinian, and efforts at their pronunciation brings many a smile from these Oklahomians. However, I am thriving under so great a difficulty.

The work that I am doing is for the Church Extension Board of the American Missionary Society. Every summer this board sends out theological students as supply pastors. This arrangement offers a wonderful opportunity for rendering service and for self-help. We have services twice each Sunday, with Sunday School. We have a Young People's Society and the Women's Auxiliary Society. The people appreciate the Church very much, and I hope that the work may be the means of great good being accomplished. Mission work for a long time has been carried on among the Indians here, and they have their own Churches. There are many negroes in this section also. Their work is carried on very efficiently by members of their own race.

I plan to be here until about September 15th, and then to return to Seminary.

I had a very nice trip out here. I had the opportunity to visit Bro. W. C. Hook's Church at Albany, N. Y., where a very splendid work is being done. I spent a day and night at Defiance College, which was a real treat. They have a wonderful spirit at the college, and faculty and students are trying to make the college a great force in the kingdom. These brethren look with a great deal of pride upon our Elon and the work she is doing in Christian education. Also I had opportunity to visit our publishing house at Dayton, Ohio. This visit to our headquarters was a fine experience. After visiting the offices of the Church, where I found every officer busily carrying on his work, I felt that I had visited a sure-enough "power-house." Those leaders are carrying heavier loads than many of our people realize. I wish every member of our Church could visit these headquarters and know something of the burdens and problems which our leaders are facing. We are indeed a part of a great brotherhood. Oktaha, Okla. WM. T. SCOTT.

SABBATH RESPECTED.

A very strong effort has recently been made by a member of the city council of Richmond, Va., to have the parks and playgrounds of the city thrown open for organized sports on Sunday, such as baseball and tennis. These grounds are under control of the mayor of the city. He gave a very full public hearing to those who favored the movement and those who opposed it.

The only representatives of the Churches who favored the opening of these grounds on Sunday were a Catholic priest and a Unitarian preacher. The plan was also favored by the leader of the Boy Scouts of the city. The movement was opposed by representatives of practically all of the evangelical Churches, and the mayor decided that the playgrounds should remain closed.

It is reported that those who are advocating the opening of these parks and playgrounds propose to continue the fight in an effort to induce the mayor to reverse his decision; but it is confidentially believed that a vast majority of the Christian people of the city approve of the action of the mayor, and are ready to support him in an effort to prevent this desecration of the Lord's day.

I wish to call the attention of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference to the meeting of our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, which meets with the United Christian Church at Lynchburg, Va., July 24th and 25th, and will close at 4 P. M., July 25th. We want every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor in the Conference to be represented by delegates and its officers. So elect at least two delegates from each Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society and get ready to attend now.

The date as fixed is not as we desired, but it is the best the executive committee could do without conflict with some other event during the month.

We hope every minister of the Conference, every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor officer, and at least two delegates from each organization will be present. Come with some suggestions as to the best way to conduct a Convention that is attractive and that will be helpful for your officers another year. We hope every one who possibly can will be there at the beginning and will stay until the end.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The Convention of the Eastern North Carolina Conference met at Wake Chapel July 14th and 15th. Quite a few schools and Endeavor Societies were not represented, but many were, and the Convention was much engaged in discussing practical problems facing actual situations in the home Churches and community. Rev. J. Fuller Johnson was president, and conducted the Convention with much zeal and fervor. He expressed the very deep regret that many heads of departments were absent and reports that would have been very helpful were not on hand.

Miss Ruth Johnson, who is in Europe, gave an example of what one, through loyalty and thoughtfulness, may do for a meeting, though absent. Knowing that she was on the program, her report was all prepared, and at the proper time submitted by the Secretary, and the demonstration that she was expected to put on from work in her school was carried out promptly and efficiently, even if she were not present. Many officers of a religious body think themselves excused from the performances of duty provided they have a good excuse for being absent in person. Evidently this is not in Miss Ruth Johnson's way of thinking. One of the very helpful features of the Convention was the devotional exercise conducted twice each day by Rev. J. E. Franks, using as his theme, "Lessons from the Life of Paul." Bro. Franks brought four inspiring messages from outstanding events and epochs in the life of this great missionary to the Gentiles.

Much of the first day of the Convention was given to Christian Endeavor reports and discussion. This body is making an heroic attempt to boost Christian Endeavor and establish a going society in every one of its Churches. One of the leading spirits in this attempt is Mr. Galen Elliott, a student of University of North Carolina, who is deeply interested in Christian Endeavor and is doing much to increase interest in Endeavor work throughout the Christian Churches in North Carolina.

Dr. W. T. Walters and Miss Pattie Coghill, of the Department of Religious Education, were both present during the Convention and added much of interest and information to the sessions. Mrs. R. J. Newton, Henderson, N. C., was elected recording secretary, and is to give to THE SUN a detailed account of the Convention. It came out in discussion of the Convention that, so far as our printed records this year show, scarcely one-half of the Churches in this Conference have Sunday Schools at all, some of them being the leading Churches of the Conference. The actual facts, as reported by delegates and visitors to the Convention, were that practically all the Churches of the Convention have Sunday Schools. This is a most regrettable injustice. A desperate effort is to be made to properly record all the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of this Conference, and this should be done in every Conference, for the printed record is all that the people have to judge by in matters of facts and statistics which apply to Schools and Churches. This writer sometimes feels, when he examines our printed records, that we Christians are the most indifferent or prodigal people in the world when it comes to giving the facts and figures of our numbers and achievements. We possibly inherited this from ancient times when tradition tells us our forefathers would meet in conference or assembly and then proceed, when the assembly was over, to burn up the records so that no one could see that we had any creed, or dogma, or even printed proceedings to take away our liberty or establish for us a precedence or custom. At any rate, we have gone a long way in exercising liberty in not printing our statistics and records as they actually are.

The Eastern North Carolina Convention is one of our most aggressive, both in the quest of problems and discussions as to best methods of conducting Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Societies and of reaching the young people. It has a great field, and the number of young people at the Wake Chapel Convention evidenced their growing interest in this phase of Church activity. Wake Chapel entertained the Convention royally, and while the attendance did not measure up to that of some years, the interest was good and the discussions interesting during all the session of the Convention. A more detailed report of the Convention will appear in THE SUN later.

PREACHERS, TEACHERS AND LEARNERS.

Our books on pedagogy tell us that there is no teaching unless some one is taught. One may explain, illuminate or demonstrate a fact, a principle, or a theory, but unless there is some human being whose mind received the light or instruction by such a procedure, there is no teaching. One, however learned and skilled, teaches nothing unless some one is actually taught and receives into his own mind and makes his own that which was taught. By this theory of pedagogy, a teacher may lecture or pretend to teach for an hour, but unless members of the class receive the facts or terms taught there was no teaching. As the word husband implies the word wife, so teaching implies some one taught. The same is true of preaching. There is no preaching when and where those preached at or preached to receive no message or truth which they can make their own. In other words, both teaching and preaching are compound words, in that they require at least two or more parties to the process, namely: the one party giving, and the other party receiving. The giving is only half the process; the other half, which is equally essential to the process, is that of receiving.

And this only carries us half way in the development of our thinking, for, declares our pedagogical authorities, when a human mind quits learning, its ability to teach ceases. It is only the learner that can either teach or preach. We can only teach and preach that which we are in the process of learning. This they illustrate for us by the process of forcing water through a pipe. One may have ever so much water in a pipe, even a hundred feet long, but that which is being forced into the pipe can force water out for use. The water in the pipe does not avail for actual use, but that which is forced out (when the spigot is turned) by that which is being forced in at the other end of the pipe. So the human mind. When a learner ceases to learn, his mind ceases to teach. He cannot force out save by the process of forcing in. He may create a noise and blow around considerably as will the spigot on the pipe from which the water has been cut off at the source of supply. One may use illustrations and draw rich lore from the enclosure of a well-stored mind, but the use of that is stale and deadening unless forced out by the process of forcing in. The great old preachers whose lives we have read and who, even in old age, delivered great messages were close students in old age. It matters little as to how great a harvest the field produced last year, if only dead hay and stubble fill that field this year, the sight is ungainly and the harvest is nil.

God's glorious world, with its new creations, with every new day, invites us as teachers, preachers and learners, to constantly force new and living truths into our minds in order that the things we have learned from experience and in other days may be forced out for the blessing and benefit of those around about us.

Any student of Jesus will tell you that the reason why he could constantly teach was because he daily learned. His eye, mind and heart were ever open to and learning from the throbbing page of nature and of man and of God. He was a great teacher. He was equally a great student, scholar, learner.

EXPERIENCE AS TEACHER.

Some of the best lessons ever learned are those of experience. In fact, no truth is worth teaching that is not worth trying. "Try the spirits, whether they be of God," says the Lord. We can better tell and teach that which has been obtained through experience than that which has been culled through speculation.

Dr. J. H. Jowett, the great English divine, learned some theology from experience that stood him in good stead all the way through. In reviewing his first pastorate, which was at Newcastle, England, Dr. Jowett said:

"I have learned this lesson, 'that sin is mighty, but God is mightier'; I have learned that man is impotent to redeem himself; I have learned that no man need be regarded as beyond redemption; I have learned that, for the ruined life, there is restoration, a power, a peace, and a joy unspeakable; I have learned that the care and the misery of this Church are in the homes where Christ is absent; I have learned that the happiest and most beautiful homes connected with this congregation are the homes of the redeemed. These are the lessons of my ministry. Upon the experience of these severe years of labor I declare, with a glad and confident heart, that Jesus has power and willingness to redeem everybody."

SERVICE BEFORE SELF.

No. II.

Time was when it was universally conceded that men who went into business had but one objective, namely: that of making money. There are many men in business today who still follow that standard. But the better class of business men realize that the merchant, like the minister, the teacher, and the physician, should be a servant to society, and that, though he expects his business to secure him a good living, his major objective should be to render the largest possible service to humanity. The better the living a man makes, the better the service he should render, and the greater is his obligation to serve. The business man should look upon himself as a servant to the public. As the teacher and the minister enter their professions because they believe they can render God and man their largest service in those vocations, so every person should choose his vocation in life with that same motive of service.

The man in business who has the high motive of service, and makes service his chief objective, is bound to profit most. Such men play the game straight, they are friends to society, and God Himself blesses the man who thus serves. In war, men give their lives for others. In peace, no man should refuse to do less. The merchant who is public-spirited and who is interested in his community as well as in his business, has a right to the patronage of the community. And the public soon learns such a man, and his interests are advanced in response to his service to the people. So also the employee who serves best his employer will be advanced the most rapidly. The young man who tries to do as little as he can for his employer, cannot expect the employer to do much for him. The time-server, the man who keeps his eyes on the clock rather than upon his work, forfeits his right to promotion. In every line of work "He profits most who serves best."

The great challenge of the Christian gospel is that of service. Jesus Christ was not interested alone in getting people saved. He wanted to save people in order that they in turn might serve. And any religion that allows its devotees to be content with being saved, and does not inspire them to prove the worth of their religious belief by rendering service to God and man, is a spurious type of religion. It is not the Christian religion, for Christianity is a religion of service. It was Jesus Himself who gave the world the Golden Rule, and who seeks today to inspire men and women with a love for God and for humanity that will impell them to give their lives in loving service to the world.

Every man in business, professional life, or in industry can serve society by genuine honesty. And the man who is honest will succeed the best in the long run. "Honesty is the best policy," but the man who is honest as a matter of policy rather than as a matter of principle is not the highest type of citizen. The kind of men needed today is the men who are honest because they hate dishonesty, and because no amount of money could hire them to be dishonest. No business can ultimately succeed, much less serve that is not based upon the solid rock of honesty.

A community forges ahead in proportion to the number of social-minded citizens it has as compared with its number of selfish citizens.

If 51 per cent of the citizens of a community are progressive in spirit and in life, social-minded and public-hearted, that community is bound to advance. Its future development and progress are assured. But if 51 per cent of the citizens of a community are selfish, narrow-minded, short-sighted and reactionary, all that the other 49 per cent can do will not avail. The die has been cast —the way blocked against community advancement.

Short-sighted, selfish men can ruin any town or city if they are in the majority. Citizens have it within their power to make their town or break it. A certain western city that I often visit has the reputation of being one of the most progressive, up-to-date cities of its size in the nation. With a population of about 200,000, it has attracted world-wide admiration. And the phenomenal progress that city has enjoyed rests largely upon the service rendered by one social-minded citizen who, by his service and sacrifice, inspired his fellow-townsmen to keep the 51 per cent of the citizens on the side of service and progress. When the place was only a town of a few thousands, he looked ahead to the time when it would be a hustling city. But he realized that towns grew only in proportion to the public spirit of their citizens. He owned much of the land in the town and surrounding country. So to prove his public spirit, he made up his mind that he would give the land or sell it at far below value to any organization that wanted to build a Church; to the town if it wanted to build schools; to hospitals or to any other social agency. And as the city grew and spread beyond the original town limits, he gave tracts of land for city parks. He realized that the more he could do for his city, the more it would grow; and the more it grew, the more the value of his property would be enhanced. And a few years ago, after he had given hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of land to the schools, Churches, hospitals and parks of his city, in appreciation of what his city had done for him in giving his property value, and making him a multi-millionaire, he made the magnanimous gift of two million dollars to his city, the income from which is to be used in social service work among the poor, and another five hundred thousand dollars for the upkeep of the parks and municipal playgrounds.

Such men, in putting service before self, have profited the most. It is tragical how short-sighted and selfish men can injure a community. But it is glorious how altruistic and social-minded men can bless their community.

I knew an old man in my home city of Des Moines, Iowa, who accumulated several hundred thousand dollars by hard work. He was social-minded and public-spirited, putting service before self. He decided that he could help his city best by service before self. He decided that he could help his city best by buying old run-down properties and improving them, and then selling them to the poor people on easy payments at exactly the amount he had invested in them. In this way, he helped to beautify his city, and also served his fellow-citizens. He loved the romance of his service. He did not want any profit, for he had plenty of money for himself, and said that he wanted to spend the rest of his life in serving his city in that way. He planted shrubbery and trees every spring and fall on old properties, and one day, when asked why he was planting fruit trees and shade trees at his age, then being eighty years old, he replied: "Well, it's this way. We have to do it for each other. Somebody planted the trees from which I have gathered fruit, and the trees whose shade I have enjoyed. So why shouldn't I plant trees for others to enjoy in years to come?" We need more men and women who thus put service before self; people who are on the lookout for opportunities to do something for the good of their community and for their fellow-citizens; people who desire to make some worthy contribution to the well-being and happiness of posterity.

The best asset to the business prosperity of any community is the willingness on the part of the merchants to co-operate with each other, to help one another, to give and take, to boost and be boosted, and to think of the other fellow, and for all the business men to be more concerned in having satisfied customers than in having larger volumes of sales. The merchant who is not content merely to sell his goods, but who gives himself to his patrons—his personal interest, as did the old family doctor of our boyhood days—that merchant will ingratiate himself into the heart of his customers and into the life of his community in a magnificent way. And when he is gone he will be missed because of the service he rendered to his fellow-man.

What our day needs in every department of business is competition in service rather than competition for gain—each to seek to give the best service, rather than for each to seek to make the most gain. That is what Christianity teaches. And any business enterprise that conforms in its practices and methods to the moral demands of Christianity is bound to succeed.

Profit is the dominant force in our economic life. That is what gives business its driving force. But many have the wrong idea of profit. What is profit? Profit is commonly thought of as that which is left in money to a business man after he has paid his overhead expense, his income tax, etc. But there is still another measure of profit—"How much of human sympathy, joy, satisfaction, and interest in the other fellow is left?" How much of honor and self-respect? How much knowledge of having served his fellow-man? These are values that cannot be measured with the yardstick of money. What a wonderful world this would be if everybody would follow the Golden Rule, and do unto others as they would have others do unto them! If all the Churches would accept the Golden Rule as their creed and base their creed upon the general acceptance of Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour, it would be creed enough to speed the coming of the kingdom of God upon earth.

The cross of Christ stands for the principle of service—a principle which was born in the loving heart of God and the only principle that can secure merited and lasting prosperity for an individual, for the State or for the nation.

The bag of Judas stands for selfishness—a sin that was born in the heart of the devil; a sin that will damn any person, for time and eternity, who fosters it, and a sin that will curse any community that it touches.

The cross of Christ stands for service. The bag of Judas stands for selfishness, and every person must cast his own vote as to which of these insignias shall be inscribed upon his heart—which group he will be in: the group that follows Jesus in service, or the group that follows Judas in selfishness and self-seeking.

The hope of our day and of the future is that there shall be a new order of society made possible by socialized men and women dedicating themselves to the proposition of service before self.

"He profits most who serveth best"

His God and fellow-man

Each day and week and month and year

Throughout life's narrow span;

Who empties self into the mold

Of others' happiness,

Like Him who suffered on the cross

The souls of men to bless."

God's reign will not come until all men shall seek to serve their fellow-men in response to the mighty principle of all for each and each for all. Then the brotherhood of man will have been ushered in, and the kingdom of God established on earth.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is a real Church paper, and it should be in every family of the Southern Christian Convention. Very few families are too poor to pay $2.00 a year—the regular price of THE SUN. This opinion is based on the fact that some of the very poorest members subscribe for THE SUN. There are many reasons why every family in the Church should subscribe for and read THE SUN. Perhaps the main reason is that membership in the Church requires a knowledge of what the Church is doing. In fact, all other departments of the Church would die without THE SUN. The Orphanage owes its existence and support to THE SUN. Missions are kept alive through the columns of THE SUN. It is the medium of the exchange of ideas, the propagation of plans and purposes. No institution that depends upon a constituency can continue its existence and to work without an organ to disseminate its principles and make known its needs. Loyalty to the Church, her principles, and her work requires contact with what is being done, and this can be accomplished only through the Church paper.
