That is what Rev. J. G. Truitt, pastor of our First Church, Norfolk, Va., says about the annual every-member canvass. "The every-member canvass is used in my Church because we are exceedingly anxious to practice Christianity in our own Church and to teach it to others. In our small and poor Church we raise ten thousand dollars every year. We need must have some very efficient way of getting this sum. This method is impartial, personal and practical, reaching all and meeting our needs."

MISSION GROWTH.

Writing in the Missionary Review of the World, Dr. Robert E. Speer makes a striking comparison between the foreign missionary work of fifty years ago and that of today. He writes:

"In 1877 there were twenty-one mission organizations in the United States (for foreign work). Now there are 122. Then there were 1,228 foreign missionaries, but many of these were missionaries to the American Indians. There are now 13,000 American foreign missionaries. Then the total contributed to foreign missions by Churches in the United States was $1,800,000; now it is $40,000,000."

We should never cease to be mightily impressed with such figures as these. It is true that not all of this preaching that is being done in foreign lands is in harmony with the pure gospel, but we remember the apostle Paul's declaration that he was not concerned whether Christ be preached of contentions, so long as Christ is preached. The simple fact that Christians of all persuasions are spreading out into every corner of the world and proclaiming the name of Christ is in itself a fulfillment of prophecy, which prophecy we believe is one of the most definite ones on which Christians may pin their faith.

Is it not remarkable that when our world finally came down to that time in its history when the great prophetic periods ended and when, according to prophecy, the last days were about to begin, there should be such a mighty awakening of missionary activity by all Christian people, and that this missionary activity has seen no abatement, but a steady growth from that time on to the present? By our prayers, by our offerings, and by the gift of ourselves, let us give added momentum to this movement, for "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."—Review and Herald.

EXPLODING SOME FACTS.

What are the facts about prohibition? Has it justified itself? Is it doing more harm than good? How can the claims of the wets be answered? Are we on the verge of a reversal of our nation-wide policy?

These and similar questions are flung at the prohibition advocate wherever and whenever he makes a public appearance.

What are the facts about prohibition? One gets that question more often than any other. It betrays a queer twist in the mental make-up of people. The briefest survey, such as might be made by one with the most limited opportunities, and a few moments of careful thinking, would yield convincing proof that the facts about prohibition are as numerous as the sands of the sea and as difficult to enumerate.

Has prohibition increased the aggregate savings of the people deposited in banks? The drys say "yes." Opponents of prohibition answer "no." The fact that savings have increased since prohibition came into effect, is not disputed. The liquorites deny that it is due to the change in policy toward the liquor traffic. Prohibitionists assert that in the main it is thus properly to be attributed.

Is there more drunkenness now than before the eighteenth amendment took effect? Our opponents so affirm; we deny. They seek out certain centers for figures to prove an increase in arrests for drunkenness; to which we reply that such arrests depend as much upon the activity of the police as upon the number of drunks.

I am not interested in statistics. I never have been. In all the years of my connection with the prohibition reform I have never rested an argument upon statements of facts which depended upon unknown witnesses or upon masses of figures. I think that method is most valuable, but I have no taste for it. I leave it to those who delight in that line of attack. In my judgment, ninety-nine out of every one hundred will form their conclusions as to the effect of prohibition and as to whether it should be maintained or repealed by the facts which come under their own observation. They form their opinions from what they themselves know.

Let me put it this way: If any reader of this article has more friends who are now drunkards than he had before the eighteenth amendment was adopted; if the children of more of his friends are going hungry and poorly clad because of drink; if more of his acquaintances are out of work and dependent upon others for help; if more of them are turning criminals; if he meets more of them drunk every day than before nation-wide prohibition came, all the favorable statistics I could gather from every section of the country proving the advantage of prohibition would leave him cold and unconvinced.

On the other hand, a wet may talk until he is black in the face about the harm which prohibition is doing; he may bring forward all the statistics he is able to compile which seem to prove his case, and get nowhere with people who are aware of the improved conditions among their own friends and in their own neighborhoods.

In other words, we are dealing with an issue and a condition with reference to which the average man or woman may form his or her own conclusions from facts personally observed.

But what about the claims of the wets? How are they to be answered? That depends upon the one who makes the answer. Somebody once asked Josh Billings if he believed in the final perseverance of the saints? He answered that he did if he could pick his men. What to do about the claims of the wets depends largely upon the wet who is making the claim or upon the source from which it emanates.

Recently, at the request of the Rotary Club in Haverhill, Mass., it was my privilege to debate the question with a lawyer in that city. He proceeded to prove the failure of prohibition by alleged facts and figures relating to San Francisco. That was about as far as he could get from Haverhill, the scene of the debate, without leaving the country. He was forced to admit in the presence of the Haverhill people that conditions in his own city were vastly improved under prohibition.

Without impugning the motives of those who differ from us and without raising any question as to their honesty, it is fair to suggest that if more intoxicating liquor is being made and consumed under prohibition than during the days of the old-time saloon, our wet opponents should be satisfied. In that event, they are getting exactly what they want. But on the contrary, prohibition is denounced on the ground that it interferes with their personal liberty—with their right to drink what they please, and more to the same effect. It is not easy to reconcile that with their boast that under prohibition liquor is easier to get than it was before and that they are drinking more of it.

A man may not eat his cake and have it. We cannot consent to allow our opponents to have it both ways. What fair-minded man doubts that, as a matter of fact, much less liquor is consumed than in the days of the saloon? It taxes credulity to the limit to believe that the liquor industry is greater today than before, when the sky was filled with the smoke of breweries, when distilleries abounded and shipped their products by trainloads, when the open saloon was found on every hand. By what rule of development can a business grow greater as it disappears from sight? If all meat markets were closed and slaughterhouses padlocked, would anybody believe that more meat products were being consumed when practically all signs of the traffic had disappeared? Could such business increase under those conditions except in such obvious fashion that the dumbest people would know it?

In the old days, the drunkard was ever present.

His poverty-stricken family was known to the community. The place where he hung out was an established center. These are gone from sight, yet the wets ask us to believe that something worse has taken their places. Their request is fantastic. We venture the assertion that only the opponent of prohibition, who has determined that he will not be convinced professes to believe such absurdity.

It should be kept in mind that the unquestioned results achieved have been brought about, notwithstanding the disposition on the part of prohibitionists to assume that the fight was over the moment the eighteenth amendment was ratified. That was natural, however regrettable. It had been a long struggle. It culminated in the ratification of the eighteenth amendment. Our people supposed the liquorites would respect that action, that they would have due reverence for the Constitution. Therefore, friends of prohibition assumed the fight was over; that what remained was a mere detail of administration in the form of enforcement of the law.

How badly mistaken they were becomes daily more apparent. It should be cheerfully granted that millions, who did not look with favor upon prohibition, have refused to be parties to its violation, but the organized wets, determined on ultimate defeat of the policy, have shown their utter disrespect for the Constitution and disregard for law.

The fight is with them. The country finally must determine whether a minority, unreconciled to an act for the moral benefit of all, is to be permitted to override the will of the majority and bring this great policy to naught.

The duty of friends of prohibition lies plainly before them. They should not cease reminding the public as to the conditions which marked the days of the saloon. Evidently the wets have outlined a course based largely upon the theory that the people have short memories. For example, we hear it said constantly that under prohibition boys carry flasks. The announcement is made in that triumphant manner which indicates that boys never before carried flasks and drank from them. It is sufficient to remind any one old enough to have a memory extending back into the reign of the saloon that flasks of liquor were kept on sale in all such resorts and were sold day and night and were carried everywhere by boys and men. In the best of neighborhoods there would always be some one to show up at any party, spelling match, or any other gathering with his flask of liquor. The whiskey flask is not a new thing. It is as old as the traffic itself. But the wets use the argument that centers around it as though it had made its advent only yesterday.

We are asked to believe that crime waves are due to prohibition. Just what they are due to in the countries which have the legalized liquor traffic our wet friends do not tell us. Thinkers long since have concluded that increase in certain crimes or offenses is due to the World War, its demoralizing effects upon standards of life, and to the tremendous changes which have come about within a decade.

Does any sane mind believe that we would be a more orderly and law-abiding people had the prohibition amendment been rejected and had the legalized liquor traffic remained?

I am not one who thinks we have an easy struggle ahead of us, but I do not doubt the outcome. I expect us to win on the high moral ground that for a nation to refuse to compromise with evil is to put itself in a position to receive the blessings of God. I am not much worried about the wild assertions of the wets. They run counter to the facts observed by the average individual.

We shall succeed more quickly if we force reluctant government officials to go forward in discharge of their sworn duties; if we compel political parties and leaders to get in line with the Constitution of the United States.

We may lose some battles. We will win this war.—World Call.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson IV—July 22, 1928.

SAUL'S EARLY MINISTRY.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Straightway in the synagogue he proclaimed Jesus, that He is the Son of God."—Acts 9:20.

LESSON: Acts 9:19b-30, 11:19-30.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Rom. 12:1-8.

Paul was, of course, unique in many ways. It would be a mistake for every one to try to imitate in every respect his religious experience. If one studies his life, one becomes more and more convinced that he was a special chosen person for a unique mission. At the same time, however, it is a mistake to feel that there is nothing in Paul's experience which we cannot make our own. We will do well to study the life and letters of Paul with the end in view of trying to find out the secret of his victorious and fruitful life, so that we may be able to make our lives richer and more fruitful in kingdom service.

First of all, we can learn something from today's lesson from the incident of Paul's sojourn in Arabia. Here Paul had a wonderfully transforming experience in his life. He had, as he had repeatedly asserted, met the Christ. He had felt the call of Christ. He had given himself unreservedly to service. The first thing which he did was to get alone to think over the matter. He wanted to know what it all meant. He wanted to come to a better understanding of what it all involved. Like his Master, therefore, he withdrew to a quiet place, and there thought things over. Paul's actions might well be followed with profit by all those who become Christians. There is so much involved in this thing of becoming a Christian, there are so many big possibilities, there are so many new privileges, there are so many new responsibilities that young Christians should take time carefully and frankly to think over things. This same principle applies also to those who are already Christians. Every Christian should "Take time to be holy." We should plan for some time even if only a brief time for meditation and for devotion. The psalmist said, "Be still and know that I am God." The soul grows in just such times.

Another thing which Paul did which is worthy of imitation was his immediate witnessing for Christ. "And straightway in the synagogues he proclaimed Jesus, that He is the Son of God."

Paul had had a vital experience with Christ, and because of that fact he did not hesitate to bear witness. Here is a sound principle of all Christians.

If we find any riches in Christ we should not be ashamed nor slow to tell others. This does not mean, of course, that one must always be talking in stock phrases or bearing witness in cut-and-dried forms, but it does mean that as we have opportunity, both by the words of our mouths and the manner of our lives, we shall bear faithful witness that we know Christ. Jesus said, "Ye shall be my witnesses." When we bear witness we fulfill one of His commandments.

Another striking thing was that Paul began to work for Christ right where he was. It was in Damascus that he received his sight, and it was in Damascus that he began to preach. Here again is a sound principle. One of the most vital things which a young Christian can do is to do something. It may not be much, but every young Christian can find or be given something to do that will go a long way toward helping them up the rough places of their early Christian lives. One of the problems which confronts a pastor, Sunday School teacher or leader of young people is to find something for beginners in the Christian life to do.

One might mention several other factors in Paul's Christian life, such as his courage in the face of opposition and his zeal in the Master's cause. But one thing more needs to be said: Paul began to live his Christian life and to do his Christian work in his home town. He went down to Tarsus. Tarsus was his old home town. That was perhaps Paul's hardest test. It is usually ours. To live a Christian life in the home, to be a Christian in business, to be a Christian in our relations with the members of our crowd—this is usually the most difficult, as it is also one of the ultimate tests of a person's Christianity. May Paul's life teach us that it ought to be done and it can be done.

"But Barnabas took him." What a difference it might have made if Barnabas had not helped Paul when "the going was rough."

How many Christians of promise and of usefulness have been lost to the cause of Christ because they did not have some one who, like Barnabas, stuck by them in a time of temptation, of misunderstanding and discouragement. One of the finest things which a mature Christian can do is personally "to adopt a new Christian and by sympathy, friendliness and wise counsel help them to grow into a full-grown man in Christ." The personal touch still counts.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, July 22, 1928.

TOPIC: "Keeping Fit—Physically, Mentally and Spiritually."—1 Tim. 4:8; 2 Tim. 1:7; 3 John 2.

Some Bible Hints.

The body is a sacred trust which we are bound to keep in the best condition (v. 8).

Godliness does not call for neglect of the body. Health is a part of godliness, and godliness means obedience to all God's laws (v. 8).

Fear is a sickness of the mind. God's love drives it out. A healthy mind is life's greatest prize (v. 7).

The soul prospers, grows strong and healthy as we feed it with the divine word and exercise it in prayer and meditation (v. 2).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The mind is a delicate instrument, and anything that unbalances it—strong drink, for instance—is harmful. Why take off the keen edge?

Man is like a pyramid—the body lowest, the soul next above it, and the spirit above all. Ill health in the body means weakness right to the top.

A weakling may accomplish much, but not so much as he would have accomplished if he had been well. Sickness means inefficiency.

The smoker does not realize that he dulls the edge of his mind by the poison he takes into his system. This is especially marked in the case of boys under twenty.

A Few Illustrations.

To keep fit we must watch nutrition. We do not throw clay and mud into our furnaces, but only what will burn well. But we stoke the body without intelligence.

Feed the mind on dime-novel reading and it will become unfit for higher tasks. The mind needs exercise just as well as the muscles.

To keep fit we must avoid breathing poison. That means that we should ventilate our rooms thoroughly, especially bedrooms.

Education is more than learning facts. It means to establish habits of right living, to ensure normal growth by proper nutrition, to eliminate physical defects, to increase physical and mental ability, and to create all-around efficiency.

To Think About.

How may we develop our spiritual life?

How does a bad liver affect the mind?

How can we "exercise ourselves unto godliness?"

GOD'S WORD IN ACTION.

The promise of God that "My Word shall not return unto me void" is being marvelously fulfilled in the work of the Pocket Testament League.

This work, which was launched as a Bible revival movement twenty years ago by the famed evangelists Wilbur Chapman and Charles M. Alexander, has been going on in many parts of the world with untold blessing to those who have gotten into the spirit of it. The movement is a simple and practical way of interesting people everywhere to read a portion of God's Word every day and to carry a Bible or Testament with them wherever they go. In response to this call, millions have joined the Pocket Testament League, and branch offices have been established in many countries.

Wherever the Pocket Testament League has been introduced and its simple conditions kept, wonderful results have followed—revivals have broken out, Christians have been strengthened and led into definite Christian service. Carrying a Testament in one's pocket is found to be not only an excellent way of taking advantage of the many opportunities to read it during the day, but also provides a splendid medium for personal work. The league opens at once a direct avenue of service whereby one may do their part in making known to others God's plan of salvation through the Word.

"Let us hold fast the faithful Word" for ourselves and let us "hold forth the Word of life" to others. Information and membership cards may be had by writing to the Pocket Testament League, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Executive Secretary.

THE CHURCHES AND PROHIBITION.

Evidently the Protestant denominations are taking seriously the present prohibition situation and the enforcement issues of the oncoming presidential campaign. The secular press is beginning to notice the opinions of the great Church gatherings. The Kansas City Star has stated the matter finely in saying editorially:

"The outspoken position of various Church bodies on the subject of prohibition suggests some interesting questions with reference to the forthcoming campaign. Whether prohibition is or should be a political or campaign issue, it is unquestionably a great moral issue with these Church organizations and, if the organizations are fully representative, with many million Church adherents.

"The action taken by the Methodist Episcopal General Conference here early last month has been followed by similar procedure in several other instances. The conference approved a resolution calling for the choice of presidential candidates committed, both in their records and present declarations, to defense of the eighteenth amendment and for unequivocal party platform pledges for dry law enforcement. Occasion was found to assert the possibility of a general breakdown in enforcement should there be elected a President unfriendly to prohibition.

"The conference presumably was speaking for several million Church members in this country. The Presbyterian General Assembly, which closed its meetings at Tulsa last week, adopted a resolution of the same nature. Action previously had been taken on the question at sessions of the Southern Baptist Convention at Chattanooga. In the last month also the United Presbyterian Church and the Methodist Protestant Church went on record for prohibition enforcement and the selection of dry candidates. Spokesmen of other bodies, notably the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have expressed unqualified sympathy with that position.

"What will come of it? Will the influence of these organizations be strong enough to affect materially the party declarations, the convention nominations, or the outcome of the election next November? These are questions for the convention delegates to consider."—Nashville Advocate.

The Mission Secretary is today in receipt of a letter from a dear good woman enclosing her check for $15.00, with words which we wish many others would take to heart: "The condition of great need of funds for our foreign mission work is a sad and deplorable fact, and has given me deep concern as to whether I have given as much as I could to stifle the great Macedonian call and help to continue the work so much needed. So I am enclosing you a check for $15.00 to be used where most needed in this beloved work. It seems really small, but I want to know that I am not disobedient to the call and that I am being used of my dear Lord in spreading His tidings of great joy. May many others add a little more to that already given is my prayer for relief in this perilous hour." We know others are feeling as this good woman does, and we only wish that others would do as she has done in enclosing a check to help in the work. THE CHRISTIAN SUN readers are alarmed over the prospect of keeping the Barretts at home. This was because we personally knew them, but the work in Japan suffers more even from the cut than the work in Porto Rico. The retrenchment there is deplorable, indeed, and every dollar that can be given now helps a situation which we Christians should feel concerned about.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

INCONSISTENCIES OF A GOOD MAN.

"Jotham did that which was right in the sight the temple of the Lord. And the people did corruptly."—2 Chron. 27:2.

Jotham was good but he did not go to Church, and because he didn't others did corruptly. What a responsibility! What a tremendous influence!

I wonder why Jotham did not go to Church? We are told that his father was stricken with leprosy there, and that was too much for him. This sounds like some modern excuses. They are good and fine folks, but indifferent to attending Church and other religious exercises.

Jotham may have felt justified in this, but he did not consider the weaker ones who are subject to grosser temptations, and who have less temperamental control. His silent influence brought them ruin.

The same principle applies today. A man may be a good husband, a kind father and a helpful neighbor, but if the world detects in him a single inconsistency, you may be sure that, by an unerring instinct of humanity, it will judge him not by what he is but by what he is not. They will not rise by his good life, but they will take license by his fault.

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us by every call of life the worth of loyalty and truth and of creating such influences among our comrades as shall make them better men. Forbid that it shall be said of us that any one has done wrong because we failed to do something we might have done. Forgive us of our sins, Lord, and save us. Amen.

TUESDAY.

FIT FOR SERVICE.

"Wait in the city till you are endued with power from on high."—Luke 24:49.

Although they knew the work they were to do, and had an experience, the disciples were helpless to enter upon that work until the power was turned on. This is not strange. We accomplish nothing without power. Jesus Himself could not enter upon His ministry until He had received the power. Merely to believe does not fit us for service. Once becoming endued with the power, filled with the light, consumed with desire for truth and to establish it, we may do even what He did—"preach to the poor, comfort the broken-hearted, bring deliverance to the captive, recover sight to the blind, set at liberty them that are bruised," and "greater works than these shall ye do," said Christ.

Prayer.—Dear Lord God, our Father, we thank Thee that none of us is too small for Thy spirit, and none too big but that he may be filled. We pray for heaven's infilling. Forbid that we shall neglect anything, even so small, in a whole consecration. Forgive us of our sins and make us Thy children. When drunkards and harlots and all manner of the ungodly are being cast out, forbid that we shall be among them, but among Thy blessed ones to enter into His rest. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

SAVING SAVED FOLKS.

"If any man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness."—Gal. 6:1.

The revised version says, ". . . you must set the offender right in a spirit of gentleness."

This morning I am thinking of good folks—saved folks—who get on the wrong track. This assumes the fact which we all know, that there are those who are weaker than others and that there are those who, out of the close living with God have power to save the weaker brother. This duty you and I should never forget. There are those who, though saved, never respond to a single call of the Church. "Every man must prove his own work," said the apostle, and as they must account for theirs, so we must account for ours in the duty of saving the saved as well as the unsaved.

This is all the more important in these modern days. Men know electricity, but they do not know a spirit-filled soul. Many know Greek, but do not know the Bible. Many know the rocks of the earth, but they do not know the "Rock of ages." Men may read and know the stars, but they don't know the name of Jesus. Men know business, but they don't know Christianity.

We who are spiritual are custodians of the oracles of God, and God has promised us success in this saving work to an extent that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for reminding us that we are builded together for the indwelling of Thyself. We pray Thee to create us daily unto good works. May we sow seed for God's coming harvest. In all life's maze, problems and perplexities show us our duty and strengthen us for the duty. Amen.

THURSDAY.

LADIES FOREVER.

"Thou saiest, I shall be a lady forever."—Isa. 47:7.

This is a reference to a pledge of a woman in the darker ages. The man of the dark ages was a hewer of wood, a tiller of the soil and the driver of beasts of burden. The Oriental woman was a drawer of water; the medieval woman was a sovereign, and the modern woman is economic. It is the latter we know. Chivalry of man toward the woman of the past is passing away. But one thing about woman which was and ever shall be is she retains femininity. Her noblest calling is "a lady forever," and this means honesty, virtue, sweetness and religion. She is the superior workmanship of God. She is the significance of fineness and love and nicer adjustments of life. She is the symbol of mercy and refinement. That so many fall short of this and are creatures of fashion, looseness and vulgar outrages God's designs for her and makes the better world sad; but it in no sense changes the design nor the possibility of being all she might be. She who endures and sacrifices a lot to be all God intended her to be is more beautiful than the one of giddy laughter, of unburdened and abandoned girlhood and the golden flirting flashes of a thoughtless head—"a lady forever."

Prayer.—Our Father, we give our thoughts in consecration to Thee today in prayer for our womanhood and for the womanhood of the world. May her part in the world fulfill Thy designs and make the world happy—to cheer the dispirited, inspire the weak and refine the vulgar and to give charm and angelic victory to the Church. Now, Lord, forgive us of all our sins and help us to do our part. Amen.

FRIDAY.

LOOKING OUT FOR NO. 1.

"Forgive each other as God also in Christ forgave you."—Eph. 4:32.

Looking out for self is the first law of our natures. We must do that very thing. Yet we often sacrifice ourselves and damage our souls in a mistaken effort to save ourselves.

When we see God forgiving those who have sinned against Him, sparing them in His mercy and sharing His bounty alike upon the evil and the good, let us take the gracious lessons of forgiveness to our hearts. Why should we hate like the devil when we may forgive like God? Why should one cherish malice, envy and uncharitableness because others do wrong? To be sure, some people use us wrong and act spitefully; but why should we fill our hearts with their bitterness and inflame our souls with their poison and be like them when we could forbear and be like God?

The world is too sweet and fair to darken it with clouds of anger; and life is too short to waste it in bearing the heaviest of burdens—grudges. Forgive, and forget if you can; but forgive anyway and be kind, for thus only shall we be the children of our Father. Thus only shall we give ourselves the surest protection.

Prayer.—Remind us daily of the beauty and the liveliness Thou art bestowing upon us every day, even the most sinful. Though we have disobeyed and rebelled, Thou art still feeding us. Though our hearts are vile, Thou art looking upon us in tenderness. Though we wander and forget Thee and steep ourselves in wickedness, Thy sun still shines upon us and Thy rain still refreshes us. However far from Thee, or however prodigal, we are never lost to Thee. Thou art the rose of our dawning. We thank Thee, Lord, and pray for a deep consecration today. Amen.

SATURDAY.

EVERLASTING LIVING.

"Watch and pray (without ceasing), that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things."—Luke 21:36.

Life consists of manhood, broken sinew, clinging soul and final rest. Manhood is: man at his best with power of resistance to that which is not good for him. Broken sinew is: the consequent struggle of broken man to retain his manhood or to lay claim to almighty strength. Final rest is: the God-given blessing bestowed upon man when all the scaffolding of his structure is torn down and the revealed heart reposes in the great heart of the Great "I am."

Can we by thought, or prayer, or meditation, or speech, or by purpose and determination, or by clean living, avoid the broken sinews and a bad past and be ready in our latter days to feel within us the firmness and surety of having done our best and are prepared to enter into the great beyond with a clear conscience.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SUNDAY.

IN HIS IMAGE.

"God created man in His own image."—Gen. 1:27.

Who said we came from the animal kingdom below? Christ said that man has no comparison with a sheep, but declared us to be "sons of God." All the discouraging things in our experiences cannot annul the fact that fundamentally we are man and that we have a great many holy hours when we feel the truth that there is soul life about us that is like God. We cannot solve a mathematical problem except by the stamp of God's mathematical thought upon us to avert His own handiwork. How can we say the sunset is beautiful

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our children had a real thrill on July 6th. Several months ago the Freeman Drug Company, Burlington, N. C., was greatly damaged by fire. It has been rebuilt and restocked. Dr. J. P. Bradley, the efficient manager, has been having special days and inviting the older people to visit his beautiful new store. On July 6th he held a special day for the children. He very cordially invited the whole Orphanage family to spend the afternoon as his guests at his expense. He made arrangements with the Southern Railway Company to have a special car on their train to take the Orphanage children to Burlington and bring them back, and he paid all expenses. He met them at the station in Burlington and led them to his store, where the joy began. Dixie cups, ice-cream cones, and cold drinks were in store for them. Mrs. Herbert Cable, Mrs. Dr. Opie and others assisted in entertaining the children with music and solos, which they enjoyed very much indeed. Our good friend Mr. Geo. Stevenson, manager of the Carolina Theater, had selected a special picture for the occasion and gave all the children a free ticket to the show. As the children came out from the show to return home, Dr. J. P. Bradley presented each child with a bag of fresh popcorn. Mr. Bradley and his assistants did everything that could be done to make the afternoon happy for them. We certainly appreciate this courtesy on the part of Dr. Bradley and his assistants for making it possible for the children to have this happy afternoon. It was the first time some of the little fellows had ever been on a train. They all reached home happy, without a single instance to mar the pleasure of the occasion. They give Dr. Bradley and his assistants and Mr. Geo. Stevenson, manager of the Carolina Theater, a vote of thanks for giving them such a happy afternoon.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

Every Sunday School teacher needs at least one first-class stewardship book as his own. Stewardship is becoming one of the foremost themes of the Church now. The Sunday School stewardship lessons will be frequent and vital. Any teacher will need to get a very recent book and one that will help him prepare for his particular class. Any service of counsel or suggestion as to the most helpful stewardship books for the particular need of each teacher will be gladly given. We do ask that our Sunday School teachers get helps for this vital spiritual theme.

It is our aim also to get a good stewardship book in every home possible. We shall be glad to suggest valuable ones to our people generally. Miss Nancy Crismon, Meta, Mo., recently purchased Cushman's "The Message of Stewardship." Now she writes, "I like it very much. It has been a great help to me. It gives me a better idea of the great truth of Christian stewardship, and it has helped me much in my daily devotion. It is a book suitable for the entire family."

Training the Canvassers.

No method will work itself. No farm or shop will succeed without painstaking effort. One of the greatest spiritual agencies in the Church is the annual every-member canvass. It has in it possibilities of untold spiritual and financial service if it is thoroughly prepared for. Some expect too great results without the preparation. The crux is in the training of the canvassers. It takes time and effort, but usually its success is in proportion to the preparation given the canvassers. Is giving a blessing and privilege or a hardship? Rev. J. E. Frye, Mellott, Ind., gives two good reasons for the E. M. C., as follows: "First, it gives every one the opportunity of having some part in the building of God's kingdom, and where a person invests his money he is sure to take more interest there. Second, as a leader in my Church I have no right to ask only a few to support the Church, and thus deprive others of their privilege and blessing."

W. H. DENISON.

except by the likeness of God in us that enables us to pass upon His work. We cannot say a snowflake is a perfect geometric concept except by the likeness of God to pass upon what He has made. Kepler said, "Oh, God! I think Thy thoughts after Thee."

Prayer.—Dear Father, every day we will follow Thee and listen to Thy wondrous truths. We pray for minds and hearts that grasp Thee like the apostles of old who followed Thee and lived daily to change the face of life to the glad message of the gospel. Bring Thou forth from us the true and the divine. Fill our hearts as Jesus did the upper room and awaken in us Thy image that we may be transformed to what we ought to be. Amen.

SAT'DAY'S BATH NIGHT.

Sat'day's bath night! This I know,
For my toes they tell me so.
When I'm washed I'm pink and white,
But just now I'm an awful sight.
Some folks they wash every day—
Gracious! How'd they get that way!
I wash every week or three,
'N' I get results, believe you me!

We have it on good authority that Rev. R. L. Williamson, now serving as pastor, as he has been for several years, at Sanford, N. C., will make a change at the close of this Conference year. Bro. Williamson is rounding out his twenty-third year in the ministry and has been and is one of our most faithful, consecrated and beloved pastors. Any Church desiring his services should correspond with him at once. He is a man who carries the work of the ministry on his heart and is capable and conscientious and wins the hearts of the people whom he serves.

THIRD AVENUE CHURCH.

We began our revival meeting at Third Avenue Church the third Sunday in June and continued through the following Wednesday night after the fourth Sunday. Bro. J. F. Morgan, of Norfolk, assisted our pastor in the meeting. The services were all well attended and the night services were especially crowded. Never in the history of the Church have we had such splendid congregations. Bro. Morgan brought each message in a way that it revealed the truth in the Word of God. During his stay, there were more than one hundred who made profession of faith in Christ, and seventy-one were added to the Church.

Bro. Morgan will be long remembered in the hearts of the folks at Third Avenue, and we wish him well in his work for the kingdom. We were having such a wonderful time in the work here that we could not help but regret the closing of the revival. We are expecting to continue the good work and add to the Church from time to time such as may be saved.

Our pastor has just moved here on the field and his presence and ready co-operation has proved a great blessing to us all. We have decided for a full-time pastor for the coming year, and I feel sure the Lord has great things in store for us yet here at Danville.

OBITUARIES

ROLLINGS.

William G., son of the late Patrick Henry and Mary Ann Drewry Rollings, was born October 12, 1858, and fell asleep May 19, 1928, age 69 years, 7 months, and 7 days. In 1885 he was married to Miss Adalena Morris, and to this union were born nine children—five sons and four daughters. Early in life he professed faith in Christ and united with Barretts Christian Church and remained a faithful member until the end, being a deacon for about forty years.

He was preceded in death by his wife, three sons and three sisters. He is survived by two sisters, four daughters and two sons. The funeral service was conducted by the writer from his home Sunday afternoon, May 20th, in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends, and the body placed in the family cemetery. May God bless those who mourn the passing of their loved one.

C. E. GERRINGER.

VAUGHN.

Mrs. Ida Rawls Vaughn, one of the oldest and most prominent residents of Franklin, died suddenly on the morning of June 27th, at 5 o'clock, at her home. She was seventy-two years of age. Her death was very unexpected and came as a great shock to her family and friends throughout Southampton and Nansemond Counties.

Mrs. Vaughn was the daughter of the late James Andrew Rawls. She is survived by her husband, J. B. Vaughn; two sons, Prof. L. L. Vaughn, who is affiliated with North Carolina State College and is also a very prominent worker in our Raleigh Church; also James Andrew Vaughn, of New York City, and four sisters—Miss Huntas Rawls, of Franklin; Mrs. J. W. Folk, of Nansemond; Mrs. Annie Byrd, of Liberty Springs, and Mrs. J. B. Everett, of Holland. The funeral services were held at her home by her pastor, Rev. J. W. Fix, assisted by two former pastors to the Christian Church, to which Mrs. Vaughn belonged—Dr. C. H. Rowland and Rev. F. C. Lester.

J. W. FIX.

HINES.

Whereas, God in His wisdom has seen fit to call from our midst a faithful and loved member and deacon of Hines Chapel Christian Church, Bro. A. R. Hines; therefore, let it be resolved:

1. That it has pleased our Heavenly Father to call our brother from an earthly home to heavenly home above.
2. That while we mourn the loss of our beloved friend, we bow in humble submission to the will of Him that doeth all things well.
3. That we extend to his family our sympathy, and may our Heavenly Father's blessings comfort them in their loss.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication and a copy be sent to his family and a copy be spread on the records of Hines Chapel Christian Church.

We thank God for this beautiful life for he was a faithful Christian father and husband. In the death of our brother we have lost a dear friend. It shall be our purpose to meet him in the end.

On February 8, 1877, he was married to Miss Rosa B. Scarborough, and to this union were born five children. Early in his life he professed faith and united with Barretts Christian Church, and later transferred his membership to Burton's Grove, of which he remained a faithful and consistent member until his death. His wife preceded him in death by thirteen months. He is survived by one son and four daughters and seven grandchildren. Funeral by the writer from the home, and the body was laid beside that of his wife in the family cemetery. Surely a good man from among us has gone to meet his God. God bless those who sorrow.

TATE.

Mr. Jerome Tinnen Tate was born on January 4, 1845, and died April 13, 1928, age 83 years, 3 months and 9 days. He leaves to mourn their loss two sons and daughters, thirteen grandchildren, one great-grandchild, a number of relatives and friends. Bro. Tate professed Christ as his Saviour in young manhood and joined Concord Christian Church forty or fifty years ago. He loved his Church and its services and was a regular attendant as long as health permitted. He had been in declining health for several months. He will be greatly missed in the community and Church.

Funeral service was conducted at Bush Arbor Primitive Church and interment made of his body in the local Cemetery.

A large crowd was present as evidence of the high esteem in which he was held. May the Lord comfort and bless the bereaved.

L. L. WYRICK.

TUCK.

Sarah Elizabeth Tuck, daughter of Sarah and Major Nelson, was born in Granville County, N. C., May 4, 1859; age 69 years, 11 months and 26 days. December 9, 1877, she was married to Solomon Edwin Tuck, who died in 1910. Eight daughters and one son survive—Miss Mura Tuck, Mrs. Fanny Long, Mrs. Carrie Whitt, Mrs. Belle Murray, Mrs. Annie Wilkins, Mrs. Hallie Satterfield, Mr. Edward Pressley Tuck, Mrs. Gracie Atkins and Mrs. Davie Slaughter. There are forty-two living grandchildren and seven dead.

Sister Tuck professed faith in Christ and was received into Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., about forty years ago under the pastorate of Uncle Wellons. Religion to her was a life of rich inward joy, manifesting itself in the Church and in daily life.

In my absence, Rev. C. L. Morgan, of the M. E. Church, conducted the funeral in the new Christian Church, where the deceased had worshiped only once. The burial was in the family lot at the old Union Cemetery, witnessed by a large crowd of sorrowing loved ones and friends. Mother is missed from the home, but none doubt that she is translated to that better home.

C. E. NEWMAN.

STEVENS.

Many of the older members of New Hope Church and community remember with pleasure Sister Martha Stevens, who was buried in the cemetery at the above-named Church Monday, June 25th. Her body rests beside that of her husband, who preceded her to the spirit world many years since.

She was the wife of "Little Joe" Stevens, as he was familiarly known, and a dear good woman has gone out from us. Earth and the Church militant are poorer for her going. She had been a member of New Hope Church for more than fifty years. She leaves to mourn two manly sons, Wilkins, who resides in the State of Virginia, and Barrett, who lives in Alabama; two noble daughters, Mrs. Sebron Deloach and Mrs. Leslie Brooks; a number of grandchildren and other relatives and friends. In the midst of a large congregation of mourning friends we laid her to rest. Peace to her soul and blessings upon the bereaved.

G. D. HUNT.

Christianity is the religion of a special providence. It presents a Heavenly Father who watches over and cares for His children—who hears their heart-cries when they pray, and who, if it is wise to do so, interposes to answer them.

THE PROBLEM OF THE DENOMINATIONAL COLLEGE.

BY THOMAS C. AMICK, PH. D.

(An Address delivered before the School-Masters' Club of Asheville, N. C.)

The topic assigned this speaker was put in the form of a question, "What is the Problem of the Denominational College?" Every institution established for the good of humanity has its problems, and the denominational colleges are no exception.

In the first place, we should understand just what we mean by the denominational college. In this paper we will assume that colleges are divided into two classes, namely, the State owned and controlled colleges and the privately endowed or denominational colleges. This line of distinction is not rigid, for there are a number of privately endowed colleges that are neither State colleges, nor are they denominational colleges. However, for the purpose of this discussion, these will be left under the head of denominational colleges.

The problem of the denominational college is, in a sense, the problem of every college in the land. It is the problem of equipping the young man and the young woman who attends college with the soundest, sanest educational equipment possible; to give to them that preparation that will enable them to render the greatest possible service in the world, both to God and to humanity. The problem of all colleges is to inspire in each student the highest and noblest ideals possible, and to enable the student to make life as resourceful as possible to the end that the material and spiritual forces of the race may be conserved and that the race may make progress and advancement to higher goals than those yet attained. The object of all colleges is to develop in the man or woman all the manhood or womanhood of which the person is capable, and then to inspire the student to go out and use this for the betterment of society and for the uplift of the world, and also to cultivate in the young person the capacity for enjoying everything that is noble and fine in nature, literature, science, or art, to the end that life for this person may be as full as possible of the noblest and best that this world has to give.

Now the problem of the denominational college is to do this work just a little better than the other institution can do the same work. The speaker maintains that unless the denominational college can do this work better than the State college can, then there is no excuse whatever for the existence of the denominational or privately endowed college, unless it is for the reason that the Church wishes to help the State to bear the burden of educating the citizenship of the State. The Church has the command, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ," and, unless the Church makes an additional contribution in education that the State cannot make in educating the young people of this generation, then the Church is simply helping to bear the burden of the State, and by so doing, the Church is simply performing a Christian service, which is her wont.

The writer, however, maintains that the denominational college can do the work of education better than the State can do it, and he is prepared to defend the following theses:

First, the State, as our government is organized, cannot teach religion. Neither can a State college, without usurping its authority, teach any thing along this line except the history of the different religions and religious organizations that have existed from time immemorial. The State college may teach the history of Judaism or Hinduism, but it may not teach Judaism or Hinduism as a religion; otherwise the Protestant, the Catholic, or the Christian, who pay their taxes just as the Jews and the Hindus pay theirs to support the government of the State, would have a right to protest, and to bring injunction to restrain the State institution from teaching religion.

The State has a perfect right to teach the principles of citizenship, to indoctrinate her future citizens in the fundamentals of character; but when it comes to teaching religion, the State must keep hands off. From the time when Jefferson and the fathers of this country who established the Constitution, laid down the principles of action for the United States, and separated forever Church and State to this good day, this principle has been held inviolable in this country.

Again, the faculty of State institutions are selected, not because of their strong personality and their ability as teachers and inspirers of young men and women; but they are selected because of their scholarly attainments, their reputation in the field of research, their ability in authorship in their respective lines and in the general fields of learning. It is seldom we find great teachers like Horace Mann, Mark Hopkins, and others of their kind in State institutions. In calling the roll of the great teachers of the ages from Jesus of Nazareth down to the present, we find the teachers who have inspired men and women to do and to dare and to die, to give their lives to unselfish service to the race, in the denominational colleges. These colleges and their teachers have given to men that inspiration that has led to sacrifice and progress along all lines that have moved the world upwards towards God. True we have found scholars in State institutions, they have written books and their names have become famous and renowned; but where have they inspired men and women to the noblest and most heroic lives? The teacher in the denominational college is generally too busy and has too much to do to do a great deal of this research and literary work that otherwise might make for his reputation and renown.

The State colleges generally have so large a number of students that their faculties do not have the opportunity to come into personal contact, personal relationship and personal touch with the individual student, that they might leave on the student the personal impress and stamp of their lives, as the personal impress and stamp of King Arthur was left on the Knights of the Round Table. This leaves the student to get his inspiration from the mass of other fellows like himself, or from the immature instructor, or from the common rabble with whom the student associates on the streets or in the fraternity house. As a rule these influences are neither uplifting nor are they such as tend to the development of the noblest that is in the young man. Your speaker has, in his experience as a student, attended State colleges only; and his experience warrants him in saying that, unless the religious character and convictions of the young man are thoroughly fixed before he attends a State college, unless he is firmly grounded on the Rock of Ages and his faith has been fixed by thorough training in the home and in the Church before he goes to college to the State institution, he is pretty sure to go on the rocks within the four years of his college career. And when he goes on the rocks and shoals during the age of college preparation for life, he is pretty apt to be a religious derelict upon the sea of life as long as he is here among men. On the other hand, your speaker, as a member of the faculty of denominational colleges, has seen the derelict and the skeptic and the unbeliever come to the denominational college and, after four years of association with a faculty of Christian men and women, and association with a Christian student body, go out of college with his faith firmly established, his eye fixed on a goal, a star not seen on land or sea, and his life become a blessing and a benediction as well as a guide and light and inspiration to all who come in contact with him.

The next thesis that the speaker maintains is that the denominational college can offer broader and fuller courses of study and instruction than the State college can possibly offer. The denominational college can certainly teach every course in language and literature, in science and mathematics, in engineering and mining, in law and in medicine, in art and appreciation, as well

NOTES-PERSONALS

Some of the churches have not yet taken the mission offering, but we feel that all will do so, and make it unanimous throughout the Convention.

Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett sailed last week for Porto Rico. Bro. Barrett visited many of our churches this spring and spoke to large congregations with great acceptance about our mission work, especially in Porto Rico.

Dr. S. L. Beougher, Wadley, Ala., writes: "You will find enclosed a check for the missionary offering from the Wadley Church, and I will take an offering at the Cragford Church on my next preaching day there, the first Sunday in August."

Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Fix, Franklin, Va., Rev. R. C. Helfenstein, Dover, Del., and J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, are our Southern contingent of ministers attending the Summer Bible Conference, Union Theological Seminary, New York.

Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of the Winchester Church stopped a while at THE SUN office on his way to the Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. He was accompanied by his daughter. The convention met with the Church at Cypress Chapel in Nansemond County.

"The four great names of the Democratic party since the Civil War are Tilden, Cleveland, Wilson and Bryan. What was the attitude of Tammany toward these? Tammany was against every one of the four. Now Tammany calls upon the Democracy of Tilden, Cleveland, Wilson and Bryan to put a sashem of the "Hall" into the White House!"—Christian Herald.

Reports are that the Bethlehem College Summer School of Methods, Wadley, Ala., was the best in attendance and in interest of any yet held. Rev. W. B. Minton, D. D., our Foreign Mission Secretary, was taken ill and had to leave for his home in Dayton, Ohio, one day before the session was over. Dr. Minton, we are glad to learn, is rapidly recovering.

"What folly it is to imagine that I may not expect God to be with me every moment! Look at the sunshine! Have you ever said, 'Oh, how can I keep that sunlight, and be sure I shall have it while working'? Is not God, who made the sun to shine, also willing and able to let His light and presence so shine through me that I can walk all the day with God nearer to me than anything in nature? Praise God, He can do it. Why then does He do it so seldom, and in such feeble measure? There is but one answer: you do not permit it."—Andrew Murray.

Dr. J. F. Burnett, Dayton, Ohio, in a personal letter to the Editor call attention to a matter that is of general concern to SUN readers, or should be. No man in our Church is more beloved and honored than Dr. Burnett, who writes: "We are going to be forced in this campaign to deal with Catholicism. I have been very reliably informed that the seven thousand Catholic women in Dayton, Ohio, are to be lined up for Smith, and that the work of organizing them has already begun. If it is solid Catholicism that we are to meet, we must have a solid Protestantism with which to meet it. The questions and results involved in the campaign are more than political, they are moral and involve the life of our civilization. Mr. Smith is the servant of Tammany, the enemy of prohibition, and the slave of an ism that would close our Protestant Churches and shut the doors of every public school in the land."

ROANOKE, ALA.

I have been here a month and am fairly straightened out in my new field, and am well pleased with my work. No pastor has a more congenial people to work with than I have. Our band here in Roanoke is small, but full of enthusiasm. We have far more regular Sunday School pupils than we have on our church roll. The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor are doing fine work. We have preaching services on the first and third Sundays, both morning and evening. We have received six members since we have been here and expect many more soon. Our revival will begin the third Sunday in August. Rev. G. D. Hunt will do the preaching. We are expecting great things to come to pass.

I am serving Forest Home Church also. I filled my first appointment there July 8th, and was glad to note the wonderful progress they have made since I was pastor there three years ago. They have built more to the house and have painted it inside and out. The Sunday School has grown both in size and enthusiasm. Our revival will begin there on July 29th. We are praying for an ingathering of souls at this time.

The Summer School of Methods at Wadley was the best in our history, and more enthusiasm was manifested on the part of the young people than I have ever seen anywhere. Indications are that the brightest day the Christian Church has ever seen in this section, is in the near future.

May God richly bless His cause.

G. H. VEAZEY.

LANETT, ALA.

It was my joy and delight to be with Pastor Rev. J. D. Dollar and his fine people of Lanett, Alabama, for a two weeks revival, the second and third weeks in June. We enjoyed many kindnesses shown us by the pastor and his people. It was a great meeting. A number of decisions for Christ were made, and over a score united with the church. It was a real treat to mingle with old friends of former days. The Christian Church at Lanett faces a wonderful opportunity. We are so thankful for the fine spirit of cooperation on the part of the sister denominations. To Him who said, "Ask, and it shall be given you," we attribute all the praise.

A STATEMENT.

The Southern Christian Convention, which met in Richmond, in May, elected the writer as circulation manager of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, to take charge July 1st. It is a position we accept with a realization of the work and responsibilities that the work carries with it. No easy job; but a job which will take lots of time and work. It is a known fact that THE CHRISTIAN SUN is not a paying proposition, so far as money is concerned; however, we cannot afford to stop publishing THE SUN because it is not a paying proposition financially. Our Church cannot afford to do without it. It is our Church organ for the entire Southern Convention. Through its columns we keep in touch with our colleges, missions, the Christian Orphanage, and all departments of the Church. In what other way can we keep in weekly touch with these, our institutions, if not through THE CHRISTIAN SUN?

Now, what must we do? We must put it on a better financial basis. What does it cost to publish THE CHRISTIAN SUN? It costs $138.50 per week for 3,000 copies; $2.20 per hundred extra. This is for publishing THE SUN alone. Dr. Atkinson gets no salary for being its editor; Dr. Harper, Rev. Stanley Harrell, Dr. Staley, and Rev. S. M. Lynam, who are associate editors with Dr. Atkinson, get no salary. Your circulation manager, who has charge of keeping up the subscription list and getting new subscribers, collecting the subscriptions to pay the expenses of publishing THE SUN, gets no salary for his work. It is a work of love on the part of us all for the benefit of our denomination. I give THE SUN readers this information so they will know and understand that no one is getting a salary out of the income from the subscriptions paid in; but it all goes to the publisher to pay that weekly expense of $138.50 for printing THE SUN. We always like to take the folks in our confidence, so they will understand where the money goes. Can THE SUN be put on a paying basis? It can. How? By every member of the Christian Church doing his or her duty. See to it that every home in your Church takes THE SUN. Four thousand five hundred subscribers will put THE SUN on a paying basis and pay all the expenses of printing, postage, stationery, etc.

We are accepting this work and will handle it in connection with the Christian Orphanage work for the next two years. We will do our best to see if we can make THE SUN a self-supporting institution for our Church. To help do this work we want to ask the support of all our pastors, all our Sunday School superintendents, teachers and officers, and every individual Church member. If we can have the hearty support of the above-named persons we feel we will succeed. If one fails us we will lose that much and the work will be the harder. We will keep you informed from week to week as to how we succeed.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

OUR UNLIMITED TOMORROWS.

By REV. W. KNIGHTON BLOOM, D. D.,

Washington, D. C.

(Sermon delivered at Elon Chautauqua, Sunday, June 24, 1928.)

Psalm 90: 4.—"For a thousand years in Thy sight are but as yesterday."

Phillipians 3: 13.—"Reaching forth unto those things which are before."

Most of the things we put off until tomorrow should have been done yesterday. The present calls for a response to every great and commanding task that is set before us. We may ride on a raft if we so choose, or we may travel on a world ship. It is our privilege to use a buckboard and a mule, or a swiftly running automobile. We may drift along if we are so minded, or take directions and strength from the Eternal each day, and pray each night for more and bigger tasks.

Ours should be an experience of enlargement and deepening. There must be a daring to face the deepest and the highest. With thinking cleared up, minds opened and souls enlarged, religion will mean for us far horizons.

The yesterdays of life have their meaning, but we should learn their life lessons in the spirit of the one who wrote: "Finish every day and be done with it; you have done what you could; some successes; some blunders; some absurdities have crept in. Forget them as soon as you can. Tomorrow is a new day."

Our unlimited tomorrows call for the facing of trying and difficult things with determination. Then defeats will become instalments of victory. New days to live and enjoy will be ours. For we live in what we do. Said Bramwell Booth to Cecil Rhodes: "Are you a happy man?" "He gripped the arm of my seat," says Bramwell Booth, "and gave me a look not easily forgotten, and said, 'Happy, I happy? Good God, no! You and your father are right; you have the best of me after all. I am trying to make new countries; you are making new men.'"

Our unlimited tomorrows will mean new knowledge to gain; new lights on the way; new deeds to be dared; new ways of doing old tasks; new friendships to make; new folks to help; new ends to live for. Ours will be the yearning within which cries out, "My work, this is my work in the world." There will be the facing of evil in word, thought and deed; reconstruction of life on the basis of an honest facing of the facts. Religion will become the fine art of living, and we shall be found working toward the great end for which the human being is created.

Our unlimited tomorrows challenge youth. The youthful president of a growing university in a frontier State thinks of his own young people and then writes, "They are not of the sunset and the recorded yesterdays; they are of the sunrise and the unlimited tomorrows." Then Mary Carolyn Davies faces youth and says:

"You who are young, it is you, it is you
Who must make the dreams of the world
Come true.

You who are young have a world to build,
The future shall be what you have willed.
Heed what you build with hand and tongue,
You who are young, you who are young."

Consider some forward-looking questions. On the part of youth is there a zealous search, a hunger and thirst after truth? Can youth contribute something constructive to the problems which perplex the world today? Is youth knocking at doors? Is youth putting life's questions into the question box? Is youth seeking in order to find? Can youth meet the challenge of Edward Shilleto: "Internationally we are not yet civilized, much less Christianized. If one may judge by the youth one meets, Yes! Is there the other kind of youth? Yes! But the finer type is in the lead. For the threefold field of intellectual achievement, spiritual power and human helpfulness is challenging the youth of today."

Moreover, enquiring, not pagan, youth is asking such questions as these: Shall religion be abolished? Yes, what is often called by the name of religion. What definitely fundamental thing can we believe? What will be the religion of the future? Is Professor Coe right when he says, "All true education is religious education?" Is it true that whatever is essentially religious is reasonable? Is God an expert bookkeeper or a Father? Is Jesus just a part in a theological system or is He the representative of the Eternal Goodness? Does Jesus show what God is like?

Such questions indicate what our young people are facing today. And when they think they have reached the end of their questioning, something else bumps over the horizon. As we face with the youth of today our unlimited tomorrows, shall we not ask ourselves the question, "Shall our young people be given the privilege of expressing themselves in thinking and doing, free from any superimposed ideas and methods of their elders? In other words shall we supervise them or trust them? How beautiful if we can live and learn and serve together Arthur B. Rhinow, writing about "The Bridge," says:

"Youth—Let me go. I live but once. --

Age—Then live

Youth—Just so! This is the life!

Age—It is death!

Youth—Ha! The life! Here's to the life!

Age—Can't you understand?

Youth—I cannot understand you.

Age—Learn by the experience of others.

Read history.

Youth—Every generation did what I do.

Age—And suffered. Can't you understand.

Youth—There is different blood in our reasoning.

Age—Shall I use force?

Youth—You don't know how strong I am.

Age—The gulf is wide.

Youth—And no bridge.—What makes your eyes look so hungry, and why do your hands press upon your heart?

Age—I love you.

Youth—You what?

Age—I am happy in making you happy; I suffer when you sin.

Youth—You sacrifice for me?

Age—I give my life to give you life.

Youth—But why?

Age—I love you; you are mine.

Youth—I see—the bridge. Give me your hand. God help me to understand."

"And only the Master shall praise us,
And only the Master shall blame;
And no one shall work for money,
And no one shall work for fame.
But each for the joy of the working,
And each in his separate star,
Shall draw the thing as he sees it,
For the God of the things as they are."

THE TIGER KNOCKS.

Governor Smith's statement to the Houston convention confirms Tammany's tribute, "He is his own platform." He is neither compromised by the enforcement declaration of his party nor does he compromise it. These are two and they are opposites. It is the irrepressible conflict.

The New York Herald-Tribune remarks editorially: "His representative sat upon the platform committee at Houston. He approved its terms. Neither dries nor wets will find it easy to forget that when the party might have been committed to a definite policy of either Prohibition or reform, the Governor not only held his peace, but acquiesced in evasive compromise, the happy warrior fights under damning handicaps."

But nevertheless Governor Smith represents himself here as elsewhere. The Houston plank speaks for the real Democracy, though it stops short of the complete declaration of Dan Moody of Texas—Dan Moody, who bids fair to inherit Bryan's mantle of prophetic leadership. (Watch Dan Moody.)

Governor Smith's statement contains one particularly significant sentence. He says: "Common honesty compels us to admit that corruption of law-enforcement officials, bootlegging, and lawlessness are now prevalent throughout the country." Governor Smith ought to know! But more to the point let Governor Smith answer as to how his personal practice and public acts have encouraged the observance of the Eighteenth Amendment and promoted its enforcement. In November, 1927, in a widely published article, not yet denied by Governor Smith—a generally complimentary article—Oswald Garrison Villard says: "I am reliably informed that he drinks every day and the number of his highballs and cocktails is variously estimated at from four to eight. . . . He is wet and he lives up to it."

Officially Governor Smith has never been a "pussyfooter." As a member of the legislature he fought every measure to restrict the saloon, though he now refers to "the old evils that grew from the saloon," and affirms that it ought "always to be a defunct institution." He fought the ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment. He fought for the Mullan-Gage repealer, and when a legislature passed it, he signed it. Alfred E. Smith, more than all other influences combined, is responsible for the withdrawing of the State of New York from the support of the Constitution of the United States. It is indeed the irrepressible conflict—the conflict between the happy Sachem of Tammany Hall and the Democracy of Jackson and Calhoun. It is the "Tiger" that knocks at the door of the White House!

But let us return to Governor Smith's statement. In view of all circumstances, his declaration that he stands upon the Houston law-enforcement plank reminds us of the old Field and Weber dialogue in which one of the famous slap-stick partnership jammed his thumb into the eye of the other and roared, "Oh, how I luf you!" Any hope of the Houston candidate for dry support in November would be as presumptuous as the prayer of the man who killed his parents and then invoked the mercy of the court because he was an orphan!

The labored effort of United States Senator Glass to prove that the election of Governor Smith could not affect Prohibition; that a wet President would not make any difference, causes one to query, "Do men gather figs of thistles?" To get what we want do we vote for what we don't want? Do the wets think it makes a difference? Will they support Mr. Smith to promote a dry America or even a status quo? Senator Glass, splendid gentleman that he is, has nevertheless cast himself

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

NOSING AROUND IN NEW YORK.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

THE SUN's editor came up to New York on Monday, July 9th, to attend the Pastor's Bible Conference at Union Theological Seminary. Just going to school again for a season. Well, he needs it. It was a wise philosopher who said that when one quits studying and learning, one quits teaching and preaching. We teach and preach only as, and when, we learn. By this theory, the reason why some teachers can't teach us anything, and some preachers can't preach to us anything, is because they have themselves quit learning, quit studying. Hence the Bible schools for preachers—especially the summer Bible school.

There are about 350 preachers here from all communions and from all parts of the country from Maine to Mexico. The program is excellent and the lectures on the Bible, and topics growing out of the Bible, are great.

New York is great. Besides taking courses in Bible study, the SUN's editor has been nosing around the city some. There are too many people here. He can't understand why some of them don't move. Go elsewhere to live. But they don't. They keep coming in troupes of thousands. Why they have to travel here three deep—on rail roads in three "layers." There were so many always going somewhere that rail roads along the streets couldn't begin to move them. Then they built the elevated—rail roads along over the tops of the houses. Then that not sufficing, they dug down under the houses, streets and rivers, and made railroad stations and hundreds of miles of railways away down under the ground. And so they travel three deep—on the earth, above the earth, and beneath its surface. And then there is not room enough for travel, and half the time every train is packed and seats are at a premium. But this is a city of six million now, and still growing. They are here from and of every nationality beneath the sun. I was in an "International Dormitory" this morning. People from over fifty nationalities sleep and eat there.

When one thinks of New York, one must think in terms of big numbers. For instance, New York has more Negroes than any other city in the world. It has more Jews (more than two million) than any other city in the world. Someone has said it has more Italians than Rome, more Greeks than Athens, more Germans than Berlin, and more Russians than Moscow. Well they are all here.

Columbia University is just across the street from where I write, and it now has over 14,000 pupils in its summer school. When folks come to New York they seem to come in thousands. I was down town tonight, and incidentally I dropped into a restaurant for dinner. It seemed small enough when I entered, but I discovered that everybody else had also come there for dinner, or were trying to do so. While the waiter was bringing me soup and eggs, I glanced at the back of the menu card. This is what I found printed there. "We feed 42,000 patrons and 300 employees each week, and this is what we buy to feed them on: 3,400 lbs. of poultry; 8,600 lbs. of beef; 9,500 lbs. of potatoes; 1,700 lbs. of butter; 4,000 lbs. of mushrooms; 8,900 lbs. of flour; 5,000 bags of tea; 4,500 lbs of sugar; 7,000 lbs. of pork; 28,000 lbs. of oysters; 13,500 lbs. of clams, 28,800 eggs; 222,000 rolls," etc., etc. Just one of thousands of restaurants here taxed to capacity to feed the people who come, and absorbing produce from every State in the Union, not to say from every country on the globe.

Passing around two days ago, I noticed a large, but unfinished, church building. Workmen and machinery were about the place, doors were open and I walked in. Once inside I enquired of the little lady at a desk the name of the church. "St. John the Divine." Some church! Chartered by the State of New York in 1873. The corner stone was laid in 1892. It has been more than forty years in building, and it will possibly be twenty-five or thirty years yet before it is completed. The estimated cost is something over twelve million dollars, about half of that sum having been spent on the completed portions. When completed it will be the third largest and most expensive house of worship in the world. In fact it is a church containing many churches, chapels, audience rooms, all under one roof. There are the "Seven Chapels of Tongues" grouped about but separate from the main auditorium, into which can be gathered 10,000 people, with standing space for many thousands more.

New York is talking Al Smith and rejoicing over the prospect of bringing in more and more liquor. As a morning paper said editorially today, "Our Governor says the saloon is defunct, but we all know he did all he could to keep it from becoming defunct, and will do all he can to revive it and make us wet again." He chose as the manager of his campaign a Catholic of course, and a militant wet, a member and director of "The Association Against the Enforcement of Prohibition." John J. Raskob is his name, and in his speech of acceptance last night, he said this campaign must be anti-prohibition, a militant wet campaign. He is a Tammany Man of course, and four years ago was a Republican and voted for Coolidge; but had now come to the Democratic party because it was wet and would wage a campaign for the wets. He is the man—a Republican most of his life, who has been chosen by Governor Smith and Tammany Hall to whip us Democrats of the South into line and make us vote "straight" for a man who is politically and personally very wet. One New York paper says editorially today that of course the "Solid South" will go for Smith, even if he is whiskey soaked himself and a militant wet, because it has not voted otherwise since the War.

Well, may be so. The Ides of November will tell. But my! how the dry forces and the honest, sane sober citizens of New York are fighting Al Smith and will do all they can to keep him out of the White House, for they hate to see our nation made as wet and as corrupt as Smith has made New York. J. O. A.

NOT A POLITICAL, BUT A MORAL ISSUE.

Tammany Hall of New York, the most notorious and corrupt political organization in American history, by forcing Governor Al Smith upon the country as a presidential candidate has forced a moral issue upon the voters in the next presidential election. Tammany Hall has always been the militant friend and advocate of liquor and the saloon. And Governor Smith is at present Tammany's favorite son, as he has been from boyhood its ready and willing advocate. Four times has Tammany, through political trickery and corruption that stinks to heaven, made him governor of his State, though in no election has he been able to carry more than four counties out of the sixty-two counties of his State.

As he has been a bane and a menace to his State, so now he is a menace to the nation. As a member of the New York Legislature, he voted ten times against allowing the people to even vote on any sort of a restriction on the sale of liquor; four times against stopping gambling and prostitution in connection with saloons; three times against repealing the law keeping the saloons open on Sunday; four times in favor of removing restrictions which would keep open saloons from churches and schools, and three times in favor of laws sponsored by organized gambling.

Here then is the issue: Shall we vote for a man who besides being addicted to excessive himself, stands for all that the temperance and dry forces of our country have opposed and fought against for the past twenty years?

And then, that the country may understand thoroughly his position, he disregards all party lines, chooses a Republican to manage his campaign, and too, a Republican with this record: He is a member of the Republican Union League of Philadelphia; a member of The Association Against Prohibition; gave $1,000,000 last year to promote Catholicism in the United States, went to Rome and was rewarded personally by the Pope for his generosity, was knighted by the Pope and is a member of the Knights of Columbus and other secret orders of the Catholic Church.

It is a pity and a shame to bring Church into this sorry affair, for we desire tolerance and despise bigotry. But the moral issue has been forced upon us by soulless propaganda, and the corrupt practices of Tammany Hall, and people who desire decency, sobriety and order in government seem to have no other alternative than to cast their ballots against Tammany's son and candidate.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

This article was suggested by the singing at the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference. Brother George McCullers lead the singing. There was an enthusiasm, a fervor, and a spiritual power in the music that this writer has not heard the like of since he last attended that convention. This scribe is not a singer nor a musician; but he believes that he knows good singing when he hears it. Why is it that some church music gets hold of the soul with an uplifting effect and other music does not?

Some suggestions are going to be advanced even in the face of the ignorance which has already been confessed; hoping that these suggestions will provoke someone who does know to tell us. One thing that was noticeable in the meeting referred to, almost everyone present was singing. But the fact that everyone is singing does not always generate spiritual enthusiasm. One wonders if the spirit of singing is profoundly influenced by the attitude and demeanor of the leader. In recent years many of the leaders of congregational singing, especially in evangelistic meetings, seem to have adopted the methods of those who lead the "community sings" and the "soldier sings" during the war. There was a special purpose to be served by war-time singing. It was intended to drive away gloomy thoughts, cure the blues, and lighten and cheer drooping spirits. To do this is worth while anytime and anywhere. But it by no means of necessity follows, that if you drive away gloomy thoughts that their places will be taken by religious thoughts. When you have cured the blues, you have not always generated spiritual enthusiasms. Persiflage, banter, real wit, and near wit may help to cheer drooping spirits; but it has never been our observation that they were especially conducive to spiritual aspirations. It seems to us, that those who would lead the congregation in singing have not done all that might be expected of them when they have beguiled the majority of those present to sing. It is their task to help create the atmosphere of worship through song.

And furthermore, to one who admits he does not know what he is talking about, it seems that congregational singing has suffered tremendously because so many leaders either do not know how to observe the time in which hymns are written; or they think it permissible to change the time to suit their own fancy. Not long ago a radio entertainer told of a musician who knew only one tune. He was asked to play for a funeral. He did something to the time of his tune, and it sounded like a funeral march. When asked to play at a dance, he again changed the time of his tune, and to one who does not know much about dance music, it sounded as if it might do very well to dance by. Again when asked to play for church, he did something else to the time, and honestly it sounded more churchy than half the hymns one hears in church. But sometimes one hears queer things done to the time of hymns, and the result is not conducive to worship or suited to dance by. In fact one would hate to be carried to the grave accompanied by such music. Somebody who knows what is the matter with some of our congregational singing ought to tell us. And somebody who can, ought to do something about it.

THE CRADLE AND THE KINGDOM.

III.

The home and the Sunday School ought to pray at the same altar, sing with the same voice, set an example in the same light, trust each other, and set all the social forces to the same standard. Old trees may be improved by pruning, fertilization, and cultivation; but only young scions can make a good orchard; so regeneration, reformation, cultivation, may start and direct new life-forces in men, but only the whole life of the child-man in the Kingdom produces the best results. Part of the incarnation lesson is the divine life operating in man from the manger in Bethlehem to the ascension from Olivet. That is the complete life. Moses, Samuel, and Timothy are examples of less perfect types.

The duty of the Kingdom to the cradle is, therefore, the highest of all duty of all. The Church wastes its force in preaching to unbelieving men instead of training believing children in the way of the Lord. Church members often go to church and neglect Sunday School. The State limits the school age to twenty-one, closing the opportunity at that age. This proves that the State believes that childhood is the time for education to begin, and then work or higher education afterwards. The armies of the world are made up of young men. Parental obligation is the most responsible obligation in the world, and parents often lead their children astray by example. Children are by nature religious and skepticism is learned later in life. Hannah's thought of her child and her devotion to her vows respecting him set before us the finest view of what motherhood can do for the child. Samuel was an answer to prayer. Hannah promised him to God, and her life was loyal to that sacred vow. She sacrificed her own pleasure of his presence in the home to religious opportunity and loyalty to God and His cause. Noble manhood rewarded her faith, her promise and her devotion. His name filled the land, and his life filled the world. None of his words fell to the ground. He had audience with God. He anointed the first king of Israel. He filled his mother's heart with joy and her name with honor. The world might be full of Samuels if mothers surrendered themselves to God, surrounded the cradles with prayers, and made and kept religious vows.

Mrs. Savage and her only little son went to Lynchburg, Virginia, to spend two weeks with her parents. It was July 17th. Fifteen minutes after their arrival, the child's grandfather went to the well to draw a bucket of water and the child went with him. An hour later the child's lifeless body was found in the well. The child tried to push back the cover of the well, as he had seen grandfather do it, and had fallen to his death. Children try to do what they see their parents do, and no one can compute the force of parental example. If the homes were all they might be, it would mean a new generation, a new Church, and a new State.

A QUESTION AND A SUGGESTION.

Did you ever note the deep spiritual tone and the passionate evangelical zeal of those who believe in and expect the immediate Second Coming of Christ? I have heard it said that the Christians who expect Christ to come again soon to this earth are about the only Christians who are putting forth determined and enthusiastic efforts to save the lost. This writer does not agree with that statement, but it has been my observation that where the Second Coming is preached and believed in, there is a deepening of the spiritual life of the believer and a manifestation of a finer spirit of evangelistic interest.

It is not our purpose in writing this article to start a theological discussion. If it be true, as it seems to appear, that the belief in the immediate Second Coming has a most wholesome and energizing effect upon the believer, it should put us to thinking. And thinking should stir us to action. In a recent conversation with a good Christian woman, the question we are here discussing was brought sharply into focus. This good woman stated her conviction that we are nearing the time of the fulfillment of the prophecy, and that Christ is to come again soon. She went on to say that she had entertained hopes that she would live to see His coming. But advancing years and failing strength caused her to think that perhaps she would fall to sleep before He comes. But, said she, that will not make any special difference, if I do all the good I can while I am living, and am ready when the end comes, I will be with the Master.

I recalled how exactly her belief coincided with the thinking of Paul, as the course of his belief is clearly revealed in his letters. As her convictions were unfolded in her conversation, it seemed to me that they were identical with the beliefs of the great rank and file of Christians, save in just the one particular as to the time of Christ's coming being very near at hand. And she herself stated that in her own case it made no difference whether she lived to see the Great Day that she had so eagerly looked forward to or not. In the statement of her beliefs, she had stated my own, with the single exception that she was convinced that the time is near at hand, while I am not so sure that we are nearing the end of the age.

It was not her beliefs that interested me, but the fact that her beliefs had produced in her a vital faith, a piety that is unquestioned, and because of her beliefs she is daily enjoying a blessed Christian experience. She is, to use the old Scotch expression, "Far been with Christ." She has a much richer Christian experience than the average Christian. It is my firm conviction that she has had a richer life because of her belief, which I do not share.

Has her Christian experience been more vital because of her belief and thought about the Second Coming, or has it been more vital because her belief in the Second Coming has caused her to think more about the Christ? If she had thought as deeply and as constantly about what Jesus did and taught while engaged in his earthly ministry, would the results in her spiritual life have been as great? If she had dwelt as constantly upon the blessings which the gospel of Jesus is daily bringing into the lives of believers, and labored as diligently to bring others to share in those blessings, would she have accomplished as much for the Master, as she has by urging others to prepare for the Second Coming which she believes to be at hand? The question we are endeavoring to raise is, Should the emphasis be upon the Second Coming or upon the Christ. Whence come the results that are achieved?

Is any doctrine vital and potent to save as it is related to the Christ? Does the preaching of any doctrine ever accomplish definite spiritual results save as it exalts the Christ? It may be that there is a principle involved here that applies to every phase of Christian service. It is our conviction that the belief and the preaching of any doctrine brings spiritual development and power only as it presents the Christ directly to the human mind and heart.

THE MISSION OFFERING.

Quite a few of the Churches, we are persuaded, have taken the mission offering, but have not yet sent it in. It is to be hoped that the treasurers will forward the money, as it is so much needed. Then there are quite a few Churches that were delayed in taking the offering. These should take the offering as early as possible, so that we may make it unanimous and our report will show every Church in the Convention co-operating.

The Barretts are returning to Porto Rico, sailing from New York this week. This does not mean that we have on hand sufficient funds to pay their salary for the coming months, but it does mean that there are loyal souls, true and faithful pastors, who have rallied to the cause and are trying to interest the people in missions and thus make the return of the Barretts a reality. We are going very much on faith, believing that our people will respond and will not go back on a work which is vital to our Church life and growth. The most unselfish gift we ever make in this life, and the most Christ-like, is what we give to missions. We do this for Jesus' sake, who commanded it, and we expect no praise or reward for every other gift that we make in this life, except the gift to missions. In this act we are helping a people that we will never know and never meet this side the gates of glory, but we are doing the divine thing as commanded by our Lord. No Church is ever poorer, but always richer, both in the things that pertain to this world and the world to come, that gives to missions.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

To-morrow has lost many opportunities, defeated many good intentions, broken the chain of human confidence, and left many debts unpaid. Solomon's statement, "Boast not thyself of to-morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth," is one of his wisest sayings. Luke's account of the rich man may emphasize the same truth. His ground "brought forth plentifully"; then he said to his soul "thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." But God said unto him, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." James covers the same ground when he says, "Ye know not what shall be on the morrow." "Now is the accepted time." "Today is the day of salvation."

There is a future for rewards or punishments, but today is the time for decision and action. Individual life is spent in a narrow sphere, works in a brief time, lives in a little world, and can not see beyond the present hour. Any extension of the individual into a larger space is through faith and others. All that we can plan for to-morrow is by faith; all that we can mean to the world is through others. No man lives to himself, and no man dies to himself, but in the esteem and life of others. The President is great because the nation is great, and he is known and respected by millions. Jesus grows greater every passing year, because the millions that trust and worship Him are increasing in numbers and service every year and every century.

The kind word spoken today, the little deed of kindness you plan to do should be done today; the little bill you owe should be paid while it is on your mind. Go to see that sick friend before he dies. Make that apology, for the sharp word spoken, now. "Procrastination is the thief of time." Putting off too often means leaving off. That is especially true of moral and spiritual decisions. The Holy Spirit moves upon the heart of the individual, and the individual has convictions that mean leaving off evils or taking up new service, and such convictions win when they are promptly obeyed. If a Christian is moved to speak to a sinner in the interest of his soul, and obeys that feeling promptly, he will win that sinner to Christ; if he neglects it, it may never return. Experience admits the truth of this statement and then puts off doing the deed or speaking the word until it is too late. This is not only true in spiritual life, but in social relations, and in business as well. When such conviction enters the mind, it is an opportunity to save a soul or make a fortune. Today is the most important day of your life. The past is gone, the future is to come; you cannot go back and you may not go into the tomorrow. I'll see you tomorrow; I'll attend to it tomorrow; I will not decide tonight; I'll think about it. These are common expressions used to defer action when conviction demands decision and action now!

ELON LETTER.

I have been thinking considerably of late of two Elon men.

Those who were present at the Alumni Banquet at the recent commencement will recall the dramatic appearance in the banquet hall of "Hardrock" Simpson, who had just completed the Trans-Continental Race conducted by Pyle and "Red" Grange.

Very naturally "Hardrock," as he is familiarly known in the college world as well as in the athletic world, was called upon for a few remarks. He had, as I have said, finished the race, but he was thirty-second in the group. He was, however, proud of the fact that in the face of great difficulty he had been able to come through to a successful conclusion. He declared that the philosophy which had sustained him in the race had been the sentiment of a poster in my office which, as a freshman, he had seen as he came in to register. This motto reads: "For when the one great Scorer comes to write against your name, He writes not that you won or lost, but how you played the game." I have no doubt that a great many Elon students have this same attitude toward life and its problems which "Hardrock" has. The quality of our effort is the value to which ultimately the highest satisfaction attaches.

I have recently met again after a lapse of years, another Elon man who shall be nameless in this connection, but his achievement is a masterpiece and an inspiration. He is not a brilliant student intellectually, but a hard worker. He had the fortune to be born in straitened circumstances and to be left an orphan. It was necessary, therefore, for him to work his way through high school and then through college. He then went to a university where he took his Master of Arts degree and later the B. D. degree. He is now about to take his LL. B. in one of the great graduate law schools of America.

I had the pleasure to visit in his room in the university in which he is now studying and where he takes only about a half course each year in order to have time to support himself. I did not ask him for the philosophy of life that had sustained him, but I used my eyes while I was in his room, and just in front of his desk upon which for the past six years he has wrought out the requirements of his legal degree, I discovered the following motto, entitled "Trudge Along":

"When trials are greatest
And all goes wrong,
Just buckle your armor
And trudge along.
The way that is very Dark and cold
May lead to shelter
Within the fold.
These trials were meant
To make you strong;
So buckle your armor
And trudge along."

These two splendid Elon men, the one centering his attention on the quality of his effort and the other with dogged determination pressing on toward the accomplishment of his purpose, are to me an inspiration and a delight.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

How many times can a worker buy a basketful of provisions with his weekly wages? This is the real wage.

Can you, behind all the elaborate tables of statistics comparing wages in various European capitals and the U. S. A. see the weary housewife with a shawl over her head, trudging home from market, basket on arm? According to these statistics, the Austrian housewife could buy five basketfuls, the Dutch eight, the English ten, and the American eighteen.

Christian Association to help the industrial girl to a position in which she will earn more under more sanitary conditions, and to educate the housewife (in those countries where her ignorance makes her a prey of shopkeepers) so that she may increase the number of basketfuls. In China, if a sign gives the price of rice, the housewife's inability to read makes it possible for the shopkeeper to give her only half as much for her money. And in no country in the world does she have so little on which to buy for her family. Nor in few countries so large a family.

The Chefoo Y. W. C. A. (to give an illustration of what is being done in that vast country) is making an experiment in the matter of self-governing clubs for industrial girls. Over a hundred girls have been interested in industrial clubs, the leadership for which has been obtained from the working women themselves. Knowing their jobs, their advantages and disadvantages, and where and how they could be more efficient and earn more, they are pioneers on the road to a promised land for the workers who will come after them. Many of these leaders gained their first impetus through the night education classes conducted by the Y. W. C. A.

In Germany, 3,500 domestic workers are members of the Y. W. C. A. Here are two examples of what has been done: A contract which must be signed by employer and employee before work is taken up by the latter, and in some cities a fund for old age has been started.

In Germany, the association organizes classes in sewing, in serving meals and similar matters. The organization of special courses in domestic science at metropolitan schools has proved particularly useful. Once a week classes are held in washing, ironing, baking, cooking, mending, sewing and patching. The keeping of accounts is also taught, and professional information is given in such matters as insurance against ill health and accidents, employment agencies, suitable clothing, etc.

In addition to taking measures to fit the girls of India for wage-earning positions and to make conditions better for them, the association, in co-operation with missionary societies, is training girls for social service. The students do various kinds of practical work among the poor in Bombay, and in particular to help to run a play-center and work-class in a large mill area.

Did you, who are an American, know that the Student Council of the Y. W. C. A. has supported a group of students in industry in one or more cities over the country each summer, in one or more cities, for the past seven years? Each girl who joins the group, having met definite requirements, finds her own job and her own living-place and lives on her wages for six weeks. A leader is in charge of the group. The workers meet several times a week for discussion of experiences and problems and to listen to speakers from different phases of industry.

Every one in the world is interested in the number of times the housewife can buy a basketful of provisions with the week's wages. Every woman who becomes better trained for her work and allies herself with some other woman to make working conditions better, helps to increase the number of times the basket may be filled.

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praise unto Thy name, O Most High."—Psalm 92: 1-4 as any and every subject that you may name that the State college can teach; and then the denominational college can enter the fields of theology and explore its broad vistas and labyrinths; it can enter the domain of the soul as the soul sits in contemplation of and with its God; it can enter the fields of the life eternal, and there, from some Mount Pisgah of the Universe, it can explore the workings of God in sun and moon and star, and it can cause the student to walk with the everlasting spirits who forever do the Master's will and make the eternal and everlasting city their home. In the denominational college the problem of everlasting life and of eternity may be studied with none to molest or to make afraid; and here the student may become acquainted with that "city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God." Here he becomes acquainted with a love that is eternal and that passeth within the veil; he gathers beatific visions that inspire and lead him to live the life of the spirit and to live above the things of time and chance and change. And so we maintain the thesis that the denominational college has the whole field of truth and of revelation for its own, its courses may cover time and eternity, they may treat of man and of his progress, of God and of His doings among men and in the earth; these courses are not bounded by time or chance or change, for they are universal in their nature. The other college has a field by no means as broad as this.

THE PROBLEM OF THE DENOMINATIONAL COLLEGE.

Then the denominational college must, in choosing its faculty, select men who are scholars, it is true, but it must also lay great stress on a faculty of men and women of great personal magnetism, men and women of faith and hope; men and women whose hearts and spirits throb in unison with the heart and spirit of God. The faculty of the denominational college must consist of men and women who are connected up with the great dynamo of everlasting and eternal truth, who drink from fountains of living water, who are teachers as well as scholars, and who will wield an influence that will attract and affect the lives of young men and young women for time and also for eternity. The State college may get such men and women in its faculty; the denominational college must have them. It is a problem in mathematical probability as to whether or not the State college gets such men and women. The denominational college can have no other kind. The faculties of the denominational colleges must be men and women of strong religious convictions, men and women who, like Luther, will take their stand for the right and for religion, the universal principle in man, and having taken this stand, they must stand there eternally.

Again, the denominational college must limit its student body to such numbers as can reasonably be taught by the direct members of the faculty. The standardizing agencies, and these have generally been initiated and organized by the denominational colleges, have said what endowment a denominational college must have for every fifty to one hundred students beyond a certain number. This provision has been made in order to prevent the college from taking more students than can come into direct contact with the heads of departments, and, as a result, the denominational college accepts only that number of students that can reasonably be taught directly by the faculty. Hence, the instruction is more personal, more direct, more individualistic, more appealing, and carries greater weight with it than instruction given to the masses can possibly be. And so it tells more for life, for character, and for true manhood and true womanhood.

The denominational college must encourage the spiritual development of its students. Spiritual development, being based on religion, the denominational colleges must lay emphasis on religion. It must stress not only character; but it must strive to make that character decidedly Christian. Unless this is done, the denominational college loses one of its chief rights to exist.

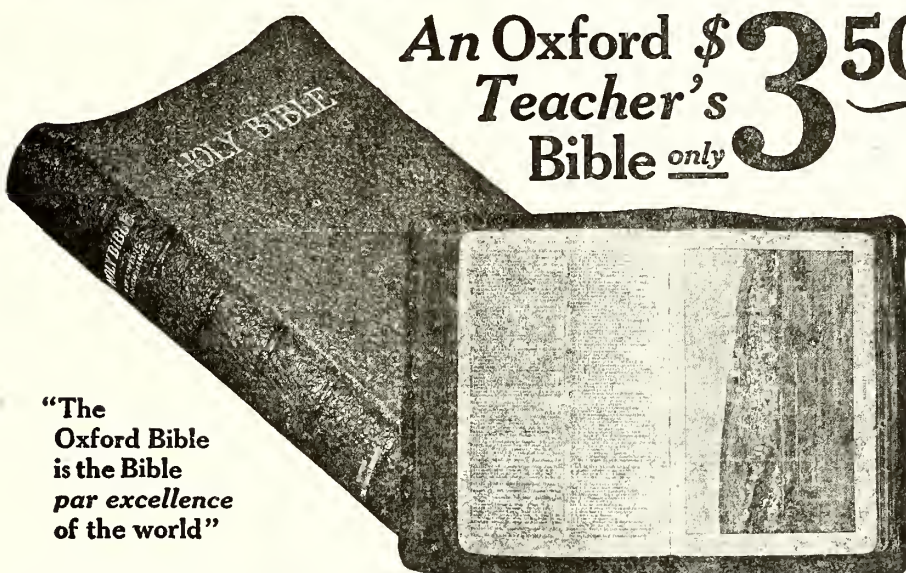

The problem of the denominational college, then, is to maintain an institution of learning that does what the State college does, but does this work in a decidedly better way than the State college can do it; and must do this work in a decidedly more religious way than it can possibly be done by the State college. The denominational college must have no limitations; the State college necessarily works under limitations. The denominational college must have a wider and broader curriculum, its course of study must be enriched by relating it to and bringing it in touch with God, its faculty must be men and women devoted to God and to truth, and its student body must be led and guided as well as directed along different lines and towards different standards and nobler ideals than the State college can guide and lead into. To do this work effectively, to provide the equipment, the faculty, and the endowment to successfully prosecute this great work, this is the problem of the denominational college.

"Some of the finest moral heroism of the generation was manifested by men and women at Houston who refused to retreat an inch from an unequivocal dry platform and equally dry candidates. History will not forget United States Senator Simmons of North Carolina, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., Dr. Barton of Georgia, and those who stood with them."—Christian Herald.

BUILDING A STRONG HOME BASE.

BY REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

(Address delivered by the Mission Secretary before the Eastern Virginia Conference.)

We Christians have been a long time building a strong home base. One could easily be pessimistic and say we will be a long time yet in building a strong home base. But one does not wish to be pessimistic or to have a grouch. In Christian work we want to be hopeful, optimistic and prophets of great things to be. It is easy enough for your speaker to say how he thinks a strong home base may be built, but he is not sure that he would convince others or carry conviction to other minds and hearts. However, he will undertake to express his own views in the matter, whether those views are shared by others or whether they shall serve only as a point of departure for others. To build a strong home base, then, there will be required at least three things:

1. Evangelism and something more than evangelism—that is, than mass-evangelism. Evangelism, as we know, is one of the sweet and palatable words that we love to repeat. It somehow seems to satisfy and to be a favorite concept. As a recent writer has pointed out, "It is a word we play with today." We use it as a declaration; we fondle it as something smooth and bright. But bear in mind, brethren, that evangelism is only a word, and a word which seems almost emptied of its content. We talk about it and play with it, but we are not making it go. It is a fact. According to the religious census of the Churches, it now takes forty members of a Protestant Church working a year to win one convert, to evangelize one individual, if you please. It takes ten Protestant ministers working together or separately a whole day to win one convert. Let us take the statistics of our own Conference and see if these figures, which apply to all Protestant Churches of America, will vary much from those here in our own Conference. This Conference has 11,268 individual members in its Churches. On that basis, with forty members working a year to win one convert, we should have 281 converts gathered into our Church the past year. If the Church letters show many more than this, it will be to our credit, and we are above the average in evangelism. Again, say that you have twenty ministers in the Conference giving all their time to pastoral labors. On a basis of ten ministers working for a day to win one convert, we would have won 730 to the Churches of the Conference the past year. We doubt if the Church letters will show many more than these. And yet we believe we are right in the heart and center of a people who are evangelistic through and through. Admit, then, that we are in the business of building a strong home base and admit further that in order to build this home base we employ as our agency evangelism. One can readily see that with ten ministers working a whole day to win one convert, and twenty laymen working a whole year to win one convert, we will be a long time in building a strong home base. Evidently, the driving power we send out to help men find God is no longer with us; or if with us, we are using that power to very poor and feeble ends and results. The fact is that group evangelism is not enough. There must come amongst us somehow and from some source a passion for unsaved souls and a passionate fondness for the Church of the living God. There must come into our hearts and lives a yearning to reach the unreached and to save the unsaved. This passion for souls would impel us to go out and build Churches where we haven't them. We have developed a passion for benevolence and seem to have substituted that for a passion for souls and Church building. We, as a Conference and a Convention, will give more this year by a long sight to support one Orphanage than we will give to build Churches in the homeland or in the foreign land. It is useless to say that we have this passion to any large or marked degree as long as it takes forty Church members, working all the year and ten preachers working all day, to win one convert to Christ. Verily, evangelism as we now have it is not enough.

The second thing to be said is that any form of approach to an unsaved world comes to be a method only. Any method of approach to an unsaved world comes to be a method only. Any system of attack on the enemy employed incessantly comes to be system only. And so we have reduced our approach to the unsaved world to a mere formalism, to methods long tried and to systems that are worn out. The strength of evangelism has always been the power of a new attack and the force of an untried effort.

The power of Wesley's attack upon the unsaved world of his day was the power of a heretofore untried effort and was a new experience in the world. We will find this to be true in the life and experience of every outstanding winner of souls to Christ from the beginning till now. Paul made a mighty attack on the forces of evil in his day, but he did not employ the legal methods of Moses or the destructive methods of Elijah. His was the power of a new and, on that account, an untried and a deeper experience than any form or method that had been tried. Martin Luther made an attack upon a world of sin, and the force of that attack is still felt in the world and the sound of its impact still reverberates among the children of men. Its force was the force of a rich and deep experience with God, an experience which he did not want to learn nor acquire from the forms, the customs and the systems of his day.

I have read with wonder and amazement the method of attack upon an unsaved world by John Wesley. There was not anything in history like it prior to his day. He followed neither Luther nor Paul, nor Elijah nor Moses. What these had done had grown into a cold, indifferent, heartless ritual and formalism. John Wesley's heart was touched with a deeper experience and a coal from off the altar of heaven. A live and burning coal so touched his lips that those lips gave utterance to messages, to thoughts and to convictions that the world had not known and heard of till his day. You will find this true in the life and experience of every man of God who has made an assault on the battlements of sin in such a way as to batter down those battlements and conquer the enemy in untold numbers for God. I have read as you have, with warmth of feeling and deep emotion, accounts of Dwight L. Moody's revivals, of his voice that thundered against sin, of the impact of his scul on the strongholds of Satan, of the sound of his clarion voice in behalf of righteousness calling sinners to repentance. There was not anything like it before Moody, and his efforts meant so much, and his life counted for so much that we reduced or have tried to reduce his form of procedure until we have made it formalism, and his method of attack until we have made it method only, of his system of approach until we have made it a system only. I say again that the evangelism of our day is not enough. I do not know what line of attack or method of procedure we are to follow, but one thing I know is that sin is yet rampant in the world and the forces of God are equal and superior to the forces of evil, and ours is the task to discover a method whereby those forces can be reached. Out of Wesley's preaching and out of Moody meetings, Churches by the hundreds sprang up. Out of the soul winning and the flaming evangelism of James O'Kelly and Barton W. Stone Churches sprang up and congregations gathered themselves together in Church buildings.

My own conviction is that we have somehow got to shift our approach. A world around about us, hardened and indifferent to sin, will not come any more to hear the good news. There are hundreds and thousands of other attractions. One is ready to believe that the next great evangelistic note struck will be the evangelism of youth, the reaching of our children for Christ and setting their souls on fire for God. We are living in an age of youth. We have yielded the sceptre to youth. We have enthroned youth in the home, in the school, in the community. We are told that youth is in earnest and is seeking truth. We are told that youth is full of energy and activity and zeal. Then it is up to the Church to set this youth afire for God, and, through youth, win this world to Christ. I am inclined to think that one of the great methods of strengthening the home base is by winning our youth to Christ and then challenging that youth with the heroic task of taking this world for Christ. If we adults have spent our strength in Church building, in building a home base, let's get our youth on fire for God and see what happens.

3. All of which means a larger and a brighter vision of God. Where there is no vision, the people perish. My own conviction is once more that one reason why we have lost the force and power of evangelism and one reason why we are not inflaming our youth for Christ and the Church is because we have limited our program and narrowed our vision. When the Lord Christ said, "Ye shall be witnesses of me to the uttermost parts," He gave the most daring and the most tremendous and the most hazardous command that God ever gave to man. It is the biggest task in this world, and it is the only task that is worth while in this world. Somehow, the Church has got to get a larger vision and has got to show this materialistic age that all our money, and all our preaching, and all our teaching, and all our energy are to be turned in the direction of making this world a God's world, of making every nation and tongue and tribe on this planet a God-ruled and a God-governed nation, tribe and people. Here, then, is our task. We will build a strong home base when we catch a right vision of that task, and in the light of that vision our souls are set on fire for God and we shall count not the price nor the cost in money or men in the one great effort and task of making the kingdoms of this world the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

Our lives are held true to God by the memory of golden moments when He revealed Himself in a peculiar manner. We need the glory of the mount to keep us hopeful and brave in the valley below.

RECOVERING SPIRITUAL PASSION.

The Church in America in our day is suffering from an attitude of complacency and moderation. The status quo delights its soul. There is good in every religion, in every person, in every situation, in everything. The universe is friendly. Life is altruistic. Not much is wrong with the world. Why should we worry?

How can the Church in America recover its spiritual passion? How can it bring itself to the point where it will really care for the program of the Christian religion? How will it ever be willing and ready and anxious again to enter into the fellowship of the sufferings of its Master?

There is but one answer. It must become seriously missionary. If the history of the Christian Church teaches anything without question, it is that the passion for the salvation of others underlies the spiritual passion and inner-heart life of the individual Christian and of the organized Church.

By concern for others, however, in the missionary sense we do not simply mean what we ordinarily describe as missions, particularly foreign missions, but the whole program of social service and Christian uplift for the life of the individuals and the world, and of the institutions that minister to their character growth and development. It includes every enterprise of the Kingdom, but particularly home and foreign missions, ministerial relief, the human welfare agencies, such as orphanages and homes for the aged, and Christian Education. So shall we recover our spiritual passion as individuals and the organized Church of Christ.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTION.

This Convention met in its Thirty-Fourth Annual Session at Catawba Springs Church, Wake County, July 10 and 11th. Prof. L. L. Vaughan, Raleigh, N. C., presided, and Rev. J. Fuller

Johnson, Fuquay Springs was secretary. The convention was well attended, the spacious church building being well filled at every service. There were enrolled 85 delegates representing 22 Sunday Schools and Endeavor Societies.

Mr. M. C. Sorrell, superintendent of the local Sunday School, gave the address of welcome, and Mr. Harold Johnson made the response. The annual address was given by Prof. Vaughan, the efficient president.

The evening session was featured and made interesting by two addresses, one on "Missions," by Mr. V. M. Mulholland, Durham, and another by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, on "Caring for the Church's Children."

Wednesday morning Rev. J. A. Denton led very impressively the devotional services. Mr. C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C., treasurer of the convention, gave a talk on Religious Education, and Miss Priscilla Chase on "Christian Education." The department secretaries all gave interesting reports, which with committee reports consumed the entire morning of the last day.

The afternoon was given to Christian Endeavor and was much enjoyed. Catawba Springs entertained the convention royally. The devotional periods conducted by Revs. J. F. Morgan, J. E. Franks and J. A. Denton were helpful and inspiring. One half the convention funds were given to missions and half to the Board of Religious Education.

The next session is to be held at Pleasant Hill Church.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson V.—July 29, 1928.

"THE FIRST FOREIGN MISSIONARIES."

GOLDEN TEXT: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I command you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28: 19-20.

LESSON: Acts 13: 1-52.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 67.

Jesus was right. "The kingdom of heaven is as a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field; which indeed is the least of all seeds; but when it is grown, it is the greatest of herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof." Two men, nineteen hundred years ago started a movement that has already become the greatest and grandest enterprise on earth, and the end is not yet. Indeed, in a way, only a beginning has been made. But it is worth-while to know that there are in the world some 4,400 Protestant foreign mission stations, with about 28,000 foreign missionaries ministering in these stations, and at least 150,000 native workers assisting them in their work. Furthermore, it must be kept in mind that most of this work has been done within the past century and a quarter, that is modern missions has been confined for the most part to that period of time. Missions is the modern miracle.

In treating this lesson, the writer has preferred to note briefly some of the characteristics or qualities of the first missionaries, Paul and Barnabas, rather than to deal in the details of their first missionary journey. Several qualities stand out which are worthy of emulation.

1.—Men with a Compelling Experience.

Paul and Barnabas had found Christ. In them the Jesus of history had become the Christ of experience. He really meant something to them. They had found in Him that which satisfied their deepest longings and met their deepest needs. He was not a vague, unreal, legendary figure; He was a real, vital, living Person. Their lives had been immeasurably enriched. And because of this fact they felt that they must tell others about Christ. Surely if He had done so much for them, and if He meant so much to them, He could do for others and mean as much for others. Their experience of Christ was so dynamic that it compelled them to share it with others. This was the center of the thing for them, as it must be the center of the thing for us. One reason why so many people do not have the evangelistic or missionary spirit—and they are really one—is because Christ does not mean anything real or vital to them. When we really possess Christ and Christ possesses us, we will feel some impulse to share the riches of Christ with others. The man who says he does not believe in foreign missions, or who says he is not interested in foreign missions, thereby reveals the poverty of his own religious life and the narrowness of his own spiritual life.

2.—Men with a Burning Conviction.

Paul and Barnabas not only felt something; they believed something. They believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of the Living God. He was more than simply a good man or a great teacher. He was the Son of God, who had died for the sin of the world and who had risen from the dead. They believed this and they proclaimed it. It was the center and circumference of their missionary message. It is, and always must be the center and the circumference of our message. Christ is the gospel. There is a place for liberality of thought in many things in religion, but when ministers and Sunday School teachers make Jesus Christ anything else than the Christ, the Son of the Living God, they do not have anything left that is going to influence very deeply life, and nothing that will regenerate character. We need in this day of liberal thinking and half-baked theories, convictions about Christ, convictions based not on blind dogmatism, but convictions rooted where their convictions were rooted, in an experience of Christ Himself.

3.—Men with a Warm Compassion.

Paul and Barnabas were interested in their work. They were interested in the gospel which they preached. But they were interested in these things because primarily, they were interested in people. They were not so much concerned with covering so much territory, or in defending pet theories, as in bringing to their fellowmen—they recognized all men as their fellowmen—a knowledge of Christ. They believed it did make a difference whether men and women, boys and girls, knew Christ, and the passion of their lives was, somehow or other, to bring this knowledge of the Christ to others. One of the most pressing needs of ministers, Sunday School workers, and Christians in general, is a sincere interest in people and an earnest desire to share with others the riches of Christ. There is no substitute for this.

4.—Men with Indomitable Courage.

"Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold." They were not afraid. They had the courage of their convictions and the courage which came from a consciousness that because they were doing the will of Christ, they had the presence and the power of Christ. We need Christians today who have courage, men and women, and boys and girls, who will stand by their convictions, and who will dare to live out at any cost their convictions.

5.—Men with Conquering Perseverance.

If Paul and Barnabas did not teach us anything else, they could teach us the power of perseverance or persistence. Here as elsewhere the missionary enterprise is the story of patience and persistence against odds and obstacles—a spirit of persistence which many, many Christians need today and every day.

TOPIC: "Appreciating Our Immigrant Neighbors."—Ruth 2: 4-17.

Some Bible Hints.

There is enough difference in foreigners to attract attention. Often that creates unreasoning prejudice (v. 5).

A kind heart will recognize good in all and be kind to all, as Boaz was kind to Ruth (v. 8).

We must judge people by the good they have done and not by their native customs that may differ from ours (v. 11).

Everything must eat and live. Boaz recognized this and helped Ruth. We have some such duty to foreigners (v. 14).

Suggestive Thoughts.

We cannot appreciate foreigners without some knowledge of their historical background. Yet how little we know, for instance, about Lithuanians, except the name!

If we follow Christ's rule and love our neighbor as ourselves, we shall have an enthusiasm for humanity. We shall realize that every man is of value to God. What should that mean to us?

It is said that many criminals belong to the second generation of immigrants. That is largely because we neglected the first generation. What are we doing to understand them and draw them into our life?

Not to appreciate and understand immigrants is a shame to us. It is an eloquent comment on our ignorance. These people we call "wops" come from races that have a heritage of literature and music that we might well envy.

A Few Illustrations.

A big tunnel was put through a mountain. When finished, the press agent made a point of saying that not a single man had been killed. Questioned, he admitted that many "wops" or foreigners had been killed, but they did not count!

"Where are your slums?" Dr. Clark once asked in Budapest. "We have none," he was told. We must get rid of the idea that Europe is inferior.

Immigrants, even the most ignorant, represent not America's peril, but America's opportunity. Michael Pupin, a Serbian immigrant is now one of America's greatest scientists.

Some still think of the Italian as a man who holds a string with a monkey at the end of it. This is just as intelligent as the opinion held in some parts of Europe that America is a land of painted savages.

"Italian immigrants are exceptionally industrious, good workmen, faithful, prompt, and steady. They can put money in the bank under circumstances in which an American would starve."—H. B. Grose.

To Think About.

How does the foreign population of our community live?

How may we show friendship for foreigners in our community?

What have foreigners contributed to American life?

THE RELIGION OF TAMMANY HALL

Tammany Hall is reputed to have religion. No one should laugh at the statement. Tammany Hall has religion and takes it seriously. Count on that without subtraction. The Scottish Rite News Bureau, quoting from Plain Talk, says that Tammany Hall is not quite 100 per cent Catholic. Out of its 36 district leaders, 32 are Catholics and the other four, Jews.

It was stated further that William A. Olvany, a Protestant and Mason, was singled out for leadership; six months later he became a member of the Roman Catholic Church. One of his predecessors in the position, Croker, though of Protestant stock, also became a Catholic.

Now of course this raises the question whether Tammany Hall is out for politics, or religion, or both, and what might we expect from a President who "belonged." It is particular folly to say that the religion of a man from such an organization "does not matter" in the question of choosing a President for the United States.—Christian Evangelist.

which it brings stir us up to a greater service for Him.

Our Sunday School has increased steadily since getting into our new building, and the separate class rooms make for greater efficiency. Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis conducted a two weeks revival campaign as soon as the building was in shape, and God blessed them and us in their work. Mr. Davis delighted the people with his beautiful rendition of the gospel songs on the piano. His is indeed a talent used for God. Mrs. Davis preached with great earnestness and power, and the messages went home to hearts. Many re-consecrated their lives to the Master's service and others accepted Christ for the first time. Mrs. Davis organized a booster choir, that came every night and sang the choruses she taught them with much spirit. Mr. and Mrs. Davis are doing a wonderful work for God, and we bid them God speed. A generous free-will offering was given them by people of all denominations who attended the services. Such a good spirit of co-operation was felt with all the denominations.

Since the first of June, under the preaching of our pastor and the work of Mr. and Mrs. Davis, twelve have been added to the church roll by letter and by profession of faith. God is blessing the work of our pastor in the saving of souls and the building up of His kingdom.

Our pastor, Rev. D. D. Nash, who has worked so faithfully to get our new building ready for occupancy, besides his pastoral duties and his daily work in a local plant, has been granted a vacation by the church, and he and his family are now in North Carolina. We pray that God may bless and use them there and bring them back to us with rested bodies to minister to our souls with his spirit filled message.

We want to do greater things for God, who has done so much for us. Pray for us that we may keep low at the foot of the Cross where He can use us.

for the role of a "happy warrior" standing in the midst of a tropical deluge and whistling "It Ain't Goin' to Rain No More."

Dr. Barton of Atlanta and Bishop Cannon of Richmond are right. "The pro-liquor wing of the party led by Tammany Hall has disregarded all warning and has challenged, indeed defied, the dry Democracy of the South by the nomination for President of Gov. Alfred E. Smith."

Would the election of Tammany's candidate be the election of the Democratic party? Which Democratic party? Who fought Tilden? Who vilified Cleveland? Who opposed Wilson? Who betrayed Bryan? Have the donkey and the tiger anything in common? Yes! A finish fight a gainst each other. It is indeed the "irrepressible conflict."

In a signed editorial, the President of the Christian Herald has said, "I have been a life-long consistent Democrat. I have practically always voted the Democratic ticket, but I feel so strongly upon the preservation of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act that I am frank to say that if the Democratic party nominates a wet candidate I shall neither uphold him nor vote for him for President. I shall vote for the candidate who stands for Prohibition and for Prohibition enforcement."

With moral and patriotic considerations lifting this general election out of party politics we shall oppose the candidacy of Gov. Alfred E. Smith for the Presidency of the United States. There are two reasons—Tammany—Prohibition. There is one way out—Hoover.—DANIEL A. POLING in The Christian Herald.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE MEANEST THING.

Lesson: James 5:1-6; Matt. 25:14-30; Prov. 22:2.

Equality in life is nowhere written in the Christian program. On the contrary, the parable of the talents implies a continuing state of inequality. The real curse of humanity is not poverty, though, selfishly speaking, we often feel that it is terrifically so. It is selfishness and the meanness of humanity that curses it.

For instance, an officer reports aboard a ship and is assigned to a room for two.

There are two beds, two wardrobes, two lavatories, toilet fixtures and mirrors, but his partner uses them all and the one lives in his suit-case. This is not an isolated example. This is a spirit of prosperous youth of this age. He is worse than a slacker and a shirker. He is a striker, a look-out man, a snob, a fob, a parasite. He is the kind that God needs to hit square in the face, and, in his own way he will. He says, "Go to now . . . weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your big self is corrupted, you shall be eaten as with fire.

Prayer.—Our father, Thy gospel is before us. Let Thy word enter into and quicken our hearts. May Thy grace reign through righteousness in our hearts unto eternal life. Cover our sins with Thy blood. Cleanse us so that nothing evil can be imparted to us. So we rely on Thee. Amen.

TUESDAY.

KNOWING THAT GOD LOVES ME.

"God commendeth His love toward us, in that . . . Christ died for us."—Rom. 5:8.

Do I know that God loves me? If so, how do I know? "When I consider Thy heavens, Thy work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which Thou hast ordained: What is man that thou art mindful of him? Thou hast made him but a little lower than God, and crownest him with glory and honor," etc. (Psa. 48).

The mighty forces of the universe which encircle us, the chambers of the deep. The chariot of the sun, the blast of the countries' storm, the glorious callings of the summer's beauty and fruitage, that day unto day uttereth speech, that we are fearfully and wonderfully made, that he has given us senses to comprehend and link us to the incomprehensible around us; and man, careless, capricious, lustful, selfish, mysterious, cruel, in such unworthiness, enjoys it all at the hands of the merciful God. Were there no personal experiences to convince one, we would be compelled to believe in a loving God.

Then, when something so changes the order of things, which one is compelled to follow, and makes it possible for him to be present in the sickness of a loved one, who (as it is known later) could not have survived had he not been there, and when one of the finest babies in the world is born prematurely and both mother and baby live normally, when physician said that there was little hope of either, all, it seems, just to provide a father's care who otherwise would have been on the high seas; and when such providences may be repeated over and over again in the lives of the thousands, what are we to believe but in an all-wise and an all-loving God?

Prayer.—Let Thy Spirit, O God, the Spirit of the Lord, the Spirit of wisdom and understanding, the Spirit of counsel and might, the Spirit of knowledge and love, keep us close to Him and vigilant in duty and life. The Spirit that will not murmur nor complain, but which leads on Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

HARD TO BELIEVE.

"Some doubted."—Matt. 28:17.

After they saw Him with their own eyes, some doubted and believed not.

There are things which make it hard for some to believe. Nature does not always prove Him. Life is a struggle for existence. There is suffering, sorrow, misfortunes, poverty, floods, fires, wars, men fighting and killing one another and innocent bystanders the victims; beasts and creatures of the earth fighting for survival of the fittest, the calmest spring day, venomous reptiles struggling to eat one another up.

How can God love and deal with this world like that? There is but one answer: Christ Himself lived poor, suffered misfortunes, was a Man of sorrows, and died a framed-up fellow. It was the price to pay for goodness, that we might be good, and he who "doeth all things well," and has never failed, will make all things right. Therefore, we say:

"Still will we trust, though earth seem dark and dreary,

And the heart faint beneath the chastening rod,
Though rough and steep our pathway worn and weary,

Still will we trust God."

Prayer.—Lord, let Thy word rouse us and keep us awake, for every day brings us nearer the judgment. Save us the shame of doubt. If we must bear crosses, make them the sign of His love toward us. Make us manly and strong. Clarify our vision. Impel us to watch and pray. Preserve our souls and man us with firm resolve to abide in Thee until Jesus comes. Amen.

THURSDAY.

HARD TO DO.

"Love never faileth."—1 Cor. 13:8.

If you would like to have a strong example of the love of Jesus and how that love never faileth, read again the story of Judas.

In the first place, Judas pushed himself into the circle of the apostles and into the office of the treasurer. But he did not receive his appointment without much deliberation and prayer by Jesus. In fact, Jesus knew that Judas was a bad man, and He prayed all night about it. This was His prayer: "Father, shall I accept him? If I accept him, shall I treat him as a friend? Shall I let him have a position of power to harm me? Shall I, though I have no charge against him, expose him or let him know that I know he is bad and that I am watching him? If I expose him it will only produce discussion in which Judas will win, and the other disciples will think I am jealous. Must I just pretend to treat him as I do the others?" All these and many more must have been His deliberations that night when He prayed all night long prior to the appointment.

We all know the answer. He put into practice what He taught when He said, "Let the tares grow up among the wheat."

And so He endured the truth. He never published the evil. He complained not a word when Judas stole the taxes, and He didn't even reprimand when Judas betrayed Him with a kiss.

Talk about the "bitter cup!" Judas was Christ's bitterest cup. In comparison, the cross must have been easy. Love never faileth.

Prayer.—Our Father, protect and defend us against emptiness and meanness. Give us real grace of soul. We wish to live in Thee. We earnestly beseech Thee that we may be among the faithful and love for Thee burn in our hearts and be the light of life. Amen.

FRIDAY.

PRAYER A DIALOGUE.

"He shall call upon me, and I will answer him."—Psa. 91:7-16.

"Prayer," said Andrew Murray, "is not monologue, but dialogue; God's voice in response to mine is its most essential part. Listening to God's voice is the secret of the assurance that He will listen to mine."

But of the two parts of prayer of which Dr. Murray speaks, most of us choose the part that is of the least importance, our calling upon God.

"But how," some one may ask, "can we put the answer first? Must there not be a call before there can be an answer?"

No; until we have listened to God, we do not know what to ask for. We ask and we receive not, because we have asked amiss. We have begun the dialogue, we select its subject, we choose its manner, we appoint its outcome. It is not a dialogue, but a monologue. It is all calling on God, all a petition.

On the contrary, the prayer that wins its way to the heart of God begins by a quiet waiting upon God. "What hast Thou to say to me, my Father?" it asks. "Here am I before Thee. Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth. Tell me my needs. Make Thyself known. Disclose Thy will. Acquaint me with Thyself."

After such a period of listening, our petitions will usually have disappeared. They will be swallowed up in Christ's prayer, "Thy will, not mine, be done." They will all be transformed to praise.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, Thou hast told us that before we call Thou wilt answer. We would hear Thee speaking to our souls. We would be silent before Thee. Thou dost know our desires; only mold them to Thine own. Amen.

SATURDAY.

GOD'S EXAMINATIONS.

"Be ye also ready."—Luke 12:35-40.

Our Lord said that He will come to His servants in an hour when they are not looking for Him. He often takes us by surprise. He sends no herald ahead to warn of His coming. He wants us to be ready for Him at all times.

"God never fore-announces his examinations," says Dr. G. Campbell Morgan; and he adds, "What you are flashes out when you do not know any one is likely to be watching you critically." God's examinations, as we very soon discover, come in the ordinary course of events. A simple cold will show how strong is our constitution, whether it is able to throw off infection, or has been weakened by ill treatment. A swift temptation to stretch the truth will reveal to us our essential honesty or dishonesty.

Character is not what we do or say when we are on parade, when we are primed for the occasion; character is what we are when no one but God is looking. If we are not ready for tests of our knowledge which come in the course of casual conversation, if we do not know until we

Dear Friends:

Our farmer and the farmer boys are very happy over their wheat and potato crop this year. We threshed our wheat last week and made 765 bushels of wheat and 28 bushels of rye—793 bushels in all. We had 20 acres planted in oats, but the zero weather the first of the year killed them, so we lost our entire oat crop. But this is quite a contrast to the first year we had charge eleven years ago. That year we made seventy-five bushels of wheat. But by constantly improving our land from year to year and the addition of fifteen acres of fine wheat land given us last year by our good friend, Mr. P. J. Carlton of Richmond, it was made possible for us to have such a fine wheat crop this year.

We planted nine bags of Irish potatoes in the early spring and made one hundred and seventeen barrels. This is the finest success we have ever had producing Irish potatoes. We are trying to do our part in helping to keep down our cost of living. If all our Sunday Schools would lend us a helping hand, the work would be much easier.

In looking over our record book the first of the month we find the following:

23 Churches in Valley Virginia Central Conference; 10 not giving. 43 Churches in Eastern Virginia Conference; 10 not giving. 37 Churches in North Carolina and Virginia Conference; 7 not giving. 49 Churches in Eastern North Carolina Conference; 17 not giving. 39 Churches in Western North Carolina Conference; 16 not giving. 16 Churches in Georgia and Alabama Conference; 11 not giving. 28 Churches in Alabama Conference; 20 not giving.

Now suppose all Sunday Schools would join hands with us and lend us assistance in taking care of 118 children. How much easier it would be for us. The Christian Orphanage is the institution of all the churches and Sunday Schools of the Southern Christian Convention, and all churches and Sunday Schools are responsible for its success or failure. Can a Sunday School or church have a clear conscience when it does not send even a garment or a piece of bread to the children in its Orphanage during the entire year? Make an investment in these little children and be happy.

This is the best news item we read last week: "Satisfactory proof of the existence of a non-bootlegging bellboy was the feature of a model bestowing ceremony at the Hotel Prince George today. The young dry hero was Russell Woods. He stood at attention while A. M. Gutterson, manager of the hotel, pinned a gold medal on his breast. The onlookers burst into applause.

"Documentary evidence that Woods earned his medal exists in the form of a letter from a thirsty guest who wrote that he admired the boy's principle, though angry with him because he would not find him a 'pint.' The letter quoted the boy as saying, 'Sorry, sir, but I can't help you out in no way, shape or form.'"

Boys and young men with such consciences are the hope of the world.—Selected.

APPROACHING GOD.

"If any man will hear....and open....I will come in."—Rev. 3:20.

How often do we feel that God is far away from us? Jesus says, "Open the door and I will come in." With a fertile imagination, we put God far away from us. We do the same with those whom we think are too great to be in our class.

Dawin said of Gladstone, "Why he sat in the chair and talked away just like he knew me." The same mistake we make with our Lord, we expect him to be approached only by special preparation and qualifications; and He right at our door and waiting to come in.

Prayer.—Our Father, we desire to know Thee. Come into our lives every day, all the day, and give us Thyself. Amen.

AN UNFINISHED VISIT.

"Emma's going to stay all night with me," said Faith Fowler to Anne and Kitty Miller on the way home from school.

"Are you, Emma?" asked Anne. "Supper and breakfast and all night to sleep?"

"Yes," answered Emma, "and then another time Faith's going home to stay all night with me." She felt more important because of Anne's surprise. It seemed quite a grown-up thing to stay at another girl's house over night, as her older sister often did.

Anne sighed enviously. "Kitty and I never stayed away from home all night in our lives," she said. "I don't suppose mother ever will let us; but it would be fun, wouldn't it, Kitty?"

"Maybe it would," replied more cautious Kitty, seldom so eager as Anne.

"We shall have lots of fun," declared Faith.

Several days later Mrs. Chase, an old friend of Anne's mother, came into town with her butter for the market, and, as she often did, spent the afternoon with Mrs. Miller. As she was getting ready to go home, Mrs. Chase said: "Milly, let the girls drive home with me. My Sarah would jump for joy to have them, and the peaches are ripe too. To-morrow is Saturday, so Jim can bring them home when he comes in after dinner."

Kitty couldn't make up her mind to stay away so long, but Anne welcomed eagerly the longed-for opportunity.

Sarah was suprised and delighted, and the two little girls had a pleasant time until supper picking ripe peaches, visiting the new pony, watching the milking, and talking all the time.

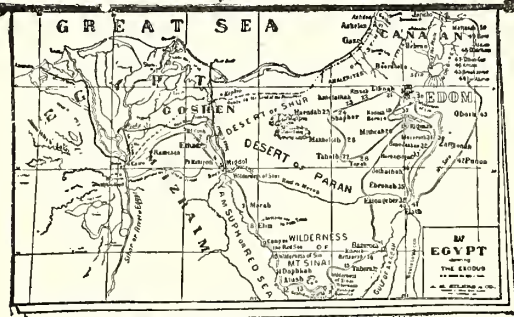

Mr. Chase was not cross at all, and there was peach cobbler for supper, so Anne was quite happy until she and Sarah had gone to bed in Sarah's room and Sarah was soon fast asleep.

Anne felt queer. She missed Kitty, she missed her father, but more than all she wanted to kiss her mother good-night. She listened to the noisy chorus of tree toads, katydids, and crickets outside. What a lonesome sound it was! She began to wonder if anything were wrong at home. Suppose the house should catch fire! Suppose burglars got in! Suppose mother should be sick in the night!

Here she dropped off to sleep, but awoke crying because she dreamed she was lost. When she remembered where she was she cried harder than ever. Sarah woke up, but she could get nothing from her except that she wanted to go home, and she wanted her mother.

Mrs. Chase came in and took her in her arms, but Anne kept on crying so desperately that Mr. Chase called from his room "Myra, I'll saddle Prince and take the poor child home. I remember one time when I was a kid and away all night."

A clatter of horse's hoofs and Mr. Chase's call woke Anne's father and mother after midnight. They came downstairs to receive a tearful little girl and the smiling but sympathetic explanations of Mr. Chase.

Anne's father teased her a little when kind Mr. Chase had ridden away, but her mother kissed her and went up to tuck her in bed again.

As she crept in beside the sleeping Kitty, she murmured drowsily: "Night's different from day. It's so much more lonesome!"—Edith Childs Battle, in Boys and Girls.

THE SMALL BLACK KITTY.

Once upon a time there was a small black kitty as black as coal. He was walking along the sidewalk all by himself crying, "Me-ow! me-ow! me-ow!"

Now, the small black kitty was lost and could not find his home, so that is why he was crying every step of the way. I suppose he had gone to walk without telling his mother or the nurse good-by, and now he had forgotten where he lived.

The small black kitty was sleepy and wanted to go to bed, and the small black kitty was hungry and wanted some milk and bread, and he wanted his mother to wash his face with her little pink washrag—which she always kept in her mouth. He wanted his mother to cuddle him up close to her, so he kept on crying, "Me-ow, me-ow!"

Just at that very moment, Daddy came hurrying along that same sidewalk on his way home to see Buster John, his little boy, as big, as big—just about as big as you.

"Poor little black kitty," said Daddy, stooping down to pat him gently; "what is the trouble, I wonder." And then Daddy listened while the small black kitty told him all about being lost, and how much he wanted some bread and milk and a safe, warm place to sleep.

"Oh, I will just take you home to Buster John," laughed Daddy. "Hop into my pocket. Buster John has no small black kitty. He will take care of you, give you some bread and milk and a nice warm bed."

Then Daddy tucked the small black kitty into his big overcoat pocket and hurried home to Buster John. And when Buster John ran his hand away down into Daddy's big pocket to see what was there, and felt something soft and warm, and heard that small black kitty saw "Me-ow," he was so surprised he squealed and jumped up and down. How funny it was to find a small black kitty in Daddy's overcoat pocket!

Sure enough, Buster John gave the small black kitty some bread and milk and a box for a bed. And the small black kitty stopped crying and lived forever after you Buster John.—Madge A. Bingham, in Cry-Baby Chicken.

A shining light is ever a burning light.

On the second day of June, 1928, the Church and community at Spring Hill received a very great shock in the sudden death of Mrs. T. C. Smith.

SHOOP.

Curtis Albert Shoop was born at Valley View, Pennsylvania, September 6, 1867, and died at his home in Suffolk, Virginia, January 17, 1928. He came to Suffolk in 1888 and was actively and successfully engaged in business there until his death. In 1891 he united with the Suffolk Christian Church and soon became one of its most valuable members, liberal in its support and active in its service.

He was a man of charming personality, public-spirited and progressive, and contributed his full share to the commercial, social and religious life of his adopted city.

For a number of years he was a member of the Board of Trustees of Elon College, and by his sound judgment and wise counsel soon won the confidence and esteem of his fellow members. He was a liberal contributor to the financial support of the College and in his efforts to serve it set an example worthy of emulation.

Therefore, Be it Resolved:

First. That in his death this board has sustained the loss of one of its most valuable members, the College one of its most liberal supporters and the church to which he belonged one of its model members.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the board, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy also be forwarded to the family of the deceased.

E. E. HOLLAND,
E. L. MOFFITT,
C. H. ROWLAND.

The above resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Board of Trustees of Elon College, May 29, 1928, and published in accordance with resolutions adopted.

P. H. FLEMING,
Secretary to the Board.

PHILLIPS.

Annie Spitzer Phillips was born September 9, 1881. On June 8, 1928, she passed away to the beautiful home of the soul. Her age was 46 years, 8 months, and 29 days. It was my privilege a few years ago to receive her into the Christian Church at Mayland, and she remained a faithful member until her death. She is survived by her husband, one son, two daughters, four brothers, and one sister. A good woman has gone who will be greatly missed. Funeral services were held at Mayland, June 10th, attended by an unusually large gathering of friends.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

"LOOKING AT OURSELVES."

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

The admonition of the apostle Paul to the people of Corinth: "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves," is a timely admonition for any people of any age. It is most timely for the day in which we live. We need to look at ourselves and see ourselves as God sees us.

The first achievement of wisdom is to discover oneself. But so often people know less about themselves than about anything else. They know of the mind and purposes of God; they know the peculiarities, the weaknesses and the eccentricities of their neighbors and friends; they know the points of merit of the illustrious and the great, but still they do not know themselves, their own points of weakness and how to overcome them, their own points of strength and how to utilize and develop them. "Know thyself" is one of the highest commandments of life. Knowledge of self, of one's limitations and one's possibilities reveals to one his need of God and his need of a proper relationship toward his fellow-men.

It is well for us to learn the ways and doings of preceding generations or to acquire a knowledge of history. It is well for us to know the customs and habits of men and women in the different strata of social and economic life, or to have a knowledge of sociology. It is well for us to know something about the religious aspirations of men and women in their search after God, and the truth, or to have a knowledge of comparative religions. It is well for us to know something about the earth's formation, its nature and its composition, or to have a knowledge of geology. It is well for us to know something about the different species of plant life, their habits and habitat, or to have a knowledge of botany. But any knowledge is incomplete that does not include knowledge of one's self.

We all, old and young, need to know ourselves. The person who knows but little about himself cannot hope rightly to know life in general, and his knowledge of God is necessarily limited by his knowledge of himself.

Every person has his weak points. And every person should study himself with the idea in mind of discovering his weak points so as to overcome them. Every person also has his strong points. And every person should ascertain his strong points so as to conserve them, and use them, and enlarge upon them for the glory of God and the service of man. Some may excel in a knowing mind. Others may excel in a loving heart. Every person may excel in something. The person who knows himself, whether he has ever been inside a college or university or not, is the educated person. The purpose of an education is to enable people to find themselves. The purpose of religion is to enable men and women and boys and girls, not only to find themselves but to find their relationship with their fellow-men and to find their God.

Many have been denied the benefit of the assistance the college or university would have given them in discovering themselves, but there is one the latchet of whose shoes the most worthy college professor or educator of our day should gladly stoop to unloose—even Jesus Christ, the Master of the minds, of the lives, and of the souls of men, and He is ready to help every man and woman, every boy and girl to know themselves. And no one can afford to pass this opportunity of self-discovery.

"Know thyself—to thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

We ought, every one of us, to know more about ourselves; we know far too little about our bodies. Many never take time to ascertain which foods are injurious to them and which are not, failing to realize that as expressed in the old Scotch proverb, "What is one person's food may be another person's poison." And many, even though they know what is injurious to them, refuse to heed the warning of distress it may cause, and laughingly say they like it whether it is good for them or not. But no sensible person has a right to assume such an attitude. We do so at our peril. Wise is the person who takes nothing into his stomach except nourishment—the person who eats not for pleasure, but for efficiency. Nature is bound to hold the count against us if we ignore her wishes. And countless thousands today in the hospitals of the land are paying the price of such folly, and countless thousands today fill untimely graves for the same reason. All nature asks of us is that we treat her fair; that we seek knowledge about our physical health, and then practice the knowledge we gain. And more, we owe it to God to take the best care of our bodies possible, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit?" "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

The regard one exercises toward his physical health is of tremendous importance. To abuse the body, to ignore the laws of health wilfully, is to defile the temple of God. In school we studied physiology largely in order to make a passing grade. It is well for every one occasionally to read the old physiology textbook along through life in order to pass in health up the ascending grade of age. Such a study would give us a better knowledge of self, a better knowledge of our bodies—the temples of God of which we are the custodians.

It is so easy to think that everything is all right with our bodies, and we go along paying no attention to this little indisposition or that, and suddenly the nerves snap and we are done for. Some organ or some member of the body that we have thought was all right suddenly refuses to work, and a physical breakdown follows which might have easily been avoided. A greater knowledge about ourselves would enable us to prevent much sickness. We need to "take time to be holy." And we also need to take time to be healthy.

Then, too, we know so little about our minds—the mental processes and laws of thought. We read and listen, and meditate, and out of these experiences we hope to retain some little information. But if we would refuse to burden our minds with the trivial matters; if we would refuse to befog our minds with the unpleasant thoughts and experiences; if we would try to forget our troubles and think more of our blessings: think of the bright things, the beautiful things, the inspiring and ennobling things of life—our capacity of mental power would be enhanced beyond our fondest hopes. The motorist would not presume to carry fastidious passengers and garbage in his car at the same time, nor in the same car. The evil thoughts that are low and mean, the unpleasant and distracting thoughts are but garbage of the mind. Whereas, the wholesome thoughts of love, purity and honor are most fastidious passengers, and these thoughts violently refuse to stay in the mind that is filled with the garbage of doubt, impurity, selfishness and ill-will. The great possibilities of the mind could be realized by us all if we would but discipline it and learn to respect its laws of mental health and power.

Then, too, we know so little about ourselves spiritually. It is wrong to say that the spiritual interest in life is more important than all the rest, for our spiritual well-being is so closely interrelated with the well-being of our minds and bodies that neither is complete without the other. Mental health and physical health are both assets to spiritual health. The person who is a faithful follower in the Jesus way of living, exercising a sweet spirit of patience and helpfulness, notwithstanding the fact that his physical health is poor, has more to his credit than the person who has no physical handicap to sap his energies of life. Great will be the crown of glory; great will be the reward to those who have come through life happy and Christ-like in spite of the great tribulations of physical suffering and physical handicaps. The spiritual depends so much upon the physical and the mental. The body will at last crumble into dust, but our spirit, our souls—we ourselves—

The circulation manager of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is calling on all subscribers who are in arrears to mail in their renewal so it will reach him by August 1st. Let him have a real flood of letters, with renewal checks.

Mr. F. M. Webb represented the Sunday School of the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., at the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference, held last week at Cypress Chapel. He reports a good convention.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, with a number of ministers of our Church, is attending the pastors' Bible conference at Union Theological Seminary. No doubt our readers enjoyed last week's correspondence and his letter this week is just as interesting.

The First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., will be represented at the dedication of the Johnston Building at the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C., July 29th. The Sunday School orchestra of the Church, Ernest G. Carr, director, will assist in furnishing the music for the occasion.

The new building at the Christian Orphanage will be dedicated on Sunday, July 29th, at 2:30 P. M., same being the fifth Sunday in July. Every member of the Christian Church and Sunday Schools and all friends of the Christian Orphanage are invited to be present. We hope to have a great and good day and a fine service. Dr. R. L. Flowers, of Durham, will deliver the address of the occasion, and everybody who attends this service will have a warm welcome.

DAMASCUS.

Had a good day at Damascus. There is a vital interest here in the work of our Church, and these people here have a mind to do their part. On my first Sunday with this Church we presented the mission cause. The offering was not equal to one-sixth of pastor's salary and many expressed a desire for another chance. It was given them, with the result that the full quota was reported today. The Church is feeling good over the matter, and we rejoice with them in giving God the praise.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

Enclosed you will find a check for $14.56, which is our special missionary offering taken during missionary period. The offering was as follows: Rocky Ford, $10.56; Elk Spur, $4.00—total, $14.56.

The work here is going on fairly well. We have a group of young people who seem to take very much interest in the work. They take pride in learning certain things about the Bible, as the Beatitudes, Psalms, etc. I am looking forward to a better and brighter day among the young people at this point.

We carried about a dozen of the boys and girls from Elk Spur to the Hillsville Presbyterian Church to sing for the preaching service last Sunday night. The children put on a good song service and received compliments for their efforts. I must praise the children, too, for I think they do well for their opportunities. The Burlington people admired their singing and invited us to come to their Church some time.

Something of real interest has been arranged for in the near future whereby the children and the young people may receive great benefit. This is what it is: Miss Pattie Coghill, Henderson, N. C., will come to begin a daily vacation Bible school here on Sunday, July 22nd, closing with a little commencement Sunday, July 29th. We are hoping to have a good Bible school. I will help her with the school and we will have a school at both Churches, one in the morning and the other in the afternoon.

Our meeting will begin here at Elk Spur Sunday, July 29th, and will continue for two weeks. Rev. C. E. Gerringer, of Wakefield, Va., will assist me in this meeting. Pray with us that our meeting may do much good for the advancement of the kingdom of God and the enlisting of souls for His service.

Yours in service,

S. E. MADREN.

SHALL THE PEOPLE?

While the righteous are in authority the people rejoice, but when the wicked beareth rule the people mourn, suffer (Prov. 29:2). This country is now at a most critical crisis, for if Belshazzar shall come to reign over this country, what can we expect but for the people to suffer. With the open bar-room, a trap of the devil, to catch the boys and break the hearts of poor mothers. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremiah the prophet, saying, "In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation and weeping, and great mourning. Rachel weeping for her children and would not be comforted because they were not" (Matt. 2:17, 18). We must remember that both Belshazzar and Herod were wicked and drunken rulers and their wives were drunkards. What a mother can be thinking of when she goes to the poles and casts a ballot for the coming Belshazzar (Al. Smith)! Do you care for your offspring? My honest opinion is that if the bar-room is thrown open on the streets of our cities that it will keep the undertakers busy burying the dead, especially since our speed of traveling is at the rate of from forty to fifty miles per hour, with our roads crowded with automobiles. We Christian people have prayed earnestly and worked hard to be freed from the curse of the open bar-room, and I don't see how a real child of God can even think of consenting to its coming back. Our late Governor Bicket showed us before he died that we had made a gain of, I think, 65 per cent; that many people who before we got prohibition had no home, no bank account now had homes and bank accounts and their children were decently clothed and in school. I am not a politician. I am a Christian and have been preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ fifty-five years, and He said: He had suffered for us, leaving us an example, and that we should follow His steps. I care not what your politics may be, for you have a right in this country to think and act for yourselves; but, Christian people, we are responsible for what our representative does, hence are you willing for your representative to use his influence to bring back the most damnable curse that this country has ever had? Our nominative convention threw the moral part of this coming campaign upon the Church of Jesus Christ, and we will be held responsible at the bar of God. I don't believe a Christian (I am not talking about membership in the Church; I am speaking of Christians) how he or she can support a man who is in favor of the open saloon. I don't see how a Christian can connect himself with rotten Tammany Hall, run by Catholics and Jews, which I think is a disgrace to our country. If Al. Smith is elected, it will be from the influence of the appetite and not the brain. I promised God in 1881, when North Carolina tried to get State prohibition, that I would not support another corrupt representative knowingly. The corruption in our political parties kept me from voting for about ten years. I feel that I am just as responsible for what I do when I cast a vote as I do when I am in the pulpit, for I have to be a Christian in every duty in this life. The Church is now facing an awful responsibility, morally so. I believe that Christ placed this responsibility upon the Church of governing the world when He said, "Ye are the light of the world; a city that is set upon a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick, and it giveth light unto all that are in the house." And then our Lord said, "Let this light shine," and I think it is a good time to let it shine. "Let your light shine before men, that they see your good works" (Matt. 5:14-16). In conclusion, I will say it out of my heart, that the corruption in the political parties of our country has greatly hindered the prosperity of Christ's Church, for it seems that every year when we have to elect a President that it gets very much demoralized and it takes quite a time to get over it. And now my last word: Let us lay aside our political prejudice and do our duty. Christian people, don't forget the Word, "When the righteous are in authority the people rejoice; but when the wicked beareth rule the people mourn, suffer." In His service saved to serve.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

CRUCIFYING CHRIST AFRESH.

BY REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher.

"Seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame."—Heb. 6:6.

We need not always make a meditation upon the cross of Christ a melancholy recital of an intensely sad story. There is so much beneath the cross besides crime and tragedy we should sometimes think on that aspect of the matter. There is so much back of the cross besides Caiaphas and his howling henchmen that we should sometimes almost forget them for that bigger meaning. There is beneath the cross pardon; and there is back of the cross love. If we have not looked through the last half of the gospel narratives at God we have seen only the window-pane, and never the view which lies out beyond it. I never read the story without seeing the cold, cruel, transparent glass bars, they are ever there in my window; but beyond is a panorama which fills my soul with peace and makes me want to love God more, and serve my fellow-men better.

So many of you children have always remained for this part of our Church's program I can never prepare a sermon without thinking of you. And the young people also wait here for worship and prayer; and the older ones of us are always present. Is there a message in the cross this morning for all? This subject fills so large a place in the gospels I dare not leave it out of your pulpit. I cannot. So I bring you to Calvary this morning to find pardon and love. It is as though the whole world has done and been doing grievous wrongs, and all of a sudden so many throughout all lands had become sorry, and then God in a great, big way said: "I forgive you, for my great love's sake." It is as though the whole world was feeling downhearted and sad, and God said: "I cheer you, because my Son desires it." It is as though the whole world was full of strife, and battle, and unrest and God said: "My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your hearts be troubled, neither let them be afraid."

In the cross God is saying to the world: "There is enough love in the bosom of the Heavenly Father to redeem it." When little children have learned the meaning of the cross they will find a desire to be forgiven for causing their loved ones sorrow, and be ready to help their loved ones make a happier world. When young people have learned the meaning of the cross they will want to have all ugliness washed from their past records, and a good spirit within prompting them to loving service. When older ones have learned the meaning of the cross they will know the meaning of repentance and the measure of pardon, forgiveness will flower in their own souls and sacrifice will become a privilege and a blessing.

Jesus is the heart of the cross, and the eternal satisfaction which our best selves desire. Without Jesus, the Saviour's prayer to a loving Heavenly Father would not have been prayed and we could not be happy today. If we know about Jesus and do not love Him, and want to please Him, then we are of all men most ungrateful. I can never see the cross but that I always also see Jesus and desire to become more like Him; and I cannot see why anybody would want to "Crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame." But there are those who crucify Him afresh.

Who are they who crucify Christ afresh? They who have Him. They are the only ones who can crucify Him. If Jesus had never come to earth, He could not have been crucified. Had he not placed Himself in the hands of men, never would His own hands been nailed to the cross. And His hands were not nailed to the cross by people in Europe, or America, but by the people of Palestine. In other words, He was crucified by those who had Him. In the light of that logic, let us read our whole text: "For as touching those who were once enlightened and tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Spirit, and tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the age to come, and then fell away, it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame."

"Once enlightened, and tasted of the heavenly gift," is the legend that shall be found written on full many of the wrecks of human lives. There are lives today which to most of the outside world may look perfectly respectful, which have become centers of turmoil within. Very cunning is the enemy of our souls. Little by little would he fasten upon us some fatal habit, and little by little would he fill our minds with some blasphemous compromise with righteousness. "Once enlightened" should remind many an erring one today of a mother's love, and a mother's prayer. "Once enlightened" should remind many who are missing the pathway of the days when they, in company with their little friends, used to attend Sunday School and enjoy the warm, enlightening love of their teacher's messages to them. "Once enlightened" should remind thousands who are putting Jesus to open shame of the sweet, sacred day when they pledge God their faithfulness, and faith forever at an altar of prayer. Stamp "once enlightened" upon the broken pieces of wrecked lives, upon the sins that drive them away from God and all hope of heaven, and it should turn its scores and thousands back to the Church and righteousness before they come to that fatal word in our text, "impossible."

The chances are about a thousand to one that the wisest and most loving person in all the world to your own needs is your mother. You were once the very darling of her heart and wrapped in her never-failing love. You tasted of her goodness and found sweet freedom in her faithfulness, but today if she knew all she would be heart-broken for her wayward child if you are not living true to God and the things which she taught you as a child. I give you that suggestion as a step to a far fuller one, namely: the love of Jesus Christ for you. Jesus knows your every need infinitely better than your mother; Jesus loves you with a perfection which in His divine providence He hinted at in the love of your parents; and with Him there is no "impossible" if we return unto Him. But how awful if when we come to Him and He places Himself in our hands, and His wealth of love at our disposal, we, instead of thanking Him, of adoring Him, of worshipping Him, "crucify Him afresh and put Him to an open shame!" Oh! "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends." I bring you to Calvary today for peace and pardon, and not that we may crucify Him afresh and put Him to an open shame.

"An open shame!" They stripped His body and bared His soul; and in an open place above the city of God, where all the world could see, they crucified Him. That was bad enough, but they prayed for the blood of their crime to be upon their poor little children. That was wickedness perfected. Shall we join that host? The pity of it is that too many of us are about to join that host and do not realize it, so cunning is the enemy of God, and the enemy of our souls. Jesus wants to succeed in bringing us home to Himself, our Church to Himself, our community, our nation, and our world. There are those who do not know Him saying He can't do it. And the "once enlightened" are helping an ignorant, godless world win its wager! Crucifying Him afresh, and what is more awful still placing the greater curse of it upon their children. There are more than two hundred in a single Church that walk with the brand of Church membership upon their records and the oath of allegiance to Christ upon their souls, who ignore the Church, not to say Jesus also. And there are those who, under the cloak of constant attendance upon Church services, allow their own lives to belie their profession and to bring Jesus to an open shame.

But I bring you to Calvary today for pardon and peace. None of us but what may well check up on our own lives and test them in the light of Calvary. We will not forsake Jesus much less "crucify Him afresh and put Him to an open shame." We will make our lives count for Him. We will love Him, and serve Him, and teach Him by precept and example to others. Others may crucify Him, "but, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak: for God is not unrighteous to forget your work and the love which ye showed toward His name, in that ye ministered unto the saints, and still do minister. And we desire that each of you may show the same diligence unto the fullness of hope even to the end: that ye be not sluggish, but imitators of them who, through faith and patience, inherit the promises" (Gal. 6:9-12).

COMMITTEE REPORT.

We, of the findings committee, wish to present the following items, believing them to be the consensus of opinion of the young people of the Eastern Virginia Conference:

1. That the pulpit is a place of dignity, and should be considered and treated as such.
2. That the ministers should give the young people their whole-hearted co-operation and support in such undertakings and enterprises as meet their approval.
3. That the young people should give the Church their whole-hearted support, both moral, spiritual and financial.
4. That young people's organizations are essential to Church work, and that they should be made attractive to youth.
5. That the young people's congress of Eastern Virginia Conference has proven itself to be of an enduring nature and worthy of the whole-hearted support of the Eastern Virginia Conference.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

NOSING AROUND IN NEW YORK.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

New York, with its six million souls, has been called, and not without some reason, "modern Babylon." The places of sin, shame, crime, degradation are here all right. But it is not all Babylon by any means. For if you wish to hear great preachers and see beautiful Churches, come to New York. I visited five of these Churches last Sunday and had a good day of it. Will SUN readers follow me to Church for a day. First, at Union Theological Seminary at 8 A. M., some 300 preachers attending the summer Bible conference, met in the chapel for Communion services. It was solemn, sweet, inspiring, heavenly. Ministers of all Protestant denominations, I suppose—Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopal, Lutheran, Reformed, Methodist, Disciples, Christians. How sacred the moments were, and how the soul was lifted up as President Henry Sloan Coffin, a Presbyterian, in Episcopal robe, and Rev. James Moffatt, D. D., of the Scottish Free Church and translator of the New Testament that bears his name, read the solemn words and led the prayer that prepared for the sacrament. "Close" Communion seems to have perished from the earth and gone the way of all things earthly and human.

At 11 A. M., the writer found himself in the magnificent and inspiring First Presbyterian Church, on Broadway. The chorus that led the song service was composed of a hundred trained voices, and the great old pipe-organ blending its solemn tones made one feel like heaven was near and Babylon was far off. The preacher (I have forgotten his name, but recall something of his sermon) took for his text John 12:20-2, "Sir, we would see Jesus." What the world needs, and even desires, today is a vision of the living Christ. We are different after we have seen Him. The world would be different, this whole great city about us would be different, if it would only catch a vision of the real Christ. God would reveal Himself to us if only we would open our eyes and mind to Him. But we are living in a prejudiced age and only see that side of Jesus which suits our tastes. We do not stop and tarry long enough to see Jesus in His fullness and power. We ought to see Jesus wholly. This is our privilege if we will avail ourselves. When we read only favorite passages of the New Testament we leave out much. The whole New Testament is given to reveal Jesus to us. Jesus said and did much about healing the physical body. If we leave this side of Him out, we do not see Him as He was and is. There are three angles at least from which we should always view Him. First, Jesus in the homes and in company with the lowly; second, Jesus with Zebedee and his sons, calling men to high adventure for Him; third, the picture of the risen Lord, now endued with power, filled with glory, crowned with Lordship.

The preacher, whatever his name, gave us a regular, sound, orthodox, wholesome sermon. I can yet recall more of it, but this seems enough to show his meaning and to lead SUN readers to want to see and to know the whole Christ, whom to know aright is life eternal. At 4 P. M. I went in to see something of St. Patrick's Cathedral (Roman Catholic). This is a massive and impressive stone structure on Fifth Avenue, and must have cost millions to build and equip it. Services were going on, and I presume continued all afternoon. Singers in robes were chanting in a Latin chorus or something I could not make out. The services were in Latin. People were coming in, crossing themselves, bowing before images of the Virgin Mary, moving their lips, no doubt in prayer, burning incense before altars surrounded with images, high candles, holy water and various colored lights. Priests in white robes would rise from their seats at intervals, make signs, cross themselves, and others would follow. The service seemed weird to one not accustomed to it, and I seemed to have stepped into another world.

At 4:30 I went to grand old Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church to hear Robert E. Speer preach. This man never fails to thrill and inspire, instruct and edify. What a sermon he gave us from the text Matt. 11:29, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me . . . for my yoke is easy." In the Roman mind, at the time Jesus was speaking, the yoke was a symbol and a confession of inferiority and humiliation. All the peoples the Romans conquered were sub jux (sent under the yoke). What Christ did for the despised cross, He did for the yoke, namely: exalted and honored it, lifted it into power and strength. As I now recall it, Dr. Speer made four main points, and out of these developed a theme, and gave a sermon never to be forgotten. His points were these: (1) Jesus took a mark of weakness and disdain and transformed it into a symbol of power, glory and effectiveness. There is no power except that which comes from bowing to obedience. The world wants power, but it never obtains any power save through the discipline of obedience. And when we bow and surrender to Jesus we enter into His power and share the joy and the fellowship of it. (2) There is no fullness of personality until we pass under the yoke with Christ. He is the world's greatest and highest Personality; yet we are permitted to share that personality with all its fullness of life if we take upon us His yoke—yoke ourselves up with Him. (3) Christ's yoke then becomes a symbol of liberty. We only know the larger liberty of life as we learn the law, and share the love of Christ. Law does not take away liberty, it brings liberty. When men have enacted some high moral law, people's personal liberties are not taken away, they are enlarged. Law leads to liberty. (4) The yoke is a symbol of fellowship. Life has its fellowships even with the unseen. Under His yoke we share His fellowship and He helps carry all our burdens. He is able, ready, willing. Of all the preachers I find anywhere, give me Robert E. Speer—orthodox, conservative, progressive, soul-stirring, great.

At 8:30 I went to Madison Avenue to hear Rev. Sam Jones, an Englishman. He was disappointing—or had I already heard enough good preaching for the day? As I recall it now, nearly a week after, he preached from John 1:41, "He first findeth his own brother, Simon, and saith unto him, we have found the Messiah." We know little of Andrew; but he is our representative in the kingdom. He represents the nobodies whose names do not occur on the front page of the paper; but they quietly and modestly find others and bring them in. The golden oriole will rest on Andrew's head, for he brought Simon Peter to Jesus. Who brought John Wesley to Jesus? Who brought Spurgeon? Some quiet, modest, unknown "nobody" did that great work. Being somebody to Christ—that is his way of building His kingdom in the world.

So here where so much sin abounds, grace does much more abound—and New York is not all bad. If you think so, come here on a Sunday and attend her Churches. J. O. A.

THE CHURCH, THE CONFERENCE AND THE CONVENTION.

These three legal and official bodies are correlated and mutually obligated. No one of them could exist as a successful organization without the other. It is, therefore, important that their relations and obligations be understood and then maintained by the faithful discharge of their obligations to one another in the interest of the Church as it represents the kingdom. Self-interest and self-importance often hinder the very purposes for which the Church exists and in which, at heart the members really desire success. The local Church is in danger of thinking and working for local interests only; and the Conference or Convention is in danger of exercising unwarranted authority. The Conference is the product of the united action of local Churches, and the Convention is the product of the united action of Conferences. The local Church could exist without the Conference, and the Conference could exist without the support of the local Churches, but it would be a bare existence in both cases. There is no reason why the Conference or Convention should feel superior importance and assume authority not granted or implied in its existence and relation to what is considered the lower bodies.

It should be understood that the Convention is composed of Conferences, derives its power from them, and Convention actions have no right to function in local Churches until satisfied by the Conference. The Convention has no power over local Churches; it deals only with Conferences and the institutions founded by its authority, such as the Church paper, the college, the Orphanage, and its missionary enterprises. In support of these institutions the Convention has no right to plan or call for money except through the Conference.

It is assumed that individual members of the local Church have first given themselves to the Lord and that local Church Conference action is binding upon all members. The local Church is made up of individuals, and action of the Church is their own action. It is not so with the actions of the Convention. That body is composed of delegates from the Conferences, which are themselves organic bodies and not individuals. The General Convention has no rights or powers beyond the approval or ratification of regional Convention, if they function; and all of them should. The loosest and weakest condition in the Christian Church is its lack of coherent organization.

Its Principles are sound and comprehensive; its spirit is Christian in practice; its relation with others is biblical; it has everything for growth except organization. The General Convention has always, in its head office, dealt too much with local Churches and Conferences. It will be a long step forward when regional Conventions function and the General Convention operates through them by their approval and adoption of General Convention actions.

DO WE NEED DENOMINATIONAL COLLEGES?

From the number of such colleges that have been established in the history of American higher education, it would appear that the answer should be an overpowering "yes." evidently the American people believe in higher education and they believe in it under Christian auspices, and for that reason they have paid their taxes to support State institutions as citizens and voluntarily contributed billions for the foundation and maintenance of higher education on a Christian basis. Is this a mistake? Have the American people been pursuing a phantom rather than a real goal?

Here again we have the answer of the very latest conclusions of specialists as to the curriculum itself. They are agreed that it is impossible to teach any subject in any institution in such a way that we do not influence at the same time, either positively or negatively, the building of character from the Christian viewpoint. If, therefore, the people of the United States believe in Christian character as the chief aim and goal of higher education, they are certainly right in their practice in maintaining institutions of higher learning on a denominational basis, or rather on a Christian basis.

We have so far spoken in general terms as respects this treatment, but what about the particular institution, and what about the Christian Church? Does it need to maintain Elon College, and, if so, why? This is a fair question and should have a fair answer.

Elon College was founded, as stated in its first catalogue, to offer instruction in all the liberal branches of learning to men and women on equal terms and under positive moral and religious influences. Nothing was said in this catalogue about the expectation that Elon would prepare ministers for our pulpits and lay leaders for our pews religiously and spiritually motivated, but that was evidently the fundamental purpose of the founders of our institution.

When, therefore, members of the Christian Church fail to patronize their own college, are we to conclude that they are not interested in the moral and religious development in their sons and daughters? I think not, but I do think that they have not given careful consideration to the issues involved in the failure to patronize their own college and that they have allowed other considerations of lesser importance, such as the fact that friends of their son or daughter are going to a State institution, or that it is perhaps a little cheaper at another place, etc.

With reference to the matter of cheapness, Elon College has tried always to keep the charges for education within due bounds, but it does not aim to make itself a cheap institution just to attract students on the basis of cheapness. It believes that it gives value received, and more than value received for the charge that is made, and certainly this is all that should be expected of an institution.

When those desire to come who are unable financially to meet the obligations, they are provided scholarships, loan funds, opportunities for work, etc. So that even the poorest may not be denied the blessed privileges of higher education under Christian influence at our college. And these poor students have made some of the great leaders in our Church.

will live on forever. A thing that is always to be is worth knowing about. Hence the importance of knowing more about our souls cannot be over-emphasized.

"Examine yourself, whether ye be in the faith." Is it well with your soul? Are you in harmony with God? While it is true that there are some people who think they are Christians when they are not, there are some other people who are not professing Christians, but who at heart are Christian, and all they lack to be Christians is the open allegiance to Jesus Christ and an announcement to the world that they wish to be known as friends and followers of the Man of Galilee.

"Examine yourself, whether ye be in the faith." The admonition is to the professing Christians and to the people who make no Christian profession. It calls us who profess to be disciples of Christ to turn the searchlight of investigation upon our lives to see wherein we have reason to claim to be Christians—what sacrifices are we making in His name; what service are we rendering humanity that has the mark of the cross upon it? What is there about our lives that is different from the lives of people who make no profession? It was indeed a pertinent question the young man asked his friend who was trying to get him to become a Christian, when he said, "Tell me what you have that I don't have. Tell me what there is in your life that is different to mine. We have the same bad habits; we engage in the same questionable amusements; we express ourselves in the same language when we are mad; we enjoy telling and hearing the same smutty stories; we both look out for No. 1 in business, with no thought of No. 2; we spend our Sundays much in the same way, with the exception that I, as a sinner, go to Church more regularly than you do as a Christian—the difference being that I attend once or twice a month throughout the year, while you go every night for two or three weeks each year during special meetings. Now tell me what you have that I don't have?"

And the Christian man was nonplussed. It set him to thinking, and upon his knees in prayer that night he resolved to live a life clean enough in his thoughts, in his words and in his conduct and habits among men that they could see a difference. And they did. And more than that, he won his friend when the friend saw the correct sample of the thing that was advertised. It is well for us all to examine ourselves frequently—to take stock of our religious assets; to take an inventory of our spiritual resources. What progress are we making in our Christian life? What quality of life are we developing that carries the insignia of the cross? Examine yourself whether ye be in the faith.

The admonition comes to the men and women who love the Church, who delight in the fellowship of Christian people, who reverence the Sabbath Day, and who honor the word of God, but who have not openly espoused the cause of religion. The admonition comes to all who believe in love, truth and justice among men. "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." You may be in the faith and not realize it. That is, you may believe the same things that Christian people believe and not be conscious of the fact that you have such a faith. But that faith will avail you nothing unless you declare it and confess your Saviour before men. If you are in the faith, acknowledge it before God and before men.

"Examine yourselves." It is not an admonition to examine others. People who want the easiest task are free to pass examination upon others continually. It is an index of a shallow mind and of a shriveled-up soul when a person is content merely to examine the lives of other people and to enquire into their habits and conduct of life, to see their shortcomings. Examine yourselves. That is the divine injunction. And it applies to the present, and not to the past. It is not an examination of the religious experience you had five, ten or fifteen or twenty years ago when you were converted that is called for, but an examination of your present life. Examine yourself to see whether you are now in the faith. Is the glow of your love for Christ as bright as it was the day you confessed Him as Saviour and accepted Him as your Lord and Master? It ought to be far brighter. People who haven't progressed beyond the experience of their conversion, who haven't been growing in the faith are unworthy disciples of the Man of Galilee.

Strike the tuning fork of the gospel to your ear. Does your faith ring true? Does your love for Christ and the Church and all human-kind ring true? What about prayer? Do you ring true there? Are you practicing the presence of God in prayer? What about service to others? Does your life ring true in the joy of service? Are you taking God's place in service to your fellow-men? Do you experience the promise of Jesus that it is more blessed to give than to receive? Or do you have more satisfaction in receiving than in giving? What about your attitude toward the Church? Does your life ring true in loyalty to the Church—in putting the Church first in your thoughts and planning? Are you willing to say to God, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way within me and lead me in the way everlasting?"

If you aspire to be more and more like Christ; if you want to follow Him at any cost; if it is your determination to follow Him through life in loving service to mankind; if it is your greatest delight to associate with Christian people, to meditate upon God's word, to respond to the privilege of prayer, and to do your part in the work of the Church and in service to society—then your own conscience, the angels in heaven and all mankind will witness to the fact that you are in the faith. And, with the poet, you will declare:

"I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention met in its fifty-ninth annual session as the guest of Cypress Chapel Christian Church (new), on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 17th and 18th of July, 1928. Jesse F. West, Jr., Waverly, Va., is president; Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, Va., recording secretary; Rev. J. G. Truitt, Norfolk, Va., executive secretary; J. W. Folk, Suffolk, Va., treasurer. Thirty-two out of forty-one schools were represented by over three hundred. The local congregation and visitors made an audience of more than five hundred, who gave sympathetic attention to reports, discussions, addresses, song service led by W. H. Baker, secretary of the Virginia State Christian Endeavor Society, and accompanied on the piano by David Brown Harrell, a recent graduate of the Elon College music department, and assistant in that department for the coming year. Sixteen ministers were present. The devotionals were led by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle. The two days were hot, but the congregation seemed to forget the heat in their intense interest in the work of the convention. The eleven-piece orchestra of the Cypress Church rendered splendid music at the Tuesday evening session.

The entertainment by the Cypress congregation, rendered in cafeteria style, was abundant, of good material, and liberally served in twelve kinds of food. It was interesting to look at the hundreds of people in line marching by and receiving the paper plates, napkins and paper cups for iced tea, and then to see them pass along to receive the bread and rolls, ham and fried chicken, pickles and potato salad, tomatoes, cakes and tea; then to see them march over to the long, improvised tables and enjoy a royal country meal.

I noticed one thing that made me think. It was that many allowed the kind women who served the food to put on their plates more than they could eat. Left on the plates and lying on the ground were slices of nice bread, big slices of ham, whole pieces of chicken, large slices of fine cake, all going to waste. One would think that good people would allow kind hands put on their plates only what they could eat instead of accepting something of all the food prepared and then throwing what they could not eat away; many did throw the good food upon the ground. It was great waste. When Jesus fed the multitude He had the fragments taken up, that "nothing be lost." Many visitors observed the careless waste of good food at this Cypress feast. The hospitality in this case was unconsciously or thoughtlessly abused. One of the lessons that we need to learn is to be as careful in the use of what others prepare for us as what we provide for ourselves. The only thing seemed to go wrong in the Cypress convention was the waste of good food, so well prepared, and so hospitably served.

ELON LETTER.

The recent session of the Southern Christian Convention in Richmond decided that Elon College should be supported in the future by gifts from individuals in our Churches and by quarterly offerings in our Sunday Schools.

Rev. R. A. Whitten has been employed by the administrative committee of the board of trustees to assist in visiting individuals in Churches and soliciting their gifts for the support of the college. He will, of course, also co-operate with superintendents and pastors in respect to the quarterly offerings in the Sunday Schools.

It is hoped that these quarterly offerings in our Sunday Schools will be real educational days, emphasizing the place of Christian education in our Church and leading our young people to desire to patronize our own college. Surely there can be no misgiving about the validity or the desirability of this aim.

A pamphlet for the celebration of "Elon College Day" in our Sunday Schools, prepared by Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, has just been mailed to each pastor and to each Sunday School superintendent. Inasmuch as a great many of our Sunday Schools have monthly offerings for the Orphanage and likewise for missions, some pastors have suggested to me that the normal thing is for the offering for the college to be taken on fifth Sundays, since four of these fifth Sundays occur each year. There is considerable to commend this suggestion, but it has been felt that it would be better for each pastor and superintendent and Sunday School to select the Sunday in each quarter that appeals to them as most appropriate for this purpose.

Another suggestion has been that the review Sundays be made the Sunday for making the offering for the college in the Sunday Schools, and that the whole Sunday School hour be taken for this purpose and a real Christian educational program be presented. Here again this matter is referred to the local situation.

The college is at all times anxious to co-operate with pastors and superintendents and others in local Churches, and whenever any of us can render any service it will be a pleasure to be called on.

The hope of the future of Elon College is certainly in the boys and girls and young men and young women who are now in our Sunday Schools. The plan that the Southern Convention has adopted for lining these young people up directly with our college is a hopeful one. I am appealing to all our people to fall in line heartily with the plan as adopted at Richmond. The test of a plan always is how well it is worked. This plan will succeed or it will fail according as our people support it whole-heartedly or neglect it. Here is hoping and praying that our people will fall in line most heartily in its support.

PIEDMONT SUMMER SCHOOL.

The school was held at the college from July 1st to 7th. Dr. W. P. Minton preached the first sermon at the union services Sunday night at the Baptist Church. The morning watch was conducted by selected individuals. Rev. F. C. Lester gave a talk to ministers each day from 9 to 9:45, and at the same hour Miss Pattie Coghill gave a talk to all others on the subject, "Teaching and Teachers." From 9:50 to 10:30 Dr. W. P. Minton discussed "Missions and the Bible." The subject of stewardship was presented in a very interesting way by Rev. Edwin E. White from 10:40 to 11:25, and from 11:30 to 12:15 Dr. W. P. Minton talked on "Missionary Materials and Methods." In the afternoon a helpful discussion on various phases of Church and Sunday School work was led by Rev. F. C. Lester. The recreation was in charge of Rev. J. H. Dollar. A very beautiful vesper service was held each evening on the Christian Church lawn.

The daily vacation Bible school was conducted each morning from 10 to 11:30, under the direction of Miss Pattie Coghill and Miss Susie Elder. The lectures which were given each night by Dr. W. P. Minton, Dr. F. P. Ensminger, Dr. Edwin E. White and Rev. F. C. Lester were interesting, inspirational and instructive.

The ladies of the Missionary Society of the Christian Church and ladies of other Churches deserve much of the credit for making the school a real success, as they planned the work so as to give free entertainment to the minister and two delegated from each of the Churches of the Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Conferences. Several of the Churches donated provisions, which was a great saving to those who were serving in the local capacity. Because of this hospitality on the part of the women, seventy-three registered, representing the work from north Alabama to south Georgia. The college furnished rooms, with lights and water, in the dormitory free of charge, and for the overflow the good people out in town and also in the country opened their homes and gave free lodging, for which we express our hearty thanks.

The Fourth of July rally day for the college was a grand success. At the 11 o'clock hour, Dr. Frank E. Jenkins, president of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., gave a fine address on "Colleges and Education." Dr. F. P. Ensminger and Rev. G. D. Hunt both gave addresses which were highly appreciated and in harmony with the occasion. A delightful basket dinner was enjoyed by all.

A prize of $5.00 on tuition in college is offered for the best write-up of the school of Christian education; second, $2.50; and third, $1.50. The tuition prize is transferable. Prof. Willis Edge was elected president of the organization, and Rev. Carl Dollar, secretary and treasurer.

It was a week of instruction, recreation and fellowship. One of the finest things about the school was the delightful fellowship with others. Thanks to all who helped to make the school a real success.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

Five years ago, in answer to the prayers and sacrificial efforts of consecrated individuals who for years felt very keenly the need of at least a junior college in this section, Bethlehem College appeared. During the five years of its history we have experienced times of a very happy and brilliant outlook as well as disappointment and discouragement. These have tried the faith and courage of those who love and are supporting the institution to the limit. In spite of the handicaps and drawbacks, the institution, thank God, has an enviable record. Because of the fact that the college has not heretofore been accredited, its graduates have had to stand upon their own merits when seeking admission into other accredited institutions. They have invariably done so with high honors, to the joy of Bethlehem and its supporters. Many have led their classes in such institutions as Birmingham Southern and Elon College. This itself speaks flatteringly of the thoroughness of the work done by an able faculty. In spite of the great handicaps under which they have labored, they have measured arms with other leading colleges of the South, as is evidenced by the unusual success of the students. Although this college is sponsored by the Christian Church, it is non-sectarian and covets the opportunity to serve the educational interest of all the people of this locality. It uses faculty members of other denominations, and according to the records the total number of students from other denominations has exceeded those from the Christian Church—a convincing argument that the institution is non-sectarian. There is no reason why a Baptist or a Methodist should not be more loyal to their Church after than before attending this school. The people of other communions have been loyal and generous in their support, for which we are profoundly grateful. The college and academy has trained 700 students and has had 128 graduates during its five years of work. The need of the school's existence is shown by the fact that most of these students were financially unable to attend college elsewhere, and had it not been for Bethlehem they would have been denied the opportunity. The college offers an unusual opportunity for the individual of very limited means and because of its passion to serve in this capacity God is blessing and guaranteeing its success. Our property, valued at $100,000, consists of a girls' dormitory of thirty-two rooms, an unfinished administration building of twelve class rooms, offices, and an auditorium on a forty-four-acre campus. The school is now fully accredited. It is affiliated with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga. This was made possible by the coming union between Christian and Congregational Churches. Our educational interests are being merged where it is advisable to the mutual advantage of all concerned. Bethlehem will be known henceforward as Piedmont Junior College. At the adjourned session of the board of trustees, July 4th, it was decided to launch a campaign to raise $50,000 with which to finish the administration building and pay off all the indebtedness of the college and provide a more ample endowment. Above all my objections I was elected as financial agent to secure this amount by September 15th—a great task for a little man. Because of the implicit faith I have in the future of Piedmont Junior College and the people who love and support it, I have accepted the job. I know you are not willing for the school to go lacking and are going to stand by with your prayers and co-operation, as well as finances. We ask you to consider a donation, with as much cash as possible and the remainder in annual installments not to exceed five years. This is an investment which will yield rich return. May God help you to see the way clear to do it. Thus we will be leaving the coming generation one of the greatest legacies possible—higher educational opportunities in a Christian institution. Men and women trained for service is the greatest asset of any nation. Help us to do this.

W. C. CARPENTER.

A STATEMENT.

The Southern Christian Convention, which met in Richmond, in May, elected the writer as circulation manager of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, to take charge July 1st. It is a position we accept with a realization of the work and responsibilities that the work carries with it. No easy job; but a job which will take lots of time and work. It is a known fact that THE CHRISTIAN SUN is not a paying proposition, so far as money is concerned; however, we cannot afford to stop publishing THE SUN because it is not a paying proposition financially. Our Church cannot afford to do without it. It is our Church organ for the entire Southern Convention. Through its columns we keep in touch with our colleges, missions, the Christian Orphanage, and all departments of the Church. In what other way can we keep in weekly touch with these, our institutions, if not through THE CHRISTIAN SUN?

Now, what must we do? We must put it on a better financial basis. What does it cost to publish THE CHRISTIAN SUN? It costs $138.50 per week for 3,000 copies; $2.20 per hundred extra. This is for publishing THE SUN alone. Dr. Atkinson gets no salary for being its editor; Dr. Harper, Rev. Stanley Harrell, Dr. Staley, and Rev. S. M. Lynam, who are associate editors with Dr. Atkinson, get no salary. Your circulation manager, who has charge of keeping up the subscription list and getting new subscribers, collecting the subscriptions to pay the expenses of publishing THE SUN, gets no salary for his work. It is a work of love on the part of us all for the benefit of our denomination. I give THE SUN readers this information so they will know and understand that no one is getting a salary out of the income from the subscriptions paid in; but it all goes to the publisher to pay that weekly expense of $138.50 for printing THE SUN. We always like to take the folks in our confidence, so they will understand where the money goes. Can THE SUN be put on a paying basis? It can.

How? By every member of the Christian Church doing his or her duty. See to it that every home in your Church takes THE SUN. Four thousand five hundred subscribers will put THE SUN on a paying basis and pay all the expenses of printing, postage, stationery, etc.

We are accepting this work and will handle it in connection with the Christian Orphanage work for the next two years. We will do our best to see if we can make THE SUN a self-supporting institution for our Church. To help do this work we want to ask the support of all our pastors, all our Sunday School superintendents, teachers and officers, and every individual Church member. If we can have the hearty support of the above-named persons we feel we will succeed. If one fails us we will lose that much and the work will be the harder. We will keep you informed from week to week as to how we succeed.

PORTO RICO LETTER.

I believe I told you in my last letter that I was going to write in my next letter about the religious conditions of Porto Rico. After a careful study of the conditions that are existing here, I have found that the principal reason why Roman Catholicism falls short of ministering to the spiritual needs of the Porto Rican is because of the ignorance it makes little effort to remove, and because of the superstitious practices it sanctions in the name of religion. The Catholic Church on this island has always opposed anything in the way of popular education; therefore, ignorance and superstition have for centuries prevented the creation of an enlightened public opinion. During any storms or earthquakes the priests lead a candle-light procession to appease the wrath of the devil, who is said to be the cause of the disturbances.

On Palm Sunday the natives flock to town and to mass, bringing their palm branches with them. So great is the demand of the palm branches that even the Protestant cocoanut palms are likely to be injured. At the Church the priest blesses the branches and the people take them home and place them in front of their houses to protect the domicile against lightning. It certainly is queer, also interesting, when one is walking around the city to pass home after home with a big palm branch tied on the post of their homes. Usually the branches are beaten down by the first heavy storm.

From 10 o'clock of Thursday morning of the holy week until the same hour on Saturday is a peculiarly sacred time for the Catholics of this island. This time for them does not simply commemorate the death of our Lord, but they believe Jesus is actually dead again. Therefore, on Good Friday at 5 o'clock P. M., a large procession is led with Christ's body all over the main section of the cities or towns. Again on Sunday morning a procession is led with Christ's body risen from the dead. If the money which is paid to the Church and priests or spent for such things during this holy week were spent in the betterment of the social and moral conditions of the island, Porto Rico would be a far more wholesome place than it is at present time.

To Porto Rican Catholics, not only is the Lord again dead, but the whole physical world suffers the pangs of death with Him. Should a person do anything in this period that is not authorized by the Church he will be doing it to the body of Christ. The poor of the country or town, if they be devoted Catholics, must quit their work. Should they try to nail their rickety huts more secure, they would be driving the nail into the very body of our Master. I could name many superstitions as such, but it is not necessary. We can see how 60 per cent of these people are living in ignorance. It is up to us Christian workers to prove to them in Christ-like spirit the true religion and high and ideal living.

Let us not forget our Porto Rican friends in our daily prayers. This is a great field for a real Christian work. If some of us cannot give our services, then let us give our support. May we not try (1) to know, (2) to pray, (3) to give, (4) to go.

VICTORIA E. ADAMS.

HOOVER THE MAN.

Everybody knows all about Mr. Hoover's public life, the wonderful things he did in Belgium, Poland and France for relief of the starving peoples, his work as Secretary of Commerce in two cabinets, and his ministrations to the sufferers from the Mississippi flood, but probably few know about his intimate life and personal habits. I happen to know something about them, and I am sure my readers will be interested in them—especially my younger readers.

First, Mr. Hoover is a very religious man, but belongs to a communion which many of you have not had much contact with. He is a Quaker, or as we would say today—a Friend. He grew up in a Quaker community, and has remained true to his faith, attending the Quaker Church during his residence in Washington. Mrs. Hoover was an Episcopal, but has attended the Quaker services with her husband. The Friends are the modern mystics. Their fundamental belief is that God is directly apprehended and felt as a living spirit by the unaided heart. Their faith has often been called the doctrine of "The Inner Light." Their services are very simple—no liturgies, no sacraments, and often no preaching, although any one is free to rise and speak as the Spirit moves him, but there are regularly appointed preachers in some groups—men or women who have a special illumination from on high.

The question very naturally puzzles some people: "What would Mr. Hoover do in case of war should arise?" for the Friends do not believe in the use of any force except spiritual force, and never participate in war. If Mr. Hoover is elected we shall have the rather strange paradox of a Quaker being the commander-in-chief of the United States Army. But Mr. Hoover is such an ardent advocate of international peace that there is little danger of the United States entering upon war if he is elected President.

Mr. Hoover is a great reader. He has a very large library at his home in Palo Alto, Calif., a library especially rich in science, economics and biography. As with all self-made men, biography has been a great stimulus and inspiration to him. When tired he finds a good novel a means of rest, and reads a good many detective stories because they are so engrossing that all work and worry is forgotten for the time. He is also very fond of music, and of the best. Nothing reveals a fine, high culture as does one's taste in music. Mr. Hoover cares nothing for commonplace, popular music, but loves the classics, especially grand opera, and knows a good deal about it. His chief outdoor recreation is fishing, and every once in a while he runs off to some favorite stream. He is also very fond of dogs and has, among his most intimate companions, a police dog named Tut—probably short for Tutankhamen.

Mr. Hoover is an indefatigable worker. He is friendly, enjoys conversation—although somewhat reticent himself—and has a fine sense of humor, thoroughly enjoying a good story, but he lets nothing interfere with his work and life purpose. He worked his way through college, and has worked twelve or fourteen hours a day ever since. He is up every morning at 7:30 and at his office earlier than almost any one else in Washington. He takes only half an hour for lunch, and is soon back at his desk. He insists on going to bed at 10 every evening, unless forced to attend some function. He likes to have friends come to dinner with him, but accepts as few invitations as possible to go to dine at their homes. It is interesting to know that somehow with all his devotion to his work he manages to read many books, but every lover of literature somehow seems able to read hundreds of books every year, even if he has to work every minute of the day. It is an art.—Dr. Frederick Lynch, in Christian Herald.

ROUSTING THE ROUSTABOUTS.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE.

(An address delivered at sea aboard U. S. S. Utah.)

Frequenting the motion-pictures and the theater are one of our daily habits and the realm of entertainment is a phase of our lives in which every one is becoming versed and familiar. It is a pleasant pastime indeed, but it is more than a pastime, for it reaches far ahead of us into the realm of that which is both wholesome and vicious, presenting squarely questions of morality and impelling us to pass decisions upon them. In this, every one faces the question of that which is proper and that which is improper; that which is good and that which is bad, and every one is becoming a connoisseur in such questions.

We are glad to note that virtue has a loud applause in its triumphs over vice. As we listen to the responses from any audience and note how often the crowd expresses delight at the triumph of right over wrong, we will take courage in the saving hope of the heart-life which lies so often dormant in our lives.

From the New York papers we glean comments that the public at large frequenting theaters are flocking to those plays which extol virtue and punish vice. The Bowery ruffians, we are told, who exploit heroines and oppose admirable heroes, though applauded for capable action, are now hissed as "perpetrators of morals and impediments to chastity," says the Saturday Evening Post.

To be true, not everybody is doing this. There are a plenty of those whose tastes lead them to the lower qualities. The nude and the salacious appeal to them, and it gives them pleasure to contemplate vice. But there is a great concourse who have no delight in that which is nasty, nor do they have pleasure nor diversion in vulgarity. They turn away from it, and our own observation has been that there is a lingering saving remnant of this choice in the hearts of the coarser.

It is refreshing to believe that fundamentally the people are growing better in their tastes of quality of entertainment. It lends charm and hope to our spirits to be told by such papers as the Saturday Evening Post that the obscene is growing less popular and evil scenes are not considered desirable. It is not hard to pick out of every audience a goodly company who do not wish to keep company with such people.

We of the Utah are just a unit of the great whole, and no exception in these things. The majority of the men aboard this ship are of the higher type. There are many who are obscene and vulgar in their language, and to be so they must be so in their thoughts. But deep down in their hearts there is a better self. The "Big U" stands for the supremacy of that better self. Why not let's make it unanimous? Let all renounce the base and the vicious. While deep down in our hearts we really applaud the pure and the wholesome, let us strive for the mastery in it. Stop vulgarity. Roust it. Live above it. Give viciousness and villainy their just deserts. "Honesty is the best policy" and "virtue is its own reward."

REAL CHARACTER.

A man cannot utter two or three sentences without disclosing to intelligent ears precisely where he stands in life and in thought, namely: whether in the kingdom of the senses and the understanding or in that of ideas and imagination, or in the realm of intuitions and duty. People seem not to see that their opinion of the world is also a confession of character. We can only see what we are, and if we misbehave we suspect others.

To make our word or act sublime we must make it real. Use what language you will, you can never say anything but what you are. What I am and what I think is conveyed to you in spite of my efforts to hold back.

Human character evermore publishes itself. The most fugitive deed and word, the mere air of doing a thing, the intimated purpose, expresses character. If you act you show character; if you sit still, if you sleep, you show it.

Dreadful limits are set in nature to the power of dissimulation. Truth tyrannizes over the willing members of the body. No man can be deceived who will study the changes of expression. When he has base ends, and speaks falsely, the eye is muddy and sometimes asquint. A man passes for what he is worth.—Herald of Light.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VI—August 5, 1928.

PAUL IN A PAGAN COUNTRY.

GOLDEN TEXT: "I know how to be abased, and I know also how to abound."—Phil. 4:12.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matt. 5:10-16.

Christianity puts iron in men's blood. The people of Antioch had driven Paul and Barnabas out of their city, but the apostles were not to be so easily frightened away from what they knew was their duty. They had gone out to bear witness for Christ and they were resolved to bear witness for Christ at all costs. They proceeded, therefore, to go to Iconium.

Paul and Barnabas at Iconium.

"And it came to pass in Iconium, that they so spake, that a great multitude, both of the Jews and also of the Greeks, believed." It is a great privilege which a minister of the gospel has to preach in such a way that men and women will believe his message and be helped to a richer, fuller life. It is a great privilege for a Sunday School teacher, so to speak, that boys and girls, men and women believe in Christ and become His followers. Let us remember, however, that all of us have the privilege of speaking in a quiet but in such a sincere and real way that our testimony will make it easier for people to believe in God, especially when the words of our mouths are backed up by worthy manner of life. "But the multitude of the city has divided." Christianity is the great divider of men. It draws very sharp distinctions. These distinctions may not appear on the surface, but they are very real and very significant that alternately all men shall be judged by their attitude toward Christ. He repeatedly referred to the sheep and the goats, the wheat and the tares, the light and the darkness, the righteous and the wicked. Let every man take heed to his attitude toward Christ.

Paul and Barnabas at Lystra.

"And there they preached the gospel." The word gospel really means good news, and the gospel is just that. We lose some of its meaning because, living as we do in a land that is nominally Christian, we take so much for granted. But the message that God is a Father, that we are His children, that He loves us and cares for us, the truth that Jesus Christ has power to forgive sins, that He imparts grace to help us bear every trouble and gives strength to face every duty, the assurance that the Holy Spirit is not something far off, but a very presence and an intimate friend, the conviction that there is dignity to life, that life has tremendous possibilities, and the assurance that there is life eternal—these and many other precious truths are a part of the message of Christianity which make it indeed and in truth the good news. No wonder that when Paul and Barnabas went to pagan countries and preached this message that so many heard them gladly. The shame is upon us that we do not appreciate the gospel more deeply and that so many of us are loath to put ourselves in the position where we can hear the gospel.

"And Paul said with a loud voice, stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked." Here is a parable of Christianity. It does just that thing—it takes men from the lower level of life and causes them to stand upright. Righteousness is really uprightness. It restores to them faculties and powers which have been crippled by the power of evil; it causes them to leap for joy and to walk out on missions of ministry and errands of service. "And they would have done sacrifice with the people. But Paul and Barnabas, when they heard this, they rent their clothes and ran in among the people, crying out, Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you." The true servant of God wants no distinction for himself; he seeks not his own glory, but the glory of God; he wants no homage for himself, but is happiest when men yield their homage to Christ his King. It might be remarked also that the ultimate difference is man is not so much a matter of endowment or training, but of willingness. Paul said, "We also are men of like passions with you." They were, of course, men of talent and of more than ordinary ability. But there had been other men of talent and ability who have done little or nothing for the kingdom. The difference had been in the spirit of willingness and consecration. Let those who read these words be concerned not so much about how much or how little ability they have, but whether they are using what they do have for God.

"The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men"—thus spoke those pagan people. They spoke better than they knew. As a matter of fact, that is what God did in Christ. And that is what God is trying to do in us. He yearns to reveal through us His character and His spirit of self-giving love. "And having stoned Paul, they drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead. Howbeit as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city." The daring of the man! he was indeed courageous in the highest sense. We need more of his spirit when we face discouragement and opposition and ridicule.

Paul and Barnabas at Antioch.

After preaching at Derbe and after revisiting the cities which he had already touched, bringing encouragement to the new Christians, Paul and Barnabas eventually returned to Antioch. There they called the Church together, the Church which had sent them out, and rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how He had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles. What a fine time they must have had, and what an inspiration it must have been to those people at Antioch when they heard of the good and great things which God had done through the missionaries whom they had sent forth! It helps tremendously to have brought to our attention once in a while the fact that through us God can establish His kingdom if we will but let Him use us. Furthermore, the story of what God has done and is doing should be an incentive to greater effort and deeper consecration.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, August 5, 1928.

TOPIC: "Personal Conviction vs. Following the Crowd."—Acts 5:27-29. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

The Pharisees thought to bury Christianity under the weight of their authority, as if ideas could be abolished on command (v. 28).

The preaching of the apostles was bound to lay the blame on the rulers and bound to kindle their anger. Courage (v. 28).

A man must be faithful to the truth as he sees it. It is this uprightness, or conscience, that makes manhood (v. 29).

"God rather than men" has been the watchword of all the martyrs and great teachers. Allegiance to God comes first (v. 29).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Since the days of Noah the crowd has generally been wrong. The world's leaders have been those that differed from the crowd.

Ideas cannot be conquered by authority or by commanding silence. Fanatic, heretic, bigot, dreamer—we may call names; but names will not shake a true man's conviction.

The crowd easily becomes a rabble, a mob, as the crowd was that demanded the death of Jesus. Pilate followed the crowd rather than his own conviction, and he crucified the Son of God. Let us beware!

The fact that Luther followed his conviction against the whole world has knocked the shackles off the world's thought and gained for us for all time the right to think and follow our ideals.

A Few Illustrations.

Speaking of certain troops, a soldier said that he never heard them cry, "We must conquer," but always, "We must do our duty." That is the Christian's attitude to God.

We often say, "Two heads are wiser than one." That depends. It is not true if both heads are stupid. The wisdom of the crowd is very doubtful unless as the crowd follows wise leaders.

Americans often set as the goal of their lives the winning of riches. The ideal is a poor boy who becomes a millionaire. Often to gain gold they sacrifice God.

When a resolute fellow steps up to that great bully, the world, and takes him boldly by the beard, says Holmes, he is often surprised to find it come off in his hand. It was only tied on to scare timid adventurers.

To Think About.

What conviction have we that we find opposed? How may we be sure that our conviction is right?

Where do we get our convictions?

THE DIARY OF AN AUTO.

On May 17th I rolled out of my home in a certain sales-house in Norfolk, Va. A feeling of joy crept into my wheels as I felt the paved street beneath me. Nothing likes to be idle, not even an auto, and I had wondered how much longer I would stand there idle in my beautiful, shiny coat. There was something a little unusual about the way folks talked when I was chosen, and I finally understood that many miles and an ocean trip were being planned for me. I listened sharply and wondered.

The chauffeur rolled me on through Virginia and on to North Carolina very slowly and with care, because one not used to exercise does get hot and dry with too much running at first. But we had a good trip and fine road and reached a place called Elon College before night. Some folks ran out to meet us and made such a fuss over me I felt all puffed up—called me "fine," "beautiful," and liked my dark-green coat and tan trimmings so much. Said what a help I would be, and later when some callers came, the one I afterwards learned is the chauffeur's wife, pointed to me and said, "See the new mission car that love bought." Ah! that was an eye-opener to me—"mission car." That helped to explain some of the things I heard back in Norfolk, but I'll have to learn more of what mission car means. Sunday came. The chauffeur, his wife, and several young folks got in and we drove to a big Church on a corner in Burlington. That was the beginning of busy Sundays. Since then that chauffeur has traveled a long distance each Sunday and I've caught scraps of conversations, such as "the people seem interested," "they will give freely when they have more information," and "yes, I expect to take the new car with me." Of course, the latter interested me most and I can't help wondering just where I'll be taken. Finally, one day, July 1st, I remember the date, there seemed to be a great deal of hurrying and work going on in the house where the chauffeur lived, and I saw trunks brought out and later suit-cases were packed on my running-board, people came and helped, and after a while the chauffeur, his wife and three young folks got in, and after telling the group of folks good-by, we started out. That was the heaviest load they had asked me to carry, but I didn't mind it a bit. We had a good-road and a pretty day, and nothing got in my way, so it was not very late when we reached the home of a young couple, and the folks got out and stayed over an hour. When we started on again, I heard them say something about how kind of Mr. and Mrs. Crutchfield and what a good dinner and how rested they felt, so of course that made me feel good, too, and I didn't stop till we reached Jackson, N. C., where the chauffeur spoke to a relative of his. Then right on across the line to Virginia, and pretty soon we left that fine road and started on a sandy, rough place that made me wish folks would soon get busy and fix it.

We pulled up at a farm, and everybody got out and seemed glad to leave me standing all alone. I did all I could for their comfort, and hope they were pleased; anyway I heard the chauffeur's wife say some nice things about me, and that made me feel good. Next morning we started again; the bad road did not last long and I was glad of it. We reached Suffolk and went to the hospital. I feared some one was sick, but afterward learned that one of the young folks had to have her tonsils removed. I hope she gets along all right. Then on to Norfolk, straight to Dr. Manning's office, and, you know, I felt like laughing! Guess I know now why the chauffeur's wife covered her mouth with her handkerchief every time she laughed lately. We autos can guess things sometimes, you see. Later we went to the home of some relatives, and the folks seemed to have a nice time. One thing calls my attention and makes me feel so happy; that is, everybody seems to be so glad about me and that I am on the way—I wonder where!

Yours sincerely,

(By Mrs. D. P. B.)

EARTHQUAKE IN SMYRNA.

Once more the Smyrna district in Asia Minor has suffered; this time from an earthquake on April 3rd that made 3,000 homeless and resulted in the death of fifty or sixty persons. Smyrna was destroyed by an earthquake thirty-four years ago, but its importance as a seaport and trading center encouraged its rebuilding. At the time of the World War it had reached a population of 250,000. It was occupied by the Greeks, and was blockaded for four years, later suffering a terrible fire and massacre at the hands of the Turks. Bible readers will remember that Smyrna had a Christian population in the days of John the Revelator, and one of the seven letters was addressed to a Church in that place. It is significant to note that Christians there were even then suffering martyrdom for their faith. "Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceedingly small"; and if we read prophecy aright, the world is to see great things ere long.—Ex.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

OUR INVISIBLE LEADER.

"He endured us seeing Him who is invisible."
—Heb. 11:27.

Did you ever say, "Something told me so?" And could you describe what that "something" was? Some one said it was intuition; another said it was insight; another that it was genius. Was it? Isn't it true that there is an invisible leadership in every one? A good man is led by the invisible high ideals; a worldly man is led by the invisible lust for delights; the ambitious man is led by the invisible call of honor and fame; the humble one is led by the invisible call of service and sacrifice; and the rich are led by the invisible desire for luxury.

My question is: Who is my leader? Is he high-born? Whither am I being led? And our answer is: Make a choice of our goal in life and go to it; that is, a choice within our power. A painter chooses his art; a poet chooses his songs; a musician chooses accomplishment; a lawyer chooses his profession, etc.—and once chosen there is nothing that will stop one in the pursuit of his goal. We all know that we cannot set our hearts on small things and achieve great ones. We cannot believe in a half success and achieve a whole one. A man's faith sets the boundaries for his achievement.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou hast given us Jesus as our Guide. Give us the Holy Spirit to lead us and teach us all things, and give us a consecration that will follow Him to the end. Amen.

TUESDAY.

AN ENTRANCE FOR SATAN.

"Neither give place to the devil."—Eph. 4:17-27.

The devil does not need a wide-open door; just a door open a crack. Satan can squeeze through the smallest gap in a life; he will enlarge it at his convenience.

The submarine, the S-4, which was sent to the bottom several months ago by collision with the destroyer Paulding, with consequences so tragic, was at length raised and made its slow progress up to the navy-yard at Charlestown, Mass. When it could be examined, every one was astonished to see how small was the hole made by the Paulding. The ship that gave the blow suffered more damage than the submarine. But the hole in the S-4 sufficed to let in the Atlantic Ocean.

"Neither give place to the devil," Paul wrote to the Christians at Ephesus. Paul knew by his own experience how small a place the devil needs from which to start his deadly operations. The Ephesians knew well how slight an opening in their defensive armor would suffice to let in the foul flood of their old heathenism. And both Paul and his friends knew that their only safety lay in the ceaseless watch which the Saviour bade them keep against the adversary.

Prayer.—Protector of our souls, we pray Thee to ward off all attacks of the evil one. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THINK ON THESE THINGS.

"If there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Phil. 4:1-8.

What we think determines what we say and what we do. And even if we are hypocritical, and make our words and acts very different from our thoughts, yet our thoughts manage to make their way through our speech and action, and people see the soul.

Therefore, as Paul says, we are to think on all things that are true, honorable, just, pure, lovely, and well esteemed, all virtue, all things praise-worthy; and as these dwell in our thoughts they transform us into their own likeness. F. G. Burroughs has given us Paul's sentence in the shape of this inspiring bit of poetry:

"Think noble thoughts if you would noble be:
Pure thoughts will make a heart of purity;
Kind thoughts will make you good, and glad thoughts gay,
For like your thoughts your life will be alway.

"Whate'er is true and reverend and just,
Think o'er these things, and be like them you must;

Of good report, of lovely things and pure
Think, and your mind such nectar shall secure.

"Think much of God and you shall like Him be,
In words of faith and hope and charity;
Protect His image from all foul abuse,
And keep the temple holy for His use."

And so a very large part of the Christian life consists in training the mind to drive out bad thoughts and welcome good thoughts. Nor can we do this without the help of the Holy Spirit.

Prayer.—Spirit of all purity, Spirit of all truth, Spirit of love and strength and honor, we pray Thee to guide our minds into Thy kingdom of thought, that they may dwell there with Thee forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

REFRAINING THE LIPS.

"I will not refrain my lips."—Psa. 40:1-9.

One of the commonest sins of Christians is the refraining of their lips. When praise is due, not to give praise is to give dispraise. When songs are called for, silence does not give consent.

"I am no friend," says Dr. Henry van Dyke, "to the people who receive the bounties of Providence without visible gratitude." Dr. Van Dyke goes on to speak of the lame man whom Peter healed at the "beautiful gate" of the temple, and who went away running and leaping and singing the praises of God. "There is no virtue," he proceeds to say, "in solemn indifference. Joy is just as much a duty as beneficence. Thankfulness is the other side of mercy."

If we believe all that to be true, let us say, "Amen," with a song. This does not mean that every one should preach sermons, or sing in the choir, or even give testimony in the prayer-meeting; some have no gifts in such wise. But it does mean that we should all cultivate the mode of expression that God has given us, and not refrain the lips we have. Some show gratitude to God only with a shining, happy face, and thereby sing a lovely hymn of praise all the day long.

Prayer.—We bless Thy holy name, O our God, for all Thy goodness to us, and most of all for the privilege and joy of thanksgiving. Thy love is over all Thy works, but we alone can answer with love and gratitude. We would not refrain our lips, O Lord, Thou knowest. Amen.

FRIDAY.

SEEING ONE'S SELF.

"Thou art the man."—2 Sam. 12:1-9.

Once there was a judge in Chicago who kept a mirror in his court, and who, whenever a drunkard was brought before him, compelled the man to gaze at himself in the mirror and see what sort of man he had become. He believed that half of these victims of drink were cured by that sight of themselves as they really were.

That was Nathan's method when by his parable of the ewe lamb he made David see his sin in all its ghastly shame. "Thou art the man," said the prophet.

And this is what the Bible does throughout its truthful, searching pages. In the clear mirror of its pure ideals, it forces us to perceive how very far we have fallen short of the beauty and glory and holiness and strength that are possible for us. We turn away with loathing for what we are, and with determination to seek, in Christ's power, the life which He means for us.

It is God Himself by His Holy Spirit who enables us thus to behold our real selves in His Word. As we pray to Him, He enlightens our eyes, He revives our will, He quickens our conscience, He purifies our desires. No one can do this of himself. But He can fashion us anew in likeness to Himself.

Prayer.—Holy Spirit of all grace, we draw near to Thee, and beg for the clarified vision. We shrink from seeing ourselves as we are. Oh, force that knowledge upon us, and bring us back to our true selves. We ask for the sake of the Blessed Example, Jesus Christ. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"WITH ALL THY HEART."

"Thou shalt find Him, when thou searchest after Him with all thy heart and with all thy soul."
—Deut. 4:25-31.

There is all the difference in the world between doing a thing whole-heartedly and half-heartedly. We may think that if we serve God with half our hearts, we are going at least half-way toward Him and ought to get credit for that half. No; in the divine measurement half-way is no way at all.

That is because in all matters of the spirit it is quality that counts and not quantity. God wants the quality of completeness, entire surrender to His will. If Satan owns even a square foot in the field of our life, he has a right of way to that square foot through all the field. If two wires fail to connect by only half an inch, the electric current will not pass along them; they must be in absolute contact. When partial best passes into best, we become children of God.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SUNDAY.

THE INVISIBLE LEADER.

"He endured us seeing Him who is invisible."
—Heb. 11:27.

"When the days are dark and weary
And the heart is sad and dreary,
Look to Him, keep sweet and cheery—
Do your best!

"Be the duties great or small,
Though you falter, often fall,
He will hear where'er you call—
Do your best!

"Give a loving word of cheer,
Bear your burden, never fear,
He will strengthen, He is near—
Do your best!

"Look to Him in all you do,
For some work He's planned for you,

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

It seems when we have trouble it pours. We generally have three in succession. Some weeks ago we had a little boy to fall on the sidewalk and break his arm. Another boy cut his toe and has not been able to walk for three weeks; and then to top it all off, our farmer took appendicitis and had to have an operation.

The superintendent has had to fill all these places, and the weather has been hot. So you see he has been a busy man for two weeks, because it has been the busiest season of the year, but we have been with the boys and they worked faithfully every day, and if nothing happens we will catch up with our work tomorrow. They are fine little fellows. Sometimes we will go through a whole year and have no trouble at all; then it's sickness and accidents, always three in a row. But we have no complaint to make. We have few accidents and mighty little sickness for the number of children we have. God has been good to us.

AN INSPIRING SERVICE.

Last Sunday night, July 8th, in Deep Creek Baptist Church, Norfolk County, Va., Bro. Sam Davis and his good wife held a fine, profitable and inspiring service. Bro. Davis presided gracefully and beautifully at the piano, and Mrs. Davis conducted the service. She read a portion of the 3rd chapter of Acts, which told of Peter and John going up to the temple at the hour of prayer and seeing a man lame from his birth lying at the gate of the temple called Beautiful, and in response to his appeal for alms, he was healed of his lameness, which astonished and amazed the people. Peter and John's boldness in preaching the word finally caused their arrest, but as the council could prove no charges against them they were turned loose. They reported these things to the brethren and went to God in prayer. The Lord expressed His pleasure and acceptance of their prayers by shaking the place where they were assembled.

Mrs. Davis then dwelt upon the importance of prayer in all of our service unto the Lord. She urged and pleaded with her hearers to be constant and earnest in prayer. She left a deep, abiding impression of the necessity of prayer in all of our relationships with the Lord.

Bro. J. M. Darden was present with them and spoke to the people in behalf of Bro. Davis and his fine, able, consecrated Christian wife. We were surely glad to have these dear people from the Christian Church in the midst of our good Baptist brethren of Deep Creek. Please come again. We will give you a hearty welcome.

M. W. HOLLOWELL.

THE SENSE OF HUMOR.

No one doubts the reasonableness and attraction of a cheerful disposition, but the stern fact remains that some do not possess it, and a joyful attitude toward life is not easy to cultivate without it. Every one, however, may aim to look upon the bright side of life, and where there is a sense of humor it is far easier to do so. There are individuals who seem to lack this sense completely, but we assume that the number of such is far less than supposed, and that there are few who may not cultivate it aright if convinced of its value. In the old cathedral at Chester a prayer is engraven which is noteworthy:

"Give me a good digestion, Lord,
And also something to digest;
Give me a healthy body, Lord,
With grace to keep it at its best.

"Give me a healthy mind, good Lord,
To keep the good and pure in sight,
Which, seeing sin, is not appalled,
But finds a way to set it right.

"Give me a mind that is not bored,
That does not whimper, whine or sigh.
Don't let me worry overmuch
About that fussy thing called I.

"Give me a sense of humor, Lord,
Give me the grace to see a joke,
To get some happiness from life,
And pass it on to other folk."

This unique old prayer implies that health (both physical and mental), digestion, tranquility, cheerfulness, high ideals, and humor are related. The man who can see a bit of fun in life, no matter what the problem or pain, is the one whose life helps the other fellow and proves a general blessing. Humor acts as a lubricator for the machinery of human society. Without it friction and irritation are sure to injure if not destroy.—Every-day Religion, by John T. Stone.

And be faithful, loyal, true—
Do your best!"

Our best may be very small, but it is the little key that opens the door to God's vast storehouse of power.

Prayer.—Let one of the parents offer a prayer that all in the circle may determine to be wholeheartedly for Christ, this day and all days, in the strength that Christ will supply.

KIDDIE WANTS TO PLAY POLLYANNA.

Dear Editor of the Korner:

I am a reader of the Kiddies' Korner and I enjoy it very much. I wish to play Pollyanna this summer because I think it would be fun. I am thirteen years old and will be in the first-year high school when school starts again.

I wanted to play Pollyanna last summer, but it was too late when I wrote my letter. I hope I will have a fine Pollyanna, which I suppose I shall.

I hope all the Kiddies have a nice time this summer with their Pollyanna, and I am wishing them good health and happiness.

PRAYING FOR THE IMPOSSIBLE.

God wants us to ask Him for the impossible. God can do things that men cannot do; He would not be God if this were not so. That is why He has graciously made prayer a law of life. "If ye shall ask . . . I will do"; this inviting promise from the Lord means that He will do for us what we cannot do for ourselves; He will do for others what we cannot do for them—if we will but ask Him. How little do we avail ourselves of this immense privilege! Some one spoke this searching word at Edinburgh in 1910: "We have lost the eternal youthfulness of Christianity and have aged into calculating manhood. We seldom pray in earnest for the extraordinary, the limitless, the glorious. We seldom pray with real confidence for any good to the realization of which we cannot imagine a way. And yet, we suppose ourselves to believe in an infinite Father."

The natural man calculates results. Calculations have no place in our relations with God, and in His relations with us. That matter which has been so burdening us just now, and with which we can see no way of dealing: how are we praying about it? In anxiety, or with thanksgiving? Worrying prayer defeats its own answer. Rejoicing prayer gets through. "In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." Then will come the answer "exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."—S. S. Times.

ADVICE TO PREACHERS.

When Thales was asked what was difficult, he said, "To know one's self." And when asked what was easy, he replied, "To advise another." It is also hard for a young preacher, "gifted with an egotistical imagination," to receive advice about his preaching. Nevertheless we find some reasonable advice in Presbyterian of the South and pass it on:

"Bishop Rondthaler, head of the Moravian Church in the South, has reached a ripe age and is full of wisdom and the spirit of Christ. Addressing a ministerial association, he gave three rules for ministers which contain some fine advice for those of us who are ministers. First of all, he advised ministers to preach to the individual rather than the group. Soul winners must think of people in the mass, but as individual souls. His second rule was this: "We ministers must cease making a joke out of a marriage ceremony. Too many take it now as only a social contract, when it should be held as God's institution. The third rule is that ministers should do more to make their homes and the homes of their parishioners Christian. We can never make our Churches more Christian until we make our homes more Christian."

DOES PRAYER ALTER GOD'S LAWS?

Many object to prayer on the ground that God's laws cannot be altered. "Do you suppose that God is going to change any of His laws because you ask Him to?" is the question of the unbeliever. How can prayer "change things" except in the heart and life of the one who prays?—that is the question of the modernist who says he believes in prayer, but only as a necessary thing in the development of the individual, a sort of spiritual exercise that helps to build one up but cannot bring to pass changes outside of oneself, except as one gets up from praying and goes and does something about it. These denials of prayer, or substitutes for prayer, overlook one vital fact revealed by God. It is well stated by J. Denham Smith: "Can prayer alter the divine laws? Nay, but it is one of God's laws, that when His people pray He answers: 'Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find.'" So prayer does not ask God to break any of His laws; instead, prayer is our obedience to God's law. We may say reverently that our praying opens the way for God to carry to their fullest results His own laws. The intercessor is never a lawbreaker, nor does he ever ask God to be a lawbreaker. It is the man who does not pray who breaks God's law.

I KNOW A NAME.

HOTEL HONORS BELLBOY.

The following is the best news item we read lately:

Satisfactory proof of the existence of a non-bootlegging bellboy was the feature of a medal bestowing ceremony at the Hotel Prince George. The young dry hero was Russell Woods. He stood at attention while A. M. Gutterson, manager of the hotel, pinned a gold medal on his breast. The onlookers burst into applause.

Documentary evidence that Woods earned his medal exists in the form of a letter from a thirsty guest who wrote that he admired the boy's principle, though he was angry with him because he would not find the

him a "pint." The letter quoted the boy as saying, "Sorry, sir, but I can't help you out in no way, shape or form." Boys and young men with such consciences are the hope of the world.—Sel.

THE GENTLE TONE.

The superintendent, far uptown, called his office late one night to inquire about one or two of the things that seem to worry such officials at all hours. The man who answered the telephone roared into the instrument loud enough to be heard a block away if the window had been open. The superintendent asked his question, quietly, and received the needed reply in a much quieter voice. And then, said he to the clerk, "Come to my office in the morning. I wish to see you."

"Son," said the boss the next day when the grouchy clerk showed up, "I don't care how you answer the telephone. If that's the way you speak to the men or the public, you don't belong here."

On June 19th, death entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Floyd, Timberville, Va., and took from the cradle little Gorman D. Funeral services were conducted by the writer from Wood's Chapel Church, of which the parents are members. May God comfort them in their loss.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

THE IRREPRESSIBLE ISSUE.

(Editorial in "The Herald of Gospel Liberty.")

The inevitable has happened. Prohibition has become a national party issue. It was stupid to suppose that it could long be prevented from becoming so. The wets, usually shrewder politically than the dries, have long seen the primary relation of the President's office to prohibition—and for years have been laying their plans to capture that highly strategical office for the wets. They centered their forces upon, by all odds, the strongest and most outstanding wet in this country and would have nominated him four years ago at New York City had it not been for the powerful influence of William Jennings Bryan and the fervent determination of the Klan forces. This year Bryan, who defied Tammany and its wet followers at the Baltimore convention and whipped them at New York, was gone; the Klan has suffered both disrepute and disintegration; and the dry forces within the Democratic party were without cohesion or forceful leadership—and the outcome was the nomination of Governor Al. Smith as the choice and champion of the militant wet forces of America. To dispute that fact is to make one's self too silly for consideration by the serious-minded.

Other factors and other forces entered into his nomination. But it was pre-eminently as a wet that he was chosen. Had he been an outspoken dry, the very forces which nominated him at Houston would have defeated him. There can be no doubts whatever on that point. Months ago one of his strongest supporters, Walter Lippman, the editor of that wettest of wet papers, the New York World, in a recent Harper's Magazine, declared of Smith:

"He is as thoroughly identified with wetness as President Coolidge has been with prosperity; he is not identified with anything else. By and-large, the one definite thing fixed in the popular mind is that he is an opponent of national prohibition."

For years, long before he became Governor of New York, Al. Smith was recognized and used by the wets as one of their most astute politicians and was groomed by them as a coming winner. His whole record, from every minor office to Governor of that great State, has been as a sopping wet. He has been on the wet side of every issue that has been before that people. He is not only politically wet; he is socially wet and individually wet. He trots with a wet crowd and drinks with them. Neither himself nor any of his friends has ever attempted to deny the charges of one of the most prominent editors of New York City, Oswald Villard, that even now as Governor "he drinks every day, and the number of cocktails and highballs is variously estimated at from four to eight." These are the reasons why Al. Smith was nominated by Tammany and the wet forces of America at Houston. Had he been a prohibitionist, these same forces would have defeated him there. And whatever the dry Democrats may be partisan enough to try to kid themselves into believing to the contrary, the wets everywhere know that Governor Smith is their candidate, that prohibition is the one big issue of the campaign, that it does make an infinite difference to the wet cause whether the President is a wet or a dry, and that for all these reasons the wets are going to move heaven and earth to elect Al. Smith President.

No shrewder move was ever made by the liquor forces of America than that by which they captured the Democratic nomination. The various State delegations were in no little part made up of wet politicians and wet sympathizers. The wet contingents from the cities, of foreign extraction in no little part, overwhelmingly dominated the convention. Many reports make it plain that the personality of the convention was thoroughly urban, heavily of foreign extraction and flavor, and decidedly wet. The great body of delegates simply were of a different stripe than the dry, Protestant, Church-going Democrats from our small towns and country places of whom the readers of the Herald mostly think when they think of the Democratic party. With cunning strategy, these wet forces at the convention conceded just enough to keep the dry delegates there from splitting the party. But on the one vital thing they conceded nothing—they named their man. What cared they about the enforcement plank—Will Rogers said none but a set of lunatics would have declared against enforcement. The New York Times, which, you must remember, is very wet and has long been for Al. Smith for President, declared that the Tammany leaders "played a very astute game of political management, and scored every point on which they really set their hearts." The wet forces wanted a wet candidate and a strategic step forward for modification, and they got them. For before they left the convention, Governor Smith, nominated on a platform supposedly satisfactory to the dries, wired the convention his promise and determination to do all in his power, if elected, to break down the prohibition amendment. Nothing else matters to the wets, as that is what they want. And then to make this matter double sure—and incidentally as a mark of the power of the wets and their defiant disregard of the dry Democrats after the wet nomination was won—Mr. Raskob, for months previously advertised as a prominent member of the Association Against the Eighteenth Amendment, was chosen to lead the campaign. Like Mr. Smith, Mr. Raskob is both politically and socially wet. Again let us quote the New York Times, for we are anxious that our dry Democratic friends see how the wet papers think things are stacking up in this campaign: "He (Mr. Raskob) is not only a wet, but his record and his speech of acceptance prove him to be what they call in the interior a 'dripping wet.' And his social and private connections are much like those of the Governor himself." Mr. Raskob has taken pains to make it very plain that he is in this fight to break down prohibition. In his speech of acceptance, he indicated as much; and a few days later he declared: "I see an opportunity of performing some constructive service by helping relieve the country of the damnable affliction of prohibition. Governor Smith has taken a courageous stand on that important question, and I accepted the chance to help him."

Thus, by one of the slickest bits of political maneuvering this country has ever known, the dry forces in the Democratic party have been hopelessly outgeneraled and their party captured by the wets and for the wets. In spite of anything the dry Democrats can now say or do, the political machinery and the political influence of the national Democratic party will be used to advance the interests of the anti-prohibition cause. There is no escaping that fact. There is not a wet paper or a wet organization in America that does not see and know that the Democratic party in this election will be the wet party, and the wet forces of this land are already gravitating to it like water runs down hill. Whether it will remain the wet party in future elections will depend upon whether or not enough dry Democrats will repudiate the candidate to keep him from being elected. There is absolutely no other way of preventing its becoming more and more wet in its stand and intentions as the years go by. It is all up to the dry Democrats. It is a most unfortunate thing for the nation that either of the old parties should have been jockeyed into this position; for it gives the wet cause all of the advantage of the old party machinery and the old party loyalties and the votes of all of those who are at heart dry but not dry enough to vote any other than the Democratic ticket—not even once to save the prohibition cause for which they have prayed and labored for years. It is a fortunate thing for the nation that prohibition has finally been forced to a national issue. It is exceedingly unfortunate that it must come within the old party lines. The wets should have been driven out of both parties and compelled to form a new one of their own. In that case, this country would have gone overwhelmingly dry. But now it will all depend upon whether or not the Republican leaders have the political sagacity to accept the issue and make the fight on wet and dry lines. That—and whether or not enough dry Democrats will refuse to vote for Al. Smith to

Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., pastor First Christian Church, Greensboro, is to assist Rev. T. Fred Wright in a series of meetings at Pleasant Grove, Halifax County, Va., beginning Sunday, August 5th.

If your Sunday School does not wish to invest $15 in a set of five maps, then why not invest $3 for a good map on roller, giving the travels of Paul? This map would be helpful to the study of the lessons now used to the end of this year. (See advertisement in this issue of THE SUN.)

Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., was a welcome visitor at Elon College July 28th and 29th, having come for the Orphanage dedication. Dr. Staley composed and presented the dedicatory formula, which was exceedingly appropriate to the occasion and the services, which we are printing elsewhere. He left Monday for a vacation with his daughters at Morehead City, N. C.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis, of Norfolk, evangelists of great worth and merit, spent a busy day last Sunday, rendering services at 11 o'clock in the First Christian Church, Sanford, N. C., coming to the Christian Orphanage at Elon for a part of the program at 2:30 P. M., and concluding the day with a service in the First Methodist Church, Asheboro, N. C. Bro. J. M. Darden accompanied them and assisted in the services.

President W. A. Harper, after six weeks' study at Chicago University, is to return to Elon College this week. He spoke Sunday, the 29th, at Frankfort, Mich., where Dr. E. A. Kirby, pastor of the United Church, Raleigh, N. C., is summering. Mrs. Harper has been studying music with Mr. Oscar Soenger, a noted teacher of Chicago, and was to sing by special invitation at the Frankfort services Sunday.

Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., Windsor, Va., seems to gain strength and health with the passing months, and under date of July 26th cheerfully writes: "Things are going very well with us and I am enjoying the work that I am now permitted to have charge of." All of us rejoice that Dr. Harward is able to be in the pastorate actively, a work to which his life has been dedicated with singular consecration and devotion.

Rev. S. E. Madren, our pastor at Fancy Gap, Va., writing under date of July 26th, says: "We are having a fine vacation Bible school at both of the Churches here, Elk Spur and Rocky Ford. Miss Coghill brought with her to assist in the work Misses Lillie Horne and Essie Mae Cotten, of Burlington. The children are taking a deep interest in the school and are anxious to learn." We are sure this means much to our Sunday Schools and families in Carroll County.

As will be seen from announcement elsewhere, Rev. John G. Truitt, of First Christian Church, Norfolk, has resigned and is open for work elsewhere after October 1st. Bro. Truitt is one of our very ablest and most successful and consecrated preachers and pastors, and the Church will be fortunate indeed that secures his services as pastor. His Sunday morning sermons, which appear in THE SUN, reveal the character of the man and his message, and is a feature highly prized by SUN readers.

Mr. J. K. Ruffin writes from Bailey, N. C.: "The annual address for the home-coming and fellowship service at the Freewill Baptist Church at Elm City, N. C., Sunday, September 9th, will be delivered by Rev. A. R. Flowers. This Church has for a number of years made the second Sunday in September a home-coming day, and the people of different denominations meet at this Church and spend the day profitably together, and there is no day that is looked forward to with more pleasure than the second Sunday in each September."

THE SUN's editor had the privilege of accompanying to his boat in New York Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., when he left on the steamship Olympic, of the White Star Line, for Europe on the night of July 20th. Bro. Helfenstein was in high-gee over the prospects of visiting Ireland, Wales, Scotland, England, and possibly Holland and of having the privilege of preaching in some Church once each Sunday while on his journey. He sailed with over 1,500 people on the same boat. He is on an errand of Christian good will and visitation in Europe, and anticipates a most interesting and helpful trip. He promised at the last moment before sailing that he would tell SUN readers about his journey.

One of the very pleasing and helpful features of the dedicatory services at the Christian Orphanage July 29th was the music by the orchestra from the Sunday School of the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va. There were twenty-four pieces in the orchestra, and it is useless to say that the services rendered on this occasion were appreciated by the great audience present and was inspiring to listen to. Their visit was made possible by the generosity of Bro. P. J. Carlton and the Richmond Sunday School, who bore the expense of the orchestra without charges to the Orphanage. It was a most gracious act, and one that was thoroughly appreciated by all present and by the trustees of the Orphanage.

The dedicatory services at the Christian Orphanage Sunday, the 29th of July, were exceedingly delightful. The attendance was large and the program was beautifully carried out. The final numbers of the program were marred when it was discovered that Bro. W. K. Holt, who was presiding as chairman of the board of trustees, was taken ill and had quietly withdrawn from the exercises and that a physician had been summoned. When Prof. R. L. Flowers, vice-president of Duke University, arose to make his address, just after the chairman was stricken, the audience was called to silent prayer, and following this, with reverential awe, the remainder of the program was carried out. We are giving elsewhere some of the addresses delivered on the occasion.

Friends everywhere will learn with deep sorrow and regret that Bro. W. K. Holt, Burlington, N. C., chairman of the board of trustees of the Christian Orphanage, passed away at the Orphanage Sunday night, July 29th. Bro. Holt had been presiding at the dedicatory services of the Johnston Building and was taken ill during the exercises and was never able to be moved from the institution till the end came. Next to his home, the Orphanage was nearest and dearest to his heart, and we feel sure that could he have chosen the least service to be rendered his Church and his country he would have preferred the service he was rendering at the time he was stricken. Under the able chairmanship and leadership of Bro. Holt, the Orphanage had been brought from a depressing deficit to a safe and reliable credit system of operation, with the plant greatly enlarged and the business of the institution in the very best possible condition. In the death of Bro. Holt, the Christian Orphanage and the Christian Church loses a most devoted member, a most competent and efficient official and servant. Personally THE SUN's editor grieves his going, for it was a pleasure to number him among our personal friends, and it was an inspiration to work with him on boards and committees. He was a member of the board of superannuation, of which THE SUN's editor is chairman, and no person on the board was more eager than Bro. Holt that the income for our superannuates should be increased and that all beneficiaries of the board should receive their checks promptly. His friends were numbered by the hundreds, who sustain a real personal loss in his going.

SKETCH OF JOHNSTON HALL.

Mr. J. M. Darden, a member of the board of trustees of the Christian Orphanage, was asked by the program committee to give a sketch of the history and events which culminated in the building of the Johnston Hall at the Christian Orphanage. Bro. Darden, on the occasion named, presented the following:

My friends, you know why you have been called here through the press, the mail and by the speakers preceding me. On the program I note they have me as giving an historical sketch of this building.

1. I want to ask, Why was this building ever erected here? Your board saw keenly the need of this building, and love in their hearts for motherless and fatherless children prompted them to act and their actions took the form of work.

On May 27, 1924, at the annual meeting, motion was made by J. M. Darden, and seconded by B. D. Jones, that the superintendent of the Orphanage be authorized to have plans drawn for this building. The superintendent employed architects, Linthicum & Linthicum, of Raleigh, to draw the plans.

These plans were presented to the board on May 26th, 1925, and were unanimously accepted. On motion of C. D. West, seconded by B. D. Jones, the executive committee and the superintendent were authorized to locate and commence the building. On motion of H. C. Simpson, seconded by C. D. West, W. K. Holt, J. R. Foster and B. D. Jones were appointed a building committee, with power to act.

On July 7, 1925, the executive committee met with the building committee, and it was unanimously decided to locate the building on lot known as the Foster lot, where the building now stands. Bids were asked for, and John H. Wood, of Burlington, was the successful bidder. The Burlington Hardware Company was the lowest bidder on heating and plumbing, the total cost aggregating $23,922.65.

Ground was broken for this building about August 27, 1925; finished December, 1926, at a total cost, after changing the plans of $24,272.64, with the furnishing at a cost of $4,112.59, making a total cost of this building, fully equipped as it now stands, of $28,385.24. And I am happy to tell you that every dollar has been paid. The building was opened March 17, 1927.

My friends, here is the building, equipped to take care of motherless and fatherless children. It is yours. I am sure that many of you have built homes to shelter your own; you have bought stocks in various corporations to erect office and bank buildings. You do this to bring you a material dividend. Sometimes such investments turn to naught. As I stand before you, this building, in my judgment, will bring the biggest and most valuable dividend in men and women that any man or woman's money could bring, no matter where invested.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

THE PERSONALITY OF JESUS.

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

"He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."—Jno. 14:7.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."—Matt. 5:8.

What do we see in Jesus more than others? What understanding of God do we find in Jesus more than in any other person who ever lived? Much that is new and distinctive; insights that we could never have had but for Him; insights that we could never retain were it not for the steady and enlightening influence of His presence which is still with us.

What Others Thought About Him.

In order to arrive at an answer to our question, we must review what God has been to humanity throughout all history. In doing so, we find that there are three great outstanding convictions which recur again and again. (1) He was regarded as Creator of the universe and the ultimate reality on which all things depended; (2) He was an indwelling spirit which was the source of the insight and progress in individuals and in society; (3) He was the ideal personality, the all-wise, the holy and loving one who revealed His character to all those who put their trust in Him. Our question is what more did Jesus give us?

1. He gave us the personal revealed God. The Jews thought of God as an ultimate reality upon which everything in the universe depended. But the ages had not always thought that way. To the people of historic days as well as pre-historic the word "God" has meant many things. But there were many gods. There was one for not only every people, but for every sect and tribe. The Greeks had Ares, the god of war; Athena was the goddess of wisdom; Eros was the god of love; Jehovah was the God of Israel. But to all of them God meant an ultimate source of wisdom and help.

In the course of time there came along a man by the name of Socrates. He had advanced ideas, and he believed in a one God for all people; that the universe was a unit and that there must be a one head for that unit. They called him an atheist. But this atheistic view has grown more and more unto an unity of life, and in the coming of Jesus this unity became more apparent. His spirit has set in motion a melting process of the nations until all are feeling a vital relation to one another. The gods of old have died out and the belief in a one God has become inevitable, until today we are thinking of God's creative activity as continuous, His indwelling spirit as a one spirit of the universe, and His personality revealed in the person of Jesus Christ; and we have the rich legacy to believe in God as not only Creator but the one whose personality stands revealed through Jesus and the one whom we understand by Him.

2. A personal inner witness. So far, we have been thinking of God as purely an external something. Our next question is, what of the internal something? What has Christ contributed to the heart-life of men that we could not find before Him? Old-time philosophers called God "The Word." Christian believers call Him "The Holy Spirit," in whom and from whom comes the inspiration of holy living. This has to do with our faith and our conscience.

There is something within us that we call "faith." We believe in an honest man, we believe in a friend, we believe in love as a superior trait, we believe in joy as the fruit of doing good, we believe in peace as a coveted reigning power, we believe in longsuffering as a Christian virtue, we believe that gentleness as a manly characteristic, we believe that kindness is winsome, we believe in our environments, we believe in the mysterious mechanical world, and we believe that against these things there is no law. Nothing of these is of the material world. They are the invisible and great "within spirit" of men. This is the thing Jesus refers to when He says, "The kingdom of God is within you." It is the thing He is talking about when He says that "The kingdom of God cometh without observation." It is the thing He is talking about when He says, "It is not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord." It is the thing he is talking about when He says, "To be carnal-minded is death, but to be spiritual-minded is life and peace."

How do we believe these things? How do we believe anything? One answers, "Because it is the truth." Whence comes thy consciousness of that truth? Why this conviction? The moralist says, "My conscience tells me so." The philosopher says, "It is intuition." But the one who knows Christ says, "It is the Holy Spirit within me." Is this anything more than was revealed in the Jewish age? It is affirmed that it is. And it is so because of everything in life having a meaning, and God who made everything is continually interpreting Himself in everything and He who made us and gave us the person of Christ is revealing Himself to Him.

None of us are without spiritual insights which bring order to our thinking and inspiration to our ideas. That insight—that indwelling is the great "I am." And that we have it is the realization that He has fulfilled His promise of sending the Holy Spirit who will teach us all things and bring all things to our remembrance. And it is not infrequent that this inner voice speaks so loud that we are constrained to know that it is His voice and we may forever afterwards pattern our lives after Him. A single instance will suffice. A chief machinist mate in the navy was once directing the placing of an engine block in his ship. The block was suspended over him ready to be let down in place. Something said to him "Get away quick." He stepped aside, and as he did so the cables snapped and the mighty block of steel fell precisely where he was standing. Had he not obeyed that voice, he would have been mashed as flat as a pancake. That was the great spirit within him. How do I know that? Because he said so, and it has been one thing in his life that made God real to him and has inspired a most unusual faithfulness. This experience is common to the Christian world. Thousands have their inner ear turned to the spirit world, and conscience sits upon the throne there, and though it be nothing more than "Something said to me," God speaks to us.

3. Incarnate personality. It is with great pride and praise that we believe that all people of all ages have believed in God as the ideal of perfection; have believed in Him as the embodiment of all that man could wish to be; have believed in Him as the realization of all that is adorable and satisfying; one who endows man with a completeness that is beyond our comprehension or imagination. Such a conception has developed more and more in the hearts of the people until today we know that there is no sin so heinous but that He is ready to meet it with full forgiveness if only there is a penitent spirit. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow."

How reassuring it is to hear Him say, "Ye shall know Him, for He dwelleth in you."—Jno. 14:17. In this the essential elements of a person is complete: the knowledge that He is, that He knows, that He acts, and has reasons for His actions. Where these are, there is a person. Where they are not, there is only a thing. Personality is described as being the power of ordered reason and conduct, whether it be in ruling a world or in regulating life. It is described as being something which expresses itself not in external processes but by individual words and deeds. Therefore, the personality of God is: He who is behind me, beneath me, above me, besets me everywhere, who is the source, the force and the order of all nature, stands face to face with my entire self wherever I may look, and speaks to me and expects me to answer. Can it be done? For the answer, we point to Jesus Christ.

What, then, is our lesson? What but this? Do for Christ what is at thy hands. Do thy best. Follow without question the impulse to live His person, and you will know Christ.

Had He taught only the philosophy of religion; had He simply delivered lectures on the principle of theism and morality; had He simply warned against vice and painted bright pictures of virtue, He would not have been more than any other teacher who has enlightened but never saved the world. He was a living and loving person, and brought to us a consciousness of a real and loving God.

It is said that Alfred Tennyson was once asked what he thought of Jesus. The poet stopped and pointed to a beautiful flower and said, "What the sun is to that flower, Jesus Christ is to my soul."

It is as such a person Christ is able to meet every want of the soul, able to meet every aspiration, every spiritual want, every true desire. He plants Himself at the head of humanity and knows their deep thirsts, takes account of their impotence and says, "I come to fulfill."

It is thus that Christianity has done more to produce development of personality than any other force that has ever appeared in the world. It has accomplished what paganism nor Judaism never succeeded in doing. And if any one wishes to inquire how it was brought about, this new sense of the worth of living, this new appreciation of the value of an individual, the answer to be given is wonderful enough, "As dying, behold I live forevermore."

Finally, making God real to us. How shall we realize God? How shall we attain His virtue so that we may have perfection and happiness? There is only one answer. Happiness comes to us through engagement in healthful activities; through friendships and affections; through contemplations of worthy objects, and at the point where we earnestly desire and seek for these things, God is found answering us. He inspires us to the reward of our labors. He introduces us to our friends. He fires our affections. He is the author of the worthy, the beautiful and the admirable. He fosters our ambitions. And as we have common sense enough to know that we can attain nothing without striving for it, practicing it, establishing relations that qualify for it, and pay the price necessary to cover it, so we know we must likewise pay for the realization of God.

He tells us that happiness is not something we can reach up and take, or buy from a store, or comforts acquired in a home, however pleasant these things must be; but happiness is wearing the bright and morning star for the good of others. Happiness is a gift of bringing others into satisfaction and joy. And if we are to attain that higher happiness through a vision of God, we must attain it by the same process. There is a preparation for it. There is a discipline to be undergone. It is simply the practice of the presence of God and surrounding our lives to that end.

There are times when it seems impossible for us to do this. Everything seems to go wrong.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

NOSING AROUND IN NEW YORK.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

Last Sunday I wrote of a Sunday in this great city and its contrast with the Babylon that throbbed and pulsed with sin and crime. There are yet other contrasts I find. Right beside the great evils of the world, God in His wisdom and goodness seems to have planted great agencies of mercy and of righteousness. "Where sin abounds, grace does much more abound" is a Scripture that keeps ringing in my ears and heart these days. If you wish to find the most active agencies for charity and human uplift in this world you will have to come to New York or to some other modern Babylon like Chicago or Cleveland or Philadelphia. Here the forces of righteousness and unrighteousness do battle hand to hand and on a grand scale every day of the week and the year. This seminary I have attended for Bible study is a power here, and elsewhere throughout our blessed land. Dr. Coffin, its president, led us, in five lectures, to see the cross, with its cruelty that sin inflicted, and with its suffering that Christ endured, as we had never seen it before. The cross was an adventure, by a new and untried route, into the kingdom of God on earth; and the way by which the sin of the world is to be wiped out and the kingdom established in all the earth—if and when it is established. We were brought face to face with the fact of the cross and the reality of suffering, self-denial and sacrifice, if we are to have a part in world conquest with our Lord. And Dr. Moffatt, of Scotland, in the course of a week gave us all a marvelous insight into the book of St. James and sent us away feeling that every book of the Bible was full of light, life and love if we would only open our eyes and mind and behold the beauty and glory of the Lord revealed there.

These are only two of the six or eight courses offered. There were in the conference 335 ministers and religious workers from twenty-nine States and Canada and Hawaii. North Carolina ranked seventh in attendance, with sixteen members, and Virginia ninth, with ten. Ohio ranked fourth, with twenty; New York first, with eighty; Pennsylvania second, with sixty-one. Eighteen different denominations were represented, the Presbyterians leading with seventy-three in attendance; Lutherans second, with forty; Congregationalists third, with thirty-six; Methodists fourth, with thirty-six; Baptists fifth, with twenty-three; Episcopalians seventh, with twenty; Disciples, with seventeen; M. E. Church, South, with nine; Christians, with five, and so on. It was indeed a fellowship of the saints from many households, and it was delightful.

The conference over, I am thinking of other incidents and contrasts in New York. It was indeed a striking and a glorious contrast to escape the pressing throngs and teeming multitudes of the great city and steal away for a day up the calm and placid Hudson and on beyond Albany, where the Hudson is not so calm or so placid, but where that wondrous stream lends its strength and pent-up power to utilitarian and commercial purposes. No one has ever yet computed the worth and the wonder of a great river to the benefit and progress of mankind. From Troy to New York one would think that God made the Hudson River for purposes only of calm repose, or restful and inspirational meditation, or serviceable navigation by lazy, slow-going steamships. But from Troy to Hudson Falls and the lakes beyond, one would decide that God made the Hudson for the enrichment and glory of mankind and to stir the imaginative and ingenuity of man to inventive and commercial activity. The good host to invited me to his lovely home beside the Hudson, at Hudson Falls, had been engaged for thirty-four years in the manufacture of wallpaper. I wondered, while a guest in the home, how many millions of American homes this one man, with his co-workers (by the aid of power he had harnessed from a dashing cataract of the Hudson) had adorned and beautified, as to their interior, with the thirty million rolls of wallpaper his factory turned out annually! His mill now is one of the seven units composing the United Wallpaper Company, Inc., and whose output is more than one hundred million rolls of wallpaper annually. Verily, we Americans believe in putting beautiful coloring on our walls to cheer our homes and charm our visions. Along this part of the Hudson you will find located the various units also of the Union Bag and Paper Corporation, which supply to commerce and our stores untold millions of paper and pulp bags used in trade and commerce. Verily, the Hudson River, madly rushing out of the mountains, springs and lakes of upper New York has a marvelous method in its madness and makes a mighty contribution to the trade and commerce of mankind. Here are the mills, for instance, in addition to those already mentioned, which manufacture most of the paper on which our metropolitan dailies are printed, which dailies carry their news and views to all parts of our country and the world.

But this writer was far more interested in and thrilled by the scenic beauty and historic events of this marvelous section than he was in its commercial achievements. Here are grounds famous in history and hallowed by the blood and battle of heroes. We went one afternoon to Mt. McGregor, where General U. S. Grant spent his last days on earth and to the spot from which a few days before he died he viewed for the last time on earth the peaceful and panoramic valley spreading far below and stretching in calm repose as far as the eye could see. Surely the great old warrior was tired of turmoil and of strife, and his soul at last reached that sense of peace for which every normal soul longs and hopes. And then we went to Schylerville, not far away, where the battle of Saratoga was fought under the gallant General Schyler and which proved to be one of the decisive battles of history and the world. And then they carried me, these good friends did, farther back into history and the past, even to the field of the battle of Lake George, where on September 8th 1755, valiant colonists were battling for life and freedom in the French and Indian wars. They carried me to where sleep the last remains of Col. Williams, who fell fighting for his colony in 1755.

And then for a delightful sail and outing on beautiful Lake George, queen of American lakes, surrounded on all sides by blue-domed mountains—a body of placid waters, surrounded, as an attendant said, by land piled up high and majestic

But my lines multiply all too rapidly as I seek, in a fashion, to translate to paper scenes, incidents, events that thrill and delight, but which refuse to be translated to ink or print. But what is the use! Suffice it to conclude that a loving Creator has made for us, His children, a beautiful world, filled with His glory and His goodness, and it is ours to use, to enjoy and to profit by for the enlargements of our comfort and our souls. Verily, "the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth His handiwork." J. O. A.

WHERE CAN ENTHUSIASMS BE FOUND?

A recent reading of the book of Ecclesiastes has provoked some thought, and left the query which heads this article coming again and again before the mind. If one has lived long enough to look back over a few years of effort; if in those years one has dared to undertake those things which put to the test the full strength of a man; and if, as is inevitably the case, one finds that many of the most cherished ambitions have failed of their full fruition; then one finds that Ecclesiastes voices the questions that constantly arise to harass the soul.

Ecclesiastes is the product of the mind that is thinking deeply upon the meaning of life and thinking not in the terms of possibilities alone, as youth thinks. But thinking in terms of the actualities of life; such thinking as maturity and experience forces upon one. The writer has tried life, and tasted life, and tested life. He has found that it has left him mystified and bewildered. Many things have left him disillusioned and disappointed. He is earnestly seeking the meaning of things—the deep, far-reaching and eternal meaning of things. He is seeking it not only for the satisfaction of his own mind and heart, but that he may point out that meaning for the guidance of those who are to come after him.

One by one the things for which men strive are taken up and weighed. They are taken up in a sort of natural and logical order of their appeal. First the thought and effort is centered upon the acquiring of wisdom. Is not this in accord with the habit of youth. Youth is always seeking to find out the relations of things and the meaning of things. One does not have to go far to encounter the everlasting "whats" and "whys" of youth. To one in quest of wisdom it seems the most desirable thing on earth. But says the wise man, knowledge does not bring happiness, and wisdom does not bring satisfaction to the soul. Ecclesiastes seems to say that every man needs wisdom to help him in the problems of life; but that it is a most disappointing thing when counted upon to satisfy the deep heart yearnings of man.

The written then turns to the seductive allurements of pleasure. If learning does not bring happiness, then seek pleasure for its own sake. Nothing ancient about that. It is as modern as the day after tomorrow's newspaper, and brings just as little soul satisfaction. Every soul that has sought pleasure for pleasure's sake has found that it turned out to be no longer pleasure.

The quest then turned to riches. Surely it is the part of wisdom to pile up the things of earth and store them away as a surety against whatever life may bring. But the seeker found that when his own wants were supplied the rest must be left to the man that must come after him, and he had no knowledge whether the man who would come after him would be a wise man or a fool.

There seems to be nothing left but work for work's sake. There was a high satisfaction to be found in work so long as it was serving a useful purpose. But it became merely a device to engage hand and brain, and to ward off the disagreeable and the distracting. It was bound to be pronounced vanity. "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: fear God, and keep His commandments, for this is the whole duty of man."

I like Ecclesiastes. It is an honest book that faces the facts of life as it finds them. It is an heroic book, the expression of a soul that will not yield, even when all efforts have failed to make plain that which the man is seeking to know. It is a book of sublime faith, that holds on to God and exalts duty to Him, even when the meaning of the things with which man is engaged cannot be made plain. It is a noble book, but it is not an enthusiastic book.

It seems to reflect the spirit that is found in many Churches and in the lives of many Christians today. We are rather disillusioned with things. They have turned out to be vanity. We know that there is somewhere a reality that has eluded us. We cannot see that our efforts are getting us anywhere. We are holding on with a grim determination. We will not yield; but we can find nothing that furnishes the occasion for enthusiasm. Is this too harsh a picture of what sometimes confronts us?

If we find ourselves unable to get beyond the picture painted by Ecclesiastes, then it is time for us to turn to Jesus. Here is one who goes to meet life with a glowing enthusiasm. Life for Him is fraught with a full, free and glorious meaning. I wonder if we can find some of the reasons why Jesus was so enthusiastic! Ecclesiastes saw men and things as they were. Jesus saw them as they might become when touched by the glory of the Divine power. Jesus saw men and women that were steeped in sin, but He looked long enough to discover that a divine discontent was smoldering underneath the sin. He saw men shackled with their own weakness, but discerned that their very weakness was breeding an aspiration for strength. He saw many men and women too deeply set in their convictions to ever be noticeably changed; but He saw also the children with minds so plastic and hearts so susceptible that He was moved to say, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Ecclesiastes thought of a God whose thoughts were past the comprehension of man. Jesus knew a Father who had revealed His will unto His own heart. Ecclesiastes thought of a God who ruled the world from some far distant and inaccessible throne. Jesus thought of a God whose spirit sought to dwell in the hearts of men. Ecclesiastes thought of man as working at a man-made plan and purpose. Jesus thought of man as working in harmony and partnership with a loving Heavenly Father. Ecclesiastes saw man as he labored for the perishing things of earth. Jesus saw men laboring for the everlasting things of the kingdom of God. The one was disillusioned but determined; the other was gloriously hopeful and enthusiastic.

EXPRESSION AND APPRECIATION.

The art of appreciation is the compliment of the art of expression. The world has placed emphasis upon the art of expression and elevated the author, the sculptor, the painter, and the composer to highest place, and overlooked that greater number who appreciate what such artists have expressed. This vast number of seers, listeners, appreciators, really make that smaller number of artists. Shakespeare would be unknown if there had been no readers; Michelangelo would be forgotten were there no millions to admire his sculpture and his painting. The great composers would die unsung were it not for the singers and listeners. There is an art in listening as well as in composing and singing. Great listeners make great singers. Great organizations make great preachers. The art gallery would be nothing more than a building with pictures were it not for that throng of visitors who gaze in admiration and appreciation upon the wonders produced by the painters. The architect becomes famous by the people who appreciate his designs in private or public buildings. Paul hints at this when he says: "I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also." The majority of worshipers cannot sing in the platform class, but they can sing in the spirit and with the understanding; and it is that sympathetic audience that inspires the singer, the orator, the statesman, the preacher, the philanthropist in their great work.

There is a suggestion in this as to the value of men and women in the world's work. There is an art in appreciation as well as in expression, and appreciation is just as important as expression. The audience that hangs on the singer's voice is inspiring that great song. In the one case it is the voice, in the other case it is the soul; the soul is the same in both. The world is one as the body is one, and human society, when at its best and understood, is one. The Church is one, though in outward form its unity is broken by the faulty thinking and faulty living of its branches. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism" expresses it in terms above the present status of the Church. What should be learned is that art is a term that expresses one side of human life, and the other side is embraced in that term. There are giving artists and receiving artists; there are creating artists and maintaining artists; there are expressional artists and there are appreciating artists, and, religiously speaking, they are all one in Christ.

NEW WET MOVE IS FUTILE.

"A probably well-meaning, costly but futile organization, which calls itself the Federal Dispensary Tax Reduction League, proposing the adoption of a constitutional amendment substituting government sale of liquor for our prohibition law, may be the next addition to the long list of wet organizations which have died soon after they sprang up since the ratification of the eighteenth amendment," said Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, director of the department of education, Anti-Saloon League of America.

"Although the program of this new organization is eminently correct technically, its chances of success within the next fifty years are so remote that they are hardly worth considering. They would have to secure a three-quarters vote in both branches of Congress to submit to the State legislatures their proposed amendment. The difficulties in the way of this are suggested by the fact that about three-quarters of each branch of the present Congress is committed to the support and enforcement of prohibition. Therefore, this new league would have to reverse the present unusually large dry majority—a task which is monumental and which would require an inconceivable reversal of popular sentiment on prohibition. After they had gained this majority of Congress and had obtained the reference of their proposed amendment to the various State legislatures, it would be necessary for them to secure a majority in both branches of the legislature in thirty-six States in the Union. A dry majority in the Senate (the smallest branch numerically) of each of any thirteen States would be sufficient to defeat the ratification of any proposed wet amendment to the Constitution.

"We suggest to the organizers of this new movement the epitaph written by Dr. Isaac Watts for a little child that died the day it was born:

"If I so soon am done for,
What was I begun for?"

"With their usual capacity for lavish, although none too wise expenditure, no doubt some of our credulous wet friends will finance this new organization until after some one has figured out for them in just which century they may hope to attain sight of their goal. In view of the brief span of life which now seems indicated for this new foe, we hasten to offer our congratulations to its leaders, who are following the constitutional and orderly methods of procedure rather than adopting the utterly indefensible nullification program of most of the wet group."

NINE WORDS.

There was a certain caravan crossing, I think, the north of India, and numbering in its company a godly and devoted missionary.

As the caravan passed along, a poor old man was overcome by the heat and labor of the journey, and, sinking down, was left to perish on the road.

The missionary saw him, and when the others had passed along, he knelt down by his side and whispered in his ear, "Brother, what is your hope?"

The dying man raised himself a little to reply, and with great effort answered, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin," and soon expired.

The missionary was greatly astonished at the answer and the calm and peaceful appearance of the man. He felt assured that he had died in Christ. "How or when," he thought, "could this man hope?"

As he thought of it he observed a piece of paper grasped tightly in the hand of the dead man. He succeeded in getting it out. What do you think was his surprise and delight when he found it was a single leaf of the Bible, containing the first chapter of the First Epistle of John, in which these nine words occur! On that one page the man had found the gospel of salvation—Ex.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Firecrackers are degraded fireworks which were, no doubt, invented by the Chinese and introduced into Europe by the Italians, and came to the western world with the tide of west-bound civilization. Fireworks were displayed in a pageant at the marriage of Henry VII and Anne Boleyn.

Fireworks, originally, had high motives and uses, expressing the heroic feelings and services of mankind. They were used also as night signals on land and sea, or for various purposes in war. The Chinese first used fireworks as missiles in war; and the rocket has been used to carry lines to establish communication between wrecked vessels and the shore.

The Japanese invented daylight fireworks, consisting of bombs which explode high in the air and discharge jets of colored smoke in the form of birds, fishes, trees, and human beings. The Chinese and Japanese surpass all other nations in pyrotechnic splendors.

It is not fireworks, but firecrackers, that claim attention in this letter. It has been one hundred and fifty-two years since the Declaration of Independence was proclaimed by a poor, small but sovereign people. If patriotism had grown as fast as wealth and population, this nation would be the mightiest on earth. But we have degraded the meaning of many great principles and lowered the standard of patriotism. Fireworks have been reduced to firecrackers; government to a business proposition; and religion to enjoyment and social service. The air is full of college yells, baseball vociferations, and days and nights made hideous by the unearthly sounds of firecrackers. No composer has attempted to put firecracker sounds into music, and if attempted, it could not add to the harmony of the world, nor inspire true patriotism. No sounds are worthy that cannot be reduced to music.

The North celebrates the Fourth of July by the use of firecrackers; the South celebrates Christmas by the same vulgar explosives. The birthday of the world's greatest republic and of the world's Redeemer deserve a more serious and dignified observance. The gunpowder age should yield to the age of peace. Sense and not sound should receive public sanction. Feelings of patriotism and piety should honor the Fourth and Christmas, and the North and the South should lay aside the spirit of the Civil War and teach unitedly the coming generation lessons of loyalty to the State and Jesus Christ. Amusement may have a place in human society, but not in connection with Mecklinburg and Bethlehem. Firecrackers degrade the celebration of Christmas and should not be tolerated any longer in the South, where it originated.

ELON LETTER.

There are some changes in the personnel of the faculty for next year which I wish to bring to the attention of the readers of the "Elon Letter."

After many years of faithful service, Prof. W. J. Cotten retires from the faculty as professor of French, and is succeeded by Dr. Cephas Guillett. Dr. Guillett is the author of a French textbook entitled "Oral French." He took his Ph.D. degree at Clark University, and has had considerable teaching experience. He was also for some years in France.

Miss Helen R. Stearns resigned her position as professor of religious education, to become director of the week-day school of religion in Dayton, Ohio. Rev. Ross Enslinger, graduate of Carleton College and of Yale and of Columbia Divinity Schools, succeeds Miss Stearns. Prof. Enslinger is the son of Dr. F. P. Enslinger, so favorably known to members of the Christian Church as field superintendent for the Southeast of the Congregational Church.

Miss Florence Fisher, who has served the college for so many years and so faithfully as head of the voice department, retires from her position in the faculty and is succeeded by Miss Mary Ann Benn, a graduate of Converse College and of Teachers' College, department of music, in New York City. Miss Benn has also had superior private teaching. She has held Church positions and had a successful experience as teacher in college and in private class-work.

Miss Emily Johnston, after a very successful year as instructor in the department of expression and physical education, is succeeded by Miss Jeannette Stout. Miss Stout has had two years, after receiving her certificate in expression at Elon, in King's School of Oratory, and during these two years of residence and study at King's she has also pursued literary work in the University of Pittsburgh. Miss Stout is the daughter of Joe W. Stout, of Sanford.

Mr. George D. Colclough, who for the past two years has been field secretary and alumni general secretary, has been made assistant business manager upon the recommendation of Dr. T. C. Amick. Mr. Colclough will continue representing the college in the field during the summer, but during the academic year he will take over a great many of Dr. Amick's present duties as assistant business manager. He will be assisted in this work by Miss Lois Corbitt, of Graham.

Miss Nellie Smiley, who has served us successfully for two years as dietician, is to be succeeded by Miss Margaret V. Craig, of Asheville. Miss Craig is a graduate of the Burlington, Iowa, Normal School, a State institution for the preparation of teachers. She has also studied in the Iowa State Normal College and the Colorado State Normal College, where she gave special attention to dietetics. She has had a very successful experience at the Normal and Industrial Institute of Asheville, where she has served as dietician for the past several years.

Mrs. Oma Utley Johnson becomes assistant librarian. Mrs. Johnson was during her college days and immediately after her graduation, librarian at the college, and when she and the late C. C. (Jack) Johnson went to the University of Colorado, she gave up her position. During the past year since his death she has been assistant librarian in the Olivia B. Rainey Library, of Raleigh. Her alma mater again welcomes her gladly to its official family.

After many years of faithful and efficient service in the office of the business manager, Mr. R. H. Gunn retires from his position and will enter business.

The college appreciates the faithful and efficient service of all these former faculty and administrative officers and wishes them well in their future relationships, and heartily welcomes the newcomers to the official fold.

We are all happy to know that Prof. A. B. Van Cleave, who has spent the year in study at the University of Indiana, is to return next year to his class-work and other college interests.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

At the adjourned session of the board of trustees, July 4th, a decision was made to launch a campaign for fifty thousand dollars for the college. The college is now affiliated with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and is fully accredited through this institution. We have agreed with Piedmont to have the administration building finished by September 12th, which will require two thousand dollars at once. The board placed the responsibility of this great task on me. We reluctantly accepted because in doing so we had to cancel all our evangelistic engagements for the summer, one of the greatest joys of my life. We have left our home and made headquarters here. We humbly accept the responsibility because we have faith in the institution and those who love it to believe we will succeed. We must succeed! Will you pray that God may direct us in the way of progress? Surely none can believe but that it is God's own planting. Many letters have gone and are going out from our office in the few days that we have been on the job. We are working day and night to put it over. As many persons have been solicited personally as could be reached. The people are responding nobly thus far—only one has turned us down flatly, and for the sake of common courtesy his name is withheld. Please do not wait for a personal solicitation, because you might for obvious reasons be overlooked. Take this as a personal invitation and write us what you can do. We are very happy over the outlook because we feel and know that the college is passing the crisis. Let's pray that the goal may be reached by September 15th. The results of our first five days' labor in cash and notes are as follows: H. W. Hearn, $200; C. G. Motley, $200; T. M. Smith, $120; J. J. Cash, $100; V. L. Carter, $250; H. F. Harris, $25; C. E. Weldon, $400; W. M. Melton, $250; J. T. Gibson, $1,000; J. R. Harris, $100; N. F. Carpenter, $50; J. M. Rodney, $171.09; G. H. Veazey, $50; H. D. Pearson, $200; Bank of Wadley, $1,000; J. J. Carter, $200; Eunice Clegg, $100; G. D. Hunt, $500; T. H. Denney, $500; W. C. Carpenter, $500; S. L. Beougher, $500; T. J. Holland, $500; L. T. Hodges, $50; Miss Vera Thompson, $50; G. F. Partridge, $25; Mrs. W. L. Osborn, $1; T. Burns, $5; L. M. Parrish, $5; J. P. Kirk, $5; F. P. Enslinger, $100; Mrs. T. M. Welch, $25; L. H. Huey, $50—total, $7,532.89.

JOHNSTON HALL PRESENTED.

We meet today for a most agreeable pastime and program. We are not here to make history, but to honor a man and extol virtues, who have made and are making the very best, the most durable history. It was Ralph Waldo Emerson who said, and truly, that the individual is greater than all geography and all governments of the world. For geography and governments exist that this world may produce and have the right sort of individual. History, country and governments reach their highest culmination and achieve their noblest results when the right sort of individual arrives. Church and State unite their efforts to bring forth a proper person, the genuine and the noble individual.

And one other fact should be recorded. No man reads history aright who thinks that what was done in a remote age by men whose names have resounded far had greater worth or deeper meaning than what men, true and brave men, are doing today. Socrates, Plato, Jesus, Shakespeare did not think all the sublime thoughts, nor even perform all the noble deeds. The man who today dares to live his honest, rugged and righteous life also finds new worlds to conquer, new territory to explore, untried achievements that may be wrought out. There is no field so romantic as the field of righteousness. Into this field one may adventure with God and know that he crowds no other man out, but becomes a light and an example to others.

We have come here today to do honor to such a man. The trustees of this institution, in their considerate wisdom, have caused a bronze tablet bearing this man's name to be placed on the walls of this building. Our presence here today is to speak our approval of this gracious act on the part of our trustees and to let the world know that we join them in honoring a man when the right sort of man arrives, as we all feel and know that such a man has arrived in the character, person and name of Charles David Johnston. Bronze has been chosen as the symbol, and the marker because it is the most durable of metals and because the finger of time corrodes it only with infinite patience and difficulty. And yet, durable as that bronze tablet is, and slowly as it may waste and wear away, when it shall have crumbled and ceased to be, that which this man hath done will be living still and having its worth and weight in the world. For he hath wrought with bronze and brick and mortar only that he may build human character and shape human destiny to the uplift of mankind and to the glory of God. In his name and honor today this tablet and building are named and presented as a monument to his labors and a token of human service and sacrifice. Henceforth we are to know it as "Johnston Hall," and use it as a temple of God for the molding and making of the right sort of human character.

The prayers and sacrifices of a grateful, God-fearing people have made this building what we see it today. Those people offered their prayers devoutly and made their sacrificial gifts gladly, because they trusted their leader and believed he would build well with the funds they donated. We are here as their representatives today to express our and their hearty approval of what has been done, and reaffirm our confidence in the man who has led, namely: Chas. D. Johnston, and the honorable board of trustees who have aided and given him good counsel. The whole Southern Christian Convention takes a pardonable pride in Superintendent Johnston, and rejoices that under his leadership such a complete and comely building as Johnston Hall is now in use for the shelter and comfort of noble boys and splendid girls, and for their training in Christian citizenship, for the service of mankind and the glory of God.

We will now have unveiled, that all may see and read what is written (as the veil is pulled, will the audience rise?) on the tablet:

"Johnston Hall. Erected 1926, to the glory of God and the service of youth, in honor of Charles David Johnston, superintendent."

This tablet is donated by the board of trustees of the Christian Orphanage. Presented by
J. O. ATKINSON.

DEDICATORY FORMULA.

Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., composed and read the dedicatory formula and prayer for the Johnston Hall, Christian Orphanage, Sunday P. M., July 29th, as follows:

Formula.

We dedicate this building to God, the lover of mankind and the giver of every good and perfect gift; to Jesus Christ, the Saviour of men, who went about doing good; to the Holy Spirit, who inspires men to help the helpless and father the fatherless.

We dedicate it to home, the safest place on earth for childhood and the sweetest place for age. We dedicate it to family life, the truest and best life known to man. We dedicate it to the care of parentless and homeless children, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

We dedicate it to the founders and supporters of this institution, and to those who devote their hearts and service to maintain and develop the purpose for which it stands.

We dedicate it to the work of charity to which this hall and its managers are devoted in their prayers, their gifts and their service.

We dedicate it to the Southern Christian Convention, in whose name and under whose authority and support it does its work.

We dedicate it to the cause of Christian charity of the young into a "life hid with Christ in God," and for their useful service in His Church. Amen.

Dedicatory Prayer.

Almighty God, we bless Thee because Thou hast brought us along the way of life with such blessings as to fill our hearts with gratitude and praise.

We have dedicated this house to Thee, feeling that "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." We now unite our hearts in thanking Thee for imparting Thy spirit to those who conceived and have contributed this building, and the paternal love which cares for the fatherless and motherless children. "When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up" (Psa. 27:10). "A woman may forget her babe, yet will not I forget Thee" (Isa. 49:15). Thou hast put Thy Spirit of care into the hearts of Thy people, and they care for the helpless and homeless in Thy name.

May this house remain dear to Thee, and may Thy favor be continued unto all who love Thee and work in Thy name. May Thy Book be kept open wide to the children who eat at this table, sleep on these beds, and worship at the altar of this home.

May the Church be filled with satisfaction in the support of this institution by love, prayer and gifts.

VISITING CHURCHES.

No doubt, most of THE SUN readers are interested in religious activities in other sections of the country. So I will try to give an outline of the present conditions in some of the Northern States. I spent a week in Boston, Mass., a short time ago and found posters or signs on the front of a number of Churches of several different denominations reading, "This Church closed for the summer." And I was informed that services of all kinds were suspended for the summer.

In Bridgeport, Conn., I find that most Churches have suspended all services except one preaching service during the Sunday. There are a few Churches still having Sunday School, prayer meeting and young people's meeting, but these are very few.

I attended preaching service at the United Congregational Church, which denomination nearly all Christians are interested in at the present time, three different Sunday mornings. This is one of the largest Churches in Bridgeport. They had around 350 to 500 at each service, and most of them were what we might say "old people." I guess there were about twelve to fifteen people under twenty-five years of age at each service. The others mostly above forty years. This Church is one of the many that has suspended all services during the summer except the morning preaching service.

There are about three different Churches that are still having their young people's meeting. I attended an Epworth League one Sunday afternoon and found nothing but real young boys and girls there, and they had no program other than singing.

On the other hand, I attended prayer meeting in one Baptist, one Methodist and one Christian Alliance Church. They were all about the best prayer services that I have attended in a long time. Each one had a short service led by their pastor, and then a period for testimonials and expressions from those present. And it was very interesting to note that nearly every one took part in this service. However, like the preaching service, there were very few young people present.

I noticed at these prayer meetings that the people as a whole are more friendly than a large part of the people in the South. The night that I was at the Christian Missionary Alliance Church I was standing near the door after the service was over, and an elder lady came up and asked me if I was a stranger. I answered that "I was," but not now, for I had met almost every one there.

I might also mention that the style of dress is about the same here as in other parts of the country. But it is nothing unusual to see women smoking in public places, as well as to hear of them playing poker and other such things. This, of course, does not apply to all women, but I never hear anything said about it from either men or women of any class.

ELON NOTES.

Changes and additions to the Elon College faculty have just been announced through the president's office for next year as follows:

Prof. W. J. Cotton, after many years of faithful service, has resigned from the department of French in the college, and Dr. Cephas Guillet has been chosen as his successor. Dr. Guillet is the author of "An Oral French Grammar," published by the University Press, Alfred, N. Y. He holds the Ph.D. degree from Clark University, and in addition has studied in Columbia and John Hopkins Universities.

Rev. Ross Ensminger, A. B., Carlton College, B. D., Yale and Union Theological Seminary, becomes professor of religious education this fall, succeeding Miss Helen H. Stearns. Mrs. Ensminger is also a graduate of Carlton College and will assist Prof. Ensminger in the laboratory work in the week-day school of religion.

Prof. A. B. VanCleave, who has been studying at the University of Indiana for the past year on a leave of absence, will return to the college this fall and assume his duties as professor of philosophy and social science.

Miss Florence Fisher, after many years' faithful service in Elon, resigned as head of the voice department, and Miss Mary Ann Benn has been chosen as her successor. Miss Benn is a graduate of Chicora College, Columbia, S. C., and of Columbia University. She has had special work with Mr. Dudley Buck and Mrs. Catherine Belkaman. Miss Benn has held Church positions and has had a very satisfactory teaching experience in New York City. She is talented not only in voice, but in the teaching of public school music.

Miss Emily Johnston is succeeded in the department of expression and physical education for women by Miss Jeanette Stout. Miss Stout was graduated in expression in Elon College two years ago and went immediately to the King's School of Oratory, Pittsburgh, Pa., for graduate work in her department. She has spent two years there and holds the B. O. degree. Miss Stout has also studied in the University of North Carolina and at Pennsylvania State College for the past two summers.

Mr. David Brown Harrell, a very talented pianist and organist, a member of the Elon class of 1928, majoring in music during his college course, has been chosen as assistant to Prof. Velie, in the department of music.

Mrs. C. C. Johnson, a graduate of Elon College, who has had a wide experience in library work at the University of Colorado and also at the State Library at Raleigh, N. C., becomes assistant librarian with the beginning of the fall term.

Miss Margaret V. Craig, a graduate of the Iowa and Colorado State Normal Schools, will succeed Miss Nellie Smiley as dietician of the Asheville Normal and Associated Schools.

C. M. CANNON.

THE CRIMINAL AND HIS ALLIES.

BY ERNEST H. CHERRINGTON, LL.D., LLT.D.,
Director of Department of Education, Anti-Saloon League of America.

Judge Marcus Kavanagh, of Chicago, has heeded Mark Twain's dictum: "Everybody talks about the weather, but nobody does anything about it," since, in his recent book, "The Criminal and His Allies," published by Bobbs-Merrill, he not only faces the fact that the increasing lawlessness of America threatens the republic, but points to the way out as he has seen it in his long experience on the bench. After portraying the almost incredible volume of crime in this nation, Judge Kavanagh incisively presents the issue thus:

"The next five years will decide whether the American people in this regard are capable of self-government. It is not difficult to demonstrate why we tolerate our infliction, nor to point out how it may be ended. Every country has the kind of crime and the amount of crime it deserves. In a hundred ways the public is being informed of the prevalence of lawlessness. If through the next year the criminal situation remains unchanged, it will be for the reason that the United States is entitled to its criminals. The salvation of our form of government lies in an immediate, full and angry realization of this situation. The only excuse for the existence of any government consists in its power to afford justice. The government that cannot establish justice forfeits its claim to the allegiance of its subjects, and, therefore, has no right to exist."

Without directly referring to the prohibitory laws, the author discusses the altering conception of crime and of personal liberty. Among other things, he says:

"It is true that certain ages and certain climates have regarded crimes such as adultery, polygamy and drunkenness as bad in themselves; while other times or in different climates they were considered not even malum prohibition, or bad, only because the law forbade. In these latter countries and times, such acts were not considered atrocious and interferences with the just rights of others; while in other countries, such conduct was esteemed an atrocious offense against decency and public morals. It is the just right of every citizen that the surroundings of the community in which he and his family must live, which he helps to support and must defend with his life when called upon, shall be what his country and his age deem sober, decent and moral. Whoever infringes upon that concept in a way forbidden by law commits a crime."

One suggestion which he makes would improve not alone the general enforcement of law, but especially the enforcement of the prohibitory laws. It follows:

"A central bureau at Washington co-ordinating with the law-enforcement authorities of the several States has become vitally necessary. This today could not interfere, of course, with the internal administration of State laws, but it might keep and publish records, supply information as to particular crimes, which would aid the State officials in the detection and punishment of offenders, and generally assist in the exposition and the prevention of evil commerce between wrongdoers in the several States."

It would be interesting to know the reaction of judges who conduct "bargain days" for liquor criminals, to this statement of Judge Kavanagh.

"One other unfortunate and widespread defect in the administration of criminal justice, and one which illustrates the national disregard for its importance, is to be found in the precise place where above all other places that defect ought to be absent. The judges of the courts and the officials charged with the duty of prosecutions too often deliberately disobey the will of the people as expressed in their statutes. It has become an established habit to bargain with acknowledged criminals."

The soft-minded sentimentalist who pities not the victim of a crime, but the criminal; the lawyer who prostitutes his profession as an ally of the criminal; the courts which spin fine webs of technicalities to the undoing of justice are all pilloried in this book. Judge Kavanagh urges the consideration by public-spirited organizations of the program of criminal law reform which has been prepared and enforced by the American Bar Association, but which has not been adopted in its entirety by any State legislature, holding that "nothing more important or more difficult has come before the people for the last two generations."

Former Attorney General Wade H. Ellis, in his introduction to this book, has written an essay well worth general reading. We quote just a few phrases. One concerning prohibition follows:

"As for prohibition, the steady increase in major crimes, which have clogged the dockets of the courts, has kept a pace quite unrelated to the comparatively minor offenses against the eighteenth amendment. The plain truth is that we are witnessing a constant, persistent and apparently permanent growth in those forms of brutal and violent lawlessness which have always been recognized, in English-speaking countries at least, as dangerous to the public, and which all men agree the State must put down if the State is to live."

problem of the alien criminal, thus:

"Nevertheless, the records of the courts and penal institutions show the lamentable fact that the numbers of foreigners on the criminal rolls are out of all proportion to their fraction of the total population. The truth is simply this: that while in every European country there is less lawlessness than there is in the United States, the chief contributors to lawlessness in the United States are the immigrants from European countries. There is, however, no consolation in this fact. If it shows anything, it shows that the criminally inclined, especially the young, who would be afraid of the laws of their own country or that of their parents, are not afraid of the laws of the United States."

One wonders how the organized opponents of the eighteenth amendment who continuously invoke the theory of States' rights will enjoy reading this by Mr. Ellis:

"The only beneficiary of the doctrines of States' rights and police powers when applied to the detection and punishment of crime is the criminal. The man who holds up a pay-clerk in New York today is quite likely to kill a policeman in Chicago tomorrow and murder a girl in Los Angeles three days later. He thrives on our forty-eight separate jurisdictions."

THE IRREPRESSIBLE ISSUE.

teach the wet forces that they cannot defy the Christian people of this land and steal one of the great political parties for their wet schemes and purposes.

Outside of the prohibition issue and the type of the two candidates, there is not enough difference between the Republican and Democratic parties to make any material difference to the country which one carries the election. To argue otherwise is purest political bunk and tommyrot to any impartial and open-minded man or woman. Mr. Ras-kob is a leading factor in one of the greatest business concerns of America, and business men are being assured that his leadership makes it certain that the Democrats will be as tender towards big business as the Republicans have always been. The tariff plank adopted at Houston was so far from the traditional "free trade" of the Democrats as to cause as strong a Democratic sheet as Mr. Cox's News here in Dayton to say of it:

"It could hardly be distinguished, with its talk of creating prosperity by tariffs, from an average Republican tariff plank. . . . It even lifts some of the hokum of Republican platforms, such as the phrase about the 'equitable distribution of the burdens and benefits of the tariff among all.' But buncombe and political platforms are inseparable and we cheerfully, for the sake of the good behind it, tolerate this specimen."

The Associated Press reported that at the very first conference of Democratic leaders after Mr. Smith's nomination it was decided that "foreign affairs . . . will be passed over as not good campaign material." And on the agricultural issue every one knows that the representatives of Tammany and the big cities are no more likely than the Republicans to take any action that would greatly raise the price of foods for the great city populations from which they expect by far the major number of their votes.

Such are the plain, ugly facts. Prohibition has, through the shrewd manipulation of the wets, become the only one question that really greatly matters—that and the type and outlook on life of the two candidates and the crowds they represent. It will be a hard and bitter fight and party lines will be split asunder. The outcome will depend upon whether or not the dry Democrats are too partisan to vote for any other than a Democratic nominee for President. And that is an even more serious thing than prohibition itself, for it involves the freedom of the ballot and the willingness of Christian people to vote their Christian conviction regardless of party ties—upon which freedom and willingness alone rest the future righteousness and safety of our nation.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VII—August 12, 1928.

THE COUNCIL AT JERUSALEM.

GOLDEN TEXT: "If, therefore, the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.—John 8:36.

LESSON: Acts 15:1-35; Gal. 5:1-15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 133.

Jesus said a man could not keep new wine in old wine-skins. The inherent life-force in the new wine would cause it to burst the old wine-skins and the wine would be lost. It was just another way of saying that the great living truths of Christianity could not be put in the old forms of Judaism, or for that matter in any religion of mere legalism or letter. Christianity is essentially a matter of principles and spirit. It has inherent life within it. It cannot be kept in narrow forms or in static creeds. It is a vital, growing dynamic thing. It must continually be reinterpreted in terms of life.

The Master's words were soon put to the test. Christianity was not very old before the issue between letter and spirit was clearly drawn. The Jerusalem council was called upon to decide as to whether Christianity should be simply a little more refined form of Judaism, or whether it should be Christ's way of life. It all happened in this way. The Christian Church was made up at first of Jews, and of proselytes. The latter were people, not Jews, who had accepted Jewish beliefs and who had submitted to the rite of circumcision, baptism, and who offered a sacrifice. So long as Christianity was confined to Jerusalem there was no pressing problem in connection with the Gentiles as such. But as Christianity began to spread, and as it came in contact with the Gentile world, especially in the regions around Antioch, and later by virtue of Paul's missionary journey, the problem of the Gentiles became acute. How was a Gentile to become a Christian? What was to be his relationship with the Jew? What application did the law of Moses have on him? These were the burning questions that arose and that demanded a solution. The issue could not be dodged; it had to be faced and solved once and for all. Thanks be unto God that there was a man named Paul who was broad-minded enough and liberal-spirited enough, and brave-hearted enough to force and face the issue, and to solve it in terms of abiding principles.

Put in clear language, those who came down from Jerusalem and the Pharisees in Jerusalem said that if a Gentile wanted to become a Christian, he must first of all become a Jew; that is, he must accede to the law of Moses, be circumcised, and fulfill the obligations of the law. From Judaism he could then enter Christianity, but he could not become a Christian unless he came into Christianity through Judaism. It might be said that to those who had been trained and steeped in the legalistic aspect of religion as had these Pharisees and Judaizers as they are called, it did seem the proper thing to do. But this was a denial of the gospel that Paul preached. In plain language, Paul said that a man became a Christian not by doing the works of the law, but through the grace of Christ. The thing that mattered was not whether a man had been circumcised or not circumcised, but whether he had been made new in Christ. Whenever men turned to God in Christ, through repentance and faith, they began the Christian life, no matter who they were or whether they went through certain external and formal ceremonies. It was unnecessary, therefore, for a man to enter Christianity through Judaism. A Gentile could become a Christian direct.

The whole thing is, of course, the perennial struggle between a religion of the letter and a religion of the spirit. It is a modified form of the struggle between fundamentalism and modernism, between liberalism and conservatism. And Paul did Christianity an unpayable favor when he asserted unequivocally that Christianity comes through grace and not through law. Christ brings liberty from law.

And Paul had the facts on his side. How could men dare to say that a man could not become a Christian unless he became circumcised, when men had actually become Christians without being circumcised. There was tact and courtesy in Paul's action in refusing to enter into the discussion at Jerusalem, but there was the finest kind of logic and irrefutable evidence in his simple recountal of what God had done and was doing in the Gentile world. Any one who knew anything about the matter knew that some of the Gentiles who had come into the Christian Church, but who had not been circumcised, were just as much Christian as those who had submitted to circumcision and every other Judaistic rite. And any one who is fair knows that today there are men and women in every communion, be they ever so far apart in theological beliefs and in insistence upon certain ceremonies, who are alike Christian. By their fruits ye shall know them, and not by their theological beliefs or their creeds or ceremonies.

Let it be said, however, that there is point in what the elders of the Jerusalem Church had to say about the things from which the Gentiles were to abstain: from meats offered to idols, from blood, from things strangled, from fornication. All of these things were not seen in the same light by the Gentiles as by the Jews. And in suggesting that the Gentiles abstain from these the apostles were doing what the Church has a right to expect from its members today—to live differently from those who are not professing Christians. The Jews were a "separate people." Christians are also to be a "separate people," not in the sense that they are not in the world, but that they are not of the world. And Christians are to differ from non-Christians not only in what they do not do—the negative side of religion—but in what they do—the positive side of religion—the forthgoing in unselfish service and in love.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

TOPIC: "True and False Standards of Success."
—Matt. 7:1-5; Josh. 1:8.

Some Bible Hints.

The fellow that keeps knocking others makes enemies and prevents success (v. 1).

The more we help others to succeed, the more are we likely to be helped upwards. "With what measure ye mete . . ." (v. 2).

Character is the true measure of success. No matter what a man gains, if he is mean, critical, ugly, fault-finding, he has failed (v. 3).

The man that through the study of the word of God knows God's will and does it has an infinitely better chance to succeed than the one who follows his own will (Josh. 1:8).

Suggestive Thoughts.

What do we measure success by? Our bank account? Our influence? The publicity we get? Not at all. By character.

Achievement is a partial standard of success, for it means effort. To succeed, we must get into the current of life and do our bit.

Many a man has felt that to be head of a great business was to achieve success, only to find that the ruthless fight had robbed him of all his finer feelings. There is no success that destroys the man.

In the Church-yard are many grave-stones that contain only a name and two dates. Not a word about achievement. Yet achievement may have been real—was real if a life of service had been lived.

A Few Illustrations.

Test life by its end, not by its single acts. Would we live radically different if we had life to live over again? How?

Old Scrooge made money but he was not a success. It is fatal at the beginning to set up a false goal and waste time in trying to reach it.

Education enters into every standard of success. No man who lives in this wonderful world and remains ignorant can be said to have truly succeeded. We are at school in this life.

"The elevator has stopped running. Use the stairs." So read a sign. True. You have to climb to every place in life worth reaching. But be sure that the place itself is worth reaching.

To Think About.

What do you think is a worth-while aim in life? Why would you call Jesus a success?

What temptations keep us from succeeding?

THE HOLY DIE WELL.

John Wesley wrote: "The world may not like our Methodists, but the world cannot deny that they die well." And the honored founder of Methodism proceeded to prove the maxim by one of the most triumphant deaths in the annals of the Christian Church. William J. Kirkpatrick, the celebrated song-writer, departed to be with the Lord some five or six years ago from his home in Philadelphia. He died at night, alone in his study, where he was left by his wife in the evening, and where she found him at six in the morning, sitting in his chair, dead. On the table in front of him, dated at 2 o'clock in the morning of that night were the following lines:

"Just as Thou wilt, Lord, that is my cry;
Just as Thou wilt, to live or to die.
I am Thy servant, Thou knowest best—
Just as Thou wilt, Lord, labor or rest.

"Just as Thou wilt, Lord, which shall it be:
Life everlasting waiting for me,
Or shall I tarry here at Thy feet?
Just as Thou wilt Lord, whate'er is meet."

THE PERSONALITY OF JESUS.

Sometimes there is not a word to help, not a spirit to call us brother, Christ-likeness is nowhere to be found. Our own ideals are impossible of achievement. Righteousness in society is still a hope to be fulfilled. Everything good seems to be in its beginnings. But, thanks be to God, that we have got something left: Christ is still before us, and we have something which refuses to be satisfied. We still long for perfection and happiness.

God has set eternity in our hearts, and we will be restless until we do rest in Him. In Him alone do we see the possibility of perfecting our imperfections. In Him alone do we expect to complete the incomplete. In Him alone do we expect to find the enduring happiness. In Him alone do we find that something that cries out against vandalism and injustice. In him alone do we expect that power which faces the gigantic forces of this modern world, to preserve the beautiful and bring that beauty to every little corner of life now ugly and repellant. In Him alone these attributes are manifested as possible to man. It is in this way we come to understand God. We see Him uncompromising in loyalty and right, and we understand that God is loyal and right. As Jesus is loving, we understand that God is love. If these things were not so, we would have to say that God is less than Jesus.

It is thus that Jesus becomes the revealed God; and it matters not how much every age has had its prophets of righteousness, how much every religion has had its witnesses, only Christ has pictured to us what God is like, only Christianity has defined God's true character, and only He has shown the world the way to eternal life.

This is our answer: Jesus. And through us He will shape this world of sin and sorrow into a new and better world fitted to heaven's designs and our desires.

Jesus Christ and We.

Christ has no hands but our hands
To do His work today;
He has no feet but our feet
To lead men in His way;
He has no tongues but our tongues
To tell men how He died;
He has no help but our help
To bring them to His side.

We are the only Bible
The careless world will read;
We are the sinner's gospel,
We are the scoffer's creed;
Given in deed and word—
What if the line is crooked?
What if the type is blurred?

What if our hands are busy
With other work than this?
What if our feet are walking
Where sin's allurements is?
What if our tongues are speaking
Of things His lips would spurn?
How can we hope to help Him
Unless from Him we learn?

Bless those who have charge of this institution, and all the children who come under their care. May they be trained in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," and may they go forth into the world to honor Thee in their lives and work.

Bless all who have come here today and have taken part in these exercises, which we trust have honored Thee.

We ask all in the name of Him who taught us, when we pray, to say, "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done and— Amen.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

RICH PAUPERS.

"I counsel thee to buy of me gold refined by fire, that thou mayest become rich."—Rev. 3:14-22.

Some years ago a wealthy man in Ithaca, N. Y., who suffered from mental trouble, wandered away from home, and after a search of many weeks was at last found in an almshouse in Connecticut. He had a luxurious home, but was living in extreme penury. He was rich, but he thought he was poor. It is a vivid illustration of the uncertainty of worldly wealth, and the suddenness and completeness with which it may be lost.

There is only one kind of riches that is not affected by the mutations of life, and that is the wealth which Christ bestows. No one is rich, really rich, till he is rich in Christ's way. Only a full account in the bank of heaven makes a man wealthy.

Well did the Spirit counsel men to buy that refined gold. How can it be bought? With a faith-filled petition, and with nothing else. It is not exchanged for money, or for toil, or for the shrewd contrivings of men. It is given for belief in Jesus Christ.

Who buys? Who will be rich? Who will be a billionaire of grace? Who will invest in heaven? Who will have the eternal and priceless possessions? Whosoever will, let him take them for the asking, without money and without price.

Prayer.—One of the parents will offer prayer, asking that all in the circle may hold at their true value the fleeting possessions of this world, and may seek the genuine wealth, and that alone.

TUESDAY.

THE POWER OF THE INVISIBLE.

"He endured as seeing him who is invisible."—Heb. 11:27.

This is said of Moses, and from the story of his life it is not hard to see that he must have something beyond this life that led him on.

The rich young ruler was a young man, just beginning a career, who thought himself a model young man, but when he was told that the material obsessed him, and that he needed the spiritual leadership, he figured it too hard and turned away.

Paul was in a position like unto the young ruler—a young man beginning a career—but different from the young ruler in that when he talked with Jesus he saw himself as looking into a mirror; he saw his past life; he saw the wrong of his course; he felt the murder of his own heart from which he could never recover. Being a man essentially honest with himself, he acted upon what he learned to be true, threw away his former life and launched out upon the new life with Christianity as his invisible leader. He paid the penalty, suffering loss of home and friends, endured hardships, stonings, prisons, all because he followed an invisible ideal which promised salvation of humanity as its goal.

Discussion: What is my leadership? Is he high-born? Is he set with the highest goals of life? Do I realize that I cannot limit ideals to small things and achieve great ones? Do I realize that I cannot be half-hearted in anything and achieve a whole success?

Prayer.—Our Father, in Christ reveal ourselves to us, show up our faults, failures and misgivings. Grant us the courage to clean up and to endure anything for the sake of right. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

ONE'S FIRST DUTY.

"What doth the Lord require of Thee but to do justly?"—Micah 6:8.

And that justice is toward thyself. To be honest and just toward one's self is to possess facts before forming opinions. It is to select ideals which lead to the best goals. It is to do one's best to reach those ideals. It is to be willing to sacrifice anything of the lower for the higher. It is to be sincere in all things.

All the world loves an honest man. His mistakes can be forgiven. He knows no pains to set himself in motion in the direction where he may be void of offense and where his character is his best witness.

Such an honesty is seated in the conscience and becomes as the compass is to the ship, always pointing the way to go. Without it, one's soul is as helpless as a ship without a compass.

To every one there is to be a great day of accounting to the great outside. Unless one has been true to the great inner-self, he can never have strength to prevent disaster nor justice enough to escape judgment.

Prayer.—Father, give us the wisdom, strength and courage to do the good we feel moved to do, to refrain when things seem wrong, to know the facts before passing judgment. Amen.

THURSDAY.

OUR SECOND DUTY TO LIFE.

"To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—Jas. 4:17.

Obedience to the claims of ideals is our second duty in life. "Man is the noblest work of God," and God has put in man an invisible little piece of machinery which operates the issues of man's true self called conscience. It is through this that God speaks to his soul and makes possible visions eternal. If this voice is not obeyed, the issues of life are confused, sins are disguised and one drifts upon the rocks.

The big invisible silent things of the universe are the greatest. The day breaks without a sound. The gates of dawn swing wide open without a creak of hinges. Greatest things come as silent as the snows of night, as potent as spring, and they are as certain to come as the dawn challenging our wisdom. Good comes as a result of vision and effort in that direction. Downfall comes as certain as the tree falls when decay sets in, and we fall without an effort.

The rich man chose the material, the wealth of life that gave him ease. The great ideal invisible which he turned away later demands his pay, "thou fool." All his plans were "knocked into a cocked hat," to use the language of the street. The neglected factor (God), whom he tried to avoid, he finally had to reckon with.

To keep the commandments is not only obligatory, but essential. Paul not only wanted to be obedient to law, but also to the heavenly vision. We also must grow from law toward the heavenly.

The woman, forgiven for her adultery, was told to sin no more, go straight now, and the Lord promised to reward her not according to her sin, but according to her righteousness from that time.

Prayer.—Our Father, strengthen our faith to be obedient to our visions, to keep in mind whatever is true, to produce what we have learned and received of Thee; and when days seem blue, may the light of our ideals hold us true just the same. Amen.

FRIDAY.

OUR THIRD DUTY IN LIFE.

"He endured the cross and despised the shame."—Heb. 12:2.

"Be thou faithful."—Rev. 2:10.

"He that is faithful in the least (of things) is faithful in much."—Luke 16:10.

There is more value and more character in the word "endure" than any other word in the English language. It is a most common trait of man that when he wants, really passionately wants, to do something or be something, nothing is too great a price. Any amount of suffering he will endure to obtain his goal. Abraham went to the promised land that way. Samson was strong to subdue armies because of this spirit. David vanquished Goliath because he knew God. Stephen and the martyrs all endured for Christ's sake. These folks had but little reward in this life. But God has not promised the perishing things; he has promised the eternal reward, and that reward which we know came to them. Paul's influence upon the world, for instance, ought to be enough to inspire us to any endurance we may be called upon to suffer. If man will endure to obtain the corruptible crowns of life, what will he not endure if Christ be the idea?

Prayer.—Our Father, Jesus thought nothing of the shame of the cross, and showed us how to endure persecution for truth's sake, that He might sit on the right hand of the Father and intercede for us that we too might be joint heirs with Him and called the sons of men. Give us this vision, O Lord, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

OUR FOURTH DUTY IN LIFE.

"Enoch walked with God."—Gen. 5:24.

The secret of all success in obtaining the glorious life is a vision of God.

Life is beset with temptations. When we have to answer to the Great Judge, what will we say?

Out in the world where standards are lower and looser, man needs God to maintain his manhood. That vision is the one thing alone powerful enough to dispel all moral darkness and keep one from downfall.

In our solitude much sin is born—evil thoughts, lies, adulteries, and many other things which defile self. Man's undoings are not in his circumstances, but in himself. There the prayer life is effective.

The road to success in living the crowns of life is a long one, irksome and hazardous. We need God, then, to enable us to press on toward the prize.

Those who overcome are those who never lose the vision of God in their lives.

"Thy glorious task work on,
Think not in vain turmoil;
Thy labors shall not be in vain,
'Twill stand when thou art gone."

SUNDAY.

WE BECOME LIKE OUR IDEALS.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We met a good old brother who was superintendent of an orphanage in North Carolina at the station here some years ago. He had come to bring two bright girls from his institution to enter Elon College. He had been a good father to these girls when they had no other to look to. He had made all arrangements for their college course and was at the station to catch his train home. The two girls had accompanied him to the station to see him off. It was real pathetic to see them bid him goodbye. Tears trickled down his cheeks and he turned to me and said, "Bro. Johnston, I cry when they come and I cry when they leave." I have often thought of his remark, and, while people do not realize it, children in an orphanage occupy a very tender place in the heart of a superintendent of an orphanage, and he realizes his great responsibility. When the time comes for them to go out it pulls his heart-strings as if they were his own.

Some time ago we had a girl to reach the age limit. We called her in the office and asked her what plans she had. I think it was the first time she ever realized that she was to soon face life alone. She came to us when a mere tot and was for a long time the "baby" of the institution. But she had grown to be a young woman. Her eyes filled with tears as she looked me in the face and said, "I have no home to which I can go." That was true. No people who could take her. Alone in the world. No home. No money to pay for something to eat. Alone. We advised her to go in training and be a nurse. She was willing to try. We secured a place in one of our leading hospitals for her. She is now happy in her work, making good.

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." When you make contributions to the Christian Orphanage you are visiting the fatherless and the widows in their affliction.

PROTESTANTS AND THE FUTURE.

We are indebted to the research department of the Church Federation, of Sacramento, Calif., for the following informing study of life prospects from the various home types in America. Let us not forget that it is the right of every child to be well born, and the religious element is the most decisive factor in determining the child's future.

"The effect of religious environment in producing men of genius is illustrated in data recently published by American eugenicists. A Protestant clergyman's son has one chance in twenty of being listed in 'Who's Who.' The physician's son has one in 105, the farmer's son one in 680, the skilled laborer's son has a tremendous advantage over the unskilled laborer's son, for his chances are one in 1,600, while the latter's is only one in 48,000. The atmosphere which characterizes the home of the Protestant minister of the gospel thus makes for success even in this world. Mankind is beginning to grasp that populations consist of people with different hereditary endowments. This is true of different groups, such as racial or occupational groupings. The material development of the Protestant nations of Europe and their world's leadership in all lines of endeavor is due largely to the children of their clergymen.—Ex.

MUSIC COMMITTEE REPORT.

Realizing the fact that a religious song is a song that truly voices the emotional experience of sincere religious life, we, your committee on music, beg to offer the following suggestions:

1. That more prayerful consideration be given to the music selected for use in our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work.

2. Only leaders who can realize and convey to the singing congregations the difference between spiritual and secular music be chosen.

3. It is a regrettable fact that two many song leaders and piano players are bringing into use in our Church and Sunday School work too much secular and not enough spiritual music.

Therefore, we recommend that our pastors and superintendents see to it that more God-inspiring music be taught and practiced in our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work.

Respectfully submitted,

SKETCH OF JOHNSTON HALL.

We will send men and women from this building to go out into the world to do great things for this country that possibly might otherwise have gone to wreck and ruin. What makes an individual, a denomination or a nation bigger? It is what they do for others; and, mark this, the more we do in this way, the bigger and greater we are.

If I had been appointed to select the happiest man here today, I would name Superintendent Chas. D. Johnston, who has worked so faithfully and efficiently, and the success of the Orphanage today is largely due to him. I would feel perfectly safe if I would say to any individual here today who has contributed to this building fund that if they were dissatisfied with his or her investment I would refund every dollar they had put in it. I am sure I would not have to refund one dollar.

Since 1905 we have reared in this institution 193 boys and girls who have gone out and made good. Now, mothers and fathers, have we a better record of children that were reared in homes by parents? My friends, investments in stocks are put on the market and sold, but I feel that those that have contributed to this building or Orphanage in love, in sympathy and money cannot be bought.

I am a member of several boards of financial corporations, but I tell you frankly that any stock that I own in any company or corporation I would sell with the exception of the Christian Orphanage, at Elon College. I will tell you as I stand here before you, this is one position that I hold as a member of the board of trustees of the Orphanage that I never expect to resign, and they will have to kick me out to get rid of me. The love and stocks that I hold in the Orphanage are not for sale—money can't buy!

I hope all of you may return to your homes and Churches with a keener feeling for this Orphanage than you have ever had before, since you have been here to see how the money you have contributed has been invested, and I assure you that the money which you may contribute in the future will be as economically spent as that in the past.

On behalf of the Orphanage, I want to thank you for coming and being present on this occasion, and I assure you that the doors are always open for your inspection, for your advice, and for your criticism, if there be any. And, in a word of conclusion, I want to say there is not a president of a financial corporation, regardless of how large or how small, that is held in higher regard or more loved than the board of trustees of the Orphanage loves the superintendent; and may the Lord spare him many years, that he may continue in this great work.

"Christian Character First and Always at Elon College"

DEDICATION OF JOHNSTON HALL, CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

Johnston Hall, the newest building of the Elon College Christian Orphanage, was formally dedicated Sunday, July 29th, with Prof. R. L. Flowers, of Duke University, as a representative of the Duke foundation for the orphanages of the two Carolinas, making the principal address.

Prof. Flowers stated that gratitude in his estimation was one of the finest and rarest of the virtues, and this was the theme of his address. He declared that many men give their lives for the public good often at great sacrifice to themselves, and regretted that the people generally did not stop to think of how much they owed these men. He declared it a very fitting thing that this building should be dedicated to Superintendent Chas. D. Johnston, the present superintendent of the Orphanage, for his untiring and effective labors on behalf of the institution for the past twelve years.

No stronger appeal can be made than that of the cry of the child, stated Prof. Flowers, and he himself appealed to the audience present and to the members of the Christian denomination in general not to consider this work finished with the new building, but to continue to put forth every effort, that the Orphanage should be enabled to serve even a wider field than it is now serving and care for even more children. He stated that he liked to look upon this Orphanage, and all such institutions, not as the common accepted term of orphanage but as a home, a real home for the children, where they could have parental care, and wished that he might see the day when there would be no less children.

Mr. W. K. Holt, of Burlington, chairman of the trustees of the Orphanage, served as chairman for this occasion, but was taken ill during the program with a heart attack, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson served as chairman for the remainder of the program. Mr. Holt welcomed the audience and invited them to make a tour of inspection of the Orphanage at the conclusion of the program.

Dr. Atkinson presented the building and unveiled the bronze tablet dedicating it to Mr. Johnston. Superintendent Johnston accepted the honor of the dedication amid hearty applause from the many friends who had assembled for this occasion.

Mr. J. M. Darden, of Suffolk, Va., presented a historical sketch of the Johnston Building, and Mr. Johnston himself gave something of the history of the institution during its twenty-four years of existence, and especially during the last twelve years since he has been connected with it as its head. The Orphanage was established in 1904 with one building. It opened with one child, and had one superintendent and one matron. Its early history was a severe struggle for existence. When Mr. Johnston took the superintendency in 1916, the Orphanage plant was worth around $50,000, with several thousand dollars' indebtedness, and a yearly income of only $2,000. Today, with the new buildings and a large farm, the plant is estimated to be worth $160,000 and has a yearly income of some $33,000, caring for 118 children. The Johnston Building was planned in 1924 and completed in 1926, at a total cost of $29,000.

Music for this dedication service was furnished by Mr. and Mrs. Sam Devis, of Norfolk, Va., and by a large orchestra from First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., the orchestra being sent from Richmond for this purpose by P. J. Carlton. The orchestra reached Elon College Saturday and furnished music for a vesper service Saturday evening at the Orphanage, and also furnished music at the morning Church services in the college chapel on Sunday. A class of Orphanage girls rendered a vocal selection during the program.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro, opened the program with prayer, and Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va., closed it with the dedicatory formula and dedicatory prayer.

P. T. Klapp, of Elon College, to assist our pastor, Rev. J. W. Knight. Bro. Klapp, we feel, is a strong, consecrated Christian. Never before in the history of the Church have we had the truth more wonderfully revealed. Every message was the plain, practical preaching of the old gospel. Every message brought seemed to be complete and in harmony with the spirit and brought a heart-appeal to the listeners.

Our people of the community enjoyed Bro. Klapp, and we will always remember him with love and gratitude. We shall remember his untiring efforts and his deep interest that he held for the people. It is impossible for one to estimate the benefits of a meeting like this; it cannot be estimated by a man. Even though very little visible results were shown, we feel sure great good was done. The Church was greatly strengthened and built up spiritually.

Already we have seen the fruits of Bro. Klapp's work. Sunday night following the revival we had the largest attendance at prayer meeting we have had this year. Perhaps the greatest benefits are being realized within the Church itself.

May God's richest blessing be with Bro. Klapp, and may his kind increase among us.

BEN. FRANKLIN FIRST AMERICAN TO VISIT GERMAN UNIVERSITY.

The first American known to have paid a visit to a German University was Benjamin Franklin, who visited Gottingen in 1760, and Michaelis in his autobiography speaks with pleasure of meeting Franklin at this time. The first American who received a doctorate from a German university is thought to have been Benjamin Barton, of Pennsylvania, who became doctor of medicine at Gottingen in 1789, and was for nearly thirty years professor of natural science in the University of Pennsylvania.

GIBSON.

At the home of her stepdaughter, Mrs. J. A. Whittemore, on July 17, 1928, Mrs. Annie M. Gibson went to her reward, age 63 years. She lived a beautiful Christian life from childhood. She was a consistent and faithful member of the First Christian Church. She was satisfied when she could render others happy. The motto of her life was service. She is survived by one stepson and three stepdaughters and two sisters. While she had no children of her own, she had so much of the mother-heart that her adopted children were as devoted as her own could have been, and feel their loss as keenly as if she had been their own mother.

The funeral services were conducted from the First Christian Church by the pastor, assisted by Rev. W. A. Rollius and Rev. J. I. White. The interment was in Green Hill Cemetery. Truly a good woman has gone from us.

C. H. ROWLAND.

BROWN.

Inasmuch as our Heavenly Father, in His great wisdom, has seen fit to remove from us our sister, Sarah Brown, and brother, O. P. Brown, since our last quarterly conference; be it resolved:

1. That while we mourn the loss of our dear sister and brother, we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

2. That their life and influence has been a blessing to us and to the community.

3. That we extend our sympathy to their families, and may the sweet assurance that they have gone to receive their crowns comfort and heal their broken and sorrowing hearts.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to their families, a copy be sent to The Christian Sun, and be recorded in the minutes of the Church book.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

CHRISTIAN WOMEN AT THE POLLS.

By MRS. W. S. LOCKHART, Ex. Sec'y

Indiana Council on International Relations.

If we follow the course of our democracy from the shrines of the past and the heroic self-sacrifice of Valley Forge, to the latest example of flagrant dishonesty among party politicians, we seem to traverse a complete life cycle of a great political ideal from birth to death.

What a change has come over the world in the years since Thomas Jefferson penned the Declaration of Independence, in which the foundation of this government was laid and its political philosophy announced to the world! "There is no longer that simple, implicit and almost unanimous faith in democracy which once there was. It is challenged from within as well as without, and there has been no time within the memory of living man when those challenges were so direct, so emphatic, and so successful as at this moment."

The most insistent is that democracy has failed and become an obstacle to human happiness and human progress. They tell us our foundations are illusory and fallacious. They tell us that we assume that society is built on individuals who will each, if given a chance, wish to develop the best that is in him to co-operate with his fellows for the advancement of the public good and so promote satisfaction, justice, contentment and progress. They now tell us that all this has been proven by experience to be futile and misleading. Individuals do nothing of the sort. They are engaged in a struggle for material gain. They are anxious each to exalt himself at the cost of his fellows; that under our system there has grown up privileged classes, privileged individuals who exploit the masses, who live at their cost, and who pervert our democratic institutions to their own ends. They say we worship at the shrine of majorities. While majorities may determine the immediate step, they do not always determine what is right.

Another form of criticism is advanced in a recent editorial, part of which I quote:

"Democracy has been a garden without a gardener. It has offered its precious store of fertile earth and fertilizing sun and rain to rankest weed or poison vine on equal terms with the herbs of healing, the flowers of beauty, the trees of fruitfulness. The state of democracy today is that of a neglected garden, arrived at its inevitable autumn, when the householder must lay up what harvest he can for the winter."

A great French critic, on being asked, "How long will the American government endure?" answered, "The American republic will endure so long as it remains true to the principles of its founders."

This is our task as Christian women. Shall we sit still and permit forces without our country to destroy it? Will we let it be riddled by these attacks, complaints, and criticisms without action and without protest? Or shall we dedicate ourselves to a new service of constructive interpretation of those great democratic principles given us by our leaders and which we cannot give up without undermining the very foundations of our liberties?

There are sixty million eligible voters in our country. The latest figures show that nearly a third have never taken the trouble to register. That leaves about forty million registrants. Of these, only twenty-two million went to the polls in the congressional election of 1926, and in the presidential election of 1924 the polled vote was about thirty million.

Taking the average of all our elections—national, State and local—we find that what we really have in this country is not a government by a majority of those politically interested.

It has been said, "If a people possessing suffrage will not help govern themselves, they will be governed by others, and very likely in a manner neither satisfactory nor creditable, which is precisely the thing that is happening in America today."

I wish to affirm with all the vigor I possess that I am not in sympathy with many of the campaigns now being put on by certain organizations throughout the country to "get out the vote."

People do not become good citizens by going to the polls. They go to the polls because they are good citizens, but this does not mean that all who go to the polls are motivated by the ideals held by those who founded our form of government. Dr. Harold F. Garnell, of Chicago, after an interesting experiment in the stimulation of the non-vote, reached the conclusion that persons with some knowledge of politics and government are much more apt to vote than those with little knowledge of government matters.

The civic responsibility of an individual ends when he does not feel that he can thereby contribute to the greater effectiveness of popular government, and to vote unintelligently is a greater disservice to a commonwealth than not to vote at all. Therefore, it devolves upon us as citizens in a great republic to inform ourselves in the science of government, free ourselves from partisanship through a study of the issues, vitalize the party systems by creating issues, and stand for a higher type of candidates.

Sustained campaigns of civic education, discussing the common needs of the community and world problems, such as the elimination of race prejudice, the perplexing problem of poverty, the outlawry of war, eradication of disease, feeding the peoples of the world, a comparative study of religions, and the future application of science to physical transport, help to make people think in terms of citizenship and stimulate civic responsibility. Dr. Devine says that "such a study of issues is superior to any effort concentrating on influencing voters in the brief period of a campaign or the hysterical call for loyalty by party leaders."

Frank R. Kent, in his book, "The Great Game of Politics," gives a most interesting description of the precinct executive and his activities, which should help us to see the importance of the individual vote being based on an intelligent understanding of the issues involved. Mr. Kent writes: "The precinct is the smallest unit in the party machine, but while the precinct is the smallest, the precinct executive is the most vital. There are about 250,000 precinct executives in this country. He is the connecting link between the people and the party machine. Many will say, 'I do not know my precinct chairman.' It may be perfectly true that you do not know him, but this is the important fact—he knows you. He not only knows you, but he knows a good deal about you. Among the things he knows about you are how you are registered, how you generally vote, and, particularly, whether you vote in the primaries or only in the general election. The reason he has this information about you is that it is his business to have it. His standing in politics, his place in the organization, and in most cases his job depends upon his ability to carry his precinct at the primaries for the machine candidate. In the average precinct there are about 600 votes fairly evenly divided between the two main parties. Observation and experience have taught him that the bulk of the registered voters, qualified to vote in the primaries, do not do so. This curious reluctance of the voter to participate in the primaries simplifies the precinct executive's job very much. He has a list of those who do not take the 'trouble' to vote, and an equally careful list of those who do. This reduces the number of voters with whom he must reckon in the primaries to, say, 125, which is a high estimate. When he has narrowed his list down to those who actually vote in the party primary, his task is a simple one. What he has to do then is to secure a majority. Sixty-five votes will do it safely in the bulk of the precincts, and it would be a very poor executive who is not worth that many votes in a 'pinch.'"

This is the picture—all made possible because the Christian man and woman, capable of voting intelligently, if they would give time and thought

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. R. A. Whitten, formerly of Reidsville, now located at Elon College, as field secretary for the college, was recently with Dr. P. H. Fleming in a very successful revival at Union Church, Union Ridge, N. C. Bro. Whitten reports that the Church was much revived and that there were several additions to the Church.

Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett and family reached Porto Rico Monday, July 16th, after a reasonably good sea voyage. They drove their esteemed automobile over the mountains from San Juan to Ponce the same day they arrived, and reached Ponce at 6 P. M. and found their home open and a table spread with a good supper.

Rev. J. A. Denton, Route 2, Apex, N. C., was among the visitors to the Christian Orphanage and the college last Thursday, August 2nd. Bro. Denton decided that it was one of the most pleasant days and visits he has lived. We wish all our ministers would come to the college and the Orphanage occasionally. It will give them new inspiration and loyalty for their Church and their work.

We learn from good sources that Miss Victoria Adams is fitting in well in her work in Porto Rico and is doing fine work. She is rapidly acquiring knowledge of the language and is doing much to reach the young people for kingdom service. Miss Adams is a graduate of Elon College and is a most devout Christian woman and is devoted to her work. We are glad, indeed, to hear such good reports of her labors on the field.

The many friends of Dr. G. S. Watson will learn with regret of his serious illness at his home, Elon College, N. C. Dr. Watson has been a member of the board of trustees of the college from its founding, and also a member of the board of trustees of the Christian Orphanage from its beginning. He has been faithful to his Church through the years, and while he expresses the hope that he will recover, he faces the future calmly, saying that he is not afraid to pass over the river when the summons shall come.

From many quarters come reports of successful revival meetings in the Churches. This is the season when our rural Churches hold their revivals and is a time of great importance and responsibility upon the Churches. Through the preaching of the Word, Churches are revived and hundreds are born anew in the kingdom of the Lord. We are hoping and praying that during this season there shall be a great ingathering of souls in the Church and the kingdom. Will the pastors please report to THE SUN the results of their meetings?

Mrs. R. C. Myers, Bethlehem Church, Valley Virginia Conference, sending a $3.00 check for missions as an offering from the children of the daily vacation Bible school, adds: "We had told them about the great need and they were interested, as children always are, when they are appealed to. Really, I feel that the greatest missionary work we can do is to educate and interest our children in the work. We were all glad to learn that the Barretts had gone back, and I trust we shall be able to keep them there."

Dr. E. C. Fry, known to many SUN readers and much-beloved as one of our very faithful missionaries in Japan, is now home on furlough after seven years of valiant and faithful service since his last visit. His headquarters while in the homeland are to be at Peterboro, N. H., visiting there his daughter, Mrs. Anna F. Wood. We indulge the hope that Dr. Fry will visit the South, and particularly during our Conference period this fall. We recall a former visit during the Conferences and the favorable and lasting impression Dr. Fry made upon those who heard him.

During the absence of the pastor of People's Christian Church, Dover, Del., Rev. R. C. Helfenstein, D. D., who is in England on the interchange of pastors' mission, services are being held regularly on Sunday, both morning and evening, a full program having been arranged by Dr. Helfenstein before his departure for England two weeks ago. The Sunday services are being well attended and much interest manifested, notwithstanding the fact that the thermometer frequently stands around the 85 to 90 mark. The congregation of People's Church greatly appreciated the services of Rev. D. M. Helfenstein, D. D., father of our pastor, who supplied the pulpit of People's Church the last two Sundays in July. His messages, as usual, were full of thought and inspiration.

The Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference meets with Mt. Olivet Church, Rockingham County, Va., Wednesday, August 15th, for three days. Rev. B. J. Earp, Winchester, Va., is the president; Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va., secretary, and Rev. W. B. Fuller, Linville, Va., is pastor of the local Church. Among the visitors outside of the Conference on the program and expected for addresses are Dr. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary, Dayton, Ohio; Mr. C. D. Johnston, circulation manager of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Elon College, N. C.; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary Southern Christian Convention, Elon College, N. C., and Rev. R. A. Whitten, field secretary of Elon College. This is the eightieth annual session of this Conference, and a good attendance is expected.

Prof. A. R. VanCleave, who has been on a leave of absence the past year from his professorship in Elon College, is to return to the college to take up his work here again at the opening of the fall term in September. The Herald of Gospel Liberty, August 2nd, carried the following: "Rev. A. R. VanCleave closed his services with the Mt. Olive Church, Central Indiana Conference, with a very delightful all-day meeting on the fourth Sunday of July. The pastor was assisted in the pulpit by Rev. James Conlin, of Mecca, Ind. Bro. VanCleave has but one more visit to each of his other Churches—Merom and Big Springs, of the Western Indiana Conference. This early closing of his pastorate is necessitated by his return to his work at Elon College. These Churches have not yet secured a successor."

A loving and most characteristic letter comes from our dear friend and brother, Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga. He is much improved in health but cannot yet talk and can walk but very little. He writes with an unsteady hand, but his heart is true and his devotion to the Church is unabated. He asked his Church at Richland to raise its missionary quota, and, though it was at a hard time of the year for such an undertaking, it was done, and Bro. Elder's heart was made to rejoice. What little the Church lacked, he himself gave even from his need. He continues: "I am so anxious about the Church work and want to do what I can to help. I can write but little and cannot talk, but how I do long to be back at the work! I feel like I could preach with new power, but the good Lord's will be done." Here, indeed, is a hero of the cross who has served his God and his Church with his full strength; and, while he is physically unable to labor now, the heart of a Church bears him up and loves him for the life of sacrificial service he has lived and is living.

In our meeting and mingling with pastors in the Christian Church, we have not found one of our number who can bring himself to the advocacy of Governor Al. Smith, of New York, for President of the United States. We have talked with several, none of whom can understand how a great party can expect the support of the votes of people who care for sobriety, justice and good government to favor a man for President who personally and politically, boldly and repeatedly, offends the moral sense and the moral principles, to say nothing of the religious convictions, for which they stand and which they advocate. It is a known and notorious fact that we are called on to vote for a man who, greatly to the regret of his closest friends, indulges himself to excess and patronizes and politically supports the liquor interests and other forms of organized evil against which the minister is called upon and is expected to preach and to teach in public utterance and in private life. As one of our best-beloved and best-known ministers said to the editor recently: "Tammany Hall and politicians have forced the issue upon us and the ministers of the gospel of righteousness are standing with their backs to the wall, and they can do nothing else than cry aloud and spare not in a time like this."

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

We have been busy a good part of the time this week getting the work started on the building, but the people have responded well that we have seen. Hands are at work and material is coming in. Money is scarce, making the task all the harder and making it all the more necessary for you who read this to respond at once. Many write that they rejoice with us and hope to see us succeed, but include no check or other obligation. This gets us nowhere in the way of actually putting the job over. May God help you to see the crisis that we are in and cause you to give your consent to make a real sacrifice to see the work go now. My dear brother, please read this report carefully, then go to God in prayer and ask Him to direct you to just what you should do for this work. The report for the week is as follows:

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

THE SURRENDERED LIFE.

By JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher.

"Christ Jesus, my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things."—Phil. 3:8.

Rightly may one read the first four words of this text when he has pondered the meaning of the last ten. "Christ Jesus, my Lord," when said with the completeness of surrender with which Paul said them, bear in their meaning a full measure of life and eternity, or eternal life. When one ponders it sufficiently, the highest thing one can say is just what Paul said to the Philippian Church: "Christ Jesus, my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things." I considered the call to the ministry a long time before I yielded; and when I did yield it was the uppermost wish of my heart that the day might come when I could say with Paul: "For whom I have suffered the loss of all things." To know Jesus is to love Him, and to love Him like that is life eternal. Paul called Him Lord. Hear what Jesus has to say about the Lord: "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment." When I read that commandment I ask myself, Will anybody ever do it? Will there ever be a mortal man willing, ready and strong to do just that thing? It is the first and great commandment; will somebody keep it? Man is often so weak, wayward, and sinful; will there arise those able to keep that first and great commandment? "Love the Lord . . . with all . . . with all . . . with all." To know Jesus is to want to say out of one's own heart, "I will." Paul said "Christ Jesus, my Lord," and I thank God he meant it!

It is a process, but it is one in which we must be in dead earnest. Normally, this love does not come full-blown in one's breast. To mention the name of Peter in the light of this text is to bring to mind one who wanted to keep this commandment but found the attainment thereof a height hard to reach. When he had reached that height he looked far down into the valley of his past struggles and said: "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to whom be glory both now and forever. Amen." It is a growth.

"The heights of great men reached and kept
Were not obtained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night."

"First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."

Briefly, let us set forth the three great steps which bring us to the love which prompted the text found in the writings of Paul, and which text so many of us wish to be the goal of our lives. It comes by complete surrender to Jesus as Lord. First, then, we must hear about Him. "And how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard?" There was pushing into a multitude one day on the banks of the river Jordan a young man to hear what John the Baptist was saying. The young man heard about Jesus. He was coming to give a spiritual baptism. John the Baptist was not worthy, so he himself declared, to stoop down and unloose His sandals. It sounded as though He was the one for whom the world was waiting. This young man desired to hear more about Him. He joined himself to the Baptist and became one of his disciples, in order that he might learn more about Jesus.

It is the normal process. There is a leader in this Church today who did not come to our Sunday School class to learn theology primarily, nor to become a Christian. He came to hear about Jesus. The privilege of hearing about Jesus is so commonplace in the minds of great masses of the folks they are failing to improve that opportunity. It is the first great step toward the goal for which our very lives are set. How terrible if we overlook that fact. From the first baby-lessons at our mother's knee to the last message of our minister or friend, the great theme for which the heart yearns is Jesus. The Church, the religious press, seminaries, and all places of Christian instruction bid you like the Baptist of long ago to come hear of Jesus. Tellers of the story of Jesus, the heavens bless your message. Teachers of religion in the home, Sunday School, pulpit, and the daily walks of life, may God speed your lesson. Yours is a privilege and a duty more beautiful than the mind of man has ever conceived. May you never be weary in well doing, for in due season you shall reap if you faint not.

"We've a Saviour to show to the nations
Who the path of sorrow has trod,
That all of the world's great peoples Might come to the truth of God."

"How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace and bring glad tidings of good things!"

It was not enough that this young son of Zebedee heard John the Baptist tell about Jesus. He sought the opportunity of coming in contact with Him.

The second step is that of being introduced to Jesus. To me this means more than simply hearing about Him. John, the son of Zebedee, had heard about Jesus, and this created a desire in his heart to see Him, and know Him. It did not affect Paul in the same way. He heard about Jesus, and it aroused his animosity against Him. But whichever it does, and whatever it does, we must know of Him before we can believe on Him. John, the son of Zebedee, was standing in the Jordan multitude and heard John the Baptist say, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." He and another of those who were seeking to come into contact with Jesus followed Him. They asked Jesus about His personal life, and He told them to come and abide that day with Him. We do not know what the conversations were; we do not know how these eager young fellows hung upon Jesus' words; but we do know that they went to their brethren saying, "We have found the Messiah!" It was a never-to-be-forgotten day! Jesus Himself must have found some of the real joy of earthly life in that day's contacts. Two young men eager to know of Him and God, the Father; two young men with potential discipleship in their characters, and two young men who eventually went all the way with Jesus—one of them to martyrdom, the other to the Isle of Patmos; one of them to the head of the first great Church council, the other standing under the cross received from Jesus His mother.

But what about John the Baptist? It was he who introduced these men to Christ. While they were abiding with Jesus that day, John the Baptist was still preaching his gospel of repentance. So, it is ours to introduce men to Christ, to form the contacts; and it is Christ's to constrain them by His love, "for the love of Christ constraineth us." We do not know what was happening for the rest of the day on the Jordan banks. Great numbers might have been baptized, or the crowds might have begun to go back to cities and villages hardby; but one thing we do know: John the Baptist had done a day's work well, for he had caused two young men to come into the confidence and sway of Christ Jesus. Are we sometimes discouraged? or weary? or about to think our work is in vain? Behold, the man whom Jesus remembered as the great among those born of women, and as the greatest among the prophets. He had not taught them much; he had not greatly embedded himself into their lives; he had introduced them to Christ. That is your business and mine. That is the business of the Church. For that sort of labor, and that sort of application to duty waits the wide, wide world. To that business we should bend our energies, give our money, and live our lives.

It is not enough, however, simply for one to come into contact with Jesus. We come to my third point: He must surrender his life to Jesus. It is a growth, I repeat, it is a process as Peter full well knew and wrote. After John and Andrew abode with Jesus that day, and had that wonderful contact with Him, they yet went back to their fishing nets. Maybe you have seen Jesus. Maybe you have been with Him. Maybe you have felt the power of His spirit; but you have often found yourself afar from Him. Your experience is common with many of the disciples. And some to whom He has spoken never yield their lives to Him. Witness the rich young ruler. It seems to me that to be almost persuaded to yield one's life to Christ and then turn sorrowfully away is life's great tragedy. There was life's deepest and finest urge within this young man. He wanted to be in perfect tune with God; to be completely and wholly reconciled to Him. Augustine has said "Our souls are made for Thee, and they are never at rest until they rest in God." Jesus had told the young man just what the depths of his heart yearned for. It was the wish of one with such a pious heart as his to love God with all his soul; but great possessions pulled him away from Christ.

There are others who have the contact, but do not hasten to make complete surrender of their lives. Witness Nicodemus, who came to Jesus after having heard of Him, formed the contact which was so beautiful, bringing forth the world-sweet text: "For God so loved the world," etc., and yet he never surrendered to his Lord until after He was crucified! It was then he brought sweet perfume and complete surrender. How much of joy he had missed! How much of help he had deprived his Lord of! and how much sorrow he must have caused himself! Why should we waste the years? Why should we follow Jesus afar off? Why not, if necessary, "suffer the loss of all things for Him?" There was a growing loss in the life of Paul; but it was a loss which enabled him to say with all his heart, with all his soul, and with all his mind: "Christ Jesus, my Lord." He had kept the first great commandment. O, God, give us grace and knowledge to do likewise. Amen.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

NOSING AROUND NEW YORK.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

I closed my last letter to THE SUN in this editorial correspondence with scenes of commercial and historic interest in upper New York State. My letter was so long I closed just before reaching what proved to me to be some of the most sublime and striking scenery of the trip. Our train from Ft. Edward, via Troy, on the New York Central, trails the Hudson all the way from Albany, the capital, to New York City, the metropolis. I enjoyed this journey under most favorable scenic and weather conditions. Such a happy blending of natural beauty and artistic achievement one does not enjoy often in a lifetime. For nearly three hours of a late afternoon our good train sped along the river shore, often almost dipping into the cooling waters of the placid river. On the west bank of the river the Peekskill Mountains, in a long, graceful range, arose here and there to large, blue-dome, rugged heights, and here and there sloped off into graceful, green valleys dotted with beautiful estates and prosperous farms. When the river receded far enough from the mountains there were immaculate mansions and homes surrounded by wide-spreading lawns and colorful flower gardens forming a background from which one could look up to the overhanging mountains or down across the placid water of the Hudson. I shall never forget the sunset. For more than an hour the king of day, in a blaze of red glory, seemed to hesitate to hide his brilliant face and shut off from view scenery that gladdened the heart and cheered the mind of the multitudes of mankind who were permitted, as this writer was, to look upon it. One wonders which was most to be admired and which was more reassuring and restful, the long, far-stretching, placid river; the wide, beautiful, well-kept estates and palaces, or the towering, blue-dome peaks, touched with the green and red of a reluctant setting sun. I took a pencil and made this entry in my notebook: "If a person who trails the Hudson on an afternoon like this cannot worship God in the holiness of beauty, and also in the beauty of holiness, then such an one is hard-hearted and unemotional indeed." We were rushing on to New York City, with its multitudes of teeming humanity, with their burdens and their problems, their pleasures and their griefs, but here hard by them an infinite and compassionate Heavenly Father was bathing a world in the richness and glory of a fading summer sun and was quietly and graciously placing a mantle of calmness and repose over His beautiful world. The writer knows that houses of worship are built that His children may assemble themselves and worship toward His holy throne, but God Himself has built a house—a house not made with human hands—and some portions of that house are adorned with a beauty and suffused with a glory that man cannot rival or approach, and in it, even in the house of nature and nature's God, man may lift his heart in referential awe and gladness, and praise Him for His infinite goodness and for His loving-kindness even to His wayward and erring children. Trailing the Hudson on a quiet afternoon beside placid waters and towering mountains and the sinking of a summer sun, is, indeed, a delight to the heart and gives one a glimpse of a glory and beauty that human hands cannot copy and that human skill cannot portray. After three weeks of "nosing around" in the city and State of New York, meeting and mingling with many delightful people and inspired by many splendid scenes and experiences, THE SUN's editor returns to his task and his duties with renewed energy and a desire to take up the task of daily toil and carry into it fresh strength of body, mind and heart.

BRUTALLY FRANK—"RUBS IT IN."

Some of our politicians, in their fervor for the word "democracy," would try to camouflage the issue in the present campaign, or to make us believe that prohibition is not the main issue. These politicians are having rough sailing, since their leader, Governor Al. Smith, loses no opportunity of being "brutally frank" with them and "rubbing it in." It is Governor Smith and Tammany Hall who insist, day in and day out, by word and deed, that this campaign is avowedly a campaign against prohibition. Governor Smith, backed by Tammany Hall, has been able to nullify the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act in the State of New York. Smith reminds us that he and his followers were able to remove from the statute books of New York every vestige of law that would lend any help to enforcing the Volstead act, and that, in so far as a State could do so, the State of New York had nullified the eighteenth amendment.

Our interest at the present is not political, but moral. We wish only for SUN readers to have the actual facts, as Candidate Al. Smith insists that they shall be given to the country, and, especially, those facts, as he is determined to rub them in on the dry forces of the South.

To begin with, he chose a man for manager of his campaign whose previous political affiliations and his present attitude show that the only point of enthusiasm between him and Governor Smith is their avowed opposition to prohibition. Both men are known to the American people almost solely on this single account. Mr. Raskob, of course, decided that the Republican party at present was not as wet as the Democratic party or he would have remained a Republican, as he was up to the nomination of Governor Smith. Moreover, lest the national committee of his party should be misled, he frankly declares that he accepts this chairmanship because it gave him an opportunity for (we quote his own words) "helping to relieve the country of the damnable affliction of prohibition." This identifies the enthusiasm of the chairman with that of his leader, and gives "a double dose of a double compound." Or, to put it in the words of the Nashville Christian Advocate, "they defy the country with liquor and Romanism." Now, if the dry South wishes a man in the White House who frankly states "that he longs for the return of the day when he can put his feet on the bar and blow the froth away" from the foaming liquor, they certainly have it in Al. Smith. He is depending upon the votes of a dry South, whose conviction and sentiment for prohibition and dryness he defies, and politicians in the South are saying, despite this defiance, that the South will remain "solid," of course.

Just one other word: We are told that we must not be sectarian and bigoted, and vote against a man because of his religion. And yet the Catholics, who sponsor such preaching, are also brutally frank and lose no opportunity of rubbing it in good and hard on Protestantism. As a distinguished Catholic, writing recently in the Atlantic Monthly, declared, of course, all Protestants and all others not members of the Catholic Church are heretics, and are to be considered a people without any religion or religious faith whatever. Let that go for what it may be worth, and content ourselves for the time being with meditating upon the following from a declaration given to the world in the columns of The Commonwealth, a Catholic paper, edited by Roman Catholic laymen. (Possibly this will serve to show some of our Southern dry Democrats that, however much they seek to camouflage or side-step, Governor Smith and the Catholic Church will have none of it and will be perfectly frank and "rub it in.") We quote from The Commonwealth as follows:

"In compelling the national committee to accept Mr. Raskob, Governor Smith aroused fear, doubt, and opposition among those committeemen who thought it bad politics to rub it in. Mr. Raskob is a wet, a Catholic, and urban. It would be better politics to assuage the hostility in the South and West by poulticing Smith's wetness, urbanism, and Catholicism with some chairman who is dry, Protestant, and rural. The Governor overrode their opposition. His way is to meet every charge by admitting it and saying, 'What of it?' He is charged with being wet, Tammany, urban, and Catholic; it is said that he would be too friendly to immigrants. Before the Houston Convention adjourned he sent a telegram reminding it that he was a wet, and in it he made several references to 'Divine guidance,' and every man who read it was instantly reminded that his religion was Catholic. He made his first speech in Tammany Hall, and in it he informed the country that he was not only a Tammany man but an officer of Tammany. He made another speech that day; it was to an audience mainly of immigrants. Now he picks as chairman a Catholic, a wet, and a city man. His way of meeting a charge is to say: 'It's true; now think it over and see if it's so very grave after all. Is it?' The doubters on the national committee regard this as bad politics. It is certainly new, in fact unprecedented, whether it is good or not."

WHAT KEEPS THEM APART?

I have often wondered as to why those who profess to be followers of Jesus fail to bring the Churches that exist to advance His kingdom together in union in answer to His prayer, and I have concluded that there are three reasons.

First: A pride in pedigree. I have just been reading an article by an Episcopal minister in which he graciously suggests that the Episcopal Church is willing to pass on its pedigree by ordaining a certain number of ministers in non-Episcopal Churches as bishops, commissioning them to ordain the ministers of their several connections by the laying on of holy hands. This brother has a pride in the pedigree of the Episcopal Church. He is sure that the Episcopal preachers have something which the preachers of the Christian Church, for example, do not have, and he is willing to give it to them, but we have looked at the Episcopal preachers and we have not seen that they are possessed of any more grace than the ministers of our own Church. We are proud of our pedigree, too. So there you have it.

Second: Partisans in the distinctive things that set off one denomination from another. The Christian Church has been accused of using the word Christian in a partisan sense. Those who think so insist on calling us Christ-ians, pronouncing the first syllable designating our Church exactly as we pronounce Christ, and refusing to call us Christians. We know that this is not true, but we are proud of the name Christian. We are proud of our cardinal principles, too, which for more than a hundred years we have offered as a platform for Christian union. Theological principles present an even more serious barrier to Christian union than the matter of name. Theology has become a very voluminous science, but it has not always been luminous. It has certainly divided the Church of Christ into little groups and competing factions.

Third: Property rights and official positions. The only man who went away from Jesus sorrowful was the rich young ruler. He had money and he had an office. It is the leaders of the denominations and the property which they (the denominations) hold which keeps the prayer of our Lord for the oneness of His followers from being answered. It is a shame, but it is sadly true.

This writer believes that the Christian and Congregational Churches mean business in their advances toward union, and he hopes and prays that they will be the first two denominations in the United States to come together and that their union will be but the beginning of what shall prove to be the final reunion of the divided hosts of Christ in America.

MISSIONS AS AN INVESTMENT.

Increase of wealth imposes upon mankind the responsibility of making investments. It may be a serious matter to earn money, but it is a more serious matter to invest money wisely. If all investments were wisely made, panics would be impossible. Three elements enter into wise investments: (a) security, (b) permanence, (c) profit. Again, it ought to benefit the invested, the investor, and others. If money is placed on deposit in a bank of dishonest management, there is no security. If one put money in a hotel on an island, and high tide destroy it, the investment is not permanent. If one take stock in a real mine of coal so far from market that it cannot be operated successfully, there is no profit. Any one of these elements being absent, the investment is not good. If one invest in real estate in a growing and prosperous city, the investment may be safe, permanent and profitable. The Astor estate illustrates this form of investment. The founder of this wealthy house made investments in real estate in New York City and no ordinary course of financial depression can affect their possessions. In addition to these elements, good investments involve mutual interests. It is not too much to say that Christendom loses more money by unwise investment than she gives to missions; nor is it too much to aver that her best investments have been in missions.

1. Investment in missions are safe investments. The opening of new territory, the elevation of backward peoples, the increase of business by new civilizations, repay the expenditures in securities of the highest order. Character produces character, and the greatest security is in improving society. Whatever may be thought or said of the Christian religion, any teaching and work that makes men wiser and better adds to the increase and security of values. When Paul and his co-workers carried the gospel into Europe they added to the security of all that was dearest to mankind. The mission of Christianity to the Sandwich Islands proved this to be true. It not only made that island Christian, but rich in wealth and good government. To cultivate and establish moral ideas is to increase security; and in missions there is an investment in manhood and womanhood as well as in money.

2. Investments in missions are permanent. Time is a great factor in values. Mining is a great industry, but nothing has less value than an exhausted mine. The poorest farm is gold compared with it. The fishing industry is great because it is permanent. The ocean is back of it. Agriculture is great because it is endless. The earth, the seasons, and God are back of the farm. The whiskey business was not permanent because the Church, business, and the State were all against it. It had to yield to those three institutions that missions has produced. Nothing planted in this country at the cost of faith, blood, and money has paid so well as the gospel. It is the substance of our civilization and of our wealth. The settlement of this country was as much missionary as it was political.

3. Investments in missions are profitable. The question of this age is, Does it pay? Some interpret this as the expression of a sordid spirit, gross in its quality and selfish in its aim. The Bible raises that question. "What shall it profit a man?" The parables suggest that profits are to be expected. Where gains were made to the talents, the servants were commended; where no gains were made, the servants were condemned. God requires profits in our work, and speaks of a sower who went forth to sow, and seed were cast unto good ground and the harvest was hundred-fold; some sixty, and some thirty-fold. The cost of missions from 1819 to 1869 was $1,220,000. The profits of American trade in 1871 was $669,964—more than half of all we had spent in fifty years. Count the profits of that year for ten years and it is $6,609,640, or $5 for every dollar spent the first fifty years. This gives the key to commercial results, and the moral and spiritual results are incalculable. The real missionary spirit at work would prevent panics, manifold the productive energy of mankind, lift the national and international spirit above anything yet known, unite the Christian world, crush skepticism that lurks under the cloth, and grows in the schools; multiply the activities of the world, give perpetual increase to its wealth, and make all natives sing for joy. No money and no life is so wisely invested as in doing the will of God.

CLASSIFYING THE CHRIST.

Dr. Will Durant, who is creating quite a little comment as author and philosopher, recently gave a list of the great thinkers of all time. He began with Confucius and ended with Charles Darwin. We had read some of Dr. Durant's brilliant philosophy and were prepared fairly well for his erratic decisions as to the world's great thinkers. For instance, he includes in his list Confucius, Plato, Aristotle, Spinoza, Copernicus, Francis Bacon, Newton, Kent and Voltaire. So much for this philosopher's list of "productive thinkers." It is especially noted for the conspicuous absences which one finds. He omits from his list Moses, the Christ, Paul, Luther, Calvin, Edwards, John Wesley. Some scholars shows where they themselves are to be classed in the public mind by the classifications they make of others. Think of a scholar leaving Moses and the Christ out of the world's great thinkers. True, many scholars do leave Christ out, because they say He is beyond classification or comparison, but Will Durant says He is to be put down among the secondary thinkers. So much the worse for Will Durant. More volumes have been inspired by the thinking of Jesus, the Christ, by His scholarship, His learning and His insight into the philosophy of life than by any other thinker in all the category of the great. He spoke as never man spake, even as one having authority, and certainly no one can speak with authority and power who is not at the same time a great and a profound thinker. The scholars have tried to analyze Him, the teachers have tried to teach like Him, the preachers have tried to portray Him, but He remains alone in a class to Himself as the world's most profound thinker, as the one who had the keenest insight into the intellect and heart of man. So much so that one writer said of Him, "He needeth not that any one should tell Him, for He knew what was in men." About the only violence that Will Durant does in his classification is violence to his own judgment and estimate of character. No man ever taught as did the man Christ Jesus, and certainly He could not have taught and could not now be teaching the teachers and the scholars of the world if He had not been, and if He is not still, the very greatest and the most profound thinker our world has ever known.

MANY ADDRESSES.

Dr. W. T. Whitsett, of Whitsett, N. C., who has been serving for some years as historian of Guilford County, and who has for many years been making extensive researches into local and Church history, is busily engaged in delivering numerous historical addresses during the summer months. His recent schedule is as follows:

August 2nd, Field family reunion, Climax, N. C.; August 3rd, Summers-Cobb Association, McLeansville, N. C.; August 6th, reunion of the Albert Ingle family connections, Gibsonville, N. C.; August 8th, Trollinger Association, Haw River, N. C.; August 9th, the N. C. Ross families, Pleasant Garden, N. C.; August 15th, the Coble reunion, Julian, N. C.; August 18th, Springfield Memorial Association, High Point, N. C.; August 26th, Burke family Association, Bonlee, N. C.; September 4th, Eastern Conference, N. C. Synod, Rocky Mount, N. Many of these addresses have been in course of preparation for months, and quite a number will be issued in a series of historical monographs, four numbers of which have already come from the press. In this way, quite an extensive collection of historical matter is being gathered pertaining to early Churches, families, local events and State and national matters of importance.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"Slow but sure" may be an old-time expression, but it contains universal truth. Speed may have its place in human progress, but it is brief in duration and space. The waterfalls of the world are attractive and have their true place in the rivers of the world, but it is the miles of slow movement above the falls that supply the water for the beauty and power the falls represent. The beauty world does not last. The flowers that are so beautiful come in short time and soon fade. The leaves of the forest adorn the mountains and the plains in the springtime and fall when the frost strikes them; but the trees which are of slow growth live on until the great forests supply timber to house the world. Beautiful young women are the first to fade. "Beauty is but skin deep" is not simply five words.

Brilliant minds may fade before the plodder reaches permanent success. Quick growth means early decline. It is easy to misjudge men by the speed they make in the path of life. The student that makes the best grade on examination may not render the best service to his generation. The old story of the race between the hare and the tortoise illustrates this universal truth. Real fortunes are not made in a short time; and those that seem to be made in a day vanish in a night. Rich today and poor tomorrow has been the experience of many. The permanent rich man is the tortoise among men. Permanent growth is slow. The oak and the pine are witnesses to this statement. The giants of the forest are century products of slow but steady growth.

Good character is not attained in a day; regeneration may be experienced in a moment of time, but character is built upon foundations that require time and effort. A person may become a Christian in a moment, for that is the gift of God; but Christian character is a slow growth by personal effort and the help of the Bible and the Holy Spirit working in man. Apples are formed in a season, but the tree that bears them took years to grow. Slow people are often misjudged, and people of rapid development are, too. Wait and you will get the true estimate of both. The car that speeds may be the last to reach the beach. The world moves forward through the men and women who stick to their work. The Church grows by the prayers, the attendance, the support, and the loyalty of the members who are always there. The best financial support is that maintained by the largest number who pays their dues regularly through all the years. Life is not a blossom, but a tree; not a waterfall, but a river; not a profession, but a character; and that character built on Jesus Christ as the chief cornerstone.

ELON LETTER.

Twenty-seven years ago the Ann Arbor Railway Company approached certain leaders of the Congregational Church and offered to give them a beautiful site on Lake Michigan on the eastern side of northern Lake Michigan, near Frankfort, if they would, within a year, invest $10,000 in property for an assembly house, lodge and dining-room. They should be privileged to sell the land along the lake to any one they might wish for summer residences. Among the leaders was the distinguished pastor of the United Church of Raleigh, Dr. J. Edward Kirby.

On Sunday, July 29, 1928, it was my pleasure to be present at the Congregational Assembly, which is held from June 15th to September 15th each summer in the tabernacle which was erected within the first year of the project. Some two hundred and fifty families have erected cottages on the site that was originally donated to the Congregational Church. In addition to this, along Lake Crystal, a small inland lake, bordering the site originally given the Congregationalists, other families have built. So that on Sundays frequently the assembly hall is full, the capacity being about six or seven hundred.

During the summer, not only are services held on Sunday at 11 o'clock, with vespers on the golf course in the late afternoon, but there are also religious lectures, musical programs, utility bazaars, together with tennis tournaments and special events for boys and girls. The dining-room and lodge cares for those who do not wish to spend the summer there in their own homes or rent cottages and the rate is very reasonable. The food is excellent.

The climate is like late fall in North Carolina, and is delightful. The Sunday it was our privilege to be there it was cold enough to wear an overcoat in the late evening. Objectionable amusements have been kept away, because the Church is in complete control of the situation.

One of the finest cottages in the group is the one which occupies the site originally of the cottage of Ex-president Henry Churchill King, of Oberlin, but now owned by Dr. Kirby and completely rebuilt according to his plans since he purchased it some ten years ago.

In the delightful Kirby cottage are gathered for the summer Dr. and Mrs. Kirby, their son and daughter, with their daughter-in-law and son-in-law and three grandchildren, a most delightful company with whom to be associated, and if Dr. Kirby excels himself as a preacher in anything it is in the generous and gracious hospitality of the summer home which he and Mrs. Kirby maintain at the Congregational assembly grounds at Pilgrim, Mich., near Frankfort.

The assembly program for the summer is under the jurisdiction of Dr. R. J. Locke, of Chicago, Ill., who is field superintendent of Illinois and Michigan for the Congregational Church. His office, except during the summer months, is 19 S. LaSalle Street, Chicago, Ill.

Among the distinguished Congregationalists whom I met while there was the president of Druvy College, Dr. Thomas W. Nadal. There were present dozens of college and university professors, among whom I noted particularly Dr. L. E. Osborne, professor of sociology in the University of Redlands, and Dr. W. D. Waterman, professor of botany in Northwestern University.

Of the field and general secretaries of the Congregational Church, I had the pleasure of meeting Dr. I. R. Smith, of the Congregational Church Building Society, New York City, and Dr. Wallace, superintendent from Montana; Dr. Charles E. Burton, general secretary of the national council; Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, of Washington, D. C., and Dr. E. M. Halladay, of New York City, also have cottages there, but were away at the time of my visit.

There was a bishop of the Methodist Church there—Bishop J. B. Birney, of China. There was a superintendent of an orphanage in Kansas; Rev. W. D. Breck, an evangelist; Dr. J. M. Welch, of Wheaton, Ill., and a distinguished editor, Dr. W. H. Phelps.

Of distinguished preachers, there were the world-famous Charles M. Sheldon, of Topeka, Kans.; Rev. John Best, of Wisconsin; Dr. E. Bonner Allen, of Oak Park, Ill.; Dr. J. R. Nichols, of Chicago; Dr. H. A. Armstrong, of St. Louis, and Dr. Frank J. Small, of Omaha, Neb.

Of laymen, I recall particularly Nicholas Johnston, of Aurora, Ill., president of the board of trustees of Wheaton College; O. J. Hill, of Kansas City, interested in the production of lime and known throughout the west in that industry, and Mr. Burroughs, distinguished architect of Davenport, Iowa. I wish that I could remember all of the great and good men that I met, but unfortunately some of the names have escaped me.

I did not meet a single person who did not express great satisfaction in the proposed union of the Congregational and Christian Churches. They feel that for these two Churches to come together will be the beginning of the answering of the prayer of our Lord for the oneness of His followers.

The Congregational Church has wrought well in founding this summer assembly grounds and in bringing together these distinguished ministers and laymen and women workers that they may spend their vacation periods not only in the midst of beautiful natural surroundings, but of glad and uplifting fellowship.

WHAT PRICE FREEDOM?

The freedom of the individual, the right of every one to have and express opinions, to act according to personal convictions are the basic principles upon which this country was founded. In the days of our forefathers for any one to challenge or directly attack these sacred privileges was to cause immediately an uproar, on every hand would have been heard shouts of disapproval and criticism, and the virtue of individuality was then highly praised. Yet, in the present day, it is wondered if, possibly unknowingly, these prized possessions have not been given up; abandoned because of the lack of backbone to stand out alone and assert one's convictions in the face of criticism. Is it the mark of softness that goes along with the luxuries of civilization? Any coward will go along if the crowd is large enough, but it takes a man of courage to face danger alone. It is easy enough to join in on the chorus, but it takes a little nerve to try a solo.

Clever propagandists have taken advantage of this knowledge as a means to attain their own desires. Many examples are seen in every-day life. A man steps wearing his straw hat upon a certain day, even though he would enjoy wearing it a little longer, because every one else does; the majority base their mode of dress, their actions, and thoughts and opinions upon the examples of others. Sheep-like, they blindly follow the herd, no matter if the path leads over the precipice and to death on the rocks below.

Politicians have also seen the desirability of making use of this public weakness. For several years the public has been groomed to believe that those who express themselves as adverse to the policies of a certain Church are narrow, bigoted and ignorant. Now, they extend themselves even further and introduce the element of force into their endeavors to sway the people in accordance with their will. At present the tendency seems to be towards the control of the vote by coercion and threats. The choice of voting for all the nominees of the party or being excommunicated from that party it seems would be put into effect by the party leaders. In other words, one is not to be given the opportunity of voting for the man of his selection unless that selection coincides with that of a few party leaders. Should one choose to oppose their choice and act according to his own convictions in one instance, he is to be barred from voting the rest of the ticket. Are such methods in accordance with true democracy? Do they not destroy all rights of the individual to form and vote his own opinion based upon intelligent reasoning in respect to each individual candidate? In reality, if obeyed, it seems that such methods would take the right of franchise from the majority and put it into the hands of a few. What joy to a man the possession of a gift if by threats of a whip he is made to use it in accordance with the wishes and for the benefit of some one else. Has he really possession? Are men who call themselves lovers of liberty, the descendants of those who gave their lives for freedom, to sanction such actions by not voicing a protest?

It is believed that when the people realize the full import of such dictatorial and tyrannical policies the cry of protest will be so loud and long as to cause the sponsors of these methods to quickly abandon them and be dissuaded from their further use. Already Mr. Ed. Maddox, chairman of the Georgia Democratic Committee, has declared that Georgia Democrats may vote for their State Democratic nominees without necessarily voting for the presidential nominee of that party. It is expected that other States will fall into line with this statement as it becomes obvious that the public has not yet reached that point of submissiveness where it can be made to jump at every crack of the whip.

As another result of propaganda, numbers have been convinced that it is of such merit to be known as tolerant that one in order to prove attainment of this so-called tolerance must not only smother his own convictions but must also criticise and ridicule those who have courage enough to express their thoughts. The idea has also been broadcasted and adopted to some extent, in spite of boasted freedom of thought and speech, that in some professions certain topics of discussion should be carefully avoided. A writer in the Courier-Journal of Louisville, Ky., gives an example and presents a question in part as follows:

"Does the law of our land allow the members of every profession to form a free opinion about candidates for office and then express that opinion publicly, if they can get any one to listen? I believe the correct answer to the above question, according to our Constitution, is yes.

"Now, I am an engineer but my father is a minister. Because I am an engineer I can say what I please about the coming election, but because he is a minister he has to practice birth control on his opinions lest some one else learns that he has reasons for or against supporting certain candidates.

"Maybe some brilliant mentor will explain just where one's duty as a citizen and in a professional capacity meet. Why not jump up and declare that street car conductors have no right to mix in politics because they see everything in terms of seven cents. Every man, regardless of profession, is supposed to keep himself informed as to conditions and act for the good of the nation.

"In the last analysis there is no profession that holds such high standards of practice for its members and raises the social, moral and personal codes of the community to more ideal levels than the ministry. After all, preachers are just human like the rest of us. I grew up with one who was also a mighty fine father and pal. If any one class of men surely do want and work for more desirable society, the preachers are it.

"Why muzzle the best men we have? I am afraid that those who would deprive others of the right of free speech have by their own judgment forfeited that right themselves."

Another recently frequent assertion is that in considering one for a public office the question of religion should be entirely disregarded. Such a one is in a position to influence legislation and the morals of the people. Every other influence, such as environment, character, education, political beliefs, and opinions are taken into consideration and carefully weighed, and yet, it is claimed that religion, which probably plays a greater part than any other factor in the average man's life, a factor that has made history and defined the boundaries of countries, must be absolutely taboo. Why?

Who does not believe the allegation that the Roman Catholic Church is greatly concerned in politics? It is hardly possible for a fair-minded man to discredit such reports when the happenings of intolerance and prejudice to those of other beliefs are evident every day in countries which they dominate. Who does not believe that if any prominent Catholic receive a nomination for an important political office he will receive 95 per cent of the Catholic vote? Is it more harmful for a Protestant to vote for one of his faith than it is for Catholic to do the same thing?

Are the free and unafraid to act upon their own convictions, asserting their individuality, exercising the privilege of freedom of thought, or must they succumb to clever publicity and be held meek and submissive by the fear of ridicule and criticism? H.

BEREA.

The annual home-coming day of the Berea (Norfolk) Christian Church will be held this year on the first Sunday in September. There will be two services, one in the morning and the other in the afternoon. Dinner will be served on the Church lawn and many ex-members and old friends of the Church are expected to attend the services.

The special feature of the day will be messages by two former pastors of the Church—Chaplain H. E. Rountree, of the U. S. Navy, will speak in the morning, and Rev. W. C. Hook, Holland, Va., will be the afternoon speaker.

STEWARDSHIP.

It is time that every pastor was carefully selecting the stewardship textbook that he will use in his November and December study campaign. The United Stewardship Council has just issued a list of "best books on Christian stewardship." It tells what books are available and what phase of stewardship each book presents. We shall be glad to send this list to any one free. It is time to plan now for November 1st.

We believe thoroughly that all our pastors, leading Conference and Church officials, and progressive workers should have the "Christian Annual" close at hand always. We have some 1928 and a few of former years that may be had at 60 cents. You will want them badly some day for file and for reference. Order today.

We heartily urge the use of charts and tabulations of reports at the annual Conference session. They should be carefully and neatly prepared on cardboard or large sheets of paper and placed where they may be easily studied. These should all be tabulated by the secretaries before coming to Conference and hung in plain sight before the opening gavel falls. The folks are interested in them. They stand in groups and see what the Churches are doing and make comparisons. That is one reason why people go to Conference. They are not much interested when the printed minutes reach their Church six months later.

By fixing definite dates when all reports must be in, this may be done. Church and Conference years do not need to end with the date of the annual Conference at all. They better not end then by far. Let the Conference people get the information they come after. Omit the public reading of those reports, for no one will remember them; but let them see those reports there on the wall nicely and accurately tabulated. Bring your Conference methods up to date. See that your reports are visualized to your Conference. We live in an age of electricity, motors, airplanes, and our Church methods should be the best rather than the antiquated.

Some of our Conferences have fine tabulated work that is among the most attractive items at the session. Do it right.

Every-Member Canvass.

Mr. L. C. Bender, a layman in our Albany, N. Y., Church, stresses the importance of the every-member canvass along these important lines:

1. The home is the best place for trained canvassers to present to every member of the family the need of the various items in the Church budget both for the local expenses and the benevolences. He says the home is the best place to do this.

2. That the stewardship of time needs to be stressed. Canvassers can stress the actual giving of time to Church work in such conversation. That the canvassers are then an example of that, as they are giving time to this work. Mr. Bender maintains that there is an intimate relationship between the giving of money and the giving of time and interest.

3. He says the home is the place to present the matter, for then the members are given opportunity to ask any questions. He urges the thorough training and canvassers. Only thus will the canvass be a success.

REVIVAL MEETING.

The revival began at Berea, Alamance County, the first Sunday in July, and continued through the 13th, a period of two weeks. The meeting opened the first Sunday with a fine spirit of worship and work. On Tuesday, Dr. C. C. Ryan, of Richmond, Va., came to us and did the preaching for the remainder of the meeting, which was received with great delight and deep appreciation. His messages were plain, forceful and vivid, arousing a deep and abiding interest in all who heard him. Congregations continued to grow at each service throughout the meeting. The music was splendid; Bro. Jesse Shephard led the music and did it with great credit. He can be safely recommended to any Church who is seeking a good spiritual song leader for such occasions. As a result of the meeting, there were scores who re-consecrated their lives to God and His service. More than twenty-five who professed faith in Christ are expected to unite with the Church when opportunity is afforded. It was one of the most successful meetings the writer was ever privileged to be in. It was a real treat to listen to Dr. Ryan as he brought such wonderful, soul-stirring gospel messages. The co-operation from the other Churches was wonderful. There was evidence of every one working and praying for one common cause, and surely God heard and answered.

The last night of the meeting I wish all could have seen it. Such as rejoices every preacher and his family—an old-fashioned pounding of everything that comes in handy for the table. The Ossippee mill gave us more than fifty yards of cloth, for which we are thankful, as well as the good folks who gave other articles.

The only sad thing that happened during the meeting occurred on Wednesday night of the last week. Mrs. B. M. Bennett, the wife of our faithful and beloved deacon, was taken sick and could not be with us. Just a little more than one week she was moved by the hand of death to her reward, death coming at the Rainey Hospital, Burlington, N. C., after a serious operation. Mrs. Bennett was only twenty-six years of age, was one of the Church's best Sunday School teachers, and the Church pianist. While she was a fine leader in every phase of Church life, she was excellent in handling junior boys and girls. Her body was laid to rest beneath a beautiful floral tribute in the Bethlehem Cemetery, a host of friends and relatives being present. Besides her husband, B. M. Bennett, she is survived by father and mother, three sisters and two brothers. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Dr. G. O. Lankford and Rev. J. F. Apple. May God bless and comfort the bereaved.

Belew Creek Meeting.

The revival meeting began at Belew Creek on the fourth Sunday in July and continued through the fifth Sunday. Rev. J. F. Apple was with us and did the preaching. Crowds were large and interest good. Bro. Apple did some fine preaching throughout the meeting, but the weather was so hot no one could enter into the meeting as they desired. However, many re-consecrated their lives to Christ. As to the number of professions, we are not able to know, but they were many. At this writing only one has united with the Church, but we are expecting more later.

TRIP TO THE ORPHANAGE.

On Sunday, July 29th, several of our Sunday School folks motored over to the Orphanage at Elon College, N. C. We arrived at 11 o'clock and were given a hearty welcome by Mrs. Weatherspoon. After resting for a while we went over to the college campus for lunch. Here we enjoyed a bountiful lunch and plenty of ice cold lemonade. Mabel Andrews, the little girl our Young Ladies' Sunday School Class supports, was our guest of honor. After this repast we went for an outside view of our college. Then over to the new building to attend the dedicatory service of Johnston Hall. This was fine and much enjoyed by all, but was saddened by the sudden and what proved fatal illness of Presiding Officer Bro. W. K. Holt. Many hearts were filled with sympathy and prayer for his recovery, but God called and he answered. We were well pleased with an outside view of our Orphanage. The boys and girls were a fine, jolly bunch. Superintendent C. D. Johnston was given honor and praise that was due him. May he be spared many years to be a father to the fatherless children. All that we send to help support our Orphanage is wisely spent, and may our offerings grow more liberal. It was a glad day for us in many ways. Going by the way of Henderson and Durham, and returning by Raleigh, we enjoyed the cities, towns, rivers and even country scenery. Then we enjoyed the sweet Christian fellowship of friends together. We are indeed grateful for the privilege, as well as pleasure, of spending the day at the Orphanage, for which we give all credit and praise to our good Sunday School superintendent, Mr. M. L. Grissom. Bro. Grissom just got busy and got others interested, then came with his nice new auto and gave us a free trip over. Inasmuch as we enjoyed the visit, we invite others to visit our Orphanage.

MRS. R. J. NEWTON.

HOLT.

William Kirkpatrick Holt was born in Alamance County, North Carolina, about three miles east of Burlington, on April 22, 1866. He passed to the other life, in Johnston Hall, at the Christian Orphanage, at Elon College, at 12:20 A. M., July 30, 1928, in the sixty-third year of his life, his last illness being a violent heart attack which came in the midst of dedicatory exercises of the building in which the end came. His going was in calmness, without struggle, and in the consciousness that his passing was at hand.

His parents were George W. and Carolyn Holt, of this county. They were of the old school of citizens, and of that earnest type of people that make a lasting and worthy contribution to the life of the community and the world.

On August 28, 1890, he was married to Miss Maud Gertrude May, the daughter of the late venerable D. B. and Eliza C. May, with the late Rev. J. W. Holt officiating at the wedding.

The deceased is survived by his wife and the following children: Vitus R. Holt, Mrs. J. H. McEwen, Corrie V., Violet, A. Glenn, Percy K., Nellie Mae, Wilmer, Edith, W. K., Jr., George A., and Harry Richard.

Surviving also are the following brothers and sisters: J. Alex Holt, Mrs. W. E. Hay, R. E. L., C. T., and Mrs. H. R. Clem, the latter of Fall River, Mass., all the former being residents of Burlington.

As his pastor, I wish to speak of the relationship of our friend to his home and his Church. In his home he was a true and faithful husband, and as a father he was truly most earnest and devoted. His love for his family and his home was strong, yet tender and paternal, and his positive thought and deep concern in behalf of those he loved never wavered. A lover of home, a generous and lavish provider for those who were nearest and dearest to him, he sought faithfully the welfare and happiness of this sacred circle. He leaves a vacancy there that only God, in His wisdom and mercy, can supply.

His religious experience dates to an early profession by his taking membership in the Church. And in the Church he was active, faithful and loyal to the last. On last Sunday, as was his regular custom, he was in his place in the Sunday School and in the worship of his Church. In his Church he had filled many places of trust and responsibility, bringing to each that energy, force, efficiency and business insight for which he was noted.

He had served as secretary of the Church for a number of years, as chairman of the finance committee, chairman of the building committee during the construction and erection of the edifice in which we now meet.

At the time of his going, he was a member of the board of trustees of the Church, chairman of the property committee, president of the Busy Men's Bible Class, and superintendent of the Orphanage work in the local Sunday School and Church in which he was vitally and tremendously interested.

His opinion and advice in the business counsels of the Church were of great weight and worth. And the stamp and impress of his strong personality will long be felt among his associates in the life of his Church. Indeed, a most capable, loyal, valuable member of this Church has fallen in our midst.

As a man, he was vigorous, fearless, courageous, tenacious and persistent to a marked degree. A leading citizen, a loyal churchman, a lover of the home, a community builder, and a leader of men passes to his eternal reward, leaving upon the community he loved the marks of his labor and service.

May we, then, his family, relatives and friends come to this hour of sorrow fearlessly and unafraid. May it be ours to see that all things work together for good to those who love God. That the afflictions and sorrows of life, when met in the spirit of Christ, work for us all a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. So may we rest in the secret place of the Most High, and go forth abiding under the shadow of the Almighty, "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ," when we shall see with undimmed vision and hear without any confusion of sound; when we shall no longer see through a glass darkly, but then face to face, and when we shall no longer know only in part but shall know as also we are known in our Father's eternal abiding place of imperturbable peace, unshadowed understanding, in the place where life, perfect life, shall end—less be.

G. O. LANKFORD.

IN A COLLEGE TOWN.

The most of my life has been spent in college towns. Some of these towns have been larger than others, and on the other hand some of the colleges have been larger than others. The opportunities offered a citizen of a college town are so superior to those of the average small town that one cannot help but notice them. The concerts, lectures, athletics, splendid preaching and addresses that one hears during commencement and on other special occasions are numbered among these opportunities.

The past thirty-one years of my life have been spent here. It always makes me feel good when Elon makes a progressive move. Even the winning of a ball game gives me a thrill.

For a long time I did not take special interest in the college affairs. I attended the public meetings and at times talked with the officials. Some few years ago I began to ask some of the high school graduates, in the territory I work, where they were going to college. To my surprise, only a few had decided on any definite institution. With a little persuasion, I induced one or two to enter Elon. From that day on, my interest has grown, and I am always pleased when I can speak a word for Elon or get a student to enroll. They tell us that where our treasure is there will our heart be. I believe it, and if more of us would work for our Church institutions we would feel more interest in them.

Elon College is not the only Church institution here that I am interested in. The Christian Orphanage, under the able leadership of Mr. C. D. Johnston, is doing a wonderful work. I wish all our Church people would come and look this town over. See your college and your Orphanage. It is worth the trip, no matter where you live.

By visiting here and seeing these Church institutions and giving some of your time and money to the work they are doing, your interest will certainly grow.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, has his office in one of the college buildings. He is doing a great work and every member of the Christian Church admires and loves him for his untiring efforts in their behalf.

Personally, I am glad I live in a small, college town. I cannot think of a more desirable place to live. I am interested in all our Church enterprises, and living in Elon gives me close contact with them all.

W. E. LOWE.

We live in an age that boasts some of the most marvelous inventions of all time. They enlarge our conception of the powers and genius of man. Some of the things that are now practical realities, some of the things that are now actually performed, if related a few years ago would have been considered as but wild and fitful flights of fancy, as tales of fiction and romance. In every branch of human endeavor the exertions of man have grown to colossal proportions.—Ex.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VIII—August 19, 1928.

PAUL CARRIES THE GOSPEL INTO EUROPE.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Come over into Macedonia, and help us."—Acts 16:9.

LESSON: Acts 15:36-16:15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isa. 60:1-6.

Paul had two qualities which every minister should covet. First of all, he looked after those who became converts to Christianity and tried to build them up in Christ. Thus it was that after he had spent some time at Antioch he suggested to Barnabas that they again visit their brethren in the cities where they had preached the word, and see how they do. Paul knew that it was not enough simply to get people to make decisions for Christ. He took a deep, personal interest in new Christians. He had the pastoral heart.

In the second place, Paul looked for new converts. He believed that it did make a difference whether men and women believed in Christ and with a passion that few men have equaled he tried to win men and women to Christ. Paul had the evangelistic heart. This combination, the pastoral and the evangelistic heart, ought to be coveted and developed by every Christian worker.

"Then came he to Derbe and Lystra; and behold a certain disciple was there named Timothy (or Timothy). Paul saw individuals. He saw the possibilities of life. He discovered Timothy, developed Timothy, and used Timothy. Big a man as Paul was, and busy as he was, he did not lose his sense of values. In training, Timothy, Paul was multiplying the influence and the power of his life two-fold and a hundred-fold. The minister or the Sunday School teacher who is not discovering and training and using leadership is not fulfilling his highest mission. Making all due allowance for the value of every individual, we might as well face the fact that there are some individuals that have larger possibilities than others, and he is a wise leader himself who is preparing such individuals for larger leadership activities.

"They assayed to go into Bithynia, but the Spirit suffered them not." "They were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia." There are many unknown paths, and many uncertainties in life, but there is one sure fact which we need to keep in mind—God guides the man who wants to be guided. Let a man set about to know what the will of God is and he shall know what it is. Let him follow that which seems like a "hunch" in things spiritual, and he will not go far wrong. Let him refuse to do the thing which the inner voice says he ought not to do and he will come more and more to the light. The steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord.

"And they passing by Mysia came down to Troas. And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, 'Come over into Macedonia and help us.' A closed door one place does not mean a closed door every place. What Paul could not do in Asia or Bithynia, he could do in Macedonia. Because a man has been thwarted in going to the mission field does not mean that he cannot do work in the home field. Because a man cannot preach does not mean that he cannot do anything for the kingdom.

"There stood a man of Macedonia." A call from God often comes in the form of the need of our fellow-men. Indeed, this constitutes a call. Many young people who glibly say that they would respond to a call from God, already have that call in the needs of their fellow-men, both in the home field and in the foreign field. Furthermore, the need was individualized and personalized. It was a man, representing the needs of Macedonia, that appealed to Paul. We must not allow the mass of facts and figures in regard to mission work blind us to the greater fact that back of all of these there are individual men and women, boys and girls.

"And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia." Paul says that he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. The secret of the man's power and of his joy was his whole-hearted and unhesitating obedience to what he felt was the heavenly vision. Follow the gleam, young people. Be true to the heavenly vision.

"And on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made, and we sat down and spake unto the women which resorted thither." There seems not to have been a synagogue in Philippi, but there were a few devout women who gathered at the river side for prayer. Wherever two or three are gathered together in His name, the Lord is present to bless.

"And a certain woman named Lydia heard us, whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken by Paul." It was a momentous day when Paul set foot upon European soil, for it marked the beginning of the evangelization of Europe and the western world. It was also a momentous incident when the first woman in Europe became a Christian. It marked the beginning of that great process which has dignified womanhood, given her an equal status with man, resulted in her enlightenment and upliftment, and claimed womanhood for loyal and sacrificial service for Jesus Christ. If as some one has said, the test of a religion is what it has done and can do for womanhood, Christianity stands supreme. Lydia was the first of that great number of women which no man can number, who having accepted the Christ, has made her home a place of Christian hospitality and who has been instrumental both in leading the members of her household to Christ and in rendering service for the Master.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

TOPIC: "How Magazines and Newspapers Help or Hinder Christian Living."—2 Tim. 3:1-17.

Some Bible Hints.

Newspapers that spread "scare" news do great harm, creating suspicion and hatred (v. 1).

One would think these verses list the contents of some papers and magazines: collections of filth (vs. 2-4).

Some papers "withstand" every good cause, sneering at prohibition, Sunday observance, religion, and so on (v. 8).

On the other hand, some papers and magazines seek to provide helpful material, encouragement, sunshine, hope, good cheer (v. 17).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Papers that wallow in details of crime somehow help to create criminals by suggesting things to do.

There are many salacious magazines unfit to publish, pandering to sex and immorality of all kinds. Such make a censor necessary.

Magazines and papers that contain articles that stir ambition, that encourage the discouraged, are helpful. They wake us up, start us on a better way.

Even in the worst newspapers one will find articles that are helpful. They may be the sugar that covers the pill; small grains of gold embedded in oceans of mud.

A Few Illustrations.

A paper that prints dozens of pictures of the friends of a murderer in order to create sympathy for a cold-blooded scoundrel is doing incalculable damage. Who thinks of the murderer's victim?

Newspapers are as a rule read too hurriedly to be of much use in building up character. Helpful thinking runs deep; papers are shallow.

Some newspapers make heroes of criminals. They write up dull-witted youths and make them out to be valiant knights of evil. They inspire weak-minded youngsters to imitate them.

Christians should support religious magazines. The more subscribers a magazine has, the better material will it be able to print. Why help those papers that manifestly serve the devil?

To Think About.

What helpful story have you recently read?

What helpful newspaper article have you recently read?

What newspaper or magazine features do you find harmful?

THE ORPHANAGE.

A few months ago Bro. Johnston, our superintendent of Orphanage, gave us a statement as to the number of Churches in each Conference, also the number in each Conference not giving monthly to the Orphanage. Last week he came across again and gave us another outline of the work through the same channel. I carefully noted the facts given in his first report and have compared them with those given last week. I find that every Conference has improved in this good work. They have gained from 7 to 25 per cent during this time. I wish to give here the number of our Churches and amount of percentage gained in each Conference.

The Eastern Virginia Conference gained 11 Churches, 25 per cent; Valley Virginia Conference, 3 Churches, 11 per cent; North Carolina and Virginia, 5 Churches, 14 per cent; Western North Carolina, 8 Churches, 7 per cent; Eastern North Carolina, 6 Churches, 11 per cent; Georgia and Alabama, 4 Churches, 24 per cent; Alabama, 5 Churches, 16 per cent.

You will find in this report that Eastern Virginia Conference has taken the lead in percentage, and Georgia and Alabama a close second. I am a member of the Eastern Virginia Conference, and I want to see my Conference come to be 100 per cent contribution to our Orphanage. Brother, sister, are you a member of one of those ten Churches that give nothing monthly to the Orphanage, as stated by Bro. Johnston? If you are, please get busy at once. Next Sunday, when you go to your Sunday School, bring this matter up, and never cease until you have gotten your school to comply.

In our last report, all of the North Carolina Conference were ahead of Eastern Virginia in percentage, but this time there is only one ahead of us, and that is North Carolina and Virginia, which has 81 3-37 per cent of her Churches giving to the Orphanage, while Eastern Virginia has 76 32-43 per cent to its credit. I cannot help being a little partial to my own Conference, but I would like to see every Conference in the Southern Christian Convention 100 per cent for the Orphanage.

There are 235 Churches in our denomination in the South, 91 of which give nothing for the Orphanage monthly, leaving 144 that give, and that is 63.8 per cent of our Churches responding nobly for the good of the poor, helpless little orphan children that Bro. Johnston is so kindly, carefully, graciously and nobly fathering in our Orphanage. May the Lord somehow, through his loving, persuasive spirit, so work on the minds and hearts of our people that they will first have to yield themselves into His service for the good of the little, helpless, fatherless and motherless children in our midst.

M. W. HOLLOWELL.

Thirty thousand children had training this summer in Chicago's daily vacation Bible schools. Of this number, one-tenth, or three thousand, were from the teeming downtown sections of the city. In these schools there were boys and girls from six to fourteen and were from more than a dozen nationalities—Persians, Assyrians, Italians, Irish, Dutch, etc. In addition to the handwork suited to the age of each pupil, training of mind and heart was promoted, including, of course, memory work, Bible reading and exercise and instruction in the beliefs of the Christian Church, story-telling and Church music. Such schools and training certainly mean much for the future of that great city.

There are a few Churches yet who, if they have taken the special missionary offering, have not reported it to the Mission Secretary. We believe all our Churches will yet take the offering if they have not done so. All who have taken the offering should send it in, as funds are needed and we are anxious to see every Church on the credit side.

CHRISTIAN WOMEN AT THE POLLS.

to inform themselves, stay away from the polls. When we refuse to accept this responsibility, we refuse to accept our responsibility as a citizen on whom our country can count at a time when our foundations are being assailed.

I am willing to admit that politics today is in a deplorable state. Who will deny that bribery, dishonesty, personal ambition, and political gangs are in the ascendancy? Investigations have become the popular pastime of our Senate. The high office of president of the United States is in danger of going to the highest bidder.

The issues are beclouded and many voters are befogged, confused, bewildered, because that is what the political leader often intends them to be. Many are deterred by the system that confronts us when we undertake to register. We are likely to be treated "as criminals being subjected to a bertilion measurement." Every voter is presumed to be a crook or a repeater until he proves his innocence. The answers that must be recorded correspond to those inscribed in the rogue's gallery—name, age, birth-place, location, length of residence, height, weight, color of hair, color of eyes, physical defects, etc. Sensitive folks naturally shrink from the first experience, but to follow the path of duty in any undertaking requires courage. When one has visualized the importance of the task, they will not be deterred by any artificial barrier.

I feel sure there is no need for me to add persuasion. It is no child's play to save the priceless contribution of our fathers from overthrow. America is ours today. It cannot be upheld by lip service. It cannot be maintained and protected by the tributes we pay to the great names and the great personalities of the past. They may guide and they may inspire, but the actual work of preservation and protection devolves upon us, who hold within our own grasp that sacred privilege which is no other than the intelligent ballot. —The World Call.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

"GOING SOME!"

"If any man would go to the law with thee, and take away thy coat, let him take thy cloak also; and whosoever shall compel thee to go one mile, go with him two."—Matt. 5:40, 41.

Two neighbors quarrelled for years over a fence. One said that it was too far on his place, and the other said it wasn't. Thus they contended in bitter enmity.

Finally a lawyer in Maine bought the one, and knowing of the quarrel, he proceeded to effect a settlement. He called the adjoining farmer into conference and said: "Show me where your line is on these premises." He showed him two feet in. "Now," said the lawyer, "move over farther in, two feet, and make it there." "But," persisted the neighbor, "I don't want to do that; that is double my claim." "That is all right," said the lawyer, "I don't need it and I don't want it. There has been enough quarrel over this fence, and I want you to be happy and the quarrel stopped forever. Go ahead and help yourself."

The farmer was dumbfounded. He had come out bitter as ever and ready to fight for his line, but this tactics "took him off of his feet" and stunned him speechless. But he came to, and having assembled himself he was not to be outdone by such generosity. After looking at the lawyer a minute, he said, "Squire, that fence ain't goin' to be moved an inch. I don't want the land anyway. There was nothin' to it anyhow but the principle of the thing."

Talk about shovel and tongs, bolts and hinges! Here was bending that made folks happy. Somebody has said, "If you don't want to traffic with the devil, keep out of his shop."

Prayer.—Lord, give us the Christ spirit with our household and with our friends, and keep it alive in us and clothe us with power to do it always. Forgive us of all our sins. Amen.

TUESDAY.

IT IS EASY.

"Resist the devil and he will flee from you."—Jas. 4:7.

That is just the way to keep from sinning. Let us remember that.

There is a story of a boy who was learning to swim. He was at Freemantle. There were two dangers there—drowning and sharks. He provided protection from drowning by wearing a cork belt. He intended not to go far enough out to be endangered by sharks. But the undertoe took him farther out than he was conscious of. Presently brother shark appeared and thought he had a good meal. But the boy remembered his father's instructions that splashing and "hol-lering" would frighten the shark. So he did that with all the power of his being. Mr. Shark thought this was a dangerous morsel, so he turned and was soon out of sight. In the meantime, his father had rescued him.

If we do all we can to fortify ourselves against enemies, and if we do all we can to resist temptation, the enemy will surely disappear. Like a burglar entering the house, if you make a noise before he does his mischief, he will beat it.

Face the wind and you take no cold. The warmth of the expirations protect you. But a draft on the neck is apt to give a cold. Face God. Resist the enemy and you will not go wrong.

Prayer.—Lord, purify our hearts by Thy word and give us courage and strength to stand strong for the Lord and against sin. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

SMOOTHING OUT THE BUMPS.

"The rough ways shall be made smoothe."—Luke 3:5.

We are familiar with track, street and road repair. A force is employed all the time filling in the holes, smoothing out rough places and making the way comfortable for the travelers. It is often remarked that the fellow who cleans the streets and makes a good road for everybody's comfort does as much good for humanity as anybody else.

There is a great host everywhere helping others to be happy and thus preparing the way of the Lord's coming some day. There are section-hands on the railroads, engineers on steam-rollers, teachers at school and after school. Mothers working hands grim, doctors and hospitals for the sick, charity and homes for the poor, Churches and orphanages for the homeless, road-builders for autos and a thousand other things we do for humanity. The living which one gets out of it should not be his primary incentive. If it is only ditch-digging, it should be with an idea of the good it means to others.

One day I said, "Thank you." My friend replied, "That's nothing. I am in the world to help make it run a little more smoothly if possible." What a motive for life!

Prayer.—Our Father, as the chief work of Jesus Christ was to go about and do good, give unto us Thy spirit also in truth and humility forever. Teach us the blessing of bearing crosses. Wash us of uncleanness. Refine and purify us, and mold us like Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE POWER OF THE "MUST."

"I must be about my Father's business."—Luke 2:49.

This was a word of Jesus often. First as a boy, He said, "I must be about my Father's business." At thirty, He said, "I must preach." The people stood amazed when He said, "I must work the works." The disciples could not understand when He told them, "I must go to Jerusalem." The folks were horrified when He said to Zaccheus, "I must abide with thee," and they were not pleased when He said, "I must go through Samaria." Nicodemus could not understand when he said, "Ye must be born again." "Must rise," "must reign," "must be baptized," "must," "must" were words constantly upon our Lord's lips.

There are two kinds of obedience—one is that through fear; the other is through love. The power that impelled Jesus was one of love. When He said, "I must," he meant that life gripped him and the great end impelled Him on. God has gathered up all the good there was in the world and put it in Christ and Christ must be perfect.

Our business is to be like Christ. We may be very far from this. It may seem impossible, but remember that He has said that so small a thing as to give a cup of cold water in His name is to be like Him and it does not escape His notice.

In this there is not an errand boy, not a door-keeper, not a bell-boy, not a boot-black, not a paper boy, not any one, and not anything, even of the smallest things of life, who nor what may not be doing the Father's business. The commonest duty is made uncommon by coming to it in a sanctified way.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou give us power, give us power to be great in truth and lowliness. Teach us to know ourselves and to know Thee in our midst and have true joy and peace in Him. Amen.

FRIDAY.

SITTIN' STILL.

"The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting; but the substance of a diligent man is precious."—Prov. 12:27.

Years and years ago I read a humorous incident in the Youth's Companion, as follows:

An old farmer had three lusty sons. One day he had a barrel of apples to get down the cellar stairs; so he called for his sons, but there was no response. The old farmer lifted and tugged and pulled; when the task was finished, all of his sons appeared at once as if by magic. He looked at them for a moment, then said: "John, where were you?"

"Up in Granny's room, settin' the clock," was John's reply.

"And, Frank, where were you?"

"Out in the barn, settin' the hen," said the next hopeful.

"And, Dan, where were you?" turning to the youngest.

"Out on the doorstep, settin' still," replied the youngster.

Now, an endeavorer may be busy as a wood-chuck—to borrow an old farm expression—and still be settin' still, as far as really helping in the Master's work is concerned. Some one once said of a certain janitor, "He will sit down upon his haunches, wave his dust-rag in the air, and talk about how busy he is." Less talking and more working would have meant a cleaner Church.

Will not indolence and inertia keep many a person out of heaven at last? The endeavorers who are sitting still when there is real work to be done remind one of the old colored man who was sitting on the fence instead of hoeing corn. A passer-by remarked, "What are you doing there, Rufus?" "Oh, nuthin', boss," said Rufus, apologetically; "jess tryin' to hurry up sundown."

The indolent endeavorer digs a grave for his own soul. God pity the young people who always do the easiest thing, who follow the line of least resistance, who lack stamina and backbone, who always long for a soft job, for an easy task, for, a big pay-check. No endeavorer can afford to drift; we must pull upstream.

Upward alone the path that leads to day;

No downward stretches on the King's highway.

SATURDAY.

THE IMMUTABILITY OF GOD.

"With whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."—James 1:17.

This is the testimony of James. No one was better prepared to utter them. He was the brother of Jesus, bishop of Jerusalem, both liberal and conservative in theology, rational in spirit, narrow in views and broad in sympathies. His chief characteristics were beauty of character, purity of life and humble and constant in devotions.

A river descends between majestic banks, leafy trees, grassy plains and flowered gardens. In the course of years, scenes change but the river flows on in majesty, bearing its burdens, irrigating lands, aiding commerce, housing fish, rushing to the sea.

So is God "the same yesterday and forever"—

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

W. K. Holt was elected a member of the board of trustees of the Christian Orphanage by the Southern Convention in 1916, and met with the board of trustees in its annual meeting in May, 1916. He was elected president of the board in its annual meeting 1918 and had served as president and presided at all its meetings since his election.

Mr. Holt was fair, honest and sincere in his administration as president and was highly respected and dearly loved by each member of the board. Under his administration as president of the board, he advocated and saw erected two splendid brick buildings for children and other improvements for the convenience and betterment of the Orphanage plant. He saw the value of the plant grow under his administration from a $50,000 plant to a value of $160,000.

The Orphanage occupied a very tender place in his heart and he loved the little children who were inmates in the institution. He was intensely interested in its growth and its development on a sound financial basis. He was interested in its every success. He has been a strong arm on which to lean and his advice was always good. One of the happiest achievements of his administration was the erection of the building known as "Johnston Hall" and one of the happiest days which he had looked forward to was the dedication of that building on July 29th.

In his passing, the Christian Orphanage has lost a friend loyal and true. One who gave his time, his thought, his wisdom as well as money to make it a real home for children who needed a home, and rejoiced in its every success. He was so congenial and considerate that the little children looked to him as a father.

GOVERNOR SMITH RUBS IT IN.

The first stunning blow Governor Smith gave his party, and especially the South, was when he became the first big bolter. He bolted the platform and, as Norman Mack, the famous Democrat, is reported to have said, became both the platform and the candidate. He scouted and holds in contempt the prohibition views of the South. But while stunned by this indecent and egotistical bolt, many Southern men who do not want to see their party destroyed will vote for him, at the same time resenting his contempt for the Constitution of the United States. But Governor Smith did not stop with that. He has now appointed as chairman of the National Democratic Committee Mr. John J. Raskob, one of the directors of the General Motors Corporation, who shares Smith's views on prohibition and on religion. Mr. Raskob is a very active Roman Catholic. His appointment to the chief place of leadership in the Democratic party, together with Governor Smith's recent laudation of Tammany, is a clear indication of what we may expect in the White House and in his cabinet should Governor Smith be chosen as President.—Ex.

the same thought, character, purpose, decree and power. Suppose the shore were to say to the river, "We will not let you bless us. We will close our doors to you."

What can God do for us if we close our doors to Him? What can the Bible be to us if we are not obedient to it? Talk about this age demanding an improved gospel! Can we add to what God has done? As surely as God is the same forever, there is one faith, one baptism, one Holy Ghost, and one walk to glory. And that one who is constantly at his part of duty is richer in vision and experience of heart than wealth can make him.

Prayer.—Our Father, satisfy us early with Thy mercy that we may rejoice and be glad all our days. Make us to drink of the waters of Thy pleasure, for with Thee always is the fountain of life, and in Thy light shall we see light. To this end, give us Thy Holy Spirit. Amen.

SUNDAY.

CHRIST'S NATURALNESS.

"Follow me and I will make you the fishers of men."

Our Lord's life was natural. He lived simply, charming His home life with a devout father and mother. He was taught by the rabbi of the village and by the folks of the caravans who passed the spring near His father's house. He helped His father drag out the timbers of the woods and He worked in His father's shop. He went to Church when Sunday came and was apt in His understanding.

In His ministry He lived the outdoor life, and none of His miracles were unnatural for a God-man to perform. When He wanted disciples He did not bid and buy them; He simply called them and said, "Follow me," or "Come," or "Today I must abide with you."

Christ was most natural because He was most real. His duty did not make Him less, but more, human. What a help to us! We can measure our characters by the strength of the appeal His life makes upon us. Study His life for facts and see how quickly you feel like saying, "Lord, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest."

Prayer.—Lord, open our eyes, that we may see Jesus as He is, whom to see is to follow. Give us the power to follow Thee all the way. Amen.

SHALL IT BE PUT OVER?

After reading the record of Al. Smith's political career in last week's SUN, no doubt the question will arise in many minds, why has a man with such a record as this been elected four times as Governor of New York State? It is because New York City, whose population is about four-fifths of foreign birth or parentage, always rolls up an enormous majority for any Tammany candidate for Governor. His alleged political strength of which we have heard so much said is wholly in the foreignized, Tammanyized and lawless element of New York City. The great mass of the best citizens of the State have not supported him for Governor, and likely never will.

At a Democratic dinner held in Hotel Vanderbilt, New York City, April 24, 1922, to discuss campaign issues, some advocated that the Democratic party should declare itself in opposition to the Volstead law; others opposed so doing. Governor Smith arose and, among other things, said: "I don't believe the Democratic party should camouflage on this subject. The Democratic party is a saloon party, and it ought to come out and say so." At the close of Governor Smith's address, one well-known Tammany politician jumped to his feet and excitedly said: "Governor Smith does not mean that." Another arose and said: "That is just exactly the thing that the Democratic party does not want the people to believe—that it is the saloon party." Even the members of the party were afraid for such statements to reach the public.

The question now arises, will the Democrats vote for a man who has sought to place this brand upon them, even though a few politicians have given him the nomination of a great party?

It was also stated that there was no liquor served at this meeting and that Governor Smith was sober when he made the statement. It has been said, however, that both Governor Smith and his wife have been seen carried from public functions to their automobile, seemingly unable to walk. Would such actions grace the White House of the United States? Will the dry people of this country allow such to take place?

People have spoken with pride of the solid South. Every true Southerner may use the term with pride. But is not this a time when it is better to stand on solid principles than in solid numbers, if either must be sacrificed?

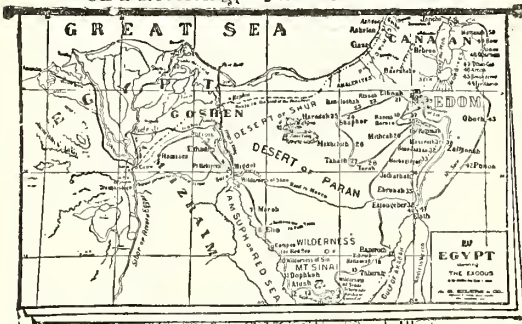

The Civic Forum, from which many of these statements have been taken, also states that Albany, the Governor's official residence for eight years, has, during this time, been overridden with immoral houses, speakeasies, gambling places and dens of vice, and he has never once made a move to have the laws against these places enforced. Would Governor Smith know himself from the great addresses delivered in his favor at the Houston convention?

NEWS FROM ROSEMONT.

A year has passed since Rosemont Church and Sunday School began making offerings to the new Church fund. During the year, without any special effort on the part of the Church $2,989.06 has been laid on the altar for this purpose. This is a very fine record, considering the financial conditions of this section during the last year, and the pastor is especially proud of the progress made along this line.

The attendance at the Church services has not been so good lately, but we hope it will be better later as the members and friends get back from their vacations.

The Church has voted the pastor a vacation the last two weeks of August, and he hopes to spend the most of these two weeks in the Bible school at Massanetta Springs, near Harrisonburg, Va.

The report of the Rosemont Sunday School to the recent session of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference showed that the school had raised during the last year $1,711.89. More than five hundred dollars of this amount went to missions, and around $600 of it went to the Christian Orphanage.

Plans are being made for our fall evangelistic campaign in October, in which we are to be assisted by Dr. L. E. Smith, of the Christian Temple, Norfolk.

J. F. MORGAN.

CONCORD.

A series of revival services began at concord Christian Church, Caswell County, N. C., Sunday, July 22nd, and continued through July 27, 1928. Good congregations were present at each service. Two services were held each day, with dinner in the grove.

Rev. J. S. Carden, of Durham, N. C., assisted in the preaching of the Word. He was with us at the opening service of the meeting. His messages were highly biblical and very instructive to saint and sinner. Bro. Carden is very energetic and earnest in winning souls to Christ. One of the joys of his life is seeing the way-faring person coming to our Blessed Lord and Christ.

This is not Bro. Carden's first visit to Concord, and we hope not his last trip. He was gladly welcomed and received in the community. He has many friends in and around Concord community. His coming was very helpful and encouraging to the Christian people.

Rev. I. T. Underwood, who lives near Yanceyville, N. C., preached for us one time very acceptably. Bro. Underwood is a good student of the Word. There was a good spirit of co-operation of other denominations manifested, which we greatly appreciate.

Eight persons accepted Christ as their personal Saviour, and four united with the local Church. The Church was very much revived and encouraged to continue the Christian race of life. The meeting was a great blessing to us all. All praise and thanksgiving be to God, our Father, through Jesus Christ, our Saviour.

HAPPY HOME.

The revival began here July 8th and continued through July 13th. The services were all held in the afternoon of the week at 2 and 4 o'clock. Each service was well attended.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, who has served our Reidsville Church several years, assisted in the preaching. His messages were highly scriptural and were food for the hungry soul. He was very earnest in his effort to enlist people in the kingdom of God and encourage them to hold on faithfully to the end of the warfare. Bro. Whitten endeared himself very much to this good people with his congenial personality during his short stay.

As to results, there were two professions of faith in Christ and two reclamations and the Church was strengthened and encouraged.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP GAINS.

Although it was reported earlier that 3,269 Presbyterian Churches, 3,474 Baptist Churches, and 4,651 Methodist Episcopal Churches failed to report a single convert on profession of faith in 1927, the Church census prepared by Dr. H. K. Carroll and published in the Christian Herald shows that the Churches of the United States gained 48,594,163. The 1927 gain is larger than that in 1926, when, according to this census, the increase was about 490,000. The returns for ministers and Churches in various denominations, says Dr. Carroll, show noteworthy decreases. There is a net loss of 1,387 in the number of ministers, which now stands at 217,204, while the number of Churches has decreased to 235,991, or 1,470 fewer than last year. "This," he says, "would indicate that the process of consolidation is assuming larger proportions." Dr. Carroll's table of the ten largest bodies follows, the colored Baptists showing a decrease:

Denomination.	Members.	Gains.
Roman Catholic....	16,735,691	174,889

RHODES.

Whereas, God saw best to remove from Linville Christian Church the oldest and beloved deacon, D. S. Rhodes; whereas, in the death of our brother the Church and all of its organizations, as well as the home and community, has lost a never-tiring worker; he was ever ready and willing to do what God would have him do; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That while we mourn the loss of our dear brother, we bow in humble submission to the will of our Father.
2. That we imitate his good example by always being faithful to God's cause.
3. That with deepest sympathy for the bereaved family we commend them to the Lord for comfort.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be

HOME OF WASHINGTON'S MOTHER TO BE RESTORED.

The home which was purchased by Washington for the use of his mother in 1772, and which was occupied by her from 1775 to 1789, is to be restored in commemoration of Washington's bicentennial anniversary if the plans of the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities can be carried to completion.

The house has had various owners in later years. No one thought much of its importance until 1890, when an agent came from Chicago to purchase the house, which it was proposed to take down and set up again at the Columbian Exposition. Mrs. R. C. Beale, the tenant of the place at that time, overheard the conversation and promptly took steps to prevent the removal of the house from Fredericksburg.

Simply furnished, the house of such interesting memories has been thrown open to the public for many years. No general appeal has heretofore been made for money to support it. It is now desired that it shall be put in good repair and restored to its original condition, so that the thousands who seek to honor Washington during the bicentennial year may view the house as it was when he visited it. It is estimated that at least $5,000 is needed for the work.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

THE FACULTY AND CHARACTER-BUILDING IN COLLEGES.

BY DR. W. A. HARPER,

President of Elon College.

Are members of faculties in American colleges and universities purveyors of fact primarily, or are they builders of character? This is a vital question, so vital that the Council of Church Boards of Education, through its executive secretary, Dr. Robert L. Kelly, is making a study of the influence of professors in American institutions of higher learning tending to make those institutions Christian or otherwise. It is expected that this report, tentatively at least, will be submitted at the January session of the council and perhaps also to the Association of American Colleges, which meets in connection therewith in Chattanooga, in January, 1929.

This interest is not confined to the Council of Church Boards nor the Association of American Colleges alone. Even the magazines are finding it quite satisfying to the public mind to discuss educational problems. "The Forum," for example, began in January, this year, to run an article each month having to do with college problems. The articles that have so far appeared are worthy of careful reading. Two of them bear upon our problem. The first was written by Irwin Edman, of Columbia University. Dr. Edman says that colleges influence character in three ways: (1) Where they least suspect it, as in the atmosphere of the beauty of the plant or the general organization and spirit of the institution. (2) By the presence of men and women of character on the faculty. In this connection, he says: "In the mystical conduct of the class-room, a student often learns more from his professor than the mere subject taught." (3) Through special courses designed to influence conduct.

Colleges are under obligation, Dr. Edman thinks, to make students feel at home during their undergraduate days, and he recommends three practical ways of achieving this:

1. To require professors to understand the reason why so many undergraduates tend to disintegrate morally during their college course.

2. Employ a trained psychiatrist to detect abnormality and subscribe for it.

3. Provide lectures or seminar courses in morals of the situation type.

The second article in "The Forum" series that deals with our problem was written by Count Hermann Keyserling. Count Keyserling accuses the American colleges, as well as the colleges of Germany, with pretending to be schools of wisdom, whereas, as a matter of fact, they are mere factories of fact. He urges that higher education should not concern itself primarily with fact-finding, but with discovering the meanings underlying facts. It is encouraging indeed to find such an attitude coming out of Germany which has afflicted American scholarship with the research attitude which so predominates in our graduate schools.

"Undergraduates," a recent bog, is correct in saying that good teaching makes for good morals in institutions of higher learning; but what is good teaching?

This matter is discussed in "School and Society," by P. A. Schilpp. He says: "It certainly will not be denied that one of the foremost tasks of the professor is to arouse, aid and advance a thoughtful response in his students. Both the method and content of instruction given by the average university professor are surely far from conducive to serious thinking." He then lists six types of teacher who fail to arouse thoughts in their students:

1. Those who omit the discussion of too serious matters on the ground that their minds are immature.

2. Those who themselves have no creative ideas.

3. Those who are inexcusably dry and criminally dull in presenting their subjects.

4. Those who are unable to get their ideas across to their students.

6. Those who prefer to do the thinking themselves and to bring the results of their thinking to class, rather than prod their students to think for themselves.

He concludes his article with the demand that professors themselves think, let think, and inspire others to think at whatever price.

All the methods suggested for improving the quality of faculty instruction in "Undergraduates" deserve commendation. I would myself include counseling of students under the head of "movements to improve instruction," because where students and professors are properly joined together in the teaching process we have better results, and counseling should bring this about.

It is quite suggestive that the beloved Thomas Arkle Clark, of the University of Illinois, prefers that counseling should be headed up in the dean's office and that sufficient help should be given him to do it properly. Dr. Clark deprecates the idea that the colleges have no right to interfere with the private life of students. He finds that it is impossible to counsel students with reference to their course of study without involving questions that have to do with private life. However, he also recognizes the undergraduate's aversion for counsel and advice and is sure that if it is forced upon him he will take it lightly and seldom follow it. Nevertheless, he thinks that "there is much more to be done along the line of advising students than we have yet dreamed of."

There is no doubt that the professor holds the key, not only to the morale of the institution, but to the attitude likewise of the students toward the entire situation in our colleges. If he is a fact monger or, to use the dignified term, "a researcher," and not interested in students as human beings, he is not fitted to be a college professor. We need such experts in order to advance human knowledge, but they should be provided for by definite foundations connected with institutions of learning, or independently organized for that purpose. It is a real contribution to the life of man to be able to add even slightly to the sum total of human knowledge.

However, if we conceive of the college as a character-building institution, then there is need for real teachers, because it is only as life associates with life on intimate and friendly basis in solving the problems of definite situations that character can be evolved.

I wish now to set forth my own view as to the professor and his part in the curriculum, because I view him as part and parcel of the curriculum.

The Professor.

Those of us who teach have been prone to look upon ourselves as the agents, the administrators of the curriculum; and we are this. However, we are ourselves also, in a very essential sense, a major item in the curriculum itself. According to the law of North Carolina, a mule now is a vehicle when he appears on the public highways, and consequently at night he must carry a light, both in front and behind. Just so the college professor becomes a vehicle when he enters his classroom, and at all times he must supply light. The definition of a college as "Mark Hopkins on one end of a long and the student on the other," is a homely way of expressing the public's belief in the strategic importance of the professor in the process of education. Our students not only learn the subjects the professor teaches, but most especially they learn him. They learn him not only in the class-room, but in every contact of their life with his.

John R. Mott lists ten methods by which the professor may influence his students in a Christian way. He prefaces his list with the opportunities that come to the professor in connection with his regular work, and considers it is one of the two outstanding opportunities which the professor has to mold the character of his students in a Christian way. The second of these two greatest opportunities he places last in his list and says that it is first in importance, provided the professor discharges his professional work well. This greatest opportunity, Dr. Mott says, is "that of forming individual friendships with individual

Our institutions will grow in proportion to the interest our people take in them.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be in every home in the Southern Christian Convention.

Read our "Elon Special" this week and pass on to your neighbors the good words about our college.

We trust CHRISTIAN SUN readers will give this issue close reading. We speak for our Elon this week, and from various helpful angles.

Elon College begins its thirty-eighth annual session September 3rd. That is a day that all who intend entering as freshmen should make most of.

It is learned that Rev. J. G. Truitt, First Church, Norfolk, has accepted a call to First Church, Dayton, Ohio. Virginia's loss is certainly Ohio's gain.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor of First Church, Greensboro, N. C., is attending the Bible conference conducted by the Presbyterians at Massanutta Springs, Harrisonburg, Va.

If parents have had any doubt as to where they will send their sons and daughters to college this fall, we think a reading of this week's SUN will help them to a wise conclusion.

It takes money to get THE CHRISTIAN SUN to you each week. The printer won't work without pay. Please mail check for renewal to Chas. D. Johnston, circulation manager, Elon College.

Rev. J. E. Franks, pastor, reporting checks from three of his Churches this week for special mission offering, says: "There will be more to follow, as I am trying to reach the full quota from all my Churches."

Read the label on the first page of THE SUN, which bears your name and the date your subscription expires. If your subscription has expired, please mail us check to renew. It takes money to pay printers.

What do pastors think of Bro. Allen's "shirt-sleeve club?" Read his "Newport News Letter" in this week's SUN, and incidentally notice how $25 was added to the missionary offering. The idea at least is novel and shows resourcefulness and interest for a great cause.

Bro. Sam Davis and wife will hold revival services at Damascus, Orange County, N. C., beginning Monday, August 20th, and at Pleasant Ridge, Randolph County, beginning Sunday, the 26th. They have been with Rev. J. M. Roberts at Johnson's Grove the past two weeks, and are at Eure, Gates County, N. C., this week. Third Sunday of this month they hold services at Oakland Church, 11 A. M., and at Liberty Springs at 3 P. M. These popular and consecrated evangelists are much in demand and should be kept busy in this work which they do so acceptably and effectually.

The Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, in session at Catawba Springs in July, decided that all resolutions offered in the Convention which had to do with local schools and societies be sent to all societies and schools in the Convention and ask each one to vote on and adopt or reject the same. This was done because quite a number of schools were not represented and the Convention wanted the voice and the vote of all. This idea is a good one, provided it is carried out and the resolutions are presented and intelligently explained in all the schools and societies.

A most kindly line comes from Mrs. J. I. Joyner, now of 335 Garland Avenue, Takoma Park, Washington, D. C.: "I have desired to thank you for an article that came through THE SUN of June 14th in a clipping sent me from old Virginia by a friend who reads THE SUN. It was my privilege to keep up with THE SUN and the Church till I came here in search of health and comfort. My physician advised that I do very little writing or reading and save the strain on my eyesight. The assurance I have here is 'Those who suffer most and endure longest come out best in the long run.' I still enjoy Church services over the radio, and I want THE SUN, for many helpful articles in it help to hold me to the faith of the fathers."

THE SUN's editor enjoyed seeing to it that his friend, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, was pleasantly and comfortably placed and "roomed" on the "Olympic," of the White Star Line, Friday night, July 20th, as our good brother left for his vacation and good-will tour in Europe. But the editor did not have time to see the other 2,500 passengers that sailed with Dr. Helfenstein, besides the ship's crew of 860 men; and we only saw one little end of that floating palace 882 feet in length—long as a city block—which is driven over the sea 520 miles in one day. But we did have time to exact from Friend Roy the promise that he would tell SUN readers of his good ship and his good voyage. So the good friend and brother is living up to his promise, and if any one misses his first contribution in this week's paper the fault is not ours—and the loss is yours.

VIRGINIA NEWS.

The past month has been a busy one in this field. On the first Sunday in July, our series of meetings began at Liberty Christian Church, Halifax County, Va., and closed the following Friday evening. Attendance was good, singing splendid. The pastor had no ministerial help. Five united with the Church, and I trust many others were helped. This Church has had a steady growth since its organization. The Sunday School numbers one hundred and thirty. The Christian Endeavor has been operating since 1911. Liberty has the largest number of young people of any Church of my pastorate.

The third Sunday in July to the following Thursday our revival was in progress at Lebanon. Bro. B. J. Earp was with us the last day and gave us a deep, spiritual discourse. At the service conducted by Bro. Earp on Thursday morning there was a real, old-time revival. Ten united with the Church. As a result of Miss Pattie Coghill's visit in the spring, this Church has a live Christian Endeavor Society of fifty-five members and a Willing Workers' Society.

The fourth week in July I was at Hebron, Va., assisted by Rev. H. E. Crutchfield. This was Bro. Crutchfield's third visit to this Church to assist in a revival meeting. Large crowds always are present to hear him. We had a good meeting. The Church was revived and seven members received. We are hoping that others will join.

The fifth week in July Dr. L. E. Smith was with us at Union, Virgilina, Va. The weather was hot, dry and dusty, but the crowds were immense. Our new Church seats over four hundred.

We needed room for two hundred more at some services. This was the fifth time Dr. Smith had assisted here in a series of meetings. We believe the town and community were greatly benefitted. Twelve members united with the Church.

Hebron, Lebanon and Liberty each have recently installed a piano. The people at Liberty are beginning to consider a Sunday School annex, with individual class-rooms.

WHO HAS CHANGED FRONT?

Just now much is being said about the preachers going into politics. Some of the newspapers speak of this anti-Smith movement as the "clerical party," intending thereby to discount the entire movement. The implication is that the clergy and certain women are the backbone of this sporadic undertaking. All of which is far from the facts. It is the politicians and not the women and the preachers who have changed front.

Twenty years ago, when North Carolina went for prohibition by more than forty thousand, the preachers and political leaders were one in their effort.

At this time, we were pastor of the Jarvis Memorial Church, in Greenville. Ex-Governor T. J. Jarvis had charge of the campaign in Pitt County. He used preachers, lawyers, teachers and business men in this campaign. We had the privilege, along with a Baptist preacher, of making the first prohibitive speech ever made in Farmville. Governor Glenn and State Auditor B. F. Dixon both spoke in the Jarvis Memorial Church on two different Sundays. This campaign was carried into the Churches and into the school-houses and out into the groves and country places. Pitt County is typical of what went on over the entire State during the prohibition campaign. No one ever raised a whimper against the preachers for going into politics. As a matter of fact, the leaders of the Democratic party leaned heavily upon them for valiant and devoted service. If any newspaper ever said nay, we did not see it.

But now to the dismay of many, the preachers have plunged into politics. It is a terrible offense for them to come to the defense of this same prohibition law and to stand for the constitution by opposing a man who hates certain parts of the Constitution. Right there is the head and front of the offending. These opportunists are dry, standing on a dry State platform, doing their best to put a wet into the White House—a man who had every State law in New York favorable to enforcing the demands of the Constitution repealed. Suppose Governor McLean would take such a step in North Carolina? Would the people support him in this? Will the candidates for State and county offices in North Carolina at this time whoop it up for the Governor of New York when they would not stand by their own Governor seeking such an end? Man voters in this State are waiting for an answer to this question. The politicians seem to be dull of understanding. Some of them still insist Al. Smith is not much wet and talk as though all the people will be in line in November. Yes, many of them will be in line with the record of the past and the struggle of the years. We are not ready to admit that our leaders and the rank and file in other days were all wrong in their stand for prohibition; we are not going to change front for the sake of Al. Smith and Raskob.

Along with thousands of other good men and women, the preachers will be found without a change of front. They are consistent. They do not believe that a man can serve both Al. Smith and prohibition, and they are free to say so. They were not charged with being in politics twenty years ago; why, when fighting in the same cause? —N. C. Christian Advocate.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

BY REV. J. W. FIX.

"Jacob's well was there."—John 4:6.

There are many interesting thoughts centering around the ancient well mentioned in an incidental way by St. John in the 6th verse of the 4th chapter of the fourth gospel. It was at this well that the Master brought enlightened hope to the Samaritan woman. It was there that she learned to know Him as a giver of living water. These blessings were afforded this woman of Samaria because an ancient Hebrew dug a well—not for himself but for other people. A well which to this day serves the weary traveler with refreshing water. This well was an investment made four thousand years ago and which today continues in the accomplishment of its purpose.

So may a man project his works beyond his three-score and ten years. When Goddell completed his translation of the Bible into the Turkish language he wrote: "Thus have I been permitted by the goodness of God to dig a well in this distant land, at which millions may drink." Cecil Rhodes consecrated his vast fortune to educating young men at Oxford University, and thereby the great Englishmen perpetuated a service to the youth of the world. He dug a well from which water of knowledge would flow outward to men of every land and of every age. When Robert Raikes called little children into his shoe-shop and talked with them about the stories of the Bible, he never dreamed that he was digging a well which is today the world Sunday School movement.

In September, 1888, the Southern Christian Convention met in Graham, N. C., at old Providence Church, for the special purpose of establishing a college for the Christian Church in the South. A college which would be a well by the side of the road at which young men and women of the Church might receive a Christian education and thereby guarantee the homes and the Church efficient leadership. This faithful group of men realized that Christian education was necessary and that a people could never rise without or above leadership. As long as the Christian Church has a memory, the names of these men will be hallowed for having dug a well at which place ministers could be trained, youth taught in the principles of Christian character and the Church we love strengthened. Like Jacob's well, Elon College was first of all:

1. A necessary well. In the section where Jacob's well was located, there are long, dry and hot seasons. Water is a most precious possession in that desert land. It is essential in the maintenance of life. With this thought in mind, Jacob dug a well. He knew it would be a necessity not only then but in times to come. He would get little or no personal benefit from it. Just as Jacob's well was a necessity in those days, wells are essential today. Not only wells of water, but wells of knowledge, for knowledge is power, and a person without power is handicapped. As a well is essential to the supplying of good water, so the Christian College is necessary for the supplying of valuable knowledge.

Elon was necessary for the best interest of a denomination then in its infancy. It has ever been one of the chief agencies of the Church for the promotion of the kingdom of God through educational processes.

"Education," said Dr. Frank Crane, "is the best preparation in the world for efficiency. For no matter what a man's work is to be, he can do it better if he is trained." Mr. George Reynolds, one of the outstanding bankers of the West, said: "I did not go to college, but I recognize that the man who does has a tremendous advantage over the one who has to plod step by step along in the school of experience." Education, therefore, is fundamental to all social progress and reform.

The most advantageous institution for securing a good education is the denominational college. It is most often smaller than the State universities and offers exceptional opportunities in Christian training and service. Its student body and faculty come into close fellowship, and instruction is always more personal. The denominational college has been very effective in supplying Churches with ministers, missionaries and social workers. The Church, therefore, looks upon it as a necessity. When Elon opened her doors in 1890 there were but two ministers in the Southern Christian Convention who were college graduates; today there are fifty-seven college graduates in its ministry, fifty-one of whom graduated from Elon. Elon has proved herself to be a necessary well within the Convention.

2. A convenient well. Jacob's well was located at the half-way point between Judea and Galilee. It was a most convenient place for the traveler to rest, to drink, and to make preparation for the remainder of his journey. It was accessible to all people.

In like manner, Elon, our educational well, is beside the road, located near the center of the Southern Christian Convention. It is easily reached by automobile from any section of the several bordering States. It is conveniently located within a day's drive of the largest Church in the Convention. It is conveniently located near the Christian Orphanage, and but a few hours from Richmond, Va., the city wherein THE CHRISTIAN SUN is published.

In his "Acres of Diamonds," Dr. Russell H. Conwell used to tell of a man who felt that he did not have a chance near home. He longed to get away, he felt that he could make good in some other place; he therefore moved to a far country, and the man who moved on his home-place found it covered with acres of diamonds. One may move to any part of the United States in search of a college embodying up-to-date equipment, instructors, and a high morale, but he will eventually find that Elon stands foremost in these things and is conveniently located within reach of every youth of the Southern Christian Convention.

3. A deep well. Medical science has shown that water from shallow wells is impure. Jacob's well was deep and its water pure. The Samaritan woman who went there to get water knew nothing of the finding of our modern scientific discovery of the germ theory; but something must have told her to drink from the well that was deep.

I like to think of Elon as being a deep well from which flows pure water. Modern tendencies are toward superficial things, shallow thought and surface water. Young people need as never before to drink from the well that is deep and to say with Cowper:

"Defend me, therefore, common sense, say I,
From the reveries so airy, from the toil
Of dropping buckets into empty wells,
And growing old in drawing nothing up."

Elon's depths contain sound thought, cultural training, and "Christian Character First and Always." But these virtues are of no value to society unless young men and women avail themselves of the privilege of drawing from their sources.

The woman of Samaria went to Jacob's well to draw plain water, but she found living water, such as would keep her from ever thirsting. Young men and women who go to Elon in search of an academic education come away with more. They come to realize that whosoever drinketh of her waters shall find within himself a well of deep water springing up, urging him to be of service to all mankind.

It costs something to have colleges, but it costs infinitely more not to have them. Elon is our college. Men and women of the past have paid great prices for her. From her depths have gone more than 500 graduates and between four and five thousand trained men and women.

Not all of us can translate the Bible into the Turkish language as did Goodell, or establish Rhodes scholarships as did Cecil Rhodes. Not all can dig such a well as Jacob dug, or become pioneers in establishing such an institution as Elon, but all may have a share in her maintenance. Let us, as members of the Church we love, be found faithful to this institution, our educational well, so necessary to the welfare of Church and State, conveniently located and accessible to all, and so deeply established upon Christian truths.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

Sunday morning, August 5th, a perspiring pastor got up to preach to a perspiring congregation. Men who had gone about their work coatless all week had on their Sunday coats, thus adding greatly to their discomfort. The pastor felt sorry for them. He could not bear to see them suffer such torture as this. Hence, he proposed that they organize a "Shirt-sleeve Club." A treasurer of the club was named, and the men instructed to turn over to him whatever sum they were willing to pay for the privilege of attending Church services without coats. A large number of the men enrolled in the club immediately after the benediction. Some of them paid as high as $5 for the privilege. It was announced also that this "fee" would be given to missions.

At the evening service the members of this club were back at Church, their faces all aglow with smiles. Their coats were at home. They felt that a victory had been won over cruel fashion. The pastor also joined the club. Today it is being whispered around that the men of a city Church, including the pastor, have actually attended a Church service in their shirt-sleeves! What a crime! Do you suppose Conference will censure them for it? No! Conference will be glad that about $25 has been added to the mission fund.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

IS IT OURS?

Parents are even now making up their minds as to where they will send their sons and daughters to college this fall. Also sons and daughters are making up their minds to assist parents in that family decision. Well, it is a decision of sufficient import to engage the attention and the wisdom of the entire family. Sons and daughters of college age are in the formative period of life, and nothing does more to influence character and shape destiny than the kind of college one attends. Wherefore, we invite any who may read these lines and are concerned directly or indirectly to consider Elon College. It is worth considering.

1. It is Our College. Somewhere within range or reach there may be a better college; but this is ours, and there is none better for us.

This writer recalls vividly a story told by the late lamented Ex-governor T. J. Jarvis, of this State. It was at Hampton Roads during the great naval rendezvous held there during the Jamestown Exposition. Governor Jarvis said he viewed the ships of the nations as they passed, one by one, amid the acclaim of persons from the nations whose ships were in review.

When a monster vessel flying the flag of Russia passed in review, some persons threw up their hats and yelled themselves hoarse. When he asked one of the excited ones whose ship that was, the reply was quick, "That ship, sir, belongs to God and the czar." The governor knew that man and that ship belonged to Russia.

Another sea monster hove in sight. Up went hats, out came yells from another group. "Whose ship is that?" inquired the governor. "Why, that ship, sir, belongs to mine Got and Fatherland." The Governor knew that ship and those up-thrown hats and out-thrown yells belonged to Germany.

Still another came. This was flying the Union Jack. Up went hats, out came yells from another group. "Whose ship is that?" "Why, sir, that ship—isn't she a beauty?—belongs to his imperial majesty the king of England."

And then came another ship. It was not so large, not so formidable as the others. It flew the Stars and Stripes. Up went hats, out came yells. "Whose ship is that?" the governor asked. One stopped yelling long enough to say, "Man! where have you been all your life? That is our ship—that belongs to us." Governor Jarvis knew an American was speaking then. For what the United States owns, that belongs to us. We are a part of it, have had a hand in it, and it has become a part of us. Elon College is ours. We of the Christian Church are responsible for it. We have put into it our prayers, our sacrifices, our efforts, our deep interest and our love. We want all who will and can to come and enjoy its advantages, its superior buildings, equipment and curriculum. We are not selfish or sectarian about this, but we have builded it where it is. It is ours.

2. The Future is to be Considered. Those who will be leaders and well and favorably known in the Christian Church a few years hence are, in large numbers, found now as students in Elon College. We want our sons and daughters to have as their friends and associates those who in future will have a large part in molding the destiny and making the history of the Church. In sending sons and daughters to Elon College, one is putting forth an effort to give these sons and daughters the acquaintance and the comradeship both of the best now and of those whom it will be helpful and pleasant to know in the future. This is a real asset, though it may now seem negligible.

3. Superior Equipment and Advantages. Since our late building program there are no colleges within reach that have better buildings, better equipment, superior material advantages, and few if any are equal to ours in this respect. No one who is in position to compare can question this. Elon College has the best and latest word in buildings and equipment. But these are not all of a college. They are not even the best of a college. The care for character building and the personnel to build that character, with the training and the heart to mold character for Christian conduct and activities—that is the most important and vital asset of any college. And that Elon has, in its constant struggle, endeavor and consecration, made its slogan real and vital—"Christian character first and always at Elon College."

CHURCH OR SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The Church was founded in Antioch, in Syria, composed of Jews and Gentiles converted to Jesus Christ. This was the first Church whose members were both Jews and Gentiles. It was probably founded in A. D. 45—about 1,883 years ago. The Church has had its struggles, its persecutions, its discouragements, its divisions; but it has lived on, made progress, and is now the mightiest force in the world. Its ultimate success is assured by the divine promise that the "kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ: and He shall reign forever and ever."

The Sunday School was founded by the Church as a permanent institution in 1832 in New York. There were individual steps taken at an earlier date by Robert Raikes, in England, in 1870. Robert Raikes is considered the personal founder of the Sunday School, though local schools in the United States existed at Roxbury, Mass., 1674; Norwich, Conn., 1676; Plymouth, Mass., 1680; Newton, Long Island, 1683; Ephratah, Pa., 1740. In 1791 the first Sunday School was organized in Boston; in 1793 a similar Sunday School was started in New York by Katie Ferguson, a negro; in 1816 the Female Union Society of New York City was organized; that same year a Sunday School union was formed in Boston; and the following year the Sunday and Adult School Union of Philadelphia was organized, and these three societies became the nucleus of the American Sunday School Union, which was organized in 1824, in Philadelphia, and has organized so many schools, printed so much Sunday School literature, and inspired so many workers. Many Churches have sprung up from the organization of Sunday Schools in neglected sections.

The Sunday School at the present time numbers millions from cradle roll to home department, and has thousands of workers in thousands of schools. That vast army of children and adults contain the potential forces of victory for Jesus Christ. There is one thing that robs the Sunday School of its great spiritual value, and that is the habit, which seems to be almost universal, of leaving the church at the close of the Sunday School and not attending the Church. The Church is the parent institution, the divinely established organization, provides the building, the equipment, heat and janitor service, and the Sunday School would die without the Church. The Sunday School is at its best when it remains at Church services. It is almost tragic to see men, women, and young people leaving the Church just at the time for service to begin. This tendency is a mark of failure on the part of the Sunday School to accomplish its main purpose, the training of the young for worship and service in the Church. Adults should set the example for the young by going to Sunday School and then remaining at Church.

The Sunday School can never take the place of the Church; they must co-operate, and they cannot do it if the tendency to separate continues.

DR. HELFENSTEIN ON TOUR.

As the gracious and cordial editor of THE SUN, our beloved Dr. J. O. Atkinson, requested me to write a letter to THE SUN readers while I am making this trans-oceanic trip, and as I promised him I would do so, I shall now fulfill my promise. It was my rare privilege to have Dr. Atkinson go with me to the boat "to see me off" and briefly view with me some of the marvelous accommodations of this great ship (the "Olympic") which is one of the three largest ships in the world.

The ship has 46,359 tons gross register and 66,000 tons displacement. The length of the ship is 882 feet and the breadth is 92 feet. The average speed is 22 knots an hour, or about thirty miles an hour. The ship accommodates 2,500 passengers, and has a crew of 860. It is the first large liner to be fitted with oil-fired engines.

The ship is like a city on the water, providing conveniences of every kind for the people. The ship has shopping places where the passengers may procure gifts, wearing apparel, etc. It is also equipped with recreation facilities, such as tennis courts, swimming-pool, gymnasium, and decks for tournaments of all kinds of athletic sports. It also provides spacious libraries, reading-rooms, restaurants, lounging-rooms, etc. As this is a British ship, saloons are also provided, much to the disgust of a large number of passengers who appreciate the benefit of prohibition.

On Sundays, both Protestant and Catholic services are held. The Protestant services were well attended last Sunday and a splendid spirit of interest manifest. The passengers are of an unusually high type, interested in the spiritual and the intellectual as manifest by their response to the privilege of worship on Sunday, and their discussions and patronage of the library. I find there are a large number of college and university students and professors and ministers on board. A number of grand opera singers and other musicians are also among the passengers, so that we are provided with wonderful concerts each day.

The efficiency of the cuisine is simply superb. Most elaborate and appetizing menus are provided for the regular meals, and according to the British custom, tea and cakes are served each afternoon at 4 o'clock on the deck. The dining-rooms are simply gorgeous in their decorations. In fact, the White Star Line has spared neither effort nor expense in making the entire ship a thing of beauty. In all the lobbies, libraries, lounging-rooms, etc., are to be found large, framed paintings, copied from the world's masterpieces hanging on the walls. Cut flowers and growing plants, ferns and palms are artistically arranged in the dining-rooms and libraries.

The ship being so large and so well planned, we are scarcely conscious of being on the water when we are at midship, except of course during a storm such as we passed through yesterday. But the disturbance experienced by the passengers in such a large ship as this in a storm is nothing as compared to what is experienced on the smaller ships at such a time. Each moment of our voyage has been filled with pleasure. Already I feel the great benefit of physical and mental renewing. I only wish that all my friends might enjoy the pleasure of an ocean voyage on such a ship as this in such weather as we have had during the voyage.

A few moments ago a school of large whales were seen near the ship. I could not help thinking of how such a sight would have struck terror in the hearts of passengers on an ocean voyage a century ago. But today the whales were more afraid of the great ocean liner than we were of the whales.

We have only sighted two ships thus far the first four days of the voyage, meeting one and passing the other. Yesterday the compass became impaired and our ship went some distance out of its course. It was then stopped in mid-ocean while repairs on the compass were being made. It caused a peculiar sensation to come over one to think of being in mid-ocean and not knowing where we were nor which way to go. But the experience did not last long. Repairs were soon made, and within a few hours we were back on the right course. The captain is trying today to make up for lost time. But he will not likely be able to do so, I am told.

As I go on this "errand of Christian good will" to the Churches across the sea, I covet the prayers of my Christian friends in America. I daily thank God for the timely courtesy of the Council on Interchange of Preachers and Speakers Between the Churches of Great Britain and America for making this wonderful trip possible. I am told that a most interesting itinerary of appointments has been made for me in Churches of historic and present-day strategic interest. The cordial letters of welcome received before I left home from the British pastors in whose Churches I am to preach fill my mind and heart with happy anticipation. And the privilege of meeting friends of my student days in Scotland and the opportunity of visiting the different places of historic and literary interest in the old world, I am confident will make for an enrichment of mind and heart that will make me a better workman in my Master's vineyard. That is the ruling purpose of my life.

Sincerely,

ROY C. HELFENSTEIN.

students, weaving into his conversation with them the deepest things of life." The other items which Dr. Mott lists are giving wise publicity to the Christian activities of the students, opening his home to the workers and to the activities, presiding over student meetings, speaking under the auspices of or at student meetings, teaching voluntary courses in Bible and Christian life principles, writing in magazines and periodicals and newspapers, coaching in the realm of ethical standards, and leading students to think on the principles underlying their various Christian activities.

From two sources, therefore, a professor is essentially part of the college curriculum. He is the purveyor of certain information and attitudes through his class-room, lecture and laboratory work, and as an individual his influence in a personal way is tremendous in molding the life and character of his students.

It is difficult to differentiate these services in hard and fast ways from each other, and it is doubtful if such differentiation should be attempted even if it should be possible. Every professor is a philosopher. He has a philosophy of life. It is reflected in the attitude he assumes toward his subject, in the chance remarks he utters in the way of comments on current events on the campus and in the world in connection with his teaching, and it finds in his own living an incarnate expression. There is a disposition in certain intellectual quarters to desire to deprive scientists in particular of this privilege to philosophize, but it cannot be done and it ought not to be done if it could be. Here is the real heart of teaching. Students should and do learn more from the philosophy of the professor that will be of permanent value to them than they get from their textbooks or his scholarly investigation. Students and professors, however, should understand that spiritual interpretation is primarily and ultimately for religious experts and their leadership in such matters should not be deprecated nor belittled.

We have a demand in our day for orientation courses, for educational counsel, and for vocational guidance. The source or cause of all three of these demands is the same, the departmentalization of our colleges so that professors teach as specialists and are largely content with the impartation of knowledge without attempt or success in fitting their particular subject in with other subjects and with life. Every course of study should be an orientation course and every professor should be able to give students educational counsel and assist in vocational guidance. Professors, however, who are successful in these matters must be real professors, real teachers of men and women and not just purveyors of certain subject-matter.

We are fast approaching the time when we will agree that it makes very little difference what the student may select as the field of his major concern in college, provided he masters it in its relationships. The selection of a major may mean everything to a student so far as his vocation in life is concerned, or it may mean nothing. It will certainly mean everything to his intellectual and spiritual development if that major is pursued in such a way as to orientate the student with reference to all fields of learning and with reference to life. This cannot be done without professors of the right kind, but neither can the professor alone do it.

Learning is a joint process in which the mind of the student, as well as the mind of the professor, is active. We will certainly never be able to make our institutions Christian, no matter how many departments of Bible or religious education we incorporate in them, unless we have professors who teach their particular subjects from the standpoint of a Christian philosophy of life. The professor's philosophy of life is more important than the subject-matter he teaches; is a most important ingredient of the college curriculum. He should found his philosophy on a Christian view of life and an appreciative acquaintance with the conclusions of our recognized spiritual leaders.

Even so incisive a critic of higher education as Mr. M. L. Mencken recognizes the values that come to the student mind from contact with real teachers. He thinks the discovery of the fraudulence in college teaching and in its emphasis is a chief gain from a college course, and urges young people to put up with its follies to reap this good. He says: "I believe that it (the ability to discover fraudulence in colleges and in college professors) is being taught in the American colleges today, and on an unprecedented scale. Swamped by hordes of unteachable students, with their faculties overworked and what they call their plants strained to the uttermost, they have been forced to throw their old standards overboard and to take in all sorts of pedagogical amateurs and quacks. These quacks now essay to instruct the youth of the land. What they try to teach is not learned, and maybe is not worth learning; but what they are themselves is detected and remembered, and in that remembrance there are the rudiments at least of true education.

Moreover, they accomplish something else; they throw up in a brilliant light the merits of those of their colleagues who are genuinely men of learning. In the average American college, perhaps, there are not many of the latter, but in even the meanest college there are apt to be a few. The influence of such men upon the students is immensely salubrious and valuable. They make it plain to even the dullest that there are ends in this world quite as alluring as material success—that men of high character may and do pursue them, and gladly. They are standing answers to the whole rumble-bumble of American habitry.

"If a boy emerges from college with an understanding of that point of view, so rare in America, and with a soundly cynical attitude toward the pretensions that fill the world with noise and confusion, he has gained quite enough, it seems to me, to compensate him for four years of his life. His increase in positive knowledge may not be great, but it is very likely to be great enough; two-thirds of the things that are taught in college, even when they are well taught, are not worth knowing. The main thing is to learn the difference between appearances and realities. That may be done, of course, anywhere, but it is probably best done, at least in the case of the average boy, in some institution which represents the world in little, and in which the experience of man on earth is fairly boiled down."

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

Although Dr. Beougher and I are handicapped very much during this campaign because each of us have meetings to hold, the work goes steadily forward. We are one-fifth the way to the goal ($50,000). If eighty persons could see their way clear to give five hundred dollars each, the goal would be reached. Surely we have eighty within the limits of the Convention who love the institution to that extent. We have had some disappointments as well as some happy surprises since we began. The former is disliked, but the latter enjoyed. I can't believe that the few who have turned us down will fail, before the campaign is over, to fall in line.

Let you who have received solicitation respond at once or there may be a danger of some one having ugly thoughts about you. One young lady, a school teacher, responded with double amount that she was asked for. How easy it would be if all our prospects felt that way about it. Come on, friends, and let's put it over. Send us your contribution and God your prayers, and watch with pleasure the report from week to week climb toward the goal. This is your personal solitation. Please do not wait for anything else, but see or write us at once what you wish to do.

The report for this week is as follows: Previously acknowledged, $8,605.39; T. J. Carpenter, $25; A. L. Kenady, $25; Schuessler & Sons, $700; J. V. Perry, $600; J. O. Atkinson, $25; Charlie Dollar, $7; Guss Pinkard, $15—total, $10,002.39.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Boarding-housekeepers are more in demand in this age than any past age of human society. Home is no longer the eating-place of all the people. People are scattered over the world as never before. Industrial cities draw men and women not only from the country but from smaller towns. Many employees are young men and young women who seek rooms and meals. Many young married people who occupy rooms in apartment houses, teach school or work in offices or stores, prefer to board rather than to prepare their own meals. This grows with increase of population, increase of business, and increase of rapid transportation. Resorts add to this matter of "keeping boarders." The boarding-house might be called, in this day, an institution.

Boarding-houses are managed almost exclusively by women, and fewer of them fail, financially, than almost any other business. This raises the question whether women may not be safer managers of business than men. "Safely first" seems to be characteristic of women. Do women, in business, ever go into bankruptcy? Which is safer, stock in a millinery store or a grocery store? Have you known of many widows losing their home by bad debts? Is it not true that many homes have been saved by the wife declining to sign a deed of sale or trust?

But this letter is trying to utter a word about boarding-housekeepers—those industrious and patient women who have the hardest place in good society. To provide meals three times a day for three hundred and sixty-five days in a year is no small job. To work in a mill, on a train, in an office, on the farm is easy compared with the planning, purchase and preparation of meals. It requires good judgment, good taste, a fine study of human appetites, and a pleasant face in all weather, all markets, and all times. A good meal is on the table. The regular hour has arrived. The clock has struck. Some are present, some are not. Had it been the shop whistle, the train blow, the school bell, the store hour, they would have been present—but it is a boarding-house. She waits, hot dishes are getting cold, ices are melting. She has important engagements to meet, some member of the family is sick; but she waits. And when the late-comer arrives, she smiles and says, "It is all right." Boarders are not as considerate of boarding-housekeepers as they are of boarders. I have boarded most of my life, and must say that some women must have been born to keep boarders as some are born to sing. They desire crows, for they get little else.

W. W. STALEY.

A SCHOOL WITHOUT A CURRICULUM.

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL, B. D.

Our Board of Christian Education has told us that there are three institutions that are responsible for the Christian education of youth. They are the home, the Church school, and the denominational college. We thoroughly agree with this allocation of responsibility. Of these three, the home is by far the most influential factor.

The home is the influence that touches the life of the child at the most impressionable age. Those who have made a study of the question are about agreed that the influences that touch the life of the child up to the time it is five years of age are the ones that make the deepest and most lasting impression. The home not only exerts its influence at the time when the mind and heart is most susceptible, but it is influencing the child practically all of the time. The Church school, on the other hand, only exerts its influence directly for a very brief period each week, and the college does not touch the life of youth until character is very definitely formed.

Many of the best-trained and most consecrated minds have been employed in selecting the material and arranging the courses that are to be presented in the Church school and in the college. But who can tell us what ought to be taught in the home? And who can outline for us the method by which the child should be trained in order to lay the proper foundation for Christian character? There are of course those who are making a careful study of child psychology. Most of such study, however, has been done in order to understand the adult mind, rather than to discover the fundamental things that determine character.

There is a most urgent need for definite and practical information that may be brought to bear upon this problem. Most of the efforts that have been made, and most of the books that have been written, have been far more theoretical than practical. But the eagerness with which they have been received by those who have the responsibility of child training is conclusive proof that when there is a definite message outlined it will not have to seek a hearing. Mothers and fathers are looking everywhere for something that will be of definite help to them in meeting their full duty to their children.

Such a course must not be too theoretical, and it must not be too technical. It will have to be molded to help those who are responsible for child training. It will have to start with the mothers and fathers just as they are, and not as they ought to be. For those who have had the least training to fit them for their responsibility are the ones who most urgently need to be helped.

It is going to be a very difficult task; but it is by no means an impossible task. There are homes that are producing children with as fine Christian character as the world has ever seen. There are mothers and fathers whose influence over their children and whose training of their children may be rated as the finest contributions our religion and civilization have produced. Nor are the results achieved mere matters of chance. Chance is the most negligible factor in the forming of Christian character. Wherever noble character is produced there are definite forces and fundamental principles that are responsible for the success. Whenever there is a failure in character formation, it is perfectly certain that there have been fundamental faults in the forces that have been brought to bear upon the life. We may not yet know enough to determine just what has been responsible for either the success or the failure. But if men and women moved by the Spirit of God try long enough and hard enough, they can find out enough to prevent a million failures in one generation.

The home is the most important factor in the Christian training of youth. And the Christian training of youth is the most important thing in the world today. Those who are doing the finest work in the home training of children need the help and inspiration that could be theirs if they might share in the experiences of others like themselves. Out of the experiences of those who are having some measure of success in training their children there could certainly be gleaned a wealth of information to help those who are hopelessly bewildered in the face of the responsibility that confronts them. Those who pioneer in the work of charting a course of Christian training for the home will have made a definite contribution both to posterity and to the kingdom of God.

WHY THE COLLEGE?

Why our college? Why any college? Why education? And a dozen kindred questions more glibly asked than intelligently answered!

We are told that a college education greatly increases a man's earning capacity, and it is proven by statistics galore. Bread and butter argument—materialistic. Good, but a low reason. We are told that it brings prestige and influence that gives the college man the advantage in any walk of life. Not so much to this as formerly. The college man is only one of a crowd, and that a large one. Educational influences outside of the college lessens the distance between the college graduate and the "stay-at-home."

But, they tell us culture is its own reward, and this alone justifies the college course. This sounds like a strange voice. It must be coming to us from a dead past—that benighted age when college students read and studied Greek and Roman literature in the original tongues. This is out of date. We dismiss it without further comment.

Again, it is contended that a college course is a necessary foundation for the professional and highly scientific courses. There is much to this, and more in the future. Universities are demanding this. The possible weight and height of any building depends on the breadth and solidity of its foundation. And so reasons and argument may multiply. But there is something more basic than these things. Man is a God-made creature. He lives in a God-made world. God has a purpose in his life. To this end there must be contacts—communication. Man must know his world, himself; God must come into his life. God is limited in entrance to man's life, to his thinking feeling, and willing. All education is but the development of these powers, and every new realm of thought entered opens up a new avenue through which God can enter, develop, energize, and direct man's powers and give expression to himself. That education is best that makes possible the greatest number of contacts. The Christian college does this and hereby justifies its existence.

I AM ENCOURAGED.

It is very encouraging to me, as field secretary of Elon College, to see the increase in interest among our people. And by our people I mean members of the Christian Church and our alumni. As a result of this interest, it has become much easier for us to reach our total capacity of students. Just yesterday I received a letter from a former student, giving me the names of three prospective students and stating that she is doing all she can to get them to enroll here. When I go into a community it is easy to find some one who has attended Elon that will take time from his work and help me to find the prospective students in that community.

The quarterly offerings that are now being taken in our Churches will mean much to the college. The amount of money taken in will be a small item compared with the increase of interest among our young people. This has been our easiest year in finding prospective students, and were it not for the "hard times" we would have been filled to our capacity long ago. In spite of the so-called "hard times," we will have all the students we can care for. This quarterly offering gives the minister a chance to place his college before his young people—an opportunity that he had not had heretofore.

I wish that every friend of Elon might know of our sincere appreciation for the things they do to help in securing students. We are very grateful to you when you send us the name of a student. The fact that our student body is secured more easily each year is proof of the growing interest among our friends. You never know when a word or two to a high school student will determine his enrolling at Elon.

With this increase of interest among our people and the new plant and splendid equipment which we can boast of, it is but a few years when more students will desire to come here than we will be able to care for. Let me urge that all our people be determined to send Elon a student. Try it and you will be surprised with what ease it is done.

THE SMOKING CAR WET.

By ERNEST H. CHERINGTON, LL.D.

We all know the Smoking Car Wet. We meet him in the barber shop, in the hotel lobby, almost any place where men meet and talk. Sinclair Lewis knows him well. He is probably a distant relative of George Babbitt. Sometimes I fancy that he is akin to Schmalz, "the man who knew Coolidge." He is wet. He is wet with a vehemence and a sweep of detail that would probably amaze the folks back home—for our friend, the Smoking Car Wet, is away from home. From his fluent tongue flows tales of his revels in the realm of King Alcohol. The case wherewith he gets the real McCoy is most amazing to his auditors. He finds prohibition a failure. He finds its enforcing agents are corrupt. He is shocked and scandalized at the debauchery of flask-toting youth. He is full of curious information concerning how one may make one's own or, if one prefers it, how one can get "the real stuff" almost anywhere that one desires. We have all met him, the Smoking Car Wet.

There is one curious thing about this specimen of American fauna. When he gets back home and election day comes around, he enters the voting booth, and there face to face with the ballot and a pencil he casts his ballot for the drier candidate upon the ticket. If there is a referendum on some State enforcement law, he votes for that measure. No bootlegger's wares have ever invaded his home. He owns neither a hip flask nor a cocktail-shaker. While he knows the names of all the various brands of liquor, he could not tell a pousse cafe from a gin tansy. But he is the Smoking Car Wet.

There is a curious bit of psychology behind all this. The Smoking Car Wet belongs to a fairly large class which has been catalogued and indexed by those who classify humanity by its reactions. He belongs to the same group as the man who brags about his sales and profits, but does not write this interesting fiction on his income tax blank. He is of the same type as the fellow who brags of having made sixty miles an hour, but who in reality is so cautious a driver that the cars behind him honk as he blocks their way. He is a blood brother to the man who hints at his life as a Don Juan, although he has never broken his marriage vows. He is in the same category as the chap who loves to pose as a spendthrift, a gamester, a prodigal wasting his substance in riot-out living while he maintains three savings accounts and has a little barrel on his desk in which he carefully deposits all the pennies received in change.

An odd twist in psychology makes men dislike to pose as unco' guid. They prefer to be thought devilish and raffish. There is nothing new about this phase of human conduct. It made Milton, the Puritan, write much of his own repressed longings into the magnificent character of Satan in "Paradise Lost." The "mute, inglorious Miltons" of today, unable to write a "Paradise Lost," pour out their unconvincing braggadocia in the smoking car or hotel lobby where they picture themselves as daring rebels against high heaven's law.

But—and there is usually that but—when these are facing fact and not fancy, when they are called upon to exercise their sovereign right as citizens, they forget the windy boasts of libertinage, of profligacy, of liberalism, anti-puritanism, and the rest, and they vote for the ideal. After all, they have been striving to live by that ideal and the loose talk in the smoking room or the Pullman club car has been merely their safety valve of expression, their apology for being decent, honest men, their sop thrown to the Cerberus of masculine adventure. It was just talk; that's all.

The comic tragedy of it all is that the real wet, the blow-in-the-bottle wet, whose credulity will accept even the bootlegger's guarantee, believes the vaporings of the smoking car orator. Surely, all the world is wet, he feels. He anticipates the hour—not far distant now, he thinks—when once more he can put his foot upon the brass rail, place his elbow on the bar and blow the foam off a glass of beer. He knows that hour must be coming soon, because all the Smoking Car Wets tell him how they'll vote on election day. And he believes them. And then when election day does come and the dry majorities steadily increase, as they always do, when popular referenda reject the brewers' proposals, then the real wet, most credulous of mankind, wonders how it is that the majority—as he mistakenly reckons while he counts over the number of Smoking Car Wets he has heard talk—is beaten again by the crafty Machiavellianism of the dries. He is puzzled. He is more than puzzled. He knows that the Smoking Car Wet was a wet, but he had not realized that in the vernacular of the day he was "all wet."

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

"A WAKING WORLD."

That the non-white world, awake and determined to make its own future, has come to the place where it must choose the ideals upon which that future will be built, is the contention of Stanley High, in "A Waking World," which has just been published by the Abingdon Press, New York.

"There is no lack of alternatives to the Christian's gospel, and no certainty that, in the end, it will prevail," writes Mr. High. "It is of particular importance, therefore, that Christians should reconsider the significance of their world-wide program and the nature of the faith it offers. Moreover, there is every indication that the choices which finally are made in Africa and Asia will be first determined at the altars of the Christian west."

Mr. High's latest book is based upon the materials which he gathered in a year of travel as a missionary observer in Africa, India, China, Malaysia, Korea, Japan and the Philippines. It constitutes a comprehensive survey of the achievements and significance of Christian missions in relation to the nationalist and racial movements that are stirring through Africa and Asia.

In his examination of the unique contributions of Christianity to the world, Mr. High gives a personal testimony of his own changed opinion after he had some contact with the facts of the mission field.

"I went out to the field," he writes, "a victim of the prevalent American uncertainty. It had been bred in me, as in many, by ignorance of the life of non-Christian peoples, lack of conviction of the power of Christianity and an honest desire, above all things, to be tolerant. I was determined to eliminate 'heathen' and 'heathenism' from my vocabulary. I resented the 'holier-than-thou' sentiments of many of our missionary hymns. It was definitely arranged that I should write a series of articles upon my return, which would indicate something of the fundamental unity of all faiths and endorse the idea of their eventual synthesis.

"But the articles were never written, 'heathenism' went back into my vocabulary, and the missionary hymns, for the most part, are no longer offensive. It was not made a condition of my going that I should change my mind. But it proved to be the inescapable consequence of the things that I saw and heard.

"Out where the missionary works, the Christian gospel is a matter of transformation. People are not comfortable. They are dying. Academic zeal is not an asset. The Christian preaches a gospel of redemption because he dares preach nothing else. He is called on daily not to defend Christianity, but to test it."

The record of that daily testing is written, in human terms and in relationship to the great movements that are abroad throughout the world, in the twelve chapters of this book.

PORTO RICO LETTER.

Weekly I receive cheerful letters from different groups of our Churches, asking me what are the things that I need most in my work, as they are happy to help. Well, I need so many, many things that I hardly know where to start to name them. Of course, I feel sure that some of the good folks will be interested to help by little things. The things that we can use the most are material for making scrapbooks, Bible pictures, pencils, notebooks, dolls, pieces of yard goods, needles, thread, also small pieces of goods, as we make quilts and old and new clothes for children, women and girls; little story books with pictures, and games or anything that can be used in a Sunday School department. Also I have a club of young women to whom I teach the Bible, domestic science and sewing. We have been trying to learn how to make over old dresses. Therefore, I shall be grateful to any group to send us dresses that we may be able to use in this class. Also if groups of girls in the different Churches wish to make cock-books or material for the study of hygiene, this would be appreciated. Every thing that you send us is greatly appreciated and used to the best advantage.

I wish that some of you good folks were here to observe our daily vacation Bible school, where we are trying to teach the handwork as well as religious instructions. I have found it very hard to find materials that do not cost money, just to keep the little folks busy, as well as to teach them all things that are essential. However, we are very pleased with our classes. I shall write and tell you about our program at the end of our summer school.

I feel very happy to have Mr. and Mrs. Barrett and their two boys back at this home. We could not have done very much without the help of Mr. and Mrs. Barrett. We are very grateful to the good folks that made it possible for them to return to this home. We need your aid and prayers.

FIRST BIBLE SCHOOL.

Miss Pattie Coghill, Henderson, N. C., came to our mountain work, Carroll County, Va., July 21st to conduct the first daily vacation Bible school that has been put on since our work has been opened here. She brought to assist her in the work Misses Lillie Horne and Essie Mae Cotton, of First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., and, with the pastor's help, there were four to engage in the work.

As Miss Coffey, of Stuarts Draft, Va., was teaching a summer school at Elk Spur, we went to Rocky Ford each morning to conduct a Bible school there. In the afternoon, after Miss Coffey's school closed for the day, we kept all of the children for the Bible school. Because of this fact, the Bible school at Elk Spur was much larger than the one at Rocky Ford, but the results were not any better.

The children took pride in learning of the blessed Book. Not only were they taught some great things concerning the Book, but they learned hymns and prayers as well. A Bible was presented to all those who learned the books of either the Old or New Testament. Some of the children earned these gifts as a reward for their labors. Their work was not in vain. This will give us a foundation for Bible schools in the future. The children are acquainted with the work now, and probably our next school will be easier to conduct. After the first day's work, Miss Coghill said, "We were very much encouraged today."

The wise man said, "Bring up a child in the way that he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Our children of today need a larger knowledge of the Bible, the Book we all love. I do not believe we can grow spiritually until we have attained knowledge concerning spiritual things. May God bless these children, that they may develop into lives of usefulness and service for the Master. It is through the young people that our Church of tomorrow has its hope. Let us do our best by them.

GO TO COLLEGE.

It is a pity so many of our boys and girls graduate at high school and stop their education there and never even enter college. Of course, a number of reasons can be given why so many do not go to college, but are they good reasons?

Some will say, "We have no money." But is that a good reason when so many avenues are now offered by which boys and girls can work their way through college and pay their expenses? Even orphan children can graduate from college if they desire. For example, there is our own Thomas Andrews. Our college gave him free literary tuition, as it does all of our Orphanage family who are prepared for college.

Some will say, "I will work up to the top by real experience." I admit that can be done, but it some times takes years to do it. It takes too long.

Some will say, "I can get a job at a fair salary and not lose all the time it takes to go to college." But it is likely you will work for only a fair salary all your life. Four years in college is a short period when you consider your future life and the service you should render to your fellow-men.

The time has been when it was not so necessary to go to college as it is today. If none or only a limited number of our citizenship were educated, you would be on an equal footing. But it is not so today. You must combat with the educated, and if you are not educated you will have to take the small jobs and small salary.

Young men and women, pay the price and go through college. I am wondering if Elon College, with its most efficient plant, new buildings furnished with every modern convenience, with a faculty of instructors second to no small college in the South, with the beautiful campus dotted with beautiful shrubbery and blooming flowers, and the most beautiful location in North Carolina, with excellent bus and railroad facilities every hour in the day would not appeal to you? Look Elon over before you decide to go elsewhere. Remember, it is our college, and we should support it with our students and also with our gifts.

We should fall in line with the Convention plan for financing our college, but right now our primary duty is to put our own boys and girls in our own college. Why not do this now and the other later?

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,

Elon College, N. C.

Sup't Orphanage.

GETTING READY FOR THE OPENING.

Things are shaping up nicely for the opening of Elon College on September 3rd, when the freshmen will arrive to begin their orientation period. After a short orientation period, the freshmen will be registered on Wednesday, September 5th, and the upper-classmen will register on Thursday, the 6th, and on the day following the registration regular class-work will get under way for the fall term.

Everything points toward a splendid year ahead, with the college offering the strongest courses this year it has ever offered to its students. With the new buildings completed and the modern equipment installed in the class-rooms and laboratories, the Elon students have advantages surpassed nowhere in the South by any small college.

The registration of students has gone steadily forward during the summer months, and a large freshman class is expected for this fall. Also a large proportion of the old students plan to return and resume their courses. The college enrollment has been limited to 400 students for some time because it is believed that this is the ideal number of students for the small college. The 400 limit will be taxed, as there are more applications from the old and new students to more than make up this limit.

However, Elon College is the Church of the Christian denomination and the students of the Christian Church are always given preference. A few vacancies have been held open for the boys and girls of the Christian Church so that no member who wishes to enter need be refused. These places will be held open until about the last of August, but if they are not taken at that time they will be filled from the large number of applications on hand from students outside of the Christian denomination.

It is the hope of Elon College to have as nearly as possible all the students from the Christian Church because in this way only can the college serve the Church to its fullest extent. The more students who attend from the Christian Church, the greater the service of the college to the Church.

Elon is now a member of the Southern Association of Colleges, and her work is recognized throughout the United States. The various courses in teacher training for the public schools, with observation and practice teaching, are offered and are recognized by all the State departments of education for teaching certificates in the several States. In addition to the regular college work in arts and sciences, courses in the departmental subjects such as music, fine arts, expression, and other cultural subjects may be had by the students at Elon.

Lesson IX—August 26, 1928.

PAUL IN A ROMAN PRISON.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Rejoice in the Lord always; again I will say, rejoice."—Phil. 4:4.

LESSON: Acts 16:16-40.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isa. 55:6-13.

A Touchy Spot.

"But when her masters saw that the hope of their gain was gone, they laid hold on Paul and Silas." These men had a girl, who because of some apparently occult powers, was bringing them in a large revenue. It mattered little to them that their gain was at the expense of her personality. With them and with so many modern people, money or profits was the thing. When, therefore, Paul, in the name of and by the power of Christ, freed the girl of her spirit of divination, her masters became enraged and vented their spleen on Paul and Silas.

How modern and up-to-date it all sounds! "When they saw that the hope of their gain was gone" they did thus and so. Perhaps one of the most pertinent illustrations of this thing is the present situation in regard to the liquor problem. We hear so much about personal liberty, about the impossibility of enforcing the eighteenth amendment, about the harmlessness of intoxicating drinks, and so on. It is all so superficial and pathetic. Does any sensible man or woman think for one minute that the liquor interests are concerned about personal rights for others or about anything else but profits. It is because they see in the eighteenth amendment the passing of their hope of gain that they are raising such a howl. And it is because men and women who like their liquor want to indulge their depraved appetites that they are swallowing all the childish propaganda that is being circulated. When the matter is traced back to the heart of it, it resolves itself into a matter of money and appetite, hope of gain and indulgence of appetite.

The same principle applies to prostitution, to commercialized amusements, to many forms of industry and so on. Those who are connected with such things are content to tolerate the Church so long as the Church is content to preach a wishy-washy, harmless gospel. But when the Church arises in her might and says that such things have no place in a Christian order, immediately these people raise a howl and put up a fight. It is poor argument that says that a man has a right to make a living. No man has a right to make a living at the expense of personality.

Free, Though Prisoners.

"They cast them into prison, charging the jailer to keep them safely; who having received such a charge, cast them into the inner prison and made their feet fast in stocks." In prison, in the inner prison, in stocks—the jailer did the thing with a vengeance. But he overlooked the truth which the poet expressed when he said something to the effect that stone walls and iron bars do not a prison make. In spite of the fact that Paul and Silas were in prison, they were of all men most free, for they were free in spirit. No man is a prisoner who is free in spirit. Men who have the liberty wherewith Christ sets men free are not prisoners to circumstances or conditions.

"But about midnight Paul and Silas were praying and singing hymns unto God." It might have been because their wounds made it impossible for them to sleep. It might have been because they did not want to sleep. At any rate, in the dark hours of the night, in a prison in a far-off land, these servants of God prayed and sang hymns of praise and thanksgiving. What can you do with men like this, anyway? Jesus has said, "My joy I leave with you, and your joy no man taketh from you." If we really share the secret of the Christ we shall have that joy.

A Prisoner, Though Free.

"Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" The jailer was free in body, but he was a prisoner in spirit. How true this is of so many of us! Living as we do in a free country, and boasting of our freedom, we are of all men in many cases the most abject slaves. Fear, prejudice, evil habits, sin bind us and enslave and imprison us. Know ye not, says Paul, that to whomsoever ye yield yourselves, his slave ye are. Only Christ has the secret of ultimate freedom, the freedom of spirit. It would be a profitable thing if every one of us would sit down alone with God and frankly face the question of just how far we are free. What are you a slave to? How far are you to do the things you ought to do, which is, after all, real freedom?

Christian Manhood Asserting Itself.

"But Paul said unto them, 'They have beaten us publicly, uncondemned men that are Romans, and have cast us into prison; and do they now cast us out privily? Nay, verily, but let them come themselves and bring us out.'" This was not false pride; it was Christian manhood asserting itself for a principle. We need that same spirit today. The present political situation calls for men and women who will assert their Christian convictions and rising above mere party loyalty who will stand for the things that Christ stands for. The issue is clearly drawn for those who have eyes to see. It is tommyrot to say that the Church has no place in politics. There is no place just at present where there is needed the moral force and the uncompromising attitude toward organized evil to a greater degree than in politics. We are never going to have a better world until the Church of Christ brings within its redemptive power the ideals of government. It can do this only as citizens of the State act and vote in the light of their heavenly citizenship.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

TOPIC: "What the World Owes to Religious Leaders."—2 Cor. 12:1-12. (Missionary emphasis.)

Some Bible Hints.

Ever since the days of the prophets, leaders of thought have always been men of vision, insight, faith (v. 1).

Not every one of us could be "caught up" to any heaven whatever; we are too gross, too earthly, too self-satisfied (v. 2).

Great leaders have given to the world examples of noble courage, of endurance, of doing their work often in weakness, trusting God (v. 9).

Jesus, like Paul, had a hidden source of energy (John 4:32). Leaders need this hidden manna that enables them to go on with their work (v. 10).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Great leaders have kept the torch of faith burning in the world in times of great darkness. Wesley is an example.

What does the world owe to a man like Edison? His inventions have enriched our life and opened the way to yet other inventions. His worth cannot be reckoned in money.

It is not often that the world pays what it owes to its leaders. Elias Howe, inventor of the sewing machine, laid all men under his debt, but he was never paid. Missionaries are in this class.

Fortunately, great leaders do not think of getting anything for their leadership. They lead because they must. The inner urge drives them. They cannot keep silent.

A Few Illustrations.

The modern world owes very much to Luther, who struck from the minds of men the shackles of authority and broke the power of Rome. He cast off the dead hand of the past and liberated the world.

One day China will awaken to what she owes to Robert Morrison, who carried the gospel there. There are pioneers of the spirit as well as pioneers who open up new lands.

Africa owes a great debt to Livingstone, who first carried the light into its darkness. Leaders open new doors. Religious leaders are the true heroes, always marching at the head of progress.

Tyndale gave to the world the English New Testament in spite of all sorts of opposition and persecution. No gift has ever influenced men more than this.

To Think About.

What great religious leader do you admire?

Who is a great religious leader today?

How may we become leaders?

CONFESSIONAL OR CHRIST.

"If Christ were sitting in one confessional box and a priest in another, the priest could blot out sin just as effectively as could Christ. The priest in confessional gives back strength and health not to a paralyzed body, but to a paralyzed soul, and that, too, is a miracle. The mere presence of a priest causes sin to be blotted out."

These are the words of a Catholic priest, Rev. John F. Hurley, S. J., in the Church of St. Francis Xavier, New York City, in the course of a sermon on "The Power of the Catholic Priesthood," on Sunday, July 1st, and as reported in the New York Times of the next day.

The priest, of course, only voices the recognized position of Catholicism down through the ages, and his affirmation but shows that the papacy has not changed a whit since medieval times.

Now, we consider that this priest has given us the most damaging and devastating argument that is to be found against a belief in Roman Catholicism. We have long contended in this journal that the papacy erects a barrier between man and God in the system of a priesthood, and that the priests usurp a function that Christ alone can perform for the sinner.

Here are a few well-known statements of Scripture which make it most clear that Christ only is our priest and mediator:

"There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus" (1 Tim. 2:5).

"If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous" (1 John 2:1).

"He (Christ) came and preached peace to you that were afar off, and peace to them that were nigh: for through Him we both have our access in one Spirit unto the Father" (Eph. 2:17, 18).

These texts clearly enunciate the fundamental truth that in pure Christianity there is but one way to God the Father, and that is through His Son and our Saviour Jesus Christ. He is the "one mediator"; He is our advocate; through Him we have our access to the Father.

Catholicism, on the other hand, says that we must go to a priest to confess our sins, and that we cannot pray to heaven direct for forgiveness, but must transact all our business with God and Christ through a priest of the Church. We consider this the most grievous error of the papacy, and one that makes it absolutely impossible to place any faith whatever in Catholicism as a way of God. It is a direct blow at the very heart of the Christian religion—the mediation and priesthood of Jesus Christ. It would make Christ unnecessary and a superfluity. It tears Christ down from His throne, and would place man in His stead.

Bible prophets long ago predicted that the Roman Catholic Church would attempt such a course. Paul, who lived in the day when the foundations of the Catholic Church were being laid, said: "It (the second coming of Christ) will not be, except the falling away come first, and the man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition, he that opposeth and exalteth himself against all that is called God or that is worshiped; so that he sitteth in the temple of God, setting himself forth as God" (2 Thess. 2:3, 4).

Paul here is speaking of the great apostasy which was then beginning and which finally culminated in the papal system. Compare with Paul's prediction the words of one of the greatest of modern popes: "We hold upon this earth the place of God Almighty." ("The Great Encyclical Letters of Pope Leo XIII," page 304. Benziger Bros., New York.)

Here is a similar statement made at the Fifth Lateran Council: "Thou (the pope) art the shepherd, thou art the physician, thou art the director, thou art the husbandman; finally, thou art another God on earth." ("History of the Councils," Labbe and Cassart, vol. XIV, col. 109).

From the Catholic conception of the pope grows the idea that he is supreme not only in the realm of religion but that he also should be supreme in things temporal and civil upon the earth. If, indeed, the pope were "another God on earth," then he would, of course, rank above kings and princes and presidents, and should rule the state as well as the Church. This is a fundamental Catholic belief; but for political purposes, in countries where the Church has not yet the prestige and power, her apologists, such as Father Duffy and Al. Smith, try to soften the truth so as not to embarrass their cause.—Signs of the Times.

AN INSPIRING SERVICE.

The Good Lord is still blessing us here at Damascus, for which we are most grateful.

We are having a glorious Church revival. Our pastor, Rev. E. B. White, of Dendron, Va., is doing the preaching. He has brought us some of the most inspiring, soul, stirring messages ever delivered from our pulpit, which have aroused a deep and abiding interest in all who come to hear him. As a result of this splendid meeting, there are many who have reconsecrated their lives to Almighty God and His service. Some have accepted Christ as their personal Saviour. It is a real treat to listen to Bro. White's forceful sermons. We are having capacity crowds and excellent singing. The co-operation from other Churches is wonderful.

Those Churches desiring the services of a wide-awake, forceful gospel preacher will make no mistake in engaging Bro. White for a series of revival meetings.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

SIN AND CONSCIENCE.

"Hast thou found me, oh mine enemy? And be answered, I have found thee because thou hast sold thyself to do that which is evil."—1 Kings 21:20.

This is the cry of Ahab when he met Elijah in Naboth's garden. It is the cry universal in the soul of any one who sins and finally faces the accusing finger of righteousness and realizes that sin has its penalty and he must pay.

Ahab had been a churlish king, grasping and unscrupulous to get any one out of the way whose property he found necessary to confiscate in order to possess. To be sure, he did not kill Naboth, but he gave his seal to Jezebel; and how did he know she would order the death of Naboth? But he knows it when he faces Elijah and is told of his meanness, and he cries, "Hast thou found me, oh my enemy?" He tried to solace himself, as most weak people do, with the idea that he had done nothing. He tried to shift the responsibility, but God made him realize that he had "killed."

The rich man of the New Testament did no wrong, but when he faced eternity the great God of his soul said, "Thou fool!" The thing he had not chosen, now confounded him—that was God.

Somewhere in the heart is the conscience, and, though penalty for a sin may tarry, finally it rises and lashes with a scourge. One may have only turned his face to the wall and said, "I didn't see it." One may not disgrace himself, but if he allows the disgrace or leaves it to others, in the judgment it will be more tolerable for the perpetrator of the crime.

Conscience is thy best friend. Obey its voice. It is as the light-house gleam to the mariner. It is like the sun or the north star to the navigator. It is like light in the dark. It is like a guide in a strange country. It is truth in life.

Prayer.—Our Father, inspire our consciences and increase in us the glorious exercises of faith and make our righteousness like God's—evergreen unto eternal life. Amen.

TUESDAY.

PLAY BALL.

"Every man that striveth in the games exerciseth self-control in all things."—1 Cor. 9:25.

I saw a ball game once of eleven innings, and the game was one to nothing. It was as nearly a perfect game as I ever heard of. There were three up and three down all the way through except in two innings, when there were four up. That pitcher who allowed no hits, that catcher who secured every ball, that first-baseman who let no man pass, that shortstop who stopped every pass his way did not happen to do so. It had taken years of training to play that game of ball, and there were a few things they had to realize in their training in order to win.

1. They must deny themselves a great many pleasures, adopt a certain course of plain food, and train every day. Their inspiration depended upon their perspiration.

2. They must be on the job individually, on time, in time and each doing his best.

3. They must play collectively—team-work. One's good play was the glory of all, or one's error was the humiliation of all. They must play together.

4. They must not let errors nor criticisms from the fans confuse them, and remember that as long as the game lasts there is opportunity.

The religion of the ball game is also the true religion of the Church and of ourselves. Self-denial in order to concentrate and do well. Practice at our best every day. Co-operate in interdependent service. It takes twenty-three persons to serve us a saucer of oatmeal for breakfast. It takes all working together to succeed both individually and collectively.

Prayer.—Our Father, let the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts be acceptable unto Thee. Defend us by giving us Thy power. Forgive us all our sins. Forbid that we shall abate our interest, but to play our part nobly. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A WEAPON FOR EVERY FIGHT.

"Fight the good fight of faith"; "Take the sword of the spirit which is the word of God."—Eph. 6:17.

Man has a weapon for every defense which he desires. In the ages ago, the sword was the weapon of personal combat, and by it one was dismembered, disemboweled or feld by it. The "two-edged sword" cut "going and coming."

In the fight of the soul against sin, God says the Word of God is a "two-edged" sword which nothing can withstand, and this is the weapon for man's use. Our failure in the use of this weapon is our failure in Christian living.

As to the effective use of it, we have only to point out some familiar examples. Abraham Lincoln said: "To the influence of the Bible we are indebted for all our progress." The Chinese and Japanese say that the Christian makes the best man. A missionary was asked, "What does your Bible do for those who embrace it?" The reply in part was, "It makes folks love everybody. It gives peace where trouble reigned. It makes the lazy active. It transforms the drunkard. It makes the vagabond respectable. It makes friends of all. It brings good and not evil."

"Let the earth now praise the Lord,
Who hath truly kept His word.
What the fathers most desired,
What the prophet's heart inspired,
What they longed for many a year
Stands fulfilled in glory here."

Prayer.—God, give us grace, that we may understand Thy Word and believe in Thee. Blessed be Thy word which comes to us and saves us. Dear Lord, man us with firm faith as we go along, and when our last battle with sin and Satan is fought may we be found victorious and free. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A KNEE PATH.

"Be instant in prayer."—Rom. 12:12.

"Praying at all times."—Eph. 6:18.

I heard the late Dr. Jowett once say, "The Christian's way is like mountain-climbing—no cycling, but a lot of hand and knee work." And now I have before me a simple statement from one Father Lucas: "Whosoever wishes to go to heaven must pray." Well, the Bible exhorts us to do nothing quite so much as it does to pray. Whosoever wishes to live must eat. Neither can our souls live without God, and God is real to us only through prayer. This is the way He speaks to us and this the way he transforms us. By it, flesh becomes spirit and a vehicle of good. Tepidity is warmed to zeal, and the human becomes divine.

God is where we are, and in prayer we speak with Him by "tuning in" our souls to the wave length of his own life; we associate with Him, and the result is a pure heart and happiness.

Art thou troubled? He consoles thee. Art thou far away? Pray and he opens up a way and his soul is moved with compassion. Art thou discouraged? Pray and the grace of perseverance is given. Art thou tempted? He strengthens thee to overcome. Art thou a sinner? He saves thee. Lackest thou wisdom? He will give thee understanding and impart to thee every virtue. Art thou in danger? He will protect thee. Dost thy labors seem fruitless? He will turn all things well.

And if thou hast prayed often and long and obtained none of these, do not complain—God may see thee in a better way. He acts like a wise physician, or a wise father toward his child who cries for a knife. Make thy petitions subject to His all-wise will.

Prayer.—Our Father, bring us to penitence, that we may give up moral sin. Teach us how to enter into prayer with Thee, with love, thought and reverence—and to come into Thy presence with faith unshaken. Amen.

FRIDAY.

HOW TO SUCCEED IN PRAYER.

"Abide in me and I in you."—Jno. 15:4.

"If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you" (Jno. 15:7). That is condition.

"When thou prayest, enter into thy chamber and pray to thy Father in secret" (Matt. 6:6). That is humility.

"He who soweth sparingly shall also reap sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully" (2 Cor. 9:6). That is abundance—full strength of mind, body and soul.

"Every one that asketh, receiveth, be it just or unjust." That is for sinners.

"The effectual fervent prayer availeth much." That is anxious desire.

"Not my will but Thine be done." That is resignation to His holy will.

"Men ought always to pray, and not to faint." (Luke 18:1). "Continue instant in prayer" (Rom. 12:12). That is perseverance.

"If you ask anything of the Father in my name He will give it you" (Jno. 16:23). That is the merit of our Lord and a claim to His promise to us.

Have you become discouraged in prayer? Would you give up the practice? Would you wish to follow in the way of sinners? Would you wish to be found in the way of those who have left the path of virtue and are going on down the way of the lost? For the sake of Jesus, art not thou willing to persevere and stand the trial?

Prayer.—God, Almighty God! have mercy upon us poor, weak, failing and falling children. We make our vows afresh. O make us faithful. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WHEN THE DAILY PRAYER?

"Be still and know that I am God."—Psa. 46:10.

"In the morning will I offer my prayer unto Thee."—Psa. 15:3.

The highest success of the day's duties, and the haste with which we wish that duty to be discharged is best concerned by taking time to buckle up for it, which is done by talking with the Master, who gives the blessings, and by thinking things through before the work begins.

A lone calvaryman was being pursued by the enemy. When he mounted his horse, he found

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our Catawba Springs Sunday School, Eastern North Carolina Conference, and some friends from the community held their annual picnic here on August 2nd. The day was fine and the visitors had full possession of the Orphanage. Ice cold lemonade was made by the tubful, and the children as well as the older people enjoyed it very much. Ice cold lemonade on a hot August day is very refreshing, and some of our little boys seem to have a special thirst that was hard to satisfy. Two of our little boys—J. D. Andrews and Merritt Wilson—would have been entitled to the prize for drinking the most had a prize been offered.

All the Orphanage family was invited to take picnic dinner with the visitors, and the little children were lined up on one side of the picnic table which was loaded with everything good to eat, including fried chicken in abundance. Our children enjoyed it very much indeed. Fried chicken is one article of food we seldom serve, as it is too expensive. Our children are always delighted to have a picnic come, as they know fried chicken will be in abundance for them. We are always glad to have friends to come to see us and hold their Sunday School picnic here. We hope our good friends enjoyed the day and will make it an annual affair.

AN AUGUST SHOWER.

The flood of letters containing renewals for THE CHRISTIAN SUN we expected on August 1st turned out to be a small shower. We had our machine ready to take them from the post-office, but did not need it. The subscribers of THE SUN surely did not read the little label bearing their name and the date their subscription expired. If you read it you just forgot to mail us your check to renew.

If the little label bearing your name stuck on the front page reads "8-1-28," for example, that means your subscription expired on that date. When you read this letter look at the label on your paper and see if your subscription has expired. If so, mail us your check to renew. We need it to pay the printer, so we can send THE SUN to you each week to brighten your home. Please do this—won't you? It will save us lots of time and expense.

his girth loose. Though under fire and under hot pursuit, he stopped and tightened his girth, then mounted and sped away in safety. The time he took to buckle up was well worth while. It was making haste by stopping a while. The time taken at the beginning of the day to pray is like buckling up for the race. It is like an interview with the boss for spirit and wisdom for the day.

To say nothing of the value of reading the Bible for communion with God, the morning, of all times, is the time when the soul is most receptive. It is the still hour. It is a time we can make certain of it. The business of the day will rob us of it later. It fortifies us for the conflict. It takes God in before anything else enters. It promotes the wisest economy. It makes one more conscientious. It fosters true perspective. It gives poise. It makes possible to work without friction, strain or waste. It sets right with God.

Prayer.—Lord, make us faithful servants and help us by the light and power of the Holy Spirit to put Thee first in our lives. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE TRIAL OF OUR FAITH.

"That the trial of your faith might be found unto praise and honor."—1 Peter 1:7.

This is the Sabbath; what shall it be—to Church or stay at home? To Church or to the beach? To Church or a long trip? To Church or to the ball game? You will probably get more "kick" out of any of it than out of the Church. But how about the "praise and the honor" and the glory of God. It is not that thou shouldst not do the other things, perhaps, but that thou hast grown cold toward God and left Him out of thy soul. Unto you who believe, He is precious.

A thousand things try our faith. It was in such trials the apostle found his loyalty and the mountain-peaks of his vision and rejoiced as partakers of Christ, and were glad in Him. After such experience, such pastime, one may wish what seems good and call it holy.

Prayer.—Lord, may our souls preserve Thy glorious testimonies, Thy going out and Thy coming in from this day henceforth and forevermore. Thou comest for the purpose of bringing glory; lead us to honor Thee. Open our eyes, open our ears, speak to our souls. Hold us fast forevermore. Amen.

MISSIONARY MEETING.

The first Woman's Missionary Conference for this Conference was held at Linville on August 2. The attendance, though not large, was encouraging for a beginning. The four ministers of the Conference gave special encouragement, as they all came and brought their wives, setting a good example for the laymen, who seemed conspicuous by their absence, only a few being present. The morning devotionals were in charge of Mrs. Mary Davis, of Linville Society, and the afternoon devotionals by Mrs. Ernest Spitzer, of New Hope.

The following Churches were represented: Antioch, Bethlehem, Linville, Leaksville, New Hope, Winchester and Dry Run.

The superintendent of young people reported a total of 108 members, with a total of $151.24 raised during the year. The superintendent of women's societies reported a total of 157 members, with $441.36 raised.

Among the specials reported were two thank-offering services held, one Easter service held, one crate of eggs sent to Orphanage at Easter, one Thanksgiving box to Orphanage, clothing to Porto Rico, cut out pictures to missionaries and story books to Fancy Gap, bought hymn books and paid on new Church building.

The superintendent of spiritual life reported eleven societies had superintendents and definite advances along spiritual lines. The literature superintendent reported one society had a mission library, two societies using mite-boxes, six societies reading mission books, six societies reading mission articles, leaflets, etc., and two having mission study classes.

The cradle roll superintendent reported a membership of 78 and raised $20.29. A number of societies have failed to report, which makes all the above reports incomplete. The treasurer reported $564.16 raised during the year.

Rev. W. B. Fuller gave a splendid address on the subject "Making the Whole Church Missionary." The Winchester society gave a play entitled "The Awakening of Mr. Tightwad," which gave a good lesson and was much enjoyed.

Societies reaching all ten points on goals were Antioch and Bethlehem. Linville and Winchester made nine points each. Mrs. Roy Larrick was chosen to represent our board at Dayton, Ohio, Woman's Board meeting in October, with Mrs. B. F. Frank, alternate.

Leaksville was chosen for the woman's conference next year. The officers elected were as follows: president, Mrs. R. A. Larrick; vice-president, Mrs. A. W. Andes; secretary, Mrs. B. F. Frank; treasurer, Miss Virdie Showalter; superintendent of woman's societies, Mrs. R. C. Myers; superintendent of young people, Mrs. B. J. Earp; superintendent of literature and mite-boxes, Miss Ella Pickering; superintendent of spiritual life, Miss Ora Scott; superintendent of cradle rolls, Mrs. Mary Davis.

The day being rainy, the bountiful dinner was served in the Church.

MRS. B. F. FRANK, Sec'y.

HAVE YOU RECEIVED YOUR B. A.?

I am not speaking now about the B. A. from below, admitting to earthly privileges; I mean the one from above—Born Again. The one is good, the heavenly is best. Men can succeed without the one from earth. They have gained fortunes and honors without it, but without the other no man can be eternally successful. We have the words of our Lord for it, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God."

Why must we be born again? The once born lives in the sphere of the natural, his life is under the control of self, self is the center of his thought. Man cannot raise himself out of this selfish and self-centered state any more than he can lift himself by tugging at his own shoes. There must be a power from above to lift him out of himself.

Again, the once born is under the control of sin. It may be the polished sin of the Pharisee or the gutter variety of the publican, but it is all sin. All snakes are snakes, the Indian said, and all sinners are displeasing to God. Self-reformation does not meet the need. Many people have made resolutions to do better, but they are soon broken. The very effort to keep the resolution seems to focus the attention even more strongly on the temptation and failure results. The way of resolution is the way of struggle; struggle is the flesh that fails. You need a new power from on high to strengthen your weakened will. You must be born again.

What does it mean to be born again, and what are the results? It means that Jesus Christ enters the heart as Saviour, and that He transforms the heart. The change is so radical that the Bible calls it passing from death to life. No man really lives until he is born again. He may have existed before, but he was not alive unto God.

The Lord works from the inside out; man tries to reverse the process. The psychologist tries to influence the heart by changing the habit. Christ transforms the heart and the habits take care of themselves. He makes us love His way. That is the reason why His yoke is easy and His burden light. The outsider imagines that the sinner has a good time, while the Christian is miserable. He thinks that living a good life consists of doing a lot of things you do not want to do and missing a lot of good times that you would like to enjoy. God says that the way of the transgressor is hard. He shows that the one who spends his life in running after a "good time" is chasing a phantom, buying bubbles with a "whole soul's tasking"; that the world which he foolishly thinks he is gaining is not worth one soul, and that it will soon pass. On the other hand, God teaches us that the twice born man will enjoy to the fullest his new life.

The new birth saves from sin. The drunkard that was not able to stop, the victim of self-indulgence, or the possessor of an evil temper are able to conquer these things by the power of Christ, given to them in the new birth. The same power that saves can keep. Christ said, "Greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world." The lives of men like Jerry MacAuley have proved this to be absolutely true.

How may we receive the new birth? By receiving Christ into our hearts. The apostles answered the question of the Philippian jailor: "What must I do to be saved?" by the words, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Such belief implies reception of Christ as Saviour.

Some have the idea that we have to seek God. The truth of the matter is that God has all the time been seeking us. To be born again, we need only to realize that Christ has been standing outside of our hearts all the time and that He has been knocking there waiting patiently, in His great love, for us to open the door. Being born again is just as simple as that. Turn from your ways, open wide your heart to the one who has called you so long, and from the depths of your heart say, "Come into my heart, Lord Jesus," and the transaction is done.

Some one will ask, "Is there not something I must do to prepare the way first? Do I not have to improve myself before I can invite Him to come in?" The answer is that you cannot. You have tried before to improve and have failed; now let Him do the work. As the old hymn says:—

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bidst me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I come."
—Southern Churchman.

THE TROUBLE WITH THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The trouble with the Roman Catholic Church is that it seeks to be both a Church and a political party. Its arrogant claim of being the only true Church might be treated with indifference; but when its head asserts political and civil authority, a position is assumed which cannot be allowed any Church whatever. If it must assume such a position, its members must not complain if it is met with political opposition not offered to any other Church. If it were willing to take its place as a Church along with all other Churches, it would be improper to meet it with any other attitude than that with which we meet all other Churches. Putting itself into a class to itself by its political animus, it must take all that such improper attitude makes inevitable. It cannot claim the political exemption of a Church while it asserts political claims as well as Churchly prerogatives.—Bishop Warren A. Candler.

Does it cost too much to educate? That depends wholly upon the type of education provided. If, during college days, the mind and heart really take hold upon Christ, the cost should not be considered of prime importance.

It sounds sophisticated, indeed, to talk of reading while traveling by airplane, but Mr. Ivy Lee mentions it quite casually in describing his trip from Koenigsberg, Germany, to Moscow, Russia, which took eight hours and cost only fifty dollars. Mr. Lee says: "The planes have reclining chairs and are well heated. The vibration is comparatively slight, and it is easier to read in one of these planes than on the average European railroad train."

New York might find prohibition not so bad after all, if it would just try it once.—Columbus Dispatch.

At the home of the bride, Virgilina, Va., on Saturday, July 14th, at 3 o'clock P. M., Mr. Fenton Drewry Royster, of Lawrenceville, Va., and Miss Clara Mae Tuck were united in marriage by the writer, using the ring ceremony. On account of the illness of the bride's grandmother, the marriage was a quiet one, only a few relatives and friends being present.

Mr. Royster has for several years been in the employ of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company and has been advancing in his work. Mrs. Royster was educated at Elon College and Fredericksburg, Va. For the past two years she has taught in the Norfolk city schools.

At the conclusion of the ceremony the bride and groom motored to Danville to take the train for a ten days' visit in Northern cities. This is an intelligent, cultured, Christian couple, and their many friends wish for them a long career of prosperity and happiness.

CIGARETTE SMOKING BY GIRLS IS TABOO AT NORTHWESTERN.

It is welcome the significant news that Mrs. Winifred R. Richardson, dean of women of Northwestern University, has sent orders to house mothers and chaplains of the fourteen sororities and five girls' dormitories that all smoking must cease, under threat of expulsion.

Dean Richardson's ruling was made with the consent of the Woman's Self-Government Association, composed of one girl from each sorority and dormitory. There are 1,500 women students at Northwestern. This is one of the most encouraging actions we have noted for a long time. Cigarette smoking is bad in various ways, but the sight of a girl smoking is peculiarly offensive.

WHAT DOES RELIGION HAVE TO DO WITH POLITICS?

A Sermon

BY REV. L. E. SMITH, D. D.

(A sermon delivered by Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., Sunday evening, July 29th.)

My Friends:

There are two great forces operative in human society today—religion and politics. Religion may be defined as the outward recognition of the existence of God and a consistent conformity to His will and wish as revealed in the Scriptures and other divine agencies, or as James puts it: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and keep himself unspotted from the world."

Politics may be defined as "the science and art of government; the science dealing with the organization, regulation and a ministration of a State, in both its external and internal affairs"; or in a bad sense, Webster has defined politics as "an artful or dishonest management to secure the success of political candidates."

From the standpoint of these definitions the two would seem to be poles apart and the twain would never meet. Yea, they may abide in the same heart and emanate from the same soul. They meet in the home, on the streets, in places of business, on the Church steps, and in the pews of worship. As you lingered on the steps this evening, as you sit in the pew now, you no doubt are thinking politically and perhaps some of you are saying, "What do you think—will it be a political sermon?" Some one says, "I hope not"; others are saying, "I hope so; I want to see him lay 'em out." All of which makes me ask, "What's it all about?" What does religion have to do with politics, anyway? And this is my topic.

The political tide is running high in this country. It is almost impossible to escape it. You walk the streets, get on the street car, go into a place of business, or sit down in Church, about the second word you hear will have to do with present-day political situations—and the pity of it all is, the Church is about to be drawn into this sorry affair. Not because of any will, plan or wish of its own, but because of the plans and persistent scheming of high-powered politicians who would dominate politics and religion, if possible, to achieve their ends. And so I am speaking to you this evening on the question, "What does religion have to do with politics?" And there are several passages of Scripture that I would like to remind you of as I speak; passages like these:

"What doth the Lord require of thee but to deal justly, love mercy and walk humbly before thy God?" "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's." "For every one of you shall give an account of himself before God." "Be not deceived: God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." "For the word of God is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: "Fear God, and keep His commandments, for this is the whole duty of man."

A little while ago, one of the chief political aspirants of the nation, in a public address delivered to the citizens of his own State and to the nation at large, made an impassioned appeal to the citizens of his country to "keep religion out of politics"; and many issues of the secular press joined in with a chorus of "amens." I would like this evening to take issue with the statement and brand the principle and movement as unsound and un-Christian. But, on the contrary, I would say:

1. Let's put religion into politics! Religion, the Christian religion, with its gospel of redemption and its power of leadership, has never injured anything, so far as I know, but the wrong; and, on the other hand, its fruits of kindness and of beneficence have been a benediction to man in all of his relations of life. If there be any field today in which religion is needed, it certainly is in the field of politics. Its high principle of honesty, of integrity and of fair play might play havoc with certain political organizations, but would result in great good to the common people of this land. The trouble with the political situation today, and that which has brought this country face to face with a political and social crisis, is the fact that so many in public life evidently have fancied that they could be religious in all other departments of life, but irreligious in their political activities; that Christianity could permeate and even dominate their business and social lives, but that it had nothing to do with their political lives. You might as well say to the morning sun as he comes leaping over eastern hills, transforming a world of darkness into a palace of light, "Arise and shine upon the hill-tops, but send not forth thy light into the valleys," as to say to the Son of righteousness, "Arise with healing in Thy beams, shine upon the high peaks of human experience in morals and religion, but send not forth Thy light into the stifling fogs of political corruption in the valleys." You can't break up life into compartments; you can't say that I am religious in one thing but I am not religious in another; you can't wear the cloak of righteousness in religion and the coat of Judas in politics. If I am a Christian in the altar praying my prayers, I am a Christian at the poles casting my vote. What the politics of this country needs today is the Christian religion, the religion that convicts, that exposes, that cleanses, that purifies, and that makes wholesome; the religion that makes one bold to follow the lead of the right and to condemn the wrong wherever he may find it, whether it be in politics or religion. What does religion have to do with politics? It has all to do with it. Civilization such as we have cannot endure under the domination of an irreligious regime. I would say tonight, then, put religion into politics, but on the other hand I say:

2. Keep politics out of religion. Politics is departmental. Religion is universal. Religion in politics has never injured the Church, and it never will. This is the Church's high mission. But politics in religion has more times than one played havoc with the kingdom of God on earth. And I would brand as spurious, un-American and un-Christian any religious organization that would seek political control of the country for the avowed purpose of ecclesiastical domination. Don't allow yourself to lose your head and be swept off your feet and lose your religion in the heat of this discussion, but keep both your head and religion, plus a little heart, and take them all into your politics and make your life tell to the very nth degree. But keep your politics out of your religion. Religion can't be political, but politics should be religious. It's not my business to bring politics into my pulpit, to turn my pulpit into a stool of political propaganda—and I won't do it! I fear God too much. On the other hand, it is my business to preach the gospel; the whole gospel, as revealed through the prophets, given through Christ and delivered unto the saints; but you corrupt, dishonest, godless, irreligious politicians, who would break down moral legislation for material and political graft, who think more of political successes than you do of righteous achievements, who put political expediency above moral integrity, who think more of party than you do of principle—can take no comfort in that declaration, even if every pulpit in the land should adopt that as a program for the next six months, namely: that they would not bring politics into their pulpits, but that they would preach the whole gospel of Christ; for when the gospel is preached in its entirety it sweeps the whole field of human experience. Sin, dishonesty and corruption cannot stand before the onslaughts of the gospel, it matters not where it may be entrenched in human experience.

3. What, then, is the function of religion? Christ said, "I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance; I came not as a physician

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. and Mrs. G. S. Watson, who have been ill in their home here for the past several weeks, continue to improve.

Mrs. H. Shelton Smith, of Chicago, Ill., and Mrs. J. J. Rountree, of Norfolk, Va., were recent visitors to the college.

Dr. W. S. Alexander has, during the past week, conducted a very successful evangelistic service in the Monticello Church, assisting Rev. R. A. Whitten, retiring pastor.

The enrollment of 72,487 new members last year is reported by the Congregational Churches in the United States. The net increase was 13,860; the total membership January 1, 1928, was 928,558.

Rev. R. F. Brown has accepted Monticello and Happy Home Churches for next year, and he plans to make his home at Elon College. He is open for work for two other Sundays of the month.

There are yet a few Churches that have not sent in, if they have taken it, their special missionary offering. We wish to make it unanimous, and do trust all Churches that have not done so will take the offering and send it at once.

Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Fry, of Mellott, Ind., and their mother-in-law, Mrs. Brown, of Merom, Ind., were recent visitors to the college. Mr. James B. Brown, manager of the Young Men's Club of the college, is the son of Mrs. Brown and brother-in-law of Bro. Fry.

Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of the First Christian Church, Winchester, Va., tendered his resignation to that congregation last Sunday, to take effect as soon as satisfactory arrangements could be made with another pastor. Bro. Earp has not yet decided as to what field of labor he will accept as his next pastorate.

Rev. W. C. Carpenter, financial agent of Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., feels very much encouraged in his present campaign to relieve the financial embarrassment of the institution. The college is worthy of the financial consideration of our people and should be relieved of its present financial embarrassment. Bro. Carpenter is greatly appreciative of every donation either in cash or pledge that is sent.

It will be a source of inspiration to our people to know that the legal battle for the control of Union Christian College, Merom, Ind., has been won by the Christian Church. At a meeting of the board of trustees, held on August 7th, it was decided to ask Dr. E. A. Watkins to become all-time president on January 1, 1929, and to open the school in September of next year. This will be encouraging news to our people.

Bro. C. J. Strickland, P. O. Box 27, Elizabeth Station, Charlotte, N. C., has caused to be made a beautiful tithe card which he is offering to send to pastors, gratis, on their application. These are very nice cards and pastors can certainly use them to great advantage. As long as the cards last, there will be no charges except when only one card is ordered and has to be mailed separately. In that case, five cents in stamps should be sent.

However, if pastors wish them in quantities, they will get them postage and charges free. We hope our pastors will take advantage of this very generous offer. Bro. Strickland is a tither and believes in it, and is willing to render assistance in helping others to see as he sees this biblical way of rendering unto the Lord that which is due Him.

Rev. and Mrs. F. P. Ensminger, of Demarest, Ga., were visitors to the college on Monday. Mrs. Ensminger has been doing post-graduate work in Middlebury College, Vt., where she received the M. A. degree in July. She is professor of Spanish in the Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga. Their son, Rens Ensminger, is to be professor at Elon College this next year.

Rev. J. E. McCauley, who has been serving as pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Nashville, Tenn., in connection with his graduate studies at Vanderbilt University, has definitely decided to resign his work there and to come back to the Christian Church as pastor next year. Bro. McCauley is thoroughly prepared for efficient and effective work. Any Church which may secure his services will be fortunate.

Let not the friends of Christian education in our Southern Christian Convention forget that Elon College begins its thirty-ninth annual session the week following the first Sunday in September. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, according to the custom of recent years, freshmen will be conducted into their work. On Thursday, the upper class-men will arrive. The prospect is for a very successful session.

Dr. Lewis H. Keller, president of the Atlanta Theological Seminary, has prepared a very excellent folder entitled "A Forward Movement." This pamphlet undertakes to set forth the union which will be consummated in September, 1929, between Elon College and the Atlanta Theological Seminary. It is hoped that Dr. Keller will find it possible to place copies of this folder in the hands of our ministers and our workers in general.

Bro. Sam Davis and Mrs. Davis are to begin revival services, assisting Rev. R. L. Williamson, pastor, at Sanford, N. C., Sunday, September 23d. Sanford is fortunate in securing these competent and consecrated workers, and we feel sure that great results will follow here as they do in other places where the Davises hold services. We trust the Churches will keep these two consecrated people busy for weeks and months to come.

Miss Mamie Fonville, a former student of Elon College and faithful worker in the Burlington Christian Church, was buried on Wednesday from the Burlington Christian Church by Dr. G. O. Lankford, assisted by Dr. J. U. Newman and Dr. P. H. Fleming. Miss Mamie was a faithful worker and will be greatly missed in our Church there. THE CHRISTIAN SUN extends sympathy to the family. Surely, a good woman and a devout Christian has gone to her reward.

Rev. W. T. Scott, Chickasha, Okla., who graduated from Yale this spring and also pursued special studies in the Union Seminary, New York City, is serving as pastor during the summer of the Congregational Church. Bro. Scott was recently married to Miss Della Mae Cotten, of Greensboro. Both of them are graduates of our college. Bro. Scott is anxious to return to a pastorate this fall in the Southern Christian Convention. He is thoroughly competent, and any Church that secures his services will have a capable leader.

Rev. H. George Robertson, pastor of our Lynchburg Church, has resigned the work there to take effect the first of November. Bro. Robertson has served the Lynchburg Church very faithfully, and severs his connection after long consideration and with reluctance. He is to be in Elon College a senior the coming year and feels that he cannot carry the work in both fields successfully. He would like some Church work near the college, and certainly any Church securing his services will count itself fortunate, as he is a worker of energy and efficiency, as his record at Lynchburg shows.

A good brother minister, writing about the present situation as it pertains to politics and the Church, says: "We are face to face with success or failure of the Church's greatest achievement in many years, viz: prohibition. I feel that a great moral issue is at stake and Christian people must stand their grounds." We feel that this dear brother is on safe grounds, and the cry that "ministers are becoming politicians," all of us know, is only cheap political propaganda to try to frighten Christians from doing their duty. The politicians have seen fit this year to invade the sanctuary of the Church and to try to tear therefrom one of the dearest and deepest principles for which the Church has fought and stood for years. And yet while they make this invasion with unhallowed hands, they cry aloud that we must be silent or we will be accused of introducing politics into the Church. This is, indeed, a spectacle worthy only of the cheapest sort of cheap politics.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

WHAT GOOD IS THE CHURCH—WHAT IS ITS FUNCTION?

By REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Chaplain United States Navy.

Lesson: Jno. 20:19-26; Acts 11:26 (read analytical No. 8, p. 574).

Text: "Not forsaking the assembly of the saints . . . exhort one another."—1 Cor. 16:1, 2.

Organization: "On this rock will I build my Church."—Matt. 16:18.

Commission: "Take care of the Church of God."—1 Tim. 3:5; 2 Cor. 11:28.

Promise: "They that assemble shall know the Lord."

The Church is something indispensable and deserves whole-hearted allegiance and support, or it is relatively unimportant, something we can use if we wish but which we can neglect without harm.

The Church has existed from the beginning of things. The Jewish day was the 7th, observed as a "solemn assembly of the Lord" (Deut. 16:18; Neh. 9:1). The Christian Church changed the day of this solemn assembly to the first day of the week, which is our Sunday. So important was it to the disciples that it is referred to ninety-five times in the apostolic writings, in which its organization is not only authorized, but called by Christ, "My Church," "Church of God," "The Church," "They added members to the Church," "Persecution of," "Body of Christ," "Christ loved the Church."

The world does not look at the Church today in the light of the biblical authority. It does not think of the Church in these terms. It is looking at it in the light of the strife within itself, and, seeing little necessity for such strife, points the finger of criticism to a lack of that very thing which she proudly boasts to possess. The ministry of Jesus was, "the kingdom of God at hand and the salvation of man." He gave His life to achieve this, and at His death commissioned sending the disciples to carry on the work He had begun, sending the good news of the gospel to all succeeding generations and to all nations. This is the Church.

Despite this: There is not a subject in all the world in which His followers are so divided and in which non-believers are so inconsistent; and we ask: "What is the true Church?" Our answer is: "It is either something which is worthy of our support or, if not, we can very well do without it." For this reason, every one should have a clear conviction as to what it is, what is meant by it, what is its function, and what it is meant to do for us.

First: The Church itself divides as well as it unites. Our first notice is: The Church divides as well as it unites. In 1893 (Prof. Brown cites the instance), in New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., a minister, D. D., of that denomination of over fifty years of age and with thirty years of service (Dr. Chas A. Briggs), a man of sincere, devout character, a scholar, a loyal churchman, a preacher of a pure gospel and the light of hundreds of souls, was convicted of heresy and put out of the Church because he believed that the Bible was the Church of Divine authority; that Moses did not write all the books attributed to him, and that there is a progressive salvation after death. And because his conscience would not let him deny what his reason taught was true, they expelled him. There are many other examples which are continued today in the fundamentalist and the modernist controversy.

Recent Church conferences held at Stockholm, Geneva and Lausanne, in the interest of Church unity, have concluded that, despite all untoward differences, the Church is indeed one, and that all minor and non-essential differences are disposed of as essentially unhealthy to Christianity.

The spirit shown in the action against Dr. Briggs in contrast with the spirit at Lausanne is striking. It is this particular thing that is in the minds of those who question the Christianity of the Church. It is the contrast between the Church as it is in the world today (which often seems to exist for the purpose of organization and perpetuating differences) and that of the true Church of the living God. Therefore, everybody who forms an opinion should have an understanding of both.

Second: The Church should unite all people. "That they all may be one," was fundamental with Jesus. Clear thinking requires us to distinguish between the two senses in which the word "Church" is used. One way is, "A Church is a society of persons who share the same religious beliefs and experiences." Another is, "A Church is an organization through which these ideals find expression."

When Paul said, "The Church is the body of Christ," he meant the former. When we say, "the Presbyterians," or "the Methodists," or "the Catholic Church," we mean the latter. Yet, nearly everybody fails to make this distinction. They think of the Church as they see it and as they see its members. But, when we analyze the real reasons for the existence of the Church, and when we undertake to determine what it is which brings people together, there is one outstanding fact and reason for its existence which is seldom recognized, and that is "the need of comradeship." Comradeship is the oldest impulse of a man, and it is that longing which sponsors the Church and which God sought to gratify by giving to us. Of course, there are forms of comradeship, such as community, profession, business, social, etc.; but all of these are limiting in their scope of feelings. These meet at certain points, but they stop at another. Each has its proscribed character, and each is likewise intolerant against rebel innovations.

Humanity longs for a comradeship in which all legitimate human interests will find place and feel at home. The true Church alone is interested in the whole man. In it all, meet on a common level and have a common interest. In it all, interests find common ground. In it divided spirits are united and discord turns to harmony. In it individuals find freedom and peace of soul.

This is the comradeship the Church aspires to be, and from the beginning it has so recommended itself to all nations and people. Nothing has changed it. God is the same yesterday, today and forever, and His Church is the same yesterday, today and forever. Thus the Church is a great company which no man can number, though speaking an hundred different tongues and thinking differently, yet all know that they are sons of the Father, and every believer is a part of that company. Nothing else in the world can do this. This is what makes it an international harmonizer. Only the Church can be truly an international force for union, peace and harmony. And the very instant a nation or a people relies upon something else for its protection and safety, it discards the very thing essential to its protection and safety; and, it matters not how powerful they be, nothing is safe.

And this comradeship does not stop with this world. It takes us into the realm beyond. Christian faith does not admit that death is the end of life. It is but an experience through which we pass into a new life. The Church leads us just there, and in the spirit world we have fellowship with great men who are there, with loved ones there, not in memory only, but as comrades in the same task of glory.

It goes further still. There are many folks who are not members of any organized Church but who do really embrace the Christian spirit. The Bible says not only those who say, "Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but those who do the will of my Father which is in heaven." Those who do the will! In the true Church we cannot say to such an one, "You are not a Christian." We do not know. We cannot judge. How many unbaptized Christians are there? We shall never know. But this we do know, that whosoever and wherever they are, they may possess the spiritual baptism of the Lord, and as such they are our comrades in Christ's Church and may be fellow-workers with us in God's kingdom. They may be failing of their duty, but who can say but God? So the true Church is a comradeship of all who live right both on this side and beyond the grave.

Third: The world with Jesus' Spirit. Thus far we have been thinking of the Church as a human society, differing from other societies in that the bond of union between its members is that of a consciousness of God. But the Church means more than this. It means not only associations of men with men, comradeship with one another, but comradeship with God. Paul called it "Fellow-workers with God." When Jesus instructed the disciples, He emphasized the fact that they were to note what He did, to understand His teachings, and for their consecration He promised to so endow them that they would carry on what He had begun. "The works that I do shall ye do also, and greater works than these shall ye do, because I go to my Father."

If this is a revelation of life's duties to us it means that what his body was to men their bodies are to be to all succeeding generations of the world. Their minds are to be minds to think His thoughts for the world, by which the world would know Him. Their souls are to be souls to convey His spirit to the world. Their lips are to be lips to speak His messages. Their feet to be feet for His gospel. Their eyes to see His opportunities. Their hands to do His work. Their shoulders to hear His cross. Their hearts are to thrill others with His love. Each Christian associated with Him are to grasp what He was and what He did, and have the inspiration and incentive to try to promote His own person life in the world; and the Church is the club (so to speak) which is to aid them to do it, and do it together. Without it there is no more success than there is with any other organization which does not work as a unit. For example, the fleet, it maneuvers, trains and drills together, and it takes an organized fleet to do so. It also takes an organized Church to propagate the gospel.

Christ likens the Church to a building of which He is the foundation, a temple in which His spirit dwells, a commonwealth of which He is the head, a bride of which He is the husband, a branch of which He is the vine, the organ through which His spirit functions to prepare the world in righteousness.

Summary.

This is what the Church has meant to all past generations and should mean today: a means of oneness of spirit and the settling of all differences; a means of comradeship with one another, both the living and the dead, and comradeship

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

"THE NADIR OF NOTHINGNESS."

Under the above caption, Mr. Theodore F. MacManus issues a "Catholic challenge" to the Protestants of America in the May number of the Atlantic Monthly. In this "Catholic challenge" the writer, who is himself a distinguished Catholic and undertakes to speak for his Church, sets himself to the task of stating and of proving the following five propositions:

"First, that there are only two schools of Christian thought in the western world; second, that if it is true that religion is the root of conduct, one or the other of these schools must be largely responsible for world conditions today; third, that all Christian creeds, cults, sects, and Churches outside of Roman Catholicism have a common origin and a common responsibility; fourth, that they all have their source in the principle of private judgment and that this principle automatically tends more and more toward complete creedlessness and churchlessness; fifth, that this process has a profound and deleterious effect upon citizenship by way of its effect upon social institutions, social customs and conventions, and the attitude of the individual toward his private and public obligations."

In elucidating these five propositions, Mr. MacManus states that the fundamental principle of the Catholic Church is the principle "of truth conveyed by Christ through His Church; the Protestant theory, on the other hand, is the theory of truth conveyed to the individual by interior illumination of whose authority he and he alone shall be the judge." On the basis of these principles we are told that the Pope, or the Church of Rome, conveys at present to the world the mind of Christ, but that individual liberty and the right of private judgment have taken away the creeds and doctrines of the so-called Protestant Churches and have really reduced Protestantism, in all its forms, to the "nadir of nothingness." Turning to a good dictionary, one will find that the word "nadir" means the lowest point; the time of greatest depression; the inferior pole of the horizon. Mr. MacManus further states that if there are creedless Churches and also empty Churches today, it is all due to Protestantism, in its appeal to the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience, allowing the individual to interpret divine things for himself out of his own illumination.

Protestants should at least be grateful to this learned and distinguished Catholic for issuing his challenge and for making clear the position of his Church and its distinction from Protestantism at the present time. We at least get an understanding from Mr. MacManus as to the attitude of the Catholics to the right of individual interpretation and the liberty of conscience. He says that it is the same thing as a free intellect, and then declares: "The so-called free intellect is always a concomitant of free love." That "not merely the marriage law but all the ancient and sacred amenities of life and death become fluid at the dissolving touch of religious individualism." He declares that the sermon by Protestants has descended to "the nadir of vulgarity and the very depths of latitudinarianism." We cannot in this brief survey give all the points of argument by which Protestantism is swept aside as having reached "the nadir of nothingness," and can only give a few brief conclusions which Mr. MacManus flings out against all Protestants everywhere.

First, he makes the claim that "the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience results in political, moral and religious anarchy," and the reason why we have such indifference to the Church and such rebellion against government and so much religious anarchy is all due to the fact that Protestants, in seeking the power of individual interpretation, have arrived at the lowest point of possible thinking and conduct, even "the nadir of nothingness" in their attitude to the Church and the government. Mr. MacManus claims that there is authority, even religious authority, and that that authority is vested in the Church as interpreted by the Pope. This authority, which all good Catholics feel their Church has, was given in a vote concerning the infallibility of the Pope on July 18, 1870, and is as follows:

"The Roman pontiff has not only the office of inspection and direction, but also supreme power of jurisdiction over the universal Church, not only in things concerning morals, but also in those which concern the discipline and government of the Church in the whole universe. Not only does he possess the highest parts of this power, but he has it in all its plenitude. And this power is ordinary and immediate as much over all the Churches in general and each Church in particular as over every pastor and all the faithful of whatever right of dignity they may be. If any denies it, let him be anathema."

This was given by the Council General of the Catholic Church and is, according to our writer, still in force, and from it the Catholic Church derives its unquestionable authority. "Precisely the same principle which permits the individual to define his spiritual, moral and patriotic duties for himself leads him into other licenses and declarations which, upon not infrequent occasions, become distinctly anti-national."

Secondly, the only hope of the religious world, and that toward which Mr. MacManus feels we are at last coming, is that the Protestant world shall at last see that it has descended to "the nadir of nothingness" in its moral teachings, and, in its lack of spiritual insight, is now about ready, or should at least be ready, to lay aside what he terms the folly and anarchy of religious liberty and return to the mother Church where there is real authority and infallible power to interpret that authority from which, according to the definition of the Catholic Council already quoted, "The definitions of the Roman pontiff are then unchangeable in themselves and are not rendered such by the consent of the Church"; and to quote from canon 29: "To the Roman pontiff are due from all Catholics honor and obedience, even when, which God forbid, the Pope is a bad man."

We are not arguing the position with Mr. MacManus, which he has made perfectly clear in his rather free and frank and amazing "challenge of Catholicism" at the present time. We are letting Mr. MacManus, as a Catholic, speak for himself, and in brief compass we have tried to give our readers a true but all too brief an epitome of this challenge that the Catholic writer, speaking for his Church, flings out to Protestants. We will let our readers, in their own minds, answer these arguments if they desire to do so, especially since the Christian Church, as a denomination, has always boasted, and we think justly, of the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience as a right and a privilege that each should enjoy. It is true Mr. MacManus calls us Protestants and Christians some very disagreeable names, besides declaring that we have reached "the lowest regions of nothingness" in our religious and spiritual thinking and activity. We are fully aware that for us to give a reply to Mr. MacManus would be interpreted at this time as an attack on the Catholic Church, or as a stroke of politics, or that we were seeking to make some of our readers intolerant of the Catholic faith. We, ourselves, plead for religious tolerance, and could wish with all our hearts that those who write for the Catholics and speak for them authoritatively would meet us on common ground and themselves be tolerant without declaring as Mr. MacManus has in his Atlantic article that we Protestants are really all heretics, and that, having reached "the nadir of nothingness" in our attitude to religion and government, our only hope of saving the government and of saving our souls is to come into the Catholic Church and let the Pope be our whole authority and the sole control of our conscience in conduct and in worship. We advise our readers, in so far as they can do so conveniently, to look up the May number of the Atlantic Monthly and get a far more comprehensive view of "the sense of nothingness" to which all of us Protestants are reduced by this spokesman for the Catholic Church.

VACATION.

The purpose of vacation is recreation. It is not cessation. It is a different use of time and energy from that which occupies one in regular work. This becomes increasingly necessary in the progress of mankind. When men moved slow and work was simple, recreation came along with regular employment. Life was so simple that workers had time "on their hands" for waiting and diversion. Workers could stop and talk for hours; there were no machines to hold them in place; but it is not so now. The great engines keep the machines going and the men cannot stop during work-hours. In the office, in the store, in the school, in the house, it is the same way. The more machines men invent, the more men are relieved from burdensome toil, the harder they have to work. Work multiplies with every invention, and business increases with every new invention and every new product. This is the busiest age of all the centuries. The increase of labor in the industrial world has its corresponding increase of duties for the minister of the gospel. The minister was never so worked in Christian history. The increase in population, education, locomotion, and organizations, taxes the minister's talents, time, and energy. His study, his pastoral obligations, his contact with public affairs, his responsibility to society in its charity, its social relations, and its sorrows, make constant drafts upon his vitality and his conscience.

Vacation in every field becomes a necessity. God set the example. He made all things in six days and rested the seventh day. Then He made this a law for man to work six days and rest on the Sabbath. This day of rest is for worship also, which is the best rest for man and beast. Nature is in harmony with this idea of rest and recreation. Forests shed their leaves and rest; fruit trees bear their fruits and rest. The seasons change, and change is rest. Jesus and His disciples rested when weary. Congress takes vacation. Legislatures take vacation. Schools take vacation. Factories take vacation. Churches take vacation. The Church bell is silent for a time. The minister goes away to rest, and that means to change his location, his habits, his associations, and to gather new strength for greater work. It is not leisure only, it is recreation, rejuvenation, for greater work. If preacher and people do not return to the Church, after vacation, with new purpose, new consecration, new determination, new strength, then vacation was dissipation and not recreation. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall run, and not be weary, and they shall walk and not faint."

INFLUENCING HUMAN BEHAVIOR.

By ERNEST H. CHERRINGTON, LL.D.,

Director of Educational Department, Anti-Saloon League of America.

I hope all dry propagandists will read "Influencing Human Behavior," by Prof. H. A. Overstreet, of the department of philosophy at the College of the City of New York, and I hope equally that none of the wet speakers or press agents will open its pages. I do not know of any other book which sets forth so vividly and practically methods for getting and holding the attention of people while we seek to sway their thought. The problem we face, as Prof. Overstreet states it, is "To get people to think with us! It is an art—the supreme art. The blunderer in life is he who, wishful to capture the interests and enthusiasms of people, to get them to think and work along with him, is able only to capture their indifference or antagonism." As one who is constantly writing and speaking in the great crusade for prohibition, I find in this book suggestions which are worth many times its price to me.

One regrets, however, that Dr. Overstreet seems to unduly emphasize the go-getter methods. His comparison of Anatole France's "Cranquebille," which the French Socialist movement uses as a tract, with a selected quotation from Galsworthy's "Forsyte Saga," ignores the fact that France's story is a bit of propaganda that seeks to persuade while Galsworthy belongs to a different school of writing.

Dr. Overstreet's comment upon prohibition is very interesting. Viewing, as he does, the problem of "Influencing Human Behavior" as largely a platform, advertising or pamphleteering program, he ignores the tremendous effect of the educational work done by the W. C. T. U. and the organizing work and the unnumberable legislative battles fought by the Anti-Saloon League, without which prohibition would never have been gained. If the professor believes that "the work-habit systems required by highly industrialized and commercialized society" would abolish drunkenness without the aid of legislation or if he believes that such legislation could have been obtained without the "preachments" which he underestimates, then, to borrow his own phrase, he is a "gentle sentimentalist." However, this is what he has to say about the prohibition problem:

"Let us analyze another change which has taken place in the habits of the public. Despite all the gloomy pronouncements about bootlegging and our general disregard of the law, we are a temperate people, far more temperate than we were forty or fifty years ago. Why? The ladies of the W. C. T. U. would proudly answer: "We did it!" And the Anti-Saloon League would beg to come in as a close second—or first! One may be inclined to doubt these estimable people. Viewing temperance as a consumption habit-system, one may quite safely regard it as the result of forces far more powerful than any preachments. In a highly industrialized society, any large amount of intemperance is impossible.

"What has happened, in short, since the Civil War in America, has been the building up of new systems of work-habits. Mechanized industry required regularity, steadiness of hand and eye, swiftness and unerringness of execution. A misstep or a mishandling is too costly to be permitted. A drunken locomotive engineer is obviously not to be thought of. An intoxicated worker at the centrifugals would probably find himself armless or legless or lifeless and centrifugals wrecked, with possibly other workers maimed and killed in the bargain.

"Again, a commercial and banking system growing upon the active body of a highly industrialized system, required keenness of mind, accuracy of attention, the habit of "being on the job." During the occupation period in Cologne, I came, to my dismay and great inconvenience, upon a drunken ticket-seller behind one of the station windows. Of course, there was nothing to do but wait until his substitute appeared. The thing was unprecedented in my own experience; and was due, of course—a most significant fact—to the temporary superimposition of a military upon a commercial system.

"Drunkenness as a prevailing habit, in short, cannot co-exist with the work-habit-systems required by a highly industrialized and commercialized society. Those genial old village scoundrels who drank themselves to death in our boyhood days, the cobblers particularly, and sometimes the hotel-keepers and the lawyers have disappeared—to the sorrow of our story-writers. But not because the ladies of the W. C. T. U. preached them out of existence: If the ladies believe that, they are gentle sentimentalists!

"We are a temperate people, in short—and despite our bootlegging forebodings—always will be as long as we are a highly industrialized and commercialized people, because our work-habit-systems are the determinants which imperatively govern our consumption-habit-systems."

Friends of the eighteenth amendment may gain from Dr. Overstreet some interesting points of technique in the task we have essayed of telling the truth about prohibition everywhere, all the time, to all the people, persuasively and effectively.

MY IDEA OF GOD.

There are many things that I do not know about God. Things which I may never know. Things which I certainly will never know until "I see Him face to face and know Him as He is."

But there is one thing that I am certain about, and that is that He is. When Moses urged God to name Himself, that he might be able to tell others of Him, God answered, "I am who am."

Apart from any thought that I may have about God, regardless of all the thinking in the world concerning the nature of God—God is. Just as truth exists regardless of what men may think, so God exists regardless of man's thoughts concerning Him. Just as the forces of nature continue to operate, whether man is aware of their existence or not, so God remains the same whether man takes Him into account or not.

Things are not so just because we think they are so. Our thinking has nothing to do with fact.

Things are as they are. Man cannot change them, but man can discover the truth concerning them, and having discovered the truth he can use them. Man cannot change God by changing his opinion of God. But man can know God, can understand His will, His goodness, His justice, and His mercy. And knowing these things he can put himself in harmony with them.

Since God exists apart from us, and His nature is not changed by our notions, we can only know God as He makes Himself known to us. This implies revelation. And God has revealed Himself, first through the prophets, and finally through Jesus Christ.

We may guess at many of the attributes of God from a study of nature, but we could never know Him in His unity and His spiritual power. We might guess at His righteousness from our conscience, but we could not know of His mercy and His love. In the Word of God we have the explanation of the mysteries of God.

But God in His entirety is beyond the comprehension of the human mind. In Jesus Christ we have an understandable revelation of God. I do not try to define God and place limits upon Him. Nor do I think of Him much in the abstract. My mind works best when it has something objective to rest upon, thus when I think of God I think of Jesus Christ. "For whosoever hath seen the Son hath seen the Father."—Carmie W. Roll, in Christian-Evangelist.

WHAT RELIGION WITH POLITICS?

to the whole, but to the sick; I came to seek and to save that which is lost."

It is the function of religion to convince and to convict of the wrong wherever it may be. Corruption cannot billet itself behind political doors and say to the gospel and religion, "You have nothing to do with me." The good Samaritan found the man who had fallen among thieves lying by the highway, broken and bleeding; he took him and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and provided against his needs on the morrow. The better Samaritan would have gone and laid hold of the thieves and reprimanded them for their wrongs; but the best Samaritan, in addition, still would have gone, driven out the thieves, cleaned out the dens, and make the highway safe for society—and this is the business of religion, of the Church and of the gospel. And they will not stop short of it.

The gospel of God is quick and powerful: it is sharper than a two-edged sword in the hand of the Spirit, with which the cause of righteousness has been fought since Martin Luther's day, with which it shall be fought today, and by which it shall triumph. The gospel of God is the truth that sets man free, and if the truth shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. And every one who runs and reads should have the privilege of the truth himself and for himself and not merely from the lips of an ecclesiastical ecclesiast; and we are not ready yet and the day will not come when this country is willing to put clamps on the truth and take the Scriptures from the common people. We believe in the separation of the Church and State and we intend that it shall stay so. The gospel is the leaven that shall leaven the whole lump. Beginning at the heart, it shall quietly but irresistibly work its way until the whole of society shall have been changed. It is the light that shines through the darkness, points out the way and guides pilgrims along life's uneven pathway until the last race shall have been run, the last battle fought, the evening shadows gone and the blessed morning of the vast forever, with all its eternal splendor, breaks upon us with its glory and its glow.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The ratio in American society is a fixed quantity. Ratio is the relation between two quantities expressed by dividing one by the other. The word ratio is derived from the same root. At one time in the history of the United States there was a spirit ration for sailors in the navy. It was a half-pint of distilled spirits, either rum or whiskey, per day, for each man in the navy. The spirit ration was abolished in the United States Navy in 1862, during the Civil War. Intoxicants were abolished from the navy by Josephus Daniels, who was Secretary of the Navy during the World War. It appears from the history of the Civil War and the World War that war demands temperance, prohibition, total abstinence for successful operation. If the navy must be sober for success in war, it follows that citizens must be sober to succeed in peace. Even more to succeed in serving God as members of the Church. But I am not writing on rations, but ratio, to show that the ratio in human society is a fixed quantity.

The ratio between opposite conditions in human society is a fixed quantity. Divide the rich by the poor, and the poor by the rich, and the answer is the same. Divide the educated by the uneducated and the uneducated by the educated, and the result is the same. The high tide and the low tide seem to differ, but in the rising and falling, the ocean touches the same level. The high tide goes as low as the low tide, and the low tide rises as high as the high tide. The ratio between them is a fixed quantity. It is just as true in human society. So many people think the rich, the educated, the prominent, those who live in fine houses have the advantage of them in living and in happiness. But when conditions are understood all fare alike. Happiness is a state of mind and not a condition of possessions, positions, patrons, and praises. The little flower fares as well as the big flower, and the sparrow as well as the eagle. The little man and the big man both share alike in air and sunshine, and in the world where their thoughts, their aspirations, their faith, and their hopes range. Increase of education, inheritance, position, property, and social relations brings a corresponding increase of responsibilities and obligations, and both are under the same strain, meet the same perplexities, feel the same disappointments, and live in the same little world of personal experience. It is even so in the Church. The great member and the small member share alike the blessings of our Father, and one can meet his responsibilities as easily and as successfully as the other. To feel important is to suffer loss in value, and to feel unimportant is equally as bad. A feeling of super-competency renders one useless, and a feeling of incompetency keeps one from trying.

ELON LETTER.

A JEW INTERPRETS JESUS.

"The Son of Man—The Story of Jesus," by Emil Ludwig. Boni & Liveright, New York City. $3.00.

A man who has established a great reputation as the author of "Napoleon," the man of war, here assays to write the life of Jesus, the Man of peace. You expect a scholar to give facts in their true perspective and to give all the facts.

Ludwig naively states in his introduction that many texts are omitted as not suiting his purpose.

He does not put it exactly that way, but that is what he means. This conviction grows on the reader as he goes through the well-written pages, which challenge and hold attention by their very audacity of interpretation as well as of omission.

His viewpoint is perhaps most succinctly stated in two passages. The first begins on page 213, and reads as follows: "A placid Carpenter, full of God's grace, overflowing with love for the Heavenly Father, for his earthly brethren, for children, animals, and plants, has, by stress of the popular demand that he should work miracles, by the exclamations of the multitude, by the suspicion and enmity of the priests, by the contemptuous attitude of the members of his own household, by the sayings and the doings and the fate of a forerunner, been driven within a year along a narrowing and steepening path, until at length he has come to believe that he is the Redeemer whom a proud and suffering people awaits, to bring deliverance and afterwards to rule."

The second is briefer and is found on page 277. It reads: "On this last day of his life, Jesus looks for a hiding-place. He does so, without plan, and too late, as he did all things that were done by him in conflict with what is usually called the real world."

Jesus, throughout, is represented as an ignorant man and opportunist, jealous of John the Baptist, as making mistakes in his methods, as not following up advantages, as subject peculiarly to the love of woman, as conscious of sin, etc. The book sickens my soul and offends my sense of fairness as well as my taste. It is not a life of Christ, but a caricature. If this be scholarship, God grant us ignorance. If this be fairness, God grant us partisanship. Jews need not expect Christians to be tolerant of them, when their best thinkers are so intolerant and offensive in their treatment of the noblest character their race has produced.

The book, however, will cause the reader to examine anew the foundations of his faith, and so in spite of its many blemishes will do good. Only those, however, who know their Bible and have had a personal experience of God as revealed in Christ can come away from such a book without serious impairment of their faith.

GRADY ON PROHIBITION.

I am sending some timely words for publication, taken from Henry W. Grady's speech, "A Plea for Prohibition," delivered in Atlanta, Ga., November 17, 1887, which all Christians, I think, should ponder before casting their vote in November. Here they are:

"My friends, hesitate before you vote liquor back into Atlanta, now that it is shut out. Don't trust it. It is powerful, aggressive, and universal in its attacks. Tonight it enters an humble home to strike the roses from a woman's cheek, and tomorrow it challenges this republic in the halls of Congress. Today it strikes a crust from the lips of a starving child, and tomorrow levies tribute from the government itself. There is no cottage in this city humble enough to escape it—no palace strong enough to shut it out. It is flexible to cajole, but merciless in victory. It is the mortal enemy of peace and order. The despoiler of men; the terror of women, the cloud that shadows the face of children; the demon that has dug more graves and sent more souls unsaved to judgment than all the pestilences that have wasted life since God sent the plague to Egypt and all the wars that have been fought since Joshua stood beyond Jericho. Oh, my countrymen, loving God and humanity, do not bring this grand old city again under the domination of that power! It can profit no man by its return. It can uplift no industry, revive no interest, remedy no wrong. You know that it cannot. It comes to destroy, and it shall profit mainly by the ruin of your sons or mine. It comes to mislead human souls and to crush human hearts under its rumbling wheels. It comes to destroy the wife's love into despair, and her pride into shame. It comes to still the laughter on the lips of little children. It comes to stifle all the music of the home and fill it with silence and desolation. It comes to ruin your body and mind, to wreck your home, and it knows that it must measure its prosperity by the swiftness and certainty with which it wrecks this work. Now will you vote it back?"

The application is easy to the present crisis.—
James Small, in Christian-Evangelist.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

Our meeting came to a close Wednesday night, as Bro. Gerringer was due to be back to his home Saturday for a meeting to begin Sunday. As far as we can see, there were no great results in terms of members being added to the Church. Bro. Gerringer presented the simple gospel message of Jesus Christ, thus showing the results of sin and the effect it has upon the life and character of mankind. He showed how sin spotted the life and blighted it; and that the blood of Jesus Christ applied, would cleanse us from all sin and make us a "new creature in Christ Jesus." Christ was held up to the people at each service for their acceptance or rejection. No one can save men from sin who absolutely refuse to be saved. "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7).

We had one person who presented herself for membership with the Church. While we do not know just how much good has been accomplished, we trust that God, through His tender mercy, has brought joy to many hearts and comfort to their lives. If the people will only put into practice the teachings of the gospel messages as they were presented to them, I am sure the Church will be stronger spiritually. May God help these people that they may "know that I am God."

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

BY JOHN L. SHULER.

There are two places in the New Testament where we are told just when Christ will come. The first is found in the great prophetic discourse of our Lord, when He talked to His disciples about the signs of His second coming and of the end of the gospel age. Jesus said, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come" (Matt. 24:14). Weymouth translates this passage: "This good news of the kingdom shall be proclaimed throughout the whole world to set the evidence before all the Gentiles; and then the end will come" (New Testament in Modern Speech).

While the spread of the gospel, in its ordinary setting, into the various countries of earth during recent centuries undoubtedly has a decided bearing on the fulfillment of this prediction of Jesus, it does not cover the specific sign of this text. It was not the gospel in merely its general phases that was to be preached in all the world; it was the "gospel of the kingdom."

The word "gospel" means good news. The "gospel of the kingdom" is the good news about the kingdom, the coming kingdom.

The Scriptures plainly teach that the coming of the kingdom is synchronous with the appearance of Christ as King of kings at His second advent (2 Tim. 4:1; Luke 19:12; Matt. 16:28). Therefore, the gospel of the kingdom is the good news about the coming of the King in His kingdom. Hence the prophecy of Matthew 24:14 calls for a world-wide dissemination of the complete gospel in a particular setting, a setting governed by the special time of its presentation, the time when the long-anticipated kingdom is about to appear. It is this announcement, or proclamation, to all the world, of our Lord's impending return, warning the inhabitants of the earth and preparing them for His appearing, that constitutes the surest and greatest sign of His imminent return.

Such a world-wide warning and proclamation of His coming as this gospel of the kingdom is just as necessary in the divine plan of preparing the way for the return of Christ from heaven as was the preaching of a special message by John the Baptist to prepare the way for the manifestation of Christ at His first advent. In fact, this proclamation of the coming of Jesus in the last days will sustain the same relation to His second advent as the message of the Baptist in relation to His manifestation as the Messiah at His first coming.

This is made very plain in the prophecy of Revelations 14:6-14. In these verses, under the figure of three angels flying one after another through the midst of heaven delivering certain warnings to the people of earth, is a representation of the rise of a divinely commissioned movement, or people, by whom this special threefold message will be given to all the world.

The three leading features of this special message are as follows:

1. A warning that the hour of God's judgment is come, and a restoration of the true worship of God as Creator (Rev. 14:7).

2. A warning against the great system of apostasy known as "Babylon" (Rev. 14:8), with the restoration of the true Church as God's obedient remnant (Rev. 12:17).

3. A warning against following the apostate power (Rev. 14:9-11), and a call of obedience to all God's commandments and the faith of Jesus (Rev. 14:12), in order to prepare the people to stand the test of God's judgment and to meet Christ at His coming.

This threefold message will embrace the very fullness of the gospel of Christ. It will be "the everlasting gospel" (Rev. 14:6) for the last days. At the same time, it will be the "gospel of the kingdom."

It will be God's present truth for the closing era of the gospel. It will not only give information regarding "the time of the end," but it will point out the way of salvation from the destruction that is coming. It will be a saving message as well as a warning message.

The very fact that the opening announcement of this threefold message is, "Fear God, and give glory to Him; for the hour of His judgment is come," is proof that this message was to arise in the earth right after 1844. For the prophecy of Daniel 8:1-14, 9:23-27 makes it plain that the investigative judgment would begin in heaven at the end of 2300 years from B. C. 457, or in A. D. 1844.

This message is the closing proclamation of the gospel; for just as soon as it is given to the world, the prophet sees the Lord's second coming, and describes it as follows: "I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on His head a golden crown, and in His hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to Him that sat on the cloud. Thrust in Thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for Thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe" (Rev. 14:14, 15).

This establishes three important points:

1. This threefold message will be definitely heralded "to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people" (Rev. 14:6) between the year 1844 and the end of time.

2. This will be the last message of the gospel to be preached in this world; for just as soon as this message is preached to all the world, Christ will come to reap the gospel harvest.

3. It gives positive evidence that it is the world-wide proclamation of this gospel of the kingdom which prepares the way for Christ to come.

Coming to Reap.

The predominant purpose of Christ's return is to reap the harvest of the gospel, by gathering His people unto Himself (John 14:3; 1 Thes. 4:16, 17; Mark 13:26, 27). This is why the revelator pictures Christ as coming with a sickle in His hand (Rev. 14:14, 15). The second coming of Christ is heaven's harvest-time. Thus Jesus declared, in His interpretation of the parable of the wheat and the tares, that "the harvest is the end of the world" (Matt. 13:39).

The farmer does not attempt to reap his field until the grain is ripe. So Jesus will not come—in fact, He can not come as reaper—until the gospel harvest has been made ready for reaping by the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom to all the world.

When the full heads of grain hang ripe, the skilled husbandman does not wait long to gather them. This brings us to our second text, a text that points out exactly when Jesus will come. "When the fruit is ripe, immediately He putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come" (Mark 4:29, margin).

When the full fruitage of the gospel is ripe, the Reaper is sure to appear. The fruit of the gospel is a converted and sanctified people, a people (Continued on Page 14.)

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

THE ONWARD MARCH OF MISSIONS.

By WILSON P. MINTON,

Foreign Mission Secretary.

One of the most significant gatherings of present-day missionary activity was the enlarged meeting of the International Missionary Council held on the Mount of Olives, just out from Jerusalem, March 24th to April 8th. Two hundred and forty representatives from twenty-six national and international Christian and missionary bodies came together from fifty-one different countries to face once more the gigantic problem of bringing to a sin-cursed world the message of the Missionary of Galilee, who more than two thousand years ago walked the streets of Jerusalem and made sacred by His presence the very mountain upon which these apostles of the twentieth century met.

Dr. John R. Mott, chairman of the International Missionary Council, in his opening remarks clearly set forth the purpose of the meeting. He emphasized the unparalleled need today for a strong, convincing lead in the face of divided thought and conflicting voices, and in no uncertain terms expressed the conviction that out of this gathering of Christian world leaders there should come forth a new and fresh understanding of the place of Christ and His message in all phases of the life of the world today. Dr. Mott spoke as a prophet when he urged that the Christian forces of the world were facing one of their greatest crises right now and that the Jerusalem meeting was destined to point the way to new and larger service on the part of the Church of Christ in the world. For the past several years, groups of leaders in various countries have been earnestly studying the whole question of the conquest of Christianity in their midst with a view to bringing to Jerusalem the facts as to the present situation together with the richest experiences of those who for years have been striving to permeate the life of the countries which they represented with the teachings and practices of Jesus.

How well Dr. Mott prophesied can be seen by a study of the findings of the several groups which, after days of careful and prayerful discussion, were finally adopted by the Council. These conclusions from the united thought of two hundred and forty of the pick of Christian statesmen are destined mightily to influence the missionary movement of the years ahead. Basing themselves on sound Christian teaching, economic science, and practical need, these conclusions deal fearlessly with world-wide industrial and rural problems, interracial relationships, the relations of the old and younger Churches (the latter referring to the Churches on the mission fields), the future of co-operation, and the problem of the home base. In no uncertain terms, the Jerusalem meeting has laid out before us a clear challenge in a unified and expanding program for world missionary effort that missionary leaders must follow if we are to bring the Christian movement abreast with the times in which we live and serve.

One of the most interesting phases of this wonderful meeting was the fact that about one-third of the delegates chosen (and all of them were most carefully chosen) were tried and proven native Christians—men and women whose services to their own countries as ministers of Christ enabled them to speak with authority as to the needs and best methods to reach their people with the message of Christ. And these national Christian leaders coming from all over the world and speaking various languages were heard and heard gladly by the representatives of the "sending" countries. More fully than ever before we are realizing that from now on the work of the regular missionary from what we have termed the "sending" country must be more and more a work of "sharing" with these native Christians in the Christian service to their own country.

Another significant thing at the Jerusalem meeting was the effort to secure a good number of younger missionary leaders in order that they might be trained to carry on the work in the days ahead when the older and more experienced men have been compelled to lay aside the burden of the work. In these and numerous other ways the far-reaching scope of the council can be discerned.

Most heartening of all is the fact that from beginning to end these great Christian leaders never lost sight of the deeply spiritual values of the Christian faith. They never forgot that if their plans were ever to become really effective they must be carried out in the spirit of the Christ whom they sought to follow. Even before reaching the city of Jerusalem the delegates assembled in groups on boats and trains and spent much time in definite, intelligent prayer. And from the very beginning of the meeting of the council through that last early Easter Sunday morning service on the Mount of Olives, a spirit of deep devotion and dependence upon God pervaded. As the company went down the mountain from that last service with the challenge of a triumphant, risen Christ stirring their hearts they scattered once again to the four corners of the earth, in a very real way to re-live the acts of the apostles, "beginning at Jerusalem" and going "unto the uttermost parts" with the glorious message of the conquering Lord. The impact of the International Missionary Council meeting at Jerusalem, 1928, will be felt throughout the world for many years to come in the new impetus and fresh conviction which it has given to those who would win the world to Christ in practical Christian service.

"A SONG IN THE NIGHT."

By GEORGE D. COLCLOUGH.

Address before Valley of Virginia Conference.

In the thirty-fifth chapter and tenth verse of Job we find these words: "But none saith where is God, my Maker, that giveth songs in the night." It is not my intention to preach a sermon, but I do wish to base my remarks for this occasion on the verse given above. And for my topic I am taking the last of this verse: "A Song in the Night."

Now, in order that there may be a song in the night, it is necessary that there be four things: first, there must be darkness; second, there must be a song; third, there must be a singer; fourth, there must be a giver of the song. It is these four essentials that we wish to consider at this time.

First: There must be a night or darkness. Job was a man of a varied life. He had served his God most faithfully, and at times it was strange to his people that he should receive such treatment at the hands of God. He saw his family taken from him; he saw his stock taken away by death, and even his own health impaired.

Because of this trouble, his wife asked him to turn his back upon God, to curse Him and die. Job was experiencing night at this time. But through it all he was willing to stand by his God. Few, if any here, at this time have failed to experience a dark hour during their lives. Some time or another you have seen some loved one placed away to await the judgment day. You have experienced financial trouble. You have not been able to meet all bills as you had planned. You have suffered from sickness. You have seen your family suffering from affliction. Some of these troubles have visited you, and because of them you have experienced an hour of darkness; you have known what night is.

After we experience the darkness we must have a song if there is to be song in the night. This song may come in many ways. The comforters that came to Job were not in keeping with their names. They did not bring to him a song in the night. They were pessimistic and, no doubt, made Job's burden harder because of their visit.

Sympathy is one of the most important songs to those who are in trouble. One afflicted appreciates a visit and we who are enjoying health often fail to pay them the respect we owe. There is no better song than a word of sympathy to those who are grieved because of family troubles. Never let an opportunity to write letters of condolence to those who are deprived of a loved one or are in trouble of any nature.

There is something about man that causes him to gloat in the troubles of others. Especially if they are not near relatives. Financial reverses are the most lively topics of the neighborhood. It would mean much to our day and to the Church of Jesus Christ if we could learn to go to those who have gone astray, to those in trouble, put our arms around them, speak a word of kindness and try to give them courage to right the wrong and to walk in the path of righteousness. We have no record of Christ ever turning His back on one that had strayed away. It was these that He wanted to bring into the fold. Let us, then, be more anxious to lend a helping hand; let us strive harder to furnish suitable song to those who are in the night, to those who are in the midst of darkness.

When there is night, and there is darkness all around us, and when there is a song, then there must be a singer. I can think of no sweeter character than the person who is a singer of songs in the hour of darkness. No doubt this was the happiest days during the ministry of Jesus. Much of this Master Teacher's time was spent healing the sick, comforting those who were grieved and ministering to the needs of His people. He was happiest when others were happy.

While we are all in position to sing songs in the hour of darkness, yet some are better than others. The minister is in a good position to render wonderful music to those who are suffering. Many fail to appreciate fully the real worth of a wide-awake minister in a community. The family physician is a great singer in the hour of darkness. Have you ever had sick relatives, sent for the doctor, and then stood in the yard and awaited his arrival? It seemed long to you, but he was the comforter, and when you saw him enter the room you felt relieved. You awaited impatiently for him to return from the sick-room and tell about the condition of the sick one. This doctor had brought to your family, in their darkness, a song in the night.

It is not necessary that we be ministers or doctors in order that we may bring a song in the night. The common layman may do this, if he chooses. It is simply; just carry your cross with a smile. Try each day and hour to make some one happy because you are living.

When we have darkness, when we have a song, and when we have a singer, we are still lacking in one essential, and that is the giver of the song. Job said: "But none saith, Where is God, my Maker, that giveth songs in the night." In spite of Job's affliction he served his God, and God gave him a song in the night. It is this God of Job that we shall depend on for the song in the night, for it is He that giveth the songs.

As we look back to the past, we are reminded that this God has given songs to many. Paul was handicapped in many ways. He was not allowed to preach as he would have liked to. He was placed in prison. He was treated as a criminal. Yet, Paul, through all this, gave to the people of his day a song. Daniel, that Godly man, walked near to God. He was imprisoned, deprived of his liberty, mistreated in many ways, yet during it all he served his God and gave to the world a song in the night. Whether it be in modern or ancient history, we find that the people who gave to their generations a song in the night are those who have put their trust in God and walked near unto Him.

Some claim the world is getting better, and some are just as ardent in their contention that it is getting worse. Personally, I do not care to enter into the argument. I am convinced that there is night, that there is sadness, that there is darkness all around; I am convinced that God, my Maker, will give to me a song for the night, and it is my desire to sing it as best I can. I am deeply concerned as to what attitude others may take in this matter, yet it matters not what course they may take, as for me I am determined to walk near unto my God who giveth the songs in the night.

THE MINISTRY THREATENED.

Nothing that we have seen lately has more clearly shown the foolishness of the world than the threat made by Mr. Raskob, the chairman of the Democratic committee, that the Churches of the South have threatened to cut off their financial support from the ministers who oppose the candidacy of Governor Smith.

Paul writes to the Corinthians that the natural man does not know the things of the Spirit of God, and that they are foolishness unto him, being spiritually discerned.

We hesitate to question the statement of this gentleman, but we are reminded of the boy who said that he saw a hundred squirrels, but who afterward qualified his statement by saying that he saw a bush shake.

We believe that some enthusiastic Smith man heard that one or more Churches had taken this step, and he accordingly wrote the chairman to that effect. He in turn argued that if one or two Churches did so, then others also would follow this example, and he accordingly publishes what amounts to a threat.

As we have eschewed politics in this paper, we shall say nothing about this step on the part of the Churches. We are more concerned about the insult given the ministers of the South, implying that the question of finances could make them act against their conscience.

We would remind this leader of the Democratic party that the ministry of the South is not to be frightened by his threats.

We would also remind him that the Good Book, of which it may be that he, being a Catholic, is probably ignorant, tells the story of two preachers who were ordered to cease accusing the political leaders of the murder of Christ, else they would be punished.

These preachers replied, "Whether it be right in the sight of God to harken unto you more than unto God, judge ye. For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard."

Such is the spirit that moves the ministry of the South.

You cannot scare them by threats. They are animated by a principle, and whatever stand they have taken, has been solely upon conscientious grounds.

This chairman has grown rich, and he stands high in the business world, but he has in this instance shown little wisdom.

The politician has to trim his sails with every varying wind, but the minister of God, if he be a faithful one who realizes that he must give an account of his deeds done in the flesh, fears not the face of man.

It is quite evident that this chairman knows not the things of the Spirit of God.

We read somewhere in heathen annals that whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad.—Presbyterian Standard.

WHO IS URGING THE RELIGIOUS ISSUE?

The injection of sectarianism—in other words, the question of a candidate's Church membership—into the present presidential campaign is to be regretted. Our Protestant Church people are, however, to be commended for eschewing this un-American policy. The issue has been raised by the wets and the Roman Catholics, and these groups unweariedly beat the drum of "religious tolerance" as a means of intimidation. From overseas come expressions of the importance of the religious issues involved. The tolerance and charity and peaceableness of Protestantism are made subject to charges of hypocrisy and militant intolerance. The enemies of our dry cause goad us with wet propagandism and then complain that our resistance is not really against liquor, but against Romanism. These wets are wonderful politicians, and so far have been marvelously successful in handling their campaign; there is no telling how fully, by the methods they are using, they may muzzle and drive the dry element of the nation. They evidently think they can make the dries very uncomfortable by accusing them of insincerity. Democratic supporters of the present Federal prohibition laws are not to be permitted to open their mouths without being told they are lying, that they at heart are anti-Romanist and are against the candidate because he is a Roman Catholic. Let us see how far the wets can go with this scheme. American character has not been accustomed to submission to such tactics and is not likely en masse to be whipped into line with a religious lash held in the hands of intolerant religionists or of audacious liquor advocates.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson X—September 2, 1928.

PAUL IN THESSALONICA.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The opening of Thy words giveth light."—Psa. 119:130.

LESSON: ACTS 17:1-15; Rom. 15:18-20; 1 Thes. 5:12-23.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 119:9-16.

If ministers, and Sunday School workers, and Christians had more of Paul's spirit of courage and persistency, the kingdom of God would move forward far more rapidly. All too many of us become faint-hearted and discouraged when things do not move smoothly, and especially when we are misunderstood and opposed. But it was not so with Paul. The greater the opposition, the more rugged the path, the more zealous he became and the more diligently he applied himself to the work. He knew he was a worker together with God. He knew that the work was greater than the worker. He knew that he was not responsible for results but for faithfulness in duty. Therefore, when they persecuted him in one city he went to another. When things did not go smoothly he went right on doing what he felt God wanted him to do. We all need the man's indomitable courage and his indiscourageable spirit of faithfulness to duty, which had its basis in his simple and vital faith in God.

"Paul . . . reasoned with them from the Scriptures, opening and alleging that it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise again from the dead; and that this Jesus, whom said he, I proclaim unto you, is the Christ." Paul used the Scriptures in a vital way. They were for him more than mere history and great literature; they were for him an irrefutable witness to Christ. They fulfilled their function only as they were interpreted in the light of Christ and only as they led to Christ. And in them, Paul found the great facts of Christ's person and mission. His suffering or passion, His resurrection from the dead, His fulfillment of the prophecies—all these and other fundamental doctrines Paul found in the Scriptures. In other words, the written word was a pathway to the living word. We will do well to keep this truth in mind. As ministers and Sunday School teachers, we are not to lose sight of the main business of our high calling. The Scriptures are to lead our people and our boys and girls into a knowledge of the Christ.

"And some were persuaded. But the Jews moved with jealousy." Here are two statements that describe the preaching of the word of all time. There are always those into whose hearts the seed falls as on fertile ground, and they follow not only the appeal of the reason but the promptings of their hearts. But there are always those who for one reason or another refuse the word, stir up opposition and attempt to discredit the gospel.

"These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also." Now, of course, Paul and Silas had no intention of starting a revolution in the sense that these men used the term. Christianity would defeat its purpose if it resorted to physical force to accomplish its ends. But in a very real sense, Paul and Silas were releasing forces that were destined to turn the world upside down. Christianity has, as a matter of fact, effected the most comprehensive and far-reaching revolution that the world has ever known, and the end is not yet. And it is doing it, not with the blare of trumpets and with physical force, but in a comparatively silent and unheralded way by the transformation of the inner spirit of things.

"These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so." The tragedy, and it was a fatal tragedy of the Thessalonians, was the fact that they had a closed mind. They were prejudiced, so deeply prejudiced that they did not want to know the truth. Like the old man who said that he did not eat fried onions, for he did not like fried onions and he was afraid if he ate fried onions he would like fried onions, these people apparently had made up their minds about the matter, and that was final. It is, alas! an all-too-prevalent human characteristic. All of us, to some extent suffer from this deadly thing. How many people really want to know the truth about the thing which instinctively and blindly they do not like? As Dr. John R. Ewers so pungently puts it: "Do you want to know the truth about the Jews? Are you open-minded about the Catholics? Are you willing to learn the truth about the colored people? Would you be open to the truth that fundamentalists or liberals are essentially good? Ask a rock-ribbed Republican how many good Democratic Presidents we have had, or vice versa. Ask a Socialist what he thinks of good men. Ask a member of the Ku Klux Klan what he thinks of the Knights of Columbus." What the world needs today is more of the spirit of those Bereans who had the open mind, and who followed the truth as they saw it.

Teaching Points.

1. The Scriptures bear abundant testimony to the character and mission of Jesus Christ.
2. It is our duty to sow the seed; God is responsible for results.
3. Idle hands are the devil's workshop.
4. Jealousy is a deadly poison that hurts those who harbor it more than those against whom it is harbored.
5. Christianity is revolutionary.
6. A closed door at one place means an open door elsewhere.
7. Open-mindedness is the gateway to new truth and larger life.
8. Blessed are they who are persecuted for righteousness' sake.
9. Be not weary in well doing, for in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, September 2, 1928.

TOPIC: "Will the Golden Rule Work in Business and Industry?"—Phil. 4:8, 9. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

"Think!" That is the key-word of this verse, and of life. We go wrong because we are stupid (v. 8).

The Golden Rule will work in business if we think the best of people. It does not work in an atmosphere of suspicion (v. 8).

It is not a "lovely" thing to cheat, defraud, or take advantage of people; and it reacts on our own heads (v. 8).

Paul and Jesus were generous, gave their best, gave a square deal. It worked with them and will with us (v. 9).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Those that have tried the Golden Rule in business find that it does work. It brings better service and larger profits.

Jesus laid down the Golden Rule as applicable to all life, without reservation. And He practiced it Himself, even on the cross.

The generosity which the Golden Rule presupposes is embedded in human nature, and generous action calls it forth. The Golden Rule demands a definite attitude which both buyer and seller appreciate.

If a man gets the name of being smart, people will be chary of dealing with him; if he is reputedly honest, generous, giving a square deal, people will deal with him and trust him.

A Few Illustrations.

The Russell Sage Foundation reports that sharing shop management with the workers is not only feasible but is good business. That is one application of the Golden Rule.

Good wages command better work than small; and good will, when it goes with good wages, gets the best returns of all. It takes an effort for an employer to put himself in the employee's place, but it can be done.

It was lack of the Golden Rule on both sides that caused the disastrous coal strike in England in 1926. There was nothing but suspicion and hatred which Christ's rule would have averted.

A certain firm had got a new manager. A big customer came to place his order with the house and met this man. He knew that he had a reputation for smart dealing and he refused to deal with the house. He could not trust the manager.

To Think About.

Why should we apply Christian principles to business?

How may employers apply the Golden Rule in business?

How may the Golden Rule be applied to your business?

WHAT GOOD IS THE CHURCH.

with God; a means of individual expression of our ideals and experiences; a means of perpetuating that character for the good of the world; a means of personal revelation of God and the character of God; a means through which men become conscious of sin, long for forgiveness and find it in God; a means for the weary to find rest, strength to the weak, reassurance to the doubtful, comfort to the sorrowing, guidance to the ignorant; a means of salvation to all. All said, it is to help men realize the fact of God, their common brotherhood with men, and the need of Divine worship as its peculiarity. That God can use the Church for this purpose may be hard to understand, but it is no greater a mystery than all the mysteries of life. Whenever God and man meet, there is mystery. But the mystery fades into the background, for somehow we know that God is in Jesus and is in us and we feel His presence in the world.

Do you believe in anything that would so bless the world? If you recognize these things as blessings for the world, is it possible for you not to believe in the thing that is the author and finisher of them? Can we believe in these things without believing in God and Jesus Christ who sponsors them? If the Church is the organization that for all time has been the organization of heaven for the propagation of these things, can we be consistent or right to give it less than our moral support?

VOTING FOR THE RIGHT MAN.

Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, pleaded here yesterday for Democratic unity in spite of any differences on religion and prohibition, says a newspaper-writer of Lake, Miss., on August 3rd. And others throughout the country are asking the same thing of all who hear them. But I am wondering if the Southern people, or any others for that matter, are willing to listen to any one who will advise them to do what seems to be against what the Christian people have fought for years; that is, the much-discussed prohibition. And I am wondering just how many people there are who are willing to cast their vote in the wrong direction just because some 10-cent politician, standing on some joke platform, cries out for unity in spite of differences in what is right and what is wrong. And I am wondering how many people will say, "Well, my father was a Democrat and I have always voted a Democratic ticket, so I guess I will stand by my party, regardless of whether we have the right man or not." "I cannot forsake my party," many will cry. But to me that seems like we are going out to do something that we know is wrong, but because the leader says do it, we go ahead and do it, regardless of right or wrong. A little money will make a fool out of most of us—and there seems to be plenty of money in this campaign; and it sure does talk, too! And as I wonder about the number who will turn their ears to the above-mentioned 10-cent politician and vote the way that they are asked just for "party's sake," I am also wondering how many there are who will rise up and stand flat-footed and whole-hearted for what they, deep down in their hearts, believe is right! I am wondering how many there will be who will say with the prophet of old, "Choose you this day whom you will serve: whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the Amorites, in whose land you dwell; but as for me and my home, we will serve the Lord." The whole weakness of the American people today can be traced back to the "choose you whom ye will serve." Whether it be the one of right or whether it be what the crowd things or what money says.

I frankly say that I do not know which man we should vote for, but I do say that I will not vote for any man who says that we should allow people to drink whatever they desire, regardless of the harm that it may do them or their family or their friends. And that we should place whiskey in the reach of those who cannot resist the temptation to drink it and make fools of themselves as well as mar the lives of those who follow them. Besides, it was bad enough when they tried to mix whiskey with horses, but how about mixing whiskey with present-day gasoline means of transportation? I for one will say that my father or my mother or my brothers or my sisters may vote for the other side, but for me I shall stand flat-footed and whole-hearted for what I believe to be right, and shall vote that way regardless of the number on the other side. And as I wonder about these things, I also wonder if God is not testing out His people today! And I would like to ask the question, "Shall we look ahead and see, or shall we wait until the handwriting is on the wall?" I am not praising either man, for I really think that we need a better man than either party has to offer; but it seems as if there is no chance for a good man, unless he has money enough to buy himself into office—and a good man will not buy an office. Therefore, we will have to take one of the two. But we can fight for what we believe to be right and pray to God that He will raise up a prophet who will lead His people in the right direction.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

BLOWS WE CANNOT MAKE.

"Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord."—Zech. 4:6.

There are great fears that the Church is unconsciously relying on the power of personnel, the power of organization, the power of music, the power of oratory and pulpit excellency, the power of classes, rather than the power of God. The writer attended services in Boston the other evening, where about three thousand people were present (and only an ordinary service), some of whom were there a full hour before services. There was no choir, they needed none, for all sang. There was no program or printed order of service. They needed none, the order was routine, and had it not been it would have seemed so from simple announcements. There was no confusion of tongues. Every one took a seat and seemed to come into a spirit of prayer as they entered. There was a sense of deep prevailing devotion throughout, more than I have ever seen in any Church in all my experience. "By my Spirit, saith the Lord."

The apostolic Church found its power not in organization but in waiting before the Lord. In that same spirit the red waters of the Jordan were more purifying to Naaman than all the clear waters of Assyria. Daniel's goodness was more powerful than Belteshazzar's kingdom or commands. Elijah's consecration drew more power from heaven than all Ahab's prophets who hammered at Baal's door. Paul with a kingdom at his door had a vision that upset his career, and that vision led him forth, with all his wisdom and culture, as a prisoner blind, to turn the world over for Christ. The song of a Saul, or the sainthood of a mother has done more to lay down our swords and turn our stout hearts to Christian living than anything else.

All salvation is merely and simply putting on Christ that does all the rest. It makes life new. It makes us new creatures. It changes stout hearts. It clothes one with righteousness. It hates iniquity. It takes away sin, and Dr. Jowett says, "No arithmetic can compute how far away a thing is which God has put away from you."

"Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." We often try so hard to be what we ought to be. Wouldn't it be better to "put on" Christ and let our being be as He makes it? "Put on" and Thy life will be clothed new. "Put on," then nothing will ensnare thee. "Put on," then no attraction will divert thy path of right. "Put on," then no intimacy will taint thy soul. "Put on," then thy lapses will be gathered up and offered to the Lord to put away. Amen. Oh come, Lord Jesus. Amen.

TUESDAY.

MAN OF FINE QUEST, LOST IN FAMILIAR PARKS.

"He went away sorrowful, for he was one that had great wealth."—Matt. 19:22.

Were you ever lost in familiar places? Try hunting in your own woods of a dark night.

The rich young ruler thought he was so familiar with the commandments and the requirements of righteousness that he could not make a mistake.

When Jesus told him of one thing that he had not done and which he did not wish to do he turned and went away—a lost man to his own highest in good.

The way of luxury is a familiar way, but in it is no contentment. Books may be all around us, but we may not be studious. Riches may bless us, but we may be selfish. Living may be abundant, but we may be unrighteous. Learning may be extensive, but we may lack wisdom. Acquaintances may be many, but we may be void of friends. We may love those that love us, but we may fail to love our enemies. Therefore, we may be as untilled fields, or like flowers in the wilderness, or like a house unoccupied and going to ruin. There are a thousand different ways in which life is fritted away in meaningless things, in which faculties are unimproved, talents thrown away and life lose its control.

Many failures are explained in familiar ways. Lost! lost! lost! Many an ardent Christian worker has grown cold and now knows Jesus in name only. Lost! lost! There is not a tragedy that has not taken place in familiar ways. Lost! lost! lost! And Jesus came to save the lost.

Prayer.—Our Father, we acknowledge that we are in danger, and if not lost often straying from Thee. We feel that there is no good in us. Spare us, Lord Jesus, and restore us to Thy fold. Raise us daily from what we are to what we ought to be until we shall be saved in Thee forever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

WHAT ARE WE INTENDED TO BE?

"If thou wouldst be perfect, go and sell all that thou hast and give to the poor and come and follow me."—Matt. 19:21.

"We are His workmanship, created unto good works which God hath before prepared that we might walk in them."—Eph. 2:10.

It is a solemn thought that we have been created for a particular thing in this world and then for us to miss it—pass life and never touch what we were put here to do.

Mr. Edison said the other day, "I do not know what there is of a hereafter, but I expect to use whatever facilities that may be available." That may not be a perfectly pious thought, but as far as it goes it is. It is invigorating to know that God has had us in mind all through the ages, seeking to bring us from darkness to light, that his purposes are nothing petty, that they embrace in us all good works and holy ways, and heavenly characters. If we will be determined to use what facilities He offers us as we go along, we have a leadership which cannot fail.

Prayer.—O Lord, let Thy tender mercies come unto us, and let Thy salvation come according to Thy word. We are glad that thou dost not break the bruised reed, that Thou dost not cast us out for our sins. Forgive us and save us to all that Thou hast intended us to be. Amen.

THURSDAY.

MISSION AND COMMISSION.

"To set at liberty them that are bruised."—Luke 4:18.

It is amazing what cripples a bruise will make of one—a fall, a sprained finger or wrist. We go down under the slightest ills. It is, therefore, a very gracious word of our Lord's when He declares that He comes not simply to open the eyes, etc., but to help those who are smarting or wounded. From cases of the sore, the misjudged, the superceded in business, the imaginary wounded, to the unfortunate and those who suffer grievous brows, Christ came to help and He has commissioned us to go and do likewise, restoring the lame to their pristine strength and beauty. Folks are not to remain cripples. They may go forward in confidence from grace to grace, strength to strength, and glory to glory. "The works that I do shall ye do also."

What must it be to be a man, if it is to be like Him A Christian, if it is to relieve suffering!

Prayer.—Lord, establish our ways in Thine; Thy work to be ours. Give us grace to live the life of love, to confess with ardent hearts, to help the suffering world about us. Above all, give us faith that is true and living, proven over all power of sin. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord and He will sustain thee."—Psa. 55:22.

Literally interpreted, this says, "Cast what the Lord has given thee upon the Lord, and He will sustain thee."

This is a stormy psalm, threats, indignation, fears, persecutions, terrors, horrors and despair. David here so labors in anguish of soul because of the treachery of his friends, that he cries, "Would that I had wings to fly away and be at rest." Finally, he says, "I will call upon the Lord," and suddenly, like a sudden rift in the clouds through which the sun shines, a light comes to his soul and he is at ease, the Lord took his burden.

This is a lesson none of us can learn too well, that "perfect love casteth out fear," that to take the Saviour's yoke is to take comfort and peace that amidst the trials we have to bear His grace is sufficient to sustain us until we can say with Paul, "Most gladly, therefore, do I glory in my weakness." Life so inspired will be delivered from all uncertainties, for "He shall never suffer the righteous to be moved."

Prayer.—Our Father, lead us into the sanctuary of Thy word, of Thy life and Thy love, and let us abide there forever. Amen.

SATURDAY.

BOLTS AND HINGES.

"Whosoever shall say, thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire."

Shovel and tongs, broom-sticks and rolling-pins, wheelbarrows and pitchforks, bolts and hinges are sometimes the verbal weapons in the household and among friends, which recall the Mosaic law, "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." But putting on Christ gives a new law, which says that true Christianity does not resist injury and insult (read Matt. 5:38-48).

A locomotive comes thundering down the track. A regiment of soldiers can't stop it. Neither can storms of rage stop the rage that has been set in motion by resisting injury. But the pressure of a little lever in the cab slackens the speed of the locomotive, and soon brings it to a stop, panting like a whipped cur. So the pressure of the will in your house will control your thoughts, words and actions and keep peace. He who rules himself is the biggest man in the world. Will you halt or turn?

Prayer.—Help us to know Thee, O Lord, and bless us with Thy love. Plead our case at Thy throne. Feed our tongues and give us a Christ-like control forever. Amen.

SUNDAY.

HINGES.

"Whosoever smiteth thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also."—Matt. 5:38.

"Let your moderation be known unto all men."—Phil. 4:5.

The emphasis in this Scripture is on the word "turn." Can you turn? Have you a hinge in your life. Under severe provocation when the beast that is in us says, "Command thy power and fight," it takes more wisdom, more thought, more REAL OR FALSE?

The desire of so many to attract attention, to appear prosperous, to sail under false colors, causes them to impose upon themselves the chains of slavery. Monthly payments on the installment plan, the living above one's means are jealous masters that demand days of drudgery, hours of worry, causing new wrinkles, gray hairs, and shortened lives. The momentary satisfaction that may be derived from putting on a show is small compensation.

The old car suits fine until the neighbor gets a new model with a differently shaped hood. The clothes would do well for another season, but what would people say? The furniture looks great until the wonderful bargain sale is heard of. Everything can be bought for just a little down and a little a month. Not so bad to hear about, but how fast those months come around! How quickly the bank account may be depleted by numerous small checks!

When one pauses to think and observe, it is obvious that it is not necessary to cover the real thing with gaudy labels in order for its true worth to be known. Those who are in fact prosperous and successful care little for the appearance of wealth that others sacrifice so much to maintain. If one investigates further, it is found also that these were not procrastinators in the matter of the nest egg. Nor were they adverse to doing without the showy red paint.

Yet man's inherent enemies, jealousy, envy, false pride, the much-talked-of inferiority complex urge one deeper and deeper into a sea of bills until it becomes a constant struggle to keep the head above water. The little nest egg that was going to be put away to get a start never materializes. The laying of the foundation for the savings account is put off until tomorrow, and too often that tomorrow never arrives.

The ability to be independent, the joy of freedom from debt, the knowledge that you can look every one in the eye, knowing you are square with the world and getting a start towards success, is traded for a mess of pottage. One spends on and dreams of castles in the future.

It is a certainty that if the dream castle is to become a reality, one has to start gathering the stones. It is true that they are a little heavy at first, but with each one placed the burden is less and there is a lot of satisfaction in seeing the stones placed in the wall. Then, too, the waster, the spender, must also work in the quarry. The burdens are just as heavy, the hours of labor as long, the distinction being that such a one never knows the satisfaction of attainment and possession. The work is done for others and the castle remains a dream.

H.

THE CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

The Christian college is free to teach extensive Christianity to the limit of its desire. The State institution cannot stress this vital function of organized Christianity. State education is a protective measure. It is a form of insurance; ignorance is destructive and dangerous to the State, and therefore the State supports schools to guard against it. It is concerned with the making of character only so far as a man's character affects his relation to the public welfare. His relations to God and the kingdom of God in the world are not within its purview. The Christian college uses a larger map. It educates men for the whole world as well as for the nation.—J. A. Marquis.

good and more power to "turn" than to go ahead. To put on Christ gives us that power. It means yieldingness for good's sake. It means meekness and not weakness.

When righteous indignation arises, such as Jesus employed in cleansing the temple, then bolt. But when love is the needed passion, such as Jesus showed with the women at the well and the one brought to him under the charge of adultery, then be like Him: a hinge—turn. It may be manly, humanly speaking, to resent an injury, but it is Christ-like to forgive.

An old woman was converted and joined the Church. A proud sister taunted her by calling her an "old hag." "Yes," was the reply, "isn't it wonderful that Christ saved an old hag like me?" "A soft answer turneth away wrath." Use the hinge. Bend rather than break. Smile rather than frown. Suffer rather than cause suffering.

Prayer.—Lord, help us to keep alive in us the living truths of Thy word and the loving Spirit of our Christ, and make life sweet all the way. Amen.

SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

whose characters are by divine grace fitted and prepared to live with Christ in the mansions above. The sooner this prepared people are gathered out and made ready to meet Him, the sooner He will come to gather them to Himself.

The task of gathering out and preparing such a people will be accomplished by the proclamation of the threefold message of Revelation 14 to every kindred, tongue, and nation.

Thus it is made perfectly plain that the heralding of the gospel of the kingdom to every nation and the making ready of a people to meet the Lord are the supreme signs of the approach of Christ. The accomplishment of this twofold work is what actually brings the end of this age.

Futility of Time-Setting.

This shows the futility of time-setting. It is not the mere passing of a certain number of years or the arrival of a certain date that will bring Christ back to this earth; it is the finishing of the work of witnessing of God's message to the world, and the preparation of God's people to meet their Lord.

During the summer of A. D. 27, there were various signs of the times that indicated that the long-looked-for Messiah was about to be manifested to Israel; but the surest sign of all was the fact that John the Baptist was at that very time preaching a special message from God, to prepare the way of the Lord.

During those fateful years of that six-score "time of the end" period that passed upon the antediluvians prior to the deluge, there were numerous signs of the approaching catastrophe in the abounding wickedness and utter depravity of man (Gen. 6:5) and in the corruption and violence of the times (Gen. 6:12, 13). But the surest sign of earth's approaching doom was the warning message of heaven as proclaimed by Noah to the people of that day, and the building of the ark in response to divine instruction for the saving of the faithful.

So today there is a mighty galaxy of signs on every sign, which indicate the approaching end of the age; but the preaching of the divinely appointed message of a soon-coming Saviour and the making ready a people in all nations are the surest indications of the approach of Christ.

Heaven's Special Sign.

This twofold work is heaven's special sign that marks the end. These two conditions are like the hour and minute hands on the clock dial. When both hands stand at 12, the circuit of the dial is completed. So when both these divine purposes we have mentioned are finished, the hands of time will have finished their journey around the dial of the ages.—Signs of the Times.

OBITUARIES

MARSHALL.

Mrs. Alice Haizlip Marshall ("Mother Marshall," as she was so familiarly known among the young people) was born January 1, 1862, and died July 17, 1928, age 66 years, 6 months, and 16 days. She was married to William ("Witt") Heury Marshall January 11, 1883. To this union were born the following children: Lucy May, who died at age of 19 years; J. Matt Marshall, Hardeu H., who died at age of 26 years; Mrs. Kate Johnson, William R., Mrs. Minnie Gray Smither, Jack, Wade L., Nell, H. Vance, and Carl A., who died at age of 21 years. The above-named children and four grandchildren and her devoted husband survive her, besides a large circle of close kindred. Of a family of twelve brothers and sisters, she is the second to die, the others living in many States. Her friends were many, both far and near.

In my forty-four years of ministry I have never known a home of greater hospitality or of more genuine friendship. Her Christian graces were extended to all, old and young, rich and poor, pastor and people. Her sickness began about eighteen months ago, and at home or in the home of loved ones or at the hospital the very best care that love could provide was given freely. The long, tedious months of waiting and watching were filled with acts of kindness prompted by love. Friend and physician have done their best, but disease and death hath gained a great victory.

She joined Salem Chapel Christian Church at twelve years of age and remained a prompt and faithful member till death. She was of the old type Christian—plain and simple in faith, honest and prompt in her dealings with others. Her Christianity was not in soft words, but in deeds of helpfulness. She was prompt in her support of the Church with her presence and her means. A good mother has gone, but her influence lives. The family circle is again broken, and husband and children grieve because of the vacant chair. What God hath joined together, death hath separated.

I commend her many Christian virtues to all. Funeral services from the home and Salem Chapel, with burial in cemetery by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., and Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, in the presence of a very large gathering of relatives and friends. The floral offerings were very handsome. The silent banks of beauty and perfume but tell of the love which filled the life she so beautifully lived.

"The mother, in her office, holds the key of the soul, and she it is who stamps the coin of character and makes the being who would be a savage. But for her gentle cares, a Christian man—then crown her the queen of the world." Sleep in peace till the resurrection morn.

ROLLINGS.

In the early morning hours when all was peaceful and calm, the death angel visited the home of Deacon William G. Rollings and bore his spirit away to the home eternal. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That it has pleased our Heavenly Father to call Bro. Rollings from an earthly to a heavenly home.

2. That while we mourn the loss of our beloved deacon, we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

3. That we extend to his family our sympathy, and may our Heavenly Father's blessings comfort them in their loss.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, a copy to his family and a copy be spread on the records of Barretts Christian Church. It shall be our purpose to meet him in the end.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

THE ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

BY REV. W. R. CHAPMAN, D. D.

"The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch."—Acts 11:26.

One would think that the disciples were first called Christians at Jerusalem, but this is not true. Though Jesus and His apostles preached first to His own people, the Jews, to a large extent, they refused to accept Him. After His death His disciples scattered over a large part of the known world and began to preach His gospel. At first when His disciples and followers went out from Palestine they preached to the Jews, then later spread out to the Gentiles. This same thing happened in Antioch.

Antioch is situated in the northern part of Syria, Asia; that is, in the province of Seleucia, called Terapolis, from containing the four cities of Antioch, Seleucia, Apamea, and Laodicea. It is situated in a deep pass where the chain of Lebanon mountains, running northward, and the chain of Taurus, running eastward, are brought to an abrupt meeting; and on the Orontes River, which breaks through the mountains at this place, Antioch was built at a bend of the river, partly on an island, partly on the level which forms the left bank, and partly on the steep and craggy ascent of Silpius, which rises abruptly on the south. It is sixteen and a half miles east from the Mediterranean Sea, and three hundred miles north of Jerusalem. It was above Phoenicia. The founder was Seleucus Nicator, who named the city Antioch after his father, Antiochus Epiphanes. He peopled it with inhabitants from Antigonis. He founded the city in the year 300 B. C.

It was a large and populous city, containing about 200,000 inhabitants. It was divided into four townships, each enclosed by a separate wall, and the four by a common wall. It was the capital of the Greek kings of Syria, and after the Romans captured it, it became residence of the Roman governors of the province. It was also the metropolis. Its suburb was Daphne. Here was the celebrated sanctuary of Apollo (2 Macc. 4:33). Sometimes Antioch was called Antioch Daphne.

I should say that this city was for some time the residence of the Syrian kings (the Seleucidae). A multitude of Jews resided in it from the first. Seleucus Nicator granted them the rights of citizenship and placed them on a perfect equality with the other people of the city. The Jews were also allowed to have an archon or ethnarch of their own to rule them. It is now a village of 6,000 people, called Antakia.

Apostolic Church.

No city after Jerusalem is so intimately connected with the history of the apostolic Church. It was the seat of the first missionary Church (Acts 11:19-30). The Christian faith was introduced into the city at an early date. One of the seven deacons, or almoners, appointed at Jerusalem was Nicolas, a proselyte of Antioch (Acts 6:5). At the death of Stephen the Christians were dispersed from Jerusalem, some going to Antioch and there preached the gospel of Jesus Christ. (Acts 11:19). Agabus and the other prophets left Jerusalem and went to Antioch, and there foretold the famine (Acts 11:27, 28). The Church of Antioch sent out Barnabas and Saul on a mission of charity (Acts 11:30, 12, 25). Judaizers went from Jerusalem to Antioch and disturbed the Christian Church (Acts 15:1). While at Antioch, St. Paul rebuked St. Peter for conduct into which he had been betrayed through the influence of emissaries from Jerusalem (Gal. 2:11, 12).

Disciples First Called Christians.

The murder of Stephen led to the scattering of the disciples throughout Palestine (Acts 8:4). This also led to the preaching of the gospel in its various towns and cities. Then the Church began to spread through the nations. A Church was organized in Samaria (Acts 8:14-17) through the preaching of Philip, a deacon. From there it spread through the province (Acts 8:25). Next, Peter preached to Cornelius (Acts 10:34-48). A Church began in his house. These scattered disciples went as far as Phenice and Cyprus and Antioch, preaching the gospel to none but the Jews. Some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, who went to Antioch and there preached to the Grecians the Lord Jesus Christ. News of this missionary work reached the Church at Jerusalem, and they at once sent Barnabas to Antioch to preach. Barnabas invited Paul to aid him, and for more than a year they labored there. About A. D. 42 or 43 they organized the first Christian Church.

At Antioch the first Gentile Church was founded (Acts 11:20, 21), and here the disciples of Jesus Christ were first called Christians (Acts 11:26). It was in Antioch that St. Paul exercised, so far as is distinctly recorded, his systematic ministerial work (see Acts 11:22-26, 14:26-28, 15:35, 18:22).

The Jewish Church existed under the Old Testament dispensation. Out of this grew the Apostolic Church which I may say was founded by St. Peter and the eleven disciples at Pentecost (Acts 2:1-4). All of its first members were Jews. Out of this Church grew the Christian Church, which had its birth in Antioch about A. D. 42 or 43. That is, the Church got its new name here and at this time. Barnabas was the first Jewish Christian minister to go there to preach, and he was sent there by the Apostolic Church at Jerusalem (Acts 11:17-30).

The Church seems to have gotten its name "Christian" in this way. The name was given them either by divine direction or was a term of contempt applied by their enemies. The appellation "Christian" was that which could not have been assumed by the Christians themselves. They were known to each other as brethren of one family, as disciples of one Master, Jesus Christ; as believers in the same faith, the Bible; and as distinguished by the same endeavors after holiness and consecration of life; and so were called Brethren (Acts 15:1, 23; 1 Cor. 7:12), Disciples (Acts 9:26, 11:2, 29), Believers (Acts 5:14), Saints (Rom. 8:27, 15:25).

The outer world—that is, the Gentiles and heathen and non-Christians—could know nothing of the true force and significance of these Jewish Apostolic Christian names.

The name Christian occurs in Acts 11:26, 26:28, Peter 4:16. It seems to be used contemptuously. The name Christian could not have been applied to the Jewish disciples by themselves, nor come to them from their own nation, the Jews. It appears to have been imposed upon them by the Gentile world, and no place could have so appropriately given rise to it as Antioch. Here the first Christian Church was planted among the Gentiles or heathens. There is no reason to suppose that the name Christian of itself was intended as a term of security or abuse, though it would naturally be used with contempt.

Suidas says the name Christian was given in the reign of Claudius A. D. 41 (Acts 11:28, 18:2). When St. Peter appointed Evodius Bishop of Antioch they who were formally called Nazarenes and Galileans had their name changed to Christians.

The Jew called the Christians "Nazarenes," and the Gentiles regarded them as one of the Jewish sects. But there came a time when they could no longer be so regarded, and as some say, the witty Antiochians named them "Christians," from Christ, intending it as a nickname only.

I think the name Christian was of divine origin. My reasons are these: First, the Greek words translated "were called" implies the name was divinely appointed; and it means "to converse or treat about business." In the New Testament it means "to impart a divine warning or admonition, give instructions or directions under the guidance of inspiration, to receive a divine admonition, to be warned of God, be divinely in-

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Christian Conference in the Valley of Virginia dates back to at least 1838, at which time a conference was held at Antioch Church; in Rockingham County. We note the Valley Conference states in its program that it has just held its eightieth session.

Bro. J. M. Darden, of Suffolk, and Bro. and Sister Sam Davis, of Norfolk, were pleasant visitors at Elon Saturday. They report a wonderful meeting at Damascus, Orange County, N. C., and were on their way to begin a meeting at Pleasant Ridge, Randolph County, Sunday.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell, of Danville, is this week assisting Dr. W. C. Wicker in a series of meetings at Mebane. Next week Bro. Sorrell is to assist Rev. J. E. Franks at Bethlehem, Warren County, N. C. For several weeks now, Bro. Sorrell is to be in evangelistic meetings. He is one of our busiest, most energetic and consecrated pastors.

The following is gratefully acknowledged and will be read with interest: "Mr. and Mrs. B. D. Jones announce the marriage of their daughter, Adelia Rebecca, to Rev. John Galloway Truitt, on Tuesday, the 21st of August, 1928, Holland, Va." All the parties are well known to SUN readers, who will join in wishing the happily wed a long and joyous married life.

Rev. H. C. Caviness is to begin a series of meetings, First Church, Portsmouth, Sunday, September 9th, expecting to continue the meeting for three weeks. He is to be assisted by Rev. L. W. Tucker, D. D., of Chicago, a man of international reputation and a very distinguished Bible teacher and divine. Dr. Tucker will no doubt draw large audiences and will furnish a feast of good things from the Book of life.

The following will be read with interest: "Mrs. Frank G. Hamilton announces the marriage of her daughter, Reva Gold, to Mr. John Meade Fix, Tuesday, August 21, 1928, Orange, Va. At home after September 1st, 600 Webb Avenue, Burlington, N. C." Bro. Fix is superintendent of our Burlington Sunday School, a deacon in the Church and the father of Rev. Jos. W. Fix, of Franklin, Va., who united the pair in holy wedlock. We congratulate Bro. Fix and extend felicitations for a long and happy married life.

This line comes by way of a dear good sister who is always deeply interested in her Church and for years has been both faithful and liberal in her activity and giving for missions: "I only wish I had more to give. My heart just yearns for the cause and for you mission workers and the burdens you have to bear. I have noticed the contributions from the Churches and have been heart-sick at the thought of what people spend on themselves for things they do not even need, and so little for the most blessed work in the world."

A personal letter from Rev. D. P. Barrett, writing from Ponce, Porto Rico, August 13th, says: "We have dropped back in Ponce so naturally that it seems hard to believe that we were away for eleven months. Just as we got here the pastor of our Ponce Church left on a three weeks' vacation, and so I took up the routine work for the time being, which seems like being at home. I have been over the field, visited all the pastors in their home and in their work, and I am glad to say I find a good spirit everywhere. We met today and arranged the conference program, which is to be held September 7th to 9th. Our automobile has been doing full duty. It has traveled 4,200 miles, and it travels as well on the Porto Rican roads as in the States. I am glad to say we are all well and happy to be back in service." He promises to write a letter to THE SUN in a few days.

Rev. T. J. Green, Elon College, N. C., who has served Shallow Ford, Apple's Chapel and Hines' Chapel for the past three or four years so successfully, has been called to serve the same pastorate the coming year and has accepted. Bro. Green has just concluded his evangelistic meetings, at the conclusion of which forty members were received into his Churches. Bro. Green is one of our steady, faithful ministers, who goes about his task quietly but with the consecration and spiritual fervor which result in kingdom growth and power.

Bro. Sam Leonard Davis, writing under date of August 22nd from Chapel Hill, N. C., where he and Mrs. Davis are holding a series of meetings at Damascus, says: "The work is going well here. The manifest interest is most gratifying, and would indicate that the people here want to see a genuine revival of religion in their midst. The attendance from the other Churches of the community has been exceedingly fine. The services last Sunday at Bro. I. W. Johnson's Churches were wonderful. Both Churches were filled to capacity and the use of chairs was made necessary because of the large congregations." Bro. and Sister Davis are doing a great work, and their work is being appreciated more and more by our people.

Rev. S. M. Lynam, 38 Barton Avenue, Toronto, Ont., Canada, who has served so successfully as pastor for two years in the Toronto Church, is open for work and would be pleased to return to the South. Bro. Lynam is one of our very able young ministers and is well known through THE SUN, especially as editor of our "Observatory." He graduated from Elon College in 1923, taught in Bethlehem College, Wadley, two years, and has pursued his studies in the University of Toronto in connection with his pastorate. He is equipped for a pulpit and for pastoral duties. Any of our Churches looking for a pastor would certainly do well to correspond with Bro. Lynam. We trust some Church will bring him back to his native Southland.

We today have this note from Rev. J. M. Roberts, pastor at Eure's Church, Gates County: "We are in the midst of a great revival meeting at Eure, Gates County, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. Sam Leonard Davis are with us and are doing the work in a most acceptable way. I need not say one word as to the work of Mr. Davis; he is too well known in our Church. Mrs. Davis has done the preaching during the entire time and has done it in a most effective way. Her sermons are wonderful from the standpoint of content, and she delivers them in a most attractive and appealing way. During my long career as a minister it has never been my pleasure to hear stronger sermons by any one. I have been in revival meetings at Eure's Church for a quarter of a century, and to my way of thinking, Mrs. Davis has delivered the strongest sermons ever preached in this good old Church."

Rev. G. E. Gerringer writes that Wakefield, Barrett's and Ivor have all voted to send a once-a-month offering to missions and a like offering to the Orphanage. Wakefield has been doing this good thing, and we are glad that all of Bro. Gerringer's Sunday Schools are adopting this helpful program. Other schools notifying us recently that they have done likewise are Pope's Chapel, in the Eastern North Carolina Conference; New Hope, in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference; High Point, in the Valley of Virginia; Cary, of the Eastern North Carolina Conference; Roanoke, of the Alabama Conference; Mt. Olivet (R), of the Virginia Valley Conference, and Richland, Ga., of Georgia and Alabama Conference. A great majority of our schools have already adopted this program and are pursuing it diligently. We long for the day when every school in the Southern Convention will be in this list, as all should be.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

A PSALM OF PRAISE AND PRAYER.

BY REV. J. W. FIX.

"I will praise Thee, O Lord my God, with all my heart; and I will glorify Thy name forevermore. . . . Teach me Thy way, O Lord . . . unite my heart to fear Thy name."
—Psa. 86:11, 12.

There hangs in the home of Robert G. Ingersoll a number of his portraits with autograph statements. One of these statements written just before his death greatly interested me while visiting there this summer. In it he said, "Let the Bible go, let the Church crumble, let the pulpit fall." Since reading those words I have wondered what would have been the result if this desire of the great infidel had become effective in our civilization. One thing is sure—you and I, as well as generations yet unborn, would be deprived of these beautiful words of praise and prayer recorded in the 86th Psalm. Men and women would never have experienced the spiritual values of the psalmist's words upon which we are to meditate: "I will praise Thee, O Lord my God, with all my heart; and I will glorify Thy name forevermore. . . . Teach me Thy way, O Lord . . . unite my heart to fear Thy name."

1. A psalm of praise: David praised the Lord with his whole heart. He felt duly justified for his every act of praise, for God was gracious unto him. Often did he sing aloud unto God; always did his soul long for Him, and he ever worshiped Him in the beauty of His holiness. David's praise was genuine. To him it was worship. It was an experience of the heart which brought him into the very presence of his Creator. In this psalm of praise David saith: "For Thou, Lord, art good—among the gods there is none like unto Thee, neither are there any works like unto Thy works. All nations whom Thou hast made shall come and worship before Thee, O Lord, and shall glorify Thy name, for Thou art great and doest wondrous things, for Thou art God. . . . I will praise Thee, O Lord my God, with my whole heart; and I will glorify Thy name forevermore."

David heard no sermons as we do today. His worship of God was wholly by way of singing psalms of praise and making a joyful noise upon the harp unto the Lord. Where David emphasized praise and prayer, we as Protestants magnify preaching; where he stressed worship, we urge instruction. We minimize many of the vital elements in the order of service. We speak of the preliminaries leading up to the sermon and preliminaries we make them. The meaning of the word comes from two Latin words "pre" and "liminaris," meaning before the threshold. Hence, before the sermon we sing hymns as a convenient plan for filling in time, getting settled, and awaiting late arrivals who come for the sermon. All of our singing should be out of a heart filled with praise for God's goodness and greatness. Every part of the Church service should be attended with reverence and devotional praise by every man, woman and child in the congregation. The Church building is dedicated to the worship of God. Entrance through its doors ought to stimulate quietness and reverence. The prelude should call us from world of business and pleasure to concentrated meditation upon things spiritual. The doxology when sung sincerely is purely an expression of adoration and praise. Each announcement made in the Church should be heeded with attention, since each one bears upon kingdom work. The offering should never be thought of as a collection, but as an offering of our first fruits unto Him from whom cometh all good and perfect gifts. Truly the Church has a ministry of praise as well as instruction, and he who would follow the psalmist would realize that acts of praise and worship are indispensable to Church service and to the spiritual life of mankind.

In the countries of Southern Europe, women go about the streets selling flowers as a means of earning a living. As the day passes, many of their flowers fade and become withered from the dust and heat. The flowers become almost worthless and would be cast out were it not for the fact that the women have learned how they may restore them. Hundreds of flowers are taken to the city fountains and held under the refreshing spray of the fountain—thus the tarnished colors are restored by the soft mist and they become as fresh and brilliant as when taken in the early morning from the dew-laden garden. Thus our spirits droop in the dust and heat of life and need to be restored through praise to God and beseeching Him to—

"Open wide the crystal fountain, Whence the healing waters flow."

2. A psalm of prayer: While David sang praises to God and put unusual stress upon music as a means of worship, he never failed to magnify prayer as a vital element in his daily worship. Through this act of devotion, he learned to know God as a friend, a helper, a shepherd and an ever-present being. He learned to see Him in nature, the heavens declared His glory, and the waters made manifestation of Him. And the more He saw of His works, the greater became his desire to know Him and to know His way. In this great chapter he calls upon Him, saying: "Give ear to my prayer and attend to the voice of my supplications . . . I will call upon Thee and Thou wilt answer my prayer." The prayer contained in the eleventh verse of the 86th psalm cannot be surpassed anywhere in the Psalter. Its two divisions come from the heart of one who desires (1) to be taught His way, and (2) for a united heart.

(1) Teach me Thy way, O Lord: The creation story, God's wondrous care in directing Abraham, His deliverance of the children of Israel from bondage, His influence upon the life of Moses, and the perfect manner in which God's providence was revealed in his own life, led David to pray, "Teach me Thy way, O Lord." He realized that his thoughts were not God's thoughts, neither his ways God's ways. He was aware that God's ways were better than human ways. As a member of God's fold, he was desirous to be led by Him, for he knew that His way would lead "beside still waters and green pastures"; that He would ever restore his soul and lead him in paths of righteousness for his namesake. Even though God's way led through the valley of the shadow of death, David feared no evil, for the Great Shepherd, with His rod and staff, would comfort him. God's goodness and mercy would follow him all the days of his life and he would finally dwell in the house of the Lord.

In this day we put too much stress, it seems, on learning man's ways. We revel in the secrets of successful men. We seek their advice and their ways. We minimize God's ways. Since the time of David, God's ways are clearer and more accessible to all. We live in the Christian era, and God's ways have been revealed in the Trinity, not only by Himself but through the teachings of His Son, Jesus Christ, and the ever-abiding Holy Spirit.

(2) Unite my heart to fear thy name: When David asked this petition, his prayer kindled great admiration in the heart of God for this His creature. He realized that he was praying for a most vital element in his religious life. There is no prayer in all Scripture like unto this one: "Unite my heart to fear Thy name." It is both beautiful and original. It is pathetic and it is practical. The man who uttered it knew the tragedy of a divided heart—a heart torn by rival affections. He knew that anything less than a unified heart would ultimately result in moral and spiritual indifference and failure. David was aware of the fact that there could be no conquering faith unless all of man's energies were united and merged in God; he, therefore, prays: "Unite my heart to fear Thy name."

Hearty unity is so essential in the Christian life that each person ought to consider its importance with great seriousness. What food is to the body and concentration is to the mind of man, unity of heart is to the spiritual welfare. And yet the greatest fault among Christians today is that of a divided heart. Our daily routine of living consists largely in serving God with a part of our being and self with the other part, which is usually the larger part. We consecrate a part of our income to God (not even a tenth as a rule) and use all the remainder for self. We attach little significance to the Saviour's words, "No man can serve two masters . . . ye cannot serve God and mammon." We continue living a divided life. There is a continuous Babel of voices in each life. Who has not heard them:

"Within my earthly temple there's a crowd:
There's one of us that's humble, one that's proud;
There's one that's broken-hearted for his sins,
And one who, unrepentant, sits and grins;
There's one who loves his neighbor as himself,
And one who cares for naught but fame and pelf.
From such corroding care I would be free
If once I could determine which is me."

The purpose of religion and the center of prayer should be to unite every faculty of the soul into a common bond with God. Pleasure and business, education and culture, philanthropy and service should converge in Him. A man is foolish to center his energies about a thing that is insignificant; he is sure to lose if he dissipates his energies in all things. God alone is able to direct talents and gifts to worthy ends, and this he cannot do unless the heart be united to fear His name. An indifferent heart is neither hot or cold. It takes no definite stand for or against God, and it is never united to fear His name. It constantly lends its every energy to serving God and man. It joyfully sings songs of praise as:

"I have ceased from my wanderings and going astray
Since Jesus came into my heart!
And my sins which were many are all washed away
Since Jesus came into my heart!

"I'm possessed of a hope that is steadfast and sure
Since Jesus came into my heart!
And no dark clouds of doubt now my pathway obscure
Since Jesus came into my heart!

Concluding our meditation upon this great psalm of praise and prayer, may you be determined to ever "praise God, from whom all blessings flow"; may you earnestly pray, "Teach me Thy way, O Lord, and unite my heart to fear Thy name."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

A PERSON AND A PRINCIPLE.

The fundamental principle of Christianity is self-denial. The fundamental Person of Christianity is Christ. However, Christ so identified Himself and built upon the principle of self-denial that in Christianity the principle and the person are one. We cannot think of Christ without thinking of self-denial. Persons influence us and move us, but principles are the foundation on which we move. Persons build on principles. Christ Himself did. He, like the rest of us, had a principle on which He built and by which He was governed. This principle, as already stated, is self-denial. Did one think it was love, goodness, patience, meekness? These were not the foundations on which He built; these were the fruits of what He was and did. The fruit of the Spirit, said Paul, is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness—against these there is no law. They are above and beyond law, just as the orange or the apple is above the roots of the trees or the trunk or the limb. These are the growth. These are the offerings from the life of the tree. The foundation is back yonder, something deeper. So the very foundation of Christianity, the root from which this tree grows, is self-denial. Christ could have been born in a palace. He was cradled in a manger. He could have dwelt in a mansion. He said, however, "the foxes have holes and the birds of the heavens have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head." He could have wielded the sceptre of the Caesars and closed His earthly career on the throne of empires. On the other hand, from His own choice, He walked the way of the despised and the forsaken, and voluntarily ended His career on the cross. One cannot think of Jesus Christ without thinking of self-denial. He was Himself the embodiment of that principle, and chose to enter His kingdom through that narrow door and to build His kingdom on that foundation—self-denial. "If any man will come after me"—come after me where? Come after me into my kingdom. He had the cross before His eye when He said that. He was preaching a sermon on the suffering and death when He used that text—a sermon on the method and process whereby He would found on earth the kingdom of heaven. This He did for man's salvation.

He wanted to establish a kingdom that would abide forever. The only hope of an enduring kingdom was that its foundation principle should be that of self-denial. The kingdoms of Babylon and Persia and Egypt and Greece had perished from the earth. Their civilizations had crumbled and had been blotted out. They had perished by the same process through which many more kingdoms on earth would perish, viz: the process of self-getting, of self-indulgence, of self-sufficiency.

Now, Christ would build up a kingdom that should never end, a dominion that should ultimately cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, a kingdom that should endure forever. Through what process? Through the process and principle of self-denial. "If any man will come after me" (into my kingdom that shall never perish and of which there shall be no end and no limitations), "let him deny himself, take up his cross daily and follow me." Christ chose the principle of self-denial that He might save us from self-indulgence, and that He might establish, even on earth, and perpetuate a kingdom that shall endure forever. When we practice self-denial we are getting on the foundations that Christ stood on and we are standing on a foundation that shall never, never waste away. So few of us, indeed, have learned the full meaning of this wonderful principle with which our Lord identified Himself, even the principle of self-denial.

GOVERNOR AL. SMITH AND PROHIBITION.

Again while many politicians and the secular press in the South generally are trying to make us believe that prohibition is not the main issue in the present campaign and that Governor Smith, if elected, would be powerless to change the Constitution or modify the Volstead act, Governor Smith and his real followers force the issue upon us and compel us to see it otherwise. In his acceptance speech, the New York Governor lets all the world know that he stands now where he has stood through all of his public career—for the liquor interests and the wet element of his own and of all political parties. He has consistently throughout his career identified himself with the wets and the liquor element and has made his reputation as a brilliant advocate of liquor and the liquor interests. He lets it be known at large in his acceptance speech that if elected he will enforce prohibition in the nation just as he has done in his own State, viz: seek to abolish or change laws that would restrict the sale of liquor. Moreover, he would leave the sale of liquor to be decided by each State, which he knows as well as all the rest of us is a farce and a pretext in these days when transportation is easy and State lines count for nothing in traffic. This man, so enamored of drink personally and politically, cites Canada as an example for us to follow, when the well-known facts are that Canada has made the sale of liquor a government matter and has made, at the same time, her dominion the scene of the most extensive and deplorable bootlegging known to our country. We were talking recently with a friend from Canada who knows his country and says that the liquor interests were never more in ascendancy and that blockading and bootlegging were rampant and deplorable.

Let SUN readers consider the following:

First: The wringing-wet element in the North is backing Smith and doing all they can to elect him. Therefore, when the dries march to the ballot box and cast a vote for Smith they are keeping company with and helping to elect a man whom the liquor interests and the wet element of the country have nominated in spite of all that the dry forces could do.

Second: Let the dry Democrats of the South know that in voting for Governor Smith they are keeping company with Tammany Hall, the most corrupt and notorious political organization that ever disgraced our nation; and this same Tammany Hall has in previous years fought with all of its resources to defeat every candidate for whom the Democrats in the South have successfully ever voted, viz: Wilson, Cleveland, Tilden. Let the Democrats in the South know that in voting for Governor Smith they are keeping company with the voters of Tammany Hall, who, for four times over, succeeded in making Smith Governor of New York and who, as Governor and before he was Governor, made himself famous on the outstanding issues in his State and in the nation as the spokesman and advocate of anti-prohibition and of the wets of his party. We think that our people are entitled to know the company they are keeping when they advocate the vote for this man to be President of the United States.

United States Senator Edwards, of New Jersey, recently, in recounting the situation, said that the hope of electing Governor Smith was the wet element in the East—New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, etc.—and "the solid South." That is to say, they are expecting the South will keep company with and advocate anybody whom the wet East might nominate and support, because they had labeled him a "Democrat."

Third: There come to our desk week by week the papers of practically all the denominations in the South—Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and the rest, numbers of them—and we have yet to find the first religious journal in the South that is advocating the election of Governor Smith; but without exception they are lined up editorially against the wet propaganda that the secular press is carrying on, the unfairness of the secular press in not giving to the public the real facts in the case, and to the last one of them they are against the election of Governor Smith. Let SUN readers know that the religious forces in the South, in so far as those forces give voice through their Church papers, are opposed to Governor Smith as President of the United States because he stands for that against which they have fought through decades.

BOOTLEGGERS AND SABBATH-BREAKERS.

The air is full of criticism in these days of political agitation, and the press overflows with discussions of temperance and the eighteenth amendment. Bootleggers are at the front and wet propaganda fills the air. Any indulgence in, manufacture of, selling or buying intoxicating beverages is a violation of the law. All who engage in the business or advocate the manufacture, importation, sale or use of intoxicating liquors are violators of the eighteenth amendment in fact or in spirit. Good citizenship requires loyalty to the government and obedience to its laws. That quality of citizenship is not determined by the opinion of others, but by the mind attitude of the citizen himself. All persons and agencies that stand for obedience to the law deserve the support of all loyal citizens, and, in fact, the government is safe only in the hands of such men.

That the eighteenth amendment is violated by common bootleggers, respectable citizens, and by all types and grades of officials is admitted; and they all belong to the same class and march under the same banner in the dark. They all deserve the same classification, the same treatment by the courts and society. If they do not get equal treatment in society and at law they deserve it, and, in the court of God, they will receive it eventually. There is too much distinction made in society between the wrong-doing of what is known as the better class and the common people. If there is any difference, the more respectable class that violates the eighteenth amendment is lower, in actual grade, than the most illiterate and obscure, so far as society is concerned.

After all has been thought, said and written about the violation of the eighteenth amendment, the Fourth Commandment is more openly violated than the eighteenth amendment. Little is said about this larger violation of this higher law—"Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy." The emphasis, no doubt, should be placed on the little word "it." Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it—the Sabbath Day—holy. This law of God is not violated by the swampers, the mountaineers, the slummers alone, but by all grades of society and even many of those who rank as good members of the Church. And it is not done secretly but openly; and little is said about it, while the air is full of what bootleggers are doing and what ought to be done with them. It is time the pulpit should say as much about Sabbath-breakers as the press says about bootleggers. Law enforcement is an apology for poor citizenship. What the State needs is such respect for government and such obedience to law that enforcement would be unnecessary; and what the Church needs is such respect for and such obedience to the Fourth Commandment that obedience to all law would become such a majority force that obedience would become the natural condition in both Church and State. The eighteenth amendment will never be fully obeyed until the Fourth Commandment is fully obeyed by Church members.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CONFERENCE.

This Conference met in its eightieth annual session with Mt. Olivet Church, near Harrisonburg, on August 15, 1928. The Conference was very largely attended from the beginning and the people were deeply interested in all the proceedings. Rev. B. J. Earp, Winchester, Va., was president, and Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, was secretary, and Bro. Samuel Earman, Harrisonburg, was treasurer. On the roll-call, the enrollment was found to be unusually large and practically all Churches were represented. Bro. A. S. Turner, who was to have delivered the address of welcome, was in a hospital for treatment, and his place on the program was well taken by Rev. W. B. Fuller, pastor of the Church. The response was made by Rev. A. W. Andes. The program as printed was adopted for the sessions lasting for three days—Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. The executive committee made a report that Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., had presented his credentials and resignation as a member of the Conference, and the committee recommended that the same be received. After discussion, the Conference adopted the report. The committee recommended also the return of his credentials by Rev. D. B. Seal, formerly of Swift Run, Va., he having ceased working in the Conference and not having been heard from for some time. This part of the report was also adopted.

After the morning service of routine work, a beautiful lunch was served on the long tables of the Church lawn.

In the afternoon of Wednesday, Bro. W. C. Wampler, prominent layman and vice-president of the Conference, led the devotional services. Rev. B. J. Earp, president of the Conference, requested that his annual address be deferred. The report of committee on religious literature was made, urging the necessity of taking our Church papers and the inestimable value of them as a home and family asset. There was universal regret that Dr. W. P. Minton, who was to have led the discussion, was detained in Dayton because of poor health at present. Miss Lucy Eldredge, of the Religious Education Department, talked particularly about the Herald of Gospel Liberty and our Sunday School literature. Mr. C. D. Johnston, circulation manager of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, urged the people to subscribe for and read THE CHRISTIAN SUN, as the paper needed their support and they needed the help that the paper would bring them. J. O. Atkinson, editor of THE SUN, spoke on certain values of Church paper frequently overlooked by subscribers and the Church. Among these values was that of keeping in touch with those members who were too far removed from their local Church to attend its services, and their only medium of acquaintance and loyalty was their Church paper. Another forgotten asset of the paper was the contribution it makes to the stay-ins at home who are not able on Sunday to go to Church. They could get their sermon and such as their Church had to offer through the columns of the Church paper. There are other forgotten factors equally as valuable, which make it imperative that we give liberal support to our Church papers.

The evening service was given to the subject of "Evangelism." There was a full house and a very valuable address was presented by Mr. G. D. Colclough, representing Elon College, and Miss Lucy Eldredge, representing the Board of Religious Education. It was a delightful evening, well spent on an important topic.

Thursday morning, after the routine of business, the report of the committee on education was presented. The report strongly endorsed Elon College and urged our people to patronize the college as the champion of religious education and Christian character. The report stated that Rev. W. T. Walters had made application for readmission as minister to the Conference, but that the committee was unable to bring in a unanimous report. After discussion, the Conference voted unanimously to leave the matter to the decision of twelve ministers, to be chosen by Dr. Walters from the Southern Christian Convention, and that the Conference was to abide the decision when rendered by the twelve ministers thus chosen. In the absence of Rev. R. A. Whitten, who was to have made an address as representative of Elon College, Mr. G. D. Colclough presented a very able and timely paper on "The Benefits to the Future of Christian Education at Present." The report of committee on foreign missions—and a very practical and pointed report it was—was presented by Sister Verdie Showalter. Pending the report, missionary addresses were given, and the Mission Secretary of the Convention, J. O. Atkinson, discussed the Book of Jonah as a missionary book. Superintendent C. D. Johnston, of the Orphanage, made a very emphatic and telling appeal for our Orphanage which was greatly enjoyed by the Conference. After miscellaneous business, the Mission Secretary briefly discussed the necessity of putting missions in the Sunday School. The Conference voted that all Sunday Schools of the Conference should take an offering once per month for missions. Several of the schools are doing this, and to good effect.

The Conference reached a fine climax in attendance and in enthusiasm at its Thursday evening session. The program was in charge of the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board. After making a report of their work for the past year, through Mrs. A. W. Andes, vice-president of the board, a beautiful and thrilling pageant was presented, which carried one by figures and through the eye-gate of our various mission centers and activities. After the pageant, which was most highly enjoyed by all, Miss Lucy Eldredge, of Dayton, made a most interesting missionary address, appealing to the women and young people to stand by their missionary societies. The Mission Secretary of the Southern Convention gave a brief address, congratulating the women on their splendid achievement and telling something of the growth in the past and the prospect for the future. A liberal offering for the Woman's Board was taken. It was a delightful evening.

THE SUN's editor was not permitted to remain for the Friday session, as an all-day drive was required to return him and Superintendent Johnston and J. O. Atkinson, Jr., who represented THE CHRISTIAN SUN at the Conference, to their homes for a day's work at their respective posts on Saturday. Heavy rains had fallen, streams were swollen and rivers had overflowed their banks. The Staunton River at Alta Vista, Va., completely blocked our way, having gone for miles over its banks, and we had to board the train at Alta Vista and leave J. O. A., Jr., with the faithful Pontiac to return when the river should recede.

It is always glorious to visit the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. Her great mountains are sublime; her historical sites and battlefields are thrilling of reminiscences; her caverns and grottoes beneath the hills are nature's wonders, of which the visitor never tires; her fertile fields and far-spreading pastures of rich grain, fat cattle and flocks of grazing sheep; her immense barns and storehouses bulging with harvests for man and beasts; her lovely homes and well-kept estates which bespeak thrift and prosperity and progress, all unite to inspire the visitor and make him feel that he has, indeed, arrived at a garden spot of God's good earth. The Shenandoah Valley of Virginia attracts tens of thousands of visitors and tourists annually, and is indeed one of nature's real show-places of this continent. One will find delightful fellowship, congenial entertainment and royal hospitality in every home to which one is invited. We love the Valley and her strong, stalwart Christian citizens.

MUST FACE THE ISSUE.

The main issue of this political campaign is prohibition. The liberals are seeking to conceal it behind a religious issue. We must not be deceived. The line is drawn. The issue is clear to those who understand the tactics being adopted.

Watch the prohibition situation. It must be guarded. Men must stand for it, regardless of party allegiance. Its preservation is more vital than any other subject now before the public mind.

Three months before the meeting of the national convention of the political parties there was held in Washington, D. C., a convention of representatives from forty anti-liquor organizations. They considered the situation as to the eighteenth amendment. They voted to send a committee to the national conventions, requesting that a prohibition plank of some sort be placed in the party platforms. This was done in a very satisfactory manner.

The presidential candidates have expressed themselves and their records studied. The continuation committee of the united meeting of the temperance forces is still in operation, working and searching and investigating and surveying and discovering. Literature is being issued. From them nothing shall be concealed. The committee is made up of men from all Protestant denominations and from both the Democratic and Republican parties. Being nonpartisan in the matter of

SUFFOLK LETTER.

In the Lord's Prayer this sentence contains a suggestion: "Give us this day our daily bread," by Matthew, and "Give us day by day our daily bread," as expressed by Luke. The suggestion is the short time in which supplies are sought. That is the way in which all blessings come best. Very few people have the capacity to care for blessings that cover long periods of time. The industrial world operates on the principle of short-time payments. If workers received their wages in large sums, covering long periods, they would not take care of it for future use. But they receive their pay by the week or by the month, and then make their expenditures in the same way. Salaried men get their salaries in the same way. If a preacher received his salary for a year in advance he would not be able to pay his expenses at the end of the year. That would be true of all other salaried men. Salaries are paid by the month, the average man makes his plans for expenses by the month, and in that way receipts and expenses are kept on a par. Even sunshine comes a day at a time, and the seasons come in short periods. It would ruin nature's purposes and plans if winter lasted a whole year.

Apply this principle of brief periods to farm life, and the results are plainer and suggest thought for those who till the soil. All money crops make poor farmers. The reason is found in the fact that when the crop is harvested and converted into money, and the farmer has the result of a year in money, he will not care for that money to make it last a year. The family looks at the money in hand, and not at the year ahead, their wants multiply, the demands increase, and the result of a year's honest toil is soon spent. But when the farmer undertakes to make a living, to build a farm, and then have enough money to pay expenses, he becomes independent. Let him raise all crops that supply home needs—corn, hay, oats, cattle, hogs, sheep, chickens, and then cotton, peanuts, truck, fruit and such crops as are in demand—and he will be independent of speculative markets. When his crib is full of corn, his bin of wheat, his barn of hay, his smokehouse of meat, his wood in the woodhouse, then he can live and pay his debts, and his preacher, too. But when a farmer produces money crops only and gets his year's work in his hands in cash, he is exposed to the danger of spending it before the year is half gone. Money farming is poor farming. To sell a few eggs, some butter, some hams, some potatoes, some corn, and thus pick up a little money all along through the year to buy the necessities of life, and then some money crop, in addition to home supplies, that cash is added to the profits of farming. What the country needs is the building up of good homes on improved farms, and not the making of money as the chief thing in tilling the soil. When the whole crop is tobacco, cotton, corn, wheat, potatoes, or any other money crop, and nothing else, the community is hard pressed; but when home supplies are stored away in good bins and barns, ease and comfort, and peace of mind satisfy the faithful worker on the farm.

ELON LETTER.

"All other reserves can be purchased; but spiritual reserves can be secured only through right living."

A statement like the above coming from such an eminent authority in the business world as

Roger W. Babson should cause the American public to pause and consider. Babson, in this special letter which he sends out to the children of his clients under date of August 21st, is encouraging young people to support the Church. He says that he had the previous Sunday attended the Little Church where he was baptized and trained and where a fairly good-sized audience was in attendance, consisting for the most part of gray-haired people. There were almost no young married people present and no children or younger persons.

Mr. Babson states positively that the sermon did not interest him because the minister was living in terms of an age-long past. Yet he urges young people to attend Church, and gives as his reason that "civilization would go to smash" without the Church. Continuing, he says: "The Church—even in its present weak position—is still the great backlog of society. None of you would think of permanently living and bringing up a family in a community which had no Church. You all must realize that your safety and that of your family depends not on judges or police officers, but upon the spirit of a majority of the people in your community who determine what laws are to be enacted, repealed or enforced. Now, how is their 'spirit' developed and directed? Newspapers merchandise advertising; the movies supply entertainment; and the schools treat of material affairs. The Church is the one institution which is being operated with the sole purpose of directing the motives, purposes and ambitions of people along worth-while lines. The Church stands for the spirit of true progress in contrast with the spirit of the jungle. Hence, we should support it not only with our money, but also with our presence."

Mr. Babson is not satisfied with this, but goes on to give what he considers his main reason for urging people to stand by the Church, and in this main reason he is so eloquent that I wish to quote him in full: "The above, however, is not the main reason why I would urge you to stand by the Church. The real reason is much more fundamental and intimate. May I try to explain it as follows: Success is, in the last analysis, a question of reserves. As you reach middle and old age, your happiness will depend upon your physical, intellectual, financial and—most important of all—your spiritual reserves. Your physical reserves at that time will depend upon how you are now taking care of your bodies; your intellectual reserves will then depend upon what you are now reading and with whom you associate; your financial reserves, upon what you are now saving and how you invest. Your spiritual reserves, however, will then depend upon the faith, habits and outlook on life which you are now cultivating. The Church is the one institution which is today working to provide you with such faith, habits and outlook.

"Some day you are sure to have trouble. It may be a very serious illness. It may be the loss of some one very dear to you. Some day you are sure to face death. It may not be for many years or it may be very soon. Then you'll want to draw upon your spiritual reserves. Then you'll want a philosophy of life, the power which comes through prayer and the faith which only the Church is today giving. The other reserves you are now enjoying; but, then, they of themselves will be of little avail. Yet, the only way to have this spiritual reserve, then, is to begin to store some up now. You cannot depend upon inheriting such things from your parents, as in the case of financial reserves, and you cannot buy such things at a college or bookstore. Only by developing habits of prayer, devotion and interest in religious things now can you have these desired reserves when the critical time comes. All other reserves can be purchased, but spiritual reserves can be secured only through right living."

It will be a sad day for civilization in America should the apathy which now seems to characterize the attitude of the younger generation toward the Church continue. I hope that those who read this Elon Letter will meditate seriously upon their own attitude toward the Church, and they will develop habits of prayer, devotion and interest in things religious, so that they will not be satisfied outside the Church when it is open for worship.

Roger Babson has certainly done the American public a great service in sending forth this circular letter to the children of his clients. I hope it may have a wholesale response.

W. A. HARPER.

"MAN DOES NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE."

In the early stage of the 1928 presidential campaign it looked as if the farm problem would be the leading issue of the political battle. But since the Houston convention the center of struggle seems to have shifted from this issue to that of prohibition. The Democratic nominee has largely been the cause of this sudden shift. William Allen White has truly said, "When the Democratic delegates left Houston, they knew that Smith had rewritten the platform and made prohibition the major issue of the campaign." Thus if the Democratic platform-makers tried to avoid this issue, their standard-bearer did not, for the New York Governor, in his telegram acknowledging the nomination, told the delegates precisely where he stood on prohibition. That which was intended, doubtless, in the first place, to be nothing more than a plank no "law enforcement" has been made, because of Governor Smith's frank statement in favor of modifying the present dry laws, a leading issue in the electoral battle.

Secretary Hoover, on the other hand, has in his reply to Senator Borah, February 23, 1928, and in other pronouncements gone on record as strongly favoring the present prohibition legislation.

Thus, because of the known stand of Mr. Hoover and the unmistakable utterance of Governor Smith since his nomination, the political prospects for obtaining the farm votes of the great agricultural States normally Republican has changed wonderfully since the time intervening between the Kansas City convention and that at Houston.

The candidates and the positions they have taken on this great moral issue and not the platforms in general on which they stand are to be the great battle-ground of the 1928 campaign. It is a great moral issue in which the country is to decide whether it shall go forward or backward. Mr. Hoover has taken the right side of this great moral issue. In his telegram acknowledging the nomination, he said: "The problems of the next four years are more than economic. In a profound sense, they are moral and spiritual." There are hundreds of thousands of good, righteous farmers possessing a sane sense of civic righteousness and a high type of moral idealism who will not become modern Esaus and sell out their valuable blessing of prohibition for a mere mess of political "pottage," offered in the Democratic platform.

Kansas and other agricultural States have enjoyed the blessing of prohibition too long to ever risk the presidency in the hands of an avowed wet for what little seeming good may come from a material standpoint. Many, many thousands of good, upright farmers, not only of the Republican rank but also of the Democratic party, not only of the western agricultural States but also of the prohibition, they are without bias. Their pronouncements should be received by their brethren with an open mind. They should have the sympathetic hearing of the general public because they are out working for the common good.

South, are now taking their stand on the right side of this great moral issue and are saying, "Man does not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." They believe firmly that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." And in November they will march to the polls and vote these sacred convictions.—Hugh C. Guy, in Christian-Evangelist.

The names of the men and women of the continuation committee will command respect on the part of the thinking public. They are those who have been fighting the moral battles of the nation for over a generation. Many of them are big business men. Many of them are big intellectuals. Many of them are big humanitarians. Many of them are big world statesmen. We do not publish their names, the list is too long. We submit their short report for your reading. Do not pass it over; read it carefully and without prejudice. Do not impugn the motives of the committee; stand with them and prepare to defend their pronouncement.

"Your special committee upon the platform and candidates, after attendance upon both national conventions, begs leave to report as follows:

"We regard the results in the Republican and Democratic national conventions as marking an epoch in the history of the struggle for a sober America and the outlawing of the saloon and the liquor traffic. We believe that these results present both the gravest danger and the greatest opportunity ever offered by a political situation to the constitutionalists and dry forces of the United States.

"In each convention the militant liquor forces were beaten in the resolutions committee and on the floor. After eight years of bitter struggle and the most widespread and continuous campaign of vicious and false propaganda by the representatives of the liquor traffic, both conventions declared for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.

"The results of the Republican convention were completely satisfactory. Herbert Hoover is committed not only to enforcement, but also against the repeal of the amendment. After a notable struggle in the committee on resolutions in the Democratic National Convention, in which the dry leadership of the Democratic party won a splendid victory—and that party platform declared for enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and all supporting legislation—this achievement was nullified by Governor Smith in a telegram of repudiation of the spirit of this enforcement plank, read to the convention just at the moment of adjournment.

"The Republican platform declares without equivocation for the vigorous enforcement and observance of the eighteenth amendment. The final results of both conventions present a supreme challenge to the dry forces and all those who believe in the integrity of the Constitution of the United States.

"The record, attitude, and pledges of Herbert Hoover, on the one hand, and Alfred E. Smith, on the other, fix the issue. Alfred E. Smith is the leader of the forces of nullification, evasion, and betrayal of the eighteenth amendment. As Governor of the State of New York, he has been the consistent servant of the liquor traffic in its death grapple with the moral forces that wrote the eighteenth amendment into the Constitution of the United States. The story of Governor Smith's official action is written into the record of his votes in the Legislature of the Commonwealth of New York, and as a servant of Tammany Hall in Democratic conventions, and in acts, statements and messages as Governor of that State.

"Alfred E. Smith voted against local option. Alfred E. Smith voted to retain the infamous Raines law hotels. Alfred E. Smith voted to nullify the town option feature of the liquor-control law of New York. Alfred E. Smith voted to overthrow the restrictions preventing saloons within two hundred feet of schools and within prohibited areas around Churches. Alfred E. Smith advocated and supported the nullification "beer bill," which was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. Finally, Alfred E. Smith signed the repeal of the Mullen-Gage act, the enforcement law under the eighteenth amendment in the State of New York, and did all in his power to paralyze all enforcement of this provision of the Constitution in that Commonwealth.

"His whole record in public life has been consistent as the servant of the saloon and liquor traffic interests and of the most corrupt political organization in the history of this republic, Tammany Hall. His election would, in our judgment, be the greatest victory for the saloon and liquor traffic since the foundation of the republic. No amount of subterfuge with respect to temperance, the Constitution, the law enforcement for campaign purposes can change the long record of the servile obedience to the liquor interests by Alfred E. Smith and of his policy of nullification of the eighteenth amendment as written by his own hand in signing the repeal of the Mullen-Gage law.

"We call upon all men and women of this nation who believe in the integrity of the Constitution of the United States to defeat Alfred E. Smith at the polls in November."—Western Christian Advocate (Methodist).

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

THE MISSION DOCTOR.

BY HUGH H. LINN, M. D.

The other day we received a fresh supply of smallpox vaccine. As we had been having numerous calls to go out to a certain village only about seven miles, we gathered up Rev. John Patterson, our district superintendent, and a schoolboy and hit the trail.

The boy knew the way to the village, but his knowledge was for footpaths and not motor cars or bullock carts, so after a circuitous route of near ten miles over stones, thorns and all sorts of jungle paths, we got to the village. We started our phonograph, and in no time had a crowd. Mr. Patterson cleaned up the arms with gasoline from the car, the boy wrote the names and took their collection, and I rubbed in the vaccine. By sundown we had done seventy-four cases, and the high-caste people were asking us to come to their section of the village. But as we did not know the road very well and did not have a great amount of serum left, we decided we had better leave for home.

The head man of another village was present and wanted us to come to his village for plague inoculation. As I knew his village was on another road that would take us home, I suggested that he ride with us as far as his town and that we would return in the morning for plague inoculation. The road was a little better, but we had to cross a number of creek beds where there was more or less mud, and you may be sure we were thankful each time we got through without sticking.

Crowd Comes for Inoculation.

The next morning Mrs. Linn and an Indian woman went along. We stopped under a tree, and for the first time our gramophone did not attract a crowd. However, Mrs. Linn and the Indian woman made a short talk over nearer the homes of the people and found that we were wanted under another tree. On moving over there we soon had a crowd, and were able to give about sixty plague inoculations, as well as to go and see several who were sick. Most of the villagers had moved out into little grass huts or shelters, and we went from one to another of these to give medicines and to inoculate. In one we found a mother nursing a boy of about nine years of age who had been having smallpox, and his smallpox sores had been infected with fly eggs, so that now in several places the maggots were wriggling under the skin and in the open sores. The child was wailing with pain. The mother had a smaller baby at her side, and behind her on the dirt floor was a boy of fourteen burning with fever while the buboes of plague were appearing in both armpits. We did what we could, little enough, for them and then brought the father in to the dispensary to get more medicines. However, the boy with the smallpox infected sores died before the next morning.

This seemed a sorry plight, but we had worse to see the next morning. At the first place we stopped along one of the main streets of the little town we went into a house where a mother was stricken with plague. She was hot with the fever of it, and the tell-tale buboes were stabbing her with pain, though she still cared for a small baby. A boy of about thirteen was sitting beside her also suffering from plague, and the father went back in a dark room and brought out first a little girl of near ten years all covered with smallpox sores; and then yet another girl of about seven years in a still worse condition with smallpox, her body seivered with blisters, scabs and filth, while her eyes were dried shut, possibly never to see again. We tried to give them medicines and tell them how to use them. While we were still at this place they were begging us to see another family just across the street. Here the mother was able to be about, but seemed to be developing a plague buboe, two children were recovering from smallpox, but one had developed plague on top of it, and a third was sitting on the doorstep with buboes in the groin.

Burying their Dead.

They told us there were possibly fifty cases in the village, but we did not see more than twenty, and these that we saw first seemed to be the worse. As we went over to the section where the low caste and Christian people were living—they have no teacher in this village—we saw them carrying out one of the dead. It seemed almost out of place to set up the gramophone and play music of any sort for them at such a time. Some were caring for their sick, others working on their plague huts, fixing poles and grass for a rude sort of shelter, yet they came together and listened to the music. Some had smiling faces. Those who had just been out to bury their dead returned and listened with the rest. They were slow to take inoculation and vaccination, yet some did. We went to one hut where we found a young man apparently stricken with plague, though the buboes had not appeared. They had a little boy of six who had recently had smallpox and lost one eye. The father asked if we would not take the boy. All their children died anyhow when they got about his size! They brought forward their little blue-eyed baby for vaccination, and then urged others to take it. From this section we went to some distance where a high-caste man had his huts. He refused inoculation, but took medicines and asked for more, but our stock was exhausted.

Smallpox in Every Village.

It was past noon and we started home. But as we were about a half-mile on the opposite side of the village two men came running to say that two of their children had plague and could we not let them have some medicine. We went over our stock and managed to get together enough to satisfy them. What misery we left behind!

There is an article in a recent Literary Digest which states that, through education and modern science, we have learned to avoid those infectious diseases. But it certainly does not apply to India, where thousands every year are carried off through preventable diseases. And yet some people would like to imagine there is nothing much that needs to be done for India. "The people are educated and quite as fit to manage for themselves as any Americans are."

The village I have been telling you about is but six miles from Vikarabad. Yesterday when we were there, plague and smallpox were prevalent on every side. Today there is a public bazaar in Vikarabad and doubtless numbers of the people of this infected village will come to the bazaar to make purchases, meeting people from dozens of surrounding villages. Is it any wonder that smallpox is to be found in almost every village?

THE ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

structed, to be called, named, be known by a particular appellation."

We have a beautiful example of the use of this Greek word in Hebrews 12:25: "See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven." Another translation: "Beware, lest you should reject Him who now speaks, for if those did not escape who rejected Him who admonished them on earth, how much less we, who turn away from Him who admonishes us from heaven." Another translation: "Beware you, lest you should not refuse the speaking. For if those did not escape who have rejected Him who divinely admonished them on earth, by how much more we, who from heaven are turning away."

They were divinely admonished, or divinely directed "to do things on earth." They were divinely instructed, or they were to "give instruction or directions under the guidance of inspiration." (Acts 11:26) "And the disciples were called Christians first at Antioch." "And the disciples have been directed under the guidance of inspiration."

Here we learn from the Greek word used that God directed that the followers of His Son, Jesus Christ, be called Christians. Giving this name was an act of inspiration. Dr. Adam Clark has these remarks on the Greek word: "If, therefore, the name was given by divine appointment, it is most likely that Saul and Barnabas were directed to give it; and that, therefore, the name Christian is from God."

Some scholars believe the name "Christian" was given to the disciples by Barnabas and Saul. This opinion is favored by the Codex Beza, which translates Acts 11:25 and 26: "And hearing that Saul was at Tarsus, he departed, seeking for him; and having found him, he besought him to come to Antioch; who, when they were come, assembled with the Church a whole year, and instructed a great number; and there first called the disciples at Antioch 'Christians.'"

This is certainly the origin of the name "Christian." Its origin, therefore, is divine. Barnabas and Saul were directed and divinely instructed to call the disciples in Antioch "Christians," which name originally had its origin in the name Christ, the Son of God, the Saviour of all men in the world. All of this was done by divine appointment. The naming of the disciples was an act of divine inspiration given to Barnabas and Saul, and this divine appointment was in fulfillment of a prophecy in Isaiah 62:2: "And the Gentiles shall see the righteousness, and all kings thy glory, and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name."

This prophecy was literally fulfilled. The "new name" was that of "Christians," and the mouth of the Lord really named it by directing and inspiring Barnabas and Saul to call the disciples "Christians." And the mouth of the Lord directed the use of the Greek word which truly directs the naming of the disciples "Christians."

The word Christian comes from the Greek word meaning "follower of Christ," and also the Latin Christianus, and the Anglo-Saxon word Christen. It finds its ultimate origin in the name Christ, Latin Christus, which means "anointed, anointed," hence "the anointed," and this is synonymous with the Hebrew term Messiah. It means the followers of Jesus Christ. The root word is pure Greek, the ending is Latin, but the thought is Hebrew. In the name Christian we see the three nations—Hebrew, Greek, Latin—and their languages perfectly blended and unified. In these languages was written the accusation of Jesus by Pilate, and placed on the cross over His head.

It was at Antioch that the Gentiles were first admitted to equal rights and privileges with the Jews in the Christian Church. Those rights and privileges have since been extended to the Gentiles and all nations in the world. Hence, the spread of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Before the name Christian was applied to the followers of Jesus Christ the Jewish converts were called by these names: disciples, believers, saints, brethren, the Church or assembly. By their enemies they were called Nazarenes, Galileans, the men of "this way or sect."

Controversy.

A controversy arose between certain Jewish believers from Jerusalem and the Gentile converts at Antioch respecting the permanent obligation of the right of circumcision; and this became the occasion of the first apostolic council or convention (Acts 15).

In A. D. 43 (Acts 11:25), Barnabas invited Paul to Antioch. He needed help in his work as gospel minister. The name Barnabas was given by the apostles to Joseph, or Joses, a Levite on the island of Cyprus, who early became a disciple of Christ (Acts 4:36). Tidings came to the Church at Jerusalem that men of Cyprus and Cyrene had been preaching to the Gentiles at Antioch. At once Barnabas was sent to that city to preach and look after the Christian cause. Barnabas soon went to Tarsus to seek Saul, as one especially raised up to preach to the Gentiles (Acts 26:17). He brought Saul to Antioch, and both were shortly sent to Jerusalem with relief for the brethren in Judea (Acts 11:30). On their return to Antioch, Barnabas and Saul were ordained by the Antioch Christian Church for the missionary work and sent out to do such work A. D. 45 (Acts 13:2); from this time, Barnabas and Paul became apostles.

Paul, Barnabas and John Mark go on their first missionary journey (Acts 13:14) A. D. 45. Their work was confined to Cyprus and Asia Minor. They returned to Antioch about A. D. 47 or 48. The Antioch Church sent Paul, Barnabas and others to Jerusalem A. D. 50 to discuss with the apostles and elders the question respecting the necessity of circumcision for the Gentile Christians (Acts 15:1). Paul and Barnabas were recognized as the apostles of the uncircumcision. They remained for some time in Antioch. While here, Paul and Barnabas disputed about the question of taking John Mark with them. John Mark was the son of the sister of Barnabas (Acts 15:36-41). Barnabas took John Mark and sailed to Cyprus, his native island. Here the Bible becomes silent about Barnabas.

Some time about A. D. 50, Paul starts from Antioch on his second missionary journey. He took Silas with him. At Troas he met Luke, the physician, author of Acts, and took him on his journey. This seems to be the last time that Paul was in Antioch. This city was early made the seat of a Christian Church and of the missionary work.

The Antioch Church.

We have found that a Gentile Church was founded in Antioch by Barnabas and Saul. This Church early became the Gentile Christian Church. This Church had in its fold disciples, apostles, deacons, elders and other Christian workers; but its head was Jesus Christ (Col. 1:18) "And He is the head of the body, the Church" (Eph. 1:22) "And gave Him to be the head over all things to the Church."

The Church at Antioch was both evangelistic and missionary, because it sent out Paul and Barnabas on two missionary journeys. It was a Church of great perseverance, determination, Christian brotherhood and fellowship and close co-operation. It was a Church filled with the Spirit of God. It was a working Church, because its members and preachers were missionary in every way. This Gentile Christian Church was noted especially for two things: first, the name Christian, and second, Christian missions. It was also a benevolent Church. It was the first, so far as the Bible instructs us, to send relief to the saints at Jerusalem and Judea.

I said it was a missionary Church because it sent out from its doors two of the greatest missionaries of all time—Barnabas and Paul. Paul left this Church on first and second missionary journeys. These were two of the best teachers and gospel ministers among the apostles. Paul was both very learned and a writer of many of the New Testament books.

The Christian Church.

The Christian denomination had its origin in a withdrawal from the Methodist Episcopal Church. Those who withdrew were at first called "Republican Methodists." This occurred in Virginia and North Carolina in 1792, led by Rev. James O'Kelly, who had opposed in vain the power of the bishop over the assignment of ministers to Churches. He had over a thousand followers. In 1794, at a conference held in Surry County, Va., the name "Republican Methodist" was dropped and the name "Christian" assumed. Its leader, Rev. James O'Kelly, was born in Virginia and became a great Church leader and organizer in his native State as well as in North Carolina.

A second withdrawal was from the Baptists, and occurred in 1800, led by Dr. Abner Jones, a physician, of Lyndon, Vt. He was joined by many from the Free Will Baptist Churches. They wished a non-sectarian biblical basis. Dr. Jones denied the Calvinistic doctrine. In 1801 he organized a Church in Lyndon, Vt., which was called simply "Christian." This was the first Church of that connection in New England. The second Church was founded in Hanover, N. H., in 1802.

In 1803, Elder Elias Smith withdrew from the Baptist denomination, and so the Christian denomination began to grow fast.

A withdrawal from the Presbyterians of Kentucky and Tennessee, in 1801, was led by Rev. Barton W. Stone and Rev. David Purviance. There was a revival in Kentucky and Tennessee, and other States, known as the Cane Ridge or "Great Revival." Some of the Presbyterian preachers, among them Rev. B. W. Stone, of the Kentucky synod, and Rev. David Purviance, of the Springfield presbytery, were expelled by the Presbyterians for preaching against Calvinism. The Springfield presbytery dissolved in June, 1804, now called themselves "Christians." Rev. David Purviance was of Kentucky. Rev. B. W. Stone left the "Christian" Church at the invitation of Rev. Alexander Campbell when he founded the "Disciples of Christ Church and joined in his movement.

[According to the best historical data obtainable, Rev. Barton W. Stone never united with Rev. Alexander Campbell. He did, however, co-operate in the great work of evangelism.—Managing Editor.]

Gradually these organizations became one under the name "Christian Connection," or "Christian Convention." But in 1854 the denomination split on the negro question, and the Southern Christian Convention was organized.

It means that the general union of these organizations effected a union in 1808.

It means that the General Convention met in Cincinnati, Ohio. Three delegates were appointed to report on the anti-slavery question. One of the three was the only delegate from the South, W. B. Wellons. The Southern delegate brought in a minority report, but because of the action taken he, with several others, declared themselves disfellowshipped and withdrew. This gave rise to the Southern Convention of the Christian denomination. In 1856 the Southern Christian denomination organized the Southern Christian Convention.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XI—September 9, 1928.

PAUL IN ATHENS AND CORINTH.

GOLDEN TEXT: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified."—1 Cor. 2:2.

LESSON: Acts 17:16-18:17; 1 Cor. 2:1-16; 1 Tim. 2:3-7.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 119:9-16.

Athens and Corinth were names to conjure with in Paul's day. The one was a university town, the center of culture and learning, the clearing-house for new ideas and innovations in thought; the other a great commercial city, strategically located, and so corrupt that Corinth almost became a synonym for immorality. One certainly could not accuse Paul of being a coward when one thinks of what was involved in his efforts to plant the gospel in these cities, each of which offered tremendous difficulties.

PAUL IN ATHENS.

Paul had something of the Master's spirit of compassion. "When he saw the city wholly given to idolatry, his spirit was moved within him, or stirred within him." Here was a great city, with all its culture and knowledge, given over to idolatry. There was something pathetic about it that appealed to Paul. It was all the more pathetic because the altar to the unknown god showed that, in spite of their religiousness, the Athenians had not found that which satisfied their heart-hunger. Paul could not keep quiet. He knew the riches of grace in Christ, the living one, who alone had power to supply all human needs, and he set about to tell the Athenians his secret. "He preached Jesus and the resurrection," a strange message to the Athenians, and especially to the Epicureans and the Stoics with their philosophies of life, the former with pleasure as the goal of life, the latter with high ideals but with a sternness and emphasis upon fate that was foreign to Christianity.

Because Paul apparently brought them something new, they hailed him into the Areopagus, where he addressed them. He emphasized several points that his observation convinced him needed emphasizing. God as Creator and Sovereign (vs. 24), God as spirit (vs. 25, 26), the brotherhood of man (v. 26), the possibility of fellowship between God and man (vs. 27, 28), the inconsistency and futility of idol worship (v. 29), the long-suffering of God (v. 30, first part), the call to repentance (v. 30, last part), the judgment (v. 31), the resurrection (v. 31). There are some who say that Paul failed in Athens because he did not exalt Christ, and especially the cross. It is quite probable that he had in mind to lead up to this, but when he began to speak about the resurrection and the judgment, with its special emphasis upon the moral issue, his hearers would not allow him to go farther. In any event, Paul was not able to do much in Athens for the speculative spirit of the Athenians was not good soil for the gospel.

PAUL IN CORINTH.

We have an interesting insight into Paul's character in an incident which happened at Corinth. A Jew and his wife, Aquila and Priscilla, had been driven from Rome by a persecution, and they came to Corinth. They were tent-makers by trade. As soon as Paul learned this he joined himself unto them, "because he was of the same trade." Paul was so interested in spreading the gospel that he was willing to support himself by working with his hands. There is no questioning the sincerity of the man. And from what one knows of Paul, one suspects that he was just about as good a workman as he was a preacher. One cannot conceive of Paul doing shoddy work. We may be sure that his tents were good tents. Religion for Paul applied to the practical things. It ought to do the same for us. The Christian should do better work just because he is a Christian.

"Paul was constrained by the word." After all, preaching was Paul's main business. When Silas and Timothy came down from Macedonia, presumably with financial aid, Paul was "laid hold on" by the word. He had that rich experience which every minister and every Sunday School teacher should covet and should strive for—the consciousness of having something to say, the conviction that the Spirit of God has chosen him as a mouthpiece for divine truth. Alas for us when we have to say something and have nothing to say!

Paul was far beyond us in many, many ways, but thank God he was like us in some ways. He triumphed not because he did not have our human weaknesses or limitations, but because by the grace of Christ he rose above them. Paul had his moments of misgivings and fears and discouragements. He was not always the fiery, dauntless warrior. The account of the vision in Acts 18:9, 10 came out of an experience when Paul had his misgivings and his fears and his discouragement. As is always the case, God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble, and they who wait upon Him shall renew their strength.

"I have much people in this city." What! Much people in wicked, immoral Corinth! Much people in this city when the gospel had not been preached there very long! Yes, the Lord had much people there. In the midst of that wicked city there were those who, because of higher aspirations, and the hunger after reality, and the whole-hearted following after the good, belonged to the Lord. We will do well to remember that in this day when we hear so much about the world going to the dogs, that God has much people both in the great cities and in the country, men and women who lead happy, faithful home lives, many who do not carry hip-pocket flasks and who do not frequent road-houses, many who have not bowed down the knee unto Baal or gone after false gods, many who in humble and unpretentious ways are following after the Master and seeking to serve Him. There has been and there is today what the prophets called the "saving Remnant." Let us thank God and take new courage.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, September 9, 1928.

TOPIC: "How May Every One Become Truly Educated?"—Prov. 4:1-13.

Some Bible Hints.

To learn we must listen to the experience of others, build on foundations already laid (v. 1).

The purpose of education is not to enable us to make money, but to make a life (v. 5).

Love of knowledge is good, but love of insight is better—to see the inner meaning of things, as Jesus did (v. 6).

We go wrong because we are stupid. If we could see what our words and acts lead to, we should never speak or do many of them (v. 12).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Jesus never taught that the cultivation of the understanding would do much for us. "The world by wisdom knew not God," says Paul. The soul needs cultivation.

Education does not stop when we leave school. We must continue to read and, above all, to think.

Education is not merely knowledge or information. It is wisdom. A man may be an encyclopedia of facts and yet be uneducated, unable to control himself or live aright.

Observation helps our education. Fabre spent years just watching insects and learning about their habits. Get the habit of noticing things.

A Few Illustrations.

Education is got as Jesus got some of His in the temple, by the collision of mind with mind. Man's mind, left to itself, is not productive. It needs stimulus.

As a boy, Patrick Henry would neither read nor work. He failed in business. Then he tried law and became a wonderful success. Follow the things you like and grasp opportunities.

One of the finest managers of men is far from being intellectual. He knows little about books, but he knows much about human nature. This also is education.

Education is to the soul what sight is to the body. It is insight, understanding, wisdom. When we begin, the mental eye is blurred; education makes it clear.

To Think About.

What have we learned since we left school?

What opportunities have we to learn more and more?

Why does college not always educate?

WHAT THE ELON S. S. MEANT TO ME.

By MISS LUCILE MULHOLLAND.

(Winner of the $5.00 prize for the best paper.)

One of the most pleasant and profitable weeks I have ever spent was at the Religious Summer School, held at Elon this past summer. The pleasures and profits here seem inseparable, for they were staunch companions throughout the Summer School. The pleasures have in reality passed, but their lingering memories are sweet; the profits are still active and bid fair to continue thus.

One of the big values of the school was the fellowship which existed. It seemed that we all were dwelling "in the valley of contentment on the banks of River Smile." This was especially true at the meals and at the "surprises." I think no one could ask for a better spirit of fellowship than existed—and this is something our hearts always cherish. It gives us somewhat of a quivering thrill when we live in memory days filled with fellowship such as we experienced at Elon.

Then, there was the pleasure of renewing old friendships and forming new friendships. Life is empty without friends, for they bring us joys and blessings which cannot be found anywhere else in the world. And, this was an occasion to form friendships with people whose purposes and ideals were similar to those of our own. Indeed, this was wonderful!

To my mind, this fellowship and these friendships prepared us for the big purpose of the school—Christian training for service. Every one will agree that we all learned very much which has, and is helping us to be better workers in our Sunday Schools, Churches and societies. In one, the courses we were splendidly instructed concerning "Youth and Worship." We learned—and probably for the first time—what worship really is, and the proper attitude for worship. This is helping us now to worship "in the beauty of holiness." Many materials of worship were suggested, and with the principles for making worship programs in mind, programs were built. This afforded us excellent practice, and the principles which we were taught now find a place in our worship programs, and we use more consecrated efforts in preparing them. The result is that they are better, more deeply religious, more inspiring. We are now more fully conscious that "our best, and only our best" is due our Christ—truly a worthwhile realization!

Then, too, we became more fully aware that the world is flinging challenge after challenge to the Christian young people of the world. The challenges were big, but with each challenge came the needed new courage and inspiration. This was gained from the services of a strictly worshipful nature. First, there was that stirring message, "Our Unlimited Tomorrows," from Dr. Bloom. This seemed to me a challenge to service. Then the vesper services held each evening about sunset out in the beautiful quiet open made impressions which can never be erased. Always the air was pervaded with silence; always there was one of God's masterpieces to beautify; always the programs were deeply worshipful. One could not but feel that God was there, and that our souls were richly fed. Such experiences are milestones for the Christian. The most individual and, to some, the most beneficial moments of worship were the morning devotions, which we all tried to keep—

"A moment in the morning ere the cares of life begin, Ere the heart's wide door is open for the world to enter in;
Ah, then, alone with Jesus, in the silence of the morn,
In heavenly sweet communion let your duty day be born."

The value of this is obvious—it makes for better and more worthwhile and more useful Christians.

There was another factor that promoted better and more useful Christians. That was the missionary messages received. There seemed to be a missionary atmosphere abroad, and the presence of our missionaries, Rev. and Mrs. Barrett, helped to create this. When we were being told the needs of the people of other lands we could almost hear them sending out "S O S" calls to us. This caused us to have a new missionary interest and to realize as never before that when Jesus gave the great commission He meant me, you, every one! We can never forget that thrilling missionary tour we made. It brought us in contact with the people of other lands, and increased our sense of duty toward them as brothers of one faith. We want to do more for them, now that we know them better. Nor can we forget the pictures and the lecture regarding our mission work brought to us by Dr. Minton. The whole mission idea was beautifully clinched. As the audience sang "I Gave My Life for Thee," and there were flashed upon the screen pictures representing the hymn, who could resist the challenge to serve?

We have mentioned only a few of the inspiring incidents of the summer school. Even then, we can never express its true meaning and value in words—we must say it with service!

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

RENEWAL WITHIN.

"Make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die?"—Ezek. 18:25-31.

Every sick man knows that if he could only get a new body he would be in no danger of death. How men long for new bodies! How much money they spend, and how much time and trouble, on the mere chance of obtaining a partial renewal of their bodies! But when it comes to a new heart, a new spirit, which is far more necessary than a new body even to the man most desperately ill, we are usually heedless.

And yet the winning of a new heart, a new spirit, is quite within our reach. We cannot get it for ourselves, but the Great Physician can get it for us, and will give it to us for our faith-filled asking. The old heart is not worth keeping. It is full of sin. Let us get rid of it, with the help of the Holy Spirit.

Prayer.—Dear Father in heaven, we pray Thee to restore us, recreate us, revivify us, make us all over again. We sadly need Thy renewing. We can make nothing of ourselves. Remake us, O Holy Spirit, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A HAPPY PART.

"They both chose the good part."—Luke 10:42.

She sitteth at the Master's feet
In motionless employ;
Her ears, her heart, her soul complete,
Drinks in the tide of joy.

Ah! who but she the glory knows
Of life pure, high and tense,
In whose eternal silence blows
The wind beyond the sense.

In her still ear God's perfect grace
Incarnate in His voice;
Her thoughts, the people of the place
Receive it and rejoice.

Her eyes with heavenly reason bright,
Are on the ground cast low;
His words of spirit, life and light
They set him shining so.

Sure joy awoke in her dear heart,
Doing the thing it would,
When life the holy took her part,
And called her choice "the good."

Oh! needful thing, oh! Mary's choice,
Go not from us away!
O Jesus, with living voice,
Talk to us every day!

G. MacDonald.

Prayer.—Lord, let Thy word enlighten us and lead us in the bosom of Thy affections and eternal fellowship with Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE OLD WALLET.

"I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content."—Phil. 4:8-13.

Having learned that, Paul had learned fully half of the science of happiness. He had saved himself from endless heart-burnings, from envies and jealousies, from frustrations and despair. Incidentally, he had learned how to lay up the only permanent treasure, the treasure in heaven of which Christ spoke.

There is a meaningful story of a ragged beggar who was plodding along, grumbling to himself, and wondering why the rich people never seemed satisfied but were always wanting more. He had an old wallet which he proffered to the passers-by, begging for a few cents. "Now I should be satisfied," he muttered, "if I could only get enough to eat and wear." Just then fortune came along and spoke to the beggar. "I have long wanted to help you," she said: "hold out your wallet and I will pour gold into it. Only be careful, for the gold that falls on the ground will turn to dust." So he held out the old wallet and fortune began to pour gold into it. "Is that enough?" "No, indeed; just a little more." So fortune poured in a little more, the wallet split from end to end, and all the gold was a pile of dust on the ground!

Have we learned Paul's lesson of entire contentment, or are we like that beggar, always asking for a little more, a little more, till at last our wallet breaks and lets it all out?

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

MORE BEYOND.

"In Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily."—Col. 2:8-15.

Dr. J. Stuart Holden tells how, centuries ago, when Spain was one of the great world powers, standing at the Pillars of Hercules, facing the unknown Atlantic, "she struck on her coinage a Hercules and the words, 'Ne plus ultra' (no more beyond). She regarded herself as the finis terræ, the end of the world. But Columbus set out across the trackless ocean and came to this land and made all its treasures available to the whole world. Spain has learned better since that time, and on her coinage now she has 'Plus ultra' (more beyond). In Christ there is ever more beyond."

If any one thinks that he has exhausted the meaning of Christ, he has hardly made a beginning. Those who have gone farthest in the great exploration see most clearly how much more remains to be discovered in Christ. There is no conclusion of Christ because there is no conclusion of the infinite God.

Surely this is good reason, not for abandoning the study in despair, but for pursuing it the more fervently. No other pursuit is so gloriously rewarding. It means the highest wisdom, the supreme beauty, the enduring riches, the endless delight, the unfailing power. To know Christ is the aim of all worthy, strong, and resultful living. Not to know Him at all, or to make poor progress in that knowledge, is the one failure in life that involves all other failures.

Prayer.—We rejoice, O Christ, in the infinitude of Thy being. As a racer speeds in the arena, we would gird up our souls and press to the mark of the glory of God in Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE GOD THAT SEES.

"Thou art a God that seeth."—Gen. 16:7-13.

Hagar's experience should be that of every Christian. We also should know that "all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do." As Joseph Parker once said: "We stand in the light of God's eye all the day and all the night; this is our joy as well as our fear."

Yes, it is our fear, because we know there is so much evil in us that we hide carefully from the eyes of men, and never can hide from the all-seeing God, our eternal Judge. And yes, it is our joy, because we know that He sees in us our inner longing after purity and strength and beauty and righteousness. Not a struggle against temptation, but God knows. Not an ideal sought earnestly yet sought in vain, but God knows. It is so comforting to be sure that we have a God that sees.

And since we know that our God would rather see a spiritual victory of His children than anything else, shall we not give Him many such sights over which to rejoice? Is it not good that His pleasure thus coincides with our own endless gains and eternal joy?

Prayer.—All-seeing Father, look upon Thy children. See us utterly, and seeing what is evil, send Thy mercy and Thy grace. For the sake of Thy Son, our Brother, Jesus Christ. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD.

Lesson: 13th chap. 1st Cor.

The world is a bubble, and death shall die:
Love shines longer than lights in the sky.
The moon is a cinder, the sun grows old;
Love's fire only shall never wax cold.

The stars burn out, but the lamp of love
Illumines forever the Blessed above.
Love is the soul of the song they sing
Through the day that fears not an evening.

The song of their love shall forever resound
In the ears of the love whom God hath crowned.
Crowned in heaven is the Love who came
For love of the loveless to sorrow and shame.
Deathless in heaven is the love who died;
Adored, whom Caiaphus crucified.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, baptize us with Thy light, Thy love and Thy leadership. O dear Father, make Thyself a bed soft, undefiled and full of delight, in our hearts. Amen.

LONG'S CHAPEL.

We commenced revival services at Union, Alabama, on the fourth Sunday in July and closed the following Friday. Rev. R. A. Whitten was with us and did the preaching after the Sunday morning sermon. His sermons were plain, practical and earnest. He brought to us good messages. The music was in charge of the choir, led by Bro. J. H. Cates. The song service was good. A good supply of books enabled the congregation to join in the singing. The children's choir rendered good service, and their singing was much enjoyed. There were some twelve or fourteen professions. Thirteen united with the Church at the close of the meeting and were baptized. The meeting was well attended and we trust much good was done in strengthening the faith and purpose of the Church in Christian service.

Revival services began at Long's Chapel on the fifth Sunday in July and closed the following Sunday. Rev. B. J. Howard, of Jonesboro, N. C., was with us and did the preaching from the fifth Sunday afternoon till Thursday evening, inclusive. His messages were very thoughtful, earnest, pointed. He impresses one as a student and as a seeker after the deep spiritual things of life. His sermons were much enjoyed. The song service, in charge of the choir led by Bro. Beth Blanchard, was good. A new supply of song books enabled the congregation to join in the song service. A song by little folks of the Sunday School was much enjoyed. There were some six or seven professions; ten members were received into fellowship, and the spiritual life of the Church deepened. The attendance at the meeting was good.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

I copy the following letter in mine this week to show you that it brings to me a pain of regret:

"Dear Uncle Charles,—A short while ago we wrote, asking you to take the Wilkins children in the Orphanage. But since then the baby boy, age five years, was accidentally killed by an automobile. This little offering, 'forty cents,' is the money this little fellow had saved to buy clothes. I went to see his mother shortly after the accident and she gave me this offering and said give it to the Sunday School class to which he belonged. So we are sending it to help some little orphan boy or girl, as this little boy has gone to be with Jesus. We hope you can soon make arrangements for the other two."

We exceedingly regret that our crowded condition would not allow us to take these three little children when application was made. Their father is dead. Their mother is in very feeble health and is not expected to recover. I truly hope the day will soon come when the Christian Orphanage will be in a position to take such cases as this one that I know is so much in need of a home like this or one similar. We could give ten more children a home if we had sufficient funds to support them.

BEFORE AND AFTER HOUSTON.

The 3,810 Baptists who in May assembled in the South Baptist Convention in Chattanooga were not exceptional. They came together from the entire Southern territory. In brains and culture and high moral purpose, they were quite representative of the Southern Baptist millions. Under the urge of conscientious conviction they expressed their views on the proper qualifications of a candidate for the national presidency. There are some, the writer among them, who question the propriety of bringing into religious assemblies matters that are so largely political; but there are none who question the right of Baptists to speak out as they see fit on any matter of public interest.

With deliberation and practical unanimity these representative Southern Baptists said:

"We enter into a sacred covenant and solemn pledge that we will support for the office of President, and for any other office, only such men as stand for the present order of prohibition, for the faithful and efficient enforcement of all law, and for the maintenance of the Constitution of the United States in all its parts and with all its amendments; and we record our fixed determination to oppose actively the nomination or the election of any candidate of the opposite type, no matter by what party put forward nor on what platform he may stand."

These utterances were made before the Houston meeting, but they were utterly disregarded by the Democratic Convention who assembled there. Said Democratic delegates assumed that Baptists in Chattanooga, educators, doctors of divinity, editors, secretaries, farmers, governors, congressmen, were merely bluffing, when they entered into a sacred covenant and made a solemn pledge actively to oppose any such candidate as Governor Smith. There were in the Chattanooga meeting 424 representative Baptists from Kentucky, who bound themselves to oppose such a candidate as Governor Smith. Certainly they did not bind anybody else, but they spoke the conviction of thousands who were not present.

The remarkable thing is that a few Baptists rate their politics higher than they do their religion and feel more at home affiliating with Tammany Hall and its corrupt foreign influences than they do in keeping fellowship with their Baptist brethren in Kentucky. Some have even gone so far as to criticize Dr. Mullins and others for saying after the Houston meeting just what they said before. It would be interesting to know just what sort of men they considered Drs. Mullins and Masters and others to be. Whatever their previous notions, they are finding out that when honorable men have deliberately expressed themselves they do not swap sides at the behest of mere political partisans. The writer was not in the Chattanooga meeting, but he is in full accord with the views there expressed. He has nothing against Governor Smith personally, but considers him hardly a suitable person to sit in the highest seat in the nation. Governor Smith does not represent the best things in American life.—Western Recorder (Baptist).

TRUITT—JONES.

Rev. John G. Truitt and Miss Adelia Rebecca Jones were united in marriage by the writer at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. D. Jones, R. F. D., Holland, Va., August 21, 1928. The marriage altar was arranged in the parlor, which was decorated in white and green and lighted with candles. Before the ceremony Mr. Joel C. Holland, of Franklin, sang "Beloved, It Is Morn," accompanied by Miss Margaret Corbett, of Sunbury, N. C., who also played the wedding march. The ring ceremony was used. A large number of near relatives and friends were present.

Mr. and Mrs. Truitt left at once for a motor trip to Asheville, and thence to Dayton, Ohio, where he has accepted the pastorate of the First Christian Church. Mrs. Truitt is a graduate of Elon College and has been a teacher in the State schools. Mr. Truitt is the son of Mr. H. L. Truitt and a native of Rockingham County, N. C. He is a graduate of Elon College and of Princeton Theological Seminary, and until recently pastor of First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va.

May their united lives be rich in joy and abundant in honor and usefulness.

N. G. NEWMAN.

APPLES', HINES, SHALLOW FORD.

Beginning on the fourth Sunday in July we held our revival at Apples' Chapel. Rev. L. A. Nall, of the Baptist Church, preached the first sermon, which was much enjoyed by all present. Immediately following was the sacrament for the Lord's Supper, administered by the pastor, who also preached at the afternoon service.

Rev. John M. Allred, of Asheboro, N. C., came to us on Monday and did the preaching with telling effect until the close of the meeting on Friday afternoon. The meeting was held in the good, old-fashioned way, morning and afternoon, with only one evening service added. The attendance was fine and the interest good from start to finish, and besides the revival effect, there were sixteen accessions to the Church.

Our meeting at Hines' Chapel began on the first Sunday in August and closed on Friday P. M. following. Rev. J. F. Apple, of Elon College, N. C., did the preaching, and did it well, from start to finish. Notwithstanding it was a busy time and some interruption by rain, we enjoyed a splendid revival, with six accessions to the Church.

Beginning the second Sunday in August, our meeting was held here. Bro. Nall's sermon in the evening was enjoyed here also by those who heard it. Rev. J. W. Knight, of Stokesdale, N. C., came to us on Monday and did the preaching from thence to the close Friday night, which was thoroughly appreciated and enjoyed by all who heard him. The results were eighteen accessions to the Church, and the people much revived.

Praise the Lord for victory, and thanks to brethren for services rendered in His name.

T. J. GREEN, Pastor.

DAMASCUS MEETING.

The annual week of evangelistic meetings was held with the Damascus Christian Church, Orange County, N. C., beginning Sunday, August 19th. As supply pastor, I preached the morning sermon, and Rev. G. D. Underhill brought the message on Sunday night.

Bro. and Sister Sam Davis arrived for the afternoon service on Monday and continued to hold services, afternoon and night, until and including Friday night. These services were well attended and a fine interest was manifested from the beginning. Mr. Davis presided at the piano with his usual demonstrative ability, yet with a spiritual sincerity that attracts and wins at the same time. Mrs. Davis brings a simple gospel message that grips and holds her audience. Her sermons are saturated with scriptural quotations by which she seeks to back up her message.

Suffice it to say that at all times they had the attention and co-operation of their audience. The free-will offering was $91, besides about $16 for current expenses. There will be

"SECTIONALISM" THING OF PAST.

In a recent address of President Coolidge, on the occasion of the dedication of a monument to a hero of the Civil War, he expressed a sentiment which all good citizens, North and South, will endorse, when he said:

"I am firmly convinced that the responsible elements both in the North and in the South, each look with pride and satisfaction upon the brilliant contribution which the other is making to the national welfare and are just as eager to help the other as they are to help themselves. A notable example of this occurred in the last session of the Congress when the flood-relief measure for the lower Mississippi Valley, which will probably equal in cost the Panama Canal, and a very large amount of which will be paid for by Northern States, passed by practically a unanimous vote. The day of sectionalism is passed. We are a united nation."—Ex.

TATE.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father saw fit on the 13th day of April, 1928, to call from his earthly to a heavenly home our beloved Bro. J. T. Tate, who for many years had been a member of Concord Christian Church; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in his death, Concord Church loses one of its faithful and most beloved members, his children a kind father, and his community a most obliging friend and neighbor.

2. That we extend to his bereaved children our sympathy and trust that our Heavenly Father may comfort all hearts made sad by his decease.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his children, a copy be sent to

The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be spread upon the Church record, in the Church cemetery. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

Maude Warren, wife of J. J. White, was born October 17, 1889, and fell asleep July 5, 1928, age 38 years, 9 months and 12 days. For a number of years she had been a member of the Millfield Baptist Church and was faithful and true to it until illness prevented her from attending. She is survived by her aged parents, husband, two daughters, one sister and one brother.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. A. K. Lamkin, of the Methodist Church, from her home, July 5th, and her body laid to rest in the family cemetery. God add His blessings to those who mourn.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

LESSONS FROM GREEKS AND ROMANS.

By W. A. HARPER, LL.D.,
President of Elon College.

(An address delivered Wednesday evening, September 5, 1928, to the freshman class of Elon College.)

The purpose of "Freshman Week" is to express the good will of a college to its incoming new students. I think you have already discovered that as the purpose of your alma mater in the social festivities, the conferences, and other items that have so far constituted freshman week, 1928. I hope that you know that Elon is glad to welcome each and every one of you to membership in her family and that every officer of the college is ready to be of any service possible to each and every one of you in every laudable aspiration toward which you may look.

In this concluding item prior to the beginning of your regular class-work on tomorrow morning, it is my pleasure to bring a word of public greeting. As I have thought of this occasion in terms of the new emphases that are so generally advocated in the educational world, I have been irresistibly drawn to a consideration of Greek education.

Today we are told that education is based on experience, that it should arise out of actual life situations, and that it is best achieved when the experience of the past crosses the experience of the present and is fused into a program of action and of idealism for the future. This was exactly what took place in what corresponds to be the first two years of our college course among the ancient Greeks. Perhaps I should be very specific and say that this was what took place for the young men of Greece, because education among the Greeks was not for women. The young women of Greece learned from their mothers the things that they needed to know of a practical character to discharge their duties as citizens, and formal education, or what perhaps I should call organized education in the form of the school, was not for them.

When the young Greek boy had completed under his pedagogue what corresponds to our high school course, he took the oath which Solon, the great law-giver of the Greeks, had prescribed for young men, and then entered upon two years of intensive training in the service of the State. During these two years of apprenticeship, his alma mater was the State and his curriculum his civic duties in connection with the State, and this continued to be the fact throughout all his life as a citizen.

I say it has been impossible for me, as I have thought of this occasion, to forget the very modern approach to problems of education which the ancient Greeks employed. They had learned that experience is the best school teacher, and it is not true, as we have a way of saying, that the tuition rate of experience is exceedingly high. As a matter of fact, considered in terms of real education, the tuition rate of experience in yielding that happy result is not only the most satisfying but actually the lowest to be had.

I referred a few minutes ago to the oath which Solon had prescribed for the Athenian youth. I would like to quote that oath to you tonight. It is as follows: "I will never disgrace these sacred arms nor desert my companion in the ranks. I will fight for temples and public property, both alone and with many. I will transmit my fatherland, not only not less but greater and better than it was transmitted to me. I will obey the magistrates who may at any time be in power. I will observe both the established laws and those which the people might hereafter unanimously make, and if any person seek to annul the laws or set them at naught I will do my best to prevent it and will defend them both alone and with many. I will honor the religion of my fathers. And I call to witness Aglauros, Enyalios, Ares, Zeus, Thallo, Auxo, and Hegemone."

Remember that the young Greek, at the beginning of his college course—or what is the same thing, his apprenticeship in citizenship—was a soldier. It was proper, therefore, for him to take oath never to disgrace the arms that were entrusted to him. We know that the safest protection is not force, but co-operative intelligence. The governments of the world do not know this yet, but they will soon be forced to see it, and it appears from the treaty that Secretary Kellogg has just negotiated with the other world powers, we are soon to see the outlawry of war. The Greek, however, was brought up in a war atmosphere. Fighting was in the spirit of the times. He did not know the method of co-operation and of intelligent, sympathetic understanding. We have made great advances over the Greek in that respect, but we have not improved upon his theory as to how real education is effected.

He also took oath that he would fight for temples and public property. This shows a fine attitude, the attitude of worship and of appreciation of the rights of others. We have been criticized in America because we lack the spirit of reverence. Representatives of non-Christian religions who have come to our country have pronounced us terribly wanting in this respect. Also we have a feeling deeply ingrained in us that if we can take advantage of a corporation or of a State we have done nothing amiss. We do not respect the officers of the law, the policemen, for instance, as we should. We have something to learn from the oath of the young Greek in these regards.

I wish to call attention in the next place to the part of the oath which obligated the young man to transmit his fatherland greater and better than it was transmitted to him. A very simple-hearted man whom I know intimately and who had struggled earnestly to educate his son when that son graduated from college, said: "Son, you are standing upon my shoulders; you can reach higher than I. Do not fail to do your best." This sacrificing father had the right attitude. He was not jealous of his son, nor regretful for the sacrifice he made on his behalf. He was ambitious for his son to outstrip him in the achievements of his life. It has been several years now since that son was graduated from college, and I have no doubt that the inspiring words of his father on the day of his graduation still ring loud in his ears. He has wrought well in the days that have passed, and I believe he will continue to go forward and the stirring words of his father—"Son, you are standing upon my shoulders; you can reach higher than I. Be sure to do the best you can"—will, I am certain, be a constant source of inspiration to him. It was not haughtiness or self-assurance that encouraged the young Greek to take oath to transmit his fatherland greater and better than it was transmitted to him. He was simply expressing his gratitude for the good he had received and voicing the obligation he felt in his heart to further the progress of the human race.

This young Greek also took oath to obey the magistrates, by which is meant the officers and the laws that had been made or that should be made. We are living in a day when law-breaking is a fad, but it is a perilous fad. We are living in a day when the idea is abroad if certain respectable citizens do not favor a law they should disobey it in such numbers as to lead to its practical nullification, if not to its repeal. This attitude undermines democracy. It was as far as the East is from the West in the thinking of the young Greek that he should ever assume such an attitude toward any law of his fatherland. The great apostle Paul said that the law was a schoolmaster to lead us into liberty. My own thought is that law makes possible larger liberty. Law is not the enemy to our freedom, but the real promoter of the abundant life. The young Greek knew this and obeyed the law which had been handed down by Solon and added to by his forefathers.

Finally, I wish to call attention to the respect that the young Greek had for the religion of his fathers. He took oath that he would honor his religion. We do not think that religion is something to be added on to life, but that it is as essential to our spiritual nature as the atmosphere we breathe is to our physical existence. Out of the infinite cosmic energy there have come two forces, what I may call personal forces and what

Rev. C. C. Ryan, of Richmond, is assisting the pastor, Rev. J. W. Fix, in a meeting at Union (Southampton) Church this week.

You are not making a donation when you subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. You will get a most excellent paper each week for a whole year.

This is the week of opening at Elon College, which thus begins its thirty-ninth scholastic year. The promise is flattering for a large enrollment.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN keeps you in touch with your College, your Mission Board, your Christian Orphanage and all departments of the Christian denomination.

Rev. James L. Foster, Elon College, N. C., is open for more church work the coming year and will be glad to correspond with any church, or churches, desiring his services as pastor.

We are sure our readers appreciate the splendid sermon in our SUN's pulpit furnished last week by Rev. Joseph W. Fix, Franklin, Va. Brother Fix is one of our young ministers, who is a careful and painstaking worker, and his sermons are well thought out and will well repay reading.

Brother Darden was with Mr. and Mrs. Davis at Pleasant Ridge for both services last Sunday and writes that he never enjoyed the beginning of a meeting more. He estimates that a thousand people were present, and all who could crowd into the house to hear them were thrilled with the music and the message of these evangelists.

Brother George J. Bradshaw, of Zuni, Va., writing under date of August 25th, requests that we ask SUN readers, who believe in the prevailing power of prayer, to pray for his mother's recovery. This good woman in the Lord has been confined to her bed for three months, and Brother Bradshaw, heavy-hearted, feels that if prevailing prayer shall be offered she can be restored. We are sure his request will be granted.

Rev. H. E. Rountree, Chaplain on the U. S. S. Utah, is now on a visit to relatives in Eastern Virginia. Passing through Richmond last week, he called at THE SUN office for a short visit. He dropped in upon us so suddenly that we almost had to stop to think whether we had gone to sea or whether we were dreaming. We were truly glad to see him, he is looking well and had recently added sixteen pounds to his avoirdupois. He furnishes the copy for the "Altar" page of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and is editor of his ship's paper called the "Big U." May he keep well and prosper.

It is not often in our ranks that one family is blessed with three sons who are ministers. Less than two years ago our beloved brother and one of the most faithful of our old ministers, Rev. C. M. Dollar, passed from earthly labor to heavenly reward. Surely, this man's good works were not interred with his body. He has three sons today, all of whom are strong young men engaged in the ministry—Rev. J. D. Dollar, Lanett, Ala.; Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, Roanoke, Ala., a graduate from Elon College and a successful pastor; and Rev. Carl Dollar, a student the past year in Elon College and already active in ministerial labors. This is, indeed, an enviable record for a preacher of the Word.

Rev. B. J. Earp having resigned the pastorate of the Church at Winchester, Va., to take effect with the present fiscal year, that Church has called to its pastorate Rev. R. L. Williamson, of Sanford, N. C. Bro. Williamson has held several important pastorates and has endeared himself to the people wherever he has labored. We congratulate our Winchester Church and Bro. Williamson on the happy alliance they have made. Bro. Earp is open for work and will be pleased to correspond with any Church needing his services.

First Church, Norfolk, has called to its pastorate Rev. J. E. McCauley, of Nashville, Tenn., to be successor to Rev. John G. Truitt, who recently resigned to accept the pastorate of First Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio. Bro. McCauley is one of our well-prepared and very strong young ministers, having graduated from Elon College and also from Vanderbilt Theological Seminary. He has had very successful experience in several pastorates. We wish for him and the Berkley Church a most happy and prosperous period of labor together.

We commend to any of our churches, in Georgia and Alabama especially, because he is one of their number, Rev. Staley Hunt, who graduated from Elon College last May. Brother Hunt is one of our most promising young men, and we have been hearing the best of reports from his work in the pulpit this summer. He is to teach this winter and take church work in connection with his school, but some pastorate should engage this promising young man for all of his time. He is the son of Rev. G. D. Hunt, of the Alabama Conference, and inherits some of his father's splendid virtues and powers.

There were no half-measures in the terms of the resolution endorsing the candidacy of Herbert Hoover adopted at the national convention of young people of the United Presbyterian Church recently held at Conneaut Lake Park, Pa. The convention registered over 3,000 delegates from all parts of the United States. Here is the shot the young people fired: "We pledge our support to Herbert Hoover, not as a partisan nominee, but for his courageous stand for righteousness and sobriety. The issue is clearly defined. It is law, order, and decency versus nullification and corruption. We therefore call on all Christians to stand firmly for the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act, and to vote for such national, State, county and municipal officers as may be worthy persons."—Christian Herald.

Our good friend, Dr. Roy Helfenstein, Dover, Del., is having the time of his life in Europe. THE SUN's editor followed him to his boat on which he was sailing from New York, and under date of August 16th, writing from London, he says: "I well remember the parting words you said to me, 'Roy, you are going to have a wonderful trip and a great experience.' Those words are not even strong enough and should be qualified by the superlative adjective. This is the greatest experience I have ever had. The people are exceedingly generous and the press is liberal, and everything possible is being done to make my trip agreeable and memorable." The Burnley News of England gives more than a column to a report of Dr. Helfenstein's sermon on "A Warless World," preached at the Salem Congregational Church, Burnley, on Sunday, August 5th. On August 12th, he preached at the Old Meeting Church, Colegate, Norwich. Dr. Helfenstein is on a pilgrimage of good will with fourteen other American ministers, directed by the Federal Council of Churches in America.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

We are still going along nicely with our campaign. I had to be off last week to hold a revival meeting for myself, which accounts for the absence of the report last time. I find that many are planning to make a donation, but just wait until they are approached personally. If you have made up your mind to make a donation to the college, it would help to speed matters along if you would write us just what you wish to do without waiting for a personal visit from us. This is the plan; we want as much cash as possible, with the remainder paid over a period of years not to exceed five. The unpaid subscription is given in a note. Now, dear friends, please remember that I have my regular pastoral and teacher duties to attend to, and do not wait for me to come, because it will be utterly impossible for me to get around to see all my friends in the time that I have to use this way. You may know of some one that you could influence to make us a donation. If so, lend us a hand in this way and let us know of your success. Pray on for us, but remember that "Faith without works is dead." Many write us that they are praying for us and hoping for our success, but include no cash nor obligation. What is this—a dead faith?

The report for this week is as follows: Previously acknowledged, $10,002.39; W. E. Higgins, $100; J. A. Fuller, $460; W. L. Marshall, $100; E. L. Groover, $50; Farmers' Union Warehouse, $50; Daniels, Inc., $10; E. E. Mostello, $5; J. L. Smallwood, $3; Mrs. Alice Hodge, $35; L. M. Veazey, $50; Marie Veazey, $50; J. R. Johns, $50—total, $10,960.39.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

WHAT THE BIBLE CAN DO FOR US.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

"Ye shall lay up these, my words, in your heart and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between two eyes."—Deut. 11:18.

"It shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate there in day and night, that thou mayest observe to do all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success."—Joshua 1:8.

Among the helps which the Church uses in its work of making God known to man is the Bible as chief, which has held that place of honor from the beginning of all time, as God's appointed means of grace. When we read it, God speaks to us through the mind, and from it the whole man is active—mind, emotions and will.

As a result of a mistaken conception of the Bible, it has been contrasted with other books and represented as exceptional and extraordinarily unlike all other books, both in composition and content. Likewise, a mysterious efficacy and supernaturalism has been attributed to it which has placed it beyond man's ability to achieve. The result has been that many thoughtful people have ceased to use it and are losing the spiritual help which it gives.

First: The inerrant conception. Man has expected from the Bible immediate understanding in the infallible message of God for him. We long for an authoritative revelation which relieves us of all responsibility and will put the whole weight upon God alone. We pray, and we want an immediate answer to our prayers, and in our finite thinking expect it just as we are thinking about it. Being inerrant, perfect in its parts, complete in its authority, we read and expect an immediate message with no room for misunderstanding, and when it fails to do this we become doubtful and cease using it.

Today modernists teach that the Bible has been written by men of their times, to men of their times, and with ideas of their times, and that it is a human book, as well as divine, and is to be studied by the method we apply to other literature. With this idea, the divine nature of it slips away from us. The supernatural disappears. This is the inerrancy.

The fact is that the Bible is the most trustworthy source of religious knowledge, and tells us how men of all ages have found God, what it has done for them, and teaches us how we may find God and what it will do for us; and in all things it is the Book which is able to guide us where we most need guidance and is a sufficient rule of faith and practice for the development of a perfect man and a perfect world.

Second: It introduces us to Christ. The one way of understanding the Bible is: bring everything the Book contains into touch with the central personality in whom all its teachings culminate—Jesus Christ. In it we learn most of Him. It is the direct source of all knowledge of Him. It gives His teachings, His character, records the influence He had over others, shows us what He means that shall be our thought of God.

His is an example we are to follow. He supplies us with inspiration which enables us to follow His example. The reading of the Bible satisfies our desire far beyond that of the critical scholars. Said one: "If you would know Jesus you must read the gospels. There is no other way." The wonder of the Scriptures is that to follow His example and live with Him makes the Book a loveable Book to us, and that to those who linger over its pages He grants the gifts to see and understand.

Every reform, every reformer has begun by Bible study. Every man reformed has been by Bible study. No other single influence has contributed so much to Christian life as the daily reading of the Bible.

Mr. Brown cites an instance during the World War which speaks just what God has done through Jesus Christ for the people of all ages. He says: "During the darkest days of the great war a Swiss professor sat in his lecture-room at Zurich trying to concentrate his attention upon his lectures. Across the border he could hear the guns booming, and he realized that every shot was mowing down young men like his own pupils. All that he said about God and Christ, about salvation and brotherly love seemed to him a mockery, and for a time he felt as if he had lost God out of the world.

In his dilemma he turned to the pages of Israel's prophets. There he read of men who had been through experiences like his own. They had seen their country devastated, their homes destroyed, their countrymen carried into captivity, the temple in which they worshiped leveled with the ground. Yet they had been able in and through it all to discern the working of a divine purpose and to retain their faith, which was love can triumph over man's ignorance and sin. Through these prophets this professor found his way back to a living God, Master of the fate of Europe in this great war exactly as in the days of the prophets.

A hundred years earlier a German monk, in his cell at Erfurt, was wrestling with the problem of his relation with God. He had tried to win inner satisfaction by loyal observance of the discipline which his monastic rule required; but the harder he tried, the more conscious he became of his own inadequacy and failure. In this crisis he opened the Bible, and in St. Paul's epistle to the Romans he read the words, "The just shall live by faith." It seemed that the scales fell from his eyes. A new conception of what life might mean opened before him, and for the first time in many years he felt at peace.

What the Bible did for the Swiss professor and the German monk, it has done for men of every age, acquainting men with those who have found God before them, it has helped them to find God themselves, and it has done this at all points at which human need is greatest. Through the Bible God teaches men what to think, what to do, how to feel, and He is teaching them in all these ways today.

The Bible puts us in touch with folks who have had the same questions we have and have found an answer to them. Instead of being a book of laws defining the niceties of conduct, it is a collection of rules and principles for cultivating personal piety, making our own decisions, finding our own answers. It is a book of expanding humanity. It is a book showing how men's ideas are slowly purified, their standards elevated under the guidance of God's Spirit, and they find the most complete expression of that in the character of Jesus.

Third: Reality of main convictions. In addition to this it helps us to realize the reality of the main convictions of life, such as the love of God, the fact of sin, the need of salvation, the meaning of the Holy Spirit, the hope of immortality.

All these things are as near to us and as significant to our lives as the earth on which we stand and the breath we breathe. In making us judges of our own conduct, it rectifies our errors, enlarges our vision of humanity and makes us wiser. In this way we realize the world over again, mingling with the throngs that crowded about Jesus as He traveled the Galilean highways and taught from the hillsides of Gennesaret. And as we live with Him and learn and understand Him better, duty becomes clearer, right decisions easier, difficulties lesser, and the path before us clearer and straighter.

Fourth: It brings order. Above all things else, the Bible deepens and purifies our emotional life. We all live by our appreciations, our hopes, our fears, our aspirations, our loyalties, our sympathies and our affections. If we are to make our lives what they ought to be, we must bring order into it.

We get things wrong; we love what is not lovely. We hate what is not hateful and much of our practices brings us no lasting joy. What we need is attention fixed in God who alone commands all this. To the Bible we go for the answer, and it teaches us to do this by bringing us in contrast with men and women who have loved most generously, suffered most joyously, lived most bravely, and worshiped most worthily.

Criticise it all you wish, and yet it is found to be a Book of this kind: The medium through which God speaks of enlightenment, of guidance, of comfort, of inspiration. In this we realize the eternal presence more vividly, and as He has thus spoken to men of all ages, He will thus speak to us.

NOTICE.

Dr. W. Leon Tucker, of Chicago, a man called of God, nationally noted as an evangelist, Bible teacher and publisher, will conduct a revival campaign for Christ in First Christian Church, corner of Washington and County Streets, Portsmouth, Va., beginning September 9th, continuing for two weeks, closing September 23rd, with three services each Sunday—11 A. M., 3 and 7:30 P. M.—shop meetings at noon, and each evening during the week at 7:30. These services will be devoted exclusively to the deification of Christ and the glory of God, predicated only upon God's eternal Word, dictated and directed only by the Holy Spirit.

Three competent and consecrated musicians will assist Dr. Tucker in this great campaign, using fourteen musical instruments. The musical program will be of unusual and marvelous spiritual character.

Dr. Tucker has been wondrously used of God in the principal cities of the United States, filling the largest Churches with great crowds who are hungry to hear the gospel of Christ in word and song. Tidewater Virginia is to be congratulated in securing the services of those people of God.

We cordially invite all sister Churches to engage in these services; also all those who can attend will be sincerely welcomed. Pray with—pray for us that God's will be done—Rom. 15:30.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

DISPOSING OF THE SUPERNATURAL.

We see this question asked: "Has science disposed of the supernatural?" We presume there are some, even many scientists, who would answer that question in the affirmative. One, however, is only blind to the facts in the case who would answer the question in the affirmative. The prevalence of the supernatural was never more in evidence than at present. The further science goes in its investigations, the more mysterious becomes the universe, and the more in evidence everywhere is the supernatural. By the supernatural is meant that which is above and beyond the natural, and by the natural is meant that which man has become well acquainted with and that which is ordinary in its laws and in its cause and effect. The law of gravitation, for instance, may be called a law of nature, only because man has discovered the fact that nature acts constantly and inevitably in a certain discerned and discoverable manner. The fact that two parts of hydrogen properly mixed with one part of oxygen inevitably results in a liquid called water, is a law of chemistry only, and because man has discovered that this is the way and the method of this phenomenon. Man cannot tell why hydrogen and oxygen act in that way. By discovery and observation he has only found out that it does so under all conditions known to himself, but back of the "how" is the eternal and the everlasting "why," and the "why" always introduces us to the world of the supernatural. We know that if we toss a body of physical weight upward it will reverse its direction, at some given point, and come down again. By discovery and observation, man is only aware that bodies thus treated always act in that way. He simply cannot tell why. He must appeal to a power, and the laws beyond that which he has never yet been able to discover. And the more of these facts and phenomena of nature man discovers, the more is he faced with that which is beyond him.

This writer sat the other evening and heard over the radio every word of an address uttered across the continent yonder in California. The only connecting media was the intervening atmosphere. The physical fact now discovered, and constantly employed, is that by the use of certain electric bulbs so manipulated as to interpret certain air waves, one inevitably gets the results. But beyond all law of electricity known to man, and beyond all the facts known about the radio, there is the eternal "why." Why should the human voice carry, or be carried, unbroken, audible and immediately across a space of three or five thousand miles or more? The invention of the radio and the wireless has not abolished any mystery or disposed of any supernatural fact. It has multiplied and increased both. One only has to open one's eye to discover the supernatural any and everywhere. We agree with Horace Bushnell, who said: "The very idea of our personality is that of a being not under the law of cause and effect, a being supernatural." That is to say, man himself is above the natural, though he can command it and, in a measure, control it. And we are yet compelled to wonder in amazement at the pertinent question of the psalmist when he sang: "What is man that thou art mindful of him or the Son of man that thou visited Him?" He is a little lower than the angels. He is not enough lower than the angels, however, to be comprehended and to be reduced to the law of cause and effect. No mortal man, scientist or philosopher, can tell us the cause and effect, the everlasting "why" of Shakespeare's mind, of Beethoven's soul, and of John Wesley's spirit.

The more we learn of any of nature's products or children, the more there is to be learned. Tennyson well said that if he could know the little flower in the cranny of the wall, he could know the universe and all that it contains. The further man advances upon the facts, the known and the commonplace facts, of nature, the more does he advance upon the supernatural and come face to face with the marvelous, the mysterious, and the mighty. Here, then, is the reason and the necessity for worship: every man who follows science or philosophy, of common sense, knows that beyond the natural is the supernatural, and above nature is nature's God. Since the mind cannot grasp, the soul must look up in awe and reverence and in faith to Him who is the God of the natural and yet who leads man on from mystery to mystery, and still surrounds himself in a cloud as He did when Moses approached Him at Mt. Sinai. He does more than this. He still seeks to lead man on to higher and to holier things, even to the promised land of abiding peace and happiness, in a pillar of cloud by day, a pillar of fire by night.

RELIGIOUS TOLERANCE.

One is hearing very much now about religious tolerance. We are being told that we must not be bigoted and intolerant, and must let every man own his conscience and worship his God accordingly. That is good advice. It is advice, too, which all the world knows, Protestants accepted long ago, and now everywhere act upon. Ours is a tolerant age. Intolerance is the most deadly foe mankind has had to face. Let us be tolerant. All the good Protestants we know tolerate all other good Protestants, and all good Catholics, too. This is as it should be, and one devoutly hopes it will never be otherwise. The curse of this earth is intolerance.

But there is one Church that is political, and always has been, as well as ecclesiastical. That Church has always sought, in every land and country it enters, to control politics. We Protestants believe in the separation of Church and State. Catholics do not. They believe in, and everywhere preach and practice management and control of the State by the Church. This is fundamental in their ecclesiastical law and doctrine. Where the Catholic Church is in the ascendancy, there, as all the world knows, or should know, the Church controls the politics of the State, controls the State in fact.

For example, at present: No one can be president of the Argentine Republic except a Catholic. The Catholics gained control and wrote that decree into their national Constitution. About two years ago we well remember Catholic Italy passed a law driving the Y. M. C. A. out of Italy. In Italy today Free Masonry is absolutely forbidden, and in Spain, another Catholic country, it can only exist, because of persecution, with greatest difficulty. No Protestant organization as such, or any sort, can do business in Italy, Poland or any other Catholic country. Up until 1857, by the Constitution, no religion was allowed, much less tolerated, in Mexico except Catholicism. The Constitution was then changed; but even now when a president of Mexico is elected who tries to enforce the Constitution, the Catholic Church employs every known device to overthrow the government. We well remember that it was only about a year ago that Catholic priests assaulted Protestant missions and publicly burned Bibles in Brazil and Mexico.

It is not Catholics that Protestants are intolerant of. It is Catholic control of government (a control which Catholicism does and must ever seek until it changes its fundamental doctrines) that Protestantism has, with good cause and conscience, had to fear and to dread since and long before Martin Luther's day. Catholic intolerance and her insatiate desire for governmental control at any price have brought more bloodshed, persecution and hatred to the human race than ever sprang from any other source.

THE COUNTRY CHURCH AND PREACHERS.

The tendency of American population is toward city residence and city life. History proves that ancient nations went to pieces through great cities. Babylon, Nineveh, Athens, Rome are examples. The country is the place of production. The harvests of the world are reaped in the country, and the great men of the United States have come up from country homes. It is claimed that city population runs out in five generations; but they keep going in from the country. Many of them leave the country Church and then fail to unite with the Church in the city to which they go. They hold their membership in the country and do not contribute to either in service or money. The Church has lost much of its strength in this dangerous way of treating Church memberships. Members should transfer their membership as they transfer their goods and their residence. By neglecting this the country Church loses and the city Church makes no gain.

There is another trend that does not help the cause. The schools may not intend to guide the minds of the young, including young ministers, but they do influence them toward city life for best opportunities. As a rule, ministers prefer to live in the city and to have a city charge; and the schools are largely responsible for this desire. The consolidated public school is responsible for this tendency. The mind of the child is turned away from the country as a place to live and work. Education should prepare the young for the life they ought to live. School teachers do not want to board in the country, and that has created the tendency toward the consolidated school, the free bus carriage, and this radical shift from the country to the town. The people want ease, comfort, convenience, and close contact with others. The stability of American life has been built on the genuine sense and character of the country home and farm. There real religion in this country was born; there it matured into great strength; and there it found expression in noble character, and spiritual joy. There is no more potent witness to Jesus Christ than the country Church by the side of the road in the grove. It may be plain, it may be old, but the silent testimony which it bears to the faith of that community is a mighty force for righteousness. Remove that all-the-week witness for Christ, and the country would be bare as a Christian community. The country Church is a monument to Jesus Christ, and the country Church is like the heavens—"their voice is not heard," but the impression is made upon all who pass that way. And it requires more ability to preach successfully to a country congregation than to a city congregation, because they do not hear so often, give more thoughtful attention to the sermon, and think and talk about it more after they go home. The country Church and the country preacher deserve high place in the kingdom and the praise of the Church.

SECRETARY KELLOGG SIGNS UP.

For some months now there has been newspaper discussion of the proposed multi-lateral treaty to outlaw war. It will be recalled that about a year ago the French Premier proposed a bi-lateral treaty with the United States renouncing war between these two countries as a method of settling disputes between them. Secretary Kellogg replied that he favored such a treaty, but that all nations should be invited to join in it.

At first, some of the European powers regarded the Kellogg purposal as stage-play, but when it became evident that the American statesman was sincere and that he expressed the voice and sentiment of the administration, a changed attitude appeared in the Department of State in foreign countries.

So on the 27th of August, our secretary of State, with fourteen other nations, signed the treaty to outlaw war. This is one of the dramatic moments in the world's history.

Already the militaristic press has begun to throw mud at Secretary Kellogg and to belittle the whole enterprise. This same influence defeated the League of Nations before the American Senate and brought Woodrow Wilson, crushed in spirit, broken in body, to a premature grave. It will be a sad day indeed if the American people permit the Senate to nullify the treaty signed by Secretary Kellogg outlawing war.

Jesus came as the Prince of Peace and every person who loves His cause should rally solidly behind the Secretary of State in bringing pressure to bear upon senators to have this treaty ratified. THE CHRISTIAN SUN rejoices in a day like this and is confident that the cause of Christ is indissolubly linked up with this multi-lateral treaty guaranteeing the peace of the world.

I may call impersonal forces. The impersonal forces give us our science, while the personal forces yield our moral and religious experiences. When we fail to live in religious terms we fail to live completely, and I think it is entirely true that an organism which has arisen in a certain environment should live in harmony with that environment. This means to me that, inasmuch as my religious nature has come out of the infinite cosmic energy, I am, therefore, under obligation to live in religious terms. I honor the young Greek for his acceptance of his obligation to do this.

The young Greek also was expected to achieve three results with reference to his country. He was expected to know his country, to love his country, and to serve his country. I cannot think of a better attitude for a freshman to take towards his college than the young Greek took toward his country, and so I would say that it would be a fine thing for every member of the class of 1932 to know his college, to love his college, and to serve his college.

During these few days of acquaintance-making, the officers and upper-classmen who have been assisting, have endeavored to introduce each freshman to the spirit of Elon College. The college, however, has a history, part of which is stated in the opening pages of the catalogue and part of which is embodied in the life and achievements of the alumni. I hope it will be your purpose while you are here to become acquainted with this institution to which you have entrusted the finest possession you have—your very life, your physical, intellectual and spiritual life. I hope that you have not made any mistake in the confidence you have imposed in this institution and those who are its administrators and that the knowledge of the institution, of its history, its plans, its purposes, its aspirations, will be a constant source of inspiration to you all.

It is not my purpose now to trace the history of Elon from March 11, 1889, when the Legislature of North Carolina granted its charter, through the days of building to September 2, 1890, when it first opened its doors to students, on through the various changes of fortune until this good occasion when we are gathered formally to welcome you to Elon. I hope that you will, for yourself, acquire that sympathetic understanding of the history of our college which is so necessary to a complete knowledge of it, and then I hope that each of you will keep in mind always that by your daily conduct and achievements you are adding to the history of your alma mater, a history that will be a credit, I trust, to you, and an uplift to those who shall later undertake to learn it.

The young Greek also was obligated, as he thought, to love his country. I hope that, as the days come and go, you will come to love this place, every inch of ground on this campus, every brick in these buildings, every particle of the equipment, all of which have been placed here for your convenience and comfort and assistance. To me, the devotion of the alumni of this college to their alma mater is a most beautiful experience, and as I travel around from place to place and meet them, and as I see them come back to the sacred shrine of their days of preparation, I am inspired beyond measure. This institution is yours from this time forever. You are privileged to use it and to enjoy it, and I hope you will come to love it with a passionate devotion. One of the finest moments in the experience of Daniel Webster, the great orator, it seems to me, must have been that instance when he was defending his alma mater, Dartmouth College, before the United States Supreme Court. There was a movement on foot to make Dartmouth College into a great State university, but Daniel Webster, as an alumnus of the institution, opposed it and appealed his case to the United States Supreme Court and won. When he was making his dramatic appeal to that august judicial assembly, he said: "It is true that Dartmouth is a small college, but there are those of us who love it." The great orator is reported to have broken down and sobbed as he uttered these words, but he won his case and Dartmouth, through the more than two centuries of its history, has continued to be a small college and has enjoyed the affection and devotion of its alumni as few institutions of the land. I hope that your affection for your alma mater will be as genuine as was Daniel Webster's affection for Dartmouth College.

In the third place, the young Greek felt obligated to serve his State not only by arms to promote her against invasion, but through living as a good citizen, the best type of life of which he was capable. He felt obligated to earn his livelihood and then to cultivate himself through the study of philosophy and music and the other noble arts and graces of life, so that he would reflect honor upon Athens, and never bring disgrace upon his graduation degree, the degree of "Athenian Man." I hope that you will have that attitude of service toward your alma mater and that it will be a pleasure to you not only while you are students here, but in the years that shall come when you have passed out to your vocational practices to think always of opportunities whereby you can strengthen, promote, and advance the interests of your college. And I say your college advisedly because the college is composed of its alumni. Their achievements are its achievements, and their successes its successes. And the contrary is also true: success of my alma mater is my success, her achievements are my achievements, and so I feel obligated myself and I trust that each and every one of you may have a similar attitude, to do all that I can to help strengthen and promote and advance the interests of my alma mater.

I wish now to make reference, in closing, to a custom which the Romans, later contemporaries of the Greeks, employed with reference to the public official. With us, when a public official enters upon any office to which he has been chosen, he takes an oath that he will obey the laws and support the Constitution of the United States, but the Roman custom was the opposite. At the end of his term of office, the man who had filled any particular office to which he had been elected by his fellow-citizens was required to take an oath that he had faithfully discharged his duties. I challenge you, therefore, at the beginning of your college career at this place, to keep in mind this beautiful custom of the Roman officer so that when, four years from now, you come to the status of graduation from your alma mater you may be able, as the faithful Roman official was, to swear yourself out of college and to say truthfully that you have performed every duty that devolved upon you as a good citizen in the college community, that you have wrought well and that you are ready to pass over the torch to others while you pass out in the world to give expression in noble living to the ideals and aspirations you shall have cherished as students in this institution.

LARGE PORTRAIT OF POPE ADORNS WALLS

On a conspicuous wall in the drawing room of the executive mansion in Albany is a large and richly framed photograph of the Bishop of Rome—otherwise, Pope Pius XI. On the white margin are these words in the Pope's handwriting:

"To our beloved son in Christ, Gov. Alfred E. Smith, in token of our high esteem and wishes, we impart the apostolic blessing." Then came the signature and the date, Christmas-tide, 1924." On the wall on the opposite side of the arched doorway hangs a portrait of Cardinal Hayes, and on another wall another prelate.

"Amplitude almost immense, with stars
Numerous, and every star perhaps a world Of destined habitation."
—Milton.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

So much is said and written in these days on the question of prohibition and the eighteenth amendment that a few facts may help some people to consider the question in a double fashion. This age is, in its largest measure, a business age. The political world considers every subject from a business angle. Farm relief, tariff, industrial conditions, public improvements, education, all have their share of money questions. Railroads were the first to prohibit employees from going on engines under the influence of liquor. Now they put up signs on the stations: "No smoking." If the Church were to prohibit smoking, political leaders would cry out for "personal liberty." Personal liberty ends where it interferes with other people's rights. Hog-pens were prohibited in Suffolk when increase of population made them offensive. Business, social, moral and religious questions all have their limitations when applied to personal liberty. But this letter undertakes to examine the question of temperance only.

Before the coming of prohibition and the passage of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, careful investigation was made into the economic relation of the liquor question, with results that prove that it was harmful to business. It was found that there was spent for liquor in one year $1,800,000,000, and for bread and clothes $1,800,000,000. The sum was equal. The number employed in the liquor business was 62,920, and the number employed in the bread and clothes business was 493,655. The bread and clothes business employed more than 400,000 more wage-earners than the liquor business. The wages paid the employees in the liquor business was $45,252,000, and the wages paid workers in bread and clothes business was $244,136,000. Those working in the liquor business received $700 a year, and those in the bread and clothes business $500, and that is one reason why the liquor interests want the business continued; they get more money for less work; but it was such a smaller number employed that it had less value in the money sense, to say nothing of the immoral results of the business. The cost of raw material in the liquor business was $139,199,000, and in the bread and clothes business $744,337,000, showing that the commercial interest of bread and clothes is so far above the commercial interest of the liquor business that it was wise economy to outlaw it on purely a money basis and wage business the liquor business has no right to exist.

No teacher has ever claimed that it had a righteous value to the home, the Church, the school, or the State. It has no right in business, domestic life, education, religion, or statesmanship.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

The college opens September 12, 1928, with the following faculty members: Rev. S. L. Beougher, B. D., M. A., Ph.D., president, professor of Bible and religious education; Herbert Scholz, Jr., A. B., M. A., dean, professor of mathematics and chemistry; M. L. Van Winkle, A. B., professor of history and education; Mrs. P. M. Beougher, A. A., matron; Alma B. Scholz, A. B., professor of English and French; D. L. Beougher, A. B., business manager and coach; Rev. Otis C. Fincher, graduate of Alabama School of Music, professor of piano and voice; William E. Ensminger, B. S., utility agent; Miss Sylvia Stephens, bursar; Rev. G. H. Veazey, A. B., chaplain.

Piedmont Junior College is an accredited co-educational institution, and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga. Its faculty and courses offered are under the supervision of Piedmont's committee of educational policy and the departmental instruction is under the supervision of the head of the department of Piedmont College.

The college offers an opportunity for an education to the student of very limited means. Total expenses for year (36 weeks), day students, $65.50; total expenses for year (36 weeks), boarding students, $236.50. The college has some very definite purposes. It intends to bring an education with a high standard of scholarship within the reach of young people of limited means, yet with a standard so high and a spirit so helpful that the wealthy will seek its advantages.

We are delighted to give full information regarding the school, and to call your attention to the fact that the institution is fully accredited, the administration building will soon be completed, that we have added three regular teachers and two special, a larger library, and a better equipped laboratory.

It is a pleasure to give this information, for it carries with it both a challenge and an opportunity. We are gratified with the friendship and loyalty of all, but long for your girls and boys to be with us in our school work. Many of our old students will be with us this school year. They consider it not only an opportunity but a privilege to have such an institution, and the names of new students are coming in every day.

The outlook is bright for the biggest and best school this year we have yet had.

AN AROUSED PUBLIC OPINION.

This country is waking up. Not within the memory of any of us now living has there been anything like it. Not even the feverish excitement of the World War could be compared to the aroused public mind of today. The people were excited and frightened over the war. Today they are calm and open-eyed in their acceptance of a challenge. Mass movements swept like prairie fires through the excited imagination of the people during the war. Today we have a nation aroused by individual reaction to a subtle challenge. Towns and counties, cities and States rushed into the streets in the war days, shouting their willingness to die, if need be, for their country. Bands were playing and flags were flying. It was a spontaneous outburst of blessed patriotism. Today our people are sitting in their homes thinking. They are looking into the faces of their sleeping babies at night, and they are thinking. They are looking at the faces of their forbears on the walls of their bedrooms, and they are thinking. There was never, perhaps, in this new nation, such an aroused public opinion. Our people are looking this challenge of Tammanyism, combined with the united liquor forces of this country and the world, squarely in the face. They are appraising this threat. They are measuring its possibilities in terms of what has gone before and what would reasonably follow. They are bringing to bear their best judgment. They are calm. They are cool. They are determined.

Edmund Burke once said: "People will not look forward to posterity who never look backward to their ancestors." Whether or not the liquor people took into account the fact that our people would calmly look this situation in the face, we do not know, and it is not for us to say; but they are doing that very thing, and they are doing it in terms of what has gone before as well as what exists today and what shall likely come afterward. None of us read history as constantly as we should, but the American people are reviewing their history today. Aye, they are reviewing the history of civilization. They are re-reading that glorious chapter in the world's history, wrought out in this new world, and epitomized by Patrick Henry's immortal declaration, "Give me liberty or give me death." We are coming to see today as perhaps we have never before understood, that Patrick Henry was voicing a precious and priceless conviction when he made that declaration. And they are going back of that to understand why the pilgrims and colonists felt so deeply on this subject—they are going back to Cromwell in England, and to Martin Luther in Germany. They are going back to Bunyan and to Hubmaire. They are going back to the Huguenots, back to August 22, 1572, when Coligny was mortally wounded, and to the massacre of St. Bartholomew, which followed on August 24th, two days later. Yes, our people are looking this thing squarely in the face, unafraid and unabashed. When a group of rich men, guided and trained in political maneuvers by Tammany, with its one hundred and thirty-nine years of unsavory record, and backed by liquor lawyers and liquor money and liquor newspapers, undertake to overthrow the Constitution of the United States and foist upon our people the yoke of bondage to private interests and invisible powers, they are up against a real proposition. We may be a very stupid people, drunk with the sense of luxury and pleasure, running after dollars and having a big time generally, but there are some things that the people of America remember, and there are some things still held precious and priceless by our pleasure-bent nation. No doubt this seemed a propitious moment to spring this challenge on a more or less heedless nation, but the trick is not going to work. The people are aroused. They are thinking they are praying. And they are going to vote in November.

Meanwhile, we are suffering here in Georgia from a group of hysterical editors and politicians who seem to feel that however desperate the situation may be they must keep up their shouting and obey the bosses of Tammany and the bosses of the Association Against the Eighteenth Amendment. Every day it is the same thing, over and over again. These dear friends, the editors of our Smith newspapers in Georgia, start out every day trying to write something logical and cogent about their position, and before they get into the second paragraph they break out in wild hysteria, screaming and wringing their hands. A great many people had become worried about the actual physical condition of these editors of our Georgia Smith papers, and it was reassuring when they had their pictures taken the other day and ran them on the front pages of their papers. They looked tired and worn, but it was good to see that they were able to be photographed. We hope our people will be considerate of these good friends. They are up against a very real situation and they are doing the very best they can, no doubt, with the position they have allowed themselves to be placed in by the bosses of Tammany and the bosses of the liquor interests. And likewise our politicians, let us remember that they are in a terrible mess. They jumped when the bosses cracked their whips at Houston, and now they are up to their necks in the thing. They are our editors and they are our politicians, and however much they scream, and however much they get on our nerves, we must deal as gently with them as we can. It is reassuring to see that several of our Georgia editors are pulling out of the bog and are taking their place in the high road of loyalty to principles rather than blind support of Tammanyism. And we yet have hope for all of them, and for all of our politicians. They have retreated now to the shibboleth of the negro question. That is all they have left, and the appeal of Dr. D. D. Crawford, Baptist State secretary of missions for the negroes of Georgia, published in last Sunday's papers, that the politicians leave the negro question and let them go on peaceably, as they are trying to do, will no doubt bear some fruit. Our point is simply this: don't get out of patience with these editors and politicians, who, frightened by the Tammany tiger, walked the plank. Let's deal with these hysterical editors and politicians as gently as we can. Our people are fully aroused to the real challenge involved, and these editors and politicians are doing very little harm now. The main thing, and the generous thing, is to try to save them from their own madness and fright. Given a little rest and repose, they will return to "normalcy."

Thank the Lord for this aroused public opinion. It is going to prove a great blessing. Not only will it save us from the impending threat of Tammanyism, but it will, we trust, put iron in the blood of our people for the many other problems which await solution in our national and international life. God be praised for this new day of personal responsibility in citizenship.—Christian Index (Baptist), Atlanta, Ga.

OUR NATIONAL HYMN.

While "The Star-Spangled Banner" is prescribed by army and navy regulations as our national anthem, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" is our popular national hymn. Samuel Francis Smith, who was a class-mate of Oliver Wendell Holmes, at Harvard, is the author of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." In a class poem, Dr. Holmes once described him thus:

"And there's a fine youngster of excellent pith; Fate tried to conceal him by naming him Smith. But he shouted a song for the brave and the free— Just read on his medal, 'my country, 'of thee.'"

Later in life, when Smith's hymn had become universally admired as our patriotic air, Dr. Holmes said to him: "Your name and fame will live when I and my works are forgotten."

It was while he was a student for the Baptist ministry, at Andover Theological Seminary, that he wrote "America." It was written in less than a half an hour. Dr. Tillett, in "The Methodist Hymnal Annotated," says: "The author had not the remotest idea that the words he dashed off thus hurriedly would ever become a favorite with any lovers of music and song, much less become the national hymn of a great and growing nation. National hymns do not become such by virtue of their loftiness of poetic thought and expression, but because they have in them that indefinable, simple something that gets into the hearts of the people. Greater national songs than this have been written—hymns surpassing it in dignity and nobility of thought—but it is doubtful if we shall ever have in America a national hymn more popular with the people than this."

When some one expressed regret in the presence of Dr. Smith that our national hymn should have the same meter and tune as the national hymn of England, he replied: "I don't share this regret. On the contrary, I deem it a new and beautiful bond between the mother country and her daughter."

It was written in 1832, and was first sung that year at a children's Fourth of July celebration in Park Street Church, Boston.

The following verses, published in the Boston Courier in 1885, indicate the wide use our public schools have made of this national song:

Passing the Primary School.

"Again each morning as we pass
'The city streets along,
We hear the voices of the class
Ring out the nation's song.

"The small boys' treble piping clear,
'The bigger boys' low growl,
And from the boy who has no ear
A weird, discordant howl.

"With swelling hearts we hear them sing
'My country, 'tis of thee—'
From childish throats the anthem ring
'Sweet land of liberty!'

"Their little hearts aglow with pride,
Each with exultant tongue
Proclaims: 'From every mountain-side
Let freedom's song be sung.'

"Let him who'd criticise the time,
Or scout the harmony,
Betake him to some other clime—
No patriot is he!

"From scenes like these our grandeur springs,
And we shall e'er be strong,
While o'er the land the schoolhouse rings
Each day with freedom's song."

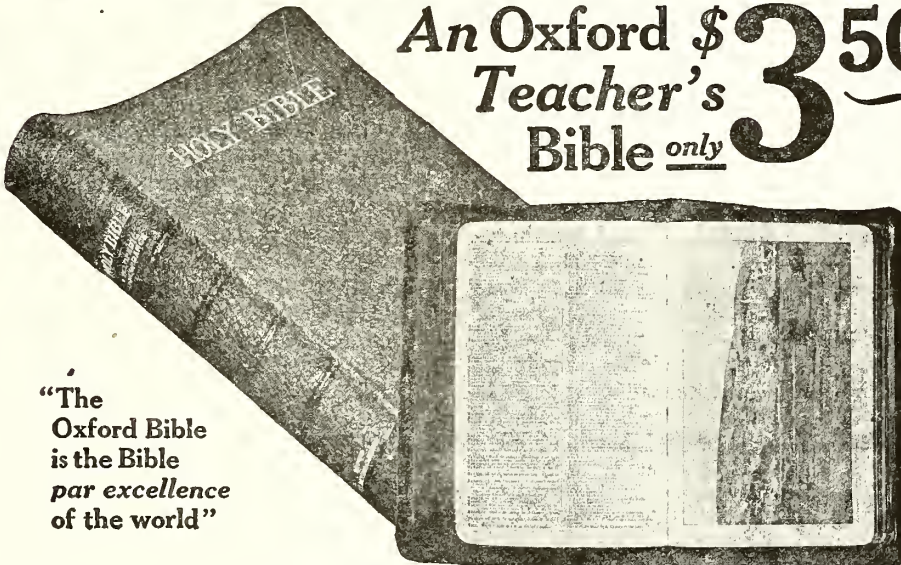

Dr. Ninde, author of "The Story of the American Hymn," quotes Dr. Smith as saying late in life: "I have heard 'America' sung half-way 'round the world. I have heard it on the Atlantic Ocean, on the Baltic Sea, and on the Mediterranean; in London, Liverpool, Stockholm, Copenhagen, Paris, Rome, Naples, in the baths at Pompeii, in Athens, Calcutta, and Rangoon. On the earth I have heard it on Pike's Peak, and under the earth in the caverns at Manitou, Colorado, where it was played on the stalactites."

LIBERIA—OLD AND NEW.

Just a little more than one hundred years ago (1820) the first colony of negro freedmen from the United States landed in their Mayflower upon the coast of Africa and proceeded to hew out of the jungle the country that was to be Liberia, the only negro republic in the world, and only republic in Africa. It was from the beginning an American missionary enterprise, backed by the government under the guiding hand of President Monroe and his successors, backed by the gifts of thousands of Church people through the American Colonization Society. In succeeding years some 25,000 freed slaves were settled here from America. And then during and after the Civil War Liberia was forgotten by America. Forgotten by all but the missionary societies of several evangelical Churches—and none too well remembered, so far as funds and men were concerned, by these agencies of friendship and good will. But the mission boards did not forget Liberia wholly, for was it not the scene of the labors of some of their earliest foreign missionaries? For almost a century evangelicals had schools and Churches and teachers and preachers—and occasionally a nurse or physician—there; but all too few compared with the needs of the struggling people.

Now, as James L. Sibley points out in his new volume "Liberia—Old and New" (Doubleday, Doran & Co.), a wholly new future seems on the horizon for this negro republic. It has been discovered that rubber can be raised here at a profit. A large American concern has leased for ninety-nine years a total acreage of 1,000,000 for the purpose of developing rubber plantations. Some 350,000 men—practically the whole man-power of the republic—will eventually be on the payroll of the company. Adjustments are being made in the type of mission work, increases are being made in the number of schools, plans are being made for industrial and agricultural training, and other plans are under way for community and health betterment—all with a view to meeting this new economic situation that will doubtless reshape the country.

The fascinating story of Liberia's founding, her struggles, and her emergence as a member of the League of Nations is well told by Dr. Sibley in his new and timely book. Americans should renew their acquaintance with this land their forefathers founded. A book of this kind, authoritative and full of human interest, has long been needed upon Liberia. Added to Dr. Sibley's interesting portrayal of the history and educational and economic conditions, Dr. D. Wassermann, professor in the University of Berlin and noted authority on Africa, has added chapters dealing with the native customs and ethnic backgrounds of the peoples native to Liberia who were there when the first colonists arrived and who are being gradually absorbed into the population.

Dr. Sibley, the author of this volume, is secretary of the American Advisory Committee on Education in Liberia, representing a number of American mission agencies and other philanthropic societies interested in the welfare of the nation.

FROM PORTO RICO.

After an absence of eleven months and six days we are at home again; that is, our adopted home, 37 Concordia Street, Ponce, Porto Rico. Notice I give the full address, for we are expecting visitors from the homeland some day and we don't want you to have any trouble at all in finding us.

We had a pleasant trip all the way from Elon College to our own door. The new car that the Eastern Virginia Women's Conference furnished for the Porto Rican mission had a large share in the pleasurable part of our trip. We were enabled to stop and say good-bye to my husband's relatives living in Suffolk, Norfolk, Windsor, Petersburg, Richmond, Washington and Baltimore. My relatives live too far north for me to visit.

A rest of one day and two nights in Brooklyn gave us time to look after our baggage and prepare for the four-day ocean voyage. We encountered no storm and the time passed quickly on board. There was a small passenger list of only one hundred and twenty, among whom we found several acquaintances from the island.

The usual round of music, dancing, drinking, gambling, also the more legitimate games of deck golf and shuffleboard were enjoyed by those of the passengers who cared to indulge. Seems a pity that the high seas are governed by no laws, and we see man just as he really is when all restrictions are removed.

It was a time of relaxation and rest for us. The gifts and steamer letters from our children and dear friends made the fading of our native land less noticed. Such thoughtfulness is indeed kind and helpful and fully appreciated by us all. We landed Monday, July 16th, at 9:30 A. M., in San Juan. Some time passed in observing the usual rules necessary to get ourselves, baggage and the car checked up and out of the wharf and ready for the street. We drove into the busy section of the city and looked for a restaurant. Now, if any one is curious enough to wonder just why we looked for an eating-place so soon after landing, let me advise them to take a sea voyage and enjoy (?) that queer feeling in the bottom of your stomach for part of a week, and then I am quite sure you will not wonder why food tastes better on land than it does out on the briny deep. It was a hot day, and I for one felt almost ready to argue that Death Valley itself could not register more heat than San Juan, P. R., on July 16, 1928. But perhaps it was because we had almost forgotten how hot a tropical sun can shine. But luckily for us we did not have to stay long, and about 1 o'clock found our faces turned toward Ponce.

A pleasant ride across the Cordillera Central and on down toward the southern coast, everything looked quite natural and home-like, and about 6 P. M. found us pulling up at our door, where we found Dona Delfina ready to receive us and a good supper in the kitchen just waiting to be served. Home again! Yes, and it matters not where nor how humble, there is no place quite like your own little corner on this old globe. The parsonage was clean and in order, and you can imagine with what pleasure I unpacked our suitcases and next day packed them in our "junk" room, there to stay for a season. The trunks came next day, and within a week we had received about fifty callers, got our belongings in place and attended six services, and my husband had made a hurried trip over the field. Then we settled down into our accustomed places so easily that it scarcely seems that we have been away. Our work seemed to be waiting for us, so we got busy immediately.

We found Miss Adams in good spirits and better health than during her first weeks on the island. The Monday following our return, the Ponce D. V. B. S. was opened and kept going three weeks, during which time between forty and fifty children received instructions in the Bible and handwork. Bad weather and an alarm caused by the announcement of an approaching cyclone spoiled our attendance and work of the last week, but even then we all felt gratified with the progress made by the little school for those three weeks. I noticed an increase in Sunday School attendance during that time also.

Yesterday the workers met in committee to arrange program for our annual conference, to be held September 7th to 9th, in Ponce. Any visitors from home will receive a hearty welcome. So, through the generosity of friends of the Porto Ricans, the Barretts are again on the field, glad to do whatever our hands find to do in this part of the Master's vineyard, and we beseech your continued interest and especially your prayers.

MRS. D. P. BARRETT.

DIARY OF AN AUTO.

So very many things have happened since I was rolled into that garage in Brooklyn, N. Y., wondering if my trip was over. I was soon to learn that many miles were to be traveled yet, for on Thursday morning, July 12th, quite early, the baggage was again fastened on to my running-board and we found our way through the busy streets to a place where everybody seemed to be in a hurry, with many cars, trucks and taxies coming and going. Our folks got out and the chauffeur left me standing near other empty cars. Soon a stranger took me across a gang-plank into a dark place. Other cars and a truck followed and we were shut in tight and left to wonder what next! For our tanks had been emptied of gasoline, and how could we travel? But we were soon to learn, for within an hour we knew we were moving, and after a while grew accustomed to a motion which was all new to us. This continued until Monday morning, July 16th, when the motion slowed down until we knew we stood still, and in a short time the great door in front of me was opened and there was the bright sunlight and another hustling, bustling place such as I had last seen in Brooklyn, but the people were different, and such talk! Strange hands again took charge of me and I was the first of the cars to be rolled down the gang-plank and into that crowd. And just as I began to wonder what might become of me, I saw the chauffeur and, in a minute, his wife and two boys. My! what a relief to feel friendly hands, for I couldn't catch a snigle word of all the talking and babbling that I could understand. They rolled me out into the street and the bright sunshine, which was about as warm as any I ever felt. My tank was again filled with gasoline, and after riding through some very narrow streets where I expected something to get in my way any moment (but nothing did), we soon found ourselves on a road leading out of that busy city which I heard my folks call San Juan. The people there seemed to be about as busy as in any of the cities we had passed before leaving Brooklyn, and there surely were a great number of autos on the streets of almost every make on the market. As we rolled along I noticed a big steamer near a wharf and recognized the place we had left a short time before and heard the boys say "Good-bye" to the "San Lorenzo," and then it dawned on me that we had all had a long ride on the water in that boat and now my journey must be nearly over.

We rode along at a moderate rate of speed. There was much that was new and strange to me, but the chauffeur did not seem to have to ask the way of any one, for we did not stop at all—right on through towns, large and small, we soon began to climb, and such a fine road as we had! We had to wind in and out, around curves and always up, until the air grew quite cool and very pleasant. My folks seemed to enjoy the ride, and no wonder—such a beautiful vista of valleys and hills, trees and plants that were all strange to me! After climbing about an hour we all stopped for a drink. I'll confess I felt dry by that time. We continued on our way, and after a while my brakes were needed, for we began to go downhill and around curves and the air was no longer so cool and pleasant. We left the hills and precipices and were soon rolling along on almost level ground across bridges, through towns, and I heard my folks say, "We ought to get there about 6 o'clock." Where? wondered I. We had passed through about ten towns, had seen many school-buildings and chapels on the roadside, and just a little past 6 o'clock we rolled across a bridge into a busy city, through streets well paved, crowded with people and autos. I heard, "Old Ponce at last! Well, everything looks quite natural. Please drive through the Plaza to Concordia Street; let's see how the new pavement looks" (it seems the street had been paved during the absence of my folks). Then at last we stopped before a house, and I concluded my journey was at last ended, for my folks got out and walked in as if they felt perfectly at home, and folks were there to greet them, and others kept coming until quite late that night. Then finally I was driven through a large gate into a yard, and there was a garage with the door wide open, which I have since learned to look upon as my new home.

And here we are, folks, for I've learned it is 37 Concordia Street, and I have traveled nearly 1,400 miles on that boat and about 100 miles across from San Juan to Ponce; and at last I understand what it is all about. That is, I have been so very busy since my arrival that there has been almost no time for writing a diary. Take my word for it, Porto Rico is a busy place, and I am learning that the life of a "mission car" is a busy, satisfying one. Good-by. AUTO.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XII—September 16, 1928.

PAUL WRITES TO HIS FRIENDS IN CORINTH.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."—Psa. 133:1.

LESSON: 1 Cor. 1:4.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Eph. 4:1-6.

"That there be no divisions among you"—this was Paul's desire and prayer in regard to the Church of Christ nineteen centuries ago. For, alas! divisions had come. Emphasizing their devotion to a leader, or their preference for certain intellectual views, at least four groups had arisen in the Corinthian Church which Paul had so recently founded. "I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ"—thus were the various groups proclaiming and at the same time intimating that they had the pre-eminence. Each group thought its name was a name to conjure with. It is not strange, therefore, that we find this other word by Paul: "There are contentions among you." Emphasis upon mere men or man-made doctrine usually if not always begets contentions. It was a sad and serious condition and Paul wrote very plainly about the matter.

He reminded them that the names they had designated as their standard, or rather their battle cry, were simply the names of the ministers from whom they had received the doctrine and to whom they had given their devotion. He reminded them that these men of themselves were nothing. He asserted that after all was said and done it was God who did the work and brought about results. And he tried to bring out into clear light the fact that Christ was the one to whom they should give their devotion because it was from Him that they got their light and their life. There is a truth here with a distinctly modern application. In many communities there are people, good people who are wrapped up heart and soul in their preacher or their minister. Furthermore, it seems that there are some ministers who encourage this practice. All such people and preachers need to keep central in their thinking that life's highest allegiance and devotion belong to Christ. A minister or a Sunday School teacher is to win men and women, boys and girls to Christ.

"There are divisions among you"—how modern that sounds! These notes are prepared while the writer is away on his vacation, and he does not have at hand the statistics in regard to the number of sects and denominations in the United States alone, but it seems that there are somewhere around two hundred such divisions in the Church of Christ. In the light of this fact, it would seem that there is something wrong somewhere. It would seem that the same thing is true today as was true in Paul's day—men have inverted the true order of things. One thing is sure: the nearer we get to Christ, the more we find that the things that have divided us are of secondary importance. Alas! that we should so long have emphasized the things on which we differ and minimized the things on which we already agree. One of the most hopeful signs of the times is the awakening, becoming more and more general, on the part of the Church, of the folly and even the sin, of these divisions, and the earnest effort on the part of so many leaders to find a way to union or at least unity. For it's too much to hope that there will ever be uniformity. Christ Himself did not pray for uniformity; He did pray for unity. And it is significant that he prayed for unity to the end that the world might believe that the Father did send Him (John 17:20). One of the greatest hindrances in the strategy of missions on the foreign field is the division and the contention of the Church at home.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Christ Jesus." Jesus Christ is the foundation that standeth sure whether it be for personal character, for Church life, for home life, for industrial life, for social life, for political life, for international life, and it is only as these spheres of life are built on His principles and embody His spirit that they can have abiding value or continuing worth.

"We are God's fellow-workers." What a stirring and challenging statement! The idea of being taken into partnership with God! But God has so willed it that He must have man in the consummation of His plans. We are workers together with God in creation, in revelation, and in redemption. We are to help Him to create a new world wherein dwelleth righteousness and peace; to reveal the character of Christ in our human life; to redeem mankind from the power and penalty of sin. It is no time, nor is there any place for idlers. Each of us has some task for which we are responsible. God is counting on us. We must not fail Him. Let us not be weary in well-doing, but let us quit ourselves like men and be strong, and let us do with our might whatsoever our hands and our heads and our hearts find to do.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, September 16, 1928.

TOPIC: "The Service of Science to Human Life."
—Psa. 8:1-9.

Some Bible Hints.

The Christian sees behind all material things the power and infinite wisdom of God (v. 1).

The stars might seem useless, but we steer by them, and our study of them reveals that this is a universe, one universal creation. How small we are (vs. 3, 4).

Science reveals the greatness as well as the littleness of man. To be able to think and feel makes man God-like (v. 5).

It is science that is showing us how to exercise our dominion. We cannot rule until we know nature's laws (v. 6).

Suggestive Thoughts.

There is no conflict between true science and Christianity. God has two books, nature and the Bible, teaching different lessons, using different methods.

Science is interested in digging out nature's secrets; then practical men apply the methods science discovers. Think what the discovery of the first wheel meant to man.

Harvey discovered the circulation of the blood. That revolutionized the practice of medicine and has saved millions of lives.

There are heroes of science, like those that allow themselves to be inoculated with poisons that they may watch the effects and possibly find a remedy. That is real service.

A Few Illustrations.

Pasteur discovered the germ theory and proved it in his treatment of hydrophobia. What a blessing his discovery has been in all fields of medical science.

Without science we could not build bridges or ships or skyscrapers or concrete houses, and so on infinitely. Modern life is shot through and through with the results of science.

We can send our voice around the world in a few seconds by radio. That will in time bind the whole world together. Our neighbors are the whole earth.

One scientific discovery leads to another. The automobile was not possible until the gasoline engine was built. What would the world be like if our knowledge of electricity were suddenly taken from us?

To Think About.

How does science grip into your business?

What is science doing for the farmer?

What scientific discoveries do we use in our homes?

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

A long time ago we read when the first Sunday School started under an oak tree by a blacksmith. Why did he start Sunday? Because all his neighbors' children, especially boys, would come to his shop to hear him tell them stories, and then they were all ready for fun when he was tired of talking to them; so he could see the good in them, and he wanted others to see it, so one morning his stories were different, but all liked them better; and the next Sunday he had new Bible stories, and they liked them better, so why can't we make our Bible stories better by the way we live them and the way we tell them and show our young people what Sunday is for? It is to get them to see what Jesus wants them to do to be more like Him. Some one will say, in what way? Well, do you think if He was here He would be riding and roaming over the land to see curiosities when we have hundreds of people here in our lands who don't go to Church or Sunday School, and it seems that no one cares? Have you asked them to go to see some poor blind or crippled person and sing to cheer them on their way? Just try going to see some one who can't go to Sunday School or get out and carry some flowers to the sick around you. Girls can have a special evening planned and go over their class and see how many girls in class their age that are not Christians and how many are not in any Sunday School that your class knows, and see how many you can get by a certain time.

Now, mothers, it is not for us to see which one can dress our children the nicest and prettiest, but see who can teach them more about our Father in Heaven and how He can see us and hear what we say, and that some day we will face all we do. Do you think that Church is a place for a social visit? I don't. When we go to Church for Sunday School purpose we ought to teach our children to remember we are in God's house, the most holy place on earth, and not allow them to go out of there during service. Tell them if they go they will miss some of God's great blessing. And when we have visitors be sure to speak a word of appreciation to them. Because one day we will all go home together and will want to be happy there. Remember Jesus says, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." It seems to me that we have more critics on Sunday Schools of today than we have real workers. Just so our same ones are there, that is sufficient, and we are ready to criticize if any changes are made. Are you all willing to go to Church on the old farm wagon now? Well, if not, why can't our Sunday School change and ride on something to camp or with your cars? How many Sunday Schools are there riding on fine cars? I don't know, but a very few. The largest per centage is being run with the farm wagon, or in other words like they were ten or fifteen years ago. How can you expect to hold them in Sunday School when the filling station and drug stores hold the biggest attraction. When Jesus was here He spoke and taught people so they would want to come back to hear. Jesus left His work for you and me. Are we doing what He wants done? He left something especially for each. When will you do yours?

AMERICA MENACED BY IMMIGRATION

"In fifty years from now, with little or no immigration, continental United States will have 200,000,000 of souls," said George W. Bopem, of Columbus, formerly chairman of the Immigration Board at Washington and Ellis Island and an expert authority on the subject, in pointing out the danger that exists in the immigration of foreigners to this country even in the present restricted stage. When this number is reached, he said further, "then the contest and struggle for existence here will be on in earnest. When that time comes 'America First' will call for more thoughtful consideration."

"Of our 16,000,000 of foreign-born, 8,000,000 are not naturalized," he said. Seven millions are rated by the Public Health Service as having the mentality of children of eleven years or under—morons. Thirteen in every 100 are illiterate.

"We would do well to padlock the gates until we have Americanized and citizenized, such as we can, and then deport the 'slag.'"

"New England and not New England alone is freckled and pockmarked with cities of 100,000 and up, probably half of whom it would be fatuous folly to attempt to ingrain in their moral and intellectual fiber the teachings and aspirations of our national life. Why? Because they are not the stuff from which Americans are made.

"Instead of Americanizing and Christianizing these elements, they are alienizing and paganizing us.

"Cheap labor is dearly bought at any price when it results in cheap citizenship.

"American traditions are American traditions, and be they good or be they bad, they are American just the same.

"America is no place for the communist who, with glittering eye and forked tongue, challenges Lincoln's pronouncement at Gettysburg; no place for the 'reds' who ingraft in our industrial life the deadly nightshade of syndicalism and inoculate the whole fabric of popular government with the poison fang of mobocracy; no place for the 'left wing' anarchist whose mission is to incite and foster insurrection, revolution and rebellion.

"We do not propose to surrender America to old world, nihilistic mobocrats; neither do we propose that America shall be transformed into a European quignire.

"He who would live under the Stars and Stripes must be brought clearly to understand that America is America, with her own institutions, her own ideas and her own destiny.

"The United States is large, but it is only big enough for one colony, one doctrine, one fealty, one Constitution and one flag.—Scottish Rite News.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE RACE FOR GOLD.

"He that maketh haste to be rich shall not be unpunished." "He that hath an evil eye hasteth after riches."—Prov. 28:11-22.

Something is going on in the far north which looks very much like this hasting after wealth of which these proverbs speak. Miners and prospectors are now seeking the rich mineral lands of upper Canada by means of the airplane. The old-time dog teams are forgotten. Routes through the woods, which former seekers after gold have traversed painfully for weeks before reaching their destination, are now covered by a few hours in the air. The adventurer decides on a likely place, photographs it, returns before lunch, comes back in the afternoon with a diamond drill and a set of mining experts, tests the spot, and perhaps by evening has added a million dollars to his possessions. That certainly has the appearance of making haste to be rich.

But, after all, these prospectors are only making a perfectly sensible and wisely enterprising use of the wonderful facilities of modern times. Every man in every calling must do the same, or be left sadly behind. But the "making haste to be rich" which the Bible deprecates is an affair of the soul and not of the body. It happens when a man's spirit gets into an airplane and rushes off after money, leaving honor behind, and love, and the Church, and prayer, and the Bible, and God. That is the haste to be rich which shall not be unpunished.

Prayer.—Lord of all wealth, we would not seek it unless Thou go with us. Along Thy path, and with Thy Spirit's guidance, we may seek it safely. Amen.

TUESDAY.

DISCOURAGEMENT—WHAT'S THAT?

"The righteous are bold as a lion."—Prov. 28:1-8.

On a cold wintry day a small boy went from door to door trying to sell shoestrings and picture post-cards. He was turned away from house after house, but he kept on brightly. He wore a thin coat, and his hands were bare, though the snow was falling; still he whistled merrily as he pursued his profitless trade. At last a kind woman bought something and got him to tell about himself. His mother was sick and his father was out of work, and he was trying to help them, but some days he did not sell a thing. "Well, I hope you will sell a lot," said the lady; "and don't get discouraged." "Discouraged, ma'am? What's that? I don't understand you."

Most of us know the meaning of discouragement so thoroughly that this story seems impossible. Most of us would find it harder to understand courage than discouragement. Most of us, when we read the statement that "the righteous are bold as a lion," feel that he is condemning us, we are so cowardly and downcast. Can it be that we are righteous, if we are so little bold?

The righteous man walks with God. He does what God tells him to do, and what God helps him do. He knows that God is all-powerful, all-wise, and all-loving. Being sure of this, how can he know the meaning of discouragement?

Prayer.—Dear Lord, be Thou our courage. Forgive our faintness of heart. We know it to be distrust of Thee. Our Father who art in heaven. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

KINDNESS PLUS TRUTH.

"Let not kindness and truth forsake thee; bind them about thy neck; write them upon the tablet of thy heart."—Prov. 3:1-6.

Governor McCreary, a former Governor of Kentucky, a man noted for his politeness, was once the guest of a friend in the country. His hostess asked him at the dinner-table whether he would have coffee or tea. "Coffee, if you please," he replied. Thereupon she explained that her cook had neglected to heat the coffee. Now, the Governor was very fond of hot coffee, but he answered promptly, "How fortunate. Do you know, I am so eccentric as to prefer cold coffee, and do not care for it any other way." The next morning was very cold, just the day when a confirmed coffee-drinker would want his coffee steaming hot; but the Governor's hostess had not forgotten. "The coffee is hot for the rest of us, Governor," she said, "but I have it cold for you; you see I remember that you said you never liked it any other way." The Governor drank his cold coffee, but his smile was less winsome than the night before.

He had read only half of our proverb, "Let not kindness and truth forsake thee." In trying to be kind, he had been untruthful, and had paid the penalty that always, soon or late, attaches to a lie. We talk about "polite fibs," but fibs are not polite. Courtesy and kindness must be founded on truth, or they will topple over. We may not think a truth-teller kind at the time, but he will be proved kind in the long run.

Prayer.—Thou, O Christ, art the Way, the Truth, and the Life! Lead us in Thy way of truth, and we shall find life indeed. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A DEATH GRIP.

"He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance, with increase."—Eccl. 5:10-17.

An English minister of the gospel, kneeling at the death-bed of a wealthy parishioner, asked him to give him his hands as he prayed for his unholding in that solemn hour; but he would not give it. After the soul had left the body, on turning down the coverlet they found the hands grown stiff and cold grasping the key of the man's safe. He would hold on to his possessions to the very last, perhaps with some thought that he might be allowed to carry them over the dark river.

Of course he could not; if he took time to think honestly he knew he could not. Few think honestly about death. We work for this world's goods as if we were to have all of them forever; then in an instant we are gone and have left them behind forever. It would be quite as sensible for a farmer to gather up an immense heap of dead leaves and fill his barns with them, and go in and gloat over them, and refuse to part with them. Such a farmer would be held insane, and rightly so. Is not a miser equally insane?

Pleasure abides in happy memories, for those go with us to heaven. It does not abide in perishable things.

Prayer.—God of all true wealth, give us Thy goods. Endow us with the riches that never fade away. And save us, we pray Thee, from the terrible snare of covetousness. Amen.

FRIDAY.

SATISFIED.

"Sheol and Abaddon are never satisfied; and the eyes of man are never satisfied."—Prov. 27:20-27.

Thus closely is unregenerate man allied to death and hell. Their maw is ever eager for more, and where is the contented man? Christ, we may be sure, was satisfied with what His Heavenly Father sent Him. Paul had learned, in whatever state he was, therein to be content. Of every Christian the same should be said; but can it be said with truth? Rather is not the old proverb right, that the eyes of man are never satisfied?

There is a time and a place where we are to be satisfied. But our discontent on earth will not help us to reach that land of satisfaction. If we are not satisfied with Christ here, how are we to be satisfied with Him there? If we are discontented on earth with the lot in which Christ has placed us, what right have we to expect a better lot in heaven? Does not our discontent here prove disloyalty to our Provider, and can we expect the disloyal to be admitted to Christ's better land? Ah, discontent is more of a sin than we are likely to think it!

Prayer.—Dear Saviour, we pray Thee to save us from our empty fears, our foolish dissatisfactions. What more can we wish, having Thee? Amen.

SATURDAY.

EVERY DAY A GLAD DAY.

"This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it."—Psa. 118:22-29.

We are likely to look on special days as gala days, and postpone to those days our gladness. Those are holidays, festival days, days of vacation. We reserve them for happiness, and we do not expect to be really happy on other days. They are not days which the Lord has made; they are days which the world has made, business has made, necessity has made; days of the dull and disagreeable side of life.

Now, that is an un-Christian way to live, for every day is made by the Lord. He caused the sun to rise upon the day. He gave us strength for the day. He filled the day with loveliness, with Himself.

And since each day is a day the Lord has made, it follows that we should rejoice and be glad in it. Well has Bishop Brent said that "the gladness most worth having is that which is growing by to-day's highway. Pluck it; it will be a present delight and a future treasure in memory's storehouse."

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer.

SUNDAY.

WORLD-LOVE.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."—1 John 2:12-17.

Why are we told not to love the world? Did not the Father make the world? Why, then, if we love the world that God has made do we not love the God that made it? This is the way worldlings talk.

By "the world," John did not mean the world that God made, the lovely and majestic things of nature, the pure and lofty thoughts of man. He meant the world that man has spoiled, the world of greed and ambition and pride and silly pleasure and empty vanity.

But the love of the world that God made is ennobling in the same degree that the world unmade by man is degrading. If we are content with the simple pleasures, which are the great ones, if we are faithful to the little duties and satisfied with moderate rewards, we place ourselves in touch with the all-loving and all-powerful Father. He can then bless us, because our hands are open toward Him to receive His blessings. He can then bless us, because we are His kind of folks. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our friends are so kind to us that it makes us very appreciative. They come and see the need and then undertake to supply that need. We had our new building nicely furnished throughout except a nice clock for the reception hall. The children of the late Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Sellars, of Burlington, N. C., decided it would be a fine thing to supply this need by donating a beautiful clock in loving memory of their father and mother: A few weeks ago they placed a beautiful chime clock on the mantle of the reception hall in this beautiful building. The clock is a thing of beauty, as well as usefulness. It chimes on every quarter-hour and strikes the hour. Every quarter-hour and every hour each day and through the night it reminds us of the kindness and the loving sympathy of the two faithful souls in whose memory it has been given had toward this institution. It also reminds us each quarter-hour and each hour all through the day and night that time is fleeting by and inspires us to grasp every opportunity as they come from day to day to help our fellow-man. I do not know of any contribution this family could have made that would have been more appropriate or more appreciated than this clock.

MASKED INFIDELITY.

Infidel philosophy is a very subtle thing. It varies its methods of teaching according to occasion; suiting itself to the spirit of the age, and always affecting to be something very new and grand. It may be compared to the kaleidoscope, which, furnished with a few worthless, showy tinsel materials, manages so to shift and vary the combinations that they present an almost endless diversity and novelty of aspect; while, after all, they have been and continue to be nothing more or better than the same valueless stained pieces of glass. "Satan is bankrupt in originality; he changes his masks, but the visage is the same."

Skeptical speculation to-day thrives on certain theories with regard to nature and the universe, which are utterly irreconcilable with the inspired word of God, man's greatest source of truth, and directly tend to aim a backstroke at faith in that word. So much is said about nature, and the laws of nature, and the course of nature that virtually the personification is treated as a person. As though nature were something apart from, and independent of, the God of nature; as though the laws which the almighty Creator has chosen to direct and control His own universe had actually superseded Himself!

What is nature but the workmanship of God? What are the laws of nature but God's ordinary methods of working in creation? Do laws have any force without an administrator? Can machinery act without a power to keep it in motion?

"If the Creator were not also the Preserver; if the arm that built the universe did not ever uphold and govern it; if the hand that framed the complicated, exquisite, harmonious mechanism of nature were not always invisible, but omnipotently working and regulating the whole, creation would fall into chaos again, and death and desolation universally ensue." The universe is no more self-sustained than self-created; it owes its preservation as truly as its origination to the great God; and in His written word He makes these facts very clear to His servant Job. (Job 38-41). —Ernest Lloyd in Signs of the Times.

THE CHURCH AND THE NEWSPAPERS.

Many people recall a few years ago when the moral forces of Virginia had to organize a daily paper to give the people the real facts and touching moral measures of great importance than pending. We have come again to the time in the Old Commonwealth when it is almost impossible for the people to get real information on the greatest moral and patriotic measures that have faced the South in a hundred years. All the daily papers we see in the State are warped with Tammany bias and their pastime is picking at the Protestant Churches and ministers. It is impossible for the people to understand the real issues before this nation if they rely upon the daily papers for information. The unfairness of these papers is amazing in this day of liberty and enlightenment. Their littleness in running over the State to run down the reputed sayings of a Methodist preacher and at the same time editorially saying they are not worthy of notice, must be disgusting to the people.

It is because of these things we feel the Church paper must give the people the real conditions we face in these tremendous moral issues. If we fail, there is no other printed page to which they can look for light. With every daily gone over to Smith and Tammany, where can the people expect to turn for the side the Church must hold up? If this was not the fact we would not use so much space, but since the people are being misled and have no other source of publicity for these great moral and patriotic issues, we feel it the duty of the Church to inform them.—Editor Rowland, in Richmond Christian Advocate.

WE KNOW THE CAUSE.

Within the next year, in this country, more than 100,000 patients with advanced tuberculosis will probably go down to the grave. These patients now know that they have tuberculosis. They can no longer doubt it. And their friends know it. Most of them know that they have but a short time to live. Some, having seen the hopelessness of their plight, are resignedly waiting for the end. In other cases, the meager resources of the stricken family are being drained to the last dollar, the home is being mortgaged, the family is suffering untold privations, one precious possession after another being sold in the hope of helping the loved one. There was a time, a few months ago, or at most a few years ago, when practically every one of these patients now nearing the end, could have been restored to health at a relatively small cost. Why was the auspicious time allowed to pass? Because they did not realize what was coming.

At one time, a large proportion of these patients called it "only a cold." If the bread-winner suspected that it was more than a cold, he dutifully kept on at his work, for what could the family do without his earnings? Others, not quite satisfied, because the "cold" continued to "hang on," consulted a doctor, who, after a chest examination of the sputum, assured the patient that he need not worry, it was only a "touch of bronchitis," or "a little weakness in one lung." With some such advice, many a person in the curable stage of tuberculosis has been encouraged to let the disease progress until it was too late to arrest it. The fact is, physicians who have not had special training are not very likely to recognize tuberculosis until it has reached a moderately advanced stage, when recovery is difficult.

This is not written in criticism of the doctors (for the diagnosis and treatment of tuberculosis is a specialty, and requires special preparation not had by the ordinary physician), but to warn persons, who have cause to suspect that they have beginning tuberculosis, to seek advice at once from some physician who specializes in lung diseases, and is known to be able to detect early tuberculosis.—G. H. Heald, M. D., in Life and Health.

"I have no personal fight against Al Smith as a man, but I would be against my own brother if he were wet. I'm fighting Al on the temperance issue alone. How is the West? Well, the sentiment out there has set in strong against Smith. There are two reasons for this—his stand against Prohibition and his backing by Tammany."—"Billy" Sunday.

PROTESTANTISM AND ROMAN CATHOLICISM COMPARED.

By W. J. Lhamon.

This comparison is intended as the simplest possible statement, almost a tabular one, of facts and principles. It has nothing to do with the personal religion of either Protestant or Roman Catholic except as personal religion is conditioned by general principles. It has nothing to do with politics, though political conditions just now should greatly enhance the interest in such a study, and the value of it. There is a jaunty saying that "one religion is as good as another." This comparison does not aim to settle that question pro or con. The reader must draw his own conclusions.

First, then: Roman Catholicism places the seat of authority in the Church; Protestantism (speaking broadly) places it in the Bible. The difference is radical, and it leads far. Of course, Protestants have the problem of interpreting the Bible while the Roman Catholics have the problem of interpreting the Church. During many centuries in the Roman Catholic Church the question of authority wavered between the ancient, Ecumenical Councils and the popes. The Vatican council of 1870 decided in favor of the popes. By that council the pope was declared infallible when he speaks ex cathedra—that is, out of his office. The official word of the pope is, therefore, the final authority for the whole Church. This explains why the Bible is not popular among Roman Catholics, and why the pope is not popular among Protestants.

Secondly: In governmental ways Protestantism, because of its element of individualism, tends toward democracy; Roman Catholicism is monarchical. It is a Church of priests, grading up from the local "father" to the bishop, the archbishop, the cardinal and the pope. It is a reversion to the governmental concepts of the ancient monarchical religions, such as those of Egypt, of Babylon, and of Judea. The Roman Catholic Church may tolerate but she cannot bless republics and democracies.

Thirdly: Protestants confine their worship to God the Father, Christ the Son and the Holy Spirit; that is, to the Trinity. In addition to this the Roman Catholic Church has the Virgin Mary as one of her most popular objects of worship, and a long list of saints. Many of these saints answer to the functional gods of the old Roman empire; they have their respective fields of activity. St. Blasius, for instance, heals diseases of the throat; St. Anthony heals erysipelas; St. Mark is the patron of Venice, and St. George of the kings of England.

Fourthly: The Roman Catholic Church places far more emphasis on sacraments than Protestant Churches do. She has seven sacraments, only two of which Protestants retain, namely baptism and the Lord's Supper. The sacrament of holy orders is reserved for the clergy. The sacrament of marriage, on the contrary is not for the clergy but for the laity. Confirmation is for the adolescent who has been baptized in infancy. Then there are penance and extreme unction, the latter for those who are in danger of death. To most of these sacraments mystical, magical, saving powers are attributed. An infant must be baptized or it is not saved. Extreme unction may save the dying. He who partakes of the wafer of the eucharist partakes of the very body of Jesus. The priest who partakes of the wine partakes of the blood of Jesus. Without the sacraments eternal life is imperiled. But Protestants in general place more emphasis on the teaching functions of Christianity, and consequently on conduct and character.

Fifthly: Protestants, especially in America, believe in the separation of Church and State. Their thought is that of a free Church in a free State. The Roman Catholic thought is that the temporal power should be subject to the spiritual; the State to Church. This means that the pope should rule the State ex cathedra as he rules the Church. This claim has caused serious trouble in many of the States of Europe.

Sixthly: One of the sharpest differences lies in the approach to God. The Protestant believes that he may come immediately to God as a child comes to a father; that there is no mediator except Jesus; and that the only requisite is a good conscience in fullness of faith. To the Roman Catholic the approach to God is through the sacraments of the Church officially administered by priests duly ordained and duly authorized. To the Protestant salvation is spiritually guaranteed; to the Roman Catholic it is officially guaranteed. To the Protestant, salvation means "growth in grace and knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ." It means character and Christ-likeness. To the Roman Catholic it means the confessional, penance, loyalty to an institution and the official assurance of that institution. As in the days of Augustine, Rome still proclaims her dictum: "Extra ecclesia nulla salus est"—"Outside the Church there is no salvation."—Christian Evangelist.

the appointment of three representative commissions to carry out this crusade along three lines—evangelism, world peace, and Christian citizenship—was announced recently. Indorsements and expressions of co-operation have come rapidly since then, reports the national Christian Endeavor headquarters (1) from the Interdenominational Young People's Commission, in charge of young people's societies in twenty-one denominations; (2) from the Sunday School workers among the young people of more than thirty denominations; (3) from a group of official representatives of young people's agencies within and without the Church.

Thousands who attended the three-fold Crusade of Evangelism, World Peace and Christian Citizenship received its first popular acceptance.

PIERCE.

When the gentle spirit of Mrs. Mary Virginia Johnson Pierce took its flight to that land of endless day, the angels must have sung a sweet refrain as they pushed the gates ajar and stood just outside as she entered into the celestial city to be with her beloved Christ. Now she is with us no more, may it be said:

Whereas, God, in His wisdom, saw fit to transplant such a beautiful full-blown rose from earth to heaven, a bride of only a few months, beloved by all those with whom she came in contact. Her sweet smile and loving words made her a favorite in her husband's home. Therefore, be it resolved:

First: Our loss is heaven's gain; God is wise, great and good, and He never makes a mistake.

Second: We extend to her husband, dear father and mother and all her loved ones our heartfelt sympathy and point them to the loving God who gave and who has taken away. Our hearts throb with pain in the loss of so young a mother and friend, but remember dear ones she will be waiting and watching for you in that celestial city prepared for all those that love and serve God.

Third: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be spread on the minutes of the Church records.

BYRD.

Inasmuch as God has seen fit, in His wise providence, to remove from our midst in Sunday School and Church services our beloved friend, C. E. Byrd, we keenly feel our loss in the death of such a splendid Christian character. His death has brought to us a deep sense of sorrow, and he will always occupy a large place in our memory. A kind husband, neighbor and friend has passed on to that beautiful home to be transplanted by God into the realities of eternity, there to await the resurrection morn and the coming of those he loved so dear.

Therefore, be it resolved:

First: That we bow in humble submission to God's will, knowing that He doeth all things well.

Second: That we extend to his sorrowing friends and loved ones the assurance of our heartfelt sympathy, that God's richest blessings may be theirs, and that He may sustain them with His love.

Third: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy spread on the minutes of Liberty Spring Christian Church records.

Oscar Ford Pinkard was born March 8, 1917, and died in a hospital at Roanoke on August 24, 1928. Funeral services were held at Mt. Zion Christian Church Saturday at 11 o'clock A. M., August 25. His body was laid to rest in the Mt. Zion Cemetery to await the morning of the resurrection. He leaves to mourn their loss a mother, three brothers and one sister and a host of relatives and friends. We pray God's blessing upon the bereaved. The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. H. Dollar.

ACCORDING UNTO THE PATTERN.

By DR. W. A. HARPER, President.

(Opening address, September 9, 1928, to the Elon student body.)

"According unto the pattern which the Lord had showed Moses."—Num. 8:4.

The discovery of the individual is the outstanding achievement of the Christian religion. There are eleven so-called living religions today, rating Christianity and Judaism as separate religions. Not one of these religions except Christianity has properly evaluated the individual soul. Some of these religions deny the existence of the soul and others of them teach that individuality is a curse. They avowedly encourage their adherents to expect the absorption of the individual spirit-substance, whatever that may be, into the all-soul substance. The chief evil, they teach, is personality, but it is entirely different with the Christian religion. Jesus taught the infinite worth and value of the individual life. So infinitely valuable did he regard the individual life that he, in a bold figure, placed it on one side of the balance and the individual life on the other side and then declared that the individual life outweighed all the wealth of the world.

We need not, therefore, be surprised to find the germinating principle of the individual's worth constantly tending to express itself with increasing force and clarity through the Christian centuries. It was nearly eighteen hundred years after the coming of Jesus before such a government as the United States could appear in human history. We do not claim that the United States is perfect as a democracy. What we are trying to say is that there would have been no democracy such as we have here in the United States or elsewhere in the world if it had not been for the teaching of Jesus. The liberation which has come to childhood and to womanhood as a direct consequence of the teaching of Jesus, as to the individual's worth is equally noteworthy during the Christian centuries with the development of democracy which we have cited. Just at this particular time the spirit of democracy which is but another expression for the recognition of individual worth, is mightily influencing educational theory. We find that modifications of the curriculum in terms of individual need go steadily forward. This tendency has made educational costs mount, but educators have been willing to accept the mounting cost because they believe in individual worth. The crown and the glory of the Christian religion is a perfected personality. Toward this achievement every institution and every influence that touches our life should concentrate its attention.

But there is another side to the picture. Jesus recognized the individual's infinite worth, but he also recognized that the individual owes allegiance to God. There is freedom and full liberty for the exercise of one's powers Jesus taught, but these powers and this freedom are to be exercised in terms of our relationship to God as Father and to our fellow-man as brother. There are patterns for life and the individual man pays a heavy penalty when he departs from these patterns. This does not reduce life to dull uniformity. It is rather an encouragement for the individual to express himself in accordance with standards that have been tested through experience and have the Divine appeal. The creation of these patterns does not thwart individual expression, but encourages man by giving him assurance that God is interested in the aspirations and the achievements of his individual life.

Some years ago a great preacher said that the individual soul is a masterpiece of the Divine Architect. This great seer in the spiritual realm also declared that God had a plan for each individual life and that no life can be said eventually to have succeeded unless it has constructed itself according to the Divine plan adopted for it. We have become so modest in these latter days that some of us have concluded that the great preacher was wrong and that human pride had suggested to the mind of this man that God is personally interested in the individual's welfare. Let us not forget in this connection that Jesus said no sparrow falls without the knowledge of our Father, and that even the hairs of our head are all numbered. Evidently Jesus believed that God is interested in the individual's welfare. And it does add a dignity to life and vest every experience with eternal significance when we are convinced that the great Architect of the universe has a pattern for our individual life.

We find that patterns are necessary in the construction of a building. We know them as blueprints and are willing to pay liberally for them. We have learned by experience that plans are necessary for the construction of worthy buildings. The same principles of architecture may be employed in a thousand different Churches, and no two of them will look alike. Yet, in essence each one of them will be constructed according to the pattern for a building. The architect who should undertake to depart from the accepted principles of building construction too far, will not only bring loss to the owner of such a building, but will produce an abnormality offensive to the best tastes.

In the profession which a man chooses he certainly feels that he has liberty of self-expression, and yet there are certain professional ethics or patterns of conduct from which he must not depart unless he expects to lose the confidence and approval of his associates in the same calling. A physician, for example, is forbidden to advertise, and the whole profession frowns upon any member of the group who undertakes to patent a remedy or discovery which he has found of especial value in the relief of human suffering. The other professions have equally rigid ethical codes, and yet, despite the presence of these patterns of conduct, there is wide room for individuality and for personal and distinctive achievement.

Colleges, too, have individuality. This is as it should be. No two colleges should aim to be exactly alike. The conventions and standards of conduct, the social codes, as well as the requirements for degrees may properly vary from one institution to another. Certain traditional patterns or types of conduct have been historically developed in certain institutions of learning. These standards appear out of date, sometimes even ridiculous, to visitors from other institutions where different standards or patterns are maintained. No doubt there are certain traditions and patterns in the organization of any college or university which appear antiquated and unnecessary to those acquainted with other traditions and practices, but should there be dull uniformity in such matters? We would not wish every man to dress like every other man. We would not wish every woman to talk exactly like every other woman. Neither should we expect every college to be like every other college. We wish individuality and personality and distinctive habits and characteristics, a unique pattern, if you please, for every institution. And if the college is really entitled to be a college there will be associated with it certain traditions, customs and practices, patterns of conduct, which will differentiate it from every other institution in the land.

And yet, in spite of the fact that institutions of higher learning should show this individual aptitude and vitality of corporate life, there are certain standards or patterns which may be called universal in the organization and administration of a college. The buildings are of a certain standard, the professors must have had certain academic preparation for their specific work as teachers, the library must not only be appropriately housed in a building designed for library purposes but it must have trained librarians and books in a certain number related to the departments of instruction. There must be a certain amount of endowment to furnish income for the maintenance of the college. Its athletics and social life must be organized in accordance with certain approved ideas of the accrediting or standardizing agencies. At least one hundred and twenty semester hours of college work based upon high school graduation must be satisfactorily pursued by each student before he can be graduated. Some education bolsheviks have looked upon these standards and

Rev. D. D. Nash, pastor of the Christian Church at Hopewell, Va., was a visitor at THE SUN office the past week and stated that the Church at Hopewell is completed and the work is progressing splendidly.

Rev. J. G. Truitt changes his address from Norfolk, Va., to his present permanent location, 2301 Salem Avenue, Dayton, Ohio. Bro. Truitt has begun his work in Dayton as pastor of the First Christian Church of that city.

Writing under date of September 8th, Rev. B. J. Earp says: "Bro. R. L. Williamson, of Sanford, N. C., was unanimously called as pastor of the First Christian Church, Winchester, Va., by the Church in called conference last night. I feel sure the Church will prosper under his leadership."

Rev. E. M. Carter, Youngsville, N. C., has two Sundays open for work the coming year. Bro. Carter should be engaged for every Sunday. Some Churches in our Eastern North Carolina Conference would do well to engage him to the ministry which he loves and which he has dedicated his life.

President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, spoke to the freshman class entering Elon this fall on Wednesday evening, September 5th. His address was carried in THE SUN last week and is well worth careful reading. According to figures issued by the press, the freshman class numbers 150, sophomores 115, juniors 80, seniors 55. We congratulate Elon on its splendid opening.

Rev. H. C. Caviness, of our Portsmouth Church, is anxious that SUN readers will be much in prayer for the Church and the revival now in progress in the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va. Rev. W. Lynn Tucker, D. D., is doing the preaching. The meeting began September 9th and is to close September 23rd. Dr. Tucker is one of the most prominent and able Bible teachers and preachers in America and will be heard in Portsmouth to great profit by all who are fortunate enough to attend his services.

Two of our Sunday Schools have recently voted to take the monthly missionary offering and have already sent in their first monthly offering, viz: Hopedale and Bethlehem—both in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. This goodly number continues to increase, and we believe the day is not far away when every school will be loyal to the Convention and the Church, and will do itself the favor and the service of taking the offering for missions, as has been so often voted by Sunday School Conventions and Conferences.

Deacon V. E. Kitchens, of our Roanoke, Ala., Church, writes: "We have just closed a very successful meeting, with twenty additions to our Church. Rev. J. H. Dollar did the preaching." The pastor, Rev. G. H. Veazey, writes that "the Church is much built up and that thirty-three members have been added to the Church since September, 1927. Our members are loyal and are prompt in attending Church. Very few persons go home from Sunday School before preaching. In fact, this Church is in the best condition of any I have ever served."

The following will be read with interest by a large number of SUN readers who are well acquainted with Mr. Betts, who was for some years a teacher in Elon College, and Miss Stryker, who is a graduate from this institution and later a teacher in Norfolk County, Va. The announcement to which we refer reads as follows: "Mrs. Bettie C. Hall announces the marriage of her daughter, Mary Hall Stryker, to Mr. Edwin Morris Betts, Wednesday, September 5, 1928, Great Bridge, Va." Mr. Betts is now assistant professor of biology in the University of Virginia. The happy pair, who have our best wishes, are to reside after September 15th at the Brandon Apartments, University, Va.

In making his annual report to the Mission Board, the pastor, Rev. S. E. Madren, records the fact that the present membership of our Elks Spur Church, Carroll County, Va., is fifty-eight, and three others have expressed their desire to unite at an early date. Rocky Ford Church has forty-seven on roll at present, and seven others have made confessions and will unite at an early date. "Our Sunday Schools also seem to be making progress the past year. The enrollment at Elks Spur is about forty; that at Rocky Ford about forty-five. We have added about seven new names to the Sunday School roll the past year. The work in this field is very, very promising. Improvements are being made. God only knows the fruits of labors among these splendid people, and there is great hope and fine prospect for the work in the future, especially with the young people."

We acknowledge receipt of a copy of the annual catalogue of Franklinton Christian College for negroes. The roster of teachers numbers twelve, and there was an enrollment of 120 pupils last year. The catalogue carries a cut of the main building, and also one of the unfinished dormitory. How sorely they do need funds with which to complete that dormitory! Franklinton's capacity for good and for receiving and educating pupils is limited only by the available capacity of the buildings. We know of no better place where a real philanthropist could do a nobler piece of work in building up a most worthy cause than at Franklinton Christian College. Prof. J. A. Henderson, the president, is held in high esteem by and enjoys the utmost confidence of not only the people of his own race, but the white race as well. We congratulate the college on having at its head a man of such stability of character, integrity of purpose and soundness of judgment in all interests committed to his hands.

A strong attack upon the record of Governor Smith, Democratic presidential nominee, is contained in a report made by the special committee appointed by the National Conference on Prohibition Enforcement Planks and Dry Candidates to attend the Republican and Democratic National Conventions. This special committee included Dr. Daniel A. Poling, Dr. Edwin C. Dinwiddie, representing the National Temperance Bureau; Mrs. Ella A. Boole, representing the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and Dr. Oliver Stewart, representing the Flying Squadron Foundation. In part, the report says: "The record, attitude, and pledges of Herbert Hoover, on the one hand, and Alfred E. Smith, on the other, fix the issue. Alfred E. Smith is the leader of the forces of nullification, evasion and betrayal of the eighteenth amendment. As Governor of the State of New York, he has been the consistent servant of the liquor traffic in its death grapple with the moral forces that wrote the eighteenth amendment into the Constitution of the United States."—Christian Herald, New York.

Brother J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va., who was appointed by the Mission Board to make dates for Brother and Sister S. L. Davis and to help direct their work on behalf of the Mission Board, greatly appreciates any word of commendation from the pastors who engage them for evangelical work. Brother Darden received from Dr. W. M. Jay, acting pastor of Damascus Church, the following: "I desire to express my appreciation for the splendid services rendered by Brother and Sister Davis in the five days' meeting conducted at Damascus Christian Church, Orange County, N. C. I do not think one can have any doubt as to the sincerity of this pair of co-workers in the field of evangelism. As they themselves express it, their desire is to do constructive Christian work, so that when their labors on the field are done, the good work will go on. This is a noble motive. Brother and Sister Davis have a fine way of getting hold of their audience and securing their co-operation. It was a great blessing to the Damascus Church to have met them and come under their teaching and influence.

"May the Lord richly bless them in their future work."

The women of the North Carolina Woman's Board of Missions spent Friday, August 31st, in Raleigh, N. C., building a program and planning the work for their annual conference at Sanford, N. C., October 5th. A splendid program was prepared, and the women are expecting a great meeting. They are exceedingly anxious to have the forty pastors of the Conference present and have sent to each a personal invitation and appeal to be present and enjoy the great good day with them at Sanford. Surely, as many pastors as can do so will attend this meeting to give to our good women the benefit of their presence and their counsel. The women are also anxious that as many Church secretaries as possible be present and secure from their Churches a delegation of women to attend the Conference, whether there is a missionary society in the Church or not. They have sent an invitation to every Church secretary of the Conference urging a delegation from each Church. The women are exceedingly anxious, and now believe that they will reach their goal for the present year, as reports indicate they are having the best year in their history. Let all who can do so join the good women of the Church in making October 5th a great day at Sanford.

This from our beloved Rev. Albert Godley, of Tenaflly, N. J.: "Dear Bro. Atkinson,—May the Lord continue to bless you in all your very good work. I greatly appreciate the fact that it has been made possible for me to have THE CHRISTIAN SUN to read weekly, because I love all the good work of our Church. I am much interested in the excellent work you and others are doing so faithfully in the South. Your very timely editorials I have appreciated much. You are in the line of your duty in presenting needed facts as to political matters when the highest interests of the Church demand it. Keep it up as long as Christ the great Head of the whole Church, by the Holy Spirit, may lead you so to do. Let us pray that many of the editors of the secular papers may be led to read your editorials and have a conscience to present the needed facts. Send your paper to them and say you have been requested so to do in the very highest interests of our great country that a very large army may not be mustered to all the borders of all the dry States if the very unwise suggestion of granting wet States right to pass laws as to content of alcohol in beer to satisfy the unnatural appetites of some modern drinkers, regardless of the present and eternal welfare of many beside those who are now clamoring for a 'personal liberty' that by no means belongs to them. Oh, that they might see it!"

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

JESUS MAKES A CHURCH SURVEY.

BY REV. J. W. FIX.

"And He came into the temple and looked it all over . . . On the next day, entering the temple, He proceeded to drive out those who were buying and selling inside the temple; . . . also He taught them 'My house shall be called a house of prayer.'"—Mark 11:11, 15, 18.

Miraculous changes have been wrought during the past two hundred years. Liberty, education, wealth and science are the outstanding bi-products of this progressive generation. So numerous have been the developments and so rapid the speed at which we have traveled that some one said the other day, "I wonder what our grandparents would think if suddenly they should return to this life and for a moment look upon things as they are." Surely they would be astonished at the manner in which we live. The land, homes, communities, friends, and relatives from which they were taken would be unfamiliar to them. But we need not be greatly concerned about such imaginary fancies as the reappearance of our forefathers; rather let us wonder what Jesus would think if suddenly He should appear in our cities and on the Sabbath come into the Church and looked it all over. Would He recognize it as His "holy bride"? What would He think and what would He do? These and many other questions are very timely to every modern Church. In answer to them we can best judge the present and future in terms of past history.

The gospel writers tell us that on one occasion, after an absence of about two years, Jesus reappeared in the city of Jerusalem, the city He loved, the city over which He wept, the city in which the mother Church was located. In the words of the text from the modern translation by Good-speed—

1. "He came into the temple and looked it all over." It is essential that an occasional survey be made of every institution. Errors in our modern banking system are greatly eliminated by periodic inspections made by State bank examiners. Progressive farmers go out on their fields many times during a season and look their crops over. If conditions are favorable, they smile; if the bankers' books reveal deficits or the farmers' crops seem stunted, disappointment and sadness come.

When "Jesus came into the temple and looked it over" He left immediately. He said nothing; He condemned no man. It was eventide and the day when the multitude had strewn palms before Him as He made His triumphal entry into the city. In our modern English, after giving the Church "the once over," He was saddened, and, with His disciples, He left for Bethany, and I am sure that night was spent in prayer for His Church. He must have pointed out its failures, as He saw them, to the twelve, for He was never given to allowing wrongs to go unnoticed. In like manner, He realized the folly of simply trusting and hoping that a changed state of affairs would soon occur. He knew that something had to be done, and with that strong determination He returns to the city of Jerusalem on the following day.

2. "And entering the temple, He proceeded to drive out those who were buying and selling inside the temple; He upset the tables of money-changers and the stalls of those who sold doves." When He was come into the city, Matthew tells us, all the city was moved, saying who is this?

We draw upon our imagination to picture the situation. The city of Jerusalem that week was crowded with more than two million and seven hundred Jews, most of whom were attending the Feast of the Passover. We see Him as He wends His way through the narrow streets of that Oriental city, and hear with anguish their stirring cries, "Who is this?" Some said it is Jesus the prophet; but they did not believe, for this man was not the type of man about whom they had heard, for He moves with rapidity through the streets, in His eyes were to be seen flashes of anger, and in His hand He held a whip. Could this be the Saviour of the world who was to establish universal brotherhood? Let us see!

Too often He has been pictured to us by painters and poets as the pale Galilean; whereas He was a red-blooded Man who rebelled against wrong. At times, He was given to outbursts of anger, and truly the occasion at hand justified His notice. As we behold the situation, let us also bear in mind that Jesus loved the temple and the people who were abusing it, rather than feel that He was seeking revenge.

Jesus was aroused as He looked over the temple, because those present had sought to commercialize it. On every hand doves were being sold, money was being changed and many of the male Jews were paying their personal tax.

Over 2,000 years have passed since Jesus arose against the evil practices of the Jerusalem Church. The things which were wrong in those days are wrong today, for time does not justify unworthy actions. While Jesus is not here today in the physical form, I am convinced that He surveys the Church. With an all-seeing eye and a heart of supreme sensitiveness, He knows.

While we do not sell doves or allow money-changers to have office in the Church building, we sponsor practices that tend to commercialize His house. For each offense, we seek justification on the grounds that the Church must have money for its benevolent and local expenses. I wonder what Jesus thinks of some of our Church bazaars, Church suppers or entertainments! Have we not lost sight of the original design of His Church?

Not long ago I visited a Church in which the average weekly offering amounted to over $1,000. The building was a magnificent edifice. It cost its members about one-half million dollars. It was located in New York City. The conclusion we would consequently draw would be that anything could happen in New York and that in all probability this Church was given largely by some New York financier. However, such is not the case, for the great possibilities of this house of God were made because its members learned to tithe, and today more than 65 per cent of them are regular, systematic givers. This Church is owned, operated and attended by negroes. Its membership now numbers 7,000, and not one penny toward the building, pastor's salary or local expenses comes through commercial activities of its constituency.

3. "My house shall be called a house of prayer." Jesus drove out the money-changers because He loved them. His great heart was filled with compassion toward those who, through ignorance and indifference, had failed to know the mission of His house. Before teaching them what His house was to be, He showed by His actions what it was not to be. Instead of it being a place of commerce, He taught them, saying, "My house shall be a house of prayer," and as such its membership should pray without ceasing. Prayer changes things; it wins victories; it achieves.

Since His house was originally designed to be a house of prayer, we, as Christians, are challenged to help maintain its mission. As members, we "ought always to pray and faint not." The Church we love should place great emphasis upon prayer as a means of building the spiritual life of its membership. Every man, woman and child ought to believe and say with Samuel, "Moreover, God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray." And yet, many of us are guilty of neglect—we have ceased to pray. It would be interesting to know just how much time each member of the Church spends in actual prayer each week. If out of the hundred and sixty-eight hours we prayed a total of one hour, the average would be less than eight minutes per day. Surely we can devote that much time to definite prayer.

Let us pray for one another; for the Church at large; for its great missionary enterprise, and for those within reach of the Church who are without the fold. We ought always to pray as Jesus taught, for power to forgive our enemies. From this day forth, let us pray more. Let the Church pray more fervently; let it teach prayer as a source of strength for daily tasks, for "the effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Prayer links us with God; without it we can do nothing; with it we "can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth us."

A praying Church has released within its walls energies for the spread of Christ's kingdom and His truth. Such a Church has victories in the hour of a crisis. Pray more, O Church of God. Be ye faithful in your Master's original plan and purpose for you and your mission, for as long as time shall last you are to be His house and shall ever be called "a house of prayer for all nations."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

NEW MISSION YEAR BEGINS.

The fiscal year for the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention closes September 1st, and the board meets in annual session Wednesday after the second Sunday in September each year. The past year has been the best since the boom days of 1918-19. The Convention had asked for missions during the year, from all sources, $39,000. The actual amount raised and appropriated, as the report of the board shows, was $38,512.99. This has enabled us to meet the demands from our foreign work and largely curtailed the board's indebtedness for the home work. If we can have another year equal in returns to the past year, the board will be able not only to wipe out all of its indebtedness but to pay all outstanding pledges and have funds with which to begin again real constructive work. SUN readers will understand that owing to the large pledges and promises from our Men and Millions Movement, the board, acting as it deemed at the time conservatively, made pledges covering a period of five years. Individuals who had pledged to Men and Millions in very large numbers failed to pay their pledges. The Mission Board, however, could not go back on its pledges made, and was driven to the necessity of borrowing money to meet those outstanding obligations to Churches which were in building and workers in the mission field. It has taken persistent effort and wise economy and careful planning to meet these obligations, and to carry forward the work without allowing the work begun to suffer.

The Mission Board can at last begin to see the light, and if our people will hear the call sent out by the last Southern Convention, and by September 1st, 1929, give $45,000 to missions as called for by the Convention, instead of the amount given this year, there will certainly be rejoicing in many hearts that have been heavy and exceedingly anxious for the last five years. We are not developing on the foreign field, and in the home field, as is our privilege, but the board has every right to believe that the missionary spirit is increasing amongst us and our people are becoming more liberal in their donations to missions. The Convention has decided that all gifts to missions shall go direct to that purpose, and not be a part of Conference apportionments, and this it is believed will help increase rather than decrease our contributions the coming year. There are several points in the home field now where demand is upon us Christians to have Churches and ministers, and these demands can be met very largely in another year if our people will help us reach the goal of $45,000 in their giving to missions from September 1, 1928, to September 1, 1929.

INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT AFRICA.

Since the days of David Livingston, that hero of world movements, Africa, the dark continent, has been a land of interest to the civilized world. The mission study book this year is on that great continent, with its problems and its possibilities. There are facts about Africa which, we think, CHRISTIAN SUN readers would note with profit and interest.

The area of what Livingston called "the open sore" of the world is 11,403 square miles—one-fourth of the earth's surface and over four times that of the United States, excluding Alaska. The coast line of Africa is 24,000 miles, thus almost equalling the circumference of the earth at the equator. Her population numbers 150,000,000 souls, nearly one-tenth of all the world's population and much larger than that of the United States. The death rate in Africa is fifteen persons a minute, whereas that in America is only three a minute. The birth rate is ten per minute, which is twice that of America.

Missions have been making headway in this continent and souls are being won to Christ in great numbers. For instance, in 1914, there were 4,629 Protestant missionaries in Africa. There are now 6,289. In 1914 there were 6,586 organized Protestant Churches. In 1924 there were 10,592. In 1914 there were 645,958 African communicants. In 1924 there were 1,015,683. There were 680,755 in mission schools in 1914. Ten years later there were 926,793 in such schools.

The missionaries are not only helping to save men's souls in Africa, but they are helping also to relieve human suffering and to restore health to the diseased. In 1914 medical treatments reached 226,427. In 1924 they reached 1,809,391. Missionaries are going into all parts of the so-called "dark continent," and at the present rate of increase it will not be many decades until the light of the gospel of our Lord will shine in every nook and hamlet of that continent of millions of human souls that the world did not believe were worth saving until David Livingston blazed the way to the heart of the dark continent and died on bended knees invoking God's blessing upon every person everywhere who would help poor needy Africa. Livingston gave his life to help save a people that the rest of the world did not think was worth saving, and this explains why Livingston is today counted among the world's bravest and greatest heroes.

ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

The annual conference is more than a few days' meeting. It is the harvest of a year and the planning of another year. Its implications are potential in results and purposes. Two agents are responsible for the success which the reports reveal: the pastor and the congregation. The presumption is that the plans outlined at the previous Conference should have been prepared and passed with great care. The necessity, the ability, and the willingness of the local Churches should be taken into consideration in Conference askings from the local Churches. As the Churches are represented by pastors and delegates, the presumption is that reasonable requests from Churches will be made by the Conference. When the Conference has acted in good faith, and through its best judgment, then the year should answer Conference requirements in full. The first thing the local Church should do after Conference is to decide to send up to the following Conference its full apportionment. Churches can do this if pastor and people decide in good faith to do it.

This Conference year is drawing to a close. Within two months all of the Conferences of the Southern Christian Convention will hold their annual sessions. During September and October the business for the year will have to be closed and reports sent in to Conference. Every effort should be made by pastor and members to raise Conference apportionments, and to select good men and women as delegates. Conference is important, and the best members—that is, those best suited to represent the Church—should be chosen. It is important, too, that delegates go at the opening and remain to the close of the Conference session. In that way the delegates get the spirit of the Conference in their minds and hearts. Then, upon their return and at the first quarterly Conference, the congregation should be informed as to what Conference did and what Conference asks of their Church. Business men should put their experience and their ability into the work of the Church.

Pastors should not be too timid and afraid to insist upon their Churches doing all that Conference requires of them. No pastor has ever received less salary or gone to Conference with his salary unpaid, because he insisted on his Church, or Churches, paying their full assessment. If he succeeds in getting his congregation to do their part for the Conference they will do their part by him. Moreover, the Churches always feel a keen sense of satisfaction when their delegates carry up a report that all Conference requirements have been met in full.

ATLANTA SEMINARY AND ELON.

We are in receipt of a four-page bulletin making announcements from the Atlanta Seminary. We take from the announcement items which we are sure will prove of great interest to SUN readers. The front page carries this statement: "Atlanta Seminary, the South's Congregational Seminary, affiliated with Elon College, N. C., the South's Christian college." As to the two institutions and the plan of affiliation, the following is given:

"The seminary is maintained to supply the Churches in needy communities with a trained spiritual ministry. Graduates and students of the seminary are now pastors of Churches in the South and North. It has done a vital work. It has been non-sectarian, has welcomed all denominations, has stood for the open mind, has been a seminary for college men, and has given opportunity to men of conviction and power who could not take a full college course.

"Trustees of Atlanta Seminary and Elon College vote to affiliate. It is approved by the Congregational Foundation for Education, the Southern Christian Convention, by Ohio and other State Congregational Conferences. Over one hundred leading Congregationalists write commending it.

"Within a year, Atlanta Seminary will sell its campus, convert the equity into an endowment and move to Elon College, N. C. Some of the teachers will go and the students, as a body, will go. The library and furnishings of the buildings will be taken to Elon, with the wonderful spirit and traditions of the seminary.

"The seminary will be given the use of the magnificent Religious Education Building of Elon College for offices and recitation rooms. Students of each institution will be welcomed to the classes of the other. The seminary will enjoy college privileges and opportunities. The college will have the co-operation of a postgraduate institution of wide influence. Together they will form an educational and religious center.

"In service, Atlanta Seminary now becomes a union seminary. It represents the Congregational and Christian Churches of the South and will freely welcome students from other denominations. Its faculty will co-operate with that of the college in the religious training of four hundred students. The number of students in the seminary will be largely increased. The seminary may now become one of the outstanding religious institutions of the South.

"The seminary will continue to do in the South the work for which it was founded. It will retain its present name and the administration of its efficient board of trustees. It will make and be responsible for its own budget.

"Dr. Robert L. Kelley, the eminent leader of American Theological Seminaries and Christian Colleges, is counselor in every step being taken. The affiliation is universally regarded as timely, leading to the development of a united school of religion to have a commanding influence in the South and the nation."

ACCORDING UNTO THE PATTERN.

have said that they take away all the liberty of expression and individuality of action from colleges, but this is far from true. It is possible for a college to measure up fully to those patterns and at the same time exercise full liberty in the development of its individual program. An institution may have its own ideas and its own methods of achieving them. The pattern in the form of standards then becomes but the framework into which the individual architects fit their building materials for the fashioning of a work of educational art.

What we have been saying about patterns for houses and ethical codes for professions and standards for colleges, applies with equal force to individual life. Nothing must be done from any source to cripple individual development and personal self-expression. Every pattern that is offered to the individual for the fashioning of his life must be like a yoke which is not a burden to the ox but a means of lightening his load. Every standard that is erected and in terms of which the individual is expected to conform, must be cement, as it were, to hold together the individual blocks of masonry that go to make up the edifice of life.

It was difficult for even so great a poet as Lord Tennyson to understand the interest that God has in the individual life and we find this zealous spiritual seer in his "In Memoriam" asking:

"Are God and Nature then at strife
That Nature lends such evil dreams,
So careful of the type she seems,
So careless of the individual life?"

Yet he was wrong even as those are wrong who think that what is known in science as the evolutionary process disregards absolutely the individual and is concerned only for the type. Biologists know now that nature, even in the blind evolutionary sense of that word, is tremendously interested in sporadic types and tends to preserve them. Otherwise, there would be no progressive evolution in the evolutionary process, but what the biologists mean by sporadic type is what the man of ordinary speech means by individual difference.

Yet we can observe even in the sporadic individuals a conformity to type or pattern. The individual has freedom to live his own life, and yet if he is to live a full life he must live in terms of his past and in terms of his environment, his total environment, and there is no conflict between ordering our life according to certain patterns and living with perfect freedom. The man who undertakes to live in defiance of the pattern that experience has shown to be best adapted to human living comes to speedy grief, if not to ultimate disaster.

Now, there is a certain type of mind that resents this presence of the pattern and this obligation to conformity. Such a mind claims that this nullifies freedom and debases individuality. These minds become the bolsheviks, the anarchists, the reds, splendid high raised spirits most of them, but mistaken as to the method by which life is best to be lived.

Several times in the Pentateuch God commands the people of Israel through Moses to do certain things according to the pattern that He had given. They were to build the tabernacle according to a certain pattern, they were to build the candlestick according to a certain pattern. No doubt there were individualistic Israelites who did not see the necessity for this strict conformity to pattern. We know, however, that there was need for this very thing among these people in their endeavor to break away from the idolatrous and pagan practices of the people with whom they had lived in bondage and of those other peoples with whom they were planning to live in neighborliness. There was the same reason for their conforming to type and to the pattern in these matters that we find with reference to architecture and professional conduct and college organization and individual life today. They needed to learn the synthesis of individual freedom and self-expression and of conformity to standards and patterns based on experience and meriting the divine approval. No age ever stood in greater need in the same direction than our own.

After all, it is the attitude that we assume toward life itself, and toward its issues, problems and privileges which ultimately counts, which, in the final analysis, determines our conduct. If we take a selfish attitude toward life it will color every item of our personal conduct. If, on the other hand, we assume an altruistic, unselfish attitude, our conduct in every particular will tend to reflect it. If we assume the attitude of inferiority with reference to others or of superiority we shall find a corresponding outcome in our individual life. These attitudes become necessarily the real patterns of living. We can no more escape taking an attitude toward life and its problems than we can escape breathing while continuing to live. By their attitudes we shall know men, because their attitudes control the fruits of their living.

There are many attitudes which we may take toward life. There are many patterns in accordance with which we may order our conduct and express our individuality. They have, however, really been five great philosophies of life, and five only, with many variations to be sure, but yet, each of these variations is readily classified under one of the five. These philosophies have been excellently described by the late President Hyde of Bowdoin College in his "The Five Great Philosophies of Life." I hope that you will read this book and so be able to evaluate any proposal that challenges your life in terms of these five great philosophies—the philosophies of Epicureanism or happiness as the ultimate good of life; of Stoicism, or self-discipline and superiority over circumstances, of the subordination of the lower nature to our higher impulses as taught by Plato; of a sense of proportion in giving due expression to all life's functions as taught by Aristotle, and of love as taught by Jesus.

It is not necessary that we should discuss each of these philosophies here, but we may deal particularly with that philosophy which, after a thorough examination, President Hyde concludes is the best, "The Christian Philosophy of Life," the philosophy that teaches that love is the highest level on which the human being can live. President Hyde concludes that if a man would live fully he must live in terms of love, and that a man can no more change the law of love as operative on the highest levels of human conduct than he can change the law of gravity. I would summarize the Christian philosophy of life as exemplified in the teaching and practices of Jesus briefly, as follows:

1. A profound trust in God as love.
2. A mind-set that love is the practical, final basis of human and divine relationship.
3. A sublime confidence that love eventually will rule in the hearts of men and in the institutions of their life.

And I would define faith as the acceptance on the part of the individual of this philosophy of life and making it the hypothesis in accordance with which life should be lived just as Jesus did. I think I will go further with this matter of faith and say that unless this faith becomes active rather than vocal simply, it is not faith at all. We must be willing to act upon this Christian philosophy of life as a satisfying hypothesis for conduct. Jesus believed that love, compounded of meekness and good will, would win the hearts of man and so during the week of his passion he made his triumphal entry into the Holy City, in the spirit of humility and meekness, of good will and love. He risked his life by this triumphal entry in the adventure of winning the religious and secular leaders of his time through love. He lost his life, but he is gradually winning the world. He will ultimately triumph. The Galilean who risked his all on love shall win. We need a faith of that type not only during our college days but during all our life—a faith that will enable us to risk our all, too, in the confidence that the only really triumphant achievements of life are to be wrought out in terms of love.

In conclusion, let me encourage every one of you to have a pattern for your life, and let me encourage you also to be sure that this pattern conforms to the high standards of living and of service which are exemplified in teachings and the life practices of Jesus. The selection of such a pattern for individual character will in no wise circumscribe or limit or hinder the fullest and the freest self-expression. On the other hand, the selection of such a pattern will lend dignity and charm and grace and significance and abiding character to individual life. Let us be sure that we are living our life "according unto the pattern" as revealed in Jesus Christ.

A rather surprising incident disturbed the equanimity of certain press correspondents located in the national capital of this country when the fact became known that Premier Mussolini had been sent a cablegram by an official of the National Press Club "congratulating him upon his election as a non-resident member of the Club and sending the best wishes of fellow members." When some of the amazed scribes learned of this they made indignant protest to the board of governors in which they cited among other things Mussolini's harsh treatment of the press correspondents, not only American but foreign newspaper men in Rome; furthermore, that Mussolini believed in a muzzled press, that his cohorts exercised a strict censorship on all news leaving Rome, etc. The board of governors, after carefully reviewing the situation, wisely withdrew the name of Musolina from further consideration for membership.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Modern politics is a caricature on statesmanship. Greed and ambition, in most cases, are responsible for modern politics. One of the menaces of this age in this country is political party scrambles for office. Politics divides citizens as theology divides Christians. The sixteenth century Reformation in religion and civil governments might well be repeated. Church divisions and politics are first cousins and lead a bad row in Church and State. In the Church the ideal is to work for the kingdom rather than our Church; and in the State, to work for the government and not our party. That does not mean that Churches and parties shall be abolished, but that they should be purged of all that mars the Church or defiles the State.

The Church has reached the stage of numbers, learning, and wealth, that it could save the world, if united and consecrated in heart and power; and this nation has reached the stage of influence in wealth, education and power that it could determine the destiny of the nations. Responsibility rises with ability to perform, and opportunity always meets the willing workers on the road of progress. The campaign for rulers in Church and State ought to be conducted in the spirit of earnest desire to purify character and stabilize government. Selfishness in Church or State is sordid and without excuse. The blessings of good Church and good State are so great that they ought to inspire best life in both. Citizenship is more than the right to vote—it is an obligation to obey law, to cultivate right relations with others, and to contribute service for the welfare of the State. Citizenship in the Christian State is the highest civil position known to man; and Paul presents a still higher position for man when he says, "Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God" (Eph. 2:19). Christian civilization is the fruit of Christianity and Christian citizenship is the mark of a Christian citizen. The act of voting is the putting of the citizen's character into the character of the government. The State can rise no higher than the sum of its citizens, and the Church can rise no higher than the character in the total of its membership. The oath of citizenship and the profession of religion are sacred and binding for life. Men do not take these positions as seriously as they should; and no one should try to ride into power on the prejudices of citizens or members. It is not what men get out of the Church or State that counts, but what men put into the Church and State. What this age needs is statesmen, not politicians; and in the Christian State, the need is for Christian statesmen. No higher position is open to man than to serve his fellow-men in the Church and the State.

W. W. STALEY.

THE ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

PART II.

By REV. W. R. CHAPMAN.

The Principles of the Church.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

The three great founders of the Christian denomination, Rev. James O'Kelly, Dr. Abner Jones and Rev. David Purviance, saw a wonderful vision. These were the chief founders. Their vision was portrayed by the great principles they enunciated. These principles are true, broad, good and beautiful. The great vision seen by the founders and handed down by these I shall enumerate under heads.

The Head. Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church, and He is peculiarly so of the Christian denomination. This Head is a witness, leader, commander and Saviour of the people. All who accept Jesus Christ as the Head of the Church and obey Him place themselves under His direction, guidance, leadership, and in so doing become members of His militant Church and of His triumphant Church in heaven, and their names are recorded by the recording angel in the Lamb's book.

There is a beautiful communion between Jesus Christ, the Head of the earthly Church, and this Church which is in reality the body. Now, as Jesus Christ is the Head of this Church, then the Church here on earth owes Him allegiance and perfect obedience. Hence, we may express this relationship in these words: the Fatherhood of God, the elder brotherhood Christ, and the brotherhood of man.

The name. I have discussed the name Christian, but at this point I must add these thoughts. The name Christian defines a peculiar people, and this people is set apart to the service of God. This name is, as I have shown, Scriptural. It is the first name applied to the first Gentile Christian Church in Antioch. It is the name of the early Church whose members were the true followers of Jesus Christ. Under this name many martyrs marched to their death. Indeed the name means a believer in Jesus Christ, and His true follower. Why the name carries everything that is significant of all that belongs to Christianity and to God. I am fully persuaded that the name Christian is a comprehensive and cosmopolitan name, and therefore is the truest and best name that can be borne by people that follow Jesus Christ. It stands above all other names that have been or can be applied to the followers of Jesus Christ, because it is, as I have shown, of divine origin. This name can be applied to all Christians in all the different denominations. And to be a Christian means to be a true follower of Jesus Christ and endeavor to do His will perfectly and completely.

The creed. The Christian denomination accepts the Bible as its only creed. This denomination does not discard one of the sixty-six books of the Bible. All are sacred. All contain the words of God. The entire Bible is accepted as their rule of faith and practice, and all good Christians strive to live up to its teachings. The book of Genesis is as fully accepted as any other book of the Bible. Such great doctrines as man's and woman's creation, their fall, regeneration, adoption, repentance, justification by faith, the resurrection, the making new the body, and the immortality of the soul-spirit, and all great doctrines such as man's free will to choose, are accepted and held as cardinal doctrines. The Bible is held as the basis of these doctrines.

Another great principle is the right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience, which is a right and privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all. All in this denomination may think for themselves. One is left to study the Bible, come to his own conclusions, and follow the dictates of his own intellect and conscience. No one is obliged to subscribe to and accept dogmatic doctrines.

Church membership. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership. The great doctrine is this: When a man, woman or child accepts God as his God, the Holy Spirit as his Comforter, and Jesus Christ as his Lord, Redeemer, and Saviour, he at once becomes a Christian. He should endeavor to live up to the principles he accepts. I am sure that the ruling principle in Christian character is Christ-mindedness, Christ-likeness, Christ-fellowship and Christ-love. To this I add Christ-like love for your enemy. Christian character is the highest, noblest and most transcendent character that man, woman or child can bear in this world.

This great principle is inclusive. It is also exclusive. It excludes not one who wants to accept Christ as his Saviour. It includes all, because Christ died for all, He suffered for all, He saves all, He rejects none. And God says, "All souls are mine"; "You are sons and daughters." All the lost pieces of silver were found, and all the sheep were brought back to the fold.

And so we may come to God the Father. And indeed, says the Lord, "Every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God." This is a great inclusive creed.

Private judgment and the liberty of conscience. This an inalienable right and privilege of all, and should be accorded to and exercised by all. Scholarship is such a right and privilege of all to study, construe and put our construction upon the Bible, history, science and literature as we think best; is also such a right and privilege. No dogmatic rule respecting the Bible should be enforced or should an attempt even be made to enforce it. Every man and woman have rights, private rights, with reference to the interpretation of the Bible which belongs to them; no one has a right to say nay. Liberty of thought and construction, and views should be fully accorded to all. No one has a right to dogmatically say what man shall think about the Bible, how he shall construe it, or his conceptions of its teachings.

It is also understood that this creed or principle is made by and for those who have repented of their sins and have accepted Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and God as their only God, and the Holy Spirit as their Comforter. It is made for all who follow Jesus Christ in His life and teachings, and for all who are led by the Holy Spirit in the construction and interpretation of the Holy Bible.

Men and women are responsible beings. They are also free. All have a perfect right to claim Jesus Christ as their elder Brother and as their Saviour. For Jesus Christ is love, He is also Lord and Master of all. This is the great creed and privilege. It is biblical.

Things done. In many fields, the Christian denomination has blazed the way. These simple ways have now, in many instances, become great highways. The Church has initiated and fostered many good things, and has done many splendid things. The people known as Christians are still doing such things. The Christian denomination stands first in five great efforts. I mention four:

In union. The first thing done was the uniting of three organizations—that of Dr. Abner Jones, and that of Rev. Barton W. Stone and Rev. David Purviance. The last Rev. David Purviance renamed a Christian. These bodies led by these great men of God came out of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Baptist, and the Presbyterian Churches. Yet they came together and united under one great name—the name Christian. This union marked the way to future Christian unions. It blazed the way.

And now there is a movement before the Christian denomination to unite with the Congregational Church. I hope it will be effected.

Religious newspapers. The Christian denomination gave to the world, in 1808, the first religious newspaper. This paper is known as the Herald of Gospel Liberty, which is now the oldest religious newspaper and Church organ in the world. And so we see our great Church standing first again.

Co-education. The Christian denomination was the first to organize a co-educational institution of learning, giving to girls and women the same educational rights and privileges accorded to men. This was done in 1850. Not only was this the first co-educational, but it was the first denominational institution of learning, or college. This college was Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio. Horace Mann was its first president. This college gave equal privileges to men and women classes and to professors and to all creeds.

Temperance. In the field of temperance societies with constitutions, there is one which has a total abstinence clause in it, and this was an organization of members of a Christian Church. So we see this denomination was in the forefront in such good work. On a large stone set in concrete, on property now owned by the Pleasant Hill Christian Church, in Alamance County, N. C., where at one time a Christian Church stood, there is a tablet placed on the large stone containing this inscription: "Erected 1909 by the Pleasant Hill Temperance Society in commemoration of its organization 1803."

From an old, faded book, containing the constitution, roster, minutes of that great society, I quote the following, which contains the total abstinence clause: "We, therefore, agree that we will abstain from the use of ardent spirits except as a medicine, in case of bodily infirmities; that we will not allow the use of them in our families nor provide them for the entertainment of our friends, or for persons in our employment, and that in all suitable ways we will discourage the use in the community."

Women preachers. The Christian denomination led in ordaining women to the Christian ministry. The first woman to be ordained in 1866, yet women were among the pioneer preachers, and they have continued to occupy the pulpit of this denomination and to labor acceptably as evangelists. It seems that Mrs. Nancy G. Cram, who died in 1816, was the first woman worker and preacher. As far as my studies have led me in this matter, it was the first denomination in modern times to ordain a woman in the ministry.

From what has been said, the Christian denomination, in its early history, caught a great vision and has entertained great ideas. Many of these have ripened and are bearing much fruit. It has set in motion great streams of wonderful influence for good. It is our prayer that all the ministers will be urged on to do greater things because of the wonderful things which the denomination has done in the past. The opportunity is great in the South. It is the same in the South as that of the Congregational Church in the North. It should be to the South what the Congregational Church is to the North. It should stand for scholarship, liberty and freedom in the South as the Congregational Church does in the North. It is a great denomination. It stands for great things. Now work to those great ends. Reap a great harvest for God.

MISSIONS

CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

By reference to page 7 of Southern Christian Convention Proceedings, Richmond, Va., May 1, 1928, it will be seen how all Conference apportionments which go to Convention purposes are to be distributed, both for the present year and for two years to come—1928-'30, inclusive. If all the Churches raise all their apportionments for Convention purposes, as their apportionments now stand (there was no increase asked this year) the total thereof will be $25,000. The Convention voted that these Conference funds shall be distributed as follows:

	Amount.	Per Ct.
Superannuation	$ 3,000	12
Convention	2,000	8
Publications	4,000	16
Convention obligations (to Elon Col.)	12,750	51
Undistributed	3,250	13
Total apportionments	$25,000	100

With Conference apportionments thus distributed, the institutions and enterprises of the Church are to call on the Churches, Sunday Schools, societies and individuals to contribute independently of all Conference apportionments the following:

For missions	$ 45,000
For the Orphanage	30,000
For colleges (Elon, Bethlehem)	34,000
For Christian education	4,500
Total	$113,500

This would make a total of $138,500 for all Convention purposes—or a fraction over $4.50 per capita for all Convention purposes, on a basis of 30,000 members.

It will be seen from the above that three enterprises of the Church—missions, the Orphanage, and Christian education (for Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work)—do not share in the Conference apportionments. It has been the policy and custom from the beginning for the Orphanage to make its appeal directly to the people. Missions have now been put on the same basis—the appeal for all funds for missions to be made directly to the people. Last year missions shared in Conference apportionments and received from this source a total of $6,773.23, which was $3,492.87 for home missions, and $3,280.36 for foreign missions. According to the distribution voted by the Convention at Richmond, nothing will go to Convention missions, home or foreign, from this source this year. So, if the income to missions this year is to be equal even to that of the past year, individuals, Churches, Sunday Schools, societies will have to give direct to missions, home and foreign, $6,773.23 more than they gave last year (the amount lost to missions by not sharing in Conference apportionments). This was done by the Convention, so we are advised, that missions might have direct appeal to the Churches and people, in the faith that when the people knew what they were giving to missions, and when, without any divisions or percentages, they would be more liberal to missions, and would see to it that missions in the Christian Church should amount to more in the future than in the past. Acting on this faith, the Convention voted to ask $45,000 a year for missions this year, and the next two years, instead of $39,000 asked per year the last two years. So the Convention had the faith to believe that when missions were separated from Conference apportionments, and not permitted to share therein, instead of losing $6,773.23, missions would gain $6,000. Hence, the asking for $45,000—or $6,000 a year more for missions than ever before. Will our people live up to this request and expectation of the Convention; and see to it that what missions lose by not sharing in Conference apportionments shall be more than made up by direct gifts since they have now the consideration and the fact that what they give for missions shall go direct to missions without any percentages, or division, with other interests and enterprises of the Church.

The Convention has paved the way. Will we accept the challenge, govern ourselves accordingly, and go forward in the work of kingdom enlargement? J. O. A.

MISSIONARY OFFERINGS.

(Explanation: Our last acknowledgment, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, page 9, September 6th, showed total amount received from March 1st, $20,974.52. We had previously acknowledged from September 1, 1927, to March 1, 1928, $7,538.47, making a total for our fiscal year, September 1, 1927, to September 1, 1928, received for missions from all sources, $38,512.99. Our goal as asked by the Convention for the year was $39,000. We thus lacked $487.01 reaching the total amount asked by the Convention. September 1st began our new year, and the Convention in Richmond, May 1, 1928, set the goal for this year, September 1, 1928, to September 1, 1929, for $45,000. This seems a small sum to ask for missions, home and foreign, from a constituency of 30,000 people—an average of $1.50 per member. Surely our people will see to it that we reach this goal. All Convention missions, home and foreign, have now been taken out of Conference apportionments, and gifts to missions by Churches, societies, Sunday Schools and individuals are to go direct to missions without percentage divisions. All Churches and individuals will know just what and when they are giving to missions. With this in view, the Convention acted on the faith that there would be an increase to missions, home and foreign. Hence, the increase asking for $45,000, this being $6,000 more than asked last year. If, during the year, we can raise the $45,000, the Mission Board will be able to pay every outstanding obligation and pledge for home and foreign missions to September 1, 1929, and keep up all appropriations already voted. Surely, with this incentive, we should reach our goal.) We began the new year September 1, 1928.

EXPERIENCES WITH THE PROMISES.

A man's own personal experience with any particular thing gives him an intelligence concerning it that enables him to know the ground upon which he stands. Hence, before we can understand anything definitely for ourselves, we must have an experience with that particular thing.

A young man, for example, enters college and passes on through the university, gathering to himself all the theoretical knowledge that he can gain upon the subject of engineering. He also goes out with his class for the "field work" that the college and university offer in this line; but after all this he must test his knowledge by an actual experience in real work that has to be done.

The crucial test, then, is personal experience. This applies most definitely when considering the words of the infinite God. All through that Book which we call the Bible are strewn the promises of this Infinite One. And the individual who has had experience with these promises knows for himself personally that the word of God is true and that it is freighted with a living power.

In the letter to the Hebrews we read: "Be ye free from the love of money; content with such things as ye have: for Himself hath said, I will in nowise fail thee, neither will I in anywise forsake thee. So that with good courage we say, the Lord is my helper; I will not fear: What shall man do unto me?"—Heb. 13:5, 6.

A promise is here quoted that was given to Moses primarily for all Israel, and then specifically for Joshua, who was about to assume the leadership of the Israelitish host and to go before them across the Jordan into the promised land.

This promise, in its original form, is in the thirty-first chapter of Deuteronomy and the sixth verse. The first verse tells us that Moses "spake these words unto all Israel." And then follows the exhortation that contains the promise: "Be strong and of good courage, fear not, nor be affrighted at them: for Jehovah thy God, He it is that doth go with thee; He will not fail thee, nor forsake thee."

And then, after reciting this promise to all the people, he "called unto Joshua, and said unto him in the sight of all Israel, Be strong and of good courage: for thou shalt go with this people into the land which Jehovah hath sworn unto their fathers to give them; and thou shalt cause them to inherit it. And Jehovah, He it is that doth go before thee; He will be with thee, He will not fail thee, neither forsake thee: fear not, neither be dismayed" (Deut. 31:7, 8.)

All through His word, God calls our attention to His loving watchcare over us. He especially directs us to the majesty and the greatness of His power. He is the Creator, not only of this earth, but of the ends of the universe. And then He tells us, "Jehovah, He it is that doth go before thee." He would inspire us by the thought of His invisible presence. He would inspire us also by the greatness of His power. And then, standing in the full assurance of this greatness and this power, and of this loving watchcare, He says, "He will not fail thee, neither forsake thee."

This promise, given to all Israel and then so specifically repeated to Joshua, is thought to be of sufficient importance by our divine Father that He repeats it again to Joshua in the first chapter of the book that bears his name.

The book begins with the Lord's announcement to Joshua that Moses is dead, and that he is to have the same power and blessing that Moses enjoyed. Read and study the passage as it is given in the first chapter of Joshua. It is most encouraging and strengthening to any individual who is seeking to gain an experience with God in the real things of God.

Joshua is told, "There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life: as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. Be strong and of good courage; for thou shalt cause this people to inherit the land which I swore unto their fathers to give them. Only be strong and very courageous, to observe to do according to all the law which Moses my servant commanded thee: turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest have good success whithersoever thou goest" (Josh. 1:5-7).

Joshua was assuming one of the most important positions ever committed to a man. He was to pass through great conflict, and to be confronted with tremendous difficulties. And in this work that he was called upon to do, he was to have the assurance continually that God would be with him just as He had been with Moses; and God repeated to him that soul-strengthening promise, "I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee." And in view of this knowledge of the presence of the Lord with him, how could he fail to rise to the heights of the exhortation, "Be strong and of good courage"?

How these sure promises of God fill the soul with courage when in the midst of perplexity, calamity, and disaster! And how definite the voice in the soul, "Fear not, neither be dismayed"! God's infinite power is with His confiding, trusting followers; and He would have them know that He will "not fail" them, and that He will never "forsake" them.

It is a personal experience with such living promises as these that enables the individual to know for himself, regardless of any of the cavilings of critics, that God is true, and that the Bible is His living word. It is the test of a vital experience that the soul needs in this auspicious hour of the world's history.—Sign of the Times.

THE SUN NEEDS YOUR HELP.

If my neighbor should come to me next week and tell me that he wanted to give me a week's work to help us fill the silo, I would not only accept his offer but I would go with him and work with him and help to make his work as easy as possible.

The Southern Convention asked the writer to become circulation manager for THE CHRISTIAN SUN without salary. We realized the mountain of work which it would put on us besides our Orphanage work with its many duties and responsibilities. We wanted to see THE SUN go to every home in the Southern Convention. We wanted to see it grow in number of subscriptions. We wanted to see it put on a paying basis. We wanted to see it grow in the hearts of our folks. We wanted to see it glow and go. We want you to help us make it so by reading the little label on the front page of your paper, and if your subscription has expired mail us your check to renew. The printer needs his pay. Your renewal will help to bear this expense. Won't you help to make this work as light as possible by co-operating with me in this? This is a work of love on my part for the Church. We do it gladly. We will get a great deal of joy out of it if you will do your part. Send us your renewal when you read this letter.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XIII—September 23, 1928.

THE CHRISTIAN BASIS OF TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Let no man seek his own, but each his neighbor's good."—1 Cor. 10:24.

LESSON: 1 Cor. 8:1-13.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Rom. 14:13-21.

"Now, concerning things sacrificed to idols." What does that mean, and how does that create an issue? It is necessary to answer that question before the implication and the application of this lesson can be appreciated and interpreted in its relation to modern life. The situation was as follows: In Corinth there were temples in honor of heathen gods, temples in which there were idols to these gods. It was the custom to offer sacrifices to these idols, usually sacrifices of animals. These animals were then sold to be used as food. In some cases they were taken to private homes; in other cases they were eaten at banquet tables in the temple itself. The question was, "Should a Christian eat meat that had been offered to an idol?" "If not, why not?" A rather plausible argument was offered to justify those who felt that they were within their rights in eating such meat. They suggested that they knew there was only one god, and that idols were nothing. Furthermore, in view of this fact, meat that had been offered to idols was not different from any other meat. Therefore they would eat it, and eat it all the more readily because of their Christian liberty. It was not so far-fetched reasoning after all. But Paul, with a profound spiritual insight, saw a little deeper into the issue. He agreed that there was no god but one God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he admitted that offering meat to an idol that was, after all, nothing, could not hurt the meat. But Paul reminded his Corinthian friends that there was something else to be considered. How about those who did not have "this knowledge?" How about the responsibility of the stronger brother for the weaker brother? How about the influence on the man with the weak conscience, when he saw those who were supposed to be Christians doing the things that he thought was wrong? Or what is as bad, what about his standards when those who were Christians put their stamp of approval on something which he had not thought through? There was indeed a very vital issue here, an issue of far-reaching significance and influence. Paul insists that men have social responsibilities as well as personal liberties. They are their brothers' keepers. What is apparently all right in itself must be evaluated in terms of its effect on others. A man must not do as he pleases, but he must act in such a way that the good of all will be guaranteed. Liberty does not mean license.

Now, all this is not something ancient and remote. Right now we are confronting this issue. The question has been injected into the present political campaign. The question put to Paul, "Now, concerning things sacrificed to idols" might be paraphrased and stated thus: "Now, concerning the drinking of liquor"—for at heart the issue is the same.

The argument of personal liberty is usually the last resort of those who are opposed to the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act. "I can take a drink or leave it alone" is the slogan of the man who wants liquor, and he usually takes his drink. Now, it would be interesting to go more into detail in regard to the present situation, but space forbids. Several things need to be said, however, which cannot be discussed at length.

1. Prohibition has not been given a fair chance.
2. Even if it had been given a fair chance, it has not been in force long enough to have effected all that it is designed to effect.
3. Many, if not most, of those who flagrantly and defiantly defy the law are professing members of the Church.
4. Mere law will never solve the problem.
5. The liquor business has proved again and again that it is not amenable to any law, however liberal. In essence, it has always been an outlaw.
6. The attempt to modify the amendment and all anti-liquor laws is an attempt to make legally right what is morally wrong.
7. Those who raise the cry of "infringement of personal liberty" are either blind to the fact that after all there is only limited personal liberty, or they deliberately misrepresent the issue.
8. The liquor problem is not so much a matter of personal liberty as it is a matter of social redemption.
9. If the matter is ever settled at all it can be settled only on the basis of Paul's principle.

This suggests something that came to the writer's knowledge last week. In the town where he is spending his vacation (these notes were written in August) there lived a successful, prosperous business man, a Jew who held the respect and confidence of all those who knew him and dealt with him. This man had from his early days had his "toddy" and thought nothing of it. He was getting along in years when the eighteenth amendment went into effect. But, unlike so many of those who call themselves good citizens and 100 per cent Americans, when the amendment went into effect he absolutely refused to have liquor in his house or to touch it anywhere or at any place. He accounted for his action by saying that his country had outlawed the thing and that as an American citizen he was going to support the law by his personal example. To the writer there is something magnificent about this. Here is the solution of the matter. If the men and women and the young people who have been looking at the thing from the standpoint of their personal tastes, or who have boasted that they have "beaten the law" would have a sense of honor and would use their personal, moral influence in behalf of law observance, we would go a long way toward solving the situation. There must be, of course, a new emphasis upon law enforcement. The Christian people must arise in their might and make violators of the law pay the penalty. But the solution is not in law enforcement, but in law observance. It would help a great deal if some of our people would have the courage to stop serving it in their homes and before their own children, if men of affairs would have the courage to say "no" to their associates; if young women would refuse to associate with young men who persisted in carrying their flask, and if young men would set a better example for the young women. There are those who say that all this is visionary and idealistic. But in the long run it is the only constructive way. One thing is sure—we are never going to solve the liquor problem by making it legal. Nor are we going to help the situation any by making it possible for those who want to get it to get it from the State or from any other approved source rather than from the bootlegger. When one considers the source of history, one who has the faith based on the character and purposes of God can see that the present turmoil is the travail period of a new order, which, though delayed and perhaps long delayed, will come in the providence of God. The liquor traffic is wrong, and eventually it is doomed. It has the sentence of death in itself. Therefore, let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we fight and pray, and faint not.

TOPIC: "How Missionary Interest Broadens Our Knowledge."—Acts 14:19-28. (Missionary meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

Just to follow the footsteps of Paul would give us a remarkable knowledge of the Near East (v. 19).

To study the experiences of missionaries leads to intimate knowledge of peoples, customs and prejudices (v. 20).

One-half of the world does not know how the other half lives and cares little for the sorrows and needs of the others (v. 22).

Traveling with missionaries we learn facts that no one but a missionary would think of speaking about (vs. 24-28).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Ask any one who is not interested in missions how much he knows about any missionary country, and note the answer. The more obscure the country, the greater the ignorance of it.

School books may give facts about a country's products and history, but only missionaries tell of its spiritual interests, its superstition, its need of Christ.

There are people who still think that India is a country of ignorant savages. Missionary interest has shown us a people eagerly seeking for God.

Missionaries know the people they live among far better than tourists or travelers. They get at character, which is deeper than customs. Oddities have only passing interest; human needs make a strong appeal.

A Few Illustrations.

Few of us would think of studying the negro in the South unless we were led to do it through missionary interest.

A modern book on China is more interesting than a novel. The missionary has no ax to grind and can afford to tell the truth.

Our ideas of Mexicans, gained from newspapers, make them out to be bandits; but missionaries see another side and tell another story. The Mexican has fine traits and great possibilities.

The missionary traveler, like Livingstone, is good company. He gives us eyes to see things that other interests do not wish us to see, as, for instance, child labor in China.

To Think About.

- What missionary book has interested you?
- What do you know about Mohammedanism?
- What missionary's life have you read?

NOTICE.

Dr. W. Leon Tucker, of Chicago, a man called of God, nationally noted as an evangelist, Bible teacher and publisher, will conduct a revival campaign for Christ in First Christian Church, corner of Washington and County Streets, Portsmouth, Va., beginning September 9th, continuing for two weeks, closing September 23rd, with three services each Sunday—11 A. M., 3 and 7:30 P. M.—shop meetings at noon, and each evening during the week at 7:30. These services will be devoted exclusively to the deification of Christ and the glory of God, predicated only upon God's eternal Word, dictated and directed only by the Holy Spirit.

Three competent and consecrated musicians will assist Dr. Tucker in this great campaign, using fourteen musical instruments. The musical program will be of unusual and marvelous spiritual character.

Dr. Tucker has been wondrously used of God in the principal cities of the United States, filling the largest Churches with great crowds who are hungry to hear the gospel of Christ in word and song. Tidewater Virginia is to be congratulated in securing the services of those people of God.

We cordially invite all sister Churches to engage in these services; also all those who can attend will be sincerely welcomed. Pray with—pray for us that God's will be done—Rom. 15:30.

H. C. CAVINESS, Pastor.

REVIVAL MEETING.

We began our revival at Forest Home the fifth Sunday in July and continued through the following Friday night. We had a real good meeting, receiving five members. Rev. Staley Hunt, of Elon class of '28, did the preaching, and did it in a very simple, thoughtful, spiritual way. We predict for him a great future in the Christian ministry.

Our revival at Roanoke began Sunday, August 19th, and closed Sunday night, August 26th. Rev. Jesse H. Dollar did the preaching, and did it in a thoughtful, forceful way. The great congregations that thronged the Church every night gave evidence that his messages were appreciated. We received twenty members, six by letter and fourteen by profession of faith, making a total of twenty-six that we have received since June 1st. Our little Church now has a total of sixty-five members.

We are now looking forward to the time of our annual Conference that meets with us in less than two months. We are expecting one of the best Conferences in our history in this section.

I have been quite busy in revivals this summer, helping other pastors. Am this week engaged in a revival at New Harmony with Rev. W. T. Meacham. When I am through here I hope to be at home a while and catch up with neglected work there. May God strengthen His workers and cause His kingdom to prosper is the prayer of an humble servant.

G. H. VEAZEY.

One of our very busy men is Rev. G. D. Hunt, of the Alabama Conference. He has just finished his round of revival meetings at his Churches, in which he enjoyed splendid service. He received into Church fellowship about thirty members, one of whom was a good old mother about seventy-two years of age. Bro. Hunt adds: "I baptized at two Churches last Sunday and preached at two others. Rev. G. H. Veazey, J. H. and J. D. Dollar and Carl Dollar have been my helpers. All of these brethren were well received and their efforts were appreciated. My own son, George S., preached for me at New Hope, Mt. Zion and Pleasant Grove. I am so fond of our young ministers and do hope and pray that our Churches here in Alabama will not let them have to go to other fields for a living. We have here a great door opened to all young men who are qualified and willing to work. I am praising God for these young men." The Alabama Conference should see to it that these young men, three of whom have just graduated from Elon College, are given work in its bounds. They are strong and worthy young men and are capable of doing great things for the Lord. If the Churches of that Conference would get busy and give these young men a living salary, the Conference would feel the weight of their work in a very few years. It is, indeed, a consummation greatly to be desired.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

MONDAY.

DOING ONE'S BEST.

"She of her want (poverty) did cast in all she had."—Mark 12:44.

There is a story of a weak-minded lad who had the habit of bringing his father sticks. Because of his weakness and innocence, the family loved him especially dear. Yet there was apparently no evidence of affection on his part. One day when other children were gathering flowers and bringing them to their parents, the poor little lad gathered a bundle of dry sticks and brought them to his father. Said the father, "I valued those sticks more than all the fairest of flowers."

We are not equally gifted. Some can do great things while others do the lesser. But the Master says, even a "cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple," shall be rewarded.

Prayer.—Give me, Lord Jesus, a heart that knows and is obedient to truth, and give me courage to do my best always, and rejoice in Thy glory. Amen.

TUESDAY.

OPPORTUNITY.

"As we have, therefore, opportunity, let us do good."—Gal. 6:10.

Somebody has said, "Well doing is the supreme condition of well being. We become good only in the measure that we do good."

The above text is Paul's passion for every one to seize every opportunity to do good which he says is the only possible way to expand our capacity for God and become a force in the world.

"Opportunity" is a hackneyed expression and a tedious one. We rather drift than to struggle to see opportunity, or to be reminded of it. To those who are sore or sour, it is offensive, for it is contrary to all their experiences. To those who are alert and hopeful it is the spice of effort.

"The golden moments in the strain of life rush past us and we see nothing but sand. Angels come to visit us and we know them only when they are gone."

Like missing something—the ship is warmed up, ready to sail with one more moment to go, and we miss it. How oft to the door of a man's soul comes the opportunity that would have changed his life from beggary to wealth, loneliness to joy, from sin to Christ! But we didn't realize it and the silent invisible figure passed away laden with priceless worth to us. Lost: one golden opportunity.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou hast bestowed upon us a great gift in spiritual alertness, and forbid that the devil shall take it away from us. May we rejoice in Thy word, in Thy service and in Thy love forever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

MURDERING OPPORTUNITY.

"It repenteth me that I have set up Saul."—1 Sam. 15:11.

"The Lord departed from Saul."—1 Sam. 18:12.

The following are types of folks in relation to their opportunities: He who murders opportunity; he who misses opportunity; he who grasps opportunity; he who creates opportunity.

King Saul murdered it. What an opportunity his was to be a king! But, being drunk with the power conferred upon him, he claimed as a right what he should have held as a privilege. The kingdom was not his. It was God's. Do you regard the things above you as yours or God's?

We covet things and then when we get them we are seized with a spirit of greed and forget the use of possession.

Prayer.—Our Father and our God, hold Thou our hearts within the hollow of Thy hands at all times and may we know and never forget the true meaning of life and the possession of gifts and use all that life is for its highest ends. Amen.

THURSDAY.

MISSING OPPORTUNITY.

"While Thy servant was busy here and there he was gone."—1 Kings 20:40.

"Let us fear lest a promise being given us—we should come short of it."—Heb. 4:1.

Dickens' "Mr. Micawber" was always waiting for something "to turn up" and then when it turned up he happened not to be there.

Often we grow eloquent over chances and hopes which are extended to us, and equally pathetic over the chances which blight our anticipations. We have not been bad. We have meant well, but by some mischance due to training or something else just as vital we have developed distraction, and concentration and creativeness is impossible, and tragedy turns to doom.

God wants us to be His in the coronation of Jesus Christ in the trifle of life as well as the bigger things. To delay in doing this means that one day we shall want Him and He will be gone. It is one of the saddest things of life to be cut out for something good, or to be in line for a fortune and then miss it. Maybe a hair's breadth, but even so a miss is as far as a mile, and the prize is lost just the same. There is as much obedience to God in alertness to opportunity to do good as there is in praying.

Prayer.—Our dear Father above, we need all of Thee our souls can contain. Give us Thyself, Thy light, Thy grace, Thy spirit, that we may believe and do Thy will always. Amen.

FRIDAY.

GRIPPING OPPORTUNITY.

"Who so harkeneth unto me shall dwell securely, and shall be quiet without fear of evil."—Prov. 1:33.

"Who so harkeneth." This is the typical successful man. He is a man alert in foresight, intent in concentrating energies in important things, patient to acquire skill in some particular things, doing his best with what he has. The world is looking for just such folks. The Church waits for those whose services are keen to the call of humanity and are always on hand to respond to any need the welfare of the people demands.

Prayer.—Our Father, as we turn our thoughts to Thee, Thy spirit speaks and says, "Who so heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them" shall be successful. Grant unto us ears to hear Thy voice, and a perfect understanding of what success is, and bestow upon us the courage to be strong and never faint. Amen.

SATURDAY.

CHEATING OPPORTUNITY.

"Through all these things we are more than conquerors."—Rom. 8:37.

This is a very rare type. It is the ideal. This is the one who takes discouragements, disappointments, failures, sorrows, etc., as an opportunity to show strength of soul and will, as an opportunity to interpret life into something better, as an open door to a victorious spirit.

Sir Walter Scott went into bankruptcy, lost everything he had but it didn't phase him. He said, "My adversity is a tonic and a bracer." Paul discovered a conquering spirit through tribulations. The way of Jesus was beset with great hardships which culminated in a death on a felon's cross without a scintillation of guilt of wrongdoing, but along His way He spoke truths which have controlled the thought of nineteen centuries. Even the cross has become the rallying point of the ages, and its message the inspiration of the world. The spirit of sublime faith draws from the Lord things of the world the power to rise above them.

Prayer.—Our Father, the Giver of every good and perfect gift, give us the conquering spirit of Paul, the loving and enduring spirit of Jesus, and make us steadfast forever. Amen.

SUNDAY.

LIFE'S IMMOVABLE THINGS.

"This word—signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken—that those things which are not shaken may remain."—Heb. 12:27.

Every day brings to our attention things that are shaken and pass away—old landmarks, collapsed institutions, broken cables, ripped dirigibles, fallen trees, blasted traditions, fixed standards, time-worn safeguards, blasted hopes, vanishing possessions and securities and brightened souls. The world is staggering in unutterable sorrows amidst things that are falling and passing away, and man's soul is crying for the everlasting something that cannot be shaken.

What is our hope? The ocean, lashed by the winds, piles up in terrific fury, but back of it is some power that always holds it. The furies of life may rage against one and shipwreck him, but truth banished is not vanguard. Amidst all the convulsions, it is the same, "Though crushed to the earth will rise again."

There are a few eternal verities we may always hold on to by which we are lifted from the debts to the heights. First, "not by might nor by power, but by my spirit," saith the Lord. Second, God is everlasting and doeth all things well to them that love and serve Him." Third (as was said of Lincoln), "Righteousness and judgements are the habitation of his throne." Fourth, "God is our refuge and strength, therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, though the mountains be shaken into the heart of the sea—God is in the midst of her—she shall not be moved."

Prayer.—Dear Father, in Thy light shall we see light and be light. Enlighten our souls and our minds that we may find Thee near us in all life's experiences. Amen.

COMMITTEE REPORT.

Suffolk, Va., Aug. 31, 1928.

A committee of ministers selected by Dr. W. T. Walters, in pursuance of a motion passed by the last session of the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference, to act on the matter of his relation to said Conference, as a minister, met today in the Suffolk Christian Church and was called to order by Dr. L. E. Smith at 10 A. M. The following were present: Revs. L. E. Smith, W. W. Staley, I. W. Johnson, B. J. Earp, W. C. Hook, J. F. Morgan, A. R. Flowers, T. N. Lowe, O. D. Poythress and G. O. Lankford. Dr. W. T. Walters, Mrs. J. A. Williams and three laymen from the Valley Conference were also present. Prayer led by Dr. W. W. Staley.

It was agreed that the ministers present could act for the twelve selected.

Dr. L. E. Smith was elected chairman; I. W. Johnson, secretary.

Statements were made by Dr. W. T. Walters and others.

After having heard the statements, Rev. J. F. Morgan presented the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Dr. W. T. Walters, a minister of the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference, has admitted certain financial wrong-doing; and, whereas, in view of this admission, the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference, at its last

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Little children always appeal to the tender heart-strings of us all. They should appeal to us. They are the most precious little beings in all God's creation—and the most helpless. The little orphan child is the most helpless of them all. Think of a little tot left fatherless and homeless, without food, clothes, and friends, who really care for it. Can you imagine any being more pitiful or more helpless! Do you know of any being you would rather take money out of your pocket and help than the little helpless child? Then, after you have contributed from year to year to see this little helpless child develop into a splendid young man or a young woman, as the case may be, to be a worthy citizen of our country; perhaps a teacher to train and teach children, perhaps a stenographer to give honest and faithful service to some business concern, perhaps a foreign missionary to carry the gospel of Jesus Christ to the foreign fields where they know not His name. Or it may be a young man that you have helped through your Orphanage and he goes out to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, or he may engage in some useful occupation whereby he can render valuable service to human-kind. Then you see the fruits of your gifts and rejoice that you have had a part. It's a joy to give and see the fruits of your giving grow into splendid young womanhood or manhood. Because you have helped them when they had no other friend to whom they could go.

Since our last report, our good friend, Mr. H. A. Carlton, shipped us 1,062 bushels of oats from the farm in South Carolina. Bro. Carlton gets lots of real joy out of helping us in this work. Holland & Beamon Company shipped us a car of coal to keep our buildings warm and comfortable this winter. These good people make this annual donation every year. It is so much help to us in our work. The Junior Philathea Class, Suffolk, Va., sent us 24 cans of soup for the children. Mrs. W. H. Boon, Durham, N. C., 1 package of dresses. Mrs. Cora Zeider, Mansfield, Ill., 4 pillows, 8 cases, 1 sheet. For all these contributions we are very grateful.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

session, accepted his resignation and the return of his credentials as a minister; and, whereas, said Conference, in session, referred this matter to a committee of ministers to be selected by Dr. W. T. Walters, with full power to act in the matter; and, whereas, Dr. W. T. Walters, on August 31, 1928, personally appeared before the undersigned members of the committee and made confession of his wrong, with evidences of penitence for same, and with the request that he be forgiven; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That this committee disapprove the conduct of Dr. W. T. Walters on his part in the improper use of the sacred funds of the Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention; and, in view of his penitence and request, recommend that he be forgiven.

2. That the action of the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference be approved, in the matter of accepting his resignation from the ministry, and the return of his credentials; and the Conference be commended for the high standard of honesty and integrity expressed thereby.

3. That Dr. W. T. Walters be given another opportunity to make good as a minister; therefore, recommend that temporary permission be given him to continue his work for two years (with full ministerial privileges except performing the marriage ceremony), and that at the end of two years, if no further complaints are sustained against him, his full ordination credentials be restored to him.

4. That Dr. W. T. Walters be advised not to accept pastoral work in the Valley Conference for the next two years.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the secretary of the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference and to Dr. W. T. Walters with instruction that they be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Bethlehem Christian Church witnessed a very successful and inspirational revival during the past week. We feel that much good was accomplished for the Kingdom. There were around two hundred reconsecrations, twenty-five confessions of faith and nineteen additions to the church. Attendance was good throughout the week, deportment excellent. The children and young people took prominent part in the singing; this feat sure added greatly to the success of the music. In spite of the fact that Rev. O. D. Poythress was called to go back home and bury two or three of his immediate flock during the week, he did some very effective and forceful preaching, and only missed one service after he began on Monday night. The meeting came to a close on Friday night, being by far too short. It is a pity that rural churches only have one week for revival services during the year. It is the convictions of the writer that each church should have at least ten or twelve days of revival services during the year and these to come consecutively. We are hoping and praying that this meeting is just the beginning of a great revival at Bethlehem.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield is doing some wonderful preaching at "Isle of Wight Christian Church" this week. However the roads being rough, made so by a much needed rain, is keeping some away that would be among the number: the people are coming out in goodly numbers. The music is all that could be asked for. Will THE SUN Family join us in prayer for the meeting?

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle will begin a series of revival services at the "Windsor Christian Church" 8 p. m. Sept. 9th. Those who have heard Bro. Hardcastle, know of his ability in this work. Let us pray that God may give us a great awakening in Windsor.

Revival services begins at "Antioch Christian Church" Sept. 16, afternoon and night services. All are invited. Rev. O. D. Poythress will be the speaker.

Bro. G. W. Uzzell, a faithful member of Antioch Christian Church, was taken ill Sunday morning, Sept. 2nd, after attending to the chores and sent for the doctor, but when he arrived, the end had come. He walked among us over seventy-two years, and leaves a host of friends and loved ones to grieve their loss but his gain. Services were conducted by the writer and interment was made in the "Antioch Cemetery."

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

Perhaps some of our people who have missionary zeal in their hearts would like to hear something of our work in Carroll County, Va. For the past two summers the writer has spent the vacation months on the field of this work, but as I have not yet finished my course at Elon College it becomes necessary for me to return for the opening of the fall semester. I wish to state that my work during the past summer months among those our friends of Carroll County has been very pleasant. The work was more interesting this summer than ever before because I have become more intimately acquainted with the people and the situation and can better adapt myself to the work.

During the summer we had delegations from four of our Churches to visit us and render to the people programs that were beneficial. Those that were represented by delegations were First Church, Burlington, N. C.; the Third Avenue Church, Danville, Va.; Palm Street and First Churches of Greensboro, N. C. All of these visits brought to us messages of joy through words of comfort and songs of praise. Such visits bring our people of the different Churches in closer contact with our work. In this way we may become better acquainted with the work of missions. So many of the people of our Church who call themselves Christians (and, by the way, I might say some of our Churches, too) have not as yet seen any need for the missionary effort and work which Christ commanded His followers to do. Too often is it the case that when we think of missionary work it seems to us as some foreign object that does not deserve or require our attention. Yet I frankly say that it is foreign in our minds when we have not been brought in contact with the matter. Christ said, "Seeing they may see and not perceive, and hearing they may hear and not understand: lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them" (Mark 4:12). God grant that some of our people may be "converted and that their sins should be forgiven them"—the sin of a neglected duty; the sin of omission.

I made mention of our meeting at Elks Spur in a previous issue of THE SUN. Now I will give a brief account of the Rocky Ford meeting, which was held the last two weeks of August. Bro. P. T. Klapp came to assist in this meeting, but owing to illness of his wife he was called away at the beginning of the meeting. I tried to get some one else to continue the meeting, but all my efforts were in vain. Bro. Klapp, Dr. Atkinson, and others advised me to carry on the meeting myself. I was somewhat backward because I had never conducted a revival. I knew there were souls lost and no one to lead them to repentance by a gospel message; and by the help of God and through the prayers of those who were praying for me, we managed to continue the meeting for ten days. As God would have it, we were blessed with a revival. Eight made a confession of faith, and others reconsecrated their lives to Christ. As a result, we still have nine to unite with us in the Church. I will carry Bro. Klapp with me at my next appointment to conduct a baptismal service.

The Church has witnessed a revival in the hearts of some of her members. Much good has been done to the community. I feel that there has been a revival within my own soul as well as in the lives of others. I feel stronger spiritually after having trusted the Lord for such spiritual blessings as He saw fit to bestow upon us.

HOME-COMING DAY AT BEREAL.

For six or eight years, on the first Sunday in September, we have had a home-coming day at the Berea Church. So yesterday was our home-coming day at this Church, and it really was one of the best we have had yet. We always meet members of our Church that we never see at any other time; also we frequently meet friends that we haven't seen for years. On this occasion I met two brethren I had not seen for thirty years; but what added to the chief joy and pleasure of the day was the presence of three of our ex-pastors—Chaplain H. E. Rountree, Rev. W. C. Hook and Dr. G. O. Lankford and family. Chaplain Rountree held his audience spellbound in the morning with one of his most powerful sermons on "Unbaptized Powers, or What Must I Do?" In this sermon he outlined the many wonderful powers God has given His children to be used for the good of His kingdom, for the uplift of humanity, for the saving of the world; yet so often we find these powers misused, thoughtlessly and carelessly considered. Then the question, "What must I do?" or what must we do with this most momentous problem with which our life must have to do. It was a great sermon. In the afternoon Rev. W. C. Hook gave us another heart-searching, soul-inspiring sermon on just the one word, "Home." Bro. Hook's convincing, indispensable, commendable methods brought out that are essential for the right kind of a home were expressed with such power and effect that our very souls were stirred within us. To have these two much-beloved ex-pastors to bring us such telling messages on this home-coming day was a treat that brought so much joy and gladness to our hearts that we cannot find words to express it. Dr. Lankford's visit also so broadened the smiles of us Bereans that you might have thought we had seen a heavenly vision on this glad home-coming day.

Dr. Lankford surely holds a warm place in hearts of the people in this community both in and out of the Church. Chaplain Rountree and Bro. Hook, too, are highly thought of and esteemed by our people. We cannot help loving all of our ex-pastors. May the Lord's richest blessing rest upon them all along the way. This day has brought so much pleasure in our midst that we pray the Lord may grant us many more.

KECK.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom, to call from labor to reward one of our oldest members, Mrs. Sarah Keck, on July 6, 1928, she also being a charter member of the Ladies' Aid Society of Bethlehem Christian Church; resolved:

1. That while we miss her presence and untiring aid in our meetings, we feel that our loss has been her gain.

2. That we extend to her family our heartfelt sympathy, and may our Heavenly Father bless, comfort and sustain them.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publica-

IN MEMORY.

We, the Ladies' Aid Society of Bethlehem Christian Church, feel so keenly the passing of two of our former members, Mrs. Lydia Waynick Isley, of Hines Chapel Christian Church, on May 13th, and Mrs. Annie Paschall Beunette, of Berea Christian Church, on July 21st. While we mourn the loss of our dear sisters, we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

Their lives and influences has been a blessing to us, to the Church and to the community in which they labored so faithfully. May we imitate their good examples by always being faithful to God's cause. We express to their loved ones our deepest sympathy and commend them to the Lord for comfort.

.. THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ..

PASTORS AND MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

In its issue of September 13th, the Congregationalist carries an address given by Rev. George E. Green, in which this vital question is discussed; a business man sending to his mission board a check for $500 asked this question: "What is the matter with the Churches that they are falling off in their giving to missions at a time when the country is more prosperous than ever before?" Rev. Mr. Green summarizes four points in reply to this question. We would like CHRISTIAN SUN readers to get these four points of the compass, that they may see if our Christian Church is steering in the right direction in the missionary enterprise. We wonder if any of our pastors or our Churches can plead guilty to the very plain indictment:

1. A very large proportion of Church members have never given whole-hearted allegiance to the program of Jesus. They have never "joined Him in His enterprise." They believe in, or on, Jesus, but they do not believe what He says. They ignore or reject the great command. They "don't believe in missions."

2. It follows that very many of our Churches are organized and working for themselves, and not for others. Many of our modern Churches have degenerated into social clubs. They do not seem to understand that "the missionary enterprise is not the Church's afterthought; it is Christ's forethought. It is not secondary and optional; it is primary and vital."

3. The kingdom is not getting its rightful share of the Christian's dollar. We do not give to missions as we spend for other things. The cost of high living leaves small surplus for Christ and His Church. The Christians of America are rich in goods, and spending more than is meet upon themselves.

4. Very many of our pastors are not "sold" to the world-wide work. Their interests are bounded by the local parish. But the pastor is the key-man to the problem. He must lead His Church in missionary interest and giving. If he does not—like priest, like people.

As I look at it, the pastor's part hinges largely upon these four things mentioned. These are some of the obstacles encountered by our missionary car as it tries to climb Apportionment Hill. Doubtless there are others. Or, to put it in another way, these are the four brakes that retard its progress. Now the pastor of the local Church is the driver of the missionary machine. It is his business to see that there is plenty of gasoline in the tank, plenty of oil, plenty of water, that the battery is charged, and that the brakes are off! The other day I took a trip to a neighboring town with the brakes on all the way. And I put them on myself! The local pastor himself is gas, oil, water, electricity, but he must not be a brake. He must fill up, loosen up, and step on the gas.

Let us very hastily go back over our diagnosis, noting the points mentioned.

First, many of our members do not believe in missions. At least, some say they do not, and they act as if they did not. Neither do they like that word "apportionment." I question very much, however, whether they would like some newly coined word which would mean the same thing any better. Well, the pastor must believe in the missionary work of his denomination, so wholeheartedly that there will be no question as to where he stands. "For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself for war?" And he must try to direct the gaze of his people beyond the apportionment, to the end it serves. Meeting the apportionment is not the main thing; the main thing is the helping of a struggling Church here in the homeland, the support of a village school in India, the maintenance of a hospital in Porto Rico. The pastor's chief concern should not be to get his Church upon the honor roll in the State minutes, or year-book; but the building of the kingdom of God in America and China.

Second, many of our Churches have no vision of the world-wide need, and of their opportunity. They would live for themselves alone, if they were left to themselves. It is the pastor's privilege and should be his pastime, to be forever stirring such a Church out of its lethargy. He should keep before it the Master's great command—and the Churches' obedience to it, as the condition of his great promise—his continued presence and power. As pastors, we should make our Churches understand that it is as sinful for a Church to live for itself as it is for an individual.

Missionary Program Primary and Vital.

I sometimes wonder what the reaction would be if, in some of our Churches which so lack the missionary spirit, the pastor some Sunday should take the attitude of so many in the pews, and say: "Brethren, I am convinced that the whole missionary enterprise is a mistake; I do not believe the angels at Bethlehem ever said that the gospel was for all people; I do not believe that God loves the whole world, and that Jesus told His disciples to take His gospel to the end of the earth; or that Paul knew what he was talking about when he said he was debtor to all those who knew not Jesus Christ." Possibly some pastors speaking thus, like a heathen, might be able to shock their Churches out of their heathenism. It is the pastor's business to make his Church see that the missionary program is not secondary and optional, but, instead, primary and vital to the very life of the Church.

We said that the missionary enterprise was not getting its proper share of the Christian's dollar; that we do not give for the Church and the kingdom as we spend for other things. And that is true. It is true everywhere and all the time. Doubtless, some of you have seen the diagram showing how the average American spends his dollar. The figures are based upon total population, earnings and expenditures of the nation. Here are four items from the nine: He spends twenty-four and one-half cents for actual living expenses, twenty-two cents for luxuries, wastes fourteen cents, and then gives three-fourths of one cent to the Church. With these figures before him the pastor of the local Church can set himself as a rock against the prevalent and foolish idea that the reason why our Congregational Churches fail in reaching the missionary goal is because they are "hard up." There is money to burn if we can get hold of it.

When the saloons went out of business some years ago, they say the "wets" had a song, "How dry I am." The song most popular now among our Churches is "How poor we are!" If I were to write another to go with these just mentioned, I think it would have the title, "How tired I am"—of hearing finance committees and Church people generally sing "How poor we are!" This is the most popular song in our Churches. Everybody is singing it! They sing it on my own field. They sing it all the way across the State to the Black Hills. And all the time there is money enough in most of our communities to meet the apportionment if you can only get hold of it.

The Poverty Complex in Church Life.

The pastor of the local Church should see to it that his people do not acquire the poverty complex, or if his Church has it, he should seek to cast out that particular devil. There is money for full apportionment in most of our Churches, and it is the task of the pastor and the missionary committee to get it. The pastor has a right to go after it, whatever the condition of the Church treasury. To illustrate: in our Church last fall, at Thanksgiving time, we were behind on local expenses, including pastor's salary. Our Church was singing, "How poor we are!" But I urged a generous thankoffering on the part of the whole Church, and secured eighty-five dollars—a great surprise to us all. This spring our Easter offering made under the same depressing conditions amounted to fifty-five dollars—and ours is a small Church.

In the average Church, it is not lack of money; it is lack of something else. If I had given heed to the mood of the people, and emphasized the deficit in our local expense account, we would not have had more than fifteen dollars on either occasion, and the hundred dollars or more which we would not have received for missions would have gone for "gas" rather than into the local budget.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Medical College of Virginia, Richmond, opened last week. Dr. Sanger is president and Mr. Ralph McCauley is executive secretary. There is a large enrollment.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., president of the Southern Christian Convention, was a visitor at THE CHRISTIAN SUN office last week. Business brought him to Richmond.

The protracted meeting will begin at Salem Chapel the fifth Sunday of September. Rev. J. L. Foster is pastor and expects to be assisted in the services by a competent and successful helper. Here is hoping that it will be a great and good meeting, as evangelism is the harvest of gospel sowing.

Rev. S. M. Lynam, known to all SUN readers, has accepted the pastorate of the Christian Church at Freehold, N. Y., to which place he will go at an early date from his present charge in Toronto, Ont. Bro. Lynam feels happy over the prospect of his labors in his new field.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis are this week and last week conducting evangelistic services at Wake Chapel, Fuquay Springs, N. C. It was the editor's privilege to be in some of their services, and it goes without saying that the services are very impressive, full of evangelistic zeal, consecration and efficiency. Large audiences are attending these services.

Prof. W. J. Cotten, who for many years has been an instructor in Elon College and who presented his resignation at commencement to enter the field of secondary education, has accepted a position as head of the department of Latin in the Petersburg, Va., High School. We felicitate the Petersburg School Board on its good judgment in securing Prof. Cotten's services.

Rev. Joe French, of Wedowee, Ala., graduated from Elon College last commencement. Bro. French is one of our strong young men and made a fine record at Elon College. He is ready now to take Church work for full-time. Any of our Churches desiring a young man of consecration and promise would do well to correspond with Bro. French. We can commend him most heartily.

Rev. H. M. Gray changes his address to 406 Jefferson Street, La Grange, Ga. He has accepted the pastorate of Hill Side Christian Church, La Grange, and Rose Hill Christian Church, Columbus, Ga. each for half-time. We feel sure his Churches that he served the past year regretted to give him up. He leaves two good Churches that deserve a worthy successor to him.

Rev. H. C. Caviness, with the assistance of Dr. Leon Tucker, of Chicago, and an able corps of musicians, is conducting a great evangelistic campaign at First Church, Portsmouth. We advise all ministers and SUN readers living within the reach of Portsmouth to attend these services when opportunity affords. Great audiences are availing themselves, and the services reach the high-water mark in evangelistic endeavor. We congratulate Bro. Caviness and the Portsmouth Church on being able to secure such distinguished and competent help.

Several inquiries have come recently as to the mission study books in missionary societies the present year. The women are using as a home mission study book "What Next in Home Missions?" For their foreign book, "Friends of Africa." The Young People's Society, "Youth and the New America" for the home work, and for foreign, "Africa Today." For children's societies as a home study book, "Indian Playmates of Navajo Land"; as a foreign, "In the African Bush."

Our attention has been called to a diagram showing how the average American spends his dollar. The figures are based upon the total population, earnings and expenditures. Of the nine items on the diagram, here are four: •The average American spends out of every dollar 24½ cents for living expenses, 22 cents for luxuries, wastes 14 cents, and then gives three-fourths of 1 cent to the Church. We can hardly be surprised that the Church is hard up, falls behind in paying the pastor's salary, and other enterprises of the Church, looked at in the light of such a division.

Rev. W. T. Scott has accepted the pastorate of the Walnut Hills Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio, and is to begin there October 1st. We regret exceedingly that some of our Churches in the South did not lay hold on Bro. Scott and keep him among his own. We need him, but Dayton is stronger for his going. Two of our very promising young men, both of whom are needed here in the South, have gone to Dayton Churches within the last two weeks—Rev. John G. Truitt and Bro. Scott. We are wondering what designs Dayton has on our Churches in the South.

If THE CHRISTIAN SUN readers miss everything else this week, we trust all will read "Kagawa," written of by Dr. Woodworth, of Japan. People in the homeland little realize what sacrifices many converts to Christianity in pagan lands really sacrifice for their Lord. Sometimes there be those of us who feel that their money, given to help carry the gospel to the heathen, is wasted. We would just like to know how many millions of dollars, if it could be estimated in dollars, the life of a man like Kagawa is worth! His is a story of one who knows how to suffer as a Christian and for his Lord. Read what Dr. Woodworth says of this living hero of the Christian faith.

The Woman's Board of the North Carolina Christian Conference, Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, president, Raleigh, N. C., met in Raleigh, in the home of Mrs. Vaughan, Friday, August 31st, and spent the day in building a program for the annual conference which will meet at the Christian Church, Sanford, N. C., 10 A. M. Friday, October 5th. The good women feel that they will present the strongest and most attractive program of any yet presented in their annual meetings, and the prospects are for a large attendance at the meeting. The women are exceedingly anxious for all the pastors in the Conference to be present, and for delegations to come from Churches that do not have missionary societies as well as from the societies. The women of this Conference have had a splendid year's work, and some of the societies have already raised in full their quota for the year, and it is believed now that the full quota for the conference will be reached by the October meeting. Mrs. J. J. Henderson, Graham, N. C., is the secretary, and will be pleased to furnish programs and information about the approaching Conference to any one desiring such information. Mrs. Vaughan very generously served a sumptuous luncheon to the members of the board, and the Mission Secretary, who greatly enjoyed the whole day, entered most heartily and fully into this particular part of the day's exercises. Mrs. Vaughan was given a unanimous vote of thanks for her royal and generous entertainment.

NOTICE.

The Palm Street Church at Greensboro will be open for a new pastor for the coming Conference year. As yet we have not called any one for this work. We feel at this time we are not financially strong enough to call a full-time pastor, but we would like to secure a pastor that could live here and serve Palm Street Church for two Sundays in the month and take some other Church elsewhere for the other two Sundays. For a pastor who could serve the Church in this way we probably could pay a little more than for just coming here and preaching two Sundays in the month and spending the remaining time somewhere else.

As chairman of the pastoral committee, I would like to hear from preachers who could consider the work here in that way. Or if any one could not consider the pastorate as I have outlined it, but could serve some other way, I would like to hear from them also. Address your communication to

A. H. HINSHAW.

Greensboro, N. C., Gen'l Del.

NOTICE.

Dr. W. Leon Tucker, of Chicago, internationally known Bible teacher and preacher, with his musical messengers, who is conducting one of the greatest meetings Tidewater Virginia ever had at the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., concludes his engagement Sunday, September 23rd, and on Monday, September 24th, Dr. Tucker will begin the conduct of a Bible conference and mission under the auspices of the Greater Norfolk Sunday School Association at the Christian Temple, in Norfolk. This conference will last one week. Services at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. every day.

Dr. Tucker's addresses and Bible expositions will be directed to Sunday School superintendents, officers, teachers and preachers, and of course, to all who will attend. The association is to be highly congratulated upon securing the services of Dr. Tucker, who is the outstanding Bible teacher in America today. All Churches and people are cordially invited to attend this conference.

Please pray therefor (Rom. 15:30).

Ch'n Arrangement Committee.

BIBLE AND THE SUN.

There are two things I want on my desk: my Bible and THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I want my Bible because I like to read it. It brings me comfort when I am discouraged and blue. It lights up my pathway when the way is dark. I want THE CHRISTIAN SUN because it keeps me in touch with my Church and her institutions. I want to know what we, as a Church, are doing. Then, too, it is filled with choice articles written by good writers, articles that elevate our minds and make us better. Every home in our Church should take THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It should carry its "SUNshine" to every individual member of our Church. If you are a subscriber to THE SUN and know of a friend who does not take it, send us $2.00 and we will be glad to send it to that family for one year. You will do that family a good deed.

We want every subscriber to help us by sending in your renewal promptly. Look on the label on the front page of your paper that bears your name and address, and also the date your subscription expires. If it has expired, please send us your renewal. It will assist us very much in paying the printer to get the paper out each week.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

THE HONEST DOUBTER.

BY REV. J. W. FIX.

"Be not faithless, but believing."—John 20:27.

There is a story of an old controversy between two men. One said the fence was black; the other one affirmed that it was white. Each one doubted the other's statement, and they almost came to blows; but the real facts were that both men were right—one side of the fence was whitewashed, the other side was weather-beaten and black. They had viewed it from different angles, and both were correct.

Some of the elements in Christianity arouse honest doubts in the minds of some men. Some view religion one way, some another. Some sincere men see the black side of the fence; others see the white side. Often one man may see it darkly and then suddenly his eyes may be opened and the white will become apparent. At one time he becomes faithless; at another time a believer. Such was true of that member of the twelve who at one time was an honest doubter, or a faithless man, but later a devout believer.

We know the man Thomas mainly for his faults. The words "Doubting Thomas" have become so proverbial that one is inclined to think that "Doubting" was his first name and that he was "Mr. Doubting Thomas." Being one who doubted his Lord, Thomas became a man of great despondency. On the other hand he possessed some of the richer qualities of Christian character. His ways seemed paradoxical; let us consider the conflicting elements of doubt and belief.

1. A man of doubts. That side of his life which portrays his gloom and doubt is so pronounced that we almost refrain from any discussion which will make it more apparent. Of the four gospel writers, only one endeavors to cite these morose moments and actions. Matthew, Mark and Luke barely mention his name. John alone gives the record. In the upper room Jesus said, "Let not your hearts be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me . . . I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go to prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know and the way ye know." To these words of hope Thomas made no favorable response. As long as he doubted his Lord's words he was faithless. "Thomas saith unto Him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way?" Even though he had been with His Lord constantly and had heard his wonderful words of life and of spirit, they meant little to him because he doubted. Thus with special emphasis "Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me."

Thomas would not—

"Come, then, and join His holy band,
And on to glory go:
To dwell in that celestial land,
Where joys immortal flow."

Thomas hesitated to join his comrades in the happy refrain—

"Only trust Him, only trust Him,
Only trust Him now;
He will save you, He will save you,
He will save you now."

After the resurrection, Jesus granted the twelve disciples the privilege of being with Him in secret; indeed, it was a rare opportunity for all. But Thomas went elsewhere. We wish he had been present, for on that occasion our Lord gave that great commission recorded by Matthew in the 28th chapter of his gospel: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." Unfortunately Thomas did not receive that personal challenge from the Master's lips. But when the other disciples saw Him they testified unto Thomas of the risen Lord, but Thomas doubted, saying, "Except I shall see in his hands the prints of the nails and put my finger into the prints of the nails and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe." A few days later some of the disciples were assembled in an upper room with Thomas. They were relating some of their experiences relative to the resurrection when Thomas reaffirms that he will not believe unless he actually see the Christ. At that moment we read Jesus appears and, looking into the face of this honest doubter, saith: "Thomas reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing." From that moment forward this honest doubter became "Not faithless, but believing" (John 20:27).

He had seen the folly of doubt, even honest doubt. And after seeing Jesus and hearing Him speak he became a believer. To this phase of his life we now turn.

2. A believing Christian. The words of the Master, "Be not faithless, but believing," take on new meaning, now that he has seen the Christ. He falls down at His feet and, with a most touching confession of faith in Him, exclaims, "My Lord and my God!" He has seen the white side of the fence. Doubts were now dispelled, and Thomas could well say with the old father, about whom Mark speaks, "Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief." Now that He was victorious, we might hear him sing:

"Just as I am, though tossed about,
With many a conflict, many a doubt,
Fightings within and fears without,
O Lamb of God, I come, I come."

Where he once doubted, he now believes and is ready to help his Lord in all things. Where once he allowed discouragement to enter his life, he now is filled with courage. Soon after the event described, a certain man named Lazarus became sick. When Jesus received the message He sorrowed. He entreats His disciples to accompany Him to the bedside of this friend. He reminds them of the faithful sisters, Mary and Martha, and of their need for comfort in the hour of distress; but the disciples feared to go. It was then 2 o'clock in the morning and the way was dangerous. They also feared the Jews, for certain of them had threatened to stone the Master. But that man to whom we have referred as "Doubting Thomas" now takes the role of "Courageous Thomas." We hear him say unto his fellow-disciples, "Let us also go, that we may die with Him."

"He was possessed of a hope that was steadfast and sure,
And no dark clouds of doubt were in his pathway to obscure."

As we study the record of the Christian religion we become fully convinced that it has won its way repeatedly in the face of questioning and uncertainty. From what has been said, we see that it had won the complete devotion from this man

Thomas, who once was a doubter. That which counted so largely in his victory was that he faced his doubts and slew them, not by accepting the dogmatic pronouncement of some foreign or external authority, but on the strength of his own religious experience and the competent evidence gained therefrom.

Having seen His Lord, risen from the grave, he believed. On this fact, Christianity makes its final appeal, for it stands or falls upon the ground of a personal experience of those verities which are unseen, yet are eternal.

It seems that there is a striking lesson in the story of Thomas the Doubter, who heeded the words of his Lord to "Be not faithless, but believing." In our own strength we know not the way. Many of us become honest doubters; we know nothing of the life beyond and we ask with Thomas, "How can we know the way?" There is but one answer, Jesus is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. May we never allow moments of grave doubt to alter our Christian living, but rather let us brush aside all tendencies of fear and confess Him, saying, "My Lord and my God." Then may we hear, "Because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed."

EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGNS.

From the second Sunday in July we were with Rev. J. W. Knight for some days at New Lebanon, where we enjoyed a gracious revival. From the fifth Sunday in July we were with Rev. H. V. Cox, at Union Cross, until the first Sunday in August. Here we enjoyed another gracious revival. During this meeting some forty or fifty entered into a covenant not to compromise with the prince of this world, but to follow the Prince of Peace. Bro. Cox will give you a fuller account of the meeting. Bro. John Allred was in attendance most of the time. It is his home Church. He is indeed a sweet-spirited brother. Bro. Cox is a young man and a much-beloved pastor by his people.

On the third Sunday in August we joined Rev. S. E. Madren in a meeting at Fancy Gap, Va., in the mountains, and for a few days we did our best in presenting Christ to those dear mountain people, and just as the interest began to give evidence of a coming revival, Dr. Dick, of Gibsonville, N. C., telegraphed me to come home at once, that my wife was very ill, so we had to leave the meeting. But Bro. Madren took courage and continued the meeting and had fine success. I suppose Bro. Madren will give a full account of the meeting. Bro. Madren's people think a great deal of him as their young pastor. Up to the time we had to leave we did all the preaching from one to three times a day in each of these meetings.

The dear Lord gave us great liberty in His spirit, and praise be to His name forever for these gospel privileges and for all the good that was accomplished. Each of these dear pastors were fine in their Christian fellowship and co-operation. We have had to turn down four other calls for evangelistic service. This kind of service is the supreme joy of my life. Praise the Lord forever.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

FINANCE AND THE KINGDOM.

How thankful we should be that God in His goodness has left to us the matter of financing His kingdom on earth. There are thousands who think this a burden. They are mistaken. It is a genuine and an unmixed blessing.

First: Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. Our Heavenly Father was so anxious for us to have our heart in His kingdom that He permitted us to give our money to it—our hard-earned and much-prized treasure. Money costs something and represents something. We can give our faith to the ultimate triumph of the kingdom, without much effort or much sacrifice. We can give our prayers, even at the end of the day, when we have finished working for ourselves or indulging in our pleasures, without much sacrifice or cost of effort. We can indulge our hopes and our anxieties that the plan of righteousness will ultimately work out in the world. These may not cost us much, but when we put our finance into the kingdom we put that which represents, and is, our energy, our effort, our wisdom, our strength, our sense of saving and of sacrifice. Our money costs something and stands for something. That is the reason why God permits us to use it in kingdom service. He wants the heart, the devotion and the spirit of effort and sacrifice which is back of and so necessary to securing the money.

Second: There is a genuine blessing and benefit in deeds that are wholly unselfish. When we give our money to financing the kingdom, and especially to the cause of missions, we pass out of the realm of the selfish and the servile into the realm of the unselfish and the Christ-like. We never expect any thanks or glory on this earth in return for money we give to missions. We do not give it for the sake of the heathen, the black man, the red man, the yellow man, or any other man whatever his condition may be. We give it for the sake of Jesus Christ. He commissioned us to do it, and we just do it for His dear sake. We may never love the yellow man and the black man and the rest well enough to part with our money for their sake because we may not know them, their needs and their conditions; but our dear Saviour knows them and wept over them, longs for their salvation and loves them. He it is who has commanded it, and it is an unspeakable blessing and benefit to give just for His dear sake and that the love of His great heart may manifest its saving power to the uttermost parts.

Third: In one way and in another we are going to spend all the money we will ever get. We will either do this while in the right exercise of our minds or leave it spent, so far as we are concerned to the mercy or mercilessness of others. God in His love has graciously shown us how we may spend some of our money in a manner to get a real thrill from it, for when we invest it with consecration and a longing desire for His will to prevail we do get a thrill and a joy and a blessing out of it such as we cannot possibly get from money invested in any other way. Not ten days ago this writer had a letter from a fine Christian girl who had this summer earned her first money. Her letter said: "I enclose you $10 from my first earned pay-check, and I want to tell you that it gives a real thrill to send this donation, which I trust is only the beginning of the hundreds I hope to work out and to give in His name in the years to come." That young lady has discovered the real romance of righteousness and is getting a real thrill and a genuine blessing from the money she earns. It is an unmixed blessing indeed to do what she can, with gratitude and thanksgiving, to build up the kingdom of our Lord on earth.

BAPTIST MISSION BOARD DISASTER.

People of the Churches everywhere are amazed and mortified over the financial disaster befallen the Southern Baptist Home Mission Board recently. The treasurer of this board, C. S. Carnes, seems to have stolen practically the whole of the available assets of the board, and while being sought by officers of the law under indictment for embezzlement, has, up to this writing, escaped apprehension. Rev. Charles E. Maddry, general secretary of missions, writing in the Biblical Recorder of September 12th, gives the following as the actual condition of the board thus far revealed by the audit:

"Assets as set up on the books, $4,276,549.68. This includes property in Havana, Cuba; the tubercular hospital at El Paso, Texas; the property of some twenty-five mountain schools that are scattered throughout the mountain States of the South, together with about $1,300,000 of invested funds of the loan department loaned out to some several hundred Churches in the South. These amounts will eventually be paid by the Churches, but many of the loans extend through a period of ten and even fifteen years. I would judge that the real value of the assets of the home board at the present time would be something like $2,500,000.

"The liabilities of the home board as of September 5th, were: notes in bank, $1,305,531.91; bonds, $1,120,000—total liabilities, $2,425,531.91. The attorney of the home board assured us that there was a possibility of salvaging from the estate of the defaulting treasurer the sum of $250,000 to $300,000. Application has been made in the courts for a receivership for the Carnes estate. However, there are other creditors, and it may be that after all the defaulting treasurer had borrowed heavily against his estate."

It is doubtful if this theft has a parallel in the annals of the Church for a century. The executive committee of the board has issued a statement saying that Carnes was given blanket authority to negotiate loans and to invest funds for the board, and to use the assets in carrying on the work of the board. The amazing feature of this transaction is revealed in the fact that Carnes was an ex-convict, having served a term in the Federal prison at Atlanta for using the mails to defraud, and squandering funds not his own. He was released, after thirteen months' imprisonment, in 1915, according to statements given the press. Prior to his imprisonment he was divorced from his wife for cruelty and inhuman treatment, though four years later was remarried to her. How one could recover so rapidly from the reproaches of such a life and win his way to the confidence and esteem of men in the Church entrusted with the handling of large sums of money, one fails to comprehend. This possibly comes from the credulity of Christian people and the desire to forgive and to give one another a chance. It has been stated, however, that members of the board did not know of the past record of their board's treasurer. At any rate, it is a most deplorable situation, and our Baptist friends have our sympathy and deepest interest in their financial catastrophe.

However, the board's work is so important that the Baptists everywhere are rallying to the need, and the good people of the Churches throughout the South are pouring in a stream of missionary contribution that the home work may continue and that the hundreds of faithful and loyal men and women in the service of the board may not be deprived of their salaries and their living, but shall be kept busy at the task of building up the kingdom of our Lord.

Whoever undertakes to work for the Lord and the advancement of His kingdom and for the building up of the cause of righteousness will meet reverses, handicaps and difficulties. Ours seems to be an age mad with the craze for money, luxury and indulgence. And to have these things there are Judas Iscariots, seemingly, in every camp who are willing to betray their Lord for the "thirty pieces of silver," which ultimately results in their own undoing and in the grief, sorrow and suffering of their brethren in the Church, whose lives are dedicated to the cause of righteousness and the Christ who pled for self-denial that His kingdom might be established in the world.

EUGENIC AND ILLEGITIMATE.

We live in a day of confused thinking, of confused standards, of confused morals.

The word eugenic means well-born, not mere physically but intellectually as well, and above all morally. It is a good word and stands for the perpetuation, improvement and progress of the human race.

In these latter days, however, in certain sections of our social order are found those who flout every content generally conceived as inherent in this good word except the physical. The physical even they would debase until it becomes equivalent in ideal and practice to animalistic. They are willing to violate all laws, all customs, all moral standards in order to satisfy their animalistic appetites. The consequence is that eugenic becomes to them the equivalent of illegitimate, not in euphemistic sense merely, but purposefully and actually.

O tempora! O mores! Who shall deliver us from the snare and delusion of this social miasma?

If there is anything that the American people, and particularly American youth, need to realize in this day it is that laws, customs, conventions, ethical and moral standards should occupy an important place in life and in social organizations. When people call black white and darkness light, and make eugenic and illegitimate synonyms, it is time for sound teaching and earnest prayer.

KEYS.

Locks and keys are familiar words. One usually thinks of keys as metal instruments with which to open metal locks; but anything that opens something to the understanding is a key. There are keys in music and there is the keynote. There are keys to mathematical works as algebra, geometry, calculus; and then there are translations to classics in Latin and Greek. People talk about getting the key to the situation: the key-man, the key-subject, and the key-situation.

The Bible is the key to the heart—the heart of God and the heart of man. It is the greatest key within the reach of man. The world was in the dark until the Bible was written; and it is in the dark now where it is not read. Countries without the Bible now are listed as dark nations; and there were ages called the Dark Ages, embracing the period from the fifth to the fifteenth centuries. The Reformation opened the eyes of the world and gave us modern Christian civilization. The Bible opens the mind to see God as the Creator of all things, and to see Jesus Christ as the Saviour of mankind. Wherever the Bible has gone it has opened the eyes of the mind as Jesus opened the physical eyes of the blind. The Bible not only opens the mind, but the mouth to “proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.” The Bible opens the heart to feel its lost condition in sin and the way of salvation through repentance and faith in Jesus Christ. It is the key which the Holy Spirit uses to unlock the chamber of the soul. No human key can unlock the secret chamber of the heart and quicken the conscience into action like the word of God. It “is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and the intents of the heart.”

The word of God has opened the Church, it has unlocked the door into the greatest institution known to man. It is the only door that welcomes all human beings without reference to race, nationality, age, education, character, position, or anything that human organizations and institutions require for entrance to their meetings. That seems to have been a time-lock, but the Bible is the key that finally opened its secrets and engraved “Welcome” over its doors. “If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.”

This key opens the purse. It not only opens the purse to give, but it opens the way to fill the purse by prosperity unknown outside of Bible lands. It teaches men that it is more blessed to give than to receive.” The Christian nations are the liberal nations. Schools, hospitals, homes for the aged, the orphan, the poor, the insane, all testify to the purse opened by this master-key—the Bible. There is no door that this key cannot unlock. Through the discoveries and inventions of Christian civilization, it has opened the door to the secrets of nature and given us steam, coal, gas, electricity, with all the conveniences and evidences of God’s love. Above all, God gave His only Son, through whom we see God: for “he that hath seen me hath seen the Father.”

The General Board of the Christian Church, with the constituent boards—missions, home and foreign, Christian education, executive committee, etc.—will hold their annual meeting in the C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio, beginning at 7 o’clock P. M., October 16th. Elsewhere is printed the call of the meeting and the names of the members as sent out by the General Secretary, Dr. W. H. Denison.

THE ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

PART III.

By REV. W. R. CHAPMAN.

There are many problems yet to be solved by the Protestant denominations. This being true, there is much work along this line for the Christian denomination to do.

The divided Protestant denominations. More than a century ago the Christian denomination succeeded three societies—one in Virginia and North Carolina, one in Kentucky and Tennessee, and the other in Vermont and in several New England States. This was effected about 1808.

There is need of a great spiritual unity in the Christian world. And yet in the face of all of this, the Protestant Church is separated into hundreds of denominations. The Church, it seems to me, should realize that it can never do its best thus separated. I do not think these different Church denominations should unite into one great single denomination, but I do think they should unite into one great confederation or union. This confederation, made up of all the different denominations, forming themselves into a confederated union or commonwealth, something like the confederation of the different States into the United States. The supreme name might be confederated Churches.

The Protestant Church claims a desire to reconcile the antagonisms caused by the World War, to reconcile the different antagonisms between themselves, to make war impossible, to make the social evil impossible, to stand together in all great moral questions, to unite on certain creeds and principles, and to stand together in the great battle against all forms of sin, and yet they cannot because there is no real perfect unity. The denominations need unity.

The Protestant Church has far too many brands of sectarianism. And yet it claims to want to proclaim to all the world the plain, simple gospel each denomination was to preach to its home people and take to the heathen is permeated with its own sectarian brand. The Church should confederate, and then unite on the special brand, and offer that at home and to the heathen. Such union would give strength and power. It would give a solid phalanx. It would be like one great army. The allies did not win the World War until they united their armies under one commander. And still strange to say, all these different denominations claim to be working for the world’s salvation under one Commander, Jesus Christ. How can this be, for in Him it is perfect union and absolute peace?

May the day soon come when there shall be some kind of union of all the denominations. I say, may the day soon come when all the true followers of Jesus Christ, in all the denominations will be one union or confederation, even as Christ our Lord prayed in these sublime words: “That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me” (John 17:21).

Let this Scripture be the great basic, central, and predominant thought and principle upon which the union or confederation which I am advocating shall be formed. Then a united front, a strong phalanx will be presented to the Christian; and this great body, then in reality will be led by the great Commander, the Lord Jesus Christ. Then sin will fall, and peace will reign, and the world saved, for knees must bow before Christ.

I call upon the Christian denomination to strive to reach this end. As there was a Martin Luther who brought about the Reformation, and as there was a John Wesley who gave the world the Methodist Episcopal Church, so let the Christian denomination go out as did they and bring about this great union.

Social conditions that now obtain. We see all about us a deadly danger which is the absence of high and noble ideals. I think any observer can see the absence of these ideals in the four ruling institutions: the home, the Church, the Sunday School, and the schools and colleges and universities, and also the theological seminaries. May I call the roll of some of the tendencies and things that are lowering ideals: obedience in the home is largely past; the family altar is gone; the social evil is prevalent; the increase of criminal tendencies is seen on every hand, especially among boys and girls who are not out of their teens. The average age of men, women, boys and girls who commit crime is given as ten years younger in 1924 than it was in 1909. Delinquent girls and boys are reported in increasing numbers every year. Prohibition evils are everywhere. Intemperance is seen on every hand. Immodesty is appalling. There is a break-down somewhere. I believe this break-down is in the home, Church, Sunday School and in educational institutions. The father is no more head of the family as he once was. We can trace many evils to the lack of home training. Then the laxity in marriage, the evil which causes divorce, marriage on trial, and the companionate marriage. All of these are striking at the very foundation of the home. If you destroy the home, the nation is lost. Take Greece, Rome and other nations that have fallen.

These are evils. They are legion. Do not think you parents and you other members of the society can sit still and do nothing; and yet these conditions which all see confronting our homes, our schools, our higher institutions of learning, our Churches, and our society will turn about and right themselves. I tell you they will not. The parents must change their methods of ruling their homes. There must come about vast changes, and these changes can only come when we the people become Christians. We must really repent, really be converted, have faith in God, in good, and go to work and bring about the needed change.

If we want good plants and first-class fruit we must cultivate them. We must carefully culture the tender plant.

The home, the Church, the Sunday School and the institutions of learning have the key. But they have gotten slow to open the door and show the way. Have they forgotten their duty? If so, let us remind them. Let us implore them to turn about, and redeem the world. Jesus Christ is the Redeemer, but we are the pro-redeemers. There is but one who can save, and that one is Jesus Christ.

The world needs a positive, confident, working Church. The Church needs a new vision of God. Oh, that the Church could see this as some of us see it. I believe a great change would soon be seen everywhere. The Church and the home need that faith which is the testimony of “evidence not seen.” It needs more faith in God. The Church needs to pray.

The ministry. There is a crying need for a consecrated ministry and for a more definite call to the ministry. The ministers should realize how they have been spoken of in the Bible. They are spoken of as chosen vessels, shepherds, overseers, ambassadors, elders, all of which imply a clear, definite divine call to the work. Let the ministers be Christians in its fullest sense, and let them make the Bible their rule of faith and practice. Let them talk much to God and walk often with God. Let them stay long in the chamber of secret prayer, getting strength and power, which will really enable them to do a great and wonderful work.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Dissatisfaction is one of the great blessings of mankind. Satisfaction is one of the most baneful conditions. There is no condition more against progress in the individual or the community than to be satisfied. Satisfaction is characterized by indolence. It is the dissatisfied man that is enterprising. The hungry pig roots; the hungry chicken scratches; the hungry man works; the poor man is the energetic, enterprising man; the rich youth is satisfied and no urge fills his soul. The farmer who is dissatisfied with the condition of his soil studies to improve it and to improve his crops. The mind that feels its ignorance seeks information through books and schools. The sick man who is dissatisfied with his condition sends for the doctor or goes to see him. The dissatisfied student presses on to higher attainments in knowledge.

The satisfied Church makes no progress. The satisfied Christian does not grow in grace. It is when the sinner is under conviction for sin and becomes dissatisfied in soul that he seeks Jesus Christ in penitance and faith. The satisfied sinner is the worst condition known to man. The jailer went to bed satisfied, but when the jail trembled under the earthquake he became dissatisfied and cried out, "What must I do to be saved," and Paul said, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Dissatisfaction is the greatest moral and spiritual urge in the human soul. It was the dissatisfaction of the public mind with the saloon business that gave this nation the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. It was the same feeling that freed the American slaves. All progress in education, in the mechanical and industrial world comes through dissatisfaction. Satisfaction ends improvement. Many students are satisfied when they receive the college diploma; many Christians are satisfied to be members of the Church. The real scholar takes his diploma as the incentive and encouragement to life study; and the growing Christian finds membership in the Church the beginning of growth in grace and the knowledge of the truth. The useful Christian is never satisfied with his attainments. He is never satisfied with himself. The real preacher is never satisfied with his sermon; the great singer is never satisfied with her song; the artist is never satisfied with his portrait; the successful teacher is never satisfied with the work of his class; the statesman is never satisfied with his achievement; nor the inventor with his inventions. Among the best in the world there is a state of dissatisfaction. The swimmers, the flyers, the writers, the orators, the farmers, the cooks, the merchants are never satisfied. That is the reason merchants change the exhibits in their show-windows, and the photographers the exhibits of their pictures. A satisfied world is a stagnant world. Aspiration grows out of dissatisfaction, and soul-progress moves on the path of dissatisfaction. Are you satisfied or dissatisfied?

ELON LETTER.

I have received two letters recently which have been an inspiration to me.

The first came from a father who sent two children here to college. This Christian father says, without any solicitation or suggestion from any source: "I shall always remember with gratitude the religious and educational training . . . and . . . received at Elon College, and will ever be willing to contribute to its financial success."

Any one who has ever taught school and has received such a letter as this knows the joy and comfort such a letter always brings. The son and daughter of this father are earnest Christian workers and are making a great success of their life. They reflect great honor on their alma mater. It must be said that these young people came out of a Christian home, and that they were, therefore, qualified to profit readily in such way by the moral and religious training of the college.

The other letter came from a batchelor friend of mine who loves the work of the Church and the kingdom devoutly. He says: "I am sending you my check for . . . to help you out with Elon College, and with it my prayers that the Lord will multiply it to His cause many times."

But the best of all is the notation he made on his check. In the lower left-hand corner of his check, this devout and consecrated brother wrote these words, "For Elon College, to help the Lord's work."

To get two such letters as these in the same mail is just about all a college president can stand in the way of inspiration and uplift at one time. Believe me, the day these two letters came will always remain a fragrant memory from the garden of life's experiences for many years to come.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

Piedmont College opened its 1928-29 session under especially favorable auspices. Not only is the number of students highly gratifying, but additions to the faculty and prospects for additional material equipment make the approaching college year one to be looked forward to with optimism.

The fine spirit of co-operation between the religious denominations which make up the Church in this section and the members of the Alabama and the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conferences in promoting the welfare of the college in uniting to build up a school in which the whole Church and the State of Alabama can take pride and in aiding to place the college upon the highest plane of school for the education of girls and boys, have developed within a period of a few years an institution which is rendering very valuable service. Nor has the work ended. Extensions are being made and additions are being made to the endowment. A new building is being erected and another planned. A campaign is now on to raise $50,000 for the completion of the administration building, pay off all indebtedness and add some to our endowment. The school is going forward in a way which is most gratifying to all friends of education.

The people of Wadley are particularly happy that another session is opening, for they take a personal interest in the institution, its personnel of executive and faculty and in the young ladies and young men who come here to make their homes for so large a portion of the year. To new students, Wadley assures them of a cordial welcome; to those who have returned to complete their work, citizens of Wadley assure them of a continuance of that hospitable welcome and friendship, the warmth of which they have already felt during their previous attendance. May the year now opening be the most successful in the history of the institution.

It is the spirit of the school that builds character and prepares for the best religious leadership. The religious life of the school is not professional but real. It sends young people forth with powerful convictions and a keen sense of God and things eternal. The social life of the institution is fine and every student goes forth from the college as from a home. It meets the needs of our civilization so strong in material things.

The men and women who dreamed, organized and developed this school were heroic and wrought well. Some of these have been promoted to higher tasks, some have grown weary, most have persevered. As the heat of the swirling fire dust is yet in our old globe, so the noble spirit of men and women of God made the past, lives on and will make a glorious future of Piedmont Junior College.

DRIPPINGS.

Logic of Wets.

The wets reason thus:

Major premise: The prohibition laws cannot be enforced.

Minor premise: The Democratic presidential nominee if elected will enforce prohibition laws.

Conclusion: Therefore, prohibition is a "damnable affliction."

The wets reason further:

Major premise: Religious intolerance has no place in American politics.

Minor premise: The Democratic nominee is a Roman Catholic.

Conclusion: Therefore, vote for the Democratic nominee or be convicted of bigotry.

Wet comment: For a dry Protestant Democrat to bolt his party's wet nominee is religious bigotry. For wet Roman Catholic Republicans (such as Raskob) to flock to a wet Roman Catholic Democratic nominee is religious tolerance.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

A Little Dialogue on the Elevated.

"I see that the Episcopal clergymen of the United States have been voting that the Volstead act is a failure."

"Where'd you see that?"

"On the front page of this morning's Chicago Tribune."

"You would."

"Why? Isn't it news?"

"Yes—the Tribune's sort of news."

"What sort is that?"

"When one-half of 1 per cent of all the Protestant ministers in America votes on the Tribune's side of a question."

"Is that all there were in this poll?"

"Well, about one-third of all the Protestant Episcopal clergy took the trouble to vote—say, 2,000; and of these about fourteen hundred and some voted to the Tribune's liking, with five hundred and some voting the other way. There are 190,000 Protestant ministers in the United States. You can figure your own percentages." "Why did the Episcopal ministers vote as they did?"

"Because they believe that way. Most of them are in the East, or in cities, where the corrupt combination between politics and the bootlegger is almost as bad as it is in Chicago. They are for temperance, and they think we're not getting it. We're not; but why put the blame on Volstead? He gets none of the graft."

"Then you don't think that all the 190,000 ministers would vote as these two thousand did?"

"Not by about 150,000."

"If a poll of all the Protestant clergy in America were taken, would the Tribune put the results on the front page?"

"No; it would put them on the editorial page, together with a hot denunciation of clericalism in politics, and a sideswipe at Anti-Saloon League."

"But it would be inconsistent of the Tribune to act this way, wouldn't it?"

"Don't be foolish! It would be the Tribune."

INTERPRETATION OF THE MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

By REV. ROY N. MOSES, Pres.

As a student who has tried to work faithfully in the ministerial association for a year and a half, I would like to make a few suggestions which may help our new members to understand the character and spirit of the organization. What I shall say is largely interpretative of the ideas and ideals which controlled the association last year, which year was generally admitted to be the most successful in the history of the organization.

1. The first purpose of the association is to help us to prepare ourselves for the work to which we have dedicated our lives. It is a society for mutual helpfulness. During the year, every member will at some time have some knowledge or sentiment which he believes will be of value to the whole organization. This is your organization. Give us your best. If you know something personal that you believe will help a member to become a better preacher, tell him alone in a brotherly spirit and he is expected to listen in the same spirit.

2. But this organization is not preparatory only. In it you will do a part of your life-work. Perhaps, during the year, we shall give several programs in Churches off the campus. These programs are a part of the ministry of God's Word. Those on the programs cannot have their minds and hearts too thoroughly prepared. It will generally be best to practice your part in the presence of some competent student or faculty member before you go before the public with it.

Another part of your life's work may be done on the campus. Elon stands for Christian character first, last and always. Let us help to make that ideal a happy reality.

As representatives of God's kingdom, we shall be watched and criticised in regard to everything that we do—our neatness, our use of slang, our honesty on examinations, all of our daily living will be noted as carefully as what we say in our sermons. Let us bring honor to our profession and to our great Leader.

3. The faculty here at Elon are a splendid body of men and women. They are not infallible, of course, but they hold a high standard. The members of the ministerial association can best serve the interests of the college, of the association, and of themselves by co-operating with the faculty.

4. As the association is made up of members of different denominations, and as the progressive Christians of our age are emphasizing the things which make for harmony among Christians, it is considered best in the meetings of the association to avoid denominational controversies and stick to the fundamentals of religion. We are especially interested in the work of character building.

5. At one time the Romans shortened their swords so that they had to get closer to their enemies in battle. The result was that they enlarged their kingdom. It is said that if Christ's followers would get closer to people they would enlarge His kingdom. Nothing in your college life will be of greater joy to you than the friendships which you make on the campus. Take time to get acquainted with people early in the year.

6. It is suggested that you get with some friends in whom you have confidence and have prayer at least once a day. This will help you to keep spiritually awake and with your Christian armor bright. It will help you to live the beautiful, victorious life.

Never fear when the Lord bids you go down to the way "which is desert." The moment you set your foot in the wilderness you are the Lord's guest, and He ever keeps His table right royally furnished.—Guy Mark Pearse.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A CORRESPONDENCE.

(The following letter, solely personal, from our veteran missionary, Rev. A. D. Woodworth, who, though having passed his seventieth anniversary, refuses to grow old, and not only persists in staying young and keeping up his youthful spirits and good humor, was so much enjoyed by the one to whom it was written that even at the risk of offending our dear friend, we are giving SUN readers the benefit of it. We trust they will all understand that it was only a letter from a dear friend and was never meant for the public eye. Bro. Woodworth is so well known to SUN readers that he is a personal friend of all of us, anyway, and what he says to one is, after all, worth being said to all. We think his rich humor will be enjoyed by every one who reads it.—Ed. SUN.)

Dear Dr. Atkinson,—I have heard that you are getting over your "sick," and I hope the report is true, and I further hope you will so behave yourself so as not to get sick again. I have heard that too much work is not good for anybody, but a little work does us all good.

I hope the article I am sending will not be bad for your eyes. Our summer resort this summer contains about a thousand missionaries. We have enough missionary machinery planned to almost run the world. After it is all said, you know that nothing can take the place of getting down and digging, and in religious work much of the digging has to be done on your knees.

The Almighty has been working at the problem of the regeneration of the world a long time, and in spite of repeated failures, due to the weakness of the flesh, the wonder to me is that He is not discouraged, but still keeps hard at the job. Mark Twain thought he had hit on something when he said he thought the cure for the ills of the world would be to have another flood and leave the ark out. Brilliant idea, don't you think? I don't think I could have stood it to have a traitor in my company as Judas was and not kick him out, could you? But the patience of the Lord is a great marvel.

Tomorrow, Mrs. W. and I celebrate our forty-third year of wedded bliss. I wish you could be present. We are going to have a lot of water-melons among the delectations. Wonder if you have such things—the joy of the negro small boy—in the Southland!

Mrs. W. is much better in health than she was a year ago; the result, she thinks of disposing of some decayed teeth. I find my chief complaint to be a rather overgrown appetite for delectable eatables. This summer, for amusement, I have read the Greek New Testament through and am on the way to do it again.

At Karinzawa this summer we have discussed and settled such problems as the League of Nations, outlawing war, the union of Churches, and the evangelization of the world. We are truly a fine lot of windbags when we get at it, and somehow the new union turns out to be another denomination.

A man in Tokyo, speaking of his theological school, said, "We give our students a particular smell, and we don't want to join with other denominations, lest we lose the smell." Well, dear J. O., isn't that the trouble with our mission boards and our so-called Church leaders in the home-land? Don't you think it will be nice in the other world to have all these smelly people cooped up in a pen by themselves while the rest of us can, in freedom, just walk all over God's heaven!

The Lord give you and all the brethren all the riches of His grace.

Your brother,
Karinzawa, Japan. A. D. WOODWORTH.

GENERAL BOARD.

The General Board of the Christian Church will meet October 16, 1928, at Dayton, Ohio, at 7 o'clock. Below are the names of the 53 members. Very important matters will be before the board and the brotherhood generally should be in earnest prayer for their guidance in their responsible tasks. Every member should be present at the first opening session and stay until the meeting adjourns. Every Church should provide for its own pulpit when its pastor is serving in this important capacity. This is the great meeting of our Church each year. This will probably be the most vital session the board has ever held.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

Dear Friends:

I am having to leave the work now and take up my school work. I shall continue to do what I can by correspondence and otherwise. Dr. Beougher will continue the campaign in person. You may send your contribution either to me or to him. He will report our weekly progress. The work has been very pleasant. The people have been very kind and responsive. The outlook is very bright. Let us not lose our greatest opportunity by failure to do our part in putting this campaign over. The report this week shows around twelve thousand dollars. Dr. A. J. Gay, well-known surgeon, of Roanoke, Ala., has obligated himself for the last thousand dollars in cash. It will be fun to put this thing over by working at both ends. It will not matter whether we finish at the middle or end. If you cannot give the thirteenth thousand, maybe you will give the forty-ninth thousand. So let's go!

The report for the week is as follows: Previously acknowledged, $10,960.39; Herbert Scholz, Jr., $150; Mrs. Alma Scholz, $100; D. L. Beougher, $100; J. F. Gittings, $100; Charles Bailey, $125; K. W. Payne, $25; Miss Lois Hudson, $25; Dr. C. B. Welch, $35; T. M. Swann, $5; O. H. Stevenson, $25; Mrs. Ella O. Thompson, $5; Daniels, Inc., $2; J. M. Aubrey, Jr., $5; J. H. McCormack, $5; C. G. Knight, $25; A. O. Knight, $25; Mrs. Anna McCormack, $5.

THE FIGHT IS ON!

It seems to me that we are facing the most vital problem that ever confronted a nation. I refer not to the political but the moral and religious issues. Prohibition is one side of the question that needs our careful consideration. Some tell us to keep this out of the Churches. The preachers must keep silent, the Church laity sit still while the hosts of Satan march to victory.

Perhaps a bit of history will refresh our minds, for surely the people of this nation have forgotten what a fight and struggle they had to down the opponents of prohibition. We had special prohibition programs in the Churches. We preached, prayed, talked for prohibition, and even the children had a part in deciding for prohibition. If it is wrong to work to keep prohibition, then it was wrong to get it, and we stand with the sin unforgiven.

I do not think it should be the theme used in the pulpit altogether, because repentance and faith should always be the outstanding theme in the Church. Personally, I think our preachers should be alive and call the people together in city halls, public school buildings or other suitable places, and there, in a tactful way, under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, fully warn the people of the danger ahead. Then talk and pray over the matter in our homes and by the wayside. Some say the prohibition law has not been enforced. I heartily agree; but neither have the laws against killing and stealing and speed limit on our highways been observed, but do we want to nullify or abolish these laws? No! We want to work towards perfecting the observance of all laws by voting for national, State, county and city officers that will enforce the law. I sincerely believe that aside from personal salvation, this moral and religious problem is the most vital question that we have ever been called upon to face. It must and will be settled. We must stand for the right, regardless of party affiliations. Some say we are in a free country, have a right to personal ideas and beliefs, and vote as we please. We grant that true in part at least, but with an anti-prohibition, Catholic President, those rights will no longer be ours. Up to the present time, I have thought it a woman's privilege to vote; now I think it her duty. Yes, mothers, our boys and girls are in danger, for whiskey and gas are not on good terms and will surely cause trouble when they meet. Personally, I do not know any young man under twenty-one years of age that would deal with the bootlegger; but place the poison stuff out in public, like a cold-drink stand, and see who will patronize the same. Yes, I believe it far more important to vote for the good of our people than to vote to say who shall preach to us next year. I have strictest confidence in our American people, believing they will continue to fight for strict enforcement of the prohibition law. The fight is on—so, "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

I am worried but very little over having a Catholic President, as I have faith in the people; but I am greatly concerned over the religious situation. You may say I am not concerned about the Catholic faith or creed, but you should be deeply concerned. They have a right to their belief, as God made us free moral agents to choose whom we will serve. But while no Catholic can ever change my faith in God and His Son, I have no right to vote to give him a chance to change another, and most assuredly they are changing them by the millions.

The Protestant Churches of America have ever bravely fought to uphold the Protestant faith and have sent preachers and missionaries to heathen lands to stamp out Catholicism and replace it with Christianity (Protestantism). On one occasion, the question was asked, "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus said, "Upon this rock (Peter's faith) I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." In the face of that statement will we who claim to be God-fearing people work against Protestantism? How I wish everybody could realize the seriousness of the matter as I do. I love the Protestant Church everywhere, and, in all sincerity, I declare if I were to vote to enthrone Catholicism I would never give another penny for the spread of the gospel of Christ Jesus. No, we cannot serve two masters. I would need to feed upon and fully digest such Scripture as James 4:5.

Yes, my dear readers, we are in a turmoil, the situation sad and appalling. Will you think what it means to have homes divided, friends divided, and the influence of the Church badly crippled? When we see good Christian people, Church leaders, working against Christianity, we know what the end will be. The world cannot have confidence in the Church, and our influence will not reach far in winning them for Christ. There are today thousands of little children in Porto Rico without parents, homes or food because those who are responsible for their existence could not pay the price of a marriage rite as required by the Catholic law. Are we willing to place ourselves in the same boat? If so, let's call our missionaries home, for we need to practice what we preach. We are indeed facing perilous times; but on one occasion 32,000 men lined up for battle, and only 300 dependable ones were needed to win the victory. We repeat we have faith in our people, for surely the ministry cannot and will not fail, and then God's people must and will stand for righteousness. Yes, out of the millions in America, there will come forth a mighty army who will fight the opponents of prohibition and win the victory for Christianity. I am only a poor sinner saved by grace, thank God, but I have a deep conviction that it is my duty to defend the cause.

Before I can be loyal to my Church I must first be loyal to Christ, the Head of the Church. Before I can be loyal to self, I must be loyal to principles that are instilled into the lives of those about me. Therefore, I ask that you think with me seriously and pray earnestly before you work against this great cause of righteousness and Christianity. In the name of Christ, I plead that you rise up to fight liquor and Catholicism, and remember to stay at home on November 6th means a half-vote for it. May God help us to realize the true situation.

Yes, the fight is on. Be a soldier true, for the call is meant for you.

Yours in the fight for Him,

Henderson, N. C.

MRS. R. J. NEWTON.

ORIGIN OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Church should be missionary. The Church should be made a missionary organization. This should be in spirit and effort. The disciples were missionaries, so was Paul, and Barnabas, and the seven deacons, so was Philip and all the others of the earlier days of the Christian Church. Remember the command given by Jesus Christ: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." This command is to the pew as well as to the pulpit. It comes to every follower of Him who voiced it centuries ago. It is to the pew, to the pulpit, to the minister and to the individual. It is a God-given duty. To meet this need and this command means much grace, great faith and unbounded wisdom.

The Christian denomination. I have given a general outline of the origin, duty and responsibility of the Christian denomination. This denomination has done much, but there are greater things to be done. The world must be saved. Let us remember two things—forget them not: First, we bear the name Christian, which comes from the name of Christ; second, we bear the only name ever given in the Bible to the disciples of Jesus Christ. This denomination is possessed of great ideas and visions. It should work them out. The Church should remember the name it bears, and put forth great efforts to do the will of Christ whose name it bears. The Church at Antioch was a Church of Christian brotherhood. It was in reality the Church of Christ. From it for years radiated the true religion of Jesus Christ the Saviour of the world. Now, let the Christian denomination be composed of Churches whose righteousness shall radiate in all directions, influencing all with whom it comes in contact for good. Let its great aim be to save men, women and children.

"We are not divided;
All one body we;
One hope and one doctrine,
One in charity."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, September 30, 1928.

TOPIC: "Goals for Our Society."—Gal. 5:22-26; 6:10.

Some Bible Hints.

The main goal of the society is to deepen the spiritual life, change human into divine nature (v. 22).

Christian Endeavor should raise the tone of the life of its members, give them beautiful ideals, inspire them to high thinking (vs. 23, 24).

Christian Endeavor leads us to see that we belong to Christ to do as He directs (v. 24).

Christian Endeavor has as its goal to outline definite "good" things that young people may do, and organize to do them (v. 10).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The Monthly Service Themes outline goals for each month, all worth following.

Set a goal for Bible reading for a month. None of us know our Bibles as we should.

Each committee should be able to tell some of its goals for the coming year. Successful societies are those that have definite goals, clear-cut standards. Try the Standards Chart.

What community goal can we have? A clean-up day; start a new Sunday School; have a community sing. Play Santa Claus at Christmas; visit prison and hold a meeting.

A Few Illustrations.

One society set a goal to start a new society. Did it, and laid it upon that society to start another. The plan worked like a snowball until five societies were formed.

Try to add to your society a definite number of new members in a given time. New blood is the life of societies. We cannot stand still; we either go forward or slip back.

Set a goal for missionary giving. To do this effectually also set a goal for tithers—young people who promise to give one-tenth of their income to the Lord. Also stress missionary information.

Set as your goal the winning of the union's attendance banner. Plan to take a crowd to union rallies. Get out every member and also friends. It can be done by careful planning and good advertising.

To Think About.

What goals did you reach last year, and how?

How do goals help a society's work?

What goal does our society need most?

RALLY DAY NOTICE.

October 7th will be a great day for the Christian Church folk this year. It is "Rally Day!" A larger number of our Churches are planning to have special rally day services than at any time in the past. Will your Church be among the number rallying all its forces for a bigger and better year's work?

What is rally day? It is a special day set apart for gathering together the forces of the Sunday School, the Church, Christian Endeavor and the other Church organizations in the interest of the Christian education of boys and girls, young men and young women, men and women.

It aims to have the largest attendance on this Sunday of any of the whole year—pupils, parents and friends—to enjoy together the fellowship of Christians.

It is a day for checking up on what has been done the past year and making the best start possible for the new year. Start your new Church year with a vim!

It is a special day for boys and girls. Many boys and girls are "glad when we say unto them, Let us go into the house of the Lord." And what would a Church be without boys and girls?

It is a special day for young people. Here are some of the ways young people of the Christian Church are helping with rally day: (1) Working with the pastor and the whole Church to make it a real day; (2) helping to interest friends of the Church and others who are not attending any Church in coming to the rally day service; (3) enlisting new young people; (4) special young people's services for Christian Endeavor, Sunday School class (for the month of October) or a special young people's night at a regular Church service. Suggestions for programs for Christian Endeavor rally will appear in the Sunday School Herald for September 23rd, and suggestions for young people's Church rally in the September 30th issue. (Free for the asking.) (5) Perhaps the best thing that young people are planning for rally day is to follow it up with a rally day for Easter" program, using the theme, "Our Quest: Crusading with Christ." Special leaflet, attractive in its make-up, has been prepared for this purpose. It contains suggestions for each month between October and Easter in worship, play, study and service. These may also be ordered free of charge.

It is a special day for men and women of the Sunday School and Church. Christian education is not alone for children and young people. Adults need to know how to better live the abundant life. They need to know how to help guide those who are looking to them for guidance in the way of life.

It is a special day for teachers and officers of the Sunday School.

A number of Churches use ten minutes of the rally day program for installing officers and teachers for the coming Church year, and impressing upon them that the winning of souls is the supreme object of the year's work—winning, holding, training, serving!

In fact, it is a day for the renewing of spirit and purpose, and for rededication of life. This day should "invigorate our whole Church and give a new zest to its work." What a great thing it would be if we could see, as in a moving picture, all the boys and girls, young men and young women, men and women, of the Christian Church as they go to Church on rally day. Will your Church be in the march?

The Rally Day Program.

The program should be whatever fits best in your Church. In some Churches, the morning is used for merged service of Sunday School and Church, with promotion service, followed by a special address on "Christian Education"; and the afternoon for a kind of home-coming service. People are invited for the day and to bring their lunch. In other Churches, the morning is given over to a special rally day service, with a young people's service at night. It should be a great day for all who attend.

Part of the service (promotion) should be taken up in presenting the school by departments or by classes who will give a program of ten minutes or more, made up of the work they have done during the year (songs, prayers, stories, Bible questions and answers, memory work, etc.), and this should be followed by the awarding of the certificates and welcoming the new pupils into the new departments or classes.

Promotion certificates and invitations to rally day services may be ordered from the Christian Publishing Association, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio, or from this office.

Write for programs or for suggestions for program which you plan to carry out. The Sunday School Herald for October 7th (which comes out ahead and may be had free of charge) carries a whole Sunday School program.

How Plan for Rally Day.

1. Make your plans several weeks ahead.
2. Advertise with posters. Posters have been sent to each pastor and Sunday School superintendent in the Southern Convention. Write for as many more as are needed. Have special invitations. Have the pupils write an invitation to their mother and father. They may be secured in the form of post-cards. Try especially to get the cradle roll babies and home department members to come. Recognize them publicly.
3. Three-minute talks in the Sunday School, Christian Endeavor Society and Church services about what rally day means for several Sundays.
4. Make a house-to-house canvass of the neighborhood with invitations.
5. Work by classes for attendance.
6. Use the telephone—a great asset to the Church.
7. Use mimeographed or printed programs, if possible.
8. Decorate with autumn leaves, potted plants, cut-flowers, or American and Christian flags.
9. If October 7th is not a convenient day for your Church, use the nearest convenient date.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

MODESTY.

"Not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think."—Rom. 12:3.

"Confess your faults to one another."—James 5:16.

A conceited man is always thinking of himself, saying, "What will others think of me?" and endeavoring to make a vain show. He who lives beyond his income is immodest. One who wears jewels worthy a king's ransom for the sake of display is immodest. One who lives extravagantly, reckless, ostentatious is immodest. It is a classic of the age that the most attractive man of the ages was one of whom it is said, "Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head."

To be sure, poverty or riches in themselves are not modest or immodest, neither is beauty nor homeliness, but when possession is exhibited for braggadocio or display, it is essentially immodest because it becomes the expression of one's heart, and a braggart is distasteful. But when one's possessions are used for the sake of humanity or for service in the common betterment of the world, that is modesty indeed.

All this may be summed up in this: The modesty of any one may be determined by the company he keeps. Jesus preferred his friends to be among the "meek and lowly in heart"—that is, the humble and modest, and not the self-important and self-sufficient. The finest instances of his attitude are as follows: The Pharisee who prayed, thinking to be heard for much speaking, and the instance of His washing the disciples' feet. To Jesus it was no disgrace to render the most menial service to the lowly, and none of His followers have ever found that it ever lowered his standard or denied them their prestige in the sight of God or man to be so genuine.

Prayer.—O Lord, Thou friend of publicans and sinners, we come to Thee, believing that Thou dost notice us. Give us the true modesty and humility of spirit of our Saviour and to daily learn of Him and become like Him. Amen.

TUESDAY.

COURAGE.

"Jesus, therefore . . . went forth and saith unto them, Whom seek ye? They answered, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am He."—John 18:4.

It is said that there are two kinds of courage, moral and physical. If this is true, Christ had both. If He had not He could not have lived the hard life that He did, nor endured the criticisms, His trial and His death. But all these He did endure unprotected, unarmed and without a friend to stand by.

The fact is, there is but one kind of courage, and that is moral courage. An athletic bully is only a tyrant over the weak, and a coward when he meets his match.

A prize-fighter is mere callousness mingled with desire for reward, which is either in hope of being the hero of his admirers or in the pleasure of the purse. A soldier may be a hero more because of the sneers of his comrades than fear of bullets. Captain Nobile does not show even that in being the first to be rescued from the ice of the Northern waste.

Real courage is willingness to suffer for a cause, and is just as possible to the weakest as to the strongest. It was not Christ's strength that drove out the money-changers. It was moral courage.

It takes courage to yield sometimes. It takes courage to consider others first. It takes courage to face the truth sometimes. It takes courage to tell another that he is wrong. This is the courage that attracts and is powerful. This courage has stood the test of the ages and Jesus is a perfect example.

Prayer.—Lord, let the spirit of Jesus rest on us and in us and give us an eye of singleness to Thy glory, that we may believe in Thee and trust in Thee and be like Him. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A DAY WITH JESUS.

The day dawns fair,
With sun and shade;
It holdeth care,
Has joy displayed.
But O how sweet
Each day to me
With Jesus! With Jesus!

The night is long,
The night of strife;
But soon the song
Of endless life.
That song will be
With Jesus! With Jesus!

The path is steep,
My feet are sore,
My eyes lack sleep,
No rest in store;
But O how blessed
That path can be
With Jesus! With Jesus!

Prayer.—Our Father and our God, we fervently pray to Thee to give us faith, the true living faith in our hearts, that we may belong to the Church of Thy Son and have life in His name. Amen.

THURSDAY.

AFFECTIONATE CONSIDERATION.

"A friend loveth at all times."—Prov. 17:17.
"And a man that hath friends must show himself friendly."—Prov. 18:24.

There is one quality in a friend that is indispensable. One may be natural, intelligent, modest, brave, witty and wise, but if he lacks love or is inconsiderate of the feelings of others he has no place in our hearts. We may admire him, respect him, honor and applaud him, but we do not want him for a friend.

Prayer.—Lord, let Thy word and Thy spirit be within us and the love of Christ permeate us and constrain us to be friendly to everybody in the name of Jesus. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE PARTICULAR AND THE UNPARTICULAR.

"The Pharisees and all Jews, except they wash their hands oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders."—Matt. 7:3.

We are told that the original word here used for "wash" means "up to the elbows"—the most thorough ablution. This ceremony was adhered to, whether they needed it or not. How particular they were about outward ceremony. Whereas, they were not particular about their morals. They did things in the dark. They neglected their parents, which the Scripture saith "Maketh the word of God of none effect."

It was to free men from just such a life that Jesus came into the world. He said, to be so particular as to wash the outside of the cup and neglect the inside is sin, and that kind of life strangles the spirit and makes religion void.

Over against washing vessels, and hands, and arms to the elbows, He sets forth the importance of cleansing the heart of evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, blasphemy, pride and foolishness.

Prayer.—Grant us Thy grace, O Lord, let Thy spirit show us our sins and lead us to the fountain of grace. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE WHINER.

"As soon as we heard these things our hearts did melt, neither did there remain any more courage in any man."—Josh. 2:9.

A complaining whiner is, of all men, disagreeable. They are usually given a wide berth. There are some folks who never find things right and who never feel well. Their troubles are more than others. Their griefs are more than others. One says, "I have suffered mor'n any one livin'." What a sublime height of self-pity!

After all, nothing happens to us but what is common to man, and the true heroic soul will be strong and uncomplaining when things go wrong, when things are out of tune, when friends desert and foes are strong.

Prayer.—Dear Lord Jesus, enable us to find life, however common-place and lowly, however hard or provoking, well worth while. It is life, and all of it is good. Grant us Thy mercy and the forgiveness of sins. Amen.

SUNDAY.

CHRISTIAN TACT.

"Give me to drink."—Jno. 4:7.

How many well-intentioned people injure, if they do not ruin, their influence by lack of tact. A tactless word, an ill-considered act, may cover and hide a multitude of good deeds.

*"Evil is wrought by want of thought
As well as a want of heart."*

When one grows strong in his own estimation, and independent of the opinion of others, he is apt to develop tactlessness. His children cannot reply to him. His wife does not dare to dispute him. His neighbors avoid him. He lacks the sensibility concerning the rights and feelings of others. To say things "frankly and flatly," no matter how or where it hurts, is un-Christian, though it may emanate from a well-intentioned soul.

The way of Jesus is not more finely represented than in His interview with the woman of Samaria, "Give me to drink." It would have been an easy thing for Him to have spurned her and put her in an antagonistic mood, and lost the chance of teaching her and her city and the world an immortal truth. He could have replied to her question, "Can't you give a thirsty man a drink of water without raising the question of his nationality?"

But He was not primarily concerned about His drink or Himself. His primary object was to make her happy, and she got so excited about it that she forgot what she had come for. She left her water-pot and went and told everybody what a wonderful man she had met. Apparently He did not get His drink of water. But the world has ever since rejoiced in an understanding of the waters of eternal life far deeper than that of Jacob's well and of which the well became the eternal symbol.

Tactfulness in all things is not hypocrisy, but a Christian virtue.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We have been the superintendent of the Christian Orphanage—your Orphanage—for nearly twelve years, and during that time we have never had so many calls to take children as we have had this year. And some of the most pitiful and the most touching. Just a few weeks ago a widow lady came to see us and begged us with tears trickling down her cheeks to take her little girl, because she had no way to provide for her. We are well acquainted with her circumstances and know she was telling the truth. What would you do if you were in my place? We have another widow appealing to us. She has two children, one a beautiful little girl, bright as can be, and the mother is confined to her bed slowly dying of tuberculosis. No means of support. I am told this little girl would go two days at a time without food. This child is fatherless. This widow is in distress. They appeal to the Christian Church, through its Orphanage, for help. It is pitiful indeed, isn't it? Yet this is a true story. With the wealth we have in the Christian Church, doesn't it seem some one would really be happy to just supply such a need? It would be visiting a widow and a fatherless child in His name. May the kind Master touch the heart of some one. We have room if we could provide for her.

School days are here again. Books, tablets and pencils will be the order of the day. Aren't you sorry for me! Then the fall of the year is here, too. Shoes and stockings for 118 children; coats and caps by the hundred. It takes money, but it is a work of love. When a little tot who has been a recipient of your love and your sacrifice goes out and makes good, won't you have a joy in your heart because you had a part in giving the child a chance?

Thanksgiving season will soon be here, too, and we trust all our Sunday Schools and Churches will begin now to make their plans for a splendid offering. Begin now!

The pastor did all the preaching, and the Church worked with him and the results were good. Many professed faith in God through Jesus Christ our Lord. The Church was greatly revived. Fourteen united with the Church. To Him who doeth all things well give we all the praise.

Antioch.

The week following the second Sunday in August we held our meeting at the Antioch Christian Church. The good Lord blessed us with a good meeting. We had no ministerial help. The pastor did all of the preaching, but the Church worked with him. The results were that the Church was greatly revived and three joined the Church. To God give we all the praise.

FROM OHIO.

Rev. William T. Scott, graduate of Elon College in 1924, has just accepted a call to the Walnut Hills Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio, his first sermon to be preached there October 7th.

Rev. John G. Truitt became pastor of the First Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio, September 1st. He is also a graduate of Elon College, as well as both Mrs. Truitt and Mrs. Scott.

Mrs. Scott (nee Della Cotten) is first cousin to Rev. E. T. Cotten, who has been pastor of the First Christian Church, Eaton, Ohio, two years. He is an Elon graduate of class 1915. Rev. Cotten was the secretary of the Miami Ohio Conference the past year, but the duties as pastor of his Church of seven hundred members necessitated his resignation as Conference secretary.

COMMUNION SERVICE.

According to custom, Communion service was held Sunday, the last day of the Miami Ohio Christian Conference. Eighteen deacons helped in the service. After the sermon the following order was observed:

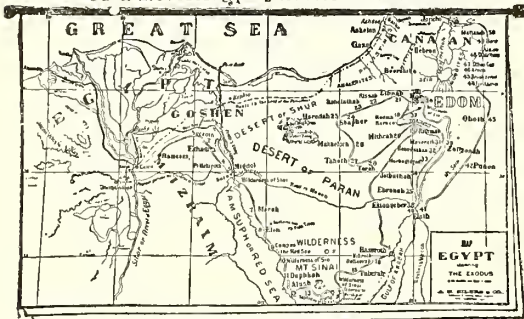

Hymn, "Break Thou the Bread of Life"; Scripture; prayer; distribute the Bread, music played softly "Rock of Ages"; partake together; silent prayer; give the cups, music played softly "Nearer, My God, to Thee"; partake together; silent prayer; quietly collect the cups, music played softly "Jesus, Lover of My Soul"; doxology; benediction.

Whole congregation served in the time of serving one plate and one tray by having many deacons. Service solemn, meditative, reverent. So many expressions of approval and commendation were received that I am passing the suggestion on for local congregations who may desire to use the order. Service planned by Rev. E. T. Cotten; conducted by Rev. Cotten, assisted by Dr. Hugh A. Smith. A printed program was given each attendant on entering, to avoid the necessity of announcements.

WET FANATICS.

People all over the country are making up their minds whether they are dry or wet. One of the New York dailies that is supporting Al. Smith said recently that this national election would be a real referendum on the subject of prohibition, and urged all opponents of this law to vote for him that a huge popular majority against prohibition may be rolled up. This journal argued that it was not enough to give Smith a majority in the electoral college, but a million or so popular majority, that the will of the people may be registered on this subject. It's beyond question that such a majority could be so interpreted as a mandate to change the amendment or to modify the Volstead act by nullification. Already many wet Republicans have announced their support of Al. Smith for this very purpose, including J. J. Raskob, the Democratic chairman, and Pierre DuPont. It is literally true that, if Al. Smith is elected, it will be by the votes of wet Republicans and dry Democrats. The wet Democrats will support him, as a matter of course. But there are Democrats and Republicans who are partisans first and last and who will vote the party ticket whoever the nominee happens to be. Many reasons govern these people. They are for the party right or wrong. It is argued now that the defeat of the Democratic party this year would ruin it. One can easily retort that the ruin came with the nomination of a Tammany wet who is the opponent of the great moral reform now a part of the Constitution.

The dry Democrats who support Al. Smith cannot escape their share of the responsibility for the organized attempt to overthrow this great advance made for the defense of our homes, our schools, and our Churches. It will be too late to console one's self with the conviction that one hoped that the law could be saved even with the election of Al. Smith. The only sure way to save the prohibition law is to defeat Al. Smith. Then the law will be in the hands of those who believe in it. Hoover believes in the law and will appoint dry men to carry out the dry law. Henry Ford has recently said that alcohol and gasoline do not go together. We have entered the gasoline age. Alcohol had to go. Both Henry Ford and Thomas A. Edison are dry and for Hoover.

It has become a habit with the wet newspapers in New York and Chicago to speak of "dry fanatics" like the women, the preachers, the Anti-Saloon League, and, in particular those Southern dry Democrats who will vote for Hoover. Recently, on a train, a stranger, in conversation, used language like that. I ventured to remind him that he was a wet fanatic. Why should people be called fanatics who are law-abiding, believe in the law, want to see it executed, and refuse to vote for a man for President who by practice and precept opposes the established law. It makes one tired. If the term fanatic is to be used about the wet and dry issue, I submit that it belongs to those who are so much the victims of the liquor habit that they violate the law of the land in order to get it and who agitate to get it changed for the purpose of gratifying their own appetites. Mr. W. C. Durant has recently offered a prize of twenty-five thousand dollars for the essay that shows best how to execute the prohibition law. He himself touched the crucial point when he appealed to business men and social leaders to obey the law themselves. Those who buy bootleg liquor and drink it are criminals as truly as the bootleggers themselves.

The issue resolves itself into whether the American people will allow the law violators to triumph by compelling government to go into the liquor business. Canada is trying that now with calamitous results. Liquor men have always been law violators. If they are allowed to triumph, the government will be controlled by liquor men as in the days of the saloon.

Personal liberty has limitations in life with other men. If one lived all by himself, he could drink to his heart's content. But not if he has a family and neighbors and uses the public streets and highways with an automobile. Civilization means the limitation of personal liberty for the good of all.—Christian Index (Baptist).

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

The revival meeting began here September 2nd and closed Friday night, September 7th. The weather was very inclement. It did not fair off until Friday. So, for this reason the attendance was small until Friday, when the house was full.

Rev. T. J. Green, of Elon College, came on Monday to assist in preaching the Word. His messages were simple, practical and very instructive. They were plain gospel discourses. It was good to sit under the influence of such a godly man. He has been here before and was heard gladly. His coming deepened and renewed former friendships. May the Lord bless him in his efforts of love elsewhere.

As to the visible outcome from the meeting there were thirteen professions of faith in Christ and reclamations, five additions to the Church, and the Church's spiritual life encouraged. Thanks be unto our Father, through Jesus Christ.

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

MORGAN.

My mother, Sarah Ann Morgan, left this life for her heavenly home Tuesday, September 4, 1928. Her body was tenderly laid away in the family lot on the old homestead in Moore County, N. C., on Thursday afternoon, September 6th, at 4 o'clock, just six months and one day after we had tenderly laid the body of her husband, my father, in the same sacred spot. The funeral services for mother were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Trolinger, pastor of the M. P. Church, Rockingham, N. C., who brought a beautiful message of comfort to the large number of friends who had gathered to pay their tribute of respect to one so tenderly loved.

Mother leaves to mourn their loss one brother, Haywood Morgan; two sisters, Mrs. Rebecca Williams and Priscilla Nall, and ten children and a host of grandchildren and friends. Her children are as follows: Rufus L., Parkersburg, N. C.; Geo. R., Spies, N. C.; Joseph F., Norfolk, Va.; Nealie J., Carthage, N. C.; Silas A., Newport News, Va.; Elder V. and Eddie B., Asheboro, N. C.; Mrs. Dock Williams, Bensalem, N. C.; Mrs. E. W. Freeman, Rockingham, N. C., and Mrs. Benson Thompson, Albemarle, N. C. Three children preceded her to the heavenly home, who, with father, must have had great joy in welcoming her to her eternal abiding place.

We children are grateful to God for giving us such a lovely mother and for letting us have her for so many years. She was a little more than seventy years old when she went away. Father and mother are both gone, but we will treasure their memory and endeavor to honor them by serving the Lord whom they served. Then one blessed day we will all join in that great family reunion that will never be broken up, if we are but true to our Lord, as we believe those who have gone on before were true to Him.

J. F. MORGAN.

A converted Indian gave the following reason for his belief in the Trinity: "We go down to the river in the winter, and we see it covered with snow; we dig through the snow and we come to the ice;

we chop through the ice and we come to the water—snow is water, ice is water, water is water; therefore, the three are one."

We are all liable to be tripped up by our triumphs.

LIQUOR CONTROL IN CANADA.

By ERNEST H. CHERRINGTON, LL.D.,

Director of Department of Education, Anti-Saloon League of America.

Ben H. Spence's book, "Liquor Control in Canada," which is being distributed by the Canadian Prohibition Bureau, 450 Confederation Life Building, Toronto, Canada, at the nominal price of twenty-five cents, is one of the most timely volumes that can come to a reader's table in the present year. Crammed with data gathered from the official records of all the Canadian provinces, it sets forth with a wealth of phrase the utter failure of the so-called liquor control system wherever tried by our Northern neighbors. There are few volumes which would be stronger weapons in the hands of the friends of prohibition wherewith to combat the insidious and utterly false propaganda of those who seek to rivet again upon the American people the chains of the legalized liquor traffic which we hope have been cast off forever. Mr. Spence says:

"'Liquor control' in the provinces of Canada is a huge success from the standpoint of those who make and wish to derive a profit from the sale of liquor; and those who buy, and wish to derive sensations of intoxication from the consumption of liquor; but, from the standpoint of those who seek to remedy the evils of alcoholism, it is a tragic, ghastly failure.

"Writ large in the experience of these Canadian provinces is the truth, which ought to be self-evident, that the ravages of a plague cannot be remedied by arranging for the dissemination of disease germs nor can the evils of alcoholism be prevented by providing facilities by which people may obtain alcoholic beverages."

The smuggling and rum-running scandals which have developed under the various systems of "liquor control" in Canada are set forth by Mr. Spence, who quotes from the official reports of the Royal Commission which was appointed to investigate an illicit traffic which grew to be so great that the so-called liquor control boards seemed helpless to combat it. Mr. Spence also sets forth from official reports the evidence of the corruption and the fraud practiced by the brewers, distillers and liquor interests of Canada.

The development of view, the stimulation of underworld activities, the growth of crime and drunkenness are given in this volume with elaborate and exhaustive citations gathered from the official records.

Two factors in the economic and social problems of Canada are stressed by Mr. Spence. One of these is the enormous drink bill which is draining away the very life-blood of commerce and industry, seriously affecting legitimate trade and imposing needless burdens upon the wealth and industry of the provinces. The rapid increase in value of brewery stocks which he shows hardly compensates a province for the loss to productive industry. The increase in motor accidents to which he pays considerable attention demonstrates that under "liquor control" as under the obsolete license system, intoxicants wipe out that margin of safety which is so highly essential in this high-powered and swiftly moving civilization.

Mr. Spence who, Prof. J. Gibson Hume, head of the department of philosophy in the University of Toronto, in a foreword, says is "the best-known and most fully informed man in Canada in regard to prohibition," speaks as one with authority. In this work he has avoided propaganda and has confined himself almost entirely to presentation of unconvertible facts. Every citizen should read this book as an antidote to the liquor group's claims that "control" is superior to "prohibition."

LIQUOR THE REAL ISSUE.

Those who have been following current political discussions in the daily newspapers of the country must be impressed with the frequency with which criticism is directed against Protestant leaders for expressing their opinion about the candidates of the two major parties. Such readers likewise must be struck with the almost complete absence of any condemnation for the expression of Roman Catholic opinion regarding the issues of the campaign. Why?

The Protestant Churches of America, true to the fundamental principles of Christianity, are in vigorous opposition to the liquor traffic in any form, and particularly to the return of the saloon. The Democratic candidate for the presidency, notwithstanding his eleventh-hour protests, is an out-and-out wet. A letter signed by George T. Carroll, national president of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, which appeared in the Champion of Fair Play, the official organ of the association, on January 17, 1920, seems to reflect the general attitude of the Governor of New York on the liquor question. The letter reads:

"A committee was appointed to wait on Governor Smith of New York to visit Washington with Governor Edwards of New Jersey on the beer question. Committee made a very favorable report. Governor Smith promised to do everything within his power for our industry. The committee was one from each interest. One from the wine growers, one from hotel men, one from wholesalers, and Messrs. Reilly Donnellan, the attorney who spoke at our convention, and Meehan from the retailers."

Governor Smith, in a land where religious freedom is guaranteed, has a perfect right to become a candidate for the presidency. His wetness, not his Romanism, is the issue that is stirring the Christian forces of America against him. There can be not a shadow of a doubt but that if the Houston convention, for example, had chosen Senator Thomas J. Walsh, of Montana, also a Roman Catholic, as its leader, he would have received multiplied thousands of votes from leading Protestants who respect his high moral courage in exposing the oil scandals at Washington. But Christian ministers and laymen will not be bullied by the newspapers into a complacent acquiescence in the candidacy of Al. Smith the wet, even though these churchmen be falsely accused of bigotry and intolerance. And they intend to express their convictions at the polls on this moral issue.

Meanwhile, we hope that the great dailies of America will use a little more discrimination in their wholesale charges against Protestant clergymen and lay leaders. We are not all bad. Give us credit at least for having no part in Tammany.

In an article written by Don Seitz, who is described as "an accomplished historian of New York City," which appeared under the caption "Al Smith's Tammany Hall," in the May number of "Plain Talk," we find an exceedingly significant statement. The last paragraph of this contribution, which will be found on page 558 of the May number, reads in part as follows:

"The Hall (Tammany) is not quite 100 per cent Catholic. Of the thirty-six district leaders, thirty-two are of that ancient faith. Four are Jews, of whom there are many in its membership. Leader Olvany was taken into the Church about six months after assuming leadership. Tweed, as already noted, was a Baptist; Croker, though of Protestant stock, became a Catholic; Kelly and Murphy were born Romanists."

Thirty-two Roman Catholics, four Jews, no Protestants, in the present leadership of Tammany Hall—32-4-0—these are the proportions. Protestants may be in politics on the moral issue of liquor degradation, but Protestant names are entirely missing from leadership roster of Tammany Hall, which is ever and always in politics on every kind of issue.—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

Perhaps there has never been another issue upon which the religious periodicals of this country are so unanimously and fervently united as the prohibition issue and opposition to every attempt to modify the law downward. It will be enheartening to our readers to know that the farm periodicals also are practically all in favor of prohibition. Successful Farming, Des Moines, Iowa, says that "Prohibition of alcoholic liquors is the outstanding issue in the world today. The liquor interests are fighting every inch of the way because it deprives them of enormous sums of money and great political power."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. L. L. Wyrick, Elon College, N. C., is open for Church work at least two Sundays per month. Bro. Wyrick is an Elon College graduate and has had some years of successful and devoted service in the ministry. Churches within reach desiring his services would do well to correspond with him.

One generous brother proposes to give $5,000 to missions this year if all the members of the Southern Christian Convention, through their Churches, Sunday Schools and societies and as individuals, will give $40,000. Thus one individual proposes to add 10 cents for every dollar given by the whole Church up to $40,000, and add thereto $1,000 for good measure.

We are requested by Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, president, to say that any delegates attending the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference at Sanford, Friday, October 5th, and desire entertainment for the night, either before or after the Conference, should write Mrs. R. L. Williamson, Sanford, N. C. Delegates or visitors attending will be gladly entertained if Mrs. Williamson is notified in time.

Mrs. T. C. Farrell, treasurer of our Mebane Sunday School, in remitting the monthly offering from her school, says: "We have had no trouble raising our money for literature and local needs since we began giving one offering a month to missions." This is the universal experience and tetsimony, and yet there are a few of our schools who have not the faith to do this righteous and goodly thing.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Leonard Davis closed their evangelistic meetings at Wake Chapel, Fuquay Springs, N. C., Friday P. M., September 21st, and went Saturday to conduct a two weeks' meeting in Sanford Christian Church. These evangelistic workers attract large audiences wherever they go and great results crown their efforts. Churches would do well to keep them busy in their chosen field of service.

A welcome visitor at Elon College the past week was our beloved and greatly esteemed friend, Dr. Martyn Summerbell, Lakemont, N. Y. Dr. Summerbell comes annually to the college and always brings messages of ripe scholarship, mature thought and great inspiration. Dr. Summerbell's mind does not grow dim with the passing years, and he maintains his youthful vigor, physically, mentally and spiritually.

Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, Roanoke, Ala., has been called to and accepted the pastorate of our Reidsville Church recently made vacant by the resignation of Rev. R. A. Whitten. Bro. Dollar is an Elon College graduate and has had several years of successful pastoral work. We congratulate Reidsville on securing his services, and Bro. Dollar will find a field of usefulness and service that will call for all his energy and ability.

The new Bethel Church, near Elkton, Va., is to be dedicated Sunday, September 30th. The Mission Secretary, J. O. Atkinson, is to preach the dedicatory service at 11 A. M. There are to be two other services of the day, one at 2:30 and another at 7:30 P. M. It is to be a great day for those who have sacrificed and wrought with such zeal and devotion in building the new Church, and they are hopeful that a large congregation from nearby Churches will be present.

The greatest anxiety is felt for our work and workers in Porto Rico. Reports are telling us that possibly half the population of Porto Rico are homeless, that many lives have been lost, and that in Ponce, where Bro. and Sister Barrett live, there were twenty-five fatalities from the tornado that swept the island nearly two weeks ago. At this writing we have nothing definite as to our work and workers on the island, but we are sure there is much distress, as the Governor of the island has called upon the United States to rush food and clothing to the masses who have been left homeless and destitute.

Sunday, October 7th, is to be "Rally Day" in Churches and Sunday Schools this year. It is hoped that the Sunday Schools especially will make an effort to have a real rally and take a new start for the fall and winter work, since Sunday School forces have been much scattered during the summer. It is well to take inventory and make a new beginning in all our activities; and Sunday, October 7th, has been set aside for such a beginning, or for such an event, in Churches and Sunday Schools. Let all the forces of the Church and school be rallied, that sufficient momentum may be gained for vigorous activity through the months to follow.

The women of the North Carolina Conference are exceedingly anxious that all the pastors of Churches in the Conference shall attend their annual meeting this year at Sanford, October 5th, and they are also exceedingly anxious that all Churches without societies shall send representatives to this Conference. Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, the president of the Conference, has not been in good health of late and cannot write the personal letters she desires inviting and urging pastors and delegates to attend, and we express the desire for her that the invitation through THE SUN will reach those interested and that the invitation will be accepted.

The Southern Convention at Richmond voted that we raise $45,000 for missions this year—our missionary year beginning September 1, 1928, and closing September 1, 1929. This can be done and will be done if plans are set on foot and our people interest themselves properly in Sunday Schools, societies and Churches. The Convention asked the Churches to raise $39,000 last year. They raised $38,512.99. We must reach our goal this year, for it means a gift of $5,000 by one man and furthermore the wiping out of all indebtedness, pledges and outstanding obligations and appropriations made by the Mission Board. Surely it is a goal worth striving for to catch up with all missionary pledges and again begin progressive, constructive work in Church building and the employment of missionaries.

Rev. S. E. Madren, pastor, reports exceedingly interesting services at Elk Spur and Rocky Ford Churches, Carroll County, Va., Sunday, September 16th. The male quartet from First Christian Church, Greensboro, went for the occasion and gave an excellent musical program, which was greatly enjoyed by large congregations at both Churches—Elk Spur in the morning, Rocky Ford in the afternoon. The pastor was accompanied also by Rev. P. T. Klapp, of Elon College, who preached in the afternoon at Rocky Ford and baptized five candidates by immersion. Two members were received into the Church fellowship at Rocky Ford, and one made a profession of faith and was received at the morning services at Elk Spur. It was a great and good day, and the audiences at both places were not only large, but appreciative and seemed to enter into the spirit of the occasion and to greatly enjoy the services.

WORK OF JOY.

The circulation manager gets lots of joy out of working for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The subscribers are so kind and considerate and have so many nice things to say when they send in their checks for renewals. I am quoting this one:

"Dear Bro. Johnston,—You may find enclosed check for subscription. I like the 'SUN-shine'; been frolicking in it since 1878. It has painted many mountains of gold on the heavy clouds of life. Its light has revealed many dangers on life's way and stimulated and inspired in life's battles. It links the most sacred and blessed memories and associations of the past and the present and future as nothing else can."

Such a fine expression as this is worth a whole year's work, isn't it? We enjoy it. Our joy would be more complete if we could get a whole lot of new subscribers. Who will help us? If all our pastors would find us five each in their Churches, and didn't get their salary raised next year, we would obligate ourselves to add enough to it to raise it.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Circulation Manager.

MODERATION IN POLITICS.

Our human system of government is important, yet it is not the most important system of government over us. It does not have to do with our most important interests; it cannot be perfectly devised or perfectly administered. It is only a bungling attempt at the administration of justice. But we are under another system that is perfectly devised and that will be thoroughly executed. Of the two systems, the latter is the one about which we should be most concerned. We should seek first and constantly and most earnestly the kingdom of God and His righteousness. There our principal citizenship lies. It should be our highest ambition to be good citizens there.

In our earthly citizenship we have to do with our fellow-men who have some power over us, but not supreme power. We should not fear what man can do unto us and be indifferent as to what God can do unto us. We may have the favor of our fellow-men and be promoted to the highest office they can bestow; but this will be a small matter in comparison with the rewards of faithfulness in the everlasting kingdom of God.

How puerile and foolish it is to allow ourselves to be wrought up to a furious indignation against those who seem to stand in the way of our advancement to some goal set by the world, and at the same time overlook the mark of the prize of our high calling to Christ Jesus.—Exchange.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

JESUS AT THE DOOR.

BY REV. J. W. FIX.

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me."—Rev. 3:20.

The Book of Revelation was written for the benefit of the Christians who lived in the first century. Many of their Churches were undergoing persecution and trial. Some of their temples were dedicated to the imperial government of Rome. Idol worship and heathen teachings prevailed. Untold numbers of early Christians were persecuted. The horizon of Christianity seemed darkened. However, many brave Christians awaited a new day. Christ had promised to come again. This hope kindled an ever-burning expectation; but time slowly passed and the Christ seemed very far away to them. There were times of great discouragement and the most faithful ones were gravely tested.

Then came the Book of Revelation sometimes called the Apocalypse, as a message of hopeful assurance and deliverance from their sufferings. The Book of Revelation is the only book in the Bible which opens with a distinct promise or blessing to the man who reads and keeps its words. We read "Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein." The Book gives a picture of God on His throne. Satan is conquered, Rome subdued, the New Jerusalem is at hand, Christ lives. The Churches which had been so full of worldliness, ease and indifference were now to become spiritualized. Christianity was not to be doomed; rather she was to become triumphant.

One of the most outstanding chapters in Revelation is before us for meditation. Within it we see a most striking figure which embodied a promise for those Churches which realized the need of the magnetic power of God. Many of the Churches were neither cold nor hot, and there was a serious need for the Lamb of God and the indwelling power of the Holy Spirit. In this third chapter there is a verse of hopeful promise to these Churches: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me." The word "door" is used most significantly in our text. As a symbol, the word "door" appealed to our Lord and by its frequent use He endeavors to show His relationship to His people. "To him that knocketh, it shall be opened unto him." Again in the parable of the ten virgins Jesus shows that a door was closed against those who were foolish, but opened unto those who were wise. In John 10:9 Jesus makes Himself a way of entrance into God's kingdom by saying, "I am the door, by me if any man enter he shall be saved." And now in the Book of Revelation he uses the symbol of the door as he seeks to enter into the life of indifferent individuals and Churches.

To all who will open unto Him, He will come in. To them He promises, in the Book of Revelation, a seat upon the throne of God. He offers them power over temptation and with his own hand will write upon them His new name—the new Jerusalem. As John writes, he sees some most indifferent Churches, but in these there are a few faithful members who are unwilling to keep the Christ without the door. They desire to let Him in. There once lived a famous artist who painted a great picture. In this wonderful work he set forth in unfading colors the Master as He stood knocking at a door. Peasants came from miles away to see the picture. As they looked upon it they saw no fault, to them it was a perfect piece of art. But one day a critic came, and as he studied the canvas he commended the painter by saying, "Your colors harmonize and your facial expression is life-like, but you have left from the door that which is most important, the latch." "But," said the painter, "you have failed to see the significance of the Master knocking at the door; the latch is on the inside."

If we desire Him to come in and sup with us and we with Him, we must open the door, remembering that the latch hangs within and that He ever knocks from without.

Many Churches throughout our brotherhood are engaged in revival services during this month. They are putting forth effort to revive themselves again. There is but one way—let the Churches open the door unto Jesus. This it can do only through its members. It is the purpose of this sermon to suggest three ways by which this may be done. They are:

1. Personal presence. One often seeks to justify his absence from Church by saying, "I was present in spirit." But one's spiritual presence will never fill the Church pews. That which manifests one's interest in opening the door for Christ is one's personal presence. This is an expression of the fact that he is not a pretender. It makes it easier for the preacher who receives no inspiration by preaching to empty seats. Every minister rejoices in having a well-attended service; he is led to believe that his people seek the house of God for strength and comfort.

Your personal presence at every service will encourage others. It will show that you do not regard your spiritual welfare as a matter of small concern. It will stimulate your children and the young people to become ardent Church-goers. I am thinking of a poor widow, about whom I read, who could neither sing nor lead in prayer, but she placed great emphasis on Church attendance and was always found in her place. She was unable to contribute much money, but she sent flowers. Near her lived a member of the Church who was an invalid. Through this loyal member's personal presence, the shut-in was ever informed of the pastor's sermons and the progress of the Church.

A good per cent of every congregation is drawn away from God's house each week. Little do they realize the effect of their absence. Let those who are inclined to leave the Church service, resolve in their hearts to contribute at least his or her personal presence.

A distinguished Church patron use to say that there were four occasions on which he made it a point to be present in his place at Church. They were (1) when it was a stormy Sunday, (2) when it was awfully hot weather, (3) when a stranger preached, and (4) when his own minister preached.

2. Personal prayer. Every Christian can help open the door of his Church to Jesus, through the medium of personal prayer. Prayer is power. Through it man communes with God and God with him. "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." There comes into every life hours of crisis, in sickness, sorrow, suffering, and sin. Those hours have a divine purpose. They come to try one, to test one, to transform one. During them man needs to pray. There is no other way by which a soul can come into spiritual touch with God but by the way of prayer.

Our greatest Christian statesmen realized the value of prayer as a necessary means toward national progress. When Mr. Lincoln was in the midst of the Civil War he went to God in prayer, and often remarked that he could not have succeeded in his great task without divine guidance. In the midst of President Wilson's difficulties during his administration, he often felt the need of, and called for, divine guidance. One day the great war President arrived at a cabinet meeting, and his face wore a solemn look. It was evident that serious affairs of the nation were on his mind. He said to the cabinet members: "I don't know whether you men believe in personal prayer or not, but I do." And the President fell upon his knees with the members of the cabinet and he offered a prayer to the Almighty for help.

There is surely an open door to God through personal prayer. No matter what man or circumstances may do to you, prayer will open the door and let Jesus come in to you. Behind all formal and stated methods of devotion, prayer is at the very center. Dr. Robert E. Speer said, "The most vital thing in the evangelization of the world is a revival of prayer." Jesus used prayer most effectively. On certain occasions he prayed all night. As Christians, we ought to say, "Lord, teach us to pray."

What wonder the burdens are heavy,
And the hours seem irksomely long!
What wonder that rash words are spoken,
And life seems discordant and wrong!
Pause for a little each morning,
And again at the close of day,
And talk with the Master who loves you—
Remember, He taught us to pray."

As a minister began a revival, he asked each person present to tell what he or she would do toward making it a success. To which an old lady replied: "I will give an hour a day in prayer." Some one has well said, you cannot wrestle with God in prayer and wrangle with man on the earth. Instead, let every man think of prayer as a great lever of the spiritual life by which God lifts man into his very presence.

Effective personal prayer must be definite. There was a drunken man in the city of New Orleans one night who wandered in the city mission and presented himself at the altar of prayer. The brother who prayed for him seemed to follow the example of a great many Christians in their praying by circumnavigating the globe before getting down to things specific. He journeyed through the islands of the sea and the places where the foot of man had never trod nor the eye of Jehovah never seen." Wearying of his journeys, he at last came home and began to ask God's blessings on the poor drunkard who knelt by him, to which the latter muttered in an audible voice: "That's right, partner; now you are talking sense and getting down to business." Our Churches need to be revived by praying Christians, by men and women whose prayers are definite and far-reaching.

3. Personal evangelism. While one's presence and prayers count mightily in the upbuilding of a Church, nothing can take the place of consecrated personal evangelism. Through it as a medium people of all ages have been led to know Jesus Christ. Churches that have despaired have taken on new spiritual life through practicing personal evangelism. It is very easy to get human sympathy for a man who has fallen from a high building, or who has met with disaster or accident. We are never too busy to take the time to call an ambulance, but we seem too busy to prevent men from falling. The first convert mentioned in the New Testament was the result of per-

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

OUR ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

As will be seen elsewhere in THE SUN, our annual Conferences, other than that of the Virginia Valley, which has already been held, will begin with the Georgia and Alabama session, First Church, LaGrange, Tuesday P. M., October 9th, and then one each week for six weeks. It should be borne in mind that these Conferences constitute the annual stock-taking of the year for the Churches, a discussion of the most important problems of the Church, and laying out of plans for the coming year. The Conference is what its name indicates—"con," from the Latin "cum," meaning "together," and "ference," from the Latin "ferro," "to bear," thus meaning "a bearing together of our burdens," our purposes, our plans, our problems in doing our Lord's work for His Church. In the multitude of council there is wisdom, and by taking counsel together in conferences we arrive at the greatest wisdom for our plans in Church work.

Let us bear in mind that it is not too early to be planning for Conference, finishing up the Church work of the year, raising the Conference apportionments if they have not been raised, electing delegates and making all things ready for the session. It is important that these things receive emphasis this year, because people's minds are centered on politics this election year and an intense political campaign is being waged. We cannot afford to have our minds diverted from the work of the Church and preparation for Conference. More than ever we will need to stress the importance of Conference, and more than ever we will have to put forth strenuous effort to raise Conference apportionments and to give the annual Conferences the emphasis and the care that they should have at our hands. Do not let us in any sort of excitement or diversion forget the importance of the annual Conferences and what these Conferences mean to the kingdom and to the Church.

RAISING $45,000 FOR MISSIONS.

The Southern Convention session at Richmond voted to raise the present year, beginning September 1, 1928, $45,000 for Convention missions—one-half for home, one-half for foreign, unless otherwise designated by the donor. The Convention further decided that in order to do this, missions would not share in Conference apportionments the present year, and that all gifts to missions should be sent direct as such. It will be of interest to SUN readers to know that the Convention asked for $39,000 from all sources last year and that there was actually raised and paid in $38,512.99. Of this amount, however, the Conference apportionments for missions amounted to $6,773.23, and the Convention voted that Convention missions would get none of this this year, that the Churches and individuals and Sunday Schools and societies might send all their gifts direct to missions.

So the method of giving the coming year is to be different from heretofore, in so far as Conference apportionments are concerned. Of the $45,000 called for, the Woman's Missionary Societies have set their goal at $12,000 and are likely to reach this amount. This leaves $33,000 to be raised from Churches, Sunday Schools and individual gifts. Now, one generous man of our number has agreed that if the Church will raise the $40,000, he will give $5,000, thus making the total goal desired, $45,000. A committee of the Mission Board was appointed to work out a goal to suggest to each Church, and it was found that if the Churches within the year, from September 1, 1928, would contribute from the Church, from the Sunday School, from the Christian Endeavor Society and from individuals (but not from the Woman's and Young People's Missionary Societies) one-third as much from missions as they pay on pastor's salary, we could reach the $40,000 asked for, and our generous brother agrees to add 10 per cent to all that every Church, school and individual will give, and then add $1,000 to that for good measure, making a total of $5,000 from this amount added to the $40,000 to reach the goal.

Surely, Churches will be willing and are able to give one-third as much to give the gospel to others as they give to have the gospel preached to themselves. Missions simply mean sending out beyond the local Church to other points and places to build up Churches and to carry the gospel to others, and it does seem that all would be willing to give one-third as much to carry the gospel to others as to have it preached to themselves.

This may seem a large quota in some Churches, but it is a reasonable amount, and if the Churches will get the Sunday Schools to work on the matter, and every child in the Sunday School interested, it should not be difficult. It can be done if a beginning is made now and we do not wait till half the year or three-fourths of it is gone before a beginning is made. If the Churches will lay the matter before the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies and classes in the Sunday School, organized classes, and tell them that the Church is trying to raise during the year so much for missions and that every dime and dollar contributed by the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society, and sent in for missions, will count on the goal that the Church is trying to reach, we believe that the Church will find the quota is within the reach of every one.

It is a fact that, by raising the $45,000, we can wipe out all debt and all pledges and obligations of the board now outstanding and get our foreign mission work on a real progressive and constructive basis again. The great desire of the Mission Board and of all of us is that on September 1, 1929, we can report the $45,000 raised from all sources and the last dollar of indebtedness and all outstanding pledges and appropriations have been paid. And that the foreign work has received such boost that it can now look toward going forward and an increase of helpers on the field and equipment to work with. Surely, this is a goal worth striving for by every Church, missionary society, Sunday School and individual.

CONTRIBUTIONS FROM CHURCH MEMBERS.

It is implied in Church membership that all should give; and Paul makes it plain how it should be done. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come" (1 Cor. 16:2). The rule is plain, the method is simple, and there is no better way than that prescribed by the word of God. The Church has yielded to outside organizations in their methods and purposes to help needy ones and needy causes, and neglected to teach and cultivate the Bible way of helping the helpless, and in Paul's direction, he specifies the saints (v. 1). The Church at that time did not undertake to help those who were outside. The Church was too small and the poor were too many outside.

The Church has passed beyond that stage, and now does most of its charity outside of the saints, because there are so many more of that class. The Church seems to be the only institution that inspires this kind of service for mankind. All the other organizations that help the poor derive their inspiration, consciously or unconsciously, from the Church; and most of them appeal to the Church people for the means to carry out their plans to help those in need. This is an unexpressed recognition of the value of the Church, and should be a sufficient reason for union with the Church. If all who should be members of the Church were inside instead of outside, it would increase membership of the Church and its potential power, and reduce the poor because it would win many of them to a better life. The Church should not do less, but more; but it should be done through the Church in a systematic way prescribed by the word of God.

There are too many outside organizations undertaking to help through charity professions and methods and all the time appealing to Churches and communities for the means to carry out their plans. They want their representatives to "have a chance" to go before the congregation and present their needs and take a collection for help. In addition to this, they make personal appeals to individual members, and these methods are so frequently applied that members get in the habit of giving a little to these solicitors, lest they be counted cheap. In that way the real spirit of giving is reduced to a mechanical act. People can be appealed to by so many agencies and so many times that they tire of the calls to which they are exposed. The Church should arise in her organic might, provide adequate means to meet regular demands, and allow special appeals in case of emergencies beyond human control. Giving must be taught and cultivated as an essential part of religious life and Church membership, and other groups that want the credit of doing something good and useful in the field of charity must be taught to rely upon themselves, and do giving as well as asking for help.

SPIRITUAL REALITIES.

There are realities in the spiritual world, even as there are in the material or mental world. If one has been following the Sunday School lessons and Paul's missionary journeys, one is compelled to be impressed with the spiritual realities of Paul's life and experience. He lived as if he were in a world largely controlled and constantly influenced by spiritual realities. On this account, the spiritual realities were his to enjoy and his to inspire. But back of these spiritual realities and leading up to them, one has been impressed with the many difficulties and even the tragedies that drove him to them. Some one recently uttered this petition: "May difficulties and tragedies of the present sharpen our vision of spiritual realities." That petition was evidently offered in the light of the fact that difficulties and tragedies are often required to sharpen our vision of spiritual realities and bring us to see the reality of the spiritual life. One is overwhelmed with the difficulties and the tragedies that confronted Paul, but instead of his giving up, they sharpened his vision and caused him to see clearly the guiding hand of the Holy Spirit and the overruling power of God. Paul was governed by the Spirit.

We are living in a day of luxury and ease and comfort. On this account, we may lose or obscure our vision of spiritual realities, and so we need to face, and must face, dangers and difficulties, trials and tragedies, if our vision is to be clarified and if we are to know and be governed by and enjoy the inspiration and fruits of spiritual forces.

Our Church services, our worship on the Lord's Day, our morning meditations, our daily prayers, should lead us to a clearer discernment and to an acknowledgment of spiritual realities. God is a Spirit; and He is the power in this universe. If we would know Him and live close to Him, we must face difficulties and tragedies courageously and hopefully, and constantly offer our petition that our vision and realization of spiritual forces shall be made the more acute and vital.

REDEMPTIVE SUFFERING.

We endure suffering with little thought of making it contribute to human welfare. And yet the greatest contribution ever made to human welfare was suffering. It is safe to say that the Lord Jesus made His greatest contribution to mankind, not in His ministry of service, but in His redemptive suffering on the cross. This line came under our eye recently—the line of a petition: "Oh, give us such love as shall make our suffering redemptive."

All of us in this life are called upon to suffer, some more than others. Evidently, suffering has its distinct place in the economy of grace and the plan of God. It ill behooves us, therefore, to complain, to rebel, to despair when suffering comes. Possibly our Heavenly Father is leading us through our suffering to a better life than we could have lived without it, and also to make a greater contribution to humanity than we would have made without it. If our suffering is borne in fortitude, in complacency, and in love, does it not become redemptive? That is, to purchase back to righteousness and to higher ideals some who may have gone through life without them. That is the meaning of redemption, two Latin words: "re," again, and "demo" to purchase; thus meaning, when the two parts are put together, "purchasing back or purchasing again." Christ so loved mankind that through His suffering He purchased mankind again, gave mankind access to the Father through Himself, and thus opened up the way from darkness to light and from death to life.

So may it be with human suffering, though in a less degree. The Good Book says explicitly,

"If any one suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed on this account." "If we suffer with Him," says the same Book, "we shall also reign with Him." He suffered in love, in compassionate, pitying, boundless, everlasting love, and because He thus suffered He made His suffering redemptive. We do not have to be up and have our hands full of busy activities in order to make life count and to fill it full of meaning. We may, as sufferers, crowd life to the limit and make it mean strength and might and majesty, if we love even as Christ loved, and so make our suffering, as His suffering was, redemptive. Some of the most beautiful lives in this world, and some of the richest in fruitage and result, are not those who have served the most, but those who have suffered and endured the most, because they have done so with an unshaken faith in God and an ever-growing and increasing love for mankind and for God.

LIQUOR IN CANADA.

The method of handling liquor in Canada is frequently cited by wets in this country as a happy solution of the prohibition question. For the wets, the Canadian plan is indeed quite satisfactory; for temperance people, it is altogether objectionable. The plan pleases Governor Alfred E. Smith, who in his acceptance speech told our country that if he is elected to the presidency he would recommend to Congress an amendment to the eighteenth amendment and Federal provisions whereby each State might manufacture and sell beverages of such alcoholic content as they might themselves determine within a maximum percentage to be fixed by Congress. This plan would make possible forty-eight varieties of temperance—or rather intemperance—in the United States and put the States in the liquor business, as Canada now is. Governor Smith referred to the Canada plan as an example for us. Occasionally a confused citizen of our country expresses the opinion that we should handle liquor as does Canada.

When we are invited to take up the Canadian method of selling liquor as a better thing than our eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law, we should examine how it works. The wets like it and advocate it—in Canada and in the United States. Why does it please them? The answer may be found in reports of Canadian authorities.

The information sheet of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union publicity bureau, on August 24, 1928, gave enough facts to settle the mind of a dry voter regarding Governor Smith's desire to extol the Canada plan. Its presentation is so important that it is given here in its entirety:

"The Canadian control of the liquor industry has resulted in the increased sale of hard liquor, increased drunkenness, and increased bootlegging. Americans look upon it as a failure because the Canadian wets introduced the subject by promising that beer and light wine would be sold.

"Here are some of the results from official reports:

"Increased drunkenness. Police Commissioner C. F. Burton, of Manitoba, states that 'if all the drunks were arrested, there would be no room for them in the jails.' The Saskatchewan Liquor Board states that 'arrests for drunkenness increased 125 per cent in the first eight months.' The Toronto Star is quoted, 'All records for inebriates were broken today,' speaking of the last Labor Day celebration. The Montreal Star says 'Drunkenness among women has increased 53 per cent.'

"Increased bootlegging. The Saskatchewan Liquor Board points out that with the so-called government control, bootlegging increased 111 per cent the first year. The British Columbia Board announces as much liquor sold by bootleggers as is sold in the government stores. The Alberta Liquor Board says: 'Our greatest problem is moonshining in the country districts.' Not long ago Ontario officials seized $10,000,000 worth of liquor in warehouses because they said this liquor was going back into bootlegging channels to be sold by Canadian bootleggers in competition with government warehouses. Bootleggers in Canada sell bootleg booze cheaper than the government, and sell it to people without permits and also sell it in the illicit drinking clubs.

"Increased sale of hard liquor. Those who argue that light wine and beer will promote temperance should learn that the British Columbia Liquor Board is quoted as saying: 'Since the opening of the beer parlors, the sales of hard liquor increased 50 per cent.' The Quebec Liquor Commission says the sale of hard liquor increased 32,275 gallons in one year. The Saskatchewan board reports an increase of 33 per cent in the sale of hard liquor. The seven Canadian provinces having government control have a population of ten million people, and the official report is that they are now spending money for liquor at the rate of $160,000,000 a year. Ontario alone is buying liquor at the rate of a million dollars' worth a week.

"Government control has not produced temperance. Beer and hard liquor consumed is increasing by the millions of dollars' worth. There is no way of inducing temperance by the sale of liquor. The number of drinkers has trebled and quadrupled, and drunkenness continues to be the besetting sin of the business, while the bootlegger and moonshiner are doing business more than ever."

From such a showing as here appears, the United States would certainly take a long step toward a greatly increased flow of liquor if it adopted the Canada plan. Moreover, there is no prospect of its doing so. The process would involve the amending of the Constitution, and thirteen States can prevent that. The suggesting of such a thing is preposterous, and for one so prominent as a Democratic nominee for the presidency to advocate it is most reprehensible. His honesty and his statesmanship are not made the more impressive by such utterances.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

EXPLANATIONS PROMISED.

When the light is turned on you cannot get rid of your shadow. It follows you wherever you go.

Governor Smith has a shadow that dogs his steps. It is his liquor record. He has done many good and helpful things, but these do not excuse or explain away his liquor record.

He is going to have a busy time explaining that record. William Allen White's statement of it got under his skin, and newspaper reports say that he is studying an answer.

Before the answer was prepared, Dr. John Roach Straton dressed up the record in biting and bitter language which drew blood, and Governor Smith wants to explain his record in Dr. Straton's presence.

The shadow follows the man!

"Whatever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Mr. Smith has made an explanation of his liquor record. That explanation must run the gauntlet of criticism. Probably the explanation will need to be explained. And then the explanation of the explanation will call for more explanation, and so on indefinitely. Yes, if Mr. Smith keeps on explaining he is going to be a very busy man.

Talk about a millstone about one's neck! That awful record is a millstone.—C. E. World.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There are many things that require patient and constant cultivation in the Church. While the Church is the parent institution and must be cared for in its worship and its financial support of all its dependent organizations, as publications, missions, colleges, and orphanage, it must not lose sight of that largest institution, the Sunday School, from which the future Church must be formed. The Sunday School is the child of the Church, and these children should be trained for membership in the Church.

People talk in these days about the lack of home-training and the loss of parental control. It is as conspicuous in the Church as it is in the home. The Sunday School should be taught to attend the services in the Church. If the present rate of leaving the Church at the close of Sunday School continues, it will mean some day the loss of Church power.

There are three things that should be impressed upon Sunday Schools:

1. To come regular and on time. It does not work to be tardy in the day school. The Sunday School should be as good in its habits as public school attendance. A real Sunday school is worth more than the day school because it deals more with character, which is more important than knowledge.

2. To open Sunday School on time. There is no way to maintain public success by irregular methods. Post-office, bank, market, station, store, all open on time. They are no more important than Sunday School.

3. Church attendance. The old-fashioned country style of families going to Church together and sitting together was a fine way of fixing the spirit and habit of worship in the family life. It would enlarge and make permanent that spirit and habit for the Sunday School to remain at the preaching service of the Church. It would double the congregation, make inspiration for the minister, cultivate a social sympathy and acquaintance, make a new impression on the community as to the meaning of the Sabbath, and check those violations of the Fourth Commandment so common in these modern days. The command of Jesus to His disciples was to preach the gospel to every creature. If all Sunday School attendants would remain for the preaching service it would produce an attraction for outsiders to attend the Church. It would improve the behavior and manners of people in the home, the Church, and the community. Good roads, good schools, automobiles, newspapers, telephones and all other modern additions to convenience of intercourse have made the community more like a family, and it is all the more important now that the community be made as good as a religious family; and this can be done by all the people waiting upon the Lord in the house of prayer.

ELON LETTER.

Christian union has been the theme of social concern on the campus this week. To begin with, the writer attended a conference in Washington the first part of the week made up of responsible department executives of the Congregational and Christian Churches, to test the great document suggesting the basis of union between these two Churches, to see if there should be administrative difficulties in the way of making this basic agreement function readily in our Churches. After two of the most strenuous days I have ever spent in the earnest endeavor to find something to disagree over, nothing was found. This will be good news to us Christians, I am sure. It will be equally good news to our Congregational brethren. I had hardly reached home before a distinguished Congregational minister came to visit us, the Rev. Elisha King, D. D., of Miami Beach, Fla., hastening south from his vacation in order to minister to his stricken people, but anxious too to see the college with which the Atlanta Seminary will affiliate in 1929, being a trustee of the seminary. He was a delightful spirit and promised to come again.

Then on Friday and Saturday Dr. Martyn Summerbell gave two lectures on the subject of Christian understanding. On Friday he treated our friends of the Baptist Church, and on Saturday the Congregational Church. None who heard his lectures can but appreciate the most heroic suffering by which our religious heritage has been vindicated for us. At the same time, as the learned scholar discoursed, there grew the steady conviction that now the hour of Christian union has struck. It is great to be living in a day like this.

Surely it does the youth of our Churches good to face this crisis of the kingdom. And therein we find a justification for the denominational college, provided it realizes and capitalizes its opportunity to teach and exemplify Christian brotherhood and fellowship looking toward Christian union.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

The fifty thousand dollar campaign for the college is still in progress, although not much has been done within the last two weeks on account of the opening of the school which took the major part of our time in arranging for the opening. The campaign is very important, and from now on will be pressed very enthusiastically because of its extreme necessity for the future welfare of the institution. We must have fifty thousand dollars to finish our building and equip the plant and pay off present indebtedness if the school is to occupy its rightful place in the educational work of the Southern Christian Convention and of the Christian Church. This amount of money could be paid by one or two individuals who hold their membership in the Southern Christian Convention and we believe they will do their part toward this campaign, but each individual in the entire Convention should have some part in the payment of the same. This will create the individual interest in the institution which is so much needed at this time. We cannot hope to raise the fifty thousand dollars from the Georgia and Alabama Conferences, but they will do their part and have already done a large part in providing for the financial needs of the institution. We must have at least ten thousand dollars for the current expenses of the school this year. A very small part of this is at present provided for. The quarterly offering which was recommended by the finance board and approved of by the Southern Christian Convention to be taken in the Sunday Schools for the colleges cannot be arranged for by Piedmont Junior College, since the program has been outlined and already in operation for this offering to be taken for Elon College alone. It was the intention of the Convention that the offering to be taken for the colleges, but since Elon College has plans already in operation for Elon College alone, we do not feel that the Sunday Schools will stand for another quarterly offering, which would make, all told, eight offerings for the colleges during the year. Therefore, we make a very urgent appeal to our entire Southern constituency to send in individual offerings to Piedmont Junior College to apply on the current expenses.

We have raised altogether in cash and notes on our campaign, $11,722.39, with the additional amounts by Dr. D. J. Hodge, $250; W. C. Gay, $200; R. W. Thompson, $500; J. T. Getting, $100; L. L. Patterson, $100; D. D. Hanson, $50; Walker Pearson, $100.

MORE ABOUT RALLY DAY.

October 7th or nearest convenient Sunday is designated as "Rally Day." The time is getting short, and every pastor, Sunday School superintendent and Church should be definitely planning for rally day. Much of the success of rally day will depend upon what is done ahead of time, both in planning the program and in promoting attendance.

Promotion in the Sunday School.

It has been said that the safest basis for grading and promoting in the Sunday School is "age and public school grading and common sense." This is true because boys and girls of the same age, no matter what their experience has been along other lines, have very similar religious experience. However, each teacher should have certain aims for his or her pupils during the year, in order to have some way of knowing what is being accomplished with them. The supreme purpose of Sunday School work is to win to Christ, but there are certain other things which should be done in order that these lives may be made richer. Each teacher should know his or her pupils so well personally that it will be possible to tell if they are improving in their attitudes toward the other pupils and in their daily living.

Each teacher will know what his or her aims for the year should be. Below is given a list of the things one junior department superintendent and teachers set as their aims to be accomplished in the three years before promoting the pupils to the next department:

Memory work accurate, books neat and completed, own Bible, handle Bible by finding references, divisions and books; how our Bible came to us; locate, read, tell and write Bible stories; memorize choice hymns (four each year); study of maps and map-drawing; memorize psalms 1, 100 and 121; memorize chapters, names of apostles, commandments, Beatitudes, doxology, missionary characters and hymns, temperance mottoes and pledge, extra honor, outline of life of Christ.

Promotion should mean something worthwhile to the pupils and teachers. It should mean that certain things have been accomplished which were thought important at the beginning of the year and earnestly striven for by the teachers and others in charge.

Send for rally day program suggestions. The September magazine issue of the Herald of Gospel Liberty is "rally number" and is full of suggestions. The Sunday School Herald for September and the first week in October have rally day programs and suggestions. Any of the above will be sent free of charge.

Rally day invitations, promotion certificates and other supplies may be ordered from the Christian Publishing Association, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio.

Let us all work together to make rally day worth while!

PATTIE COGHILL.

THE ISSUE IS CLEAR.

The issue between the two parties and platforms and candidates is now sun-clear. The two platforms and candidates do not differ in any essential point except on prohibition, and here the candidates stand at opposite poles. Mr. Hoover does not favor the repeal of the eighteenth amendment or the Volstead law, and only favors a commission to discover and correct "grave abuses," not in the amendment or the law, but in the administration of them. Mr. Smith calls for an amendment to the eighteenth amendment and also of the Volstead law that would permit a new definition of "intoxicating" beverages and also remit to each State the local administration of the law, further suggesting that the manufacture and sale of liquor be done by the State. He says this would not be the return of the saloon, but few will agree with him on this. His suggestion is a return to local option, almost the worst plan for dealing with the liquor traffic and one which we have tried out in almost every form with disastrous results. Governor Smith has been true to his record and expressed views on this subject, and his plan is a bold proposal to return to old evils that have cost us a hundred years of education and agitation and repeated experiment to throttle and finally put under the fundamental prohibition of the Federal Constitution and of national and State law. It would be an amazing thing if the American people were to do this thing and undo all that it has done. Governor Smith speaks fair words as to the purpose and the success of his plan and may be honest in so doing, but whether intentionally or not he is pleading with us to let the nose of the liquor camel or tiger under the tent that we have erected, and we believe that temperance people as a class and in the mass will resist it. Too many ruined homes and lives, broken hearts and tragic tears will cry out against evils of our human world. It is no answer to this to say that the law is not now enforced, for there is evidence that this violation of the law is greatly exaggerated and the remedy is to correct these abuses and not to change the law.—Presbyterian Banner.

NOTICE.

The Palm Street Church at Greensboro will be open for a new pastor for the coming Conference year. As yet we have not called any one for this work. We feel at this time we are not financially strong enough to call a full-time pastor, but we would like to secure a pastor that could live here and serve Palm Street Church for two Sundays in the month and take some other Church elsewhere for the other two Sundays. For a pastor who could serve the Church in this way we probably could pay a little more than for just coming here and preaching two Sundays in the month and spending the remaining time somewhere else.

As chairman of the pastoral committee, I would like to hear from preachers who could consider the work here in that way. Or if any one could not consider the pastorate as I have outlined it, but could serve some other way, I would like to hear from them also. Address your communication to

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

DO MISSIONS PAY?

By J. E. FULTON.

Said Theodore Roosevelt: "I wish it were in my power to convey my experience to these people who speak about the inefficiency of foreign missions. If they really could know but a tenth part of the work that is being done and the work that has been done, they would realize that no more practical work, no work more productive of the fruit of civilization, could exist than that work being carried on by men and women who give their lives to preach the gospel of Christ to mankind."

Hon. Henry Morgenthau, a Hebrew, recently U. S. ambassador to Turkey, says: "The missionaries have the right idea. They go straight to the foundations, and provide those intellectual, physical, moral, and religious benefits upon which alone any true civilization can be built."

Said Robert Louis Stevenson: "I had conceived a great prejudice against missionaries in the South Seas, and I had no sooner come there than that prejudice was at first reduced and then at last annihilated. Those who debate against missions have only one thing to do, to come and see them on the spot."

Wrote President Charles W. Eliot, of Harvard, who in 1912 visited China and studied mission work as carried on amid the peculiar difficulties of a port city: "It is the missionaries who have kept before the Chinese the good works of Christianity. Without them the Chinese would have been left to infer the moral value of Christianity from the outrageous conduct of the Christian governments toward China during the past hundred and fifty years, from the brutalities of Christian soldiers and sailors in time of war, from the alcoholism of the white races as it is seen in Chinese ports, and from the commercialized vices which the white races practice in China. Against all of these influences adverse to Christianity on the Chinese mind the missionaries have had to contend; and it is a miracle that they have won so large a measure of success."

Said Mark Twain (Samuel L. Clemens): "The benefit conferred upon this people (the Hawaiian Islanders) by the missionaries is so prominent, so palpable, and so unquestioned, that the frankest compliment I can pay them, and the best, is simply to point to the condition of the Sandwich Islands in Captain Cook's time, and their condition today."

Newspapers for July 10, 1925, reported a radio message sent by the McMillan arctic expedition from Hopedale, a center of Moravian missionary effort, which said among other things: "Had it not been for the Moravians, whose service with utterly inadequate funds is little short of marvelous, there would not be an Eskimo alive on the Labrador coast today. The work speaks for itself."

Said Marquis Ito, prime minister of Japan: "Japan's progress and development is largely due to the influence of missionaries."

Said Lord John Lawrence, viceroy of India: "The missionaries have done more to benefit India than all other agencies combined."

Some will remember Ratu Meli's statement about missions, which was about as follows: "A so-called wise Englishman who didn't believe in God visited Fiji, and seeing the natives going to Church with Bibles in their hands, said, 'The Bible is no good, your religion about Christ is false.' To this a simple native preacher replied, 'It is a good thing for you that we left our heathenism and cannibalism and took to our Bibles and Christianity, else you would probably be clubbed, cooked in a native oven, and eaten. Fiji has been transformed by the Bible, and the club law and cannibalism are gone."

The gifts of many thousands of believers in our Churches in all lands attest the fact that they believe in missions. May the spirit of giving to this grand cause be more deeply awakened in many hearts, for the time is late and the work is great. —Review and Herald.

KAGAWA.

(The story of a Christian who knows how to suffer for his Lord.—Ed. SUN.)

It is said that Toyohiko Kagawa is the most loved and by some the most hated man in Japan. He is about forty years of age and for nineteen years he has given himself and all his property, unreservedly, for the alleviation of the suffering of the poor. He is somewhat of a genius in intellect, one of his books having been so popular as to bring in an income of $60,000, not a penny of which did he keep to himself.

For nine years he lived in the slums in order to reach the people of the slums, and during this time he lived in a room 6x6, with his wife, preaching constantly the great, good news. He says telegrams came to him, but his house was so small that all he had to do was to stretch out his hand and take the telegram from the delivery boy. If he were rich and lived in a big house it would not have been so easy.

In his close contact with the poor, with all their sufferings and diseases, he contracted that dread eye disease trachoma. Four times his eyes have been operated on, but, like the woman of the Bible who had spent her all on the doctors, was constantly made worse. So it has been with Kagawa, who is blind in one eye and is almost blind in the other. But in spite of this disability he is looked upon as probably the greatest evangelistic force in the country. Just now his slogan is a million Christians for Japan. He says the missionaries should stay in Japan until there are a million Christians. When that number has been reached, he thinks the Japanese can carry on by themselves, but until that time the missionaries should stay.

Hitherto the work done in Japan has been done with the middle classes, but the farmers, five and a half millions; the fishermen, two and a half millions; the common laborers, about four millions—have not been touched. For about five months of the year, while the farmers are growing and harvesting their crops, they are untouchable. But during the winter season, their special time of leisure, they gladly listen to the gospel message.

Kagawa is not a favorite among the rich, whose gains are largely made by exploiting the lives of men, women and children. Although he is far from bolshevism, repeatedly he has been imprisoned because of his fearless criticism on government measures which favor the rich at the expense of the poor.

As one considers his life, there is a close resemblance between him and the Master—no property, no fear, great love, no reserve in self-sacrifice, calling men and things by their right names without fear or favor, doing all things for the glory of God, and thronged by people wherever he goes who want to see and hear and be near him, and himself a living sacrifice on the altar of God.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

We were again with Bro. Madren at both Elks Spur and Rocky Ford, Va. At 10:30 A. M., the 16th, we addressed the Sunday School at Elks Spur, using Paul's plea for Christian unity, "That ye all speak the same thing, that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment" (1 Cor. 10). The quartet from Greensboro, N. C., came in, with their bright faces, which was an expression of happy hearts. Their names and places in the quartet are R. E. Loman, first tenor; B. L. Robinson, second tenor; J. B. Brady, baritone, and W. M. Hayes, bass.

Bro. O. P. Shelton, of Greensboro, brought these brethren in his fine big car and furnished us with a sumptuous dinner, which we thankfully and fully enjoyed. After the quartet rendered a few of their gospel messages in song, the pastor read Psa. 40, with suitable comments. After this a few more songs, followed, by the writer, with an earnest exhortation and an appeal and invitation, and a real revival followed, during which time several came forward for prayer, and a man of sixty-eight years professed faith in Christ, and shouts of joy and thankfulness went up to God. It was indeed a revival.

The quartet was so impressed with the meeting and the needs of this people that they are willing to go back the first Sunday in October. The writer is expected to go also.

After the service at Elks Spur, we went to Rocky Ford at 2 P. M., and the quartet gave us some more fine selections, after which the writer preached to a splendid audience, received two new members, and administered the Lord's Supper. Then we went to the place for the baptism of the newly received members, where the writer spoke briefly to an audience of some two or three hundred people, after which he led the candidates down into the water and buried them beneath the waves.

To God be all the honor and praise forever and ever.

Bro. O. P. Shelton is very much interested in this mission field, and may God bless and use him and this quartet much in leading many to Christ. Be much in prayer for the service on the first Sunday in October, that God may give victory on that occasion.

P. T. KLAPP.

In regard to an account which I gave of our Rocky Ford meeting, which was held the latter part of August, I failed to state the active part that Bro. Klapp took. I stated that he was called away at the beginning on account of an illness of his wife. Bro. Klapp came Saturday evening, and the meeting opened on Sunday. After the Sunday services we held the meeting only at night. It was Thursday morning that Bro. Klapp was called away. During the first sermons, Bro. Klapp directed his message to the Church, thus preparing them for a revival. Then in his last two sermons he gradually directed his message to the sinner. It was at this time that we could see a vast change in the meeting. People began to come and offer themselves for prayer. At the time of Bro. Klapp's departure it seemed as if the meeting was just beginning well. Souls were being stirred. Bro. Klapp came to us in a spirit of prayer, and his soul was burdened for the unsaved of that community. His messages were simple and direct. He held up Christ and the principles of a Christ in his messages.

Although God saw fit to bless us with a revival, I feel that the meeting was not what it would have been if Bro. Klapp could have stayed the entire time, as he had planned. Just as a son feels lost when he no longer can hear the counsel of his departed father, we also were at a loss to know just how to proceed after so suddenly being left alone. May God bless Bro. Klapp and his efforts for the kingdom.

Mr. O. P. Shelton, Greensboro, N. C., brought a quartet from the First Church of that city on September 16th, who brought to us a gospel message in song. These brethren are planning to make the trip again the first Sunday in October and give gospel song messages to those people of our two Churches. We had a spiritual blessing to come upon us as a result of their visit before. May God bless them, that they may have the power to sing those spiritual songs in such a spiritual way as to cause the unsaved to repent and accept Christ as personal saviour.

S. E. MADREN, Pastor.

WILL LECTURE.

Prof. A. R. Flowers will deliver an address in the interest of the Young People's Co-operative Community League work in Sandy Cross Methodist Church, Nash County, N. C., on Sunday evening, September 30th, at 8 P. M. This is one of the oldest and probably one of the most widely known Churches in the county. The other Churches of the community are expected to take part in these services and help to make this one of the most helpful occasions of the year. Prof. Flowers assures me that he is hoping to bring us a message that is full of interest, and it is just like him to do it.

COMMITTEE REPORT.

The committee appointed by the Mission Board to devise methods and means by which the Convention's asking of $45,000 for missions, home and foreign, could be raised, met in Suffolk on September 19, 1928, and made the following findings: that the women agree to raise $12,000, leaving a balance of $33,000 to be raised by Churches, Sunday Schools and individuals.

Moved and carried that we ask each Church to adopt as its quota of this amount one-third of the pastor's salary, which will be necessary to raise the amount.

Whatever amount is raised through Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor and sent to the Mission Secretary will be counted on the Church's quota. Members present:

FIRST CHURCH, NORFOLK.

We are enjoying our new home and field of work. It seems real good to be back in the Christian Church and enjoy the pleasant associations with the people of our own denomination. I do not mean to infer that our work at Nashville, Tenn., was in any way unpleasant while working with the good Presbyterian folk there. It was most enjoyable; but coming back to our own Church is like a long stay from home, then coming back for a visit.

But who could help loving the work in such a field as this? The folks are so good and considerate of you. They have done all that could be asked to make our stay with them pleasant and profitable. Upon our arrival we were met by Bro. J. M. Jones, who carried us to the home of Bro. Pierce, where we were royally entertained for two days and nights until we could get settled. The day following our arrival we were informed by Bro. Bell, who had been carrying me to various places and helping to get the necessary household goods, that there was to be a meeting at the parsonage that afternoon to which Mrs. McCauley and I were invited. When we arrived we found that the good people of the Church had given us a miscellaneous shower, which relieved our minds as well as our pocketbook of a strain that we had been laboring under for several days.

Only those who have had a similar experience can know how words fail us in expressing our appreciation to those who were so thoughtful of us. We hope to prove our sincere appreciation and heartfelt gratitude for the many kindnesses shown us since we have been with the folks of the First Christian Church by the service that we may be able to render them.

VALLEY LETTER.

Some time has elapsed since I last wrote to THE SUN. During this time I have been exceedingly busy here and there, and have let this privilege escape me. Our Conference was held August 15-17. The attendance was unusually good. We were greatly delighted to have with us Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Rev. J. F. Morgan, Dr. I. W. Johnson, Miss Lucy Eldredge, Geo. D. Colclough, Rev. A. R. Flowers, Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, C. D. Johnston, and J. O. Atkinson, Jr. The following Churches reported all Conference apportionments paid in full: Beulah, Concord, Dry Run, Joppa, Leaksville, Mayland, Mt. Olivet (G), Mt. Olivet (R), Newport, Timber Mountain, Timber Ridge, Whistler's Chapel, Winchester, Woods' Chapel—fourteen out of twenty-seven. As Dr. Atkinson has already given a report of the Conference, I will not say more.

It is now time to begin revival meetings for another year, and so all seasons seem to be the busy season with me.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson I—October 7, 1928.

PAUL IN EPHESUS.

GOLDEN TEXT: "We are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God fore-prepared that we should walk in them."—Eph. 2:10.

LESSON: Acts 19:1-41; Eph. 4:16.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Eph. 3:14-2.

Ephesus was one of the most important cities of Asia Minor. It was at the mouth of the Cayster River, and it had a splendid artificial harbor that was accessible to the largest ships. Furthermore, it was connected with the chief cities of the province by good roads, and hence it was easily accessible by both land and sea. Its location, therefore, favored its religious, political and commercial development, and presented a most advantageous field for the missionary labors of Paul. Ephesus was also the home of the native goddess Diana, and it was perhaps because of this fact that Ephesus was so rich and influential, for the temple to Diana was located here, and that temple was not only a place of worship, but it was a treasure house with almost incalculable sums of money stored in it for safe-keeping. The temple was also a museum, a sanctuary for the criminal, and also the rallying place for a large number of artisans who made a living by manufacturing images of the goddess Diana or shrines to be sold to visitors. Paul was in a very strategic place, with Ephesus as his headquarters.

"Reasoning and persuading as to the things concerning the kingdom of God." Religion is reasonable. When one thinks things through, it is the sensible thing after all. "Come now, let us reason together," says God. He does not thrust things down our throats, nor does He command blind, unreasoning obedience. He is willing to submit all things unto the test of reason. And even where things are not mathematically demonstrable, reason is on the side of faith rather than on the side of infidelity and atheism. Paul used reason in presenting the gospel. He also used persuasion. There is a legitimate place in teaching and preaching the word of God for an appeal to the emotions. The love of God, the sacrifice of Christ, the appeal to holy living, the certainty of impending doom, and many other doctrines have as much emotional appeal as intellectual conviction.

"But some were hardened and disobedient, speaking evil of the way before the multitude." By an inexorable law of the moral and spiritual nature, those who refuse or resist the truth become hardened to the truth. When a man hears a sermon, or a person hears a Sunday School lesson, and does not respond to the truth, by just so much he hardens his heart. Indeed, it is a rather serious thing for a man to hear the gospel unless he is prepared to respond to the gospel. It is not an unfounded psychological principle that comparatively few people are converted after they are twenty-five, but a sober, well-established fact. The man or woman who for twenty-five years has been saying, "No" to God's appeal through Christ is in a dangerous situation. "Today if ye hear His voice, harden not your hearts," is sound advice.

"Of the way." Thus did the Jews often call those whom we call Christians. How suggestive it is. Christians were those of the way, Jesus' way. Religion is not primarily a matter of belief, but a way of living, and Christianity is simply Jesus' way of living. We are called to embody His character and to express His spirit in all our relations and attitudes of life.

"Many also of them that believed came confessing and declaring their deeds . . . and they brought their books together and burned them." That was genuine repentance, a thorough-going "change of mind" as the word really signifies. The man who has really been converted will live differently. He will put out of his life things that stand in the way of Christ. He will "burn his bridges behind him" if he is wise, so that it will be all the more difficult to return to his old life. The action in this case was all the more noteworthy because it involved financial loss. Money is often the acid test.

The verses, Eph. 4:11-16, set forth the ultimate goal of the gospel of Christ. It is to bring men and women, boys and girls unto a unity of faith, and unto a knowledge of—not merely knowledge about—the Son of God, the measure of the fullness of the stature of Christ. Christian manhood and womanhood is the finished product of the Christian religion. And to this high calling God has called apostles, and prophets, and evangelists, and pastors, and teachers, and workers with young people and parents and all those who name His name. He has not given us all the same talents, nor has He opened to us the same sphere of work, but He has given to us the same ultimate mission—to use what we have and all that we have in helping Him to fashion men and women, boys and girls even unto a likeness of Christ, and in creating a world in which righteousness dwells. We are workers together with God. Let us not be weary in well-doing, but let us do with our hands and our heads and our hearts whatsoever He gives us to do.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, October 7, 1928.

TOPIC: "Workers Together with God."—1 Cor. 3:1-9. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

Most of us work without thinking about working with God, and so we lose joy and blessing (v. 1).

Many feel that they are working with their fellowmen, the minister, for instance, and again forget God (v. 4).

In Christian work, without God we can do nothing; as in nature, He must give the increase (v. 6).

Moreover, God is working with us, working upon us, tending us as a gardener, that we may bear the fruit of goodness (v. 9).

Suggestive Thoughts.

If we work with God we must work in His way, according to His laws. Some of our work is quite unlike God, being selfish and ambitious.

It is a great thing to be able to link up what we are doing with the powers of the other world, with God Himself. Then we know we cannot fail. One of the joys of Jesus was that He was doing the things that His Father was doing (John 5:19). He always consulted God. He attempted nothing He could not ask God to bless.

We can work with God in every-day affairs, in the carpenter's shop, in the market place, in the office. All the work of the world is God's work in which we share.

A Few Illustrations.

The football player who pays no attention to the signals given by the captain will fail as a player. The Christian who pays no attention to God must also fail.

One consecrated person with God is more than an army without God, for all power is his to draw upon. God is the eternally Live Wire.

The electric current stops the moment contact with the battery or dynamo is broken. To work with God we must make and keep contact with God—in prayer, meditation, Bible-reading.

The farmer works together with nature in sowing and tending his crops; and nature rewards him with a harvest. We cannot work with God without being likewise rewarded.

To Think About.

In what things do we work with God?

When and how do people fail to work with God?

How may we get more of God's power in our lives?

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

"IT TAKES A HEAP O' LOVIN'."

"Love suffereth long and is kind . . . is not provoked . . . beareth all things . . . endureth all things."—1 Cor. 13:4-7.

It takes a heap o' lovin' to keep a man at home
When he feels a little lonely and his heart desires to roam;

When the Great White Way is calling and 'tis there he longs to be,

It takes a heap o' kindness—you just try and see.

A kindly tear o' pleading or perhaps a smile of cheer

When the golden sun is sinking and the hush o' night is near;

When the old gang seems to haunt him as he stands so sad and lone,

It takes a heap o' lovin' to keep a man at home.

The tender touch o' baby or a virtuous wife's care,
With a hand o' gentle fingers moving softly thru his hair,

Not wistful eyes o' yearning when to paths o' life
he's gone,

For it takes a heap o' lovin' to keep a man at home.

Let misfortune greet his loved ones, 'twill restore his manly pride;

Then behold his sad bereaving, he is ever by thy side.

With thy sympathetic patience, gloomy days will hurry on,

But it takes a heap o' lovin' to keep a man at home.

TUESDAY.

CHARACTERISTICS OF A CHRISTIAN.

Lesson: 1 Peter 3:8-11; Eph. 4:1-3, 31:5-2.

Christians must be "Like-minded with Christ," compassionate and sympathetic with the afflicted and distressed, lovers of one another as brethren, tender-hearted, humble, courteous, unselfish, good to the evil, holding of tongue, peaceable, living worthily, seekers after knowledge of truth of Christ and God, longsuffering, patient, forgiving, prayerful continuously. This kind of Christianity every one acknowledges to be the stuff the world needs most, and this is the kind of religion that impresses the world. This is the kind of living that cost nothing but has eternal reward.

John Wesley said, "The longer I live, the more allowances I make for human weaknesses, and the more I require of myself."

Prayer.—Our dear Father, who can give us everything we can conceive, give unto us the true Christian life and the power to require of ourselves more consideration for others. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

VOICES HEARD AND UNHEARD.

"There are so many voices in the world—I will speak with understanding . . . else how shall
. . . the unlearned say, Amen?"—1 Cor. 14:1-9.

Read the above reference and require more of yourself in making the spirit, your spirit, your attitude, your life, plain to others.

Prayer.—Lord, let Thy Spirit fill us. Give us Thy understanding. Make our living plain, and may we keep ourselves unspotted from the world.
Amen.

THURSDAY.

JESUS CHRIST—AND WE.

Christ has no hands but our hands

To do His work today;

He has no feet but our feet

To lead men in His way;

He has no tongue but our tongues

To tell men how He died;

He has no help but our help

To bring them to His side.

We are the only Bible

The careless world will read;

We are the sinner's gospel,

We are the sinner's creed;

We are the Lord's last message

Given in deed and word—

What if the line is crooked?

What if the type is blurred?

What if our hands are busy

With other work than His?

What if our feet are walking

Where sin's allurements is?

What if our tongues are speaking

Of things His lips would spurn?

How can we hope to help Him

Unless from Him we learn?

—Annie Johnson Flint.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

FRIDAY.

FARMS.

"A sower went forth to sow."—Matt. 1:23.

There are four classes of farms: farms without fences, farms of light sandy soil, the rich farms, and the good farms.

How much like this can a soul be? One without protection, that is open to anything, that is without deep soil does not endure. With too much business the eternal is crowded out, but the soul that is even-tempered, regular, consistent, honest, patient, etc., and holds on as fast as a fixed star, yields the largest life when it is ended.

Prayer.—Lord, give us grace to keep Thy words in our hearts and Thy spirit in our lives. Amen.

SATURDAY.

HOW MAKE PEACE.

Christ "abolished in His flesh enmity, even the law of commandment contained in ordinances, that He might create in Himself—one new man, so making peace."—Eph. 2:14, 15.

Essentially every one desires peace. It has been seen that the most disturbing actions have been intended to make peace. Though born out of one's own selfishness, distorted ideas, and wilful badinage, nevertheless it was that one's idea of peace which he sought. Thus as a soul cries for peace it may arm itself to the teeth to keep it and the bloodiest and most savage incidents take place.

Does fighting bring peace? God says, "Come and let us reason together." Christ abolished enmity and called it a "more excellent way." Even laws and ordinances may be set aside for peace.
Neighbors should have no fences between them.
Their spirits should be too brotherly for that.
Neighbors should be able to act with utmost and truest confidence in one another. Jesus has showed the way and demonstrated that the only protection is friendly feelings. "He that takes up the sword shall die by the sword." Christ's peace is the only peace.

Prayer.—Our Father and our God, our hearts be praised for Thy unspeakable gift of love and the way to our heart's desire. Amen.

SUNDAY.

STOPPING BEFORE YOU GET THROUGH.

"Thou shouldst have smitten five or six times."
—2 Kings 13:19.

In other words, he grew impatient in the effort and kicked out of the traces before he accomplished his task. Did you ever do that?

Life records every deed and it stands as a perpetual witness for or against us. What is that divine scribe writing now? It is indeed a solemn thought. We are trustees of ourselves. One day we will be required to render a complete report.
True to God, faithfulness, self-denial and personal religion.

A company of young people were preparing for a dance at home. A picture of Christ was on the wall. The question arose whether to let it stay there or not. They finally decided to take it out.
One of the party came forward and said, "What!
take the picture of the Saviour out? Will it spoil the dance? If that is what it means, I will not be present. I will never be found where I shall be ashamed for the eyes of Jesus to see me."

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, gather us by Thy word under the wings of Thy grace, and be Thou the guardian of our lives, that we may never do the things that maketh ashamed, and Thus may be pure in Thy sight. Amen.

YOUNG PEOPLE.

What are you planning to do in your Christian Endeavor Society, Sunday School class and missionary society this fall and winter? The nights are getting longer now and they are fine for making plans for socials, for doing something. Rally day should give us new inspiration for the year's work. After rally day, what? You will be interested in the following announcements:

Rally Day to Easter Leaflets.

A new rally day to Easter leaflet has just been issued by the Young People's Department of the Christian Church for use in Christian Endeavor Societies, organized classes, missionary societies and other young people's groups, and may be had free of charge. It has as its theme: "Our Quest-Crusading with Christ." We hope the more than 30,000 young people of the Christian Church will join the thousands of young people in other denominations in the great Christian Endeavor "Crusade with Christ" campaign, in which they are seeking to crusade with Christ in personal evangelism, Christian citizenship, and world peace. It is a great thing to adventure with Christ in making our own lives richer in winning others, in living as Christian citizens in this good country of ours, and in helping to rid the world of war and bringing about world friendship and fellowship. Write for further information about the "Crusade with Christ" campaign.

The new leaflet carries suggestion for worship, study, play and service for each month from October through Easter. You can't afford to miss this. It was prepared for you and your Church.

World Friendship Programs—Second Series.

The 1927-28 World Friendship Programs were so helpful that many requested that another series be written for 1928-1929. They are now ready and are full of suggestions for world friendship. They may be used in Christian Endeavor Societies, missionary meetings, young people's classes and other young people's meetings. The themes by months are:

October, "Prayer and Missions"; November,
"Missions and World Peace"; December, "A Friendship Circle that Goes Round the World"; January to March, "Africa Today"; April to June, "Youth and the New America"; July, "Red Letter Days"; August, "A Palaver"; September, "World Friendship Rally." Price 10 cents, or $1.00 per dozen.

PATTIE COGHILL, Sec'y.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The Sunday Schools in the Eastern Virginia Conference and North Carolina and Virginia Conference are running an even race on our monthly offering list. Both Conferences have the same number of schools now on the list of monthly offerings. We wonder which Conference will be the nearest to a one hundred per cent when their Conference meets. We are doing our best to get both up to 100 per cent by that time.

Little Edith Virginia Bryant, from the Valley of Virginia Central Conference, came to live with us on September 11th. She is a fine little girl and is the first little girl we have had from that Conference. Her father and mother are both dead. We trust her stay in the Christian Orphanage will be pleasant and profitable to her, and when she reaches the age limit she will go out a splendid young woman.

The Woman's Missionary Society of our Henderson Church sent a box of nice new dresses for Gladys Horne this week. This society gets a lot of joy out of helping this fatherless child, and it makes this little girl very happy to have this society help her.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Newman, of Henderson, N. C., sent a box of nice dresses for Swannie Horne this week, too. These good people are delighted in helping this little girl, and it makes her very happy. Mr. and Mrs. Newman were pleasant visitors to the Orphanage some time ago, and are deeply interested in its work. It seems to me that many ladies' societies would be delighted to clothe a girl or boy.

The fall season is upon us, and it takes lots of clothes, wraps, shoes, etc. We truly hope our friends will remember us by sending us things to help us.

AN APPRECIATION.

Some time ago a catalog of Piedmont Junior College came to my hands. It was examined carefully. There were noticed some changes. The best of all is that it is now an accredited school. When we think of the good it has done already, this advantage gives increased hope and courage for the future.

The new administration building will mean added inspiration to both teacher and student; and the thought of its being completed right soon gives occasion to rejoice. Its thirteen large, well-lighted and ventilated recitation rooms, and an auditorium fitted for any occasion will be a great addition to the former plant. It makes us rejoice with those who have supported the institution and have long and prayerfully looked for a brighter day.

With a little extra assistance in the campaign which is being conducted at the present, it will mean untold good for the Church and institution. It would mean a great deal if the item for "schools and colleges" in Conference apportionments could be pro-rated rather than giving to Piedmont Junior just the amount raised by that section of our work. But the outlook for the coming session is encouraging. And, when we consider the cost, there is everything in favor of the school.

Youngville, N. C. E. M. CARTER.

BRO. FLOWERS' WORK.

A very good meeting is reported from the Free-will Baptist Church at Elm City, N. C., the first week in September. This was a real union service, conducted by Rev. A. R. Flowers and attended by the people belonging to about six different denominations. People for several miles out in the country took part in the meeting, and many from Wilson and Rocky Mount. Bro. Flowers is a firm believer in the fellowship of all Christians, and is making his mark in this kind of work. He has recently received several pressing invitations from Sunday School secretaries, young people's organizations and Church clerks to return to Georgia and Florida for the fall and winter.

J. FRANK NICHOLS.

According to Dr. W. J. Hampton, author of "The Religion of the Presidents," Herbert Hoover's mother was a preacher in the Society of Friends. He says: "Hulda Randall Minthorne Hoover was a Quaker preacher, of grace and beauty as to appearance, and remarkable ability as a preacher. This mother of Mr. Hoover was well educated, having been graduated from a prominent seminary and attended the University of Iowa, in which State, in the Quaker village of West Branch, Herbert Hoover was born. Mrs. Herbert Hoover informed me that Mr. Hoover's mother, endowed with a well-trained mind, was particularly celebrated in her part of the world 'when the spirit moved her' in meeting, and was constantly invited to attend meetings elsewhere." —Evangelical Messenger.

sonal evangelism. We hear him today saying to his brother, "Come with me; we have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ." "And he brought him to Jesus." The gospel record shows that Jesus took this crude, impulsive man, who had been a fisherman, and made him to become the great fisher of men. All this resulted because Andrew did a little personal work for his Lord.

Too often we refrain from asking our brother to come unto the Christ. We, therefore, allow the kingdom to suffer. We rob it of untold numbers of men and women of talent and ability. I am thinking just now of one of those common experiences wherein one man neglects to ask another to accept Christ, when a golden opportunity was given him. I go back a years ago to a Y. M. C. A. meeting held one night on my college campus. It was toward the beginning of the collegiate year and a number of freshmen had come into the meeting. The leader asked if there were any who desired to become Christians that night. One young man said he would like to have the prayers of the group, but was not ready to make a decision then. A few days later the leader of that meeting (who is now a nationally known Y. M. C. A. worker) met this young fellow on the campus. They took a walk and every step of the way they talked—about this and about that, eventually hoping to come to the question of a life decision for Christ. But they returned to the dormitory that night and the question was still unsettled, for Fletcher Brockman had not mentioned Christ to his fellow-student. Procrastination had robbed him of his good intentions. He would speak to him next time. In the meantime, another Y. M. C. A. meeting was held, at which place the youth publicly announced his desire to follow Christ. Brockman went to him and told him that he was glad, whereupon the boy looked him in the face and said: "Yet you would have allowed me to go to hell! You took me on a walk, and every step of the way I wanted you to tell me about the Christ you knew, and you did not."

Christ stands at the door of our lives and of our Churches. Through personal presence, personal prayer and personal evangelism, you and I may open the door and let Him come in and sup with us and we with Him. When He enters, our lives will be filled with happiness and good will; our Churches will be temples of spiritual re-enforcement. Jesus will be within.

"Fling forth the triple-colored flag to dare
The bright, untraveled highways of the air;
Blow the undaunted bugles, blow, and yet
Let not the boast betray us to forget.
Lo, there are high adventures for this hour,
Tours to test the sinews of power:
For we must parry, as the years increase,
The hazards of success, the risks of peace!"

BIBLE SEALED IN GLASS.

The treasured Bible, the property of Fredericksburg Masonic Lodge, on which Washington took his oath of Masonry, has been sealed in a glass case, a gift from Trinity Lodge, No. 41, of Washington, D. C. The gift was made at the instigation of O. A. C. Oehmler, a member of Trinity Lodge. His mother made the cushion upon which the Bible rests in the case.

Some time ago, when Trinity Lodge visited the lodge in Fredericksburg, Oehmler, with others, was shown the Bible, which at that time was covered with netting. He was deeply impressed and decided it was practically sacrilegious to have this relic lay under such inauspicious surroundings and with the ever-present danger of mutilation from relic-seekers. He learned also that the Bible was considered precious by the lodge and that almost fabulous sums had been offered for it. As a result of his interest and as a gesture of fraternal love, Trinity lodge presented the glass case in which the Bible has been hermetically sealed.

LET'S RALLY!

Summer has passed, the autumn is here, and with it comes the close of our year's work. I am wondering how the different societies and conferences are coming along with their goals, and I am sure every one of our readers would like to know, too. You know some time ago a Convention editor was elected to whom all items of interest should be sent to have published in THE SUN and the Herald of Gospel Liberty. The local societies are asked to send their material to their Conference editor and she will send it to the Convention editor, where it will be assembled and published. Now, we cannot put your accomplishments or wants or ads in these papers if you do not send them, so let us start right now and elect a reporter in each local society who will be responsible for writing up the account of your meetings and your work. Hope to have a good amount of material to send to THE SUN soon.

The Eastern Virginia Conference may send material to Mrs. J. W. Fix, Franklin, Va.; the North Carolina Conference may send to Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C.; the Alabama and Georgia Conference send to Mrs. G. L. Stephens, Wadley, Ala., and the Valley Virginia Conference may send to Mrs. Boyd Richards, Winchester, Va.

HOLY NECK.

The annual revival services were held at Holy Neck Christian Church, Nansemond County, Va., the week following the first Sunday in September. Dr. C. H. Rowland, a former pastor and now of Greensboro, N. C., did the preaching, to the delight and edification of his hearers. There were many decisions and reconsecrations and fourteen united with the Church. Dr. Rowland was pastor of this Church from 1900 to 1906, and did a splendid work and was much beloved by the congregation. It was a mutual pleasure to former pastor and people to be associated together in a week of fellowship and service.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is small.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

BETS—STRYKER.

A quiet, but most beautiful marriage took place on Wednesday, September 5, 1928, at 2:30 o'clock, at the home of Mrs. Bettie O. Hall, Great Bridge, Norfolk County, when Miss Mary Hall Stryker became the bride of Mr. Edwin Morris Betts, of the University of Virginia.

The ceremony was performed before an improvised altar of palms, ferns, clematis and cathedral candles, by Rev. J. F. Morgan, the bride's pastor. Before the ceremony, Mr. A. Guy Hall, Jr., of South Norfolk, Va., played Schubert's "Serenade." The processional was the "Bridal Chorus" from Lohengren; the recessional was from Mendelssohn's "Wedding March."

The bride entered with her sister, Mrs. Frank F. Miller, of Waycross, Ga., her only attendant. The bride wore a dress of Mouet blue transparent velvet, with hat and accessories to match. Her flowers were a corsage bouquet of butterfly roses and valley lilies.

The bridegroom had as his best man Mr. Frank F. Miller, brother-in-law of the bride, and the master of ceremonies was Mr. Frank N. Hall, cousin of the bride.

Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Betts left for a wedding trip to Boston, and on their return will make their home in the Brandon Apartment, University of Virginia. Mrs. Betts graduated at Elon College, N. C.; Mr. Betts is a graduate of Elon and also of the University of Virginia, and at the present time is assistant professor of biology at the university, and is choir director and organist of the First M. E. Church, Charlottesville. Mrs. Betts has been art teacher for the schools of Norfolk County and is an active member of the Berea Christian Church.

The many friends of this happy couple wish them much happiness as they travel life's journey together.

NEGRO MISSIONARIES TO AFRICA.—

On August 22nd there sailed for France, en route to Africa, Mr. and Mrs. Irvin W. Underhill, the first two missionaries of the negro race sent out by the Presbyterian Board of Missions for a generation. Mr. Underhill graduated from Princeton Seminary this year. The new missionaries are to be stationed at the Cameroun, on the west coast of Africa.—Christian Century.

BUDDHISTS JOIN IN REFORM.—

Buddhists have begun to link hands with Christians in Japan for moral reform. At the national convention against licensed prostitution, convened recently by the Japanese W. C. T. U., Buddhists were among the 500 women present, and Buddhist speakers had place on the program. Young women, Buddhist and Christian, have launched a league, the members of which solemnly swear that they will never marry a drinking man. A Japanese newspaper, noting the league's growth, commented that "the time may come when a man will be obliged to choose between his wine or his wife."

Prominent Buddhists, believing that reform begins at home, are campaigning to enforce the Buddhist principle of prohibition among the priests of that faith.—Christian Herald.

BISHOP JOSEPH C. HARTZELL.—

Bishop Joseph C. Hartzell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who died in Cincinnati September 7th, at the age of eighty-six, went to Africa in the era of the imperialists. He was a friend of Britain's greatest empire builder, Cecil Rhodes. Rhodes' dreams for Britain were matched by those of Hartzell for the kingdom of Christ. Most monumental of the work of this Methodist Livingston is at Old Umtali, in Southern Rhodesia, where, on 33,000 acres of land granted by Rhodes himself, Hartzell founded a Christian community that for nearly three decades has been a training ground for the leaders of a Christian Africa. In forty-six years of Christian service, Bishop Hartzell boasted he had traveled annually 35,000 miles and without a single accident. His death was at the hands of robber-assailants who entered his Cincinnati home.—Christian Herald.

THE CHURCH AND RACE HATRED.—

One of the issues dealt with by the International Missionary Council at Jerusalem was the question of hatred between the races. There is no evil that is more deeply entrenched in the heart of the world than that of one race looking down upon, despising and hating another race. Hate is eternally and unalterably opposed to the spirit of Christ's gospel. He who taught that hatred in one's heart toward another individual was sufficient to prevent entrance into the kingdom of heaven must be profoundly stirred as He contemplates the present-day attitude of one race for another. If the followers of Jesus really set themselves to bind together the divergent races of mankind by ties of mutual interest, understanding, sympathy, and love; and if they set about the task in the spirit of the Master, the effort may take us a long way toward the hastening of the kingdom.

It may take a long time. It required nineteen hundred years for the teachings of Jesus to sufficiently permeate the realms of national thinking for the leading nations of the world to come together and formulate a treaty condemning war. But this has now become an actuality. With all the discouraging facts that are confronting those who are attempting to live the gospel of Christ, this is perhaps the most hopeful day that the Church has ever seen. The developments and achievements of the kingdom are indeed measured by our faith. Once we have come to believe that under God a thing is really possible, we see it beginning to take shape before our very eyes.

DROPS SECTARIAN DESIGNATION.—

In a pastoral letter to the congregation of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, New York City, Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick calls attention to the fact that when the Church moves to the new cathedral-like edifice now being built near Grant's Tomb, the Baptist designation will be dropped and the simple title, "The Riverside Church," will take its place. The congregation will not call itself a community Church, but it will be, according to Dr. Fosdick, "in a peculiar sense a communal Church." In discussing the dropping of the denominational connotation, Dr. Fosdick points out that "all disciples of Jesus are welcome on equal terms into our membership, without regard to credal subscription, ritual requirement or denominational affiliation." He then goes on to point out the requirements for community service which must be met in a section where "the community is not primarily recipient, but active; it is accustomed to doing things together rather than to passive acceptance of things done for it." Various forms of activity are suggested, but these details are subordinated to this general statement: "What we shall need the most is clairvoyance; we must see the places where we can be a focus for expression for the community's co-operative spirit. What we shall need next is genuine unselfishness; we must be interested primarily not in our own prestige and proselytism, but in the community's good. What we shall next need is breadth; regardless of creed, Church, race or religion, we must welcome from the community co-operators to do what needs to be done." New York, with two community Churches, and these two served by men of as great and distinctive talents as John Haynes Holmes and Harry Emerson Fosdick, is going to command increasing attention from those interested in the development of American Church life.—Christian Century.

E. STANLEY JONES IN SOUTH AMERICA.—

Dr. E. Stanley Jones, of India, is just completing—early in August—fifteen days' intensive evangelistic effort in Buenos Aires, Argentine, following a week each in Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo, Brazil, and another week in Montevideo, Uruguay. His visit marks the highest level in the presentation of the Christian message that we have had in the River Plat region for some time, and the actual co-operation of the various denominational groups and splendid spirit has been unprecedented. Dr. Jones was loaned to the Committee on Co-operation in Latin America by the Methodist board for this important work, and the local committee on co-operation, representing various denominational groups, has had charge of all arrangements. Forty public meetings have been held in fifteen days, with Anglicans, Baptists, Brethren, Disciples, Lutherans, Mennonites, Methodists, Nazarenes, Presbyterians and Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A. and the Bible societies, the evangelistic union and the Salvation Army co-operating in the promotion and the personal work. Some persons came a distance of 500 miles to attend these meetings. The morning conferences for Christian workers have been especially profitable. A large attendance of non-Christians has been secured in the meetings at the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A.

The Christ-possessed man of India, with his engaging smile and winsome personality, brings forth from his treasure-house things new and old to present the message which he loves to needy people. Such logical and psychological argument backed by a sincere Christian life, combine to give a presentation of the gospel which reaches the hearts of people, making them see the realities of life, their need for something greater than themselves, and Jesus Christ as the all-sufficient one to meet that need.

Latin America needs a man like Stanley Jones who can give his full-time work in important centers of the twenty republics, working especially among the neglected upper classes. At a small conference of university heads and other leaders in Buenos Aires, Dr. Jones discussed religion for four hours with men who were eager for his kind of message. A leading newspaper man said a few days after attending this conference that he had been living in a new world; that spiritual truths had been presented there whose existence had been made known to him for the first time. On another occasion, this leader said, "I have seen in Dr. Jones the joy and optimism that altruistic service among a foreign people can bring to one."—Christian Century.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The new Christian Church at Biscoe, N. C., had its formal opening last Sunday, September 30th. A good program for three services had been arranged, and no doubt large audiences attended the formal opening of the new Church. Rev. W. C. Martin was in charge of this service.

Rev. W. C. Martin, Candor, N. C., writes: "We held our meeting at Brown's Chapel the week following the second Sunday in September. Rev. M. A. Pollard, of Liberty, helped us there. We had a fine meeting and more than twenty-five professions. Sixteen joined the Church at the closing services and others are to join later. All praise be given to Him who giveth peace and power to those that ask Him."

Rev. Jos. W. Fix, who is supplying so acceptably many of the sermons for the Pulpit Section of THE SUN, finds himself resting and relaxing under the doctor's orders at Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, for a brief season. Bro. Fix is a close worker and constant student, and we are sure that two weeks' surcease of activity under the guardian care of Dr. Rawls, at Lakeview, will bring him back stronger and better for future tasks.

Rev. G. H. Veazey, Roanoke, Ala., in a note to THE SUN's editor, says: "We are planning to clear our Church of its $700 indebtedness on or before November 1, and then begin immediately to build our parsonage. We are just waiting till we can get the debt off of our Church in order to begin the parsonage. We are happy in our work in Roanoke. We have plenty of good neighbors, and the other denominations of the town are very friendly to our Church. I am agreeably surprised at the consideration we get here."

Rev. J. Lee House, of Pope's Chapel Church and a member of the Eastern North Carolina Conference, is open for ministerial work and is ready to give full time to the pastorate. Bro. House graduated from Duke University last spring, and is one of our promising young ministers. Rev. E. M. Carter, in a personal letter, says: "Bro. House was with us last fourth Sunday at Pope's Chapel and preached a good sermon. In fact, he has been with me in a number of my services and the people enjoy his messages." Bro. House is doing post-graduate work at Duke University, Durham, N. C., and will be glad to correspond with a Church or Churches needing his services.

Many inquiries have come about our work and workers in Porto Rico. Owing to the seriousness of the storm, mails and wires were interrupted, and not until this week have we had direct communication and information. We are pleased to present elsewhere the letter of Mrs. Barrett, which tells something of conditions now in Porto Rico. We are grateful, indeed, that our workers were spared, and learn with sorrow that so many are left homeless and in want. While the Red Cross undertakes to do the immediate relief work for the physical welfare of the people, the Churches must do the relief work for damage done to the Church buildings and to other property necessary to the effectual work of missions.

Rev. E. M. Carter, Youngsville, N. C., under date of September 27th, writes: "We organized a Woman's Missionary Society in our Church here last night. Mrs. E. M. Carter, president; Mrs. W. G. Scarborough, vice-president; Mrs. W. A.

Massey, secretary-treasurer, and Miss Gertrude Winston, corresponding secretary. The society starts with fourteen active and three honorary members." Seeing what a help to a Church a Woman's Missionary Society is, we sometimes wonder why any Church goes without such a society. We have often said that one woman, deeply interested and determined, could organize and carry on a Missionary Society in any Church, and we still hold to that faith. We wish the Youngsville Society length of days and useful service.

A telegram from Bro. Darden, at Sanford, N. C., September 24th, stated: "The Davis meeting fine. Had a packed house last night." A letter from Bro. Darden, who is directing their work on behalf of the Mission Board, states that Bro. and Sister Davis have just closed a very successful meeting with our Church at Wake Chapel, and the people seem much gratified and rejoiced over the conduct and the outcome of the meetings. Immediately following the close of the Wake Chapel meeting, their engagement began with our Church at Sanford, and is to continue for two weeks. The telegram quoted tells of the beginning of this meeting. Bro. Darden further advises that the Sanford engagement is the last so far booked for Bro. and Sister Davis, and that he is anxious to correspond with any pastor or Church desiring the evangelistic services of these two consecrated and capable evangelistic workers. Wherever they have held meetings, the people seem spiritually edified and quite satisfied over results achieved. If any of our pastors or Churches contemplate evangelistic meetings within the next few weeks, they should correspond with Bro. J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va. While the Mission Board does not employ Bro. and Sister Davis, it most heartily endorses their work, as it did the past year, and commends them to Churches needing evangelistic aid, and has asked Bro. Darden to act for the board in making engagements and directing their work.

LARGE CONGREGATION AT DOVER.

Sunday was declared by many to be the greatest day in People's Church, Dover, Del., since the dedication of the new Church four years ago by reason of the large audience present at the morning service to greet the pastor, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, on his return from his vacation in Europe.

The occasion itself, the exceptionally large audience, the beautiful floral decorations in honor of the occasion, the memorial bouquets, the music, and the message by the pastor on the subject "Impressions from the Peace Pilgrimage" made the day one long to be remembered by all who attended the morning service.

Dr. Helfenstein returned Thursday of last week on the S. S. Homeric, of the White Star Line, sailing from Southampton, England. Dr. Helfenstein and thirteen other ministers from different sections of the United States were on the pilgrimage of international friendship under the direction of the Council on Interchange of Preachers Between the Churches of Great Britain and America. A like number of British pastors conducted a similar pilgrimage in America.

Dr. Helfenstein's itinerary included Holland, England, Wales and Scotland. He spoke twice each Sunday, in the pulpits of historic Churches of different denominations, in The Hague, Holland; London, England; Burnley, England; Norwich, England, and Dalkeith, Scotland; addressed the Rotary Club at Edinburgh, Scotland, and conducted numerous group conferences on "America and the International Situation" in various centers, including Cambridge University; Amsterdam, Holland; Cardiff, Wales; Edinburgh and London and smaller cities.

While in Holland he attended the Olympic Games at Amsterdam, where the athletes of twenty-nine different nations were competing. His trip included a non-stop flight in one of the large Dutch airplanes from London across the English Channel, over northern France, Belgium and Holland, to Amsterdam.

While in Wales he attended the Eisteddfod, the Welsh National Musical Festival, which was held for seven days at Treorchy, Wales, in the Rhonda Valley, which event was attended by 35,000 people each day, and at which more than three thousand of the world's leading singers competed for prizes in solo numbers, duets, quartets, glee clubs, choral societies and choirs. While at the Eisteddfod, Dr. Helfenstein met personally ex-Premier Lloyd George and several members of the British Parliament.

In referring to the cordial reception given by the Churches to the speakers, Dr. Helfenstein said that the same could not be surpassed, and that the enthusiasm of the people for the pilgrimage and the hospitality extended the speakers was simply marvelous. He told of a number of the unusually pleasant experiences enjoyed as a guest in the homes where he was entertained.

Dr. Helfenstein visited the principal cities in Holland, England, Wales and Scotland, and also motored out into the rural sections of the usual tourist path to visit the smaller villages in order to become acquainted with the regular life of the people in the various countries. He did not go to France, Switzerland, Italy and Germany this summer, as he had spent several weeks in those countries during the year he spent in graduate study abroad.

Of all the European countries through which he has traveled he said he believed that for beauty in natural scenery Wales and Scotland were not surpassed by any, unless it would be Switzerland. Later in the fall he is to give a series of illustrated travel talks on the countries visited this summer, using pictures he took while on his trip.

The pastor has announced a carefully worked out program of Church activities for the fall months and a schedule of the worship services with the topics on which he is to speak each Sunday during September, October and November.

Every member of the Church is challenged to enter wholeheartedly into the life and activities of the Church in the very beginning of the fall program in appreciation of God's love and providence.—Delaware State News.

PROHIBITION OR THE SALOON.

I regard the cause of prohibition as virtually settled, although it may take as long to release a community from the curse of drink as it is likely to do in the case of murder and burglary.

A community has a right to rid itself of social pests the same as other dangers to health and property. This nation has taken this step in defense, as a great experiment. I see no evidence of its failure among law-abiding people; and these constitute the vast majority of us. If we do not like a law, there are very simple and direct ways of changing it, not through defiance.

We hear a good deal of the modification of the Volstead law, accompanied by the admission that the saloon has been a monstrous evil which must be checked. As a matter of fact, there is no way by which alcohol for drinking purposes can be made acceptable and accessible. There is no substitute for the saloon, short of its suppression. In fact, things are going on as well as could be expected. Whether we wish it or not, prohibition has become a national issue. The American people have decided and will never turn backward, although minor details may be subject some time to change, but not, I believe, through the methods that have been thus far put forward.—David Starr Jordan, in Signs of the Times.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

THE OPEN WINDOW.

BY REV. FRED D. BALLARD.

"He went into his house; his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed, and gave thanks before his God as he did aforetime."—Dan. 6:10.

The Washington monument is said to be one of the highest monuments in the world. It towers into the heavens a height of nearly six hundred feet. As one climbs the summit of this memorable structure, one is at first impressed with its magnificent structure. When the top has been reached, his interest has widened. It is no longer held within the confines of its marvelous structure. Suddenly a light dawns upon his face. His interest now is directed to a window through which he beholds the beauty of the horizon, the rising sun, the vastness of the universe. Standing in utter amazement at the wonders his eyes behold, his soul is inspired, and as he watches the sun creep from behind the hills and pursue its daily run, he seems to sense the very presence of Him who is the source of all light, the Son of God, the light of the world. It was such a vision as this Daniel beheld looking out of his chamber window facing Jerusalem. The open window was to him a channel of vision.

The purpose of a window. A window has its manifold purposes. It serves to let in and it serves to keep out. It is used in a valuable way in the winter to keep the warmth in the room; in the summer as a ventilator to keep it cool. It is an instrument of vision to look within or to look without. It is through the open window the sun-rays find their entrance into the sick-room, bringing light, heat, cheerfulness and health. Scientists tell us plenty of sunshine is nature's greatest remedy for all maladies.

Types of windows. As to the type of windows seen, they are various in style and structure. They also vary as to purpose. There are windows of a material sense to let in artificial and natural light, and there are windows of a spiritual sense. There are windows to the earthly home and windows to your heavenly home. There are windows of the body through which we have our physical sight; there are also windows of the soul through which shines the celestial light. It is this window of the soul that we are to consider.

Over the Persian kingdom ruled the monarch Darius. In order to facilitate the affairs of his kingdom and to avoid any possible danger that might develop, he divided his kingdom into one hundred and twenty provinces, and set over each province a princess, and over the princess he set three presidents. Into the hands of the presidents was entrusted the financial affairs of the kingdom and other interests. Darius was now a man of age and felt that he could no longer manipulate the executive affairs of his kingdom. Therefore, he decided he would appoint one who would be chief of all the presidents and princesses to fill that position. On account of the excellent spirit that was in him, Daniel was preferred above all the princesses and presidents to fill that position.

Following the action taken by King Darius and the selection of Daniel, a spirit of jealousy began to breed in the hearts of the princesses and presidents. Soon a plot had developed and plans were laid to remove Daniel from office. Their scheme worked most effectively, and soon Daniel was the victim of their hate and conspiracy. A decree had been signed by the king, which, according to the law of the Medes and the Persians, could not be changed. The decree was to the effect that if any one was seen or known to ask a petition of any god or man save that of the king, for thirty days he shall be cast into the den of lions.

"Now, when Daniel knew that the decree had been signed, he went into his house, and, his windows being opened in his chambre toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees and prayed, and gave thanks before his God three times a day as he did aforetime."

Fanny Crosby, America's greatest hymn-writer, when six weeks old lost her sight; therefore, she had to labor under extreme difficulties all her life. Although she was blind, she assumed an optimistic attitude toward life and exemplified a splendid spirit in all her writings. One day a friend was asked how it was that a woman blind as Fanny Crosby was could write such beautiful hymns. He replied by saying, "But her soul can see." It was out of the window of her soul the vision came to write hymns. Like Fanny Crosby, Daniel, too, had eyes to his soul. He had his trials, his handicaps and failures. While his life was not a perfect example of righteousness free from limitation, yet there are worthy traits of his character we can well afford to emulate.

1. The open window of purpose. "Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank" (Dan. 6:8). "Daniel purposed in his heart." The poet has sanely said, "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it come the issues of life." We are living in a day when purpose is motivated by wisdom. Matters of choice are left with the brain. The danger of forgetting to consult the heart as well as the brain lurks on every hand. A noble purpose will be the fruit of the heart as well as a product of the brain. Daniel found the fountain of his purpose hidden in the spring of his heart.

Purpose means character. The strength or the weakness of a character lies in the purpose a person has in view. Life's greatest battles are not fought from without, but within. To conquer one's self is the first victory to be gained in any conflict. It is the first step in either a spiritual or a moral victory. The faculty of the human mind which enables a person to say, "I will or I will not" becomes man's strongest asset or his most belligerent foe. All real dignity, true Christian statesmanship, deeds of heroism has its beginning, not in ancestral fortune, but in that of a rich, vital and noble purpose.

He purposed he would not defile himself. A man of letters has said, "To thine own self be true and thou canst be false to any man." Daniel refused to eat the king's meat or to drink the wine in order that he might be true to himself. To eat the meat or to drink the wine meant self-defilement. The commonest meal furnishes an occasion on which to defile or to dignify the man. It is often in a man's physical appetite that character is discovered and the higher or lower nature is proven dominant. Daniel's purpose was not to satisfy his physical appetite, the lower nature; but to feed his soul, the higher nature, by keeping pure and undefiled. A man who will not honor his body will not respect his soul. A man who does not have a purpose for both body and soul is like a ship without a rudder. Sad is the end thereof. Daniel had a purpose for his life.

2. A window of trial. Daniel's life also had a window of trial. He was put to the test. He was tried in the fire of temptation. The inevitable day of trial came to him as it comes to every child of God. "God does not tempt us above what we are able to bear." The real test of a Christian is not in what he believes, but how he acts in the hour of testing. God can use only the best to be His leaders. If Daniel was to be the man of God he must be able to stand the test. He who would behold the beauties of the mountains must climb its loftiest peaks. He who would climb a tree in search of its luscious fruits will find its rough places. But they are not handicaps; they are helps. Men do not become great athletes by sitting in the grandstand, nor by donning themselves in a football uniform. They become great only as they persistently play the game. Likewise, he would grow in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, will become strong in the faith and love of God as he plays the game and overcomes the world of trial.

The window of trial was a revelation to Daniel. It is in the trials of life that often we discover our best selves, and remedy our weak points. It is the trials we have that draws us close to and drives us to a sense of dependence on God. Daniel felt a deep need of God in the hour of trial. He prayed in the sunshine of prosperity as well as in the rain of adversity, but he felt the need of him more and was more conscious of his presence in the hour of trial.

3. The window of the world. "Then this Daniel was preferred above the presidents and the princes, because an excellent spirit was in him." Daniel's life was an open book, "a living epistle known and read of all men." Life is not something to be closed in a vacuum and lived in isolation. Every life should be an open book. Our conduct should be such that we would not have a closet of secret sins, of hidden faults, of hatred toward our fellow-man. It should be a living example, for a living testimony is God's strongest argument for Christianity.

Daniel was preferred because of the excellent spirit that was in him. Man's usefulness in the world is limited or increased in proportion to the degree and quality of the spirit that is in him. By spirit we do not mean that Daniel was simply an emotional type of person, void of all rationality. Nor does it mean gross ignorance. Spirit is a culmination of all the finer qualities of character that go to make an integrated personality. Religion has a rational element as well as an emotional appeal. Religion is a matter of both the head and the heart. Daniel purposed in his heart, but he did not fail to use his head also. To lay hold to such a claim as "an excellent spirit," Daniel must have been a person of some integrity, intelligence, of executive ability and certainly a man of God. Spirit, then, is the larger sense, means man plus God. Nothing less than this was Daniel.

In the early centuries when Christianity had its beginning it was thought to be something only fit for the ignorant, the simple-minded, the foolish, but today it is recognized by all classes of people. It is professed by both king and subject. Godliness is no longer a hindrance to greatness, nor prayer an obstacle to promotion. Men do not have to keep their religion as something to be lived only on Sunday. A Christian life is an open book seven days, for the shop, for the store, the office, for the open room as well as the closed doors. Daniel lived such a life before the world.

4. Daniel's window to his soul. The secret of all pious living is that of an open soul; one made possible by a constant life of devotion and prayer to God. Such a window as this Daniel had for his life.

Daniel's habit was that of daily prayer. "He kneeled three times a day and gave thanks to God." Prayer is a source of great power. It is a flood-gate that controls the incoming tide of temptation; it motivates Christian character and

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

RELIGIOUS "INTOLERANCE."

The Protestants of the South are being told by the politicians that we are an intolerant and bigoted people. We presume that no one knows better than the politicians who are bringing this accusation that it cannot be substantiated. The editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is called upon to travel not a little and to meet and mingle with not a few people, especially in North Carolina and Virginia. He avers and avows that for every individual he has met and talked with in the last six months who opposes one of the candidates now running for President on the ground of his Church affiliation, he has met a hundred who oppose that same candidate not because of his Church affiliation, but because he is before the American people simply and solely on the ground that he has ever been an advocate, and a staunch champion of, the wets. There is no need of this camouflage and deceit on the part of the politicians. The people of North Carolina and Virginia are tolerant, are not bigoted, and their whole history and tradition prove that they are not. We meet and we mingle with denominations of the various Churches, Catholic and Protestant, and we do know that the friendliest relations and fellowship obtain between them. Why should the people of North Carolina and Virginia be intolerant of the Catholics? There are not enough Catholics in the two States to so manifest their power and their prestige as to make themselves offensive if they desired. In very few of our towns and cities and scarcely anywhere in our rural districts do we find a Catholic Church; and where we do find the Catholic Church we will find the kindest feeling and fellowship towards the Catholics on the part of the Protestants with whom they meet and mingle. We, in North Carolina and Virginia, know more about the Catholics through the ministry of their hospitals and their effort to relieve human suffering than we do on any other ground. Yet, in spite of this known friendliness and fellowship here in the two states, we hear the politicians crying out that the people of these States are opposing a certain candidate because he is a member of the Catholic Church. They know when they say it, or they are the most ignorant people on this earth, that they are saying it simply to deceive, and that it is political "bunk" and deception of the most glaring type.

On the other hand, it is a known fact that both North Carolina and Virginia fought the battle for prohibition, fought it valiantly and boldly and successfully, and that the people of these two States, along with the people of the South, have made up their mind to stand by prohibition and do everything they can legitimately to fight the saloon and the liquor interests. The politicians know, and we all know, that the South is dry, and that many of the good people of the South would oppose any man on earth who would run for an office calling for their suffrage who opposes prohibition. There is a candidate before the American people bidding for their votes whose whole personal and public career has been that of favoring the saloon, as long as there was any hope of keeping the saloon, and then of the liquor interests and the nullification of the Volstead act and the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. He has done all within his power to nullify and to make of no effect the very principles for which hundreds of thousands of good people here in the South have labored and taught and preached and prayed. And now we are told that when we oppose such an individual solely on the ground that he is a wet candidate through and through, as is proven by the fact that the wets nominated him and that the wets in the North and East are flocking to his standard, we are told that we are opposing him not because he is a wet, but because of his religious affiliation. We wonder at the affrontery, at the deception of those who try to divert our minds and our thoughts by accusing us of that which they themselves know full well we are innocent of. The politicians are setting up a straw man which they call "Intolerance" and are then training their guns to the destruction of that foe in straw. Let them ramp and rave while the sober Christian citizen of our land and country consider well the main issue in the present campaign and make it a matter of patriotism and of prayer.

DISTRESS IN PORTO RICO.

Elsewhere we print from the pen of Mrs. Barrett the first authentic facts reaching us about the disaster that has befallen our people in Porto Rico. We trust every CHRISTIAN SUN reader will see and read Mrs. Barrett's letter. Enough is said there to bring not a full knowledge of destruction wrought and the present distress, but to give some idea and faint picture of the damage done and the present need for help. If there are Churches, societies, Sunday Schools or individuals who will help, let them send the same to J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C., and the same will be forwarded safely and without charges to the proper source of distribution. Those who wish to send packages and clothing, should send direct either to Rev. or Mrs. D. P. Barrett, Ponce, P. R., but all funds for transmittal should be sent the Secretary of Missions. They will be properly acknowledged and promptly remitted. Our property damage—that to Church and parsonage buildings, seems now to reach about $10,000. This should receive liberal response and prompt attention from our people, as we do not have a chapel or a piece of property that could be spared and that can be left unrepaired without seriously impeding the progress of our work in Porto Rico. We are grateful indeed that the lives of our missionaries and workers have been spared, and in the sense of this gratitude our contribution for the relief of the workers and the work there should be the more ready and the more liberal. The following comes from Dr. W. P. Minton, to whom Bro. Barrett was writing while Mrs. Barrett was writing to THE SUN's editor, and will give the point of view of Bro. Barrett from personal observation and visitation:

"Since first reports of the terrible storm in Porto Rico have come in, Foreign Mission Secretary Minton has been trying in every possible way to secure some direct information as to the extent of damage to our work and workers. Just as we go to press he has received word from both Mr. Barrett and Miss Adams, and wishes to make the following statement:

"None of our missionaries were injured, and so far as we have been able to learn, none of our native Christians lost their lives, though some of them had most of their property blown away. Mr. Barrett has not yet been able to get over our entire field, because of blocked roads, but he reports that the Salinas Church is probably ruined beyond repair, and that considerable damage was done to the Foor Mission Home, the Argus Chapel, the Descalabrado Chapel built just last year, and that most of the other buildings suffered lesser damage. Ponce suffered the least damage, but even there every tree was blown from the yard of our mission home.

"While it is too early to give accurate estimates, it seems quite probable that if the Salinas Church has to be completely rebuilt, this, together with the other repairs, will require from five to ten thousand dollars. The missionaries report much suffering among the people. Many had their homes swept away with all their belongings. Starvation and disease face them, and they must have help. We hope by next week to be able to give accurate statements of the extent of our losses. In the meantime, Mission Secretaries might well send boxes of light-weight clothing to Mr. D. P. Barrett, 37 Concordia Street, Ponce, or to Miss Victoria Adams, Box 423, Ponce, P. R."

AN UNLIMITED AUDIENCE.

It is announced that Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, is to resign his Brooklyn pastorate and devote himself to radio audiences. The "hook-up" for these audiences is to include forty radio stations, reaching an audience of millions each Sunday over an area from Florida to Alaska. Dr. Cadman has been pastor of Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, since 1901 and has built up a membership in that Church of more than 3,500, which is said to be one of the finest religious organizations in the country. He is to be known in his new field as the national radio pastor, and is to receive a salary of $25,000 a year. His services are to cover an hour and a half each Sunday from 4 to 5:30 P. M. eastern standard time, and he is to be assisted in the services by a special symphony orchestra recruited from the best of New York's musicians and from a vocal ensemble of the best radio singers. Among other features of the services will be Dr. Cadman's answers to questions propounded from various quarters as has been his custom for some time past. Thus, through the medium of the radio, a preacher is to have the largest audience ever accorded a man in the world's history. It is refreshing and heartening to think that the radio is making it possible for the gospel to reach such audiences as no other message from the lips of man has been permitted to do. True, political speakers have charge of the radio for a few nights or for a brief season, but only a minister of the gospel has thus far been given the privilege of continuous service over the whole area reached by the radio in our land and country. After all, that which mankind most needs and desires, and in soberest moments most longs for, is the gospel of the Son of God—the good news that saves men from sin and turns their faces toward righteousness.

PERSONAL LIBERTY AND SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY.

The Declaration of Independence declares that the "rights to liberty, life and the pursuit of happiness" are inalienable.

The Constitution of the United States contains a "general welfare" clause.

Every conflict in our national history has grown out of the clash between these two principles. We all know that the right to life is not inalienable, because the State may exact the death penalty; that to liberty is not inalienable, because imprisonment is practiced; and that to the pursuit of happiness, too, is alienable, when a man's pursuit interferes with his neighbor's right. My rights end where my neighbor's nose begins.

"By due process of law," any right can be alienated or abrogated or modified. But law is nothing more nor less than the social acceptance of responsibility for the general welfare enacted by legislation into principles of conduct for the individual. It oftentimes limits the individual's personal liberty, but it is for the social good, and all of us, we should admit, are of more consequence, even in God's eyes, than any particular one of us.

Connecticut, in the early days of our national life, wanted to impose its own taxes on imports, but had to yield its State's rights on behalf of the national program. Shay's rebellion was terminated on the same terms, and individuals from that time forth lost the right to make whiskey except as the government prescribed. The South lost the right to secede—the interest of the entire nation, determined by the issue of a four-year war, was of more importance than the interest of any particular State or group of States.

This principle obtains in private life. The individual is free to relinquish his personal liberty out of respect for the general welfare, out of respect for his brotherman's good. If he is a Christian he will do this happily, refusing with Paul to eat meat if his brother is offended in his conscience thereby. If he insists on violating the eighteenth amendment because it infringes his personal liberty and on the ground that he can take a "nip" before breakfast to open his eyes, another at noon to hasten his digestion, and a third at night to soothe him to sleep, and that nobody has anything to do with it, whatever else may be, he is certainly no Christian. And this writer doubts if he is a good citizen!

It is great to have personal liberty. It is greater to feel social responsibility. It is greatest to relinquish personal liberty out of a high sense of social responsibility. Whether we will it or no, we are our brother's keeper. This law is written deep in our nature. We cannot escape its consequences. We cannot repudiate it and live, either individually or socially, in the truest sense.

THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL.

It may be a surprise to some that the word Church is not found in the Old Testament. There is no Jewish Church. The origin of the word Church is obscure, if not unknown.

It is used but twice in the gospels, and that by Matthew only in 16:18, "Upon this rock I will build my Church"; and in 18:17, "If he neglect to hear them, tell it to the Church." In all other cases Matthew uses "the kingdom of heaven"— thirty-six times. Mark, Luke and John never use "kingdom of heaven," but "kingdom of God." Luke does use the word Church in Acts 2:47, "The Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved"; and in twenty other places in Acts. The word is used 107 times by five other writers in the New Testament, making the total use of the word Church in the Bible 130 times.

Pentecost was the birthday of the Christian Church. From that day until this day the word Church is used as the body of believers, the place of worship, and a denominational term. At one time, in Rome, it was a cardinal part of the State.

The History of the Church is the history of missionary evangelism, autocratic domination and divisions. The missionary period was most fruitful of spiritual results; the autocratic period, of opposition; and the divisive period most wasteful of means, opportunity and Christian effort.

A definition of the Church is difficult, if not impossible; but all children of God are members of the universal Church. It is spiritual and invisible. Protestantism in all nations is usually in our minds, when we think of the Church; but Jews and Roman Catholics are apart of the Church universal. We would have no Bible and no Saviour but for the Jews. Luke is the only writer of books of the Bible who was not a Jew. And Church doctrine and history would be meager but for Rome. Jesus Himself was a Jew, born of a Jewish parent, and "He came unto His own and His own received Him not." Rome put Christianity in all the world, wrote its history, preserved its doctrines; and the Church universal has always been one in prayer, song, and work.

In the present divided state of the Church we must recognize "Christ as the Head of the Church," and that He loved the Church and gave Himself for it" (Eph. 5:23, 25).

Independent movements, such as Evangelical Alliance, Y. M. and Y. W. C. A., Christian Endeavor, Inter-Church Conference, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, all indicate a common desire for closer fellowship and co-operation among denominations for activities in missions for the salvation of mankind. The Anti-Saloon League is really the united Church at work for temperance that gave this nation the prohibition law that banished saloons as a legal business. It was the result of united Christian effort that opened the eyes of Congress to the necessity for such a law. The sympathetic and united effort of the Church universal will some day give prohibition to all the nations of the world.

POLITICS AND THE CHURCH PAPER.

It seems almost unspeakable that Christian men and women should refuse to continue their Church paper because it advocates prohibition, as it concerns the nominees for the highest office in the land. Yet we have received a number of orders from our constituency refusing longer to read the paper because it has politics in it.

We have insisted before, and we insist again, that this paper has never entered into partisan politics, and we do not mean that it ever shall; but our Church, in its General Conference session, as printed on the first page of this paper some weeks ago, has taken its stand, insisting that the members of the Church shall not vote for any man, or party, who has the intention of destroying the efficiency of the eighteenth amendment. This question is not a political question. It had no business in either platform, and we submit to these friends of ours who are growing nervous over our political tendency that we are simply defending prohibition, a law that has been of uncounted blessing and that we cannot conceive that we dare to hold our tongue when this great thing that God has given us is imperiled. We have no desire to go into heroics, but calmly and judiciously considering the situation we feel it is our duty to protect the eighteenth amendment and to insist that the Christian Church that has put this amendment into the Constitution must stand by it at all hazards.

If it so happens that in taking this stand one of the candidates declares that he will not stand for the eighteenth amendment and will make every effort to change it—that is not our concern. Our fight is for prohibition, and for this we must fight if we are true to our conscience and to the law of the Church.

The saloon has been gone so long that a generation has come up that has never seen one. But there are some of us who know the horrors through which we have passed from this vile and terrible thing as it has wrought havoc in the home, the Church and the State. Men are not much mentioning the horrors of strong drink these days, but we have stood in a cell where a man who had taken poison enough to kill him pleaded with God to save his life and his soul, while a broken-hearted mother was prostrate at home. We saw a man trying to sell his baby's shoes in order to obtain money to buy drink. We have seen some of the finest spirits we have ever met torn down from their high estate and dying in the throes of delirium. We have seen senates and houses of representatives debauched. Laws have been futile to control this traffic, and as we think of the graves filled with the dead, and the broken-hearted women and children and the wrecked manhood of the world, we cannot but register a vow in heaven that we will fight the wretched business to the end of our days at whatever cost. It is a different thing so famed in poetry as "the delights of the social glass," and so ready to play upon the lips of orators about "the angel of the cup." It is a different thing about which books have been written in honor of "the fellowship of the cup." We know it is but the painting of a black cloud with the gold of a summer morning when it is midnight still.

Our friends must remember what it means. They must not forget the past. They must stand with God among the widows and the children of drunken men and fight this traffic no matter what is involved. Heaven stands with the man who hates the drink and fights it to its death.

If it must be that our friends shall forsake the paper because of its stand, then shall it not be that those who still have in their hearts the memories of the past and the horrors of this traffic and who will not stand for any one who would bring back the thing that should be dead, and that we had thought was dead, shall stand by this paper in this crisis. More and more the temper and bitterness of the people will be aroused as the campaign proceeds. Let all who love God and love His people and love righteousness and temperance stand together with us as we go forward bearing the banner of temperance now and forever.—The Methodist Protestant (Baltimore).

HEALTH BULLETIN.

The October Health Bulletin, the monthly publication of the North Carolina State Board of Health, contains a number of articles particularly pertinent at this time. Some of the leading health officers of the State discuss pre-school work among children and the physical examination of school children. Tuberculosis in infancy and childhood is discussed by one of the field directors of the State sanatorium. A well-known specialist writes of some common skin diseases. There is also a comprehensive review of the development of health in the State and of the present work of the board.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Criticism is the art of judging anything or any person. It is more of a friend than usually considered. Of course, there is favorable and adverse criticism; but what is commonly understood as criticism is not commendatory. It is that ordinary criticism which this letter ventures to consider. Criticism of the common type is a friend, though commonly considered as an enemy. Praise often spoils men; criticism often awakens in them latent talents for service. I call criticism free advertisement. If no one speaks of a man in business or public service; if no one in society mentions a woman's name or dress; if the name of a professional man or an aspirant for office is not on the tongues of men—then success or progress is doomed. It was the opposition of the world to Jesus that nailed Him to the cross; yet it was that very fatal criticism that changed the attitude of the world toward Jesus Christ. Paul went from one city to another because criticism made it impossible for him to remain in Philippi, Thessalonica and Berea; the critics kept him going in his missionary work.

It was criticism that led Paul to Rome. When the Jews spoke against the gospel Paul appealed to Caesar, and that put him in Rome. While there in charge of an officer the chief Jews said to him: "We desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest: for as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against; and when he had expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses and out of the prophets, from morning till evening, some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not." It was criticism that put Paul in Rome, and it was Paul in Rome that put Christ and His gospel in the Roman empire and the world.

Criticism is a friend to individuals. It keeps his name before the public and in the mind of men. Criticism is a friend to business. It does three things: it makes customers stand by the business, it causes others to examine into it, and it finally wins its enemies, if it does not resent the criticism. Criticism has been a friend to the Church. It has kept the Church alive and awake. If nothing was said about the Church it would become indifferent toward the world and lifeless in itself. As long as those who have the name of being great scholars ridicule the Bible, the preachers, and the Church, the Church will keep alive and aggressive in her work. If no one said or wrote anything about a presidential candidate his name would drop out of public interest; but every criticism is free advertisement. Adverse criticism makes his friends rally to his standard and defend him; and, often, his political enemies do him great service. Jesus set a good example: "When He was accused by the chief priests and elders, He answered nothing" (Matt. 27:12). Silence is the best answer to criticism, because reaction in the critic's own mind or the public will be the best answer.

ELON LETTER.

The spirit of co-operative democracy is evidently abroad on the Elon campus. For two years the faculty committee on religious organization and the cabinet of the religious activities organization representing the students have met each Monday and as often in addition weekly as occasion demanded, to plan for the Sunday evening services. The results have been highly pleasing, though not perfect. The joint committee is hoping for improvement this year.

For several years the Y. M. C. A. cabinet has been composed of the association officers and an equal number of faculty members. Last year the Y. M. C. A. began the same custom.

This year the chapel service is under the joint control of a committee representing the faculty and students. This committee is young in its work, but already an improvement is noted in the chapel services. This joint committee selects the persons it desires to conduct the chapel services and assigns the theme it desires presented in every instance. These themes are chosen not arbitrarily by the committee, but because they relate themselves to the problems and issues of the Christian life from the student's standpoint. The speakers are given ample time to prepare.

The program, however, is flexible enough to be changed when an outside speaker with a message appears suddenly on the hill. It is the hope and expectation of the joint committee to make the chapel services real occasions of worship. No jokes or laughter or applause will be expected. It is a new venture, but it has great possibilities.

Even the Sunday School classes of the college are conducted on the same high plane of democratic co-operation. The classes have a cabinet of teachers, ordinarily four, and the pupils elect an equal number of students to arrange with these teachers who shall teach and what themes shall be presented, and how. The results, too, are gratifying. It may be that such democratic sharing of responsibility for the Christian program may not be possible elsewhere, but with the fine group of young people who have made Elon College their choice, it appears to be yielding good results.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

College students are tired of having knowledge interpreted to them wholly in terms of the classroom as something having little or no relation to life. The Washington University may be the pioneer in a field of educational value which has been overlooked by nearly every university in the nation—a nation which is attempting to train men and women for citizenship by gleaning from the dusty past. Careful and intelligent reading of the daily news and the periodicals devoted to current events is becoming a lost art in the United States. The great journals which cater to thinking men and women exclude crime news from their columns and devote their entire space to events of national significance, but the average college student of today is less selective in his reading than the educated laborer but are more interested in the sports sheet and the comic section than the affairs of moment for both classes of individuals forming one unenlightened class of readers, the newspapers put the scandals of the day in screaming headlines and bury the news of world significance for at least three quarters just prior to his leaving the university the student should be trained in the reading of the newspapers and helped to follow the trend of world affairs. If such a program is put into effect in the universities, its graduates will be far better educated and influence far more worthy in the body of citizens of which they have become members.

The enjoyment of one generation are not those of another, and our boys and girls do not read our favorite books. They do not listen to our music.

Their aversion from our style is even stronger than our disapproval of theirs. We may think them crude, but on the whole our boys and girls are maturer than we were at their age and maturer than some of us are now. We cannot force our fun upon them. They cannot force theirs upon us. Strong in them is the notion of a goal—the sense of utility which was so delightfully absent a century ago. Doing something affords them the same pleasure that we got out of doing nothing. College sports are occupying a very large part in our college career, but perhaps if intercollegiate sports were abolished something else equally diverting might arise to allure students away from their studies. It is one of the tragedies of higher education that so many students are not susceptible to scholarship in the post-graduate sense. Scholarship seems to be stymied by the regrettable but unalterable fact that particularly all sophomores are nineteen years old and helpless. In the old days it was supposed that all freshmen had an inherent intensity to be fresh, and he must be sat upon, shown his place by the community generally and by sophomores particularly. A better way has apparently been found. The old idea was to make the freshman seem small. The new way is to make other things seem big. Under the new system a freshman can enjoy a considerable amount of self-respect and yet in the presence of great and good things unfolded to him possess the grace of humility. The new freshman, as he enters the first year, may feel overwhelmed by the attention he receives, but he does not feel fresh.

The new method of dealing with freshmen is not merely a contrivance of his elders imposed upon him from above; it is the only method which is suitable to the new kind of freshmen. For the new freshman, like his fellow-students of other classes and like modern youth generally, has a mind of his own and insists upon having the fact recognized.

S. L. BEOUGHER.

DAYTON, OHIO.

It seems to me that this must be one of the finest cities north of the Mason and Dixon line. Folks were so fine to us for the first few weeks we were here I wondered whether it would last; but last night when a "miscellaneous shower" came down upon us in a veritable downpour, we wondered where was the end. No better setting could have been arranged for just such a surprise than that to which Mrs. Truitt and I were heirs appalled and apparent. We had been invited to one of the prettiest homes in Dayton for 6 o'clock dinner, and had enjoyed it very greatly, when in came about a hundred guests each bearing a bundle, or a package, or a parcel flanked by greetings and laughter both beautiful and bewildering. We felt like the heart of a huge and happy joke; and as the gifts were piled about us we felt as though we might be a part of a bon-fire kindled out of the warmth of human kindness. Never before, folks, never before, have I been in such a shower!

But I mean to tell you something of the situation of the First Christian Church of Dayton, and its future hopes and plans. Dayton has had a situation just a bit different from anything I have ever heard of before. About thirty thousand, more or less, negroes have migrated to Dayton within a little more than a decade. They have wedged their way in through the westside until whole large sections of that side of the city have been occupied by negroes. White Churches have been forced to follow their members as they have moved up and out. Beautiful Church buildings have been sold to the colored people because there was nothing else at all practicable to do. The First Christian Church, a beautiful brick building with Sunday School plant, built on the Akron plan, must share its part of that situation. And the pretty parsonage, along with the good Church building, has for some time been on the market awaiting a buyer. In the meantime, the Church membership has been reduced to complete despair. Scores of their best members have united with other Churches well out of that section; others have bought homes in far sections of the city, some of them driving back to worship once in a while and to see if the old Church is still standing the stress of a situation a few years ago absolutely unforeseen. For more than six months one finds in the records of the business meetings of the Church real discussion, and serious resolutions, wondering if the Church had not better disband and parcel out its members and property to nearby Christian Churches within the city. There were many who thought it would be wise, but some held on when there was but little left to hold to. A Sunday School of more than two hundred and fifty had been reduced to fifty only, and a great Church which had stood the stress of many long years was about to be no more. Dr. F. G. Coffin came to their rescue and began to rally their morale until his successor could be secured.

Again, in the meantime the Conference had come to the help of their child and had suggested that the First Christian Church nucleus become a beginning for a new Church in Dayton View, which is one of the newest and prettiest suburbs of the entire city. Upon such a plan the whole project now begins to move forward. Plans for the new building are already accepted and adopted; the First Church has agreed to begin work on the new Church just as soon as possible; and new life may be found in any angle of the whole situation. The first Sunday I preached to sixty-nine folks, the next Sunday to seventy-nine, and the third Sunday, which was last Sunday, to ninety-six. Last Sunday there were eighty-three in attendance at Sunday School. Two weeks ago we had a Missionary Society meeting at the home of one of the members, with more than forty present. Last night, as I began by telling you, the biggest congregation this Church has assembled in many moons had part in a "miscellaneous shower" for Mrs. Truitt and me. Mr. D. W. Mikesell, at whose home the party was planned, brought our gifts to our apartment in a big truck after 11 o'clock, when all the joy-makers had gone home, and we sat up admiring the gifts and recounting the pleasures of the evening until 2 o'clock.

Somehow we had gotten the impression that there was little of the outer expression of hospitality among the people of this section, and especially to newcomers, but we have been entirely relieved of that impression because we have been invited out to dine fifteen times already; we have been given various little tokens of appreciation even before last night; and the congregations have been most generous in the expression of their appreciation of the Church services which have been conducted. I have spoken at Shiloh Springs, one of the Dayton group of Churches; preached at Riverdale last Sunday night, another of our Dayton Churches; and am scheduled to preach at Trotwood this coming Sunday night. At each of these places the pastors and people have been very cordial indeed. Therefore, after all, we may be very happy that ours is one great country, with good and gracious people everywhere.

In Dayton and her suburbs are the following Churches: Walnut Hills, Rev. W. T. Scott, pastor-elect; Riverdale, Rev. Edwin B. Flory, pastor; Murlin Heights, Dr. McD. Howsare, pastor; Shiloh Springs, Rev. L. J. Procter, pastor; Polk Grove, Rev. Heber O'Hara, pastor; Crown Point, Rev. Clark A. Denison, pastor; Trotwood, Rev. A.

W. Hirby, pastor; and First Church. So, you see we have quite a goodly group. These Churches compose the Association of Dayton Christian Churches, and their pastors make up the Dayton Christian Pastors' Association. I loved Norfolk and the Norfolk folks and Churches and their pastors, as well as the people of the great Eastern Virginia Conference, and I am delighted that we have been placed in a city of Christian Churches and in one of the most active Conferences in our denomination, for in being so placed I am happily reminded of a great folk of former days. May God bless our great people everywhere and make us truly one.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

MISSION BOARD IN SESSION.

The Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention met in annual session at Suffolk on Wednesday, September 12th. The day was spent in discussing the work of the past year, going into every detail of the work committed to the care of the board, examining the income and the outgo of all funds, and of planning for the work the coming year. Reports showed the best year of our work in some particulars, especially as to funds collected. The call was for $39,000, and the actual amount as paid in and appropriated was $38,512.99. The sum of $17,000 had been forwarded to the foreign mission work, and the remainder had been used for the various phases of our home mission work. The reports from the various points helped were encouraging, and appropriations made a year ago and also those covering a period of five years had been met during the year, and it was discovered that if the goal is reached the coming year all the board's outstanding pledges and obligations can and will be paid. The Convention at Richmond asked for $45,000 the present year, and one member of the board, so anxious is he that all the indebtedness and obligations be wiped out, offers to give $5,000 of the $45,000, provided all the Churches, societies, Sunday Schools and individuals composing the Churches of the Conference in the Convention will give $40,000. In other words, this brother will add 10 cents to every dollar given up to $4,000, and then will add $1,000 to the 10 per cent. This was greeted with delight by the board and is a most magnanimous offer and a challenge to our people everywhere. The board has outstanding notes, appropriations for coming year, pledges and obligations amounting to $20,215.64 for home missions, and a like amount to foreign missions, as the board goes on a basis of equal divisions unless designated otherwise. These obligations, brought about by pledges made covering a period of years, and covers the total of all pledges made. The appropriations the coming year are to assist in relieving the indebtedness at Portsmouth First Church, Elm Avenue, Winchester, Lynchburg, Roanoke (Ala.), Raleigh, Richmond and the mountain work in Carroll County, Va.

Bro. J. M. Darden was elected by the board as Assistant Secretary of Missions to aid in the strenuous work of the coming year in the endeavor to raise the total amount of the $45,000 asked and to clear the board of all indebtedness and obligations, both in the home and foreign work. Lieutenant Governor J. E. West remains the chairman of the board; R. W. Malone, cashier First National Bank, Burlington, N. C., treasurer of the board; and J. O. Atkinson is the executive secretary. The executive committee of the board consists of J. E. West, chairman; Dr. W. W. Staley, J. M. Darden, J. A. Williams, and Mrs. M. L. Bryant.

The work of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis in their evangelistic endeavor was approved by the board, and Bro. J. M. Darden was continued as their manager to make dates and to assist in directing their work. It was found that Bro. and Sister Davis had special services in seventeen Christian Churches, revivals in six Churches, and free services in fourteen. They had held special services in twelve Methodist Churches and revivals in three; special services in eight Baptist Churches, and also at three Presbyterian Churches. Their work was found highly commended in all the Churches they had held services. There were many calls for help from the board that could not be met because of the desire and the determination, if possible, to clear all outstanding obligations and pledges in another year, with the hope, at that time, that new work may be begun at places where Christian Churches are in demand. The members of the board as now constituted are Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, Chairman; J. M. Darden, Dr. W. W. Staley, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Williams, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, K. B. Johnson, Dr. G. O. Lankford, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, executive secretary.

DISTRIBUTION OF APPORTIONMENTS.

By reference to page 7 of the Southern Christian Convention Proceedings, Richmond, Va., May 1, 1928, it will be seen how all Conference apportionments which go to Convention purposes are to be distributed both for the present year and for two years to come—1928-30, inclusive. If all the Churches raise all their apportionments for Convention purposes, as their apportionments now stand (there was no increase asked this year) the total thereof will be $25,000. The Convention voted that these Conference funds shall be distributed as follows:

	Amount.	P. C.
Superannuation	$ 3,000.00	12
Convention	2,000.00	8
Publications	4,000.00	16
Convention obligations (Elon Col.)	12,750.00	51
Undistributed	3,250.00	13
Total apportionments	$25,000.00	100
With Conference apportionments thus distributed, the institutions and enterprises of the Church are to call on the Churches, Sunday Schools, societies and individuals to contribute, independently of all Conference apportionments, the following:
For missions	$ 45,000
For the Orphanage	30,000
For colleges (Elon & Bethlehem)	34,000
For Christian education	4,500
Total	$113,500

This would make a total of $138,500 for all Convention purposes—a fraction over $4.50 per capita for all Convention purposes, on a basis of 30,000 members.

It will be seen from the above that three enterprises of the Church—missions, the Orphanage, and Christian education (for Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work)—do not share in the Conference apportionments. It has been the policy and custom from the beginning for the Orphanage to make its appeal directly to the people. Missions have now been put on the same basis—the appeal for all funds for missions to be made directly to the people, and all funds received or contributed for missions go direct to missions. Last year missions shared in Conference apportionments and received from this source a total of $6,773.23, which went: $3,492.87 for home missions; $3,280.36 for foreign missions. According to the distribution voted by the Convention at Richmond, nothing will go to Convention missions, home or foreign, from this source this year. So if the income to missions this year is to be equal even to that of the past year, individuals, Churches, Sunday Schools, societies will have to give direct to missions, home and foreign, $6,773.23 more than they gave last year (the amount lost to missions by not sharing in Conference apportionments). This was done by the Convention, so we are advised, that missions might have direct appeal to the Churches and people, in the faith that when the people know what they were giving to missions, and when, without any divisions or percentages, they would be more liberal to missions, and would see to it that missions in the Christian Church should amount to more in the future than in the past. Acting on this faith, the Convention voted to ask $45,000 a year for missions instead of $39,000 asked per year the past two years. So the Convention had the faith to believe that when Convention missions were separated from Conference apportionments, and not permitted to share therein, instead of losing $6,773.23, missions would gain $6,000. Hence the asking for $45,000—or $6,000 a year more for missions than ever before. Will our people live up to this request and vote of the Convention? Will we see to it that what missions lose by not sharing in Conference apportionments shall be more than made up by direct contributions and offerings, since we have now the fact that what we give for missions shall go direct to missions, without any percentages or divisions with other interests and enterprises? The Convention has paved the way, and made clear the method of procedure.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

J. O. ATKINSON, Sec'y.

A GREAT CHALLENGE.

Can the Southern Christian Convention, with a Church membership of 32,472, give $40,000 for missions, home and foreign, in one year? If it will, there is one man of our number who will give $5,000 additional, making our total contribution to missions within the year, September 1, 1928, to September 1, 1929, $45,000. This is what the Southern Convention, in biennial session at Richmond last May, voted that we raise. We raised the past year $38,512.99. Now, if we will give, through all sources, this year $1,487.01 more than we did last year we will reach our goal, and our generous brother will pay in the $5,000—he says gladly—and thus make the total asked by the Convention. If we will do this, we can wipe out all debts and pledges of the board and also get our foreign mission work on a progressive basis again. This is to include amount contributed from all sources—Woman's Missionary Societies, Sunday Schools, Churches, individuals, and all.

But bear in mind that last year missions received $6,773.23 from Conference apportionments. By vote of the Convention it receives nothing from this source this year. Whatever is given for Convention missions—half for home, half for foreign (unless otherwise designated by the donor)—will have to be given direct to missions by the Church, the Sunday School, the Missionary Society or the individual. No Conference apportionment comes to or can be counted on this goal. If Churches, Sunday Schools, Missionary Societies, individuals will begin to plan now, this great and good thing can be done. Will you help?

Yours for kingdom progress,

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary, S. C. C.

FROM PORTO RICO.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

My husband is writing to Dr. Minton and thinking that the friends of the Porto Rican mission in the South might be interested in how we fared during the awful cyclone which passed over the West Indies last Thursday, September 13th. I write these few lines hurriedly. God has been wonderful in His mercy to us as a mission, for so far as we have been able to learn there has been no loss of life. Loss of property is great, though, and many of our poor are homeless. In many instances, the wind blew houses down and the rivers washed them away. I haven't words to describe the destruction, misery and want that reign everywhere on this little island today. The majority of the school buildings are in ruins. From reports that are coming in from all parts of the island, I think Ponce has suffered very little in comparison with other towns, especially those in the hills.

Our Ponce Church stood it well; parsonage suffered no loss except all of our trees are gone. Clausell's Chapel is damaged and most of the roof gone. Aries Chapel is badly damaged and half of roof gone. Descalabrado roof and belfry gone. Five large windows of the Santa Isabel Church blown out, and all the trees down.

The house where Miss Williams lived in Salinas and the Romans live now is roofless, and Salinas Church cracked and apparently in dangerous condition. All the rented chapels in Salinas district are down and in ruins. In rural districts people are living under trees.

The authorities have not been able yet to calculate the loss of life and property. Crops are in ruin, especially the coffee, which you know is one of the principal resources of the island.

Sunday, the 16th, we attempted to go to Salinas and were only a short distance from Santa Isabel when we reached a part of the road which looked as if a great axe had chopped away fifteen or more feet, and passing was impossible.

The little fishing village, La Playita, where the majority of the houses are made of straw and the rest very old, is one big ruin. What shall we do, what shall we do! Tell our folks, anybody who will and can spare their old clothes of any size, to send them to me. Then pray that God will open the hearts and pocketbooks of our people. Am sending the newspapers to Palmer. Ask him to show them to you.

MRS. D. P. BARRETT.

SUFFER IN PORTO RICO.

Damage amounting to $100,000—double the amount of earlier reports—was inflicted upon the Congregational Church property in Porto Rico by the hurricane. Every Church, chapel and parsonage and the two Congregational institutions—the Ryder Memorial Hospital at Humacao, and the Blanche Kellogg Boarding School for Girls in San Juan—suffered. Roofs were torn off and doors and windows were blown out. Walls were also blown out or crushed by trees or neighboring buildings. Details of the damage were given in a letter received Monday, September 24, 1928, from Rev. Charles I. Mohler, superintendent for Porto Rico, by Rev. Fred L. Brownlee, New York, N. Y., secretary of the American Missionary Association, the Congregational board in charge of work in the island.

Dr. James R. Watson, superintendent of the Ryder Memorial Hospital, Humacao, Porto Rico, in a letter received Monday, September 24, 1928, wrote:

"Humacao was in the very center of the storm and suffered as heavily as the worst. It began on Wednesday evening about 9 o'clock. A very strong wind, with torrents of rain, was very difficult to keep out, but we managed to handle without much damage being done. There was a lull early in the morning, and I went to bed, but by breakfast time it was on us again. Still we were not alarmed, as everything was holding all right and the patients were fairly comfortable and protected. But it increased in intensity, and all the morning people were pouring in from all the little groups of houses along the hillsides until the hospital was jammed with people—some hurt, all hungry, some hysterical, all needing some kind of attention. Nearly half were children, and a great many were crying babies. Our brave little Porto Rican nurses went among them ministering to their needs, binding up wounds, giving babies milk, finding the driest and safest corners for the new born, and in general proving themselves ministering angels. During the very worst smashes of all a group of five or six of them stood in the midst of a semi-crazed crowd of people and sang one of our Spanish hymns, 'Cristo es mi Roca' ("Christ is My Rock").

"The roof of the nurses' home went a little before noon, and was followed soon after by the roof of one of the cottages, filling the air with pieces of flying debris. This made it exceedingly dangerous for the staff and nurses to pass through the open porches from the various parts of the hospital, which had to be done to minister to needs arising in various rooms or wards, or to fetch things needed in one part of the hospital from another part. Fortunately, however, beyond a few cuts and bruises, none of the staff was hurt, and no one was hurt much in the hospital, although many were badly hurt before getting inside. About 1 o'clock, the windows of the hospital began to go, letting in the torrents of water driven by what the authorities report as a hundred and fifty miles an hour wind. Soon parts of the hospital roofs began to go, and what with the water from above and the water and pieces of wreckage coming in through the windows and the crying children and groaning sufferers and crowded condition, you will hardly be able to imagine the situation."

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson II—October 14, 1928.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Now abideth faith, hope, love—these three; and the greatest of these is love."
—1 Cor. 13:13.

LESSON: 1 Cor. 12:14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: 1 John 4:7-16.

There seems to have been a great deal of discussion and argument, and evidently some feeling, in the Corinthian Church in regard to the matter of spiritual gifts. There was, of course, a diversity of talents and capacities and gifts among the members of that Church. Some of the members who had one gift were taking the position that their gift was more to be prized than the gifts which others had. It was also natural that some who had what they thought were the humbler gifts would feel that they had been slighted by the Almighty. The whole situation was unfortunate, and Paul devotes a section of his letter to the matter.

Paul says that there are diversities of gifts just as there are various members of the body. But in the one case as in the other, there is a place and a function for all the different capacities and talents of men, just as the body has need of its various members. And Paul intimates that when things are seen in their true perspective, one has no right to say that one gift is better than another. All are necessary and important. One thing must be kept in mind, says Paul, and that is that every gift comes from the same Father, and although these gifts differ in nature and function, they have one common purpose. "But each one is given the manifestation of the Spirit to profit withal." Whether a man has many or few gifts, or whether they be so-called great or so-called humble gifts, every man is under sacred obligation to use them in such a way that they help others and to bring in the kingdom of God. Hereby is our Father glorified, that we bear much fruit and that our fruit remains. It is not the part of any one who reads this to be puffed up or to be ashamed in regard to the gifts he has. It is rather for one and all to hold such gifts as a stewardship and to use them in such a way that our lives become fruitful and God glorified. Alas, that there are so many people who wish they were some one else or had some other's gifts instead of using what they have where they are for God!

Over and above all gifts, says Paul, is the gift of love. It is the one absolutely essential quality. Without it nothing else—tongues, prophecy, faith, charity—counts. Above all else, men should covet love. And in the immortal thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, Paul tells us something. He tells us almost every thing about love. As Henry Drummond, in that surpassingly great little book "The Greatest Thing in the World," tells us Paul passes love through the "prism of his inspired intellect" and breaks it up into its component parts, just as a scientist passes a beam of light through a prism and breaks it up into its component colors. According to Paul, love has nine ingredients:

1. Patience—"Love suffereth long." To be patient with the faults of others, to bear without complaining the unpleasant things of life, to bide one's time until faith shall be confirmed, to do one's work well and gladly, knowing that in due season one shall reap if he faints not—this is characteristic of love.

2. Kindness—"And is kind." "Be ye kind one to another, and so fulfill the law of Christ." To fill the days with kind thoughts and friendly attitudes and kind deeds is another characteristic of love. The world needs nothing more than it needs simple kindness. There is nothing that costs less or counts for more, and it is one thing that is open to all of us. All of us cannot be wealthy or wise or great, but we can be kind.

3. Generosity—"Love envieth not." Alas, how many hearts have been eaten out by envy! How difficult it is always to be generous toward those who are doing the same thing that we are doing, and doing it better! How much grace it takes to go on doing the little things in the out-of-the-way places and keep sweet when others are in the spotlight, or to be content with what we have when others seem to have so much more! Love envies not.

4. Humility—"Love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." Every truly great man is humble. He knows that what he is and has and does is not of himself, but of God. Love is meek. It may take the form of a dove, but it never takes the form of a pouter pigeon or a peacock.

5. Courtesy—"Doth not behave itself unseemly." The basis of good manners is a respect for and thoughtfulness of the personality of others. A man or woman could read all the Blue Books of etiquette and still be discourteous. On the other hand, one might be ignorant of all these rules and yet be courteous in the sense that, although he might break some petty rule, he would have that spirit of regard for others that is the essence of good manners.

6. Unselfishness—"Seeketh not her own." Love is never self-seeking. Love at heart is self-giving. It was no chance statement that Paul made when he said, "the life that I now live, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." The two statements go together.

7. Good Temper—"Is not easily provoked." Dr. Drummond says that no form of vice, not worldliness, not greed of gold, not drunkenness itself does more to un-Christianize society than evil temper. For sheer gratuitous, misery-producing power, this influence stands alone. Love is good temper. The presence of Christ alone can insure it.

8. Guilelessness—"Thinketh no evil." What a blight suspicion puts upon life. Think how much it means to have some one to believe in you. Love believes in people, no matter how bad they may be. That is why love redeems.

9. Sincerity—"Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth." To be genuine, to love truth, to rejoice in another's good fortune, and to suffer in another's misfortune is another and no insignificant element of love.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, October 14, 1928.

TOPIC: "The Christian's Duty as a Voter."—Matt. 22:15-22.

Some Bible Hints.

If the Christian is "true"—that is, true to his highest conception of God—he will vote as he believes God wills (v. 16).

The secret ballot has made it possible for us to vote our convictions without fearing man (v. 17).

We do not need to choose between politics and religion. We may have both, and make politics religious (v. 21).

Pray God that Christians may "perceive" the wickedness of unscrupulous politicians and refuse to support them (v. 18).

Suggestive Thoughts.

If Christians do not vote, evil men will, and the devil will get leave to rule the world.

If we have the right to make just and equitable laws, and do not do it, we are guilty of neglect and responsible for the evil that is caused by unjust laws.

If Christians refuse to vote, or neglect to vote, they will soon have no Sabbath. There are plenty that wish to abolish it.

Had it not been for the Christian vote we should not have had prohibition today. If the world is to be made better it will be by Christian influence.

A Few Illustrations.

Why sing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and not fire one of our most effective guns—the ballot?

In old days, when autocrats ruled, no one was asked what he wanted. Democracy changed this. But if we do not say what we want we must take what the devil chooses to give us.

Keep the spotlight on politicians. Let them know they are being watched, and that if they do wrong they will be laid on the shelf.

In civic life ignorance is not bliss; it is criminal. We should understand our government as well as we understand our own job.

To Think About.

Why should Christians interest themselves in politics?

How may we help Christian politicians to advance the kingdom?

Is the world growing worse or better? Why?

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

On August 5th the protracted meeting began at Big Oak Christian Church. Despite the unlikely weather, we had large crowds for both services. We felt fortunate in having a male quartet from Greensboro to sing for us at both services Sunday. The quartet consisted of three Messrs. Lowdermills and Mr. Brady. They rendered selections at both services and all agreed that their visit was a benefaction.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell, of Danville, Va., came to our assistance on Monday and preached at the remainder of the services. He preached in an inspirational, able and acceptable way. Beginning with his initial message and continuing through the series of services, Bro. Sorrell filled his messages with scriptural passages. In every sermon he seemed to be obeying the sage when he said, "Preach the word." Our congregations were not as large as in other days, but wonder and admiration were aroused at the interest and attendance when one knows that it was either raining or seriously threatening to rain when practically every service began.

Bad weather forced us to close the meeting on Friday night. Two united with the Church, and others are expected to join. Besides those who professed faith in Christ, there were several who reconsecrated their lives to His service. We feel that Bro. Sorrell's evangelical mission among us was not in vain.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE WAY OF PUNISHMENT.

"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Col. 6:7.

All motion moves in circles; rivers run to the sea; sea evaporates and ascends to clouds; clouds condense and descend in rain to the earth; out through the earth the water finds its way to the rivers and back to the sea again.

Plant life takes material of earth, dissolves it; the tree dies and falls and returns to the earth.

A stone hurled out straight, were it to keep on straight long enough would come back and hit you in the back. All straight lines end in a circle. A dynamo sends out its current; it completes a circuit and returns. Everything in the world is taken from its surroundings and is finally given back to it.

Everything one does comes back to him full force. Nothing can stop it. All virtuous action brings its pleasure. All vicious action, however delightful to the perpetrator at the time, brings pain, and every error has its penalty.

To destroy error is God's way of destroying sin. Therefore, it is said "They that sow righteousness shall reap mercy," and "They that sew to the Spirit shall reap eternal life"; but "They that sow to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption."

Who will stop the practice of sin so long as he believes in its pleasure? Who will sin or do anything so long as he is certain of the pain of it. The reason so many go on in sin is given by the Wise Man (Eccl. 1:8-11), "Because sentence for evil-doing is not speedily executed, therefore the hearts of men are set on them to do evil." That is, they think they can have their fling and enjoy it and get away with it. But the question is not one whether he can get away with it or not; it is one of what seed are we sowing? Whither the tendency! What we do will come back to us as a planter's seed brings forth its fruit, so what we sow in life's doings must be reaped some time. If we violate the laws of flesh, we reap disease. If we violate heart life, we reap blasted affections. If we sin against the spirit, we must reap a blight of soul, our highest nature. Hate brings hate. Love begets love.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray to Thee for a consciousness of the workings of Thy laws, for an insight into the pain of wrong-doings, for a knowledge of the glory of living right. Grant this today. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE BIBLE FOR ALL.

"Those things which are revealed belong to us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of his law."—Deut. 29:29.

"The word is very nigh to thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it."—Deut. 30:14.

"The Bible is the sacred Book of the Christian Church. It is the record of God's progressive self-revelation, first to the people of Israel, afterward to the world in Jesus Christ. It tells us not only what men have thought of God, and what they have done for God, but what they have experienced of God. Thus, by bringing us in touch with the men and women who have found God before us, it encourages us to believe that we can find God for ourselves and it shows us how to do so.

"Above all, the Bible makes us acquainted with Jesus Christ in whose person the divine revelation culminates and so gives us a standard by which we can discriminate between what is transient and what is permanent in the revelation of the past."—W. A. Brown.

The marvel of the Bible is not in its inerant character, but in Christ's assumption of human nature, with all its limitations, through whom God is revealed, and that the writers of the Bible, though only men of their own day, were able to produce a Book which has something for people for all subsequent times, thus making it the Bible for all times.

Prayer.—Lord, give us grace to keep Thy word in our hearts. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

"It is required of stewards that a man be found faithful."—Cor. 4:1, 2.

A steward is one placed in charge of the property of another. God is the universal owner of creation, and Christians belong to him by creation and redemption. Are we faithful?

In the parable of the stewards, we are taught to use and increase what we have. We have no moral right to waste, to squander, or to hoard what God has given us.

Livingston said, "I will place no value on anything I may have or possess, except in relation to the kingdom of Christ. If anything will advance that kingdom, it shall be given away or kept, only as by the giving or keeping of it. I shall most promote the glory of Him to whom I owe all my hopes for time and eternity."

A poor woman who made her living by washing and other menial service, pledged a tithe to her Church. They remonstrated with her, saying that it was too much. She said, "Let me alone; you are trying to take away the greatest pleasure of my life." This was purest stewardship.

Prayer.—O Lord God, sanctify us while we live, and save us when we die. Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN?

"The first shall be last and the last shall be first."—Matt. 20:16.

Why are things permitted to be as they are? The laborers believed that they who had borne the burden through the heat of the day should be rewarded more than those who came late and worked only in the cool of the evening.

This lesson, along with that of the rich ruler which just precedes it, teaches that the barter and sale spirit of the world does not fit into the scheme of spiritual life and may keep one out of the kingdom. Commerce or business asks, "What will it pay?" The other says, "What can I do?" The one asks, "What will it profit me?" The other asks, "What will it profit Thee?"

The lesson is one of spirit, which is a question not of how much money we can get out of life for so many hours, not a matter of contract, but that there is a justice that cannot be measured by man in terms of standards and customs. Jesus taught the same thing when He said, "Whosoever would be great among you, let him be your servant"; and again He said, "He that findeth his life shall lose it."

The rich and the poor, the man who spends his life winning dollars and turns to God in the evening of life shall meet the humble missionary who has spent his life winning souls. Each shall be rewarded according to the motives of his life. The first hired, who claimed the greater wage, relied on a motive of the bartering spirit. The other was a work of faith and perhaps did far more for the kingdom.

What is our motive for service? If it is love for Jesus Christ, we will be rewarded with a consciousness of divine presence and we will be given a steady power which will hold us joyfully to our God-given task. Do His will and walk in the path He has chosen for us, and the reward will be satisfying and sufficient.

Prayer.—Lord, grant that our faith may be true and living. Live Thou in us and let us die in Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

OUR DEPENDENCE UPON GOD.

"I am the vine, ye are the branches . . . Apart from me ye can do nothing."—John 15:5.

In this age of the material rapid progress, advancing science, riches and the getting of wealth, we are disposed naturally to feel very independent and to forget God. Humanity needs some vital force to remind it that God is in it all and that without Him we can do nothing.

The Hawaiian Isles are very independent, but they are out of touch with everything and the inhabitants live out of tin cans. Humanity is very independent of the sun; but try to make a crop without the sun. God says, "If I did not vaporize the sea to make rain for the earth, your water-power would be a dry creek. How much are you dependent upon God for what good you do every day?"

Prayer.—Our Father, give us Thy Holy Spirit, which Thou has promised to them that ask Thee, that we may honor Thee in our every-day life. Amen.

SATURDAY.

ABANDONMENT.

"Who then offereth willingly to consecrate himself this day unto Jehovah?"—1 Chron. 29:1-5.

"Consecration" is a word that is often used loosely. We are likely to say, "I have consecrated myself to God again," or "I have reconsecrated my possessions to God," when the fact is that, whatever may be true of this consecration, the first was a farce, or it would not need renewal. We can remind ourselves of a consecration, but we cannot make it over again if it has been really made.

"The word that helps me most," said George MacGregor, "is 'abandonment.' It indicates my falling back upon God." Another meaningful expression is self-surrender. When we have once really given to God the title deed of our life, the life is His, and we would not regain it if we could.

Prayer.—Dear Saviour, Thou hast bought us, Thou hast ransomed us, Thou hast saved us, and we are Thine. We are Thine now, we shall be Thine tomorrow, Thine till the end of our earthly lives. Thine through the measureless reaches of eternity. We have abandoned ourselves to Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

HOW MUCH POWER?

"Abide in me."—John 15:4.

How hard is it to live so as to be known as a Christian? We are told that it takes one hundred pounds to the square inch of nature's force to produce a rose; that it takes 450 pounds to the square inch to move a cylinder of a Corliss engine. It doesn't take much of a man to be a Christian, but it takes all of him. How much of you belongs to Jesus? The object of life is not to live but bear fruit.

Prayer.—Lord, give us faith to feel Thy kindly spirit in our lives. Give unto us Thy grace daily, that we may serve Thee with all of our power. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

It is a very busy time at the Christian Orphanage at this season of the year, and especially so this fall. We have had so much rain it has delayed us in our farm work very much. Forty acres of hay to cut, cure and haul to the hay loft and get it done between rains is a strenuous job. The old adage is to "Make hay while the sun shines," and it is being put into operation with us this week. To feed twenty head of cattle it takes lots of feed. To produce milk and butter in abundance for the children, it takes good feed. A good cow is like a machine. If you feed her well and give her good care, you may expect fine results; but you cannot expect good results from a poorly fed cow with poor care.

The Orphanage has a fine lot of hogs to kill this season—twenty-six in all. One of our little boys, Clarence Fields, is the superintendent of the hog department, and he gives them fine attention and takes great interest in feeding them. He is to get a nice present if he makes ten thousand pounds this season. He is doing his best. Clarence studies all the literature from the State college and U. S. government on hog-raising and feeding, and his close study is showing fine results. We are all looking forward to the time when we will have fresh sausage, with gravy; spare-ribs and backbone, and later on good old ham with brown gravy, and fried sweet potatoes thrown in.

Our little boys are looking forward to another joy also. It will soon be rabbit time. Then all the plank I have on hand will melt away one at a time till all the little fellows are supplied with boxes to trap them in. It is amazing how many they catch in a season. It seems they catch all on our farm and persuade them from adjoining farms and trap them, too. Elwood Farrer was one of our champions last season.

Another Sunday School joined our ranks last week with a promise of a large Thanksgiving offering. We hope our Churches and Sunday Schools will begin now to plan for a magnificent Thanksgiving offering this year. We are nearly one-half way to our goal for the year. We must not fail to reach it.

FEDERAL AID.

The opponents of the Curtis-Reed bill, providing for the establishment of a Department of Education with a secretary in the President's Cabinet, after seeking and not finding other grounds upon which to base their opposition have cried insistently that it would interfere with the rights of the States, even though they have been unable to point out any provisions in the measure that would allow Federal control of the schools, or provide Federal aid for the States.

It has also been noticed that these so-called ardent supporters of States' rights have not raised a voice or even made a small protest about Federal aid that the States are receiving yearly in large amounts. The grand total distributed to the States last year by the Federal government was $144,410,937.23. The line of demarcation between States' rights and Federal aid is so nearly non-existent that no one has attempted to define it.

Maryland, where Governor Ritchie has so often avowed himself the enemy of anything that tends to interfere with the rights of the State, received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, $1,545,155.95, of which $650,106.91 was for co-operative construction of rural roads; $73,196.60 for co-operative vocational education; $589,540 for the national guard; $60,000 for agricultural experiment stations; $59,217.76 for co-operative agricultural extension work; the remainder being distributed over a variety of objects, such as welfare, hygiene and maternity, agricultural college and other concerns in the State's interests. The majority of the other States received like appropriations for similar interests.

We are aware of no instance where the Federal government, because of this aid, has attempted to dictate who should ride on the roads or what the speed limit should be, what should be planted or how it should be planted, or how the children should be raised. Yet when a Department of Education is mentioned, you hear the opposition cry about how the schools would be dictated to by the Federal government and forced to use such textbooks and teach such theories as the Department of Education would demand. All of which, of course, is a bunch of tommyrot, the creation of imaginative pessimists who have no other ground upon which to oppose a progressive measure. H. illicits for the soul spiritual strength. Water that is kept in circulation purifies itself; likewise, by the constant stream of prayer and devotion to God, the soul is kept pure. Purity means worth, strength and power. We would covet for each such a source of power.

A few weeks ago in the State of California one of the largest dams in the country gave way. This dam held in subjection, by its own strength, millions of gallons of water. This body of water, when under control, furnished all the power for the turning of machinery, the making of light, and other industrial purposes, for miles around. It was a great asset to the community. Suddenly the power to hold within control this enormous body of water was released—the dam had given way. Instead of the water which had been harnessed into usefulness, it was now a force of destruction, and as a result many lives were lost, with a destruction also of much valuable property. Prayer and devotion is to the individual what the dam was to the water. It was a safety valve for the protection of living souls. When the prayer and devotional life of an individual gives way, the welfare of the soul is immediately endangered. The secret of Daniel's life was that he knew how to possess as well as profess God. He knew the source of power and took every precaution to guard himself against the danger of losing connection with it.

Jesus, when talking to Peter and the other disciples, said, "Come unto me and I will make you fishers of men." Too many, like Peter, are trying to be fishers of men when their nets need mending. As long as they are kept submerged, the world cannot see the torn places. Daniel's life was not submerged into the deep sea of deceit, or of non-transparency, but into the crystal waters of a noble purpose; into the blue and sparkling waters of the universe, and into the calm and constant repose of a lifeless sea of unceasing devotion. Such a life as this is worthy of emulation and should be a living example to all who would find the open window of their life. Walters, Va.

NOTICE.

The Palm Street Church at Greensboro will be open for a new pastor for the coming Conference year. As yet we have not called any one for this work. We feel at this time we are not financially strong enough to call a full-time pastor, but we would like to secure a pastor that could live here and serve Palm Street Church for two Sundays in the month and take some other Church elsewhere for the other two Sundays. For a pastor who could serve the Church in this way we probably could pay a little more than for just coming here and preaching two Sundays in the month and spending the remaining time somewhere else.

As chairman of the pastoral committee, I would like to hear from preachers who could consider the work here in that way. Or if any one could not consider the pastorate as I have outlined it, but could serve some other way, I would like to hear from them also. Address your communication to

CHURCH SUPPER AND BUSINESS.

On Friday night, September 21st, the Franklin Christian Church met in its last quarterly conference for the year. Preceding the business session, members and patrons of the Church met for a banquet supper. About 120 members and friends broke bread together and enjoyed the fellowship of eating from one common table. During the supper an informal program was given, consisting of music and inspirational talks. The special guests of the Church were Dr. W. H. Denison, general secretary of the Christian Church, and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church. Dr. Denison, in his usual way, warmed our hearts with words of inspiration and encouragement. He told us the incident of Pat who was doing a job of painting and some one discovered that he was wearing three coats while doing his work, and an observer asked him what his motive was in wearing three coats while doing his work, whereupon Pat replied, "The directions read, 'For best results put on three coats.'" Dr. Denison challenged our Church to put on three coats in beginning our new year's work. The coats which he suggested were (1) the coat of co-operation, (2) the coat of sacrifice, and (3) the coat of loyalty.

Mr. Hardcastle brought us a stirring message on "The Church the Biggest Thing in the World" because of its purpose, its personnel and its power.

At 8 o'clock the business session ensued, with roll call, hearing reports, new items of business, etc. Before adjournment a motion was made and carried that such a meeting become an annual event of our Church life, in an effort to bring our membership into closer family bonds and help make us appreciate our Church as a real Church home.

OBITUARIES

SLADE.

Inasmuch as our Heavenly Father, in His divine providence, has seen fit to take to his eternal reward our brother, Mr. P. R. Slade, of near Dendron, Va.; be it resolved:

1. That Bro. Slade having been a member of Union Christian Church for many years, he gave the Church his loyal support and set a Christian example. That, while we mourn the loss of our dear brother, we bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well, for his life and influence has been a blessing to the community in which he lived. That his Christian fortitude and patience with which he bore his long sufferings be an inspiration to us to live closer and do more for the Saviour whom he loved and trusted.

2. We would say to his loved ones and friends, "Weep not, your father is not dead, but he sleepeth the sleep of the just and holy." Were he to be with us again we feel that this is what he would say, "Lift up your hearts, dear children, grieve not a single day; but follow thou in my footprints, for they lead up to the holy way."

3. That we extend to the family our sympathy, and ask our Heavenly Father's blessings upon them in their loss, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one to The Christian Sun and many friends to mourn her going. Church, wish to put on record our deep for publication, and one be spread on appreciation of his faithfulness and devotion to his class.

GOOD.

Henry Good was born September 23, 1848, and died July 19, 1928, at the age of 79 years, 9 months and 26 days. Deceased was a faithful member of Mt. Lebanon Christian Church, and was recognized by all as a good man. In obedience to a request he made some years ago, I conducted his funeral service. The services were held from the home of his only son, near Shenandoah, Va., July 21st.

OATES.

John C. Oates was born June 20, 1843, and died August 26, 1928, making his age, therefore, 85 years, 2 months and 6 days. Bro. Oates was a faithful member of the Timber Ridge Christian Church. Near the end of his long life he took it upon himself to collect a goodly sum of money for repairing and improving the Church building. It is due largely to his efforts that the Timber Ridge Church has been greatly improved inside and fitted up with beautiful new pews. He is survived by five sons and four daughters. Funeral services at Timber Ridge August 28, 1928.

A. W. ANDES.

NORFLEET.

Edward S. Norfleet died at the home of his nephew, R. L. Smith, Suffolk, Va., September 3, 1928, aged eighty-four years. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Drs. W. W. Staley and C. H. Rowland, at Holy Neck Church, and the body interred in the Church cemetery.

Mr. Norfleet was the son of Joseph and Louisa Norfleet, of Nansemond County. He was one of seven children—four brothers and three sisters—only one of whom, Fnlton B. Norfleet, survives. His wife, who was Miss Rosa Rawles, died some years ago.

He had been a member of Holy Neck Church for about fifty years, and was a regular attendant at Church and Sunday School as long as circumstances permitted. He was a man of great energy and industry, frugal in his habits, generous toward all, but especially the poor and unfortunate, humble in spirit, loyal and liberal to his Church, and firm in his faith and trust.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

ONE OF WORLD'S SAFEST HARBOURS.—

Hampton Roads affords the largest and safest anchorage on the Atlantic coast. The absence of climatic disturbances, with an ice free harbour, makes for additional safety for vessels.

THE CHURCH'S TASK.—

"The Church is necessary as the only institution in human life that has the specified task of linking individual and social life with the faith of Jesus. How poor and colorless life becomes without the faith for which the Church at its best stands alone!"—Rev. Morgan P. Noyes.

A GREAT SCIENTIST SPEAKS.—

"The human race is in the childhood of its knowledge, and has stupendous stages to go before it can measure in any dogmatic manner the boundless universe which surrounds it. We need to be careful that we do not deny the revelations of the spiritual kingdom, which in itself is as real and positive as any material fact of knowledge."—Sir Oliver Lodge.

A BOOK WE SHOULD LIKE.—

The press of the Young Woman's Christian Association announces the publication of a new anthology. The title is "Christ in the Modern Poetry of Today." The creative genius which has manifested itself in art and literature has found inspiration for much of its finest work in the life and teachings of the Man of Galilee. And as the names of some of the leading present-day poets appear upon the title page of this new book, it may be that present-day literature is not as degenerate as we are sometimes tempted to think. Perhaps the bad is more widely advertised.

A DAY OF PRAYER FOR UNITY.—

We have had world-wide days of prayer for missions in the past. But now comes a call for a world-wide day of prayer for Christian unity. February 15, 1929, is the day appointed. The call is to go out to Christian men and women in all lands to join in this wave of supplication. The movement is sponsored by the Council of Women for Home Missions and the Federation of Women's Boards for Foreign Missions. The more seriously the Church gives itself to the mission task, the more evident becomes the necessity for Church unity. We may yet find that before we can ever measure up to the task of carrying the gospel to all the world, the prayer of the Master "That they may be one" must first be fulfilled.

A TITHE FOR DRINK.—

It is appalling to think about such a nation as Great Britain spending one-tenth of the national income for drink. But the figures for 1927 indicate that was approximately what was spent. For the cup that is supposed to cheer, there was an outlay of £300,000,000, or about $1,500,000,000. The English people must have been terribly downhearted, to think they required such an outlay. But bad as it seems, there is occasion for encouragement when we are told that these figures are $680,000,000 less than the nation spent for drink in 1920. A falling off of more than $100,000,000 a year indicates that there is a steadily growing movement toward temperance in Great Britain.

STUDENTS WHO GO TO CHURCH.—

Not all, not even a majority of college students, are indifferent to Church. A survey of the moral and religious ideals of college students just completed by the Institute of Social and Religious Research and published under the title "Undergraduates," reveals that most students attend Church with some regularity.

As one phase of this inquiry, questionnaires were filled out by a large number of seniors, men and women, scattered through twenty-three colleges and universities. Eighty-three per cent of the men and 93 per cent of the women declared that they attended Church either regularly or occasionally, while "a majority of both men and women found religion a larger force in every-day experience" by their senior year than they had when they entered college. Large majorities of both men (80 per cent) and women (90 per cent) also stated that they regarded the life of Jesus as setting the ethical standard for modern life, and similar majorities "considered the teachings of Jesus to be practical in regard to such matters as war and industrial relations in modern society."

So far as Bible reading is concerned, "only 7 per cent of either men or women read it (the Bible) regularly; 39 per cent of the men and 47 per cent of the women read it occasionally, and the rest who answered read it seldom or never."—The Christian Herald.

CHURCH MUSIC AND UNION IN ENGLAND.—

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, writing for the Christian Herald his impressions of the English Wesleyan Methodist Conference, which he attended last July, under the title, "British Methodism Faces its Tasks," presents two facts which show us that the spirit and the problems of Christ's Church are very much the same everywhere. We commend both of these statements for your consideration.

"There is a proposal in process to revise the Hymnal of the Church. Yet I do not hesitate to say that the one now in use is among the first manuals of devotion extant. Dr. James Martineau averred that Charles Wesley's hymns were of that grade, and W. T. Snead declared they had been a bond of union for English-speaking men.

"Comparisons are odious, yet occasionally necessary. It is the Wesleyan choice of hymns and spiritual psalms that I covet for our American Churches, and after that the magnificent congregational singing I found in every Church I visited. We can sing the gospel around the world quite as soon as we can preach it on that dimension.

"The most far-reaching legislation was decided upon after a full-dress debate on Methodist union. The conference passed a resolution by a more than 80 per cent vote to petition Parliament for the enabling act necessary to such union with other Methodist Churches. This practically assures their oneness and, in my judgment, it predicts the day when world Methodism will also be one federation, preparatory to Protestantism's future solidarity on a suitable basis. The Doyen of Methodist laymen today, Sir Robert W. Perks, voiced the prevailing sentiment when he said that he hoped to see the union of British Methodism consummated in 1932."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.—

Widespread attention has been given a suggestion originally made by Mr. W. H. Murray, director of the religious book department of the Macmillan Company, designed to aid in keeping the preacher up to date in his reading. Mr. Murray thinks that it would be a fine thing if parishes would put fifty dollars in their annual budgets, exacting from their ministers an air-tight pledge to spend every cent for religious books. It would be, and we hope that large numbers of the parishes follow the suggestion. The principal trouble, so far as we can see, is that the suggestion does not go far enough. Numerous ministers do find it hard to set aside funds sufficient to keep them abreast of important religious publications. That is sadly true. But not half as many Churches suffer from a ministry thus deprived of adequate mental nourishment as suffer from what Dr. Lynn Harold Hough once called in these pages "the religious illiteracy of the laity." One main barrier lying across the path of progress for hundreds of Churches is the fact that their members seldom read a vital book dealing with the problems of religion. This is not because of any lack of acumen, but simply because the idea never seems to occur to them that they might with advantage carry on some of their reading in this field. So we suggest that the Churches which place fifty dollars in their budgets to provide new books for the minister carry the process one step farther. Let them appropriate another fifty dollars to buy religious books for the laity. Then let them work out some system of reading-circles or for the circulation of these books from hand to hand. Circulation of a dozen vital books among the thoughtful members of a congregation would lift the whole level of intelligence and activity in that congregation within a year.—Christian Century.

NOTES-PERSONALS

We trust all SUN readers will carefully read all that Miss Victoria E. Adams presents this week in another column. Miss Adams is our latest recruit on the mission field in Porto Rico, and she writes most interestingly and reveals something of the need and the distress now in Porto Rico. Her story and plea should certainly not go unheeded.

The Mission Secretary, J. O. Atkinson, is by invitation of the pastor, Rev. G. H. Veazey, to preach at the First Christian Church, Roanoke, Ala., Sunday evening, October 14th. Bro. Veazey writes that they are expecting a great Conference the week following. We are sure the Roanoke Church will entertain the Conference in royal fashion, and if the Conference is not a glorious success, it will not be the fault of the entertaining Church.

We congratulate Rev. H. Shelton Smith, who has recently been elected to a position in Teachers' College at Columbia University, New York, to succeed Dr. George Albert Coe, who retired some months ago at head of the department of religious education in Teachers' College. Dr. Smith has been the past five years director of leadership training of the International Council of Religious Education, headquarters at Chicago. He was formerly a member of our Hines Church, Guilford County, and an honor graduate from Elon College. He is to begin his work with Teachers' College January 1, 1929, and we wish him all success in the field of large opportunity that Columbia offers.

Mrs. D. P. Barrett, under date Ponce, Porto Rico, September 26th, writes: "The United States government is doing all in its power and much help is being extended in relief work among those in distress here. A cable from Dr. Minton last night tells us to go ahead with repairs to our mission property. Our mission loss is not less than $5,000, including the great damage done to Selinas Church. My husband went to a meeting of the mission workers last Monday. The Congregationalists are nearly wiped off the island, so far as their mission property is concerned, and the Disciples of Christ are very heavy losers. The total loss to missions on the island is estimated at $154,815. This is confined, of course, to property and buildings owned by Churches and doing missionary work."

Rev. T. J. Green brings word of the very successful and happy service at the opening of our new Church at Biscoe, in the Western North Carolina Conference, Sunday, September 30th. The Church building is brick-veneer, has ample seating capacity, and presents a very inviting appearance. There were three services on the opening day—Rev. G. R. Underwood preached at the morning service, Rev. M. A. Pollard in the afternoon, and Rev. T. J. Green at the evening service. Rev. W. C. Martin has labored most faithfully in building the Church, and he has been assisted in that by an enthusiastic and efficient building committee, who have really built a permanent memorial to the Christian zeal and spirit of self-denial in the community. We congratulate our Biscoe people most heartily on this splendid achievement. We presume Bro. Martin will give SUN readers a detailed account of the opening services.

Our friend and brother, Rev. N. J. Waldorf, D. D., writing THE SUN's editor a personal note from Orlando, Fla., on September 29th, says: "The official estimate of dead in Florida hurricane is set at 2,300 in West Palm Beach and vicinity, with $50,000,000 property damage. It did blow, I can assure you! Sometimes I thought the cottage 'San' and all would blow away. Ten of our large pines broke or were uprooted. Everything was in darkness. All lines were blown down, electric and phone. Nobody knew how the others were getting along. The city of Orlando was shaken and a good deal of damage was done in the way of trees uprooted, etc. The storm lasted from Sunday midnight until Monday about 4 P. M. The worst was from 2 A. M. to about 11 A. M. Monday. We had gusts from seventy to ninety miles per hour, and maybe a little more in places; 16,000 homes in Florida are wrecked in the path of the hurricane. The papers have not exaggerated it this time. The unofficial death rate is about 3,000. A calamity indeed has befallen us, especially in parts of Florida."

WAKE CHAPEL.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Leonard Davis began a series of meetings at the Wake Chapel Christian Church on the second Sunday in September and continued for thirteen days. The meetings were well attended and many were made to rejoice to hear the splendid sermons and delightful music. It is a treat to hear Mr. and Mrs. Davis sing together, while Mr. Davis is still playing the piano. Mr. Davis not only plays wonderfully, but also has a clear, ringing testimony for the Lord. Mrs. Davis' sermons are clear and pointed and show that the Bible has been studied much. I consider her sermons orthodox and fundamental. We believe, as a whole, the services were uplifting and ennobling. There were fifteen or twenty professions of faith, with seven uniting with the Church thus far.

O'KELLY MEMORIAL.

Bro. W. E. MacClenny, teacher of a young men's class in our Suffolk Sunday School, and also a member of the committee on the O'Kelly Memorial, under date of September 17th, writes: to finish paying for the O'Kelly monument, to be erected at Elon College, was taken up with the young men of the class which I try to teach here, and an offering was taken for that purpose, and I beg to hand you herewith my check for $3 to be applied on the said fund.

"Were this matter presented in an intelligent way to the young people of the Southern Convention we do not think that there would be the least trouble in collecting the balance still due on this work. For one, I believe that there are 100 Sunday School classes that would be glad to make a similar donation, and by doing this it would link them up in the interest of the Church as a whole. This is the second time that this class has made a contribution to the monument fund."

Bro. MacClenny is right. We know that if Sunday School classes were appealed to, they would send the money in. We now have in bank $952.03. Bro. MacClenny's donation brings it to $955.03. The total amount to be raised is $1,275. We yet lack some over $300 of getting the necessary funds. The memorial has now been made and has been put in storage at Elon College, awaiting the raising of the balance of the funds sufficient to pay for the same, and then the memorial, which is a beautiful one, indeed, will be erected on the Elon College campus and unveiled to the world. We sincerely trust that others will do as Bro. MacClenny has done, and individuals who wish this matter completed and will send in their donations, the same will be acknowledged in THE SUN.

Respectfully,
JUDGE J. F. WEST, Ch'n.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

"PRAYER FOR THE STATE."

BY DR. L. E. SMITH

(A sermon delivered at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Sunday, September 23rd.)

"Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved."
—Rom. 10:1.

My Friends:

I spoke to you last Sunday morning about prayer for the Church. Christ came that He might give us the Church. He taught that the Church might be established. He died that the Church might not be taken from us. But if the Church is to abide it must abide in the world, in the State, in the nation. The Church does not exist for itself, but for others. Its purpose is to save, to save men, and if it saves men it will save society, and if it saves society it will save the nation, and if it saves the nation it will save the State. So I am speaking to you this morning about prayer for the State. You will find the text in Rom. 10:1, "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved."

Israel was a nation. Paul was an Israelite, and therefore a part of the Jewish nation. The Jews as a people and as a nation had rejected Christ, had refused the only means of salvation that God had offered to a sinful world. Paul was aware of the rejection and knew full well what it meant. Paul spoke about this rejection, and his own heart's desire in the matter. He spoke feelingly. We can't realize fully how feelingly he did speak. They were his people, his own kindred, and perhaps flesh of his flesh and blood of his blood. It's more than a friend pleading for a friend; it's like a brother praying for a brother, praying that he might be saved from doubt and rejection from divine punishment and eternal loss. He prays that Israel as a nation and as a people might be reconciled to God.

Provisionally it would seem that God created America and preserved it for His own, until the day came for them to find a refuge from social distinction, political oppression and religious persecution, and then He opened up the way across the high seas to the golden shores of freedom and opportunities, and they and their descendants have built a great nation. This nation, our nation, has come into being as a result of prayer, of consecration, of service and of sacrifice. In our days of prosperity, of material and political greatness, we should not forget the things that have made us great; we should not forget the great souls who laid for us the foundation of our nation; we should not, we dare not, forget God who made us, who has guided us, and who holdeth our destiny in His hands.

We pray for ourselves, we pray for our children, we pray for our Church, and why not pray for our country?

The foundation of our nation was laid in prayer. The founders and leaders of our nation have been men and women of prayer.

At the critical hours of American history when the noon-day sky was midnight and the atmosphere was saturated with murk, where do we find our great American leaders, unable by human eyes to see before them? We find them, do we not? on their knees beseeching Divine guidance and grasping for a clasp of the unseen hand which would lead them and their people into the light again.

The whole winter of the American troops at Valley Forge is but an American panorama of heroism, self-denial and sacrifice. Yet every noble incident of that season of doom and dread furnishes but details of the background for the great central picture which the American mind loves to dwell upon, Washington on his knees in the snow, pleading for his cause, his broken army, and his suffering soldiers.

In 1864, when again the shades of night would cover this fair land, it was Abraham Lincoln who declared "God bless the Churches, and blessed be God who in this hour giveth us the Churches."

When war was raging in Europe and this country was about to be drawn into that terrible affair, Woodrow Wilson, our President, was constantly on his knees before God in prayer, pleading for wisdom and guidance, and today every Christian whoever he may be or whatever position he may fill in life, whether humble or great, should be praying and praying much that God's will may be done in our country. That our country may be saved, that it may be saved!

First: From the bondage of selfishness. America cannot live her life alone. She is a part of a great world; she is a member of a great world family. Her destiny, in a way, is tied up with the destiny of other nations. When misfortunes overtake other nations, the effect of that misfortune is reflected in our own national life. For instance, when a famine rages in China we are conscience-stricken if we do not, out of our abundance, send food and supplies to save starving men and women. And when other sections of our country are devastated by fires and floods or storms and the people suffer, we open our hearts and our purses and divide our living with the unfortunates. And may we as a nation know that inasmuch as we have done it unto the least of these we have done it unto Him.

And may God save us from:

Second: The bondage of materialism. In the long ago Christ warned, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal," but, saith He, "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where moth and rust doth not corrupt and where thieves do not break through nor steal," and later He continued, "The love of money is the root of all evil"; and yet again He declared, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven?"

America as a nation is becoming more and more wealthy every day and every hour. She is beginning to feel that only wealth counts; that it can cover up impurities in private life, and that it can atone for dishonesty and thievery in public life. Money is what the individual wants, and money seems to be what the nation wants.

The chief executive who brings material prosperity to the State, regardless of the type or character of the people he may develop, or the type of legislature he may meet out, is hailed as the Moses of our nation.

In our mad rush for wealth and material power, we should not forget that the nations who forget God shall find their reward with the wicked who are turned into hell.

Then may God save us as a nation from:

Third: The bondage of lawlessness. We are fast winning for ourselves the stigma of a lawless nation. There are two things about us that other nations seemed to accentuate—our greed for gain and our disrespect for law. We lead the world, they tell us, in broken homes and shattered families; we crowd the divorce courts with appeals and petitions. Crime is laid at our door with an increase that's startling. They tell us that we have more murders than all the rest of the world put together. We care not for civil law, and we disregard the Constitution of the United States to a degree that's alarming and distressing. May God save us from a—

Fourth: Godless nation. We are known as a Christian nation, but are we Christians? God grant that we may be Christians in our ideals, Christians in our thinking, Christians in our purposes, and Christians in our deeds. But before we can be a Christian nation—a nation that's Christian in deed and truth—we have got to have a nation with Christian leaders: men who love God better than they love gold; men who will put character above cash and principle above politics; men who will worship God and serve men; men who will fear God and keep His commandments; men who will lead us in the ways of the Almighty—that we may be the sharers of the riches of eternity.

"God send us men of steadfast will,
Patient, courageous, strong and true,
With vision clear and mind equipped,
His will to learn, His work to do.

"God send us men with hearts ablaze,
All truth to love, all wrong to hate:
These are the patriots nations need,
These are the bulwarks of the State."

"God Give Us Men."

"God give us men! A time like this demands Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;

Men whom the lust of office does not kill,
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will,
Men who have honor—men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And scorn his treacherous flatteries without winking—

Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the Brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

POWER OF BELIEF.

Everything depends upon one's belief. Unbelief blocked the way, and the work, even of our Lord while here on earth. "And He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." Our Lord limited His efforts, even in His divine task, to the belief of the individual. In His duty, a father came in sore distress seeking deliverance for his son. Out of his deep distress, the father cried, "If thou canst do anything, have compassion on us and help us." Here was a man full of anxiety and even with some faith, but evidently doubts assailed him. And so quoting the father's own words, our Saviour said: "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth." The "can" on the part of the Saviour hinged solely upon the "canst" of the needy father. When that father made the discovery, he cried out, "Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief." At that, the Lord tells us the healing power of the Christ went to the afflicted one and deliverance came. How many times since has the healing power of the Son of God been stayed from helping and healing the sons of many who fail to believe or had doubts in their own mind.

Yet, there are those who contend that it matters little as to what we believe, provided our deeds are all right. This is human reasoning, pure and simple. The divine part is left out. We may shape our deeds with reasonable logic and morality and things may move along smoothly, but our Saviour can only do His divine work in the heart when there is the right sort of belief in Him and a willingness on the part of the individual to have His helping and saving power and strength. Many are today losing much of the divine life revealed to us in the Word of God because they are doubting the Word itself; because they do not believe in the Word and on Him who is the Lord's Christ. It makes all the difference in the world as to whether we believe or not and as to what we believe. It takes all of the Bible to cover the area and scope of human life, and there is not a line in it that is not necessary and helpful. It is God's Book which unfolds to us life at varied angles and human experience from every point of view. We need the whole Book to lead us to a whole and full life in Him that our belief may be steadfast and that He may do in us His perfect work.

RELIGION AND POLITICS.

It is well to keep in mind that there is a difference between religion and Christian life, and a difference between politics and statesmanship. There is religion where Christ is unknown, and politics where statesmanship is a stranger. Mohammedanism is religious, and partyism is political. Religion deals with the mass, but Christianity deals with the individual. Politics deals with the mass; statesmanship with the individual. Religion controls the multitude; Christianity changes the heart of the individual. Politics deals with the mass; statesmanship with the citizen. Religion tries to organize; the gospel tries to save. Politics tries to win; statesmanship tries to save the State.

The Church has been too much engaged in trying to build up a strong organization, and not enough engaged in developing real Christian character. Politics has been too much occupied in building a great party, and not enough in developing true citizenship. Politics is a good word in the dictionary, but it has lost its best meaning in its degraded use in party interest. Religion is a good word in the dictionary, but it is applied to so many cults that it has lost its place in Christian civilization. It is time for the nation to return to Christ as the Head of the Church, and to government as the head of republic. There is no nation and no race that does not have some form of religion, but so many of them are false. "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved," and that name is Jesus Christ (Acts 4:12-10). Jesus Christ is really the Head of the best governments, for in Rev. 11:15: "The seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever." The best nations are Christian nations, and the best rulers are Christian rulers.

What the world needs is to get away from religion and politics to Christianity and statesmanship. What the missionary fields need is the preaching of Jesus Christ, and not the introduction and building up of denominational institutions. The mission fields have been studded with denominational institutions that really confused the heathen mind. The apostles went everywhere preaching Christ, and if that were done today the converted peoples would build their own Churches, schools, hospitals and orphanages. When people are regenerated and get the spirit of Jesus Christ they will develop themselves and their institutions. This method of missionary endeavor would reduce the cost in trying to build up institutions and enable the Churches to increase the number of missionaries. In this way, much larger numbers could be reached and the native converts would develop more rapidly into self-governed peoples. As long as denominations try to build up their own institutions and their own way of doing things, the peoples thus won to Christ will be slow in self-determination and Christian progress. Once in line of Christian progress, they will develop a civil government in harmony with their conditions, their race characteristics, and their language. Church and State at home should be kept in the background, and they should be encouraged to develop a Church and a State suited to their natural talents and locations. "Christ formed within them the hope of glory" would enable them to build conditions that would appeal to their people, and thus new civilizations would spring up and grow in fruitful living and fruitful service.

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE.

The women of this Conference held their greatest annual missionary meeting at Sanford, October 5th. There were 140 delegates present representing the more than 1,200 women now enrolled in missionary societies of the Conference. Delegates and visitors packed the spacious auditorium of the Sanford Church, and the program was of such interest that the close attention of the great audience was riveted from start to finish. Promptly at 10 A. M. Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, President, of Raleigh, called the assembly together and announced that the theme of the Conference was "Self-denial." The Scripture cited was Luke, 9th chapter, verses 23-25: "Let him deny himself and follow me." The opening prayer was led by Mrs. J. D. Kernodle, Graham, N. C. The enrollment showed forty out of a total of fifty-five societies represented, and some Churches without a society had delegates present.

The reports of the eight district leaders of the Conference were interesting, and showed progressive work in every district the past year.

Mrs. J. J. Henderson, recording secretary, Graham, N. C., reported two new societies organized during the year and an increased membership in old societies. Mrs. Stanley C. Harrell, vice-president and superintendent of life and memorial memberships, reported an increase of three life memberships during the year and an increasing interest in memorial memberships.

The following pastors were recognized and introduced to the Conference: Revs. R. L. Williamson, O. D. Poythress, B. J. Howard, J. Lee Johnson, J. Edward Kirby, G. O. Lankford, W. S. Alexander, G. C. Crutchfield.

Mrs. W. M. Jay, president Woman's Society of Elon College, made a most interesting and an exceedingly practical and helpful address on "Stimulating Interest in Missions." This address was asked for publication and should be published since it contained suggestions of worth and merit to all societies. The Secretary of Missions made an address on "Roads that Lead to the City of God." Bro. Sam Davis and Mrs. Davis, evangelists, delighted the great audience with a musical number which thrilled and inspired all who heard them.

The offering was for reconstruction work in Porto Rico, and amounted to $65.50. The real features of the morning program which brought the same to a splendid climax and edified the souls of all were the report of superintendent of spiritual life, Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, and the item following, as a logical sequence, the devotionals by Mrs. W. H. Boone, Durham, N. C. It was worth attending the Conference, and all the efforts it cost, to have this feast of real soul and spiritual food. The foundation of missionary work, and also that which the work seeks most of all to promote, as Mrs. Carroll pointed out, is the deepening and quickening of the spiritual life. And then when Mrs. Boone presented a graphic chart showing vividly that Christ is the first and foremost need in every life, and He alone is sufficient, the entire audience felt the need and the presence of their power, as the leader prayed earnestly for His presence and His power. It was the Conference's highest moment of spiritual enjoyment.

In the afternoon the young people had charge, and every item was tense with life and power and progress. Mrs. M. R. Rives, superintendent of young people's work, Graham, N. C., read the report on the work of the past year. She was followed by two young ladies who thrilled the audience with their soul-stirring addresses—Miss Lucie Mulholland, Durham, on "Cross-Bearing," and Miss Jean Bushart, of Raleigh, on the same subject, as viewed by one who attended Blue Ridge last summer. The young people of the Burlington Society gave a pageant, "Cluster of American Beauties," that was exceedingly touching and appropriate. It was thoroughly enjoyed. Miss Pattie Coghill delivered the final address of the program, in which she set forth in emphatic and practical manner the ways and means of organizing the young people for missionary service.

Bro. J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va., Assistant Secretary of Missions, was introduced to the audience and in a brief talk stirred the Conference to fervor and enthusiasm for missionary work. It was the fitting climax to a wonderful program and a great day. Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, is to be president, as Mrs. Vaughan declined to serve longer, greatly to the regret of all. Mrs. Pattie Preston Paris, Greensboro, succeeds Mrs. J. J. Henderson as secretary, Mrs. Henderson also declining re-election to a position she has filled with great acceptance and efficiency.

The Sanford Society and Church certainly entertained the great Conference in most royal fashion and made all guests feel happy and at home. Mrs. W. R. Sellars, treasurer, reported received during the year $4,487.97 on a total goal of $5,000. The same goal was fixed for next year and all believe it will be reached. Mrs. Sellars has been treasurer for ten years, and in that time has collected and paid out for the Conference $33,422.06. There are now fifty-five societies and the number is on the increase.

The benediction was pronounced and a prayer for the work offered by the pastor, Rev. R. L. Williamson. It was indeed a great Conference and a glorious day.

WHY PROTESTANTISM IS IN POLITICS.

For a generation the Outlook, New York City, held a distinguished place in the periodical literature of this country. It was accounted an almost indispensable institution of news and scholarly opinion in all intellectual circles. Dr. Lyman Abbott, its noted editor, was one of the most outstanding preachers and thinkers of America, and he never permitted his periodical to fall from the high plane on which he himself moved and thought. One might differ from it, but always he respected its dignified and thoughtful bearing toward any subject under discussion. Of recent years the Outlook has been undergoing a steady metamorphosis downward until one seldom hears it quoted in those intellectual circles in which it used to be monitor. But it struck bottom when it consented to publish an article entitled "Protestantism in Politics," by George W. Hinman, Jr., in its issue of August 29th. For irresponsible innuendo and the spirit of unrestrained billingsgate one could hardly find its equal in any of the magazine sections of the sensational Sunday papers. The article makes a most virulent attack upon the Anti-Saloon League and the Federal Council of Churches and is bespattered with such epithets as "usurpation of secular authority by self-appointed clerical leaders," "its brazen head" (referring to the Anti-Saloon League), "hirelings," "appetite for temporal sway," "whetted by conquest in prohibition," "these worldly Church groups lust for still wider dominion," "other Protestant groups joined rancously in the campaign," "worldly Church oligarchy" (meaning the Federal Council of Churches), "worldly aspirations of the Protestant oligarchy," etc.

In spirit at least, it is just such an outburst against the Anti-Saloon League and the Church as one might hear in a low-grade barroom or a bootlegging livery stable. That it should appear in such a periodical as the Outlook is incredible. We are informed that its author himself is a Protestant; but it would be interesting, and we venture very illuminating, to know just how much of a Protestant he is and how much he has thrilled his Church and his community by his own personal and financial sacrifices and services for the cause of Christ. His article betrays a most amazing shallowness and ignorance of the whole trend of modern Christian thinking, harking back as it does to the germinal seeds of that type of rank fundamentalism which would "save souls for heaven" and keep itself "free and unspotted" from the worldliness of this earthly life. That there is a legitimate field for discussion as to how far the Church and her subsidiary institutions should go in the use of their influence toward the solution of moral and social problems is freely admitted. But it is a profound subject, deserving of only broad and scholarly dissertation. It is an extremely intricate and difficult theme worthy of a brain like that of Dr. Lyman Abbott himself. Attacks like that in the Outlook help only to stir up mistrust and antipathy against Protestantism in shallow and unthinking minds, the only kind to which this article can possibly appeal.

The wet press is bubbling over just now with all sort of editorials and articles warning the Church against quick disaster if it does not stay out of the prohibition fight and sit down quietly and let the liquor forces rule this country as they will. The wetter these papers are, and the less religious, the more solemn advice they seem able to give to the Church. A careful study of such editorials and articles leaves but one major impression, and that is that the writers thereof are far more concerned about the victory of their wet candidate than they are about the welfare of the Church or the outcome of Christianity. The thing that is stirring their souls to such poignant utterance is not that the Church and Christianity are in danger of dissolution, but that they are becoming altogether too potent a factor for righteousness and human welfare in some of the circles which used to be conceded wholly to the devil and his followers. If these writers would stop for a moment to think of the logic of the situation, they might realize how futile are their objections in the minds of sterile men like those who compose the leadership of the Protestant Churches of America. For two generations these Churches have fought the liquor traffic—fought it politically, if you please, because it was the only way in which it could be fought; fought it politically because the liquor traffic itself had already entered politics long before the Anti-Saloon League was formed. Never did any other institution in this land more corruptly and more effectively throttle the political life of this nation for its own nefarious ends than did the liquor business before the Church forces broke its hold upon our government. But finally after long years of hard and costly fighting, the liquor business was outlawed from this nation. In all of these fights and up until now neither national political party had ever dared to espouse its cause. But now comes the presidential candidate of one of those parties declaring that if elected he will do all within his power to have the prohibition laws materially modified downward, advising the repeal of the prohibition amendment and advocating the establishment of State socialism in the liquor business. According to the editor of the Outlook, Mr. Smith deserves the thanks of the nation for thus bringing the prohibition question "into the field of practical politics." Who, then, is to blame that "Protestantism is in politics" in America today? To suppose that the Christian forces of this land would sit still and do nothing to protect the prohibition laws which they have worked so long and so hard to secure is to accuse them of idiocy. They would not only be untrue to their best manhood and womanhood, but would betray one of the holiest responsibilities which God has ever committed to their hands through hard-fought victory if they did not do all within their power to defeat any candidate of any party who proposes to legalize the liquor traffic again and even start the States themselves in the liquor business. It would be the height of absurdity and an act of weak and despicable cowardice for the Anti-Saloon League and the Churches and pastors of those Churches to keep silent now and permit the liquor traffic to legalize and entrench itself in political life again simply because a shrewd politician has thrown the question into national politics.

But to see no difference between the efforts of the Anti-Saloon League and the Federal Council of Churches on the one hand and those of the Church in former days from which came the old-time question of State and Church is to be blind to all of the essential facts of the case. There is not a single likeness between them in rational thinking. The activities of the Church in former ages which led to the "separation of Church and State" about which so much is being loosely said in these days was an activity directed for the selfish interests of the Church against the best interests of the nation. It was a Church seeking great endowments, rich pastorates paid by taxes, great grants from State lands, and such as that. But the Anti-Saloon League and the Federal Council have never sought anything from the State for their own selves nor in any way profited by the reforms which they have advocated. What they have done has been done out of utterly unselfish motives for the good of humanity. They have raised their own expenses, carried on their own campaigns, and at great sacrifice done what they have done with the knowledge that in no way would they themselves profit thereby. They have never interested themselves in any issue in which great moral and religious goals were not at stake. Men and women have given their time, their strength, their money unstintingly because of this urge of a great passion for human betterment from which they never hoped to receive one cent in return, but only to do good for their unfortunate fellow-kind. They have never attacked anybody or anything but those who would make gain from helpless victims or who would wring power and lucre from human woe. The implications of the Outlook article are nothing less than slanderous and baseless attacks upon thousands of as honorable, as public-spirited, and as unselfish servants of Jesus Christ as this nation has ever known. And though it is to be presumed that individuals like Mr. Hinman will stoop to the writing of such shallow stuff, this country has a right to expect something better of a responsible periodical like the Outlook than the publication of such an article. Dr. Lyman Abbott must stir restlessly in his grave at how far his great journal has fallen from high estate.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Tuesday evening, October 2nd, at Liberty Spring Christian Church, in Nansemond County, Va., the Baraca Class entertained the Philathea Class at a seafood supper. The Philathea Class had previously entertained the Baraca Class. There were a hundred persons present and all enjoyed the happy, hospitable occasion. Dr. I. W. Johnson is the pastor, and has been for twenty-five years.

The present Church was dedicated in 1904. Sunday School additions were completed last year with class-rooms, furnace heat, electric lights and ample space in Sunday School main room for a supper like that which was enjoyed on Tuesday night. A good kitchen, well furnished, with water inside, silver, china and oil stove, complete, make the equipment practically equal to what many Churches have in cities. For Sunday School purposes and fellowship supper, it reflects credit upon the congregation for their taste, liberality, and good-feeling. It is not only the pride of the congregation, but a blessing to the community.

Eight tables, with ten chairs each, were nicely arranged in the room adjoining the kitchen, covered with tablecloths, glass, china and silverware, vases of fall flowers on each table, and napkins. Men had done all the cooking, preparing the tables, and six men in regular white suits served as waiters. The women had nothing to do but to accept the gracious welcome, sit down and enjoy themselves. The menu consisted of stewed oysters, fried fish (spots), fried potatoes, cornbread, rolls, butter, pickles, coffee, followed by peaches and cake. The unique way the gentlemen and ladies found their partners was by a novel plan of slips of paper with the name of some book of the Bible cut into two parts in such a way that when put together the slip would spell the name of the book. I had a slip with "Mi," and a young lady had one with "cab" on it. When these fitted in the diagonal cuts we were partners. This was a device of Dr. Johnson and it spiced the seating arrangement.

The main cooking was done in the grove on a splendid arrangement, the coffee and bread were made in the kitchen, and all seemed from that universal fountain of good things for the body. Six men in white came like angels of kindness with the bowls of oysters, hot fish, and hot coffee, and then other tasties. A blessing, songs, words from Pastor Johnson, Aaron H. Savage, teacher of the Baraca Class and a teacher in the school for fifty years; Emmet Rogers, teacher of the Philathea class, and this scribe on the "Origin and History of the Baraca and Philathea Classes"; and then the hum of all talking and telling one another what a good time they had had and how they had enjoyed it. Only one criticism was made, and that was by women. They said the men had surpassed the women in cooking and arranging the tables and in their beautiful service. Then they said: "We are going to do better the next time we entertain the Baracas." If they keep that mind and succeed in beating the men in cooking, I hope I will be there and that it will be next year in October.

It was the custom in the Jewish times to have a great feast when they had their annual festivals, and Christianity has always cultivated hospitality and fellowship.

ELON LETTER.

The Southern Presbyterian Church has just published two comprehensive surveys on its work of Christian education.

The first of these surveys was made by Dr. W. O. Thompson, former president of Ohio State University, and relates to the theological seminaries and Assembly's Training School, at Richmond. Dr. Thompson found in the seminaries of the Church 424 students, of whom 114 are special students. In the training school at Richmond he found 152 students, of whom twenty-seven were special students.

Dr. Thompson looks forward to the time when theological seminaries will require four years of work, rather than three. Many will regard this as a mistaken expectation. They will rather believe that the seminary course should be shortened to two years by permitting undergraduates to pursue pre-professional courses in arts colleges, entitling them to a year's advanced standing in the seminary. There is a further defect in his survey, in that he does not recognize the obligation of the theological seminaries to prepare laymen and laywomen to become directors of religious education in local Churches.

The other survey was made by Dr. B. Warren Brown, of Chicago, and has to do with the colleges of the Church. This study is one of the most statesmanlike it has been my privilege to read. The Presbyterian Church has not had a denominational sense of responsibility for its institutions of learning, and consequently local influences have fastened upon the denomination, schools of various grades which should never have been founded and which the Church is not now able to support in any adequate way.

Like Topsy, the educational system of the Southern Presbyterian Church just "grewed," and consequently it may not actually be described as a system at all. The survey plainly states this, but does not fault any one in particular for the situation. These institutions grew up in a day when educational standards were not even dreamed of. Now that we have educational standards, the Church faces a crisis. This is true in not only the Presbyterian Church, but of all the Churches.

The survey recommends that the Church should face the new day in education with a comprehensive, economic and statesman-like program. This will necessitate the closing of some schools and merging of others. Haste is not recommended in this process, but thoughtful consideration, it is presumed, will evidently lead to this conclusion.

The colleges of the Church are all but two in debt, the total debt amounting to $3,105,151. One of the colleges is in debt to the amount of $723,696. The survey says: "No criticism of the schools is involved by this fact. The indictment lies against the general policy of the Church, which conducts the schools on the basis of successive crises rather than laying down policies which will avoid emergency financing." The report also shows that there are in Presbyterian four-year colleges 3,247 Presbyterian students, and in the Junior Colleges of the Church 726 Presbyterian students; a total of 3,973 Presbyterian students in colleges of the denomination. There are 12,570 Presbyterian students in State schools, distributed as follows: In State universities, 5,754; in A. M. colleges, 5,358; and in normal colleges, 1,458.

This means there are nearly four times as many Presbyterian boys and girls in State institutions as in the institutions of the Church. The survey is, therefore, absolutely right in assuming that a sensible educational policy and program for the Church must include a ministry on the part of the Church to this larger group of Presbyterian young people who are in State institutions.

In concluding this reference to these studies, I wish to quote a paragraph on page 41, which reads as follows:

"The real problem of college financing appears when comparison is made between assured income from students, supplemented by income from endowment, and the total budget necessary to run the respective institution. A great many business men fail to appreciate why colleges need endowment and outside support, because they have never measured this gap. An ordinary business sells its product for slightly more than it costs. The Church college undertakes to sell education for about one-half of what it costs. The balance is made up by income from endowment, occasional profit on a few departments, such as board, room, music, laundry, etc., and by contributions from the Church. There is no reason to suppose that education ever will be self-supporting or that it ever should. Its value to the Church and the community is recognized, independent of the service actually rendered to the individual student. Under these circumstances, the building of endowments and the continued support of the Church are the only factors which stand between the school and ultimate bankruptcy, however well it may be managed."

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

This institution is one of the American schools which believes in humanity; therefore, it labors to open its doors of culture to every boy and girl within its jurisdiction. The creed of our fathers was "Liberty and Equality for All"; we believe that all men have a right to be of as much use as they can to the world and prove our faith in the perfect ability of all who are willing to share their investment in order to give them an education. Our board and faculty consist of the best type of people. Our fees are absolutely the lowest for which honest work can be provided. Our standards rank very high, and we invite comparison with any similar institution. In these days it is a tremendous handicap to lack proper education for the intended line of work. To this end, we are making an appeal to our entire constituency throughout the Christian Church or the Southern Christian Convention and otherwise. Men of wealth are more and more devoting a part of that wealth to general good, and, as the government permits deductions from income tax not to exceed 15 per cent of the taxable basis, we are hoping that our friends will, where they desire to take advantage of that ruling, turn that amount or a part of it, over to Piedmont Junior College and also persuade their affluent friends to do likewise. Almost every minister within the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention could give five hundred dollars covering a period of ten years, or could raise from among their Churches, if they have charge of Church work, at least five hundred dollars. You will find printed in THE SUN a certificate with explanation following which will comply with the decision of the Southern Christian Convention and acquire sufficient funds for the running expenses of the institution for the next ten years. Let us hear your reaction.

Jesus' most precious promise to us: "And lo! I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

THE RUN COUNTS.

The run before the jump counts mightily. The Christian Church's intensive stewardship period begins November 1st and closes in December. The tremendous importance of the proper and effective observance of those full six weeks makes it highly necessary that very thorough preparation be made long before that time. Some Churches and pastors have already made their plans. Without very careful early preparation, the permanent results will be correspondingly unsatisfactory.

The General Convention saw the need and directed that "an aggressive, extensive and intensive stewardship campaign be promoted throughout our whole denomination until every last Church shall have felt the impact of the stewardship message." The present state of spiritual life in the Church also demands it; the character message it contains is vital to the hosts of young people entering our work; the tremendous need for lives and money for our responsibilities all demand that all our Churches plan for and observe educational period.

The program of instruction and enlistment should be strong and provide for every age in the Church and home—adults, youths and children. All should be instructed. It will not suffice to just reach a few in a given group.

Nearly all the Christian Endeavor topics this fall are on stewardship, and the Christian Endeavor leaders do not yet have the meaning of stewardship; the Sunday School lessons teem now with this theme, and thousands of Sunday School teachers do not know what it is all about. They are not practicing any of its principles. Any number of parents are neglecting the instruction of their children in this matter that is now engaging the attention of the Christian forces of the world. Dr. McConaughy, author of "Money the Acid Test," is carrying the stewardship message and program around the world; a great international conference was held in June in Glasgow, seeking to spiritualize Church finance; the United Stewardship Council is promoting it in America. The need is vital.

A real program for the whole Church and its homes for six weeks will not only revolutionize the whole spirit and method of Church finance in our Churches, but will enlist and re-enlist life and interest. The methods of Church finance have just as much spiritual power, and should contribute to the life of the Church as much worship power as any other part of Church life. Nothing less than six weeks will make an impression, and then only when the whole congregation is reached. The subject of Church finance can be changed from a disagreeable matter to a most pleasant and spiritual service.

Planning an adequate, interesting and worthwhile program should necessarily include several items. There should be a strong series of sermons. The message is one of the most prominent ones in the Scriptures. They teem with parables, direct instruction, illustrations, and the epistles are full of it. The people should know that it is a great spiritual theme of vital importance to life and character. The United Stewardship Council says, "Stewardship is primarily spiritual. Its great objective is character. It is the principle on which daily life must be organized in order to be fully Christian."

Then it must be studied by the people themselves under competent teachers. More stewardship books of the highest type have been issued in the last ten years than in a century before. They are fitted for the youngest child up to the oldest member of the flock.

There should be charts and mottoes to give their message to the eye. There is nothing like a stewardship reading contest to create enthusiasm and pack your Church and give a background to the message for the entire year. Competitive essays by high school boys and girls in your Sunday School will be most helpful. There is an abundance of literature, most interesting, and at a nominal price, which should be gotten into all homes.

The field of stewardship is vital, interesting, spiritual and in it are rich finds for your life. We shall be glad to render any aid possible to our Churches and pastors by suggestions of study books, material for worship periods, special literature, Church finance, and investment of talent and time.

T. E. WHITE, Ch'n.

Is there real war in the Democratic camp over Governor Smith and his famous Houston telegram? According to reports, there is but one newspaper in the State of Oklahoma supporting Governor Smith, and that a hitherto Republican journal. The Tulsa World, it is said, has this distinction, but does so with the soft pedal on, praising the Governor for his stand on modification of the dry laws. This situation is ominous in such a normally Democratic State as Oklahoma. Its newspapers have all bolted to Hoover. They refuse to incur the risk of being dubbed un-American and destroyers of the American Constitution, to say nothing of the moral issues involved. They have not turned Republican, but in the face of the issues which are of such vital interest to America and the world, involved in this presidential campaign, they cannot remain partisan. The Telescope congratulates them upon discerning the real issues at stake and their willingness to make these moral issues paramount.—Religious Telescope.

DISTRESS IN PORTO RICO.

As was stated in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN so graphically by Mrs. D. P. Barrett and in a "Note and Personal," the hurricane in Porto Rico wrought serious damage in the destruction of life and property. We do not know the full report, but sufficient has been given out to make us realize how terrible the tragedy is, how deep the distress, how far-reaching the need. The Red Cross is doing much to relieve the physical wants of the people, but, of course, will do nothing in the matter of reconstructing buildings and property. The destruction of our own property—chapels, parsonages and Churches—is between $5,000 and $10,000, and this reconstruction work must be done immediately. It cannot wait. We have no funds in the treasury with which to do this work, and to take any part of the regular funds would seriously cripple, if not wreck, the regular work. We had no margin to go upon before this calamity befell. We give herewith a few cuts which give some idea of the destruction wrought:

Somebody's Home.

Cut No. 1 shows somebody's home. Hundreds of houses were actually washed away by the floods. Those escaping the water were torn to pieces by the storm.

All She has Left.

Cut No. 2 shows all that the poor woman in the picture has left in the world. This woman

PORTO RICO NEEDS HELP.

The cyclonic announcements were sent all over the island on Wednesday, but that did not impress us much, because several times this summer others have been announced, but they passed over or went around us. But on Thursday morning, September 13th, about 9 o'clock, we heard such a clatter in the streets that we went to see what was the matter. Soon we learned from the school children, who were running and shouting "Cyclone is coming! Cyclone is coming! The barometer is dropping fast." Within half an hour all the schools were closed and the business men were busy fixing the storm windows and doors, in order to protect their properties from the storm. I went is a member of our Church at Playita. When Miss Adams took the picture, the good woman looked up with a smile in the midst of her wrecked home and household and said, "God will take care of me," and will her faith be in vain?

Chapel at Descalabrado.

Cut No. 3 shows all that is left of our beautiful little chapel at Descalabrado. This will have to be rebuilt before services can be held there. It serves an entire community as a place of worship.

Community Home of Miss Williams.

Cut No. 4 is the most distressing of all. This was the beautiful home which the late lamented Miss Williams occupied as a community center, where her industrial work was carried on and into which she gathered the community for many social and religious meetings. As the picture shows, it is almost a total wreck, and the pastor of our Salinas Church and his family who were living there were spared. They have no place of abode now until we rebuild.

Any donations that CHRISTIAN SUN readers wish to give may be sent direct to the Mission Secretary, J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., and they will be forwarded promptly. The need is very great.

to the Church to see if it was shut tight, and at 10:30 ran for home as fast as I could get there, for by that time I knew that the cyclone was coming upon us.

There are just two of us in the house—Miss Clingan, the Baptist missionary, and I. We live in one side of a double, cement house; therefore, we scarcely realized what was going on outside. Did the cyclone come? Yes, by 12 A. M. the tragical wind, with its destructive power, was blowing hard, and the dark clouds were sending the horrible storm over the beautiful fruited land of Porto Rico.

The dreadful and horrible storm raged on until 5 o'clock, when suddenly there was a lull, and

Mr. Caldwell, the United Brethren missionary, came up to see if we were safe. So he took us in his car to the plaza (park). I was just horrified to see such destruction could be done, for in our secure house I had no idea it was that destructive. The plaza looked as if some fiend had just tried to see how much of a mess he could make. We were assured that the strong storm had passed us, and that we should not fear; but a little while after we got home the heavy rain began to fall and the strong wind began to whistle a mournful and tragical warning. As I had never seen nor been in a cyclone before, I was very anxious to see what was going on on the outside. The street in the front of our house had turned to a big river, carrying big branches, leaves and boards, which had been blown down. What a pitiful sight! I feel helpless to describe the terrible destruction. On some streets the houses, animals, fruits and furniture were seen carried by the powerful water. The terrific storm raged on till next morning. With a strong hope and faith, I went to bed that night, knowing for sure that God was going to save me from the storm so that I could be of some help to the unfortunate ones. It was not until next morning and succeeding days that the full import of the disaster came to me.

All the days in a Catholic country carry the name of a saint, and this day of September 13th was "San Felipe's Day." They call the hurricane "San Felipe, Jr.," for fifty-three years ago, on the same day, there was another, which was not as destructive as this one. Friday morning the storm was over, with very little damage to us. One of the front gates was blown off, the plants in the yard looked very sick, and there were many branches of palms and leaves everywhere. The water had come in under doors and windows and even the roof leaked, so that we were rather wet, but that was all.

After breakfast we went out to the bridge over the Portuges River, and it was still very high, and saw the little houses along the river banks all full of water and mud; also many houses had been carried away. The people of Porto Rico were poor before, and now what is going to happen to them? The only hope that we have is first the kind care from above, and the help that comes to us from the other countries and the good folks like you.

Even while it was raining we kept on going to see the ruins; also tried to take some of the pictures of the ruins, but no kodak could show the terrible sight. We then went to our mission, where the Barretts live, and found them safe, but all the beautiful trees in the yard but one or two small ones were flat on the ground. The yard looked like a forest; also a big tree had fallen on the roof of the house and made a little damage. Mr. Barrett then took us all in the car and went down to Playa, where the sea had almost covered part of the little town. Many houses were destroyed, the ships washed away, and the people left homeless. The Methodist Church was smashed completely. Our Church in Ponce had escaped the storm, but we found our chapel at Clausell damaged a little; probably it is that I had seen so much of the terrible destruction that the damage of our little chapel did not seem so very great. Everywhere we found pitiful sights. There is no place on the island that did not suffer the effect of the cyclone. Hardly a fence was left standing anywhere, and even brick buildings were all in ruins. Of course, it means ruin to the farmer, for the sugar cane looks burned, and the coffee which was to be a bumper crop, with good prices is now a thing of the past. Bananas are completely ruined, and they scarcely had recover after the San Liborio hurricane two years ago in July, which was nothing in comparison to this one. Not until Sunday noon did we hear from the other side of the island. Some people arrived from other parts on foot to see how their relatives stood the tempest, but even they brought little news as to what came in later and is still coming.

Our own Churches and chapels suffered quite a bit. Not until a few days ago were we able to learn what had happened to our work in Santa Isabel, Salinas or the other points. Mr. Barrett had tried to go and see, but as the State road partly had been washed away and the raging rivers still high, he was not able to go across. But as things are improving and the new ways have been fixed, therefore Mr. and Mrs. Barrett and myself were able to go to our field as far as the Salinas River. The Church in Santa Isabel had lost five big windows, and all the beautiful fruit trees in the yard were destroyed. All during the storm our Churches served as a safety shelter for the unfortunate ones. The greatest loss that has come to our mission is at Salinas. Our Church has been damaged very badly, and the mission house where Rev. Pedro Roman, our country pastor, lives is practically ruined; and now he is living in the small part which is not badly damaged. His country work suffered a great deal. But the other house where Juan Romero, the city pastor, lives was not damaged.

We were not able to cross the river; therefore, we left the car on this side and crossed in a big truck and walked to the Church, which is not very far from the river. Indeed, Ponce did not suffer as compared to some other cities. Salinas looks like a doomed city, nothing more than a forest. The school-houses that escaped the storm now are serving as a shelter-place for the refugees, as most of the people are left without homes, food and clothing. Already sickness has started and the people are dying from hunger and lack of care. We were told that 700 people in Salinas and circles are homeless. What can we do? Surely no more than comforting words, and these they do not need as badly as food, clothing and shelter. I have daily averaged twenty people calling for help, besides those I see on the streets. I have been giving some of my own clothes, which I need, but as I see their needs are greater than mine I am glad to give all that I can. If any time we needed old clothes and other necessities for men, women and children it is right now, as cries come from every part of the island for help. If any of you have old clothes that you cannot use, please send them to me, and I can assure you they will be greatly appreciated.

I have not mentioned the death rate, as we do not know for sure the correct number lost, but it is estimated at about 600. Also it is said that 50 per cent of the population is homeless. The cyclone has destroyed more properties than lives, and the homeless people do not even find a shelter under the trees, as all that are left standing are dried; in fact, the whole island looks like it was destroyed by a big fire. We are not able to find any vegetation, and every thing is high now, and what it will be within a few months we know not.

I tremble to think of the results of this terrible disaster which has come to the island. It certainly does not look very pretty today, and when I first landed here I thought I had never seen any place as pretty as this island. As I have written before of the poverty of Porto Rico, what will it be now? Surely we need help now as never before. Our progress toward self-support is now set back many years. But God will take care of His own, so we are happy in that confidence. I am really surprised to see the resignation with which the stricken natives are taking their disaster. We need your prayers and help.

STEWARDSHIP STUDY TEXTBOOKS.

BY DR. W. H. DENISON.

Rev. Dennis D. Bouman, Lakemont, N. Y., asks, "Are there any outstanding stewardship books recommended for this year's study?" Miss Alice Morton, Lees Creek, Ohio, president of the Ohio Central Young People's Congress, says, "In November and December our Y. P. C. will stress stewardship. One of our goals is the reading of a stewardship book. What books do you suggest? We need more study of stewardship."

For adults: For a four weeks' class, one chapter a week, we recommend "Dealing Squarely with God," by Cushman (50 cents); for a six weeks' class, "The Call to Christian Stewardship," by Crawford (60 cents); for an eight weeks' class, "Money the Acid Test," by McConaughy (50 cents). Quite a number of our Churches have used this, but if not, we urge it. Another for an eight weeks' course is "The Larger Stewardship," by Cook (25 cents).

For young people: "Stewardship in the Life of Youth," five chapters, by Williamson Wallace (50 cents); "The Way to the Best," by Anderson, five chapters (25 cents); "Life as a Stewardship," by Morrill, five chapters (25 cents).

For women: The Woman's Board is recommending the study of that splendid book, "Stewardship in the Life of Women," by Miss Wallace, six chapters, for November (cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents).

For devotional use: "The Message of Stewardship," by Cushman ($1.00), is splendid for family or midweek devotional services.

If any will write this office seeking information for special needs, or particular subjects, we shall be glad to make recommendations. We have already sent to all our active pastors a list of "best books on Christian stewardship," those on the meaning and scope of the message of Christian stewardship, and those bearing especially on the application of the principles and teachings of stewardship regarding money or substance. If all our Churches will conduct real stewardship classes for all ages of the congregation, they will be agreeably surprised at the spiritual and financial results. We hope every Church will make a real study of Christian stewardship apart from the raising of funds. Order textbook without delay, so as to be ready to begin November 1st.

BRO. FLOWERS' WORK.

A very good report comes from sections of Franklin County with reference to the work that Prof. A. R. Flowers has been doing among the young people. He did not have time to visit several Churches from which he had received invitations. He is certainly making himself a great power for good in his efforts for a greater unity among the people who compose the membership of the different Christian brotherhoods—a thing which has been too long neglected already.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson III—October 21, 1928.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

GOLDEN TEXT: "First, they gave their own selves to the Lord."—2 Cor. 8:5.

LESSON: 2 Cor. 8:1-9:15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalms 95:1-7a.

A steward was a man who had charge of his master's affairs and who was accountable to his master. The fundamental fact in stewardship was the fact that the steward did not own what he administered. He was simply handling for another what belonged to another. For all that was entrusted into his hands, he had to give an account.

When one thinks through things he can see why the Bible teaches the principle of stewardship. All that a man has and is, is simply something to be held in stewardship. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof. The silver and the gold are mine, saith Jehovah, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. It is the Lord God who giveth thee the power to get wealth. Ye are not your own." These and many other similar quotations could be given to show that God is the owner of all things; man is simply the steward. And the principle of being held accountable for our talents, our influence, our time, our money, our lives, all that we have and are holds true here just as it held true in the case of a steward of an Oriental household. Some time, somewhere we shall all hear the words of the Judge of all the earth, "Render an account of thy stewardship." There is nothing more sorely needed in our modern Church life than a recognition of the principle of stewardship and the practice of that principle of stewardship. In this particular lesson Paul is discussing Christian stewardship from the standpoint of material things, of money.

"How that in much proof of affliction the abundance of their joy and deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality. For according to their power, I bear witness, and beyond their power they gave of their own accord." Out of affliction, out of poverty, these Macedonian Churches had given. And they had given joyfully and of their own accord. In fact, their poverty had been so real that Paul evidently had not felt that they could give anything, but they wanted to have a part in this work and they had given, and given beyond what they really were able to give. In so many cases it is thus. If the public could have access to the treasurer's book of the average Church, or the books of the departments of the Churches, it would find there the strange fact that many of the most liberal givers to all Church enterprises are not those who have much of this world's goods, but those who are hard-working, poor people. Furthermore, many of those who have had most trouble and most affliction are often the most generous and most joyful givers. Alas! that those who often have most are so many times comparatively small givers.

"But, first of all, they gave their own selves to the Lord." There was the secret of it all. These people gave themselves to the Lord and then it was not so hard for them to give of their means to the Lord. After all, money is a pretty good test of consecration. It is idle talk for a man to say that he loves God when he is niggardly in his giving. "See that ye abound in this grace also." The grace of giving is just as important as any other grace. Paul was just as much concerned that the members of the Corinthian Church had the grace of giving as he was that they had faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and earnestness, and love.

"But as proving, through the earnestness of others, the sincerity also of your love. There are other ways of proving the sincerity of a man's love to God, but certainly one of the surest ways is to measure it by his giving. Some people would deny this because it hits them at a very sore spot. Personally the writer believes that the spirit of giving is an integral and fundamental element of the true Christian life. It is the root from which grow so many other Christian virtues.

"Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye, through His poverty, might become rich." Here, as elsewhere, Christ is our example. Whatever else might be said about it, one thing is certain—one cannot be Christ-like unless one has the spirit of giving. And when reference is made to giving, it is not the giving that a man exemplifies when he gives twenty-five cents a week to the Church and spends that much a day for smokes or soft drinks, or that spends each Sunday more for mere pleasure gas than one gives in an entire month to the kingdom enterprises.

"He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap, and he shall reap accordingly as he has sown. God is not retaliatory, and it is not because He is petty that the man who sows sparingly shall reap sparingly. It is simply a matter of natural law. The man whose nature is selfish and niggardly cannot hope to reap except in terms and measure of what he has sown.

"Not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver." Many people give, but they give in a grudging way. One is loath to accept the gifts of some because of the spirit in which they are given. Better a small gift from a whole-hearted, cheerful giver, than a large sum from a penurious, stingy, grudging giver, so far as the man is concerned. "For God loveth a cheerful giver." The writer had occasion some time ago to look up the Greek word here translated cheerful, and to his surprise and delight he found that it is the word "hilaros," from which we get our word hilarious. God loveth a hilarious giver. That is one of the most suggestive terms imaginable. God loves people who give in the spirit that corresponds to what we call hilarity. All of us had better pray for more of the spirit of true giving.

"Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift." We ought to love Him because He first loved us and gave Himself for us.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

TOPIC: "How Does Law Increase Freedom?"—Rom. 13:1-8.

Some Bible Hints.

Without law we should be at the mercy of evil men, and freedom would vanish from the earth (v. 3).

Law increases freedom because it makes an appeal to conscience, which is not yet quite dead (v. 5).

The taxes we pay are part of the price of freedom, enabling the government to give us protection (v. 6).

Freedom is not license, removal of all restraint. It is liberty of action that respects similar liberty in others (v. 2).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Freedom is not liberty to do as we please. That would be anarchy, and we should then find that we had no freedom except what stronger persons allowed us.

Man is created with a sense of order. As soon as men begin to live together they set up rules and regulations to govern their actions. This is instinctive and the only practical thing to do.

Law today gains its force from the consent of the governed. We agree beforehand that the will of the majority shall prevail. If we did not, life would be impossible.

The great body of the people are law-abiding. Criminals are in the minority, although they make a great noise. Rigorous law alone protects the decent people.

A Few Illustrations.

When the police struck work in Boston some years ago, in an hour's time the city was in an uproar with criminals rampant. Only the return of law and its enforcement brought liberty and peace.

If regard for law is destroyed by laughing at prohibition, then we shall lose the protection of all law. Smash one law and the whole structure topples.

When your collie is young you need a leash to restrain it. Later it will walk at your heel without a leash, because it loves you. Laws, at first, for some people, are leashes. Later they do not need restraint.

The savage dare not go far afield, alone. He is likely to be killed by his enemies. But law, order, police arrive, and he wanders at his sweet will. Law increases freedom.

To Think About.

How do the rules of a game increase freedom? What freedom should we lose if there were no law?

How can we create respect for law?

AN INTRODUCTION.

This article is intended to tell "who," and "why." If you want to know, you may read the rest of the article; but if you do not read it the writer will never know the difference.

The writer is not a scholar whose learning will enlighten the wise, nor a man of leisure whose ready pen can charm with fitting phrases. He is the busy pastor of three Virginia Churches who loves the Lord and people and who tries to do his duty the best he knows it.

By vote of the Southern Christian Convention and the Board of Christian Education of that Convention, he is now the chairman of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Christian Convention—much to his regret.

That is the "who."

It was the judgment of the board that the chairman should use part of this page each week to help the hungry to find what they need in Christian education. That is "why" he is writing. It is not because he wants to "break into print" or to tell what he knows, or to take your time. The Church, through its properly constituted officials, has said "write," and write he must!

You may, therefore, look on this page next week (if you wish) for some little bit of "news" or something else, and credit all mistakes to Waverly, Va.

them, ask them what it was all about—just to see what they say. F. C. L.

WORSHIP PROGRAM.

(This program was prepared by Miss Lillie Fowler and used in the Mebane Church.)

Squaring Life with Belief.

Prelude: "Have Thine Own Way, Lord."

Call to worship: "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

Response: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me."

Prayer: Thanking God for our blessings in being given the knowledge of Christianity and the privileges it brings. Asking that we may realize the responsibility of living consistently with that knowledge, and that Christ may be so evident on our lives that others may be drawn to Him.

Story: "The Old Man with the Oil Can."

There is a story of an old man who carried a little can of oil with him wherever he went, and if he passed through a door that squeaked he poured a little oil in its hinges. If a gate was hard to open, he oiled the latch. And thus he passed through life lubricating all the hard places and making it easier for those who came after him. People called him eccentric, and queer, and cranky, and odd, and even harder names.

But the old man went steadily on refilling his can of oil when it became empty, and oiled the hard places he found. The old man did not wait until he found a creaky door or a rusty hinge and then go home and get the oil can; he carried it with him.

Application.

There are many lives that creak and grate harshly as they live day by day. Nothing goes right with them, and they need lubricating with the oil of kindness, gentleness and thoughtfulness.

Have you a can of oil with you? Don't forget it. Be ready with your oil of helpfulness in the early morning to the one nearest you. It may lubricate the whole day for him. The oil of good cheer to the down-hearted one—how much it means! The word of courage to the despairing—speak it!

Our lives touch others but once perhaps on the road of life, and then maybe our ways diverge, never to meet again. Carry your little can of oil. The oil of kindness has worn the sharp edges off the redeeming grace of our Saviour. Try your sweet, soft voice and thoughtful deeds. No life is so bad but it has its spark of good. Carry your can of oil.

Silent prayer, while "Others" is sung.

March to class by music, "Ancient of Days."

Make your opening Sunday School programs as worshipful as possible.

PATTIE L. COGHILL.

"CITIZENSHIP SUNDAY."

Sunday, October 28th, has been named by the campaign committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America as "Good Citizenship Sunday." On that day all pastors, Sunday School superintendents and other Church leaders and temperance workers are urged to take part in a nation-wide concerted discussion of the principles of good citizenship. They are asked to emphasize the importance of voting by good citizens to insure good government, and to present the vital facts about the great moral question of prohibition to enable good citizens to vote intelligently on this issue.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

WHAT DOES IT LOOK LIKE?

"By their fruits ye shall know them."—Matt. 7:16.

After one has toiled all the year, what does his crop look like? When you inspect the apple orchard, does it look like crab apples? To contemplate Christ's illustration of this in the fifteenth chapter of John, work out the analysis—a branch is a prolongation of the tree itself. It resembles the tree; its function is the same as the tree's; it is animated by the same life forces, and it acts toward the same ends. It does the work of the tree.

If we are the branches of God in the world, how much of us functions like Him? how much of His life animates our lives? how much of us is endeavoring to bring to pass His will? how much of His work are we doing?

Prayer.—One Lord and one God, let Thy grace sanctify us wholly and entirely. Amen.

TUESDAY.

SIN OF ANXIETY.

"Be not anxious for the morrow, for the morrow will be anxious for itself."—Matt. 6:34.

Ruskin said, "It is a good rule to sojourn in every place as if you meant to spend your life there, never omitting an opportunity of doing kindness or speaking a true word, or making a friend." And some one else has said, "Give yourself to laziness today, and it will steal tomorrow from you." Forethought means preparedness; no thought means unpreparedness, but it warns us against the deadly effect of over-anxiety and absorbing care as the supreme need. To be absorbed with all genius will not rob tomorrow of its own problems and difficulties, but it will rob the brain of its clearness, the heart of its courage, prayer of its faith, and the soul of its assurances.

Prayer.—Preserve us, O God, from continuance of sin. Teach us, O Holy Spirit, the saving grace of doing today well. Cleanse our hearts and prepare us each day for a better day to come. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

DISTRUST.

"Be not anxious for the morrow, for the morrow will be anxious for itself."—Matt. 6:34.

To be overanxious about the future builds expectancy upon our own enguinity. That spells disappointment. Disappointment means distrust, and we doubt the goodness of God. The psalmist, in his disappointment, cried, "Hath God forgotten to be gracious? Hath He shut up His tender mercies?" Jesus bids us to "Seek first the kingdom of God" and all else will be added unto us. It also teaches us that "The Lord knoweth what things we have need of, therefore cast all your care upon Him." "If He so clothes the grass of the field . . . shall He not much more clothe you?" "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace."

The question, then, is not where will you spend eternity? but how will you spend now? Pope, Byron, Burns, Shelley, Napoleon, and Nero were men who got the wrong emphasis on "the now" of life, and their splendid lives came with a crash to an unglorious end.

An humble soul carrying the outlines of Christ in his life, giving happiness to others, is better than the most luxurious existence.

If We Had but a Day.

We would fill the hours with sweetest things

If we had but a day;

We would drink alone at the purest springs

In our upward way;

We would love with a lifetime's love in an hour,

If the hours were few;

We would pray not for dreams, but fresher power

To be and to do.

We would waste no moments in weak regret

If the day were but one;

If what we remember and what we regret

Went out with the sun;

We should be from our clamorous selves set free

To work and to pray;

And to be what the Father would have us be,

If we had but a day.

THURSDAY.

THE LIFE THAT NOW IS.

"Godliness is profitable for all things, having promise of life which now is, and of that which is to come."—1 Tim. 4:8.

Only an enhanced sense of the value of the present life can make its continuance seem worth while. Jesus makes possible the enhanced sense of value. If life has no more to offer than what we see in many people today, why should we wish for its continuance? But if life may become for us what it was for Jesus and those who have followed Him most closely, then it is the one thing to be desired. The life of Jesus makes possible this enhanced value of life by revealing to us capacities in ourselves which require another life for fulfillment.

Prayer.—Our Father, anoint us with Thy heavenly grace in every-day life or that every thought, and work, and word may be to Thy glory. Amen.

FRIDAY.

OUR DEPENDENCE UPON GOD.

"I am the vine, ye are the branches . . . Apart from me ye can do nothing."—Jno. 15:5.

In this age of the material rapid progress, advancing science, riches and the getting of wealth, we are disposed naturally to feel very independent and to forget God. Humanity needs some vital force to remind it that without Him we can do nothing.

The Hawaiian Isles are very independent, but they are out of touch with everything, and the inhabitants live out of tin cans. Humanity is very independent of the sun, but try to make a crop without the sun. God says, if I did not vaporize the sea to make rain for the earth, your waterpower would be a dry creek. How much are you dependent upon God for what you do every day?

Prayer.—Our Father, give us Thy Holy Spirit, which Thou has promised to them that ask Thee, that we may honor Thee in our every-day life. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THINK.

"Commune with your own heart."—Psa. 4:4.

"Think on these things."—Phil. 4:8.

Thoughtfulness and thoughtlessness—which do I like?

Thoughtfulness leads us to be what God intended us to be, for it "is the measure of life."

"Fine thoughts are wealth,

For the right of which

Men are and ought to be accountable:

If not to Thee, to those they influence."

Thoughtlessness tears down all that thoughtfulness may build up.

"Evil is wrought by want of thought

As well as want of heart."—Hood.

Humanity is suffering thousands of difficulties, sorrows and endless expense because of thoughtlessness.

She spent a long time and worked hard to prepare that dinner. You thought it fine, but did you say so? No. You gulped it, got up and settled down in a paper while she sadly continued her work in the dish-pan. How much better to have said, "Gee! Flo, what a good dinner! I'll bet the President has no better!" and then helped with the dish-pan. Think!

"Pride, of all others the most dangerous thought, Proceeds from want of sense, or want of thought. The man who labors and digests things most Will be most apt to despond than boast."

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, word of life, draw us to Thee and to the Father. We are sinful and unclean, but cleanse Thou us wholly by Thy blood, and we will praise Thee forever. Amen.

SUNDAY.

HOW MUCH POWER?

"Abide in Me."—John 15:4.

How hard is it to live so as to be known as a Christian? We are told that it takes one hundred pounds to the square inch of nature's force to produce a rose; that it takes four hundred and fifty pounds to the square inch to move a cylinder of a Corliss engine. It doesn't take much of a man to be a Christian, but it takes all of him. How much of you belongs to Jesus? The object of life is not to live, but bear fruit.

Prayer.—Lord, give us faith to feel Thy kindly spirit in our lives. Give unto us Thy grace daily, that we may love Thee with all of our power. Amen.

HOW A HUNTER BECAME A SOWER.

By WM. H. RICHIE.

They were singing, "O 'Tis a Great Change for Me" with splendid enthusiasm. There were only about thirty adults and children present in the little school-house, but the Lord Jesus was "in the midst of them," by the Holy Spirit; and I could not but think what a change had indeed been wrought in the lives of these people. The superintendent, a giant of a lumber-jack, had said to me before the Sunday School started: "None in this community belonged to the Lord before Mr. K. came to us last fall." And now there were thirty or more who professed loyalty to Jesus Christ. It all came about this way.

At the State Sabbath School convention last October, we had given Mr. K. some samples of our Scriptures, with explanation as to how we would gladly furnish others for rural schools. When on a hunting trip up in the big hills of Potter County, Penn., Mr. K. had found there was no Sunday School for this game preserve community. He found eleven homes that did not have and never had had a Bible, and a number of young people less than twenty years old who had never heard a public prayer or service of any kind. So they organized a Sunday School and gospels were given out to all who agreed to read them through and thus earn their own Testaments. Along with his hunting for deer, he became a sower of "the seed, which is the Word of God."

So this was why we wanted to visit this school this summer and see with our own eyes what a change had been made in that little community of a dozen houses. Before the Sunday School hour arrived we called at the home of an Italian family and encouraged the mother to send the

Dear Friends:

This week is the smallest financial report we have had in a long time. We truly hope our friends who love little children will remember us in this work. With one hundred and fifteen to buy shoes for, it takes money.

Then, too, begin to think about our special Thanksgiving offering this coming Thanksgiving. We want every Church to do its best this year. We need it.

little boy as well as the twelve-year-old girl. A few leaflets and Scripture portions were left with them. As school opened they were both on hand. And as the writer was speaking of Testaments being available to any, little Margaret of the Italian home spoke up and said she'd lost the Testament which she had earned; "but," she said, "I've been praying the Lord to send me another." So we assured her that this afternoon her prayer would be answered, as we had a Testament which we were sure the Lord wanted us to give to her. I think she'll not lose this one.

I wish you could have heard them sing, "I am so Glad that Jesus Loves Me." There was a real joy in the singing, and the light of Christ was in the face of the big lumberman as he led them. And you should have seen the hands go up when the school was asked (for our benefit) how many were thankful for what the beginning of the Sunday School had meant to them—the hands of the youngest to the oldest.

As we think of what Jesus said about there being joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, does it not gladden our hearts to hear of such a harvest coming from the sowing of the good seed of gift gospels and Testaments in soil so eager to receive it? It is in such rural sections that the American Scripture Gift Mission is especially interested. To reach the young people not reached by other agencies with attractive, illustrated Scriptures is the chief purpose of this mission. Without endowment, but dependent upon voluntary gifts, it covets the prayerful co-operation of all Christians.

HOPEWELL.

"He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay His hand or say unto Him, What doest Thou?"—Dan. 4:35.

The Christian Church at Hopewell, Va., is closing its first year of work as a member of the Eastern Virginia Conference. It is a great privilege to feel that we are a part of such a great organization, even though we are so small and weak and unlearned; yet God has promised that if we lack, He will give to all liberally when we ask.

On Sunday night, September 30th, the fourth quarterly conference was held after the evening service. The reports from the different organizations were inspiring and showed that they were busy in the work of the Church. With a few exceptions, the same officers of the various organizations were re-elected for the coming year and were endorsed by the Church.

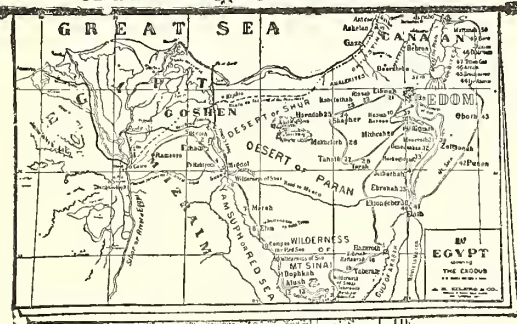

Within the past few weeks a young people's branch of the Missionary Society was organized, with nineteen members. They will take up the study of the textbook, "Meet Your United States," in the near future.

We have a fine class of young men in our Sunday School, and they delight in having the largest offering of any class in the school.

Our present pastor, Rev. D. D. Nash, closes his pastorate with us the 1st of November. He is young in the pastoral work, yet has a zeal for Christ and lost humanity which puts a zest into his sermons that uplifts and inspires to a greater service for the Master. He has done a good work here, and we pray God that He may open the door for Rev. Nash where he may continue in the work he loves, and may his work be blessed with the salvation of many souls. A call was sent to Rev. T. N. Lowe, of Portsmouth, Va., to take up the pastorate here, but through the overruling providence of God the call was declined. But we are not discouraged, for we believe that God will provide a pastor for us who will lead us through the coming year into a closer fellowship with our Lord and a greater service for Him. We need your prayers.

SENIORS ATTEND CHURCH.

"Unexpectedly large majorities" of men and women in American colleges attend Church, according to the report of an inquiry into the moral and religious ideas of college students, conducted by the Institute of Social and Religious Research, 370 Seventh Avenue, New York City, and just published under the title "Undergraduates." The authors are R. H. Edwards, J. M. Artman and Galen M. Fisher.

As one phase of this inquiry questionnaires were filled out by a large number of seniors, men and women, scattered through twenty-three colleges and universities. Eighty-three per cent of the men and 91 per cent of the women declared that they attended Church either regularly or occasionally, while "a majority of both men and women found religion a larger force in every-day experience" by their senior year than they had when they entered college. Large majorities of both men (80 per cent) and women (90 per cent) also stated that they regarded the life of Jesus as setting the ethical standard for modern life, and similar majorities "considered the teachings of Jesus to be practical in regard to such matters as war and industrial relations in modern society."

Regarding the effect of a college career upon belief in the Bible, the authors say: "The largest groups were those who changed from a belief in the literal interpretation to a belief in the Bible as historical, allegorical or ethical (men 31 per cent; women 38 per cent). The decided majority of both men and women, therefore, held to what may be termed the historical view; that is, that the Bible presents a satisfactory working code of ethics, as well as a beautiful piece of literature and a history of significance, though not entirely authentic. Many made the definite statement that their study of science had caused them to revise their ideas as to the literal truth of the Bible, but they nevertheless considered it the foundation-stone of right living and practical religion."

Nevertheless, of the seniors answering the question, "only 7 per cent of either men or women read it (the Bible) regularly; 39 per cent of the men and 47 per cent of the women read it occasionally, and the rest who answered read it seldom or never."

"We weary watching wave on wave, and yet the tide heaves onward;
We build like corals grave on grave, but have a pathway sunward.
We're beaten back in many a fray, and yet great strength we borrow,
And where the vanguard rests today, the rear may camp tomorrow."

CHAPTER 23.

THEN spake Jē'sus to the multitude, and to his disciples,

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

THOMAS.

Mrs. Irene Gaster Thomas was born July 16, 1893, and died August 30, 1928, by her side administering whatever comforts that were humanly possible.

She was a good woman and a member of Shallow Well Christian Church, of which her husband is a deacon. Her patience and spiritual peace during extreme physical suffering was remarkable. The summons found her abundantly prepared and consciously waiting.

The Church auditorium was too small to accommodate all who attended her funeral. This was one evidence of the high esteem in which she was held and the community-wide sympathy for the bereaved.

1. That our Father does all things for the best.

2. Bro. King was a great Christian worker, who always had a helping hand for building up God's kingdom.

3. We extend to the family our sympathy and ask our Heavenly Father to keep each one ready to join him in heaven. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, and one be spread on the minutes of the Church.

DOFFLEMYER.

Ruby Louise Dofflemyer, wife of Oscar Dofflemyer, passed to her reward Sunday, September 16th, aged 20 years. She had been a devoted and consistent member of Bethel Christian Church for five years. She was an affectionate wife, a devoted mother, a good neighbor and a friend to all. The passing of such a life is a great loss to the community.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer from the New Bethel Church, in the presence of a large congregation and amidst a wealth of floral offerings expressing the sympathy and esteem of a host of friends. The remains were laid to rest in the nearby community cemetery. Left to mourn her departure are her husband, a ten-month-old daughter and two sisters. May God bless and comfort the bereaved.

Welch in 1876, and to this union was born eleven children—seven living and four dead. Bro. Hearn was the oldest deacon in his Church, and was a good Christian man. The Church will greatly miss him. He leaves to mourn his going his wife and seven children, and several grandchildren as well as many friends. Wakefield, Va.

HINES.

Inasmuch as the Lord, in His all-wise power, has seen fit to take away from our midst in Sunday School and Church, on August 4, 1928, our friend and brother, R. E. Hines, we keenly feel our loss in the departure of such a friend. His death was indeed a shock to the town and community, and our hearts fill to an overflow as we think that it had to be. The memory of him as a devoted husband and a kind friend will long remain with us. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we humbly submit to God's will, remembering that He doeth all things well.

2. That we extend to his devoted wife, loved ones and friends, our heartfelt sympathy, that God's richest blessings might abide with them and that they might find shelter within His fold.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy recorded in the minutes of the Ladies' Aid Society of Wakefield Christian Church.

INSTRUCTION FOR THE DEAF.—

A bulletin from the Bureau of Education, Statistical Division, states that there was a total enrollment of 17,582 pupils in schools for the deaf in the United States during the school-year 1926-27. There was a total of 2,303 instructors in these schools in that year, according to the report, an increase of 21 per cent, or 394 teachers, over the number reported in 1922. The report includes statistics of 168 schools for the deaf.

NEGRO EDUCATION IN N. C.—

It may be of interest to note that North Carolina is now spending about four million dollars a year in an effort to provide adequate educational facilities for negro youth. This is more than the State spent for the education of both white and colored in any year previous to 1910. North Carolina's interest and confidence in her negro citizenry is evidenced by this educational outlay. The splendid negro citizenry that is being developed in North Carolina bears evidence to the fact that the confidence is not being betrayed.

PRACTICING WITHOUT PROFESSING.—

Mahatma Gandhi, one of the most influential men in modern India, who does not profess to be a Christian, but who tries to live according to the teachings of Christ, writes as follows: "I beg of the people of the East not to mix up with the teaching of Christ the current religion of modern civilization. . . . Of a truth I say unto you, young men, drink deep from the spring of the Sermon on the Mount of Olives, for the precepts of Christ are not for His disciples alone, but for you and for me. There have been many times when I did not know which way to turn. But I have gone to the Bible, and particularly the New Testament, and have drawn strength from its messages."

A SWORD OF THE INQUISITION.—

A Toledo steel sword, made in Spain in 1792 and which first saw action during the Spanish Inquisition, has been presented to Durant Masonic Lodge, No. 45, Oklahoma, by Dr. J. C. Muerman, P. G. M., director of rural school education at the Southeastern State Teachers' College. The sword was presented to the seventh Spanish regiment of infantry and saw service in the reign of Charles IV, in the campaign in Southern Europe. It was taken to the Philippines in 1800 by this regiment, and was carried by different members of the Jaurez family, officers and always loyal to the Spanish government. The sword was last worn by Don Frances, just before the American occupation of the islands in 1898. In 1901 Captain Jaurez gave the sword to Dr. Muerman, who brought it back to America when he returned last year.

DR. CADMAN IS RADIO PASTOR.—

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, president of the Federal Council of Churches and pastor of Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., is to broadcast weekly sermons through the National Broadcasting Company. For some time past, Dr. Cadman has been delivering Sunday afternoon addresses, during the winter months, at the Bedford branch of the Y. M. C. A. Those addresses were broadcast by station WJZ, New York, and proved so popular that arrangements have been made for Dr. Cadman to reach a larger radio audience by broadcasting from the National Company, with its hook-up of forty stations, which will carry Dr. Cadman's messages all over the nation. Dr. Cadman will continue as pastor of the Central Congregational Church. The newspapers in announcing this larger venture in religious broadcasting, stated that Dr. Cadman was to receive an annual salary of $25,000, but an official announcement states that this was a mistake. The $25,000, which is to be contributed by a non-sectarian advisory committee, is to defray the incidental expenses in connection with the program, such as providing an orchestra and singers. The Christian Century, in commenting upon this new feature provided for the radio public, referred to Dr. Cadman as having "a mind that is probably better informed on more subjects than any other mind in the American ministry."

EVANGELISM IN CHICAGO.—

Chicago has been receiving a great deal of undesirable publicity on account of its robberies, murders, and gang warfares. But there are good people in Chicago, thousands of them, and as is the case in any great city these good people are going about their business and doing nothing to make the front pages of the great dailies. Just now, however, the religious world has occasion to be especially interested in what is going on in Chicago. Under the auspices of the evangelistic committee of the Church Federation, the Churches of the city are undertaking a city-wide program of visitation evangelism. The campaign is to be under the personal supervision of Dr. A. Earl Kernahan, perhaps the foremost authority in the world on visitation evangelism. There has been a conviction in the minds of Church leaders for a number of years that the Church's program of mass evangelism leaves a great deal to be desired. In looking for other methods to either take the place of or to supplement the work of mass evangelism, there has been developed a system of personal or visitation evangelism. The basic idea of this system is that consecrated and trained visitors go into the homes of the people, and there present the claims of Christ's gospel and seek to lead individuals to a definite acceptance of Christ and commitment to Christ's program. Dr. Kernahan has written a book, "Visitation Evangelism," which has had a wide reading among religious workers. Many Churches have adopted this type of evangelistic effort, or a modification of this plan, but so far as we have seen this is the first time the evangelistic Churches of a great city have attempted a program of visitation evangelism designed to reach the entire city. Eight hundred ministers recently gathered at the Chicago Temple to consider plans for the campaign. The religious world will watch the undertaking with considerable interest.
