At Winnipeg there was recently held the General Council of the United Church of Canada. This was the fourth annual gathering of the representatives of the Churches which now comprise the United States. Four hundred and fifty ministers and laymen elected by the various constituent groups comprised the council. At a time when churchmen everywhere are centering their thought upon the problem of Church unity, this actual undertaking to perfect the union of so large and varied a section of Protestant Christendom by our Canadian brethren is of momentous interest. The way in which the United Church has met all problems and difficulties of the union to date, gives promise of ever-increasing success for the union. The action of the council concerning the liquor question and the ordination of women indicate both the far-sighted policy and the practical common sense which the council brought to bear upon its problems. Ernest Thomas, in reporting the council for the Christian Century, writes:

"The liquor situation was also studied with great care, and it was found that the supreme need of our time is the re-establishment of right personal attitudes toward indulgence; that concentration of attention on political action and laws had allowed a generation to grow up without informed conviction to guide their own personal responses to alcoholic beverages. The main attention of the Church, therefore, will be for the next few years directed to create a body of young citizens who will bring into play robust, informed convictions, such as will inhibit resort to alcohol. The proposal to ordain women to the ministry had been sent down to presbyteries for consideration, and this evoked three almost equal bodies of opinion. (1) Let us proceed at once to ordain them; (2) let us resist any further growth of this feminism; and (3) let us affirm our belief that there exists no bar in religion or reason to such ordination, but delay action until the Church has been led to something like a preponderant judgment in favor of this policy. The council's committee included the protagonists on both sides, but reached unanimity on the third policy. In nothing did the fine spirit of the council so triumph as in this mastery of strong personal preference and prejudice by the spirit of the whole."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. C. E. Gerringer was in Richmond last week and made a brief call at THE SUN office.

Prof. Ross Ensinger, son of Dr. F. P. Ensinger, is professor of religious education in Elon this fall. He is also teaching a class in Bible. He and his wife have united with the Elon College Christian Church.

The quarterly conference of First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., was held last week, and W. J. Stephenson and J. H. Newman were elected delegates to the Eastern Virginia Conference, which meets with the Christian Temple, Norfolk, October 31st.

Announcement is made that the secretary of the National Council of Congregational Churches, Dr. C. B. Burton, and the moderator of the national council, Dr. Ozoro S. Davis, will both visit Elon College during the fall semester. The college is always glad to welcome such distinguished visitors.

Since the opening of the college, twenty members have been received into the fellowship of the College Church. At practically every Sunday morning service Dr. Alexander receives members into the Church. This type of pastoral evangelism is particularly effective in a college community.

Rev. A. B. Mann, 2 Curran Avenue, LaGrange, Ga., a licentiate of the Georgia and Alabama Conference, has served successfully as pastor of shady Grove Church the past year and is now anxious for work for full time. Bro. Mann is willing to move, with his family, to any Church or Conference wishing his services.

Rev. Albert Godley, Tenaflly, N. J., whose heart is always touched by the need of humanity, writes: "I am so sorry of the great disaster in Porto Rico. I can do but little, but gladly give of what I have. Enclosed find $1.00. May thousands help who can spare more. I have been praying for our work there and the many in need."

The Georgia and Alabama Conference organized a Woman's Mission Board last Thursday, thus completing all the Conferences in this respect of the Southern Convention. Mrs. J. F. Roquemore, Box 313 Lanett, Ala., is president of the board, and Miss Beatrice Davis, 516 South Greenwood Street, LaGrange, Ga., is secretary.

Dr. E. A. King, of Miami Beach, Fla., a trustee of Atlanta Theological Seminary and of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., was a recent visitor to Elon. He was particularly interested in the Christian Education Building, which is to be the home of the Atlanta Seminary. He felt that the building would make a most suitable home for this institution.

Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary of the Board of Christian Education, is in attendance on the Conference in Georgia and Alabama for the next two weeks. She is also to hold institutes in this section of our Church. Miss Coghill is doing a fine work as field secretary. THE SUN's editor and Superintendent Charles D. Johnston are attending the Georgia and Alabama Conference at Spring Hill Church, near Roanoke, this week.

The first minister to have a nation-wide "hook-up" for a weekly message is Dr. S. Parke Cadman, president of Federal Council of Churches. Every Sunday afternoon, Dr. Cadman is to give his message to the American people over the radio. He has been heretofore heard over individual stations for many years, but this is the first time that any minister has had opportunity for so wide a hearing.

There are fifteen ministerial students in Elon College this year, and by a strange coincidence there are also fifteen ministerial students in Franklinton Christian College, which prepares the leadership for our colored people just as Elon does for the white people of the South. In this connection it is worthy of note that more than ten per cent of the graduates of Elon College have entered the ministry. Query: What would the Christian Church do for leadership if it had not been for Elon College?

The General Board of the General Convention of the Christian Church is in session in Dayton, Ohio, this week. The session began on October 16th and will conclude, presumably, on the 19th. There are fifty members of this General Board. They certainly put in a strenuous week of work at these annual sessions. Our Southern Christian Convention is represented in this board by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. S. L. Beougher, and Dr. W. A. Harper.

The women are happy to persist in efforts for the Church and their Lord, and are willing to put together continuously their small offerings until they count in a great way. Men are not thus minded and work only at large, large results immediately. This tells why women accomplish so much for the Church and the Lord. Mrs. W. R. Sellars, who has been treasurer of our North Carolina Woman's Board for ten years, said at the recent session of the Conference that she had collected and paid out during that period $33,422.06, this amount being paid in through small channels—nickels, dimes, quarters.

Rev. H. C. Caviness, Portsmouth, was a recent visitor at the editorial office. Bro. Caviness reports his Church much edified and spiritually uplifted by the recent evangelistic services conducted by Dr. Leon Tucker and his associates. It was a great meeting and attracted larger audiences than the auditorium could accommodate. The Church was much revived, the people of Portsmouth and vicinity were greatly delighted, and twenty additions were made to the Church. Bro. Caviness feels that any one is fortunate in having Dr. Tucker for a series of meetings.

CHRISTIAN SUN readers will deeply sympathize with Mrs. T. S. Parrott, of Newman, Ga., formerly known during her college days as Miss Nannie Carlton, in the death of her husband on October 1st. Mr. Parrott was one of the outstanding citizens of Georgia and was identified with many enterprises in Newman, Atlanta and other places. His interest in the Church was deep and abiding. On Sunday, before his untimely decease, he superintended Sunday School, attended preaching services, morning and night, and a special service in the afternoon. After the night service he took a minister to leave on the 10:30 train. Upon reaching home and retiring, he was taken suddenly ill, and shortly after midnight passed away. One of the largest funerals ever conducted in Georgia was that held in his honor, and, as expressing appreciation for him and sympathy for his widow and family, THE CHRISTIAN SUN extends deepest and most heartfelt sympathy.

The Mission Secretary is grateful beyond his words for a beautiful certificate which entitles him to life-membership in the Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention. The certificate is signed by Mrs. J. A. Williams, president, Franklin, Va., and Mrs. M. J. W. White, secretary, Norfolk, Va., and is accompanied by a letter from the secretary stating that the life membership is a donation from the women of the Alabama Conference. The Mission Secretary is certainly grateful to this Conference for this most courteous act and favor, and feels happy to think that for all his life he will be a member of such a worthy and distinguished body as that of the Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention and is entitled to all the privileges of such membership. It was a most gracious and unexpected act. The money for the membership goes to the erection of a home for returned missionaries. Interest in life memberships is increasing and memberships are multiplying, we are glad to know, from various reports.

A NEW HAT.

The circulation manager of THE CHRISTIAN SUN makes the following offer, to hold good till December 31, 1928:

Every Church and Sunday School sending us a club of ten new subscribers and ten renewals, with a check for $40.00, he will make the pastor of that Church a present of a $10.00 Stetson hat for a Christmas gift. Where a pastor serves two or more country Churches, they can club together, and the present will be given in the name of both Churches.

You send in the names each week and get credit on your club until you reach the desired number. Give name and address of each subscriber, and state whether "renewal" or "new."

Let everybody get busy, and let us get a thousand new subscribers right quick.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Circulation Manager.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN GOALS.

"THE CHRISTIAN SUN in every home in the Southern Christian Convention."

"THE CHRISTIAN SUN on a self-supporting basis."

"Forty-five hundred subscribers."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

LEARNING TO SEE GOD.

BY REV. JOS. W. FIX.

"Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand on me."—Psa. 139:5.

The ability to see what others do not observe is the mark of a genius. It is an art which comes sometimes through natural ability; sometimes through much effort and continuous education. Some hunters have the keenness of sight to see game where the average eye would see but grass and foliage. Some see the haunts of fish, where the average fisherman sees but ordinary water. Gypsy Smith had a gift handed him from being set behind in past generations with a call of the gypsy to behold God's work in nature. He tells that up until the age of twenty-five he lived constantly in the great out-of-doors. He saw flowers even in the late winter, while other people saw but the bare twigs and stems. Life in the gypsy camp during past generations had given this man of God a prophetic insight into the Creator's handiwork.

Much has been said of that valuable characteristic trait which God gave women. Her intuition enables her to sense the needs of her children and to see their wants before they speak a word. Some have called it "a hunch"; I prefer to call it a God-given talent. To be able to see and understand and know that which others do not is truly the mark of a genius. David Lloyd George, England's Premier and great peace advocate, had the power to sense and to know that which other people were thinking about and how they would act in a most remarkable way. During the world peace conference, he saw beforehand just how each delegate would vote. He could understand human nature and see individual traits where other people saw just men.

While visiting the Metropolitan Museum of Fine Arts in New York City, I was shown the paintings of Turner, that great artist who is too well known for his beautiful coloring lavished in his skies. As I stood before one of the most elaborate ones there came to mind an incident that took place during the artist's life which revealed his ability to see what others were blinded to. A woman looking at his work, said: "Mr. Turner, I have never seen such skies and sunsets in nature as you portray on your canvas." To her, he said: "Madam, do you not wish that you could?"

David could see God and feel His presence at all times. "Thou hadst beset him behind" with that ability. His mother was a tenderly, godly woman. She had taught him to see God even as her parents had inculcated it into her. Being the youngest son, he was charged with the care of his father's sheep, and he displayed his fidelity to them. He possessed musical gifts of high order, so that truly he could say, "Thou hadst beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand on me." To David the heavens declared the glory of God, the firmament showed forth unto him God's handiwork. To him, day unto day uttered speech of God and night unto night shared forth his knowledge. There was no speech nor language wherein David could not hear the voice of God. In the 139th Psalm, David asked the questions to himself, "Whither shall I go from thy spirit?" or whither shall I flee from thy presence? And then from his personal acquaintance with God and his ability to see Him, he answers, saying: "If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in Sheol, behold thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say surely the darkness shall cover me even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth thee not from me; but the night shineth as the day; the darkness and the light are both alike unto thee. . . . How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! How great is the sum of them! If I should count them they are more in number than the sands; when I awake I am still with thee. Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts and see if there be any wicked way in me and lead me in the way everlasting."

In the original Hebrew, the word which we translate beset means "he was enfolded" even before his birth to know God. All of his ancestry, dating to that gracious man and woman, Ruth and Boaz, were people who knew God and could see Him. This unusual gift of seeing and knowing God came to David without his putting forth great effort. His attainments we, as Christians, all desire. The ability which David possessed from early childhood, you and I must attain through effort. We must study and seek. During the remainder of our moments of meditation, let us think of some medium through which you and I might learn to see and know God more personally. God enfolded David with a God-fearing ancestry, so that he could say "Thou hadst beset or enfolded me behind," or during the years before his birth. God had planned to reveal Himself further through nature and its teachings. He saw God as a Shepherd leading His flock into paths of righteousness, as he saw his own father's sheep being led beside the still water and into places of safety. While God did not give David Churches and Sunday Schools, and while he never saw Jesus nor read about Him, God did not hesitate to make His ways known unto him.

For you and for me, we must find God through earnest endeavor to learn to see Him. There are many ways open unto us. Let us think of some of the most available paths of revelation.

1. The Church of God. The Church is God's greatest institution. It is more than a building. It is a spiritual organization. In the early days it was an upper room, an out-of-door place, anywhere in which people of like minds sought His presence. There they would sing and pray and read His word. They had to obtain through ritual and worship what David saw revealed in all things. In brief, the Church is erected to help you and me learn of God. His will concerning His laws, our relation to Him, to others and to ourselves must and are to be taught. The Church must needs have adequately equipped buildings, and must adopt and use modern methods of approach in its teachings. Its regard for mothers should be shown through social service and missions. In order that others might know God, the pulpit must proclaim Him. The Sunday School must teach its children that God is love and that His love is like unto the love of an earthly father for his children. The Church needs laymen who are willing and eager to serve Him. Its choir can bring Him very close to the worshipers through the ministry of music. Every duty performed should be motivated by His spirit and for making known His ways unto His children.

A friend of mine once overheard a conversation between two ministers. One of them was greatly discouraged. His tone of voice had taken a pessimistic slant. His services had of late been poorly attended. His parishoners were indifferent, he felt, toward God's house. They seemed to care not to learn to see God. He said: "In this twentieth century of American life, business methods and pleasure-seeking resort to the automobile. The Church is but the fifth wheel." The other minister was very hopeful in his outlook, but said, "You mean that the fifth wheel is just something added?" The reply was, "Yes." Whereupon the other minister replied, I agree with you and say that the Church of today is like unto the fifth wheel of an automobile and that that fifth wheel is the steering wheel. The Church leads its influence and trains its men to steer the world of business. The pessimistic man made reply and said: "You are right, but in too many places or cities the steering wheel is locked. The Church cannot guide, lead, or direct spiritual life of people because some few have locked the wheel. Let it be unlocked and let no man prevent the Church from revealing God to men."

2. The word of God. The Bible is God's word to man. In its pages He seeks to be made known unto all people. It is a book far different from other books. While its literature is unsurpassable as to law, poetry, history, prophecy, gospels, epistles and revelation, its greatest value is in the fact that its writers were divinely inspired—they had learned to know God. Paul, of the greatest of the Bible authors states that "all scripture is given by inspiration."

The word of God helps us to know Him as a Father who forgives his children. This is especially revealed in the story of the prodigal son. In this parable, the father welcomes the lost. In like manner, the Bible portrays God as one whose arms are open to the man who is in sin. There used to be an old lady who attended a Presbyterian Church in Omaha whose pastor told me some interesting things concerning her life. She could scarcely see; her hearing was impaired; but her heart yearned to know more of God. Her attendance at Church was dependable. One day her pastor asked her why she came when she could not see the beauties of the Church or hear the sermon. Her reply was that she came to Church and, through her Bible in her lap during the service, she drew near to God. She stated that even her eyesight was dim, she could discern the coloring of the book and its several colors reminded her of her Father in heaven. The blackness of the cover reminded her of her own sins; the red embossed pages and the red letters in her testament taught her that the blood of Christ was shed for the remission of her sins; the white margin of the pages reminded her of the fact that this blood would wash her and she should be whiter than snow. The little purple ribbon book mark reminded her that royal purple was the coloring used in making the robes worn by kings and queens. She thereby looked at it and felt that she was a child of the King. A member of the royal family of God.

Sir Walter Scott used to say to Lockhart, "Just read to us from the Book." In this way the later years of the great novelist and poet were enriched. The reading of the Word aided him in knowing God.

The Bible is unlimited in scope. Dr. Hermon Eldredge tells the story of an old Scotch woman who for the first time in her life saw the mighty Atlantic Ocean. Upon seeing it, she said: "W'all thank the Lord for one thing that there is enough of." As we look upon the Bible we can thank God's writers for one Book that there is enough of. It has something for everybody and for all needs. It has a cure for sorrow (John 14), a remedy for worry (Matt. 6:19), a help for the discouraged (Isa. 40), a stimulant for one's faith

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

GEORGIA AND ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

This Conference met in regular annual session with First Church, La Grange, Ga., October 9th, at 7:30 P. M., Rev. H. M. Gray, president of last session, presiding. After devotionals conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. W. Hanson, the mayor of the city of La Grange welcomed the body with words of cordial greeting and acclaim. While all orderly bodies receive welcome to the city, none with such gladness and cordiality as Church bodies, declared the mayor, for the Church is the stay and the hope of the home and the State.

Rev. J. D. Dollar, Lanett, Ala., responded appropriately and appreciatively to the mayor's welcome. The same officers as last year were elected to serve another year, when the enrollment of ministers and delegates showed a quorum present.

President H. M. Gray delivered the annual message, a sermon based on the text, "Where there is no vision the people perish." The speaker contended that the one great need of this Conference and of Christians generally was a vision—a clear vision of truth. Our plans, our pursuits, our achievements for God are all restricted in our day because Christians seem to have lost, in large measure, their vision of truth—the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. Bro. Gray held the rapt attention of his audience and made all long for a larger, a clearer, a broader vision of the whole truth of the whole gospel for the whole world.

The first session was well attended and was spiritually edifying and uplifting. One of the gratifying features of the session was the presence on the platform of that true veteran of the cross, Rev. H. W. Elder, the father and beloved leader for many years of the Conference. Worn with serving and wasted with years of burden-bearing, this faithful man of God, no longer able now to speak even one audible word, remains amongst us a blessing and a benediction to the hundreds and thousands he has helped to find the better way of life. Bro. Elder is the beloved of the Conference, and while his tongue is silenced, his whole life cries out for a forward march by the people of God toward progress, victory and achievement in righteousness.

The morning session of the second day was consumed in discussing reports, in hearing what the executive committee had done the past year, and in the discussion of missions, home and foreign. The Mission Secretary was privileged to tell what we are trying to do, both in the home and foreign field, and also explain the program proposed by the last Southern Convention in raising during the year $45,000 for missions. It is believed the pastors and Churches of this Conference fully understand the program and will do their part in raising the amount asked, and thus clearing the board of all indebtedness, and thus releasing the board for future constructive work.

Under the report on home missions, the Conference converted its committee into a board of missions for the Conference, and five of its best men were elected to this board, with power to act. The afternoon was given to reading Church and ministerial reports; also to the discussion of Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work. Miss Pattie Coghill, Secretary of Christian Education Department of the Convention, made an address, setting forth the aims and methods of the department for aiding and promoting Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work.

The women of the Conference, at 2:30 P. M., went to the Sunday School auditorium of the Church to consider organizing a Woman's Mission Board and Conference. An enthusiastic group of women assembled, and after addresses by the Mission Secretary, Miss Pattie Coghill, and others, the organization was perfected, with the election of the following officers: Mrs. J. T. Roquemore, Lanett, Ala., president; Mrs. D. S. Hogg, Richland, Ga., vice-president; Miss Beatrice Davis, 516 South Greenwood Street, La Grange, Ga., secretary; Mrs. J. B. Crowder, Forest Avenue, La Grange, Ga., treasurer; Miss Susie Elder, Columbus, Ga., superintendent young people; Mrs. W. R. Kitchens, Lanett, Ala., superintendent cradle roll. There was already one Woman's Missionary Society—that at Lanett—properly organized and functioning, and other Churches, especially Richland and First, La Grange, had Ladies' Aid Societies which were ready and anxious to organize and co-operate as Women's Missionary Societies. It is believed that the board elected will be able to organize missionary societies in many of the Churches during the present year.

At night the Missionary Association of the Conference was in session, presided over by Acting President Rev. C. W. Hanson (Rev. H. W. Elder, is president, elected for life). The evening session was consumed in reports and collections of dues, and by a most interesting and instructive address on the Christian Orphanage by Superintendent C. D. Johnston. Owing to the absence of Dr. Louis H. Keller and others who were to address the Conference on the final and third day, it was voted to continue in session until all business was completed before adjourning for lunch. It was a crowded and busy session with committee reports and routine work. Rev. W. C. Carpenter presented a very strong and pronounced report on moral reform, pledging the Conference to vote in the coming election only for those candidates who pledge themselves to the support and enforcement of prohibition and other laws on our statute books. The report evoked favorable discussion and was unanimously adopted.

Rev. J. D. Dollar presented the report on religious literature, urging our people to a careful study of the Bible and support of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and our other Church literature. Circulation Manager C. D. Johnston made a talk on THE CHRISTIAN SUN and pled for renewals and new subscribers to their own official organ. Rev. H. W. Gray presented the report on superannuation and urged the Conference to raise its superannuation fund, as the same was so very much needed now. Rev. A. H. Shepherd, chairman, presented a very able and comprehensive report on education, especially emphasizing the need and the service of Piedmont Junior College, and asked that $100 be raised on the floor of Conference at once for the college (and this was done quickly and easily). The several licentiates of the Conference were continued for a year and advised to take extension work from Piedmont Junior College.

The next session of Conference is to convene one year hence with Lanett Church, and a rising vote of thanks was accorded First Church, La Grange for its royal hospitality in entertaining the present session. First Church, La Grange, is a commodious and beautiful brick structure. It has just been completed at a cost of $20,000, and one wonders how such an edifice was constructed at such a cost. The seating capacity, without additional chairs or crowding, is 600 in the main auditorium. It is a well-finished, beautiful auditorium. Besides this there are Sunday School rooms, auditoriums, ladies' parlors, class-rooms, kitchen, dining-room, lavatories and all modern equipment. Rev. C. W. Hanson and his faithful workers have wrought wonders. The building is a credit to the city and the city is justly proud of it. It was a great session of Conference in a great Church, and all were happy. J. O. A.

LITTLE THINGS.

What Naaman's servants said unto him when he "went away in a rage," after Elisha had told him, "go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee and thou shalt be clean," suggests a lesson for all who come to Jesus Christ for cleansing. Naaman's servants came near and said to their master: "If the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? How much rather, then, when he saith to thee, Wash and be clean?"

Naaman changed his mind at this suggestion, "Went and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, and was healed of his leprosy." This suggests two important things: that the lowest class of persons may help the highest class of persons. These servants helped the great captain to get healed of his leprosy; that very simple acts, in obedience to divine direction, may bring blessings that no other course will bring. There was, then, and there is now, no human remedy that could cure leprosy; but obedience to the prophet's direction healed Naaman and he went back well. Leprosy was a type of sin, and there is no human remedy that can save men from sin. The best home training and the best education cannot save from sin. "Ye must be born again" is the only remedy, and that never fails, and it is as simple as Elisha's remedy for Naaman's cure, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Naaman believed, changed his mind, obeyed, and was healed.

Many people in the pews and many ministers in the pulpit are looking for some great thing to do while little opportunities are at their door, neglected. Jordans flow by every man's path; simple things done in obedience to God's word, applied by the Holy Spirit, will result in changes beyond the wisdom of man. Good homes are fine, good schools are great, but change of heart is by the Spirit of God. The world is full of simple opportunities for doing good. Naaman's servants were anxious for their master to be healed, and that impelled them to suggest that the simple thing

Elisha had instructed him to do might heal him. There is no work in the Church so simple as to be useless, and the greatest men may profit by the suggestion of the least men, and by kneeling at the altar of prayer, or any other simple thing that makes the divine stream wash away the sin that means spiritual death. "In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness" (Zech. 13:1). That fountain was the precious blood of Jesus Christ, for "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7). "What can wash away my sin? Nothing but the blood of Jesus." The right word at the right time is like a nail in the right place. The penny given in the right spirit is as great as the dollar in the service of the king. So many people will not sing because they cannot sing well; so many will not give because they cannot give much; so many will not teach in the Sunday School because they cannot teach well; some will not conduct prayer-meeting because they cannot speak fluently; some people will not go to Church because they cannot dress fine. The simple word in the name of Jesus has great power. The simple life-witness for Jesus Christ may win a soul to him. Do not wait for some great thing to do.

SERVICE OF OTHERS.

The Christian religion clearly teaches the obligation of service. Jesus, Himself, said that he came into the world not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and that he was among His disciples as one who served.

Practical experience, however, teaches any man who has undertaken to render service to others that to do so with success is one of the most difficult things, and often-times offense is given where the purpose of men in the kindest way was to minister to others.

Social service workers testify that it is a dangerous thing to bring the persons who are anxious to render service into too close personal contact with those who are to be recipients of their kindly ministrations. It is so easy for the kindly dispositioned person in affluent circumstances in life to assume a condescending attitude toward those less fortunate. This atmosphere and attitude of condescension defeats the very purpose the well-intentioned person may have in mind.

Then captains of industry who have been anxious to incorporate welfare work in the conduct of their businesses have, to their great astonishment, often-times affronted their employees in their sincere efforts to do something for them. It is a common saying that we must be careful in undertaking to do things for people, lest they should get the impression that we are trying to do things to them. It is now a well-accepted principle in welfare work in industrial plants that the employer should work with the employees rather than for them, if the best results are to be obtained.

This brings to the forefront a consideration of the real, abiding basis for Christian service. Should we undertake to serve others because we are more fortunate than they? Or because they need our assistance? What is the real basis of the obligation of one person to serve the other?

I think that a thoughtful consideration of the practice of our Master in this respect will make this issue clear. It is found in the principle of the incarnation in accordance with which Jesus identified himself with humanity and in accordance with which also He felt chargeable with any of the injustices or hardships or heartaches of His brethren. As Christians, we are members of a brotherhood, a universal brotherhood, and we are personally responsible for everything that goes on in that brotherhood. If, therefore, we undertake to relieve the sufferings and anxieties, the injustices and hardships of our brethren because we feel that we are personally responsible for these inequalities, there will be no ground for criticism of the services we may render. When we, in the spirit of Jesus, identify ourselves with our brethren, we do not offend them by any effort we may put forth to render service to them or for them or with them, as the circumstances in each case may require.

RENOUNCING WAR.

Plenipotentiaries of fifteen nations, including the United States, Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy and Japan, on August 27th, in Paris, signed a multilateral treaty renouncing war. Since that time over three-fourths of all countries have signed or declared their intention of doing so. By signing this treaty the contracting parties agree that the settlement of any dispute or conflict that may arise among them, no matter the nature or origin, should never be sought except through pacific means. It was described by President Coolidge as a "great forward step in the preservation of peaceful relations between the nations."

The existence of such a document is doubtlessly a signal indication of the future arrival of a time when guns and other implements of warfare may be molded into plowshares forever and ever, of a time when the people will no longer be called upon to bear the weighty expense of an army and navy.

Yet even the most optimistic, the extreme pacifists, would hardly be justified in advocating the scrapping of this country's armaments in reliance upon the treaty. Too often in history have nations forgotten their agreements in the lust for blood. Not yet is the veneer of man's civilization thick enough to withstand the innate desire for conflict. In the present stage, strong defense forces probably still remain one of the best assurances of continued peace for this country.

Though this be true, it does not dim the significance of the treaty. The signing of the agreement by the representatives of so many millions of people points to the prevalence of the universal desire for better understandings and closer relations between countries. It is indicative of the widespread realization of the futility of war and bloodshed. It brings near the vision, makes more probable the dawn of a day when nations shall exist, not as jealous, suspicious and unsympathetic units, but in friendliness and understanding without the fear of conflict.

CHURCH DEDICATED.

Bethel, a Church for whose building the ground was broken less than eighteen months ago, was dedicated with appropriate services Sunday, September 30th. The Church is located in a thriving farming community, three miles out from Elkton, Va., and belongs to the Valley of Virginia Conference. Dr. W. T. Walters, the pastor, has led in the building, and the people have rallied to the work and have wrought most efficiently indeed. The Church house would do credit to any community. While the total money outlay in building and equipping was $6,000, one realizes that the greatest economy was practiced and much labor and material donated to complete such a structure at a cost so small. The entrance is by circular cement steps and landing, which gives a sense of permanence and stability to the whole building. Immediately to the right, on entering from the front of the Church, are three ample Sunday School rooms, cut off from the main auditorium by folding doors, and above these upstairs are three more Sunday School rooms beautifully furnished for primaries, intermediates and juniors. These three upper rooms serve as a balcony for the main auditorium, and when so used increase considerably the seating capacity of the Church. The floor of the main auditorium is inclined, and the platform for pulpit and choir extends two-thirds across the front part of the building. The seating capacity of the main auditorium is about 350, which, with the addition of Sunday School rooms adjacent, will carry the capacity to more than 450. The building is to be lighted with its own Delco system and is to be heated by hot-air furnace. When it shall become necessary, several Sunday School rooms may be added in the basement of the Church.

On dedication day the weather was quite gloomy and unpromising, but, despite this fact, the people came and seemed happy over the achievement that had been wrought and in the blessing of such an ample and beautiful building. There were three services on Sunday, all of which were well attended, and the people present seemed to enjoy the day immensely. The afternoon service was conducted by the pastor, at which service four other ministers took part, two of whom brought greetings and spoke words of welcome and encouragement from their own Churches, viz: Presbyterian and United Brethren.

Bethel Church now takes its place as one of the most beautiful and promising rural Churches of the Conference. We most heartily congratulate the pastor, who has led so successfully in the work, and the enthusiastic building committee which has stood by him so faithfully, and the entire membership of the Church who have sacrificed and denied themselves to the utmost for the Church in which they now indulge a pardonable and worthy pride.

MR. DANIELS IN DEEP WATER.

If any man in the country deserves sympathy during this campaign, it is the dry Democratic politician in the South. Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, is trying to take the minds of his auditors off the vociferously held convictions of his running-mate by reminding them that Mr. Mellon once held distillery stock and that Mr. Vare stampered the Republican convention, and that Republican enforcement of the prohibition laws has been less than a shining success. Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, has given up the attempt to get around Governor Smith's wetness, and is frankly off the reservation. But the man who seems to be having the worst time of them all is Josephus Daniels, who is trying to hold North Carolina in line for his party. Since the death of Mr. Bryan, Mr. Daniels is probably the most distinguished dry in the Democratic party. He is a dry of years' standing; a dry without equivocation; a dry politically, and a dry personally. As Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels endured endless ridicule and started unwarranted attack because he insisted that Uncle Sam's warships should carry no beverages stronger than grape juice. Toward the enactment of the eighteenth amendment Mr. Daniels contributed his bit, and it was no paltry bit. But now comes the campaign of 1928, and the democratic party sniffs a genuine chance at the spoils of office for the first time in eight years. What is Mr. Daniels to do? What he actually does do is to advise the voters of the South to stay regular, promising them that "if we elect Smith we will tie his hands with a dry Congress." In other words, vote for a candidate whom you don't dare follow! Pick a President, and then shackle him! Did ever political opportunism express itself more openly? Or did ever the blight of party regularity show its working with less disguise? It is easy to be charitable with the words of Mr. Daniels, for they are the words of a much-harassed man. But it is to be hoped that the South in general will not let itself be duped into voting for anybody on any such specious plea.—Christian Century.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The annual Conference is more than a formal meeting to receive reports and pass a few days in social fellowship. It is the climax of the Church year, the harvest of what has been produced in the Churches since the last Conference. The members of Conference are supposed to be representative Church members chosen carefully by the local Conference. It should be counted an honor to be elected as a delegate to Conference, and those thus chosen should attend and be present at the opening session and remain to the final benediction. Pastors of Churches should set the example for attendance and intense interest. A Conference thus composed and earnestly conducted will always produce results worthy of place in the history of the Church.

Several things should be done before the Conference assemblies. All committees should prepare their reports and have them ready when called for, and they should be written in clear, concise style. This applies only to committees appointed at the previous session. In addition to this, all members of Conference should hold themselves in readiness to answer any request or demand of Conference. Preparation is a large part of any service, and it is pre-eminently so in Conference work, where the greater number is looking to the smaller number for suggestions and results. A congregation never grows restless if the leaders keep something worth while before their minds. A Christian Conference should be a very interesting, inspiring and helpful meeting.

A harvest is preceded by a long period of hard work, faith and patient waiting. The whole year of prayer, preaching, individual and group work must fill up the time in preparation for Conference. The pastor should make up his mind to see that all that the Conference asks of his Church or Churches shall be sent up to Conference. That determination should begin to work soon after he returns from Conference. The current expenses of the Church should be cared for by the local officials, but the pastor should see to it that Conference apportionments be raised in full and sent by check to Conference. If the pastor will put his soul into this part of his work, the members of the Church will support him in his efforts. Money is essential to the conduct of the Conference in the support of its enterprises, and those who love will give. The Church report to Conference should be made out in full before Conference, and the check enclosed with the report. If proper preparation were made before Conference, there would be ample time for sermons, addresses, song services and inspirational meetings. Competent work would make such services spiritual and enjoyable.

Nothing fills the heart of pastor and delegates with such satisfaction as to go up to Conference with all requirements met and a full determination to repeat the same success the coming year. In fact, that was the commendation in the parable, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord" (Matt. 25:21).

ELON LETTER.

Dr. Frederick J. Kelley was recently installed as president of the University of Idaho. As is customary on such occasions, the president undertook to outline his philosophy of higher education.

President Kelley narrowed his theme down, however, to a discussion of the place of higher education in American life on a tax supported basis.

With much of his philosophy, educators in general will find themselves in agreement. When, for example, he argues that higher education should be provided in order to equip persons so minded with the culture and skill requisite for leadership in our democratic life, he will find few who will disagree with him. When he further argues that provision should be made whereby all who are so minded may have the advantage of this ample preparation, he is not so convincing.

Educators are now convinced that higher education does not benefit certain persons, and that the educational system is under no obligation to provide facilities ample to offer educational advantages of the higher type on a universal basis. Just how to administer the process of eliminating those who are not qualified to profit by higher education is at this time a matter of experimentation. Most colleges eliminate students who fail to pass 60 per cent of their work at any particular examination period. All institutions refuse to admit those who have never graduated from accredited high schools and who fail to have in addition proper credentials as to their character and promise. These, however, are recognized as unscientific procedures. Experiments are being conducted of various kinds, out of which it is hoped that a scientific solution of this problem will be arrived at.

President Kelley is least convincing when he argues that the State, at public expense, should provide free tuition in its institutions of higher learning. There is no justification in theory or in experience for this practice which has sprung up in many State universities. Mr. Arnett, who is president of the American Association of Colleges, and also of the General Education Board, argues that every student should pay his tuition in an institution of higher learning, and that progressively these institutions should pass over to the student himself a relatively larger proportion of the cost of his instruction, of which he now pays, as a general thing, about one-third. Mr. Arnett argues that the colleges should have loan funds for students who need financial assistance and who have a requisite ability to profit by higher education. He believes that this practice will insure leadership of the highest grade for our American life.

There is food for earnest and serious thought in this inaugural address of President Kelley's and in the suggestions of Mr. Arnett.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

The time has arrived when the social education should be more emphasized in the industrial order. One of the problems which has been laid at the door of the modern Church by the industrial shift is the task of overcoming a misplaced emphasis on Christian ethics. There is a very general feeling at the present time that our industrial order is influenced, if at all, by ethical virtues which grew up in a past age. It has often been said that Calvinism very early formed a working alliance with capitalism. This statement is both true and false. It is true that the virtues which were encouraged by puritanism—such virtues as courage, thrift, industry—were exactly the virtues which were needed in the pioneer agricultural period. Puritanism encouraged a great individualism. Through such a working alliance, individualistic virtues came to the forefront, but the industrial revolution is modifying experience of the agricultural pioneer. The new industrial order demands a new set of virtues. It is the business of the Church and its agencies to overcome the misplaced emphasis of the past and supply the virtues which are necessary to a new age, and this must be largely provided for through our denominational colleges.

The first obligation of the Church is not the revision of a code. A code is an itemized bill of particulars in a program of goodness. We need a revival of the spirit out of which programs originated. Unless we can get back of codes and systems our path is hopeless. There is a peculiar quality and method in Christian justice. It has never been embodied in any permanent code. The law of right in the Christian community is discovered in the face-to-face relationship. Some one has called this the Christian type of direct action. The president of the National Brotherhood of Blacksmiths not long ago was discussing a threatened railroad strike. He said, "The president of that road is a Christian, I am a Christian. I believe if I could meet that man face to face we could talk out some of our difficulties and come to an agreement." It seems to be a Christian confidence in the way of living. Long-distanced communications corrupt good manners.

It is not going to be sufficient to proclaim this principal from the pulpits. The Church must practice it as an educational method. A corporate Christian conscience cannot be handed down from the top. It must be built up, group by group, social situation by social situation. All will join together in building something which is authority for all. The group faces certain very difficult social problems. They go to the great laboratory of the Bible to gather laboratory experience in associated living. To this experience is added the experience of each member of the group and the larger social experience with which they are acquainted.

The most normal, the most wholesome and the most democratic method for the extension of the Christian ethics to the social order is through the discussion of social questions by the industrial groups which are organizing in our industrial society. More and more these groups are coming to self-consciousness. It is a day in which the group mind and the group consciousness play a great part in determining the actions of men. The question as to whether we are to have Christian industrial ethics rests finally in the hands of those men who understand the technique of modern industry, and this must be taught largely through our educational institutions.

CATHOLICS FEVERISHLY PRAYING FOR SMITH'S ELECTION.

(The following are excerpts, without any changes whatever, from an editorial in The Missionary, the official organ of the Catholic Missionary Union, published monthly at the Apostolic Mission House, Washington, D. C., the editorial being in October, 1928, number, the Rev. Father Lewis J. O'Hern, C. G. P., D. D., editor.)

No vice of the mighty is so detestable as negligence of responsibility. This applies, in the United States, to the sovereign voter, who is, theoretically, responsible for everything in our government. Therefore, it is a blessed thing for voters to be alert and eager in preparation for the solemn duty of election.

Always Catholics have been earnest citizens. By every test they are above the average in willing, effectual discharge of patriotic duty. Never have they been more deeply stirred to searching study, frequent prayer, resolute purpose and enthusiastic effort, than in the present campaign.

Their readiness to prove themselves responsible citizens at the ballot-box is consoling to every lover of Church and country.

The Missionary finds many reasons for sharing the interest of fellow-Catholics in the campaign. It seems to be a most beneficent provision of the Heavenly Father for the advancement of those ideals to which The Missionary is dedicated. . . .

Never before in the history of the United States have so many Catholic-haters been ready to learn the truth about the Catholic Church. This opportunity stirs The Missionary to wish that ten thousand priests might be set free here and now to give missions to non-Catholics—in the streets and alleys of the cities, in the country's highways and hedges, with books and dodgers, movies and radios, saying, "You are curious to know just what the Catholic Church is—come, listen, we will answer all your questions, we will set things straight in your minds, we will reveal to you treasures which have been in reach of your needy, longing souls, these many, many years!"

When Governor Smith published his reply to Mr. Marshall, a mission priest wrote to him, thanking him, and saying, "I have been preaching missions to non-Catholics all over this continent for the past thirty years. I believe you have done more good as a missionary to non-Catholics by this one letter of yours than I have done in a life-time."

The strains, toils and bruises of the campaign are amply compensated to the Catholic candidate by the happy consciousness, which no election returns can take from him, that he has brought the Catholic Church into the minds of the American people in a way and with a force surpassing the utmost capacities of pulpites. He has moved America over closer to the truth of Christ, as if he had picked up the nation and pushed it, like a book on a table. His opportunity to enlighten and convert America has been stupendous, and stupendous will be his reward. He earned it by being a sincere, practical Catholic and by meriting success in his vocation of statesmanship. This encourages and inspires every faithful child of the Church to believe that none who meets duty generously will miss greatness.

Does this conviction include assurance of Governor Smith's election? Hardly. Indeed, it is difficult to decide which would be the more satisfactory outcome of the campaign, considering Governor Smith merely as a convert-maker. Our Blessed Lord Himself wins through failure, and sets up the principle, "Unless the grain of wheat falling into the ground die, itself remains alone. But if it die, it brings forth much fruit."

The campaign has been intensely significant to Catholics because it is so plainly part of our Divine Lord's own, age-long and world-wide campaign. Warfare is now being waged in this presidential campaign on the mystical body of Christ, rather than on the man Alfred Emanuel Smith. Each detail of the current struggle fits into the gospel story with astonishing precision. . . .

Defeat may augment Governor Smith's appeal to the non-Catholics of America, as a protagonist of the kingdom which is not of this world; they may find it easier to honor the faith of one who after a good fight must retire from the field in sorrow. The ways of God are not man's ways. God's reward to his faithful servant will certainly surpass the world's reward to a successful politician.

On the other hand, a long and fruitful service as President of the United States will enable Governor Smith to make known the wisdom, prudence, courage, kindness of one who, by the help of the sacramental life of the Catholic Church, "reaches from end to end mightily and disposes all things sweetly." For a plain, simple man to live the Catholic life frankly, fearlessly and loyally, in the full glare of the publicity which beats on the presidency, is exactly what America most needs to teach its high-speed, shallow mind the truth by which Christ undertakes to set men free.

With this in view, is it any wonder that all Catholic lovers of Christ are feverishly praying for Governor Smith's success? Have you ever thought of what life will be like in the United States when it becomes the fashion, the rage, to be Catholic? This change is almost certain to come. It is highly probable that it will come suddenly. You will go to sleep some night in the same atmosphere you and your ancestors have breathed for the past four hundred years—the oppressive, dull, sad atmosphere of a detested, exploited, sullenly tolerated sect—and you will wake up in the morning to find Catholic interests in big type on the front page of your daily paper, and all the world clapping hands in applause. The reason for the suddenness of the change is twofold.

First, it has been prepared, during the past fifty years, by the army of American visitors to Europe, who spend half a billion dollars every year for the privilege of basking for a few weeks in Catholic culture and taking Catholic supremacy as a matter of course in every manifestation of European civilization. In Europe they visit the Pope, they study the saints, they frequent Catholic services in the Churches. Some of them even presume to receive the Blessed Sacrament in Holy Communion. This last is exceptional, but it is the high light on a wide, deep trend of hearts whose life-blood is inherited from Catholic forefathers and whose loneliness longs for the mothering of the Bride of Christ. They return to the United States. The asbestos curtain of conformity to vested prejudices drops between them and Europe and the Church. Again, as of old, lustily, they hate and despise Catholics and the Catholic Church in America. This paradox of hypocrisy (Continued on Page 10.)

STEWARDSHIP BOOK.

Extracts from a Letter.

"I received the stewardship book, 'Stewardship in the Life of Youth,' you told me about at Conference. I found it so interesting and beneficial, I have really found my life-work, and most of it since I read this book. It has been a real inspiration to me. I have begun to plan for my work already. I find I need to do that. After finishing this book last night, I promised my Lord as to my life's work" . . . "Tonight as I sit alone it has been really made clear to me that I was made for a purpose, and with God's help I must fulfill it. This book has made Jesus seem so real to me and so near, I have a real purpose now, and a real Partner."

This is from one of our fine Western Convention young women. What would a book like that do for you, or your son or daughter, or grandson or daughter? And has your home even one stewardship book in it? This stewardship period should see at least one such book in every Christian home.

Visualize Your Stewardship Campaign.

The Christian Publishing Association has left but a very few of the fifty-cent sets of charts and wall mottoes. Secure them without delay. This office has only about fifteen charts left at 25 cents each that illustrates and explains the stewardship Church. By all means you should have one or two stewardship pageants during this educational period. There are some fine ones, and the C. P. A. handles them.

Solves the Problem.

Rev. C. G. Nelson correctly interprets a great truth when he says that the message of stewardship is vitally necessary if your inactive members are to be re-enlisted. It is the best-known way yet found to do so. It is the secret of the power of the every-member canvass, too. Some Churches cut the life and power of the every-member canvass out of it by using some short cut; all they see is "raising a budget." Bro. Nelson has struck one of the greatest truths of the stewardship message.

The 1928 Handbook.

From several specially prized sources we have had hearty words for the 1928 Handbook. If you will turn to the November and December pages, you will find suggestions for the Christian stewardship period. We surely hope that at least one hundred of our Churches will become actual stewardship Churches this November and December. The United Stewardship Council has formed a standard definition of one:

"A stewardship Church is one which, first, includes in its annual program systematic teaching of the scriptural principles of stewardship; and, second, enrolls in a fellowship of stewardship those of its members who devote a definite portion of income—ordinarily at least a tenth—to extend the kingdom of God."

Report, please, as soon as your Church becomes a stewardship Church.

PROHIBITION DECLARATIONS.

BY ALFRED E. SMITH.

From Telegram to Houston Convention.

"It is well-known that I believe there should be fundamental changes in the present provisions for national prohibition, based, as I stated in my Jackson Day letter, on the fearless application to the problem of the principles of Jeffersonian Democracy. While I fully appreciate that these changes can only be made by the people themselves, through their elected legislative representatives, I feel it to be the duty of the chosen leader of the people to point the way which, in his opinion, leads to a sane, sensible solution of a condition which, I am convinced, is entirely unsatisfactory to the great mass of our people."

From Acceptance Speech at Albany.

"I personally believe that there should be change (in the prohibition law), and I shall advise the Congress in accordance with my constitutional duty of whatever changes I deem necessary or expedient. . . . Some immediate relief would come from an amendment to the Volstead law, giving a scientific definition of the alcoholic content of an intoxicating beverage. . . . Each State would then be allowed to fix its own standard of alcoholic content, subject always to the proviso that that standard could not exceed the maximum fixed by Congress.

"I personally believe in an amendment in the eighteenth amendment which would give to each individual State itself, only after approval by a referendum popular vote of its people, the right wholly within its borders to import, manufacture, or cause to be manufactured and sell alcoholic beverages, the sale to be made only by the State itself and not for consumption in any public place. We may well learn from the experience of other nations. Our Canadian neighbors have gone far in this manner to solve this problem by the method of sale made by the State itself, and not by private individuals."

BY HERBERT HOOVER.

From Acceptance Speech at Palo Alto.

"I do not favor the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. I stand for the efficient enforcement of the laws enacted thereunder. Our country has deliberately undertaken a great social and economic experiment, noble in motive and far-reaching in purpose. It must be worked out constructively.

"Crime and disobedience of law cannot be permitted to break down the Constitution and laws of the United States. Modification of the enforcement laws which permits that which the Constitution forbids is nullification."

Attention!

Attention is hereby called to the following excerpts from the minutes of the 1927 session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference:

"It was moved and carried that hereafter the Conference recommend 'The Harvard Plan' of entertainment of Conference, i. e., free lodging and breakfast, and a nominal charge for dinner and supper."

"It was moved and carried that all delegates and visitors who wish to be entertained be requested to notify the Church in advance of the session of the Conference."

Ministers, delegates and visitors will please give heed and govern themselves accordingly. Please co-operate with the pastor and the people of the Christian Temple in this matter.

H. S. HARDCASTLE, Pres.

ALL-SOUTH ENDEAVORERS TO MEET.

Dr. Daniel A. Poling, New York, president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union, will bring the opening address of the All-South Christian Endeavor Convention, to be held in Chattanooga, Tenn., December 28-31. The opening session will be a great mass-meeting on Friday evening in the Memorial Auditorium, and Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, Newark, N. J., vice-president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, noted quiet-hour leader and author, will also speak.

Christian Endeavorers from all the Southern States are coming in large delegations. The program will present many outstanding Christian Endeavor and Church leaders, and the features of the convention will be of the very highest type. The convention will make a thorough study of "How Christian Endeavor May Serve the Church." The crusade with Christ will be studied in discussion groups and will be presented through addresses and pageant.

An afternoon is devoted to visiting the beautiful places of interest in and around Chattanooga. The registration fee is $1.00 and should be sent in at once. Send registration fees to W. Roy Breg, Southern secretary, 11 Feger Building, Chattanooga, Tenn., and write him for further information.

The person who has never made the discovery that he is a sinner, and who considers he has no need of a Saviour, is a person in peril. Jesus "came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson IV—October 28, 1928.

PAUL'S LAST JOURNEY TO JERUSALEM.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that He Himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."—Acts 20:35.

LESSON: Acts 20:1-21:17; 2 Cor. 11:28.

DEVOTIONAL READING: John 10:7-17.

A negro boy went into a store and asked the proprietor if he might use the telephone. He called up a man and apparently sought a job. The man said that he did not need a boy, for he already had a boy that was giving absolute satisfaction. When the boy left the telephone and started away, the proprietor of the store expressed his regret that the boy had not been able to get work. The boy replied, "Boss I got a job. I am working for that man to whom I just talked. I was just checking up on myself, dat's all." The negro boy was doing the thing that every one of us ought to do once in a while—check up on ourselves. In a way, this was what Paul was doing at Miletus as he talked with the elders from Ephesus. He also looked forward to the future.

Paul's Manner of Life.

"Ye yourselves know after what manner I was with you all the time, serving the Lord with all lowliness of mind, with tears, and with trials (or temptations)." The life of the teacher's teaching is the life of the teacher. Happy is that minister or Sunday School teacher, or Christian who can drag out into the open his manner of life. Let every one of us who name the name of Christ walk worthy of our high calling.

"Serving the Lord." Much of the indifference and inertia of Christian service is due to the fact that so many Christians feel that they are doing things for the Church or for the preacher or for their fellowmen. Paul saw that in every service he rendered, he was serving the Lord. Inasmuch as we do it unto one of even the least, we do it unto Christ.

"With lowliness of mind." Here was a man great in ability and in training, an outstanding man in any generation. But he was humble and self-effacing. He had the mind which was in Christ Jesus—the mind of humility and meekness.

Paul's Preaching and Teaching.

"I shrank not from declaring unto you anything that was profitable." Paul did not ride any hobbles in his preaching or teaching. He did not preach what people necessarily liked—in fact, his truth was often distasteful—but he preached what people needed. He dealt with the great truths of the Christian religion. So many preachers or teachers have a hobby, a pet theme.

"Teaching you publicly and from house to house." Paul was a personal worker as well as a preacher. He added to the effectiveness of his formal and public message by personal interviews and work with incidentals.

"Repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." Here in a few words is a summary of the gospel message which Paul preached. A "change of mind" issuing in a change of conduct, based on faith in Jesus Christ—that is, after all, the gospel.

Paul's Advice.

"Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock . . . to feed the Church of the Lord which He purchased with His blood." Be careful of your manner of life. See to it that you do not compromise your ideals. Live the Jesus-life. This is one side of the practical advice Paul gave these people. Then take heed to others. Have and manifest a personal interest in them. Feed them—give them something that will build up strength and cause them to grow. Good substantial food is necessary for the soul as well as for the body. It is as acceptable, too, if it is carefully prepared. The Sunday School teacher or the preacher can put the great truths of the gospel in an attractive and appealing way and still take nothing from their force and power.

Paul's Example.

"I coveted no man's silver or gold or apparel." How many there are who do covet such things today! "These hands ministered to my necessities and to them that were with me." Paul showed his sincerity by working his way because circumstances demanded it. "I gave you an example." That is a great saying coming from any man when it is spoken in sincerity and when the facts back up the statement. Ministers and Sunday School teachers and professing Christians are to give others an example of Jesus' way of life. We are the salt of the earth, we are as a city set upon a hill, we are the light of the world.

Paul's Burden.

"Besides those things that are without, there is that which presseth upon me daily, anxiety for all the Churches." There is the secret of it all. This man Paul cared tremendously for folks and for the Churches. There was on his mind and heart daily the thought and the care and the anxiety for the Churches. He had something of the Master's compassion. One essential in fruitful Christian service is a passion for people. Unless it does make some difference to us, unless we do carry a sense of responsibility and anxiety for the work of the kingdom, we are not likely to do much or to go far. It was when John Knox fell on his face and cried, "O God, give me Scotland or I die," that a great revival was born. We need a baptism of this spirit of care and anxiety for the boys and girls, the men and women to whom we minister and whom we serve. There is no substitute for this passion.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, October 28, 1928.

TOPIC: "Making the Right Use of Our Talents."
—Matt. 25:14-30.

Some Bible Hints.

Our gifts are "God's goods." We have nothing that has not been given us (v. 14).

Talents vary both in size and quality. We are responsible only for what we have, much or little (v. 15).

The big thing about life is that we be faithful to God in it, and faithful to all others (v. 21).

A "good" servant is one that puts his whole soul into his service (v. 23).

Suggestive Thoughts.

There is a difference between use and right use. It is possible to waste our gifts, or abuse them to our own and others' hurt.

Gifts or talents are given us first, to use to earn a living; second, to help others; third, to create happiness around us. The first use alone is selfish.

Think of the good a man might do who has the gift of making money if he used it for the kingdom. Some do this, but most of the big men have other interests.

It is by use that our talents grow. That is one way in which God rewards faithfulness. The reward is not withheld until our journey is finished. It comes, in part, now.

A Few Illustrations.

Man is a home-maker. He has a talent for that. It is right to use this talent, and then make home happy. In everything we do we may serve God.

One old Scotchman had a talent to build stone walls. It seemed all that he could do, but he resolved that no better stone walls than his would be found anywhere. He was faithful.

Money is like fruit that grows from the root of our talents. We must use it rightly or the earlier use of our talents will mean nothing. Keep an account with God and put into it at least a tenth.

A man that has lost his sense of obligation is like an engine without a fly-wheel. It has no control, runs wild. We need to feel tied up to God.

To Think About.

Why is stewardship larger than mere giving of money?

What talent have you that you may use for God?

Why should all develop the talent of kindness?

NEWS NOTES.

The field secretary of the Board of Christian Education, Miss Pattie Coghill, has recently attended and taken part in the Georgia and Alabama and Alabama Conferences and the Woman's Missionary Conference of Alabama. In between these Conferences she held several institutes for the training of religious workers.

There is a fine spirit of co-operation between our people and the Congregationalists. Miss Coghill has recently exchanged engagements with similar workers from the Congregationalists. This is good for both Churches.

Plans are being formulated to hold several training schools for religious workers in Eastern Virginia within the next few months. Further announcements will be made concerning this later. Those who are especially interested in having such a school in their Church would do well to write to Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va., who was appointed by the Sunday School convention to promote this work, or to either Miss Pattie Coghill, Henderson, N. C., or the undersigned writer.

Your Board of Christian Education, through its chairman and field secretary, stand ready to do all within their power to help any person or Church with any problem connected with religious education. Tell us your needs, please.

One pastor and two superintendents have already answered the letter recently sent to each pastor and superintendent. Brethren, please do not forget that your board is depending upon you.

is precisely and perfectly in accord with human nature. We are made this way.

Then, in the second place, this enlightened dishonesty is the one state of mind which naturally changes suddenly, overnight. If the American people were really ignorant of the majestic righteousness of the Catholic claim, they could not, short of a miracle, change their attitude towards it suddenly. They would require patient, slow instruction. Watch and see! America is going to become pro-Catholic all at once. This change may take place early in the administration of Governor Smith as President—Democratic President—of the United States.

If it does, again we are admonished that there will be terrific need of laborers in these vast fields suddenly white to the harvest. Oh, how we should pray for trained missionaries to Americans! How fervently, earnestly, generous, yea, frantically, we should make ready for them! This aspiration is the very breath of life of the Apostolic Mission House.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

WELLS.

"God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water."—Gen. 21:19.

"The mouth of a righteous man is a fountain of life."—Prov. 10:11.

Wells and springs are mighty good places to find a wife. I congratulate Isaac in finding Rebecca there, and Jacob finding Rachel. Fights also have taken place at wells. Isaac's servants contended there. But, however that may be, wells in the Bible have come to symbolize God's covenant with His people of renewing strength, of life and health, and purity, of heaven's blessings upon the individual soul.

How may we all find these wells? Hagar found hers by a way of bitterness. So did Jacob. The way to the rose is by the earth, a long black root. The song may be beautiful, but its rhythm comes by a long discipline of a life, and stress of soul. The way to the wells of the Lord sometimes is a desert way, much discipline of conduct, maybe suffering for others.

Prayer.—Our Father in heaven, open our eyes to the fountains of life flowing for us every day. May we drink of these and pass the refreshing along forever. Amen.

TUESDAY.

WHOM DO WE FIND AT GOD'S WELLS.

"Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."—Isa. 55:1.

Not the saved only, but the thirsty ones; not the pure only, but the unclean, longing for cleansing; not the satisfied, but those longing for growth in grace.

Who can sing when clouds hang low? When woes cover them? When fate is cruel? Who can pray when conscience is out of gear? "Come to the fountain; make no delay." He who will, may walk in the comfort of the Holy Spirit, may enjoy conscious fellowship daily with God, will make satisfying discoveries in life's duties, will love folks more, will have inward peace in tribulations. Though in a barren and dry place where no water is, a green place and a spring will be found.

"When the poor and the needy seek water, and there is none, I, the Lord, will hear them; I will open rivers in high places and fountains in the valleys. I will make the wilderness a pool of water and the dry lands springs of water."

Prayer.—Dear Father of love and mercy, give us the refreshing that made our tasks seem light, that revives us when discouraged, and that strengthened us when we are sick, and bears life's burden for us. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

HAVE YOU FORGOT?

"Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but forgot him."—Gen. 40:43.

Think of it. How did he do it? Joseph had been a friend of the butler and interpreted his dream. It was like freeing him from jail, and the butler promised to tell the king about Joseph. But he didn't. Why? Was he too busy? Was he jealous of Joseph? Was he afraid he would lose his own job? Did he fear obligations or did he feel superior and regarding the favor as a matter of course?

One may forget to return a book, or an umbrella, or a pencil, or to write a letter; but when it comes to a kindness like that, it isn't faulty memory. It is pure selfishness or it is thoughtlessness. How often we hear "I didn't think."

We remember the show, but forget the Church. We remember the talk with friends, but we forget to talk with God. We read books, but we forget the Bible. We remember the dance, but we forget the prayer-meeting. We remember the story of Byrd's flight to the north pole, but we forget the story of Jesus. We remember Alexander weeping over the world because he couldn't conquer it, but forget Jesus weeping over it because men would not be saved. We remember Washington at Valley Forge, but we forget Gethsemane.

My! what does it take to make us remember? Bereavements, misfortunes, poverty, or maybe a flower folded in the leaves of a book. But it is a blessed day when we do remember. "This day I remember my fault." It means forgiveness, interest in others, and a place for them and a new joy and new power. Remember Jesus Christ.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

THURSDAY.

DOES TIME MEAN ANYTHING?

"Teach us to number our days."—Psa. 90:12.
"Redeeming the time."—Eph. 5:15-16.

Time is a very fleeting thing. What does it mean to us? We are told that time was so precious to Napoleon that every state and stage of his life had a routine for him from which he never willingly deviated. His motto was, "Use every hour." He told his landlady once that if he spent his time like she wished him to in pursuit of pleasure he would never accomplish anything, or words to that effect. Herein lay his greatness.

When we look back over our past we see how little we have accomplished, how much time has been wasted; and when we understand that every day marks a boundary line of eternity where the human race melts into nothingness—even achievement passes away—it is enough to humble us and make us beg of the Father, "Teach us to number our days," "Redeem our time."

It is not believed that God wishes us to live so seriously. He has set no mark to depress us; but He has arranged that we shall ponder the mysteries of life and use our time wisely.

Prayer.—O Lord, let Thy mercies come unto us, even Thy salvation, day by day, according to Thy word. Amen.

FRIDAY.

REAL VALUES.

"What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

A year is a long time, but a day rushes by so fast that it makes us dizzy. Even the heedless man feels its ebb and flow. We pray for a long life. Ought it not be a deep life? We struggle for material possessions. Ought it not be for the spiritual?

"Live while you live," the motto would say, And seize the pleasure of the present day.
"Live while you live," the preacher cries, And give to God while the moment flies.
Lord, in my view, let both united be,
For my pleasure is when I live for Thee."

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SATURDAY.

THE UNFORGIVING MINUTE.

"A wise man's heart discerneth time."—Eccl. 8:5.

Rudyard Kipling ends his celebrated and inspiring poem "If" with the following lines:

"If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds of distance run,
Yours is the world, and everything that's in it."

Lost minutes have been the cause of more than one man's failure to make a place in the world. Think of the minutes that go empty; think of the time spent waiting for others, either because your day or their day was not rightly planned; think of the time spent trying to recall something because your record was not complete. How much time do we spend in determining what to do next because of no plans. Think of the time thrown away looking for things that ought to be right at hand. Think of the time at actual work, but futile. With all this, reckon the time thrown away in pursuit of wrong ideals, unthinking advice.

The solution is: In all things plan for achievement of value; establish right motives and enforce self-discipline in the pursuit of right ends.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, God our Saviour, give us the simplicity of faith, the liberty of grace and a vision of what we may do and be and wisdom to use our time wisely. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"I HAVEN'T GOT TIME."

"Redeeming the time."—Eph. 5:16.

Suppose you had twenty-five hours every day instead of twenty-four. How much would the twenty-fifth be worth to you? We can never hope for the twenty-fifth hour by having it given to us; but in the light of how we spend the twenty-four, we can take it, if we know how to fill in lost minutes. Many can improve not only one but several hours a day. Darwin said, "A man who dares waste one hour of time has not discerned the value of life."

Can we redeem time? Not that which is lost. That is gone forever.

"Lost one golden minute
Set with sixty diamond seconds;
No reward offered for its return.
Lost forever."

Paul's lost past haunted him to his grave, but he did not dwell upon that—he tried to forget. "Forgetting the things that are behind." To him, to spend his future right was his only redemption, and so intent was he in this that when in jail, chained to a guard, he talked him into becoming a Christian, a prison cell was his pulpit.

Frederick Watt said, "The idea of anything being unfinished today has a dread for me. Something may happen to me before tomorrow."

"For all sad words of tongue or pen,
These are the saddest: it might have been!"

With this goes the following:

"The harvest is past and the summer is ended,
And I am not saved."

Christ said, "It will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorra than for Thee."

Prayer.—Our dear Heavenly Father, inspire in us desire for the best gifts and best values and grant unto us to covet these things and to be diligent day and night in search for Thee. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The board of trustees of the Christian Orphanage held a very interesting and pleasant meeting in its office at the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C., on October 6th. All the members except two were present. Mr. J. M. Darden was elected president of the board to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. W. K. Holt, who had for more than ten years served as president and had given his time and thought so freely for the benefit and upbuilding of the institution that held such a warm place in his heart.

We feel in the election of Mr. Darden that the Orphanage has a friend whose heart is full of love and beats with deepest sympathy for the little fatherless children in this institution. They feel in him they have a warm friend.

The board confirmed its former action in regard to having the charter of the institution amended, giving it the right to elect twelve trustees instead of seven, and the following gentlemen were recommended to the executive board of the Southern Convention for election: L. E. Carlton, Richmond, Va.; A. L. Jolly, Holland, Va.; L. R. Jones, Franklin, Va.; John A. Hall, Burlington, N. C.; W. B. Truitt, Greensboro, N. C. These gentlemen added to the number of the present board will make a fine working body, and we look for the Christian Orphanage, under the management of this board, to go forward in a beautiful way.

The Thanksgiving season will soon be here. Let each Church and Sunday School begin now to plan for a large Thanksgiving offering. We hope to be able to report next week that we are half way to our goal for the year. Then the race will begin in earnest to raise fifteen thousand dollars by the end of the year to push us up to our goal. May the kind Master give us all a vision of the need.

DR. MORRISON SPEAKS TRUTH.

It is a little bit amusing that editors of daily papers, who have shown very little interest in a pure gospel in New Testament teaching should all at once become so deeply concerned that the preachers of the gospel shall confine themselves to the preaching of Christ and Him crucified. Rather than that, they should insist on social purity, civic righteousness, and the leadership and control of public servants who fear God, love humanity, and undertake to direct the affairs of the nation so as to conserve the best interests of the sobriety and prosperity of the people. We are thankful that the time is coming when the preachers of this nation cannot be brow-beaten by back-number ecclesiastics or godless editors. They will not only preach Christ and Him crucified, but they will insist that He was crucified to save men from sin, from selfishness, to make them strong, godly citizens with deep concern for the welfare of their fellows and courageous protest against the liquor traffic, Sabbath desecration, the white-slave traffic, the amassing of vast sums of wealth by the few while multitudes toil in sweat, poverty and disease. Christ was crucified to save humanity from sin, from the slaughter of war, from the blight of strong drink, from the life of greed and selfishness that grinds humanity under the heel of tyranny. Christ was crucified to bring new life into men, new, holy courage into them and make them not only meek and humble, penitents at the foot of His cross, but soldiers girded for battle against the domination of Satan and his servants. It is not worth while for selfish editors and back-number ecclesiastics to be telling the preachers of the gospel that they have no right to protest in the pulpit, on the street, in the family circle, and at the ballot box against the rule, domination and destruction of the liquor traffic. Neither need men undertake to persuade us that we have no privileges as ministers of the gospel to condemn men and political parties that propose to foster and impose upon the people wicked and corrupt government that would again open and impose upon society the saloon with its debauchery and ruin. Let us by all means preach Christ and Him crucified, but let us insist that He was crucified to bring the kingdom of God on earth. It was Jesus that taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as the angels do it in heaven." This simple prayer that Jesus has given us to offer to our Father in heaven is ample warrant for every preacher and all Christians to gird themselves with strength and draw the sword of Almighty God against the liquor traffic in all of its phases and all of such corrupt and destructive organizations as Tammany Hall, in New York City. Men of God, arouse yourselves. Spurn the counsel of those who would command you to keep quiet; ignore the ridicule of godless editors and go forward in this holy war to overthrow wickedness, to rebuke sin, and to bring glory to God, peace on earth, and good will among men. —Pentecostal Herald.

OBITUARIES

KERNODLE.

Mrs. G. W. Kernodle, aged 62 years, died at her home in Washington, D. C., September 26th, following a critical illness of ten days. She underwent an operation two months ago and recovered enough to go home, but complications set in and she grew worse to the end.

She was the daughter of the late Dr. and Mrs. Gaston D. Cobb, of the Shallow Ford section of this county, where she was born and spent her early life. She attended Elon College two years. She was married to Dr. George W. Kernodle in 1891.

Mrs. Kernodle is survived by her husband, Dr. Kernodle; five sons and daughters—Mrs. Roger McDuffie, Greensboro, and Mrs. Roulald McDonald and Mrs. Sam del Vecchio, and Roy and Howard Kernodle, all of Washington—and by one sister and two brothers—Mrs. W. H. McLean, Whitsett; John T. Cobb, Durham, and C. D. Cobb, Tulsa, Okla.

The funeral was conducted by Dr. J. U. Newman, Rev. J. W. Pattou, of Elon College, and Dr. S. B. Turrettine, president of G. F. College, former friend of the deceased. Interment was made in the family plot of the Church cemetery.

She opened her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue was the law of kindness. Her children arise and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her. Give her of the fruit of her own hands, and let her own works praise her. In her home diligent and devoted; in Church, active and faithful; to her friends a true and inspiring companion; in the civic life of her community a leader and a wise counselor.

J. U. NEWMAN.

TUCK.

Mrs. Julia Ann Tuck, daughter of William and Sarah Overly, was born November 25, 1845, and died September 28, 1928; age 82 years, 10 months and 3 days. She was married to Captain Edward A. Tuck on December 20, 1865. Captain Tuck died October 11, 1884. There were born to them thirteen children. Ten of these died young. Those growing to mature years are Sallie, Walter and Arthur. Sister Tuck joined Union Christian Church in early life and was one of the most faithful members till death.

About thirty years ago, when the mining interest of this section was beginning to be developed, she sold the Tuck farm, and has since made her home with her son, Walter, in Virgilina. In my experience I have never known children more devoted to and considerate for every comfort of a parent than those of the deceased. Last November, when she was taken ill, a nurse was secured and remained with her to the end.

Besides the two sons, there are two sisters living, eighteen grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren. The traits that stood out in her life expressive of a real Christian were cheerfulness of spirit, devotion to her family, and deep interest in the welfare of her many friends; and to these is added a strong faith in her Saviour. A short while before the end, she told her son she was ready and willing to go.

The funeral was from the home in Virgilina on the afternoon of September 29th, conducted by the writer and assisted by Rev. E. R. Harris, of the Baptist Church, and Rev. C. L. Morgan, of the M. E. Church. The burial was in the old home cemetery. It is sad when our parents can be with us no more here in person, but it is a cause for gratification when we have their counsel and inspiration through so much of that period of life when the greatest responsibilities are upon us.

C. E. NEWMAN.

HUFFINES.

James David Huffines was born April 5, 1859, and died August 29, 1928; age 69 years, 4 months and 24 days. He was married in June of 1904 to Addie Elizabeth Boone, who, with six children, survive him—G. R., Mrs. J. B. Chrismon, Mazie, Alma Frank, and Fayette. He is also survived by three sisters—Miss Jane Huffines, Mrs. J. M. Rumley and Mrs. J. A. Cook, and other relatives and friends.

He had been a member of Apples Chapel for eleven or twelve years. The burial services were conducted by the writer and pastor.

STEPHENSON—GOODALL.

A most beautiful and impressive marriage was solemnized at the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rivers Goodall, near Bahama, N. C., at high noon on Saturday, September 21st, when Charles H. Stephenson, Jr., led to the altar their daughter, Mabel Duke Goodall. The ceremony was performed out of doors on the terraced lawn and presented a most lovely picture of native and artistic beauty. Rev. Dr. Bradshaw, of Raleigh, a former pastor of the bride, and The Sun's editor, J. O. Atkinson, officiated. The bride was given in marriage by her father. The bride's attendants were Miss Julian McChesney Goodall, of Staunton, Va., maid of honor; Mrs. Louise Rose, of Charlotte, and Mrs. Jesse V. Hundley, of Durham, dames of honor. The groomsmen were Messrs. Billy Caviness and Alfred Mosely, of Raleigh. The ushers were Messrs. Hubert Teer and Alfred Griggs. Many guests, prominent in business and social circles from Raleigh and Durham, attended the marriage. The wedding presents were numerous and costly.

The bride is the granddaughter of the late Washington Duke, and the groom is the son of Mr. Charles H. Stephenson, of the firm of the Stephenson Music Company, of Raleigh, N. C. Immediately after the marriage ceremony, a brief reception was held and refreshments were served, following which the married pair left for New York for a boat trip to Cuba. This young and deservedly popular pair have our heartiest congratulations and best wishes for a long and happy married life. J. O. A.

SMITH—JOYNER.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on August 28th at 5 P. M., in the Christian parsonage at Wakefield, Va., when Miss Susie Maie Joyner became the bride of Mr. Wesley Booker Smith. Mrs. B. H. Laine, of Ivor, Va., presided at the piano and accompanied Miss Mildred Varner, of Ivor, who sang beautifully "I Love You Truly." To the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, the bride and groom entered unattended and took their places before an improvised altar while the ceremony was performed by the writer, using the ring ceremony. Mrs. Laine played "To a Wild Rose" as the recessional.

Miss Joyner is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Joyner, of Zuni, Va. Immediately they left for a motor trip through the Valley of Virginia, after which they will be at home at Ivor, Va., where Mr. Smith is in business. Their many friends wish for them many years of Happiness together.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

THE HEART OF CHRISTIANITY.—

It is a fact not without significance that wherever the gospel of Christ is really apprehended, those who are moved by the spirit of Christ seem impelled to missionary activity. The Chinese Home Missionary Society celebrated its tenth anniversary last September. The members gathered in Shanghai from all over the nation for this celebration. A little group of Chinese Christians felt that they must have a part in carrying the gospel to their fellow-countrymen. The society is now doing effective work in two provinces. The interest has increased until there are 13,000 members of the various auxiliary societies.

RELIGIONS VERSUS WAR.—

In an effort to form an enlightened public sentiment to support the treaty outlawing war, which was recently signed by many of the representative nations of the world, plans are now being formed for a universal peace conference in 1930. A group of churchmen in Geneva, Switzerland, are formulating a committee of one thousand, which is to constitute the nucleus of the movement and complete the organization of the conference. On this committee are representatives from all the notable religious faiths. There are Christians, both Protestant and Catholic, Buddhists, Confucianists, Hindus, Moslems, Jains, Jews, Parsees, Sikhs, Taoists, and other smaller bodies.

CATHOLIC CHURCH WITHOUT POPE.—

The movement to reopen the Catholic Churches of Mexico under control of laymen is referred to on this page. Patriarch Jose Josquin Perez, head of the Mexican Catholic Church, is seeking a solution of the Church problem in Mexico, in another direction. His effort is to establish a Church in Mexico which will have many of the ceremonial characteristics of the Roman Catholic Church, but which will not recognize the authority of the Pope. Patriarch Perez claims to have already mobilized a following of 370,000 members. He is endeavoring to carry his idea throughout the entire Mexican nation. If the proposed plan should become effective, Mexico would have a Catholic Church without "entangling allegiances."

CATHOLIC CHURCH IN MEXICO.—

For the past two years the Catholic Churches of Mexico have been closed by order of the government. In 1926 certain laws were passed regulating the management of Catholic Churches in the republic. The clergy refused to comply with the requirements, and as a result the Churches were closed and many priests were ordered to leave the country. Former President Calles recently issued a decree permitting the reopening of the Churches. Local committees of laymen are in control of the Churches and are held responsible for observing the laws relating to the Church. Among the first official announcements of the new President, Emilio Portes Gill, was one to the effect that the Cathedral of Mexico City is to be reopened. "Three reputable Catholic laymen" will administer the services of the Cathedral, and only lay services will be held.

THE CHURCH IN FIGURES.—

Those who place their hope in statistics will be cheered by the report of the United States Department of Commerce that its census of religious bodies reveals an increased Church membership of 12,698,122 in the decade between 1916 and 1926. It is less cheering that this membership is scattered through 213 different denominations. These divisions range all the way from the Theosophical Society of New York, with one Church and fifty-five members, to the Roman Catholic Church with 18,940 Churches and 18,605,003 members.

Baptist bodies, taken as a whole, ranked next in size to the Roman Catholic Church, having a membership of 8,440,922 in 1926, as against 7,153,313 in 1916. Nine Presbyterian groups number 2,555,626 in 1926, as compared with 2,255,626 in 1916. Methodists embracing nineteen different groups, had a total membership in 1926 of 8,070,619, as against 7,165,573 in 1916.

The value of Church edifices in 1926 amounted to $3,842,577,133. The total in 1916 was $1,676,600,582. Total Church expenditures in 1926 was $814,371,529, as against $328,809,999 in 1916.—The Christian Herald.

RELIGION FOR PHILADELPHIA.—

For some weeks the newspapers have been chronicling the efforts of the mayor of Philadelphia to clean up the city. Much publicity was given to his order to all officials charged with the responsibility of law enforcement to arrest every crook and criminal in the city within twenty-four hours. The mayor also has his own ideas as to the part that religion can play in such a task. He said: "Billy Sunday is needed in Philadelphia at this particular time more than any other man. I hope that he can so arrange his affairs that he can come and give us a great spiritual revival." The mayor seems to have a sublime faith in Mr. Sunday's ability and methods. We will pass over the question as to whether Mr. Sunday or any other man for that matter can give to a city like Philadelphia a great spiritual revival. It takes more than a revival to make a city what it ought to be. It is a task for hundreds of Churches and thousands of consecrated Christians working year in and year out, preaching a gospel of salvation, teaching the children and youth the fundamental principles of morality and righteousness, and holding up constantly before all men examples for sacrificial service.

THE ENGLISH PRAYER-BOOK.—

To many American Protestants it seemed a strange procedure when they learned that the revision of the Book of Common Prayer must be submitted to the House of Commons for ratification. For years there had been agitation among the leaders of the Church of England for a revision of the prayer-book. There had been no revision since the book was compiled, in 1662. The Church decided upon a revision. The best-informed minds of the Church were appointed to the task. Many long months were spent in the work of revision. When it was completed it was submitted to the House of Commons for ratification, as is required by English law. The House of Commons rejected the revised form. The House of Bishops of the Church of England has ruled that the forms provided in the revision may be used by the Church, and that such use cannot be regarded as "inconsistent with loyalty to the principles of the Church." One wonders what the next move will be in the face of this anomalous situation. There are those who think that the present disagreement between the officials of Church and State may mark the first step toward the disestablishment of the Church of England.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY DENIED.—

"Government employees in the Philippines are expressly prohibited from engaging in active religious affairs. There is a particular setting for this restriction, for the State Church of the Spanish regime merited definite restrictions, but religious freedom is too precious to be sacrificed upon any altar. The Constitution of the United States covers the Philippines and must be made effective there.

"This is the clause in the manual governing federal employees in the Far East to which we take exception, against which we protest:

"Government employees may attend Church and worship as they please, but they are not permitted to engage in religious activities which involve proselytizing or active direction of religious affairs or religious teaching." The enforcement of this section of the civil service manual has deprived at least one Church of its Sunday School superintendent, its Christian Endeavor president, and three of its best Bible teachers.

"In this amazing situation are found the beginnings of far-reaching and vital evils. Missionary boards and educational committees should lose no time in carrying their protests to Governor Stimson, who, as the Christian Endeavor World has remarked, very likely knows nothing at all about the offending matter."—Stanley High.

NOTES-PERSONALS

While Churches are planning for the next Conference year, and some are making up their budgets, let none forget that all Churches, including what the Sunday School donates, are requested and urged to give one-third as much for missions (home and foreign) as they pay their pastors.

Rev. Lee House, a graduate of Duke University and now doing post-graduate work there, will be glad to serve any Churches within reach of Durham needing his services. Bro. House is a capable and competent man and is well equipped for pastoral duties. His address is Duke University, Durham, N. C.

We note with deep regret and solicitude that Bro. M. Orban, Jr., Whittier, Calif., owing to impaired health, was unable to attend the recent session of the General Board meeting, Dayton, Ohio, last week and felt compelled to resign his membership in the board. We sincerely trust his recovery will be speedy and complete.

Dr. Jas. H. Lightbourne, pastor First Christian Church, Troy, Ohio, is in the midst of a building program for his Church. An elaborate three-story addition is to be made at a cost of $37,500. This addition is to be a modern and adequate equipment for Christian education, and when completed will give Troy one of the most complete Church plants to be found anywhere.

Without change, we are giving SUN readers the latest message from Mrs. D. P. Barrett about conditions in Porto Rico. We trust every SUN reader will take to heart this letter. Five pictures were enclosed, but we haven't the time and the money now necessary to get these in this issue. If one means ever to help Porto Rico, now is the time. Read for yourself and judge.

Three young men were ordained as elders in the Alabama Conference last week, namely: Revs. Joe French, Carl Dollar and Staley Hunt. All three are graduates of Elon College and are well equipped for preaching and pastoral duties. The Churches of the Alabama Conference will act wisely to give them work and keep them busy within their own Conference, if possible.

Bro. O. H. Lambeth, secretary of our recently built Church, Biscoe, N. C., and Bro. W. H. Freeman, Star, N. C., secretary of Ether Church, are very anxious for a strong and capable man to locate at Biscoe or Ether and serve a pastorate of five Churches accessible to either place named. Bro. Lambeth and Bro. Freeman invite correspondence immediately with a capable and consecrated man who is willing to move to this field and give the work his full time. It is a very inviting field and one full of opportunity for service and for growth.

Rev. S. M. Lynam writes from Freehold, N. Y., October 8th: "We are happily located here at the Freehold Church. It is the only Church in the community and offers a splendid opportunity, I think, for community service through the Church. The people have been doing considerable work on the parsonage for us, and in many other ways have made our stay among them thus far a most pleasant one. Mrs. Lynam, after six months away from all responsibility, is again in her home here much improved in health but by no means strong enough to do her usual work."

Bro. Hernon Eldredge, Dayton, Ohio, so well known throughout the Churches as Sunday School and Christian Endeavor worker and writer, becomes managing editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty January 1st, President W. A. Harper of Elon College, and Dr. W. P. Minton, Secretary Foreign Missions, Dayton, becoming associate editors. Dr. Alvah H. Kerr remains editor, and owing to poor health is to be responsible only for the 'editorials and trend of events,' Miss Genoa Wheatley, editorial assistant, becoming secretary to the managing editor, all by decision of the General Board in recent session at Dayton.

There are yet four Conferences of the Southern Convention to hold their annual sessions. These are in the center of the territory covered by the Convention. It is up to them, in the main, to make effective the resolutions of the recent Convention. Funds are needed for the various enterprises and departments of Church work. Information is to be disseminated. We have no means other than personal appeal and our Church organ. The circulation manager has made appeals by personal effort and through THE SUN for subscribers. The editors are giving the Church a paper equal to the best. It now remains to be circulated.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be in every home. We figure we have five thousand homes in the Southern Christian Convention not taking THE SUN. If we could get a copy in each home, that would give us five thousand subscribers for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and then we could pay as we go. The circulation manager has offered to make the pastor of any Church a Christmas present of a $10 Stetson hat if the Church and Sunday School will send us ten new subscribers and ten renewals, with a check for $40. Let every Church in the Southern Convention make it possible for us to make every pastor happy on Christmas morning. Get busy now. Send us the names and addresses and mark each "renewal" or "new" subscriber and we will send official receipt.—Chas. D. Johnston, Circulation Mgr., Elon College, N. C.

Fifty years of active service in the ministry is somewhat of an exceptional record. Few men are thus privileged. Dr. David M. Helfenstein, pastor of the Christian Church at Lewisburg, Pa., was licensed to preach by the Union Christian Conference of Iowa fifty-one years ago. One year later he was ordained by the same Conference, which Conference celebrated at its last session its fiftieth anniversary of Dr. Helfenstein's ordination. In all those years of service in the kingdom, this servant of God has been so blessed with health and strength that he has missed only three appointments during the fifty years, and is promoting an active program at the present time in the Church of which he has been pastor the past four years.

THE PREACHER IN HIS PULPIT.

By REV. G. H. VEAZEY.

(An address before the Ministerial Association at Roanoke, Ala.)

The pulpit may be the center of overwhelming power, and it may be the scene of tragic disaster. What is the significance of our calling when we stand in the pulpit? It is our God-appointed office to lead men and women who are wayward, exultant or depressed, eager or indifferent, into "the secret place of the Most High." We are to help the sinful to the fountain of cleansing. We are to help the sad into the sunshine of grace. We are to help to redeem the strong from the atheism of despair. We are to help the little children to see the glorious attractiveness of God, and we are to help the aged to realize the encompassing care of the Father and the assurance of the eternal home.

We may not be able to command intellectual power. We may never astound men by a display of cleverness, or by massive argumentative structures compel their admiration, but with the power and means that are ours we can build a plain, simple, honest altar, and we can invoke and secure the sacred fire. If we can never be great in the pulpit we can be prayerfully ambitious to be pure, and sincere, and void of offense.

One weakness of the pulpit is too often this: we are prone to drift through a service when we ought to steer. Too often we are out on the ocean sailing, but we have no destination, we are out for anywhere and for nowhere in particular.

Irreverence emerges when there is no sense of "the high calling." Unless we see "the Lord high and lifted up," irreverent and disorderly things will appear in our conduct of the service. We cannot keep them out. The first necessity to a refined pulpit ministry is reverence, and if we are to be reverent our eyes must be stayed upon "the King in His beauty."

One great cause of the weakness that is exemplified in the pulpit today is the lack of private prayer. Men never learn to pray in public. They learn in private. One man said to me once "If you want to preach a real good sermon, spend more time in prayer than in all other preparation." If we are never in Gethsemane when alone we shall not find our way there with the crowd. When we are in our pulpits we should regard our prayers as essentials and not the preliminaries of the service.

We may often chill the entire service by the Scripture lesson and the way we read it. Too frequently the Scripture lesson is just something to be "got through." No careful and diligent work is given to its choice.

In all our preaching we must preach for verdicts. We must present our case. We must seek a verdict, and we must ask for immediate execution of the verdict. We are not in the pulpit to please the fancy. We are not there even to inform the mind, or to disturb the emotions, or to sway the judgment. These are only preparatives along the journey. Our ultimate object is to move the will, to set it in another course, to increase its pace, and to make it sing in the ways of "God's commandments." Yes, we are there to bring the wills of men into tune with the will of God, in order that God's statutes may become their songs. It is a blessed calling, frowning with difficulty, beset with disappointments, but its real rewards are "sweeter than the honey and the honeycomb." There is no joy on earth comparable to his who has gone out with the Shepherd, striding over the exposed mountains, and through deep valleys of dark shadows, seeking His sheep that was lost; no joy, I say, comparable to his when the sheep is found, and the Shepherd lays it on his shoulder rejoicing, and carries it home to the fold. "Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep which was lost!" And every one who has shared in the toil of the seeking shall also share in the joy of the finding.

I cannot conceive of a pulpit that is used as a place of theatrical performances as being pleasing in the sight of Him who gave His own life's blood to exalt it as a means of winning lost souls to eternal life. However, some men have succeeded in the ministry that have made a practice of performing such stunts, but I really believe they would have accomplished far more for the kingdom on earth if they had exalted the pulpit in a more sacred way.

May God help us to realize the great responsibility that is placed upon us, and keep everything out of our pulpit that does not glorify Him.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

GOD'S GOODNESS AND CARE.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

"They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing."—Psa. 34:10.

"There is no want to them that fear Him."—Psa. 34:9.

"The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want."—Psa. 23:1.

"Oh, taste and see that the Lord is good. Blessed is the man that trusteth in Him."—Psa. 34:8.

The four above texts today all express thoughts of God's care for His own.

If you cannot remember them all, two of them you can; they are the first and the third. "They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing," and "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall never want."

There is no single passage so great, none that does so much, none that reaches so far as these. By them the sorrowful have been cheered, the troubled found peace, prisoners have sung them and felt free, the homeless have repeated them and felt content, and the weak and fainting have leaned upon them and been refreshed. All doubtings, and fears and questionings—the whole black brood of unbelief—have been chased away by them like the shades of night by the morning star. They have brought calm to wounded spirits and fired many a soul with inspiration to suffer anything in order to be right and to live lives guided by His will. They are rightly called "pearls," whose radiance delights every eye and whose worth is too wondrous for mortals to grasp, and they bespeak experience too high for us to climb; and yet in spite of all that, in them is a vision and an experience of God's goodness and care that blesses every one who does what our fourth text says, "taste and see."

The first thing good for us in this Scripture is the fact of the Lord. Each text says, "The Lord." The Lord who is described as a Shepherd to us, like a shepherd over his sheep. That means, fellows, that we have a Providence who cares for us as closely and as carefully as you care for your locker. It means that this overseeing Providence pulses within us with pure generous love and not a one escapes His attention. It means that He is acquainted with everything that concerns us and that He understands our desires better than we do ourselves. It means that He is with us in trouble and will never leave us flat. It means that He provides a way of escape from every temptation. It means that "He is good to all and His tender mercies are over all His works."

The second blessing for us is this: The possibility of making the grade, or appropriating heaven's blessings to us in a way that we may say we actually possess them.

We can do things mentally, intellectually, and lay hold on truth anywhere, but that does not satisfy. In fact, to accept God and Christianity merely as an intellectual exercise, we reap disappointment. Our mentality will not carry us. The highest reach of Christian experience is to lay hold of truth that fits our own hearts; that fits in the things with which we have to do. This interest is essential to personal character.

It is recommended that one of the finest spiritual exercises one ever did is to take the Bible and read, looking for all the "me's," "my's," and "mine's." One soon finds that all is his for the asking—God in possession.

The third gold mine here is God's goodness and care. "I shall not want." "Shall not want," which means we shall "lack nothing."

Of course, we all understand that this life, however much it may be a Divine plan, is not all roses. There are dry places, deserts, misfortunes, calamities, pestilence, famine, hurricanes and devastations, homeless and starving people. In these it is hard for us to see that "He knoweth our frame" and that He is providing for His own. We are even tempted to doubt God's goodness and believe that Christianity commands no reward. Is this so? Is it not rather true that we have failed to bring our ideas to where God is and where He can give us the light. God has not said that He will supply our every desire (though there is a passage which says He will "give us the desires of our hearts"); but He has promised to give us our needs, and that He will be with us in all troubles, and if we trust in Him He will reveal Himself to us, make us content and give us a happiness that transcends the happiness of the world where our desires may be centered.

Now, how are we going to find Him? "Taste and see."

There is none of us but every day are reminded that we need wiser and more certain counsel and guidance than ourselves. From childhood to death, if we are to know something further on and higher up—know truth—we must have a greater counsel. Thus from the first, when we give ourselves to learning something we desire or which we are told will be good for us, it may be said that we are tasting and seeing.

If we are ever to know God in the simplest or the highest that He is, we must taste—try Him. Much of life is unintelligible, self-contradictory and miserable, from which there is no relief nor end, and we say, "Show me." God answers that prayer by saying, "Taste and see." "Try me." Some one said, "The proof of the pudding is the eating."

Like everything, the secret of knowing is experience. We shall never know repentance until we try it. We shall never know purity until we try it. We cannot know what a Christian is until we try it. Thanks be, that millions have tried it and set the seal on it that God is faithful. And this blessing is for all without distinction or exception. The invitation is, "Whosoever will."

And still one inquires, "How shall I taste?" This is how: "Keep thy tongue from evil and thy lips from speaking guile. Depart from evil and do good. Seek peace and pursue it." Therefore, we find that it is all up to us. We may experience the best by living up to the highest and best we know; but may experience the good by living the opposite of the bad. To be bad is to know the right and the good and not do it. "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Try this, and when temptation, or doubting, or questioning God, say, "God is goodness," "The kingdom of God is righteousness," and immediately it will become unthinkable that God can be bad, or that one can go bad by following Him. And the most satisfying result will be that He is not only good, but that His goodness is all around us like the sea—like the sunshine, and that we walk through it every minute breathing and living upon it.

Finally, all the goodness of God is summed up in Jesus Christ whom we are asked to follow. Ordinarily we take our standards of right and wrong from ourselves, from customs and maxims, from decrees of laws and courts; but Jesus has been given us as the supreme example and the embodiment of God's goodness.

This means that to try to be a Christian means that besides being virtuous we must possess an enthusiasm for goodness. Besides abstaining from sin, we are to regard vicious thought with horror; and no ordinary ethics of ourselves can reach this ideal—not even attempt it.

When Jesus said, "Blessed are ye if ye know these things and do them," He referred to the pure heart, to that honesty which keeps a man out of jail, to a kindness which makes men lovable and life tolerable—that shapes men's thoughts for the higher and the better. And the only reason we fail to see God's care in life is because we are continually forsaking Him and His way and clinging to our own. We are to come into an understanding of God by engaging in habits of worthiness, trust and love, spent in an obedience to His will, then we cannot fail to know Him, we cannot fail to be happy, and if there are hard places we shall be happy still in the assurance that we have tried and not found Him wanting.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

I am very sorry you could not stay for our Conference. It was the best one I have ever attended. We had the best representation that I have ever seen, and they all manifested a great interest in the proceedings. Rev. G. D. Hunt was elected president, G. H. Veazey was elected secretary, and J. W. Payne treasurer.

Among our visiting representatives were Miss Pattie Coghill, secretary of religious education for the Southern Christian Convention; C. D. Johnston, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C.; Revs. H. W. Elder, J. D. Dollar, of the Georgia and Alabama Conference; Dr. Neil McQuarrie, superintendent of Congregational Churches in Georgia, Alabama and Florida; D. D. Bailey, of the M. E. Church; Rev. T. W. and H. M. Gray were with us the second day. I have never seen business transacted in a more harmonious way. We had some very able discussions, especially on the report of education and home mission.

One interesting feature of the program was the Tuesday evening service. Thirty minutes of this service were devoted to singing, after which Dr. Neil McQuarrie delivered a very able and inspiring sermon on "The New Day."

Joe French, Carl Dollar and Staley Hunt were ordained to the full work of the gospel ministry. Roy Walker was licensed as a probationer.

While the report on Christian education was pending, there was an offering taken for Piedmont Junior College that amounted to $112 cash and subscriptions. The Christian Endeavor Societies and the missionary societies and the Sunday Schools pledged most of this. A new day is beginning in the Alabama Christian Conference. As soon as the young people come into possession of finance, they will finance the kingdom.

We made one forward step, I think. We adopted a resolution to hold a pastors' and laymen's conference every fifth Sunday. This will be a co-operative movement within both the Alabama and the Georgia and Alabama Conferences, and we feel that it will help to promote Christ's spirit in our actions.

We appreciate more than we can express our heartfelt thanks for the able assistance rendered by Miss Pattie Coghill and Dr. Neil McQuarrie, and trust that they shall be with us one year hence.

The next session of Conference will meet with the Church at Wadley.

Fraternally yours,
Roanoke, Ala. G. H. VEAZEY.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

ALABAMA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE

The women of the Alabama Woman's Conference have not achieved as large total results as those achieved in some of our larger Conferences, but no Conference has developed a finer spirit of devotion and co-operation, and certainly no Conference is working with more energy and consecration to achieve than are the women of this one. Their total membership is not large, and their societies thus far are not numerous, but they are working with singleness of purpose and a desire to achieve that will not let them fail. This year they had set as their goal $500. It is seldom one sees such joy in any Conference as was evident here on all sides when the treasurer made her report, showing the goal had been reached. The fact is, their societies had really raised far more than this amount, possibly two or three times as much, but local demands were pressed upon them and their efforts and gifts, in large measure, were diverted from the aims and ends of missionary societies as such, to the ends and aims of aid societies or local Church societies for the benefit of the local Church. A society working in the local Church, for the sole benefit of the local Church, to buy something for the use and benefit of the local Church is a praiseworthy and commendable society, but in so far as it confines its gifts and its efforts to the local Church, it is not a missionary society at all—it is a Church aid society. It is buying something or doing something for itself and its own community and not "sending" (the fundamental idea in missions) out the benefits and blessings for the benefit and blessing of others. This idea will correct itself in time, and it will then be seen what results these good women have achieved and are achieving.

The Conference at Spring Hill Church, near Lineville, this year was far and away the best Conference so far held since the organization was effected and the work begun only a few years ago.

Mrs. W. M. Melton, Wadley, Ala., is president and carries into her work both well-directed energy and consecrated wisdom. Her annual message to the Conference was a clarion call to service and enthusiasm for the great cause the Conference represents. All the addresses, in fact, on the part of the women participating were well prepared and beautifully presented. The following program was executed to the delight and edification of the large audience present for the day (Saturday, October 13, 1928): Song; Scripture reading, by Mrs. L. H. Liles; prayer, by Mrs. J. H. Lee; welcome address, Mrs. Ida Phillips; response, Mrs. J. H. Swint; president's address, Mrs. William Melton; message from Porto Rico; address, J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary; offering for Porto Rican rebuilding fund. One hour for a sumptuous luncheon. The afternoon was a young people's program: Scripture, by Miss Ione Young; prayer, by Miss Ruby Orr; missionary education for intermediates, by Miss Margaret Hood; "How Young People's Societies are Helpful," by Miss Eunice Stephens; "How to Keep the Interest of Our Missionary Societies Twelve Months of the Year," Miss Lois McCormick; "How to Stimulate Interest in Our Societies," by Miss Nellie Rae Sledge. Business session. Adjournment.

Several pastors were present and spoke words of encouragement and appreciation of the great work that Conference is doing. It was a glorious day spent in a good and glorious work. J. O. A.

FINANCE OF THE KINGDOM.

The most universal necessity and the most difficult solution of such necessity is the question of money. There are two methods of meeting this universal demand for money, both in private life and in public institutions. The one method is the cash method and the other is the credit system. In the matter of conducting Church enterprises the credit system is used in large measure; and in great corporation and government it is also used. Railroads sell stock, issue bonds, and then undertake to earn money to pay dividends and interest to bondholders and stockholders. The government has the advantage of corporations by having the authority to levy taxes upon the property of the State or nation. Private individuals have no resource for meeting obligations beyond earning capacity or income from investments. The only safe way for the individual is cash payments or, which is the same thing, pay as you go.

But the financial problems that concerns many people are Church problems. It is one of the serious things, at the present time, that so many Church boards are in debt with nothing in sight to meet payments. Boards of missions, education, publications, go beyond their available means in their anxiety to further the interests of the Church. Their hope goes beyond their judgment. The heart of the Church is often larger than the head of the Church. They have more love than wisdom. It requires both to keep the work going. When anxiety goes beyond sound judgment, the debt increases until the work lags or ceases. This sometimes arises out of lack of experience. It is easy to imagine that ministers and their congregations will respond to liberal calls to support worthy enterprises; but experience often contradicts estimates. The Christian Church faces just such a condition at the present time, and it will require instruction, prayer, faith in God and in enterprises, and a spiritual appeal to members of the Church to work out of debt and get on a sound financial basis to keep the enterprises from suffering or, worse, failure. The individual membership of the Churches must be brought to a deeper sense of their financial obligation to support all of the Church enterprises; and boards must reach a position of wise judgment and not plan and ask for more than can be secured willingly from the people. It is folly to multiply organizations and overhead expenses faster than people can be educated into a personal sense of financial obligation. Churches can do more than they are now doing, but the process is more of education than a demand upon them. Ministers need more loyalty to God and causes that require support, that their ministry may be for the kingdom.

REPORT OF DEPT OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

The object of this department is to build up and to strengthen the spiritual life of the membership of our missionary organizations and to provide devotional programs for monthly meetings. To that end, definite prayer and Bible study are recommended, forming prayer bands, with prayer lists and a prayerful definite study of God's Holy Word. As a result there will be an increasing number of tithers and family altars.

Granted that spiritual life is one of the fundamental principles of mission work, then the degree of spirituality possessed by the membership individually will decide in a very marked way the success attained by missionary organizations along this line of Christian work.

Prayer: Prayer and Bible study are closely linked together. Through prayer we are given a clearer vision of God's will concerning His Church, and wisdom to put into execution just what He would have us do as missionary organizations. For what should we pray? Jesus said unto His disciples, "The harvest truly is plentiful, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth laborers into His harvest." The psalmist says, "O Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee will all flesh come." We are to "pray without ceasing, continuing instant in prayer." A willingness on the part of our Heavenly Father to hear prayer and bestow good gifts is shown in Matt. 7:11: "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good gifts to them that ask Him." Again, "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you."

Bible study: Of all the thousands upon thousands of books that have been written and are existent, the Bible occupies a supreme position from the very first word of Genesis to the very last word of Revelation it is the inspired Word of God. May we pass on to you this tribute to the Bible: "This Book contains the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners and the happiness of believers. Its doctrines are holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. It contains light to direct you and joy to comfort you. Read it to be wise, believe it to be safe and practice it to be holy. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's charter. Christ is its grand theme, our good its aim, and the glory of God its end. Read it slowly, frequently, prayerfully. It should fill the memory, rule the heart and direct the steps. It is a mine of wealth, a paradise of glory and a river of pleasure. It is given to us in life, will be open at the judgment, and will be remembered forever. It involves the highest responsibility, rewards the greatest labor and condemns all who trifle with its contents."

The tithe—God's tenth: After earnest prayer and study of God's word, it should be brought home very forcibly to the hearts and minds of the membership of the various missionary organizations, the vast importance of stewardship. We are agreed that the tenth is the very minimum of our monetary obligation to our Lord. The women of the Church are called upon to bring our people to a realization of this fact, that God has a claim upon them; that we are accountable to Him for the use made of our lives, time, talents and money—a wonderful opportunity is ours, in the home with the family, in the Church with its activities, and in private with friends.

If our women will render unto God just acknowledgment of His universal ownership and prove it by returning to Him at least a tithe of their material possessions, the Church will move forward with a mighty force for righteousness—mission secretaries and missionaries will not have to plead for the necessary funds to carry on their work of the Lord at home and abroad.

The theme for our meeting today is "Self-denial." After we have prayed as Jesus bid His disciples pray that laborers be sent, that the way be made clear, and wisdom be granted us, dare we withhold that which rightfully belongs to God? After all, it is not self-denial, it is a supreme pleasure and privilege we may enjoy in having a part in the advancement of Christ's kingdom on earth.

"We give Thee but Thine own,
Whate'r the gift may be;
All that we have is Thine alone—
A trust, O Lord, from Thee.

"May we Thy bounties thus
As stewards true receive,
And gladly as Thou blessest us
To Thee our first fruits give."

Family altar: And lastly let us consider for a moment the family altar. We fear there is a sentiment that the family altar is out of date, quite old-fashioned, that there is not time amid the hurry and rush in this year of our Lord 1928 for a devotional period in the home. In Jer. 10:25 we read, "Pour out Thy fury upon the heathen that know Thee not, and upon the families that call not upon Thy name."

"To the Christian home, heaven looks for its citizens and earth for its safety. The Christian home does not neglect its children, does not spoil its youth, lays no foundation for a misspent life. The Christian home is the safeguard for the Christian Sabbath, the support and strength of the Christian Church."

And now we trust we have made the object of this department quite clear—to strengthen and make more abundant the spiritual life of our women through prayer and Bible study; stimulate the interest in monthly meetings; increase funds and build up Christian homes.

While the department is comparatively new—just two years since it was adopted by the Southern Christian Convention Woman's Board—progress has been made and all the societies reporting this year show a gain over last year. We close with the words of Mary Schaeffler Platt: "And will you, my sisters in the Master's service, join me in this task of learning how we may bring to the feet of that dear Master in days to come a fuller, more complete report concerning the work which He has entrusted to us. Together, let us step out into the future with courage and with great love and a steadfast faith, for, for it is the way the Master trod, should not the servant tread it still?"

Respectfully submitted,
MRS. W. H. CARROLL.

DISASTER IN PORTO RICO.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

A number of letters received this A. M. compel me to put aside all other duties and write. Mail for the States will leave tomorrow, and there are many dear friends who have written to know of our welfare and that of the mission in general.

First of all, let me say that Miss Adams, our native workers, and we, the Barrett family, have been saved all physical suffering, and at present writing we are all well and busy, though heavy-hearted. I may repeat some of the things you already know; if so, please pardon.

Generally speaking, according to Governor Towner's report during the first days after the cyclone, half of the island's inhabitants were without homes, making 700,000 homeless. On the island there were about 350 killed and many wounded. I have sent our daily papers to Palmer and cannot give exact numbers.

Wednesday A. M. interruptions brought my time down to almost nothing for finishing this, and now the mail schedule is changed until the railway can be used all the way to San Juan, which makes our time shorter for writing. I'll not try to get this ready for SUN. Will just jot down a few facts and you please make them presentable and readable for our folks. Pallie is busy with annual report to board and has left this to me. Our folks everywhere have been most kind, and yesterday's mail alone brought twelve letters of inquiry.

Porto Rico, as you know, is directly in the path of the tropical storms which frequently devastate all. It is said that years ago the inhabitants contemplated deserting the island on account of them. But its beauty, richness of soil and delightful climate have held man and he has faced danger many times to stay. Since 1515, history has registered forty-one cyclones counted among the six worst is the one of San Felipe, which swept over the island on September 13th, lasting almost forty-eight hours. The barometric pressure lowered to 27.89, and the force of the wind broke all instruments in the San Juan weather bureau. The papers stated the last record was over 130 miles per hour. They calculate it reached between 150 and 160 when at its worst. Here is our personal experience. On Wednesday, the 12th, a cyclone was announced to be approaching Porto Rico rapidly. The mayor of Ponce announced that if it proved true he would have the fire alarm sounded so the public could prepare to meet it. Near night the doleful sound of the siren sounded, carrying terror to many hearts, especially to those who remembered the awful cyclone of San Ciriaco in August, 1899. Such preparations as nailing up windows and doors, buying extra food, and those who live near the river prepared to watch through the night. Many did not retire. The night passed quietly, and morning broke with a calm, if not rosy, sky. People went about their affairs with anxious faces, children flocked to school as usual, but before their first class was scarcely begun the principals of the schools were advised to dismiss immediately because the storm was coming rapidly. The wind rose, clouds looked threatening. All through the morning there was an unusual stir in the elements and excitement mixed with anxiety governed the town as a whole, trees swayed, bent and finally fell (five came down in our yard). The wind blew terrifically for a while, then a short calm, seemingly gathering fresh strength for the awful things it did. About 5 P. M. there was a calm and my husband hurried up to see if the Ponce Church still stood. All was well, though the brick wall dividing the yard and next property was down. It was with difficulty he returned, for the wind rose again, filling the air with zinc from roofs, limbs of trees, etc., as earlier. There was no more calm until 2 o'clock in the morning, when it quieted sufficiently to justify a relaxation of nerves. Two of the family were in bed with the flu, but the other three passed a wakeful night, not thinking of undressing and lying down to sleep. By Friday morning the worst was over, though the sky was still gray and angry-looking. Thankful indeed for the Father's wonderful mercy, but most anxious for news of workers and friends everywhere, though no news came, all means of communications being cut off. We got in the mission car and rode about town, down to the port and no more, for the roads and many streets were filled with fallen trees and debris. The chapel in Clausells was badly damaged. The beautiful little Methodist Church in the Playa was ruined, the roof of the Baptist Church in town badly damaged, and one window blown out of M. E. Church in town. The United Brethren and Christian Churches of Ponce stood unhurt. There were no deaths among our members, and only five in Ponce district, which consists of 77,000 inhabitants.

The beautiful, tree-lined roads leading into the hills looked like jungles, and it was necessary to literally cut your way through telephone, telegraph posts and wires, trees, branches, zinc, parts of houses made one vast tangle everywhere; as a friend expressed it, "It looks as if some demon had passed, leaving all the destruction he possibly could in his wake"—and so it really was. We had not recovered from all the damage done by swollen river and wind here in Ponce when news began to come from nearby towns, brought by those who came afoot; by Saturday we learned of damage done in nearest towns. Ponce's mayor, wishing to communicate with Governor Towner in San Juan, did so by cable sent via New York.

Sunday P. M. we attempted to go to Salinas, going by way of Juana Díaz. We reached Arus without difficulty, though the river was still a raging torrent. Our chapel there lost half of its roof and one end is badly damaged. The river had washed through that village, up into houses over five feet above ground, and everybody was busy trying to clean and dry their houses and belongings. We visited among the people. There had been no deaths, but much damage to property. We started on to Santa Isabel, but about one mile this side of Santa Isabel River we came to a washout in road; about twenty feet of the road was gone, making further progress impossible. Nothing to do but return to Ponce, badly impressed with the scenes of destruction, misery and poverty on all sides.

By Friday, September 21st, we could get through to Salinas, so we started again, reaching Santa Isabel without delay, saw Bro. Placido Vazquez, pastor, learned from him that there were no deaths but much damage to property. Five large windows of our Santa Isabel Church were blown in. Many people took refuge in the Church during the storm. Trees in the yard were down. We passed on through, and there was much damage to property; no water and no lights in town. On we went toward Salinas, and things grew worse, with many poor homes only a pile of debris, and some houses partly gone were still inhabited.

Beyond Arus is La Playita, the little fishing village where poverty and sin are evident on all sides and where we have held services for years. At present we have a rented house for services which is occupied now by families who lost their homes. Those straw huts were just heaps of ruin. Two large stores were masses of ruin. I haven't words to describe it. The river had swept through Salinas, carrying houses, trees, debris and some people on to death and destruction. We left the car on this side and went across in a truck, and part of the bank of river and paved street had been washed away. Salinas was just a little south to the direct path of storm and suffered more than any other part of our field. A number of houses in one poor section were washed away, one containing a family of seven, all lost. There were seventeen deaths in the town. We walked on into town, noting destruction on all sides. On to our Church, which is built of cement block, and is

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A dinner was served for the General Board of the Christian Church and the Christian Churches of Dayton and vicinity at the Y. M. C. A., on Wednesday evening, October 17, 1928, 6 to 8. A regular menu of chicken croquette, buttered potatoes, creamed gravy, green beans, perfection salad, hot rolls and butter, jelly, coffee or milk, ice cream and sliced peaches was served. Two hundred and forty-three persons enjoyed the Christian fellowship and the meal together.

The Trotwood Christian Church orchestra furnished music for the occasion, and Dr. F. G. Coffin presided and presented the speakers at the close of the dinner. Mr. O. S. Walker, president of the Dayton Association of Christian Churches, presented the greeting of the Dayton Churches, and Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, N. C., gave the response.

Dr. Coffin requested a lady to gather of the roses that decorated the tables, at the close of the meeting, and carry them to Rev. Alva M. Kerr, editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, who is confined to his home in a critical condition. The sympathy of the great audience for Dr. Kerr was as beautiful and sweet as the flowers.

Rev. J. G. Truitt, the new pastor of the First Christian Church of Dayton, was introduced and made a timely address on "A Newcomer's Impression of Dayton as a Field for the Christian Church." Miss Hazel Davis, of Shiloh Church, sang a solo, accompanied by Miss Iona Trotwine on the piano.

Dr. L. E. Smith, of Norfolk, Va., was introduced and spoke on "The value of Working Together." After his good address, the Amphion male quartet sang two pieces that provoked applause.

Dr. Omar S. Thomas then delivered an address historic and inspiring in its bearing upon the interest of Christian Churches in Dayton and its vicinity. This was followed by an address by Hermon Eldredge on "How We Live Together at the Headquarters Building." It illustrated Christian unity in its co-operation of minds and lives that differ in doing kingdom work.

A trombone solo was rendered and Miss Ruth Bullock accompanied the player on the piano. The male quartet rendered more numbers, to the delight of the audience. The Amphion male quartet was from the First Church, of which Rev. John G. Truitt is pastor.

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, pastor of the People's Christian Church, Dover, Del., took the place, by request, of Rev. H. M. Haines, of New Bedford, Mass., who was absent, and this brought the speaking period to a close in a telling address. The crowded room seemed to enjoy all the addresses and the music.

As this occasion was at the time when the board of trustees of the Christian Publishing Association was in annual session, department boards likewise holding their annual meetings, and the General Board of the General Convention holding its annual session, it added a representative group of Church leaders to the association of Dayton Churches, and thus added to the importance of the banquet as a Christian Church gathering. Rarely has a more enjoyable occasion been held by as large a number of men and women who have the interest of the Church at heart.

As a final close of this memorable meeting, Dr. Coffin called upon Dr. Martyn Summerbell to close with a benedictory prayer.

ELON LETTER.

The General Board of our Church met in Dayton, Ohio, last week. In this letter the transactions of the Board of Christian Education will be outlined briefly.

This board is charged with handling all matters connected with our denominational Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and college enterprises, including such allied organizations as Boy Scouts, week-day religious education, daily vacation Church schools, Camp Fire Girls, etc. Its twelve members are also expected to relate themselves to the interdenominational organizations in the general and specialized fields of education.

The board began in 1922, following the Burlington Convention, to unify and integrate our educational work. It issued first of all a pamphlet setting forth the organizational principles of such integration and has since been devoting itself, through its secretaries and editors, to an orderly realization of these ideals. Much remains to be done. The board felt that it would require at least twenty years to achieve even a measurable success, and only six years have passed.

Our board was the first one in the country to begin this work of educational unification. Since it began, several others have undertaken similar programs, notably the Congregationalists, the Northern Methodists and Baptists, and the Presbyterians. We are the same persons in relation to all our experiences, including our educational experiences, and this fact suggests unified approaches to educational problems.

The board in its annual session this year reaffirmed its adherence to this principle of integration in organization, finance and instruction and applied it particularly in its relation to the Church year, announcing definite plans for integrating instruction in missions, evangelism and stewardship as indispensable parts of the regular Sunday School lessons.

Two new schools were reported to the board, both designed to give special training to Christian workers who cannot or have not found it possible to go to college or seminary. The Starkey Christian Training School began in September at Lakemont, N. Y. The Bible Training School of Union Christian College is to begin in September, 1929. It is hoped that these schools will prove valuable assets in our educational program.

President A. Z. Caris, of Defiance College, was commissioned to prepare an educational policy in the college field for our denomination and to report it to the next session of the board. Dean Geo. C. Enders, of the Christian Divinity School, is to do a similar service in the field of ministerial education.

The Sunday School Quarterly, the Sunday School papers, and the magazine number of the Herald of Gospel Liberty are to be continued as during the past year.

ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH.

Elm Avenue Christian Church held its fourth quarterly conference on October 3, 1928, in the Church with a large attendance. Conference opened with hymn, "Stand Up for Jesus," followed with prayer by the pastor, Rev. T. N. Lowe. The general routine of business was transacted, including the next year's budget. The Church budget was systematically carried out and seemed to be satisfactory to all.

Re-elections of officers of the Church for the fiscal year resulted as follows: secretary, F. A. Bell; assistant secretary, G. W. Taylor; financial secretary, Miss Jennie Cobb; treasurer, G. N. Taylor; pianist, Miss Marjorie Branch; assistant pianist, Miss Louise Bowden; second assistant pianist, Miss Ethel Pugh; chorister, R. L. Baker; assistant chorister, Mrs. J. A. Baker; ushers, W. H. Wilson, J. A. Bowden, E. L. Wiloughby, O. G. Porter and O. C. Blanchard; official board: F. A. Bell, R. L. Baker, L. H. Carr, C. C. Mountcastle, O. G. Porter, G. W. Taylor and H. E. Davis.

Then our pastor, Rev. T. N. Lowe, was recalled unanimously, after which he gave the members a brief but serious talk, with complimentary remarks of appreciation expressed in beautiful and tender words. Bro. Lowe expressed himself as God speaking definitely to him and told him to stay with us, for he turned down a call that was very dear to him, and was deeply appreciated by all that attended.

Let's rally around the Christian banner and hold it high to show our appreciation of his decision by upholding him with our support and finance. The call he turned down was the Hopewell Christian Church, a place where he has a host of friends besides his children. Thank God He gave him grace to overcome the struggle between love of friends and family to listen to the voice of God, as Paul the great apostle did.

May God crown his every effort and grant us a glorious ingathering of souls this year to come. May we so live that our Church may be called the "Evergreen Church," and members may be added daily such as should be saved.

MRS. P. F. TURNER.

HAS PROHIBITION CORRUPTED YOUTH?

I challenge the insinuation and brand as false the charge that prohibition has corrupted American youth. I have seen drinking from hip-flasks in public places; I have dealt personally with some miserably sad cases of juvenile delinquency in which booze has figured; but God pity the man who, on such a foundation, would build a general indictment! We do not indict bankers when one banker, or several, default. We do not indict preachers when one clergyman, or several, betray their trust.

"Wets" tell today of promiscuous drinking in public places by girls and boys—"wets" who, in another time, defended the saloon with its wine-crocks, beer gardens, and "wet" dance halls, which were covered, high-walled places where all the evils, real and fancied, recited here took place, vastly multiplied. I venture that I have seen in one beer garden in one night, before prohibition, more drinking by young people than any man has seen from flasks in lavatories since the eighteenth amendment was written into the Constitution. But did these advocates ever cry out over these other conditions?

We are not inclined to accept seriously the anti-prohibition testimony of men who did their best to keep the saloon open and who defended its practices, nor of politicians who are associated with organizations which functioned largely in barrooms and which, in the more recent past, have obstructed the law-enforcement efforts of police commissioners.

I have the honor to serve as president of an organization enrolling in the United States more than 2,500,000 young men and young women. I am acquainted with representative young people in every State, in every county, and in every considerable community. These are not law-breakers. These are law observers. Increasingly they will be found supporting law enforcement and registering against the law's nullification, modification, and repeal,

What Youth Itself Says.

Recently I addressed a questionnaire to the presidents of our State and local unions. There were four questions, as follows:

1. Do you believe that beer and light wines should be legalized?

2. Do you believe that prohibition should be repealed?

3. Do you believe that prohibition has bettered conditions financially, socially, and morally?

4. In your opinion, are a majority of the people in your community and State (a) for or against modification? (b) for or against repeal?

The 538 replies are divided as follows: 531 voted against the legalizing of light wines and beer, only 7 voted for such legalization; 532 voted against the repeal of prohibition, only 6 voted for such repeal; 529 voted that prohibition had bettered conditions financially, socially and morally.

You will be interested to know that a copy of the letter addressed to these young people was sent to the managers and owners of 695 general chain merchandising stores located in 47 of our 48 States. These manager-owners reside in their communities and are representative of the best business life of the country. Within ten days replies were received from 585 of these gentlemen—a remarkably high percentage.

Five hundred and forty-six voted against the legalizing of light wines and beers, only 39 voted for such legalization; 577 voted against the repeal of prohibition, only 8 voted for such repeal; 563 voted that prohibition had bettered conditions financially, socially and morally.

Always a Lawbreaker.

You will have observed that the replies of the young people and of these business men are almost identical. This was one of the first serious efforts made to secure a statement from representative young people concerning a vital matter that many of their elders have discussed in a manner little short of slanderous against their own children. That these young presidents are representative of America's youth will not be disputed when I tell you that they are the elected leaders of a movement that enrolls more than two million young Americans.

The charge that prohibition has substituted for the saloons and traffic in the open, regulated by enforceable law and paying taxes to the government, the secret, clandestine, unregulated and migratory "speakeasy," ignores the fact that it was the law-breaking infamy of the legalized traffic that hurried the destruction of the saloon; ignores the fact that the liquor traffic in unnumbered instances was proved guilty of violating every law that interfered with its financial profit, and ignores the fact, too, that under the license system the "speakeasy"—the illegal joint—with all the attendant circumstances of gambling and prostitution, was inseparably bound to the business.

In 1916, at the end of the year, the New York excise department reported a total of 24,339 liquor licenses for the State. The yearbook of the United States Brewers' Association for 1916 carries the record of 30,638 retailers of intoxicating beverage. The difference is 6,299; in other words, the yearbook of the United States Brewers' Association for 1916 shows 6,299 places retailing liquor which were not licensed by the State. This is to say nothing of places paying neither State nor Federal tax.

As to the actual effects of prohibition upon the life and practices of the country, my own observation and knowledge confirm the evidence of those who have testified to the bettering of conditions. In my New York parish, a portion of which is located in what is popularly known as "Hell's Kitchen," and another portion of which covers the middle East Side, with the mother Church on Fifth Avenue at Twenty-ninth Street, I have seen a notable improvement since prohibition. Only twice in these years has it been necessary for me to take summary action bringing the head of a house into court as the result of delinquencies due to drunkenness. Drinking there is, to be sure, more than there should be, vastly more; but I say to you that from every standpoint, the situation is vastly better than it was before prohibition went into effect.

When a man declares that the saloon is gone forever and that prohibition modification in no way affects that particular situation, I want to know first what he said before the saloon was destroyed. The saloon did not eliminate itself; it died a lingering death after decades of intense and culminative activity on the part of people, few, if any, of whom are now advocating modification and repeal.

There are many of us who feel differently about a possible return of the saloon. Chancellor Ellsworth Brown, of New York University, is one who feels differently. He has said, "I favor keeping the prohibition amendment as it now stands, with strict enforcement, my chief reason being that, in my judgment, no modification has been prepared which would not inevitably bring back the saloon with all the evils connected therewith." —Daniel A. Poling, in Signs of the Times.

ATTENTION SECRETARIES.

In the "Ministerial Directory," as published in "The Annual" of the Southern Christian Convention and Conferences, there seem to be some names of persons who have been transferred or withdrawn. It is desirable to have this directory as nearly correct as possible, and in order to get these corrections, secretaries are asked to go over the list and report any entries that should be changed or corrected. Also they are requested to make an accurate list of the names of ministers and licentiates of their Conference and forward with their minutes to the editor of "The Annual."

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

STIMULATE INTEREST IN MISSIONS.

Interest in any subject or enterprise will wane and lag unless properly and periodically stimulated. Our women are engaged through their missionary endeavor in the best and biggest business of the Church and of the world, but even such an enterprise cannot hold our interest and awaken our enthusiasm unless we seek and find new points of contact and larger visions of our task. There are three ways of stimulating our work:

First: We must constantly increase our knowledge of missions. We cannot keep up interest if we remain ignorant of the enterprise that challenges us. When I consider the unlimited amount of engaging literature that is pouring from our presses and how thought provoking and thrilling much of this literature is, I wonder why any of us should be ignorant of the fertile facts of the missionary world. Just now the missionary press has put out books on "Africa," for instance, that will not only enlighten the mind, but really thrill and enlarge the soul. As we learn of other nations, the difficulty and the need of other nations, of other peoples, the sin and the distress of other people, our interest in them is quickened and our vision of our Lord's commission is enlarged. It is doubtful if any book has come from the religious press in a decade that has had a wider sale and a finer reaction than that of E. Stanley Jones' book entitled "The Christ of the Indian Road." One simply cannot read this book without having one's mind inflamed with a passion and a new zeal for the triumph of the gospel of our Lord. One is perfectly safe in saying that the very best and most thrilling books of any type are some of the books now devoted to the great world-wide call and cause of missions. I commend first and foremost of all an ever-increasing knowledge of the mission field as a stimulant to our work.

Second: The effort to increase our local membership and then the effort on the part of the society to plant and foster another society always add a healthy glow and stimulus to missionary endeavor. If we go to our society month in and month out without seeking to enlarge our membership, the horizon of our vision becomes restricted and the work grows dull and common-place. I believe that every society can increase interest in its work by constant wholesome effort to gain other members. Growing gives a glow not obtained from any other source. Our interest in any enterprise we are connected with can only be sustained as we see that enterprise growing, enlarging, increasing.

Third: It cannot be too often said that constant, regular and persistent attendance at our regular meetings helps wonderfully to stimulate interest in mission work. Periodic or spasmodic attendance at a society meeting is conducive to apathy and indifference. It is very easy to get into the habit of staying away from a meeting on the least pretext, and I have never yet known an individual to drop into this habit who did not sooner or later lose interest and finally become unconcerned, if not absolutely inactive. Constant attendance, through thick and thin, by effort and sacrifice, does not weary or exhaust one, but stimulates and inspires one. The farmer who attends most regularly the growing crop keeps up the deepest interest, not only for the crop but for the harvest as well. If a pupil drops out of school a day or two in each week, it is not long until that pupil has lost interest in the school and in study. It may seem a common-place thing, but regular attendance, prompt and on hand with the dues and a readiness to respond for specials, constitute a splendid means of stimulating interest in missionary work. In this line I must add that attendance upon our rallies or district meetings and our attendance at the annual Conferences are means of wonderfully stimulating interest in the work. If we only saw our home society and what it is doing, it may come to seem very simple and hardly worthwhile. If we come to the annual meetings and see how great the work is when the sum of our efforts is put together, we certainly will go back to our societies with an increased strength and a new zeal. I wish more of us would and could attend our district and our annual meetings. It would mean a real stimulus to our work.

NATIONAL ASPECT OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Problems as well as men have their day and are marked by a specific era. The eighteenth century asked whether missionaries should be sent to the far places of the earth. The answer to this question was potentially affirmative or negative. Certain countries held Christianity in the hollow of their hand and the disposal of it was to them a matter of choice.

The problem is no longer the same. Some one has said that "For good or for evil, the nation is really a missionary society." The facts remain that nations as well as individuals exert influence, and the influence of our missionaries cannot be separated from that of our nation as a whole. Our influence over other nations is now an actuality rather than a possibility, and the only choice that now lies within our keeping is to determine the kind of influence this shall be.

All must realize the part of modern means of transportation and communication in making our nation a neighbor and an open book before the various nations of the earth. We may withhold and withdraw our missionaries from the foreign fields, but these forces steadily increase. It is recognized that people who gain contacts with each other tend to think and act alike. Now the problem is: shall we draw other nations to a higher level and standard of living, or shall we permit them to drag us down to a lower plain? By concentrating additional attention upon the conditions of our own country we will make it a better place in which to live, and by doing so will create an ideal toward which other nations may well advance.

We have been told to go into all the world and teach all nations. But we sometimes forget that our own community is a vital part of the world. We need to realize that the ground whereon we stand is holy ground. Never was there a time in which we were compassed about with such a crowd of witnesses as we are now. And we need to realize that any action of our own nation may prove to be a stumbling-block or a saving beacon to nations who are looking for guidance.

ANNUAL REPORT TO MISSION BOARD.

BY REV. D. P. BARRETT.

We had the pleasure of greeting you in person last year at your annual meeting, and we are glad to greet you at this time from Porto Rico. Our furlough in the States gave us a good opportunity to renew our energies and to get a better grip on life in general. Our surroundings at Elon, where we made our home, were excellent, and the pleasure of meeting old friends and the student body will never be forgotten.

While on this vacation we had the best opportunity of getting acquainted with people in North Carolina and Virginia that we have had since coming to Porto Rico. Our time was spent largely in visiting and speaking to the Churches regarding missions.

We had the pleasure of visiting four annual Conferences. Each of these Conferences gave special interest and an allotted time to the discussion of missions. The visited Churches and schools of missions in the Valley of Virginia were a real inspiration. We also visited individual Churches in Eastern Virginia and Central North Carolina. It was our privilege to speak to fifty-six different religious bodies during our vacation. The last, but not least, of our privileges while in the States was to visit the Southern Christian Convention. It was the first time we had ever been able to visit it and observe the working of this body. I count it a great opportunity to have been present and to have heard reports and discussions of the brethren, but the greatest yet was to have seen the spirit of the entire Convention when the report on Christian union was presented and adopted without a dissenting voice.

We arrived in Ponce on our return trip on the 16th of July. Bro. B. W. Morton had been in charge of the mission during our absence and had left the island on the 24th of May. Mr. and Mrs. Morton are good friends to Porto Rico and they will not be forgotten by the friends they left behind.

Miss Victoria Adams was our only missionary to greet us on our arrival. She was feeling her responsibilities and we are sure she was glad to feel that there were other shoulders to help in burden-bearing by our arrival. I think Miss Adams has become acclimated and, like all the missionaries, loves Porto Rico and her work. She finds an excellent opportunity for service and is carrying on her work with enthusiasm. Our young people find in her a real helpful friend, and we expect good results from her consecrated efforts. Since Mrs. Barrett has had to give up her work almost entirely on account of not being able to use her voice, Miss Adams has come in to fill an indispensable place among our young people in Ponce, where she hopes to remain.

We have found all of our native workers in their respective fields as we left them, and, so far as we have been able to judge, the work is going nicely, except possibly some uncertainty yet with regards to our pastor in Ponce. We believe that with this one exception all workers are in complete harmony and mutual co-operation.

Since our arrival at Ponce, our time has been given entirely to the work in a general way, visiting the pastors in their homes, speaking to their congregations, conferences with the workers, and the preparation of the annual Conference, which took place in Ponce September 7th, 8th and 9th. The Conference was an inspiration to us all, and the outlook for the present year was promising.

However, on the 13th of September, our island was swept from east to west and from south to north by the cyclone "San Felipe." For eight hours the wind blew at the rate of from 130 to 160 miles an hour from the east to north. After one hour's calm, the wind changed from its former direction to southeast when it blew for eight hours almost as hard as it had done before, carrying the loss of life and property to every part of the island. Ponce and San Juan probably suffered less than any other parts of the island, but it is hard to calculate the real situation at this time.

The outlook for self-support among our Churches this year is not bright, but so far every Church is undertaking to carry the same responsibility as it did last year.

Five of our buildings are seriously damaged. The chapel at Clausells, in Ponce; the chapel at Descalabrado, in Santa Isabel district; the chapel at Arus, and many of the large windows in the Santa Isabel Church building entirely blown out. The Four Neighborhood House is badly broken to pieces, all the top torn off, and the large balcony to the north of the building broken to pieces in such a way that a new balcony will be necessary.

The Salinas Church building is damaged. For days no services were held there for fear of its falling. We have a contractor working on the cost of repairs, after having looked the building over carefully. I had expected to give details at this writing, but as yet I am unable to do so.

We feel assured of immediate help from the Church at home to rebuild and repair the broken-down buildings.

The first cable that came to us in our distress was from Mr. Jack Stafford, of our Burlington Christian Church, who represents the Christian Endeavor Society in cabling us the sum of $60. Our first letter "by air" was also from Bro. Stafford. We surely appreciate the sympathetic heart of our Burlington Christian Endeavorers. The second check came from Mrs. W. K. Saunders, of Zuni, Va., advising to use the money where it was most needed.

A large number of letters have come from different parts of the United States inquiring of the real situation. Then came a cable from Dr. Minton in response to a letter we had written which reads: "Make immediately necessary repairs and send detailed estimated cost of restoring all buildings, including Salinas Church."

Our chapel at Clausells, Ponce, has been repaired and ready for use, with the exception of lights. Our city electric light men are all at work for twenty days, but the lines are still in the streets in some parts of the city.

The Red Cross of the United States is helping a great deal, and we believe it will be able to assure that no one shall go hungry. All fruits, vegetables, and coffee plantations are practically wiped out through the central part of the island. Thousands are homeless in the country districts, but the weather is warm. Tents and bed clothes are being furnished by the thousands and the island rejoices that it has been no worse.

Most respectfully,

Ponce, P. R.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson V—November 4, 1928.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: love, therefore, is the fulfillment of the law."—Rom. 13:10.

LESSON: Rom. 13:1-14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psal. 15.

The question of lawlessness and disobedience to constituted authority is not new. Paul had to face it in his day, and in this section of his letter to the Romans he gave some principles that have a present-day application. He suggests that obedience to the powers that be is a Christian duty, for the powers that be are ordained of God and government is a divinely appointed means in the plan of God for securing certain advantages and benefits which would otherwise be impossible. Unless the members of society respect and observe and support law, and support government, there cannot be any enduring basis of social welfare. Respect for and obedience to law is one of the corner-stones of the social structure.

It is to be noted that Paul does not hereby give his "blanket" approval to all rulers. In fact he is not making a defense for governors, but for government. He was not prescribing a set of rules that obligated men to submit to high-handed tyranny or the abuse or misuse of power. There is a two-fold application in Paul's principle. In the first place, because the powers that be are ordained of God, public officers should consider public office as a public trust. Officials should be concerned primarily with carrying out what really is the will of God. One of the worst features about the present situation, and one of the most fruitful sources of lawlessness is the attitude of officials from judges all the way down toward the prohibition question. There is so much evidence that the machinery for law-enforcement is honey-combed with graft and bribery. Now every man is entitled to his own opinion in regard to the liquor problem and every man is entitled to do everything in his power to modify or repeal the present law in regard to liquor. But no official who takes an oath as an officer has any right to allow his personal views or opinions to interfere with his duty in the matter. It is an ugly word, but all such are scoundrels, traitors, law-breakers themselves. It is, of course, a great, sometimes seemingly an impossible, task to get public officials who will do what is really their duty in the matter. But even if the facts are ugly we have got to face this situation and seek in some way to enlist the interest and the support of those who will hold public office as a public trust, and who will do their duty as officials and officers.

But when we have said this we have said only half. For there is something more to this question than the matter of law-enforcement; there is the matter of law-observance. Every man has a right to take his stand against the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act, and he has a right to use his influence and his money to repeal or to modify these laws. But so long as they stand as they are, every citizen is under obligation to observe these laws. That is unpleasant doctrine, but it is sound doctrine. What right has a man to disregard and to disobey the law simply because it does not meet with his personal approval or because it does not seem to him to be best for society as a whole? Why should he claim for himself the right to disregard this law and refuse to another man the right to disregard the law against murder or stealing or adultery? The principle is the same.

Here is the crux of the matter. We are never going to solve our problem simply by law, although we can do a great deal more than we are doing through law. There must be a constructive program of education over a period of years, perhaps for several generations; there must be a new emphasis upon law-observance, there must be a new interpretation put upon citizenship, its duties as well as its privileges, there must be a subjection of personal desires to the larger social well-being, there must be a steady application of the law of love to this as to all other problems that concern society as a whole. In these and in other ways lies the solution to this problem.

Let it be understood that the election of either of the candidates is not going to solve the problem. Neither is the election of certain candidates to Congress going to solve the problem, although our people need to be very careful in the selection of those who are to go to this body which has law-making and law-repealing power within certain limits. But this election does have some bearing upon the whole problem. In spite of what many politicians say, the writer believes that there is a distinctive moral issue involved. Let every man take heed how he votes. And let every man take heed how he uses his power and his influence in regard to this thing called liquor, which stands condemned on many counts over a long, long period of time.

There is point, too, in the heading of this lesson—"World's Temperance Sunday." This problem of liquor is more than a local problem; it is world-wide in its implications and consequences. As a young man, the writer of these notes used to spend a great deal of time on the lawn and the grounds of his home, and took a great deal of pride in beautifying and trying to keep attractive the lawn and flower-beds. But in spite of all that he could do, he could never achieve the best effects, for there was an uncultivated lot adjoining his home, and the weeds along the fence and in that lot detracted from his own lawn. Just as this nation could not endure half-slave and half-free, just so the world eventually cannot endure part dry and part wet. We are called upon not only to make a dry America, but also a dry world. How the liquor interests will howl when they realize that; but in the providence and power of God, it is coming. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Stand fast for law observance and law enforcement. Quit you like men and women, and be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might. And in due season ye shall reap the fruits of victory.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, November 4, 1928.

TOPIC: "In What Do We Waste Our Time?"—Eph. 5:16; Psal. 90:12. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

Time is opportunity—for something; neglected time is neglected opportunity (v. 16).

"Buying up the opportunity," the marginal rendering, implies that the right use of time costs us something. What? (v. 16.)

Our days are like pearls slipping off a thread, one by one. Think how many are left; think what to do with them (v. 12).

Time is wasted which does not help us to get a heart of wisdom—a heart that knows, reveres, and obeys God's will (v. 12).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Oceans of time are wasted in pleasure that should be used in getting knowledge or doing useful work. Pleasure is necessary, but not an overdose of it.

Time is wasted by dawdling at our tasks. The cure is to "do with our might what our hands find to do."

Time is wasted in day-dreaming picturing our own greatness, building castles in the air, instead of buckling down to realities.

Time is wasted on railroad trains and street cars. Use it for planning the day; or improve the mind by reading worth-while books, or memorizing poetry.

A Few Illustrations.

We waste time on the newspaper, on its scrappy articles, its colored editorials, its insipid gossip, its ugly stories of crime. Why make the mind a gutter and pour filth through it.

A Boston man wastes time on futile tasks—studying astrology, magic, and things like that, instead of attending to his business. His mind is like an old curiosity shop, full of antiques that have no value.

Employees often waste their employers' time by loitering, losing five minutes now and five minutes again; and wasted time means lost money.

One senator told me once that he had wasted more time in the Senate than in any other way: listening to futile addresses, taking days to do what business men would have done in half an hour.

To Think About.

How may we lay out a plan for our days?
What temptations have we to waste time?
Can we waste time reading? How?

NEWS NOTES.

Union (Surry), Eastern Virginia Conference, held "Rally Day" on the second Sunday in October and made an offering for Christian education. This was the first Sunday School to send in an offering. The Sunday School board, or committee, of the Alabama Conference recently made two fine recommendations which were adopted as follows: (1) That each Church send two representatives to the summer school next year; and (2) that an offering for Christian education be received in every Church before Christmas.

During the past few weeks our field secretary has attended the Georgia and Alabama Conference, the Alabama Conference, the Woman's Missionary Conference of Alabama, the meeting of the newly elected Mission Board of Georgia and Alabama, and has spoken in about fifteen different Churches. She reports that there is a fine spirit of interest in the work of Christian education among the people of the far South.

This week-end Miss Coghill is to meet with the New Jersey Young People's Congress at Madisonville, Pa. This congress is composed of young people from parts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York.

The Burlington (N. C.) Sunday School is making the month of October "Rally Month." The following is taken from the bulletin of that Church for October 14th:

"The annual Christian education offering will be taken on the fourth Sunday of this month. Rev. F. C. Lester, chairman of the Board of Religious Education, is asking that we make the offering as liberal as possible. Last year the total offering of the denomination for general Christian education was less than nine cents per member. The board is cheerfully going ahead, despite the fact that they are not being supported financially. What is the field of Christian education? It is to suggest and to supplement the work of Churches in the Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor, summer schools, young people's congresses, leadership training, literature, Conferences and field work, office work and correspondence, and interdenominational co-operation. Your contribution will be appreciated."

F. C. LESTER.

One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

FIRE AND BURNS.

"Can a man take fire in his bosom and his clothes not be burned?"—Prov. 6:27.

We do not have to turn to the Scriptures to learn that one's sins are handed down to generations after him. We have seen it actually happen. When we choose our own way to suit our fancies and tendencies, misery follows. When we choose to do good, joy and satisfaction follows.

What examples we have! Judas. Enough said. David, a man after God's own heart, for his trespasses had to die of a broken heart and limp into the kingdom of heaven.

Peter denied the Lord and ever carried the misery of it in his life afterwards. He was a pillow of the Church, but a broken one.

A sinner once wrote:

*"My saints are comforted I know
And love Thy house of prayer;
I sometimes go where others go,
But find no comfort there."*

Prayer.—Our Father, in the light of Jesus we shall see our way. Make us keen to see the way of life and be right and forestall a bad past. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE WAY TO COME BACK.

"Restare unto me the joy of Thy salvation."—Psa. 57:12.

This is the prayer of David, who lost his hold on God by taking an unholy way. How come back? Confess every degree of sin, every decline of love, every faltering of faith, every flagging of zeal, every dullness of desire, every failure of confidence; open thy heart to the Almighty in prayer and supplication, making known thy desires unto Him. Come to Christ and stay there.

Prayer.—Oh, dear forgiving Father, through Thy Son Jesus, our Saviour, forgive us of all our sins and restore unto us this day Thy salvation. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

DOES GOD SEND TROUBLE?

"As many as I love, rebuke and chasten."—Job 5:17-2; Chron. 33:10-13.

Does God send trouble? The rich live in luxury and fortune. A godly man may be as unfortunate as Job. The ungodly flourishes like a green bay tree and heaps up his gold and endows his posterity. A great many of the righteous and the virtuous live in deprivations. Do they serve God for nothing?

Answer: Does a father correct his child? Will he consent to surgery on the child when he has a disease within which will take his life? Will a father speak harshly? Because he loves him he will—

*"In love I correct thee, my gold to refine,
To make thee at length in my likeness to shine."*

Spurgeon says, "There never was a saint who grew proud of his fine feathers, but that the Lord plucked them by and by." The Lord has to spoil our glory in order to make us see His.

We wonder how much guilt Christians have been saved from by their afflictions. I wonder had it not been for some misfortunes which turned our path, how wise we would have been and what troubles we would have avoided. It is indeed hard for a child to think of the rod that chastised him as love, but having received that chastisement the time will come when he will feel that he did not get all he deserved.

I wish we could see how to do our best for the Lord always and then thank God for trouble. This is our prayer today. Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHERE DO WE VOTE?

"Our citizenship is in heaven."—Phil. 3:13-21.

Paul was from Tarsus and he was proud of it. He was also a free-born Roman, with full protection of that country. But this world offered him only drudgery, hostilities and constant unrest. It was the heavenly city and Christian service and witnessing for God to folks that gave him the most comfort. God stood by him here when everything else held out a sword against him.

Our cities are vastly better than any Paul knew. Our interest in citizenship is far more extensive, if not to say vital, than his was. We are, with every issue, called upon to vote and do what we can to make things better, stronger, happier and more righteous. Unless we, like Paul, can draw upon our heavenly citizenship to indoctrinate the life here, the beauty and wisdom of this world will go on mingled with ugliness, and the folly of sin. Our heavenly citizenship glows with a loveliness of purity and a power that means the perfection of delight in the life that now is and that which is to come.

Prayer.—We thank Thee, our Father, that Thou dost admit us to the upper allegiance and the heavenly kingdom, wherein is a source of all good. At all time enable us to be found faithful. Amen.

FRIDAY.

HOW DO YOU VOTE?

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, a light to my path."—Psa. 119:105-112.

We are told of a business man, a builder, a contractor, and a real estate agent, and a little insurance on the side. He says that often he gets involved in business tangles and cannot see his way out. When this happens, he closes his office, goes home, takes his Bible and begins to read. He reads until he finds some message for himself, and then he meditates upon it until he is calm and strong. The difficulties seem to disappear. He sees his way. He goes back and takes up his work.

That example is worth following. That is what the Bible is given us for. In it we find all we need. It is there for the taking. But we must take it. It will not come to us.

Prayer.—Our Father, Author of the Book of books, Thy word shall be our lantern. Blessed Holy Spirit, direct our approach to the Book, and interpret its messages to us. So shall we walk along a safe way, and so shall we reach the goal Thou dost intend for us. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE UNSEEN HELPER.

"The Spirit also helpeth our infirmity."—Rom. 8:18-26.

Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler once saw a man working one end of a cross-cut saw. He could not see the other man, but from the way the first man worked, he was sure a partner was working with him. "So," said Dr. Cuyler, "does the invisible Spirit work with the man who enjoys the communion of the Holy Ghost?"

If we watch the people around us, and see how they carry on their lives, we can soon tell whether they are living and laboring alone, or have this unseen Partner. If they have the invisible Helper, they accomplish things that seem quite impossible for them to do. When sorrows come, they are unaccountably upheld. They overcome adversity with a might that is altogether beyond their own. It is because of the unseen Power that is working with them.

Prayer.—Holy Spirit, Thou Aid of all humble and seeking souls, be with us, we pray Thee, in all we do. Without Thee we are indeed helpless; but with Thee, we can do all things. Our Father who art in heaven (repeat the Lord's Prayer). Amen.

SUNDAY.

VALUES IN SMALL THINGS.

"We have thought on Thy lovingkindness, O God."—Psa. 48:9-14.

So often we just see the outside of things, the bright lights—the glow and the spectacular—and fail to see beneath it all. If we ever expect to see real values we must go deep and examine even the small things.

There is an old story of a clergyman farmer on a little island off the coast of Maine, and one day a former parishioner came to him from Boston to get married. After the ceremony, the groom presented him with a pair of fine kid gloves. The minister was surprised and a little disappointed, for he was a poor man and the groom was wealthy. But he put the gloves away, as he seldom had a fit occasion for such finery. But a college event seemed to call for them, his wife brought them out, and he started to put them on, but met with obstructions. Investigating, he found ten bills, each of ten dollars, one tucked in each finger.

Yes, it pays to think on our gifts, and especially on God's lovingkindness to us. It is inexhaustible. We can never plumb its depths. We can never bring up their full contents of blessing. There is a happy surprise in it for every day of our lives.

Prayer.—King Giver of all good, we have faith in Thy kindness. We anticipate it, we rest in it, we delve in it, we find no end to it. Amen.

badly damaged, and we fear it will have to be torn down. Mr. Barrett has a man busy now on probable cost of repairs, and will send estimate as soon as possible. We passed a graded school, one end of which was in ruins and the other part served as a shelter for a number of those who were left homeless, sleeping on the bare floors and eating what was given them (the Red Cross with its merciful hand had not had time to reach Salinas then). We passed Four Neighborhood House, which lost its roof, part of ceiling and side porch. Bro. Roman and family have patched up a part of the house and are still in it. During the storm a little nephew who lives with them was lying on a cot in his bed-room when his aunt called him to come to her. He rose, and just as he left the cot a piece of zinc tore its way through the side of the house, crashing down on the cot he had a moment before occupied. God's providence does some one ask. Yes, indeed! we answer.

The rural district of Salinas is almost wiped out. Bros. Romero and Roman have visited all

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We are happy to say that we passed the fifteenth mile-post in our financial report for this year. Now the real task begins—the hardest task yet to come. Hard work, much thought, and perhaps sleepless nights trying to plan how to reach our goal. Fifteen thousand dollars to raise by January 1st. You ask the question, can it be done? It can. How?

We want to enlist every pastor in our Southern Christain Convention in this undertaking. We want to enlist every Sunday School superintendent and all the teachers to help us. We want to enlist all the good women in this work of love and charity. We want to have the hearty support of every man in the entire Church to pull with us. We want every boy and girl in every Sunday School to come to our rescue. Now, what do we want you to do?

We want you, as a brave army of soldiers, to start now to push your special Thanksgiving offering in your Church and to see to it that you raise the largest Thanksgiving offering in your Church that you have ever raised.

Who is it that does not have a tender place in their heart for a helpless child? Who is it that would fail us in this work of love?

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

our preaching places and find poverty everywhere. In one barrio, where stood thirty-two houses, all were washed away by the river except one. I asked them to find out how many of our members have suffered losses; they gave me a list of twenty-seven names in Salinas district, some of which number lost their little homes and everything except the clothes they were wearing. In Santa Isabel, two members lost their homes, and in Clausell's two members lost the roof of their homes.

At the workers' meeting here in Ponce yesterday our pastors told me: "Mrs. Barrett, if you receive any dresses please let us have them; it is what is so badly needed just now among our members. Women's dresses and men's shirts and trousers, too." Today's mail brought a package from Providence, R. I. I have just opened it and counted twenty dresses and a dozen pair of rompers. Thanks to our Rhode Island friends. I know other packages are on the way. In fact, help is coming and being distributed as quickly as possible from the National Red Cross and by their committees on the island. The Red Cross is doing all in its power to help the people and prevent epidemics.

Last Saturday we rode up to Aibonito, though not through the beautiful avenue of trees we have always enjoyed so much. These same trees are bare; some are little more than posts, while others are gone entirely. The road is badly damaged in many places. I saw people living in the open. Imagine this tropical sun without a sign of a leaf to shield you. For in the path of the storm all vegetation and foliage looks as if a fire had passed over them, so dead and bare are they. I saw others living under a few pieces of zinc; others in the ruins of their homes, the more fortunate are repairing. On the mountain-side for miles was strewn zinc, hundreds of pieces. But why try to describe more! All the things that cyclones do have been done to this little island and other places in the States where the same one passed.

Do you wonder how it has affected the people? One thing impressed me deeply. Every where we see them, especially the poor, patching up their poor remains, if possible, and trying to live. About 150 people found refuge in the Olive G. Williams Memorial Chapel in the playa at Salinas. It stood the storm, the sea came up, passed it, but did not rise into it. It is not at all damaged, which all seems almost a miracle, for it stands within a few feet of the water's edge. Several people are still living in it, as they have no home.

Pray, friends, and open your hearts and pocket-books as you never have before. The Burlington Christian Church cabled sixty dollars, which my husband "put to work" immediately; a cousin in Virginia sent ten, which has found a needy place, but if your mission on this island is to continue even as it was we will need over $3,000. We beseech an interest in your prayers always.

EVA REED BARRETT.

"It was moved and carried that hereafter the Conference recommend 'The Harvard Plan' of entertainment of Conference, i. e., free lodging and breakfast, and a nominal charge for dinner and supper."

"It was moved and carried that all delegates and visitors who wish to be entertained be requested to notify the Church in advance of the session of the Conference."

Ministers, delegates and visitors will please give heed and govern themselves accordingly. Please co-operate with the pastor and the people of the Christian Temple in this matter.

H. S. HARDCASTLE, Pres.

A NEW HAT.

The circulation manager of THE CHRISTIAN SUN makes the following offer, to hold good till December 31, 1928:

Every Church and Sunday School sending us a club of ten new subscribers and ten renewals, with a check for $40.00, he will make the pastor of that Church a present of a $10.00 Stetson hat for a Christmas gift. Where a pastor serves two or more country churches, they can club together, and the present will be given in the name of both churches.

You send in the names each week and get credit on your club until you reach the desired number. Give name and address of each subscriber, and state whether "renewal" or "new."

Let everybody get busy, and let us get a thousand new subscribers right quick.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4¼ inches x¾ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4¼ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

FIELD NEWS.

I have been very busy and have neglected sending you a full account of our opening service. The threatening weather kept some away who would have attended, but we had a large crowd. We did not get everything in as near readiness as we would like to have had, but we are so thankful that we can hold services in our new Church. We had three consecrated ministers to bring us real messages of love at our opening service. Rev. G. R. Underwood, of Pittsboro, N. C., preached to us at the opening; subject, "Loyalty." Bro. Underwood is perhaps the oldest Christian minister in North Carolina. His message was very forceful and full of love. Rev. T. J. Green, of Elon College, N. C., preached in the afternoon from the subject "All Things are Yours." His message was a real inspiration to all who heard it. Rev. M. A. Pollard, of Liberty, N. C., preached at the evening service on "Stewardship, or Using What We Have in God's Kingdom." His message was well composed and was received by a packed house. Bro. Jason Moore, of Spies, directed the music at the morning service, while Mrs. E. R. Burt, a member of the Methodist Church, felt very much at home while making music on the piano.

Our good friends from each of the Churches helped to make the day more enjoyable by their presence, and also by a contribution of more than one hundred dollars. It is impossible for us to express our appreciation for each donation to us for our new Church. Whether your donation was great or small, the great Giver of all will reward each. We have quite a number of things to buy. If any one wishes to have a part in the Wellons Memorial Christian Church, please send your contribution to Mr. O. H. Lambert.

GUNTER.

Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God to call Bro. W. M. Gunter, our fellow-deacon, from our midst; and whereas, we are bowed in sorrow and grief; be it resolved:

1. That the membership of Old Zion Christian Church, Norfolk, of which he was a constant and loyal member, in regular meeting assembled, do now express and extend to his family our heartfelt sympathy, with the prayer that the Lord will supply the strength and courage necessary to enable them to bear up under the heavy weight of sorrow.

2. That his widow and children have sustained an irreparable loss, while his memory and example is a precious heritage.

3. That our Church has lost one of its most faithful workers and one whose place cannot soon be filled.

4. That we, the board of deacons, have lost a friend and fellow-worker, one whose joy was to serve.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be placed on the Church minutes, a copy sent to the bereaved family, and a copy published in The Christian Sun.

Done in conference of the board of deacons, on this the 27th day of September, 1928.

HINES.

Bro. Richard E. Hines has fallen asleep after a few hours of illness. He was the son of the late Sylvanus and Mrs. Annie E. Hines and was born February 21, 1870, and died August 4, 1928. He is survived by his aged mother, wife and three brothers. In the absence of his pastor, services were conducted by Rev. J. M. Roberts and was laid to rest in Wakefield Cemetery.

C. E. GERRINGER.

THOMAS.

We, the Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies of the Shallow Well Christian Church, feel very keenly the passing of one of our most faithful and interested members, Mrs. Stacey Thomas, on August 30th. While we mourn the loss of our dear sister and co-worker, who had been a great, but very patient sufferer for months, and while we shall greatly miss her cheerful presence in our meeting, we feel that our loss is her gain, and may we strive to imitate her good examples by being more faithful in our duties to God's cause. We bow in humble submission to God's will and extend to her loved ones our deepest sympathy, and recommend that a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, a copy to her family, and a copy recorded in our societies.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

For catalog and other information, address S. L. Beougher, President.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

JEWISH CHARITY.—

Under the leadership of Julius S. Berg, of New York City, an effort is being launched to raise a million dollars for the help of Jewish invalids of the World War and their families. The purpose is to help the disabled Jewish veterans in European countries.

ENGLAND'S WAR TROPHIES.—

The mayor of Southwark, England, is launching a nation-wide effort to remove the war trophies, in the form of captured implements of war with which the parks, public squares and commons are littered. There was a craze that was almost world-wide to place this captured ordnance material in and around cities. Such things were ever an offense against good taste. They have a place in museums. But even though they may not hinder the development of a sentiment for peace, as some people accuse, they certainly do not help to develop aesthetic taste in the observers.

USING THE SAME SUBJECTS.—

During the four Sundays of October the twelve Protestant ministers of Brookline, Mass., are preaching, each Sunday, on the general subject, "Religion and Life." The four special topics for the four Sundays are: "Jesus' Attitude to Children," "Jesus' Attitude to Possessions," "Jesus' Attitude to Institutions," and "Jesus' Attitude to the Kingdom." Each Saturday during the month an invitation is left in every home of Brookline to attend Church services, the students of Gordon College distributing the literature. A religious census of the town will be taken during the month. —Christian Century.

INFLUENCES FROM THE PAST.—

A few Bible readers will recall the name of the Hittites. But it is a name that has no meaning for them, save as one of the many peoples who opposed the Jewish development. Now comes Prof. John Garstang, director of the British school of archeology, to tell us that to these forgotten people we are indebted for the fact that our civilization and culture is European rather than Asiatic. Prof. Garstang says: "We thank the forgotten empire of the Hittites for holding the gate while our culture was in the crucial period of its formation. The Hittites were the doorkeepers of Europe. They themselves, protected on the east by the Taurus Mountains, kept out the eastern monarchs who tried to get through and meanwhile sifted out the best of the Oriental culture and passed it westward."

GETTING MEMBERSHIP TOGETHER.—

Dr. John Ray Ewers, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has started something new in congregational visiting that gives promise of meeting a vital need in Churches with a large membership. Feeling a need for a closer acquaintance with his congregation and among the members of the congregation, he arranged for neighborhood groups of his members to meet at some home where the pastor might meet with them. The plan was so successful that it was continued; the pastor placing the responsibility for arranging the meetings upon the members themselves. In this age of hurry it is very difficult for the pastor to find time to do the visiting that ought to be done. But it has been our observation that the average pastor is far better acquainted with his members than his members are acquainted with one another. Church receptions and "get acquainted" socials are apt to be too formal and stiff to accomplish their intended purpose. There is no place so favorable for cultivating acquaintance as a home. This plan also has the merit of developing a spirit of neighborliness; something which modern city conditions has made well-nigh extinct.

A GREAT CHURCH CHOIR.—

Those who have been privileged to hear the Westminster choir, of Dayton, Ohio, have heard sacred music in about as perfect a form as one may ever expect to hear it on earth. They have sung in many sections of this country. Next year the choir is to make a three months' tour of Europe. The arrangements for the tour have been made by the Dayton Westminster Choral Association. The itinerary calls for the appearance of the choir at the Vienna opera next April.

MINISTRY OF SERVICE.—

Writing for the Christian Century, under the title, "The Next Great Step for the Church," Dr. Charles E. Jefferson has spoken a truth that should be heard and heeded by every Church organization and every individual Christian.

"If by Church you mean the entire body of Christian believers throughout the world—the holy universal church—my answer is 'Getting closer closer together.' The church of Christ exists in the twentieth century in three great branches—Greek Catholic, Roman Catholic, and Protestant. It is time for them to come closer together. This does not mean closer in church organization or creed, but closer in sympathy and good feeling. Organic union between these bodies is not yet a question of practical churchmanship. That step, if it ever comes, must be preceded by a thousand short steps, acts of kindness, words of good will, thoughts of love. Agreement in doctrine or in polity is impossible until hearts are closer together than they now are."

"The sacrament of the Lord's Supper has proved to be a divisive sacrament, and another sacrament must now be tried; the sacrament of the basin and towel, the sacrament of service. John in his report of the last evening in the upper room says nothing of the institution of the Lord's Supper. He dwells on the institution of another sacrament, that of foot-washing. This second sacrament, possibly, is to be the sacrament of the future. It may turn out to be the sacrament which will unite all the followers of our Lord. The Church has a gigantic piece of work to do. Evils many and mighty confront us on every hand. Civilization has fallen on evil days. Mankind is bleeding and weary. The human race is in sore need of help. The nations must be ministered unto. Coming closer together in social service, this is the next important step which the three great Christian communions must take."

BACK TO THE SIMPLE LIFE.—

There is a man in Japan of which the world of Christians has heard and will probably hear more. This man is a Japanese, and a Christian. His name is Toyohiko Kagawa. He is rapidly becoming the prophet of Christ to the Japanese nation. He has given himself to the service of the humblest and most needy of the people. He has literally emptied himself that he may help to lift those who have never had a chance. His sacrifice, his devotion, and his consecration have caught the imagination of the Japanese. His power and influence are daily increasing. He and his followers live the simplest kind of life, wearing the simplest clothes, and eating the simplest food. A group of young missionaries in Japan, moved by the example of Kagawa and his followers, are now planning to eliminate all that may tend toward extravagance from their method of life. They are determined to see whether the more expensive mode of life of the missionary is a real barrier between the missionary and the humble people to whom they often minister most largely. It may be that all Christendom has missed that which is essential, when it has failed to consider the example of Him "who though He was rich, became poor for our sakes."

It may be, too, that Christ was doing more than showing us a way whereby we might help those who walk in the lowly paths of life. It may be that he was showing us a way to escape that which is both a hindrance and a burden. It would seem at times as if we were all competing with one another in a race that leads nowhere. Many people are working themselves to death to acquire things they would be better off if they did not have. Life is becoming faster, more difficult, more exacting. It looks as if there might be no limit to the speed of motion that may be acquired; but medical men are beginning to ask whether or not there is a limit to what the nervous system of man can endure. Most of us can see no way out of this man-killing race, this vicious circle in which we are all moving. There is no way unless it be the Jesus way.

NOTES-PERSONALS

All but three or four pastors of the Eastern Virginia Conference were in attendance at the Woman's Missionary Conference in Suffolk last Friday, and while their presence in such large numbers greatly delighted the women, it is safe to say that they were each greatly enlightened and inspired by the great conference.

Under date of October 10th, Dr. W. T. Walters writes from Harrisonburg, Va.: "I have received a call from District No. 6, embracing Mt. Union, Union Memorial, Rock Hill and Gapsville Churches, Rays Hill and Southern Pennsylvania Conference, and shall move to the field on the 15th of this month. My address will be Everett, Pa."

Rev. W. J. Edwards, 211 Ward Street, High Point, N. C., one of our true and tried ministers of the Western North Carolina Conference, is open for work the coming year and is willing to go anywhere the work may demand and the Lord directs. Bro. Edwards has been unwell, but is on foot again and strong and is anxious to be again in the active work.

The ministers of the various Churches of Suffolk—Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians—were present at and presented to the Woman's Missionary Conference in the Suffolk Church last Friday. The introduction was by Dr. Staley, who took occasion to say that the pastors of Suffolk always work in utmost harmony and sweetest fellowship.

Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., of Burlington, has been assisting Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor, in a series of very helpful and successful meetings of Durham Christian Church. We have not learned of results other than that good audiences were in attendance. Dr. Lankford's able sermons were much appreciated and that the Church was spiritually edified through the meetings.

The committee in charge still lacks nearly $400 having enough money to pay for and erect the O'Kelly Memorial on the Elon College campus. As stated recently, the memorial is now finished and ready to be erected and dedicated as soon as the remainder of the funds is in hand. Judge J. F. West, Waverly, Va., is chairman of the committee, and J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, is treasurer, and either will be glad to receive funds for this most commendable enterprise.

Dr. Job G. Holland, Holland, Va., sends a check which is acknowledged elsewhere in THE SUN and is sent "to help rebuild the community home (cut No. 4 in last week's SUN) for the Salinas Church." Dr. Holland joins us in indulging the hope that others will help to rebuild the house for the pastor and his family, at last reports, had no roof over their heads and were making out as best they could, greatly handicapped and exposed to the weather, until funds came in for rebuilding the house which was extensively damaged.

On a recent Sunday, Dr. L. E. Smith, of the Christian Temple, preached for the First Congregational Church, Washington, D. C., both morning and evening. This is the Church of President and Mrs. Coolidge, whose pastor, Dr. Pierce, preached some months ago in Dr. Smith's pulpit at Norfolk and also gave the baccalaureate sermon at Elon College last commencement. Dr.

Smith and Dr. Pierce, with their Churches, seem to have already united, and the good work of union between Christians and Congregationalists still goes marching on.

The Sanford correspondence of the daily press of North Carolina speaks in high and commendable terms of the work of six years of Rev. R. L. Williamson, pastor of the Christian Church at Sanford, N. C., who retired from that work last week and moved with his family to Winchester, Va., to accept the pastorate of the First Christian Church of Winchester, beginning November 1st. The correspondence referred to says that Mr. and Mrs. Williamson have endeared themselves to the people of Sanford during their six years' stay in that city, and it is with deep regret the people part with them. Bro. Williamson is one of our faithful pastors, and the Winchester work, we are sure, will go well in his hands.

Our friend and brother Chaplain H. E. Rountree, now with the U. S. S. Utah, reminds us of the interesting fact that it takes somewhat to feed the crew of ship like that, even if they are out on the waters of the deep just floating and steaming around. For instance, during September, while out on a cruise ("loafing around," we presume), the following quantities of foods were consumed: fifteen tons of fresh meat, $6,300; 3,400 dozen eggs, $1,122; 2,000 pounds of butter, $940; thirty-seven tons of fresh vegetables, $2,565, including fruit; twenty tons canned vegetables, fruit, meat and sugar, $4,300; twelve tons of flour, $720. "Each day our bakery aboard converts nearly one thousand pounds of flour into bread." We fear that Bro. Rountree, being a preacher, fares poorly, as we see no chicken listed, unless it be in the fresh meat item, and that seems a plenty for a few "middies" for one month at any rate.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN's circulation manager wants to present every pastor in the Southern Convention a ten-dollar Stetson hat for a Christmas present. Every congregation ought to make this possible by sending us ten new subscribers and ten renewals with a check for forty dollars. You will make your pastor feel that he is appreciated as a pastor. You will help finance the expenses of publishing THE SUN. You will help increase the subscription list. You will not be making a donation when you subscribe to THE SUN, as you will get four dollars' worth for two. Bro. J. H. Veazey, of Roanoke, Ala., has already sent us two new subscribers to start the ball rolling in his Church, and he is going to place THE SUN in the homes of all his Church members. This is fine! Who will be the next one to fall in line? We have three widows who are not able to take THE SUN, and ask that their names be taken off our list because they cannot pay for it. They tell us they enjoy reading it so much. Who will make it shine in their homes?—Chas. D. Johnston, Circulation Manager.

The Suffolk Christian Church sets a fine example for other Churches in making a budget for the year, of all its expenses, and publishing that budget so that every member of the Church may see and have a copy. A copy of this budget, beginning October 1, 1928, has fallen into the hands of THE SUN's editor, and he feels disposed to give it place, as its proportions and total are of more than local interest: "Pastors' salaries, $5,000; organist, choir director and choir leader, $1,680; financial secretary, $600; janitor and extra labor, $775; rent of parsonage, $600; water, lights and gas, $300; sheet music and choir supplies, $100; fuel for Church and Sunday School, $500; Church envelopes and stationery, $250; fire insurance, premiums on building, organ and furniture, $750; supplies, telephone and miscellaneous, $250; upkeep of building, organ, etc., $500; Conference assessment, $2,250; missions and missionary association, $843; Orphanage, $400; Boy Scouts, Church troop, $100—total, $14,898.33." At any rate, our Suffolk Church begins the year knowing what the membership is to undertake financially, and we have no doubt but that they will end the year by reaching their goal.

FELLOWSHIP SUPPER.

The Waverly Christian Church enjoyed its first fellowship supper on Friday evening, October 19. On this occasion there were more than one hundred and fifty members of the Church and Sunday School present, and every one entered fully into the spirit of the occasion.

The program consisted of several musical numbers, solos, quartets, and choruses, interspersed with short talks on appropriate subjects for the occasion, being concluded by a brief statement from the pastor on the financial requirements of the Church for the coming year.

The "eats" were plentiful, wholesome and delicious, being served by the good ladies of the Aid Society in the splendid way in which they do every thing they undertake.

The good efforts of this get-together was reflected in the attendance at both Sunday School and Church services the following Sunday. We are confident many good results and good times are to follow this our first annual fellowship supper.

B. E. WHITE.

ALTAMAHAW, N. C.

Last Sunday, October 21, 1928, we filled our last appointment at Bethlehem Christian Church, Altamahaw, N. C. We have endeavored to serve this Church six years. We feel that the Lord has been with us and blessed in the work, and to Him we give praise for all that has been done to His glory. During the six years we preached one hundred sermons, received one hundred and twenty-nine members into the Church, baptized one hundred and sixteen, conducted fifteen funerals and assisted in many others, and every Friday night we taught a singing class of fifty to sixty pupils.

The Church, during these six years, adopted and used the envelope system in financing to a fair degree of success, built Sunday School rooms costing around fifteen to eighteen hundred dollars, and put in electric lights. In the last quarterly meeting a committee was appointed to solicit funds to cover the main part of the Church building.

During all our pastorate, the congregations have been large. There were five hundred or more present at the last service. We used for our last text 2 Cor. 13:11, "Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you." At the close of the sermon, Communion service was held. We are leaving many of our friends. Memories of their love and devotions will live with us; as they told us good-by, many left money in our hands, and upon going to our car we found that others had loaded it with many good things, such as flour, sugar, honey, coffee, canned goods, chickens, and other things, all of which found a hearty welcome into our pantry. These good people certainly knew what it took to make us glad. Words cannot express our appreciation to them for their love and confidence, and for the many kindnesses they have shown us during our stay with them. We pray that God may supply all their needs according to His riches in glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

FORWARD.

BY REV. J. M. FIX.

"Speak unto the Children of Israel, that they go forward."—Ex. 14:15.

The book of Exodus is one of the most historical and interesting books in the entire Bible. Its name indicates the subject matter contained within its pages. It is a book which records the story of the exodus, exit, or migration of the children of Israel under the leadership of Moses, out of Egyptian bondage. It is well-nigh impossible to estimate the religious value of the book of Exodus. Nowhere else, save in the Christian Revelation, is there to be found so sublime a conception of the nature of God; nowhere a loftier and purer idea of morality as springing out of man's relation to Him. The book of Exodus portrays the early civic and religious developments of a people destined to occupy a unique place among the nations and to exert upon the whole world the very greatest spiritual influence. In this book we find the beginning of the fulfillment of the promise made to Abraham, saying "in thy seed shall all the nations be blessed."

The great underlying idea of the book of Exodus is that of revelation. God is everywhere represented in self-manifestations. His power over nature revealed in Egypt at the Red Sea and at Mt. Sinai. In every event His hand is discernible. "He made known His ways unto Moses, His acts unto the children of Israel." He constantly speaks to Moses giving him counsel in times of emergency, and the knowledge of his nature which he desires to be communicated unto the people. While God is high exalted above the comprehension of His creatures who are unable to see His face, He does not dwell remote from the world, but is everywhere present and active in nature and in history.

One of the characteristic and fundamental ideas in the book of Exodus is that while Israel is the chosen people of Jehovah, it is nowhere asserted that God is the God of the Hebrews only. He rules over the land of Egypt, and all of the earth is His. It is true that He chose Israel as a peculiar treasure unto Himself above all people, and thereby enters into a covenant with them. This people God enlightened, instructed and disciplined, in order to communicate to the world that He was preparing a way for the perfect revelation of His grace in Christ.

The book of Exodus has been in all ages a source from whence both Jews and Christians have drawn lessons of encouragement and warning. Throughout the covenant, Jehovah is a God full of compassion, and gracious, slow to anger and plenteous in mercy and truth; keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin. He promises to those who trust Him that His presence shall go with them and His magnetic power invested in man shall lead them forward.

For centuries the children of Israel had been in strict bondage. The whip of the cruel Egyptian task-masters had fallen unmercifully upon them. As we turn to the 14th chapter of Exodus we hear God instructing them to flee from the pursuing army of Pharaoh. God has given them a great deliverer. Their days of bondage draw to a close as Moses speaks to them. And what does he say? With a faint heart and the seemingly impossible Red Sea ahead, does he say, "Let's surrender?" Instead of meeting defeat, Moses turns his face, not backward toward Egypt, but upward to God, and when called upon God spake unto him, saying: "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."

And God caused Pharaoh to fail in his attack upon the children of Israel and to be utterly destroyed, whereas those who called upon Him were delivered. The Red Sea opened; they walked through on dry ground even in the midst of the sea. Thousands of years have elapsed since God commanded Moses to speak to the children of Israel that they go forward. But neither time nor eternity can hush the voice of the Almighty. Today He speaks to nations, Churches and individuals, urging them not to turn back but to go forward. To His prophets, priests, preachers and ministers, He comes with the same challenge "go forward," and thus lead others.

The word "forward" seems to be the keynote of the age in which we live. It is true in the scientific realm and is especially true of the industrial world. When one looks around and sees the terrific output of automobiles per year and the numerous mechanical devices in the factories of her land, it is evident that we, as an industrial world, are going forward. Politically more is being done to enlighten and inform the American populace as to national affairs than at any other time of the world's history—thus we go forward. Educationally we are making rapid strides toward the training of our children for better citizenship. Consolidated schools and great colleges and universities open their doors to everybody. Truly the word has been spoken—that we go forward in educational endeavor. To the realm of religion we now turn and ask ourselves just how we stand. Have we gone forward with other lines of progress?

Religion and life are combined. One cannot break life into compartments. He cannot say that I am religious in one thing and not in another. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep one's self unspotted from the world." Religion is a series of experiences which bring the soul into communion with God through meditation and sends the individual forth with an unlimited source of strength of body, mind and spirit in service. To this end, religion is universal and should by all means be promoted. To the Church we now turn as an institution and listen to the voice of God speaking to the people of each brotherhood that they go forward religiously during the coming Church year. Practically every Church has its program of religious education, evangelism, stewardship, missions, and social service in which they are going forward. Let them not fail. But to the individual God speaks that each one go forward in some of the great Christian virtues which we often minimize in our spiritual life. What are some of them? Paul, in his letters, speaks to the people of Philippi and Galatia that they go forward by thinking on "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, and whatsoever things are of good report." And then to the latter he tells them that the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance. Let us select a few of these virtues and with emphasis endeavor to place them foremost in our Christian living during this coming Church year. Let us go forward first of all through the greatest of them, which is—

1. Christian love. A virtue that stands above faith and hope, for it never faileth. It prompted Jesus to lay down His life for His friends and for His enemies. It is a source of strength greater than electric, steam or water power. No bacteria has ever been discovered that can survive the sunlight; and no evil can survive the sunlight of the love of God manifest in the hearts of men. Yet with all its magnetic and wonder-working strength we, as Christians, have unconsciously neglected to love one another as we should. We have sought to apply modern psychology, business methods and even force as means of accomplishing our purposes. Most often these have failed, but love never faileth. We have erected houses of worship and adorn them with wonderful architectural designs; we have made them costly and attractive, and frequently left love out of our Churches. Its programs of religious education, stewardship and social service are vital to the life of every Church, but they are not to be included at the expense of Christian love. An efficiently organized Church is valueless to the kingdom of God unless every man and woman appreciate and practice genuine Christian love.

A minister friend now serving in the Eastern Virginia Conference once made a statement in a sermon to which one of his parishoners took offense and for three months did not speak to his pastor. Whereas the minister did not know that his sensitive member was angry and indifferent toward him and he thus continued to be friendly, as usual. One evening the parishoner called at the minister's home and asked forgiveness for the un-Christian spirit he had shown. The minister replied that he had not noticed that he had been silenced by an unintentional offense. The parishoner stated that during the entire time that he had failed to speak, the minister continued to speak to him and that he had felt so mortified that he had come to make an apology. True Christian love overcomes indifference and hatred. Jesus loved those who hated Him. In the Sermon on the Mount, He said: "Ye have heard it hath been said thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." What man is there of you, if his son ask bread would he give him a stone, or if he ask a fish would he give him a serpent? Not one. Such would be contrary to the love of an earthly father for his son. Christian love centers in Him whose love was without end.

The wisest of all men, whose name is synonymous with his writings, says concerning Christian love which was then unborn: "If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty give him water to drink; for thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head and the Lord shall reward thee." Do not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with love. Christian love is illustrated in the story taken from an event which happened during the Russian-Japanese War. It seems that a Japanese colonel had been captured by the Russians and was about to be executed. He had accepted the death penalty without a murmur other than to say, "I became a Christian when a boy and am now about to show my first act of real Christian love. I wish to give a thousand rubles to the Russian Red Cross to be used for our wounded enemies." The Russian commandant was deeply moved and remonstrated with him, suggesting that the gift of money to the Japanese Red Cross or to his own family. The Christian Japanese was firm in his purpose and insisted that his money go to his enemies. His final request was that the Sermon on the Mount be read aloud as he stood ready to meet death. When the words were reached, "if you love them that love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans do the same?" Christian love in the final analysis is doing unto others as we would have them to unto us. It is loving

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

EASTERN VA. WOMAN'S CONFERENCE.

Nothing less than "great," and that but poorly, can be used in describing the sixteenth annual session of the Woman's Missionary Conference of Eastern Virginia, which was held in Suffolk, October 26th. The program was great; the audience was great; the reports were great; the public utterances were great; the whole occasion was great. Assistant Secretary of Missions J. M. Darden, in an inspirational and an impromptu address of ten minutes, voiced the sentiment of hundreds when he said that he could think of no honor that could come to any one greater than that which had come to the president, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, in presiding over a body of such proportion, such spirit and such inspiration. Mrs. Bryant, as president, has certainly carried her organization on a high peak of perfection and enthusiasm, and has developed in the organization a marvelous spirit of co-operation, comradeship and service. Dr. N. G. Newman, one of the beloved pastors of the Conference, voiced the sentiment of the great number of pastors present when he said that he did not get from any assembly, conference, or gathering during the whole year as much inspiration and interest as he got from attending this Woman's Missionary Conference. Practically all of the vast number of pastors in the Conference were there to look on and to be inspired. The women have certainly shown the men how to have a conference of marvelous worth, might, and merit in every particular, and how a conference may be conducted in the spirit of good fellowship and real Christian atmosphere. The women in the kitchen, who served a bountiful luncheon at a nominal price of twenty-five cents, because a previous session had voted that they must make a nominal charge hereafter, said that they fed about five hundred. The main auditorium of the Suffolk Church, now beautiful, solemn and impressive with its new and dignified equipment, was filled to capacity, and some were standing and others were in the gallery. It was certainly a conference great in numbers, and Rev. O. V. Armstrong, a missionary of the Presbyterian Church, recently returned from China, said enthusiastically, as he faced the great audience to deliver a magnificent address, as guest of the gathering, that this was the largest missionary conference he had ever faced. The women had done their work quietly, steadily and heroically through the whole year in their missionary societies, and they had now come together to see and be thrilled by the results of their work, and thus get equipped for the race, the conflict and the effort of another year. Mrs. W. V. Leathers had been entrusted by the women of the societies, as treasurer, to assemble and present the financial results of their sacrificial service. Mrs. Leathers takes a pardonable and praiseworthy pride in this great task, and the charts that she presented to the conference, showing to the gaze of all what each society has done, are the work not only of an enthusiast but of an artist and a painstaking accountant. Her charts, two large one and a small one, hung on the wall, told a story even in silence that was eloquent beyond words, and nothing less than thrilling to look upon. The conference a year ago met its goal for the year at $7,000. The treasurers' reports show that they had raised and sent in $7,689, being over $1,300 above what was raised as shown in the report of a year ago. The conference has now grown to such proportions, in fact, that there are to be two divisions assembling in annual session hereafter, one the Woman's Conference proper and the other the young people of the conference. The first session of this, the Young People's Conference, is to be held in the same Church and auditorium this year, as was the Woman's Conference, namely: on the evening of November 9th. The young people of the conference are now doing far more and giving much more to missions than was the whole conference six or seven years ago.

It was a beautiful and inspiring scene when the conference opened. At 10:30 the great auditorium was filled, the splendid pipe organ was pealing forth a melodious welcome, when Mrs. M. L. Bryant, the president, followed by the four district superintendents and the four department superintendents, came in procession from an adjacent room and took their places on the platform. After a devotional period, conducted by Dr. Pell, of Richmond, and the singing of an appropriate hymn, the superintendents of the various districts made their reports as follows: Mrs. W. D. Harward, for the Franklin district; Mrs. B. D. Jones, for the Nansemond district; Mrs. O. M. Cockes, for the Waverly district; Mrs. H. C. Caviness, for the Norfolk district. These reports presented to the audience the splendid work of the four separate groups of Churches and societies, whose total makes up the annual conference. These had all held their annual sessions last spring and had rallied their forces for active service and had enjoyed splendid meetings and programs. The report of department superintendents came next. Mrs. E. P. Jones, for the cradle roll; Mrs. R. T. Bradford, for the young people; Mrs. W. H. Andrews, for the spiritual life; and Mrs. J. M. Fix for the conference editor; Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, for department of literature. Each of these reports was exceedingly apropos and deeply significant and interesting. Mrs. M. L. Bryant used as the topic of her president's message, "Looking from Our Peaks." Rev. O. V. Armstrong, of the Presbyterian Mission, chose as his topic, "Looking at China." Following this, Mrs. Clarence Harrell and Brother W. W. Ballard, of the Suffolk choir, delighted the audience with a duet, "Love Divine." Mrs. W. V. Leathers, the treasurer, had chosen as the topic to rivet attention upon her beautiful charts, "Come, Look with Me." Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, chairman of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention, was recognized, and in an impassioned address of five minutes emphasized the fact that the woman's work is the one bright star in the great galaxy of our missionary lights and shadows, and the one hope of our organized effort in extending the kingdom through missions. In praising the women for what they had done, he begged them to show us men how to become missionary in spirit and in activity, and, if possible, how to match them in the wonderful work they are accomplishing. The Lieutenant-Governor declared that if we could have had this organization and the vision we now have, thirty years ago, instead of 115,000 members we would have 300,000 members of the Christian Church, and no one can doubt that those words are true and sound a challenge to us even now to redouble our efforts in our missionary task and undertaking.

After an hour, during which all were served royally at a beautifully appointed luncheon, the vast audience assembled and Mrs. E. L. Beale, of Franklin, brought the service immediately into a spirit of worship and reverence through a most impressive devotional service. Mrs. Smith, a recently returned missionary from Korea, gave a graphic account of life and missionary work in Korea. She told us that Korea is one of the most needy and poverty-stricken races in all the earth, and that they are hungering for the gospel of the Son of God. Mrs. Telza Miller, of the Suffolk choir, sang a beautiful solo entitled "Others." Brother J. M. Darden, of the Mission Board, was recognized and added words of fervor and commendation for the wonderful work the women are doing, and said that he could think of no prize more to be coveted than that of being privileged to develop and preside over such an organization as the one now in session before him. The Mission Secretary, J. O. Atkinson, gave a brief story of the Jerusalem conference, which assembled last Easter on the Mount of Olives, and of how that conference, after having been in session for ten days, declared in its findings that while the representatives of fifty nations had come up to the Holy City where the original commission of our Lord had been delivered to His disciples 1900 years ago, they must now needs go out by "roads that lead to the city of God." Those who in good conscience are doing their missionary task, whether assembled in an annual conference or working away quietly in the home society, are themselves plodding along the path that invariably leads to the city of God. A plea was made to the women that they co-operate the coming year in an effort to raise $45,000 with which to wipe out our missionary indebtedness and get our missionary work on a firm foundation and ready again for a program of progress in kingdom-building.

Rev. J. E. MacCauley, of the First Church, Norfolk, in well-chosen terms, presented the four banners to the societies that had attained the highest degree of excellence.

The next session of the conference is to be held at Franklin, Va. Practically the same officers for next year are to be in charge.

It was found that one Young People's Society, viz: that at our Waverly Church, had during the year averaged $12 per member. And that the Holy Neck Woman's Society had averaged $9.21 per member, and that the Dendron, Va., society had averaged $7.53 per member. One society reported 95 per cent average attendance through the whole year. We regret that the name of this society failed to lodge in our memory.

All of the above facts have been written from memory the day after the Conference had adjourned, since the writer was too much interested and too overjoyed with the spirit and glory of the day, to take any notes, and he is sure that more than one outstanding event that should have been mentioned is overlooked in this write-up. But all the events of the day and the whole conference were thrilling, inspiring and uplifting, and combine to make a real epoch and a brilliant page of history in our missionary endeavor and achievement. As Lieutenant-Governor West and Assistant Secretary J. M. Darden said: "God bless the women of our missionary societies who are doing such great work for us and are showing the whole Church, in a most beautiful spirit, the methods and the measures to be employed in dealing with our great missionary tasks." LAW OBSERVANCE.

Much is said and written in these days about the violation of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. There can be no question about the violations of this law that provokes this criticism. The weak point in this criticism is that it is partial in its judgment and ignorant or insincere in its application. All laws in the Constitution are equally binding upon all citizens. It is well to keep this in mind when passing judgment upon others. Romans 13:1 is one key to the door of law observance. "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God." Another help to the settlement of this question is found in Titus 3:1: "Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates," which indicates that citizens should obey the laws of man as well as the laws of God. Appetite, money, and position, seem to be at the bottom of much of this complaint about the violation of the eighteenth amendment. It would be safe to affirm that this law is observed as well as other laws in the first stages of administration. The Sabbath laws of this country are violated as much as this law, and nothing is said about it. What this nation needs is obedience to the laws of God, first, and then the laws of the land would be willingly obeyed.

People go on with their business on Sunday, make the day one of pleasure, neglect the house of prayer, and use the day for gain and pleasure. This is permitted to Jews for religious reasons, and why not permit prohibition for the same reason. Logic fails when it touches appetite, gain, or power. It is not wise to enforce one law and wink at the violation of other laws; and it is not and let a different class go free. It is unjust to right to punish one class of the violators of law punish the poor bootlegger who makes and sells liquor and let the gentleman who buys and drinks go unpunished. It would be easy to enforce the eighteenth amendment if all violators were treated the same way in the courts. The judge and the jury that will keep their oath inviolate in the administration of this law on the subject of prohibition will succeed in law enforcement. Selfishness is at the bottom of all violations of law, and all men need the spirit of Jesus who went down to Nazareth with his parents, and was "subject unto them." He set the example for the family and the State.

No man can use intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes in this country at the present time and be a good citizen, much less a good Christian. If men would go to Church and worship God in sincerity they would not have to go to the polls to take care of prohibition. The altar of the Church is the place to make clean voting precincts. What this nation needs is obedience to fathers and mothers; obedience to the voice of conscience enlightened by the word of God and His Holy Spirit, and then obedience to the law of the land as written in the Constitution. James gives us a good point to consider on this question of law observance

(2:10) "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." If a man owes one debt, he is a debtor. If he violates one law, he is a law-breaker. The implications of a truth so far-reaching, if really understood, would drive the nation to its knees in confession and prayer for pardon.

"SUNSHINE."

Our good friend, Otis A. Hudson, manager Orlando, Fla., Sanitarium, sends THE SUN's editor such a delightful dissertation on "Sunshine" that he yields to the temptation to share with his readers some of the splendid things on this commonplace subject. The editor is anxious to do this because while sunshine is a universal blessing, many are tempted to shun it, and even more are tempted to disregard it, because they do not know its real value. But to quote from the dissertation presented:

"Sunshine is a marvelous, yet little understood, agency, containing life-giving energy and power, and at the same time dealing death to disease germs when properly applied.

"When its rays are gathered up by a reading-glass and concentrated on paper or soft wood, they will quickly start a blaze. This indicates something of their wonderful nature. Yet sunlight is all about us. Animal life and plant life are dependent upon it; but we know only its A B C's.

"Doctors realize its value in the sick-room. Sanitariums and hospitals endeavor to plan their buildings to admit its life-giving rays to every room, but many people seem fearful of letting it enter their living-rooms and bedrooms. The housewife shuts its life-giving rays away from her parlor because it fades tapestry and rugs, not knowing that, at the same time, she is endangering the health and the lives of her family in so doing.

"The virtues of sunshine are closely akin to pure air and good ventilation. All rooms should be aired and sunned every day. The physiological effect is marvelous, in spite of the fact that it may show up some dust. Let God's great out-of-doors in through your windows."

But Friend Hudson goes further than the belief in sunshine as a physical and material blessing. He thinks we will do well to let some sunshine into our disposition and so reap certain mental, moral and even spiritual benefits therefrom. He continues:

"Sunshine may be reflected in the life, in fact should be, for a sunny, happy disposition is better than medicine, and every physician, nurse, and all who would help others should carry an abundance of the sunshine of life into their daily duties. Especially should they radiate sunshine in the sick-room and leave some there when they go out."

In other words, if we would radiate sunshine in our disposition and help to make the world brighter and better, we should pull back the heavy curtains, throw open the doors and windows and let a little sunshine in. One of the great troubles with the human race is that they shut out God's sunshine from their living-quarters and also from their hearts and their souls.

And what the sun that governs the day is to the national and to the mental make-up of men, so is the Son of righteousness that governs the spiritual day and seeks to control the moral attitude of mankind. As we throw open our doors and windows and pull back the curtains to let the material sunshine in, so should we put aside all the hindering causes that prevent the life-giving rays from the Son of righteousness. Let a little sunshine into the heart and soul. Keep that sunshine there, and we will be healthier of body, sounder of mind, stouter of heart and stronger of spirit.

DIRECT OR INDIRECT—WHICH?

It is an accepted principle, in telling a story, that you should never apply the moral.

Why?

Experience teaches that the human mind is flattered by being allowed to think somewhat on its own account, and that a person will more readily apply a moral which his own mind has sensed or thought out.

Teachers in colleges who dignify their pupils by requiring them to think, in the long run are more appreciated than those who do the thinking for their classes. Education, it is generally conceded, is not something done to students, but creating an atmosphere wherein a student may arrive at the highest values in each particular experience or situation, keeping in mind the past and the future as well as the present.

Is there anything in this psychology for the minister? Does he need to be very careful to point out the moral and ethical implications of the great Christian principles he enunciates? Will he achieve more by proclaiming the oracles of God than by interpreting and specifying their applications?

The direct or the indirect—which?

MIRACLES.

Some time ago one of the Southern Churchman's correspondents sent in an "excerpt from a letter," in which it was stated that a certain clergyman preaching on a special occasion had ridiculed the Old Testament account of Jonah and the great fish, asking his hearers whether, to this day of scientific knowledge, anybody really believed such a story. I wonder why he should have chosen this particular miracle from the book of Jonah for his attack, when there are so many others similar; that is, in their demand upon the Christian's faith. Is it any easier to believe the account of the iron axe-head that swam, or the dead man brought to life by touching the bones of Elisha, or Elijah going to heaven in a chariot of fire? Are not the miracles of the Old Testament all of a piece? If you prove one to be false, how can you establish the truth of the others? When the opposing counsel at a trial in court can prove that the witness has lied, of what possible value is his further testimony. The book of Jonah belongs to the canon of Scripture "of whose authority" (which has the nature of truth), our prayer-book declares, "was never any doubt in the Church." Further, to doubt the truth of the miracle of Jonah and the great fish is to call in question the character of our Lord Himself. When He used this miracle to illustrate and enforce the truth of His own burial and resurrection, He knew that the men to whom He was speaking believed implicitly its reality. Is it thinkable that Jesus Christ would have taken this article of the faith of His hearers, have treated it, as He did, as an absolute fact, leaving them under the impression that He believed the same, if in reality He did not so believe it? "I am the truth," said Christ. Can we believe "the Truth" would so act?

Which, after all, make a greater demand on our faith, "Jonah, three days and three nights in the whale's belly," or "the Son of man three days and three nights in the heart of the earth," and rising to life again? There is no such thing as explaining a miracle, whether in the Old Testament or in the New. We accept them as a matter of fact—that and only that. It is this faith on which the Church is built which has kept it alive through the centuries and brought it hitherto. What will happen when this faith is lost? Does the least intelligent "modernist" suppose that the Church could be built de novo on any other foundation? (Continued on Page 13.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

After the meeting of the General Board, which followed the other board meetings in the Publishing House, Dayton, Ohio, I went to Athens, Ohio, to visit Ben W. Buck, who once lived in Suffolk, Va., and has been critically ill for some time. His sister, Mrs. Joe Little, of Suffolk, and his son, Russell and wife, of California, have been with him for several weeks. He had expressed a desire to see me, as I buried his father and mother and married him. Although not a member of the Church, he expressed himself as a Christian, trusting in Jesus Christ. I found he had many friends in Athens who render any help they can, and in a beautiful Christian spirit. Mr. Pratt and Mr. Parker are unusually attentive. I spent Saturday night, October 20th, with Mr. and Mrs. Pratt, and attended Sunday School and Church at the Methodist Church.

After a final visit to Bro. Buck, I left Athens, which is a coal center and university city, for Nashville, Tenn., where I arrived Monday morning at 8 o'clock. I was met by Rev. J. F. Rawles, treasurer of the mission board of the Southern Methodist Church, who carried me to his home. He and his family lived with me in the Suffolk Christian Church parsonage for ten years, and they have two young daughters who are students in Vanderbilt University. That visit was a mutual joy. They carried me to see Vanderbilt University, Peabody College, Scarratt College, Fisk University, the State Capitol, the Parthenon, the Methodist headquarters, many Churches, the Hermitage (the home of President Andrew Jackson), fourteen miles from Nashville. His log house, built in 1804, and his mansion in 1819, which is preserved with its furniture, and the room in which La Fayette was entertained, Jackson's grave and nearby the grave in which his faithful Alfred was buried. The log house in which Alfred lived is preserved with its furniture.

Dr. W. F. Fillett, dean of Vanderbilt, came in his car and carried me for a long drive, but a heavy rain made seeing difficult. Dean Fillett and I roomed together at Trinity College, and we enjoyed the ride together.

A special feature of my stay in Nashville was a very delightful visit with Miss Elizabeth A. Redford, who was in our party through Europe, Syria, the Holy Land, and Egypt in 1895. Miss Redford has, since that time, conducted herself twenty-five parties overseas, and has been through Palestine nine times. She plans to conduct a party around the world next year. She is one of the most interesting persons I ever met, and I told her to come to Suffolk and speak for us after she makes her trip around the world.

The evening before I left Nashville on the Pan-American train, the Rawles family had at supper Bishop Dubose, Dean W. F. Fillett, Drs. W. B. Ricks, E. H. Rawlings, H. B. Trimble and W. G. Cram, general secretary of the board of missions of the Southern Methodist Church, with Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Rawles as hosts, and their two daughters as waiters, and I as their house-guest, we spent a fine evening together. Social life has its place and Christian hospitality expresses more than words. The more I see of the world, and the more I meet leaders in the Church, the more I am impressed with the unity of the Church, the love of Christians for one another, and the hope "that they all may be one."

ELON LETTER.

The North Carolina College Conference has been in operation for eight years. It has created a sense of comradery among the State's various institutions of higher learning. There is a growing sentiment that all the colleges working together can accomplish more than they can working separately. There are yet some college officers in North Carolina, however, who have the "better than thou" attitude and obtrude it on every occasion. There is less of this now by far than eight years ago. It is destined to grow less and less.

This year the conference discussed such items as increasing student fees for their instruction. Students now pay about a third of what their instruction costs. Last year Elon increased her fees, and some of her neighbors did not. The North Carolina colleges are agreed that joint action should be taken on this matter. The State institutions are aloof. Instead of increasing tuition rates, they would like to abolish them. But the matter was thoroughly discussed.

Should colleges advertise? was another issue. The denominational colleges insisted that they should certainly have the right to advertise in the Church papers. The State colleges felt the same way about the daily and weekly papers, since they must reach all the people. Informative advertising, it was generally agreed, was permissible.

What about Latin? It is rapidly disappearing from the high schools. Shall colleges offer beginning courses in Latin as they have been forced to do in Greek? Is there more culture in Latin than in French or in chemistry, or in Bible or in business administration? It was suggested that college teachers need to examine the objectives of higher education, and that they need a philosophy of education, based on a sound psychology. Many college professors do not know that the so-called faculty psychology has been totally discarded by the accepted leaders. Many of them believe in a transfer of ability under conditions that are laughable to a thoroughly trained psychologist.

Next year the conference will discuss methods by which the quality of college teaching may be improved. The writer suggested that another topic worthy of discussion would be improving the executives of our colleges. The varied duties of a college president or dean are not appreciated by the onlooker, and these officers have had to learn by experience. They should have definite training. The college conference cannot give that, but its members could exchange experiences, and that would help. One of these days we will have that matter, too, discussed by this body of altogether earnest-minded college leaders. The willingness of the conference to discuss any problem is its strongest point.

W. A. HARPER.

THE TRUTH ABOUT PROHIBITION.

BY DR. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN.

Prohibition has done more for our nation than any other single measure of reform in our entire history. It has helped our homes. It has helped our schools. It has helped our stores. It has helped our factories. It has helped, in fact, every legitimate interest and every legitimate business. The only business that has not been helped by prohibition is the liquor business itself. Prohibition has outlawed the greatest curse to humanity—the liquor traffic. People who say conditions are worse today than before prohibition have simply forgotten conditions as they were then. We see no drunkards lying in the gutters of the streets today. We pass no vicious saloons today along our streets where men rush out maddened with drink to fight and kill and insult womanhood.

The wets fought prohibition before it became a law, and they are now fighting to kill the law. The breweries have paid no dividends on their stock for nine years, and hence millions of dollars are being spent to fight prohibition to bring the curse of drink back into our governmental life. The plea of the wets is that they only want light wine and beers and that they do not want the old-time saloon, but the truth is that the real motive of the wets is to get back the old-time saloon so the breweries can again pay their dividends. Millions of dollars are being spent by the Association Against Prohibition to buy editors of newspapers whose position has been dry, and to buy men and women who have been dry to change their position on the issue and work for a change of the prohibition law.

The wets draw no party line. They are working for the wet candidates on every ticket. Neither should the dries draw any party line. For prohibition is not a party question. It is a people's question—an American question.

If the wets should succeed in placing their candidates in office this year, it will only be an entering wedge which eventually will bring back the saloon and all its kindred evils.

Prohibition has not been 100 per cent efficient simply because it has had the wets to deal with who refused to obey the law. The enemies of prohibition have alone been the offenders. If there is to be a change in the prohibition law that change should be made by the friends of prohibition and not by its enemies. The fact is the prohibition law has worked so well that its enemies cry out against it for relief. It is always the dog that is getting bitten that does the yelling. Just so it is only the wets who are making so much fuss about the inefficiency of prohibition. Prohibition has done much already, and within fifty years it will change the entire social life of American civilization.

The dries had to live under wet legislation for more than a hundred years in this country. It is no more than fair that the wets should live under dry legislation for a like period of time.

The wets know that they have all the wet votes by merely asking for a change in the prohibition law. And the tragedy is that they are trying to get sympathy from the dries who have forgotten what the saloon was, saying that conditions are worse today than before prohibition, and that the young people are drinking more. The truth is, statistics show that there is not one-half as much drinking among the young people today as there was before prohibition. And besides, who ever heard of the wets really being concerned about how much young people drink? The worry of the liquor business which the wets sponsor is not how much the young people drink, but how little.

Can you imagine what conditions would be if the wets should win, and the breweries could again carry on their advertising campaign of large display ads in the papers and large posters on bulletin-boards along the streets and highways encouraging people to drink more?

The wets draw no party line. Neither should the dries. These are the most critical days in American history. What we need is not less prohibition but more prohibition.

The Church of Jesus Christ is not concerned about the welfare of any particular party, but it is concerned with all its power in the welfare of the home, the schools, the people, and in social righteousness. This being true, every Christian has a right to refuse to vote for any candidate on any ticket who is opposed to prohibition.

ATTENTION SECRETARIES.

In the "Ministerial Directory," as published in "The Annual" of the Southern Christian Convention and Conferences, there seem to be some names of persons who have been transferred or withdrawn. It is desirable to have this directory as nearly correct as possible, and in order to get these corrections, secretaries are asked to go over the list and report any entries that should be changed or corrected. Also they are requested to make an accurate list of the names of ministers and licentiates of their Conference and forward with their minutes to the editor of "The Annual."

OXFORD BIBLES

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A SIGNIFICANT GATHERING.

In the early spring, including Easter, of this good year of our Lord, 1928, there assembled, on the Mount of Olives, out from Jerusalem, a most significant and serious group of men and women. There were 240 of them, coming from fifty of the leading nations of the earth, representing the various Churches and communions of the Christian world. Almost exactly 1900 years ago their predecessors in name and spirit, though very few in number, had gathered at this self-same spot. This gathering of 1900 years ago, considering results achieved, was the most significant gathering of all time, for Jesus was present with them and delivered to them His great commission. The ones to whom He spoke were few and without favor or prestige in the world. They had no financial backing, no formal organization, no guarantee of success, save the words of their great Commander, who was now about to leave them; but before going gave them the command, the chief command of all is career, and the one for which He had come into the world: "Go ye, and lo! I am with you even unto the end." The disciples, receiving that commission, went out down the various paths that led from the Mount of Olives and away from the sacred city. They and their descendants in name and person have traversed the earth, knocked and been admitted at the door of every nation beneath the sun, and their message has been heard almost in every tongue spoken by man. That little band going out from the Mount of Olives to carry out the great commission have not merely changed history, they have made history, and they have largely influenced the life and the character of all nations, governments and peoples.

And now, after 1900 years, disciples, representing a multitudinous host, regathered at the same spot that there, where the original commission was delivered, they might spend ten days together in order to take counsel, not as to what had been accomplished, but as to how they, and the millions they represent, might best make effectual the message and the commission of our Lord. These delegates from all parts and communions of Christendom tarried there on the Mount of Olives, sang and worshiped and prayed together, and once more enquired of their Lord how they and the millions whom they represented, might in the best possible way make known to the world the adequacy of His message and of His life. These, assembled this time in the year 1928, had no occasion to doubt the adequacy of the great commission, for it had proven its weight and worth everywhere; they had only to pray and to sing and to worship and take counsel together as to how they might make their Lord's message effectual in the hearts of men. Under the name of the International Missionary Council, these delegates and those whom they represent, are under the leadership of their Lord, to put on a most vigorous campaign and on a larger and more extensive scale than any undertaking thus far through the centuries. Shall we join hands with this great host and do our part in making effectual in the world the saving message of our Lord? In order to do this, we shall have to overcome indifference, ignorance and unwillingness to give and to do. There are 32,000 of us here in the Southern Christian Convention, and the Convention has asked this host to raise $45,000 during the year, September 1, '28, to September 1, '29, to be used in helping extend the kingdom of our Lord at home and abroad. A divine challenge comes to us from the Mount of Olives, and we know full well that our Lord Himself will not fail us and that His message can and will do its work in the world if only we will do our part to make it effectual and to carry and to send it to those who haven't it. We are living in a strange and great time, and we have every reason to believe that the meeting on the Mount of Olives in 1928 will go down in history for results and achievements, second only to those of the first meeting of the disciples on that sacred Mount when our Lord commissioned them to go out to traverse the roads in devious ways that lead to the city of our God.

May we not join that vast host since all who in good conscience do the missionary task and help in the missionary cause, traverse the paths that lead inevitably to the city of our God? One of the greatest Christian statesmen of our day, John R. Mott, favorably known throughout the world, is to give all of his time and great talent to the marshaling and the leadership of the forces assembled and represented on the Mount of Olives in 1928. Under such leadership, guided by the unerring hand and sustained by the unfailing strength of our Lord, the saving work must be done and will be done in the world. Shall we of the Christian Church do our part? J. O. A.

ANNUAL REPORT TO MISSION BOARD.

By MISS VICTORIA ADAMS.

One year in Porto Rico, and what have I accomplished? Certainly not very much so that I could write an interesting report of the work. Most of my time has been devoted to the language study, also trying to adjust myself to the strange conditions.

I have studied the language with great interest; I have associated with people and worked with them in order to be able to learn and understand, also help them to know a real Christ and to enjoy His beautiful fellowship. I started doing personal work very soon after I landed, and I have found that it has been the best language teacher that I have had. Weekly I have been making from ten to fifteen home visits and holding an average of five prayer services in the individual homes, hospitals, and other charity institutions. To me the personal work is at the basis of any successful campaign for the evangelism of the people, young or old. Any one who has tried to do personal work will remember how much easier it is to approach people to win them in some places than others. While I was under the doctor's care for three months I became very interested in the young lady who was working in his office and enjoyed also learning many things of interest about Porto Rico. Most of our conversations were held in a mixed language, also by motions. Soon we became very good friends and I had a better chance to know more of her spiritual life. On Sundays I took her to my Bible class. Now she is one of the faithful members.

With the help of the pastor, I was able to start a Bible class in English during the Sunday School hour. I have a membership of fifteen, and nearly all of them are public school teachers and high school students. During the school term I had an attendance of ten, but during the vacation period the attendance has dropped to six. Soon I hope to have more new members. Beside the class work, this class has had a monthly social gathering held in my home, where songs, games, cool refreshments, and jolly fellowship were enjoyed. The programs of this class the past year have helped the boys and girls to appreciate real wholesome Christian living. The study of the lives and works of the prophets has been the most interesting to every member. This class has also contributed toward special offerings about fourteen dollars, and we are looking forward to doing more in the near future.

In my personal work I found that the young girls of our Church needed much attention. So, with the consent of the pastor, I organized a girls' club and called it "Siempre Fiel," which means "always faithful." The club began its work with a membership of fifteen, met once a week, and enjoyed various programs that are essential to womanhood. The following courses have been studied this past year: Oliver's teacher training, cooking, hygiene, sewing, three books of the New Testament, and home managing. Also weekly I have taken one or two members with me on my visiting tours, in order to teach them how to make calls and hold prayer services in the homes. Different methods have been used to earn money for our funds, also to help the Church as much as possible. On the 7th of July this group presented the Church with a beautiful rug for our pulpit; also gave four dollars to clean and oil the floors of the Church. A monthly social has been enjoyed which has helped them to appreciate wholesome, jolly Christian fellowship. I am happy to say that two members have been added to our group.

During the past year I have tried to help our young people's societies with their weekly programs and monthly socials. For the translation part of my language study, with the help of my language teacher, I translated in Spanish the constitution of the Christian Endeavor. It was read and accepted not only in our Ponce society, but also in Salinas and Santa Isabel. My main purpose is to try to link and create interest between our Churches, and also to help them to learn to work systematically. Of course, as I have not started my definite work yet, I have not been able to do everything that I had planned before I came to the field. I am hoping that soon I will be placed in my definite field of work, so that I can try, with the help of my Master, to accomplish my purpose.

After Christmas I took the responsibility of our junior Endeavor society. Every Saturday afternoon I worked with a group of twenty-five jolly juniors. After our interesting Endeavor program, led by the little folk, we enjoyed one hour of hand and Bible memory work. They certainly have been made happy by the magazine pictures which have been sent to them by different members of our Churches. Surely the little folk are grateful to every one of you for your kind help and interest shown to us. For a while, I worked with a group of six-year-old children and taught them many little hymns. Soon we had a regular choir. A good many times we have given a special number in the Sunday School opening exercises, and also in the junior society. I regret to say that I was compelled to give it up, due to lack of time. The juniors also gave a very interesting Mothers' Day program and also a little reception in our Church-yard, where each child presented to his mother his hand-made gift which he had made in our Saturday handwork class.

Considering the rainy weather and a great deal of sickness, I managed, with the help of Dona Delfina and five capable teachers, to have a very good daily vacation Bible school for three weeks with an enrollment of forty children and attendance of twenty-five. Encouraging results were shown in the handwork and in the Bible work. A new project was taken this year—a class in painting—and it proved a success. We hope to have a better school the coming year. I wish to thank all the societies and other groups which sent me the material for the handwork.

I also helped Carmen Perez, our future missionary for Salinas Church, to study daily vacation Bible school, as it was an experiment. It did not have many helpers, and only twenty children were enrolled. Unfortunately it was necessary to start this school at the same time as the Para school, and I was not able to help her any; just gave her the material and the instructions for the school. We felt grateful for the progress made by the little folks in the two weeks.

Our Santa Isabel school was one of the most successful. Sixty-five children were enrolled, with an average attendance of forty. Splendid results in handwork and Bible work were shown.

During the absence of Mr. Barrett, I have tried to take his place in the various committees of the Evangelical Union, as well as to represent our Church at the different conferences. For almost two months I was left alone on this field and tried to manage the work and its responsibilities to the best of my ability by visiting our different points and meeting with our pastors.

The past year I have received nearly three hundred garments, mostly second-hand, but some new, from missionary societies, clubs, and classes; also a box of kindergarten material. I feel very grateful for the interest shown in helping me to carry on my work among the needy souls.

"May we do all things through Christ which strengtheneth us."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VI—November 11, 1928.

PEACE AND GOOD WILL AMONG MEN.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."—Rom. 12:21.

LESSON: Rom. 12:1-21.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Phil. 2:5-11.

The Sunday on which this lesson will be studied will be the anniversary of Armistice Day. Who can ever forget that day? After all those years of anxiety and yearning, of bitterness and hatred, of fighting and bloodshed, of horror and nightmare, of wholesale slaughter and group maiming, of uncertainty and unsettlement, there came that morning when we learned that an armistice had been declared, and the way for peace had been opened. What a great sigh of relief went up from a war-torn and a war-tired world! How we all looked forward to a return to peace and an era of good will among men! But, alas! Armistice Day and the Versailles treaty of peace did not settle the matter. The world did not become regenerate overnight. Racial bitterness and prejudice did not disappear as if by magic. We found that peace hath her problems. Any one who sees things straight and sees them whole, knows that there is still a great need for the spirit of peace and of good will. The lesson committee did well to use this theme for this day, and to use Romans 12 as the lesson.

In this great chapter, Paul writes about many things, but in a general way he writes about five fundamental things: consecration, transformation, co-operation, character, conduct.

Consecration.

I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (v. 1). Not dead animal sacrifices, not the offering up of a dead son, but the full and free giving of a living personality, with all one's powers at their best—this is what God wants. Paul suggests that it is our reasonable service. In the light of what God, through Christ, has done for us, He has a right to expect it. If ever peace and good will are to come, God must have men and women, young people, boys and girls, who have given themselves so fully to Him that the spirit of peace and good will be expressed through their lives.

Transformation.

Be not conformed, but be ye transformed. We can have a changed world only through changed men and women. Reformation is not enough. There must be that inner transformation of life that Jesus meant when he said a man must be born again or from above. Education, culture and other agencies have their place, but there is no substitute for that vital experience which transforms men. Nations are not going to come to an era of peace and good will unless the ideals of the nation, and the spirit of the nation are transformed by the spirit of the Prince of Peace Himself.

Co-operation.

For we have many members in one body and all members have not the same office. So we being many are one body in Christ. This might be paraphrased to read somewhat as follows: "There are many nations in the world. All nations do not have the same capacities or the same functions.

But they are all members of one family, the human race. And it is only as each nation is given an opportunity for self-development and self-expression in terms of the welfare of the family of nations, that the human race will go far or go at all. Let each nation make its contribution to the human race, and let every nation see in every other nation simply another brother of a larger family."

Character.

Verses 9 to 12 deal in a general way with the kind of character that is absolutely necessary for the well-being both of the individual and of the larger social group. Sincerity—let love be without dissimulation; holiness—abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good; love—be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; courtesy—in honor preferring one another (a principle that is as binding upon nations as upon individuals); energy—not slothful in business; enthusiasm—fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; cheerfulness—rejoicing in hope; patience—patient in tribulation; reverence—continuing instant in prayer. There is no substitute for sound character. The real wealth as well as the real hope of the world is not material possessions or education or culture or power, but Christian character. Please keep in mind, Sunday School teachers, that you are trying to develop Christian character as your ultimate goal. Keep in mind also that other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Christ Jesus.

Conduct.

Character expresses itself in conduct, and is of course affected by conduct. Verses thirteen to twenty-one suggest some forms of conduct becoming Christians and necessary in the complex world in which we live. Be generous—distributing to the necessities of the saints; be hospitable—given to hospitality; be forgiving—bless them which persecute you; bless, and curse not; be sympathetic—rejoice with them that do rejoice and weep with them that weep; be humble—set not your mind on high things, but condescend to things that are lowly; be magnanimous—recompense to no man evil for evil; be honest—provide things honest in the sight of all men; be peaceful—if it be possible, as much as in you lieth, live peaceably with all men; be helpful—if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; be righteous—be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

In this transformation of life, resulting in consecration, and expressing itself through co-operative forms of service, and on character fashioned after the ideal Christ Jesus, expressing itself in conduct—this is the road to peace and good will.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, November 11, 1928.

TOPIC: "What is Being Done for and Against World Peace?"—Rom. 14:19.

Some Bible Hints.

History shows that big armies do not make for peace, but war. Good will is a better weapon (v. 19).

An international court of justice will serve the cause of peace better than all the navies in the world (v. 19).

Believing that if war were to be proclaimed by agreement an international crime, this would make for world peace, we follow this plan (v. 19).

Injustice makes for war, and Christians should shout aloud against it when they discover it (v. 19).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The war habit is probably the oldest national habit in the world. It may be hard to teach old dogs new tricks, but it is harder to make them forget old ones.

The glamour is being rubbed off war. Men are getting the horrible facts of its cruelties, its lies, its abysmal crimes. Such things will at last stir conscience to action.

Peace societies are being formed to give the facts about war and peace. They are educating people in war's futilities and peace's glories.

The League of Nations, says Elihu Root, probably America's greatest international lawyer, has done incomparably more for peace than ever has been done before by any agency.

A Few Illustrations.

Trade rivalry causes war. Customers must be found for goods, and nations will fight to open up new markets. The profit system is a danger spot.

Militarism, or the doctrine that national security can be secured only by armed force and that we should be prepared for aggression, is a danger, "the great pagan retrogression." It engenders fear and suspicion.

A law providing conscription of all wealth as well as men would help to abolish war. There are men mean enough to want war for the profits they make.

We should have a minister of peace as well as a minister of war. We spend untold millions on preparation for war and little or nothing to create good will and make for peace.

To Think About.

Can you imagine Jesus sanctioning modern war? Why?

How may we most effectively work for international peace?

What are the Churches now saying regarding the war system?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

Rev. Thomas C. Bryan, president of the South Carolina Christian Endeavor Union, will move November 1st to Whitmire, S. C.

Lake Charles, Crowley, Baton Rouge, and New Orleans for district rallies and conventions.

Mr. Breg will be in North Carolina from November 12th to 25th, inclusive, for district and county conventions, and other gatherings. Mr. Breg spoke in the Atlanta union meeting October 16th, and has met with the State executive committees of South Carolina, Georgia and Kentucky during October, as well as speaking in the West Tennessee Christian Church convention.

Plans are being made for the all-South Christian Endeavor convention to be held in Chattanooga, December 28-31.

A special train will take the delegates from Dixie to the international convention in Kansas City in July.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

WHAT IS "WORLDLINESS"?

"The friendship of the world is enmity with God. Whosoever, therefore, would be a friend of the world maketh himself an enemy of God."—James 4:4.

Forces of evil; foes of the spirit of Christ, of love, of brotherhood; sensual gratification; inordinate participation in pleasures; pleasures that debauch; devotion to riches and this world's gifts; covetous greed generated in rivalries; indiscriminate attention to pleasantries which suggest unrestrained passion and anarchy; it is a condition of heart which makes preferment of the things of this world.

Not a more striking example have we than that of Absalom. He was flashingly brilliant but thoroughly unscrupulous. He was fascinating and winsome but thoroughly selfish. He spurned his father's devotions. He discarded his grandfather's faith. He spurned Joseph's and Samuel's unimpeachable patriotism. He betrayed his father's kingdom. He deceived the people. And his life went out in disaster.

The rich man was a good man but he was a worldling. He thought he could thrive without feeding his soul and he was suddenly poverty-stricken. The prodigal son thought, too, he did not need sane food—what the world could give him was enough.

The Pharisee prayed that he might be heard by the people. Jesus called him "a hypocrite."

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

TUESDAY.

WHEN AMUSEMENTS FAIL.

"Work not for the food that perisheth but for the food which abideth unto eternal life."—John 6:27.

After a recent concert given for the entertainment of a number of soldiers just before leaving for the World War, one of them was asked to propose the vote of thanks. He arose and said: "We are very grateful for the amusement afforded us tonight, and we appreciate all the musical talent brought for our enjoyment; but we are off to the front tomorrow, and I do not know how to die—I am not prepared to meet God; I only wish there had been something for our souls."

Mother's question: "Yes, I saw considerable of John," said the member of the family who had been away among friends. "John is getting on in the world." There was a moment's pause, and then the gray-haired mother by the fireside asked, "Which world?"

Prayer.—Dear Father in Heaven, we come to Thee for Thy Spirit and Thy blessing in our thought. Inspire us to covet things that give us soul satisfaction and life, and teach us how to look for this. "He that seeketh fineth." Lord, may we find. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

WHAT ABOUT OUR PAST?

"What must we do, that we may work the works of God?"—John 6:28.

I want to tell you that the way to heaven is a blood-stained way. No man has ever reached it without Jesus Christ, and he never will. A man said to me: "I'll cut the booze and get on the water wagon." "Good, what else?" "I guess I'll quit cussing." "All right; what else?" "Of course I am a gambler; I'll quit gambling and I'll never touch a pack of cards." "All right; what else?" "Good! what else?" He said: "If I quit these things I think they cover about all. I'll quit drinking, swearing, stop gambling, and I'll quit being impure." I said: "Good! give me your hand and say you'll accept Jesus Christ as your Saviour." He said: "No, I won't. If I stop those things I won't need to do that." Is that so! That's man's way of salvation. Those are simple resolutions. Resolutions have to do with the present and the future, but never with the past. Supposing you owed a man $25 and you should go to him and say: "I've made up my mind that I'm going to pay cash for what I get from now on." "Good; I'm glad of the resolution, but you owe me $25—what about that?" "Oh, if I pay cash from now on that will call us square." You try to pay the debts you owe God by simply reforming and see where you lose out.

Prayer.—Our Father, if we have wronged any one or taken from any one that which belongs to him, God grant us Thy Spirit so thoroughly that we may do all we can to set our past all straight. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A CHRISTIAN FIRST.

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."—Matt. 16:24.

When the World War made its claim on the U. S. A., Mr. Lester, of New York, asked his wife what she thought of his enlisting. Her reply was, "You are an American citizen first, and then you are my husband. Suit yourself. If you go and come back I shall be prouder of you and love you more; if you go and don't come back you will be a hero."

Can we be as true to the kingdom of God? The kingdom of God is not heaven, nor a blessed home, nor an invisible Church. It is the world in harmony with God. When we can say, "I am a citizen of His kingdom first and nothing of man is foreign to me," when it can be said, "that man has first in his mind righteousness and harmony with God's will," then it can be said we are getting closer to glory.

Prayer.—Our Father and our God, it is hard to live in the world of sin and keep from its stain, but we are glad that Thy kingdom is heaven in this world. Lift us up to that plane and make the world at peace with God. Amen.

FRIDAY.

BELIEF IN ACTION.

"Faith without works is dead."—James 20:26.

If a ship is to ride at anchor till she rots, what does it matter whether her charts and compasses are true or false? Our bodies and our souls live in a material world, and getting a living is our most outstanding business. There are times when we can feel nothing else than that money is the supreme object of our quest.

The men who cut the Panama Canal could talk nothing but steam-shovels. A lady who gave a dinner-party to a group of them said: "The first man who says 'steam-shovel,' I will throw a plate at him." Her husband said, "My dear, you will break all your plates."

Everything is sacred and should be thought of in its sacred relations. The plow in the farmer's hands is a sacred instrument.

Whatever Jesus went about, whether at home helping His father build a house or a yoke for oxen, He said: "I must be about my Father's business." Religion can never claim the whole life until daily work becomes a part of religion. And the best way to fit men for heaven is to get them acclimated to heaven in this world's business.

Prayer.—Our Father, give us a spirit that places us just where we ought to be, where Thou dost wish us to be, and doing what Thou wishest us to do. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE GLORY OF GOD.

"Whatever, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."—1 Cor. 10:21.

God's great aim is not to get the largest possible number of souls out of an unfriendly world into a friendly heaven, but to make the world friendly and perfect. The physical man is to serve the spiritual while the spiritual glorifies the physical. When we can do all to the glory of God we hasten His coming. When we can see (as we should) in our work the workings of God's plans, we can trace His kingdom. Work may be ever so distasteful, but greater is the joy.

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, we pray to Thee for the great spirit of glory to do all we can for Thee in us now and forever. Amen.

SUNDAY.

A PICTURE JESUS WANTS.

"If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature."—2 Cor. 5:17.

G. Campbell Morgan, in a meeting at a certain place, was invited to go with a friend to see a little woman and mother who was once a member of their Sunday School. They went and found the place through an alley, between houses and in a back court. The children ran and hid. The furnishings consisted of one broken table, a chair with a broken back and one cup and saucer, both broken. There was no fire in the grate. The mother was clothed in unwomanly rags with a bruise in her face and the ill-clad children clung to her.

As he went into his pulpit that night, some one said to him, "He is here." "Who is here?" "The woman's husband. He is on the front pew." That night he changed his sermon and preached to that man. Do you think that he hammered at him and scolded him? Never! He told him how God loved him and what God would do for him if he would let Christ in his life and home. When the invitation was extended, the man was the first to come forward. Dr. Morgan says, "I met him and put my arms around him and wept with him, and that night he entered into the kingdom of God."

Twelve months later I was in that town, and the same man says, "I want you to go with me to see somebody." I said, "Who?" "Do you remember that little woman?" "Yes, but you are going the wrong way." "No, they have moved." "Moved! what for?" "Why, he has been converted; now they have a nice little home, neatly furnished, a fire, the children are neat and comfortable, the mother once dressed so unwomanly is now clothed and the sunlight of love is in her face."

This is the work of Christ in a down-and-out man who let Christ in his soul and in his house.

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, forbid that we shall see Thee only as the multitudes of old, but as good sheep who follow the Shepherd and with a constant view to giving Thee in our lives all we are capable of. Amen.

The Diemer family may not hold the world's record for preachers in a family, but the family record is certainly unique. Rev. George Diemer, of Browntown, Minn., is a Lutheran minister. He has five sons, and all of them are also ministers in the Lutheran Church.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our farmer and boys are very happy over their success in their heavy crop this fall and the yield of sweet potatoes. They had a hard job to cure the hay, as the rains came so close together and caught some of it, but did no serious damage. They filled the hay loft in our dairy barn full and had to stack quite a lot on the outside.

They dug and stored seven hundred and fifty bushels of sweet potatoes. We built us a modern potato house last year and we cure them and do not have much trouble in saving them. When they are cured with fire-heat they are fine. We have the potatoes and I noticed this week that the boys are already catching 'possums, so we will soon have potatoes and 'possum—a delicious dish.

Cold mornings make the little boys call for shoes, and when one gets a new pair all want them whether they really need them or not. They all catch the fever; every child likes to get a new pair of shoes; it makes them happy. If some of our friends would send us shoes and clothing it would make us happy, too. We can always fit some one.

dation, or that the present superstructure can possibly stand with the foundation of faith destroyed? "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 3:11). Jesus Christ Himself the greatest miracle of all, a miracle in His birth, working miracles all through His earthly life, and finally ending that life that He might take it again in the miracle of the resurrection. St. Paul, with all the emphasis of which he is capable, declares there can be no Church to any real purpose without faith in this miracle. "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain" (1 Cor. 15:17). This is not only the foundation; it is also the motive power of the Church. To deny this and appeal to humanity to follow Christ because of the beauty of His life is futility itself. The history of the world from the beginning is ample proof of this. Notably, Socrates in Greece; Epictetus and Marcus Aurelius in Rome. No doubt, the Church can continue for a time with its faith gone and can maintain an outward conformity to certain ecclesiastical rules and regulations, but it cannot be for long. Like our regard for the family spoons, which have no intrinsic value, people may be willing to keep a venerable institution going because of past associations, but this will gradually lose its influence and finally perish.

If what we see everywhere concerning the Church are not indications of this, then men of the present day are unable to "discern the signs of the times." If we are going to surrender the substance of the faith to "profane and vain babblings and oppositions of science, falsely so called" (1 Tim. 6:20), we might as well surrender all that goes with it. For what possible good can come from "having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof?" (2 Tim. 3:5.) To stabilize the faith, then, is the one great need of the Church today. Not only by decrees and resolutions of conventions, nor by repeating certain formularies in public worship, but by every clergyman of the Church in public and private, stating whenever occasion arises the faith of the Holy Scriptures without any exception "as this Church has received the same," to be his faith, and stating it also in the plainest English, in the boldest and most unequivocal language.

It sounds wonderfully comprehensive to say that the Church is big enough to contain all schools of thought, when they are often absolutely contradictory. But over against this is the pronouncement of the Church's founder, "A house divided against itself cannot stand."—J. Y. Downman, in Southern Churchman.

MINISTERIAL STUDENTS.

By order of the Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference at its last session, the committee on education will meet in the Sunday School rooms of the Raleigh Christian Church at 9:30 A. M. November 10, 1928, to examine all candidates of this Conference for licensure or ordination. All persons applying for examination for advancement at the next session of Conference are urged to present themselves for their examinations. Those who do not apply should report to the committee in writing or person if they wish to be continued in the class.

NOTICE.

Bro. J. E. Harris, of Prospect, Va., is trying to make a living by securing subscriptions to magazines. He is unable to work at his usual vocation (railroad agent) because of the greatest of all afflictions, sickness, which has left him disabled. For years, Bro. and Sister Harris were active workers in Bethlehem Christian Church, Nansemond County, Va.

He suggests that when ordering magazines for the coming season, or special Christmas presents for some relative or friend, that he be given the business. It will not cost any more, and will greatly aid him. He meets any magazine price advertised, and requests you write him for catalog. Address J. E. Harris, Prospect, Va.

those who hate us, even though it be a most difficult battle. Love will always triumph over malice.

Love is of God, for God is love. God's plan in all things is growth. One has but to witness nature to understand that God moves. He would have those of his followers to go forward in Christian love. The greatest of all love is expressed through sacrifices. This brings us to the Christ who gave His life for those whom He loved.

2. Christian joy. Just as God commissioned Moses to speak to the children of Israel to go forward and thereby experience a sense of joy in being saved from the pursuing enemy, so He would have us as individual Christians know the joy of being saved worldly sin. On numerous occasions Jesus said to those round about Him, "Be of good cheer." When He said this to the sick of the palsy lying on the bed, the sick man became joyous. It is a noble characteristic to look upon the joyous side of life. God never intended a Christian to be gloomy. There is a story related by the late evangelist Sam Jones concerning one of his boyhood experiences that truly illustrates what I mean here. Mr. Jones said that one day he went into the kitchen and watched with the eager eyes of a barefoot boy his mother as she peeled peaches for canning. He asked her what she was going to do with them; her reply was that she intended to preserve them. "That meant," she explained to her son, "to keep them and to keep them sweet." To his audience, Mr. Jones used to say that most people were not preserved but rather pickled. The Christian religion means for you and for me a life of joy and sweetness. We read that "they looked unto him and were radiant." Again we are reminded that when Moses "came down from Mt. Sinai with the two tables of testimonies in his hand . . . the skin of his face shone." Moses had a sense of joy that found expression on his face and "he knew not of it."

Jesus came, saying I speak unto you that my joy might remain in you and that your joy might be full. In every sense of the word, Jesus was a man who enjoyed His religion. In his little book, "The Manhood of the Master," Dr. Fosdick introduces his readers to Him as a man of joy in the first chapter. At the table with his friends, He is happy and entertaining. We remember how He compared His disciples to a bridal party on their honeymoon. Jesus received joy in even being persecuted, and said to others, "Blessed are ye when men shall reproach you and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven."

Too often we have felt that joy came primarily through attaining material possessions. Jesus showed that in all things joy came through serving the needy populace. He put Himself forward to do good to others. By so doing, He received a byproduct of great human value—joy in service.

The New Testament opens with a joyful chorus which is being sung over the Bethlehem manger; it closes with a superb picture of the multitude which no man could number, singing "Hallelujah" choruses. Jesus had a most joyous conception of God. Throughout His ministry He portrayed Him as a Father who knows how to give good gifts to His people. The reason for His joyfulness corresponds to a universal law that the happiest people on earth are those who know and serve God.

If our religion means anything in the world to us, it ought to mean a life unlike the brook that flows from melting snow which vanishes with the sun, but there should be a joy like a stream having exhaustless springs to draw upon.

In conclusion, let us lend our ears to any voice which commissions us to go forward and become better Christians. There is a story taken from the history of the Civil War which relates that General Grant's army continued to lose ground for several days prior to the victory at Vicksburg. Just before the battle was won, seeing the discouragement written plainly upon the faces of his men, the general said, "No turning back; we are going forward." And a few days later they won a great victory. When you and I become discouraged, let us remember that the children of Israel at one time were on the verge of despair, but God spake to them that they go forward. Let us go forward in the two individual Christian virtues, love and joy.

PROHIBITION AND CANDIDATES.

By DR. DANIEL A. POLING.

The drawing of quantities of liquors for use at parties, and with, apparently, no limit to the number of parties one may give or the number of guests one may have, in addition to those permitted to be purchased through the Motbok; the serving of liquors with meals in restaurants, the making of beer with 3.2 per cent alcohol by weight free from all restrictions, and the presence of the ubiquitous bootlegger and the elusive rum-runner, mark some of the high spots of the so-called Bratt system of liquor control in Sweden, according to Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, general secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism, with prohibition, as a result, in the offing.

The statement of Dr. Cherrington is most pertinent to the present campaign, due to the fact, say the continuation committee of the national conference on prohibition enforcement planks and dry candidates, through which his statement is issued, that M. Bergvall, Stockholm director of the Swedish liquor monopoly, was reported by cable as having sailed September 22 for America to lecture in the presidential campaign in advocacy of the Bratt system. This fact, say the continuation committee, further, emphasizes the interest which the liquor forces of Europe are showing in the campaign of Governor Smith to modify the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law. Dr. Cherrington's statement follows:

"If widespread liquor smuggling, a developing taste for alcohol among youth as well as age, an increase in drunkenness and the diversion of large sums from legitimate business means success, then the Bratt system as developed in Sweden is perfect. While it is possible that this system may have decreased the amount of the most ardent spirits consumed by a few, it has multiplied the number of whiskey consumers throughout the country.

"When in 1916 Dr. Ivan Bratt, of Stockholm, persuaded that city to adopt his system of liquor control, it was hoped that the evils of alcoholism might be reduced. That system has now been extended over the entire nation with 150 companies operating to supply and promote the alcoholic thirst of the people.

"Under the Bratt system, those who desire to buy liquors obtain a Motbok in which is stated the monthly allowance that may be purchased by the holder. The limit, four liters per month, is usually sought and permitted, although single men are restricted to a smaller allowance and single women are supposed to have only one gallon per year. This, of course, is not all the liquor which may be obtained by those who are thirsty."

Motbok Easily Avoided.

"Any one can buy a drink in the Swedish restaurants, provided some food is ordered. The

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x3½ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength. One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

abuses which accompanied the Raines law in New York are evident in Sweden, although in a lesser degree because of the smaller population and its more homogeneous character. A restaurant is allowed to serve three small glasses of liquor to a customer, with as much wine as he can consume without being unmistakably intoxicated. A limit of a quarter of a bottle per person is set for stronger wines such as Madeira, Port and Sherry.

"The simplicity wherewith the limits of the Motbok may be avoided is quite evident. A round of the restaurants will enable the heavy drinker to get all the strong liquor he desires without drawing on his Motbok supply which may be reserved for emergencies. Beer with 3.2 per cent alcohol by weight is free from all restrictions, although the stronger imported brands of beer are handled by the Bratt system agencies.

"The elastic character of the system may be imagined from the fact that any one giving a party at his home is allowed to draw an additional quantity for each guest. There seems to be no limit to the number of parties one may give or to the number of guests one may invite."

BRO. FLOWERS' WORK.

In a recent lecture before a large audience, mostly of young people from a rural district, Prof. A. R. Flowers advised the young people to remain on the farm unless they had a deep conviction of their calling to other professions. "I am certain," said the speaker, "that there is a great future for the intelligent, painstaking farmer of the next generation. A generation when he and his family will be respected among the most honored of all classes. No environment has yet been found, for the development of wholesome thinking, that can equal the advantages that you find on the farm under a beautiful blue sky and amid the sublime presentations of nature. I am never so much encouraged as when I face an audience of farmers' sons and farmers' daughters who know how to work, how to appreciate and how to save, and I beseech you to grow more grateful for the chances you have as you grow older. Learn to think on things clearly, and your prejudices will not be much in the way of your success and your usefulness. I don't know just what your idea is of education, but to me it is training one's self how to think and how and when to translate those thoughts into activity. You can "cram up," as many do both in high school and college, and get by in your examinations, but that does not mean that you are a thinker, not at all. There is an old expression, "that he who thinks clearly and seeks truth, with clean hands, finds God in the center thereof." God is the fundamental subject of the Bible and the life eternal, and above all things else, this should be the paramount thought of your life.

LAMBERT.

Cornelia A. Lambert, wife of J. W. Lambert, has passed into eternity. She was born August 13, 1858, and died October 14, 1928; age 70 years, 3 months and one day. She was married to J. W. Lambert November 10, 1881. To this union there were born nine children, eight of them living—Flossey, Louise, Mary Sarah, Ida Maud, Olley and Harden. She leaves a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

Sister Lambert professed faith in Christ in 1903 and united with the Disciples Church. In 1919 the family moved to Randolph County. There she united with the Christian Church at Needham's Grove, Moore County, in 1920. Sister Lambert lived a consistent Christian life and was loved by all who knew her. The writer had the privilege of taking the W. C. Hook, pastor of Holland Christian family in the Church at Needham's Grove, Church. The burial was in the family cemetery near Holland. Mrs. Fowler was the daughter of the late Thomas and Lucinda Gardner Howell of Nansemond County, and was a member of Holy Neck Christian Church. She leaves a husband, three daughters and five sons—Mrs. A. H. Glover, Clifton Forge; Mrs. A. T. Holland, Holland, Va.; Mrs. H. E. Wright, Whaleyville; Paul J., of Smithfield; Benjamin J., Oscar, Raymond and Melvin Lee, R. F. D. 3, Franklin; also a brother and two sisters. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

FIXING RESPONSIBILITY.—

Judge William H. Smathers, of Atlantic City, N. J., has this to say concerning juvenile delinquency: "Increase in juvenile crime is due solely to separation of fathers and mothers. In the next case that comes before me, I will make a personal effort to see that the father and mother are brought before the grand jury and indicted for criminal neglect."

A SOURCE OF POWER.—

Writing under the caption, "The Holy Communion," John Ray Ewers relates some facts which ought to convince us that there is far more reality in worship than most of us believe or receive. Think it through for yourself.

"Dr. William Adams Brown told us last summer about a distinguished friend of his who became worried and ill over business affairs. Several months afterward he met the man again and found him healthy, balanced and happy. When asked the reason, the man replied: 'I made my four hundred and sixteenth daily Communion this morning.' Each morning the business man had made his way to a Church open for daily Communion (Protestant) and there at the altar found peace and power from Almighty God."

POWER BRINGS WEALTH.—

The total wealth of the world is about $1,000,000,000,000. Of this amount, America has one-third, or about $350,000,000,000, and the major portion of this wealth has been accumulated in the last twenty-five years. In 1900 the wealth of this country was about $90,000,000,000. On the same date, or about twenty-five years ago, this country had $1,000,000,000 of gold. Today we have $5,000,000,000 of gold, or about five-eighths of the known gold of the world.

This wealth has been accumulated because of the application of the power engineer and electrical power in some form to every process of manufacturing. Manufacturing has increased more than 400 per cent, and its production now exceeds $60,000,000,000. The amount paid to labor has increased 300 per cent.

THE COUNTRY CHURCH.—

"With good roads and cars, people are traveling farther to Church and the old-time open country Church is rapidly vanishing." Thus concludes the report of a study of one hundred Churches in Wayne County, N. Y. This study was made by Cornell University. Reports that are similar in trend come from various sections of the country. The vital question is not, are there fewer country Churches? The real question is as to the influence of the country Church. One denomination is making an earnest effort to reduce the number of its rural Churches in North Carolina by the consolidation of Churches that are located in what is now virtually one community. Good roads and automobiles bring people closer together. In the old days of horse-drawn vehicles and unimproved roads, a three-mile trip to Church was quite an undertaking at certain seasons of the year. It required more time and effort than a ten-mile trip does today.

This denomination is seeking to give the rural Churches a far richer program of spiritual service. Their objective is to decrease the number of Churches and increase the power of the rural Church. We are not prepared to furnish statistics to corroborate this conclusion; but it has been our observation that the country Church that recognizes no other obligation save to furnish the people with preaching services on stated occasions is steadily losing its hold upon the community. On the other hand, the country Church that is rendering a definite service in the spiritual education of the people and that is offering a program that ministers to all the needs of the community from a spiritual viewpoint, is flourishing and enjoying such a prestige as it has never known before.

CHRISTIAN HEALING.—

The General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in its recent session in Washington, heard a most significant report concerning spiritual influence in the healing of disease. The report stated that "Christian healing has passed beyond the stage of experiment and its value cannot be questioned." The convention was called upon in the report to "thankfully recognize the deepening of the spiritual life of the Church which has come through the growing recognition of the healing power of God." The findings of the report were based upon six years of study of the question. They were embodied in three conclusions, as follows: "That throughout the world spiritual healing is no longer the hope of the few, but the belief and practice of a large and rapidly increasing number of persons; that such healing is an experience of mankind that can no longer be questioned; that while faith in any supposed remedy produces some effect, vital faith in God, as revealed in Christ, is followed by results which are more sure, more lasting and of a more evidently spiritual character."

This is a significant pronouncement, coming as it does from one of the most conservative and one of the best educated of the Protestant denominations in America. For many years this most beneficent phase of the Christian religion has been neglected, chiefly as it seems to us, because it could be so easily exploited by the unscrupulous seeker after publicity. And because the ignorant and credulous were prone to be led by it to dangerous extremes. It was the conviction of the report that spiritual healing should always be carried on in close co-operation with medical science and practice. One wonders if that about which our Episcopal brethren were talking has not been enjoyed all the time by those who were blessed with the services of both the consecrated Christian doctor and the consecrated Christian pastor.

THE CHURCH AND WAR.—

For the past ten years there has been a deepening conviction that the Church must concern itself with the problem of war. A bleeding world consoled itself for a season with the declaration that the World War was a "war to end war." But after the war was ended it soon appeared that, no matter how sincere may have been the intentions of those who proclaimed and preached the popular slogans, the world politicians were not at all disposed to take it seriously. Very soon the masses seemed to forget all about the matter. The far-visions men of the Christian Church have determined that the issue shall not be so lightly passed over. They are seeking to sift the question of war to its fundamentals, and to set forth the relationship of the Christian gospel to this most ancient curse of civilization.

The International Congress of Antimilitarist Clergymen met last August in Amsterdam, of the Netherlands. The congress was composed of about 100 members, ministers from most of the European countries and America. Many different denominations and varying shades of theological belief were represented. But all of these were submerged, and every energy directed to the task in hand. The problem was studied in four major phases: war and Christianity, war and economics, war and justice, and war and races. It is not to be expected that every Christian is ready to accept each finding of this body. But they are certainly deserving of the most earnest consideration of every Christian man and woman.

We give the resolutions as they were unanimously adopted: Judging—

1. That the moral principles of Christianity, as they are revealed by the gospel of Jesus Christ, are in irreconcilable contrast with war;

2. That war, especially modern warfare, by its very character violates all Christian values;

3. That the State, which makes preparation for war and forces its citizens to share in the business of war, de-Christianizes the nation;

Therefore, the appeal is made to the Christian Churches to consider it their duty—

1. To declaim in a fundamental anti-militaristic sense against the sin of war and war preparation;

2. To declare the position of military chaplain as incompatible with the gospel;

3. To protect the conscientious objector as one maintaining the true Christian attitude;

4. To convince the Christian nation that it ought to disarm and, instead of the sinful risk of war, ought to accept, in reliance on the assistance of God, the risk of peace.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. B. J. Earp has changed his address and place of residence from Winchester, Va., to Harrisonburg, Va., at which place correspondents may now address him.

What plan has your Church adopted, or do you contemplate adopting, to raise its missionary quota the coming year? "Plan the work and then work the plan."

There was universal regret at the Eastern Virginia Conference that Rev. F. C. Lester, one of the most beloved ministers of the body, was, because of illness, unable to be present. Special prayer was offered for Bro. Lester's recovery. There were many expressions of solicitude that Bro. Lester would soon be restored and back at his accustomed place and work.

It was learned at the Eastern Virginia Conference that Bro. I. A. Luke, of Holland, Va., was in poor state of health at present and was unable to be in Conference and fill his accustomed place as the efficient and capable chairman of the committee on apportionments. Bro. Luke has served his Conference in this capacity and other capacities through the past several years, and there were many expressions of deep regret at his absence.

Rev. Alva Martin Kerr, D. D., our beloved editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, passed away at his home in Dayton, Ohio, on Thursday evening, November 1, 1928. Funeral services were held at the Shiloh Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio, Monday, November 5th, at 2:30 P. M., at which time Dr. Frank G. Coffin, President of the General Convention, spoke for the denomination, and Mr. John M. Moore, of the Y. M. C. A. religious department, for the interdenominational work. An appreciation of Dr. Kerr is presented elsewhere in this issue, both by Dr. W. A. Harper, an associate of Dr. Kerr on the Herald, and also by THE SUN's editor.

This comes from Mrs. D. P. Barrett and should encourage our people to help in the work of relief for the distressed and needy Porto Ricans: "Just a word to say that we are still on the job. We have just now received twenty-six packages of clothing from different States. I have not yet had time to list them, but I notice North Carolina on several, so would like for you to say just a word through THE SUN, so the folks in the South will know we are receiving each mail, and I will write a note to each sender as soon as possible (these twenty-six will have to wait till next mail). Pallie (D. P.) took the car full yesterday and left with the pastors to distribute. We expect to go again tomorrow. Miss Adams is also receiving even more than we, so you see the folks everywhere are responding. Old Mother Nature is doing all she can to erase all traces of the storm, and in many places man is helping. We have had very heavy rains, and that helps also. Pallie (D. P.) took a snapshot of the packages as they were piled on the porch just as the postmen left them. If it is good, will send one on next mail for THE SUN."

WORK WITH YOUNG PEOPLE.

The pastor of the Freewill Baptist Church, at Elm City, has invited Prof. A. R. Flowers back to this Church for further work among the young people; however, the older people seem to enjoy the work as much as the young. Bro. Flowers spent eight evenings the first week in September at this Church, and it is due to the good work which was done in that week that he is asked to return. Prof. Flowers is unassuming, a sound thinker and a patient, faithful worker. He puts no barriers between himself and the people with whom he works; and it is interesting to see the young people gather around him at the close of each service to ask questions about things in which they are interested. I am certain that our young people are being too much neglected in the restless age in which we now live.

Sims, N. C.

W. G. SCOTT.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be in every home in the Southern Christian Convention. We have around thirty-three thousand members. Counting five members to the family, we should have six thousand and six hundred families. If each family would take THE CHRISTIAN SUN it would bring in to THE SUN the sum of $13,200 per annum and put it on a sound financial basis. Our people would be informed as to our institutions and would become more interested. Our denomination would grow, and all of the institutions of our denomination would be better supported and be able to do a greater work. But the circulation manager is just one human being and can only do one man's work. It is impossible for him to visit all the Churches in behalf of THE SUN. It would cost too much in the first place, and, too, he has too many duties to take the time. Every Church ought to have a committee to work up the subscription list for THE SUN and make a special effort to place it in every home. It is a paper worthy to go in any home. We truly hope our pastors will take more interest in sending in renewals and new subscribers. Some of our pastors have helped us some. We are grateful. Help us to place THE SUN in each home.

WILL THE PEOPLE RESPOND?

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

Just a word to enclose some snapshots that we took last Thursday when Dona Delfina, Pallie and I went to Salinas district with over 200 garments for our neediest ones. Friends of this mission, both North and South, are responding to the plea for light-weight clothing. Fifteen packages have been received last week and this week, and we are busy distributing and Pallie is looking after the repair work. The Clausell's Chapel is again erected and newly painted, costing $70. Arus Chapel will have woodwork finished and roof on this week; windows for Santa Isabel Church are being made, costing $55 plus glass and work of putting in place. As the Romans had no place to go in Salinas, they have stayed in the damaged Foor House; we considered its repair an absolute necessity, so lumber was bought and sent over yesterday and work begun today. Pallie is over there now; he thinks it will cost about $500 to fix that house, as it was nearly a complete wreck. Salinas Church and Descalabrado Chapel have not been touched yet. We are hoping our folks will really become missionary and lend a generous helping hand.

I wish some of our officials would make the island a visit now, as some other missions have done. Under separate cover I am sending "P. R. Evangelico," and on page 4 you will find an article in English by P. W. Drury. Am sorry to send nothing for Conference use, but have had to call a halt. The experiences of the past month and the struggle to recuperate from influenza have been almost too much for me, but I will pray, and the Master can move hearts, message or no message.

Hope this finds you strong for all the work of the Conference season.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

BAPTIZED AND UNBAPTIZED POWER.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

"He went away very sorrowful, for he had great wealth."—Luke 19:23.

Poverty is the greatest curse of the world, and riches is its greatest temptation, and the power of that temptation is in ratio to the position in life one occupies. The whole question of power and its influence upon environment is a relative one. The greater the riches, or position one has, the greater is the power of resistance to all the other powers that life has, and the greater is the tragedy if it is misspent.

A sapling is never bothered by the winds. It bends easily; it is whipped about a little, but then comes back to its position none the worse for its experience. But a tree is big, bulky and bare, and the wind has something to deal with in it. Thus the hurricane storms it, but it resists and usually stands the storm.

This tells us something of man. Page some of our great men of history. Napoleon became drunk with his position and his power. He craved to be monarch of the world, but with that misdirected power he met his Waterloo in infamy and shame. One of the Caesars was king, and wanted more kingdoms. He used his power of intrigue to obtain it, and while dallying with a woman his own kingdom was seized and he died a disgraced man. Such is the story and history of man.

When we turn to present-day problems, China is suffering the curse of poverty, illiteracy and lack of communication, and is starving for the lack of food. Only 5 per cent read and write, and there is not enough railway connections in the entire empire to serve a single city of the United States. No wonder they war with one another. Anybody can start a fight. Ignorance means war.

The problems of the United States are not that of illiteracy, nor lack of communication, nor lack of food. It is the problem of riches and plenty and power. Uncle Sam is like the rich man. In his wealth and political influence he is saying: "I will pull down my old barns and build greater ones. I will have to conserve, grow fat, take my ease, and lavish my pride."

The problem of the United States and her greatest temptation today is the use of that power in the attempt to pull down her old things and build greater ones. He stands at the cross-roads of Dives, where judgment may call him a fool. Not that doing away with the old things and bringing in the new is wrong, but that in cherishing the material and coveting the new we are in danger of failing to reckon with God.

But this is not our greatest responsibility, if we meet our problem fairly and squarely and act wisely, we have got to go deeper than the mere use of our power to do big things; we have to go deeper than the making of laws to control its people. That depth is to touch and train the youth of our age and prepare them for the task. Our most consecrated attention is a baptism of training of our young people in the proper use of wealth and power. Our God, Jehovah, saw this a long time ago and caused it to be written in the sacred Scriptures.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Not all of us are admirers of Mussolini. Perhaps better said, we do not admire everything that Mussolini does. His personality may be positively repulsive to some. But Mussolini has done two things for Italy which are making for greatness and which will send his name through the ages for the Hall of Fame. He is teaching his people self-denial, and he is training them in a self-discipline unsurpassed in the world's history. These are two essential elements in a training for the proper use of power, and only time will tell what Italy may become if this is adhered to through the next half-century.

American people today do not know self-denial and self-discipline. They love to do what they please. But we can't do that; for instance, can you go out on your farm and follow every impulse and fancy and succeed with the crop? Can you go into your store and follow every suggestion of comfort and convenience and make a living? Can you go into your shop and act upon every provocation and succeed? Can you go into a laboratory and do what you please? If so, you won't stay long. I followed a formula once without adhering to directions and made up enough of potassium nitrate, charcoal and sulphur to please my eye and convenience. Instructions said "stick a match to it." I did. I came out looking like a rabbit just out of a fire.

There is a spirit today which says, "I will do as I please"; "I must let myself go"; "I will not go to Church today"; "I don't feel like it." If I do, my subconscious instinctive peculiar complex self may disagree with something that is said and I will suffer for it. I may see some one there I don't like and that may damage me.

A young man is out riding with a lady love. He is tempted to compromise her. He says he must let himself go, "lest my instinctive peculiar complex might violate and harm my mentality."

A young man feels that he has been insulted. He says, "I must let myself go, or my subconscious peculiar complex will be damaged," and so he goes wild.

There is a shipwreck at sea. A man would like to save his wife first, but his instinct says, "save yourself first," and so he must let himself go, lest in saving his wife first his subconscious peculiar complex would be damaged.

A man is in an auto accident. He lets his pugnacious instinct go, but how does he explain his peculiar complex to the judge?

How we rely on our instinct today! "Coxplex" is overworked. How we fear to tamper with our instinctive subconscious complexes! We can't let our desires go. It is unholy to do so. It is power of our lives, but a power which must be controlled by self-denial, discipline and direction for the conservation of the highest good of others.

Our great need today is baptized ones for the Church of the community. What kind of Church am I going to have in my community? A Church that I will attend; a Church that I will support; a Church that I will serve to the best of my ability whether I always feel like it or not; a Church I can invite others to attend; a Church where prayer is the spirit of the place; a Church which God can approve; a Church where we can meet one another and worship. Or am I going to let myself go and do as I please? If we let ourselves go we might go fishing when we ought to go to town after a barrel of flour. It might satisfy our particular instinctive coxplex to go fishing, but it might not satisfy the hunger of the family.

This will apply to anything if your peculiar complex does not want to go to Church this morning, don't go; let yourself go and stay at home. You may enjoy that, but it sets in motion a tendency in the life to let self go. Besides, there are duties for every member of the Church to at least render moral support. It is either something which demands our full support, or it can be dispensed with entirely. Let go if you like, but what wilt thou render the Lord when the judgment lets go? Let your self go. Leave thy duties undone and the community will still merit your criticisms.

Sure, get riches, get social position, get political power, but sanctify that power in the example of Jesus, who yielded to nothing that He knew to be wrong, it mattered not how much it displeased His peculiar complex. Get power; it is the greatest blessing of life. But take it to the measuring-rod of the life of Jesus and learn that He thought it far better to hunger and go without wealth; yea, to be scorned and crucified as a thief, than to yield to sin or compromise right.

Learn the gospel of the rich young ruler: "Give all thy goods to the poor." This was Christ's way of teaching. Baptize Thy power to real service. It means honor God, help the needy, take offenses if need be, turn the other cheek if need be, give the other your coat, accept wealth but turn it to good of the world. "That's the stuff."

The essential ethics of Jesus was the dedication of heaven's power and earth's power to serve, and so He went about speaking kindly to the down-hearted, washing feet when the servant was not there to do it, administering to the sick, giving to the poor, helping the blind to see, going about doing good, and then lifted His voice and said, "The greatest of all principles in life is love." In His last commission to His disciples He said, "The works that I do, shall ye do also; and greater works than these shall ye do." That is baptized power. Shall we dedicate ourselves to it? What is the "baptism of the Holy Spirit?" Whatever else it may mean essentially, it means a clean soul, embracing the spirit of Christ for mankind and consecration of self and possessions to that end. We have allowed this dedication of ourselves to drop out of sight and the Church is losing its expectancy.

The baptism of the Holy Spirit is not intended to make us happy nor holy, but to make useful and through usefulness only do we receive happiness.

We all have intellects, affections, desires, tastes, powers of attention, conscience, imagination, memory and will, all of which represent the "inner man," which are the dynamos of life. These must receive the light of Jesus until no part of them is dark. These must be baptized with training until the whole being recognizes the relation of God in everything. These must receive spiritual energy until the whole conscious being is brought into captivity to the noblest use, so that man can say with Paul, "Whether I live or die, I am the Lord's." The germ of the divine ideal in man needs this nourishment to bring its powers to their proper fruition. The solicitude of the whole Scriptures is for this baptism, and the welfare of the home, the community and the Church are dependent upon it and take their tone from it.

In vain do we adorn our bodies, or do we struggle for money, or for honor and position; in vain do we try to improve civic righteousness or beautify our surroundings if the fashion of the heart is sombre and full of iniquity and misspent energy. But the body may be meanly clad, and money may be scarce, and life in penury; thy dwellings may be obscured by lanes and alleys and fallen-down fences, but the heart behind it may be full of goodness and joy.

When life has received that baptism, rain or sunshine, cold or hot, automobile or beach, golf or fishing—none of them will have charm to keep thee from thy duty. This is the life that will lead us to Him, where we shall gather around the great white throne and sing, "All hail the power of Jesus' name and crown Him Lord of all." We shall pass in a happy transition from this world into the other, saying, "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Amen.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

A GREAT MAN IS GONE.

In the passing of Rev. Alva Martin Kerr, D. D., editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, Ohio, THE CHRISTIAN SUN's editor feels keenly the loss of a dear friend, and the Christian Church takes leave of one who had made an invaluable contribution to its prestige and its power. Dr. Kerr was not only a great man intellectually and morally, but he was a most noble soul and a most gracious and generous spirit. Handicapped for years through disease, he overcame all physical disability by the sheer force of a giant intellect and the power inherent in a great soul. He labored with such strength of mind and soul that the infirmities of body were more than overcome, and no one reading his writings or hearing his utterances from pulpit would ever think of debility of body or of any sort. He was a strong, stalwart, magnanimous soul, and he put the strength and the magnanimity of that soul into his work. He was known best throughout the Church as a writer and was respected, esteemed and admired because of the brilliancy of his editorial utterances and the generous Christian spirit that gave strength to his great editorials. But back of the writer was the man, and back of the man was the great, noble soul.

At Burlington, N. C., when he was speaking before the quadrennial convention and at Urbana, Ill., four years later, when he spoke before the same body, and at Elon College in his marvelous baccalaureate sermon, and on similar occasions, he arose to heights of eloquence and power that made his audiences feel that back of the words they heard was a great soul that gave his words power and penetration and a divine afflatus.

There was no man in all our Church more respected and more beloved than Dr. Kerr. He was both a great pulpit spokesman and an editorial writer of unequalled and unparalleled grasp and penetration. He made an invaluable contribution to the journalism of America. There are hundreds of us who shared the friendship of his great heart, and I feel the sorrow and the loss of his going. We shall not know his kind again, and there is no one of our members to take his place. We shall miss him from his familiar place as editor of the oldest religious newspaper in the world, and in our hearts there will be a vacancy that it will be difficult to fill. Surely, earth is poorer and heaven is richer in the passing of this great and good man, this humble and faithful follower, this splendid and eloquent expounder of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. OUR CONFERENCES AND MISSIONS.

At the Eastern Virginia Conference last week steps were taken by pastors and delegates present, and positive declarations were made, to see to it that missions shall not suffer because of the departure from its former course in financing missions on the part of the Convention and the Conferences. Missions, having shared heretofore in the Conference apportionments, last year to the extent of $6,773.23, stand to suffer unless pastors and Churches in all the Conferences begin at once, as many pastors and Churches in Eastern Virginia Conference declare they are going to do, to make operative plans for raising their mission offering. The quota for the year is $45,000. One brother has generously donated the $5,000 on condition that the entire Church in the South raise the other $40,000. We cannot wait till next spring, or next fall, to begin to raise this money. The Eastern Virginia Conference adopted the following resolutions:

"1. That we indorse the action of the Convention at Richmond in issuing a call for $45,000 for home and foreign missions.

"2. That we indorse the action of the Mission Board in apportioning the amount to be raised by this Conference to the Churches on the basis of pastors' salary, which amounts to one-third of pastor's salary.

"3. That all Churches not having pledged themselves to raise this amount be requested to do so as soon after Conference as possible, and we suggest that the amount be included in this budget, raised by personal subscription in special offerings or as the Church may elect.

"4. That in the event there are Churches that do not care to adopt the full quota requested, that such Churches be requested to put forth every possible effort to raise their quota. That they put on personal campaigns and arrange for a special campaign and offering in the spring, receiving the offerings on Easter Sunday or the Sunday nearest thereto."

Now, what is absolutely essential is that one or the other of the plans suggested above, or some plan, be made operative immediately. Where Churches write their missions offering into their budget, members will, of course, begin to pay on their budget, and money for missions will begin to accumulate in the Churches. Where the budget covering the quota of one-third the amount of pastor's salary is not adopted, the second suggestion that the entire membership be canvassed to find out how much each will give on missions during the year, so as to help make up the missionary quota.

The Mission Board has obligations which must be met now, and if Churches will immediately take action and lay their plans and will begin to act in the matter and work their plans no one need suffer because of the change in financing the missionary work. The most cruel and unpardonable thing will be for pastors and Churches to do nothing about the situation, since the sole dependence for missionary returns now is that of individual gifts to missions, through the Church and through the Sunday School, to be sent on to the Mission

Secretary, that the same may be used immediately for the purpose intended. Every individual, every Church and every Sunday School that raises money for missions now will know just how much it is giving to missions, and THE CHRISTIAN SUN, from week to week, will show just how much is received and from whom. Again, let us say, by co-operation and concert of action our mission cause need not suffer from failing to share in Conference apportionments, but unless there is concert and co-operation the cause must suffer and our mission interest will be retarded.

MONEY! MONEY!

More people are interested in money than any other one thing in the world. It is used by more people than anything else known to man. Children love it; men work for it; governments coin and print it. It is necessary in the business of the world. It would ruin business if all business were conducted on the basis of exchange. If coal had to be paid for in flour, and automobiles in cotton, there would be slow trade not only in these commodities but in almost all other articles of trade in this great trading age. Money is the medium of exchange, and great transactions can be carried through in brief time and easy settlement. A check for a thousand dollars can pass from one man to another and the goods delivered on time. A man may buy and pay for a house and lot in the city or a large farm without leaving the office. The greatest convenience known to man is money. The basis of money in the United States is gold; but most of the money in use is paper money and checks. The paper money is a promise by the government to pay the face value of the bill. In the use of checks it is a matter of faith of men in men. Men could understand faith if they would stop to think that the business of the world is conducted on faith. The average man does not stop to consider what money is; his faith in its purchasing value is so simple and so strong that he receives his pay for work, for goods, for property, or anything that enters into his business relations with others.

In the present state of human society, money is a necessity. It is true that "the love of money is the root of all evil," but that does not mean that money is evil. A thief may love money while a rich man may use it to advance the interests of the kingdom of God. Money is not only essential in the business of the world, but is essential in kingdom work, the Church of Jesus Christ. It is time for Church leaders to recognize the value of money in the field of religion and stop apologizing when money is needed for Christian purposes. The day of apologetics has passed. Money is not only a necessity, but useful in the spread of the gospel and the salvation of souls. Leaders should stop saying, "We are not after money; we are after you." A man and his money are one. If he earned it, he put his life into it. The Church does not really get men unless it gets of their money. If there is any one thing that the Church needs today above another, it is money. Ministers must be taught, and must learn by experience, that a part of their duty is to raise money to carry on the work of the Church. "Give, and it shall be given unto you." There is too much timidity in the pulpit on this question of money. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The great souls of the Church are great givers; and the great givers are not those who give large sums, but those who give in large proportion to what they possess. The poor widow who gave "two mites" cast in more than they all "of their abundance"; and it was approved by Jesus. The little givers can give as much as the big givers, and this is a truth that Church members need to have impressed upon their minds and hearts. This is a great truth and poorly understood. The world works for money and the Church has to work for money if it gets it. After Conference this week should begin and the pastors must not be afraid to urge his people to give at the beginning of the year. W. W. S.

APPRECIATION OF DR. KERR.

Dr. Alva Martin Kerr was one of the great men not only of the Christian Church, but of our generation. Handicapped throughout his life by physical ailment, by sheer will power he rose to a place of leadership in religious journalism unsurpassed in our day. As editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, he brought luster and distinction and leadership to his denomination. I think it is safe to say that no religious periodical was more often quoted in the secular press than the Herald of Gospel Liberty, and this, in spite of the fact that dozens of religious periodicals surpass the Herald of Gospel Liberty in circulation.

In religious gatherings of the interdenominational character in recent years it was no uncommon occurrence to have his opinions on matters of moral, ethical and religious import referred to with hearty approval. His editorials were gems in literary expression, in spiritual concept, and in the beautiful fraternal spirit which pervaded every word employed. His editorial voice was dominant in American religious journalism. He was one of the upstanding personalities of the religious press, and his fellow-editors in the same field looked forward to his weekly messages in the sure confidence that here was a man who had the grasp of a Christian statesman and the heroism of the martyrs.

Dr. Kerr sensed the fundamental spiritual concepts that must always control social actions if religion is to occupy the primary place in the hearts of individual Christians and in social organizations, which it is due to occupy. He not only sensed these fundamental concepts, but he portrayed them like a true artist and contended for them like a true statesman. It will be many a day until his like is found again as the facile editor of our national religious organ, and the winsome spokesman of God's eternal truth to our day and generation.

In his passing, my heart aches. His translation to the eternal life is to me a personal bereavement. It seems to me that we could never have lost him at a time when his gracious and winning personality and manner were more needed in our own denomination and the Church of Christ at large. His memory will be ever cherished as one of the rich heritages of my life, and what I say for myself I may truly say for thousands who knew him only to appreciate and love.

IMPRESSIONS FROM MY TRIP TO EUROPE.

By DR. R. C. HELFENSTEIN.

A trip to Europe is one of the very best ways in which to spend a vacation. It offers a complete change, and that is what a vacation must do if it is to be beneficial. It gives one new experiences, new impressions, new ideas, new ideals, new purposes, new acquaintances, new visions, new vigor and new life.

The ocean voyage itself is declared to be one of the greatest health stimulants known. The benefits of a trip to a foreign country are numerous. It reveals to a person how little he really knows. It enables one to check up on his knowledge of history, and his knowledge of other people. It enables one to see for himself conditions in other countries and thus compare the merits and demerits obtaining in his own country and in theirs, for all the merits are not on one side, nor are all the demerits on one side. Each country has its merits and its demerits.

Each country has its own peculiar customs, its own peculiar beauties, its own peculiar interests, its own peculiar life. Every country is wonderful! You cannot compare the scenery of one country with the scenery of another country, for the scenery of each country is unique. To see the beautiful sceneries in other lands, one is able better to recognize beauties he has never seen in his own country. America has beautiful sceneries that no other country has. But on the other hand, other countries have beautiful sceneries that America does not have. God did not give all the beautiful sceneries and all the wonders to any one country.

Every country can well be thankful for that fact. It is easy for a person who has never seen any other country than his own, actually to think that there is no other country but his own. Naturally, we Americans think there is no other country like our own; but we must not forget that most of the Englishmen, the Scotchmen, the Dutchmen and the Frenchmen and all the rest think the same thing about their countries.

It is human nature to think that one's own country is the best country in the world. But it is bigoted ignorance for one to think that there is nothing equally good, nothing equally grand, and nothing equally wonderful in other countries than his own.

America has her own peculiar charms, and for us charms that surpass those offered by any other country of the world. But we should not forget that every great country has its peculiar charms—charms that are not to be found anywhere else in the world.

The young boy is very apt to think that the old man is a back number, out of date, a "has been," and that he at eighteen knows far more than his dad does at fifty. That is the natural conceit of youth. Such an attitude would be pathetic if it were not ridiculous, for the dad of fifty was also once eighteen. And though he likely displayed the same superiority complex toward his dad at that time, still the years that have passed since then should have increased his knowledge somewhat, especially in having to deal with his own son for eighteen years.

The same attitude is apt to be expressed by young nations toward older nations. The conceit of youth is likely to cause a young nation to look toward the older nations, as youth in a home or in a community look toward their seniors, namely: to be tolerated but not appreciated. The young nation is in danger of having a superiority complex thinking that its lack of age is in itself an element of strength and a warrant for superior wisdom and greatness. Thus a sort of national conceitedness has often expressed itself on the part of American people toward the nations of the old world.

But when one goes to the countries of the old world he is made to realize how simple such an attitude is. He is made to realize that every nation has its greatness, and that the greatness of any nation is enhanced in proportion to its ability to appreciate the greatness in every other nation and in its willingness to share its greatness with them.

A trip to the old world causes one to appreciate the countries of the old world more, and it also causes one to appreciate his own country more. It broadens the horizon of one's world and deepens his appreciation of the whole.

On the other hand, a trip to the new world by those who live in the old world would be of equal service in increasing their understanding and appreciation of the new world.

The countries of Europe, by reason of their age and traditions, are just as apt to discount the wisdom and culture of our young nation because we are young, as America is apt to discount the old countries because they are old. Parents often fail to appreciate the fact that though young people don't know everything that they may know something. As with parents toward children, so with older nations toward younger nations.

Nothing can better correct these mistaken attitudes between countries young and old than can inter-travel on the part of the people of the different countries, and an interchange of ideas from the educational leaders of each country, from the religious leaders of each country, and from the business men of each country. People who visit their sister countries in the interest of a better understanding of the other nation can best scatter the seed of international good will and international friendship. The average tourist from the old countries to the new or from the new to the old does little good toward strengthening the bond of fellowship between the nations. Too many tourists by their prejudices, their selfishness and their nationalistic conceit militate against international good will and friendship.

The people of different nations get the wrong opinion of other nations by seeing a certain class of tourists or globe-trotters from the other nations. The moving pictures, the unbalanced novelists and the jingo press also misrepresent the nations to each other. It would make us all blush for shame if we knew the opinions that some people of the old countries have formed of the American people because of the moving pictures sent over from America which have exaggerated beyond all reason certain family irregularities that may be found in some places in our country, and pictures which have portrayed in a magnified manner some of the indecencies that may obtain on some of our college campuses and in some of our social groups, leaving the impression that such indecencies are the natural order in American life instead of being the exception as they really are.

Then, too, unbalanced novelists and fanatical reformers have likewise misrepresented America to the European mind. The number of such is many, but to name one from each group will suffice to indicate what harm has been done in poisoning the minds of the people of the old world with erroneous interpretations of the people of the new world. Sinclair Lewis and Lewis Sinclair, each in his respective field of literature—one as a novelist, and the other as a social reformer—have pictured American life to the people of Europe as if disgrace were only a synonym for anything called American. Untold injury has been done our nation by such writers who have maligned the American home, the American school, the American college, the American Church, and American civilization itself in order to write what they thought would appeal to morbid minds and have a big sale.

Because of these many gross misrepresentations from thoughtless tourists, conscienceless authors, distorted press reports, and pictures portraying the unrealities of life, a definite movement has been launched between the countries of the English-speaking world to correct these false impressions. Teachers and professors are being interchanged for a year's time between the high schools and colleges and universities of the different English-speaking countries with the thought in mind that such interchange will help to effect a better understanding between the people of the different nations.

A council known as the "Council on Interchange of Preachers and Speakers Between the Churches of Great Britain and America" has also been promoting an interchange between the pastors and Churches of the different countries, in order that the pastors of one country might be privileged to interpret the life and ideals of their country from the Christian point of view to the people of their sister countries. These movements have effected an interchange of teachers and pro-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The present life is important. It involves present and future interests. It has its easy and hard tasks. The easy tasks are those that are met in good health, good preparation, and good spirit. Good health is a great asset and is largely in the determination of the person who uses it. Preparation is another personal asset, made by personal effort. A good spirit is also largely a result of soul cultivation. It might be written as a law of life that God enters the open door of individual life so as to make that life conscious of what it ought to be and do in life; and when that impression is promptly obeyed, life moves on in the right road to useful satisfaction; and a satisfied life carries a good spirit, and that helps in health and preparation. The man who plows should be as well satisfied as the man in Congress; the woman who cooks, as well satisfied as the woman who leads in society. What the world needs to learn is that all work is necessary, all places important, and all positions honorable. The absence of this conviction makes upper and lower classes in the thought and attitude of men and women, and lowers the value of human service. The bricklayer is as necessary as the architect, and the plasterer as the decorator; the carpenter is as important as the painter, and the one who sweeps the yard as the one who sweeps the parlor. The janitor adds to the worship as well as the choir and the preacher. It takes all workers to carry on the world's work, and all singers to fill God's house with praise.

Three rules may serve as a suggestion for best results in all three of the above essentials in human life in this present world; and they would not interfere with the life of the spirit in preparation for the future life that awaits all mortals in heaven. The best life is suited to both worlds; the worst life is not suited to either. The truth is that true life is happy and useful in both the physical and spiritual realm. The three rules for life are simple, within the reach of all, and are useful if they do not lead to perfection. The first rule is: be a small eater. It is said that more people dig their graves with their teeth than with shovels. That may not be literally true, but moderate eating is a good rule for living and working. The stomach is a great organ, and all fine organs need sensible treatment. As a rule, big eaters are short lived. The second rule is: take plenty of sleep. The world has its seasons, and man needs rest for best service. Night is the time for rest in sleep, and day is the time for work. Men of good health are good sleepers. Bed-lights for reading do not aid sleep or health. Do not take business or troubles to bed with you. When clothes are removed from the body, cares should be removed from the mind. A healthy, growing child sleeps, and a healthy working-man sleeps. Nervous people are poor sleepers; ro, better stated, poor sleepers are nervous. The third rule is: keep busy. There is no such disorganizer of man or business as idleness. Very few who retire from business live very long; yet the dream of many men is to retire from business and take life easy. The hardest life is the idle life. The hardest time a man has is when he has no job. To keep busy is to keep healthy and useful. Very few people work themselves to death. If they eat moderately, sleep soundly, and keep busy, they may keep sweet, useful and happy.

ELON LETTER.

The atmosphere of college teaching is rapidly changing in these latter days. For many years the lecture system has been under the ban, and now the time-honored recitation is being discredited as being a species of policing. What is being demanded is a voluntary pursuit of knowledge, valuable as interpreting present experience in terms of racial experience and ideals, so that the student's own active mind will educate him.

Everybody who now discusses education must slip in a word for experience and for voluntary pursuit. A cautionary word needs to be spoken, though, because a student's experience may be so limited as to suffocate his mind within its too narrow confines. There is certainly need—great need, too—of teachers who shall suggest at least profitable paths in the wilderness of knowledge, to be tested by the student's own experience as well as by the accumulated experience of the race. Nor must ideals be forgotten. In a Christian college these ideals must be Christian.

But I set out to discuss the changing atmosphere of college class-rooms today. Many professors prefer to have all the stationary seats removed from their rooms and replaced by movable chairs, arranged in semi-circle or around a conference table. The teacher is there as a companion in learning, and not as a director. The fullest and frankest expression of opinion is not only permitted, but urged. Only one requirement is insisted upon: that a man must be able to report his opinion with solid fact or expect himself to be rated down as a bluffer.

Such classes or groups usually elect from their number a committee to plan their course and its topics, in conference with the teacher so-called, and are permitted to modify their original plans as the course advances. Study becomes research in such a group and becomes entrancingly interesting, and what is learned is really learned. The professor oftentimes learns far more than his class and is at all times a companion in the quest of learning. The quest tends to become a conquest, as it should be.

Smug masters of the lecture method or of the recitation technique have small patience with this innovation in the college field. And they may be right. Time only can tell, but when class-rooms become beehives of animated interest, we must sit up and take notice.

FACTS ABOUT OUR CONFERENCE.

The one hundred and eighth session of Eastern Virginia Christian Conference convened Wednesday morning, October 31st, in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., and was called to order by President Rev. H. S. Hardcastle. As president, Bro. Hardcastle is proving himself very capable, worthy, and well fitted for his duties; also his wit, humor and pleasant manner has won the confidence, admiration and high esteem of those whom he governs. We feel this session of Conference was one among our best. The manner of all present was fraught with sweet fellowship and brotherly courtesy. And the kindness, consideration and hospitality of pastor and people won our hearts to an attitude of hoping great things for them as a Church. The speech-making was of a very high order. "The Southern Christian Convention's Program of Missions," an address by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, was full of thought, earnestness and pathos. I wish every member of our Church in the Convention could have heard it. Following the report of the committee on education, Dr. Harper made an address. In this address, Dr. Harper revealed many of the needy important problems a college is up against to properly instruct, impress and train a body of students in the most desirable, worthy channels of life.

Mrs. M. L. Bryant read the report of the Woman's Missionary Conference, which revealed fine, commendable work done by this Conference. Rev. W. C. Hook gave an address on "A Bigger and Better Conference" in place of Rev. F. C. Lester, who was absent because of illness. Bro. Hook spoke in his usual earnest, convincing style, which always animates and inspires his hearers.

Miss Pattie Coghill, secretary of young people's work of this Conference, spoke on "Christian Education." Her pleasant, pleasing, easy, quiet, fascinating style always grips and holds the attention of her hearers. The report of the committee on evangelism, by Rev. H. C. Caviness, was followed by an address by Rev. O. D. Poythress. In this discussion or address, the speaker soared aloft, dived deep and spread abroad the real things essential for full, complete success in evangelism. Dr. C. C. Ryan, following the report on moral reform, spoke very feelingly and powerfully on the prohibition question. Dr. Chas. E. Shelton, pastor of First Congregational Church, Portsmouth, Va., spoke on "Christian Union." Dr. Shelton's discourse was timely and highly appreciated.

There were several others that expressed themselves in a few words, all of which were good for the work being done. Last but not least, the managing editor of THE SUN was present with us. He did not have much to say, but if you could have seen the broad, pleasant, appealing smile on his face, it would have persuaded you to subscribe for THE SUN.

Well, we have adjourned and are now at our homes. May the Lord immediately impress us to get busy and carry out the plans of the Conference and do more this year than ever before for the spread of the kingdom. M. W. HOLLOWELL.

AN APPRECIATION.

At the closing services Sunday night at Mt. Olivet Church, in Greene County, Va., the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, Rev. W. T. Walters is going to a new field of labor, and whereas we regret to have him leave us, we trust that, while we are losing in the way of a strong spiritual worker in the Church, others will be benefited by his labors.

"Bro. Walters worked faithfully to build up our Church in every way temporal and spiritual, and we can assure the Churches that secure his labors that they will make no mistake. Under his care our Church, as well as others where he has preached, have been built up and strengthened in the work.

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon the Church record and a copy sent to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication."

By vote of the Church,

E. S. MORRIS, Clerk.

GREENSBORO NOTES.

The First Christian Church held evangelistic services for two weeks in October. Rev. O. D. Poythress, of South Norfolk, Va., did the preaching and led in the singing. His messages were earnest and convincing and the Church was greatly revived by the services. Bro. Poythress has marked evangelistic ability and did a splendid work in our midst. There were a great number who renewed their covenant with the Lord and a number who confessed Christ as their Saviour. Seven have united with the Church to date. Our Church auditorium has been thoroughly renovated and relighted and presents a pleasing effect.

ATTENTION SECRETARIES.

In the "Ministerial Directory," as published in "The Annual" of the Southern Christian Convention and Conferences, there seem to be some names of persons who have been transferred or withdrawn. It is desirable to have this directory as nearly correct as possible, and in order to get these corrections, secretaries are asked to go over the list and report any entries that should be changed or corrected. Also they are requested to make an accurate list of the names of ministers and licentiates of their Conference and forward with their minutes to the editor of "The Annual."

OXFORD BIBLES

An Oxford $3⁵⁰
Teacher's Bible only

"The Oxford Bible is the Bible par excellence of the world"

The best recommendation of the OXFORD TEACHER'S BIBLES is the fact that over 3,000,000 copies have been sold. The wonderful helps they contain save your time because they are alphabetically arranged, making reference easy. They take the place of many books about the Bible, and can be depended upon, being written by eminent scholars. The Helps contain 32 graphic illustrations, besides 15 beautifully colored maps. The text is the Authorized or King James version, with over 50,000 centre column references.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

REPORT OF FOREIGN MISSIONS DEPT.

By DR. W. P. MINTON,

Executive Secretary, Dayton, Ohio.

During the year the Woodworths returned to Japan from their regular furlough and resumed work in Tokyo, teaching in the schools, conducting services for various pastors, and as head of the department of Greek at the seminary.

We record with deep sorrow the passing of Mrs. Susie Gullett Fry, at Utsunomiya, Japan, on February 27, 1928, after more than thirty-three years of missionary service. She was buried at Utsunomiya. Tribute to her memory was published in the Herald, but in this annual report we bear record to her earnest and consecrated and sacrificial service. She built with her own money the Sendai Church and gave it to the mission. She also built the girls' school building, and the Utsunomiya Church, selling the latter to the board recently at a very reasonable price.

Dr. Fry and Miss Crew came home in the summer for regular furlough, part of which is being spent in deputation work and part will be spent in school with the hope that both may be returned at the regular time in the late summer of 1929. The Garmans and McKnights continued their regular work at Tokyo and Sendai, respectively, and Miss Stacy spent the year at Ishinomaki, moving in the summer to Utsunomiya to carry the work of Dr. Fry.

We have fifteen pastors in Japan, and one minister in charge of the Orphanage, twelve kindergarten teachers in eight kindergartens, three Bible women, three seminary students, two Bible training students and one kindergarten training student.

Three young men have been ordained this year following their first year or two of active service after graduation. One kindergarten was revived during the year and a new one started.

The Oji day nursery, which we have conducted so successfully since the earthquake of 1923, has been turned over entirely to the Oji Social Service Settlement. Another opportunity to do this kind of work had to be rejected because of lack of funds.

We had eighty-six baptisms in the Japan field this year and one hundred and sixteen last year. Our resident membership has been cut to 586 from 738, and our total membership from 1,972 to 1,966. New pastors revising rolls accounts for the decrease. Enrolled enquirers have increased from 173 to 214. Sunday School enrollment decreased from 2,047 to 1,815. Amount paid for pastoral support by Japanese Church gained from $1,450.25 to $1,482, and total Japanese giving from $3,645.47 to $4,026.18.

The Barretts returned to Porto Rico in July, 1928, after a year of furlough, visiting many of our Churches and Conferences.

Mr. and Mrs. Morton had to retire from the work in Porto Rico this year because of the continued ill health of Mr. Morton.

Miss Victoria Adams has successfully completed her first year of service in Porto Rico and is doing good work, particularly among the young people. She assisted in three daily vacation Bible schools the past summer and is already teaching her Bible class in Spanish.

One pastor was ordained in Porto Rico during the year and two young men were brought into full-time service. We now have five pastors, one Bible woman and one kindergarten teacher.

A Church was organized at Descalabrado in May of this year.

The terrific hurricane that swept Porto Rico September 13th left fearful destruction throughout the island. Several hundred people lost their lives, 70,000 were left homeless and hungry, and millions of dollars of damage was done. Mission boards suffered heavily, but our own mission had the smallest loss of any. Mr. Barrett estimates the losses on our properties at $5,000. It may go beyond that figure. Our missionary societies are doing fine work in sending boxes of clothing to these destitute people. Thirty families belonging to our Church lost everything they had. Pestilence is following the storm and much help is necessary. The fund to restore our property and help our own destitute people will have to come as a special gift above our regular budget for this year or our entire foreign mission work will be seriously affected in its regular channels as the property must either be repaired now or be more seriously damaged. The foreign department is expecting to raise this fund by calling for personal gifts without a general appeal to the Churches for offerings except as a last resort, and asks the approval of this board to proceed in this way.

We have seven main stations as against six last year, a Church membership of 440 as against 459 last year, a Christian Endeavor enrollment of 189, which is twenty-two less than last year, and a Sunday School enrollment of 1,183, which is 49 higher than last year. The Porto Rico Church raised $1,956.60 this year as against $1,928.78 the year before.

We followed the same lines of missionary educational work during the year, issuing one large leaflet covering briefly all the work and a number of smaller ones describing the actual work and workers on the field. A total of 104,500 copies of leaflets were issued and much of this material was used in Church schools of missions, a six weeks' program for the Sunday School during the foreign mission period in February and March and various other ways. A larger number of Churches used the literature in some way, but a smaller number of offerings were received during the year. The interest of our young people in foreign mission work has substantially increased, and we have had the finest co-operation from the Department of Christian Education in this direction. Following is a comparison of receipts for last year and this:

General fund	$39,714.27	$45,499.50
Designated gifts	11,619.50	6,438.44
Forward movement	609.59	187.50
Totals	$51,943.36	$52,125.44

While this shows a gain of $182.08 this year, it has not been at all sufficient to materially decrease our deficit, which now stands at $10,561.72. Up to last May the falling off in receipts was such that a special meeting of the board had to be called and most drastic cuts made in the budget amounting to $5,000 in Japan and $3,000 in Porto Rico. The announcement of the cut spurred some extra giving, and since May we have also received over $5,000 in two unexpected gifts of money not actually raised during the year. But even with these unexpected gifts we could not have financed the work at all without the cut being made.

The illness of the secretary during the latter part of the summer prevented him attending any of the fall conferences. He attended one conference in the spring, three summer schools, the Central Convention, the Student Volunteer Movement, the committee on co-operation in Latin America, the foreign missions conference, the missionary education movement, the Ohio Pastors' Conference, the Southern Christian Convention, besides a number of local Churches through the year. He also attended the meeting with the Congregational secretaries at Washington in the interests of union. The department has sought to get into closer touch with the American board of commissioners of the Congregational Church.

The Foreign Mission Department has taken the following action concerning the work of the coming year:

We endorsed the resolution passed by our Japan mission as presented by the fellowship of reconciliation calling upon the Churches to uphold the missionaries in their work by expressing their disapproval of all forms of militarism including the withholding of funds or other sanctions to denominational schools or colleges offering courses in military training.

The Garmans are to come home next year for their regular furlough, and Dr. Fry and Miss Crew are to be returned to Japan following their year of furlough.

A resolution of appreciation was voted Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Fletcher for their services in connection with the Japan mission though they are working independent of the same.

One of our more experienced younger pastors, Rev. K. Kitano, Jr., is coming to America this month to enter Auburn Theological Seminary for a two-year course, and we hope to have him at our next General Convention as fraternal delegate from the Japan Christian Church.

We have endorsed a proposal made by the Japan Christian Council to the Jerusalem meeting of the International Missionary Council calling for a union of the theological seminaries in Japan and pledging our support of our own mission in co-operating with others in this undertaking.

The Foreign Mission Department has been compelled because of lack of funds to refrain from co-operating in the plan for a Latin-American conference in Havana in the spring of 1929 and also in a great Christian literature program for all Latin-America. All other co-operative work has been seriously curtailed.

We hope to be able to secure the $5,000 needed for Porto Rico reconstruction work by personal contributions without resorting to an appeal to the Churches as above stated.

The Porto Rico Church and mission has heartily endorsed the proposed union between our mission and that of the Congregational on the island and have been proceeding with steps toward this as soon as possible. It is hoped that the United Brethren mission will also enter this union now and that the other missions on the island will soon follow. This board has passed resolutions urging both the Porto Rico and Japan missions to move forward as rapidly as they can with these plans.

The Foreign Mission Secretary had an urgent invitation from the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions of the Congregational Church to attend their annual session meeting this week at Bridgeport, Conn., and a similar invitation that a representative of the Woman's Board be present. Because of our own board meetings, we could not accept, but the foreign board sent the following telegram: "American Board of Commissioners of the Congregational Church, care Rev. C. H. Patton, D. D., Bridgeport, Conn. The Foreign Mission Department of the Mission Board of the Christian Church in annual session sends greetings to the American Board of Commissioners of the Congregational Church. May you have an inspiring meeting and may we soon be united in this work of kingdom extension to the glory of God. (Signed) W. P. Fletcher, president; W. P. Minton, secretary."

The following was received in reply: "W. P. Fletcher, Mission Board of the Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, in annual session at Bridgeport, Conn., received with heartfelt appreciation your greetings and unite with you in the earnest hope for speedy union in our common task. (Signed) R. H. Potter, president; O. L. Maurer, secretary."

In this connection it should be said that Dr. M. J. W. White, who has been a candidate for appointment for medical service under our board, is now considering appointment by the American Board, possibly in the Philippines or two other fields, and will decide this week between that and a call from the Baptist Board for work in South China.

An expression of appreciation was given to our young people for their effective co-operation in our foreign work. The following budget was approved:

Porto Rico:
Regular and special work.....	$9,177.00
Union work	1,323.00
	<hr/> $10,500.00
Japan:
Regular work (Co-op. Bd.)	$8,000.00
Regular work (Japan mis.).....	15,000.00
	<hr/> 23,000.00
Specials	4,600.00
Miscellaneous budget	9,900.00
Deficit	10,561.72
Total 1929 budget.....	$58,561.72

This is just $30,000 less than the estimates made by our two missions, and means permanent injury to the work. It is hoped that the Porto Rico hurricane fund can be raised in full, so as to release every dollar of this greatly reduced budget for the regular work and, if possible, cut down the deficit.

NOTE: The action of the General Mission Board in voting that each department should pay 5 per cent of their income from recurring items in 1927-8 for the Herald deficit means that the Foreign Mission Department must pay $2,561.20 this year to the Herald fund, based on total receipts from recurring items of $51,224.14. Since we had provided for $1,250 in our regular budget for the Herald deficit, it becomes necessary to add the balance of the $2,561.20, or $1,311.20, to the budget above mentioned, which makes the total amount of the foreign mission budget for 1929 $59,872.92.

Officers elected for the ensuing year are: president, Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D.; secretary, Rev. W. P. Minton, D. D.; assistant secretary, Mrs. Alice V. Norrill.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VII—November 18, 1928.

PAUL'S EXPERIENCES IN JERUSALEM.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Be strong in the Lord, and in the strength of His might."—Eph. 6:10.

LESSON: Acts 21:17, 23:35.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Eph. 6:10-20.

The lesson story covers three chapters, a rather long lesson, but it will amply reward those who carefully read it, for it is packed with stirring scenes and dramatic experiences. This man Paul was an interesting character, and he had some interesting experiences. The few days in Jerusalem were packed with situations and experiences, some of them actually hair-raising. To stand trial on a false charge before a packed jury, to be rescued just in the nick of time from the blood-thirsty mob, to be threatened with scourging, to be the victim of a dastardly plot of cold-blooded murder, and to be escorted by an armed guard to a place of safety, were some of the incidents that took place in today's lesson. Among all the mass of details in these three stirring chapters, there are several things which need to be emphasized.

Paul's Personal Courage.

Agabus had told Paul before he went up to Jerusalem that he was going to find the going hard in Jerusalem. And any one who reads these chapters can readily see that Paul did find the going hard. But there is not whimper, not a hint of moral compromise, not a sign of fear. Paul was courageous not only in the physical sense, but in the moral and spiritual sense. He stood by his convictions, no matter what it cost him to do it. The Church needs members today who are just old-fashioned courageous people. We have too much moral compromise based either on expediency or on personal indulgence. We need moral heroes.

Paul's Pride in His City.

As Paul was about to be led into the castle, and in reply to the chief captain's question as to whether he was "that Egyptian," Paul replied, "I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city." Now, Paul, of all men, could see faults in his own city. But Paul took pride in the fact that he was a citizen of Tarsus, and he very emphatically said so. He set a good example for many, many people today. Alas, how many citizens there are who knock their town! A citizen—that is, a good citizen—will do at least two things: he will speak as well of his city as he can, not overlooking the bad things to be sure, but certainly emphasizing the good things, and he will try to make his city the best possible city. One thing is certain—if our town is not the kind of town it ought to be, it is our fault.

Paul's Personal Testimony.

When it came to a show-down that day in Jerusalem, Paul fell back on his own experience. He told of the experience when Christ had come into his life, and of the change it had effected in his life. It was a very simple story, but it was a very vital and convincing one. The best part of it all was that Paul's experience of the Christ was not confined to the past. Paul could still talk about what Christ meant to him, what He was doing in him, what He was doing through him. Paul's testimony was convincing and powerful because his experience was fresh and living.

Paul's Personal Friend.

"And the night following, the Lord stood by him and said, Be of good cheer, Paul, for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome." God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Discouragement, temptation, sorrow, defeat come into life sooner or later, but the Lord knoweth how to care for His own and to bring them out more than conquerors through Christ who loves them.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

TOPIC: "What the Practice of Stewardship Would Mean to the World."—1 Peter 4:7-11.

Some Bible Hints.

Stewardship, rightly understood, would make time; puts a serious interest into life (v. 7).

Stewardship, rightly understood, would make us stewards of the love of God, to pass on that love to others (v. 8).

Our homes would be our own, indeed, but for service; we should be kind, hospitable, using the home for Christ (v. 9).

We are stewards of all God's gifts, not money only, but life, talent, ability of every kind (v. 10).

Suggestive Thoughts.

If all practiced stewardship the Church's treasury would always be full and running over. Our niggardliness hinders the work of the kingdom.

If all Christians practiced stewardship the world could be evangelized in this generation. There would be abundant funds if all tithed.

Business men would feel that they were making money, not for themselves alone, but to improve the lives of their workers and to finance all the enterprises of the kingdom.

If the understanding of stewardship gripped all of us, there would be a new Pentecost, a surge of divine love that would make Christianity a real power in every life, and compel attention.

A Few Illustrations.

Universal stewardship would empty the movies and fill the Churches on Sundays. It would put God first in every life and turn our thoughts to the things of God.

Stewardship helps us to answer the question, "Why are you living?" It shows us that we are, or may be, partners with God in all our work; and that our work is His work, and His work ours.

Stewardship practiced by all would fill the Church with workers, bees, not drones. Try to get a superintendent for an intermediate or a junior society and see how hard it is. Workers are still few, as Christ said.

The best effect of the universal practice of stewardship would be that it would make all Christians Christian—followers of Jesus, imitators of Him, as the needle turns to the north.

To Think About.

Why does stewardship take in more than giving money?

How would stewardship affect social reforms?

What are some hindrances to stewardship?

MISSIONARY NOTES.

By MRS. W. M. JAY.

The missionary cradle roll rally of the Holy Neck Christian Church, Holland, Va., was held Saturday, June 30th, at the Church, with a good attendance, in spite of the rainy day. There were twenty-six members present, and it was indeed a beautiful sight to see those little ones take their parts so well in the program which was suggested in the Herald of Gospel Liberty and to respond to the roll call when their names were called by running to the front with their mite-boxes and money to be used for the Lord's work. A lovely white and yellow basket was placed on the table to receive the boxes, which was very attractive. Three were promoted to the Willing Workers, and five new babies have been added to the roll during the year.

The Young People's Society of Berea Church, at Driver, Va., has about twelve active members ranging in ages from twelve to eighteen. They use the miscellaneous programs outlined by Miss Lucy Eldredge, and have had one public performance, using the playlet "Aunt Tillie Learns to Tithe," receiving a silver offering. They also help in the missionary programs in the Sunday School, which is a fine piece of work. They are an interested group, and two of the girls who have entered college are planning to do social work. Mrs. Elizabeth Everett Harrell is their leader, and she is a great believer in young people and finds it a great joy and inspiration to work with them. She tries to instill in them a love for missions, has them to read their Bible, memorize lovely chapters, pray in public and to be willing to be used for active service whenever and wherever they can.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Berea Church, at Driver, Va., have decided on a new plan for raising their goal. Instead of having suppers or such, they send to each member a little bag in which they are to put a penny for each year of their age, and then some time in June they hold a big birthday party with a big birthday cake and a good program. They think it an excellent way to have a social time and bring in a good offering.

The Elon College Missionary Society, of Elon College, N. C., held their first regular meeting on October 10th, with a fine attendance and a good program. The officers for the new year were installed, with Mrs. O. W. Johnson, the retiring president, in charge. The installation program put out by our Woman's Board, at Dayton, Ohio, was used. Reports of the Woman's Conference which was held at Sanford, N. C., were given and the banner which the society won was displayed. The society is going to put on the program outlined by the Woman's Board, using the envelope of helps this year, and every one seems to be very much interested and the work is starting off in good shape.

LETTER FROM MRS. BARRETT.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

It seems to fall to my lot to do this writing. My husband hasn't had much time for it this week. Dr. Minton sent $200 on last mail, and of course there is so much repairing to be done he is in the midst of it now. They have about finished the chapel at Clausells, and this morning he bought materials for Arus chapel and had a man looking after Salinas also; that is, the house where the Romans live. We have had a great deal of rain, and they have had to do the best they could, roof or no roof, since he couldn't find another place in town to move to. His books are about ruined. But it would do your soul good to see those two, Roman and his wife—not a bit of complaining, but bright, cheerful, and doing all in their power to help in the country districts where his work is.

Pallie and I went over Monday A. M. I had received a package with thirty-one pieces of clothing for children and was anxious to distribute them among the neediest, so we went to sabana Llana and saw what is left of it. We took these snapshots that I enclose. No. 1, as you see, there isn't much left of the rented house for service. No. 2 is still worse, as the houses were washed away by the river. Some of the inhabitants fled to the hills; others into Salinas. Nos. 3 and 4 are examples of "patch-up" remains of homes. In No. 4 there are ten children in the family, all of our Sunday School. Imagine the joy of giving each a new garment—dresses to the girls; rompers to the little boys. Thirty was all I had, but I could have easily found a needy one for 300 if I had had them. In No. 3 they are just getting over the influenza. No help from the Red Cross has reached the folks in our field yet, and we are trying to do what we can.

This week's mail brought us five packages containing over 200 garments. Tomorrow we expect to return to the Salinas district with them. It is the one bright spot in all this gloomy experience—that of being able to help, and we do feel so grateful to the folks at home for their co-operation. These packages came from New York, Indiana and Ohio.

I wish some of our Eastern Virginia ladies could see what an important part that mission car is playing in the work; why, it's about the busiest thing on our field!

No. 5: I had just gone into that home to take a little dress to a sick child. O such misery, poverty, want, and yet smiles and a "gracias," one little girl in particular; she never said a word when I gave her the dress, but took it to her mother, and I chanced to look up just then and caught the radiant expression on her face. I felt it was worth more than a hundred thanks.

I believe our people at home will respond; they are already, and we are looking forward to helping the neediest in all of our preaching points. The Ponce Church named a committee, who bought materials, and several of the members are busy sewing, each one trying to do his bit.

We visited La Marea also. It was the first time I have been able to go to either of these places, having always had duties in our Ponce Church, there hasn't been opportunities to see our country work in that district. Thirty houses fell in La Marea, 52 in Playita.

Your request for a message to the Sanford Conference reached me on the 5th. I had hoped to send some word for the others to you today. As soon as those packages came yesterday I opened, counted and then sat down and wrote to each sender, then later sorted each class, and it took the whole evening. Besides, these things are getting on my nerves a bit; I don't believe I could write a decent message. I'm leaving all these things I write to you to get ready for the public. I wouldn't dare send direct to be printed. If it were at all possible, I'd visit the conferences this year; never wanted to do anything in my life much more, but there's work here, too, even more urgent. The Master can move their hearts, and I believe the work will move on. Why, it just has to or die completely. I wish I had a pen and a tongue like yours—I'd draw pictures all right. I saw enough misery, want, sickness Monday to move a heart like Gibraltar. If it is so in our district, what must it be like in the districts in direct path of the storm!

MRS. BARRETT.

NOTICE.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference will meet at Ingram Christian Church, Halifax County, Va., on November 13th. Those coming by automobile will find splendid roads by Danville or South Boston. The Church is on the Richmond-Danville highway, about twenty miles east of Danville and about twenty-five miles west of South Boston. Those coming by bus will find good service between Danville and South Boston; or if you come by train to Pace, Va., and will notify us, transportation will be provided.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

HIS PRESENCE WITH US.

"My Presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."—Ex. 33:12-23.

Moses facing perhaps the most tremendous task ever laid upon mere man, begged for some strengthening assurance from Jehovah. He received it, promptly and sufficiently. It came in the divine promise of the Lord's presence with him all the difficult way, and the Lord's rest, not at the end of the wilderness journey merely, but during every mile of it.

Earth's happiest and most successful workers have had this abiding consciousness of God working with them. Without it they could never have done their duty and won their triumphs. With it, they have found each day a joyful festival, an easy and exultant progress.

Prayer.—Infinite and Majestic Companion, how great is Thy condescension to us, Thy creatures! How unthinkable that Thou shouldst come down from the throne of the universe, to go with us over the toilsome road of every day! Yet Thou dost do it, and gladly. We give Thee daily thanks for daily blessings, but most of all for this Thy daily presence. Amen.

TUESDAY.

PRAISE OUT OF THE PIT.

"I will sacrifice unto Thee with the voice of thanksgiving."—Jonah 2:1-10.

When we think of sacrifice we think of petition; but when Jonah thought of it he thought of praise.

After one of the terrible battles of the Civil War, a dying Confederate soldier asked to see the chaplain. When the chaplain arrived, he supposed the young man would wish him to beseech God for his recovery; but it was very different. First the soldier asked him to cut off a lock of his hair for his mother, and then he asked him to kneel down and thank God. "What for?" asked the surprised chaplain. "For giving me such a mother. Thank God that I am a Christian. And thank God for giving me grace to die with. And thank God for the home He has promised me over there." And so the chaplain knelt down by the dying man, and in his prayer he had not a single petition to offer, but only praise and gratitude.

That is the kind of sacrifice with which God is well pleased. No prayers go so swiftly to heaven as the prayers of praise that wing their way up from the pit of pain and misfortune. God is with us then, that we may soon be with Him in the height of heaven.

Prayer.—Thou Hearer of prayer, never dost Thou turn away from our petitions, but Thou art pleased above all by our remembrance of Thy mercies. How good Thou art to us! With what kindness Thou dost glorify our days! All eternity is not long enough for our thanksgiving. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CHRIST'S GRACE, OUR GRACE.

"The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ . . . be with you all."—2 Cor. 13:5-14.

Dr. Russell H. Conwell once told this true story to illustrate the grace of Christ as it appears in human lives. At Franklin, Pa., an old miner lived with his daughter and her husband, and it was a great sorrow to him and to his daughter that he was thus dependent on his son-in-law. Finally the old miner went down to Texas and earned a piece of land, on which oil was discovered that made him very rich. He had not told his daughter of the good news, and one day he came back to Franklin in the same old and ragged attire he had worn when he left, saying that he could not work any more, and asking if they would take care of him for the rest of his life. He was received cheerfully and told that, though they had less than when he went away, they would gladly share with him what little they had. He could keep up the pretense no longer, but told them that thereafter they should live in a fine house and ride in an automobile.

The kindness and patience of that daughter and her husband were the outworkings of the grace of Christ. Without Him they could not have shown such graciousness. Wherever He lives His grace lives, His love, His helpfulness, His forbearance.

Prayer.—All-merciful Saviour, Thou hast shown Thy grace first to us, and in wonderful abundance. As we have freely received it, so let us give it freely. Through riches of grace in our Redeemer. Amen.

THURSDAY.

DOES GOD SEND TROUBLES?

"It hath been granted to you—not only to believe in Him, but to suffer in His behalf."—Phil. 1:29.

"Tribulation" is said to have a root derivation which means "threshing instrument." It is another word for "education." Every good thing in the world has been ushered in through tribulation. Every great man has come to his greatness through tribulation. Pain is a happy necessity for better conditions.

Study makes the headaches, but it means wisdom. To a child, the task of memorizing, under penalty of the whip, seems awful, but it has been known to result in broad and massive character. Science and invention has advanced at the slaughter of small investors, but it meant advancement.

The prodigal son would never have come to himself had it not been for his poverty. Troubled waters are healing waters. To Paul, to be imprisoned meant an opportunity for the Lord Jesus Christ. He always enlarged his place by taking Jesus into it. Anywhere with Jesus was a way to heaven. Chains, doors, keys, locks, a guard, to him were only so many things he could use to teach the kingdom of God.

If by a bitter way we can learn to check sin, gain spiritual stimulus, develop piety, self-reliance and respect, find fellowship in common with our fellow-man, we shall reach the greatest plane of goodness and greatness.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we desire to be like Christ. If to suffer is to believe Him and will make Him real to us all, God grant us power to suffer and endure. Amen.

FRIDAY.

GOD HELPS.

"Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth from them all."—Psa. 34:19.

A little story comes to us. A little boy was sent upstairs to fetch a book forgotten. He stayed a long while. Presently the father heard sobs and went to see what the trouble was. He found the child sitting down sobbing, the book at his feet. Upon inquiring, he said, "Daddy, I can't bring it; it is too big." Whereupon the father said, "God bless my boy," and gathered up the boy, book and all into his strong arms, and when he reached the room the boy was all smiles and happy.

That is what He means when He says, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light."

Prayer.—Our Father, help us in all our burdens and cares. Increase our faith and keep us faithful. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE WICKEDNESS OF JEALOUSY.

"Jealousy is cruel as sheol (grave); the flashes thereof are flashes of fire."—Songs of Sol. 8:6.

The twelve young sons of Israel became jealous of Joseph. This jealousy turned to hate, hate to murder, and they lived a lie the balance of their days. How cruel!

The psychologist tells us that every emotion we have produces some corresponding change of our bodies. A bad stomach and a bad liver will give one a bad disposition. Conversely a bad disposition will trouble the stomach.

It is impossible for one to live in strained relations. To do so, Tennyson says, "is more deadly than a mad-dog's tooth. It is such a venom that trifles, light as air, are as strong as proofs of Holy Writ. It is the green-eyed monster which mocks the meat it feeds on."

Prayer.—Dear Father in Heaven, let us walk becomingly day by day, not in strife and hate. May we paint Christ in the pattern of our everyday plans and welcome the good tidings of our brother's blessings. Amen.

SUNDAY.

LET GOD DO IT.

"Vengeance belongeth to me, I will recompense."—Heb. 10:30.

"Thou God, to whom vengeance belongeth, shine forth."—Psa. 94:1.

God has his pay-day in all things and seeing things for the good of all He is infinitely competent to reward us and to exact from the enemy the penalty he should pay for his transgression. Transgressors work for the devil. We are working for God. Let God handle us all. His gifts to the faithful is eternal life.

One may be treated unjustly. A kind and loving one may be provoked by unfaithfulness. The supreme need in such a case is the Father's guidance and patience to await his reward. If we can only remember that darkness cannot dwell where the light is turned on, we can understand also that we can't go wrong when Jesus gives us His light and guidance. To do otherwise is getting away from God.

Prayer.—Dear Father of our souls, we would honor Thee in our spirits toward one another, even as we would in singing hymns of praise and professing our allegiance to Thee. Give us every day religion toward one another, that Thy will may be done in us. Amen.

NOTICE.

Bro. J. E. Harris, of Prospect, Va., is trying to make a living by securing subscriptions to magazines. He is unable to work at his usual vocation (railroad agent) because of the greatest of all afflictions, sickness, which has left him disabled. For years, Bro. and Sister Harris were active workers in Bethlehem Christian Church, Nansemond County, Va.

He suggests that when ordering magazines for the coming season, or special Christmas presents for some relative or friend, that he be given the business. It will not cost any more, and will greatly aid him. He meets any magazine price advertised, and requests you write him for catalog. Address J. E. Harris, Prospect, Va.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We truly hope our Churches and Sunday Schools are planning for a large Thanksgiving offering. This is one year that we are especially in need. The income this year has not been what we had hoped for. The demands from all sections of our Church has been heavier than usual. We have taken one urgent case after another until we now have 117 children. Then, too, we have had the least amount of clothing and other things sent to us this year than any year since we have been here. So we have been forced to buy all of our supplies and the cost has eaten up our bank account. We sometimes wonder if our people have really forgotten us and our family or have they ceased to love the little fatherless and helpless fellows who crave your love so much. So dependent on your generosity to make it possible in life with other boys and girls. Now let us figure a little. The Orphanage has taken in to this date this year the sum of $15,916.73. In checking over our income books we find of this amount $6,145.39 has been gotten from outside sources, which would not have gone to either of the other departments had it not come to the Orphanage. So the Christian Church, for the first ten months of the year, has contributed to the Christian Orphanage to care for an average of 114 children the sum of $9,771.36, or $977.14 per month, or $8.57 per month per child. Now these are facts and figures gleaned from our records for this year. I want to ask just one question. Do you think you have stood by me loyally in this work of love and charity? These are orphans. They are your children. God has placed them in your care. They are the Church's responsibility. God has said in His word, "Pure religion and undefiled before the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction." Is the Christian Church doing this in a fine way?

fessors and ministers between the countries of Canada, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Australia, New Zealand and the United States.

It was my privilege, along with thirteen other pastors from different parts of America, to spend my vacation the past summer preaching in some of the old historic Churches of Europe, under the direction of the Council on Interchange. A similar number of ministers from England and Scotland likewise preached in the Churches of the principle cities of America.

I had spent a year in Europe as a student before the war, taking graduate study in the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, and doing social research work in England, Scotland, France, Switzerland and Italy. Hence the experience of adapting myself to the customs of foreign countries was in no way difficult, for in the year of residence abroad I had learned the customs of travel, etc., and how to translate prices and values and to use foreign money with comparative ease. The fact that my ancestors on my mother's side came from Scotland, Holland and Wales, and on my father's side from Germany and England, I have always had an interest in European life and customs. But every one of us can trace our lineage back to the countries of the old world.

The fact of our lineage should give every person of us deep interest in international friendship. But the thing that alone can give us a passion for international good will, international friendship, and international peace is faith in the love for the Prince of Peace, Jesus Christ, who gave humanity a world religion and who is seeking to give humanity a world-wide peace—universal, unbroken and unbreakable peace.

We had a most delightful voyage across the ocean on S. S. Olympic, one of the three largest passenger ships in the world, sailing from New York on July 21st. The ship is 882 feet six inches long and 92 feet six inches wide, carrying 2,500 passengers and 800 crew. It is really easier for a person to get lost on one of the big passenger steamships than it is to get lost in a city. These ships are like a great hotel afloat, with every accommodation imaginable. The service in the dining-room is equal to that of the best hotels in the great cities. Comfortable staterooms and comfortable berths add to the pleasure of the voyage. Tournaments in various sports, such as deck tennis, shuffle-board, quoits, bull pen, etc., were held each day on the great open decks. The large ocean liners ride so smoothly that, except in a really severe storm, none of the passengers experience any seasickness.

Burlington, N. C. Treasurer.

Burlington, N. C., Oct. 24, 1928.

This is to certify that we have examined the books of Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Treasurer of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference, for the period beginning October 18, 1927, and ending October 16, 1928. We have checked the receipt stubs against her book and find the total receipts amount to $4,510.67.

We have also examined canceled checks and receipts from Mrs. H. S. Hardeastle, Treasurer of the Southern Christian Convention Board, for $4,510.67, showing that Mrs. Sellars has turned over to Mrs. Hardeastle, Treasurer, the full amount received.

HOW ARE YOU TREATING CHRIST?

Dear Simon Self:

I want to congratulate you upon the great success you have made since I first knew you about a dozen years ago. You were then struggling along with your good wife and three children, trying to pay for a little home. You were very successful, and in a few years you "pulled down your barns and built greater." Immediately you moved out of the little shabby house in which you then lived, into a large house that you built and equipped with every modern convenience. You now have an ideal home in many respects. Your neighbors greatly enjoy their evening visits in your home. Your pastor receives a most hearty welcome every time he goes to see you. In fact, your whole community looks upon your home with pride.

Your family is very highly appreciated by all who know them. Your children are very brilliant, and are a great asset to the community. I admire your custom of taking the whole family to Church and Sunday School. The truth is, I don't see how your Church and Sunday School could exist without you. When I first knew you, you went to Church on an old rattle-trap of a buggy. Today you drive the best car in your community.

I learn that two of your children are planning to enter college next September. I trust you will send them to our "own" college. There is none better anywhere.

"One thing thou lackest." "But one thing is needful, and you have not chosen that good part." You treat your dear Saviour as if He were a dog. When your family has enjoyed a bounteous feast you "pitch out" what is left to your dog. You would not think of setting that dog up to your

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4¼ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

table to share equally with your children. Of the bountiful harvest that you reap from year to year you just "pitch out" only a little of what is left to your Saviour. Why not take Him into your home and give Him first place? "For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in." Your great hindrance is selfishness. You have been laying up for yourself treasures on earth. You are not rich toward God. If you would "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's," you would not be embarrassed when your rich uncle visits your Church and is forced to listen to an uneducated minister, very poorly clad. Nor would you be embarrassed because the window-lights are broken out and at the general appearance of your Church, which does not compare with your barn, to say nothing of your dwelling.

When you pay your pastor fifteen dollars per year and two dollars for missions, you congratulate yourself that you have been very liberal. If you would only tithe your income you could pay more than your whole Church is paying. But you say the tithe does not apply to this age. But did you know a man could not be a good Jew if he did not tithe? And surely a Christian does not want to class himself beneath a Jew, who had never had the light that we have.

Now, Simon, since we were boys together, and lifetime friends, I speak very plainly to you upon this vital subject. I am anxious to see you enjoy the great blessings that Christ has in store for you. You can never enjoy your religion to the fullest extent until you are willing to "deny yourself and take up your cross and follow Christ." I trust that you will study your Bible prayerfully and carefully and learn what the Lord requires at your hands and be honest with Him, and insist upon the other members of your Church doing their duty, that you will not only go up to conference with your conference apportionment paid in full—something you have never done—but that you will ask your conference to raise your assessment and besides this you will make a large contribution to many benevolent causes and especially to our mission field that is suffering severely at present for the want of funds.

Remember, "faith without works is dead," and if you pray and do not pay you accomplish very little.

Now, Simon, if you think I am too severe in my criticism and can prove that I am by the Scriptures, please do so next week in these columns.

Fraternally yours,

A PARSON.

WELLS.

William Harvey Wells, son of Elisha Lee and Elizabeth Smith Wells, was born August 24, 1847, and died October 17, 1928, age 81 years, 1 month and 23 days. On May 2, 1880, he was married to Miss Sarah Spencer. To them were born four children, one dying at an early age—Stephen Harris, of Clarksburg, W. Va.; Clifton Harvey, of Edgeton, Va.; and Fleming Edward, of Semora, N. C.

Bro. Wells united with Lebanon Christian Church, Semora, N. C., under the pastoral charge of Rev. J. W. Wellons, in 1870, and was a faithful member till death. At the age of sixteen, he entered the Civil War and served till the close. He was faithful in the discharge of his duties as a soldier and experienced great pleasure in his declining years in reminiscences of his war experiences.

Bro. Wells was a successful farmer, honored by those who knew him for his honesty and sincerity in all of life's duties. For several months before his death he was confined to his home. The doctor came, and his diagnosis showed that the passing of time was the cause of his feeble condition. The deceased died just as he had lived, quietly and peacefully. The funeral was from the home in Person County, N. C., conducted by the writer, his pastor for twelve years, and burial was made in the family cemetery.

In addition to the three sons, he is survived by his faithful companion of forty-eight years, one sister, and ten grandchildren.

C. E. NEWMAN.

BRAY.

Miss Ida Bray, daughter of John A. and Sarah Bray, was born in Halifax County, Va., in 1878, near what is now Virgilina, Va., and died October 20, 1928, near Nathalie, Va. When a young girl she united with Union Christian Church. In 1910, when Liberty was organized, she was transferred from Union to become a charter member of the latter Church, where she remained a faithful member and liberal supporter till death.

In 1901, on the death of her mother, the deceased became her father's housekeeper and took the place of a mother to the younger children. Since the death of her father, about eight years ago, she and a sister had had their home together. On the afternoon before her death she went to spend the night with her niece, Mrs. John Tuck, near her home. While there, she was taken ill and died before the doctor could reach her. She is survived by three brothers—David, Burnette, John, and seven sisters—Mrs. J. B. Vaughan, Mrs. George Stoval, Mrs. Ed Dixon, Mrs. Jimmy Whitt, Mrs. C. B. Tuck, Mrs. Walter Bray and Mrs. Henry Tuck. The funeral was held at Liberty Christian Church on Sunday, October 21, and burial in the Church cemetery.

A large crowd of relatives and friends were in attendance. The floral designs were numerous and beautiful. A true Christian has gone to her reward. She will be missed from her home by her loved ones, her Church and the entire community, but the influence of her noble Christian life remains.

C. E. NEWMAN.

FULLER.

Mrs. S. W. Fuller, who before her marriage was Miss Eunice Coghill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Coghill, was born March 25, 1889, and died August 14th.

She was married to S. W. Fuller January 10, 1917. She leaves to mourn their loss her husband, two small boys, her mother, one sister, three brothers and a large number of relatives and friends. She bore her sufferings patiently in her long illness. The floral designs were many and beautiful.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

MRS. STETSON DIES.—

Mrs. Augusta E. Stetson died last month at the age of eighty-seven. She was at one time an outstanding leader of the Christian Science movement, but was later repudiated by the mother Church in Boston and was denied entrance into the Science Churches. After Mrs. Stetson was rejected by the society she spent huge sums, reported to have amounted to $750,000, in an effort to prove that she was the true successor of Mrs. Eddy. Mrs. Stetson had twice predicted that she would never die. Thus pass the vain imaginations of the human heart.

PRESENT SOCIAL CONDITIONS.—

Mr. Bertram Smith, speaking before the Congregational Union at Leeds, England, outlined the task that confronts the Church in transforming the present social order. He thus indicted the present social status: "Above all, what are we to think of a society whose economic structure is frankly un-Christian—a society in which the most essential services are scarcely rewarded with a living wage, and the greatest fortunes can be won by the idlest and most useless members; a society in which an honest and industrious man can toil all his life at work socially essential for a wage upon which he and his family can scarcely live, and in which a worthless speculator can amass an enormous fortune in a few years."

GOLDEN JUBILEE.—

The Christian Herald celebrated its fiftieth anniversary in the issue of October 27th. It is an interdenominational religious weekly. The articles of incorporation state that the objects of the corporation which publishes it are to diffuse the principles and teachings of the Christian religion, receive and invest voluntary contributions in support of religious, benevolent and educational enterprises, and to publish the Christian Herald. During its fifty years of history, the Christian Herald has carried contributions regularly from the most outstanding preachers and religious thinkers of America. Active campaigns have been waged through its columns to raise funds for the sufferers of many famines and disasters in all parts of the world. Eight millions of dollars have been collected and expended in these various campaigns. Rev. Daniel A. Poling is the present editor-in-chief. Mr. J. C. Penny, well-known chain-store merchant, is president of the present corporation.

LONG PASTORATES.—

In this restless age, when it seems as if even the preachers have become infected with the moving fever, it is interesting to note the outstanding ministers of various denominations who have spent an average working lifetime in the same field.

Dr. George W. Truett has completed thirty-one years as pastor of the First Baptist Church, Dallas, Texas. Dr. Truett went to his present field in Dallas when he graduated from Baylor University. Dr. Peter Ainslie will complete twenty-five years of service with the Christian Temple, Baltimore, Md., next January. Dr. Ainslie is known far beyond the bounds of his own denomination (Disciples) for his preaching of Christian unity. Even the Methodist Episcopal Church is turning from its time-honored rule of short pastorates. Dr. George Stoves has recently been appointed for his eleventh year of continuous service as pastor of the West End Methodist Church, Nashville, Tenn.

GREATER OUTREACHES.—

The California Institute of Technology has recently received a gift of a two hundred-inch reflecting telescope. The largest telescope in the world at the present time is the one hundred-inch telescope on Mount Wilson, Calif. The new telescope, which is yet to be built, is expected to surpass by five or ten times the power of the present largest astronomical instrument in the world. The scientists are indulging in all sorts of conjectures as to what will be revealed concerning the nature of the universe by this new telescope. The knowledge of the universe is dependent upon the enlargement and perfection of the instruments with which to observe and weigh and measure. The knowledge of the spiritual universe is dependent upon the enlargement and perfection of faith, through which the human heart lays hold upon and comes to know God. We need not expect a more perfect understanding of God and His ways until we have a more far-reaching eye of faith and a purer heart—the two divinely decreed essentials for coming to a knowledge of God.

TURNING INWARD.—

Rev. Edward Shillito, of London, England, tells an interesting story of how he sat in his library in England and listened to an onlooker at Lakehurst, N. J., describe the landing of the giant German Zeppelin. The writer commented upon the wonder of the big airship crossing the Atlantic and the wonder of his hearing a man in New Jersey tell of the landing while it was taking place. He concludes with these two suggestive sentences: "We have almost a surfeit of wonders. When are we going to turn inward?"

The greatest challenge to the Christian of this present age is the challenge of what is being achieved in the realm of the material. In the time of Christ the world marveled at His infinite knowledge and his perfect mastery in the realm of the spiritual. This age is gaining a more perfect mastery of the material, and one is tempted to say, losing its knowledge of the spiritual. What Christian minister would dare confess the relative amount of time taken up by the material and by the spiritual? Isn't it about time that we "turn inward"?

DR. TORREY PASSES.—

Rev. Reuben A. Torrey died in Asheville, N. C., on October 26th, in the seventy-third year of his age. Dr. Torrey was born in Hoboken, N. J. He was a non-Christian in his youth, and an unbeliever during a part of his student days at Yale. He was converted while at Yale, received his A. B. degree from that institution in 1875, and his B. D. in 1878. He was ordained to the ministry of the Congregational Church in 1878, studied for some time in Germany, and was for some years superintendent of the city missions in Minneapolis. Meeting with Rev. D. L. Moody, he became interested in evangelistic work and gave his life to the work of evangelism and the superintending of the Moody Bible Institute. He achieved a remarkable success as an evangelist, and in that capacity visited almost every land in which the gospel is preached. The emphasis of his preaching was upon the message of the Bible and the power of the Scriptures in bringing souls to Christ. He was a prolific writer, being the author of some forty or more books, most of which deal with the message of the Bible and the work of evangelism.

AIRPLANE MARRIAGE.—

Archbishop Matheson, Episcopal primate of all Canada, addressing the Canadian Council of the Mothers' Union, denounced what he called "that ghastly innovation, the airplane marriage." It would seem that these words of warning are most timely. There are earnest students of social conditions, who are convinced that the only solution of the divorce evil is through a changed attitude on the part of the masses toward marriage. This was evidently what was in the mind of the archbishop when he spoke his words of warning to the Canadian mothers, in an effort to persuade them to use their influence to impart the proper ideas concerning the sanctity of marriage. There are always people who are seeking for "cheap" publicity. Such individuals, if married in the ordinary way in Church or home, would have an account of the marriage appear on the society page of the local paper. But if married in an airplane, the press may give the fact a wider publicity.

What does the average minister recognize to be his duty in performing the marriage ceremony? Many seem to think that when they have read the ceremony, filled out the necessary certificates and pocketed the fee, that they have discharged their full duty. Recently I heard a lecturer say: "It is the duty of a preacher to make every effort to invest the marriage ceremony with an appropriate dignity, solemnity and sacredness, as it is his duty to create the same sort of atmosphere in administering the Communion."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. R. L. Williamson and family moved from Sanford to Winchester last week and are now in the parsonage at the latter place, having arrived and being housed happily. The address of Bro. Williamson changes from Sanford, N. C., to 12 West Gifford Street, Winchester, Va.

It will soon be time for teachers and students of the International Sunday School Lessons to order their lesson helps for 1929. The two most comprehensive are "Peloubet's Select Notes" and "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide." Each is priced $2 per copy. Order through THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va.

Dr. J. Edward Kirby and Prof. L. L. Vaughan of the United Church of Raleigh were guests of the college on Wednesday. They are deeply interested in the work of the Christian Church, not only in Raleigh, but everywhere, and they are particularly interested in the union program of the two denominations.

We have been running an advertisement of "Eiler's Sunday School Maps" in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The complete sets are $15 and $20, but single maps of the sets can be purchased at from $3 to $3.50. For the last two quarters the map of Paul's missionary journeys has been helpful. Order through THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va.

Dr. C. C. Merrill, of the foreign board of the Congregational Church, was the preacher at the morning service at Elon College on November 11th. Dr. Merrill suited his sermon to the day—the tenth anniversary of the signing of the armistice. During the services the pact of Paris was read in unison by the pastor of the Church and the congregation.

Dr. W. H. Jay has been elected president of the "Men of the Church of the Elon College Christian Church. Dr. Jay is planning a great banquet of the "Men of the Church" on Friday evening, November 16th. The slogan of the local organization is "Manhood of the Elon College Christian Church Behind the Whole Program of the Church." Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, has been chosen to bring the initial address.

President Lewis H. Keller, of the Atlanta Theological Seminary, was a pleasant visitor to the college last week. He conferred with President Harper and Dean Hook of the college, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson of the committee of the board of trustees. Dr. Keller is enthusiastic for the union idea between the Congregational and Christian Churches, and he is particularly anxious that the seminary have a good beginning next fall, when he plans to have it duly installed at Elon College.

Dr. W. W. Staley was the official representative of the Southern Christian Convention at the funeral of Dr. Alva Martin Kerr, editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty. Dr. Kerr was buried at the Shiloh Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio, on Monday afternoon, November 5th, at 2:30 o'clock. From all reports the burial services accorded this distinguished leader was worthy of his great life and his vital contribution to moral and spiritual leadership in our denomination and in the Church at large. Mr. Hermon Eldredge read the appreciation written by Dr. W. A. Harper, associate editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty with Dr. Kerr.

Our Rocky Ford Sunday School, Carroll County, Va., is one of the very first in the whole Convention to make a canvass among its members to get each pupil of the Sunday School to agree to give 5 cents a week, to be paid into the school once per month, for missions. Quite a few pupils of this, our mission school, signed the cards and have thus set an example for pupils in other schools throughout the Convention. Five cents per week for missions for each pupil in a Sunday School is not too much to ask of every Sunday School, and THE SUN's editor believes that if all our schools would do as the Rocky Ford school has done there would be found thousands of pupils who would gladly do this good and great thing. Give it a trial, Bro. Sunday School Superintendent, and see what happens in your school.

The Congregational Advisory Board of the Southeast is appointed to meet at Central Congregational Church, 21 Ellis Street, N. W., Atlanta, Ga., November 13-14. This board is to hold a joint session with the regional committee of the commission on missions. Dr. J. Edward Kirby, of our Raleigh Church, is the chaplain for the sessions, and is in that capacity to conduct the devotions of the meeting. A most inviting program has been prepared by the secretary, Rev. F. P. Ensminger, and matters of vital importance, both to Congregationalists and Christians are to be discussed. At 2:15 P. M. on November 14th, a program of Christian union is to be presented by representatives of Congregational and Christian Churches. Among those to speak on this program, we note the names of President L. E. Smith, of the Southern Christian Convention; President W. A. Harper, Elon College; President S. L. Beougher, of Piedmont College; and among others invited to be present from our number are Miss Pattie Coghill, of our Christian Education Department, and J. O. Atkinson, of our Mission Department. The meeting promises to be a momentous one.

FOR VALUE RECEIVED.

The age-old promissory note carries a phrasing: "For value received, I promise to pay," etc. To many, no doubt, as familiar as "Jack and Jill went up the hill," and to all who have dealings in that form of trade, as exacting upon ethical standards as are the rhymes of "Mother Goose" upon memory.

In the ordinary commerce of life—social, business or otherwise—no benefit is secured without some sort of exchange in value. We pay for financial favors and advantage, for all manner of aids to industry and to scientific development, for material and cultural progress; in short, for anything that enlightens and advances civilization, such as schools, roads, laboratory facilities for all kinds of exploration and experiment, and for many other things. It would be folly for any responsible individual to resist or resent government edict as to tax-sharing for the promotion of human understanding and prosperity. Merely a discouraging attitude toward any field of effort to discover or verify truth, whether in natural physical law, religion, or what, would place the person entertaining such spirit in a class not receiving or deserving the respect of good citizens.

Yes, for value received we promise to pay, and, in matters of civic management and authority there is no getting around it—we pay! But, remember, under Christian rule where equity and fairness prevail, one pays only according to what one has the use or control of; in other words, what one owns, either permanently or temporarily, in the sense that no other can claim it.

Thus favored and blessed of God who owns everything, even ourselves, and gives us our chance, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me?" I would answer: nothing less than full stewardship. What, then, does full stewardship require? Full stewardship to God requires of me (1) my first love; (2) my only worship; (3) my whole service; (4) not less than one-tenth of all my goods.

During the present stewardship weeks, separately and successively writing under these four divisions as best I can in my weakness and inability, if I may have space in THE SUN, I want very much, through that medium, briefly to do my small bit for the great cause of stewardship.

As more and more I prove the great principles of Christian stewardship, their practice brings me joy. In the reading of what I may write, may some other find equal blessing.

MRS. J. J. LINCOLN.

WHY DID HOOVER WIN?

The answer to the above question is simple. Mr. Hoover won in an unparalleled and unprecedented victory over Governor Smith because Mr. Hoover was and is in sympathy with the prohibition law and wishes it to succeed, whereas Mr. Smith was opposed to the prohibition law and wished it to fail.

The recent election was a referendum on the wet and dry question, which should settle once and for all the question of "Do the American citizens favor prohibition?"

Those from both parties who wanted a change in the law voted for the candidate who promised he would change the prohibition law. Those from both parties who favored prohibition voted for the candidate who promised he would enforce the prohibition law.

The American people have not forgotten the curse of the legalized liquor traffic. And never again will they allow the arch-enemy of human happiness and prosperity to fasten its clutches upon the government. It must forever be treated as an outlaw.

The dry voters from both parties matched their numbers with the wet voters from both parties at the recent election, and their verdict is the announcement to the world that America favors the prohibition law and its enforcement.

What a revelation it is to study the election returns by districts, and thus to find that only in the thickly foreign centers did the wet candidate have a lead on the dry candidate. In centers where the old-line American stock was in the majority, the lead for the dry candidate was in every such case most pronounced.

How our confidence in the better judgment of the people should be strengthened, and how our faith in the future of our nation should be stimulated by the results of the election which revealed the fact that the majority of our citizens put country before party, and clean government first in their thoughts.

Herbert Hoover won because he is a dry and because our nation is dry. Our nation could enjoy the greatest progress, the greatest prosperity and the greatest happiness in its history if the wets would obey the prohibition law and now enlist with the majority. And such enlistment would remove the need of enforcing the prohibition law, for where there is obedience there is no occasion for enforcement.

THE RIGHT TO REJOICE.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT.

"And they offered great sacrifice that day, and rejoiced; for God had made them rejoice with great joy; and the women also and the children rejoiced; so that of Jerusalem was heard even afar off."—Neh. 12:43.

It seems to me that Nehemiah has found the true source of joy, namely: sacrificial giving. And not only has he found the source of joy, but also its course, for it runs like a grand contagion from Jerusalem afar off. All of us wish to rejoice, and we have no right to deny the women and children this privilege. A little child can get more pleasure out of giving gifts than any person I know of. It is not written in our text that "the joy of Jerusalem was heard even afar off," until there has been written that "the women also and the children rejoiced." The rejoicing of a group does not permeate distant places until all rejoice—even men, women, and children. When the whole family rejoices its joy becomes contagious. When the whole Church rejoices, its joy becomes influential into fields afar. Not until then is it heard of beyond the borders of Jerusalem.

I wonder why we have lived as long in this country as practically any other denomination, and yet we are so often having to explain who and what we are. I wonder if there is any connection with our way and manner of giving. I wonder if we have not been too silent in our teaching and practice of the biblical principles of giving. I believe we are doing much better of late, and there is in like ratio a diminishing need for explanation of who we are. No one has to explain who the United Presbyterians are either at home or "from Jerusalem afar off." No one has to explain who the Moravians are either in Winston-Salem, N. C., or in their homeland of Europe. The Seventh Day Adventists are not strangers in many places either. There is something supremely convincing about their gifts and their manner of making them. There is something paralleling in their program the words of our text: "And they offered great sacrifices that day, and rejoiced; for God made them rejoice with great joy; and the women also and the children rejoiced; so that the joy of Jerusalem was heard even afar off."

That denomination, people, or Church which would serve mightily the cause of Christ must be careful not to deny the children and women of their communion the privilege of rejoicing through their sacrificial giving. I wish we could realize that. Witness our missionary gifts before our women and children began to assume a real place in our giving. God's economy provides that all shall give, and that all shall rejoice. Are you going to ask the women and children for a pledge in the annual every-member canvass? Why shall we deny them the privilege of giving? They have a right to rejoice. When they rejoice in their sacrificial gifts along with ourselves our Church shall be heard of even from Dayton afar off. We shall not only give them the privilege of giving, but if we are wise we shall insist on it and provide for it.

If we look long enough at God's law we shall see a loving reason for them back of them. What will it mean thirty years from now if a mother teach her child to give? What will it mean thirty years from now if a child drops his gift along with his father's and mother's in the offering plate today? The answer is apparent. God's treasures will not be empty in the years to come. But on the other hand, if a child never sees his mother lay an offering in the plate which he knows means a real sacrifice for her, and if he never puts his own little gift by its side, his very respect for his mother will be a psychological barrier against his putting much of a gift ever in all the years to come. And he and the Church both are poorer. How well do I remember the gifts my mother untied from a hidden handkerchief and gave to the Church of God! It is a memory which greatly affects my life today. Therefore, not only have the women and children a right to rejoice, but the Church has a right to rejoice over their gifts; and the people in fields afar off have a right to listen for that rejoicing. When we rejoice, others rejoice. It's God's way. When we do our duty, others are made happy, and then we are doubly happy—happy over having done our duty, and happy over being of service to others.

So, then, the logic of Church life and expansion is contained in our text: offering sacrificially, rejoicing greatly, and being heard from in fields afar. Is not that the logic of the very life of the Lord Jesus Himself? He offered Himself gladly; He rejoiced greatly, and He desires His gospel to envelop the globe. We are far off from Jesus historically and geographically speaking, yet we have heard of Him. All the way across the world was He born, and two thousand years almost ago did He live; but "the joy of Jerusalem was heard even afar off."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be in every home in the Southern Christian Convention. We have around thirty-three thousand members. Counting five members to the family, we should have six thousand and six hundred families. If each family would take THE CHRISTIAN SUN it would bring in to THE SUN the sum of $13,200 per annum and put it on a sound financial basis. Our people would be informed as to our institutions and would become more interested. Our denomination would grow, and all of the institutions of our denomination would be better supported and be able to do a greater work. But the circulation manager is just one human being and can only do one man's work. It is impossible for him to visit all the Churches in behalf of THE SUN. It would cost too much in the first place, and, too, he has too many duties to take the time. Every Church ought to have a committee to work up the subscription list for THE SUN and make a special effort to place it in every home. It is a paper worthy to go in any home. We truly hope our pastors will take more interest in sending in renewals and new subscribers. Some of our pastors have helped us some. We are grateful. Help us to place THE SUN in each home.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Elon College, N. C. Circulation Manager.

The social element in amusement is a very Christian element, for brotherhood is a Christian attribute. Playing together aids us to work together. If we cannot get along with others in our games, we cannot get along with them in our business. "Team play" teaches co-operation in getting large affairs of life well done. Christians are to live helpfully with others, and to that end they will play charmingly with others.—C. E. World.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

This Conference met with Christian Temple, Norfolk, on the morning of October 31st, in its one hundred and eighth annual session, and remained in session for three days, closing Friday late in the afternoon. The attendance was good. The entertainment by Christian Temple people and friends was delightful, and the program, as executed, was exceptionally interesting and helpful. In the spacious and impressive auditorium of Christian Temple, one cannot help being respectful, reverential and inspired with the spirit of worship. The auditorium itself suggests to, and invites, all who assemble therein to reverence and to worship. Sometimes one finds it difficult to worship in buildings which are not suggestive of reverence and devotion, and then one finds buildings in which it is difficult, if not impossible, not to worship. It is a matter of art, design and plan, and not that of cost and expense, that make a building a real house of worship. One used to say that nobody need inquire of another if Rev. J. W. Wellons, now of sainted memory, was a preacher. One just knew he was. His whole mien and bearing and appearance declared that fact. The same was often said of Dr. C. J. Jones, now of sainted memory also. One just knew that these men were called of God to preach His Word. Sitting in the auditorium of Christian Temple, Norfolk, one does not have to inquire as to whether those who planned and constructed that building meant it for a house of worship. One never thinks of the inquiry in that auditorium; one just naturally and instinctively and without inquiry worships there. Throughout all the services and exercises of the three days' Conference sessions the audiences, assembling in this building, were in the spirit of reverence and devotion and worship, not by invocation or provocation, but just naturally and by inclination because of one's surroundings. This will explain why the periods given to devotion, either at the opening or at the close of each separate session of the Conference, seemed so full of the spirit of the Master and so tense with His presence and His power.

The Communion service, conducted by Dr. W. W. Staley and others, at the close of the first morning session; the service of worship, conducted by Dr. L. E. Smith and members of his choir at the evening service; the devotional period, conducted at the closing hour of the second day, morning session, by Rev. M. F. Allen; the devotional period of the final day, conducted by Rev. J. E. McCauley, were all spiritually uplifting and invigorating, and brought refreshment and spiritual fervor to the large congregations present. Throughout the sessions there obtained this spirit of reverence and devotion in a most marked manner.

The feature of the morning of the first day was the address on "The Christian Orphanage," by Supt. C. D. Johnston, who gave the Conference a vivid idea of what contribution the Orphanage is making to citizenship. He was followed in an inspirational address by the chairman of the Orphanage board, Bro. J. M. Darden.

The moral reform report reaffirmed the declaration of a year ago, pledging the Conference to do all in its power to see that our prohibition laws, the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act, were enforced. Dr. C. C. Ryan, of Richmond, a member of the committee, and Dr. W. D. Harvard, chairman, made able and convincing addresses on the necessity of constant vigilance on the part of the Church to help exalt moral standards and reform.

Dr. I. W. Johnson, the secretary, had prepared a chart which showed at a glance what the Churches of the Conference had done the past year, both as to the ingathering of members and as to finance. The chart, which was kept on the wall in full view of the Conference, was an interesting study in achievement of those working for kingdom enlargement.

The reports from the Churches did not measure up, in results, to the reports of a year ago, and some four or five Churches showed no report, much to the regret of all present and to the confusion of the good secretary, who much prefers to write figures against the name of a Church to drawing a blank there.

In the absence of Rev. F. C. Lester, chairman, Rev. J. W. Fix submitted the report on stewardship and made a very engaging address on the general topic, "Stewardship." Bro. Fix believes strictly in tithing, and feels that the one great lack in the Churches today is the failure of its membership in large numbers to practice tithing and on the part of parents in not teaching this biblical doctrine and practice to their children. It is easy to tithe when one learns early in life.

Mrs. M. L. Bryant, president of the Woman's Missionary Conference, delighted the body with her vivid report of the recent annual session held at Suffolk.

J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, was permitted the privilege to explain to the Conference the Southern Christian Convention's program of missions. His plea was that as no part of Conference apportionments this year would go to foreign and Convention missions, and since all gifts to missions in future are to be made, not through Conference apportionments, but direct to missions, that the pastors and delegates not wait for months, but immediately begin to put into practice one of the plans recommended by the committee on foreign missions, viz: either every Church make up a missionary budget and begin work at once to raise that budget, or that a canvass be made of the members of the Church to ascertain how much each would give per month for missions through the year, that the cause of missions might not suffer loss. Several Churches, through their pastors or delegates, responded that they had already taken the matter under advisement and had either written the missionary budget into their program of the coming year or had gone to work on some plan to bring results and to achieve the quota for each Church, viz: that of giving to missions at least one-third as much as the Church pays its pastor.

The evening sermon of the first day was preached by Rev. C. C. Ryan, D. D., pastor First Christian Church, Richmond.

On the morning of the second day, under the report of committee on education, Dr. W. A. Harper, of Elon College, delivered a most suggestive and scholarly address, dealing with the attitude and activities of the college student of the present. The speaker revealed a serious side of the mental and moral attitude of students and declared that the student of the present had an inquiring mind and a deep and abiding desire for truth, and was seeking intellectual clarity, ethical application and spiritual development in the days of academic life and the period of collegiate pursuits.

Dr. Chas. Eldred Sheldon, of the Congregational Church, delighted the great audience on the subject of "Christian Union," and, without doubt, convincing all present, if they were not already convinced, that Congregationalists and Christians should be in one communion and have unity in organization and pursuit.

Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West presented the report on home missions which had to do with points already built and with the payment of pledges already made.

Rev. W. C. Hook, of the Holland Christian Church, substituted for Rev. F. C. Lester in speaking for a bigger and better Conference.

Miss Pattie Coghill, of the Christian Education Department, told of the work that her department was doing, and made a plea for its further equipment, support and activities.

Rev. H. C. Caviness presented the report on evangelism, which report struck the evangelistic note and urged Conference to keep in mind that the supreme task to all religious bodies and especially the Church was that of evangelism.

Rev. O. D. Poythress made an address on "Evangelism," filled with the spirit of a true evangelist, and moved the audience mightily with his spiritual zeal and fervor.

On the program of the second evening, President Harper of Elon College spoke engagingly and with great lucidity on the subject of "The Need of Prayer in a World Governed by Law." President Harper has the happy faculty of making academic problems vital and vivid and real to a mixed audience, and of convincing his hearers of the oneness of the problems of life.

On the evening program, following Dr. Harper's delightful address, the president and secretary of the Woman's Missionary Conference had asked J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, to tell of the Jerusalem conference, held on the Mount of Olives, and in the sacred city, March 24th to April 8, 1928. This conference, it is believed, was exceedingly significant, since it was the assembling, by delegates from more than fifty nations of the earth, of the descendants of those who 1900 years ago had received the great commission to go out into all the world and make disciples of all the nations. It is believed that, if we are to credit those who attended this conference, this meeting is to be fraught with great consequences and will result in marvelous achievements in making the adequacy of the gospel effective in all lands and tongues.

The final day of the Conference was a busy one. Reports of special committees were made and a free discussion of our problems, those of superannuation, colleges, missions, Christian education and others were indulged. While a discussion of the problem of missions was being conducted and the Conference was brought face to face with the present necessity for immediate activity to relieve the Mission Board, Bro. J. M. Darden, of the Mission Board, moved the audience to feelings and expressions of deepest gratitude with the generous offer of paying in $5,000 immediately to help tide over the present emergency and meet immediate obligations of the Mission Board, which $5,000 is to be repaid to him on September 30th if the Southern Convention, through all of its missionary endeavor, does not contribute the sum called for by the Convention, viz: $40,000 in addition to his $5,000; but if the call is met and the $40,000 is paid in to the Mission Treasurer by September 30th, the note is to be canceled and there is to be no interest and no further charges in the matter. The Conference cheered this generous offer and felt that there had been divinely provided a way out of immediate embarrassment, and that also a great challenge had been issued to our people to raise the $40,000, so that this $5,000, to be used immediately, shall not have to be repaid, and that instead of a loan for a year without interest, it shall be made a donation outright, that which Bro. Darden declared would give him most happiness, that of making the entire amount an outright gift.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, who has served so efficiently as president, and Dr. I. W. Johnson, as secretary, and Mr. W. E. MacClenny, as treasurer, were all re-elected, and because of a discussion as to the place of holding the next session, indecision was reached on this item and the matter was left to the executive committee.

Appropriate closing exercises of this great Conference concluded its one hundred and eighth annual session.

CHURCH UNITY.

Spiritual unity exists throughout the Church. Paul says to the Galatians, "Ye are all one in Christ" (3:28). All who are in Christ, and all in whose life Christ abides, are one in Him. Differences are mental, not spiritual. There is a spiritual Church that is one, as God and Jesus Christ are one. The divisions have arisen in the minds of men and the thinking of the Church. Most of the divisions have arisen in the selfishness and ambition of men. Some men think more highly of themselves than they ought to think, and they want to lord it over God's heritage. Such leaders, with followers and bodies, spring up that divide the Church into denominations. There is in the spirit of the Church a growing desire for unity. This desire has expressed itself in many organizations that unconsciously feel the urge of the necessity for unity in the Church of Jesus Christ. Christian Endeavor, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the division of areas in mission fields, conferences on the subject of unity, all show the trend of feelings and longings that will never be satisfied until unity becomes a fact in the Church.

The attitude of the Christian Church and the Congregational Church toward each other as denominations is an index to this feeling in the heart of those two denominations that they should be one. Jesus prayed "that they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me" (John 17:21). God and Jesus Christ were one in their purpose to save the world. God gave Him and He gave Himself. It was the same love, the same spirit that prompted both; they were one in their spirit, their purpose, and their effort to save men.

The background of this movement of these two Churches toward each other in unity is the spiritual consciousness that "United, we stand; divided, we fall." In union there is strength. Both bodies know that they ought to be one, and these gestures coming from so many angles are signs of the moving of the Holy Spirit upon the minds and hearts of these two bodies that want to see the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ. At heart, both denominations feel that they ought to keep "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. 4:3). A divided Church can never win the world to Christ; a united Church could not fail. The implications of a united Church are so far-reaching and so wonderful in achievements that self-surrendered Churches to kingdom purposes would surprise the world and the Church itself. The prayer of Jesus can be answered by the prayer and self-surrender of the Church. "Have Thine own way with our Church, Lord," should be our prayer; and then we should surrender our will to His will. The world is waiting for some denominations to believe in unity, practice unity, and live all that Church unity implies. Not only is the world waiting for Church unity, but God is waiting to answer the prayer of Jesus, "that they all may be one." God cannot answer the prayer of Jesus unless the Church helps Him to answer that prayer. God cannot answer the prayer of the farmer for a harvest unless the farmer sow the seed in prepared soil and then wait in faith for the harvest.

LINCOLN AND THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

It is well known that Abraham Lincoln had small interest in the sectarian divisions of the Church of Christ. It is also well known that he was a man of earnest prayer, deeply versed in the Scriptures, and of an essentially religious disposition. So far as we know, he never joined any Church. On one occasion he used these challenging words: "I have never united myself to any Church because I have found difficulty in giving my consent without mental reservation to the statements of Christian doctrine which characterize their articles of belief and confession of faith."

One of the foremost authorities on the life of Abraham Lincoln and his family is Dr. William E. Barton, past moderator of the National Council of the Congregational Church.

Dr. Barton is authority for the following statement: "Thomas Lincoln, father of Abraham Lincoln, was originally a hard-shell Baptist, but joined the Christian Church in Illinois, was a loyal member of it, and buried one of its ministers." Dr. Barton states that this discovery of his is attested by a citizen of the locality, who said that he heard the funeral sermon preached half a mile away.

Dr. Barton also says that Abraham Lincoln himself was well acquainted with the Christian Church and that he appreciated fully its influence on home life and in political affairs.

The Christian Church is honored in this discovery of Dr. Barton's, giving evidence as it does of its molding influence in the life of the most typical American. We do not say it boastfully, but the Christian Church is, in the last analysis, the most typically American Church, embodying in its ideals, in its platform, and in its methods the very genius of the American people.

PORTO RICO LETTER.

Dear Friends:

Almost four weeks have passed since the terrible hurricane struck and almost ruined this beautiful island. Weekly I visit the different parts of the island, gathering information and taking pictures of the havoc wrought by the storm. Many friends have been asking how much damage has been done to the mission. Indeed, it is very hard to estimate as to accurate damage at the present time, because the prices of materials are very uncertain. Also it is very hard to find material and workers, as a good many roads have not been opened yet.

The Red Cross was swift to respond, and is doing fine work, but is greatly handicapped by local professional politicians who are making every effort to get control of distribution of supplies and use them for political purposes. A few Catholic priests have also lowered themselves in the estimation of even their own people by trying to force people to confess and take Communion if they would receive supplies. Many priests, however, are co-operating in a fine way, and some have even opened their Churches for refugees. Our pastors, almost without exception, are co-operating whole-heartedly, working almost day and night, and all our country people are left in a very pitiful condition, without homes, clothing and food. It seems that we can't do enough to help these unfortunate ones. As I go to these people to try to help them with the few articles of clothing, I almost feel speechless to give them a word of comfort, and want to close my eyes so that I may avoid this horrible and dreadful picture. Oh, folks, you just can't realize what these people are going through. All that we are able to do is to call on our Heavenly Father to open the way of help, and He has been kind through your thoughtful Christian spirit to give some aid. I wish that I could send every one of you some of the snapshots which I have been taking, which I cannot send for the publication. I am sure you would see and realize the conditions of these people.

There seem always to be human vultures where there are other kind. Besides the professional politicians referred to, there have been cases of the merchants, paid for and instructed to send out supplies, who instead of sending fifteen pounds of rice, as paid for, are said to have sent seven pounds, until checked up on. The central committee of the Red Cross is making every effort to stop all such practices.

In some of our rural communities, almost four weeks after the cyclone, no aid of any kind has yet reached the people. They have thus far existed on green bananas and coconuts salvaged from the storm. Our Salinas country work is still left without aid; the poor ones are living out-of-doors almost without food, clothing and shelter, and some are living under the floors of their destroyed homes, which were not destroyed. Indeed it is remarkable how they are existing. Most of them seem pretty happy and appreciative. So all that you good folks have helped has been a great aid. I am very proud of our different societies and different groups of our Churches for their immediate aid.

In spite of all the sickness and terrible conditions that are existing, we faithfully follow our regular programs. I am happy to say that we observed our rally day with all of our Churches in the States, and had a very interesting program and a special offering of $24. I tell you, good folks, these people are willing to give their offering, even though it be very small. I was very surprised to visit some of the homes of our Sunday School members and found them in such a terrible condition, and I do not see how they even could give five cents; but in most cases the poor are the very ones that are willing to give. Sometimes I think it is a pity to ask them to give anything, but we must teach them the spirit of giving.

Up to last week the people—rather the members of our Salinas Church—would not enter the Church, and wished to have the open-air services, as I have mentioned before that our Salinas

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A great man has fallen! A great Church mourns! Dr. Alva M. Kerr, editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, the oldest religious newspaper in the world, published in Dayton, Ohio, passed from labor to reward on the first day of November, 1928, after a life of great affliction and great faith. Dr. Kerr was great in his thinking, his writing, his faith in God and the cause of Christ, his mastery over handicaps, his loyalty to his convictions and the Christian Church. His comprehensive grasp of truth, his clear expression in editorial sentences, his thorough investigation of great subjects, and his fine spirit in the discussion of controversial themes marked him out among men as a historic prophet. His Church is great in its history, its achievements, and its influence. It published the first religious paper in 1808; opened the first co-educational college (Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio) in 1849; organized the first temperance society in this country in Pleasant Hill Christian Church, Alamance County, N. C., in 1833; and thus holds the first place in what has given all denominations Church papers, co-education in nearly all schools, and prohibition in the United States.

Dr. Kerr was buried from Shiloh Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio, on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock, November 5, 1928. A great congregation thronged the Church to express their love for the man whose body lay under the mountain of flowers, and their sympathy for his companion and other loved ones. Many ministers were there with feelings of respect for Dr. Kerr as a man, a minister, an editor, and a great Christian statesman. The service was simple and impressive. His pastor, Dr. Lester T. Proctor, Dr. O. P. Furnas, and Dr. F. G. Coffin were in the pulpit. A mixed quartet sang "He Leadeth Me"; Dr. O. P. Furnas offered a touching prayer; Dr. F. G. Coffin delivered an address touching the main peaks of his great career; the quartet sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee"; the pastor read telegrams and letters from many who could not be present, and an obituary and words of praise to the man whose life had been so true and so sweet. The quartet sang "Jesus, Lover of My Soul"; the casket was closed and the throng followed the remains to the lovely cemetery in which his body sleeps. The committal, a prayer, and the benediction closed the service, and friends and loved ones returned to their homes. The beautiful flowers will fade, the grass will grow on his grave, but the memory of his faithful and useful life will abide in the hearts of his loved ones and the Christian Church.

His long affliction from a child, his heroic service in kingdom interests, and his mastery over a weak body by a strong soul show that the spirit may be willing while the flesh is weak. The day was bright, the flowers were beautiful, the words spoken in the throng, the songs and messages from the pulpit all meant that he was good and great. I have attended many funerals, but none more impressive than the one for Dr. Kerr in Shiloh Church. Earth is richer because he lived, and heaven is richer because he died. His companion may mourn his going away, but will feel that she has a strong tie binding her to heaven. "Weeping may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning." The Southern Christian Convention mourns with the whole Church.

ELON LETTER.

The average length of office of the college presidents of the United States is slightly beyond four years. Some of these executives have continued in office for twenty-five and, in rare instances, even for forty years. This means that for the great majority the term of office would be less than four years. Evidently there are reasons for this rapid turnover.

Perhaps their explanation is to be found in the multiform service which the college executive is under obligation to perform. A recent book by Dean Max McCann, of Lehigh University, discusses these qualifications under seven heads. Dean McCann says:

"To be a competent university or college president, a man should have the following qualifications:

"1. He should be, or have been, a distinguished scholar—in no other way can he have gained a full appreciation of the ideals and needs of scholarship; in fact, he should have been a scholar in all fields of knowledge, so as to understand the problems and necessities of all equally well and do even-handed justice among them.

"2. He should have a broad knowledge of the history and problems of education and of systems of education in this and other countries.

"3. He must have, or speedily acquire, considerable expert knowledge relating to buildings and grounds—architectural design, lighting, heating and ventilation, the equipment needs of a dozen sciences, and landscape gardening.

"4. He should be an expert judge and handler of men—men of many types: business men—his trustees, upon his deft control of whom his success is constantly contingent; philanthropists (for donations), or politicians (for appropriations), or both; academic men, since he must make all the recommendations for appointments to and promotions in his faculty—whose professional life and death lie in his hands, just as Mr. Herriek portrays; adolescent boys and girls—the students; and, in fact, every class and type of men and women, for representatives of all of them frequent his office and waylay him outside.

"5. He should be an effective administrator—able to handle vast bodies of detail, to organize and delegate them, and yet keep his eye and his hand upon them all.

"6. He should be a financial genius—every college is always hard up, for the legitimate reason that the possibilities, and therefore the needs, of youth are unlimited.

"7. He should be also an effective public speaker on every conceivable kind of occasion and before every type of audience."

Few people realize the tremendous responsibilities a college president must carry. There should certainly be a way of giving training to men and women who are to be called upon for a position involving so many and varied responsibilities. Two universities have sensed this need—Columbia and Chicago. Columbia has done much in this direction, and Chicago very little, but even the beginning of training for executives of colleges is cause for congratulation.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

The principles of stewardship as taught in the Bible are as follows: God is owner of all things, every man is a steward and must give account for all that is entrusted to him. God's ownership and man's stewardship ought to be acknowledged. This acknowledgement requires as a part of its expression the setting apart for the extension of the kingdom of Christ such a portion of income as is recognized by the individual to be the will of God. The separated portion ought to be administered for the kingdom of God and the remainder recognized as no less a trust. Most Christian stewards begin with 10 per cent as a scriptural portion; the proportion should increase as income increases.

All of self and all possessions for Christ. This is our principal for practical guidance; all possessions shall be used for God's glory, whether used for self or given for others. My own life shall be tempered and fugal, and what is above this shall be given for the kingdom. We must have a system to embody the principle and realize the ideal, giving from principle is a good foundation on which to build a system of giving.

Human nature cannot be trusted to carry out its generous impulses unaided by some definite plan to which it is irrevocably committed, and which all of its better elements are enlisted. A man should give as he prospereth in his heart. A heart stirred by the need cause, and guided by the spirit of God. System is the life of every enterprise. We make money with system. System is necessary to insure any certainty to our giving in exact proportion. System makes giving an actuality and not a theory. The act of giving now makes possible the future larger gift. It will force you to live up to your ideals in Christian giving. It offers the continual, definite plan of action to an informed mind, a stirred heart and consecrated will.

To sum up the meaning of the tithe, it is the starting-place for us when we try to devote our money to the service of God. It is where God started when he wanted to teach His own people how to live for Him. The principle is that our possessions should be dedicated to God. The ideal is "All of self, and all of possessions for Christ." It will fill the treasury for the local Church and put to rout the army of difficulties which besiege a poor treasury, supported by haphazard gifts. It will lift the burden of debt of all the agencies of the Church and provide them with sufficient means to carry on their great enterprises, which includes our colleges; moreover, it will enable them to lengthen their cords and strengthen their stakes for the larger tasks of world evangelization. It will make possible the teaching of the gospel to every living creature.

The gift we offer now makes possible a larger gift for the future. Liberality is a growth. It grows by giving. The first giving is the hardest; the tithe gets it started. The habit grows strong with practice. The tithe will make it easy for you to turn your generous impulses into generous acts. The tithe is God's first lesson in stewardship. It is the first step in a great and beautiful development of our lives as we more and more surrender everything to His service. If our people would only tithe we would have no trouble to lift our indebtedness from our colleges, provide for needed equipment, and acquire our current expenses for the operation of our institutions.

IS THE BATTLE OVER?

"The battle is over! the battle is over!" cries many million people today who have been fighting in politics for the past several months. "Whiskey has been outlawed again." "The devil has been defeated again." Today many rejoice because they say that the battle is over. Many are today crying that "it was a hard battle." And it was a hard battle! It has been a hard fight, and homes have been divided, friends have dissolved friendship, loved ones have forsaken each other, parties have split, States have pulled away from their party, the country has divided, preachers have fought other religions, and have criticised each other, Churches have split, men have argued with their tongues, and men have fought with their fists in the great battle, while other nations have looked on in amazement and wondered about the outcome.

What was the great battle? The great battle was between right and wrong. You and I have been in this fight on one side or the other. Many on the wrong side, but yet honest in their belief that they were right. Many were on the right side and did not realize the importance of the battle, while many were on the wrong side and did not know that they were wrong. Many others were on the wrong side and knew that they were wrong, but would not change because of the "party" to which they belonged, and many others were on the wrong side because they listened to some 10-cent politician standing on a "plank" that was filled so full of knot-holes that it would not hold him up.

While many were on the right side because it happened to be their "party," many were on the right side who left the wrong for the right, and many others were on the right side because they knew right from wrong, and because they looked to the Almighty God as their Leader and Guide through the trying hours.

While the first firing has been done, and the enemy has been driven back, the fight is not over yet. There are other battles yet to be fought. Shall we lay down our guns and rest? Or shall we pursue the devil while he is on the run and drive him and his angels back from whence they came.

When the eighteenth amendment was passed, many said that the fight was over, but it was not, and it is not over yet. While no doubt the largest and hottest battles have been fought, there are others yet to fight. And we need to go forward now and fight them while the enemy is weak. We should not wait until he has recuperated and is able to give us another big fight, but we should go forward now, and take advantage of his weakness while we may. Now, while we are supposed to be leading the whole world in religious activities, we should show them that God is still with us, and at least a few of us are still with God.

Many of us have forsaken our party because of right and wrong. Shall we now allow the party to which we went to fall down on its promise to uphold the eighteenth amendment, and shall we be satisfied with their mere statement that they will "not try to modify" it? Or shall we insist that they enforce it as it should be? And while on this point, let's be reminded that no one man can enforce this law alone. You and I must do our part. We must live as we want to see others made to live.

The Church has had a large hand in this battle, and the Christian people have played a large part in the winning of it. We have been criticised for it, but we need to be criticised for what we failed to do, rather than for what we did. It was the Church that put the eighteenth amendment over, and it's the Church that is going to keep it as it is or make it even better. Now is the time for the Church and for all Christian people to do their duty towards all manner of sin and vice, and wipe from the record of our lives those thoughts that God can be overcome by the devil, and go on realizing that the fight is not over, and if the nation is ever "dried" up we must keep up the fight. And while the eyes of other nations are turned towards us, may we be able to teach them another lesson in our religion. And may we never forget that God had a hand in this fight.

HOW TO STIMULATE INTEREST.

By MRS. W. M. JAY.

(Read at the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference at Sanford, N. C., Friday, October 5th.)

The missionary work among our women is one of the most vital in our Church, and the missionary enterprise is the greatest movement as well as the chief business of the Church. We are indeed a great band of earnest workers, all engaged in a common cause—that of strengthening our mission work both at home and abroad—and should feel it a privilege to be linked up with so great a movement. But while some get such a wonderful amount of inspiration and help out of their service to the Master, there are many who are indifferent and neglectful and appear to be disinterested.

How can we stimulate interest in our woman's missionary work? is the question which is daily confronting us, and when we can solve that important question we will have live, enthusiastic Churches, plenty of missionaries on the fields and plenty of money to do the Master's work.

Before our Church can come to be a missionary power in this world, it will have to beget interest, enthusiasm and zeal in its various departments through missionary instruction. Can we be Christian and not believe in missions? I do not think so. Hence, we need missionary education to train our people, so they will learn of the habits, customs and needs of others. The best place to begin with this missionary education is with the child. The greatest textbook is the Bible, and the greatest missionary teacher is Jesus. Children should be taught so as to develop a right attitude toward others, to create in him a desire to help others and to have a knowledge of the needs of others. We need to bring home to the minds of our youth the privilege of yielding a wholesome influence to those with whom they come in contact and of winning them to Jesus, and the urgent need of just such as this to evangelize the world. Children are like unto clay. They are easily molded if we as adults will but take the time and patience to teach them. The responsibility rests heavily upon us, and we need to grasp it for our children's sake, for our Churches' sake, for our own sakes, for the sake of the heathens who are not so fortunate as we, and, last but not least, for the sake of the kingdom of God.

There is nothing that strengthens the missionary cause like the knowledge of the needs and conditions in heathen lands, and it is just such knowledge that we are all deficient in. We were not taught when we were children, hence we are more or less uninformed along these lines. This is the primary cause of our indifference today and it is our present problem to teach the youth and to go about some plan to interest those who are grown.

So we need to study as well as the child, and just such changes of attitude and spirit will result in us if we go about it with a desire to learn and to be enlightened. Paul said to Timothy, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Just now the missionary press has put out books on "Africa," for instance, that will not only enlighten the mind but really thrill and enlarge the soul. Then when we consider the unlimited amount of literature that is pouring from our presses and how thrilling and thought-provoking it is, we wonder why any of us should be ignorant of the fertile facts of the missionary world.

As missionary societies, our primary interests are to cultivate a spirit of missions; to acquire a greater knowledge of missions through our study-books, Church papers, conferences and conventions; to enlist new recruits as members of our societies and to support missions with our means. I believe it to be true that if more of our women would attend our rallies and annual meetings and see how great the work is when the sum of our efforts is put together, they would go back to their societies with increased strength and new zeal. Inspiration by means of information will bring the remuneration.

Then the next asset towards stimulating interest among our women is prayer. Here is where our spiritual life superintendent has her chance to work by organizing prayer bands, individual prayers at special hours and even the silent prayer for the success of the missionary societies, for a deepening of the missionary spirit and for a complete rally to the cause.

We need to pray earnestly and faithfully, not like the band of people who went to their Church to pray for rain and a certain little child said to a good old deacon, "You must not have much faith in your prayers, for you all came without your umbrellas." How true that is. Some of us would experience a shock sometimes, I guess, if the Lord should answer our prayers.

Then we need to do a great deal of personal work. Here is a strategic point. Every successful evangelistic meeting has its corps of personal workers and indeed a great deal of the actual winning of souls is done through this medium. If we are interested enough to go and talk tactfully with our neighbor about this missionary society of ours and then live the Christian life each day, we are sure to wield a lasting and wholesome influence for good.

Service, too, is a strong asset to strengthen us in this work. You know the old adage "that we get out of a thing just what we put into it," or "the more we work at a thing, the more interested we become." God enjoins us in His precious Book numbers of times to give a tenth of our income, and just as much He wants us to give of our time and energy. Christian service is the kind of work which yields the largest returns and the most joy. I heard a political speaker remark over the radio the other day that what we need now is not so much organization but action. I thought how true that is of the missionary cause. We have organization, and perhaps in some cases we need more, but above all we need action.

Then we need to plan our work. Yes, how true. Have you ever seen a superintendent, teacher or leader try to lead or teach without preparation or forethought? Well, you know how such a meeting progresses, and it is thorough preparation that counts. We need to have our plans all completed before trying to execute them.

We should have our money goals. Then plan our work and work our plans so that our money goals are reached. The raising of our funds should be a sacred and an essential part of our missionary program; but it is only a part of our program of work and should never be allowed to overwhelm our interests to the detriment of our meetings.

Missionary meetings that are based upon a program of gossip and schemes for raising money will usually find that interest and attendance are hard to keep up to the standard. Every member should feel that there is something to be obtained from the missionary society, as well as to be given to it.

If the membership is to support with their means—and they must—then what has the society to give in return by way of appreciation? It should be spiritually uplifting and intellectually helpful to its members who belong to it. That

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

MINUTES OF FOREIGN MISSION DEP'T.

Tuesday, October 16, 1928.

The Foreign Mission Department met in the office of the Foreign Mission Secretary at 3:15 on the afternoon of Tuesday, October 16th, with Dr. W. P. Fletcher, president, in the chair. All members of the board were present. We were glad to welcome Mr. Roy Ransberger, of Goshen, Ind., as a member of the department, succeeding Mr. Lee Harvey, who resigned during the year. It was a real pleasure to have present Rev. E. C. Fry, D. D., from Utsunomiya, Japan, who is home on furlough. Miss Crew was prevented from meeting with the department by the death of her brother, which occurred just as the General Board convened on Tuesday morning. It was voted that greetings be sent to the American Board now in session at Bridgeport, Conn., greetings to be signed by the president and executive secretary.

Business was then taken up according to the agenda prepared by the secretary.

Dr. Minton read the annual reports of the missionaries in Japan.

1. Voted that we endorse the resolution of the fellowship of reconciliation adopted by the Japan mission, as follows:

"As missionaries, rejoicing in the strategic movements for world peace during the last year, we are convinced more than ever before that in their work of promoting the kingdom of God, a kingdom of peace and love, it is the duty of the Christian Churches to take practical steps to abolish war. Since in the so-called non-Christian lands, Christianity is judged by the whole impact—social, political and commercial, as well as religious—of the so-called Christian nations, we implore the Churches to uphold us in our work by continuous, strenuous efforts to have the spirit and life of Jesus Christ permeate our entire social fabric.

"The most blatant inconsistency of American States. This militarism manifests itself in such civilization seems to be militarism in the United ways as the war in Nicaragua, the 'big navy' program and military training in educational institutions. Because of this our stand against militarism in Japan is weakened.

"We, therefore, strongly urge that our Churches express their disapproval of all forms of militarism and refuse to give Church funds or other sanctions to denominational schools and colleges which offer courses in military training."

2. The following resolution was adopted: "Be it resolved that we recommend to our missionaries that whenever it is expedient and advisable they cross the Pacific second-class on first-class boats, or first-class on second-class boats."

3. Voted that we approve the plan for the Garman furlough to begin in the summer of 1929, and that they be permitted to come home by an indirect route if they so desire, and that we appropriate $400 for each member of the family as travel money for the trip home only, the above resolution to be in effect thereafter. We express the hope that they may be able to return to Japan at the end of their furlough.

4. Voted that we approve the continuance of the missionary service of Dr. Woodworth in Japan during the year 1929.

5. Voted that we approve the furlough plans of Dr. Fry and Miss Crew, which include in each case deputation work, a term of school and their return to Japan in the summer of 1929.

6. Voted that we express our appreciation of the service of the Fletchers in connection with our mission work in Japan, although not members of the Japan mission, and that we concur in the judgment of Mr. Fletcher that in his present position he is rendering a service to the kingdom that justifies his continuing his contract with Keio University if at all possible.

7. Voted that we express our appreciation to the Woman's Mission Board for their gifts to the Kitamura mission home fund and urge them to continue their efforts in behalf of this much-needed home, as a foreign mission special, gratefully remembering that the initial gift to this fund of $550 was made by Mrs. Mina Kitamura.

8. Voted that we welcome Rev. K. Kitano, Jr., to this country and express the hope that he will thoroughly enjoy his work at Auburn Theological Seminary and that during his stay in this country he may have the privilege of meeting with our people in our Churches and Conferences.

Adjourned to meet Wednesday A. M. at 9 o'clock. We were dismissed with prayer by Dr. Fry.

Wednesday, October 17, 1928.

The Foreign Mission Department met at 9 o'clock Wednesday morning.

Mrs. Morrill led the devotional service.

Minutes of Tuesday's sessions were read and approved.

9. Voted that we endorse the purpose of the National Christian Council to attempt to unite the theological seminaries of Japan as expressed in their resolution to the Jerusalem meeting of the International Missionary Council as follows:

"Present-day requirements in the training of religious workers are far beyond the resources of any one Church or institution to meet, and conference and co-operation are much needed.

"The existing schools are already grouped largely in two centers—East and West—and it is highly desirable that they, either by corporate union or by a plan of federation, so assemble their forces as to provide in each of these two regions one theological and Bible-training center of highest quality."

The secretary was instructed to pass this resolution on to the Japan mission, with the assurance that this board will do all it can to aid them in entering with the other missions in Japan in the above proposal.

10. Voted that because of our heavy losses in the Porto Rico storm and our already heavy deficit we feel that it is impossible for our board to co-operate with the plans for the Latin-American conference to be held in Havana in the spring of 1929.

11. Voted that the total budget for Porto Rico be appropriated as $10,500, of which $1,323 is for the union work and the balance of $9,177 to be reapportioned to meet the needs of the regular work of the field as the Porto Rico mission sees best. It is further requested that the new apportionments be itemized and sent to the mission office at the earliest date.

12. Since the Porto Rico mission estimates the damage to our property by the recent hurricane to be $5,000, the Foreign Mission Secretary is instructed to continue to push vigorously a campaign for personal gifts to meet this emergency.

13. The following Japan budget was appropriated:

Regular work (Co-operative Board).....	$ 8,000.00
Regular work (Japan mission).....	15,000.00
<hr/>
Total regular work	$23,000.00
Japan specials	4,600.00

Total Japan budget $27,600.00

14. The miscellaneous budget appropriated was $9,900.

15. The total budget for 1929 appropriated by the board was:

Porto Rico:

Regular and special work.....	$ 9,177.00
Union work	1,323.00

Total Porto Rico budget..... $10,500.00

Japan:

Regular work (Co-op. Bd.).....	$ 8,000.00
Regular work (Japan mission).....	15,000.00

Total regular work $23,000.00

Specials 4,600.00

Total Japan budget..... 27,600.00

Miscellaneous budget 9,900.00

Deficit 10,561.72

Total 1929 budget..... $58,561.72

(See note at close of minutes, showing increase to $59,872.92.)

The letters from the Porto Rico missionaries were read by Dr. Fletcher.

16. Voted that we express our most grateful appreciation to the Eastern Virginia women for their generous gift of an automobile for our Porto Rico work, especially as this was in addition to the already splendid work they are doing for our mission work.

17. Voted that we extend our greetings to the Mortons and express our gratitude at Mr. Morton's steady return to health. The board feels that it would not dare establish a precedent by paying medical bills of one who had resigned from our missionary work.

18. Voted that we express our sympathy to all our brethren and sisters in Porto Rico who, during the recent hurricane, have suffered personal and Church losses.

19. Voted that we approve the recommendation of the Porto Rico mission that Miss Adams remain in Ponce.

20. Moved that we send our greetings to the newly organized Church in Descalabrado.

21. Voted to express our satisfaction on receiving the announcement from the Porto Rico mission that they have so heartily endorsed the proposed union with the Congregationalists and appreciate the efforts they are now making to bring the two missions into a working unit as soon as possible. We repeat the hope that the United Brethren Church may also enter this arrangement and that eventually all denominations on the island may become one.

22. Voted that we encourage our Japan mission and our Japanese brethren to take steps looking toward union with the Congregationalists in that land as indicated by their endorsement of the plan.

23. Voted that Dr. Minton and Mr. J. M. Darden be our representatives at the foreign missions conference to be held in Detroit January 15-18.

24. The Foreign Mission Secretary read the telegram sent to the American board, in session at Bridgeport, Conn., and which said: "American Board of Commissioners of the Congregational Church, care Rev. C. H. Patton, D. D., Bridgeport, Conn.—The Foreign Mission Department of the Mission Board of the Christian Church, in annual session, sends greetings to the American Board of Commissioners of the Congregational Church. May you have an inspiring meeting, and may we soon be united in this work of kingdom extension to the glory of God. (Signed) W. P. Fletcher, president; W. P. Minton, executive secretary."

25. The president read the following reply from the Congregational brethren: "W. P. Fletcher, Mission Board of the Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio.—The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, in annual session at Bridgeport, received with heartfelt appreciation your greetings, and unite with you in the earnest hope for speedy union in our common task. (Signed) R. H. Potter, president; O. L. Maurer, secretary."

26. Voted that having carefully considered the recommendations of the Porto Rico mission, and believing every one of them to be worthy, we feel that this year, with the absolute necessity of cutting our budget to the lowest point, these things cannot be granted unless they can be done under the reduced budget.

27. Resolved, That we, the Foreign Mission Board of the Christian Church, express our deep appreciation and lasting gratitude to Mrs. Marian McCord, who was for several years assistant to our Foreign Mission Secretary, for the efficient and capable service she rendered the office and the Church, and express our wish for her happiness and success in all her undertakings."

28. Voted that this board express its heartfelt appreciation of the splendid work done by Bro. J. M. Darden in the interests of our mission work during the absence last winter of Dr. J. O. Atkinson from his office.

29. Resolved, That we express to the young people of our Church our most sincere appreciation of the splendid co-operation which they are giving to the mission work of our Church.

30. Voted that, inasmuch as the Foreign Mission Department is so heavily in debt, and that we are so rapidly progressing toward union with the Congregationalists, we do not feel that we dare assume a pledge to the American school in Japan at this time.

Meeting adjourned at 10:30 P. M. Wednesday.

Thursday, October 18, 1928.

The Foreign Mission Department was called to order by President Fletcher at 8:30, and Mr. Rensberger led in prayer.

The minutes of the Wednesday sessions were read and approved.

Adjourned to call of chair.

Friday Morning, October 19, 1928.

31. The Foreign Mission Department met and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: president, Dr. J. O. Atkinson; secretary, Dr. W. P. Minton; assistant secretary, Mrs. Alice V. Morrill.

Friday Evening, October 19, 1928.

Following the action of the General Board, which voted that each department of the Convention should pay 5 per cent of its income from recurring items in 1928 toward the deficit of the Herald, the Foreign Mission Board met for a few minutes to reconsider the budget. The General Board instructed that this 5 per cent should be added to the budget already approved by the General Board and which for the Foreign Mission Department amounted to $58,561.72, including last year's deficit for this department. But in this budget there had been included by the Foreign Mission Department the sum of $1,250 toward the Herald's deficit. The receipts from recurring items in 1927-28 were: Refula funds, $45,687; World Friendship fund, $3,490.44, and General Mission home fund (thankoffering), $2,046.70, making the total for this department $51,224.14, of which 5 per cent is $2,561.20. Since $1,250 of this was already in our budget, the board decided that it would be necessary to add the difference of $1,311.20 to the budget of $58,561.72, making the total actual budget of the department for 1929, $59,872.92.

ALICE V. MORRILL, Ass't Sec'y.
W. P. FLETCHER, President.
W. P. MINTON, Secretary.

The statistics of the Porto Rico mission were received late, and are not as complete as usual, because of the extreme difficulty of securing them since the storm. They show, by comparison with last year:

	1927.	1928.
Missionaries	4	3
National pastors	4	5
National women helpers.....	3	3
Main stations	6	7
Outposts	12	9
Sunday Schools	14	13
Church membership	459	440
Enrolled in C. E.	211	189
Enrolled in S. S.	1,139	1,183

Money raised by Porto Rico Ch. $1,928.78 $1,956.60

The loss in outposts and Sunday Schools is due to cut in the appropriation, and the loss in Church membership is due to the failure to report the membership of the newly organized Church at Desealabrado.

OUR STEWARDSHIP.

In a recent letter, Mrs. H. G. Rowe, Huntington, Ind., said so much in a few words that we take the liberty to quote: "Yes, I do believe in Christian stewardship. The need of the hour is a Church membership with a determination to give God the first fruits of all time, energy and money. And I am doing my best to train the juniors of our Church along that line. I began with our own boy when he was old enough to ask for pennies to go to the store to buy candy. That surely is the time all parents should begin." First fruits, juniors, need of the hour, our own boy—those are great words, and need to be strenuously urged.

The General Board had two resignations before it in its recent sitting. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C., from the Board of Evangelism and Life Service, and Rev. O. S. Thomas, D. D., Covington, Ohio, was elected to fill the vacancy; Mr. M. Orban, Jr., Whittier, Calif., from the Board of Christian Education, and Miss Helen R. Stearns, Dayton Ohio, was elected to fill the vacancy.

We are right in the midst of our stewardship period now. Each pastor, Church, superintendent, teacher and stewardship secretary should be using his best efforts to teach the stewardship message and principles. These should be such thorough instruction that the enrollment of stewards on December 9th will be one of the great occasions of the year.

General Convention Budget.

The number of Churches now starting on the General Convention budget plan is rapidly increasing. This is the way it should be. The Churches like it when they begin it. It is a sensible, Christian business method, and commends itself where some one does not stand in its way. It is high time for all Churches to be using it.

W. H. DENISON.

Church is damaged badly and is cracked. Of course, the people were afraid that an earthquake might take place at any time. But they were assured by an engineer that it was safe to be in it. Therefore, now the services are held in the Church and we are following the regular programs.

It certainly is a miracle to see Miss Williams' chapel left in a very good condition, and now is serving as a dwelling-place for many families. When the storm was raging, one of the first thoughts of destruction that came to my mind was of this chapel, as it is so very close to the sea. I suppose God has a purpose for everything.

VICTORIA E. ADAMS.

NOTICE.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference meets on Monday, November 26th, lasting through Tuesday and Wednesday, at Fuller's Chapel, four miles south of Henderson. Will all ministers and delegates please notify Miss Ethel Woodlief, Henderson, N. C., when they will arrive and how, by automobile, bus or train.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VIII—November 25, 1928.

THE PRAYERS OF PAUL.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Rejoice always; pray without ceasing; in everything give thanks."—1 Thess. 5:16-18.

LESSON: Acts 20:36-38; Rom. 1:8-10; Eph. 1:15-23, 3:14-21; 1 Thess. 1:2-5.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 34:1-8.

If Paul had not been a man of prayer it is quite likely that we would never have heard much, if anything, about him. In spite of his ability, he would never have made much impression on the world if he had not been a man of prayer. It was prayer that vitalized his life and made him such a power, not only in the world of his day, but through the influence which he thus exerted in the world of our day. There are literally thousands of Christian workers today who are being inspired by the life and letters of Paul, which as has been suggested, were the expressions of his inner, prayer life. As we briefly survey Paul's prayers as listed in today's lesson, a number of characteristics stand out.

1. Earnest. Prayer for Paul was a serious, earnest thing. He believed he was doing something worthwhile when he prayed. He concentrated his thought and heart on what he was doing. He did more than simply say prayers; he prayed. There was no half-heartedness about Paul's praying.

2. Natural. Paul's prayers were natural. He believed God heard what he was saying. He believed God was interested in what he was doing. When he prayed, therefore, he talked to God in a natural, simple way.

3. Thankful. Read Paul's prayers as given in this lesson and elsewhere and you will be impressed by the dominant note of thankfulness which runs through all of them. How conscious Paul was of the manifold gifts of God! Alas, that so many of us are always asking God for things when we have not given Him thanks for the blessings He has already given us. Study also in these prayers of Paul the things for which he was thankful, "that your faith is spoken of throughout the world" "for the love which ye show to the saints" and so on, evidences of grace in others. For Paul there was no special thanksgiving day—the whole year was thanksgiving day to him.

4. Personal. "I thank my God for you all." How personal it all is! I, my God, you all, making mention of you. It is all right to make general prayers, but every one of us should pray for persons, not only for "me and my wife, my son John and his wife, us four, and no more," but for individuals and groups which include a comprehensive circle. The writer has made it a practice for several years to pray definitely by name for missionaries and Christian workers.

5. Regular. Paul was not, he could not be, content to pray spasmodically. He prayed regularly. He made it a practice, a habit to pray. There are so many Christians who pray only infrequently. There can be no sound development in Christian character unless prayer is a regular habit.

6. Effectual. The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. There is no computing just how much Paul accomplished through his prayers. More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of. A man of Paul's nature would not have prayed if he had not believed that prayer changed things and persons.

7. Intercessional. Reference has already been made to this characteristic of Paul's prayers. He undoubtedly prayed for himself; he tells us he besought the Lord thrice that he would remove the thorn in the flesh. But from what we know of Paul we are led to believe that Paul prayed a great deal more for others than he did for himself. Strange as it may seem, prayer which is perhaps the highest spiritual exercise of the soul, may become the most selfish thing. It was not so with Paul.

8. Spiritual. Read carefully Paul's prayers and you will readily discover that they are characterized by a lofty spirit and sentiment. There is nothing petty or material about them. They are the expression of a great soul as it expresses itself to the life of all souls. As one reads them, one's spirit is quickened and renewed because of the high tone and the spiritual note which they strike.

It might be added that Paul's prayer life was an achievement. He did not come full-grown into it. Like us, he had to set himself resolutely to pray, and in season and out of season he had to persevere in prayer. And here as elsewhere the law of life, "He that is faithful in that which is least shall be ruler of many things" found application. As Paul prayed and because he prayed, he constantly became a better prayer. Let us give heed to ourselves that we do likewise.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, November 25, 1928.

TOPIC: "Remember God."—Eccles. 12:1; Psa. 103:1-5.

Some Bible Hints.

The habit of remembering God makes character of the best kind (Eccles. 12:1).

Time is so fleeting that if we do not remember God in youth, age will find us incapable of thinking about Him (12:1).

Remember God in daily thanksgiving, as the Giver of all good (Psa. 103:1).

Remember God's kindness. We often blame Him for our distresses and forget His benefits (v. 4).

Suggestive Thoughts.

It is hard in a great city to remember God; we are hypnotized by material things; gold and glamour take the place of God.

If we keep our pledge it will be impossible for us to forget God. We shall seek His will and strive to do it.

The soul is indeed lost when it gets rid of God. It can no more reach its true destiny than a plant can thrive without air.

To remember God is to accept life's discipline from His hand, to bow to His will, and to trust His wisdom.

A Few Illustrations.

The prodigal forgot his father, but his father did not forget his boy. God's seeking love will never give us up.

Remembering God is the soul's turning to Him as the needle turns to the magnetic North. It is our nature to remember Him; to forget Him is a perversion of our nature, spiritual blindness.

At night in the forest, the woodman walks "by the light in the sky." It is as we look up to God that we find guidance, though life's pathway be dark.

The rich fool of the parable who purposed to tear down his barns and build greater, forgot God. So did Dives in Luke 16. But God will not be forgotten. He comes crashing into our life.

To Think About.

How did Daniel remember God?

What things make us forget God?

What is the good of remembering God?

DOES A CONTEST PAY?

(A story of Home Department, Vanceville S. S.)

In 1922, about the first of spring, We thought a little contest would be the very thing To try to get the people to go to Sunday School; And so when we began it, this was our simple role: One side was called the Red side, and one was called the Blue,

And now to get them equal we just appointed two To choose of all our number—big, little, young and old;

Each one was in dead earnest to do as we were told.

The contest was started, each side did have the same,

And each one made an effort a larger crowd to gain.

Talk of faithful workers—we had them not a few; Each one with smiling faces met members old and new.

At the end of six weeks, the contest being through, The Red side almost numbered to equal with the Blue

Of those who went to Sunday School, but more the Red side won

Of Home Department members who said they couldn't come.

Among the Home Department, a family in the west

In the State of Louisiana took part in our contest: An earnest, faithful worker, with courage strong and bold,

Has toiled these six years faithful, God bless her precious soul.

They're Home Department members of our S. S. yet,

And by their earnest efforts more families they did get.

This noble, working family has kept the work alive,

And now, instead of seven, they number twenty-five.

Wish we could get a preacher, and one who wouldn't wait,

To organize a Christian Church in Louisiana State;

Wish we could get a preacher, and one who wouldn't wait,

To run a meeting for those folks in Louisiana State.

means there should be a lively sincerity in our program of work.

We are living in a busy age when we can scarcely find time for all there is to do. Our only hope of getting things done in good order is by better methods of planning and systematizing our work, so that no time actually goes to waste.

Meetings should begin promptly and on time. Don't allow the impression to prevail that members can get to the meeting a half-hour late and still be on time, because you are waiting for them. Let the interest of the meeting begin with promptness; then continue that interest by showing that the meeting is well planned. Keep things moving. Life is a drama. The principal things in the drama of life are action and characters. Something is to be done and some one must be found to do it and do it well.

To keep up that living interest in the society meetings will keep the meeting from dragging and the members from yawning. Be zealous about the goals that we set or are set for us. Remember that the end, however good, does not always justify the means. Goals for goals' sake is a poor policy. To reach a standard of excellence just for the sake of reaching it, regardless of the spirit and method in doing so, may do more violence to the society than good. For instance, one of our goals is a net increase in membership. Suppose it develops at the close of the year that there is a decrease in membership instead of an increase, and then to save our record we rush out and get two or three names to put us over the top. Perhaps it was more the names we were after than the persons. To reach the goal of membership, we should let it be known that it is more than the name and dues we are after. There should be a mutual helpfulness to both the society and the members to have them in this kingdom-building work.

In meeting the standard in our study-books and books for reading there should be no sham. It is an easy thing and no small temptation to do a makeshift business of studying the mission books required. This is the educational feature of our work. Here we get our increased information as well as inspiration. You don't have to plead for financial support for missions where the folks are informed along mission lines. So we should be as careful and methodic as possible in our use of the mission-study books. We want to get the help from the use of them as well as the credit toward a goal.

There is no question about the fact that because of the lack of a definite financial plan or policy an undue amount of time in our society work is consumed in talking about money and plans and schemes of reaching our financial goal. Of course, the society should be thoroughly informed of its financial obligations and the plans for securing the same. The rest of the time should be used in working the plans instead of making money the chief subject of every meeting.

Careful records should be kept of all money received and the same should be disbursed only upon proper authority. No treasurer in a missionary society or any other organization of the Church should object to having their records audited and approved at the close of the year. It is your own safeguard. The Church world has had enough experience in the last decade to make it important that great care should be exercised in the handling of the Church funds.

We are glad to see so many pastors here today, and here is one place that our women's interest may be stimulated, too. We say the pastor is the "key-man," and so he is—like pastor, like people. He is the leader and a leader always goes ahead of the followers. I have seen missionary societies which were the backbone of the Church, as it were, and I am sure the pastor who is really interested is proud of such a society. Then I have known of Churches where the missionary society had to get along as best it could without the aid and support of the pastor. This is unfortunate, and we hope that our North Carolina pastors are all leaders in this missionary work and we crave their help and advice in the task of carrying out the Master's commission, "Go ye into all the world."

Success is the high endeavor,

It dwells in the heart that dares;

Success is the will that never Gives up and never despairs;

Success is the noble action

That lifts us up from the clod,

The joy and the satisfaction

That comes to the child of God.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

AS OTHERS HEAR US.

"He that refuseth correction despiseth his own soul."—Prov. 15:23-33.

This striking sentence implies that honest and fair criticism is the best thing possible for the soul, so that when we reject it we are doing the greatest possible injury to ourselves.

The story is told of a certain legislator who found fault with the free way in which the shorthand reporters printed his speeches, asserting that they took great and unwarranted liberties with his utterances. Thereupon one of the reporters put into his paper exactly what the honorable gentleman said, which was as follows:

"The reporters—ought not to—the reporters ought not to be the ones to judge of what is important—not to say what should be left out—but—the member can only judge of what is important. As I—as my speeches—as the reports—as what I say is reported sometimes, no one—nobody can understand from the reports—what it is—what I mean. So—it strikes me—it has struck me certain matters—things that appear of importance—are sometimes left out—omitted. The reporters—the papers—points are omitted—I mean—to make a brief statement—what the paper thinks of interest—is reported."

That is not an unfair illustration of the degree in which most of us need correction, and are quite unconscious of our need.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to be humble and teachable. And above all, grant us the constant admonition of Thy Holy Spirit. Amen.

TUESDAY.

WATCH OUT.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."—Mark 13:28-37.

Tuberculosis is no longer the world's most terrible scourge. Once it claimed more victims than any other disease, but now it ranks only fifth among the causes of death. This vast improvement has been brought about by education. Tuberculosis does not leap upon us and bear us down suddenly to the grave; it comes gradually, and sets before us many danger signals that are plain enough to give us full warning, if we will only heed them. The National Tuberculosis Association gives the following list of danger signals: being too easily tired, having a lack of "pep," loss of weight, indigestion, having a cough that hangs on, having an "all-in" feeling. These are common enough symptoms, and give no warning of tuberculosis unless they are persistent and resist ordinary remedies. In that case, if the warning is heeded at once, living outdoors, with plenty of sleep and of proper food, will almost certainly effect a cure. Tuberculosis is a readily preventable disease.

And so is sin a preventable disease. Satan does not leap upon us with a sudden onset. Temptation comes gradually. The disease of sin affords us far more danger signals than tuberculosis, and all of them are perfectly plain if we will not shut our eyes to them. Follow the Saviour's advice, keep on guard against sin, and it is easily preventable.

Prayer.—Our Blessed Redeemer, show us our peril. Make our souls honest. Lead us away from temptation and deliver us from evil. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE SEARCHING GOD.

"Will not God search this out? For He knoweth the secrets of the heart."—Psa. 44:15-26.

It is a profound comfort to the thoughtful mind that God knows. He knows our failures, but also He knows how hard we try to succeed.

Now this comfort which we so eagerly take to ourselves, why do we refuse it to others? We urge the incompetence of mortals to decide about us, whether we are just or unjust. Why are we so certain that we are competent to judge other mortals?

God is the searching God. He has searched us. He knows us completely, and we rejoice in His knowledge. Let us remember that He knows all men as well. Let us allow Him to be the only Searcher for their lives also.

Prayer.—Great Judge of all the earth, Thou doest right, and Thou alone. We commit all judgment to Thee. We will judge others only enough to help them, never enough to condemn them. Thou understanding God, Thou God of love, we would enter into Thy love and Thy understanding. We do this as taught by Thy Son and in His name. Amen.

THURSDAY.

YOUR THOUGHTS AND YOU.

"As he thinketh within himself, so is he."—Prov. 23:1-7.

Not, as he is dressed, so is he. Not, as men acclaim him, so is he. Not, as is his bank account, so is he. Not, according to his learning, so is he. None of these things make a man what he is; but, as he thinks within himself, so is he. A man is his inner-thoughts, that no one sees, that no one knows, that he hardly realizes himself; they are the man.

Dr. Burrell once said that "the prevailing fault of our time is the estimating of mankind by the accidentals of life, rather than by its essentials. Not what a man has or what happens to him; not wealth, nor noble blood, nor crowns nor titles; but the thoughts that are in him and shine through him—his thoughts, motives, springs of action: these constitute the man."

We can really make no progress toward the better life until we see where we are; that is, what we are. To decide this is not so easy as it seems, because it requires strict honesty, and honesty is not easy. We can estimate others with all frankness, though such an estimate does us no good—or them either; but who is so courageous as to make a straightforward, clear-headed, sane and just estimate of himself?

Prayer.—Dear Lord, help us, enable us to weigh our characters on the scales of Thy holiness. And, knowing ourselves, aid us to make ourselves what we ought to be. Through riches of grace in Christ Jesus. Amen.

FRIDAY.

COVENANT AND LOVINGKINDNESS.

"The faithful God, who keepeth covenant and lovingkindness."—Deut. 7:6-11.

Thirty-nine of the leading nations of the world have, through their representatives, signed a treaty agreeing not to use poison gas in war. That is fine, or would be, if the nations would ratify the acts of their representatives; but France alone has done so, and France is continuing her experiments in poison gas, believing that the failure of the other nations to ratify absolves her from her agreement. The latest nation to be heard from, Russia, keeps up her research in poison gas, feeling obliged to do what all other countries are doing.

What a contrast is this lamentable condition of affairs to the character of "the faithful God, who keepeth covenant and lovingkindness"! There is hardly anything in all history so completely opposed to lovingkindness as poison gas. It is the most hateful, and at the same time the most deadly of all the agencies of war. Its onset is silent, and without the least warning. An entire city can be stricken down in a minute; and if there are any survivors they were far better dead. A covenant of lovingkindness condemning and outlawing this most horrible iniquity is the need of the hour.

Prayer.—The Lord of hosts, we would do battle with Thee against Satan. With Thee we would fight war. We pray in the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE SONG AT MIDNIGHT.

"This is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith."—1 John 5:1-12.

President Charles A. Blanchard once told a wonderful story about the conversion of a very dear friend of his. That friend was for many years an infidel, a hard drinker, a swearer, a Sabbath-breaker, unkind to his wife. One day, after a debauch, he went out on a stringer belonging to a wharf in process of building, drank two bottles of whiskey, and lay down on the stringer, expecting to fall asleep and roll over into the water in his sleep. He wanted to end his miserable existence, but had not courage to do it in any other way. He did fall asleep, but did not turn over, and awoke with the stars shining in his face. He went home at midnight, saw his wife through the window still at work ironing, and heard her singing, "What a Friend we have in Jesus." The thought came to him, "If Jesus can make my wife sing at midnight, He can make me stop drinking whiskey." He never touched a drop of intoxicating liquor after that, and he became a sincere, trusting Christian.

Prayer.—Dear Lord Jesus, help us to realize that Thou canst and will save us from our sins. Help us to know that nothing is too hard for Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE TEST OF CHRISTIANITY.

"Ye are my friends, if ye do the things which I command you."—John 15:9-17.

A correspondent in Connecticut asks me how she is to test herself, to discover whether she is really a true Christian or not. She has been a Church member for many years, but she seems to lack the joyful, confident assurance of being a follower of Christ which she longs to have. Many Christians are in the same perplexity.

In answer to this question I must say, in the first place, that our feelings have really nothing to do with the matter. Consider your relation to your earthly father. Some children rejoice all the time in their companionship with their father, while others do not seem to get so close to him and have the joyful intimacy with him that they would like. But are these last any less their father's children? Does their father really love them less than those of a more open and demonstrative nature? You will see at once that feeling has nothing to do with a fact.

But if you are not to tell by your feelings, how can you tell whether you are a Christian or not? Christ alone can give you the test, and He has given it very plainly. We are Christians if we do His will. We are His friends if we obey Him.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

As Thanksgiving draws near, we are wondering what our Churches will do for its Orphanage this year. We just wonder how much interested our people will be in their 118 little boys and girls in the Christian Orphanage. One denomination in North Carolina sent its Orphanage ninety thousand dollars last Thanksgiving. That orphanage cares for 535 children. They have five times as many as we do. If our people love its children, we ought to receive eighteen thousand dollars by the end of the year when our books close for the year. Our children are just as intelligent and just as worthy as any children in any orphanage, and stand shoulder to shoulder with the children in the community high school. One of our boys was valedictorian last session. So you are not throwing your money away when you send it to the Christian Orphanage. It will be invested in bright boys and girls and will be wisely invested in training these children. Show your love by what you do for your Orphanage in this Thanksgiving offering this year.

ATTENTION SECRETARIES.

In the "Ministerial Directory," as published in "The Annual" of the Southern Christian Convention and Conferences, there seem to be some names of persons who have been transferred or withdrawn. It is desirable to have this directory as nearly correct as possible, and in order to get these corrections, secretaries are asked to go over the list and report any entries that should be changed or corrected. Also they are requested to make an accurate list of the names of ministers and licentiates of their Conference and forward with their minutes to the editor of "The Annual."

IMPRESSIONS FROM MY TRIP TO EUROPE.

By DR. R. C. HELFENSTEIN.

II.

The voyage across took six days and a half. We anchored first at Cherbourg, France, to let off passengers who were going direct to the continent. Then our ship docked at Southampton, England. It is a great sight to see the thousands of people on the docks waiting for friends and relatives arriving on an incoming ocean liner. The waving of handkerchiefs and hats, the calling of names as those expected are recognized at a distance by those on the dock while the boat is being anchored, and then the greetings and the reunions of friends and relatives is a real inspiration. To see such on a foreign shore makes one think of his own home and his own return.

It is a real experience to meet the custom officers, answer their questions and secure their O K on the passing of one's baggage. I might say that the custom officers in the foreign countries, as a group, are more courteous and more obliging than those in our own ports of entry.

After the baggage was all inspected, a special train took the ship's passengers to London, where their ways separated to the various parts of Europe. We arrived in London Friday evening at about 7 o'clock. I made my headquarters in London between engagements, but was entertained in private homes in the cities where I filled speaking appointments.

On Saturday afternoon I flew in one of the large Dutch airplanes on a nonstop flight from London to Amsterdam, Holland, the trip including a flight over London, over eastern England, across the English Channel, over northern France, Belgium and Holland, a distance of three hundred miles, the flight being made in two hours and thirty minutes. It was a wonderful thrill from beginning to end. No, I was not a bit "air sick"—none of the passengers were.

When the plane hit an air pocket, the reaction was the same as when an auto hits a bump in the road. When the plane ran into an air current, the reaction was the same as when a rowboat is hit on side with a strong wave. But we did not hit many air pockets or run into many air currents. The sailing was so smooth that one could have closed his eyes and thought himself to be riding a Pullman car that was smoother than any Pullman car he had ever ridden on. While flying over the English Channel, I wrote a letter home, telling of the wonderful trip and wishing that the whole family were enjoying the flight with me.

Airplane transportation for freight as well as for passengers is making rapid progress in Europe between the different countries. I do not doubt for a moment that within fifteen years airplane transportation will be carrying thousands of passengers back and forth across the ocean each summer.

I was met at Amsterdam in a large French private car and taken to The Hague, Holland, one of the most charming cities in Europe, and as you know, the home of the marvelous Peace Palace. On Sunday morning I spoke in the American Church in The Hague, and Sunday evening I spoke in the English Church. I visited numerous cities and towns in Holland, including Leiden, the first home of the Pilgrim Fathers after they left England. Saw the great old Church that was built in the twelfth century where the Pilgrim Fathers worshiped, and saw some of the old homes where they had lived.

I had opportunity to see the people of Holland in their homes, at their work, in their play, and at worship. They are truly a wonderful people. Amsterdam, Rotterdam and The Hague are the principle cities of Holland and are among the most modern cities in Europe. Only in the north of Holland do the primitive customs and dress still prevail. It was a most interesting experience to visit the towns in northern Holland, and see the people in their quaint costumes and wooden shoes. There is as much difference between the dress and customs of the people in northern Holland and those in central Holland as there is between the people of northern Holland and the people of America.

While in Amsterdam I attended the great Olympic games, in which the athletes of twenty-nine countries competed for honors. It was a thrilling experience to see the young men and women from many lands in the competitions, and to see the great amphitheater crowded with spectators from all over the world, indicating what country they came from by the flags they waved while cheering. The American athletes did not fare well in the track events, as the runners from the other countries for the most part outclassed them. But in the other events—rowing, swimming, etc.—the American competitors made enough points to place America first in the entire tournament.

I wish I could describe some of the interesting scenes in the Olympics, but words are inadequate. I shall never forget the feeling I had when sitting alongside of a French professor from Paris University on one side and an English professor from Oxford University on the other side, the competitors came out upon the track for one of the 400-meter races. Of course, I felt confident that the American runners would outclass the rest. But to my sorrow the American runners on whom we had counted so much were left behind. The vociferous cheering of the English and French professors rather got on my nerves, for it seemed to me their cheering was because of their satisfaction in seeing that the American runners lost, for the runners from their own respective countries did not fare much better than did the American runners.

All the events were extremely interesting, but one of particular interest to me was that of the javelin throw. The competitors stood in line to take their turn in throwing the javelin. Where it struck the ground the flag of the country of that competitor was placed. It was a beautiful sight to see the flags of the different nations floating there in the field indicating by the positions the comparative abilities of the competitors. But I was not good enough sport to get any kick out of seeing several of the other flags placed ahead of the Stars and Stripes when the athletes from Finland, Japan, Italy and Spain out-threw the American athletes.

My first impulse was to offer an alibi to my foreign friends in defense of our athletes who lost in the different events. But a better sense of sportsmanship caused me to take my medicine and enjoy it. My turn came at the final wind-up when the total count of points in all the events of the week was made, and though America lost in many single events her athletes won more points in all the events combined than did those of any other single country, placing her first in the tournament.

There is no difficulty whatever in knowing what Christ's will is, since it is all written down for us so plainly in the New Testament. We can read Christ's commands. We can carry them out. And so we can be Christians. There need be no doubt whatever about it.

THEN spake Je'sus to the multitude, and to his disciples,

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3¾x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x¾ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

THOMPSON.

James Henry Thompson died at his home in southern Alamance County, October 16, 1928, aged seventy-nine years, eleven months and seven days. Bro. Thompson was a member of the Bethlehem Presbyterian Church of southern Alamance County. He leaves to mourn his departure two sons, William Thompson, of Burlington, N. C., and Eugene Thompson, of Elon College, N. C.; one daughter, Mrs. Nora Fox, Liberty, N. C.; four grandchildren, and many other relatives and friends.

For some time Bro. Thompson had been in declining health. He never complained of his condition but always seemed submissive to God's plan. He was a kind father and husband, a good neighbor and friendly to all.

Interment was made in Rock Creek M. P. Church cemetery. Funeral services conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. L. L. Myrick and Rev. J. U. Fogleman. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

PIERCE.

Inasmuch as our Heavenly Father, in His great wisdom, has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved member of the Woman's Missionary Society of Damascus Christian Church, Mrs. Jennie Hill Pierce; and whereas, in her death this society has lost one of its loyal and devoted members; be it resolved:

1. That while we mourn the loss of her, we bow in humble submission to the will of Him that doeth all things well.

2. That her life and influence has been a blessing to us and to the community; that the Christian fortitude and patience with which she bore her sufferings be an inspiration to us to live closer and do more for the Saviour whom she loved and trusted.

3. That we extend to the family our sympathy, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun, and also recorded in the minutes of the Woman's Missionary Society.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

ENLIGHTENED MIND.—

An enlightened mind is not hoodwinked; it is not shut up in a gloomy prison till it thinks the walls of its own dungeon the limits of the universe.

SOLDIERS' RELIGION.—

The chief of chaplains of the United States Army publishes some interesting figures as to the attendance of the American soldier at services of worship. Last year there were held 18,890 services for worship, and there was an attendance of 1,777,018 worshippers. On an average, every soldier in the army attended Church service thirteen times during the year. The figures, of course, are not available, but it is to be doubted that the average American citizen made as good a record as the soldier in attending worship. In the British army, attendance at services of worship is required by army regulations. A story is told of an English company commander who said to his men one Sunday morning that all those who wished to attend Church should step forward one pace. When about half the company had stepped forward, he dismissed those who had expressed a desire to attend worship, sent them back to their barracks, and marched the others to Church. He evidently thought that those who had the least desire to attend Church needed most to go. In the American Army, attendance at services of worship is entirely voluntary on the part of the soldier.

BETTER DAYS FOR MISSIONS.—

For the past five years there has been a constant falling off in the contributions for missions. Practically all of the larger denominations, as well as most of the smaller ones, have been suffering from this slump in giving for the support of missions. Mission boards heavily in debt and being forced to provide for emergencies by all sorts of makeshift plans, has become a familiar story to all those who are informed as to the work of the Church in mission fields. Now comes the encouraging news that for one denomination at least the tide seems to have turned. The World Service Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church reports that during the past fiscal year which closed October 31st, there was an increase of $105,000 over the contributions for the previous year. There had been no organized drive for funds. The increase in contributions seems to be the result of a reviving interest in missions. There seems to be a series of cycles in which the interest and the activities of Church work move, which no one is quite able to explain. But let us hope that we are entering upon a better day for the support of missions that will spread until all the denominations may be affected by it, and the various mission boards may have sufficient funds to at least pay off debts and provide for the most urgent demands.

EDUCATION IN CHINA.—

A movement is now under way in China to teach the one hundred million illiterate Chinese between the ages of sixteen and thirty to read and write. The Chinese language has no alphabet. Instead of a few letters being learned, and these letters put together to form words, the Chinese language has a different symbol for each word. Thousands of these symbols must be learned before a Chinaman is educated in our sense of the word education.

Y. C. James Yen, a Chinaman who served a Y. M. C. A. secretary in France during the World War and whose work was with the Chinese coolies, found that it was possible to teach them enough symbols for every-day use, within a few hours. After the war, Mr. Yen worked out a system by which the average man may be taught enough of the language to read and write simple messages in ninety-six hours of class-room study. The movement has already grown to nation-wide proportions. There are between five and six millions studying in the schools Mr. Yen has founded. If the work is continued, and is as successful as it now bids fair to be, it is impossible to estimate its influence upon the new China which is just beginning to take shape.

THE FARMERS' PLIGHT.—

Dr. Edward Sherwood Mead, professor of finance in the University of Pennsylvania, has made a study of the financial condition of the American farmer, and presents the facts in a way which indicates that it is far worse than most people had any idea. Though everybody realized that the farmer has been having a hard time with finances during the past few years. Prof. Mead says:

"The American farmer receives an average return of $790 a year for his own labor, the work of managing the farm, the labor of his family, and the return on his investment; the lowest wage paid in any major occupation—at least 30 per cent below any other wage-group; $325 less than the amount he pays his own hired help. The American farmer is working for 15 per cent less than the amount paid for the American farmhand. Not only is he working for his pittance, from which a section hand, a truck driver, or a stevedore would turn away in disgust, but he is employing in the business of agriculture, capital (belonging to himself, exclusive of the $17,000,000,000 which he has borrowed and on which he is paying interest) amounting to $36,800,000,000. On this capital he receives no return.

"The situation here presented is without parallel. Here is the leading American industry, largest in capital invested, in value of product, in importance to the general welfare; an industry recognized as the foundation of all other industries; which feeds and clothes the nation; which supports a larger number of essential raw materials, without whose orderly function our national life would be impossible; and yet this supremely important industry pays starvation wages to the men who run it, and gives them no return on the huge mass of capital which they employ."

UNITY WITHIN.—

In the pastoral letter read at the last session of the general convention of the Episcopal Church and sent out to all the clergy to be read in every parish, there was emphasized a thought that should have the consideration of all Christendom. It was the obligation of the Church to be one with itself, and then to start out to seek union with other communions. The discussions and the efforts toward union which are going on in practically every denominational connection are revealing a fact of which many of us have heretofore been blissfully ignorant. That fact is that within most denominations there are lines of cleavage that are more marked than are the differences which in the main separate denominations which are closely akin. For instance, there are so-called fundamentalists groups in different denominations which have more in common with each other, both in beliefs and methods of practice, than have the fundamentalist and modernistic groups within the same denomination.

There are two possibilities which may grow out of this condition. There may be a breaking up of old lines of demarcation, and a realignment along new lines. This might and probably would result in a still larger number of denominational groupings, with a resultant division and confusion that would be even worse than the present conditions which are so weakening and discouraging. Or, as is suggested by our Episcopal brethren, there may be a development of unity within the denominations themselves. There can be but little doubt as to the desirability of the latter course. One is tempted to affirm that the present impotence of Protestant Christendom is as much due to the lack of unity within the various denominations themselves as it is to the lack of unity between different denominations.

How may this inner unity be attained? We can see no way save in a greater love and loyalty to Jesus Christ. Whenever there is an effort to emphasize any particular theological doctrine which is contrary to our own accepted beliefs, we can feel a stiffening of our denominational backbones and a rising of our sectarian bristles. But whenever we have brought to our attention the compassionate tenderness, the sacred humility, and the sacrificial love of Jesus Christ, our hearts melt within us, we stand self-condemned at the bar of our own conscience, and our souls reach upward in a passionate desire to emulate the blessed Christ. In such moments, how wonderfully close are we drawn to those who love and serve our Lord! Can there be any other way to that unity within?

NOTES-PERSONALS

"Peleubet's Select Notes" and "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide," commentaries on the Sunday School lessons for 1929, each priced $2.00, may be ordered from THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va.

In this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN are printed cuts showing the three fine buildings of the Christian Orphanage, located at Elon College, N. C. Read the appeals for a Thanksgiving offering and act accordingly.

Dr. Chas. E. Burton, of the National Council of the Congregational Church, is to visit Elon College and to conduct the chapel services Monday, November 19th. Dr. Burton is an outstanding man in the religious world, and the Congregational Church in particular, and Elon gives him glad welcome.

Here in truth is a most magnanimous deed. A good brother, who reads and enjoys THE CHRISTIAN SUN recently donated, for a period of one year, fifty new subscriptions to THE SUN. A most timely gift. Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va., and J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, are to select the fifty names of those who really wish and would read THE SUN but are not able to subscribe for it. A few other such offers would soon reach the number of subscribers Manager C. D. Johnston is endeavoring to secure. Many, many sincere thanks to our good brother!

President W. A. Harper attended the meeting of the advisory board of the Southeast of the Congregational Church, in Atlanta, Ga., November 13th and 14th. Dr. Harper spoke on "Church Union" and addressed the board and worked with the board on this and kindred topics. The boards of the two Churches are being brought together in rapid fashion, and if the boards are properly put together it may be observed without any attempt at facetiousness that after a while there is a building. The Congregationalists and Christians are building their united house through the bringing together of their boards.

The Men of the Church completed their organization and held their first regular meeting at a delightful banquet in the Y. M. C. A. hall at Elon College last Friday night. Dr. W. M. Jay, of the college faculty, is president of the local club, as he is also of the Conference movement, and under his leadership it may be expected that there will be many active Men of the Church organizations throughout the Conference. It is a great and good movement. The women are organized and are doing great things in kingdom service. It is high time that men were organized to go forward in active service in the Church.

Bro. J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va., Assistant Secretary of Missions, has consented to assist the pastors of the Eastern Virginia Conference in putting the missionary campaign before all of the Churches of the Conference and endeavor to have each Church reach its goal by raising for missions this year one-third as much as its pastor's salary. The Mission Board is under the necessity of having to raise $45,000 for missions by September 30, 1929, and Bro. Darden believes it can be done and is willing to do his best to assist the pastors to raise their quota. We ask our pastors to co-operate with Bro. Darden, Assistant Secretary, in this great undertaking.

The editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN wishes to extend his heartiest congratulations and happiest felicitations to his good friends, Captain and Mrs. William Holt Turrentine, Burlington, N. C. The beautiful invitation received is unusual and interesting, viz: "1868-1928. Mr. and Mrs. William Holt Turrentine will receive their friends on their sixtieth wedding anniversary, Thursday, the twenty-ninth of November, from three until five o'clock, Burlington, N. C." Here is hoping that this good deacon and his beloved wife, having gone ten years beyond their golden wedding, and yet in good health and strength, may live to celebrate, fifteen years hence, their diamond wedding. Surely, these twain have grown graceful and gracious with increasing years.

We extend our brotherly sympathy to Rev. L. L. Wyrick, Elon College, whose godly mother recently passed to the spiritland. The funeral services of Sister Wyrick, who died at her home, near Monticello, in Guilford County, on November 15th, were conducted from Apple's Chapel on November 16th. The services were in charge of her pastor, Rev. T. J. Green, assisted by Rev. J. F. Apple, and the interment was in Apple's Chapel Cemetery. Sister Wyrick was sixty-two years old and had been in declining health for three years. Her husband, two sons and four daughters survive, and these bereaved ones have our sympathy in their grief.

PASTOR GETS NEW HAT.

We want to call the attention of our Churches to the proposition of giving a ten-dollar Stetson hat to the pastor of the Church and give it in the name of the Church if the Church members will send us ten new subscriptions and ten renewals for THE CHRISTIAN SUN at two dollars each. This is a fine opportunity for our Church people to make their pastor happy for Christmas, and nothing would make the circulation manager more happy than to have the pleasure of presenting the hats to the pastors in the name and on behalf of the Church. Send us a list of subscribers, with check, giving name and correct post-office address, and state whether new or renewal. We would like to have the lists in time to get the hats for Christmas. Let everybody get busy and see that your pastor gets a new hat for Christmas.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,

REQUIREMENTS OF STEWARDSHIP.

Our first love. Even when law was yet supreme the majestic words "Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord"; and "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might"; "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart, and thou shalt teach them diligently even to thy children," etc., were uttered by Him whom God sent to be His own mouthpiece, methinks in thunderous tones into the ears of all Israel assembled. But because of such manifest omnipotence and power, think we that God, who with His Son, is both Author and Finisher of our faith, is less Father than Sovereign? It cannot be. The divine commandment to love God first, last and best is laid upon all, but not without a like divine provision for its fulfillment in the placing by God in the human heart the very attributes that qualify it to do and to be just what His authority compels.

Figurative of regeneration, we read in Deut. 30:6: "And the Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God." And in Heb. 9:14, "How much more shall the blood of Christ purge your conscience from dead works." And so, by these provisions and promises, we know His sovereign power is both fatherly and provident, and that it lays upon us, His earthly children, no impossibility.

The biblical definition of love for God is that we keep His commandments (see 1 John 5:3). Literally, we are to walk after His commandments (2 John 6). Obedience to what God exacts of those He deigns to call His own is the only proof that we do love Him first and most. Does some one say, can we, should we, love God more than father or mother, more than son or daughter? For answer, we have but to remember that earthly parents forsake; children become reprobate and lose all natural affection. The only thing that insures against the possibility of ever becoming untrue to the closest and dearest earthly ties is that we love God even as He first loved us. "For God so loved . . . that He gave." We know what He gave. Do we comprehend such love? Not unless we can say, "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave Himself for me."

"O Love," "O Light," "O Joy," "O Cross"! No strange succession that. "O Love"—love brought God's Son to earth and made Him yours and mine; "O Light"—love bore Him unafraid to Calvary; "O Joy"—love lives in sacrifice, to help, to lift; "O Cross"—stranger than death or life, love conquers.

BRO. FLOWERS' WORK.

The physician Luke tells us that "Life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment." How forgetful we are of how short it is from the cradle to the grave. We play around, and often superficially, on life's stage for a brief period, and the scene closes and we pass out into the shadows. If we would live on beyond our breathing and our heart-throbs, we must realize that the life is more than meat and the body is more than raiment. Those who have made the world better and given vision to the children of men were those who live above the common level of perishable values. They lived Christ-like, which is one of the most vital, livable truths that men know today. Some time ago I met an aged lady teacher who has retired from active class-room work because of declining years, but for fifty-one years that angel of love has given her life to the poor unfortunate children of our land. That life will not end when she passes out beyond the shadows. I read of a Japanese physician some weeks ago who gave his life in an effort to give the world a cure for Southern fever. That man will live on and on, for other physicians and surgeons will take up his work and carry it on to completion. If you go into life with selfish motives, I am sure you will have little to console you when you come down to the close of life's career. If greed and forgetfulness of God have filled your heart, you will be a woeful picture of human wretchedness, for when you pass out you will be dead to a finish to those who are to live after you. Don't think you are not appreciated in your fight for righteousness and potential power; for there are hundreds of men and women in this old world who are standing with you in your efforts to make a life that will live and achieve. Their hearts are not yet calloused toward you because the blows that come to them from the hands of ungrateful, sin-serving men; they realize that you are the saviour of life to a needy world that is to come after them.

IMPRESSIONS FROM MY TRIP TO EUROPE.

BY DR. R. C. HELFENSTEIN.

III.

Here is to be found one of the most wonderful cathedrals of Norman architecture in England. Norwich was the home of Edith Cavell. There in the Church-yard lies her body at rest. An ancient castle, a great museum, old Churches and homes built of flint-stone, and many other items of interest make Norwich one of the most interesting cities in England. While in Norwich I was the guest of an English gentleman on his beautiful estate along the River Yarmouth.

The following week was spent visiting the cities of York, Ely, Cambridge, Stratford-on-Avon and Warwick, returning to London on Saturday to preach at St. Peter's Church, in London, the following day. It was a delightful experience to meet with the people of this splendid congregation and to be entertained in the home of one of the prominent manufacturers of London—a man who has a record of not missing Sunday School or Church a single Sunday in forty years. Perhaps that splendid record explains the secret of his great success in business, and his great influence as a Christian layman.

The following week I spent in Scotland renewing old acquaintances in Edinburgh, speaking at the Rotary luncheon and holding conferences. The last part of the week was spent in a trip to the Highlands through the Trossachs and the lake region made famous by Walter Scott's "Lady of the Lake." I had made the same trip fourteen years ago in the month of October when the mountains were in their autumn colors of such rare beauty. The trip this time in the month of August was equally interesting, with the mountains covered with beautiful purple and white heather.

On my last Sunday in Europe I preached in the beautiful and magnificent old U. F. Church at Dalkeith, Scotland, near which city the summer palace of the kind and queen is located. Dalkeith is one of the oldest cities in Scotland, an unusually interesting place, surrounded by marvelous scenery. A delightful week-end was spent in the fellowship of the sturdy devout Scotch people in their fine old Church.

While I spoke on my itinerary in Churches of the Congregational, Presbyterian, Reformed, United Free Presbyterian and Episcopal denominations, people of all denominations in each city attended the services. There is a growing movement in Europe, as there is in America, toward a united Church. The people of all denominations greeted the American pastors most cordially, expressed great interest in the pilgrimage of peace promoted by the Council of Interchange. Some of the cities had as many as five of the American preachers on consecutive Sundays; some two, or three, or four. The speaker each week was advertised widely through the press, on the motion-picture screens and with large streamers in front of the Churches and with large posters in the market-places and the parks.

I had seen Europe as a student and a tourist on my former visit. But on this visit as a guest of the Churches I found there was no comparison between the two experiences. Being a guest and a representative of the Council of Interchange, I was shown every kind of courtesy, and was privileged to meet many of the leaders in both Church and State. I saw King George and Queen Mary of England, talked with ex-Premier Lloyd George and several other members of Parliament, dined with the aristocracy, and was entertained everywhere I went in a most royal manner. The hospitality of the homes of England, Scotland, Holland and Wales simply cannot be surpassed.

Being a representative of the Council of Interchange as a messenger of good will from America, I had entree to the best circles of fellowship, and opportunities were afforded me that I could not have hoped for under any other circumstances. Numerous receptions were held to enable me to meet personally different groups interested in strengthening the bonds of international friendship. The enthusiasm of the occasion was truly inspiring. In addition to speaking in different Churches each of the five Sundays, it was my privilege to hold numerous group conferences each week on the subject of "International Friendship and American Life and Ideals."

Many of the Rotary Clubs of Europe take a vacation during the month of August in order to keep up their attendance average, and hence I was not able to attend a Rotary luncheon each week. But I met a great many Rotarians in my travels who attended the different meetings where I spoke and who introduced themselves after the services and extended fraternal courtesies in a perfectly marvelous manner during my stay in each city. At Edinburgh, Scotland, I addressed the Rotary Club on the subject of "Friendship Between the English-Speaking Nations."

The day I attended the London Rotary meeting I was taken to the executive offices to meet personally the president and the members of the board of directors. I was glad to be privileged to attend on that special day, as a program of unusual interest had been arranged in honor of Vivian Carter, a member of the London club and the new editor of The Rotarian, who was leaving to come to America. His farewell address on "Seven Years of Rotary Stewardship" was indeed a masterpiece.

It was a real privilege to meet Vivian personally and to welcome him to this side. He is an unusually high type of man and a high type scholar. All Rotarians will certainly profit by his election to the important position of editor of The Rotarian.

Rotary is held in very high esteem in Europe. One finds Rotarians everywhere he goes. And I never had it fail, that to meet a Rotarian in any of those cities was to meet a friend.

I count the experiences of my trip to Europe as a member of the peace pilgrimage one of the richest experiences of my life. Though I was busy a large part of the time, the privileges afforded me by reason of my associations enabled me to get more out of the five weeks in Europe than I could have experienced in five months merely as a tourist. The vacation did me the most good physically, mentally and spiritually of any vacation I have ever had. And letters of appreciation from the British council, and from the Churches visited indicating the importance of the service I rendered in the pilgrimage make me doubly glad for the experience and for the privilege of service it afforded.

Europe is a splendid place for an American to go to for a visit. But it would be difficult for an American to live there permanently. Notwithstanding all the joys and satisfactions that were mine every moment of my stay in Europe, and not unmindful of the marvelous beauties of the countries visited and the wonderful kindnesses extended by their people, when my time was up I felt the ties of my homeland drawing tighter and tighter upon the strings of my affections, and I realized that the true sentiment of my heart found expression in these lines of Van Dyke:

"Oh, it's home again, home again,
America for me;
I want a ship that's westward bound
To plow the rolling sea.
To the beautiful land of room enough
Beyond the ocean bars,
Where the air is full of sunshine
And the flag is full of stars."

It was a happy day when with more than two thousand other passengers I boarded the steamship Homer at Southampton at noon on August 29th and started back to America. Another delightful voyage across the ocean was enjoyed. Every minute was a delight. But the greatest sight and the greatest thrill of the entire trip awaited us as our good ship sailed into New York Harbor on the evening of September 5th, at night-fall, just as the torch in the hand of the Goddess of Liberty was lighted, as if to welcome us home. New York Harbor after night, with the great skyscrapers above the battery lighted like a castle on a hill, presents a picture to those approaching through the harbor that words simply cannot describe. It is a sight that is wonderful, a sight that is glorious. As we sailed up the harbor back to our own home country, I am sure there were many of us who wept for joy. We were "home again!" And we thanked God.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE NOTES.

Dear Bro. Editor:

I am writing to call the attention of the Alabama Conference ministers and Churches to two very important matters. First, the free-will offering for the Orphanage on or near Thanksgiving. Brethren, please don't overlook this matter, for it is of such grave importance that some young life may depend upon the offering. What will we do for our Orphanage at this Thanksgiving period? Get every Church to give something. It will help them and will also increase their spiritual life.

Second, the offering for Christian education to be taken in December. This is also a matter dealing with our young people. The Board of Christian Education is responsible for our school of methods at Elon and Piedmont Junior Colleges. Every one who attended the summer school last year will be anxious to give something to help carry forward the good will for next year. Should we be willing to give largely, we could not give value received.

Brethren, as pastors, give your young people a chance to support their own work, and let us encourage them in this work by getting them to give a liberal contribution. I am expecting this to be the best year ever for the Church and its every interest since God and the good people of our great country have stamped their approval of Christianity and sobriety. Glory be to God for the great victory, and it is a sweeter victory to us because we helped to bring it about. By all means, take the offering. G. D. HUNT.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be in every home in the Southern Christian Convention. We have around thirty-three thousand members. Counting five members to the family, we should have six thousand and six hundred families. If each family would take THE CHRISTIAN SUN it would bring in to THE SUN the sum of $13,200 per annum and put it on a sound financial basis. Our people would be informed as to our institutions and would become more interested. Our denomination would grow, and all of the institutions of our denomination would be better supported and be able to do a greater work. But the circulation manager is just one human being and can only do one man's work. It is impossible for him to visit all the Churches in behalf of THE SUN. It would cost too much in the first place, and, too, he has too many duties to take the time. Every Church ought to have a committee to work up the subscription list for THE SUN and make a special effort to place it in every home. It is a paper worthy to go in any home. We truly hope our pastors will take more interest in sending in renewals and new subscribers. Some of our pastors have helped us some. We are grateful. Help us to place THE SUN in each home.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THANKSGIVING AND THE ORPHANAGE.

Before another CHRISTIAN SUN reaches its readers we will be in the midst of Thanksgiving service. The President of the United States and the Governors of the States have issued proclamations calling upon the people to assemble in their houses of worship and render thanks to God for His blessings upon us, our land and country the past year. On this day, and at this season, we, of the Christian Church, are called upon to do more than render a lip-service. We are called upon to carry our offerings to the house of the Lord, making them just as large and liberal as possible, the same to be given to the support of our Orphanage at Elon College. This institution now has 118 children to care for, and it is in the hands of a careful, economic, consecrated and capable management. The Orphanage is dependent upon the Thanksgiving offering from the Churches and people, and from the monthly Sunday School offerings through the year. The amount asked by the Convention for the support of its Orphanage for the year is $30,000—$16,260 of which was reported in last week's SUN as having been donated during the year, thus leaving $13,740 to be contributed between the time of that report and January 1st, in order to reach the goal, the amount necessary to keep the Orphanage clear of indebtedness and to meet promptly its bills and obligations.

No orphanage has a more capable, competent and consecrated superintendent and leader than has our own in the person of Bro. C. D. Johnston. He is a father, indeed, to the children committed to his care, and he has proven himself a most capable executive and a most economic and careful administrator of funds and children committed to his hands. We have every inducement, therefore, to evoke from us a liberal offering on Thanksgiving, knowing full well that the offering thus made will be invested most efficiently in and made herself world-famous by her care of the human character and in the care of those who, by no fault of their own, are incapable of caring for themselves.

A great responsibility and a great opportunity, therefore, confronts us at this Thanksgiving season, and the editor of THE SUN but voices the spirit of the entire Church in expressing the desire and expectation that our people, in rendering thanks to God with word of mouth and devotion of heart, shall express and emphasize that need of thanks and gratitude by and through a liberal and adequate offering of their substance for this most worthy and meritorious institution.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

The season again approaches when it has been the custom for generations to set apart a Day of Thanksgiving for the blessings which the Giver of all good and perfect gifts has bestowed upon us during the year. It is most becoming that we should do this, for the goodness and mercy of God which have followed us through the year deserve our grateful recognition and acknowledgment. Through His divine favor, peace and tranquility have reigned throughout the land. He has protected our country as a whole against pestilence and disease and has directed us in the ways of national prosperity. Our fields have been abundantly productive; our industries have flourished; our commerce has increased, wages have been lucrative, and comfort and contentment have followed the undisturbed pursuit of honest toil. As we have prospered in material things, so have we also grown and expanded in things spiritual. Through divine inspiration we have enlarged our charities and our missions; we have been imbued with high ideals which have operated for the benefit of the world and the promotion of the brotherhood of man through peace and good will.

Wherefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States, do hereby set apart Thursday, the 29th day of November next, as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer, and I recommend that on that day the people shall cease from their daily work and in their homes and in their accustomed places of worship devoutly give thanks to the Almighty for the many and great blessings they have received and seek His guidance, that they may deserve a continuance of His favor.

In witness whereof, I hereunto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of the United States.

Done at the city of Washington, this 23rd day of October, in the year of our Lord 1928, and of the independence of the United States the 153rd.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE.

There was held in the Suffolk, Va., Christian Church, on the evening of November 9, 1928, a most inspiring and thrilling missionary conference. It marked an era in our mission work and more than measured up to all that its sponsors had expected. It was the first meeting of our young people in a distinctively missionary conference. It was sponsored by the Woman's Missionary Conference of Eastern Virginia, and the officers of that conference presided and directed this conference. There were five hundred or more young people present, it was estimated, and they were an intelligent, eager, interesting group. They had set as their goal the past year $1,475. They actually raised and sent to the treasurer, Mrs. W. V. Leathers, $1,776.14. There are now twenty-two Young People's Societies in the Conference, with a combined membership of 500. So these young people had contributed over $3 per capita for missions the past year. Then there are eighteen Willing Workers' Societies in the Conference, with a total membership of 254, and they had raised the past year $630.60. That, we think, is a fine showing. Yet many would have one thing that the youths of our time are not interested in as serious a subject as missions. And they were all well represented in the conference at Suffolk Friday night.

The theme of the conference was "The Challenge of Christ to the Young People." The opening prayer was by Dr. L. E. Smith, of Norfolk. Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West delivered a most timely and informing address of welcome. It was a beautiful and inspiring sight to witness the group of delegates from each society arise quietly as the secretary called the roll. Some societies had scores of representatives and were cheered.

Mrs. R. T. Bradford, superintendent of young people's work, made a report which, by request, is being printed in THE SUN. Rev. J. W. Fix, of Franklin, in well-chosen words, presented the banner of the year to the Waverly Society, which society of ten members had sent in $120.

Dr. Donald W. Richardson, Richmond, Va., a returned missionary of the Presbyterian Church, delivered a very vivid address, revealing the conditions of the Church in China and the tragedies of the anti-missionary uprising in China last year. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of the Church, conducted a very appropriate devotional service, and J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, delivered a brief address on the "Romance of Righteousness." The young people of Franklin, Va., put on a thrilling and moving pageant, "America's Call to Service." Mrs. M. L. Bryant, who presided, was highly gratified at the attendance and the showing of our first young people's missionary conference, and well she may be, for it was good and great.

NURSES AND HOSPITALS.

At the end of the fourth century, when the temples of Aesculapius, Hygeia and Serapis were closed, the sick poor were turned adrift in a world without charity.

Christian monasteries and temples were opened to them, and orders sprang up to provide for the sick. The care of the helpless has always been assumed by the people of God.

The eleventh century saw the beginning of hospitals, and they were rendered more necessary by the crusades; and, on account of the death of physicians, women assisted in hospital work. From that period until the present time, women have rendered invaluable service in the care of sick, and this service is increasing all the time.

In the twelfth century, St. Hildegard, abbess of Rupertsburg, organized a school for training nurses for service in hospitals. From this school grew the modern training of nurses for three lines of service: (1) charitable hospital work; (2) charitable service for poor sick in their homes; (3) paid service for the rich sick or such as could afford to pay for service.

In 1840, Mrs. Fry's Nursing Sisters cared for outcasts in London, England; and in 1853 Florence Nightingale, born in Florence, of English parents, returned to England, after an inspection of hospitals all over Europe, and gave great impetus to training of nurses; and during the Crimean War she went out with thirty-four nurses sick and wounded soldiers in that war of 1854-1855.

At the close of the Crimean War she gave 50,000 pounds to found the Nightingale Home at St. Thomas Hospital for the training of nurses. She was often consulted during the Civil War and the Franco-Prussian War on camp hospitals. Bellevue Training School for Nurses was founded in New York City and graduated its first class in 1872—fifty-six years ago. Training schools are now conducted in most of the large cities of the United States, and in most large hospitals. The time required for graduation is one year, two years, and, in Philadelphia and New York, three years.

The nursing army of the world is in contrast with the fighting army of the world. This army of women is an army of peace and sympathetic help, while the other is the army of war and death. Love has produced this vast army of nurses; hate the greater army of soldiers. The increasing sympathy of mankind for the afflicted and the helpless will produce peace. War is to vanish in the course of years, when woman comes more and more into active service in all the spheres of human life. Doctors and nurses fill a place of high service in the world and millions on sick beds understand what kind treatment means. That white-robed army of girls and women that watched through long, dark nights and long, bright days will receive their reward. They are saving and blessing millions of lives, while soldiers on the field of battle fill vast cemeteries with the dead. God is calling young girls into this great field of service, and He will crown them some day with crowns of gold.

WESTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

This body met in its fifty-eighth annual session on Wednesday, November 7th, at Pleasant Ridge Church, near Ramseur. Rev. J. M. Allred, one of the beloved of the Conference, conducted the devotional in such manner of reverence and worship that it prepared the Conference for the serious work of the day.

The program of the morning was filled with routine business, appointments and reports of special committees until 11:30, and the hour had arrived for the Conference sermon. This was preached by Rev. J. Lee Johnson, who brought a real message from the Word of God to the hearts of his hearers. The preacher, basing his remarks on Ephesians, 1:17-20, showed what he conceived to be the real purpose of the Church. In order to do this, the history and life of the Church was contrasted with the history and life of Israel. The hope of Israel, as expressed again and again in the Bible, is an earthly hope. The hope of the Church, equally emphasized and as frequently expressed, is heavenly. Inheritance, in the Bible, is not of succession but of possession. Instead of our inheriting Christ, Christ's inheritance is in us, as is taught in the eighteenth verse of the first chapter of Ephesians. Here the hope of Christ's calling is spoken of and the riches of His glory through inheritance in the saints. This Scripture shows God's manifestation of His own power toward us who believe. And this mighty power of God is manifest, not in the creation of worlds, nor in the strength of man, but in the raising of His Son our Lord from the dead and in setting Him at His own right hand in the heavenly place. This is the standard of God's power in the New Testament. In the Old Testament the standard of His power was that of serving and protecting and defending Israel, His chosen people, against earthly foes that they might have an earthly career and render an earthly service, and, as a chosen people, manifest on earth the power of God. In the New Testament we have this power manifest not in earthly things, but in the heavenly things, in the raising of Christ from the dead and, through Him, to whom was given all power, of building a Church that was to be blameless and spotless which indeed was to be His very body and bride. This objective was not earthly, but heavenly. This was and is the hope of His calling—that is, the hope of the calling of the Christ is the Church of the living God, in contrast with the calling of Israel whose hope was earthly and an earthly career. Israel was called that all the families of the earth might be blessed. God in raising Jesus from the dead, and, through Him and the power of His resurrection, in building a Church, is creating a heavenly family, a family whose citizenship is in heaven and whose Head is seated at the right hand of God in glory. God in choosing Israel was to do an earthly thing.

pressed all present with the power of his own personality as he laid upon the minds and hearts of his hearers a convincing message and plea for Christian union. On this topic, Dr. Kirby speaks with a passionate zeal and a fervor begotten of deep conviction. Dr. Kirby was reared in the Christian Church and spent his earliest ministry therein, later going with the Congregationalists, and now bringing together in himself and his career the spirit of co-operation, fellowship and union, so manifest everywhere both in the Congregational and Christian Churches. The sin of the Churches, according to Dr. Kirby, is the sin of separation and sectarianism which prevents the answer of our Lord's Prayer that "they all might be one in Him even as He and the Father are one."

At the evening session, Rev. T. E. White, the

ORPHANAGE BUILDING

God in choosing the Church was to do a heavenly thing. God in building a Church through Christ was lifting the eyes of the saints to the heavenly things; and the Church was chosen before the foundation of the world, that it might be holy and without blame to Him in love. Israel was called from the foundation of the world; the Church was called from before the foundation of the world. The conferences in the Old Testament show that show that God chose the Church from before the foundation; but the references in the New Testament show that God chose the Church from before the foundation, and, through the Church, He chose His saints who have been redeemed and are being redeemed by the power manifested in the resurrection of His only begotten Son.

We are writing of this discourse more than a week after its delivery and from memory, but the argument and presentation followed the Scripture very closely and was so logically thought out and lucidly presented that one who heard the discourse would never get away from it. It was indeed a real sermon preached from the Book of God.

In the afternoon, Rev. G. R. Underwood, a father in Israel of the Conference, made the report on religious literature and urged the people to patronize our own publishing house and to read THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Bro. I. H. Foust, of Ramseur, brought in the report on Sunday Schools, and Bro. M. C. Stafford, of Burlington, made the report on Christian Endeavor, and thus brought to the attention of the Conference the great work these auxiliaries of the Church are undertaking. Bro. C. D. Johnston, superintendent of the Orphanage, laid before the Conference the work of the Orphanage—that institution which is near and dear to the heart of the Church. Rev. J. Edward Kirby, D. D., of Raleigh, addressed the Conference on "Christian Union." This was Dr. Kirby's first appearance before this Conference, and he im-education, and also that on Christian union, and President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, delivered a very forceful and powerful address on "The Christian College and Its Work."

On the second day, Rev. J. U. Fogleman presented the report on social service; Rev. T. J. Green that on home missions, and Mrs. I. H. Foust made a report on the woman's work of the Conference, and Mrs. W. R. Sellars on the woman's work of all three Christian Conferences in this State. These Good women pled with their sisters in service for co-operation in the great work that the women are trying to do, and urged the women present who did not have missionary societies to organize societies in their own Church. Rev. E. C. Brady, chairman, presented the report on foreign missions, which showed the great need of funds to carry on our present work in foreign fields, and also urged the Churches of the Conference to adopt some plan and put the same into immediate execution of raising for missions the present year one-third as much as they pay their pastor. The Mission Secretary spoke on "Missions, the Heart of the Church and of the Bible." An ordaining presbytery ordained in a very impressive service Rev. H. V. Cox as an elder.

In the afternoon of the second day the devotional services were conducted by Bro. D. R. Moffitt, and Rev. John M. Allred made the report on evangelism. The remainder of the afternoon was filled with routine business, and a great Conference came to a close with a period of real worship and fellowship.

Dr. G. O. Lankford is president of the Conference, Rev. T. E. White is vice-president, Bro. J. H. Harden is secretary, and Bro. M. C. Stafford assistant secretary, and Bro. O. D. Lawrence is treasurer. These officers were re-elected for the ensuing year. The Conference was royally entertained by the Church and community. J. O. A.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The program of the rally service of the Young People's Missionary Societies of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, held in the Suffolk Christian Church at night on November 9, 1928, was carried out in a very impressive manner. The attendance was five hundred, the program was religious, instructive, and ended with a climax that pleased all. The theme of the program was "The Challenge of Christ to the Young People." Mrs. M. L. Bryant, president, presided and made the announcements. "The Son of God Goes Forth to War" was sung; Dr. L. E. Smith made the opening prayer; Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West delivered the address of welcome; the roll of the societies from the Church was called and the delegates recognized by rising to their feet.

Treasurer Mrs. W. V. Leathers made her report; Mrs. Russell Bradford, the young people's superintendent, made her report, which was read by Mrs. I. W. Johnson; a letter from Porto Rico was read; and Rev. J. W. Fix, the Franklin pastor, delivered the banner to the Waverly society.

The hymn, "Saviour, Like a Shepherd, Lead Us," was sung, after which Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of the Suffolk Church, conducted an impressive devotional service.

Rev. Dr. Donald W. Richardson, a teacher of missions in Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va., and who spent eighteen years in the same work in China as a Presbyterian missionary, delivered a very illuminating address on China. His portrayal of conditions in China and the trials of missionaries and the success of the gospel in that land held the attention of the audience in both mind and heart. Mrs. Telza Miller sang a solo, which all enjoyed.

The closing address was delivered by Dr. J. O. Atkinson with more than his usual interesting and instructive appeal to the audience. His profound way of thinking and his enthusiastic manner of delivery impresses the souls of the audience with a conscious sense of personal obligation to the cause of missions; and he was trying to help the young people to understand that the greatest thrill is found in the performance of religious tasks at home and abroad. The three hours of the meeting did not chill the interest nor reduce the attention of the congregation.

The closing number was a pageant, "America's Call to Service," by the Young People's Society of Franklin, Va. This was well presented, carried a good lesson, and was greatly enjoyed. Such portrayals of religious lessons by young people, and such interest on their part show the increasing interest of young people in Christian missions and Christian character. "O Zion, Haste" was sung, and Dr. I. W. Johnson offered the closing prayer.

A meeting of five hundred, mostly young people, in a three-hour meeting, and many of them twenty and forty miles from home, is a prophecy of what the Church may become in the near future. Christianity is not dying. The people are not losing interest in Christ and the Church. The Church is not on a toboggan-slide downward, but on a road upward, with willing hearts to climb to heights crowned with the blessings of God. All young people need is the example of mature Christians in right living, the encouragement and help they can give, and the creation of a religious atmosphere that is better and sweeter than the ways of the world. The Sunday School and Young People's Societies are the training-ground for the young in the "paths that lead to God."

Jesus said: "Follow me." Parents should follow Jesus and their children will go with them.

ELON LETTER.

The Christian Orphanage began in 1905, and is now twenty-three years of age. When I was a small child I began writing letters to the "Children's Corner" in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and sending 10 cents a month for the "Little Cousins," and many other children did the same thing. The Christian Orphanage exists for children and is really founded on the faith of children. I quote from page 22 of the minutes of the twenty-eighth regular session of the Southern Christian Convention these inspiring words:

"We could turn over the keys of the Christian Orphanage to this Convention as of January 1, 1928, with assets valued at $157,900.83 in real and personal property, with an income in endowment value last year of $75,000 at 4½ per cent. and could have given you a check for cash in the bank at that time for $6,181.06."

This is a marvelous achievement, and is cause for gratitude on the part of each member of the Christian Church. Our Orphanage is supported by free-will gifts from individuals, by monthly contributions through Sunday Schools, and by annual offerings at Thanksgiving in Churches. This is the method that our people have adopted for making contribution to the Orphanage.

It requires $30,000 a year to care for the one hundred and eighteen children in the Orphanage and make necessary improvements. The Duke endowment has listed some twenty-two points of excellence for the conduct of orphanages, and in every one of these except three the Christian Orphanage led. This again is cause for satisfaction on the part of our people. We are proud of the record of our Orphanage and of the superintendent who has made this record in our name.

The Christian Orphanage is asking our Churches to raise $15,000 in the Thanksgiving offering this fall. It does seem that we would wish to express our appreciation to the management of that institution by meeting them fully in their request. It is not unreasonable from a financial standpoint for us to do this, and if we desire to express appreciation for the Orphanage, surely we would not feel that the raising of this amount in our Churches would place too heavy a burden upon us. I hope and pray the Christian Church will raise this $15,000 and gladly raise it as an expression of appreciation for the Orphanage and the administration there.

Dr. W. S. Long was chairman of the committee that located the Orphanage here. I remember that he and the late beloved Willis J. Lee were exceedingly anxious to locate the Orphanage here because it would give the children who would be reared in that institution direct access to the college and encourage them to go forward in their educational preparation. The board of trustees of the college have agreed to give the children in the Christian Orphanage who are prepared to do college work free literary tuition. In the twenty-three years since the Orphanage began, several have registered as students and one young man has graduated. This year a young lady is to graduate. In addition to this, the college maintains a week-day school of religion in its Christian education building, to which the children of the Orphanage from three years old and upward are welcomed as students. No other community in North Carolina offers its children such an opportunity for religious culture in the week as our college offers to the children of our Orphanage through this week-day school of religion.

The attitude of co-operation and appreciation which the college and the Orphanage have for each other is a fine example of brotherhood and fellowship. It is hoped that the offering at Thanksgiving for the Orphanage will be generous, because it is based upon sincere appreciation of the work the Orphanage is doing in our Church and a genuine desire to co-operate with the administration of the Orphanage in its effort to express the good will of our Church to the one hundred and eighteen children who reside there as our wards.

Superintendent Johnston does not need that I should write this Elon Letter in advocacy of the cause of the Christian Orphanage. He is well able to write for himself and does so with splendid appeal. It has, however, given me great pleasure, as I think of the approaching Thanksgiving season, to give expression to my feelings and of my appreciation for the Orphanage in this way. I sincerely trust that every one who may read this item will respond liberally to the appeal of the Orphanage at this Thanksgiving season.

W. A. HARPER.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

An education is the heritage that this generation owes the future generation. Many feel that an education is valuable, yet they do not know exactly why. Because of an education, we really live, understand and appreciate people and things about us. Because of it, we are better equipped to face life's battles and win that success for which we strive.

Statistics carefully compiled by former United States Commissioner of Education Dr. W. T. Harris show that of ten thousand men who have risen to prominence in the United States in the first hundred years of our history, not more than thirty were self-taught men; that a boy with only a grammar school education had one chance in nine thousand of reaching distinction. Dr. Harris says, "A boy with a high school training has one chance in four hundred; that is, he has twenty-two times the opportunity of the boy who stopped at the end of the eighth grade." Dr. Harris further says, "It is unnecessary to extend this inquiry to women. Education is practically her only door to eminence."

The investigations of the First Industrial Commission of Massachusetts show that neither power nor advantage is gained by entering an industry at an early age, and that the child who thus goes to work for wages closes behind him the door to a living wage later. Two boys leave school, one at the end of the eighth grade, the other after graduating from high school. Statistics show that at twenty-five years of age the high school graduate has earned, on an average, five hundred dollars more than the other man. From then on, his earning power is much greater. Statisticians have figured that each day in high school is worth ten dollars to the pupil. This is only a small part of the real benefit of a high school education, and this same benefit and efficiency to serve increases proportionately as we pursue our studies on the plane of higher education in our higher educational institutions. Education increases the opportunities for greater success, for higher enjoyment and for richer, fuller life. Without an education, life may be one of drudgery, without much compensation; a life of only limited enjoyment of the best in the home, in business, in literature, and art; a life shorn of its greatest usefulness and influence among his neighbors and friends; a life of only limited opportunities and a variety of service.

OFFERING FOR OUR ORPHANAGE.

Our Thanksgiving season will soon be here, and proclamations from our President and Governors will be issued in every section of the country, that the American people may not forget God's goodness and mercy and the bountiful provision He has made for them during the past year. And while we are in the midst of this gracious Thanksgiving period, we should ask ourselves what the real duties are that we owe to one another in this life. As we contemplate this question, our minds wander in different channels of thought, so as our minds are drifting, suddenly there comes a halt and we are reminded of a section of our country, in the State of North Carolina, where there is a great need, the character of which should appeal to every member of the Christian Church, South. And that need is the welfare of our Orphanage at Elon College, N. C.

Dr. Johnston, our superintendent, has told us that there are 117 little mouths to feed, little backs to clothe, little feet to shoe, little minds to cultivate and train, and little physical natures to protect against distress and disease, and all of this must be done by means coming from us, members of the Christian Church in the Southland. Dr. Johnston's desired goal for this year is the same as last year—$30,000. For the past ten months only a little over one-half of this has been raised. He will soon make his appeal to us for the Thanksgiving offering, hoping it may so awaken, arouse and impress us that we will come willingly and gladly to his rescue.

Friends, brethren and sisters in the Lord, think of it—$30,000 is just $265 per child for a year in that institution. Out of this amount must come their food, clothes, nurse and doctors' care, books and school training, matrons and teachers' tuition, the superintendent and his family's support, besides the upkeep of the institution and its surroundings. How do you expect so much to be done with so little per capita? Yet Bro. Johnston, through his wisdom in knowing how to control, manage and economize, has wonderfully succeeded thus far.

So I am appealing to every Church in the Southern Christian Convention to so expand your minds, open your hearts, loosen your purse strings and come forward nobly, graciously, gladly, willingly and determinedly to make this the greatest, most worthy offering that has ever been made for the Orphanage. Finally, please, dear workers with me in the Lord's service, don't pass this appeal by unnoticed, void of meditation; but stop a little while. Suppose it was your child there—how would you feel regarding an offering for such a noble purpose? Would you not wish that it might be very, very large? Well we do; so come along and get in line with us for just once, and make this offering the largest, most pleasing and gratifying that has ever been made.

M. W. HOLLOWELL.

OUR ORPHANAGE.

There are many individuals and institutions that are rendering great service to mankind. The public school renders its service of providing budding citizens with mental training and manual skill. The public utilities and the merchants supply gas, power, light, food, clothing. The Church, chant, or the schools, but we pay for value received.

This Orphanage is our Orphanage. Mr. Johnston and his staff of helpers are doing our work. November and December are the months designated by the Southern Christian Convention for paying toward this work. I say "toward," for we can never pay in full; for who can estimate the value of this noble task in the building of human character?

So, as we enter into this month of thanksgiving, let us not only pay for our worldly goods, but let us be thankful for the institution, and appreciative of the man who is giving the best of his life in service for our Orphanage.

MRS. J. W. BARNEY.

OUR ORPHANAGE AND THANKSGIVING.

The time for our annual giving of thanks and thanksgiving is almost here. Our hearts thrill with the great spirit of gratitude at this time, and we think not only of saying "Thank you," but also of bringing an offering with which to more fully express our thought and feeling of gratefulness.

We of the Christian Church and other friends of the Christian Orphanage at Elon College have a great opportunity of expressing our gratefulness by making this year our very best Thanksgiving offering. The Orphanage needs it, and must have it, and I want us to make this offering this year as large as we possibly can.

We should make this offering as large as possible, in the first place, because of the blessing it will bring to us. I think the children at the Orphanage are possibly a greater blessing to us than we are to them. It was after Enoch had looked into the eyes of his baby that he walked with God those three hundred years. Just so, our children become great blessings to us, and for this reason let's make the Thanksgiving offering to the Orphanage large.

Then, because the offering will help them, we

JOHNSTON HALL

There is another institution, among others, that is rendering a great service to us, or for us, and that is the Orphanage. We may not have thought of the Orphanage as rendering us service, but let us consider it a little from that viewpoint and see how it works. The Bible states that one of the requirements of pure religion is to visit (minister unto) the widow and the fatherless. This, then, is a duty that we, as Christians, should perform, and if it is not expedient for us personally to do this, then the person or institution that does minister unto the fatherless is surely performing service for us. And we should pay for service rendered. We would not think of saying that we give our money to the public utilities, or the merwant to make it. The Orphanage cannot go on without the offering, but we will get on better because we give it.

Then, too, we ought to make this offering, and make it as large as possible, because it is the Father's will for us to do it. So let's go, all together, for the greatest Thanksgiving offering to our Orphanage we have ever made.

Gratefully,

J. F. MORGAN.

A DAY OF RENEWAL.

A quiet mind on a peaceful Sabbath yields to one an inestimable benefit. By it the body is given rest and renewal, the spiritual person is made strong, and life is put in tune. How vastly different from hurrying forth in swift conveyances to the excitements of crowds is the calm repose of the soul in the midst of the sweet hush of God's day!

To him who has learned the language of the Sabbath, no other kind of speech can equal it. The very silences utter messages which no articulation can convey. One returns to the primary passions of his being and realizes he is a "trailing cloud of glory" moving awhile in an earthly order and returning swiftly home to the bosom of the eternal. Prayer and sacred song spring up in the heart, even though they may not pass the lips. The fellowship of the family and of the congregation then means more than any other human companionship, and when transfused with the Spirit of God it has the nature of the communion of saints. Earth is joined to heaven and horizons lengthen their curves to the infinite.

One is induced to reflections like these when he sits at his window on Sunday morning and sees the speeding automobiles noisily rushing forth with their loads of merry-makers hungrily searching for satisfaction and knowing not where to find it. At baseball parks, at crowded resorts, in the confusion and jargon of aimless multitude they hope to find some morsel for their restless natures. When the day is gone they discover that they have found only vanity and much vexation. Their pleasures have become ashes and the new week must be entered with an impaired vitality. The nerves still gnaw, and the bow of promise is pale in the skies. There is no undergirding of an everlasting arm, no soothing of the loving Father. The Sabbath has been misspent.

The case of the composed worshiper is altogether different. The conversations in the home and the services at the Church have quieted his inner turbulences. He is stronger for temptation and for duty. He has spent the day in kindly thoughts toward his neighbor and has learned the happiness of forgiving and being forgiven. Charity has taken hold on him. Rather than scuffle for position in a jam of selfish pleasure-seekers, he has preferred to visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction and to manifest the character of his Master. Heaven has come near, and its beauty will not wholly disappear from the busy days of the week to follow.—Christian Advocate.

All funds have been given cheerfully and the receipts represent absolutely free-will donations. We have not sold one penny's worth of anything, have not given any paid shows or pageants, and have not had to beg or plead with any member or friend for money. No dues, no assessments, no pledges, no compulsion or pressure in any shape or form has been brought to bear in any way toward the raising of the above amounts. We have simply outlined what we wanted to do along certain lines, have tried to do and give everything for the sole aim of glorifying God and relieving the distressed, and the report speaks for itself. The treasurer praises God for this example of Christian generosity on the part of our members and friends of the society, and asks your prayers for divine guidance, that he may always be found faithful in his stewardship of the affairs of the society and in the administration of funds entrusted to him for the glorifying of God and the exalting of Christ. May He open unto us new and broader fields of service for this coming year.

Respectfully submitted,

THE POWER OF THOUGHT.

The one distinguishing feature between man and the lower animals is thought. Animals cannot be educated because they cannot think. Animals can only be trained. Man can be educated because he has the power of thought. To be educated, one must do some thinking. The power of thought is the greatest gift from God to man. Animals are denied this blessing, therefore "God has given man dominion over the works of His hands."

It is the power of thought that causes man to rejoice in the full salvation of a living Saviour and the beauty of holiness. Each of the human senses is a great gift, and many people see, hear, feel, smell and taste and do not use the gift of thought. But just think of those who are so unfortunate that they do not have the power of thought. Can you conceive of a more pitiable condition? We often come in contact with men who are afflicted and are wholly dependent upon others from a physical standpoint, yet they can see more of the real beauties of this world than many of us who are physically independent. Why? Because they have the power of thought. They see the real beauties of life, such as virtue, intelligence, honesty, friendliness and, greatest of all, character.

It is the power of evil thought that causes man to hate his brother, lie, steal, rob and plunder, and even take the life of his fellow-man, and last of all the remorse of conscience that often causes man to take his own life.

How great is the power of thought? Of the millions of men now living, there are only a few real thinkers. Men had seen apples fall to the ground through many centuries, but only Newton thought out the law of gravitation. Men had seen the heavens lit up with electricity ever since man had his being on the earth, but it took a Franklin, a Morse, an Edison and others to harness it for a blessing to man.

All men everywhere today enjoy the blessings of a Heavenly Father, yet how few think of the source of their blessings.

Let me repeat, the power of thought is the greatest gift God has ever bestowed upon man, but how few use that gift for the glory of the Giver? We think about our own affairs and how we may succeed financially, but what about the success of the greatest thing on earth—the kingdom?

G. H. VEAZEY.

WISDOM OF AGE.

In these modern times, old age is regarded by some as evidence of decay, mental and physical disintegration, and general uselessness. This assumption is prompted by various pronouncements of the youthful intelligentsia who deprecate "old-fogey" tendencies and protest against the staid conventionalities that appear to go hand in hand with men and women of mature years.

An educator of comparatively youthful mien was accorded goodly space in the press in which to render the opinion that teachers upon reaching the age of forty-five years were unfit to remain in their honored profession, by reason of the fact that they could no longer sympathetically understand youth, and consequently could not adjust themselves to the situation of giving competent instruction.

Of course, it must be conceded that this gentleman's direct contact with a representative university lends his expressed opinion no little weight. He most likely has first-hand information on the subject. He is familiar with the likes and dislikes of the students, their mental attitudes toward teachers and professors, hence it is felt that this educator was entirely correct—from the standpoint of youth itself.

It is to be regretted, however, that mature teachers—those past forty-five—who have given years of consecrated effort and devotion to the teaching of their youthful charges should be so lightly disposed of on the grounds of inability, especially in view of the fact that these same years which have left their indelible marks of gray hair and wrinkles have likewise brought a rich measure of experience and ever-increasing knowledge.

Suppose the young educator's opinion should achieve such weight and authority that it would result in the enactment of an ordinance prohibiting a teacher over the age of forty-five from continuing in the profession. A vast number of men and women whose life earnings had indeed been meager would be cast out into a cold world or retired on a pittance at the very height of their ability, and would be supplanted by a number of mere girls and boys whose academic ability counted not so much as their sympathetic "understanding" of juvenile problems.

If one may judge by the types of young men and women encountered in the class-rooms of the modern school and college one may see imperative need for the kindly and restraining influence of instructors who have passed the age of frivolity, and whose mature reasoning and competent teaching go a long way to curb the irresponsibilities that beset the youth of today.

"Old-fashioned" is a common and well-worn expression. In fact, it runs a close second to that other reliable standby, "tolerance," which figures so prominently in today's conversations. The former term, however, is employed usually in a disrespectful, somewhat superior sense, a rebuke as it were. The modernistic interpretations of this term are varied, if not unique.

It is astonishing, however, to note that many, if not a majority of "old-fashioned" people have the happy faculty of experiencing the real pleasures of life. They are content to go at a modest pace and have little desire for "thrills" or "speed."

Just recently a Boyish inmate of a California prison paid the extreme penalty for taking a human life. This chap would have deeply resented being termed "old-fashioned." If anything, he proved the other extreme. But why single him out from the young men and women, boys and girls, who are so generously represented in the realm of lawlessness today? Some of those who have received the sentence of death have been so young in years that a humane citizenry has balked at the thought of taking their lives—even though the courts have rendered the only verdict that they, in justice, could. Something is wrong in the scheme of civilization when youth, like Macbeth's ambition, "o'erleaps itself." A remedy should be sought and that remedy, apparently, must come from age and competent experience.

Continuing the thought of age being a barrier, as expressed by the educator, how many mere youths are to be found occupying the really important positions, national, State, civic and private, today? There are, it is true, many exceptionally bright young men and women who are capably holding down positions of trust, but we are speaking in a general way.

How many young men have served as president of this great republic? Or as justices of the Federal Supreme Court? Or in the national Congress? Mature years may not, after all, be considered an impediment on the highway of success.

Consider the Greek philosophers, recall those venerable characters in Holy Writ whose sound judgment was respectfully sought by the aspiring youth. Consider those wise and kindly Jewish patriarchs that could always be counted upon to dispense helpful advice and good counsel from their rich store of wisdom.

Youth is a beautiful period of life, there is such a sense of freedom from bodily ills, mental responsibilities; the cares and toil of life have but lightly touched the brow of the boy and girl; the future is rose-hued. Life—that great, fascinating experience—is ahead; ambitions are to be realized; love, happiness and success are in the offing.

But the youth of both sexes may, with profit, sit at the feet of the venerable man and carefully heed the invaluable advice to be gained. Here is one who has drained the cup of earthly experience, who has fought the great battle and bears the scars of conflict. And what does age teach?

Perhaps some things will be learned that are not exactly pleasant. One may suffer disappointments and may almost regret that he sought the counsel of age. But what he learns will prove very helpful. The teacher, a pioneer, has charted the voyage of life. He knows where the shoals and reefs are to be encountered. By bitter experience he has navigated the difficult passage and is competent to guide the hands of the young helmsman through the tricky currents and away from hidden derelicts and rocks.

With all due respect for tender years, it seems that it is not so necessary for age to "understand" and "adjust" itself to youth, but rather that a transposition of this form would not be amiss. Let youth seek the counsel of age. It is not a misdemeanor to be "old-fashioned," to fail to appreciate just why "youth must be served," or why the boys and girls of this "advanced" age should, without limitation and restriction, experience every frivolous pleasure that a gay world may offer.

Approaching the complex issues of life, let youth draw near to the venerable philosopher and, in respectful silence, listen attentively while age speaks.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson IX—December 2, 1928.

PAUL BEFORE HIS JUDGES.

GOLDEN TEXT: "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision."—Acts 26:19.

LESSON: Acts 24:1-26:32.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 25:1-6.

THE BACKGROUND OF THIS LESSON.

Paul was in Caesarea, whither he had been taken from Jerusalem for safe-keeping from the Jews who had made a determined effort to assassinate him. His accusers, led by Ananias the high priest, came down to prefer charges against him. Through Tertullus, a glib-tongued orator, they accused him on three charges: inciting disturbances among the Jews, which was an offense against the Roman law; being a leader of the sect of the Nazarenes, which was an offense against the Mosaic law; and defiling the temple, which was an offense against both the Roman and the Mosaic law. The blood-thirsty Jews noisily and emphatically endorsed all that their paid spokesman had said. They pressed for an immediate verdict.

Felix, with a sense of Roman justice, gave Paul a hearing. Paul immediately and emphatically denied the charges, and in a very calm and clear way showed how flimsy and how false they were. He so impressed Felix, who knew the general facts about Christianity—he referred to it as "that way"—that he dismissed the Jews, and said that he would have to know more of the matter before he could make a decision. He did not release Paul outright, but he did commit him to a centurion with orders to give him restricted liberty and to allow his friends to visit and to minister to him.

PAUL BEFORE FELIX.

Moved perhaps by curiosity, Felix, who was accompanied by his wife, Drusilla, who was a Jewess, sent for Paul "and heard him concerning the faith in Christ." It might be a wholesome thing if every Christian were examined once in a while concerning the faith in Christ. Alas! there are so many who have no vital faith in Christ. What was once a living experience and a vital faith has become an unreality and a mere formal and hence dead creed. As individuals, we ought to check up on our lives in their relation to Christ occasionally.

"And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance (or self-control), and judgment to come, Felix trembled. Righteousness, uprightness, godliness, integrity—what a theme for a sermon to Felix, who so history records thought he could do anything he pleased and do it with impunity! Self-control, temperance, self-discipline—how personal that became to Felix, who had a woman who was another man's wife! Judgment to come, a day of reckoning—no wonder Felix trembled, for he had murdered Jonathan, the high priest, and had committed many other sins, and if there were to be judgment to come he had good reason to fear it. There is still a place for preaching on these great themes. Our modern age needs to have the great themes of right living, of self-discipline, and of judgment to come presented in a plain way again and again. Sunday School officers and teachers need not fear to embody it in their teaching. Our young people need to have these truths preached in love.

"Go thy way for this time; and when I have a more convenient season I will call thee unto me." There is an old saying to the effect that "the streets of hell are paved with good intentions." Using that figure of speech, one might say that the idea expressed in Felix's words is one of the most widely used materials in the street-paving projects of the lower regions. More men will miss heaven because they waited "for a more convenient season" than for any other reason. "Behold, now is the accepted time." In the light of the indisputable statistics which show that only a very, very small percentage of those who become Christians ever become Christians after they are twenty-five years of age, it behooves every minister and Sunday School teacher and Christian worker to win boys and girls and young people definitely to Christ in this "more convenient season."

PAUL BEFORE AGRIPPA.

When Paul appealed unto Caesar, Festus had to give him the right to go before Caesar. But he wanted to send along specific charges against Paul to Caesar. He, therefore, invited King Agrippa to hear Paul. The twenty-sixth chapter of Acts contains Paul's stirring account of his early life, his conversion, and his ministry. It is said that this is one of the twenty-six chapters of the Bible, which Ruskin's mother had him commit to memory. If it is worth committing to memory, it certainly is worth careful reading. Get out your Bible and read it in connection with this lesson.

"I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." Paul had seen Christ. There had opened up to him a new vocation. There was but one thing to do—follow the vision. You can account for all that Paul was and all that he did as a Christian in those few words—he followed his vision. That is the secret of successful men. They have a vision of things as they ought to be, and then they set about to realize that vision. Every young person should have ideals; they should follow the gleam. Above all else, we should keep before us Christ and be obedient to the heavenly vision of manhood and womanhood He has given.

"Having, therefore, obtained help from God." Paul once wrote, "By the grace of God, I am what I am." Let no man boast of himself, but let him realize that all that we have and are, we have and are because we have obtained help from God. Let us have both a sense of gratitude and a due sense of humility.

"And Paul said, 'I would God that not thou only, but also all that hear me this day, might become as I am, except these bonds.'" Mr. Reader, can you say that? Is Christianity so rich for your life that you not only do not envy any other man his possessions or his power, but that you actually wish that he had the same thing you had?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, December 2, 1928.

TOPIC: "What is Our Reasonable Service?"—Rom. 12:1-2. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

What is our reasonable service is not for us to say, but for Christ to say. Ours to accept His will (v. 1).

God asks us to live for Him rather than die for Him. "A living sacrifice," life, health, strength, ability (v. 1).

To be of use to God we must have our mind renewed. The old, sinful mind, full of selfishness, is worthless to God (v. 2).

Just as we are transformed are we able to understand what God's will for us is. Let us seek transformation (v. 2).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The Christian Endeavor pledge outlines what we must admit is a very reasonable service. What is the use of being Christians at all if we deny Him service?

What is reasonable for one may be unreasonable for another. Each tub must stand on its own bottom. What is reasonable for each depends on gifts and opportunity.

Christ, who redeemed us, has a right to our service. "Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price." If we realize what this means we shall dedicate all to Him.

Christ's service calls out the best that is in us, as selfishness calls out the worst. Doing God's will makes true manhood.

A Few Illustrations.

To be a servant of God is honorable. The head of the British cabinet is called the prime minister. He ministers to the king. So do we.

The soldier's prime virtue is obedience. "His not to reason why." When Christ calls, He calls us to do what we can do and what He will help us to do.

As we pass on to other sufferers the knowledge of a medicine that has cured us, so must we bring to others the gospel that has saved us. Is not that reasonable?

God can so easily magnify our service. Ananias was a common man, "a certain disciple" (Acts 9:10-20), but God used him to bring Paul into the light. We can always do what God wants us to do.

To Think About.

What excuses do people find for not working for Christ?

How does Christian Endeavor help us to serve Christ?

What is one hindrance in the way of Christian service?

BEREA NEWS.

This year has been a splendid one for old Berea Church. Services which are held every Sunday afternoon have been fairly well attended, and the interest is good. Eight new members were received into the Church during the year, and the Conference apportionments were sent to Conference; $50 was raised for the Harvard fund, and special offerings were taken for the other calls from the Church at large.

Locally, the Church has also done good work. The Church has been painted on the outside, and the Sunday School has done the painting and beautifying on the inside. Chairs and furniture have been made more attractive by the brush of paint, and other work is to be done later.

Those deserving special mention for good work done along the painting line are Mr. F. N. Hall and Mr. E. J. Hall, the special committee that was appointed by the official board for directing the work. These two workers were ably assisted by the other members of the Church.

The Sunday School, under the direction of Superintendent C. M. Curling and his corps of teachers, is doing great work, and this is much appreciated by the whole Church.

The Church enjoyed a good evangelistic meeting in October, in which the pastor was ably assisted by the Rev. T. N. Lowe, of the Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth.

The Ladies' Aid Society, under the leadership of its president, Mrs. F. N. Hall, and the Missionary Society, led by Miss Betts Whitehurst, are both doing very commendable work.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

OUR ATTITUDE.

"Give thanks unto the Lord, call upon His name, make known His deeds among the people."—1 Chron. 16:8.

"In everything give thanks, for this is the will of God in Jesus Christ."—1 Thess. 5:18.

Much of the past year has been significantly from the hand of God. He who sees the spiritual order of things and recognizes in them the hand of God and the sublime chances of spiritual growth, does not need a special season of thanksgiving, for he thanks God daily. But, nevertheless, special thanksgiving is necessary, for all need to be reminded of what we have received.

We need to thank Him for all sweet and pleasant things, for leisure, comfort, health and friends, and most of all for our kinship with Him. Knowing Him as justly doing all things well and that He even makes evils, misfortunes and satanic influences serve Him; knowing His will, by it we can be brought to see the pleasure of His way even in death and give thanks.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, in this week's special provision for our gratitude, give us the profound and sincere soul—thankfulness that knows no bounds. So inspire us that every day may be a thanksgiving day, that Thy thoughts may ever be with us and Thy songs ever in our hearts. Amen.

TUESDAY.

OUR SONG.

"Sing unto the Lord, for He hath done excellent things; this is known in all the earth."—Isa. 12:5.

Lord, in this dust Thy Sovereign voice
First quickened love divine;
I am all Thine, Thy care and choice,
My very praise is Thine.

I praise Thee, while Thy Providence
In childhood frail I trace,
For blessings given, ere dawning sense
Could seek or scan Thy grace.

Blessings in boyhood's marveling hour,
Bright dreams, fancyings strange;
Blessings, when reason's awful power
Gave thought a bolder range.

Blessings of friends which to my door
Unask'd, unhop'd, have come;
And, choicer still, a countless store
Of eager smiles at home.

Yet, Lord, in memories fondest place
I shrine those seasons sad,
When looking up, I saw Thy face
In kind austerity clad.

I would not miss one sigh or tear,
Heart-pang, or throbbing brow;
Sweet was the chastisement severe,
And sweet its memory now.

Yes! let the fragrant scars abide,
Love-tokens in Thy stead,

Faint shadows of the spear-pierced side
And thorn-encompassed head.

And such Thy tender force be still,
When self would swerve or stray,
Shaping to truth the forward will Along Thy narrow way.

Deny me wealth; far, far removed
The lure of power or name;
Hope thrives in straits, in weakness love,
And faith in this world's shame.

—J. H. Newman.

Prayer.—Pray as you feel, some member of the family leading.

WEDNESDAY.

OUR BEAUTIFUL GIVER.

Text: Read Psa. 116.

This song was one of the songs sung by the Jews at their great festivals, especially the Passover. It was the song the Saviour and the disciples sung at the Last Supper. It is a psalm in which one may commune with his soul and acknowledge God as the beautiful Giver of all benefits.

The psalmist was not one to pass through life thoughtlessly, enjoying everything, expecting everything, without bestowing thought and thanks on the giver. On the contrary, he scarcely knew how to express his gratitude. And the constant repetition of blessings, however abundant, dulled the fine edge of his feelings.

Let us contemplate, as in the presence of God, all the benefits we have experienced of His mercies, the pure affection He has inspired, the sins that have been forgiven, the snares we have escaped, the protection we have received.

Let gratitude inspire us with confidence in the future.

Prayer.—O Lord, we do not need to look for Thy proofs of love for us. They are about us like the mighty sea and as glorious as Thy sunshine. We thank Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A PRAYER.

"O God, for my existence, my life, my reason; for nurture, protection, guidance, education, civil rights, religion; for Thy gifts to me of grace, nature, worldly goods, for redemption, regeneration, instruction in truth; for my call, recall, yea many calls all through life; for Thy forbearance, long-suffering towards me, even until now; for all good things received, for all successes granted to me, for all good deeds I have been enabled to do, for my parents' honesty and goodness, for brothers kind, for benefactors never to be forgotten, for religious friends so congenial and so helpful, for bearers thoughtful, for friends true, and sincere servants faithful; for all who have helped me in writings, sermons, conversations, prayers, example, rebukes, even injuries; for kind deeds and strengthening hands; for all these and for all others which I know, and which I know not, open, hidden, remembered or forgotten, Lord I thank Thee. Amen."—Bishop Andrews.

FRIDAY.

MY CONSECRATION.

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord, I will pay my vows unto the Lord."—Psa. 116:12-14.

After all of the best we can do, God's blessings are so many there is little that we can do to express any real thanks. The psalmist feels this and says, "All I can do is take the cup of salvation and seek to link my life to Thee."

This consecration ought to help us. We think at times what we would render the Lord if we had the means to do it with, but we have barely enough to buy food and meet the necessities of our own existence, with this we sit back. We can keep our own house, can't we? Give ourselves to God and then avenues of service will open up. Surrender a trustful heart, an acquiescent will, an obedient life, a whole personality to the power of love. Then common joys become sacraments, and worship, and sorrows the workings of God for good.

Prayer.—Our Father, we accept Thy mercy. Make redeeming love our chiefest treasure. Make our chief endeavor todo Thy will, praying that we be guided ever by Thy grace and shielded ever by Thy protecting care. Amen.

SATURDAY.

OUR NEW ENDEAVOR.

"Were there not ten cleansed, but where are the nine?"—Luke 17:17.

Illness makes men think of God who have never thought of Him before. Ten lepers prayed, "Lord have mercy on me." Their prayer was an act of faith and the Lord accepted it and blessed them. They were healed. They went on and were never heard of, except one who returned and thanked Jesus personally. Jesus noticed the absence of the others.

This story suggests that 90 per cent of those who receive God's benefits are wanting in their gratitude. We are prone that way. We take our blessings for granted and as a matter of course. We accept our good fortunes with joy and use it as a reason to expect more and oftener.

One day in seven is given to the Lord's worship, but not one in ten Christians goes. We are like the lepers. Their faith and their prayers were about their leprosy, and according to their faith so it was unto them. Our faith is lodged more in material things or in our weaknesses, and these having been satisfied the law has been completed. We forget that it was God who did it for us.

Prayer.—Dear Father, enable us to make a new endeavor to acknowledge Thee in all our ways and give thanks. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE UPWARD LOOK.

"Arise and go Thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole."—Luke 17:18.

This is the new blessing Christ gives to him who returned to give thanks and to search out the God in his life. The grateful man received the greatest blessing. The former blessing was a physical one. This is a blessing of the soul. Christ's purpose is in the soul, and unless his physical blessings blossom into spiritual grace, he is troubled. The nine were healed, but they were not "made whole." Only he can be made whole who comes to the circle of divine relationship and acknowledges God as the Giver of health and all good things.

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us where the corn comes from, where help comes from, where healing comes from, and enable us to lift our eyes above and see in every blessing and gift, every incident, a divine influence which inspires to highest good of the soul and endows with spiritual treasures beyond price. Amen.

ATTENTION SECRETARIES.

In the "Ministerial Directory," as published in "The Annual" of the Southern Christian Convention and Conferences, there seem to be some names of persons who have been transferred or withdrawn. It is desirable to have this directory as nearly correct as possible, and in order to get these corrections, secretaries are asked to go over the list and report any entries that should be changed or corrected. Also they are requested to make an accurate list of the names of ministers and licentiates of their Conference and forward with their minutes to the editor of "The Annual."

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage, with its 118 children, appeals to you at this Thanksgiving season to open your hearts in loving sympathy for the fatherless ones, and as the Lord has prospered you, give, so that they may have food to eat and clothes to wear, and a home in which to live. Make your offering liberal. Make it through your Sunday School and Church or send it direct to the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C. Every Church and Sunday School is called upon to join in this offering this year, and we earnestly appeal to you to make your offering as large as possible.

MEMORIAL FOR BARTON W. STONE.

An event of unusual importance took place at Cane Ridge, Bourbon County, Ky., Friday, October 26th, when an interdenominational memorial service was held at the historic old Christian Church and in the Church-yard, in tribute to Barton W. Stone, whose body lies beneath the sod of the old Church-yard, but whose memory will be cherished down the ages as one of the most soul-inspiring ministers of the past. The following program was carried out in connection with the Congregational Conference in session at Berea, which was attended by representatives of the old Christian Church on account of the merger being effected by the two Churches. A number of Disciples of Christ of Paris and Lexington assisted those who desired this fraternal service to be held at the famed Church-house and shrine of the two Christian Churches.

In the Church building two hymns were rendered—"Faith of Our Fathers" and "Coronation"—led by Dr. R. E. Jarman, director of religious education at the Central Christian Convention, Lexington. The invocation was pronounced by Dr. C. L. Pyatt, of Lexington. Dr. Warren H. Denison, General Secretary of the General Christian Convention, of Dayton, Ohio, made a few introductory remarks and read a historical paper on "The Life and Message of Barton W. Stone." Dr. A. M. Fortune, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Lexington, asked the divine blessing, which was followed by an address by Dr. Fred P. Ensminger, secretary of the Kentucky Congregational Conference, on the subject, "The Rock Foundation of the Church." Scripture reading of John 17 was by Hermon Eldredge, Secretary of the Department of Christian Education of the General Christian Convention.

At the stone monument in the Church-yard, tributes in words and by floral offerings were made by the following: for the Disciples of Christ, Dr. William E. Ellis, pastor of the Paris Christian Church; for the Kentucky Christian Conference, Secretary Hermon Eldredge, national Secretary of Christian Education, Dayton, Ohio; for the Congregational Churches: Prof. Charles C. Haun, of Vanderbilt University School of Religion, Nashville, Tenn.; for the General Christian Convention: Secretary Warren H. Denison. Those present then clasped hands in a circle about the monument and sang the old familiar hymn, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." The benediction was then pronounced by the Rev. W. E. Ellis.

Prior to going to Cane Ridge, a brief devotional service was held at the home of Mr. Ellis. Besides the ministers taking part in the ceremonies at the Church, a number of members of the Paris Christian Church attended, among them being Charles C. Cooke, Ossian Edwards and J. D. Booth.

NOTICE.

Bro. J. E. Harris, of Prospect, Va., is trying to make a living by securing subscriptions to magazines. He is unable to work at his usual vocation (railroad agent) because of the greatest of all afflictions, sickness, which has left him disabled. For years, Bro. and Sister Harris were active workers in Bethlehem Christian Church, Nansemond County, Va.

He suggests that when ordering magazines for the coming season, or special Christmas presents for some relative or friend, that he be given the business. It will not cost any more, and will greatly aid him. He meets any magazine price advertised, and requests you write him for catalog. Address J. E. Harris, Prospect, Va.

Only one in a hundred of our people is a college graduate, yet thirty-six per cent of every one hundred congressmen have been college graduates, while fifty per cent of our Presidents, fifty-four per cent of our Vice-Presidents, sixty-nine per cent of our Supreme Court judges, and eighty-seven per cent of our attorney-generals have had college degrees. The person who cannot read and write has one chance in one hundred and fifty thousand to get his name in "Who's Who in America," and the grammar school graduate one in four thousand two hundred and fifty; the high school graduate one in one thousand six hundred; the college graduate one in one hundred and eighty; the honor student in college one in three. Does education pay? It does! It pays to graduate from high school and college.

ROSEMONT.

The Rosemont congregation enjoyed a good revival this fall in which Dr. L. E. Smith, of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, did all the preaching except on Sunday. Dr. Smith greatly delighted the Church with his great messages, and much good was done by the masterly way in which he presented the Christ.

Fifty members were received into the Church during the year, and more than seven thousand dollars was raised by the Church and Sunday School during the year for all purposes. The Sunday School of Rosemont had the following to take the teacher-training course given in Norfolk this fall: Miss Ada Ramsey, Miss Mary Halstead, Miss Elizabeth Mills, Mrs. H. C. Hedly, Mrs. J. F. Morgan, Mrs. John Swink.

The Woman's Missionary Society, Mrs. O. S. Mills, president, is doing a great work, and keeps the subject of missions before our people. All the money they send to the treasury of the Woman's Board is given. None is raised by sales of any kind, the members believing the best way to give is to make it a part of worship.

Miss Lowrnie Halstead, president, is leading our Endeavorers in a fine piece of work, and their meetings are indeed most helpful and encouraging.

Our building fund for our new Church is growing slowly, but it is growing, and we are hoping to have a new Church and Sunday School for these good people one of these days.

We are now thinking about thanking our Lord on Thanksgiving Day, and of celebrating His birth appropriately at the Christmas time.

J. F. MORGAN.

A GREAT TRAGEDY.

On November 4, 1928, the United Christian Workers of Palm Street Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., went to the Third Avenue Church, Danville, Va., and held a service at 3 P. M. After the service was over and having received so many words of encouragement from the good people of the Third Avenue Church, we started home with our hearts full of joy and love for our Master and a greater determination to go in the evangelistic work which was started only a few months ago. We had just passed Reidsville when all this joy was turned into the deepest sorrow.

As we were riding along at the rate of about twenty or twenty-five miles per hour, Mrs. W. B. Lumley's little three-year-old girl opened the door of the Ford in which we were riding and fell out. The mother, like most of mothers would have done, not realizing the danger she was in, leaped from the car, and her head, striking the side of the hard-surface road, was cut in a large place and her neck was broken. She was rushed to St. Leo's hospital, but she was dead when we reached there. The child was scarcely hurt and was all right in a day or two.

Mrs. Lumley was a true and faithful member of Palm Street Church since the day she joined, which was some time in May, when she moved her membership from the Magnolia Street Baptist Church, Greensboro, where she had been a most faithful member for many years. She had taught the young girls there for several years, and it was said that she taught as well as any preacher.

After coming to our Church, she proved so faithful that she was appointed secretary of the Sunshine Class, and was most loyal to the class. She also was appointed superintendent of the intermediate C. E. Society and was a true worker there, having in her charge about forty children. She was a member of the United Christian Workers of our Church and was always ready and willing to do her part to help carry on the work of the Master.

Her last message to a group of people was at Danville, on the evening of her departure from this life, when she read a portion from the 25th chapter of Matt., beginning with the 31st verse and reading the remainder of the chapter. Her face was beaming with light as she read these words from Matthew's gospel. She always had a smile for every one, and her last thoughts were for others, for on our way home she said that she thought we ought to go to the sanatorium and hold a service soon, for the people there could not go to Church and would enjoy the gospel messages. Her life here was short, only thirty-one years, but she did not waste it as many are doing.

Funeral services were held at Magnolia Church by her former pastor, Rev. J. W. Boman, assisted by her present pastor, Rev. M. T. Sorrel. She was laid to rest in the Green Hill Cemetery. She leaves to mourn her loss a mother, father, husband and three children, besides a host of friends. While we are sad and lonely, we feel that if she could speak that she would say for us not to grieve for her, but to be faithful in the work of the Master, which she was so much interested in.

May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones, and may we all go forward in the Master's work, is my prayer.

LETTIE SCOTT.

VALLEY LETTER.

I have held a good meeting at Leaksville this fall. Congregations and interest were good. There were seven conversions and nine additions to the Church. I have recently accepted pastoral charge of Bethel and have held a meeting there. We had good congregations and interest there also, there being twelve conversions and additions to the Church. The people here are very proud of their new house of worship. It has required much sacrifice on the part of some to make the building possible. I am now in a meeting at Timber Ridge.

Prof. A. R. Flowers was a welcome visitor to the Atlantic Christian College, Wilson, N. C., Friday, the 9th. He has old friends who are members of the faculty of the institution, and some of his old pupils have graduated in the past, while some are to graduate this year. In his talk to members of the Y. M. C. A., he stressed the need of a whole-hearted service for the Master. While Bro. Flowers is a staunch friend to Elon College, he is also a co-worker with other colleges that are training young people for Christian service.

POCKET SIZE 3½x4½ inches

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x¾ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

GATLING.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to take from our midst our beloved Sister Sallie Mary Gatling, a consistent member of the Sarem Christian Church; and,

Whereas, the intermediate relation long held by our sister with the members of this Church render it appropriate that we should place on our records our appreciation of her services and usefulness and the high regards we have for her as a faithful servant of Christ; therefore, be it resolved by the members of Sarem Christian Church:

1. That while we humbly yield to the will of our Heavenly Father, we do not the less mourn for our sister who was called from labor to rest.

2. That in her death this Church loses one of its most faithful members and one whose life was a benediction; her quiet, unassuming manner won for her the love and admiration of all. She was wise in counsel and trusted by all who knew her.

3. That by her departure there is a vacancy in our Church hard to fill, but while we worship here below with Him, she worships now above with loved ones and all the blood washed throng.

4. That we tender her loved ones our deepest sympathy and love in this their time of sorrow.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and also a copy be inscribed on the minutes of our Church records.

KELLER.

John R. Keller was born October 18, 1867; and departed this life September 23, 1928. His age was 60 years, 11 months and 5 days. It was my privilege to receive Bro. Keller into the Palmyra Christian Church about seventeen years ago. Death occurred at his late home in Front Royal, Va.

Funeral services were held at the home of his sister, Mrs. Mahlon Clem, in Edinburg, Va., September 24, 1928. He is survived by his widow and by two sons and one daughter. A. W. ANDES.

HIGH.

Mrs. Bettie E. High was born February 13, 1854, and died October 20, 1928, at the age of 74 years, 8 months and 7 days. Sister High was a good woman and respected by all. In respect to her expressed wish of years ago, I preached her funeral sermon. Rev. W. B. Fuller assisted in the service.

The funeral was held at Linville, October 23, 1928, and interment at Lacy Spring. Several grown children survive. A. W. ANDES.

SECRIST.

Philip M. Secrist was born March 9, 1839, and died October 29, 1928, aged 89 years, 7 months and 20 days. He is survived by three children, twenty-one grandchildren, and ten great-grandchildren. His wife died about fourteen years ago. Bro. Secrist was a member of the East Liberty Christian Church, though for a number of years, owing to age and distance, he was not able to attend. He was held in high esteem by all who knew him.

WARD.

Alfred Riley Ward, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Ward, was born March 24, 1919, and died at the home of his parents, near Edinburg, Va., November 3d, age 9 years, 7 months and 9 days. Left to mourn his death are his parents, seven brothers, and one sister.

Funeral services at the home November 5, 1928, and interment in the cemetery at Edinburg.

SOMERS.

Bro. G. W. Somers was born May 20, 1863, and died October 30, 1928, age 65 years, 5 months and 10 days. Bro. Somers united with the Baptist Church while a young man and remained a member until some six years ago. After moving to Reidsville and becoming an attendant at the services of the First Christian Church, he moved his membership with us. He was of a quiet, kind, agreeable nature, always true to his Church, and led a Christian life. He will be greatly missed in his Church and community.

He leaves a number of relatives besides his good wife and five children, who, with his Church and friends, mourn his going. He was laid to rest in the afternoon of November 1st in the city cemetery. Services were conducted by the writer, with the Jr. O. U. A. M. in charge of the body at the grave.

May God's richest blessings fall on the bereaved.

J. H. DOLLAR.

HARRELL.

We, the ladies of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church, feel very keenly the passing of one of our most faithful and interested members, Mrs. J. A. Harrell, age 69 years, who departed this life on October 28, 1928. We shall greatly miss her cheerful presence in our meeting, and may we strive to be more faithful in our duties to God's cause.

We bow in humble submission to God's will and extend to her loved ones our deepest sympathy, and recommend that a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, a copy to the family, and a copy recorded in the minutes of our society.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

AN OLD TRADITION PASSES.—

Time brings changes even of conservative Scotland. Miss Vera M. M. Findlay, a graduate of Glasgow University, has been ordained to the gospel ministry. This is said to be the first instance in the history of Scotland where a woman has been thus entrusted with clerical responsibility. Miss Findlay is to be the pastor of the Patrick Congregational Church, in Glasgow. There are still those who believe that the ministry is forbidden to women by divine commandment; but it appears that those who hold to such convictions are gradually losing ground.

PREACHERS IN POLITICS.—

Some of our readers may have wondered recently about the place of the preacher in politics. It is a question that has been very much in the minds of some people all over the country. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, in his first nation-wide broadcast on October 14th, replied to the question: "What place, if any, has the preacher in politics?" Dr. Cadman replied, "He has the place of a citizen without benefit of the clergy. So far as politics involves ethics, then the preacher is entitled to preach upon them. The pulpit is no place to preach politics. Let us devote the pulpit to far higher things than politics and elections. If we do that we will get better results in our national life."

CITIZENS NOT CITIZENS.—

On November the 6th, when millions of American citizens were going to the polls to register their convictions, their preferences, and perhaps, their prejudices, through the medium of the ballot box, there were thousands of citizens in the District of Columbia who took no direct part in the election. The management of the District of Columbia being entirely under the control of the two houses of Congress, the residents are completely disfranchised. There was an organized manifestation of protest against the situation which was designated as "Washington's Day of Humiliation." In many places, ballot boxes bearing the inscription "Closed" across their front were displayed, and the windshields of many automobiles carried the "humiliation" posters.

THE COST OF WAR.—

"With what has been paid out and what is already apparent, it is probable that our final cost (of the war) will run well toward $100,000,000,000, or half the entire wealth of the country when we entered the conflict. . . . The whole scheme of human society, the whole progress of civilization requires that we should have faith in men and in nations. There is no other positive power on which we could rely. All the values that have ever been created, all the progress that has ever been made declare that our faith is justified.

"For the cause of peace, the United States is adopting the only practical principles that have ever been proposed, of preparation, limitation and renunciation. The progress that the world has made in this direction in the last ten years surpasses all the progress ever before made."—President Coolidge.

RELIGION IN RUSSIA.—

In recent years the world has been treated to the rare spectacle of a national government making a determined effort to destroy every form and manifestation of religion. Because the established Church of Russia was under the patronage of the old Czaristic regime, when the Soviet government was established it manifested an open hostility to all forms of religion. The attitude of the government was received with but little protest at first. But it appears now that the heart-hungerings of the masses are beginning to assert themselves. There have been many signs recently of religious awakenings. The Soviet has become alarmed and has rushed through a new law intended to crush any incipient religious revival. Every form of religious gathering of whatever nature has been forbidden. Steps have been taken to prevent religious literature from reaching the people, and all paraphernalia used in religious worship has been declared to be the property of the State. It may be that the suppression of the religious tendencies of the people eventually may bring about the overthrow of the Soviet government.

RELIGIOUS PREJUDICE.—

One is surprised and sometimes appalled at the strength of religious prejudices or religious convictions. It depends entirely upon the personal relationship to the point at issue whether they be called prejudices or convictions. It appears now that Mahatmi Gandhi, for years the revered leader of many of India's millions of people, has roused his fellow-countrymen to righteous indignation by his responsibility for the killing of a sick cow to end her misery. The Indian is forbidden by his religion to kill any animal. It is entirely within the idea of what is right and proper to leave the animal to starve to death or to suffer any amount of pain while awaiting a lingering death. But to be the agency for bringing an animal to what the Indian considers an untimely end, simply must not be done. It does not befit us to either despise or deride the Indian for his superstition. He is but being true to what he has been taught for centuries to be the highest expression of religious duty.

One may feel inclined to laugh at such a manifestation of what we conceive to be religious superstition and prejudice. But when we stop to consider how that thousands of our own countrymen have turned their backs upon the most fundamental principles of Christian ethics, doing themselves irreparable injury and endangering the welfare of our whole social order, we begin to wonder if, after all, the Indian does not have the laugh on us. There may be outworn convictions that linger on to hinder the onward march of progressive religious development; but even that may be more desirable than the state of the people who have lost all religious convictions that might serve as an anchor to hold back against the deadly downward drift into immorality and vice.

BALDWIN ON PEACE.—

Mr. Stanley Baldwin, Premier of England, speaking at the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the League of Nations' Union, had the following significant statement to make concerning the maintenance of world peace: "The fact is that we have paid much too little attention in the past to these tigrine impulses that lie deep down in human nature. If you think you are going to beat the things that culminate in hatred and in war without a spiritual fight, you are foredoomed to failure. To make a vow with your lips is not enough; to sign a covenant with your pen is not enough. It savors of crying, 'Lord, Lord.' Such of you now listening to me who, as myself, were baptized, made a vow of peculiarly solemn nature through your proxies—and you renewed it if you were ever confirmed—to renounce the world, the flesh and the devil. I wonder how many of us have done it. I know myself I have not. I have tried often. I fall down again and again, and I know that if this vow of renunciation is to be kept it means a daily struggle until you fall into the grave. It is exactly the same with these old tiger instincts of human nature. You can only save yourself and the world by constant daily fighting with these old impulses, and in time you will win. You may feel that I ought to bid you go and wash in the rivers of Syria, whereas I am only directing you to the Jordan. But if you want to do something perfectly simple and easy that would really help, let me submit that from tonight onward no member of the League of Nations' Union add one drop to the fetid stream of insinuation and suspicion, and the attribution of low motives to statesmen of your own country or other countries who are engaged in pacificatory work in the world. In my view, the statesman who makes an observation doubting the good faith of or makes insinuations against the bona fides of a foreign country for the sake of obtaining a cheer, the newspaper which puts in such paragraphs to make news—they are both of them doing the devil's work and making it infinitely harder. Suspicion very quickly becomes hate, and hate very quickly becomes war. You in this league are missionaries—or you ought to be—and as missionaries you should conduct yourself."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. Jesse H. Dollar changes his address from Roanoke, Ala., to P. O. Box 499, Reidsville, N. C.

Bro. J. G. Myers, Pleasant Hill, Ohio, treasurer for many years of the General Convention of the Christian Church, died on Sunday, November 18th. Bro. Myers made an efficient and capable treasurer, and was widely known and much loved. At the recent session of the General Boards in Dayton, he was present and made his report as usual, but was far from well. A good and faithful servant of his Church and of his Lord has passed to his reward.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell, of our Danville Church, reports that "Our board of deacons met tonight, and I brought before them the matter of missions. They adopted and decided to recommend to the Church the third plan suggested by the recent session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, viz: to ask the Sunday School to contribute more than it did last year and to make our Easter offering for missions, endeavoring in this way, if possible, to reach the quota for our Church. We agreed to seek to raise the quota, if possible."

Our sympathies are extended to our dear Bro. J. W. Bradshaw, Windsor, Va., whose wife and devoted companion passed to the spirit world November 18th. The funeral services were conducted from Antioch Christian Church Tuesday, P. M., November 20th. Sister Bradshaw was a sister of the late lamented Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., former editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and Rev. J. W. Barrett, of Norfolk, Va. Dr. W. W. Staley, who assisted in the funeral services, will write THE SUN of the life and the passing of this good woman.

It is learned with sorrow and grief that Rev. W. H. Martin passed away on Sunday, November 18th, from his home at Hilton, N. Y. Bro. Martin had seemed to be in excellent health recently, and his going was without warning. He will be remembered by many SUN readers as a former missionary to Porto Rico, where he labored especially at Santa Isabel for several years until the failing health of his wife necessitated his resignation and returned to the United States. The funeral was at Christiansburg, Ohio, his boyhood home, on the 20th, the services being conducted by Dr. W. P. Minton and Dr. W. H. Denison. THE SUN's editor has kind recollections of Bro. Martin, and we extend to his bereaved wife and son our deep sympathies.

The Conferences have adopted three plans for financing missions the coming year, one of which each Church is asked to adopt: (1) In those Churches where the budget is used to include in the budget the quota asked for missions, the same being one-third of the amount of pastor's salary. (2) Where the budget is not used, to make the every-member canvass, allowing each member to say how much he or she is willing to give for missions the coming year, the same to be paid monthly, quarterly, or all in cash, as the individual member may elect. (3) To endeavor to largely increase the offering from the Sunday Schools, and then next spring, at or near Easter, the Church put on an intensive campaign in the endeavor to raise the full amount of the quota asked in conjunction with the amount raised by the monthly offering of the Sunday School. If every Church at an early date will adopt one or the other of these plans and then work the plan through the year, the goal will be reached, but it will require purpose, plan and persistence to do this great and good thing.

From the New York Herald-Tribune, it is learned that Miss Louise S. Eby, a recent graduate from Union Theological Seminary, with the degree of B. D., was ordained by the laying on of hands in the Broadway Congregational Tabernacle, New York, to the ministry of the Congregational Church. The Herald-Tribune carries the picture of Miss Eby, and features the event of her ordination, saying: "Miss Eby is believed to be the first woman of any denomination ever to be ordained in New York City. The ordination will confer upon Miss Eby all the rights enjoyed by male clergymen of the Congregational Church, including authorization to officiate at baptisms and Communion, and to perform marriages and conduct funeral services. The ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. Chas. E. Jefferson, D. D., pastor of the Tabernacle, and the charge was made by Rev. Julius A. Bower, D. D." It has been said that the Christian Church was the first in America to ordain a woman to the full authority of a minister, and since the Christian and Congregational Churches seem to be headed toward Church union, it is interesting to note that our Congregational brethren are thinking and acting along lines long since marked out by Christian Churches.

Elon College is to be congratulated on the successful choice of its commencement speakers in 1929. It is announced in the press that Dr. William E. Barton, of Massachusetts, the past moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches, the author of more than forty volumes, and one of the most distinguished ministers in the American Churches today, will deliver the literary address on May 28, 1929. Dr. Barton is known as a great Church leader, and a man of established intellectual moral and spiritual leadership throughout our land and country.

The preacher of the baccalaureate sermon on Sunday, May 26th, is one of our own number—Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, president of Palmer College, Albany, Mo. President Hurst is one of our younger ministers, who has won for himself an enviable reputation as thinker, leader and college executive. He will be welcomed to Elon and heard with deep interest and affection.

The alumni speaker is our own Charlie Howell, now the Hon. C. C. Howell, of Jacksonville, Fla. Charlie graduated in the class of 1908, even then a lad of less than twenty-one summers, and immediately upon his graduation entered the University of Virginia, from which he won his LL.B. degree with high distinction. Charlie is now special bond attorney of the city of Jacksonville and is one of the most distinguished lawyers in Florida and a speaker of note. His wife is the sister of former President E. L. Moffitt and an alumna of Elon. And here is hoping this popular pair will come back to commencement and bring their whole family, that their many friends who will be present may again greet them and, in a measure, show in what high esteem they both are held.

THAT HAT FOR THE PASTOR.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be in every home in our Southern Christian Convention.

The proposition to give a ten-dollar Stetson hat to the pastor of a Church that sends us ten new subscribers and ten renewals should make many pastors happy for Christmas. Show your pastor, who has been so faithful in his service during the year, that you love him and appreciate him by making up a club of ten new subscribers and ten renewals and send it in. Be sure to state it is a club, so you will get the proper credit. Give name of subscriber and correct post-office address.

We would be happy to make every pastor in the Southern Convention a present of a nice hat for Christmas and give it in the name and on behalf of the Church that sends in the list. Get busy in your Church and see to it that your pastor gets a new hat for Christmas. You will make him happy and you will be placing THE CHRISTIAN SUN in new homes, and you will also make your circulation manager happy.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Elon College, N. C. Circulation Manager.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Christian Missionary Association of the North Carolina Christian Conference will meet in its annual session at Elon College, Thursday, December 13th, at 10 A. M. A tentative program appears elsewhere in this issue of THE SUN.

The one main objective we have tried to set before the people is this, that every Church within the three Carolina Conferences should become a member of this association on or before the date of the annual meeting. It is earnestly hoped that all former members will stand by the organization and be present at the meeting or send in their dues. May we make this urgent appeal to the pastors to bring this matter before their Churches?

In many of the Churches, the Sunday School and other organizations should become members also. Just take your "Christian Annual" and see what the Churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference are doing through their C. M. A., and let that be a challenge to our Churches.

This association can be made a very great power for good if it can command the co-operation and help of the pastors and Churches.

W. M. JAY.

1928.

So far as the Southern Christian Convention is concerned, 1928 will be one of the greatest years in its history.

1. It unanimously approved the plan of union with the Congregational Church which requires action by the highest bodies of the two denominations.

2. It unanimously adopted a financial plan which will meet the needs of every department of the Christian Church. It only remains for the Conferences, ministers and local Churches to carry same into effect.

The Eastern Virginia Conference is one hundred per cent behind the plan, and I trust that every Conference will do likewise. The adoption of this financial plan makes a new epoch in the history of the Christian Church, South.

J. E. WEST, Ch'n.

THANKOFFERING.

The Woman's Mission Board of the North Carolina Conference, in session at Burlington today, November 22nd, voted that the thankoffering of all missionary societies in the Conference, both women's and young people's, shall go to the Porto Rican reconstruction fund. All societies are urged to make as liberal a thankoffering as possible, and as soon as the offering is received to send the same to Mrs. W. R. Sellars, treasurer, Burlington, N. C. We trust that all societies will take the thankoffering, as funds for reconstruction work in Porto Rico are very much needed.

Respectfully,
MRS. C. H. ROWLAND, Pres.
MRS. O. H. PARIS, Secretary.

GREAT HOURS WITH DAVID.

By REV. J. G. TRUITT.

"Jehovah hath sought Him a man after His own heart, and Jehovah hath appointed him to be a Prince over His people."—1 Sam. 13:14.

The words were spoken of an unknown lad who was keeping watch over his father's flocks. What greater words can we find about an ordinary young fellow in all the pages of literature, or history: "Jehovah hath sought Him a man after His own heart, and Jehovah hath appointed him to be a Prince over His people." The very magnitude of such words stir one's soul. "A man after God's heart . . . a man over God's people." More space is given to telling the doings of David in the Old Testament than to any other character. Perhaps because if we look through David for the secret of his success we shall catch something of the goodness and nature of God—for David was a man after God's own heart: a prince over God's people.

Therefore, let us study David, and in this way: What are the big moments of your life, David? Tell us where the high spots are, and let us look at them, for they are the testing-places of the strength and nature of your soul. Sunday before last we pointed out some of the great hours in Abraham's life; last Sunday, in the life of Moses, and today we are to notice some of the great hours with David. Maybe not the greatest, and each of us might select different ones, but these are some of the great moments of his life.

1. When David slew Goliath. In the first place, David resented any slur upon God. God was his friend. He knew God. With Him he communed out in the fields with his father's flocks. God had helped him. God had inspired him. He loved God. The armies of Israel had fought before, and David had not in any way intervened; here they are defied as the armies of Jehovah, and Jehovah's name is challenged! This David could not stand for. He might die, but he could not stand to see his Friend's name insulted. He would die for Him if necessary, and gladly. It was the sweet strong faith of a child. It has never been surpassed. Jesus said: "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

David was yet not more than a boy, but he knew there were some things that were holy and sacred. I thank God for children who have been so trained that they know sacred things when they see them, or hear them. In the very soul of young David there was reverence. Find a boy who is called of God to be a prince over His people, and I shall show you a boy who is reverent. Some young people whisper and talk throughout a whole Church worship period, but not David's kind. Some young people like to visit their neighbors during the prayer in the house of God, and so they sit in the pew with bowed heads, thoughtless, irreverent hearts, and whispering lips. There are not many such, I thank God, but the few who do such things are only taking their elders for their example.

Again this hour shows that David was the kind of boy who used what he himself had, and not another's. There was no cheating in the soul of David, no sham, no show; he was not biased by the king's compliments, nor burdened by the king's armor! How often we try to work with too big tools. How often we seek to do the big things, when if we only did the little first things, they themselves would do the big things for us. It was the handling of the little stones, and the simple sling that slew the great enemy of the armies of God.

Neither was David ashamed of his small weapons. They were his and the best he had. They were tested and tried. He was not ashamed to carry them into the biggest business into which he might be called. So often we are ashamed of our best clothes—not good as somebody else's—ashamed of our way of going—not like somebody else's. Must we ever jeopardize our soul's culture, or our eternal happiness because we cannot wear the armor of others, or contribute as much as others, or do so well as others? The armies of Israel could do great things. David could do greater, because David was willing to do the best he could, where he was, with what he had. And this experience in David's life shows the humbleness of his great nature. He did not allow this victory to upset his thinking. He wore away no medals of honor, nor received commissions of rank. These are right and came to him soon enough, but for them he did not seek.

2. When David formed his friendship with Johnathan. God is such a Friend—loyal, true, and unforgetting—that we cannot be surprised that one of the very greatest things about David was his ability to make a friend and be true to him forever. No moment in David's life could have been greater for him than this, so far as his future position in Israel was concerned. In the first place, this friendship leavened his soul with the patience needed to make him the prince which he was called of God to be. Had it not been for this friendship he might have stabbed Saul, and then his hope of setting up the throne of David, son of Jesse, would have been ended. This friendship fed his soul with charity for a wicked one. It is not so much what this friendship kept him from doing to Saul, as great as that was, but what it kept him from letting his difficulty with Saul do for him. Hatred, anger, malice are a trinity of evils which try the souls of men; but these could not grow in the heart of David against Saul on account of his great love for Saul's son. When Saul and Jonathan died in battle years later, David said of them: "Saul and Johnathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives; they were swifter than eagles; they were stronger than lions." Oh, how beautiful, if we can keep our hearts clear of hatred even for a foe! No wonder David was called a man after God's own heart. And of Johnathan he said: "I am distressed for thee, O Johnathan, my brother; very pleasant hast thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women." The forming of a true friendship, whether it be done in a minute or years, is a high spot in any person's life; and the breaking of that friendship is a tragedy. David proved right to the title, "friend of God," by being a friend of man.

3. When David twice spared the life of King Saul. Saul had definitely tried to murder David; and even now he was setting for himself the serious business of putting him to death. It so happened that twice Saul lay asleep under the point of a javelin held by the hand of David; twice was he shown absolute mercy: yea, may we not say unmerited favor! The narration of these two instances in the life of David are most interesting indeed. And they show the type and quality of charity that reposed in one who had a heart after God's own. He had been promised the kingdom, already he had been anointed by Samuel, and already had he been acclaimed by the popular voice of the people; but David did not wish to run ahead of God, nor hasten his plans.

4. When David wrote the 51st psalm. Although this is the great dark spot in David's life, he would not leave it but were he talking to us about his life, for here it was that he did the great thing of repenting with a godly sorrow. David was not without his faults. David was not the "whole which needeth no physician." It is bad to sin, but if one has sinned it is great to repent. It is the difference in David and Dives. It is the difference in happiness and eternal remorse. It is the parting of the ways between Peter and Judas. David had sinned, but his repentance was complete, and as permanent as the psalms themselves. He did not brood; he repented. He did not sulk; he repented. He did not give up, and do worse; he repented. He did not commit suicide like Saul, his predecessor; he repented. He did not become evil; he repented—and his very repenting has been a service rendered the whole sinning and sinful world. His repentance included acknowledging, confessing, and exchanging the positive evil for the positive good.

5. When David wrote the 23rd psalm. I have not tried to list these great hours with David in chronological order, but even so I think most likely I have done so, for while the twenty-third psalm is often thought of in connection with David's boyhood, may it not be that as he reflected on a long life, and recounted days long spent, he might not have drawn upon boyhood experiences for this greatest of all psalms. This psalm is a whole sermon, or series of sermons in itself; and so I shall only mention it today. A great man was David, full of the spirit of that great psalm, and, indeed, we may see that "goodness and mercy followed him all the days of his life, and that he dwells in the house of the Lord forever." Let us now repeat that psalm with the common prayer that we may more fully submit ourselves to the whole spirit of it, and thus fashion our hearts after the great heart of God.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Chris-

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

This Conference met in its 103rd annual session with the Ingram Church, Ingram, Va., on the morning of November 13th. The Conference was called to order by the president, Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro, and Dr. P. H. Fleming, of Burlington, conducted a very timely and helpful devotional service. Dr. S. T. A. Kent, of the local Church and a layman interested in all Church activities, gave most cordial words of welcome, and Rev. R. A. Whitten, vice-president of the Conference, appropriately responded. Besides the routine business of the first session, the president delivered the annual address, using as his theme "The Hope of the Church." Dr. Rowland gave a splendid message of encouragement and inspiration, in which he held out, in no unmistakable manner, a hope for the progress and achievement of the Church militant. Assisted by others, the president administered the Lord's Supper, which solemn service served well as a sacred setting for the Conference and its activities.

Rev. J. W. Patton conducted a very fitting and appropriate devotional service in opening the afternoon session. Immediately following this were the reports from the departments of Christian education and addresses pertaining thereto, viz: "The Sunday School," "The Christian Endeavor," and "The Young People's Work." Rev. T. F. Wright presented the report on Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor, and Rev. S. E. Madren gave a historical sketch of "Christian Endeavor," and emphasized the merit and might of this organization in the Christian life and activity of the Church. Bro. W. B. Truitt, of Greensboro, president of the Sunday School Convention of the Conference and a man deeply interested in Sunday Schools, gave some most timely suggestions as to how Sunday Schools may be improved, and, as such, may prove a real blessing and benefit to the Church and the kingdom. Miss Pattie Coghill, Secretary of Christian Education, delighted the audience with a very practical talk on "Young People's Work." Superintendent C. D. Johnston, of the Christian Orphanage, told the audience many of the details in conducting an orphanage and of the results achieved therein. He also made a plea for a liberal Thanksgiving offering. Rev. J. F. Apple, who was not present, sent in the report on moral reform, which report evoked a very warm and worthwhile discussion on the moral topics and standards of the day.

At the evening session, a male quartet rendered a delightful service in song, and Rev. S. A. Bennett, of Elon College, preached a very able and acceptable sermon on "Self-Denial and What it Means to Follow the Lord."

The second day of the Conference was largely attended, and many interesting and edifying issues and events were discussed. The officers for the year were chosen—Rev. C. H. Rowland and Rev. R. A. Whitten, re-elected president and vice-president, respectively; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, and Dr. Waldo M. Boone, of Durham, treasurer. Rev. P. T. Klapp introduced the report on foreign missions, and in the same submitted three plans, one of which his committee urged every Church to employ in the effort to raise this year for missions one-third the amount paid pastors. Bro. Klapp and his committee reported that this could be done with hurt to none and helpfulness to all, provided the plans as proposed in the report should be adopted at once. The three plans suggested were:

1. Where the local Church makes a budget, that an amount equal to one-third the pastor's salary be included in the budget.
2. In those Churches not using the budget, a canvass be made of individual members, giving them the privilege of making their contributions either monthly or quarterly, or in a lump sum, and the same be paid to the treasurer of the Church, to be forwarded to the Mission Secretary during the year.
3. Where neither of these plans is adopted by the Church, a vigorous effort be made next spring, at or near Easter, to raise the entire amount of the quota assigned to the Church.

Bro. Klapp's committee told of the need on the foreign field, and especially made a plea for immediate relief in Porto Rico.

Mrs. C. H. Rowland, president of the North Carolina Woman's Conference, made an address on "Women and Missions," and Mrs. W. R. Sellars, treasurer, gave the Conference a report of the women's work for the past year. The Mission Secretary gave an address on "The Southern Christian Convention's Program of Missions." Dr. W. M. Jay, chairman, read the report of the committee on religious literature and led the discussion, followed by others, in which the necessity of supporting THE CHRISTIAN SUN was emphasized.

In the afternoon, the report of the committee on education was made, which report strongly commended Elon College as a Christian institution which answers for us of the Conference the all-important question as to where we shall educate? There were no ordinations or licensures recommended at this session. Following the report, Dr. T. C. Amick, business manager of Elon College, made a very eloquent and timely address on "Christian Education." The speaker held up the life and growth of the Christ as the example and inspiration for all young people who are seeking intellectual and spiritual growth. The address was much enjoyed and appreciated. Dr. G. O. Lankford, of Burlington, delighted the audience and instructed them with a very lucid exposition of the kind and character of the work expected of, and to be undertaken by, the organization of the Men of the Church. The last session of our Convention provided for an organization of the Men of the Church, and this Conference is seeking to promote that work. Dr. Lankford's address should prove helpful to any Church undertaking to organize the Men of the Church. Mrs. C. H. Rowland presented the report for the committee on stewardship, and Dr. W. S. Alexander, of Elon College, gave a brief and timely address in advocacy of the items and recommendations of the report. The day closed with this report pending.

The evening session consisted of song and a very helpful sermon by Rev. R. A. Whitten.

Rev. J. S. Carden, one of our most consecrated ministers, opened the third day's session with a most timely devotional service, the spirit of which was shared and enjoyed by all present. Bro. Carden said, and rightly so, that if the people of the Church would get right with God and be filled with the spirit of the Master, our Church problems, which so much vex and perplex us, would all be solved, and with this safe and sound doctrine all Christians are agreed. When you find a person filled with the spirit of the Master, thrilled with His doctrine and life of self-denial and of service, you will find that person ready and willing to do his part in helping to bear the burdens and share the joys of the Church. The great question for the Church is how to get the people to get right with God and to be filled with the spirit of service and devotion? Bro. Carden's remarks were most timely and manifested the proper spirit.

Conference remained in session on the last day till the work was finished. There were many reports and much discussion pertaining to the practical working out of plans adopted by the Convention and the Conference. It was a most interesting session, in which our practical problems were thoroughly thrashed out in a way and manner that all present might fully understand the plans and the program of the Churches and enterprises of the Church the coming year.

The Conference was royally entertained by the good people of the community, assisted by members and friends of their neighboring Church—Pleasant Grove. Rev. Fred T. Wright is pastor of both Churches, and he and his good people certainly know how to dispense bountiful hospitality and good fellowship. The next session of the Conference is to meet with the Virgilina Church.

PULPIT, PRESS AND PROHIBITION.

The New York World, in a recent issue, said that the recent election, so far as the South was concerned, was a contest between the pulpit and the press. The esteemed Richmond Christian Advocate agrees "that such was the case and was apparent to all observers. The politicians and the press combined to mold the South to their way of political thinking. They had every advantage. Habit controls actions, and to do something one has been taught for years to despise is exceedingly difficult. The political press attempted to bulldoze and overawe the pulpit. Let us thank God that there were many who were unafraid. These ministers have not lost the respect of those who like brave men."

The New York World is not far from right in its conclusion. From one end of the South to the other, the pulpit thundered, in no uncertain tones, its approval of prohibition and of its adherence to the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act. The religious press, the denominational papers throughout the South, without exception, so far as we observed, reflected and spread to all homes into which they went, from week to week, the voice and sentiment of the pulpit. On the other hand, the daily press, reflecting the mind of the politicians, without exception so far as the same came to our notice, either sought to camouflage the attack on the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act or to divert the minds of the people from this one issue so near and dear to the hearts of the people of the South.

It is useless now to call up the ghosts of the past, the sharp and cruel things that were said and done by those of different political faiths and followings. It is worthwhile, however, to reflect upon the fact that the people at the ballot-box spoke their minds in no uncertain terms as to prohibition. In spite of all that the press and the politicians had to say, the people understood well and fully that the recent election was a referendum on the subject of prohibition. The candidate of the defeated party and his manager virtually said as much, time and time again, and gave the people to understand that his election was a virtual repudiation of the Volstead act and the eighteenth amendment as they now stand. The verdict has been rendered, and it is interesting to note that there will be more dries and fewer wets in the next Congress than in any preceding Congress. Incidentally, Senator Edwards, of New Jersey, and Senator Bruce, of Maryland, the two most outstanding wets of the Senate, both of whom stood for re-election as avowed wets, went down to defeat. This is only two instances, as many wets in other States seeking re-election went down to defeat also. "There will be more dries in both houses of Congress than ever before," points out a contemporary.

Prohibition has not done all that its friends and advocates have desired that it should do, but it can be said, without any fear of successful contradiction, that the American people have decided to stand by and defend prohibition and to give it further trial. It may be said further that the minds of the sober, thinking people of the country are made up on this issue, and will not at present forego the prospect of better enforcement and better conditions. It may be safely said that no administration, and no representative of an administration will have a greater opportunity and a more weighty responsibility than that which comes into power March 4th next. Mr. Hoover, upon whom the dries pin their faith for constitutional allegiance and law enforcement, will go into office with an easy majority of his party in both houses. In the Senate: Republicans, 55; Democrats, 39; Farm Labor, 1; vacant, 1—thus giving the incoming party a gain of eight in the Senate. In the House he will find Republicans, 269; Democrats, 165; Farm Labor, 1—a gain of 38 for the successful party. Here, then, is an opportunity and an obligation for the successful party, such as is seldom witnessed, and unless those in power rise to meet this opportunity and bear successfully this responsibility they alone will be to blame, for they alone will be held responsible by the suffrage and the mind of the American people.

DOING HIS WILL.

No one can earn his way into the kingdom of God by giving, going or doing. However, it is very certain that many are brought into the kingdom after they have done the will of our Lord, and certain it is that all who have been brought into the kingdom must and will do His way. In the eighteenth chapter of Luke we are told of a very pious and highly moral sort of a ruler who came to the Lord, and yet went away from Him full of sorrow. He was filled with sorrow, we are told, simply because he would not go and do what Jesus told him to do in order that he might be what Jesus wanted him to be: "Sell all that thou hast and distribute unto the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come follow me." Here was an instance in which it was necessary to put the deed before the being. In order to be, he must first do. This is clearly an instance in which it was necessary for the individual to come to be through obedience to the command of his Lord. And Jesus said, when the multitude spoke to Him about His mother: "Who-soever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother and my sister and mother." It is only by the grace of God that one is redeemed, saved, born into the kingdom. But it often requires even for grace, and more grace, that one get up and go and do something in the name and for the sake of their Lord. The ripest and the richest Christian characters this writer has known have been those who, like the Master, "have been about their Father's business," and like Him again, "went about doing good."

One may speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and one may give millions, but unless one have the spirit of the Christ and acts in the spirit of the Christ, such deeds avail nothing for the doer; but certain it is that one who has the spirit of Christ and one who wishes to develop in himself or herself the spirit of Christ and have that spirit grow stronger and stronger, will be doers of the Word and not hearers only, and will not only be willing to sacrifice, but will sacrifice and will deny one's self in order to sacrifice. Doing has its reflex influence on the life, and re-enforces the life and the mood of life. Prof. James, the psychologist, pointed out that if one in a rising mood of anger will refrain from the clinched fist, the drawn muscles, the outward manifestations of anger, one will soon find the mood disappearing and the anger vanishing. Reaction is equal to action, and our deeds react upon us and change our very being. The kingdom of God and the entrance to that kingdom cannot be purchased at any price, but those who would enter the kingdom and those who would remain in the kingdom must do something more than express a belief; one must act, one must do in keeping with that belief, if one is to grow in the power of His might and become His true follower and constantly share His fellowship. Jesus said, "I must work the works of Him that sent me," and so must His followers if they would keep company with Him and enjoy the comradeship of His great and divine personality.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Thanksgiving Day is the climax of the year when kept in the Thanksgiving spirit. It has been said that a thankful spirit is happy in enterprise, brave in difficulties, and patient in reverses. The word "thank" is derived from an old Anglo-Saxon word which means "thought." Thanksgiving is, therefore, thoughtgiving; and all words and deeds are products of thought. One cannot give thanks unless he has given thought that produces something to give.

Thanksgiving Day in the United States is a day set apart for the celebration of the Lord's goodness to the nation. From its origin it has combined religious worship and social festivals. The first celebration was held by the Plymouth colony in 1621; and the usage soon became common in New England. After the Revolutionary War the custom gradually extended to the Middle States; later, to the West and, more slowly, to the South. Since 1863 the observance has been recommended annually by the President of the United States; and, since the Civil War, by the Governors of all the States; and it is now generally observed, and with happy results, throughout the country. There are many reasons why we should give thanks.

1. For those who founded the republic. In 1584, Sir Walter Raleigh had discovered Roanoke Island, in North Carolina; a fort was built and fifteen men left on the island; but, when visited in 1587 they found the place deserted and human bones scattered upon the field where wild deer were reposing. They re-peopled the place, but when Governor John White returned to look for the colony, and his own daughter, he found a desert; and it is not known whether they perished or were adopted into the tribe of the Hatteras Indians. In Virginia, twenty years later, the English were more successful, and a permanent settlement was made at Jamestown. This settlement contained Bartholomew Gaspard; Edward Wingfield, a merchant, who was made Governor the first year; Robert Hunt, a clergyman; Captain John Smith, and others, numbering one hundred and five in all—knights, gentlemen, merchants, with license from James I to establish a colony in Virginia. The hardships they endured ought to remind us of their sacrifices in founding a Commonwealth in which people are prosperous and happy to this good day; and every heart ought to swell with thanksgiving.

2. For the integrity of government. James Brice said: "America is a commonwealth of commonwealths, a republic of republics." While we are diversified we are unified—a sisterhood of States embracing a brotherhood of men. All nations reside in comparative peace within our borders; and all men have an equal chance in life.

3. For the extent and variety of our area. Gladstone said: "The United States has a natural base for the greatest continuous empire ever established by man. The United States contains 3,500,000 square miles, a river flow of 40,000 miles, two great mountain ranges—the Alleghany and the Rockies—running north and south, so that the sun shines on both sides of them.

4. For material prosperity. The American people are better housed, better fed, better clothed, and better paid than other peoples. This nation can put one end of her table on the Alleghany Mountains and the other end on the Rocky Mountains and a hundred million of free people can sit down to this Thanksgiving dinner and eat to the full in peace. We ought to be thankful to God for His boundless blessings.

5. For denominational fraternity and brotherly love among the people of God. Many signs of this spirit in co-operative organizations for charity and missionary enterprise point in this direction.

6. For the civic recognition of God by the government in the President's proclamation and the call upon the Churches to observe the day in their respective places of worship. The expectancy of this nation now is even larger than when the thirteen colonies were struggling for existence, or when the Liberty Bell sounded its first notes of freedom. Garden and forest have passed from summer into winter with rarest beauty and abundant harvests, and all should give thanks for all that God has bestowed upon the nation and the world.

MISSION QUOTAS.

The following pastors have promised to raise their quota for missions as follows: Rev. T. N. Lowe, Elm Avenue, half budget system and half Sunday School; Rev. L. E. Smith, Christian Temple, budget system; Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, probably budget system; Rev. F. C. Lester, Spring Hill, Easter; Rev. J. E. McCauley, First Church Norfolk, budget system and offering; Rev. J. T. Morgan, Rosemont, raise all possible; Rev. J. F. Morgan, Berea, quota; Rev. O. D. Poythress, South Norfolk, by pledges; Rev. W. H. Garman, Old Zion, budget system.

I will give you a further report as soon as I hear from the pastors. Yours very sincerely,

J. M. DARDEN.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Birth is the beginning of a mortal life; death is the beginning of an eternity. Both are important and all must pass both stages. One is brief and full of opportunities; the other is endless and is the result of this life. "In the place where the tree falleth, there it shall lie"; and the believer is "like a tree planted by the rivers of water"—so where he does he enters into an eternal state.

A good woman has finished her course in the flesh and entered into that mysterious bourne from which there is no return. Mrs. Mary Virginia Bradshaw was born August 4, 1854, and departed this life November 18, 1928, age 74 years, 7 months, and 14 days. Before her marriage she was Miss Mary Virginia Barrett. She was married twice: first to George T. Bradford, October 15, 1871. Out of this union there were eight children, four of whom are still living—two daughters and two sons: Mrs. James Jernigan, Newport News, Va.; Mrs. C. V. Carr, Norfolk, Va.; J. Eddie Bradshaw, Zuni, Va., and George J. Bradshaw, Lynchburg, Va. She was married the second time to James W. Bradshaw, and to this union was born one daughter, Mrs. W. K. Saunders, Zuni, Va. Besides her husband and the children named above, she is survived by three brothers—R. H. Barrett, Rev. J. W. Barrett, Mills T. Barrett—and one sister, Mrs. Mattie Davis Bowden. She leaves also fifteen grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren. She was the sister, too, of the late Rev. Dr. J. Pressley Barrett, who was editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty and THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the author of several valuable books, and a conspicuous character in the Christian Church.

She gave her heart to Jesus Christ when a girl, and her life and her children to His service in Antioch Christian Church until failing health reduced her strength and kept her at home. She and her family have added many values to the influence of Antioch in that Isle of Wight community. It could be said of her that "she was a mother in Israel." No man can appraise the worth of a virtuous woman; "her price is far above rubies." Such was Mrs. James W. Bradshaw.

The service at Antioch on Tuesday afternoon, November 20, 1928, was conducted by Dr. W. D. Harward, Rev. Mr. Cobb, of the Baptist Church in Windsor; Rev. G. A. Pearce, and Rev. W. W. Staley. The flowers were many and beautiful, the songs were sweet and comforting, the congregation was large and sympathetic, and the bright hope of reunion and the precious memories of her past life all united to comfort the large family and the Church in their bereavement. Her grave was covered with flowers, but her head was covered, we believe, with a crown of righteousness by Jesus Christ who loved her and gave Himself for her. As the cross is the greatest fact in the history of the Church, death is the greatest fact in the history of a Christian. The three most sacred places on earth are home, where mother lived; the Church, where mother worshiped, and the grave, where mother is buried. Graveyards are sacred acres, and there human feet tread with greatest respect and reverence. Mother cannot come back to her loved ones, but they can go to her and dwell with her forever.

ELON LETTER.

I failed to attend the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference this year for the first time in twenty-four years. My absence from this Conference was due to the fact that I had to make a choice between attending my own Conference and the meeting of the Congregational advisory board of the Southeast, in Atlanta, Ga.

I thoroughly enjoyed the meeting with the Congregationalists. Their group is small, being composed of a representative of each conference in the Southeast district, of the employed secretaries and superintendents in this area, and of certain national officers who are detailed to be present.

The Congregational meeting does not possess legislative powers, but discusses matters thoroughly and presents "findings," which are sent to the leaders of local Churches without authority other than the authority of the individuals as such who compose the conference and the validity of the conclusions.

There was no program in the accepted sense of that word among our people, and there were no set addresses except at the evening sessions, one of which was a banquet occasion.

Each president of each college present or educational institution was expected to have ten minutes to present his institution. When the institutions were all presented, then there was a period of questions and general discussion, and the general discussions always consumed more time than the presentation talks.

The superintendent of the Southeast was there—Dr. W. Knighton Bloom. He was allowed ten minutes, but there were thirty minutes of discussion following his ten minutes of talk.

Dr. Ernest M. Halladay, of New York City, secretary of the Church extension board; Dr. Chas. C. Merrill, of Chicago, in charge of the entire budget of the denomination; Mrs. D. Foster Updike, of Boston, in charge of the women's work of the entire denomination, and Dr. Chas. L. Fisk, of Cleveland, Ohio, the secretary of religious education for the denomination, were also there. Each of these national officers was allowed the customary ten minutes, at the expiration of which he was called down without exception, but there were thirty minutes of discussion following each presentation.

Of course, the superintendents of various groups in the Southern area were heard. Among them Dr. F. P. Ensminger, Dr. Neil McQuarrie and others. No one was allowed more than ten minutes to present a topic, but there was an abundance of opportunity for discussion. And the group had a way of talking itself into a position of general agreement. Dr. J. Edward Kirby was chaplain and brought five great messages. His period alone escaped the inevitable discussion.

Perhaps the topic that claimed the larger share of attention was the union of our two Churches. Dr. Bloom presented the subject from the standpoint of the Congregationalists in a ten-minute talk, and I had pleasure of presenting it from the standpoint of the Christian Church in a ten-minute talk in place of Dr. L. E. Smith, who could not be present. There was a discussion period of an hour and a half for this topic following the twenty-minute presentation speeches. At the end of that time the group voted unanimously its approval of the union plan as worked out.

There was another topic, however, that ran this a close second, and as far as the Southeast was concerned was really more vital than the union of our two Churches. I am referring to the removal of the Atlanta Seminary to Elon College in September, 1929. With reference to this issue after two ten-minute presentation speeches, one from the Congregational standpoint by Dean Zimmerman, of the seminary, and the other from the Christian standpoint by myself, there was a rather prolonged period of discussion. This did not seem to satisfy all, so the matter was postponed and taken up as a special order at a later session to which the executive committee of the board of trustees was invited. After they had presented their view of the matter there was a discussion period of an hour and a half. The findings committee brought in the following recommendations with reference to the seminary, which were unanimously adopted:

"We learn with considerable anxiety that Atlanta Theological Seminary is in critical need of money to adjust its business arrangements looking towards complete federation with Elon College in the fall of 1929. We wish to go on record as heartily favoring this proposed removal of the seminary to Elon College. We heartily commend the president and board of trustees and the officials of Elon College for bringing such a happy proposal into actual possibility. Inasmuch as the seminary has vacated its property in Atlanta and has placed that property on sale, and in view of the fact that the seminary is now temporarily connected with Oglethorpe University, awaiting an alleviation of its financial stress, we commend this action on the part of the seminary in associating itself temporarily with Oglethorpe University and we pledge ourselves to do what is possible to bring about the final happy lodgment of the seminary in Elon College in the fall of 1929. Atlanta Seminary has not only filled an actual need in the South already, but gives promise of a much larger service to Southern Churches in the future. When the union of the Christian and Congregational Churches is effected (which we confidently expect), we shall then have a theological seminary that will serve a very much wider constituency and in a more efficient way. The seminary needs $12,000 immediately with which to complete the current year without additional debt. Of this $12,000 this advisory committee asks the Churches and constituency of the Southeast to contribute $3,000 (which would be equal to 6 per cent interest on an endowment of $50,000). We also ask the executive committee of the commission on missions to approve an appeal to the remainder of our Congregational constituency throughout the country for the balance of the amount needed, viz: $9,000, to the end that with the co-operation of the region immediately affected and the other Churches of the country, the entire $12,000 may be secured.

"We, therefore, call upon all of the Churches in the Southeast to set aside one Sabbath Day in January to be known as "Atlanta Seminary Day," at which time the claims of the seminary be presented to the various congregations and offerings made for the seminary with the co-operation of this advisory board.

"We furthermore recommend that a letter signed by three laymen trustees be prepared and sent to a selected list of Congregational Churches in the United States, asking for a special contribution to this special readjustment fund.

"We further recommend that one issue of the Southern Congregationalist, perhaps in January, be devoted to the history, present needs and future plans for the seminary."

FACING CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

All men are religious. Humanity is the basic interest of religion, and the culture and propagation of it is the business of the Church. The spirit of religion has grown far beyond the Churches—Church attendance and statistics do not reveal the health of religion. Religion is the quest for reality. It takes God as the ultimate reality. The religious man realizes that he is in the presence of the invisible, and that his life somehow relates itself to the invisible. Throughout all the past history of our race we have been gradually developing the religious conceptions which are current today. Man's conception of God has mounted century after century. He has become exalted, purified, and ennobled. Each age has worshiped its own thought of God. This clear thinking is what our generation must have in order to clear itself of the curse of materialism. What we need in our religious instruction today is a religious interpretation of all life. Every human relation raises a moral question, every enterprise presents a social problem—man's attention needs to be called away from rights to that of duties. The Christian conscience is staggered by how much it means to be a Christian when the Golden Rule is properly applied.

The task confronting the Protestant denominations is to provide a religious instruction which shall reach all who are entitled to it; and provide instruction which shall be adequate to our highest freedom. The most serious obstacle to effective religious education has been the weakening of Protestant forces through excessive division. This is a part of the price paid for religious freedom. The whole Protestant movement has been a movement toward freedom, and freedom in the Church, as elsewhere, has too often been interpreted as being synonymous with individualism. The one hundred and fifty Protestant denominations in the United States today all testify to this spirit of independence in matters of religious faith and practice. The time is at hand when religious education must be regarded in the light of its relation to democracy and civilization. The declaration that "all men are equal," though often misunderstood and frequently misapplied, has been fondly cherished, while the pronouncement that they are "endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights," among which are "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," has served as a kind of irreducible minimum for democracy.

Real freedom is the result of forces which are in the life of the individual—forces which are spiritual and religious in their nature. A larger freedom becomes courageous, progressive and ascendant just in so far as it dares to have faith, and just in so far as it can be faithful without ceasing to be inquisitive. This faith must be in the possibilities of human nature, in the development of the individual and social values, rather than in the accomplishment of specific results. Such a faith means the assumption of large risks and the making of large sacrifices, and this will be increasingly required of the Christian Churches of America, and this responsibility can only be met through the religious instruction of the youth of our land.

The agencies for fostering such a faith are the Churches and our institutions of learning that have grown out of the Churches. These Churches in their very variety of worship, methods of work and organization are an expression of freedom which is characteristic of democracy. The strength of the Protestant Churches lies in their freedom to discover, to appropriate and to disseminate truth. The modern movement toward popular education is in no sense anti-Christian or opposed to the work of the Christian Church, for in its last analysis it really means emancipation, freedom—intellectual freedom, moral freedom, religious freedom. The enormous intensive development which has taken place in American education has done so, in a great measure, without any reference to any inclusion of the religious element, and has occupied a large place in the child's life which might otherwise be utilized by the Churches for religious instruction were they prepared to provide it. The time has arrived for the Protestant Churches to assume together the responsibility of providing this needed religious element in popular education and thus make their civic contribution to the cause of our larger freedom—in social life, industrial life, political life, religious and Christian life. There is no more immediate and imperative need than that these various organizations should become federated and their programs co-ordinated and unified.

A world crisis is upon us, in which the interests of all humanity are involved. These interests are summed up in the word "democracy," and democracy is the modern expression of the spirit of Christ. He came to accomplish for all men the fullness of life; to bring the individual into a closer consciousness with God; an unbroken communion with Him, that His whole common life should be pervaded by a sense of interdependence and brotherhood. Democracy is the product of the Christian faith. Its ideal is self-realization through self-sacrifice, the finding of the individual self through its submergence in the larger social life.

The perpetuity of our democratic institutions depends upon the intelligence of the democratic citizenship and her moral integrity. Through the public school system the American people have determined to create a citizenship capable of directing a great socialized, industrial democracy, for in the interests of both religious liberty and po-

Churche as a responsibility of the Church rather tegrity of our citizens has been accepted by the ing of religion as a groundwork of the moral inof religion in the free common schools. The teach-

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

YOUTH AND MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE.

By MRS. RUSSEL T. BRADFORD.

(A resume by Mrs. Bradford, superintendent of Young People's Department, Eastern Virginia Conference, and printed by request.)

This year is a gala and memorable year for the young people in our Conference, for according to plans on the evening of November 9th, in this Church the young people's first annual conference will be held. So I was requested by our president, as superintendent of the young people, to make my report this year a bit of a resume of the work accomplished by the young people in this conference since first they organized. Just to have some basis of thought, we will take as a subject, "Youth and the Missionary Enterprise in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference Sixteen Years Ago and Now." And we might take as a theme, "I can do all things through Christ" (Phil. 4:13).

At the session of the Eastern Virginia Conference held in 1911, it was decided that the Conference should have a Woman's Missionary Board, and as the records state, "thus doing our part to supply a long-felt need in the Southern Christian Convention—the need of woman's organized work." Hence, we find that on December 5, 1911, in the pastor's study of the Suffolk Christian Church, this Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board had its first meeting, with the following present: Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Mrs. W. H. Dick, Miss Margaret Brickhouse and Rev. J. O. Atkinson. At this board meeting, plans were made and ideas promoted by which the women and the young people of Eastern Virginia Christian Conference might be organized for the purpose of carrying on an organized missionary work. And as one reviews and ponders on the progress and strides that have been made during the past sixteen years, one is compelled to feel that God was present at that first little board meeting in Suffolk and divinely guided those loyal, earnest and courageous four who first began our work. "I can do all things through Christ, who strengthenest me."

This bit of history is given, for it was out of this board meeting that our young people's work was started. It was at Mt. Carmels Church, Walters, Va., on October 30, 1913, that the first session of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Conference of Eastern Virginia was held. It was at a board meeting in July, before this first conference, that Mrs. W. V. Leathers was elected superintendent of young people's work. For eleven years Mrs. Leathers was the young people's superintendent, and it was through her devout loyalty, faithful service and unlimited love for the missionary cause and its needs that the greater part of the success of the young people's work is due. When she became superintendent, there were two Young People's and four Willing Workers' Societies, with a membership of 117, having that year contributed around $50. At the time of her leaving this office to become the treasurer of our Conference, there were reported in the Conference thirty-three Young People's and Willing Workers' Societies, having a membership of 821 and having raised that year (1924) for missionary work $1,942.75.

To give you the yearly statistical reports for these sixteen years would, I realize, tire your patience and impose upon your time, but the records of the second annual conference as compared with the records and reports of today are truly interesting and encouraging and causes one to ponder over what a little missionary education, combined with earnest and devoted workers, can do.

The second annual woman's conference met in this Suffolk Christian Church fourteen years ago, and there were reported three Young People's Societies and six Willing Workers, with a total membership of 329. Today we report twenty-two Young People's and seventeen Willing Workers' Societies, with a total membership of 779. Our gain financially is also most interesting.

A larger gain might be expected, but our hearts beat with pride and appreciation, and are filled with gratitude to all who have labored so loyally and courageously and who have made our work what it is today.

In 1914 the Young People's and Willing Workers' Societies together sent in $120. This year, as you will see from our treasurer's report, they have contributed to the missionary enterprise of our Conference a total of $2,404.76.

It behooves one to mention the first three Young People's Societies organized; they were Suffolk, Waverly and Barrett's, the first two being two of our strongest societies at this time. It is an interesting fact to note that Waverly, one of the first three, though still small in numbers, yet one of the largest in missionary zeal and enthusiasm, has, with their twelve members, this year contributed $120, which in 1914, as we have just stated, was the entire amount contributed by all Young People's and Willing Workers Societies.

As best could be figured from our records, the Young People's and Willing Workers' Societies of this Conference have raised and sent in for missionary purposes during the time since organization, the amount of $22,139.51. Some of the fields where this money has helped are in the building of a chapel at Santa Isabel, in Porto Rico, contributing to the pastor's salary there, helping the Christian Orphanage and also aiding the mountain work in Virginia.

Not only in a financial way have our Young People's Missionary organizations been helpful, but one finds where there have been such organizations a greater interest has been manifest in the subject of missions in the homes, in the Church and in the community. The young people have had a good time in their societies, have enlarged the circle of their acquaintance, and their interest has been increased in the fundamental and most important message and command of our Lord. These societies have taught that the world's one need is the gospel of our Lord.

Again we discover that not only have our Young People's Missionary organizations taught our young people to give, not only have they created a greater interest in missions, but these societies have taught and are teaching our young people to pray. As one of authority has said, "It is important that we should know the gospel, it is more important that we should pray the gospel. If we pray the gospel proceeds, if we do not pray the gospel halts."

This little striking example occurred a few days past which I think is well worth relating. One of our young people's superintendents was telling me how sad and disappointed she felt over the fact that her society had failed to reach its goal this year, but she said something happened at the last Young People's Society meeting which made her so grateful and happy that it helped to erase the bitter disappointment of failing to reach their financial goal for the year. She is the superintendent of one of our smaller societies composed of boys and girls. At the last meeting, she called for sentence prayers, and every boy and every girl in that society responded so willingly, so earnestly and so devoutly that her heart was touched with gratitude and she was filled with a joy that she could not express. When John R. Mott made his last trip around the world, studying the different missions and their deeds, some one asked him, "What is the greatest need of our missions today?" He said something like this: "It is not more men, not more money. It is more prayer." These sixteen years of organized missionary work among our young people have truly taught them the need, the helpfulness and the value of prayer.

But the work among our young people has just begun. Every new day that dawns is calling as never before upon our young people for devoted and heroic service in the great mission program. Now the young people are not only recognized as potent forces in the Church, but through the youth movements they are assuming a leadership hitherto unknown. Now the Church that evades or escapes the appeal and study of missions must either have a non-missionary pastor, no pastor, or no young people. During these past sixteen years our young people have been brought into a place of responsibility, of influence and of spiritual development that promises much for the future of our Church, the raising up of missionary recruits and the extension of the kingdom of God.

THE CONTRIBUTION OF OTHERS.

One wonders if we are grateful enough for the blessings and the gifts of our friends. Many of us engage our thought in what contribution we can make to others. We often try to convince others to come our way, persuade others to be and believe as we are, that we may confer favors and benefits upon them. Sometimes at least it should be the other way about. When Moses was starting with the Israelites through the wilderness he invited his father-in-law, who was not a Jew, to go with him and Israel, saying, "Come with us and we will do thee good." That did not avail. The priest of Midian did not fall for that invitation. When on the other hand, Moses said, "Come with us and be eyes for us, for you know this wilderness way and can be of great help to us"—that appealed to the Midianite. There are wise ones around about us. Some of them are our friends and daily associates. They help us, and we do not acknowledge that help. They serve as eyes for us, and we do not appreciate their leading. "Come with us and be eyes for us and show us out of this wilderness way." In every Church and around about every Church are men of brain and character and consecrated judgment. Those of us who are trying to do things in the name of the Church and for the Church need them, need their counsel, need their fellowship, their association. This explains that movement now in the world whose organized name is "The Men of the Church." The pastor of the Church and those already deeply concerned are at last calling into their council men whose energies and efforts and wisdom are largely spent in other directions. They are beginning to say to these men, "come on and deliberate with us; your judgment, your wisdom, your fellowship, your co-operation are needed. Come with us and be our eyes, that we may see more clearly the paths that we are to pursue if we are to do this constructive kingdom work."

Let us be grateful that there are men of knowledge and mature judgment and wisdom around about us. Let us thank God for their friendship and their fellowship. And instead of claiming that we already know all that there is to be known and have done all there is to be done, let us counsel with them and take counsel from them as to the better way. There are unlimited possibilities in the Men of the Church Movement. These possibilities will be realized if we shall appreciate the fact that we need their help as well, and as much as they need our help.

CHURCH AND MUSIC.

Why does the Church insist on a musical program preceding the sermon? Is it a matter of custom merely or is it founded upon a sound psychological basis?

The answer to this question is found not only in the fact that music is the means of spiritual impression and expression, but that it prepares for the sermon. When a musical program has been well planned, it has fitted the minds and hearts of the people to receive the message of the hour. This means that there must be the closest co-operation between the minister and the director of music. It also means that the director of music should regard himself as the servant of the minister and use his best endeavor to create the spiritual atmosphere actually conducive to the effectual delivery of the message which the man of God has in mind to bring.

Music, too, serves a further purpose in the Church, in that it tends to attract large numbers of people who are not only soothed but deeply stirred and inspired by great music.

The two great objectives in the modern Church program are an adequate method of achieving the results of religious education and the desire for Christian unity. Music is a real ally in both these fields. The motives and ideals which the religious educator has in mind to make effective in the lives of his pupils can be expressed with winning power through song. And the same is true of Christian unity. When people sing together, a sense of social solidarity inevitably results.

Martin Luther was not far wrong when he said that music is the art of the apostles. The Church would be poor indeed but for the application of this divine art in its services of worship and its educational program.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson X—December 9, 1928.

PAUL GOES TO ROME.

GOLDEN TEXT: "I am not ashamed of the gospel; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Rom. 1:16.

LESSON: Acts 27:1-28:31; Rom. 1:8-15; Phil. 1:12-14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 91:9-16.

"And so we came to Rome." Rome, the mistress of the world, the embodiment of power from the military standpoint. To this great city Paul came as a prisoner, a prisoner for the sake of the sect which, as the brethren from Rome told him, was "everywhere spoken against." Even as he entered the city he was chained to a soldier. So far as the crowds on and along the great highway that led from the seaport to the Eternal City could see, he was just an ordinary criminal, one that had either stood trial and been sent to Rome under sentence, or one who had appealed his case to Caesar. They never dreamed that this humble man came as an ambassador of one who was greater than all the emperors of Rome, and one who should establish a kingdom of whose increase there should be no end. Even as Paul trudged along, he was conscious of one who walked by his side, of one who had told him that He would be with him even unto the end of the world. Thus it was that this man, going into the center of worldly power could say, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rome had seen some great triumphal marches down that Roman road, but when the returns are all in, there has never been anything that compared with the results growing out of Paul's entry into Rome.

Rome had been one of Paul's objectives for a long time. He had written to the saints at Rome—there were evidently Christians at Rome before Paul went there—that he had prayed that if it be the will of God he might have a prosperous journey to Rome. Paul got to Rome all right, but think what was involved in getting there! A narrow escape from death by violence, shipwreck, pain and tears. Men usually have to pay for what they get. But there was something that repaid Paul for all that he suffered and was to suffer. He wrote that the things that had happened to him have fallen out rather unto the progress of the gospel. Even as prisoner, he had talked with the Roman soldiers who came in contact with him. It is not at all improbable that he led many of these soldiers to accept Christ. And then as they went out to all parts of the world they carried with them the good news. Furthermore, it was while Paul was in prison at Rome, or while he was kept as a prisoner in his own hired house that he wrote some of the best of his letters, and hence some of the finest New Testament writings. Here is a classic instance of how a man turned his handicaps into opportunities. Paul had the spirit of the invalid who said, "At first I thought I would make the best of it, and then I decided I would make the most of it." The man worth while is the man who can smile when everything goes dead wrong.

Paul called together those that were the chief of the Jews. He was a loyal patriot. He loved his countrymen. He wanted to share with them the good news. He was eager to know how they felt toward him, but more eager to have them accept the gospel. And when they came and he learned that the Jews from Judea had preferred no charges against him, "he expounded to them the matter, testifying the kingdom of God, and persuading them concerning Jesus." And some believed and some disbelieved. In spite of what some people say, it does make a difference what men believe. Of course, too much emphasis can be put, and often is put, upon mere creeds. But eventually there was a great deal of difference between those Jews who believed Paul's gospel and those who disbelieved it.

"Preaching the kingdom of God and teaching the things that concern the Lord Jesus Christ with all boldness." Preaching a kingdom in the heart of Rome which claimed for itself almost all the nations of the world at that time! Teaching concerning the Lord Jesus Christ under the shadow of the emperor's palace where lived the one who was the acknowledged Sovereign of most of the then known world. This man Paul certainly did have boldness. But history is rendering a verdict in his favor. Mighty and proud Rome is referred to as one of the great empires that have gone into decline. The kingdom of God is increasing and the end is not yet, not until the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ.

Teaching Points.

1. God often works out His purposes in mysterious ways.
2. Genuine friendship has power to inspire and encourage.
3. He who knows that he is doing what God wants him to do need fear nothing.
4. God keeps His promises.
5. Do the hard thing first.
6. A man can witness for Christ, no matter where he is.
7. Some of life's most fruitful periods are times of enforced inactivity.
8. A man is never a prisoner so long as his spirit is free; he is never free so long as his spirit is bound.
9. All things work together for good to those who love God.
10. Moral courage is fundamental in the Christian life.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, December 9, 1928.

TOPIC: "How Should a Christian's Christmas Be Different?"—Luke 2:15; 2 Cor. 9:15.

Some Bible Hints.

If we hear the angels' message our Christmas will be different, sending us on a new mission (Luke 2:15).

New truths should always drive us to do something. They change us. So does Christ when He comes to us (Luke 2:15).

Do we, like the shepherds, really want to see and understand the meaning of Christmas? It is an endless, glorious study (Luke 2:15).

The Christian has received for his Christmas present the richest gift on earth—Christ Himself—and that transforms his life (2 Cor. 9:15).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The world's Christmas is material, concerned with material things; the Christian's is spiritual, concerned with Christ and His service.

Our Christmas should be unselfish, so that we look not for presents but for opportunities to bring a ray of sunshine into darkened lives. It is for us to find how.

The Christian's Christmas is different in its motive. Its driving force is love to Christ. Its aim is to bring to others the Christ-spirit, and not merely material things.

If we understand the meaning of Christmas we shall spend it in worship. Angels, seeing the marvel of it, worshiped and praised. How can we do otherwise?

A Few Illustrations.

Endeavorers who help neglected groups make their Christmas different. They send hundreds of cakes, cards, gifts to prisoners, and achieve the joy of real service.

Words are service as well as deeds, and a single word may change the whole complexion of Christmas for some one. Kindness is the transforming power.

We can prepare a Christmas tree for poor children, or even a municipal Christmas tree for the whole town; and we can organize a Christmas-carol choir to sing around the tree.

The Christian, like the wise men, sees the star. For him, Christmas means Christ in him, a heavenly guest who abides. The Christian knows that heaven is interested in him.

To Think About.

How can we make every day different from the worldling's days?

What are some of the things that spoil Christmas?

Why does money count for little at Christmas?

NEWS NOTES.

The writer of these notes is not dead—he simply sleepeth. The doctors see to it that he stays in bed part of every day, and that he does nothing of any consequence the rest of the time. They say that he should soon be able to work again, if he will continue to rest for another month or two. But he does not want to rest so long at once. Perhaps he can write a few lines for this page each week as a sort of rest from the other rest.

Quite a number of Sunday Schools have sent in offerings for the Board of Christian Education since the call was made recently. Your board is very grateful. If the other schools will do as well, the chances are that the work will continue to grow. But please do not forget that it takes money to do this work. Mr. C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C., will gladly credit you with any amount you may send to him.

This is Thanksgiving week. Every boy and girl should know the story of Thanksgiving, and at least three reasons for having such a day. Let me suggest that gratitude is an essential for happy and successful living. Ingratitude closes one's eyes to beauty—such things as sacrificial service as in the case of mothers and Church-workers—and makes one suspicious of others, as was the trouble with the man Jesus told about who received only one talent. But gratitude makes one happy because the good things are seen and enjoyed, there is a kindly feeling towards others, and the blessings of God are received and appreciated. And happiness tends to success because it releases new energy, creates friendships, gives faith, and develops courage. Gratitude is a hardy little plant that can sometimes be found crushed down between the walls of a hard heart, but can be cultivated and caused to grow to be a large, flowering and fruitful plant in any life. The best kind of cultivation is to count your blessings, and name them one by one. All that we have comes from others and from God. The very best gift of all is the gift of God's love in Jesus Christ, our Lord and aSviour.

A hundred and eighteen children at the Christian Orphanage await the expression of gratitude from the people in the Sunday Schools and the Churches. If we are grateful for what we have, we will want to share with those who are less fortunate. The Orphanage is in need of our liberality. It deserves the very best that we can do. And we can do a fine part, for God has given good harvests. Let's make the superintendent and the children at the Orphanage very happy by giving freely of our bounty.

Christmas will soon be here. The children in your community will want to know the meaning of that delightful season. There should be a special program which will leave a proper impression on those childish minds so that when they become men and women they will remember with pleasure the Christmas program in the Church of their childhood, and will be better because of that memory. Are you planning such a program? It is time to begin. Please do it for the sake of the children, and in honor of Him who was a Child at Christmas time.

BANNERS AWARDED.

At the annual conference of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of Eastern Virginia, held in Suffolk, October 26th, several banners were awarded the societies making the best grade on questionnaires sent to them. Three woman's societies made a score of 100 per cent—Christian Temple, Franklin and Bethlehem. Christian Temple sent the largest amount per member, $4.72, and was awarded the banner. Franklin sent $4.59 per member, and Bethlehem $4.05 per member. Of honorable mention among the woman's societies were First Church, Portsmouth, Richmond, Waverly and Holy Neck. Holy Neck did not get 100 per cent on questionnaire, but sent in the largest amount per member ($9.21) of any Woman's Society in the Conference. Waverly's average amount was $6.85, and Dendron's $7.53.

The Young People's banner had four societies tying for it, all making 100 per cent on questionnaire—Waverly, Holland, Franklin and Windsor. Waverly sent in an average of $12 per member; Holland, $6.91; Franklin, $4.50, and Windsor, $1.21 per member. Waverly received the banner. Of honorable mention among the Young People's Societies were Suffolk and Rosemont. Suffolk, Franklin and Holland tied, with 100 per cent, on questionnaire for Willing Workers' Societies, Suffolk sending $3.64 per member, was awarded the banner; Franklin sent $2.65, and Holland $2.08 per member. Of honorable mention among the Willing Workers were First (Norfolk), Christian Temple and Holy Neck.

The Cradle Roll banner was awarded the Holy Neck Society, with honorable mention for Franklin. For the first time, one special banner was awarded the society that had the best average attendance at each meeting. This went to Holy Neck's Young People's Society (95 per cent), with honorable mention for Woman's Society at Waverly, 90 per cent; Young People's, at Rosemont, 83 per cent; Woman's Society, South Norfolk, 81 per cent; Willing Workers, Suffolk, 80 per cent.

These banners have certainly created interest and enthusiasm, and each society has started on a race to win next year.

One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE FLY ON THE GOBLET.

"They sow the wind, and they reap the whirlwind."—Hosea 8:1-7.

Hosea is picturing the growth of a bad habit. At first it is like a tiny seed, but it soon becomes a wilderness of weeds.

There is an Eastern fable of a fly which lighted on Abdallah's goblet, took a sip, and went away. But it came again and again, taking a sip each time. It grew constantly and became ever more beautiful. At last it had grown to the size and appearance of a man, who ate Abdallah's food, so that the poor fellow grew thin and weak. In despair, Abdallah struck the demon and drove him away. But after a while the foul fiend came back, charmingly attired, and Abdallah received him with delight. The next day the foolish youth was found dead, and on his throat was the print of a colossal finger as big as a man's hand, in the garden was the mark of a giant's foot three yards long, while all Abdallah's treasures had disappeared.

Such is the fatal power of a bad habit when it is not resisted and destroyed at the very beginning. Whoever dallies with it risks his very soul.

Prayer.—We pray Thee, blessed Holy Spirit, that Thou wilt strengthen us against the evil one and preserve us pure, for the sake of our Redeemer. Amen.—Dr. Amos R. Wells.

TUESDAY.

WITH CHRIST IN HEAVEN.

"That where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14:1-11.

Heaven would not be heaven to us without Christ; have we not Christ's word for it that heaven would not be heaven to Christ without His people? As Dr. R. W. Dale once said, "Christ's joy would be incomplete if we were not with Him in the Father's house. It would diminish our gladness, our anticipation of supreme bliss, if we did not know that our presence with Him would heighten His own happiness."

Our Lord has told us of His happy work making ready for us our beautiful abodes in heaven. But while He is so busy for us, should we not be equally busy for Him? The home He Himself seeks is our souls. We can prepare them for His abiding while we are here on earth. We can make them shine with purity and radiate spiritual loveliness in every part.

Prayer.—Our Father, who art in heaven, where Thou art is heaven indeed, and we may begin heaven now and here, having Thee. Come into our hearts. Amen.—Amos R. Wells.

WEDNESDAY.

TURN ON THE LIGHT!

"When I sit in darkness, Jehovah will be a light unto me."—Micah 7:7-10.

Bishop G. F. Browne reached a hale old age, and was asked by a newspaper editor to give his rules for the continued health and strength which he had attained. He gave the following list: "(1)

To have had healthy parents; (2) to have been brought up in the country; (3)—

"When things look black at night, Turn on the electric light."

Rule No. 1 is beyond our reach for ourselves, but we may heed it for our children. Rule No. 2 may also be out of the question for us, but we can at least spend a part of every day outdoors. But rule No. 3 is easily managed by all, and it is the most important of the three. It means, "Stop worrying." It signifies, "Don't look on the dark side of things. Light is at hand. Get up and turn it on. Flood the room with brightness. Flood your life with good cheer!"

Not every house is supplied with electric light, but every soul may instantly receive the electric current from the Light of the world. Prayer is the button, easily turned. Faith is the wire, quickly stretched.

Prayer.—Forgive us, O Father of Lights, that we sit so much of the time in the darkness. We know that gloom is a sin. We know that cheer is health—health of body, health equally of soul. Shine on us, we pray Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

KNEW WHAT HE WAS DOING.

"The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."—Jas. 5:16.

Salvation is being postponed indefinitely by prayerlessness.

Gypsy Smith met a young man on the street. Finding he could not come to the meeting that night, said, "Well, will you pray for me?"

"You don't know what you ask, man. I have not prayed in ten years."

"That doesn't matter; you can pray, and I want you to pray for me tonight."

"Why, I would not know what to say."

"I will tell you." He wrote down: "O Lord, bless Gypsy Smith tonight, and enable him to preach the gospel in the power of the Holy Spirit that sinners may be converted."

He stopped a minute, thought, then said he would do it, and went his way.

That night, Smith watched for him; and sure enough he did come, right on up to the front. He gave the preacher his hand and said, "You knew what you were doing. When I kneeled to pray for you, I thought I was the worse man in the world. I gave my heart to the Lord; I am now happy."

Prayer.—Our Father and our Lord, we pray to Thee we may see our duty to one another and to our neighbors in praying for and assisting in their welfare. Amen.

FRIDAY.

LIVING UP TO CHRIST'S PRAYER.

"Ask of me and I will give Thee nations for their inheritance."—Psa. 2:8.

Moody and Sankey, when in London, rode out to a gypsy camp. They stayed an hour. Sanky sang to them. A little gypsy boy came up, and with all sincerity said, "Sing that again."

He put his hands on the boy's head and looked up to heaven and said, "God, make this boy a preacher." Result: Gypsy Smith.

The bride and groom had returned, and the next morning when she came down she invited the cook to prayers. The cook refused, saying she was not a Christian and did not wish to come in. The mistress insisted that she should come in. The young man read beautifully. He prayed a graphophone prayer—one that was set, probably was his father's prayer all his life. The next morning he prayed for the sick. It was the morning he set aside to pray for the sick. After he was gone, the cook asked her mistress who was sick?

She replied, "I don't know; why?"

"Well," replied the cook, "Boss prayed for the sick this morning, and as it is my afternoon off I thought I would take whoever is sick some jelly."

When the husband came to dinner, the bride asked, "John, who is sick?"

"I don't know; why?"

"Well, Bridget wishes to know. She said you prayed for the sick this morning and she wishes to take the sick something."

He replied: "Well, coming to think about it, Mr. A broke his leg the other day and they are making him up a purse. If I am going to maintain my credit with the cock, I had better do something besides pray."

Prayer.—Our Father, who art able to give us abundantly, grant unto us a passion for practicing our faith in the works of daily life. Forbid that we shall bring discredit to Thy Church by our indifference. Forgive us all our sins and make us a power for Thee. Amen.

SATURDAY.

JUST FOR FUN.

"God loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Cor. 9:6-15.

A smart young fellow met in the street an aged clergyman and said, "Here! just for fun, I'll give you this five-dollar bill for the charity you pleaded for on Sunday." "Just for fun!" the old minister exclaimed; "why, that's exactly the way it should be, for the Bible says that the Lord loves a cheerful giver, and the exact word in the Greek original is 'hilarious.' The Lord loves a hilarious giver. While you are in your good spirits, a successful young business man like you might double your fun and make it ten dollars."

The spirit of the best sport should be the spirit of our giving to Christ's work. It is a high adventure, this laboring with Christ. There is splendid romance in it. Its results reach to the ends of the earth. There is no telling where a Christian dollar will turn up, or what good it will have accomplished. If any one wants the most enduring enjoyment, let him give of his possessions and himself to the Lord's work.

Prayer.—Infinite Giver, as we receive Thy gifts, we would share them with others. Thus we receive them doubly. Thus we receive with them Thy Holy Spirit. Amen.—Amos R. Wells.

SUNDAY.

WHO "OF SORROWS."

"He was despised and rejected of men—a man of sorrows and acquainted with griefs."—Isa. 53:3.

You cannot drift down the tide of life and be a Christ-man or a Christ-woman. Why? The world is to be saved. That means the tide must be turned.

God-inspired man is to do the turning, and no one can buckle himself to the problem of making others Christian, and not grow sober under the sacrifices which he has to make.

A thousand torchlights, and ten thousand bands cannot convert a single soul, nor can it crinkle the first line of seriousness in a life of merriment.

Can you see why Jesus was a man of sorrows? He threw Himself against forty centuries of wickedness. He was bruised in the mighty effort. He stood up and let forty centuries of wickedness fall upon Him. He held his own, but the blood broke through His body like great drops of perspiration.

Prayer.—Our dear Father, give unto us the sweet spirit of Jesus to see the real reason for things, to covet the truth and Thy life may obtain. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

When you read this letter you will perhaps have eaten your Thanksgiving dinner. We truly hope you had a good one and enjoyed it. As many of our Churches and Sunday Schools will make their Thanksgiving offering on the first Sunday in December for the Church's Orphanage, we hope your good Thanksgiving dinner will put you in a fine frame of mind for services on that day, and also for the Thanksgiving offering to be made that day.

We want you to think of the 118 little children in your Orphanage who are solely dependent upon your offerings for bread to eat, clothes to wear, and a home. If your children were here you would want us to give them the best the Church has to give. Your neighbor's children are here. The Bible tells us to love our neighbor as ourself. Let every member of the Christian Church make an offering to help to support these little children. "God loves a cheerful giver."

STEWARDSHIP.

By far more Churches this year are observing the November-December stewardship period than in any previous year. At a recent meeting of the pastors of the Miami Ohio Conference, the president asked for a showing of hands as to how many were actually observing it with some definite program, and there was a fine response. By the way, this Conference is planning to build its next Conference program with stewardship as its central idea.

We are happy to have personal testimonies from tithers in our own Churches. We are anxious to know their experiences with this great scriptural truth. Tithers' enrollment day next month will mean much spiritually to any Church that makes much of the occasion, having carefully planned for it.

Churches and Church officers, as well as pastors, should ever be facing the relationship in amount which they raise and use for themselves and their own congregations and the amount they spend for the larger work of the kingdom. Christian leaders must ever consciously face the question, "Is our Church budget out of balance?" The benevolences of a Church should actually keep pace with the increase in expenditures for local purposes. It is all too common to hear the reason for smaller benevolences, "This year our local expenses are more; we are increasing our equipment, paying larger salary, or doing something for ourselves that requires more funds." Benevolences should increase with increasing expenditures for our own Churches and homes. Have you faced what your Church actually did last year for you and yours as compared with your benevolences? We should ever keep before us "as much for others as for ourselves."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be in every home in the Southern Christian Convention. We have around thirty-three thousand members. Counting five members to the family, we should have six thousand and six hundred families. If each family would take THE CHRISTIAN SUN it would bring in to THE SUN the sum of $13,200 per annum and put it on a sound financial basis. Our people would be informed as to our institutions and would become more interested. Our denomination would grow, and all of the institutions of our denomination would be better supported and be able to do a greater work. But the circulation manager is just one human being and can only do one man's work. It is impossible for him to visit all the Churches in behalf of THE SUN. It would cost too much in the first place, and, too, he has too many duties to take the time. Every Church ought to have a committee to work up the subscription list for THE SUN and make a special effort to place it in every home. It is a paper worthy to go in any home. We truly hope our pastors will take more interest in sending in renewals and new subscribers. Some of our pastors have helped us some. We are grateful. Help us to place THE SUN in each home.

litical freedom they remove the formal teaching than the State, and the outgrowth of this action is seen in the denominational colleges. If the Church is to build a great system of religious education, she must raise up a vast army of religious teachers, administrators and editors; which can only be done through her Church schools. The period of reconstruction is calling for foreign leadership such as no previous age has witnessed. The newly democratized nations of the world are demanding Christian teachers, preachers and social workers more rapidly than they can be adequately trained.

The Protestant Churches of America must not fail the cause of democracy in this hour of the world's history. Upon them rests, primarily, as we have seen, the responsibility of taking the initiative in this great task. The task is difficult because it is so nearly new, but the Churches will not hesitate on this account. They will not be so unpatriotic as to ignore their country's need nor so selfish as to think mainly of their own denominational upbuilding or of merely national prestige. It is an hour of supreme opportunity for the Churches to render a world service. Will they be equal to the task? Will they accept the challenge?

PROGRAM.

Following is the program of the C. M. A. of the Eastern Virginia Conference, which is to hold its annual session at the Suffolk Christian Church on Tuesday, December 4, 1928:

Morning Session.

- 10:30. Call to Order by President Poythress.
Song and Devotional Service.
10:45. Address—"Glad You are Here," by Pastor Hardeastle.
10:50. Address—"Glad to Be Here," Rev. T. N. Lowe.
10:55. Roll Call and Collection of Dues.
Announcement of Committees.
12:00. Talk Around—"Where Should We Build a New Church?" led by Rev. W. C. Hook.
12:30. Luncheon.

Afternoon Session.

- 2:00. Service of Song and Prayer.
2:15. Address—"Building and Developing Churches," Rev. H. C. Caviness.
2:45. Reports of Committees.
3:15. Miscellaneous Business.
3:45. Adjournment.

November has been designated C. M. A. month, and pastors and Church leaders have been urged to secure as many new members as possible. An exchange of pulpits in the interest of the campaign for new members has also been suggested where pastors deem it advisable.

PORTO RICO GRATEFUL FOR HELP.

I wish to thank you for your thoughtful and quick response to our urgent appeal for clothing to help the unfortunate people of this island, who are suffering more than their share. Two days after I received your box of clothing, with many others, I took them to our country chapels and opened the doors and gathered the needy ones in and tried to meet some of their needs. I wish that you could have been with me to see the long lines of poor people, some of them almost naked, anxiously waiting for some aid. The conditions that exist now are beyond description. However, many sad and sickly faces were made glad by your clothing. I can assure you that every article was greatly appreciated, and used to the best of advantage.

Our country work has suffered the most, and most of our people are left without homes, food and clothing. Many are living under the trees and under their destroyed huts. Up to this time they have been enjoying the beautiful fresh air and sunshine, but now the rainy season has started, and what are these poor ones going to do? God knows! The Red Cross has been helping a great deal, but as yet it has not reached many country sections. Many of these unfortunate people have been provided with tents, but even the tents are very little protection during the heavy rainfalls. May God have mercy upon this island and save its people from starvation and darkness and show them the best path that leads to salvation.

I have been working over fifteen hours daily and writing about twenty letters weekly to acknowledge the boxes that have come to our aid. I am proud of our Churches for their splendid spirit of co-operation and help. I have been receiving fifteen boxes weekly from our different societies and groups. Over eighty people call for clothing daily and other help. It is a wonderful work, but very strenuous and nerve-wrecking, especially to see these pitiful conditions that are existing among these people.

Our repair work is progressing nicely, and the people are trying to do their part. Most of our country chapels are left without hymn books, Bibles, etc. You folks just can't imagine with what we have to put up; however, we are trying to do the best, through your kind aid, and above all under the care of our Master.

I wish to thank you again for your help. We need your daily prayers. I am,

Sincerely yours in His service,
Ponce, P. R. VICTORIA E. ADAMS.

CLACK.

Whereas, the angel of death visited our community Friday evening, at 6 o'clock, November 2, 1928, and plucked from our midst one of our most beautiful flowers and transplanted it on the other side of the river; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in the going of Simmie Lee Clack, we feel very keenly our loss, but we feel our loss is heaven's gain.

2. That we, the Young Ladies' Class of Roanoke Christian Sunday School, express our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family.

3. That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

4. That we shall profit by the consecrated Christian life she lived among us, although it was only twenty-three years, four months and twenty-seven days.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be recorded on our minutes, a copy sent to The Christian Sun, and a copy sent to her widowed mother.

WYRIK.

Mrs. Ibbie Apple Wyrick departed this life November 15, 1928, at the age of 61 years, 10 months, 22 days. She is survived by her husband, J. A. Wyrick, and six children, as follows: Rev. L. L. Wyrick, Rosa F. Wyrick, Mrs. I. B. Christmon, Annie Ila Wyrick, Mrs. W. J. Brown and Martin P. Wyrick; ten grandchildren, four brothers and three sisters.

Interment was at Apples Chapel, where she had been a faithful and devoted member for more than forty years. The large crowd and the many pretty flowers attested the esteem in which she was held. Truly a good woman has gone to her reward. May the Heavenly Father comfort the loved ones. Burial services by the writer, assisted by Revs. J. F. Apple and R. A. Whitten.

T. J. GREEN.

KLAPP.

Floyd, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Klapp, was born June 19, 1928; died November 12, 1928; aged 4 months and 23 days. He leaves one brother, father and mother, the grandparents, many uncles and aunts. His life was very short, but not too short to be entwined about the hearts of the loved ones. May the Lord comfort them all, especially the young parents. Burial service at Apples Chapel by the pastor.

KING.

Again the ranks of the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union of the Suffolk Christian Church have been broken; again God has called home one of our members, which reminds us that one by one we are being called from this earthly habitation to our home in the sky.

In the sudden and unexpected death of Mrs. Etta Riddick King, on November 5, 1928, the society has lost one of its loyal and devoted friends and co-workers. Therefore, resolved:

That we submit to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

That we seek to emulate her worthy example of gentleness, meekness and devotion to family, friends and Church.

That a copy of these resolutions be admitted to the records of the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union, a copy sent to The Christian Sun, and a copy sent to her family.

BRANCH—SAVAGE.

A quiet but pretty marriage was solemnized on September 6th, at 3 P. M., in the pastor's study at the Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., when Mr. William Caleb Branch and Miss Odell Leigh Savage were united in marriage. The bride had as her only attendant her sister, Miss Rosa Lee Savage, of Whaleyville, Va., and the groom had as his best man Mr. Smith, of Suffolk, Va. Mr. Branch is the son of Mrs. Katie Branch, of Wakefield, and holds a responsible position. Mrs. Branch is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Savage, of Whaleyville, Va., and for some time has held a responsible position in Suffolk.

Immediately after the ceremony they left for Richmond, Va., where they will be at home at 2920 Elwood Avenue. The ceremony was performed by the writer, assisted by Rev. H. S. Hardeastle, using the ring ceremony of the Christian Church. We wish for them many years of usefulness and happiness.

THE PRIME MINISTER OF GREAT BRITAIN ON THE BIBLE.

The Bible is a high explosive but it works in strange ways, and no living man can tell or know how that book, in its journeyings throughout the world, has started the individual soul in ten thousand different places into a new life, a new belief, a new conception, a new faith. Those things are hidden until some man, some people, is touched beyond all others by the divine fire, and the result is one of those great revivals of religion which repeatedly through the centuries have startled the world and stimulated mankind; and which will recur again.—From an address by the Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister of Great Britain.

No interest in missions? The only explanation is either inexcusable ignorance or willful disobedience.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

For catalog and other information, address S. L. Beougher, President.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

MORE ENCOURAGING NEWS.—

These columns carried news last week of the improved showing in the financial reports from the Methodist Episcopal Church. During recent years it has come to be the expected thing for Church organizations to come up with a deficit. The last annual session of the General Baptist Association for the State of Virginia, which met in Alexandria, Va., on November 13th, had a most encouraging financial report of the work done by the Baptists of the State. The association had received a total of $668,048, and had expended $647,986, leaving a balance of $20,062. The association was greatly enheartened by this evidence of increasing interest. It may be that the waves of gains and losses in Church work is due to the fact that when things are on the upgrade people generally become careless in the observance of spiritual things, and there is a consequent falling off. The alarm over the poorer showing brings us back to renewed spiritual activity and earnestness, and immediately there is a resultant increase.

"THE WORLD TO COME."—

Dr. William E. Barton used the above theme in his Armistice Day sermon at the Stanford Memorial Church, Palo Alto, Calif. President-elect Hoover and Mrs. Hoover were in attendance, this being their first attendance at Church after the election. Dr. Barton said, in speaking of the world to come: "The world to come, of which the text speaks, is not heaven. It is this present world as it is to come to be. Do not let any one make you think the world is coming to a speedy end. There is nothing either in astronomy or in the Bible to warrant such a declaration. It is time that ancient heresy was buried and forgotten. God is not going into insolvency. When he made this world He did not overestimate His ability to control it. He will not in a petulant confession of spiritual impotence scrap a world which He made but is incompetent to govern. Christ died to save this world, because He believed it was worth saving and that it could be saved. We are here to face our problems and fight them out. They are not easy. Who wants them to be easy? Our problem is to bring our moral and spiritual self-control abreast of our progress and physics and chemistry."

SIN AND SALVATION.—

H. Richard Niebuhr, writing of "The Relativities of Religion," makes some interesting observations concerning sin and salvation to this effect: "Perhaps the main reason why interpretations of Christ and God differ so much is because the sense of sin is so various in various times and groups. The first question one must ask about every theologian before one can understand him is this: What does he mean by sin? Only then is it possible to understand his interpretation of Christ and God and salvation. For Augustine, sin is concupiscence; for Luther, it is guilt; for Calvin, it is secularism; for Wesley, frivolity and vice. But the conception of sin in the modern world, or, to speak more modestly, in American Christianity, is rather that of ethical failure. We know that we have missed or are continuing to miss the mark. And this missing of the mark is not just an individual matter; it is social failure. Or again, sin appears today more under the form of selfishness than of sensuality. To be sure, men continue to be aware of guilt and concupiscence, of secularism and vice, but the deep division of their souls appears less as the conflict of the flesh with the spirit and more as the warfare of their selfish with their social purposes."

THE RIGHT WAY.—

In the recent political campaign, the liquor question was greatly in the forefront, perhaps far more than the situation really warranted. There is a marked tendency to pin the hopes for temperance in this country upon political and legislative programs. In the discussion that raged, the liquor situation in Canada was used by both sides, both sides seeing the situation in Canada that which they thought bolstered their contentions. Reports now come from Canada which indicate that the religious leaders of that great people are really beginning to see the light. In Canada, just as in the United States, Church leaders have lent their support to the political organizations that have promised the most favorable support to the temperance cause. Political organizations have so conducted the issue as to cause embarrassment to the Church forces. There is now being launched in Canada a nation-wide effort to educate the youth of Canada with regard to the right personal attitude toward the personal use of intoxicating liquors. An earnest effort is being made to separate the educational campaign from any legislative or political movement. The aim is to teach the young people of Canada what science has shown to be the destructive effects of indulgence in alcoholic stimulants, and to teach them what religion has to say concerning the moral obligation to temperance.

WHY A GREATER NAVY?—

Another measure that will claim the attention of the approaching session of Congress is the action with reference to the bill providing for an expenditure of $274,000,000 for the construction of seventeen ships to increase the United States Navy. Some months ago the world was startled by the proposal that the United States Congress appropriate $800,000,000 for the construction of 274 vessels of various types for increasing naval strength. This came at the time when the rest of the world was directing its thought toward efforts to stabilizing the peace of the world. The magnitude of the proposal, the utter unreasonableness of it, served most effectually to defeat it. Such a wave of protest went up from every section of the country that no effort was made to push the bill. Now comes the modified effort to thus increase the fighting strength of the United States Navy. The Armistice Day speech of President Coolidge indicates that the administration is sponsoring the plan for this bigger navy. If our government should be committed to this big navy program when all the world is seeking for a solution of the problem of war, foreign nations, it would seem, are forced to one of two conclusions. Either the United States is not sincere in its efforts to establish world peace or it is using the ability to build the biggest navy in the world to bring pressure to bear upon the rest of the world to accept such peace proposals as may be advanced by the United States government.

CONGRESS AND KELLOGG TREATY.—

It should be of tremendous interest to all peace-loving people everywhere as to what the approaching short session of Congress will do with the peace pact. The world was electrified by the news that Mr. Kellogg's treaty outlawing war had received favorable consideration and reception by the leading nations of the world. It seems the most far-reaching step toward the guaranteeing of world peace that has ever been made. It is an occasion of pride to every American that one of our fellow-countrymen should have been instrumental in bringing forward such a notable declaration. But we must needs remember that before the United States government is committed to this attitude toward war the treaty must first be ratified by the United States Congress. It would appear that after such a favorable reception of the treaty by the public opinion of this country and the world at large that there should be no doubt as to its ratification by the United States Congress. But when we remember that the League of Nations was projected by America's great war President, that it was joyously acclaimed by the world at large and rejected by our own Congress. The world court had a similar origin, was just as favorably received abroad, and met the same fate at the hands of Congress as did the League of Nations. This, too, being what is sometimes called a "lame duck Congress" makes the ratification of the treaty more problematical. If Congress should fail to ratify or reject the Kellogg treaty it will be but another step in placing the United States in a more impossible light before the world, and make more difficult any constructive measures looking to the stabilizing of international relationships.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Prof. O. W. Johnson, of Elon College, N. C., attended the State Teachers' Convention, which is regularly held during Thanksgiving week in Richmond, Va., and while in the city made THE SUN office a welcome visit.

Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., is attending this week as a delegate from the General Convention of the Christian Church to the quadrennial session of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, December 5th to 12th, at Rochester, N. Y.

The musical program being given on the third Sunday evening of each month at the First Christian Church, corner Grove Avenue and Sheppard Street, are well spoken of in the community. The programs are furnished by the Sunday School orchestra and Church choir.

It is learned with sorrow and grief that Rev. Henry Crampton passed away on Sunday, November 25th, at Lancaster, Ohio, where he had been chaplain in a boys' industrial school. His funeral services were held Wednesday, November 28th, at 2 o'clock, at Eaton, Ohio. Bro. Crampton was one of our faithful ministers, and for a long time was associated with Dr. Summerbell in the Herald office as an assistant. THE CHRISTIAN SUN extends its deep sympathies to the bereaved.

Rev. W. B. Fuller, Linville, Va., who, prior to last annual session of the Valley Conference, was stewardship secretary for that Conference, is succeeded in that position by Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, a member of the Conference, who is now spending a season at Trenton, N. J. This will explain, in a measure, the splendid articles coming from the pen of Mrs. Lincoln now appearing in THE SUN on stewardship. They are certainly worthy and readable productions, and we feel sure they are being enjoyed and appreciated by many SUN readers.

The United States government reported that there were 32,843 deaths from cancer in the United States in 1900, 62,199 in 1910, 85,241 in 1920, and 110,000 in 1927. These figures do not tell the whole story; there are many, many deaths from cancer that are never diagnosed, consequently they are not reported. Now, to bring the facts to our door, there were 110,000 reported deaths from cancer in the United States last year out of a total population of 130,000,000. North Carolina, with a population of 3,000,000, has about 2,550 deaths every year from cancer. This means that there are seven deaths every day in our State from this disease.

The following is from the Herald of Gospel Liberty, November 22d: "Secretary Denison and Secretary Hermon Eldredge represented the Christian Church, October 26th and 27th, as fraternal delegates to the Kentucky State Conference of Congregational Churches, at Berea College, Berea, Ky. They also attended a Christian union service at old Cane Ridge Church, near Paris, Ky., of Disciples of Christ, Congregationalists, and Christians at the grave of Barton W. Stone. Dr. Denison will report the State conference, and Mr. Eldredge will report the Cane Ridge service in another issue."

It is noted with pleasure and with pardonable pride that one of our very successful native pastors, Rev. K. Kitano, Jr., of Sendai, Japan, has entered the Auburn Theological Seminary, Auburn, N. Y., where he plans to spend two years in study. His Church in Sendai recognizes his possibilities to the extent that it is caring for the services during his absence, with the expectation that he will return to them better fitted for his life's work. Brother Kitano comes to an American seminary without financial aid from our Mission Board, or from any American source, so far as we know, and is a product of our missionary work and training in Sendai, where he is already one of our successful and outstanding younger pastors.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN has arranged with Mrs. J. A. Williams, president of the Woman's Board, Southern Christian Convention, to carry the young people's program each month. The program will appear in the last issue of that month prior to the month during which the program is to be used by societies. Mrs. Alice V. Morrill has very kindly provided the first program. Prof. S. A. Bennett, of the department of Christian education of Elon College, has kindly consented to furnish the program for January. Missionary societies will find their programs in THE SUN each month, and we know that this will be appreciated by our missionary societies in particular. Mrs. Morrill very aptly calls attention to the fact that the women, as well as the young people, may use this program since "The Friends of Africa," the missionary study-book, seems far better as a book for the young people than the one specifically recommended for them only.

It is learned, with pleasure, that the work of the United Church (Christian-Congregational) of Birmingham, Ala., goes along smoothly under the leadership of Rev. Geo. H. Dierlamm, pastor. A very active Sunday School and a progressive Christian Endeavor Society are organized and are doing splendid work. Bro. Pressley Ingram, a member of the Christian Church before going into the union, is anxious to get in touch with every member of the Christian Church who is in Birmingham, and also with every Congregationalist, and will appreciate any help that may be rendered in this behalf. The names of such persons living in Birmingham known by any SUN reader should be sent to Rev. G. H. Dierlamm, 526 North Twentieth Street, Birmingham, Ala. By uniting the Christian and Congregational forces of Birmingham, it should not be many years until there is a strong Church in this great Southern city where we should have had a house and an organization years ago.

SERVICE BROADCAST DISCONTINUED.

A number of our people in Virginia and North Carolina have recently enquired why the services of the United Church, Raleigh, N. C., have not been broadcast this year, as last year. The reason is that the radio station here in Raleigh asked us to pay $25 per Sunday instead of the original sum which it was costing. Two denominations in Raleigh are paying the price. We will have to do the same if the service of the United Church is to go to our people outside Raleigh.

We should like to have those of you who are interested write us, as a Church, the Sunday in the month preferred, and whether you would like to have us continue. We will then announce the Sunday in the month through the columns of THE SUN. If there are enough families desiring this, the United Church will resume the broadcast. Address Rev. J. Edward Kirby, United Church, Raleigh, N. C.

CLAIM YOUR SUN HAT.

We want to urge all who are working up the clubs in order to get the hat for their pastor for a Christmas present to send in by December 15th, if possible, so we can deliver the hat before the 25th. We are hoping to receive many club subscriptions by the 15th. Help us place THE SUN in every home. The more we can inform our people about our denomination and what it is doing, the more interested they will become. All of the departments of our Church will be benefitted by an inpouring of new subscriptions.

How can we expect our people to be interested in our colleges, our missions, our orphanage, or any other department of our Church if they are not informed and know nothing about them? If THE CHRISTIAN SUN can be placed in every home you will see the Christian denomination take on new life and we will do greater things for the kingdom of God.

DR. SMITH GETS AUTO.

Dr. L. E. Smith preached on "Stewardship and Tithing" to a large congregation. He asked his congregation if they believed that tithing was the scriptural way and best way to raise money for the Church, and if they did to stand up. Nearly all stood up. What a blessing it would be for the Church and its enterprises if the people would put in practice what they say they believe. We would have money to pay all Church expenses promptly, and some left.

Just at the close of the morning services one of the laymen interrupted Dr. Smith by saying he wanted to say a word. He praised the pastor for being such a wonderful leader. He said, "When you came to us less than ten years ago we had 236 members, and now you have led us out of that little bungalow Church into this magnificent temple with a membership of over 1,400—an average increase of more than 100 a year. So on this Thanksgiving Sunday we want to extend our heartfelt thanks for your wonderful leadership." Then he was presented with a beautiful automobile.

A. M. JOHNSON.

A REQUEST.

Will the Churches of the Valley of Virginia Central Christian Conference be much in thought and prayer that soon, when called upon to name some one of their own number to co-operate with the Conference department and to lead locally in trying to stress the grace of Christian stewardship, unmistakably God may show who should be that one?

This is no light matter. Whether the person upon whom the lot falls be man or woman, young or old, is of little consequence. The big consideration should be, "Is it one who believes in and is willing to work for the coming of Christ's kingdom by actually putting first things first?"

MRS. J. J. LINCOLN,
Sec'y Stewardship V. V. C. C. Conference.

BRO. FLOWERS' WORK.

A Methodist minister says that "Bro. A. R. Flowers has no trouble making friends among spiritual-minded people." This minister voices the sentiments of many of us Methodist brethren in many sections. Bro. Flowers has been an inspiration to many of our young people, and older ones as well. He always comes to us as a real brother in Christ and talks to us and to our children out of the deepest interest of his heart.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

A GUILTY SINNER.

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE.

"If the wicked will turn from all the sins he hath committed and keep my statutes . . . he shall surely live."—Ezk. 18:21.

"I am a guilty sinner."—William Edward Hickman's Confession.

(The following is a sermon preached by Chaplain Rountree to his men aboard the U. S. Utah, Hampton Roads, Va., Sunday, November 11th.)

Just about two weeks ago, William Edward Hickman, of California, was led to the electric chair, where he paid with his life the penalty for the life he had taken, that of a little girl. Steadfastly, he maintained his innocence until the very last, using every possible means to secure reprieve. When all hope was gone and he knew he must pass into the other world, he collapsed and said, "I am a guilty sinner." This is the world's comment on the subject of a man's repentance, a thing of life so beautiful that it is said "The angels of heaven rejoice over one sinner that repenteth."

Repentance was the first corrective thought of the ages; it was the first thought in the ministry of Christ; it was the fundamental theme of all His teachings; it was His commission to the twelve apostles; it was His last message to the world when He left; and we know that it is the first element of our natures in correcting wrong.

What Is Repentance?

Then the first question which confronts us is, what is repentance? We understand that literally it means "to turn around." It means a change from something to something; from something of which we are sorry to something which we think will be better. We read of one Thorndale who did not believe in the efficacy of repentance. He said, "God never pardons. His laws are irrevocable. The mind that deserts its better knowledge must suffer." But it seems that subsequently he repented of this saying and reversed it by saying, "God always pardons: for remorse is penitence, and penitence is new life and returning peace." Ben Hur expressed this when he is caused to say, "Penitence is something more than remorse for sin. It comprehends a change of nature befitting heaven."

For example, we are told of a story of a little boy who used to love to play in the horse-trough. His father gave him a few lectures and forbade him to do it again. He promised that he never would. But each day he returned to his play in the trough. Finally the father, in exasperation, administered a sharp whip. After that, the boy played no more in the horse-trough. The first was not repentance. He had no such desire. The latter was impressive, and he acquired a change of heart. True repentance consists in two things: the heart broken for sin and the heart broken from sin. As such, Carlyle said, "It is the most divine of all acts; and the greatest of faults is to be conscious of none." But in the conscious beauty and efficacy of repentance, some one has said, "Spotlessness may do for angels, but repentance unto life is the highest that belongs to man."

Imperfect Repentance.

Now, the next question which we naturally think of is the hypocrisy in repentance. There is a common comment among folks everywhere attributing impure motives to one who repents. They are rather cynical about it and lack trust in such actions. There are some reasons for this, for so many cases do lack sincerity, as we have seen from their later actions, and hypocrisy in the Church still exists, we are ashamed to say. These comments are such as George Elliot and others have given, when she said: "Penitence is a weight of undigested meals eaten yesterday." "It is not so much sorrow for the ill we have done as it is the fear of the ill that may happen to us."

The Church cannot help this. There seems to be imperfection in everything. But we are glad that there is a power which enables us to make the difference and not let the imperfections of some be a stumbling-block to us. There is a warmth that softens iron and hardens clay; which both develops energies of life and sets in decay. This warmth is a great power in a hot-house. It is also a great power to a dead carcass. There is a warmth that is a great power to nature and its foliage and fruit, and at the same time it is the power of dissolution.

So is repentance to be classified. Without the energy to put it in effect, it is a most despicable disease; but when it is linked with the heart-life, it reconstructs the principles of that life. Therefore, our text.

Death-Bed Repentances.

Another thing which concerns us vitally is the question of death-bed repentance. The most of us are compelled at one time or another to look death squarely in the face. It may be through sickness, an operation, an accident, or a hundred other experiences; and none of us have too much courage in such an hour; neither can we all be so sure that there are "harps and crowns and palm branches" awaiting every one.

Dr. Francis E. Clark has left with us a story of his own experience in which he says that while crossing the great Atlantic during the war there was a collision with his ship while in a great fog. The captains of each vessel exchanged profane compliments. The passengers swarmed the companion-ways with few clothes, but each with his life preserver; and while the stewards were pounding the doors to awake profound sleepers, all were busy in preparation to abandon ship. But it was learned that the damage was not below the water-line, and soon they were on their way. The point is, this was an hour of facing death, and by drowning, which all dread, and yet Dr. Clark did not register a single sensation that indicated that he was thinking about death. He did not think of the "everlasting arms." There were some hysterical and nervous passengers, but the most of them seemed to be waiting for what would happen next. "In hours of death," he says, "God sends grace to rob it of its terrors; but if one has not made peace with God, the excitement and the numbness which overcomes one in such hours do not contribute to repentance." The fact is that within a few hours after this accident the passengers did not seem to be affected seriously. They were returned to playing cards, singing rag-time songs and drinking cocktails as before.

And yet, however much discount we may place on death-bed repentances, who knows enough about the worth of such an act or such a change? If one, at the last hour, calls on God and professes repentance and faith, were to recover, who can say that he would forget it all? Who can say that he would not forget it all? We are told of an instance in which a thousand cases were tested who got well, and three of them remained faithful. We must conclude this. Is it repentance to cease from sinning only when the power of sinning is gone? Is it not mockery to style it repentance when it is not the man who forsakes his sins, but his sins that forsake the man? What is confession when a man confesses under nervous breakdown, his frame prostrate, his mind enfeebled, the functions disordered, the power to think is gone, and prayer reduced to mere restlessness, fever and pain?

And yet it is God who pardons, and He only can judge the heart. Perhaps that moment of confession is the soul's beginning for God, and from it he will grow toward perfection until somewhere and somehow, in God's way and good time, he will become, like others, in the likeness of his Master.

Further, no man can die the death of the righteous who has not lived the life of the righteous, and mere wishing will never bring it. Why should any come to a good death who does not live a good life? Is life so foolish? Is God an unrighteous God? Do we expect to gather grapes of apple trees? "A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit." In this, God is talking about the living man, and He means to teach us that if a man lives a hard-boiled, unclean, impure, dissipated life, can he look for mellowness, profit, pleasure and happiness. The only assurance of a proper death is to have a life bent against evil, to set self against deceit, to retrace crooked steps, to walk the straight and narrow way, to recognize the difference between the last end of a bad man and a good man—that it is the natural result of his voluntary acts. To wish for a kind of death without living the life is to dream of an effect without a cause; it is to wish for promotion, advancement in rating and honors possible to be bestowed without working for it; it is praying for an education without studying for it.

The Blessing of Confessing.

The next thing we need to think about is the act of confessing and the blessing of it. Some people have the idea that to be a Christian is just to begin doing good—that no act of penitence or confession is necessary. The Bible has something to say about this. "He that covereth his transgressions shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth his sins and forsaketh them shall obtain mercy." "He that confesseth me before men, him will I confess before my Father who is in heaven." This is a truth which is so, not because God said so but God has said so because it is the truth. Not long ago, in a city of the United States, a speeding automobile struck a man crossing the street. The negro driver may have escaped by beating it away. But, to the contrary, he picked up the victim, rushed him to the hospital and provided for every care for him, and then reported the affair to the police. He admitted speeding, but that the man crossed in a dark place. He expressed his great sorrow and would make amends as far as it was possible. This negro was well known. He had the respect of the citizens; his extreme honesty in this case won the forgiveness of all, even though the life of the victim could not be restored.

To confess is to own to man and God that our sins would have never darkened our lives if we had not chosen to commit them. But that is not all. It goes deeper yet; we must understand that sin is not an act that happens without a cause; sin does not come out of nothing; it comes out of the person's life. It may be in the blood, or it may be a deliberate choice. Whatever its source, it is poison to us and everybody else. To recognize this is a confession. And deeper yet: it is not confessing sin to admit merely the fact that one is a "sinner," or that a thing is base, or that something else is better; but it is confessing sin when we come to a conclusion freely in our hearts that a thing is wrong and we will not be guilty; it is confessing sin to realize that a thing is awful and

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

IN SUNNY FLORIDA AGAIN.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

Orlando, Fla., Dec. 1, 1928.

Just here for the sheer joy and fun of it! And it is glorious! Conferences over, there were six days in between. The temptation was too strong. The editor fled away to lovely Orlando, and to this sane and sensible sanitarium. Oh! beautiful and balmy Florida. It was cold and shivery at Fuller's Chapel during the Eastern North Carolina Conference this week. It is glowing, glimmering, sunshine here in Orlando, warm, wholesome, welcoming. How God's good sunshine does cheer the soul, make glad the heart, stimulate the mind and rest tired nerves. The gospel of sunshine, God's great tonic, ought to be preached more and practiced everywhere. If one feels chilled in body, mind, nerves or spirit, come on down to Florida—especially to Orlando and the Florida Sanitarium, where they furnish sunshine raw, cooked or canned, just as one prefers or needs. Today this writer could not take in the sunshine fast enough in the broad-open, so they took him indoors, stretched him on a table, and for ten minutes, for only a dollar extra, uncanned some delicious sunshine and pumped his body, heart, liver and lungs full of it till the whole system was aglow, heart-beats were easy and breathing was a joy. And they feed you on smiles, vegetables, fruits, nuts, raisins, dates, orange juice (by the gobletful), with a whole lot of other kindness thrown in, but never a mouthful of meat, flesh, fish nor fowl, no coffee, nor vinegar, nor pepper nor any other poison to curse and clog up your system with. It is good indeed to be here, even for five days of balmy, beautiful, bountiful Florida sunshine and hospitality.

It was just twenty-four hours, and the miracle was wrought. At 2:30 P. M. Wednesday, the 28th, the writer was having a late and happy lunch with his friends and relatives, Rev. J. E. Franks and wife, in a Raleigh, N. C., restaurant. Just at 2:30 Thursday P. M., the 29th, he had registered in Orlando and dropped into a restaurant to find familiar faces and lunch delightfully with friends found here last winter. And for four hours before lunching here he had sat on an observation car of a Tampa special, the electric fan whirring to keep passengers comfortable, car doors open, and seats delightful out on the broad veranda of the open spaces. And the spreading groves of the bending orange and grapefruit trees on either side the roads, as far as the eye could see; the yellow in the green; the green waving and almost blushing to show you her yellow, rich, ripe or ripening fruit. An orange tree with its fruit is the most perfect blending of green and yellow that the eye of man ever looked upon—green the mildest and softest of all colors to the human eye; yellow the richest and the ripest. God, in His godness and glory, packed into a ripe orange tree a compound and a consummation of coloring such as no human artist has ever equaled or approached. The human eye is so constructed that it, the very weakest eye, can look upon an orange tree laden with ripe fruit all day and never tire. One supposes that is why one may travel through and look at all southeastern Florida and never grow tired. And then these massive, marvelous swamps. I used to think a swamp was dark, dreadful and repulsive. Florida swamps are not. The tropical trees, plants and verdure there are beautiful—restful indeed to the human eye, already weary with winter elsewhere—and afford to the traveler an unending variety of magic and marvelous scenery. The graceful tree-moss that hangs in wavey, slender, silken cords from limb and branch of pine, palm and oak, makes one feel that the fairies or wood nymphs have been weaving their attire of "hectic, fluffy" silk and rayon, for these dames and damsels of swamp and woodland. If Florida is not great, and doesn't stay so, it is all man's fault and not God's. For here indeed the Creator smiled His abundance and did His best with climate and with color.

One finds some changes on returning after seven months' absence. They have had a hurricane or two. They say it is an ill wind that blows no good. Months ago it was said that there were no rabbits in Florida—they had all killed themselves running against real estate stakes and markers with which all the forests and fields were laid off. Well, these stakes are largely gone now. The cyclones blew them away. The rabbits may now return and rear their young and people their hiding-places in peace. So may other sane and sensible beings. Florida's real estate boom and bizarre are over. Some people who wish to come for health and happiness and not be molested may come on back now and spend their winters—and summers too, if they wish—in peace. If the cyclones have served to give the rabbits and other law-abiding, docile, peace-loving animals a chance to live in and enjoy this favored land, surely they were a blessing in disguise.

A wonderful land indeed is this in which we live, and a most marvelous age. If the climate of one section does not agree, one may fly away to another, get a fresh breath, lungs and liver full of life, sunshine and good cheer, then go back and tackle his job in the place and among the people with whom God has cast his lot for him. I am writing these lines out in the open, beside a beautiful, shimmering, silvery lake, while a warm sun keeps the body aglow, and balmy breezes fan the face and form; waving, mossy, graceful pine and palm sway back and forth on bank and lawn, and one feels that it is glorious to be living where God is so near and so good.

A TRINITY OF VALUES.

Every member of the Church can become valuable in a useful way by accepting and practicing the trinity values. The first of these is regular attendance at the trinity meetings of the Church—preaching, Sunday School and prayer meeting. There is a triune value in such attendance—value to the member himself, to the Church, and to others. Few members have realized the importance of attendance. It is primary in its value and exerts an influence for Christianity that can never be reached by irregular attendance. There is no roll call, as at school, but God keeps a record of Church attendance as a mark of interest and a sign of loyalty to Christ. Who counts most in the Church? The regular attendants. "They first gave themselves" is seen in those who are always present in the house of prayer.

The second is systematic givers. It is not the "drives," the "special offerings," the "campaigns for money" that count most in maintaining the cause of Christ at home and abroad. It is the every-Sunday givers, the regular contributors that keep alive the current expenses and the benevolent enterprises of the Church. Most workers get their salaries and wages weekly or monthly, and they are better able to "lay aside on the first day of the week" than to give for a year or half-year at one time. It is not the special train that maintains the railroad, but the regular train that runs all the time and on time. It is not the flood that runs the mill or the power plant; it is the smaller current that runs all the time. This illustrates the great truth that it is not the large givers that support the Church, but that large number of small givers that are present and drop in their offerings in the regular way. This does not mean that floods and large givers do not have their place and their value; but it does mean that regular, systematic attendance and giving keep the mills of the Church running all the time. There is a personal value in this systematic giving. It makes it easier to give and it influences others to give. The Church should be run on a cash basis except in its larger enterprises as its colleges. Great institutions have to be operated on the bond basis. All great corporations are in debt; but the local agencies of such corporations operate on the cash basis. It should be so in the business of the Church.

The third of trinity values for a good Church member is the reading of the Church paper, which in the case of the Southern Christian Convention, is THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Outside of the Bible, there is no book or paper of as much value to a member of the Christian Church in the Southern Convention as the reading of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Such reading keeps the member in touch with Elon College, the Christian Orphanage, home and foreign missions, the needs of the Church organ, the mountain work, the women's societies, and that fills the mind and heart with a sense of opportunity, obligation and privilege. THE EASTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

The last of the Conferences this fall was the Eastern, at Fuller's Chapel, in Vance County, N. C., November 26-27. The first afternoon was an experiment, and not largely attended. The Conference voted to go back to the A. M. hour of meeting and commence on Tuesday next year. The session this year was hurried and seemed incomplete, as the final adjournment came at a late hour of the second day. The sessions of the last day were well attended, crowded with reports and discussions, and a haste to finish the business and adjourn. The president of the Conference was Bro. Geo. T. Whitaker, who having served three years successfully and successively, retires. His message as delivered, and voted by the body to be printed in THE SUN, will appear soon. In the absence of the secretary, and by his request, Rev. J. W. Patton acted as secretary. Rev. M. T. Sorrell opened the first session with a fitting devotional service; Rev. D. M. Spence, the pastor, gave the address of welcome, and Rev. Robert Lee House made the response. On the second and final day, Rev. J. E. Franks conducted impressive devotionals, and Bro. J. A. Kimball presented and delightfully discussed the report on social service. Rev. J. Fuller Johnson, in addition to his report on evangelism, delivered an eloquent and an appealing address on that great theme. Rev. J. Lee Johnson presented the report on foreign missions, calling attention to what was done and what was left undone on the foreign field, and recommended one of three plans for all Churches in raising their mission funds the coming year. (1) Either every Church adopt the budget plan and include the quota for missions equal to one-third the amount of the pastor's salary, or (2) each Church use the every-member canvass for the mission quota, or (3) each Church urge an increase in the amount of the Sunday School offering, and then at or about next Easter put on an intensive effort to raise the entire amount at the one service.

This Conference, like all the others that discussed the matter, adopted the Convention program of financing the various enterprises of the Church.

In the afternoon, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis, evangelists, conducted a service to the edification and delight of all. Bro. C. H. Stephenson made the report on Sunday Schools and C. E. and addressed the Conference on that theme. Superintendent Charles D. Johnston and Chairman of the Board J. M. Darden told of the Orphanage work and needs and urged a generous Thanksgiving offering. Miss Ruth Johnson delivered a very suggestive address on the need and work of missionary societies in the Churches.

At the evening session, President W. A. Harper delivered a very informative and searching address on "Our Educational Institutions," and Rev. R. A. Whitten and Prof. S. A. Bennett spoke engagingly and interestingly on Elon College. Dr. J. Edmond Kirby, of Raleigh, closed the Conference with a great sermon on "Those Who Shall and Do See God." Dr. Kirby is a most engaging thinker and speaker and does not fail to give his hearers something to help and inspire them.

The community entertained the Conference in regal fashion, and many expressed the regret that it closed so soon. Dr. W. C. Wicker is president for next year, and Prof. L. L. Vaughan is secretary, with Bro. W. J. Ballentine, treasurer.

PROHIBITION, NOT RELIGION, THE ISSUE.

By ERNEST H. CHERRINGTON, LL.D., LITT.D.,
Director of Department of Education, Anti-Saloon League of America.

Prohibition, and not religion, was the issue in the recent national campaign, although the liquor advocates have made every attempt to disguise the terrific defeat they sustained at the polls. No other single question so interested and concerned the American voter as that concerning the eighteenth amendment. Neither was there any other issue on which the attitudes of the opposing candidates were so clearly defined.

The cry of religious intolerance so early raised and so loudly and repeatedly uttered by the followers of the one candidate who made himself the personal champion of the program to substitute government sale of liquor for prohibition, was pure camouflage. Most of the intolerance was shown by the wet advocates, who assailed the moral and religious leaders of the country because of their continued championship of a prohibition policy which many of these had supported for over a quarter of a century. The fact that the principal candidate of the liquor group chanced to be a member of the Roman Catholic Church had no more to do with the opposition of the dry group than the fact that his opponent was a member of the Society of Friends assured him the support of the friends of the eighteenth amendment. Had conditions been reversed, with a dry Roman Catholic as a candidate for the presidency against a wet Protestant, the forces which so bitterly opposed the Democratic nominee at this time would have opposed as ardently a Protestant holding the same views concerning prohibition.

Any serious study of the election returns will demonstrate the error, if not the insincerity, of those who have misrepresented this struggle as a religious contest. According to the statement issued July 24, 1928, by the Census Bureau, Rhode Island had 325,375 members of the Roman Catholic Church. Of course, not all these were voters, but the figures given are the only official figures. Analysis differs concerning the ratio of voters to membership in this Church. The total, however, was more than the total of the votes cast for both Hoover and Smith in the recent election when Smith carried the State by about 1,000 votes. At the same election, a dry Republican French Roman Catholic defeated the wet Democratic incumbent for the seat in the United States Senate. The issue there was not religion. It was prohibition. This is made clear when one notes the fact that Rhode Island also elected a Republican State ticket in which the important officials who are predominately Protestant are openly and frankly in favor of the eighteenth amendment and its enforcement, defeating the Democratic ticket which was predominantly wet.

A study of the Southern States in which Smith received the electoral votes would seem to support the argument that even in those sections where the cry of religious intolerance was most loudly raised by the Smith supporters, the Democratic candidate received a heavy Protestant vote which would probably never have been given to him had religion and not prohibition been a serious factor.

South Carolina cast over 50,000 votes for the Democratic candidate for President. This State, with North Carolina and Nevada, has the smallest number of Roman Catholics of any State in the Union. Those who are acquainted with conditions in South Carolina know how strong are the religious convictions of the people of that State. If one might expect religious intolerance to display itself anywhere, one might look for such display in a State so overwhelmingly and so ardently Protestant. The election returns, however, will show that Smith carried South Carolina by over 50,000, while Hoover received a little over 3,000 votes.

Alabama had only 33,019 Roman Catholics, according to the latest census figures, but gave to Governor Smith about 128,000 votes. Tennessee, with only 24,876 Roman Catholics, gave him over 135,000 votes. Mississippi, with 32,705 Roman Catholics, gave him nearly 90,000 votes. Arkansas, with 24,743 Roman Catholics, gave him over 60,000 votes. Virginia, with 38,605 Roman Catholics, gave him 132,097 votes. West Virginia, with 71,265 Roman Catholics, gave him about 190,000 votes. Georgia, with only 17,871 Roman Catholics, gave him 128,077 votes. Florida, with 39,379 Roman Catholics, gave him over 85,000 votes. Oklahoma cast nearly five votes for Governor Smith for every Roman Catholic man, woman and child within her borders. Utah, with 14,595 Roman Catholics, gave him 48,557 votes.

All this would seem to indicate that the Protestant voters were not motivated by religious prejudice. It is interesting also to note that in States where the Roman Catholic group was extremely large, the election returns would suggest that the Democratic candidate did not show remarkable strength among his co-religionists. Rather does it seem most probable that religious solidarity was not displayed by either of the contrasting sections into which the Christian Church in America is divided. Men voted in accordance with political convictions—in which their attitude toward prohibition was an important element—and not in harmony with sectarianism.

The Census Bureau's figures show that in New York State there were, at the latest count, 3,115,424 Roman Catholics, about a million more members of this Church than are found in any other State in the Union. The election returns show that the Governor of New York, running upon a wet platform of his own invention, received in his home State a little over two million votes, about 100,000 fewer than those which were cast for his dry Republican opponent. Had the Roman Catholic voters of the State cast their ballots en bloc, these, with the normal wet Democratic vote, would have given him a tremendous majority. The election returns suggest that neither Protestants nor Roman Catholics, in any considerable number, voted along religious lines. Pennsylvania, with 2,124,229 Roman Catholics, gave the Democratic presidential candidate less than a million votes, casting about twice that many for his dry Republican competitor. Maryland, with 233,969 Roman Catholics, gave Smith a little over 200,000 votes, while his competitor received about 33 per cent more. In Maine, the votes cast for Governor Smith were about one-half the Roman Catholic population of the State. Governor Smith's vote in Massachusetts is less than one-half the total of 1,629,424 Roman Catholics resident in that State. This would suggest that Governor Smith, running on a wet platform, did not receive the expected support of the Roman Catholic Church which the clamor of intolerance was raised to gain for him.

Colonel Patrick Henry Callahan, of Louisville, Ky., formerly chairman of the Knights of Columbus Commission on Religious Prejudice, early exposed the false claim of religious intolerance in the campaign by declaring that those who voted for Smith because he was a Roman Catholic were as intolerant as those who voted against him for the same reason. While it is undoubtedly true that there were those who did cast their votes against him on the ground of religion, it is also probably true that he gained as many votes because of his religion as he lost for that cause. The religious issue quite evidently cancels out as a significant factor in the recent campaign.

Prohibition, however, was a clear-cut and dominant issue. Some of the candidates eliminated every other issue and made their fight upon this question alone. Anton Cermak, running for the senatorial seat from Illinois, asserted that his election would be a referendum on prohibition. His overwhelming defeat is sufficient answer to the challenge he issued to the people of that State.

When one considers that the dry presidential candidate had a popular majority of over six million votes, and that he will receive 444 electoral votes to his opponent's 87, one may get an idea of the strength of the dry sentiment of the nation. Even a more emphatic evidence of that strength can be found in the senatorial and congressional elections. Of the 96 members of the United States Senate, 80 are dry and 6 more will likely support prohibition legislation. The prohibitionists have

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Suffolk Letter rarely gets suggestions from others, and usually takes its own course; but this letter grows out of a conversation with Mrs. Eleanor, mother-in-law of Dr. I. W. Johnson. It came to her through a neighbor, who said that a Baptist preacher from Kentucky said he had the Tator family in his Church, and he gave the names of the husband, wife, son and daughter, and he inquired if the Church, which he was visiting at the time, had any of that family in it.

The husband's name was Dic Tator. He worked very well when all the members, and the preacher, too, did as he directed. He dictated the choice of a pastor, the salaries for the preacher, organist, janitor, and any other paid workers. He named the delegates to the conference, the deacons, the officers of the Sunday School, any improvements made to the Church, when a revival should be held and who should conduct it. In fact, everybody was afraid to express an opinion contrary to his plans and purposes.

Then, there was Mrs. Agitator. She kept the congregation stirred up all the time by reports and hearsays that prevented any rational action on the part of any organization in the Church. The missionary society had the wrong president, and the treasurer was not a safe handler of the funds of the society; the Sunday School superintendent had been in office too long and many teachers wanted a change; the pastor paid too much attention to certain members and not enough to others. He paid too much attention to the rich people and not enough to the poor people; he did not visit the members enough, anyway. She kept a stir-up in the congregation and the community all the time. Dictator and Mrs. Agitator gave very little to the support of the Church or the denominational enterprises, but they had much to say about how the money which others gave should be spent. They were active along all lines where they rendered little or no help.

Miss Imi Tator was also a member of that Church. She was always trying to sing like some one she had heard in another Church. She was always planning some new entertainment that made her prominent in the Church and the community. She originated nothing and was a poor imitator of what was best in other people. She thought little of what suited their Church or was adapted to their people. She reminded one of preachers who imitate Billy Sunday, or singers who imitate some successful star performer. But the books showed that she was a small contributor in money, regular attendance, or real work in the Church.

There was another member of the Tator family who was a member of that Church; that was Mr. Spec Taytor. He looked on when anything was proposed or undertaken. He was not regular at Sunday School, prayer meeting or preaching; but when he did come he sat at a distance and just looked on to see what others were doing. He came occasionally, and the members and pastor would shake hands with him and tell him how glad they were to see him and hoped he would be regular in attendance, as they needed his help. The question is, does any of that family belong to your Church?

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

It was my happy privilege to attend the Congregational advisory board meeting of the southeast, which convened at Atlanta, Ga., November 13, 14, 1928. We appreciated their fine hospitality, fellowship and clear vision of the problems we are all facing as a Church in this twentieth century.

The missionary, educational institutions, publications and Congregational-Christian union occupied the major part of the time set for the meeting and engaged their deepest interest and greatest concern.

I was much concerned with all the recommendations of the findings committee, but especially with No. 6: "This advisory board is deeply interested in the development of the educational institutions in the Southeast. We note with pleasure the increasing efforts to co-ordinate and co-operate in a fine, compact, interlocking system with articulated courses with the hope of reaching and training leaders for this great American-born Anglo-Saxon stock, that its ideals, so vitally American, may be mobilized not only for the South, but for the needs of the nation as well."

Section B: "We heartily commend the action that has been taken that has changed Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., into Piedmont Junior College with its Piedmont name, courses, and calendar and Congregational trustees. Already it has sent graduates to Piedmont, showing thereby a real co-operation."

Section D: "This advisory board wishes once again to go on record as favoring the proposed union of the Christian and Congregational denominations. We believe the two bodies are one in polity, in belief, and in spirit, and in purpose should not any longer exist separately. There is every reason to believe that the union of these two bodies would greatly strengthen the cause of practical religion in the South, and enhance Christian union throughout the country at large."

No. 8: "We wish to suggest that, in case the Christian and Congregational Churches are merged into one within a year, that our committee on co-operation with Christian bodies take steps to call a convention of the Churches of the merged bodies in the Southeast."

S. L. BEOUGHIER.

WHAT THE RELIGIOUS CENSUS SHOWS.

The final results of the 1926 census of religious bodies, as lately announced by the Department of Commerce, are decidedly encouraging. According to the tabulated statistics, the total number of Church members in the United States in 1926 was 54,624,976. When the preceding Federal census was taken in 1916, the results showed 41,926,854 members. This means a gain during the decade of 12,698,122, an average gain of approximately 3 per cent annually.

The detailed tables show that the Roman Catholic membership is 18,605,003. The Jewish membership is 4,087,357. Of the remaining total, approximately 30,640,000 are Protestants. (The number is not easy to state precisely because of the uncertainty as to whether certain small bodies should be classified as "Protestant" or not.) The remainder—slightly more than one and a quarter millions—are Eastern Orthodox, Christian Scientists, Mormons, Spiritualists and several small miscellaneous bodies.

We do not regard it as especially profitable to make spirited comparisons between Protestant and Catholic strength. We rejoice, rather, in the gain of every body of devout worshipers of God and disciples of Christ. But, since there has been so much superficial talk about the "decline of Protestantism," it may be worth while to point out that the Roman Catholic gain between 1916 and 1926 was 18.3 per cent, and that during the same period the major Protestant Churches gained 19.5 per cent. The figure of 19.5 per cent includes the record of the twenty-eight communions affiliated with the Federal Council and, in addition, the two largest Protestant bodies that sustain no relation to the council, viz: the Southern Baptist Convention and the Evangelical Lutheran Synodical Conference. To make an all-inclusive statement about Protestant gains during the decade is impossible, as certain small bodies were not reported in 1916. The average of 19.5 per cent, however, is based on the statistics of nearly nine-tenths of Protestantism. Many individual denominations, of course, show a far less satisfactory situation.

For those who are eager to make comparisons, it should be pointed out that the Roman Catholic figures include all baptized persons, and therefore infants and children, while the Protestant statistics refer only to communicant members. The constant 2.8 is ordinarily used as a multiplier for equalizing the two sets of figures. The Protestant figure, multiplied by 2.8, gives a total Protestant "constituency" of about 86,000,000.

One of the striking facts disclosed by the census is that, in the case of several Protestant bodies, the number of local congregations has decreased during the same time that the number of Church members was increasing. This is true, for example, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Northern Baptist Convention, the Congregational Churches, the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., the Reformed Church in the U. S., and the United Brethren. This is clearly to be explained by the distinct tendency during the last decade toward the elimination of over-churching. Time was when the Protestant emphasis was on the organization of new Churches, especially on the frontier. Today, it would not be untrue to say that our concern is not for more Churches, but for better ones.—Federal Council Bulletin.

HAIL TO THE CHIEF!

By a popular vote of over 20,000,000, Herbert Hoover was elected on November 6th to the highest office of our nation. For four years, beginning with his inauguration in March, he will bear the responsibilities of directing the affairs of the world's largest and most prosperous nation. Again, the democratic principles of America have been proven. One, who was born of humble parents, and left an orphan at an early age, has overcome the obstacles of poverty and, with undying energy and determination, has fought his way to the pinnacle of success.

President-elect Hoover comes well prepared to carry the burden that goes with the presidency and to meet the many problems with which one in that position is confronted. He obtained a good scholastic education, and to that has been added many years' experience as an organizer and executive. He is also fortunate in having come in close contact with conditions in foreign countries, an experience which will, no doubt, prove invaluable in directing the nation's foreign policies. As Secretary of Commerce, he has been enabled to gain a thorough knowledge of the country's commercial affairs and economical condition. A review of his past activities make apparent an outstanding fact, Hoover has always accomplished in a laudable manner that which he has undertaken.

During the campaign there naturally developed certain opposing factions. Issues arose upon which decided stands were taken. Supporters of each side used every fair means to gain an advantage. In keeping with the nature of Americans, they strove wholeheartedly, putting every ounce of energy into the fight for the furtherance of their side. Some, looking into the future, were apprehensive of the aftermath, wondered, possibly, if those factions would not exist and grow after the campaign was over.

But there is no cause for fear. Another boasted American characteristic asserts itself, that of sportsmanship. Tradition, environment, training causes those of this country to fight hard but to admit defeat gracefully, to bear no grudge or hate but only admiration for the hard fight put up by the opponent. Now that Hoover has been elected, all will unite in his support, give him every aid for a successful and prosperous administration. His supporters and former opponents shout with one accord, "Hail to the chief!" H.

THE CENTURY APOLOGIZES.

The Christian Century hereby tenders its apologies to tens of thousands of Southern drys. While the Democratic convention was in session in Houston, representatives of these believers in prohibition sought to oppose the nomination of Governor Smith by means of prayer meetings held in the neighborhood of the convention hall. It was then suggested in these columns that there might prove to be a difference between Southern prayers in July and Southern votes in November. But it has been abundantly proved that a very large proportion of the drys in that section voted as they prayed. To do so, they dared a weight of social condemnation which party bolters in other States can hardly conceive. Nothing but a passionate devotion to the principle of national prohibition could have produced the political revolution in the hitherto "Solid South." Other elements contributed to the power and extent of the movement, once it got under way. But it was the attempt to deliver the Democratic party into wet hands which set the revolt off. And the men and women who placed principle above a party loyalty that had existed for generations deserve the most generous credit which it is possible to accord them. —Christian Century.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be in every home in the Southern Christian Convention. We have around thirty-three thousand members. Counting five members to the family, we should have six thousand and six hundred families. If each family would take THE CHRISTIAN SUN it would bring in to THE SUN the sum of $13,200 per annum and put it on a sound financial basis. Our people would be informed as to our institutions and would become more interested. Our denomination would grow, and all of the institutions of our denomination would be better supported and be able to do a greater work. But the circulation manager is just one human being and can only do one man's work. It is impossible for him to visit all the Churches in behalf of THE SUN. It would cost too much in the first place, and, too, he has too many duties to take the time. Every Church ought to have a committee to work up the subscription list for THE SUN and make a special effort to place it in every home. It is a paper worthy to go in any home. We truly hope our pastors will take more interest in sending in renewals and new subscribers. Some of our pastors have helped us some. We are grateful. Help us to place THE SUN in each home.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Christian Missionary Association of the North Carolina Christian Conference will meet in its annual session at Elon College, Thursday, December 13th, at 10 A. M. A tentative program appears elsewhere in this issue of THE SUN.

The one main objective we have tried to set before the people is this, that every Church within the three Carolina Conferences should become a member of this association on or before the date of the annual meeting. It is earnestly hoped that all former members will stand by the organization and be present at the meeting or send in their dues. May we make this urgent appeal to the pastors to bring this matter before their Churches?

In many of the Churches, the Sunday School and other organizations should become members also. Just take your "Christian Annual" and see what the Churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference are doing through their C. M. A., and let that be a challenge to our Churches.

This association can be made a very great power for good if it can command the co-operation and help of the pastors and Churches.

THANKOFFERING.

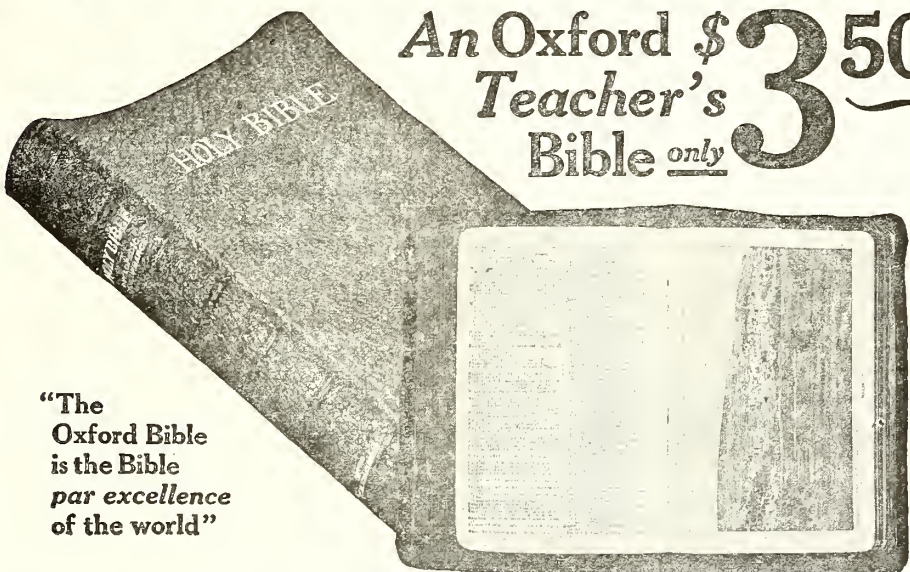

The Woman's Mission Board of the North Carolina Conference, in session at Burlington today, November 22nd, voted that the thankoffering of all missionary societies in the Conference, both women's and young people's, shall go to the Porto Rican reconstruction fund. All societies are urged to make as liberal a thankoffering as possible, and as soon as the offering is received to send the same to Mrs. W. R. Sellars, treasurer, Burlington, N. C. We trust that all societies will take the thankoffering, as funds for reconstruction work in Porto Rico are very much needed.

Respectfully,
MRS. C. H. ROWLAND, Pres.
MRS. O. H. PARIS, Secretary.

WHAT DOES STEWARDSHIP REQUIRE?

Among the numberless precious truths upon which He is discoursing for our eternal welfare, Jesus tells us that where our treasure is there will our heart be also. In other words, whatever we spend money for most willingly and freely, whatever gratuitously attracts our first interest and attention, whatever ungrudgingly claims our time and labor—these and like things indicate the attitude of the heart.

By the illustration Jesus here draws, it readily is seen that this treasure and heart business works conversely. Hardly need it be asked why are Church members not going to Church, not wishing to enter into the worship of the sanctuary, nor so much as paying common respect to Sabbath and other stated religious services? Is it not because they love something else better—their heart is elsewhere? Why is the heart of the should-be-loyal Christian estranged and diverted from that which ought first to engage it? Is it not because one's treasure, as described above, one's money, solicitude, time, toil are given to other things?

The only sure way of schooling one's self to the love of genuine worship is by bestowing one's treasure upon kingdom enterprises, and that, in the main, Church members are not doing. Think on these things, says Paul—the things that are honest and pure and just. Give willingly and freely, yea fairly, of possessions; withhold not the time, toil, sacrifice, which true soldiery demands, and see how quickly the heart is captured! And look well to this fact: not always is our treasure something tangible or material. Human loves and aspirations and ideals often hold us in thralldom.

The obedient disciple when he has fulfilled the divine commandment as found in Matt. 22:37-39 loves to worship. Interchangeably, when we worship we love to make material vows, nor do we neglect to pay them. And so worship and giving, symbolical of heart and treasure, go hand in hand. The exercise of either grace incites and heightens the other.

Israel did not refuse to worship. The people begged and cried for the chance. "Up, make us gods," they demanded of Aaron. Their sense and understanding of worship were perverted, a condition not uncommon today and at least in part due to like cause, viz: their leader was off the job. Being off the job by absence may be better than a misused or misappropriated presence. High purpose and zeal suffer for lack of right leadership.

It is a grave, an appalling indictment against the present-day Church, but can it be denied that in very great measure the opportunity for worshipping in spirit and in truth is lost? Too many things detract. At a prayer (?) meeting the minister in charge said, "Make it snappy. We don't want to be late at the movie." As a matter of fact, some did not want to go to the movie. It were better had others been discouraged from going. Soul impoverishment is everywhere. I myself often am afflicted. Services supposed to feed and fill leave only emptiness or else a false satisfaction.

Nominally, the ten commandments are accepted. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," all may accede to, but oh the tragedy of it! How very many fail to take Jesus' example seriously and live as He lived, worship as He worshiped—in agony; yea, in sweat of blood.

Much of the loss of the spirit of genuine, true worship is chargeable to substitution. For example, radio supplies a period of morning devotion. It is pleasing, sometimes decidedly uplifting, but does it give full spiritual content? No. Jesus knew. He had experience. He says, "And when thou hast shut thy door." All sound, sight, interest, attraction, everything that hinders the feeling of aloneness with God must be shut out. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

We plead for a more faithful stewardship of worship. Sadder than that men and women never were taught is it that so often the sense of worship is perverted by neglect of private exercise and by the suppression and misapplication of public privilege. "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Because of the ratio between the number of those who teach and those who learn, teaching is a word of weight and responsibility.

God cannot accept our worship at the altar of Ramah, nor at any other false altar. But He can use the very material that is in us, and out of it help us to build unto Himself a Geba or a Mizpah. God will not transport the timbers and the stones. He leaves that to us. "It is the work of a faithful stewardship to the worship of the one Jehovah."

ELON COLLEGE AND THE CHURCH.

Every progressive Church is vitally linked up with the cause of education. This is wise, and well, and God has so ordered in the course of human affairs that men and women everywhere must be trained for their chosen work in the world. No work of consequence can be well done unless the worker is specially trained. Church work is no exception to this general rule. And if the Church worker, the social worker, the home builder, the minister of the gospel, the Sunday School worker is to be trained, then the Church which fosters these institutions must provide schools and colleges for the purpose of giving definite and adequate training to those who are to engage in all these forms of service to humanity.

The Church can have no better model for its organization than that of the Master Himself. It was said of Jesus that He increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man. There is a great significance in this statement about the Master. The first idea mentioned is not that, as a boy, He developed physically, but mentally. Wisdom was the principal thing in the young manhood of our Lord. The indications are that, with Him, it was a matter of prime importance and of chief concern. We cannot doubt that while he was working daily in the carpenter shop of Joseph of Nazareth He was spending His evenings in studying, working and preparing Himself mentally as well as morally and spiritually for the great work He had to do here in this world. Could we have visited Him back in His boyhood days, we would have found Him attending the Jewish schools, that He studied very diligently, and we would have found Him at night by the firelight or by the light of a candle working and studying with the greatest earnestness and faithfulness. Had He not done this, He would never have had the Old Testament on His tongue's end to enforce and bear out the ideas that He later endeavored to teach. He could mass quotations in battle array against the scribes and Pharisees who undertook to undermine His teachings and the Scriptures became His bulwark of strength against the attacks and onslaughts of the supreme tempter. No such profound philosophy and spiritual insight as is given in the discourses of Jesus could ever have come from the lips of one who had not studied broadly and who had not drunk deep from the springs of wisdom. And Jesus increased in wisdom.

If the example of Jesus teaches anything, it teaches that the very first duty of His Church is to establish schools and colleges for the training of her young people. With the Church, wisdom must be a matter of chief concern. The Church must concern itself about education before it concerns itself about physical growth. When young people are properly trained in a Christian college, there is very little danger of these people's becoming derailed upon the sea of life. They are most generally spiritually minded men and women; they have at heart the work of God, and they are the men and women who are doing most to lift up and to elevate the race. They are prepared to render Christian service in whatever community they live, and they are an asset to the race no matter where they may make their dwelling-place.

Wherever they are, they are the very salt of the earth. Wisdom, education, training—these are put first in the biblical category of the elements that led to Christ's success; and if the Church is to develop along the same lines that held in the development of the Master, then the Church should first build, equip and man her colleges to train and educate her young men and women, and these institutions are the most worthy objects of the care and support of the Church.

The Christian Church had been in existence for nearly a century, and the Southern Christian Convention had barely six thousand members when Elon College was established. For nearly one hundred years the Church had forgotten to carry out the example of its Lord; but finally, when the Christian Church commenced preparing to give her sons and daughters the advantages of Christian education, what was the result? Within a little over thirty years the membership of the Christian Church within the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention, has increased to approximately thirty thousand members. Within this thirty years and a little over, the Christian Church has gained five times as many members as she had gained in nearly a century of her former existence. What a dividend in growth has the college paid back to the Church! The writer would challenge any person to point out any other institution of the Church that has paid so large a dividend for the money invested. The mission work of the Church is doing great and lasting good; the work for the orphan children is work of the finest constructive type—but where can these enterprises of the Church point out such vast dividends in Church membership as has resulted from a trained and educated ministry and the trained laity sent out from the consecrated halls of learning at Elon College?

And Jesus increased in wisdom. There is one denomination in our country that puts education first. No man can become a minister in that denomination who is not a college graduate. Wherever and whenever this denomination is known and spoken of it is with the deepest respect. The colleges of this Church are adequately supported; they are well endowed, and they are splendidly and thoroughly equipped for training young men and women for life. This denomination is doing mission and orphanage work unparalleled by any other denomination in this country. Their contributions for the work of God's kingdom are the greatest per capita of any other Church in our midst. This Church, I repeat, puts education first. Their plan is to give to every young person in the Church the opportunity of adequate training and preparation for the work of life. And that denomination is carrying on in the great fields of human endeavor and is making itself a living influence for good among men, telling for God and the uplift of the human race.

Shall the Church of our choice and the Church we love do less? Training and education must come first with the Church that wishes to be a living, throbbing life factor among men. If the Church educates her sons and daughters, the mission work of the Church will go forward by leaps and bounds, the orphanage work will progress as never before, and every enterprise of the Church will be adequately supported. God's blessings have ever rested on the Church that provides for the adequate training of her young. Then the Church must support her college. Every member of the Christian Church should take a pride in making his contributions to Elon College as large as possible, and that the support of this college is ample and adequate for the highest type of mental, moral and spiritual training, and then he should see to it that his son or daughter goes there to college. When this is done, then will the Church grow and develop as God intended.

And Jesus increased in wisdom. This was His first and chief concern. It was the first concern of the reformer Erasmus, who sought Greek books first and then he bought food and clothing if he had any money left. If the Church follows the example of Christ, then in following this example, will she grow in stature, in size, in membership, in the largeness of her labors, in her mission work, and then will she grow in favor with God and man.

So the plea comes to every member of the Christian Church. Adequately support and develop your college. Make it a great and strong institution and one of which you will be justly proud. Let your college go on unhampered in her great work of training and educating young men and young women, and then the Church will grow and become greater and greater and add finer laurels to the Master as the years go by.

THOMAS C. AMICK.

329 members of the House of Representatives who will actively support dry legislation—a gain of 11 members in this branch of Congress. Of the remaining 106, there are quite a number who will vote to support legislation necessary to enforce the eighteenth amendment, not because of their own convictions, but because of political expediency.

It is quite noteworthy that in some States where the Republican landslide carried to victory practically the entire ticket, exceptions occurred where the defeated Republican candidate was a wet, while his successful Democratic opponent was a dry. On the other hand, in sections where the Democratic vote was very high, an occasional Democratic candidate who was either personally wet or politically opposed to prohibition, was left at home and a dry Republican substituted.

The Churches, however, while not motivated by any spirit of intolerance, did, nevertheless, muster their strength most effectively in support of an issue which, by virtue of its enormous social implications, is a dominant moral issue. They could not do otherwise and remain true to their commission. Had they been silent or had they hearkened to the insidious voice of the tempter and failed to effectively champion a cause for which more than any other factor in our social life the Church is primarily responsible, it would have lost respect, have seen its influence for good diminish in every field of activity and would have been compelled to spend the next quarter-century apologizing for its failure to speak forth clearly in the hour of crisis. The magnificent response of the people of the country to the summons of the Church as well as to the summons of the leaders of the dry cause is one more evidence of the sane idealism and the wholesome clarity of the popular thought on this question.

That there are weaknesses and flaws in the enforcement of prohibition is well known. The fact that, in spite of these weaknesses and flaws, prohibition has demonstrated its value as a great factor in our phenomenal prosperity, does not justify us in permitting needless flaws and weaknesses to exist. These should be remedied. The President-elect has declared his purpose to remedy them. The friends of prohibition should remember that those who have been their standard-bearers in the campaign now closed are entitled to the organized and effective support of the people who have given them their public commission. This is not a time to disband nor is it a time to rest on our arms or our laurels. It is rather the time when we should most seriously and thoughtfully consider just how we can co-operate with our public servants to best promote enforcement and just how we can best inaugurate and carry forward on a great scale a campaign of education that will insure success for the cause of prohibition in which is inextricably woven the social, the economic, the hygienic and the moral welfare of the American people. If we face this task with the same earnestness and enthusiasm that we faced past struggles, the victory will be far greater than the victory won on November 6th.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XI—December 16, 1928.

PAUL AND HIS FRIENDS.

GOLDEN TEXT: "A friend loveth at all times."—Prov. 17:17.

LESSON: Acts 20:36-38; Rom. 16:1-4; Philip. 2:25-30.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 63:1-7.

A little boy, in defining a friend, said: "A friend is one who knows all about you, and loves you just the same." He had put in a striking way the words of the text, "A friend loveth at all times." Friendship does not mean that one cannot see faults in his friend. It means rather that there is that spirit of genuine affection that makes one love another and be true to another in spite of his faults.

The Number of Paul's Friendships.

The sixteenth chapter of Romans is, on the whole, rather dry reading, made us as it is for the most part of greetings and salutations to those who had such tongue-twisting names as Andronicus, Amplias, Stachys, Apelles, Tryphena, Tryphosa, Asyncretus, Philologus, and many other such strange-sounding names. But it is interesting in the light which it throws on the number of Paul's personal friendships. In spite of the many interests which he had, and the many lives which he touched, Paul had a warm and personal interest in his friends. Some one has counted some seventy-odd names which Paul uses in his letters which is, of course, only suggestive of the wider circle of friends which he had. It is not quite likely that all of these were intimate friends—a man usually has only a comparatively few intimate friends—but they were kept in mind by Paul as personal friends.

The Inclusiveness of Paul's Friendship.

One of the most interesting facts about Paul's circle of friends is their inclusiveness. They ranged all the way from Luke, a famous physician, to Onesimus, a runaway and converted slave. Rich and poor, learned and ignorant, Jew and Gentile, all found a place in this great-hearted man's heart. We will do well to follow Paul in this respect. It is a mistake to choose and to cultivate friends only from a select and selfishly narrow circle. The range of a man's friendships is often the measure of his breadth of spirit. Certainly it is true that a man should have the friendly spirit toward all.

The Reciprocal Influence of Paul's Friendship.

Any one who knows anything at all about Paul knows that he contributed a great deal to his friends. His strength of character, his store of wisdom, his range of vision, his warmth of spirit, his inspiring fellowship were factors that made inestimable contributions to those who came in contact with him and those who shared his friendship. How much noble friends bring into our lives! How much we owe noble friends! But there is another side to the matter. As great as Paul was and as much as he contributed to his friends, his friends contributed a great deal to him. A careful reading of his life and his letters will disclose many instances where Paul not only received help and encouragement and inspiration from his friends, but where he acknowledges the debt he owes his friends. Let us not only rejoice in the fact that our friends can make such contributions to our lives, but let us rejoice that even the humblest of us can make some contribution to the lives of our friends. There is nothing that our friends need more than the fruits of our friendship. Let us not only live in the house by the side of the road and be a friend to man, but let us walk in the road with the men who need our friendship, and as we have freely received, let us also freely give.

An Example of Paul's Friendship.

The letter to Philemon, one of the shortest if not the shortest books in the Bible, is one of the most precious gems in the Bible. Paul probably never wrote anything that is finer. And the beauty about it all is that it is an unstudied, informal, personal letter of friendship. By all means, read it in connection with today's lesson. Briefly, the facts are these:

Philemon was a resident of Colossae, probably a well-to-do man. He and his wife and son had become Christians under Paul's personal influence. They had opened their home to Paul and it was used as a meeting-place for the Church at Colossae, at least for a time. Among Philemon's slaves there was one named Onesimus, who had not only run away from his master, but who had apparently stolen some of his master's goods, which may have been the reason why he ran away. Either by chance or through choice he met Paul who was then a prisoner in Rome. He may have gone to Paul for help. He may have been heart-sick and remembered this man who had spoken so simply in his master's house. In any event, Paul took a warm, personal interest in Onesimus, and finally led him to Christ. The fellow was such a willing and able fellow that Paul wanted to keep him to minister to him at Rome, but he felt that that was not fair to Philemon, his friend, and Onesimus' master. He, therefore, sends Onesimus back to Philemon, but not as a slave but as a brother in Christ. He sends along a letter—the epistle of Paul to Philemon, as it is inscribed in the Bible—in which he sets forth his position, commends Onesimus to Philemon, and implies that he knows that Philemon will do the right thing in the matter. There is a delicacy about the matter that is touching. He refers to Onesimus as "his son," and states that he is now highly profitable both to Paul and to Philemon. He refers to the fact that he would like to keep him, but that he could do so only in case Philemon would of his own accord send him back. He suggests in a tactful way that Philemon is to receive Onesimus not as a slave, but as a brother both of Paul and of himself. He generously agrees to pay for anything that Onesimus may owe Philemon. And in conclusion he expresses his confidence in Philemon's obedience, and adds that he knows that Philemon will do even more than he suggests. He also asks Philemon to be on the lookout for him, for he hopes to pay him a visit soon. Paul is a confirmed optimist up to the last.

One feels that all this is somewhat typical of Paul's friendships. A man like Paul who took the stand he did in this case, and who manifested the spirit of friendship which he here manifested, had within him the capacity for real friendship.

TOPIC: "God's Christmas Gift to the World."—Luke 2:1-16.

Some Bible Hints.

God's gift came at the right time, when the Roman empire had conquered the world, thus paving the way for the spread of the gospel (1. 1).

God's gift has never been fully appreciated. There is still no room for Him in many hearts (v. 7).

Poor men first get the news of heaven's greatest gift. It is the hungry that are fed, the needy that are willing to be helped (v. 8).

God's greatest gift is a man, Son of God in human form, sublime personality. Compared with manhood, all material gifts fade away (v. 11).

Suggestive Thoughts.

When an artist's pupil was asked to try to paint a sunset, she replied, "I cannot paint glory." How can we ever paint Christ?

God's gift of His Son to the world had many purposes: to be a Saviour; to reveal God; to show us how to live; to conquer death and give hope of immortality.

God's gift is personal—to us. It is a gift, free, only to be accepted, not worked for. It is a gift of love divine that we make our own.

God's gift is peculiar in that the more we share it, the more we have of it. It grows by being given away. No one knows Christ who keeps Him to himself. Speak of Him and know Him better.

A Few Illustrations.

In Germany, mothers used to give their daughters a wonder-ball of wool to be knitted into stockings. As the girls knitted they came upon little gifts inside. Christ is to be used, and He unfolds Himself as we use Him.

On a high cliff stood a board which bore the legend, "This Outlook is Private." God's gift is not private. It belongs to the world.

Mother came home one night without bringing any gift to the children. One said, "We don't care, mother, you are the best gift." In giving us Christ, the Father gives us Himself as well—the best gift.

God's gifts are indispensable. If He withdrew the gift of rain, the earth would become a desert. Take Christ out of the memory of man and the world would be a jungle.

To Think About.

Why is Christ spoken of as a gift?

How has Christ helped to change your life?

How does God offer His Son to men today?

CIVIC SPORTSMANSHIP.

By W. G. CALDERWOOD.

George Washington fought eight years without pay, through unexampled hardship and privation, for American independence and the right of self-determination. The Revolutionary War was the travail of progress incident to the birth of this nation.

From this travail the revolutionary fathers gathered to erect the governmental fabric to protect the liberty they had won. It was but natural that the man who had led the colonial troops to victory against baffling odds should be unanimously named as chairman of the constitutional convention which framed the "Magna Charta" of America.

Now, after that Constitution has won its place as a monumental milestone of human advancement, it is not strange that those who oppose progress should seek to use the veneration of the people for the document to thwart the civic spirit which gave it birth. In such a time the words of Washington, who was unanimously chosen the first President under it, are of commanding interest. In his memorable "Farewell Address," which is an outstanding classic among American State papers, he says:

"This government, the offspring of our own choice uninfluenced and unawed, adopted, upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the Constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government, presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government."

These words clearly lay down as the basis of the civic structure erected by our patriot fathers, the right of the people to change their Constitution by orderly and authentic process. Change is not necessarily progress. Yet it is an axiom that there can be no progress without change. To guard against unwise alteration unsupported by mature and overwhelming public opinion, the fathers ordained in the Constitution that no amendment could be valid except upon the approval of two-thirds of both houses of the Congress and ratification by three-fourths of the several States. In all the world there is no other law so fortified against change.

Therefore, when it has been amended by that overwhelming sanction, it certainly demands "respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures" as a minimum duty of every citizen. To accept the blessings and benefits of the government which it ordains, and then withhold loyal allegiance to it, is "yellow." Under a "government of the people, by the people and for the people," good citizenship requires good sportsmanship.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

LOST AT THE DOOR.

"And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on Him, saying, If Thou be Christ, save Thyself and us."—Luke 23:39.

This man was just as near to the door of salvation as the other malefactor who merely cried, ουαυ αυ ιακουωαι πυρ αυ το λοζου ελπιζι ('Ποτ, Thou comest into Thy kingdom'); and yet because of the spirit within him, or because of misconception of the spirit of the kingdom, he faded into an eternity of blackness and was lost.

Israel was lost at the door of the promised land when they feared the Amonites and rebelled.

Elijah failed in completing the victory for the Lord at the very moment of victory when he became frightened at Jezebel's threats.

Christ has set before us all "an open door" (Rev. 3:8). There, the opportunities to loyalty, devotion to the Church, atonement for past wrongs, coveting the best gifts, keeping the eyes fixed on the glory to come; no discouragements, however ominous, can keep us back if we only have the vision and the will to go ahead.

Prayer.—O Lord God, make Thy abode in our hearts today. Grant unto us consecration, vision, will and heaven's power to press on constantly to the goals in Christ. Amen.

TUESDAY.

HEALING.

"With His stripes we are healed."—Isa. 53:5.

"He bears our sins in His body . . . that we . . . should live."—Peter 12:24.

Why talk about healing if sin is not regarded as a disease. God calls it so, because it is that that robs man of his highest faculties and functions. It makes us moral weaklings, draws us away from the prayer life, blinds our spiritual vision, palsies our hands, makes deaf and dumb. And like disease it is fatal unless arrested. "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." But also like disease it can be cured. The remedy is Jesus. When all disease is cured, we shall be perfect physically. When sin is cured, there will be no more sin. It is the work of Christianity to heal humanity of its soul diseases. Let Christ in and it shall be done.

Prayer.—Our Father, as we hear Thy words, "There is no condemnation to those that are in Christ?" we crave Thee in Christ for this day and our lives. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

NEVER SAY QUIT.

"Though he (saint) fall, he shall not be utterly cast down; for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand."—Psa. 37:24.

"Be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."—Isa. 41:10.

Jay Gould was a failure as a storekeeper, tanner and surveyor; but he did not cease his quest of life. In the railroad business he found his place.

Barnum was a failure fourteen times before he found his place in the show business.

Josh Billings could succeed at nothing until he took up literature.

U. S. Grant was a failure at everything until he became a soldier, and likewise was John Adams until he took up statesmanship.

A flood once washed a mill away. The owner turned away broken-hearted in his loss. Another turned to it and found a gold mine in the wash-out.

We never can know just what God is saving us from and just what He is opening up to us. Hardship and disappointment are often a great school of God's.

"The righteous shall hold on his way,

And he that hath clean hands shall

Wax stronger and stronger." (Joh 17:9.)

Prayer.—Our Father in heaven, it is a great gift that Thou dost hold us up, when otherwise we would fall. Though the way seems dark, grant us Thy light and Thy courage forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE MEANING OF THE CROSS.

"God so loved the world that He gave."—Jno. 3:16.

The text is the answer. It has its counterpart in many of life's experiences. There appeared in the Norfolk papers once a story of a young woman who ran away from her home in North Carolina and came to Norfolk to be married. Her fiance disappointed her and left her stranded. In dire extremity, she wired her father. He wired money sufficient for her return and assured her of his forgiveness.

Another case came to our knowledge. A young man estranged from home, desired to return. The father was too proud to allow him to come back. The son, determined to win his way back, got a friend to intercede for him, and thus the way was opened and he was restored to the father's arms.

Christ went through it all to atone for our sins, and the cross is the symbol of the light, the love, the suffering and the sacrifice He underwent for us. It is also a symbol of what we must do for Him. There is an inward crucifixion of self, personal pride and passions, which must be disposed of, and we must die to the world.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, give us the light and the grace of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may believe and accept the salvation of Jesus Christ. Amen.

FRIDAY.

CONFOUNDING SIMPLICITY.

"Out of the mouth of babes . . . thou has perfected praise."—Matt. 21:16.

"God chose the foolish things of the world to confound them that are wise."—1 Cor. 1:27.

It cannot be seen that Jesus ever intended to make His gospel fashionable. It appears that folks of rank and station with gaudy trappings were always beyond the realm of usefulness. Those who have been most sensitive to His calls have been those who have lived simply, modestly, truly, devoutly, and folks whom He could help. We choose helpers, but God chooses whom He can help. We choose givers, but God chooses those needing aid. We choose the most deserving, but God chooses those capable of receiving His grace. We choose the handsome and beautiful, but God chooses those whose souls are fertile fields for beauty of character.

The apostles were fishermen, not sages. From these Christians, Christianity sprung up everywhere. They were put to death, but the more that were slain, the more did they multiply. They were hunted, but they became numerous. Red-hot irons were laid upon them, they were daubed with pitch and set in Nero's garden at night and burned. They were left in dungeons to rot. They were made the ravages of lions and wild beasts, but Christians multiplied. The swords of Caesar and Nero, which by power and skill conquered nations, could not combat feeble Christianity propagated by a few poor illiterate and uncultured fishermen and a few devout women who prayed.

It is believed that if God has chosen the mighty men of the world to do His work, they would have turned upon Him and said, "He is dependent upon us." But when he chooses the so-called "weak" and the "foolish," they are dependent upon Him, and His will is done.

While the wise fumble at the latch of heaven's door, the simple are entered in, while the wise hunt in vain for God in exalted places, the shepherds worship Him at the manger.

Prayer.—O Lord, let Thy tidings of joy permeate our hearts. Make us humble and true, right and devout, and always looking to Thee for Thy love. Amen.

SATURDAY.

SHUTTING THE DOOR IN HIS FACE.

"Woe unto you . . . because ye shut the kingdom of heaven against men."—Matt. 23:13.

A Finnish woman, affected with an incurable disease, landed at Ellis Island, seeking admission in the United States. She was rejected and sent back to her country. The great American republic, with all its science, wealth and power, could not help this poor woman who knocked at its door.

Well-meaning ones may shut souls out of the kingdom by prayerlessness, by selfishness, and by the joy of their own way; by freedom of example and moral turpitude, by social circles, by withholding aid to the needy. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

Prayer.—Our Father, we praise Thy holy name through Christ our Lord for that which He has done for us. Come down into our hearts and make our bodies Thy temple. If we should get our just deserts, we would be lost, but through Christ we are forgiven and saved. Make our home the home of saints and fill it with happiness, where God is worshiped in spirit and truth, and where love, peace and God abounds. Amen.

SUNDAY.

KEEP QUIET.

"Come ye yourselves apart . . . and rest a while."—Mark 6:31.

This is the same as saying, "be still and know that I am God." "Commune upon thine own bed and be still."

He who is always with somebody never has a chance at serious helpful effective meditation. He who never takes the time to be alone and dream dreams, never gives his soul a chance at the deeper and finer meanings of life. As the body and the mind need rest, so does the soul need quiet, and an infilling of the true spirit. Excitement all the time tends to madness. It is possible to be so busy with holy things that there is no time to be holy.

"Take time to be holy,

The world rushes on;

Spend much time in secret

With Jesus alone."

Prayer.—Our Father and our God, release us from the constant rush of things. Give us spirit and wisdom to plan quiet with Thee when our souls may unite with Thee, our Blessed Saviour. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The children had a nice Thanksgiving and enjoyed the day very much. Our good friends of Long's Chapel Christian Church brought us twelve nice hens, Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes, cornmeal, and two sacks of flour. Mrs. S. A. Horne and Mrs. Will Horne, of circle No. 5 of our Burlington Church, brought us some nice hens, cakes, etc.; the Southern Dairies, of Burlington, furnished us ice cream for the dinner. So the children were bountifully remembered and had a good dinner and all enjoyed it very much. In the afternoon our good friend Mr. Daughtry, of Holland, Va., came to see us and brought the children a can of salted peanuts and a box of chocolate candy, which is always appreciated.

The Thanksgiving offering is starting off very nicely. Many of our Churches are taking right much interest in the offering, and we hope to reach our goal. Let everybody get busy and help push us up to the goal. We will give you a report from week to week, and we want you to keep pushing till we can cry "Victory!"

BE YE STEADFAST.

We hear much said today about times and the manner of living being changed. We hear this offered as an excuse for the inconsistencies of Church members. But since Jesus did not change the code of conduct, have we the right to do so? His coming emphasized the duty of believers. If we have made Jesus Lord of our lives, then we are heirs with Him, sons and daughters of God. As such, we are to conduct ourselves at all times and in all places, in such a manner that we "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." This can be done only by keeping in the straight and narrow way, close to our Blessed Saviour's side. We have been warned to "Beware lest ye also being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness."

There is only one way by which we can stand against the "wiles of the devil," and that is by having on the whole armor of God. Truth is the first part mentioned, and it is the most important part of the outfit, for it is the foundation of everything worth while. Only that which is founded upon truth stands. It holds everything together, so we must have on the girdle of truth. Then the helmet of salvation, the breast-plate of righteousness, the shield of faith and the gospel shoes of peace are always needed. Then, too, we must have at hand the sword of the Spirit. It is the weapon against which the tempter can never stand. Having on the whole armor, we are shielded and protected in every way.

"Hold fast," "stand fast," "steadfast" are the words. We are to "stand fast in the faith," to "stand fast in the Lord," until we "stand perfect and complete in all the will of God." We are to be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

There is only one way by which we can remain steadfast to the end, and that is to "seek the Lord and His strength, seek His face continually." We are to continue "grounded and settled, unmoved." It is the even, steady continuance which wearies not in obedience until the appearing of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, which wins His "Well done, good and faithful servant." May we all labor for that blessed reward.

BRINKLEY.

Whereas, our Father in heaven has taken unto Himself from this life of pain and suffering our friend and sister, Mrs. Mattie E. Brinkley; and whereas she was for many years a faithful and worthy member of the Berea Christian Church; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in the death of Mrs. Brinkley, the Church has lost one whose service of love we greatly appreciate and whose passing we deeply mourn.

2. That we, the members of her Church, record our gratitude for her life among us, and while we realize our loss, we are submissive to Him who has given us life and love and hope.

3. That we express here our sympathy to her husband and all the members of her family, and pray that God's richest blessings may rest upon them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our Church book, a copy sent to the family, and a copy published in The Christian Sun.

Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her. Give her of the fruit of her hands; and let her own works praise her in the gates."

Surely every member of the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union of Suffolk Christian Church can testify that the above beautiful tribute to virtuous womanhood in Scripture was fully exemplified in the life of our beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. J. A. Harrell, who departed from our earthly union on October 28, 1928. In her transition to our heavenly union, we bow in humble sub-

GATLING.

Mrs. Sallie Mary Langston Gatling was born December 29, 1889, and died October 24, 1928. In early girlhood she joined Sarem Christian Church and remained a faithful member till her death. On the 10th of January, 1910, she was married to Grafton G. Gatling. To this union were born three children—Gattis Langston, Nancy Darden, and Margaret Sarah. Her husband and the children survive her.

Mrs. Gatling was one time a student at Elon College. She was a leader in her Church and community affairs, and was loved by all who knew her. The funeral services were conducted at Holy Neck Christian Church in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. The floral designs were many and beautiful. Truly a great and good woman has gone to her reward. May God bless the family and friends.

KING.
Since the last meeting of our society, the haud of death has claimed one of our loyal members, Mrs. Etta M. King, age 56 years. She was called very suddenly on October 30, 1928. We shall greatly miss her cheerful presence in our meetings.

Resolved, That we, the Ladies' Home and Foreign Missionary Society, of the Suffolk Christian Church, extend to these bereaved ones our deepest sympathy, and that these resolutions be recorded in the minutes of our society, a copy sent to the family and to The Christian Sun for publication.

JOYNER.

Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God to take from the midst of his friends and loved ones Bro. Elisha Joyner, who was a faithful member of Joyuers Christian Church; be it resolved:

1. That his going from us was the will of the Heavenly Father, who knoweth all things and doeth all things for a great cause; hence, this act of His providence must be reckoned as a divine work.
2. That while we mourn his loss, we bow our humble heads in submission to Him, our Lord and our God; we believe that all things work out together for good to those who love the Lord.
3. That the Church of which he was a member extend its deepest sympathy and regret to his family and pray God's blessings upon them, one and all.

4. That a copy of these resolutions, be presented his family, a copy be kept in the Church files, and the other be printed in The Christian Sun.
5. That the Chnrch continue to thank God for the life of a man so consecrated to the cause of the kingdom, to the welfare of his community and his friends: such was the life lived and exemplified by him as he went about his Father's business.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE WADLEY, ALABAMA An Accredited Junior College Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

A SENSE OF SIN.—

Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, of Calvary Episcopal Church, New York City, said in a recent sermon: "We need a fresh sense of sin." He denounced the "comfortable doctrines about human perfectability and the necessity for giving our instincts liberty. You can't lift a man very high when you tell him he is about as high up as an instinct-ridden animal can get! The profoundest conclusions of the popular interpreters of modern science seems to me to be that we are not so bad after all. I have no love for a gloomy despair of ourselves, but I know that I itch for the ideal."

BLESSINGS IN DISGUISE.—

According to a recent statement by Senator Borah, Germany has been driven to prosperity by the terms of the allies which they have forced upon her, through depriving Germany of her armaments. Senator Borah says: "They have forbidden her to have armies or navies or ammunition factories. They have seized upon her guns and battleships and dress parades, and have gone off with them, chuckling at the harm they have done Germany. What they really have done is to relieve her of a burden so tremendous that, in spite of all the Dawes plan taxes, Germany is coming back with a rapidity that surely prophecies that inside the next twenty-five years she will be in unmistakable ascendancy in Europe. France, the victor, staggering under a great excess of armament, with her franc at 4 cents; Germany, the loser, stripped of her armaments, with her mark at 25 cents—what a picture of modern war!"

A GREAT LEADER PASSES.—

Dr. E. Y. Mullins, well-known Baptist leader and president of the Southern Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., passed to his reward on November 23rd. He was in his sixty-ninth year, and for the past twenty-nine years had headed the work of the seminary. Hundreds of preachers of the Southern Baptist Church have had their lives and their ministry profoundly influenced for good by the dynamic personality of Dr. Mullins. Few men are given the opportunity to wield so great an influence as those who touch the lives of young preachers in the time of their training, when they are most susceptible to formative impressions. It appears that God always arranges to place some great soul at these strategic places. Almost every preacher thanks God for some such man from whom he has received great inspiration. The Southern Baptist Church lost such a man in the going of Dr. Mullins, but surely we may believe that God does not permit such places of power to go unfilled.

MATERIALISM vs. SPIRITUALITY.—

It appears as if the triumphs of scientific effort will reach a point some day when the world will be forced to recognize the validity and necessity of spiritual faith. Men have been laughed at for believing that God could touch and energize the lives of men. The puzzling question that perplexes the mind of the world today is, how in a world controlled by natural law as we know it to be can God get His messages into the minds of men and unloose the spiritual energies of their souls unless He can establish some material contact. Recently the engineers of the Westinghouse Electric Company have perfected a siren which sounded from an airplane in flight above an airport, turned on the flood-lights which light the landing-field. The sound-waves of the siren are received by a delicate apparatus which transmits the vibration to a mechanism that turns on the lights. And yet men wonder whether God can send out an impulse which, being received by the soul of man, can turn on the spiritual lights of life.

CHINA'S CHRISTIANS.—

The world has been greatly interested within recent months in what has been going on in China. Those whose primary interest centers in the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ have been wondering about the future of the Christian Church in China. At the time of the greatest disorders and conflicts, the concern was for the lives of the missionaries in China. Many of them were returned to their homelands. The Christians of China suffered such persecutions and trials of faith as must have been the fate of the early Christian Church in the days of the Roman persecutions. But instead of the Christian movement of China having been destroyed or enfeebled by its trial of fire, it seems to have emerged with renewed faith and vigor. The recent session of the National Christian Council of China displayed a spirit of unity and of broad Christian statesmanship which promises to be a powerful factor in the making of a new China. Indications point to the fact that the Church will emerge from the present situation an indigenous Church, with its influence turned toward the task of making China Christian.

The telegram sent by the council to President Chiang and the government of Nanking is indicative of the spirit and purpose of the Christian Church in China. The council said:

"The nation being now united, the era of political tutelage has begun, reconstruction is under way, and the nation is rejoicing. This humble organization, at its annual meeting, respectfully presents its congratulations.

"We look to the government to uphold religious liberty, promote moral education, reduce military establishments, suppress banditry and work for permanent peace.

"This humble organization desires, with its fellow-Christians in the entire country, actively to propagate the religious teachings of universal love according to Christ, and thereby to try to complete the great work started by Dr. Sun of building a new nation.

"In the work of the coming year we shall devote special effort in support of the government in such movements as the suppression of opium and prostitution, the improvement of family life, the amelioration of the conditions of agricultural and industrial workers."

PEACE AND PREPAREDNESS.—

Much discussion is going on in this country and abroad concerning the Armistice Day speech of President Coolidge, in which the President urged additional efforts to promote world peace, but linked with it the statement that in order to insure world peace that the United States must be prepared with adequate armaments. The speech of the President has given great encouragement for those who are interested in the United States building a tremendous navy. Many earnest thinkers in this country are wondering if additional naval strength is the way to promote international peace.

Other nations seem to be waiting to see what steps shall be taken in response to the policy announced by the President, and are inclined to put the most hopeful interpretations upon the President's words. An English writer says: "It is too early to measure the response to President Coolidge's Armistice Day speech. Speaking generally, our spokesmen are calm; they recognize that America must follow the line of its own interests as it understands them, and that in any case this country will not think of its navy program in any competitive spirit. The fact is not forgotten that the main interests of Britain and America are the same."

The speech met with less kindly criticism at the hands of Dr. Halford E. Lucecock, of the Yale divinity school, speaking before the board of foreign missions of the Methodist Church. Dr. Lucecock voiced the hope that what the President had said "is the valedictory of the old administration, and not the inaugural of the new. The President and Congress will hear from the Christian conscience of the country when the heart and mind of the people have been so stirred by the great moral and spiritual adventure of the Paris peace pact. The Christian forces of the country should not be satisfied to turn their backs on that adventure and occupy themselves with sitting down in shipyards and building more cruisers. Mr. Coolidge is too much like Bunyan's character Mr. Facing-Both-Ways. The philosophy of Bunyan's character rested on the great truth that there is much to be said on both sides. The President has straddled the whole issue by endorsing positions which are not compatible with each other. In the next few weeks the Christian conscience of this country must thunder loud enough to split the eardrums of Congress."

Prof. S. M. Smith, whom many of our people know, is engaged with the Children's Home Society of Virginia and is now in the city in the interest of that society. He is regional director, and his home address is 15 Kensington Court, Norfolk, Va.

THE SUN's editor met last Sunday P. M. with the Woman's Board of the Georgia and Alabama Conference at Lanett, Ala., and Monday A. M. with the ministers of the Alabama Conference, at Roanoke, and Monday P. M. with those of the Georgia and Alabama Conference at LaGrange, Georgia.

No better Christmas gift could be made to a friend than a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It would be a reminder, if you wish to be remembered, and we all like to be remembered by our friends. Send your order and the price to the circulation manager, C. D. Johnston, Elon College, N. C.

Shop windows, city streets and mails with all kinds of Christmas advertisements remind us that the happiest season of the year draweth nigh. The birth of the Christ-Child has given the world its greatest holiday season; but we wonder sometimes if in our celebration of the event we do not forget the character and life of Him who gave it to us.

We are passing along our compliments and congratulations to our good friend and brother, T. J. Holland, Enigma, Ga. We acknowledge the following: "Dr. Benjamin Franklin Camp announces the marriage of his daughter, Jennie, to Mr. Thomas Junius Holland, on Wednesday, November 14, 1928, Lake City, Fla."

Col. J. E. West, chairman of our Mission Board, writes that which we have tried to make plain repeatedly: "Kindly make it plain in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and in your letters that only the Sunday School collections and Church offering for missions can be counted on the one-third of the pastor's salary quota. I understand some of the Churches have been told, erroneously of course, that the C. M. A. dues would count."

NEWS NOTES.

By MRS. W. M. JAY.

The First Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., is doing a fine piece of work and is well organized for efficient service. The Woman's Society is divided into eight circles, with an additional circle recently organized which is made up of business girls who will go directly from their work to the Church where supper will be served. After the supper they have their devotional and business meeting. Twenty young women were present at their last meeting, and they are all enthusiastic over the prospect. The society is using two study books, "Dealing Squarely with God," and "Women and Stewardship."

Word comes from the Alabama women that they are slowly but surely pushing forward. Their Conference was well attended and they have organized three women's and two young people's societies since. Several Churches have expressed the desire to organize and they are working hard on this part of the work. They feel that the increased interest is the result of the summer school and school of methods. All departments of the work are being pushed, and new organizations perfected, so we can expect to hear of great things being done in the near future.

The Elon College societies held their regular Thanksgiving service Wednesday night, November 28th, in the college chapel, with a good attendance and a fine program. The little play, "The Mother Goose Village Missionary Society," was given by the Willing Workers, and they did it exceedingly well. Mrs. W. S. Alexander is the superintendent, and Mrs. J. S. White, assistant, and they are doing a fine work with the little folks. Mrs. S. W. Coddell and her juniors put on a beautiful candle-lighting service in connection with the offering. Mrs. N. F. Brannock and Mrs. C. E. Tapscott each read appropriate selections on the theme "The Grace of Gratitude." The music was an important part, too. Mrs. W. A. Harper sang beautifully the solo, "My Task"; a ladies' quartet rendered a selection, and three little girls gave two motion songs.

TWO PASTORS MADE HAPPY.

Our good friend, Rev. C. E. Newman, Virgilina, Va., will be the first pastor in the Southern Christian Convention to receive the nice Stetson hat under our proposition to give a ten-dollar hat to the pastor of any Church where they will send me ten renewals and ten new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. And Bro. Newman seems to be the first lucky one to be made happy for Christmas.

Our good Bro. Rev. G. D. Hunt, of Alabama, is a close second. He wrote me last week that he would send in his list of subscribers with a check this week, extracting from the circulation manager a Stetson hat. We had hoped that every pastor in the Southern Christian Convention would receive a new hat for Christmas. We hope that many Churches yet will send in their list in order that their pastor may receive a ten-dollar Stetson hat for a Christmas present. I think it would be fine of any Church to show their appreciation of the long and faithful service of their pastor who does his best for the congregation. I take it for granted that the pastor of any Church would feel happy to get a nice Stetson hat for a Christmas present. And then, too, it would make him feel so happy that his Church people appreciated his faithful and untiring service.

It would make our circulation manager happy to get a new hat for Christmas. But as he is no pastor and has no Church in charge, he will not come under this club proposition. So he will have to look to his wife to give him a new hat for Christmas.

Let every Church get busy, and let us raise more club subscriptions before the 20th of December. Then we will have time to mail all the hats out so the pastors can receive them the day before Christmas.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Elon College, N. C. Circulation Manager.

CHRISTMAS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The Christmas season offers the biggest opportunity for Christian living and practice in the Sunday School of the entire year. The Sunday School superintendent, teachers and officers should be quick to grasp the full meaning of the Christmas spirit and help to interpret it in the lives of those who make up the school. It is a fitting climax for the year's work because it represents the greatest act of love the world has ever known.

And that one event represents the infinite love of God for the world, so powerful that we can scarcely comprehend it, and at the same time the story is so simple and so appealing that even the tiny child can understand it. Christmas is called the "magic season," and it is that and more. It affords Christian people an opportunity to express in so many ways what this gift of love has meant to their own lives. It is tied up with all that stands for the best in our lives, home, Church, community, others.

Many of our Sunday Schools are planning their Christmas program so that it will include all the Sundays of the month instead of just one Sunday. They are making their opening worship services in the general Sunday School and various departments as beautiful as possible, using the Christmas hymns (and there are no more beautiful songs in the world), Bible accounts of the birth of Christ, Christmas stories and poems.

The Christmas spirit is best expressed in doing something for others. Several weeks before Christmas the different classes should begin thinking about their part in the Sunday School Christmas service. Last Christmas, one boys' class gave a new individual Communion set to the Church; the girls' class in that same school sent magazines to one of our mission points. The Christmas program in that school was a "giving service," in which each class had a part. There are always needy families in any community. This kind of service has grown out of what is known as "white gifts' service." A number of these services have been arranged and may be ordered for use in any Church.

It is a mighty fine plan for each school to arrange its own service after having decided upon what each class will give, making the service one of music, sketches from the Christmas story, presentation talks by a member of each class, and anything they may wish to include. The gifts are usually brought to the altar, which may be lighted with candles, showing the manger scene. Many schools bring their gifts wrapped in pure white and have the representatives presenting the gifts dressed in white. Such a service as this is much more impressive than some of the irreverent, hilarious programs given in some Churches, when there is little to suggest the Christ-spirit. It is to be hoped that our Churches will continue to improve their Church services at all times, making them more impressive, more beautiful, and, above all, more worshipful.

PATTIE L. COGHILL.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

Our Sunday School Thanksgiving offering for the Orphanage amounted to $104. Several pledges are to be added to that amount. The congregation, after so long a time, approved plans for the new Church building at a business session last night.

Last year the Church, which has received home mission aid ever year since its organization, reduced the amount received by $150. This year we reported to the C. M. A. that we are now self-supporting and will receive no aid.

The pastor is riding in a new super-six sedan, presented to him by the congregation.

There were 207 present at the Sunday School last Sunday. M. F. ALLEN.

"There are many simple things that we make complex, many easy things that we make hard by the difficulties we read into them. Is not that why the Master says we must become as little children if we would enter his kingdom? The child does not beg directions by reasoning about them. He obeys to the best of his understanding."

"A MAN AFTER GOD'S OWN HEART."

BY GEO. T. WHITAKER.

(Annual address delivered before the E. N. C. Christian Conference, at Fuller's Chapel, Henderson, N. C., by the president.)

I see present this morning a number who were of the personnel make-up of our last Conference. Doubtless, they will recall that my remarks on that occasion were based upon the estimate placed by God upon one of His outstanding servants—David, the shepherd lad, the chosen leader of his people, "a man after God's own heart." The burden of that message was to hold up the life and works of David—his failures as well as his successes—as a pattern after which we, as humble servants of the Lord, might shape our thoughts, mold our purposes, and determine our actions in life. That David's life was a worthy one, after which we may pattern ours, is attested by the fact that God Himself said he was "a man after God's own heart." Now, having lived such a worthy life, David, full of years, came to realize that he was soon to go the way of all the earth, so he set his house in order and sent for his son Solomon, his chosen successor, to whom he gave this parting injunction: "Be strong, therefore, and shew thyself a man" (1 Kings 2:2).

King David, in the light of his varied experience, realized the tremendous responsibilities that were to fall upon the shoulders of his successor, and with true prophetic eye, looking into the future, he sensed the vacillating side of Solomon's character and sought to strengthen his nobler impulses by this—"Be strong, therefore, and shew thyself a man." Solomon, for his part, recognized the full import of David's admonition. He realized his weakness and knew that he was face to face with a tremendous task. Overwhelmed with the sense of the duties confronting him, Solomon did that which every true man will always do; he took this matter to God in prayer. In the 3rd chapter of 1st Kings, and in the 3rd verse thereof we find these words: "And Solomon loved the Lord, walking in the statutes of David his father." And so zealous was he in his love of the Lord that his meditations by day led him to dream of God by night. The character of the request Solomon made of the Lord is proof of the fact that he had set his heart to carry out the injunction of his father, "Be strong, therefore, and prove thyself a man." Yes, my friends, he proved himself a man—one made in the image of God—for we are told that the Lord was pleased with the thing which Solomon had asked: the plea for wisdom to discern between right and wrong in the judgment of his people. For the Lord granted more than Solomon had asked, and promised that even greater blessings should follow if Solomon would walk in His ways and keep His commandments as David his father had done.

Well, for many years—twenty, or more—Solomon measured up to all expectations, and the Lord blessed him as he had promised he would do. Solomon shewed himself a man in that he carried through the programs that his father had mapped out. The arch-plotters against the crown were brought to judgment and to doom. Solomon pressed to a successful completion the work of building a house wherein the worship of Jehovah was to be magnified and glorified, and he dedicated this temple with one of the most beautiful and most impressive prayer services recorded in all the annals of Scripture. Moreover, Solomon wrought vast internal improvements throughout the kingdom, organized the people for the various phases of their activities, and entered into trade relations with the neighboring peoples on a most extensive scale. We are told that the fame of King Solomon went abroad so that there was none like unto him among all the kings of the earth, neither in riches nor honor, nor in glory. And when one from afar came to see for herself the truth of the reports that had reached her land, made open confession that the half had never been told.

But revelling in such extravagant prosperity and glory proved Solomon's undoing. His heart became proud and he forsook the service of the Lord for the heathen worship practiced by his heathen wives who turned his heart after other gods. And we are told that the Lord was angry with Solomon and told him that the kingdom should be rent from his son and be given to his servant. Moreover, the Lord stirred up adversaries, who plagued Solomon all the rest of his days. Such, my good friends, was the fall of one who in the final analysis failed to shew himself a man—a creature in the image of God.

A study of this man's life and character is seen in its truest perspective when the force of its application is measured in terms of our own life's actions. All the world admires a real man—applauds a manly action—cherishes manly traits of character wherever exhibited. Methinks there has never fallen from the lips of man a nobler tribute than the words the immortal Shakespeare ascribes to Antony when he says of Brutus, "His life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him that nature might stand and say to all the world, This was a man." Indeed, may I ask you, my fellow-workers, if you do not recall with vivid recollection the gripping thoughts and the stirring resolutions by which you were guided in the days of the attainment of your majority? When you reached the milestone of life where the law of the land recognized you as a man—when you assumed the duties of citizenship and accepted the responsibilities thereof. Or further, may I presume to inquire of any youth present today if his supreme desire or wish is not the yearning for the time to come in his life when he may rightfully be recognized as a "man," and may properly assume the responsibilities thereof? To those of us who have passed this experience, I wish to propound this simple question: have we at all times since this experience proven ourselves men—creatures in God's image? Have we followed Solomon's early example and taken our burdens and responsibilities to the Lord, and there humbly sought wisdom and guidance in the conduct of our affairs? Then have we as individuals yielded to this guidance and walked according to the statutes of the Lord? Have we been rewarded in our efforts with a reasonable portion of success, and thereby had added responsibilities, yet all the while continued to love mercy, to do justly, and to walk humbly before our God? Or have we, in seasons of prosperity, allowed pride to swell our hearts and thereby crowd God out of our lives? Have we yielded to the temptation to take short cuts to business success, or have we stood the acid test of having sworn to our hurt and changed not when the penalty thereof was exacted? "Be strong, therefore, and shew thyself a man." May I give an illustration? There lived in my home town a very successful and prosperous merchant. He had made such a study of his particular line that he had become an expert, and was recognized as an authority; moreover, he had an unquestioned reputation for square dealing and fair treatment in the conduct of his business—indeed, so great was the confidence of the people in his integrity that his patronage grew to such proportion that others selling this same class of goods were forced out of business, and one of them even entered the employ of the more prosperous one. Now let us see what happened. Misfortune befell this good citizen. While crossing the railroad, his automobile was struck and demolished by an oncoming train. The merchant escaped death by the narrowest margin, spent several weeks in a hospital where one of his lower limbs was amputated and a number of broken ribs were attended to before he was able to return to his family. Hobbling upon crutches proved too trying an experience for the man to look after the mercantile establishment, so he interested a cousin of his in the purchase of the business. By and by, as his wounds healed and disappeared and when he found that an artificial limb could be fitted, and when he had become so accustomed to the use of the same as to be able to get around in comparative comfort, the urge to return to the business of merchandising came upon him with all its old-time force. However, by this time, his cousin was succeeding well in his undertaking and it was assumed that the old business could not be bought. So the former merchant proceeded to establish himself in a new business on another street. Now, it soon became evident that the man's cousin had not had sufficient experience—had not become proficient enough in the conduct of his business—to be able to cope with real competition, and his establishment bade fair to go upon the rocks. Thereupon, this cousin complained after this fashion: "When I purchased your former business, I never contemplated facing the situation of having you as a future competitor." "Well, neither did I expect such a development, in view of my physical handicap," replied the merchant; "however, I do not recall having promised to refrain from such a venture at the time our deal was consummated." "That is true," said his cousin, "yet your decision to re-enter business will be my ruin." "Well, now," the man replied, "if that is what it means to you, I will just buy you out and operate both places." So the cousin sold. You get the point, my brethren? This merchant showed himself a man, in a position where no law compelled him so to do—and the esteem in which his fellow-townsmen hold him has been heightened beyond bound.

Again, a firm of business men found it necessary to enlarge their capital, so they appealed to a personal friend of theirs—a man of financial standing—to endorse their note for a loan at the local bank. This disinterested man kindly accommodated them with his credit. Now, one of the partners in this business had active charge of affairs and was trusted to the utmost by his associate. But he yielded to temptation, and through speculation and riotous living wasted the assets of the firm, so the business was closed out. This crook absconded with all the cash that could be saved from the wreckage—and this included all the hard-earned money saved up and put into the venture by the other partner. As a matter of fact, this blameless man was left practically penniless, while the note was still running at the bank and the innocent surety still bound thereon. Since he was not worth the amount exempted by law, this man could not be forced to take care of this obligation. Having a large family to support from a meager monthly salary earned as a line patrolman, what do you suppose this man who had been filched by a faithless associate did in the matter of the note? He went immediately to the banker and told him that he did not want his surety friend to have to pay one cent on this paper, and that he purposed to place every dollar he could possibly spare from his monthly salary toward the liquidation of this loan. And he did this over a period of years, finally turning over to his endorser this note marked "Paid in full." "Be strong, therefore, and shew thyself a man." Both these incidents came within my own observation, and they have served to strengthen my faith in my fellow-man.

Down in Georgia lives a good member of our brotherhood. His life has been one of frugal in-

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

OUR CONVENTION'S FINANCIAL PLAN.

The Convention at Richmond last May adopted a financial program for our Conferences that is plain, practical and, if pursued, will adequately support the enterprises and institutions of the Church. And, be it said, to the credit of our Conferences, that Convention's program, whenever and wherever discussed was approved. This is as it should be, as Convention is our most conservative and painstaking body, or should be so, and its decisions should always be reached with such discretion and mature deliberation as to commend their wisdom to all other bodies of the Church. And history shows that this has usually been true of Convention decisions. It sometimes requires years, maybe decades, for Convention's decisions and conclusions to become thoroughly understood and operative, but almost invariably their wisdom prevails and their conclusions are accepted as final.

There are reasons why this should be so. The Convention owns and operates, and is responsible for, interests and enterprises that no Conference alone can sponsor, or maintain, or adequately support. The Convention of necessity has to legislate for, provide for, and support all the institutions and enterprises of the Church. And to think of a Convention's providing for one of its institutions or enterprises, at the expense or hurt of another, is sheer folly and nonsense. This would be like a mother having children of her own, all of whom are equally near and dear to her heart, and yet showing favors to some at the hazard and discomfort of the others.

The fact is there is no place in the plan or program of a Church for one of its institutions or enterprises to flourish and prosper at the expense of other enterprises thereof. All legitimate and necessary Church enterprises flourish or fall together. Church institutions and enterprises must and do grow together, or they perish separately. If our Orphanage is to prosper at the expense of our colleges, then our Orphanage ought to cease to be, and sooner or later will cease to be. If missions depend for support on money that should go to our colleges, then missions should get out of our program, and sooner or later will do so. If our colleges are to prosper at the expense of our Orphanage and our missionary undertakings, then our colleges will sooner or later close their doors and go out of their God-given task. The thing is unreasonable and absurd on the face of it. Our Church enterprises do not furnish the one at the expense of the other. They flourish, if at all, at the expense of the world and the flesh, with all their untold millions of wealth. As Ben. Franklin is quoted as saying of the colonies when voting to declare for independence against British tyranny, "We must all stand together or we will hang separately." Our Church institutions and enterprises are in a common warfare, never against the whole wide world in which there are foes to face and in which there are sufficient reserves to support and sustain all, as long as these enterprises are legitimate interests and enterprises of the Church.

Elon College and Piedmont Junior College are ours. They have been built and maintained by our efforts, energies, gifts, prayer. We cannot be loyal to our Church and what it is doing in the world and not support them. Our mission interests are ours. Through these interests we endeavor to increase our numbers, enlarge our borders, extend our stakes, that we may have ever enlarging territory in which to work. We must and will support these if we love and are loyal to our Church.

The Orphanage is ours. It is the utterance and the vision of our charity. We have built it, and will sustain it if we love our Church, the widow and the orphan. The CHRISTIAN SUN is ours. We will sustain and support it if we love our Church and are loyal to it. Our aged ministers and their dependents are ours. They have given themselves and their best for the Church we love. She will not see them suffer in need and helplessness. Our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Societies are ours—vital, integral parts of our Church-life and polity. We will support them in our program of Church progress and growth and maintain our department of Christian education. The system of supporting all these needy sometimes seems intricate and difficult to comprehend. The system of financing a growing family always becomes more intricate and has to be dealt with at ever-increasing angles; but the growing family living, laboring, striving together, increases rather than decreases the sources of increase and support; and so it is with a growing, going, glowing Church, such as we are laboring and praying that ours shall continue to be.

It is folly and short-sightedness to talk or think of one Church enterprise prospering or flourishing at the expense or detriment of another. The loyal Church member will show his love for his Church by helping sustain and support all its legitimate and worthy institutions and enterprises. A Church, as a denomination, can live and can grow in no other way.

J. O. A.

THE CHURCH AND OUR CHURCH.

"The" Church and "our" Church are two thoughts in the mind of most men, and it may be so in our minds; but if our love for "the" Church does not go beyond "our" Church it is a limited love, and love limits, largely, our service. Men do not render willing and liberal service to the persons or the causes they do not love. Loyalty to our family is not only legitimate; it is righteous. But if it stop at home and does not go to our neighbors, it is faulty. We are to love our neighbors as ourselves, and we are to love the Church as we love our Church.

This is the basis for missionary enterprise and Church institutions. Light that is hid under a bushel does not give light; but, when it is placed in a candlestick and set on a table, it gives light to all that are in the house. Current expenses support our Church, but kingdom expenses are as binding upon members as current expenses. What Church people need to learn is that religion is not simply a personal experience and a final home in heaven; it is, first, a personal experience and then an expression of that experience in helping the kingdom to save the world. Jesus said Himself, "I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." He did not minister to others with money, clothes or food of His own, for He had not where to lay His head. But it does not require what we call means to render service to the Church, but a life. Jesus did most with His words and His life. He went about doing good. This fact in the life of Jesus is full of encouragement to the poor members of the Church. Jesus was the poorest in this world's goods, and yet He did more than others for the Church. So many think they can do nothing for missions because they have no money to give; but they underestimate their ability and their obligation to help the Church to save the world.

Attendance upon Church services is service for the kingdom. Jesus went to the synagogue—the Church of His day—"as His custom was"; yet He put no offering into the plate. But His presence and His words strengthened the faith of believers, led others to believe, and helped to spread the gospel; and poor members can do that by living for Jesus and filling the house of prayer with the spirit of worship. A big poor congregation can do more for the Church than a little rich congregation.

But there is one other thing to consider, and that is that those who have means cannot help the Church nor our Church unless they give of their means to both. Giving is based on receiving. The New Testament rule is "to give as the Lord has prospered us," and "it is more blessed to give than to receive." The hen cackles with delight when she gives an egg; she would not cackle if some one gave her an egg. Receiving is good, but giving is better. W. W. S.

RAISING SPIRITUAL PRODUCTION.

Principles are eternal, but methods are temporary. It is exceedingly difficult to get some leaders in the kingdom's enterprises to see this. That all members of a Church should support its program financially is a principle. It does not change. The methods of enlisting the support of the members and of their payments may very well change from time to time. It is far better that they should change. Spiritual production is raised thereby just as the introduction of improved machinery in a factory raises production.

One item that limits spiritual production in the Church is its segmentary alignments, whether in interest or in financial support of causes. Dr. Frederick A. Agar, efficiency expert of the Northern Baptist Convention, strikes this situation a hard blow in his recent book, "Enlisting Laymen" (Judson Press, Philadelphia; $1.00), when he says:

"There is no Scripture for or against segmentary group organizations in a local Church, such as the women's organizations, the men's organizations, the Bible school, the young people's society, and organized classes in the Bible school. All students of modern Church life believe in group organizations that contribute to the welfare of the whole and do the work belonging to the Church. They accord with the general teaching of Scripture that provides a place for service, a method of training, and an evangelistic and missionary outreach for every child of God. But to allow one part of the whole group to grow into such a place of independent action that the unity of the Church is in danger is to divide the educational outreach and impact into segments that produce confusion, competition, and failure. The financial policies of the different subsidiary parts, for instance, may become so conflicting as to render ineffectual any attempt by the Church to enlist every member in the support of the whole. It would seem clear from a study of Scripture that the Church is not bound by any method in this connection and is free so to constitute and direct its subsidiary parts as to produce organic unity and functional effectiveness. The part must never become a substitute for the whole."

THE MARVEL AND MIRACLE OF MISSIONS.

One has to come in contact with Seventh Day Adventists and their literature to know anything about the wonder and work of missions in our day. All other communions, and our own in particular, are but playing, and that quite poorly, with that great theme and command of the Lord. One cannot possibly believe what a Christian people can do for missions and the spread of the gospel unless one learns what Adventists are doing. And then one has to take a second or third breath and try over again. For instance, here is a denomination that, in the territory covered, about equals our own numerically. (We outnumbered them until recently.) Now for a comparison that will seem to many SUN readers unbelievable. This writer sat with our Foreign Mission Board in Dayton in October and helped to make up a foreign mission budget for this year of $58,000. (If we meet this it will be the first time in a decade.) The Adventists have a foreign mission budget this year of $4,500,000 (four million, five hundred thousand dollars), and indications now are that they will reach their budget and have half-million left over.

We Christians are working still in two countries, having begun our work abroad about the time they did, but at that time we had a very much larger membership at home. Now Adventists have missionaries in 126 countries, preaching the gospel in 256 languages. We have now twelve foreign missionaries on the field; Adventists have 6,767. We sent out one missionary in 1927; Adventists sent out 184. We gave to foreign missions last year something less than 50 cents per member; Adventists gave $25.11 per member.

Is it any wonder, then, while we Christians gave for all our home enterprises less than $10 per member, they gave for their home enterprises $50 per member? And while we are now growing at snail's pace, they are growing by leaps and bounds. There is a difference, and the Bible teaches us why; but our people will not heed.

J. O. A.

WHERE ARE WE?

This Sabbath afternoon the writer asked his pastor whether or not all the institutions of the Church were provided for in the financial budget of the Church. The reply of the pastor was that they were not all provided for. It seems from what can be gathered, that in our Conference we are asked to raise eight thousand, two hundred and fifty dollars, which is to be divided among the following objects: superannuation, Convention, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Convention obligations, and an undistributed item, which supposedly goes to any purpose the Convention, in its wisdom, may see fit. This leaves our Conference with the following items unprovided for: missions, $6,130; Elon College, $5,865; the Christian Orphanage, $6,980, and Christian education, $880—a total of $19,855.

Since the above items were not provided for in the Church and Conference budgets, then where is this money to come from? If our Conference does not recognize its obligations to these institutions of the Church, can we expect the individual Churches to recognize an obligation that the Conference does not assume, and can the individual member of the Church feel that his Church will not assume? Are we to look to the outside world to support our mission work, our college work and our Orphanage work? Will these institutions be turned over to be supported by charity?

But, says one, let the Mission Secretary take the field and raise the mission fund; let the president of the college go out and raise all the money that the college needs; and let the superintendent of the Orphanage raise what is needed for the support of the fatherless and motherless children in his charge.

But where are these brethren to raise this money? The Conference has said, by its action, that outside of monthly offerings for missions and the Christian Orphanage and a quarterly offering for the college, the raising of these funds does not concern it; following the lead of the Conference, the individual Church can say that this is none of its business; and likewise the individual Church member can say that this does not concern me, since my Conference and my Church repudiate the responsibility of supporting these institutions.

Then, where are we as a Conference and as a Church? By Conference action we have left the Church with all its benevolent institutions without the fold of our fostering care. We have said to those engaged in the work of our institutions to go and get the money if you can; if you cannot do so, then blame no one but yourselves.

Here we wish to lay down a fundamental principle of Church development. No Church will ever amount to a row of pins in advancing the kingdom of God on earth that does not live by these principles. That Church that would make its power for good felt among men must—

First, undertake great things for God; and Second, expect great things from God.

We undertake great things for God by ennobling the institutions of the Church, by making them strong and great, by giving liberally to their support, and by recognizing their claim upon the Conference and the individual Church. To undertake great things for God calls upon us to recognize in our Church budget all the interests of the kingdom of God here on earth, and for us to write it large across our Church budget that the Church expects the largest contributions possible. To undertake great things for God means that the Church will inaugurate a training school in which, with the Church and the pastor as leaders, all the members of the Church will realize their financial responsibility to the Church and to its institutions, and will then open up the hearts as well as pocketbooks of the individual members to support the Church in an adequate way.

If we are ashamed to write what is expected of the Church in the budget, where will the individual member be trained in the art of dividing his gains with the Master for the Master's work?

If we do great things for God, then we will have a right to expect great things from God. And one reason why our crops are poor, and why we make so little is simply because we undertake to do so little for God. It has always been so, and it will ever be so. If the Church gives, if she recognizes her obligation to do great things for the Master, then will those who thus lay their gifts on the altar prosper and succeed and God's kingdom will come and His will be done among men.

I wonder if we have not made a mistake in not charging the individual Churches with the responsibility of supporting the institutions of the Church! Let us consider the matter, and if we have made a mistake, let us not make it any more.

DR. A. M. KERR SERVES OWN GENERATION.

Nearly a quarter of a century ago it was our esteemed privilege to listen to Dr. Kerr preach on the subject, "Serving Our Own Generation," and that masterly sermon has been a source of inspiration and aspiration to me through all of these years.

When the letter came to me from Mr. Hermon Eldredge announcing the death of Dr. Kerr I was grief-stricken, as all his other friends were; but out of it all came the whole panorama view of that thought-provoking, self-searching, altruistic sermon.

There is a sense in which Dr. Kerr has served his generation, but there is also a sense in which he lives to serve the eternal generations. There is perhaps a limit within which the work of service to mankind may be performed in the flesh, however great and powerful; but there is no limit to the wide, far-reaching, endless ministry of spiritual influence.

If a person should live so long as to reach the fullness of old age, he would live through nearly three generations; and yet it is only upon one of them that he can exert an active influence. The first generation molds him, with its various educational forces; the second generation he may distinctly impress with his own individuality; while on the third he can only exert a passing influence. He is, for the most part, out of sympathy with it, and he presently finds that he had better step aside and let the current of life and thought pass on.

Some men serve their generation by being before it, and giving expression in it to the thoughts and truths and sentiments which properly belong to the age that is yet to be. Some men belong precisely to their own generation; they are exactly adapted to it; they never get beyond it; they are born into its thought and feeling; they live in it, work for it, worthily express it, and pass away with it. Others seem to be always in the past generation, their thoughts and feeling all belong to the time past and gone; they may seem out of place, but no generation can afford to forget the past out of which it has come.

Dr. Kerr served his generation by being a witness for God in it. He knew quite well that every generation needs men and women who really believe in God and make it plain to everybody that they do believe in Him. He brought the sense of God to man whenever he came into relations with them. Not by word only, but by the impression he made on them that actually lived under his pleasing influence.

He served his generation by living the best possible in it. He knew that every generation needed in all its spheres such models and examples as may be to it a constant inspiration. He ever endeavored to keep the moral standards up, and raised the moral standard still higher.

He ministered to the generation by manfully resisting the evils that he saw afflicting it. Every generation has had its conflicts and has needed holy warriors, brave soldiers and noble leaders. He not only opposed evil by solid, steadfast, quiet persistence of godly character, but was faithful in resisting every phase of social, political or moral evil that has grown up in our midst, and he never refrained from denouncing conceit and laxity in

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The sixth quadrennial session of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America assembled here in the Seneca Hotel, in Rochester, N. Y., on Wednesday, December 5th, at 11 o'clock, and will continue until Tuesday night, December 12th. Three sessions are held each day—business meetings forenoon and afternoon in the hotel ball-room, and public meetings at night in the Baptist Temple. At the evening meetings great addresses are delivered and great music is rendered by a Presbyterian choir. About four hundred have registered and there are four hundred and fifty rooms in the hotel. On Thursday evening, the 6th, a supper was given by the council to those who attended the Interchurch Conference in Carnegie Hall, in New York City, in 1905, when the idea of the Federal Council was initiated, and the first regular session of the council was held in Philadelphia in 1908. There were thirty-one at this supper, and I was one of eight who attended these first meetings and have attended every meeting since that time. It was a delightful meeting, and Dr. Martyn Summerbell was one of the thirty-one.

The General Convention of the Christian Church is represented in this session by Drs. F. G. Coffin, president; W. H. Denison, secretary; A. G. Caris, president of Defiance College, Ohio; Martyn Summerbell, president of Starkey Seminary, N. Y., and W. W. Staley. Under the direction of Dr. Coffin, the work of reporting the meetings of the council has been divided up between the five of us present; and those letters will all be sent to the Herald of Gospel Liberty, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and the Vanguard for publication. That makes it necessary for us to wait till the meetings close and we get home and have time to write them.

I have met many big men whom I have met many times before, and new ones who are prominent in the twenty-eight Protestant denominations that are members of the Federal Council. It is refreshing to sit with hundreds of bishops, rectors, pastors, presidents of colleges and universities, editors and business laymen who are so occupied with the discussion of questions that pertain to the kingdom that you would never know to what denomination they belong. Unity for which Jesus prayed dominates the thought and speech of the members who lose their local interest in the interest of the whole Church. With such a spirit in the Church we can look forward to international good will and world peace.

All the questions that occupy the mind of thinking Christians are brought into the meetings, receive careful consideration and unanimous approval. One of the factors that count most is the mingling together, the exchange of views on fundamental and current topics, and the common view of all who follow Jesus Christ. The Protestant Churches are already one, but do not know it until they meet and study the great human and kingdom questions together.

Dr. S. Parks Cadman retires from the presidency, and Bishop McConnell, of New York, took the chair this afternoon in his place. One man holds this high office only one term of four years. Dr. Cadman has been chosen and has accepted the position as broadcaster of sermons and will devote himself to that high service.

ELON LETTER.

WHY STUDENTS ARE IN COLLEGE.

The college life, its attitudes, methods and approaches differ widely from the conditions of a quarter-century ago, and in many instances of a decade ago.

Formerly, only those went to college who had definite convictions personally that going to college was necessary to get along in the world, and consequently students were willing to accept a great many prescriptions as to curriculum, as to conduct and as to activities, which today would not only be resented but openly opposed by college students.

Why this change?

It has become the fashion now for students to go to college. It is the rule now rather than the exception for those who can finance themselves or who can persuade others to finance them to enter college. Consequently, a great many persons have come to college not with the expectation of making scholars of themselves but of spending four agreeable years. A survey conducted in the Middle West three years ago by the Chicago Tribune revealed three outstanding reasons given by the college men and women of the "Big Ten" of the Chicago area for being in college. These reasons, briefly summarized, were:

1. To get training for success in life.
2. To secure a background of culture for vocational purposes.
3. To form friendships that may be useful in the future.

It is customary for me to be the Sunday School teacher of the senior class in Elon College. The changed attitude of college students toward the whole educational situation is reflected in the approach of each succeeding senior class to the problems of the Christian life. Last year the senior class decided to use the uniform lessons, but they insisted that these lessons should not be presented from the informational standpoint but from the problem-situation standpoint. In their discussions, they wished to find, for their own experiences and for the problems which they were daily facing, help from the topics given in the uniform series. Consequently, they spent very little time discussing the facts involved in any Scripture set for study, but they were alert keenly to find help for their life problems in the experiences of those mentioned in the Scriptures set for study. This is a radical attitude with reference to a Sunday School lesson, but the results were most satisfying.

This year the senior class, which, by the way, is governed as to its procedure by four faculty members and four students, selected from their own group, voted to make Bruce Curry's "Facing Student Problems" the basis of their discussions. Characteristically enough, they voted not to follow this text slavishly, but to select from it problems with particular meaning for them and to add others to it from time to time. This committee of faculty and student members meets each Tuesday immediately following chapel to report any particular problem on the campus that has become so acute that it needs to be treated immediately by this group in one or more discussion sessions. In line with this general policy, the first topic chosen out of Curry's book was the ninth, entitled, "What are we in college for?" Another characteristic of this group is that no set time is fixed for settling problems. It took them four weeks to satisfy themselves with answers to this particular problem. Their answers were founded not on opinion, though opinion had its influence in their thinking, but upon their experiences, their ideals, and all the information they could possibly secure as containing the experiences and ideals of others. Extreme views were expressed by many of the group in the interchange of thought. The discussion was always lively and on a high level. The conclusions arrived at were eminently sane, and would commend themselves to outstanding leaders and thinkers in the field of the philosophy of education.

Before the first discussion session treating this problem, each member of the group was asked to hand in, without signing, the chief reason he or she might at this particular time entertain for being in college. This elicited, out of forty-five persons in the group, nineteen different reasons. Some of these reasons were given as many as eight times, but most of them were given only once. It will be interesting to catalog these reasons. They are as follows:

- Because others were going to college.
- To get and to carry good.
- To serve myself and my fellow-man.
- Because my people wished it.
- To broaden knowledge and help in my life's work.
- To prepare myself for future living.
- To broaden my view of education, secure new associates, and prepare for my vocation.
- To better understand our world.
- To make myself the best teacher possible.
- Because you must have an education to count in life.
- Because I love reading and study.
- To fit myself to stand equally with others in the financial and social world.
- To be able to live a better life in my profession.
- To render service to mankind.
- To get an A. B. degree.
- To learn how to see life and see it whole.
- To contribute more to the world.
- Because of an inner urge.
- To secure a broader outlook on life and be better able to cope with its problems.

Every one of these reasons was thoroughly discussed by the group and evaluated. They found the good and the weak points in each reason. They summarized the true purpose of college education as service, but they were very particular about the connotation that term should include.

For example, service, according to their thinking, was to be absolutely devoid of the "better than thou" attitude. It is to be rendered without condescension and in co-operation with people rather than as a favor granted to people. Service, in the judgment of this group of Elon seniors, rests upon the Christian sentiment of love and its sense of brotherhood. They went even further and decided that service, to be Christian and to carry out Christianity's sentiment of love and sense of brotherhood, would have to be based upon an identification of interests arising out of a sense of responsibility of the individual for social injustice or need of any character, together with an acceptance of that responsibility as a personal obligation. They freely granted that a college education results in economic gain and gives also a cultural value to the individual who pursues it successfully, but they were equally certain that these positive gains would do injury to the individual achieving them and to the social order in which they might be achieved, unless they were used in the spirit of service, as in their thinking they had defined it.

They also undertook to express their opinion as to who is "the educated man." They decided that the actual experience of being in college is worth while in itself, and at the same time is a preparation for a larger contribution in the solution of the world's problems as they are related to citizenship, politics, social democracy, education, industry, religion and the home. A man never completes his education, they agreed, but may be said to be well on his way toward education if his college course does certain things for him.

Among these certain things, they listed the following:

1. Ability to use the tools of human intercourse.
2. The habit of study and thought without guidance.
3. An acquaintance with the achievements of the race.
4. A grasp of the processes upon which life and service depend.
5. An acquaintance with methods of satisfying the intellectual and esthetic interests of life.
6. Ability to use occupational interests to advance general culture.
7. An appreciation of the good, the beautiful, and the true.
8. A Christian philosophy of life.

Finally, they examined the philosophy underlying the entire educational system and process. Education, they said, is not something done to a student by an institution and its teaching staff. It is rather an organized effort to induce the student to educate himself through the voluntary and interested activity of his own mind, as he views his present experience in terms of the racial experiences, and as he looks forward in idealistic terms to the oncoming obligations of his personal life. They are not sure under such circumstances as to what would be the outcome for the liberal arts college, in view of the fact that character has been shown to develop out of particular situations and that there is no transfer of ability, or power, or ideal or skill from one situation to another, unless there are common elements involved and unless these common elements are brought to the realm of conscious thinking and are considered desirable in the changed situation. In spite of the fact that they could not arrive at definite conclusions in regard to these matters, they, nevertheless, expressed their confidence in the educational process and their whole-hearted belief in the worth-whileness of being in college.

ATTENTION TO RECOMMENDATIONS.

At the Alabama Christian Conference this fall the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor committee made the following recommendations:

1. That our pastors co-operate with Sunday School and Christian Endeavor organizations in training our youth in Christian ways of living.
2. That each Sunday School give one offering to missions and one to the Orphanage each month.
3. That each Sunday School and society send two or more students to the summer school of Christian education at Wadley.
4. That each school take an offering for the Department of Christian Education.
5. That each Church, where there is no C. E., try to organize one.
6. That pastors and people be much in prayer for the Father's guidance in the training of our young people.

Since I happen to be president of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Alabama Conference, I am calling attention to these recommendations, hoping that it will get the desired results. Last year's record shows that only ten Sunday Schools in the Alabama Conference contributed to missions, and they gave, all told, $56. Last year fourteen Sunday Schools in the Alabama Conference contributed to the Orphanage and gave a total of $163.

These figures may not make us feel so proud. I hope they shame us to the extent that we shall do better this year. It is the experience of Sunday Schools that have given one Sunday's offering to missions and one to the Orphanage that nothing was lost, but the offering on the other two Sundays in the month paid the running expenses. However, in order to get Sunday Schools to try the plan, Dr. J. O. Atkinson and Mr. C. D. Johnston are willing to make good any deficit in Sunday Schools where the plan is used. Cannot we pay as much to support God's kingdom elsewhere as we pay for ourselves?

I hope we are already making plans to have our Churches represented in the summer school at Wadley next summer. If not, let's begin now.

Prof. W. C. Edge, who is president of the school, has suggested that the Sunday School set aside $1 per month for the twelve months for the purpose of paying the expense of two students in the school. Christian Endeavor can adopt the same plan, and thus send four students from the Church. We had a great school last summer, but we want to make it better by having every Church represented.

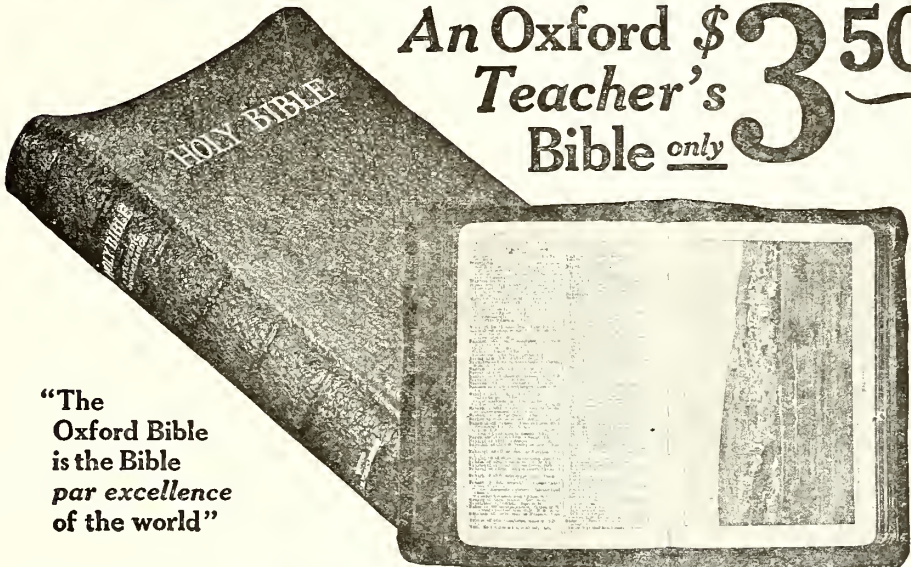

If the offering for the Board of Christian Education has not been taken, let us see that it is taken and sent to Mr. C. H. Stephenson, 120 West Martin Street, Raleigh, N. C. The board must have this money if it is to keep Miss Pattie Coghill as field secretary of Christian education. The board pays the running expense of the summer schools at Piedmont Junior and Elon Colleges. Let us ask God to lead and guide us in His kingdom work.

OXFORD BIBLES

An Oxford $3.50
Teacher's Bible only

"The Oxford Bible is the Bible par excellence of the world"

The best recommendation of the OXFORD TEACHER'S BIBLES is the fact that over 3,000,000 copies have been sold. The wonderful helps they contain save your time because they are alphabetically arranged, making reference easy. They take the place of many books about the Bible, and can be depended upon, being written by eminent scholars. The Helps contain 32 graphic illustrations, besides 15 beautifully colored maps. The text is the Authorized or King James version, with over 50,000 centre column references.

REQUIREMENTS OF STEWARDSHIP.

Not less than one-tenth of all our goods. The best study of stewardship is to live it. The best example of stewardship is to live it. Were giving of our means the only or the chief phase of the great content of Christian stewardship, many of us would be in possession of a very meager spiritual experience.

Full stewardship to God may be wholly expressed through the channels designated in this and the preceding numbers of this series. Not that in these puny articles the subject has been covered! It has been barely touched. But it is not unfair to claim that the subtopics employed are expansive enough to be made all-inclusive of what the subject holds. Whether the outline topics are in proper succession may be left an open matter. Their gradation well may be studied. As presented, love is the keyword to the whole idea of personal stewardship as it is to the least of Christian living. Love is itself "the giver and the gift." In the matter of Christian stewardship, only God and one other are directly involved. If one loves God passionately, consumingly, one will worship God. If one loves and worships God in the spirit of holiness, one will serve God in all the activity of life, being careful to engage only in such things as most certainly and speedily will transform the kingdom of this world into the kingdom of our Lord. And finally, if one loves, worships and serves God, one will give Him the first of everything, and who will say that is not the whole content of Christian stewardship?

That every person should do so, and that every one who has received the fullness of inheritance into the eternal kingdom of God's love will in return bring something into God's storehouse is not a disputed question. Not going back to the old law and forgetting the very plain New Testament injunction, "According as God hath prospered," the hesitation arises over what one should give—how much?

It would be presumptuous here to undertake to prove the validity of the Christian tithe or even defend it. Absolute proof and defense of it are given on higher authority than mine. From the earliest days of Bible history, in importance and time standing very next to the redemptive promise and provision, the tithe is an outstanding teaching. As far back as the Garden of Eden God made a reservation for Himself.

Failure of members to respect and practice tithing has kept the Church (the whole Church, but here I shall speak particularly of our own little branch of it) in a very impotent state. Any one inclined to regard this as an exaggerated view, let it be asked of him, Why are our general Church enterprises in such a feeble and precarious condition, some fairly gasping to keep an existence, some in languor, not even resisting the tide of discouragement, some slowly but surely passing, some actually gone? Specifically, why is our foreign mission work steadily reducing and wavering; schools shifting and uncertain? Why did my own little Conference (Valley Virginia) in 1926 fall short of Conference apportionment more than three hundred and twenty-five dollars, and in 1927 more than five hundred and fifty dollars? Why do other conferences for the same period show these comparisons—one: 1926, on Conference apportionment over $930 short; 1927, over $3,368 short? Another Conference, 1926, over $663 short; 1927, over $1,066 short? Why, oh why, are matters thus! Look at those declines.

To what will the Christian Church come if members do not face about and more properly adjudge our duty with respect to God's tithe?

As admitted by some (all too few), the fact that we owe God at least one-tenth of all He permits us to earn and acquire is not debatable. With many, the chief debatable phase of the matter is, how arrive at the tithe? Can the rich and the poor do it by the same reasoning and mathematics? Can I do it for you, you for me? I would not undertake to say I could do it for you. I can do it only for myself, but I can do it for myself! I must do it for myself. I dare not fail to do it for myself. Some one asks, shall we tithe only increase? Increase of what? Initial, foundational things come from whom? From God alone. There is no promise of increase except as we are faithful over present possessions, be they only a few things. Life itself and what is called daily living, be it little or much, are loans from God. Loans, as already heard, involve obligation. One's very capacity to earn, use, enjoy, is God's bestowment in no sense humanly or self-attained.

The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof. We are but the sheep of His pasture. Our Shepherd-leader—He to whom, if truly we are His, has been pledged our first love, our only worship, our whole service, concerning material possessions, says: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

STEWARDSHIP SPARKS.

Rev. A. E. Kemp, D. D., Urbana, Ill., says: "We will observe 'Enrollment of Stewards' Day' December 9th. Please send one hundred tither's pledge cards. Am speaking every Sunday morning on stewardship through November and up to December 9th."

Rev. Rue Burnell, Truro, Iowa, writes: "I am in the middle of a series of sermons on stewardship. I am gratified with the sympathetic hearing they are receiving."

Rev. J. T. Brooks, Farmer City, Ill.: "Am beginning stewardship study at my Church November 11th, to continue through November and December."

Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., North Girard, Pa., gives four reasons for tithing: "(a) It is God's way; therefore, the best way of financing His Church; (b) it brings one into a glorious partnership with God—the partnership of owner and steward; (c) it is the best financial investment, for it pays big material dividends and enriches spiritual life; (d) it brings the highest joy in giving."

Occasionally our hearts are cheered by remittances from Forward Movement subscribers who were prevented from making good on their subscriptions at the time. They have high regard for sacred pledges and do not regard them canceled. Such faithfulness is delightful.

Not Too Early to Begin.

Our pastors, superintendents and young people's congress workers should be using from now until January 13th, which is "General Convention Day" throughout the Church, to thoroughly inform themselves of the work and needs of the General Convention. No member of the Church should be left ignorant of the multitude of services rendered by your Convention office and officers. It must have the active support of the whole brotherhood. Our work and workers need your prayers; they need your co-operation. The Convention needs and must have generous support, or it cannot function. Tell your congregation about the work, make it clear to your Sunday School and Christian Endeavor people. Only one month to thoroughly make it plain. May it be full of instruction and inspiration.

Budget Churches.

Are the Churches seeing the value and necessity of the General Convention budget plan? Yes, they are, and it is time all were working at it. If the Churches named in recent Heralds in the Southern Wabash Illinois, the Northwestern Ohio, the Miami Ohio Conferences are adopting it in actual practice, then why not the Churches of Eastern Indiana and the Merrimack and all the others? In the Erie, Pa., Conference, Beaver Center, Fairview and Conneaut Churches are using it. We are happy to see it so. They are setting a fine example. Every Church should see that one-twelfth of its full allotment is remitted each month on the 15th, preferably through the Conference treasurer. The Maine Conference has recently voted to remit all benevolences through the Conference treasurer. Now, if the Churches of these conferences will actually raise their full allotments each month, it will be an inspiration.

All Churches should remember that all funds intended to apply on their allotments should not be assigned to some one kind of work, but just be labeled, "General Convention Budget." If you designate your funds for some specific cause, then you may send them direct to that particular department.

Diary and Budget Book.

Hundreds of parents and Sunday School teachers should get 1929 diary and budget account books for 25 cents for Christmas gifts. It is a fine daily diary, with stewardship instruction combined.

OUR CHURCH AUXILIARIES.

Jesus said, "I am the Vine, ye are the branches." This metaphor is so common in our ears that we hardly take time to scan its measure.

Let us picture for our thought this Vine and its branches. Where does the Vine end? and where do the branches begin? They are knit together. The Vine is a life-giving source. The branches show forth this life in the form of leaves, blossoms or fruit.

Christ said, "Without me ye are nothing." Now, let us put into visible form these pictures. Here is the Church established as a life-giving medium—a thing of inspiration and preparation; but for what? To serve and spread the gospel! Using a phrase that is so common with Dr. Atkinson, "Impression without expression becomes depression," why all this going to Church, singing praises, and listening to the preacher reveal the Word and will of God unless we are going to act upon this inspiration? "Be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only."

When we see a vine without green leaves or without fruit we know there's a lack of life, and, like Christ with the barren fig tree, we destroy the whole thing. Nurserymen tell us to keep the shrub growing so freely that it won't have time to blight or contract disease. So it ought to be with our Church groups. They should be so busy and so eager to fulfill the great commission, "Go ye," that there could be no time for stagnation within the Church.

Think of the beauty of these live and flourishing organizations, each doing some part to fulfill the mission of the Church! In the words of David, "Like a tree planted by the rivers of water, bringing forth his fruit in his season, his leaf also shall not wither." What a part we have! Christ said, "Greater works than these shall ye do."

Now let us look at our selves—the Eastern North Carolina Christian Church. Are we like the tree planted by the rivers of water, or are we like a cactus in a dry desert that pricks and takes for its own sustenance all life that touches its thorns? We are made up of forty-nine Churches, and within this number there are only thirteen women's missionary societies, two young people's, two willing workers, and four cradle roll, making a total of twenty-one societies altogether. I wonder if it is a fair test to say, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Such an opportunity we miss in existing for ourselves alone. Like an afflicted child, we never grow up to share in our pastor's labor or to spread the gospel. Perhaps we give a few scanty dollars; but what a privilege we pass up in not sharing larger in the kingdom! Most likely our lack of interest is due to a lack of vision. The more remote the need, the fainter the vision.

There is nothing that strengthens the missionary cause like thought of the need and conditions. We were not taught when we were children, therefore we must make more zealous efforts that the children of our present Church may have opportunity for a bigger knowledge of the peoples, customs and superstitions in lands where the light of the cross has not shined. The heroic stories of our missionaries appeal very strongly to children and young people, because childhood dreams are dreams of heroism.

Before our Church can come to be a missionary power in the world, it will have to create interest, enthusiasm, and zeal in its various departments through missionary instruction. Can we be Christian and not be missionary? Can we enjoy the love and blessings that the Heavenly Father bestows upon us and yet not be willing to share this joy with those who have never been given the privilege of knowing this great Father of all the universe? "And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

RUTH JOHNSON.

Fuquay Springs, N. C.

the Church of our time. He always called things by their right names, and sought with wholesome proofs and warnings to purify a corrupt generation.

No evolution explains such a man. The grace of God from a child, converse with nature, forgetfulness of self, patient, courage and fortitude, suffering in the school of affliction—all have played their part in making him the great man that he was. He was among us as one who serves. Service is a great word; a greater thing: to serve. He did not fail to find his way to serve his fellow-man and "generation." The poor, the humble, the untaught, the sinful, the learned and the good all alike found in him a special friend to serve.

He ever felt that the work he was doing was by the will of God. This was seen in his every purpose and in his special care to do the thing in the best way as he felt God would want it done. He sought His will in the springtime of life and carefully, humbly, all the way down through life, endeavored to accomplish the purpose His grace originated in his heart.

While he was great in the estimation of others, he never appeared to be so to himself. He served his generation in the simplicity of humility. He did not waste his aspirations on great schemes only to end in idle disappointment, nor did he seek the unattainable distance. The present time, the present place, the present task seemed the time and sphere for doing his great task, and not as many others lose their great opportunity between the dreams of the past and the visions of the future. Nor as many others sigh for more strength or more knowledge or more wealth instead of using at once their available strength and improving soberly their given talents one, two, or ten, or lessening of moral strength and diminishment of that enlarged opportunity which is the invariable sequel to faithfulness in "few things."

His life was cut off in what is ordinarily called the prime of life, and yet he served his generation. This may seem a short time to serve, but what an important length of time. What a multitude and variety of people! What a weight of solemn, thrilling interest in human affairs! What a trial of individual consistency in education or individual character! Only the infinite mind can read that volume through—the volume of one generation. Yes, there is no great distance to lend enchantment to the view, and no such picturesque vista, and no vague, flattering, indefinite scope; yet how full, how ample the definite scope was to him!

The end came. He fell asleep. This is sweet language indeed, but how often we lose the sweetness of it! A servant of Christ need not call that death which bounds the days of earth and shuts the bodily eye to the light of an earthly sun. It is but night, grateful night that bounds the day of life, speedily merging in that grandest morning. Asleep in Jesus, equally deep, soft, restful, close the eyes of His wearied servants, surely renews His youth, and soon wakes in life everlasting and the light that is in God's presence. Let us learn the name Jesus gave to death and learn to love it. Now we work, we watch, we pray, soon we shall sleep on and take our rest and our awakening from it will be ineffable light and knowledge and love.

ENOUGH HATS FOR ALL.

We are wondering how many of our pastors will wear a new hat Christmas! It is time to get busy. We truly hope we will have the pleasure of sending all our pastors a new hat. Ten new subscribers and ten renewals, with a check for forty dollars, will make your pastor happy Christmas. Let us have your club right away. Two good women in each Church can get this many new subscriptions and renewals in two days' time. You ought to be willing to work three days to make your pastor happy for Christmas.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XII—December 23, 1928.

THE BIRTH OF JESUS.

GOLDEN TEXT: "There is born to you this day in the city of David a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord."—Luke 2:11.

LESSON: Luke 2:1-20.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isa. 11:1-9.

It is difficult to write anything new about this story of the birth of Jesus, but fortunately it is not necessary to write anything new. The simple story of the birth of Jesus, even if it is repeated again and again, still has a charm and an appeal all its own. There is something imperishable and ever fresh about it.

"And she brought forth her first-born Son and wrapped Him in swaddling clothes and laid Him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn." In these few words there is stated one of the most profound and one of the most paramount facts of Christianity. In theological terms we call it "the incarnation," but in simple everyday terms it means that God came down in the likeness of man to live in Jesus Christ. In other words, God showed us what He is like and how He feels towards us in Jesus Christ. Whatever else God may be like, He is like Jesus Christ, and that is enough for those of us who love Him and serve Him.

Furthermore, the fact that Christ came as a Babe bears witness to the fact that God can enter into our own human hearts and lives. Indeed, that is precisely what God wants to do.

"And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them." Shepherds were humble, untutored men. And yet it was to them that the news first came of the birth of the Christ-Child! It is ever thus. Not to the proud and high-minded, but to the humble and poor in spirit does God manifest Himself. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him. The meek will He guide in judgment and the meek will He teach His way. It is significant, too, that the shepherds received this revelation while they were about their commonplace tasks, their daily duties. It is often in unexpected places and in unexpected ways that God makes known His secrets and His purposes. Let us all ever be attentive to the voice of God and let us be responsive to its bidding.

"Good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." A Saviour, one who should redeem men and women from the penalty and, what is still better, from the power of sin—why that was what men needed above all else! This Babe was the Christ, God's anointed One who should really save His people from their sin. And He was to be Lord of lords and King of kings, ruling not by temporal power but by the power of love. This message was not simply for the shepherds or even for the larger group which they represented, but it was to be to all people. Whatever other emphasis Christmas has, it ought to have the missionary emphasis. Everything that Christ has brought us and means to us is to be shared with others, with all, until the knowledge of Him covers the earth as the waters cover the sea.

"And this shall be a sign to you: Ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger." That is the startling thing about the whole thing. In view of His heavenly and kingly origin and nature and mission, one might expect not only great signs of His coming, but find such an one in royal surroundings. Instead, these shepherds were to find Christ the Lord as a Babe, wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger. And today God still moves in mysterious ways His wonders to perform. Those things and those forces which seem so insignificant and helpless, eventually become instruments in the hands of God to work out His purposes and to establish His kingdom.

"And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will among men, or toward men, or, as another translation has it, among men in whom He is well pleased." When one considers the effect which the coming of this Babe has had upon the world, there is no difficulty in the statement to the effect that the heavenly host sang that night. Their refrain was significant, too. Glory to God; "Jesus said, Father, I have glorified Thy name on the earth"—and peace and good will; Jesus insisted that good will toward all, indiscourageable, comprehensive good will, was the heart of religion. Both His gospel and His spirit make Him the Prince of Peace.

"The shepherds said one to another, Let us go now even to Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us." As soon as they had seen the vision, as soon as they had heard the heavenly voice, they set about to follow that vision and to obey that voice. What a lesson these humble men can teach us! Whenever or wherever higher impulses stir within us, new insights are born within us, new service opens up before us, we should rise up with haste to be obedient to the heavenly vision.

"And they came with haste and found Mary and Joseph, and the Babe lying in a manger." In other words, they found things exactly as the angel had said unto them. It is always thus. God is not slack concerning His promises. He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. He can make good anything that He has promised. We will always find that it as He says if we obey.

"And the shepherds returned, praising and glorifying God." They had to go back to their old tasks. Like us, they could not always stay in the place of vision. But as they went back to their old tasks they went back in a new spirit. Life was always different thereafter for them after they had seen the Christ-Child. And if we really know Him, life is always different for us, too.

"But Mary kept all these things and pondered them in her heart." We men do not know much about that, but mothers can interpret this verse. Ask some mother—ask any mother.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, December 23, 1928.

TOPIC: "Worshipping Christ in Story and Song."
—Luke 2:1-14.

Some Bible Hints.

The lowly origin of Jesus, His birth in a stable, His cradle a manger, have been made the subject of many lessons (v. 7).

The story of Christmas was first told to poor men, shepherds, engaged in their work. God comes to those in the path of duty (v. 8).

Christ was familiar with the supernatural. He talked with Moses and Elias. Angels ministered unto Him. He brings us into touch with heaven (v. 10).

Christmas is the song, not of the warrior, the hero, but of the child; a song of kindness and love (v. 13).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Christmas should sing in our hearts. If it does not, then other songs will not help us.

The Christmas story should be repeated in our own lives, Christ should be born in us, live in us, praise God in us, and serve through us.

One of the greatest Christmas poems is "A visit from St. Nicholas," by Clement C. Moore, beginning, "'Twas the night before Christmas when all through the house." Read and comment on it.

"The Christmas Carol," by Dickens, embodies in a beautiful and touching way the spirit of Christmas. Read parts of the story in the meeting.

A Few Illustrations.

"Brightest and best of the sons of the morning," Heber's great Christmas hymn, refers to the star as "brightest and best," and the star, of course, represents Christ Himself. He is best.

The joy of Christmas is found in the old carol, "God rest you, merry gentlemen"; a song of comfort and peace, like Christmas itself.

Nothing truer or more tender has ever been written about Christmas than Phillips Brooks' "O Little Town of Bethlehem!" God can bring greatness out of small places.

Read the poem by James Russell Lowell, "What means this glory round our feet?" and note some of its lessons, especially the thought that this glory will shine around us if we humbly come to Christ.

To Think About.

What is your favorite Christmas hymn?

How may we best honor Christ at Christmas time?

Why is Christmas a time of song and joy?

A JUVENILE CHRISTMAS STORY.

Far away across the sea many years ago was a country called Judea. The people who lived in this country loved sheep and kept great flocks of them. They were kept in open fields, so men had to stay with them to keep them from straying away and to keep the fierce wolves from coming from the woods at night and destroying all the baby lambs. The men who stayed in the fields and kept the sheep were called shepherds.

When the sun would begin to sink low in the western sky, each shepherd would call his sheep together. Every one knew his master's voice and would come to his call. Then the shepherds would carefully count the sheep to see that none had strayed away. After eating the soft, green grass all day they would be ready to go to sleep. Each old mother sheep would lie down with her little baby lamb close by her side and all would be quiet for the night.

Then after the shepherds had cooked and eaten their supper they would gather around the fire and talk; sometimes they would sing songs. They watched the stars in the heavens, and sometimes they would talk of the promised Saviour and wonder when He would come, and perhaps wish that He would come soon, that they might see Him. But no doubt these humble shepherds dared not even hope for the wonderful privilege of seeing the Saviour of the world.

One night as a group of these shepherds sat around their fire talking, their fire burned low, the men grew tired, and some of them fell asleep, while others watched. All at once a bright, beautiful light shone out in the sky, and they saw an angel coming toward them. They fell down on their faces, for they were afraid; they had never seen an angel before, but the angel said, "Fear not, for behold I bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."

Then as they looked in wonder and awe, suddenly the sky was full of angels, singing, "Peace on earth, good will toward men." Then the angels vanished, and the shepherds sat and talked together of what had happened. Suddenly one said, "Let's go and see." So they left their sheep and walked and walked till they came to Bethlehem, and there they found Him, not in a palace, not even in a house in a little white bed, but in a stable, lying in a manger, with only hay for a pillow, for there was no room for them in the inn. There, with Him, was Mary, His mother, and Joseph. There were cattle in the stable, too.

When the shepherds saw Him they knew that here was He who had been promised, and they knelt down and worshiped Him. Then they went back to their sheep, praising God and telling all whom they saw what they had seen and heard.

In a country far away from Bethlehem were three wise men who had long been looking for the Saviour to come. They saw a wonderful new star in the sky and knew that it was a sign that the Saviour had come. They mounted their camels and, following the star, rode and rode, many, many miles, over the lonely desert plains, and on and on till they came to Jerusalem.

There they asked, "Where is He who is born King of the Jews? for we have seen His star in the East and have come to worship Him." When the king heard of it he sent for the wise men and told them to go find the Child and worship Him, then come back and tell him where to find Him, that he might go and worship Him, too.

So the wise men went on, and followed the star till it came to Bethlehem. Then it stopped over the stable where the little Baby Jesus lay. These kingly men in costly robes and jeweled crowns also knelt down and worshiped Him. Then they opened their treasures and presented Him rich gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh. Being weary, they lay down to rest. While they slept, an angel came in a dream and told them not to go back to the king, for he wished to find the Baby to destroy Him; so they went back to their homes another way.

The king waited, and when the wise men did not come back he was angry, so he sent wicked men to find the Child. But an angel had told Joseph that the king wanted to kill the Baby, so Joseph got up one dark, dark night and put Mary on an ass, with Baby Jesus in her arms, while he walked along beside them, and they went away down into Egypt, as the angel had told them to do, so the wicked king could not find them.

When the wicked men went back to the king and told him that they could not find the Child, he was very, very angry. So he sent out men to kill all the little boy babies in the country who were two years old and under. He thought then he would surely kill the little Baby Jesus.

Oh, what a sad time it was in that country! How sad the mothers and fathers were, and all the little brothers and sisters! But the little Baby Jesus was safe down in Egypt, where He stayed with Mary and Joseph till an angel told them that the wicked king was dead. Then they went back to Nazareth to live.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

BY DR. AMOS R. WELLS.

MONDAY.

OUR BURDENS.

"I removed his shoulder from the burden"; "Bear ye one another's burdens"; "Each man shall bear his own burden."—Psa. 81:1-6; Gal. 6:2, 5.

These three verses seem directly contradictory. God is shown to us as the great burden-bearer, yet we are told to bear our own burdens, and, even more, to add our brother's burden to our own. How can this be?

Whatever may be the explanation, we all may know that it is true. As William Wordsworth once wrote: "To character and success, two things, contradictory as they may seem, must go together—humble dependence and manly independence; humble dependence on God, and manly reliance on self." Yes, and we may add the manly carrying of our own burdens while at the same time we humbly allow another to aid us with them.

The contradiction vanishes in the light of the proverb, "Heaven helps him who helps himself." If God sees that we are bent on doing the best we can with the little power we possess, He gladly comes to our aid with His infinite powers; and if men witness our courageous facing of difficulties, with admiring sympathy they place themselves at our side. On the contrary, neither God nor man likes a cowardly weakling, a hanger-on, a lazy dependent, a willing pauper. To help such a person is felt to be no real kindness.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou wilt not see us overburdened. Thou wilt place Thyself under every yoke that is too heavy for us. What honor, what glory, to be yoked in with Thee! Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE FALL OF PRETENSE.

"Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts."—Psa. 51:1-7.

Nothing is truth that does not begin from within and go outward. All hypocrisy is an exterior pretense with nothing inside corresponding to it.

Cicero emphasizes the transitory nature of these exteriors. "True glory," he says, "takes root, and even spreads. All false pretenses, like flowers, fall to the ground; nor can any counterfeit last long." It seems too bad to compare the beautiful flowers to anything so essentially ugly as hypocrisy, especially when the falling of the flowers is necessary in order to bring on the fruit; but much pretense does appear as lovely as a flower, at any rate in the eyes of the pretender, and it is true that the life of all pretense is as fleeting as the life of a flower.

So, when we find ourselves tempted to appear in any respect other than we really are, let us remember that all the experience of mankind and all divine wisdom combine to prove it completely useless. For hypocrisy is like a poisoned garment, fair in outward show, but planting in the body of the wearer the seeds of certain death.

Prayer.—Lord of all truth, not in harshness but in love dost Thou desire truth in the inward parts. It is because Thou wouldst dwell within us, and Thou wilt not live with any lie. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE SOUL'S THIRST.

"My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God?"—Psa. 42:1-5.

When Miss Amelia Earhart, the first woman to cross the Atlantic in an airplane, visited London, she was received by great crowds in the streets and was entertained in palaces and with splendid ceremonies; but as soon as she had a little time, she made her way to the pioneer social settlement, Townbee Hall. "There is no place like home," she said, and a social settlement is the home of her soul. Her great feat of flight was to her only a vacation experience which, as she puts it, it would be "too inartistic" to miss; and she goes right back to her loving service of the little children of Denison House, in Boston.

So it was with David. His soul thirsted for God's house, and he was eager always to return to it. So it is with every true Christian worker. By the thirst of the soul we may judge the reality of our service of Christ.

All souls are thirsty; all have desires and longings. Well for us if our soul-thirst is easily and abundantly satisfied. For if we thirst for excitement and splendor and fame, we are likely to thirst in vain; but if we thirst to do God's will in helping His creatures, we shall find a flowing fountain at every corner.

Prayer.—Our Saviour, as we thirst we come to Thee. Grant us the living water. Be in us a well of water, springing up eternally. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

INQUIRING THE WAY.

"I have chosen the way of faithfulness."—Psa. 119:25-32.

We often inquire the way and choose the right one. David asks for an understanding of the way of God's precepts. He asks that the way of falsehood may be removed from him. He promises to run the way of God's commandments, and declares that he has chosen the way of faithfulness.

"The way of life" is a metaphor running all through the Bible, and all through secular writings. The best statement of it in modern times is the famous little poem by John Oxenham:

"To every man there openeth

A way, and ways, and a way.

And the high soul climbs the high way,

And the low soul gropes the low;

And in between on the misty flats,

The rest drift to and fro.

But to every man there openeth

A high way and a low,

And every man decideth

The way his soul shall go."

Prayer.—Blessed Redeemer, save us from these wanderings. Thou art the way, the high way, and there is no other. Be to us not only the way but the guide. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WORKING ON THE WRONG SIDE.

"The spirits of just men made perfect."—Heb. 12:18-24.

There is a lovely and well-known poem entitled "The Tapestry Weavers," which describes how the skilled makers of tapestry keep their eyes fixed on the pattern that is hung up above them, but work always on the wrong side of the piece, so that what they see of their work is nothing but a tangled mass of threads of different colors. Not until evening, the day's work done, do they turn the tapestry over and see the beauties of their delicate handiwork.

So is it, says the poet, with the Christian's life here below. He is to keep his eyes set on the pattern which is held up before him, and he is not to mind the confused tangle of life. It may all seem a grotesque failure—his work entirely wasted. But at the end of life, if he has been true to his pattern, the piece on which he has been working will appear in its real design, glowing with rare colors and fit for a heavenly palace.

Prayer.—Let one of the parents offer a prayer, asking that all in the room may resign to Christ the ordering of their lives. Close with the Lord's Prayer in concert.

SATURDAY.

CAN ONE HAVE TOO MUCH AFFLICTION.

"Thou shalt consider in thy heart that, as a man chasteneth his son, so Jehovah thy God chasteneth thee."—Deut. 8:1-10.

Basil King, the well-known novelist, who has recently passed away, was a man of peculiarly fine character. An Episcopalian clergyman, deeply in love with his calling, he lost his eyesight almost entirely, and had to give up his Church work. But he had taught himself to operate a typewriter, and in his affliction he gave the world many powerful and helpful novels. He turned his misfortunes into opportunities, and I never saw him when he did not appear cheerful and even merry. The nearest approach to a complaint of which I have heard was his saying, half-humorous, wholly stout-hearted, "I have more adversity than I know what to do with."

In reality, he did not have. No one of his heroic spirit ever has. He knew just what to do with every bit of adversity—transform it into a bit of heroism. For no one can make heroism out of ease or pleasure or good fortune; the raw materials of heroism are difficult and pain and untoward fate. And heroism means the loftiest uplift of any life.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, teach us how to be tried, and to come forth pure gold. Lead us the way of the cross. Amen.

SUNDAY.

WHEN KEEP SILENCE.

"Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace; for I am with thee."—Acts 18:1-11.

Much is said about speech as being silver and silence as being golden, and men are admired very often merely because they maintain persistently what is known as a "dignified" or "oracular" or "mysterious" silence. Some reputations are based on nothing else.

But, as Ecclesiastes says, there is "a time to keep silence, and a time to speak." When the time for silence arrives, then silence is golden and speech is silver or lead; but when God calls on us to speak, then silence is leaden and speech is fine gold. On religious matters, far more of us are guilty of leaden silence than of leaden speech.

Hugh Black says: "There may be times when a man could bite his tongue out for the things he said—the bitter, or the malicious, or the impure words. But there are times when he hates himself for the ignoble silence that would not speak the word, it may be of rebuke or of counsel, perhaps of war or of peace." How often our Lord must be saddened because His brothers will not speak out for Him, but allow His cause to go by default for lack of a manly word! How often, when there is need of confessing Christ, we deny Him by our silence, even as Peter denied Him in speech!

And the reason for all this is because we fear men, and do not fear God.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

"Flu" and pneumonia seem to have their day in the Christian Orphanage at this time. A number of cases of each disease have appeared at the Orphanage. One thirteen-year-old girl is critically ill at this writing. For four years we have had no scourge of anything, and very little sickness, but it seems it has come our way this time. God has been good to us, and during our twelve years of service we have only had one death.

Our financial report this week shows that we must raise by the end of the year, to reach our goal, the sum of $9,107.48. Let all our Churches get busy and make a fine effort to put us up to the goal.

Will our Sunday Schools remember our children, as heretofore, at Christmas. We will be glad to furnish the list of names to those who call for them. Just a little present makes them feel that they are not forgotten. Give the name of each child to some person to bring a present and put the child's name on it and send all in a box is a fine way to handle it. Some will get better presents than others, but none will be jealous.

The following articles have been sent in since our last report: Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Hatch, Salisbury, N. C., 15 sheets, 3 pr. pillow-cases; Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Horne, Burlington, N. C., 1 washing machine; B. A. Sellars & Sons, 10 coats for the girls; Woman's Missionary Society, Goshen, Ind., 2 comforts; Women's Missionary Society, Lynchburg, 1 quilt; Revolution Cotton Mills, Greensboro, N. C., 417 yds. white cotton flannel; Pomona Mills, Inc., Greensboro, N. C., 145 yds. chambray; Mrs. John A. Hall, clothing for children; Minneola Batton Mills, 117 yds. outing; Export and Commission Co., 98 yds. goods; Proximity Mfg. Co., 615 yds. blue denim; Columbia Mfg. Co., 100 yds. sheeting; E. M. Holt Plaid Mills, 163 yds. goods; L. Banks Holt, 250 yds. cloth; Consolidated Textile Corp., 252 yds. outing goods; J. P. Montgomery, Burlington, N. C., clothing for little girl; Philathea Class, Winchester, Va., sweater, stockings, towels, etc.; Minnie Steele, Durham, N. C., shoes, dress, sweater; Mrs. A. B. McFarland, sweater, dress, hose; High Point Christian Church, 48 yds. goods, sheets, pillowcases and other articles; First Church, LaGrange, Ga., 1 box clothing; Mrs. C. W. Parker, 1 suit, 1 hat; Circle 5, Burlington Church, coats, caps, dresses, jelly, 7 cakes, 8 dressed hens, pitcher and many other articles; Ladies' Missionary Society, Circle 1, Burlington, dresses, coats, slippers, pants, sweaters, washing powder, etc.; Va. Cotton Mills, 61 yds. chambray; Women's Missionary Society, Lanett, Ala., 2 quilts, 42 towels, pillowcases; Franklin Peanut Co., 1 bag peanuts; J. Edgar Long, 1 bbl. apples; Long's Chapel Church, 13 hens, 1 sack flour, 5 lbs. Sugar, 1 pk. meal, Irish potatoes, and sweet potatoes.

For all these contributions we are very grateful.

A MAN AFTER GOD'S OWN HEART.

dustry, and over a period of forty years he accumulated an estate of several thousand dollars' worth of the best farm lands of that State—nearly 1,000 acres. I made his acquaintance and came to know him quite well during a period of years I spent in his community. He was recognized as a model farmer, a leader in all that his settlement undertook, and generally conceded the most prosperous citizen of the community. But the boll-weevil came, and for a number of years this man made a failure in his farming operations. Then came the debacle of deflated prices, for farm products especially, which swept our land in the years 1920 and 1921. These low prices, together with the blight of the boll-weevil, proved too much for this farmer. Struggling on, he sacrificed, first, his equities in paid-up life insurance policies; then his livestock; and then the farm itself was mortgaged for a loan in the Federal land bank. And, finally, being unable to meet the annual payments exacted on this loan, this man's land was sold from him—he was forced to move out from the home where he had reared his family; and, shorn of his rank as a landlord, now past sixty years of age, he is an ordinary tenant again. I saw him last summer and found him in a cheerful mood. He said to me, "Yes, I have failed, but it is through no fault of mine. I could not foresee the damage the boll-weevil has wrought, nor the slump in the price of my farm products. Men, some of whose families I had furnished their daily bread, quit their crops and moved away—some of them in the night-time—leaving me responsible for their store accounts and fertilizer bills. I have paid as far as my property and my labor have been able to pay, and I did not do it by means of bankruptcy proceedings." Ah, my friends! have you always been so strong, and shown yourself such a man! or have you availed yourself of exemption rights; or even further, have you transferred property to your wife's name to evade the payment of a just obligation? Have you stood the acid test and shown yourself a man on every occasion?

And now leaving the financial aspect of the matter, let us carry the question further and apply it to our conduct in its relation to our duties as citizens of this great land in which we live. I want us to ask ourselves this serious question: have we exercised the prerogatives of citizenship in a true and manly way? Have we been four-square in our support of the moral issues that have confronted our government? Have we, as Church members, at all times been true to our convictions, or have we been swayed in the expression of our constitutional right by tradition, by habit, or by prejudice?

The answer comes that more and more are our citizens exercising this right by giving expression to their sincerest convictions—and this at a time when the power of money and other sinister influences were never so great in our land. We have just recently closed the most strenuous campaign ever waged in history, and in any land on this earth. The moral forces of this nation of ours battled for the support of a constitution that had been amended to outlaw the liquor traffic. Weighed in the balance, these forces were not found wanting. By the most overwhelming majority ever recorded, the American electorate has reaffirmed its support of this Constitution and of its concurrent enforcement act. People voted their convictions as never before. Party lines were so broken that serious doubt exists as to their ever being reformed again. Certainly it may be said in truth that nothing less than a determination upon the part of our citizens to be strong and to shew themselves men—and our good women come within the generic meaning of this term—in their support of this great moral issue was responsible for so decisive a victory. A glorious and mighty triumph of civic righteousness; a milestone in our national existence. But, my brethren, we must recognize the fact that this is but one of the struggles in which we shall be called upon to engage for the moral uplift of our land and people. Other battles are to be waged by the Church of God. The enforcement of this prohibition law is very largely a responsibility of the Church. 'Tis often said that prohibition cannot be enforced—and we must certainly admit that efforts toward its enforcement have not been whole-hearted, nor have the Church people co-operated fully with the enforcement officials. Will the law ever be enforced? I think I can answer that question. It will be enforced if, and whenever, the Church people of this great land want it enforced.

Brethren, herein lies the supreme challenge to the manhood of the members of our own religious body—the clarion call to colors in the support of real prohibition enforcement. With which spirit shall we answer that challenge? It is not likely that I shall ever stand before you again in the official capacity that I now occupy, and I can conceive of no more fitting valedictory to leave with those among whom I have labored so pleasantly than the words of the text, "Be strong, therefore, and shew thyself a man."

Holman Jewel Testament
INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x¾ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its unique quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

POCKET SIZE
3½x4½ inches

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

STEVENS.

Annie Rae Stevens was born December 9, 1914, and died November 16, 1928, age 13 years, 11 months and 7 days. This short life never knew many well days, yet she bore all her affliction with patience. She was loved by all who knew her. She carried sunshine wherever she went. She was a member of Noon Day Christian Church, having joined when she was only ten years of age. Her loved ones and friends realized for some time that there was no hope of her recovery, since she had a severe attack of dropsy. She never grew despondent. She hoped to recover and enter school again. Her many friends prayed that if it could be the Father's will that she might be restored to her parents. Since she was the only girl in the family, it seemed that they could not bear the thought of giving her up. However, we feel that her loved ones are fully reconciled to the will of Him who doeth all things well. Annie Rae leaves to mourn their loss her grandparents, father, and mother, four brothers and a host of other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted at Noon Day Church by her former pastor, Rev. J. D. Dollar, assisted by the writer, and her frail form was laid to rest in the cemetery nearby late in the afternoon of November 17th to await the resurrection of the just. May God comfort the bereaved is my prayer.

G. H. VEAZEY.

MANN.

Bro. J. T. Mann, a faithful and consecrated member of Catawba Springs Christian Church, died on the 7th day of November, 1928. Because of his love for the Book and the Christ of the Book, we believe it might be said of him, in the words of our Lord, "Not dead but sleepeth." Bro. Mann was, I think, about 80 years old, and had been able to attend services until within a few days of his death. He leaves a family of seven boys, two girls and a wife, besides many grandchildren.

He first joined Christian Chapel Church in Chatham County, but brought his membership with him when he moved to Wake County years ago. One of the beautiful things in this family was the family altar, and about two days before he died, while very sick in bed, he had some one to read, and he prayed as usual. Among the last audible words which he spoke were Scripture quotations. Then there seemed to be no fear or dread of death with him.

The interment was made in the Catawba Springs Cemetery. The services were conducted by the writer. May God's richest blessings rest upon and comfort those who are left to miss him.

MICHAEL.

Mrs. Margaret A. Michael departed this life on November 26, 1928, at the age of 70 years, 1 month, 24 days. She was the widow of the late Alfred A. Michael, who preceded her in death fourteen years. Surviving are eleven children, forty-two grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren, one sister, one brother, besides many other relatives. May the good Lord comfort them all.

Burial services by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. F. Apple, at Bethlehem, where she held her membership. A large congregation was in attendance and the floral offering was abundant and beautiful.

GERRINGER.

Louisa Apple Gerringer was born on August 13, 1845, and died November 29, 1928, being 83 years, 3 months and 16 days old. Her husband, W. R. Gerringer, preceded her in death twenty-seven years ago, having died November 26, 1901.

Her nearest of kin surviving are her nephews and nieces, with their families. Although she was a member of Bethlehem Church, she was buried at Apple's Chapel beside her husband. Many were in attendance. Long live her memory in the hearts of her friends.

BRAY.

Resolutions offered by the Sunday School, the Christian Endeavor Society, and the Missionary Society of Liberty Church:

Whereas, on October 20, 1928, our gracious Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom, saw fit to call from us one of His fairest flowers, Miss Ida Bray, who was a charter member of our Church, a valued, faithful, conscientious worker, bringing a heartfelt loss to the Church and community in her death; and whereas we, the members of this Church, shall miss her in our meetings and in our homes, yet our loss is her eternal gain; therefore, be it resolved:

1. We desire to show our appreciation of this lovely character and the beautiful example that she has set of consecration to God and of faithfulness, devotion and love to all in need of her tender sympathy.

2. That we extend to her loved ones in their bereavement our deepest sympathy, and that we humbly and submissively accept the will of the Heavenly Father, who knoweth best and doeth all things well.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in our minutes, a copy be sent to each of the brothers and sisters, and a copy be sent to the local paper and to The Christian Sun for publication.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

The Sun Wishes Each and Every One A HAPPY CHRISTMAS and a PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR

PERPETUAL PEACE IS AIM OF SOCIETY.

The American Peace Society, century-old national peace organization and one of the earliest influences among nations abroad for organized effort in behalf of peace, has announced the election of William Fortune, of Indianapolis, as president to succeed United States Senator-elect Theodore E. Burton, of Cleveland.

The new president has had a long record of notable achievement in the leadership of movements for the public welfare, and when a banquet was tendered him by fellow-citizens in 1925 President Coolidge publicly said of him: "Such examples cannot but inspire others to similar interest in public welfare." He was described by John W. O'Leary, then president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, as "a citizen at the forefront of those who are giving of their time and ability to the American public."

The American Peace Society was founded in 1828 by William Ladd. Its early proponents were from the Churches of that day, and its early field of action was the Churches themselves. From then until now it has had the active support of religious leaders, seeking to find the organization through which they might work to fulfill the Church's universal ideal of world peace.

The society was founded with the merging of several State and local peace societies. The peace movement had its beginning in this country thirteen years earlier with the founding of the New York State society, which became a component part of the American Peace Society with the merger and organization of the national society.

At Cleveland last May the society celebrated its one hundredth anniversary, with a national peace congress. Throughout its history it has sought to promote international peace through justice. Its program has been to advance in every possible way the use among nations of conciliation, arbitration, judicial methods and all other means of avoiding and adjusting international differences. Its ideals have been wholly consistent with American traditions and it has throughout the century supported our government and institutions. Dr. Arthur Deerin Call, veteran secretary of the society, points out that the society "endeavors to confine its energies to policies of a constructive, forward nature."

A Christmas Prayer

By HENRY HALLAM TWEEDY
The Divinity School, Yale University

Lord, make my heart thine inn!
Wide-open door; clean rushes on the floor;
Each lamp well trimmed and burning bright;
My table set for thee on Christmas night—
No manger now awaits, if thou wilt come
To grace this home!
All, all is thine,
O Guest divine!
Lord, enter in!

Lord, make my heart thy star!
A shining world that sees unfurled
Heaven's banners waving over thee, its King,
And stops to listen while the angels sing!
So let me pause in all the rush and roar
Shine with thy light
On Christmas night,
Thy flaming star!
That spoil the song;

Lord, make my life thy song!
Help me to sing while anvils ring!
Till love and labor build God's city; foil
Let brain and body join thee in thy toil,
The lust and hate and selfishness and wrong
Of passion seeking more;
Till heaven's choirs
And pealing spires
Join in thy carillon!

So would I keep thy birthday,
Christmas Lord;
Kneel at thy feet with shepherds; greet
Thy coming with the Magis' wondrous gifts;
Enfold thee, as thy gracious mother lifts
Thee in her arms, the Miracle of time,
God's Gift sublime!
An inn, a star, a song—
All, all to thee, belong,
O Guest adored!

"These are times when the whole world should make great strides forward toward perpetual peace," he said. "Under the leadership of our new president we look forward to renewed and energetic effort to achieve this purpose."

Senator Burton, the retiring president, congratulating his successor, said, "The principles upon which the society are founded are enduring and peculiarly American. Its efforts on behalf of international justice have been eminently worth while. Its policy of promoting a better international understanding, of advancing the principles of judicial settlement of international disputes, its emphasis upon the power of law and order have been most helpful."

Prominent men and women throughout the century have given it support. Among them were Charles Sumner, Edward Everett Hale, John Greenleaf Whittier, Ralph Waldo Emerson and William Ellery Channing. Emerson's essay on "War" was given at one of its meetings, as also was Sumner's oration on "The War System and the Commonwealth of the Nations."

The new president nearly forty years ago was called into the leadership of undertakings for the civic improvement of his home city. With that beginning, he has devoted much of his life to such movements, national and local. He has been active in the American Red Cross and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Through his local chamber of commerce he has directed an outstanding effort for economy in local government, savings of five years amounting to more than $8,000,000. This has brought him into leadership of effort through the national Chamber of Commerce to promote such activity among local chambers of commerce all over the country.

In the Red Cross he has been chairman of his local chapter during the entire twelve years of its existence. He directed its war relief program and was at the head of other war relief activities in his city, having organized and directed his city's war chest. He was a member of the tri-State commission that administered relief for the Red Cross to the victims of the great Midwestern tornado of March, 1925. He was honorary representative of the Red Cross at the American Legion's Paris convention, and is a member of the board of incorporators of the National Red Cross.

His whole life has been devoted to betterment of mankind, and he steps into the presidency of the Peace Society with a wide background of experience and sympathy for its purposes that give promise of fresh impetus to the cause of peace.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Thirty-three new subscribers added in one week. Fine!

There will not be an issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN next week. The editors and office force are given holiday.

We celebrate at this season the greatest event of history—the advent into the world of the Son of God.

We wish every CHRISTIAN SUN reader a Merry, and a Joyous, and an Unselfish and a Sane Christmas!

Rev. W. T. Scott, since going to Walnut Hill Church, Dayton, Ohio, October 1st, has received ten members into his Church.

Dr. W. A. Harper attended an educational meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, last week as a committee-man of the International Educational Association.

If every SUN subscriber would do a little missionary work and get one new subscriber, we could double our subscription list in one month. Who will try?

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Stokesdale, N. C., has accepted the pastorate of the United Christian Church, Lynchburg, Va., and will move his family to Lynchburg shortly.

Read the circulation manager's letter this week and see what some Churches are doing. THE CHRISTIAN SUN "in every home" is a mighty good slogan for all our folks to help push to a finish.

"Peleubet's Select Notes" and "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide," commentaries on the Sunday School lessons for 1929, each priced $2.00, may be ordered from THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va.

No CHRISTIAN SUN next week. Fifty-one issues have gone promptly to subscribers this year, and those who have labored constantly to bring this about need and deserve a week's holiday with the rest of the world.

The official survey in Porto Rico, which was completed on November 28th, showed a loss of $85,300,000, which does not include loss on livestock or of household goods and furnishings. The poverty and suffering entailed cannot be estimated.

One of the best mediums to keep our people in touch with our college, our missions, and our Orphanage is to get them to read THE CHRISTIAN SUN; and the best way to get our people to read THE CHRISTIAN SUN is to get them to subscribe for it.

Our Danville Church, under the leadership of Rev. M. T. Sorrell as pastor, has recently added Sunday School rooms and other equipment to its plant at a cost of $3,300. The new and enlarged building is to enjoy a dedicatory service at an early date.

"Are you reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN regularly? It is your Church paper and is as vital in your religious life as the daily paper is in your secular activities. Send a year's subscription of THE SUN to a friend for a Christmas gift."—Franklin Church Bulletin.

The Christian Missionary Association of the North Carolina Christian Conference, in session at Elon College last Thursday, recommended that each of the three North Carolina Conferences organize its own association and that the State association cease to function, the membership of the parent association to be given to the respective Conferences to which they belong.

Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., attended the quadrennial session of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America at Rochester, N. Y., last week and served as a member of the business committee of the council. Dr. Staley was present when the council was organized twenty years ago, and we think he has attended each quadrennial session since.

From Dr. W. P. Minton, in Herald of Gospel Liberty: "The Southern Christian Convention's Woman's Board has just forwarded, through our General Woman's Board treasurer, another fine quarterly check for foreign missions. The amount this time was about three thousand dollars, and it certainly speaks well for the fine work of these loyal and interested women in the Southland."

Bro. E. B. Matkins writes: "Services at Bethlehem Christian Church 11 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. Rev. J. W. Patton, of Elon College, our pastor, preached at Bethlehem Church Sunday morning at 11 o'clock and Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock. His subject was 'Warning Us Against Sin.' He held the attention of the congregation and it was very touching. Every one seemed to enjoy what he had to say."

From the Herald of Gospel Liberty, December 13th: "Buck Valley Church, Rays Hill and the Southern Pennsylvania Conference recently closed a series of meetings in which the pastor, Rev. A. R. Garland, was assisted by Dr. W. T. Walters as evangelist. There were eleven confessions for Christ. Bro. Garland, who is the field secretary of this Conference, reports other meetings now in progress: Dr. W. T. Walters, at Gapsville; Rev. Henry W. May, at Cedar Grove, and Rev. David Hollenshead, at Mt. Hope. All of the Churches have pastors with the exception of Laurel Ridge and Belle Grove."

ALCOHOL AND NATIONAL RESOURCES.

By W. G. CALDERWOOD.

While there were many motives which contributed to the agitation for the overthrow of the liquor traffic, it is certain that humanitarian and moral considerations were dominant. It was the social and moral degradation of the family—the suffering of childhood and the neglect of womanhood; the gaunt, bone-bare and abject social wreckage; the staggering, leer-eyed and brutalized father stumbling empty-handed into his hopeless home—that moved the early reformers of their crusades.

Then followed the railroad companies, pushed to the adoption of rule G, requiring absolute abstinence from intoxicants for train employees, in the interests of public safety. The railroads were reluctantly followed by manufacturers, mining companies and general industry.

Then came the economist and the physician, pointing out the staggering loss of health, life and productive capacity annually sacrificed on the altar of Gambrinus. It was the cold problem of man-power.

Dr. Thomas Nixon Carver, internationally known economist, and professor at Harvard University, in a study which he has completed for the Encyclopedia Britannica, points out the national and international significance of the waste through drink. He says, in part:

"So long as all the rival nations are wasting resources and man-power in drink, there may be no differential advantage in favor of any one or against any of the others; but when one nation, such as the United States, makes a definite advance in this form of economy, unless it indulges in some folly that will neutralize the advantage thus gained, there is no reason to doubt it will gain on all others, year by year, decade by decade, and century by century, and eventually dominate the civilization of the world. They who refuse to take this great step forward in the economy of human resources, whether they understand it or not, are definitely choosing to occupy a secondary position in the civilized world."

There are striking proofs worked out in the laboratory of practical life which demonstrate the accuracy of the scientific conclusions.

The United States Department of Labor reports that the daily wage of bricklayers in the United States is $12.56, compared with $1.39 in Austria, $1.32 in Belgium, and $1.84 in Germany. Carpenters in the United States draw $10.16 per day, in England $2.96, and less than $2 in the other named countries.

Just as a sober man earns more than he could earn if he were half drunk, so a sober trade earns more. And as a sober trade earns more, so a sober nation earns more. To earn more is to spend more and save more. To spend more and save more, makes prosperity, contentment and happiness.

Other factors go into America's prosperity. But economists generally all give to prohibition a dominant, or at least a major, part in the unexampled prosperity of the nation. America sober will always have a tremendous economic advantage over countries that tolerate alcohol.

PEACE AND GOOD WILL.

As the Christmas season approaches with its feverish rush, its thronging of the shops, and its sometimes reckless inroads upon the family purse, one wonders if we have not failed to understand the true spirit of Christmas. Or if we have caught the true spirit of Christmas may we not have permitted some things to assume unwarranted proportions. A careful study of the teachings of Jesus reveals the fact that one of the fundamental teachings of Jesus is the doctrine of proper proportions. The main trouble with the Pharisees was that they had lost their sense of proportion. They had become so careful about the outward form of righteousness that they had missed entirely the inner spirit of righteousness.

The Christmas message has a two-fold meaning. It is peace and good will. Peace comes first. The materialism of Christmas-time that is often so much in evidence has originated in the desire to express our good will toward others. But if it causes us to miss the inner blessings of peace in our own minds and hearts, it has defeated both of the purposes to which the observance of Christmas is intended to minister.

If the needs of the Lord's work were set forth in a proper light before those who have means and influence, these men might do much to advance the cause of present truth. God's people have lost many privileges of which they could have taken advantage had they not chosen to stand independent of the world.—Southern Watchman.

The real question is not how much of my money will I give to God, but how much of God's money will I keep for myself?

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

THE WORLD'S GREATEST GIFT.

BY REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, B. D.

"Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable Gift."—2 Cor. 9:15.

One of the American soldiers who returned from the front line trenches after the World War suffered the misfortune of losing both arms. When any of his friends referred to his having lost his arms, he manfully replied, "I did not lose anything; I gave my best for my country." As we approach the Christmas season, let us think of it as a time of giving and not receiving.

"The heart grows rich in giving,

For all of its wealth is living grain,

And seeds which will mildew in the garner,

When scattered, will fill with gold the plain."

Thus out of love for each other, let us give, and there will come to each person a joyous blessing, such as he has never experienced. The key to Christmas may be summed up in the words, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

One of Paul's greatest messages is based on giving. Let us read it in the ninth chapter of his second epistle to the Church at Corinth. Listed among some of the great truths contained therein, he says that "He who sows (gives) sparingly will reap sparingly, and he who sows (gives) bountifully shall reap also bountifully, for every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give, not grudgingly, or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver. God is able to make all grace abound toward you." And then with a short pointed statement, the apostle concludes his exhortation by reminding men everywhere to give thanks unto God, the greatest Giver the world has ever known, for His greatest Gift unto man—Christ, the unspeakable Gift.

In referring to Him as God's unspeakable Gift, we are sure that the apostle was so touched with love for Him that he could not find words sufficient to formulate an adequate expression, and he just closes by referring to Him as God's unspeakable Gift, which to you and to me is the world's greatest Gift.

The fairest way to test a gift is to consider the motive back of the giver, and the value of the gift. Were we to so test our gifts, our Christmas season would be filled with untold joy and blessing; and our love for Him, God's unspeakable Gift, would be increased a hundred-fold.

The Motive of the Giver.

"A motive is that which prompts action," says Webster. As we near the Christian season may we ask ourselves "What prompts us to bring our gifts?" In answer, let us endeavor to understand the motive that prompted God to give the world's greatest Gift. A gift to a friend for any other purpose than that prompted by a noble motive should be withheld. Too often men give because they have received. Perhaps you have heard some one say, "He sent me a present on my birthday and I must remember him this Christmas season." Will we ever consider the folly of giving only to those who give to us, or even those who love us? Hear the Master: "If ye love them which love you, what reward have you?" Do not even the publicans the same? And if you salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans so? Foolish is the person who thus confines his giving to such a low standard or false motive. Wise is he who gives from a noble motive. One of my neighbors is preparing a number of gifts for the poor. She considers this her gift to Christ, for she said: "I know I shall not receive anything in return from them." But she will receive a greater gift than wealth can provide—the approval of the Christ, who said: "Inasmuch as you do it unto one of the least of them, my brethren, you do it unto me."

"Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them . . . when thou doest thine alms, do not sound a trumpet before men as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets that they may have men's glory. But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth: that thine alms may be in secret and that thy Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."

The motive of Him who gave the world's greatest Gift is clearly expressed in the first three words of John 3:16, "God so loved . . . that He gave." He expected no recompense other than that His gift might be joyfully received and properly evaluated by all men. Such a gift was prompted by the motive of the Heavenly Father's love, who in His compassion sought to save suffering humanity from sin. Thereby He sought "with His Gift to create a spirit of universal brotherhood and to overshadow the earth with peace and good will. Love for the world sent Him into the manger there beneath the Bethlehem star. Love for all men motivated Him to willingly be lifted up that He might draw all men unto God.

The Intrinsic Value of the Gift.

Every gift should have some value, either in intrinsic worth and usefulness or as a constant reminder of the giver. Unfortunately, many of our gifts have been valueless—some of them worthless. When such things are presented our friends, many of them stand and wonder what such presents are for, or how they shall be used. Let it be born in our minds this Christmas that the true value of any gift is measured in terms of its usefulness. Consider, therefore, its intrinsic value. If it is useless, then withhold it; if valuable, then give it.

God's greatest Gift on that first Christmas morn was the most valuable one the world ever received. Valuable in that He was a reminder to all men of God. Jesus knew more about Him than any other person that ever lived. He came from Him, and therefore was a most perfect revealer. He brought glad tidings from Him. He gave assurance that He had power to save men from their sins, and to all who would believe He promised eternal life. He made known God as a Father, whose great heart throbbed with tenderness and love.

Jesus, the unspeakable Gift to the world, was valuable in that He satisfied the longing of the heart of man. Heretofore, men groped in darkness. They thought of God as a distant monarch; but now they might think of Him as one who understands and loves His children. He furnished incentive to as many as fought against evil. He revealed truth to all seekers. Just as John Bunyan's "Pilgrim" stood before the cross and felt his burdens roll away, so you and I may cast our burdens upon Him and He will help us to enjoy life as a happy experience. In time of affliction He is most valuable; yea, He is the great Physician. He heals the sick, gives sight to the blind and even life unto the dead. So numerous and valuable are His attributes that space will not permit us to enumerate them. Suffice it to say, that He is the greatest Gift the world has ever received—He is the unspeakable Gift!

In conclusion, let me say that the best way to show our appreciation for this great Gift to the world is to accept Him into our own little worlds. This may be done by giving Him first place in our life. God gave His Son, the gift of self, and Christmas means that we give not only our material possessions to others, but that we give ourselves unto God. Christmas with Christ in our lives will be a day of constant rejoicing. Christmas won't be much if we confine a few gifts to "me and my wife, my son John and his wife." Rather, let Christmas be the world's greatest opportunity for giving expression to unselfishness. God gave His Son; He gave Him because He loved man—what and how shall we give?

YOUNG PEOPLE OF S. C. CONVENTION.

"I would that I could" literally "pick up" and "pack off" a group of our finest young people from Georgia, Alabama, the three Carolina Conferences, the Eastern Virginia, and Valley of Virginia Conferences to the Christian Church Young People's Meeting in Dayton, Ohio, December 27-30.

And, why should I like for you to go?

1. This meeting has come to be an annual affair with Christian Church young people, this being the fourth of these Christmas holiday meetings. It is a time when young people, and their interested leaders, discuss and make plans for future work, check up on their past achievements, and learn to work together. It is great to see this splendid group of young people as they seriously face their part in the work of the Church!

2. It would be an inspiration to you to know and work with the young people who come from all parts of our Church—as far North as Canada, as far East as the New England States, and as far West as Iowa, and as far South as you are. This Christian friendship and fellowship alone should mean great things for the Church in the future. They are all so interested in you and you are so very interested in them.

3. The program will be just what you have been wanting to give you information about the work of the Christian Church, its various departments and your part in that work. The program this year includes exhibits of materials used in local Churches and Conference young people's meetings, books and literature, group discussions, suppers together in interesting places, survey of work and problems facing the young people, beautiful worship services, messages from departmental workers, fellowship with Congregational young people, socials, inspirational addresses, and many other things. There will be a "party" at Rev. W. T. (Bill) Scott's Church, and a special meeting with sermon by Rev. John G. Truitt, at his Church. At least you'll know these two to begin with! And Miss Lucy Eldredge will meet you with the biggest, broadest smile you ever saw her have.

If you are interested in knowing more about this program, write us and we shall be glad to give the information and send you a copy of the program. And, better still, let us know if you can attend! The Dayton people will entertain you while there. Write for information about expenses. Your field secretary was there last year, and that meeting has been a source of inspiration to her in working with young people all this year. What part would you like to see the young people of the South have in our denominational program for youth? Let us know what you think we can and should do.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE BIRTH.

(Matthew 1:18-25.)

Now, the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as His mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.

Then Joseph, her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.

And she shall bring forth a Son, and thou shalt call His name Jesus: for He shall save His people from their sins.

Now, all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying:

Behold, a virgin shall be with Child, and shall bring forth a Son, and they shall call His name Emmanuel, which, being interpreted, is God with us.

Then Joseph being raised from sleep did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife:

And knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born Son: and he called His name Jesus.

HE IS WONDERFUL!

"And His name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."—Isa. 9:6.

The greatest miracle of all time is Jesus the Christ. Modern scholars have tried to strip Him of His wonderful attributes and reduce Him to a mere Man. It cannot be done. The task is impossible. If they were to take away the fact of His virgin birth, prove that He did not turn water into wine and raise Lazarus from the dead, and that He did not arise from the dead on the third day after He was crucified (which they can't do), the greatest mystery and wonder that attach to and surround Him would not be touched. These incidents and miracles of His birth, life and resurrection are by no means the greatest wonders of His career. Think of it! one can read in about one hour every recorded word He spoke while here on earth, and yet the thousands of volumes written on what He did and said testify that never man spake like this man. Without college or university training, there is no scholarship equal or comparable to His for breadth, depth and accuracy even in all the world today. Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, three of the world's greatest thinkers and teachers, spent an aggregate of nearly a hundred years instructing the youth, teaching men, propounding their systems of letters, philosophy and learning; but the united effort of these three matchless instructors is not to be compared, in philosophy and in results, with the three years' teaching of the Galilean—the carpenter of Nazareth. Great preachers have poured their soul and their eloquence and their consecrated learning into their sermons and sacred writings, but the world of them combined cannot be compared in might, majesty and power of penetration to the Man of Galilee.

He touched the eyes of the blind, and did it so lovingly and so graciously that the world since His day has deemed it wise and righteous to build schools and homes for the blind, and thus seek to do as He did—open the eyes of the blind.

He healed the sick, made the deaf to hear and the lame to walk, and did it with such gladness and graciousness that the world since His day has deemed it worth while to build hospitals, erect schools for the deaf, and give a helping hand to the lame until they are able to leap and walk.

He preached, taught, ministered to the sick and needy, broke the good news to the captive, and He did it so well and gave a message with such force and power in it that men since His day have crossed oceans, fought with wild beasts, fed themselves to cannibals and joyously laid down their lives that this message of this Christ might be carried to all the world. Yes, He is wonderful, and it does not require miracles to make and explain Him. He makes and explains and is Himself the world's greatest miracle. J. O. A.

ELON COLLEGE SUPPORT.

A Church without a college is doomed, and a college without the support of the Church is doomed. Since the Convention planned a quarterly offering in the Sunday Schools, and five Conferences have approved the Convention action; and, since the fifth Sunday in December is the time for this offering, it behooves all the pastors and superintendents of Sunday Schools to plan for this offering by such explanations and encouragements as will bring the best results. There are three values to accrue from this method of making contributions to the maintenance of Elon College. It develops in the mind of the young an attitude of financial loyalty to the college. It creates a sentiment of co-operative interest in the institution as a Christian institution. And it acquaints ministers and laymen with the obligation that rests upon the Church to develop a privilege that is essential to Christian education. It might be added that the increase in secular education in tax-supported schools increases the demand for Church-supported college to care for Christian education.

The time was when ministers could fill the place of pulpit and pastor with limited education. Spiritual character, earnest proclamation of simple gospel truth, and a congenial personality would reach the heart and conscience of men and women, and children, and win them to Jesus Christ and the Church. That day has passed and people are educated to that extent that ministers must be educated. This does not mean that literary training alone will fit men to preach the gospel; but it does mean that spiritual and intellectual preparation are necessary to fill the high calling of the ministry. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The truth is more than Bible quotations; it includes language, geography, history, philosophy, science, and all that the college teaches. Laymen are educated and ministers must be educated. The minister must be born again, and college trained to fill his place in kingdom service. That the future may furnish such ministers for the Christian Church, Elon College must be adequately supported not only by patronage, but by financial contributions. The government is supported by tax on property, and the least property pays its part; the Church is supported by tax on its members, and the least should bear its part. It is a simple proposition that all that men enjoy is God's gift to them. It is a simple obligation that all should give to maintain His cause; and one of the great methods of doing that is the support of the college in a liberal way. "Give, and it shall be given unto you."

W. W. S.

GOD WITH US.

We shall bear in mind, as we celebrate Christmas, what the angel of the Lord said to Joseph in announcing the advent of the first Christmas: "They shall call His name Emmanuel, which, being interpreted, is God with us."

Surely God is with us in a most marked and marvelous manner at Christmas-time. For it is during this period we do more unselfish deeds, give more gifts, and seek more to make others happy than at any other period of the year.

Of course, there are those who forget and turn the season of gladness into one of greed and getting and gloom. Many indeed will do little or nothing that would indicate any thought of or respect for the One whose birth and advent into the world gave us Christmas. Others will use the occasion for hilarity, indulgence, any and all sorts of evil. They themselves will get the least of any out of Christmas, and will do most of all to make it anything but a season of joy and good will among men.

But thousands, yea, millions, will discover anew that at this glad season "God is with us" in a very marked and mighty manner. There will be glad and happy family reunions, at which the father and mother will again rejoice and give thanks for God's presence and blessings. Children in the home will rejoice again, and gratefully, that now indeed "God is with us." We will not forget, we cannot forget that this season emphasizes and celebrates the one great, grand and glorious event "God is with us" in the person and power of His Son. J. O. A.

SYSTEMATIC GIVING TO ELON COLLEGE.

The Southern Christian Convention, at its recent session, requested every Sunday School in the area supporting Elon College to set apart every fifth Sunday in the year as Elon College offering day and take a special offering on such Sundays for the support of the college. This request has been endorsed by all the Conferences not only for the reason that it will train our people, old and young alike, to become regular contributors to the support of the college, but also constantly give opportunity for systematic attention to our Church college and its great work in preparing Church and Sunday School workers and leaders.

In the projection of Elon College, it took great faith, daring, and determination to launch such a great undertaking. Inertia, indifference and indecision confronted the men who led in the project, but they pressed on against great discouragements and erected the first buildings and opened the institution almost four decades ago.

Teachers were employed at small salaries and worked at great sacrifice to carry the work forward in those early days of the college. Then the fire came and swept away the main building, in a few hours, which was hallowed by sacred memories, fond associations, and sacrificial service. The World War was just over. The cost of material and workmanship was extremely high, but to close the doors of the college and quit would have been suicidal to our future in Church and educational undertaking. We could not turn backward, regardless of cost. The men of great Christian faith and dash and daring realized that they must build a bigger, better Elon, not for this generation but for the indefinite future. They projected and perfected a building plan and program that resulted in one of the best equipped college plants in the State, but at tremendous cost because of conditions over which they had no control.

The executives of the institution surpassed the fondest visions of the constituency of the Church in securing financial assistance in liquidating the indebtedness incurred by the buildig program, and reduced it so that by liberal co-operation on the part of the men and women of the Church to whom the institution belongs, the entire debt will in due time be completely liquidated, if all will do their part conservatively, systematically and sacrificially as unto God and not unto man.

The offerings requested on the Fifth Sundays should enlist contributions from all the people of the Church and Sunday Schools. They should give occasion for the study of the educational service of our college. They should keep before our young people the idea of attending Elon College when they complete their preparatory work. They should enlist the services of the alumni of the college as short-talk speakers on the work of the college as learned by personal experience. They should be opportunities to create good will toward our educational institution and its leadership. Through them our people should learn that loyalty to the college, in patronage and support, is more than loyalty to man or men, but loyalty to our Lord. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

Elon College must live; it will live when all who have attended it and all who are now connected with it will be gone. It will live in the hearts, affections and devotions of coming generations. The rest of the financial obligations will be met sooner or later—the sooner the better. This is and should be considered the financial obligation of every member of the Churches in the Elon College area. A systematic plan in financing Elon College is represented in these fifth Sunday offerings, and such a systematic plan worked throughout the Church in all the calls for the college would work wonders without becoming a burden to any one.

W. C. WICKER,
Pres. Eastern N. C. Conference.

S. S. OFFERINGS FOR ELON COLLEGE.

The more you study the financial plan adopted by the Southern Christian Convention at the Richmond session last April, the more you will see the beauty of its provisions and the wisdom of the plan. It provides for every department of the denomination and has enough flexibility to meet the wishes of the spasmodic and the systematic giver.

Among the new provisions of this financial plan is a quarterly offering (preferably fifth Sunday) in all the Sunday Schools of the Convention for Elon College, the head of the department of Christian education in the Southern Christian Convention. The work of Christian education is all one, whether in the home, the Sunday School, Church or Christian College. Just as the State supports its university as well as its public schools, so the denomination must support its college as well as its Sunday Schools.

Through this quarterly offering every member of the Sunday School is brought in contact with Elon College and makes some contribution, however small, to its support.

Every Sunday School should take these four offerings each year. Loyalty to the Convention, loyalty to the college, and loyalty to the welfare of the boys and girls in the Sunday School demand it.

J. E. WEST.

FIFTH SUNDAY FOR ELON COLLEGE.

I want to say to all readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and to all friends of Elon College that I for one heartily endorse the idea of giving fifth Sunday collections of our Sunday Schools toward the support of Elon College. This method, if given enthusiastic support throughout our Southern Christian Convention will, I am confident, take care of Elon's needs and in an easier manner than making special drives in our Churches.

I have already presented the matter to our own Sunday School council, and we of the First Christian Church, Greensboro, are going to give our fifth Sunday collections to this cause. I shall certainly present the matter to the Sunday School as a whole, and to my own class, and I believe we may make our collections of the fifth Sunday unusually large.

The scholarship plan should build up enthusiasm in every Church. Young people wanting to go to Elon College can assist themselves materially by this work, and they, together with alumni of Elon College, should put the plan across in great style.

W. B. TRUITT.

IMPORTANT FOR MINISTERS.

I find that it is possible for the ministers of the Southern Christian Convention to secure group insurance from a company that is reputable and entirely safe.

The premium is dependent on the average age of those insuring. If the average age is forty years, the premium per thousand will be around $9 per year, with premiums to be paid annually to the Convention Treasurer. In order for us to secure the group rate, 75 per cent of the ministers of the Convention will have to agree to accept the insurance when issued.

The minimum policy is $1,000, and the maximum is $5,000, and each minister must take the same amount.

New ministers coming into the Convention may enter the group upon their acceptance by the Convention as ministers.

When once the company has accepted us, the group as a whole cannot be dissolved. If you fail to pay your premium, the policy lapses; however, your policy would not be affected by any one else lapsing his policy.

The purpose of this letter is to ask if you will enter the group on the above conditions, and if so what size policy would you be willing to take?

This is an important matter, and merits a prompt reply, as every other minister in the Convention is depending on you.

Please send the enclosed card by return mail.

Trusting that you will be able to take a policy of at least $2,000, and with best wishes, I remain,
Yours very truly,

L. E. SMITH.

P. S.: In further conference with the company's representative regarding the above insurance plan, I think it wise to acquaint you with these further conditions as stated by the company's representative, that you may be in possession of all facts, as we want you to act with all facts in hand.

These are the conditions: The individual certificates issued to each minister will carry a disability clause which provides that in the event of permanent and total disability from any cause the insurance company will pay to the insured the face amount of the insurance in monthly installments over a period of ten years or less, this being optional with the insured; or they will pay, at the expiration of six months from date of disability, the face amount of the policy in a lump sum. At the end of each five years the company reserves the right to readjust the premium rates according to the experience the company has had with the group during the past five years. In other words, if the experience of the insurance company with the group as a whole has not been favorable, they will increase the premium rate at that time sufficient to insure the company against loss in carrying this insurance; or if it has been sufficiently favorable the company will reduce the premium in favor of the group.

I am adding this note for the further purpose of saying that it looks as if we are ever to have the advantage of group insurance we had better take it now, as all companies except two have discontinued this form of insurance on the association plan.

A REQUEST.

Will the Churches of the Valley of Virginia Central Christian Conference be much in thought and prayer that soon, when called upon to name some one of their own number to co-operate with the Conference department and to lead locally in trying to stress the grace of Christian stewardship, unmistakably God may show who should be that one?

This is no light matter. Whether the person upon whom the lot falls be man or woman, young or old, is of little consequence. The big consideration should be, "Is it one who believes in and is willing to work for the coming of Christ's kingdom by actually putting first things first?"

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There seems to be a feeling that people are not as religious as they used to be. There is a feeling abroad that there is a decline in Church attendance, a decrease in interest, and a sense of discouragement possesses Church leaders in the pulpit and the pew. As to the Church attendance, if one will add the number who attend Sunday School, Church services, and auxiliary societies together, it will reveal the encouraging fact that never in the history of this country did such a large percentage of the population go to Church on Sunday. When the money that is raised for current expenses, missions, and benevolences is taken into account, it will appear that the members of the Church were never so liberal as at the present time. This does not prove that they attend the preaching and contribute as much as they ought; but it does prove that there is no decline, but gain, in both of these respects. This is a sufficient reason to encourage ministers, laymen, and all workers in Sunday Schools and organized groups to increase their efforts with brighter hope of success.

There is another reason for encouragement to all workers. Conditions in modern society have changed in all the human relations from which opinions are derived. Take the simple matter of property. A person that once seemed rich in the public mind, stirs no such thought in this age. The same is true of education. This is an age of distribution in such wide fashion that the individual does not appear as great as in other days when only a few held diplomas. Where there was one rich man or one educated man fifty years ago, there are hundreds now. The same is true of dress. There was a time when dress determined wealth; but that day is gone. The working-woman now dresses as well as the rich used to dress. In fact, you cannot tell the white women from the black women by their dress on the street.

The same is true of religion. There was a time in this country when the "amen corner man" and the shouting woman made a great impression religiously on the public mind. That time, and that condition have passed into history. Religion does not manifest itself in the same way as it did then. There are more people that are religious now. The membership of the Church has increased in great numbers, and the improvement in the living and social conditions have improved to such an extent that no one stands out in bold relief in dress, home, education, property, or religion as in the past generation. There is improvement along all lines, and nothing is so outstanding as it used to be unless it is some new thing, as airplane, radio, or electric lights and power.

ELON LETTER.

The Southern Christian Convention, at its Richmond session, upon the recommendation of the President of the Convention, who is also chairman of the Board of Polity and Finance, voted to request our Sunday Schools to make a quarterly offering, preferably on the fifth Sundays, for the support of the college. Money so received counts toward the $24,000 which Elon is permitted to secure from our people in addition to the allotment made for it by the Convention through Conference apportionments.

While the money that is to be secured through these quarterly offerings is of course necessary for the support of the college, the primary purpose of these offerings is not the money that is to be received but the educational value of having the people once in three months, and especially the young people, think about our college. When these offerings are taken, it is hoped that the superintendent or some person appointed by him will make a brief address, setting forth the work that the college has done in preparing our ministers and Christian workers and encouraging our people to support it by their patronage. In addition to this, on one of the fifth Sundays in a year, preferably the fifth Sunday in September, it is desired that a longer program be given, for which the college will furnish the necessary literature. In this way, over a term of years it is hoped to tie the hearts' affections of the people to the college so that they will never think of sending their young people to any other institution.

The board of trustees of the college heartily endorsed this idea and agreed by the co-operation of a generous layman to found ten scholarships, known as Southern Christian Convention scholarships. Two of these will be awarded to each of the five Conferences in North Carolina and Virginia. The Sunday Schools in each Conference that makes the largest gross gift to the college through quarterly offerings will be allowed to name a young person for a scholarship worth $100, and likewise the Sunday School that makes the largest per capita gift through quarterly offerings will be allowed to name a young person for one of these scholarships. It is possible that the same Sunday School will win both scholarships, but it is not probable. The plan that has been adopted gives the small Sunday Schools equal opportunity with the larger ones to win a scholarship for some young person through generous gifts.

The first of these quarterly offerings fell either on the fifth Sunday in July or the fifth Sunday in September, since there were two fifth Sundays in that quarter. It was a new plan and the Sunday Schools were not fully informed with reference to it. By Conferences, the following Sunday Schools have so far sent in their offering for the first quarter:

Eastern Virginia: Antioch, Berea (Nansemond), Cypress Chapel, Christian Temple, Elm Avenue, Spring Hill, Wakefield and Waverly (through budget)—a total of eight.

North Carolina and Virginia: Elon College (through budget), Haw River (Mrs. Simmons' class), Kellam Grove and Salem Chapel—a total of four.

Western North Carolina: Bennett, Graham-Providence Memorial, High Point, Liberty and Parks Cross Roads—a total of five.

Eastern North Carolina: Henderson, Mount Auburn, Raleigh, and Sanford—a total of four.

Virginia Valley Central: Antioch, Bethlehem, Linville and Winchester—a total of four.

This makes twenty-five in all, which is a splendid showing for the beginning of a new venture. The five Conferences have now met and have ratified the Convention plan and have called upon their Sunday Schools to support this plan. A number of pastors and superintendents and other workers have written that they will put forth their very best endeavor to secure a splendid offering on the fifth Sunday in December expressive of the appreciation of their people for the first Christian educator, our Lord and great Teacher. This is certainly a beautiful thought, and one that I am sure will appeal to our people. I hope and pray that the response of the Sunday Schools to the needs of the college on this fifth Sunday will not only be gratifying to them but approved by our Master.

So far, the college has received toward its $24,000 this year $3,803.95.

Shall we not unite in prayer and in giving during the Christmas season to swell this total? Let us make our quarterly offerings at this time a genuine expression of appreciation for the privileges and blessings of Christian education.

W. A. HARPER.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

The people who came to America in the early days immediately revealed their high veneration for the Christian religion. Scarcely had they completed their crude homes to shelter them from the cold and rain and the beasts and savages when they began the erection of the Church and the school. These institutions were considered fundamental to their fullest life. Their march across the continent may be traced by the schools and colleges they built.

There are two great functions of the Church of God—evangelism (extension work of the kingdom) and education (the extension work of the Church). To neglect either one of these is to limit the usefulness and to imperil the very life of the Church. There are some planes upon which the educational work of the Church and State are parallel. Both seek a high grade of scholarship and are striving to reach proper standards of equipment, endowment and personnel to achieve the highest type of education.

Both Church and State are appreciating the fact that a larger amount of money must be poured into its work. The State institutions are receiving larger and larger sums from the capitalists. Almost all the larger denominations are putting their work of education in the budget, and thus securing a steady stream of financial support which is bearing with it the interest and the prayers of the members of the Church. Many of the large, independent and State institutions are now putting on campaigns to get large sums of money. The Church is also appreciating the responsibility of more safely endowing and equipping its institutions, and millions of dollars are now sought.

There are many arguments that justify the existence of the Church college and call for greatly increased financial resources which will enlarge its life. We call attention to some of the most potent reasons: the Church has a large place in the field of education, which is becoming more and more clearly defined each year. The Christian college is an institution of supreme importance to the Church. The college is not an intruder in the field of education. The college has before it a purpose different from the State university. It seeks not merely to prepare the youth for the citizenship of the State and to train him to make a living, but its end is to fashion a full-rounded personality and to train men and women so they may fulfill the purpose of God in their lives. Education has always yielded its best fruits when associated with religion. The Christian college is essential for the conservation and development of the leaders of breadth and vision. The college has a large place in the leadership of the hosts of education. But the Church and the world need to appreciate the supreme task of the hour. It is to develop a moral conscience in the people of their own land and of the world. The college is of supreme value to the home, the Church, the school and to the nation and to the world. It is no accident that the small college has given to all the trades, industries and professions the outstanding leaders far out of proportion to its small number of graduates.

Piedmont Junior College should occupy a large place in the minds and hearts of the members of the Southern Christian Convention and should receive its adequate financial support. As a small remuneration for the college, the Southern Christian Convention voted that a quarterly offering be taken in each of the Sunday Schools for the "colleges." All schools arranging to take the offering may send 20 per cent of the proceeds collected to the treasurer of Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala.

S. L. BEOUGHIER.

MEETING OF SOUTHERN ASSOCIATION.

It was the good fortune of the writer to attend the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, meeting at Fort Worth, Texas, on December 4th to 7th, inclusive. A special Pullman had been chartered by the North Carolina College Conference to carry the North Carolina delegation to Fort Worth and back to North Carolina again, so we all had a regular house party of good-fellowship both on the going and the home-coming trip. Representatives from practically all the North Carolina colleges were on this Pullman, and quite a deal of college lore as well as college joke, concerts and the like made up the intellectual part of the trips.

The first two days of the meetings were given over largely to committee work and the work of secondary schools, to the junior college meetings and to the meetings of the women's colleges. The attendance at all these meetings was large. The junior college speakers indicated that the junior colleges are taking the day, that they are increasing very rapidly, and that the four-year or senior colleges will in the future find it difficult to maintain themselves unless they are highly endowed and can exist without a large number of students. However, a saner view was expressed by Dr. Zook, president of the University of Akron, who said in his address before the junior college meeting that there was plenty of room for both the junior college and the senior college; that the junior college would have a tendency to fill the junior and senior classes in the four-year colleges, and that they would take very few students from the freshman and sophomore classes in these colleges. He further stated that there are many junior colleges now in existence that are not meeting the requirements and the standards set up for junior colleges, and that these junior colleges will soon have to go out of existence.

The college meetings took place on the 6th and 7th of December. The attendance on these sessions was large, the programs were interesting, and every thing went off as nicely as could be expected. The banquet given by the Texas Christian University and other Texas colleges near Fort Worth on Thursday evening was all that could be desired. The magnificent ball-room of the Texas Hotel was completely filled with visitors and guests. The program of the evening was good. At this banquet the address of the fraternal messengers to the North Central Association of Colleges were heard, and the presidential address of President Ivy was delivered. President Ivy's address dealt largely with the abuses of athletics in the colleges and the hope was expressed that the colleges of the association would finally come to the point that athletics would be participated in for sportsmanship only.

Elon College was admitted to the Southern Association of Colleges at the meeting in Jackson, Miss., in 1926. She had met all the standards of this great accrediting agency, had passed with credit all the tests, and she ranks as one of the standard colleges of this country. And as long as she can meet the requirements of this association she will continue to be a member and will continue to rank with all the best institutions of the country.

We are asked, at times, what it means and what it is worth to belong to this accrediting agency. For a college, it means that she is an accredited college, accredited by an agency that is recognized the world over, it means that the college meets all the requirements of a college according to the best definition of a college. It further means that the college has a faculty that has passed the accrediting test; that her faculty is composed of men and women who take the highest rank as teachers and educators. It also means that the college is doing sound, faithful work, and that her students are also doing accredited work in all the work that they undertake. Further, it means that the examining board of the Southern Association of Colleges consider that the college has buildings, grounds, laboratory facilities, and all the equipment necessary to do the highest grade of college work.

It means for the student that, while he is in college, he can feel assured that he is in one of the highest grade colleges; that he can realize that he has the best instruction possible; that he has all the library and laboratory facilities for making the very best of his college work. Also, when, after graduation, if he wishes to take university work, he finds that he is welcomed to any university in the country, that he is allowed to enter upon graduate work without question, and that he finds that his college from which he graduates is looked upon by the university which he attends with the greatest respect and favor.

It is an honor to the Christian Church to have her college in the Southern Association of colleges, and, as the Church made it possible for her college to become a member of this accrediting agency, it is the duty of the Church and the Church is under obligation to keep her college up

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A CHRISTMAS MESSAGE.

Peace on earth!

That first Christmas message to a war-torn world was given nineteen hundred years ago, and in the nineteen centuries there has been little effort, until in the past century itself, to apply it to the practical behavior of nations. On the contrary, each century has seen its bloody, disastrous wars.

One hundred years ago, Americans organized to promote the cause of peace through international justice. The American Peace Society was then formed by William Ladd, of Maine. In the years since, it has worked to give its message to America and the world—peace through justice. There have been wars since, and possibly there will be wars in the future; but this society is gratified to note that now all America and at last the world have come to talk seriously and plan earnestly for ways of preventing wars. Progress has been made. Much remains to be done.

There is no way by which the Churches of America can be more helpful in promulgating the cause of a righteous international peace than by causing Americans to think seriously and prayerfully upon the problem. Christmas-time is a specially appropriate time of the year for such thoughts. The American Peace Society urges the ministers and leaders of every Church in the land to bring problems of peace between nations forcefully to the attention of their congregations.

Just now we are about to take a step, as a nation—an important step—in promoting the peace of the world through the adoption of the multilateral treaty to renounce war as a national policy. It is well for those who will lead the Christmas-time peace thoughts of our nation to study this document with care, and to present it and its aims to the people. It is a fitting Christmas-time topic. Our government is laboring upon other measures in behalf of the friendly settlement of international disputes. There is no way in which the American public can be more helpful just at this time than by gaining a clear understanding of these important matters.

The American Peace Society especially urges just now the Church people of the land to think seriously and earnestly at this Christmas-time upon the challenge of their religion on the plane of international relations.

May there yet be, everlastingly, "Peace on earth, good will among men!"

WILLIAM FORTUNE,
President American Peace Society.

PORTO RICO LETTER.

Dear Homefolks:

I have found THE CHRISTIAN SUN to be one of my best friends. It has brought many new and interesting friends to my life since I have been here. Good many folks write to me just because THE SUN has asked them or they have read my letters in THE SUN, and have become interested in our work in Porto Rico. I can assure you that it has been a great help to me personally, and also for the work. Therefore, when weekly I answer the letters of a good many friends, I feel that I must write to my best friend and express my appreciation for the splendid work that it is doing.

Last Saturday I spent all day visiting our Salinas country work with Pedro Roman, who is in charge of this work. I found that these points that I visited had suffered the most from the cyclone. I found many people living under their destroyed homes, and some living with their relatives; about fifteen persons in two rooms, and half of them suffering from the tropical fever. I never have seen such conditions in all my life, and do not see how these people exist. Of course, destroyed homes mean that clothing and all other things were lost, so ever since the cyclone the people that suffered from the effect of the storm have been undergoing a great deal of suffering. One would never realize until one sees the pitiful picture. Of course, when there is not sufficient food, clothing and shelter, naturally sickness will take place, and it has among those that I have especially visited and studied their conditions. My heart aches for them, but what is it that we can do? Certainly the government of Porto Rico must take some action and improve the living conditions among the poor class. There are many, many men, women and boys and girls left without work, who are able to work and try to help their helpless families. To my mind, that is the only solution to improve the living conditions of the suffering class. Let us remember Porto Rico in our prayers, and ask our Father to have mercy upon this island and save its people for His kingdom.

Most of the clothing that I have been receiving has been for the women and girls, and very little for the men and boys; also very few shoes, and if any of you wish to help more I would appreciate it if you would send shoes and men's and boys' clothing, as there is a great need for such.

On Tuesday, December 4th, a very impressive memorial service was held in our Santa Isabel Church to pay tribute to our great Christian leader that has been taken away from us. Many tributes were paid to Mr. Martin, our native worker. Indeed, he is gone to his Heavenly Father, but his work and influence still live among the people that came in contact with him. Many of our natives who I talked with told me he certainly was a great leader, with wonderful plans to help the growth of our mission, and the kind of leader that Porto Rico needed. Of course, God knows best. May God comfort his family. Our prayers are with them.

I am glad to say that our work in general is progressing nicely under the circumstances. The native workers are taking more responsibilities, which is a very encouraging thing for all of us. Do not forget our work on this island in your prayers, as we need you all the time.

RECOMMENDED BOOKS

The following educational helps and books have been recommended by Dr. W. P. Minton, Secretary of Foreign Missionary Department, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, S. C. C. Acting upon the advice and recommendation of these two recognized and earnest missionary workers, The Christian Publishing Association has stocked the following books, which are moderately priced and can be supplied on receipt of order:

MISSION STUDY BOOKS.

If any individual or society desires to secure mission study books, I have the following on hand: "What Next in Home Missions?" by William P. Shriver, price 60 cents (the home mission book recommended for women's societies); "Youth and the New America," by G. Bromley Oxham, price 60 cents (home mission book for young people); "In the African Bush," by Jewel Huelster Schwab, price 75 cents (foreign book for Willing Workers or junior age children); "Indian Playmates of Navajo Land," by Ethel M. Booder, price 75 cents (home book for Willing Workers or primary age children).

I shall be glad to secure copies of "Friends of Africa," price 50 cents (the woman's foreign mission book), and "Africa Today" (young people's foreign book) for any who may wish to secure them.

I also have copies of "Please Stand By," by Margaret Applegarth, price 50 cents (children's book for 1927-28), and "The Adventure of the Church," by Samuel McCrea Covert, price 60 cents (woman's home book for 1927-28).

PATTIE L. COGHILL,
Henderson, N. C. Supt. Literature.

An invitation is being sent to the various foreign mission boards and societies to participate in a day of prayer for missions in the week of prayer. This will be observed on Thursday, January 10, 1929, and all boards are requested to observe it as a day of prayer for the missionary enterprise abroad. It is hoped that in the larger centers where several boards have offices, it may be possible for the boards to arrange a union prayer meeting on that day.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XIII—December 30, 1928.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF LIFE.

LESSON: Rom. 12:1-17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: 1 Cor. 12:1-13.

We are hearing a great deal about stewardship these days. Denominations have their boards of stewardship; there are stewardship councils, stewardship training classes, stewardship books without end, and there is a larger co-operative stewardship council made up of representatives from the various denominations, pooling their efforts and their thought in an attempt to make the principle of stewardship an integral part of the Christian life, or rather to make clear that stewardship is an integral factor of the Christian life. There is an undoubted emphasis upon stewardship today.

In the mind of the average Church member, however, stewardship signifies the giving of money. When the minister preaches on stewardship, or conducts a class in stewardship, the average man and woman usually thinks that he is trying to get more money. And perhaps he or she is not always wrong. But stewardship is a more comprehensive thing than this. It is, in principle, one of the most comprehensive things in the Christian life. Stewardship, in the sense of holding as another's and using as a good steward that which does not belong to the person who holds it applies in the Christian's life to all that he has and is and becomes. It is too bad that stewardship has been held to such a narrow interpretation in so many cases. It might be said, however, that if a man is not a good steward of his money he is not likely to be a good steward of anything else. Money is a good, if not the acid, test.

Now, Paul interpreted all of life as a stewardship. He knew that not only was the earth and the fullness thereof the Lord's, but he knew that they that dwell therein were the Lord's. He sums this principle up in the words, "Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price." Men in general belong to God through creation, but Christians in particular belong to God because they have been redeemed through Christ. Paul refused to compromise on this point. A man was not simply a steward of material possessions—although Paul insisted that men be good stewards—man was not simply a steward of time and talents and energy; man was a steward of life itself. Life was a sacred trust committed to man by God. It has tremendous possibilities and capacities. It was to be developed and utilized for that which was highest and best. All the powers of body and mind and heart were to be kept at their best and to be placed at the disposal of God through Christ. "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God which is your reasonable (or spiritual) service. The word 'therefore' is significant. Paul had been using the first eleven chapters of Romans to set forth his doctrine or philosophy of the Christian life and faith. Not by works but by faith and grace are men saved. Christ has wrought out man's salvation. Therefore, man ought to present himself at his best for the service of Christ. He puts the matter in another way when he says that we are not to yield our bodies as instruments of unrighteousness, but as instruments of righteousness.

One can readily see what a practical and far-reaching application this principle has to life. To hold not only our money, but all that we have and are as a stewardship from God; to develop our powers and capacities to the highest and with every increase in capacity to offer a deepened consecration; to invest our lives in kingdom service in such a way that they will count for the most; to do the very best we can wherever we are—these are some of the implications of this doctrine. Let any man apply this principle to his own life and he will soon find that it demands a reorganization of life and a constantly increasing discipline of life and a deepening measure of consecration.

This principle ought to be stressed in the case of young people. There are so many young people launching forth in life without any sense of the stewardship of life whatever. They are making their life plans as if there were no God at all, so far as their sense of obligation to Him is concerned. They interpret their lives as their own. They need to be helped to see that the life which they have is a trust from God, that they ought to make that life count for the most, that they ought to invest it where they can make it count for most, and that they ought to make a determined effort to find out what the will of God is. Happy is that man who knows that he is in the place God wants him to be and is doing the thing God wants him to do.

This principle of stewardship finds application again in the case of those who face Jesus Christ's claim upon their allegiance. The man who delays becoming a Christian is not being a good steward. To live one's life as one pleases and then late in life to offer Christ all that is left is to fail in the vital point of stewardship. To give one's self to Christ early in life, to develop one's powers and capacities as best one can, to seek to find the place and the work where God would have us, and then to make one's life count for the most in that place or work—that is the demand of stewardship. He who does that will be found a good steward and he shall enter into the joy of his Lord.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, December 30, 1928.

TOPIC: "Learning from Experience."—Eccles. 1:16-18; Psa. 37:25.

Some Bible Hints.

Experience is valuable only as we think it over and draw lessons from it (v. 16).

We have opportunity enough these days to "know madness and folly." It is all around us; and we see the bitter fruits of it (v. 17).

In wisdom is grief, it is true, for then we shall be able to see, without being able to prevent, the inevitable results of people's folly (v. 18).

David's experience is general. This is the rule, but there are exceptions to it, as the book of Job teaches us. It is good to have a faith that remains strong even in poverty and pain (Psa. 37:25).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Life is God's school of experience. Some learn quickly, some slowly, some not at all, but continue to make the same mistakes again and again.

The proverbs teach us that it is well to learn from the experience of others. Why become a drunkard to find out the effect of alcohol on character? Others have tried.

A Spanish proverb says, "He drives nails with his head," meaning that a person is obstinate, will not learn from experience.

The prodigal son learned something from his experience, but his experience has not kept others from trying the delights of the far country. That is because we are slow and stupid.

A Few Illustrations.

Experience shows that the dope fiend begins with small doses, and very soon he becomes enslaved. Look at the wreck! Why should we have to take drugs to know what will happen?

I have learned that to make friends I must be friendly; I must give and not seek anything in return; I must be interested in others, be kind, encouraging, helpful.

Read the newspapers. Do they not teach us that most of the ruin that comes upon young people comes through folly rather than special wickedness. Look out for folly.

An animal once caught in a trap is forever afterwards chary about anything that looks like a trap. It is man that walks blindly into danger.

To Think About.

What has this past year taught you?

What have you noted from the experiences of others?

What happy experiences have you had in the past year?

ALL-SOUTH C. E. TO MEET.

JANUARY MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

Subject: "Healing and Teaching at Home and Abroad."

Scripture: Matt. 4:23-5:2, 5:17-19, 7:28-29; Isa. 56:6-8; John 10:14-16.

The leader should have these selections arranged so that they may be readily presented with careful emphasis on healing, teaching and the inclusiveness of the Master's plans.

Prayer: Prayer of appreciation for God's far-reaching plans, for Jesus' ministry of healing and teaching, for those who today extend His kindly service. Petition that we may learn to know God's plans for a world in need, and be enabled by His Spirit to have some part in these larger tasks of the kingdom of God.

Talk: Emphasize the importance of health and the pressing need for the ministry of healing in Africa today.

Report: Glimpses of a modern Christian doctor at work in Africa. Present some vivid incident described in chapter three.*

Talk: The relation of the teacher to the problem of health.

Report: Dramatic incidents from chapter four that show the task of the Christian teacher in Africa.'

Season of sentence or brief prayers for doctors and teachers who carry on a helpful ministry at home or abroad.

Songs and special music should be carefully selected by the leader to enrich the service of worship, and give expression to the deeper sentiments and aspirations. An offering or any appropriate call for service may be an integral part of the service of worship.

*The mission study book, "Friends of Africa," by Jean Kenyon Mackenzie, should be carefully studied by those who prepare and render the program.

ARE WE ANY BETTER?

When the question is asked, "Is the world getting better?" there are superficial thinkers and twentieth-century enthusiasts who immediately reply, "Certainly the world is getting better! Just look at our airplanes, radios, skyscrapers, factories and what not! We are miles ahead of our grandfathers; and, so far as the ancients are concerned, they are clear out of the running when compared with our wonderful era!"

In other words, our generation offers the results of its inventive genius and its material accomplishments as proof that it is better than former generations. Its thesis seems to be that, because our grandfathers traveled six miles an hour and we go sixty, therefore we are ten times better than they.

But some of the world's thinkers are beginning to realize the tragic fallacy of such an argument, and to sense that, after all, where morals and wisdom are considered, we may be immeasurably worse off than our slow-moving ancestors.

One of England's brilliant thinkers and writers, C. E. M. Joad, writing in the September issue of Harper's Magazine on "The Future of Man," says:

"In the last century and a half man has enormously increased his command over nature. Sixty miles an hour in an express train has replaced four miles an hour on foot, and two hundred miles an hour in an airplane has replaced sixty miles an hour in an express train. Productivity has increased enormously, and one man can utilize machines to do the work which formerly employed the labor of a hundred. In power and skill, in ability to tap the resources of nature and harness them to our use, we are to the men of the eighteenth century like giants to babies. Our powers might, so at least it was hoped, have been used to improve human life, to make it more leisurely and spacious, to diminish its toil, and to increase its beauty. This hope has, however, been shown to be illusory. It would be interesting to take one

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

*"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure
... then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty ... and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.*

MONDAY.

CHRISTMAS DEVOTIONS.

*"There is born to you this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."—
—Luke 2:10:11.*

We celebrate this week as the greatest event of history, an event which has divided all time from which we now compute our time and dates. The story as given by Luke is considered the best.

It has not always been celebrated. Francis of Assissi was the first to bring it to the forefront. Centuries have now rolled away but the luster of that night increases with every year.

We wish we could know definitely some of the places of Christ's ministry where "heaven's glories flash" so brightly. But God, it is said, has wiped out these places, like He did the burial places of Moses, lest the world should pay them too great homage and forget that all places and all people are equidistant from heaven. It is enough to know that the vision came. That Christ came and that "He is and ever shall be, world without end."

Prayer.—Lord, give us grace to keep Thy word in our hearts. How high shall we lift ourselves to find Thee? To what place shall we go to find Thee? What shall we do that God may reveal Himself to us? What shall we do this week to make Christmas-time one of heaven's intended light? We will take the cup of faith. We will acknowledge God and the grace of Jesus to others. We will praise Him in our celebrations. We will render thanks and promise to continue in this all our lives. God help us! Amen.

TUESDAY.

CHRIST MORNING.

*"And the angel said unto them, Be not afraid; for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy."—
—Luke 2:10.*

Christmas hath a darkness
Brighter than the blazing moon;
Christmas hath a chillness
Warmer than the heat of June;
Christmas hath a beauty
Lovelier than the world can show;
For Christmas bringeth Jesus,
Brought for us so low.

Earth, strike up your music:
Birds that sing and bells that ring;
Heaven hath answering music
For all angels soon to sing.
Earth, put on your whitest
Bridal robe of spotless snow,
For Christmas bringeth Jesus,
Brought for us so low.

—Rossetti.

Once and for all time the token of God's presence in the world is manifested in a person. Once and for all there is a presence in the midst of humanity that shows how man is in the image of God and how men can draw nigh to Him.

A message for us today is this: "Be not afraid." "Have no doubts." This is the cheer of life's every phase, and its every turn. Christ came to deliver man from every fear of the universe. He is God's answer to the devil, sin and human gloom, and the antidote to death and hell. This is our great joy.

Prayer.—Oh, Father! we rejoice that Thou hast sent into our hearts a ray of glory for the world. We rejoice that Thou has given us a treasure of most precious living. We rejoice that our light is from the Son of God and from the heart of God. Extinguish selfish joys from us. Put out the light that burns for us only. Bring forth Thy star, Jesus—humanity's star that shines for the world. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CHRIST IS AMONG US.

"When He the Spirit of truth is come He will guide us into all truth."

Another message of this Christmas-time is that man is to be saved. Hitherto, mankind has been under groaning miseries, tyrannical powers, the whip of taskmasters, the bondage of Pharaoh; but now it has a champion able and ready, with heaven's power, to work out a complete deliverance and a full salvation, ready to flow on through mortal life and bear them all safely and triumphantly to the boundless ocean of eternity.

He whose life we celebrated yesterday goes out into the world, healing the sick, feeding the hungry, comforting the afflicted, forgiving sins, giving peace, taking souls to Paradise. The Lamb of God who takes the burdens under which humanity is crushed.

Prayer.—Wonderful Counselor, Jesus, God! Messenger of love, Sun of Righteousness, the Healer of the nations. Lord of our souls, turn the world to Thee, heal their wounds and diseases. Open fountains of blessings sufficient for their needs. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE PROMISE OF CHRISTMAS.

"There is born to you this day ... a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord."—Luke 2:11.

How optimistic can we be in that for which we prayed yesterday? Will God ever satisfy men and women? Man is so full of discords and selfish passions that a great gulf seems to make it impossible.

How can we be persuaded that God loves us, feels for us, cares for us? Only Jesus Christ, living among us, sharing with us, tempted as we are, drinking with us the "vinegar and the gall of our hard places. Hence, "The word was made flesh." If one is to write a true story of a life, he must know that life at its worst as well as its best; must live with that life. This is what God has done for man. In Him we meet the infinite and the eternal and heaven is in us a reality.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for Thy Son. Help Thou our unbelief and faithlessness. We acknowledge our sins which are ever before us. We would turn to Thee and obey Thy Spirit. God be thanked for Thy unspeakable gift. Amen.

FRIDAY.

DIVINE? YES—HUMAN? YES.

We know that He was divine. He did the things of God; also, in all that Christ did, he allied Himself with man—He came into their hearts like a friend. This fact unveils the essential God-likeness of man, and that the lowliest is capable of receiving divine indwelling. Christianity has often been accused of taking the joy out of life and depressing human nature, but where in the dreams of mankind is there any joy so great as the fact of knowing that God dwells in us? This is the ideal of human nature.

Both the apostles of Christianity and the apostles of the world have misunderstood Christianity's application and meaning. The loveliness of perfect deeds, the warmth of pure love, the throb of human pity, the realization of forgiveness, the sense of right, the joy of noble purpose, the inspiration of lifting power, the realization of human nature's dreams and constant desire, the accomplishment of what we are striving for, the answer to the continual cry of humanity for righteousness and peace, the joy of being a friend with Christ and freedom from wrong—all represent the common plain of all when they meet and find God. It is the dawn of the sun and the acme of man without spot.

Prayer.—Dear Father, God of us all. To Jesus let us fly, and draw from Him a splendor of soul that makes us like Him. Amen.

SATURDAY.

IF WE HAD BUT A DAY.

"We would fill the hours with sweetest things

If we had but a day;

We would drink alone at the purist springs

In our upward way;

We would love with a lifetime's love in an hour

If the hours were few;

We would pray not for dreams, but for fresher power

To be and to do.

"We would waste no moments in weak regret

If the day were but one;

If what we remember and what we regret

Went out with the sun;

We should be from our clamorous selves set free

To work and to pray;

And to be what the Father would have us be,

If we had but a day."

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, gather us by Thy word under the wings of Thy grace. Be jealous for Thy name, and drive out of us all sense of sin and shame. Pour out Thy rich gifts upon us, that from this Christmas on we may magnify and praise Thy name. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"What means that star," the shepherds said,

"That brightens through the rocky glen?"

And angels answering overhead,

Sang, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

'Tis eighteen hundred years and more

Since those sweet oracles were dumb;

We wait for Him, like them of yore—

Alas! He seems so slow to come.

But it was said in words of gold

No time or morrow e'er shall dim,

That little children might be bold

In perfect trust to come to Him.

All around about our feet shall shine

A light like that the wise men saw,

If we our loving wills incline

To that sweet life which is the law.

So shall we learn to understand

The simple faith of shepherds then,

And, clasping kindly hand in hand,

Sing, "Peace on earth, good will to men!"

And they who do their souls no wrong,

But keep at eve the faith of morn,

Shall daily hear the angel's song,

"Today the Prince of earth is born!"

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The Thanksgiving offering is coming in very nicely so far. Our Burlington Church made us very happy this year and sent us $1,951.15 in real money, and they also sent us $652.55 in merchandise given by the several circles in the Church and the merchants.

The Orphanage superintendent will give the pastor of any Church that will equal that record two Stetson hats and throw in a pair of shoes. Our grand total so far this year is $24,155.42. We must raise by the end of the year, to reach our goal, $5,844.58. We have until January 1st to reach it. Won't you lend us a helping hand, and if your Church has not made its offering see that it does and send it in at once? We are very anxious to reach it. Let everybody get busy, all help, and see how fast we climb up to the goal.

THE SUN LETTER.

It is just amazing to see what can be done when some one will take the lead and get others interested. One good lady in one of our Churches was so much interested in her pastor getting a new hat for Christmas that she worked so hard and so fast she got twenty-nine renewals and new subscriptions and sent me $58 instead of $40. Her pastor will wear a smile and a new hat for Christmas. Two other Churches joined hands and each got their quota of subscribers and one over and sent me a check for $42. Another Church secured ten new subscribers and ten renewals and their pastor will wear a new $10 Stetson hat Christmas. Another pastor has sent in the size of his head and said the money and subscription list would be on the way in a few days. Two other Churches have clubbed together and hope to raise their quota of subscribers and make their pastor happy for Christmas. It is so easily done if you will but try.

ARE WE ANY BETTER?

by one the major scientific discoveries of the last hundred years and to show how the potential benefits which they might have conferred upon the human race have been in each instance frustrated. We have more power over nature, it is true, yet the only way we can escape from the dirt and squalor, the foul air and the overcrowding which power over nature involves is to escape into the country, where nature is still in more or less undisputed power over man. Our doctors have achieved unprecedented skill in repairing damaged bodies; but our chemists have achieved even greater skill in destroying them, so that in war time we see all the resources of civilization devoted to patching up broken bodies in order that all the resources of civilization may proceed to blow them to bits again. We have invented rapid means of transit to bring us in and out of our cities, yet allowed them to grow to such dimensions that not all the tubes and railways in the world can take their workers out of them, with the result that we live no nearer to the country than we did before, while a new race of nomads engaged in perpetual transit between workshop and dormitory knows neither the solace of solitude nor the sense of community.

"The trouble here is obvious. Man's skill has enormously outstripped his ability to use it. In other words, his technical efficiency is greater than his social wisdom. . . . Men of genius by the dozen, men of talent by the hundred have labored, that wireless might be; they succeeded, and the tittle-tattle of the divorce courts is broadcast to the ends of the earth, while the remoter ether vibrates to negroid music.

"Science has not altered man's desires; it has merely made it easier for him to carry them into effect. If our desires are good, this added power of gratifying them is good; if they are evil, it is a corresponding evil. Most of men's desires that have hitherto found social expression have been harmful. Hence, the principal effect of the increase in human power and knowledge has either been an improvement in methods of destroying human life or an accentuation of economic inequality, with the result that our States are founded on force, dominated by money power, and armed through fear, while rich and poor tend increasingly to differentiate into two different species. Our civilization is in fact only skin-deep; fundamentally, man is still the same foolish, credulous, vain, impulsive and intolerant animal that he was in the stone age. Fire the first bullet, and the savage appears.

"Mind, I am not maintaining that mankind is worse than it ever was; merely that it has a need to be better. For science has taken this primitive savage posturing as civilized man, and presented him with powers fit for the gods. Give a boy an air-gun, and he may kill a sparrow or break a window or two; give him a modern Lee Metford rifle, and he becomes a public danger. Politically and socially, man is still a baby, with the acquisitive and destructive instincts of a baby; science has given the baby a box of matches. Can he survive the gift?"

We believe that these paragraphs contain matter for serious reflection on the part of those who pin their hope for the future on the glowing material accomplishments of the present.—Signs of the Times.

to that high point of excellency that her college will ever be worthy of the honor of membership in this great association.

That this may be done, the college must be properly financed. Other denominations are financing their colleges well and Elon College must be adequately financed if she is to remain in the position in which she now is. As long as the denomination recognizes her obligation to her college and her responsibility to finance her college and does her duty by and towards her college, as long as the Church lifts up the hands of the college, then Elon College will ever rank with the other great institutions of our country and she can easily and readily maintain her membership in the Southern Association of Colleges.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x¾ inch
The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength. One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

OBITUARIES

JOYNER.

We, the board of deacons of Mt. Carmel Christian Church, submit the following:

Bro. J. E. T. Joyner joined this Church in 1871, and was ordained to the office of deacon in 1890. He was for several years superintendent of Sunday School. He was a faithful and interested member of the Church and performed the office of deacon well until death claimed him on November 11, 1928, at the age of nearly 76 years; therefore, resolved:

1. That we humbly bow to the will of Him who doeth all things well and try to follow his example of faithfulness to duty in the Church, believing our loss is his gain.

2. That a copy of these resolutions be admitted to the records of the Church, a copy be sent to The Christian Sun, and a copy sent to his family.

Tolerance is not craven avoidance of issues merely because they are fraught with danger; that is weakness and cowardice. Tolerance is an avoidance of prejudice, mendacity and passion. Tolerance is open-minded, intelligent facing of issues in the spirit of truth and fair dealing, and when the approach is made in his sympathetic manner no candidate need fear the most searching discussion of his religious opinions—The Masonic Digest.

GATLLNG.

We, the Ladies' Aid Society of Sarem Christian Church, feel very keenly the passing of one of our most faithful and interested members, Mrs. Sallie M. Gatling, on October 24th. While we mourn the loss of our dear sister and co-worker, who had been a patient sufferer for some months, and while we miss her cheerful presence in our meetings, we feel that our loss is her gain, and may we strive to imitate her good examples by being more faithful in our duties to God's cause—we bow in humble submission to God's will and extend to her loved ones our deepest sympathy, and recommend that a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, a copy to her family, and a copy recorded in our society.

EDWARDS.

Bro. John Robert Edwards began his course on earth January 1, 1847, and it came to an end December 8, 1928, making his stay on earth 81 years, 11 months and 7 days. During the earlier part of his life he was affiliated with the Baptist Church, but for the past thirty years he had been a member of Antioch Christian Church. The Church extends sympathies to those left behind. He will be missed by those left behind—a wife and five children: C. P., W. J., and J. L. Edwards, Miss Bettie Edwards and Mrs. W. E. Gray; one half-brother, J. G. Britt, and six grandchildren, together with a host of friends.

Funeral services were conducted from Antioch Church on December 9th by the writer, assisted by Dr. W. D. Harward, and the remains were laid to rest to await the great awakening.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

For catalog and other information, address S. L. Beougher, President.
