REV. JAMES O'KELLY.

BY W. E. MACCLENNY.

Rev. James O'Kelly, the organizer of the Christian Church in the South, was born in Virginia—very likely in Mecklenburg County—about 1738. He fixes the place in his "Essay on Negro Slavery," and the date is from his Testament record in Elon College library. Of his parents we know little. He says that he was born of poor parentage. Tradition says his father's name was William. About his brothers and sisters we know nothing with certainty. He was of Irish descent. Cellach, chief of Hy Many and fourteenth in descent from Main Mor, was the progenitor from whom the O'Kellys derive their surname. The family has been prominent in Ireland for ages, going back to the year 960 A. D. Many churchmen and statesmen have come from it. There are many works, some in Latin, in the Congressional Library by members of the family.

About his youth we know little. One of his friends, Osborn Pope, of Granville County, N. C., in a letter written to him before 1801, gives us a glimpse of his youth as follows: "Little did I think, when Samuel Yeargin, the preacher (perhaps Andrew Yeargin), my mother and myself persuaded you to join in society about twenty-five years ago, I should ever live to see you so stigmatized as you are, and the Scripture so depreciated by the Methodist synod, and from all I hear in private and public you are thus treated because you hold by the New Testament or Scripture government which was the very term of union at first. I knew you for years before you joined the Methodists, and I never heard you were called a lying man, a tattler, a mischief-maker, or a busy-body in other men's matters; but on the contrary, when unconverted, mirth and company you delighted in. Now, if religion makes a man so much more like the devil than he was by nature, he had better have none."

About his educational advantages, we know nothing, except what is learned from his writings. Schools were scarce in his day. There is evidence in some of his printed works that he had a fair knowledge of the Greek and Latin languages, and that he was fairly well versed in general history.

As to the date of his marriage to Miss Elizabeth Meeks, who was descended from some of the earliest colonists at Jamestown, and who, through his long and checkered life, shared his joys and divided his sorrows, we have no definite information. She was born about the year 1744, and her son, William O'Kelly, was born April 29, 1763. Therefore, we know that the couple were married young, the husband being about twenty-four years old and the wife about eighteen years of age. In his will he mentions his son, John first, then William's heirs. Very likely William was the older. William O'Kelly became a statesman, having set in both houses of the North Carolina Legislature.

As to his occupation before entering the ministry, nothing is known.

In the summer of 1774, James O'Kelly turned his attention to religious matters, and was soon converted. We will let him tell of this. Says he: "My first mental alarm was not through the blessed means of preaching; but by the kind illuminations of the invisible Holy Spirit. I saw by this divine light that I was without God, and destitute of any reasonable hope in my present state. Now, being moved by faith through fear, I attempted to flee the wrath to come, and seek a place of refuge! But, O what violent opposition did I meet with! After many sorrowful months, I formed one resolution. With a low cadence of voice and fearful apprehension, I ventured, like Queen Esther, who approached the king's presence at the risk of her life, so I ventured in a way of prayer, to speak to the Almighty! With the Bible in my hand, I besought the Lord to help me, and during life that sacred Book should be my guide, and declaring that at the close, if I sunk to perdition, 'Just, O God! yet dreadful! But if Thy clemency and divine goodness should at last rescue me from the jaws of a burning hell, this miracle of grace shall be gratefully remembered by me, a monument of mercy!"

"The things which followed, which were such things as belonged to my peace, the inexpressible change, the instantaneous cure, I am incapable of speaking of; but O my soul was lodged in Immanuel's breast, the city of refuge—the ark of my rest. And in those days, God sent preachers into our dark regions, who were burning and shining lights."

Immediately after his conversion, everything irreligious was abandoned, his iron will knowing no half-way ground. He deliberately laid his fiddle on a huge fire and burned it and his other worldly amusements were laid aside.

His son William was converted before his father and felt called to preach, but his father dissuaded him owing to his age, and soon Mr. O'Kelly felt that the Lord laid the burden of preaching on him; therefore, he at once became active in religious work, and on January 2, 1775, he was licensed a Methodist lay preacher and sent out as one of that immortal band of American lay preachers in the societies. He was not, however, ordained either deacon, or priest (elder), as no Episcopal minister would have done that. Thus, from January 2, 1775, to the Christmas conference of 1784, in Baltimore, Md., or for nearly ten years, he was a layman, a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who belonged to the Methodist societies of Rev. John Wesley in America. His name first appears in the Methodist minutes at the conference at Leesburg, Va., when he is reported as remaining on trial. His first official station was on the New Hope circuit, in North Carolina.

The first mention that we have of his preaching in Methodist history was in an old colonial Church, in Southern Virginia, about 1777. The location of this Church is not known with certainty. One writer noticing this early work of Mr. O'Kelly says: "The people flocked to hear him and great was the work of God under his powerful exhortations, and earnest prayers. The parish minister was greatly enraged that an upstart Methodist preacher should have the temerity to preach in his chapel, and what was worse that he should attract more people than the regular successor to the apostles. In spite of the curate's violent opposition, he continued to preach for more than a year with increasing success. The next year he joined "Asbury's Ironsides."

He was a man of outstanding natural ability, and soon took a high stand in the ranks of Methodism. Rev. Devereaux Jarratt, the noted Episcopalian, speaks of him as a man of ability and a brilliant speaker.

In order to understand Rev. James O'Kelly's early work, we will have to take a bird-eye view of the conditions in Virginia in 1778. The Methodists had been in the State six years. English laws, manners and customs prevailed. Virginia was in truth a little England. The Episcopal Church was the State Church, and in many instances it had become very corrupt, and many of its ministers were very poor examples of morality, yet they opposed other sects. The Methodist societies, seeking a closer walk with God, regarded themselves as a part of the Episcopal Church up to the year 1784. The Revolutionary War was on, and was soon transferred to the South, and a large majority of the people of Virginia and North Carolina were down on everything having the English stamp upon it. Rev. John Wesley had sent over to America Rev. Francis Asbury as a missionary. Mr. Asbury was ambitious to leave his name at the head of American Methodism, while republican ideas were shooting in the popular mind, and the people were demanding the greatest possible freedom in Church government. The subject discussed most frequently was regarded the administration of the ordinances of the Church—baptism, the Lord's supper, marriage, and the burial of the dead. No Methodist preacher could administer these rites. Episcopal ministers were few, many having returned to England at the beginning of the war, and those left paid little attention to the Methodists, so that in some places the Lord's Supper had not been administered for years, and thousands were unbaptized. The Methodist ministers and laity felt the thrill of free American air, and demanded that the ordinances be administered by Methodist preachers. The Baptists of Virginia were demanding the same thing for their members, from the Virginia Legislature, and won it. Mr. Asbury and a few other Methodists opposed this movement. These were the issues that first started the movement that eventually led to the organization of the Methodist Church of America and later the organization of the Christian Church in the South.

Of the Methodist preachers south of the Potomac River, a large majority were opposed to Mr. Asbury's plan of letting things drift in this way; therefore, in the minutes of the Methodist conference held at Brokenback Church, Fluvanna County, Va., in 1779, we find, in spite of Mr. Asbury's opposition, the following questions and answers: "What are the reasons for taking up the ordinances among us? Because the Episcopal establishment is now dissolved, and therefore in almost all of the circuits the members are without the ordinances, we believe it to be our duty. What preachers do approve of this step? Answer: Isham Tatum, Nelson Reed, Phillip Gatch, James Morris, John Major, Henry Willis, John Sagman, Carter Coles, William Moore, Charles Hopkins, Reuben Ellis, Thomas Morris, James Foster, Andrew Yeargin, Francis Poythress, Leroy Coles, James O'Kelly, Samuel Roe."

A presbytery was appointed, consisting of Gatch, Foster, and Ellis, first to administer the ordinances themselves, second to authorize any other preacher or preachers approved by them, by the laying on of hands, to administer the ordinances. Out of this event grew the Methodist Church of America as a separate organization; Rev. James O'Kelly being one of the leaders in the movement. Rev. Francis Asbury, by his opposition to this movement, set in motion the influences that led to the organization of the Christian Church in the South in 1794.

We will now look at another side of his life which developed at this time—his service in the Revolutionary War. He and his family had been living in Virginia long enough to feel the spirit of freedom which was then abroad in the land, and this was blown into a flame by the speeches of Patrick Henry and others regarding the acts of the English Parliament. When the storm did break, the members of his family did not go into hiding, nor try to shun the issue as the lists of the Revolutionary soldiers in Virginia and North Carolina will show. (Note: The Virginia lists, published in 1911, give the names of William D. and Thomas D. O'Kelly, while the North Carolina list shows the name of Patrick O'Kelly.) We will let James O'Kelly tell his own story, as follows: "As to my conduct, it may be traced through the American Revolution. After the itinerant preachers fled from the South, for fear of danger, I labored and traveled from circuit to circuit, in North Carolina, to feed and comfort those poor, distressed sheep left in the wilderness. Philip, whose surname was Bruce, helped me—through great perils. We judged it best, for

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

OCTOBER SIXTEENTH—O'KELLY DAY.

We are presenting to our readers this week what is fittingly termed a "James O'Kelly Edition of THE CHRISTIAN SUN." Much historical data is presented herewith, that SUN readers will wish to have and to keep through the years. The program of the day that brought together this material is printed in full, so that the thousands who wanted to be at Elon on October 16th and could not may follow the program throughout, and thus catch the spirit of the occasion.

It was an epochal day in the annals of the Christian Church, as the program and the papers presented reveal. Busy and competent stenographers were present, and it is believed that a true and accurate record of what was said and done throughout a program lasting two hours and a half is given herewith.

It was a glorious October day. There were many lineal descendants of O'Kelly present for the occasion. Those interested in the genius of the Christian Church, its origin and its progress came from afar to catch the spirit of the occasion. October 16, 1929, marked the 103rd anniversary of the day on which O'Kelly died. Because this man of God championed the cause of religious liberty and had convictions from which he could not be shaken, and kept him steadfast in pursuit of the truth that he loved better than his own life, the increasing years have enhanced the value of the man. It takes no prophet to say that another hundred years will tell even a greater story of the worth of this man. He does not shine out as some historical lights, because the idea that he made articulate was bigger than the man and the achievements of his idea have overshadowed him. His contribution was not temporal, but but eternal; not mental, but spiritual. It was the leaven placed in the lump, and, through more than a century that leaven has been doing its quiet but powerful and incalculable work.

The granite memorial, unveiled by beautiful little Dorothy Ann Harward, a direct descendant of James O'Kelly, lends dignity, grace and beauty to the Elon College campus and will stand as a memorial to a man whom coming centuries will delight to honor.

October 16, 1929, will be long remembered and cherished, not only by those who were fortunate enough to witness the events of the unveiling of a permanent memorial to a great man, but to all who cherish the memory of those who in the past fought through desperate struggle that the religious mind might be unfettered and that the souls of men might be free in that love wherewith Jesus Christ has made us free.

O'KELLY MEMORIAL PROGRAM.

The program as presented at the unveiling of the Rev. James O'Kelly memorial, on the Elon College campus, October 16, 1929:

PROGRAM.

Organ prelude by Prof. David Brown Harrell.
Processional hymn No. 61, "O God, Our Help in Ages Past."

INVOCATION.

Invocation by Dr. E. L. Moffitt, as follows:
Our Heavenly Father, as we come together to honor the memory of the great founder and leader of the Church to which we belong, and which is the founder and the inspiration of the institution under whose auspices we meet today, we come with our hearts full of gratitude for the leadership that has brought us to this good day. We thank Thee that there have been great outstanding men in the industrial world who have forged ahead and who have been successful, by which this institution and the other institutions of the Churches throughout the land may prosper and may do the work which Thou hast intended for them to do in the world, and who have helped to direct the affairs of the nation's government, so that success should come to many others and, we trust, in all the nations of the world. We thank Thee especially for great leaderships in the religious world. We thank Thee for the great leader whose memory we come to honor today, and his wonderful ideas, and his wonderful thoughts in the religious world. We thank Thee for the great principles of religious liberty upon which he stood. We thank Thee for the inspiration that he has given to us and to all the Churches of the world. And as we come in Thy presence, we ask Thy benediction to rest upon us this day for Christ's sake.

Hymn No. 442, "The Church's One Foundation."

SCRIPTURE.

Scripture, by Rev. Alfred W. Hurst:
I have the honor to read our Scripture lesson today from the New Testament which belonged to James O'Kelly in the year 1790. I have chosen a passage of Scripture which he himself regarded as very important. In the margin of the Scripture, he has written these words, "A great lesson by reading the letter of Paul to the Philippians." "I rejoice greatly in the Lord, that your care for me has now flourished again; for whom ye were indeed careful before, but ye wanted opportunity. Not that I speak on account of want; for I have learned in whatever circumstances I am, to be contented. I know both how to be abased, and how to abound: in every place, and in all conditions I am instructed, both to be full and to be hungry, to abound and to be in want. I can do all things through Christ strengthening me. Nevertheless, ye did well in communicating to the relief of my affliction. And ye Philippians know that in the beginning of the gospel, when I was departing from Macedonia, no Church communicated to me on the score of giving and receiving, but you only. For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again to supply wants. Not that I desire a gift, but I desire fruit that may abound to your account. And indeed I have it all, and now abound: I am fully supplied, having received of Epaphroditus the things sent by you, a fragrant odor, an acceptable sacrifice, well pleasing to God. And my God will supply all your wants, according to His riches, in glory, by Christ Jesus. Now, to our God and Father be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

PRAYER.

Dr. W. W. Staley led in prayer: "Our Father, who art in heaven, we honor Thee as God over all and blessed forever. From everlasting to everlasting Thou art God. Wise men from the East found Jesus and honored Him; and wise men have honored Him ever since that day. The man whose memory we honor today in word, music, and stone, was a true follower of Jesus Christ and loyal to his convictions at the risk of all that men hold dear; and he won a victory in the field of human freedom and Christian liberty for the Church of Christ. One hundred and thirty-seven years have confirmed his judgment, his faith, and his love for the cause of truth. His name may be forgotten, but his work will live as long as Christian faith and love co-operate among the followers of Jesus Christ.

"We thank Thee for his vision, his faith, his courage, and his love for truth. His position in the Church has changed the thought and attitude of believers toward one another and the Word of God. We thank Thee for his Christian manhood, his wise judgment, and his great venture in the field of Christian progress. This marble may crumble into dust, but his life will continue to grow in the Church and his memory in the minds of men till the Church will be united in faith and work.

"We thank Thee for the Christian Church and its influence over other Churches in the field of religious papers and co-education. May the Church be loved and helped to establish remain true to her traditions, her profession, and her opportunities to make the world Christian. May her spirit permeate other bodies until unity is realized among all the followers of Jesus Christ. Accept this marble expression of the Christian Church's appreciation of the life and service of James O'Kelly. May a double portion of his spirit rest upon the Church that tries to honor his memory and upon those who conceived and executed this method of fixing his name upon this sacred ground; for we ask all in the name of Jesus Christ, who gave Himself to save a lost world. Amen."

WELCOME.

President Harper, who presided, said:

"It is a matter of great sorrow to me personally that the distinguished Judge Jesse F. West, of the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of Virginia, who has been a moving spirit in bringing this occasion to its happy climax, is prevented by severe illness from being present to preside at this time. No man in our Church has been more interested in preserving our annals and in giving due emphasis to them than this distinguished jurist, who languishes today on a bed of illness. In the coming years when the passing throngs shall look upon the marker that we today unveil, they will owe a debt of gratitude to Judge West for his capable and forceful leadership in making this day possible. He and his committee, consisting of W. E. MacClenny and Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, with Dr. J. O. Atkinson as treasurer, have done well. By action of the Executive Committee of the Southern Christian Convention, I have the honor to preside as the chairman of the meeting in Judge West's absence today and to bid you one and all welcome.

"It is fitting that this marker, signaling the memory of the distinguished founder of the Christian Church in the South, should be placed upon the campus of this college. James O'Kelly did not himself have an opportunity to attend college. He was, however, a hard student, and was versed in history and the sacred Scriptures, and likewise in Latin and Greek. He was a progressive man, however, and had colleges existed in his day, as in ours, he would no doubt have enjoyed the advantages of higher education. He made splendid use of the opportunity he had and improved every passing moment.

"I say it is fitting that James O'Kelly should have a marker placed to his memory on this campus, and that had he been living at the time of the founding of this College he would have been active in its foundation. We can discern the genius of the man in the spirit of his descendants, and my remark that he would have taken part in the founding of this college had he been living in 1889, is supported by the fact that his great-great-grandson, the Hon. John M. Moring, Speaker of the House of Representatives in North Carolina, gave the first address on what is now the Elon College campus when the corner-stone was laid.

"Another great-great-grandson of James O'Kelly, Frank O'Kelly Moring, was one of the original trustees of Elon College and a member of the committee that selected the site of its location here.

"Another great-great-grandson of the distinguished leader, was Dr. W. T. Herndon, who for many years was the financial field secretary of the college and kept the institution alive by reason of his ability to solicit funds.

"A member of the original faculty was a great-great-great-granddaughter of James O'Kelly, Miss Alberta Moring, now Mrs. J. M. Roberts, Windsor, Va.

"The first lineal descendant of O'Kelly to receive an Elon degree was S. A. Holleman, who later became professor of mathematics at Elon, and also treasurer of the college.

"More than fifty of the lineal descendants in the fifth and sixth generations of James O'Kelly have been students in Elon College, and sixteen of them have received their degrees as follows: S. A. Holleman, High Point, N. C.; Dr. W. D. Harward, Windsor, Va.; Miss Jennie Herndon, deceased; Miss Irene Clements (Mrs. Genio Cardwell), North Wilksboro, N. C.; Miss Lulu York (Mrs. N. F. Brannock), Elon College, N. C.; Miss Nannie Clements (Mrs. J. R. Stephenson), Severn, N. C.; Miss Stella Clements (Mrs. G. J. Green, Morrisville, N. C.; Miss Ethel Clements (Mrs. W. N. Huff), Raleigh, N. C.; Miss Annie York (Mrs. E. A. Crawford), Mebane, N. C.; Miss Alberta Boone (Mrs. Stanley C. Harrell), Durham, N. C.; Miss Margaret Moring (Mrs. L. L. Wilkins), Durham, N. C.; Miss Charlotte Roberts, Windsor, Va.; Miss Ruth Crawford, Mebane, N. C.; D. York Brannock, Elon College, N. C.; Miss Mary Brannock, Elon College, N. C.; A. C. Stephenson, Severn, N. C.

"In addition to this, there is a great-great-great-great-granddaughter of the Rev. James O'Kelly a member of the senior class this year, Miss Alberta Roberts.

"It is fitting also that this marker should be placed on the campus of Elon because that religious liberty, that right and duty of the individual to interpret the Scriptures for himself as the Holy Spirit gives light, that open-mindedness toward spiritual values which characterized the great O'Kelly in all his efforts and labors, is the outstanding characteristic of this college, dedicated to Christian character first and always."

ADDRESSES.

Paper written by W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va., "Rev. James O'Kelly," will be found on another page of this issue of THE SUN.

The address by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell on "O'Kelly and Christian Union" will be found on page 1 of THE SUN, this issue.

Anthem, "The Sanctus," by the college choir.

President Few, of Duke University, sent a paper, which was read by Prof. Garber, as follows:

GREETINGS.

From Methodist Episcopal Church (South).

Mr. Chairman, it is a rare privilege for me to be here at this moment and speak as the representative of the Methodist Episcopal Church (South) at the unveiling of a marker in memory of James O'Kelly. One hundred years ago it is doubtful if the followers of O'Kelly and the followers of Asbury could have met together upon any common ground. At the time of death of O'Kelly, the feelings and passions were too strong to permit of such an affair. But time, the great changer, has worked its usual miracle. Today we are not thinking about the harsh statements which were made during those days when James O'Kelly led his followers out of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Both sides then were guilty of bad manners. My Church told the world in no uncertain terms what it thought of O'Kelly, and O'Kelly's followers likewise informed the world about the tyranny and oppression of Episcopal Methodism.

Yet in all that struggle there is one incident that is dear to the hearts of both the followers of O'Kelly and the followers of Asbury. On August 20, 1802, Bishop Asbury tells us in his "Journal" that he was in Winchester, Va.; and hearing that Mr. O'Kelly was ill there, he sent two of his brethren to inform O'Kelly that if he wished it he would make him a visit. O'Kelly replied he would desire a visit, and so on August 23rd Asbury made the visit, and after the meeting wrote in his journal, "We met in peace, asked of each other's welfare, talked of persons and things indifferently, prayed and parted in peace. Not a word was said of the troubles of former times. Perhaps this is the last interview we shall have upon earth." Yes, all of us here today can be proud of that statement. To think that Asbury and O'Kelly were able before death came upon them to pray and talk together and never mention a word about their former troubles. Although they represented two divergent trends of ecclesiastic polity, yet they were able to put those things aside in the face of the great Christian principles of life.

And since Asbury and O'Kelly were able to bury their grievances, are we not foolish to carry any further animosity because of the troubles that arose a century ago over the machinery of the Church. There are too many things that the followers of O'Kelly and Asbury hold in common to think of our differences. That is why I am proud to be here today to do homage to James O'Kelly, even though I belong to the Church that O'Kelly severely criticised. We quarreled over democracy and autocracy in Church government, and we separated, but in that separation both O'Kelly and Asbury retained the same fundamental principles. That is why both held to the same religious heritage.

First, both O'Kelly and Asbury were men of warm hearts. They were both followers of John Wesley. Both of our Churches were influenced by that great man Wesley, who after years of search for a vital religion he found it only after he had placed his trust alone in Jesus. And then one night he went to that small meeting in Aldersgate Street, London, and there, Wesley tells us, "I felt my heart strangely warmed, I felt I did trust Christ, Christ alone for salvation, and an assurance was given me that He had taken away my sins, even mine, and had saved me from the law of sin and death." That was the birthday of Methodism, and there is not a branch of Methodism today that has wandered away from that great principle of the warmed heart. O'Kelly had a warmed heart and Asbury had a warmed heart. And it is upon that principle that both the Christian Church and the Methodist Church can stand hand and hand today as we unveil a marker to O'Kelly.

In the next place, we had the heritage of the same fighting spirit of those early preachers. No record of history is as romantic as the record of the early circuit riders in America. For a mere pittance, those early preachers of Methodism went through this nation carrying the gospel to the poor and the rich, to the blacks and whites alike. Those early Methodist preachers burned themselves out by their zeal. For example, of the first 737 Methodist preachers to die, nearly one-third died between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-five. Two-thirds of our first 700 preachers to die died before they were able to render more than twelve years of service. When the break came between our Churches, some of those preachers followed O'Kelly and some followed Asbury. But both of our Churches have that heritage of preachers who literally burned themselves out for God. And today I bow in reverence before the memory of O'Kelly because he was with Asbury, the leader of such courageous men.

And then we have the same common heritage of a sensible theology. O'Kelly and Asbury did not quarrel because they opposed each other's theology. They were both true to the liberal views of John Wesley, who said, "I believe the merciful God regards the lives of men more than their ideas. I believe He respects the goodness of the heart more than the clearness of the head." Again he said, "When a man comes to us," we ask him, "Is thy heart right? Dost thou love and serve God?" If he says yes, Wesley said, "It is enough. I give him the right hand of fellowship." Wesley was not interested in creeds, but what did interest him was how to spread scriptural holiness over these lands. And since the day of Wesley, both of our Churches have not stressed creeds, but instead have stressed Christian experience. We have tried to make Christians out of men first, and then they can be theologians if they care to be. We have never quarreled over theology. He was one of those first preachers in America to preach religion instead of theology. And so I honor O'Kelly today because he believed in a sensible theology.

And, then, lastly, I admire O'Kelly because he stood for his convictions. O'Kelly felt that there were serious evils and tendencies in the Church, and he felt it was his business to remedy those conditions. Asbury and his followers did not see it as O'Kelly did. Our Church has felt that the changes in Church government could be made in a more gradual fashion. And today if O'Kelly were here he would perhaps not be as antagonistic to his mother Church because changes have taken place during the past hundred years. But the point is that we bow before a man who was brave enough to stand for his convictions. The world always has and will always honor such a man.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, there are many other points of pride in the life of O'Kelly; and after one hundred years we find that, even though at one time we saw so many differences between us, yet today it is hard for us to find them. Is it not wonderful that as we do honor today to James O'Kelly that those two hostile Churches of years ago can join hands together? Is it not wonderful that the followers of Asbury and the followers of O'Kelly have such a noble heritage? And so today let us not think of our differences, but instead think of that last meeting of Asbury and O'Kelly as they had prayer together there at Winchester, Va. Let us remember that even in all their troubles they still kept the same fundamental principles. And so today as the representative of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, I can join with you in reverence to the memory of O'Kelly because he was a man of the warmed heart, because he was one of those early pioneer ministers who truly had a fighting spirit for religion, because he had a sensible theology and because he was a man who was ever willing to stand for his convictions. May God bless the memory of James O'Kelly and may God bless the followers of James O'Kelly.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Foreign missions in the Christian Church had its beginning in a small way, through a sermon preached by Rev. Peter T. Klapp in Moore Union Christian Church on the third Sunday in April, 1883. He preached a sermon on that Sunday on foreign missions, showing how the heathen needed the gospel. He described the cannibals as eating their own children as we would eat turkey. That sermon made a profound impression upon the congregation; and one man, R. Womack, was so moved that he told Bro. Klapp if what he had said was true, he had only 35 cents, but he would give him that to help carry the gospel to the heathen. And he said: "If the Christian Church won't use it for them, then give it to some people who will use it." Thinking and praying over what the poor ignorant man had done and said, Klapp made up his mind that, by the help of God, this small beginning should mean foreign missions in the Christian Church.

After this he saw Revs. D. F. Jones, J. D. Wicker, and his brother, Rev. S. B. Klapp, and, with their help, he raised more than a hundred dollars before the next Conference. The Conference met that year in the new Church at Poplar Branch and adopted the following resolution offered by Bro. Klapp: "Resolved, That Monday morning, 11 o'clock, be set apart to consider the advisability of taking up the foreign mission work." D. F. Jones spent the night with Bro. Klapp, and they spent most of the night in praying and studying and drawing up a memorial to the Southern Christian Convention, asking that a Board of Foreign Missions be appointed to consider fields and applicants for the work. The Convention met in Mount Auburn Church the following May. The memorial was adopted and the Board of Foreign Missions was appointed and Rev. P. T. Klapp was made chairman of the board, with Rev. M. L. Winston, J. W. Wellons, Dr. W. T. Herndon, and A. Moring as the other members. This committee kept alive the subject from 1883 to the Mount Auburn Convention.

Revs. Z. A. Post offered himself to the foreign field, but changed his mind. Rev. D. F. Jones offered himself and was appointed by the American Christian Convention, which met in New Bedford, Mass., in 1886. Rev. H. J. Rhodes also offered himself for service on the foreign field. He and Rev. D. F. Jones, both went to Japan in 1887 under the appointment and care of the American Christian Convention. Rev. P. T. Klapp was in attendance at the New Bedford Convention and took part in the foreign mission movement, though the North and the South did not unite until the Marion, Ind., Convention, four years after, in 1890.

No doubt, the united effort in foreign missions led up to the union of the two sections of the Christian Church in 1890. Enough to say that Rev. P. T. Klapp's sermon in that little country Church, Moore Union, in April, 1883, and the 35 cents given by that man, who could neither read nor write, really started foreign missions in the Christian Church. "Little drops of water, little grains of sand," etc., and this man's gift of 35 cents is a good lesson for all, even the smallest givers.

AN EVALUATION OF REV. JAMES O'KELLY.

By Rev. J. O. ATKINSON.

"There is one thing more powerful than any army with banners," said Victor Hugo, "and that is an idea whose time has come." The Rev. James O'Kelly gave voice to an idea whose time had come. This is God's way of making men and movements in the world. The herald and forerunner of our Lord on earth was a man sent from God whose name was John. John was but a voice crying in the wilderness, releasing to the world an idea whose time had come. This is just another way of saying that true greatness and real genius consist in the ability to vocalize the unuttered needs, and make straight the path for the eternal verities of mankind.

When the Christian world was held in ecclesiastical thralldom and the darkness of medieval night had settled down over the Church, there was a man sent of God whose name was Martin Luther, to release to the world an idea whose time had come.

The tide of religious fervor ran high, but ultimately receded and lapsed to a low ebb. Once again a man came forth to voice and to proclaim the idea of free grace and never-dying love, and the figure of John Wesley looms large on the horizon. It is ever and always so. As Ralph Waldo Emerson put it, "Every great movement of time can be traced to some one individual."

Our own country, through seven years of contest and struggle at arms, had won her civil liberty. The dramatic utterance of Patrick Henry that had aroused a lethargic people to activity and to arms had been re-echoed from a hundred hard-fought battlefields. By the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown in 1781, the sovereignty of individual citizenship, even in these colonies, had been asserted and acknowledged. The spirit of civil liberty was abroad in the land. Men everywhere were declaring that mankind must be free. In 1792, when the first General Conference of the Methodist Societies of America met in Baltimore, be it remembered, Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence and the founder of the University of Virginia, was forty-nine years old, and his pen and tongue, in behalf of the sovereignty of the individual citizen, had been busy for more than twenty years. James Madison, a reserved but stalwart defender of democracy, was forty-one years old, and for twelve years had been using his tongue and pen to carry on the battle for civil liberty, whose victory had been proclaimed through the successful battles of George Washington and his Revolutionary troops. Monroe was thirty-four years old and was already in the arena battling with a keen and far-sighted mind for the rights of the individual citizen. These were some of the men of the time who were proclaiming, far and wide, that the private citizen, the individual man, the humble and even the unlettered mind, should become the unfettered mind and have the right, the full and the free right, to the pursuits of peace and the development of personality.

Is it any wonder, sirs, that in such a time the hour struck also for full religious liberty and for the sovereign right of the laymen in the pew, the individual man, who was to be governed religiously should himself have a part in the government that was to govern him.

The Methodist Church, as proclaimed and established in the land, had come a long way toward democracy from the ecclesiastical autocracy of the Anglican Church. Bear in mind, please, that the State Church—the Church of England—dominated the ecclesiastical thinking in our colonies as it dominated the ecclesiastical thinking of England. George Washington and his braves had broken the power of the British yoke in civil affairs. But no Washington had arisen to lead the way to throw off the yoke of ecclesiastical bondage. Francis Asbury, coming over from England and discovering the temper of the American colonists, and with the advice and consent of John Wesley, who was yet a member of the Anglican Church, went a long way, a very long way, from absolute Episcopacy to modified Episcopacy. It is doubtful if any man brought up in England, whose mind was under the sway and dominion of the ecclesiastical mind and teaching of England, could have gone any further in religious tolerance and Christian democracy than Francis Asbury went, be it said to his everlasting praise. But there was even yet some vestige of the divine right of the appointing power left in the mind of Asbury, and being at the head of the Methodist Church in America, he claimed the right to appoint preachers to the various congregations in the newly born States, and these preachers, when appointed, were to have no recourse whatsoever other than back to the appointing power.

Evidently, the hour had struck, and an idea which has proven more powerful than an army with banners had come to its time. The redoubtable James O'Kelly, a very capable and competent though humble and pious elder in the Methodist Church, appealed to Bishop Asbury and those about him. In the light of our day, his appeal seems very simple and hardly worth the effort to make it. It was only a plea for the right of appeal. A formidable resolution to a Conference called and presided over by Superintendent Asbury and made up of his brethren in the ministry, read as follows:

"After the bishop appoints the preachers at Conference to their several circuits, if any one thinks himself injured by the appointment he shall have the liberty to appeal to the Conference and state his objection, and if the Conference approve his objection, the bishop shall appoint him to another circuit."

After three days of debate, that resolution was lost. Verily, the last vestige of ecclesiastical tyranny had not yet been wiped out, and religious autocracy was dying hard. The whole crux of the situation and the resolution were centered in the fact that the individual who goes out to preach the Word of God must be free to proclaim that Word, must be answerable only to those to whom he preached and to Almighty God. Thank God, this is a right and a privilege granted today, but it was not tolerated then. The idea whose time had come had been released in the world, and its battle for ecclesiastical liberty has been fought through the years and still goes on fighting its way today, and as long as there are individuals on earth who want to do their own thinking and be the guardians of their own conscience, answerable only to their peers and to their God, that battle will still go on.

Not for any invidious comparison, but for the sake of clarity and comprehensive understanding, two or three obvious distinctions should be made.

One may say that here in America, the Congregational Church offered individual freedom and made the idea of individual sovereignty supreme in the local congregation—and so it did, be it said to its everlasting honor. But it had chosen for its Church a name which signified the character and the kind of its government, rather than the genius and the soul of its fellowship, and to that extent drew a distinction between itself and other Churches not so governed.

Or, again, even before O'Kelly's day, and throughout its history, the Baptist Church had stood for the sovereignty of the individual and declared that the layman as well as the minister, was a free-man and had his rights. In this particular, it had gone as far in religious liberty as the colonists had gone in civil liberty; but those going under that name had declared, and were declaring, that all who would wear their name were free to interpret a disputed and divisive teaching of the Bible on the ordinance of baptism only in one way and according to a single mode.

Come now with me to the memory of the man whose idea and utterance we this day honor. The Rev. James O'Kelly, with the small group around him, declared in Old Lebanon Church, in Surry County, Va., in 1794, that there was one name which might include all the followers of our Lord and not exclude any! And that each and every one so professing and was willing to wear that name, might interpret the Word of God according to the dictates of his own conscience. That under the inclusive name, Christian, all those might dwell in a state of spiritual union, Christian character alone being the test of fellowship in that union. James O'Kelly was the pioneer champion of real religious liberty in America.

But why is his name today not surrounded with a halo, and why is he not acclaimed as one of the outstanding heroes of all time? The answer is not far to find. James O'Kelly voiced an unuttered cry of the human heart. Of that there can be no doubt. But his plea for Christian unity was not the sound of bells ringing out from innumerable Church spires, but was leaven placed in a lump which has taken the silent working of a century to manifest its power in the Church and in the world.

There is not a Methodist Church on earth today that does not enjoy the very privilege for which O'Kelly pled in vain in his day. There isn't a Baptist Church on earth today whose membership doesn't rejoice that there are Christians in every communion and that there are souls making their way to the city of God, even though they have not conformed to some peculiar mode or dogma of a Church ordinance. There isn't a Congregational Church today whose membership doesn't rejoice that the Christian world is coming together as one. Somehow, in the name "Christian" there is that which unifies the sentiments of mankind and yet gives diversity of opinion and place for personal liberty to every individual every where. The idea that O'Kelly voiced was bigger than the man. It overshadowed him. It has to this day overshadowed even the communion that sprang up in the wake of his eloquent and passionate preaching. Moreover, he was an individual of the earth, earthly, an humble man, an unhonored man in his day, for the idea that he voiced and the truths that he uttered were not temporal, but eternal; not carnal, but spiritual. No one can properly evaluate this man, save in the light of eternity and in the merit and majesty of spiritual values.

I was reading a while ago a comparison of the life of Alexander Hamilton, the noted Federalist, the first Secretary of the Treasury in Washington's cabinet, and that of the late President Roosevelt, in his day the idol of the American people, a free lance as an individual, a symbol of modern democracy. The historian said: "How different these men, and yet how similar," for "it is only tomorrow that counts." It is tomorrow alone that counts in estimating the genius and the merit of human life and achievement. It is not what the men and women around about us are saying of us today that really counts; it is not how often we appear on the front page, while we are yet in the flesh and can use our powers or our pride that counts in the making and the evaluation of our character. What will the folks of tomorrow, tomorrow, and tomorrow, when our tongues are silent, our hands are still—what will they be saying and doing about the ideas we thought and the deeds we did in our time? Yea, verily, tomorrow, tomorrow alone counts in estimating the weight and worth of any individual.

It has been one hundred and three years since they laid the body of Rev. James O'Kelly into its native earth. A people who love to think for themselves, a people who love to cherish the very thought of liberty, when liberty was bought at a precious price, when freedom came hard and came high, a people who not only love individual liberty and freedom for themselves, but equally love to allow it to others, are met today to pay humble tribute to the memory of the man who voiced an idea whose time had come. And as long as religious liberty and true Christian democracy shall have their place in the world, as long as men shall claim the right of individual interpretation of the Word of God, and the holy privilege of thinking up to God for themselves, and, in humility, allowing God, by His grace, to think down to them, and through them to others, so long will the name of James O'Kelly live, and his idea of a spiritual democracy will find a dwelling-place in the hearts and consciences of mankind. For it was he who first made articulate, in the new-born republic of America, the idea that they who were governed in the Church should themselves have a voice in that government, and that the spiritual democracy which the Lord Christ had instituted should not perish from the earth.

PROHIBITION WEAPONS.

Facts, the invincible weapon against sophistry and fallacy, fill "The Anti-Saloon League Year Book for 1929," newly off the presses of the American Issue Publishing Company. In addition to highly valuable data covering the progress toward prohibition in each State of the Union, this book sets forth the educational phases of the campaign against alcoholism today. Besides a special discussion of this campaign, with the presentation of the work being done by the Anti-Saloon League and other agencies, there are discussions of "How governmental agencies can assist temperance education," "A summary of provisions for scientific temperance instruction and prohibition enforcement codes in the several States," and "Laws referring to scientific temperance teaching in the several States."

The attitude of President Hoover toward prohibition is set forth at considerable length.

"Prohibition and Public Health" is discussed by Dr. Haven Emerson, formerly health commissioner of New York City, in a very comprehensive contribution.

GREENSBORO HAS UNION MOVEMENT.

Grace Methodist—First Christian.

Although no official information is yet obtainable, the Daily News yesterday learned that a movement looking to union of Grace Methodist Protestant Church and the First Christian Church has been inaugurated and the prospects for its consummation appear to be bright. At a luncheon meeting at the King Cotton Hotel at noon Thursday, the idea was unanimously and enthusiastically approved by every member of the group in attendance—a very representative group from Grace Church, including a number of members of the board of stewards and other members of that congregation, together with Rev. Ronald J. Tamblin, Grace pastor.

It also is understood that Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor of the First Christian Church, like Rev. Mr. Tamblin, is heartily in favor of the consolidation. The approving resolution adopted at noon yesterday by the group from Grace Church embraced a request that a group from the First Christian Church be appointed with a view to conferring on the project with representatives from Grace Church. It is reported that Bascom T. Baynes yesterday was named as chairman of a sort of merger committee from Grace Church. Many of the details of union, it is said, would be left to the joint merger committee.

The movement had its inception in Grace Church. From representatives of that Church an invitation went forward to representatives of the First Christian Church for conversations regarding the feasibility of union of the two. It is reported that much enthusiastic sentiment for this union has been indicated among members of both congregations.

Consummation of the merger movement would mean, among other things, that the united Church would begin with a membership totaling approximately 800, about 400 from each Church. The property valuation of the two combined would be about $300,000, it is said. One Church and Sunday School plant, the one now owned by Grace, would be maintained. Very substantial economies would be effected. It is understood that the united Church would have two ministers, Rev. Mr. Tamblin and Dr. Rowland working together. In other respects it appears that much reorganization would be necessary, but unofficial information is to the effect that there would be no effort on the part of either Church to dominate the situation or to take advantage of the other in any way. Much duplication of effort would be avoided, and it is the belief of many that the united Church could and would function far more effectively than the two Churches working separately could function.—Daily News (Greensboro, Oct. 4).

O'KELLY AND CHRISTIAN UNION.

the light of the frailty of human nature. That the adoption of the name Christian was never intended to be used in a sense that would exclude other followers of our Christ, is shown by the fact that when the same name was later adopted by another distinct and separate group—a group holding as a requisite of membership a mode of baptism about which the Church has been divided for centuries—and though the use of the name by the body which later thus came to be designated has resulted in constant confusion among the members of the two bodies and the public at large, there has never been an official protest from the body which first chose to call themselves Christian.

The early records all bear unmistakable evidence that O'Kelly and those who were associated with him purposed to form a fellowship broad enough to include all followers of Jesus Christ. Nothing was farther from their minds than the adding of another to the long list of Protestant denominations. They had their hearts set upon Christian union, and not upon further Christian division. Those early leaders insisted that they were establishing a Christian fellowship, and not a denomination. In fact, there are still living those who, in the light of the first ideals, still insist that the Christian Church is not a denomination. But despite their high ideals for Christian union, for more than a century and a quarter the results of their labors did not bear the fruit for which they had constantly labored and prayed.

The wisdom of their planning, however, has been justified to this extent: wherever different denominations or men of divergent creeds and differing ecclesiastical organization have sought to formulate a basis upon which they might work together in harmony and fellowship, they have arrived at practically the same basis of agreement formulated by O'Kelly and his co-workers almost a century and a half ago. They had approximated the irreducible minimum of credal declaration, which provides the sound basis of Christian faith, and at the same time permits the free exercise of Christian liberty for the individual in which Christ hath made us free.

But a new day has dawned for Christian union. In this day all Christendom is earnestly and sincerely seeking to find the way whereby may be accomplished that union among Christ's followers for which He prayed. That which has been the dream and the ideal of the great souls throughout the history of the Christian movement is now being considered by Christian minds everywhere as offering a possibility of realization. And who can say to what extent the coming of this new day has been made possible through the fact that a small group of Christ's followers have been offering such a broad Christian fellowship to all the world.

RESPECT FOR RIGHTFUL AUTHORITY.

November 3, 1929.

(WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.)

GOLDEN TEXT: "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."—Isa. 11:9.

LESSON: Mark 12:13-17; Rom. 13:1-14; 1 Peter 2:13, 17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matt. 13:20.

Jesus' Words on Rightful Authority.

The Pharisees and the Herodians thought they had Jesus just where they wanted Him. Their question was packed with dynamite—"Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar or not?" If He said "yes," He would offend the Jews, who hated Rome and who rebelled against paying taxes to Rome. If He said "no," He would be in it sure enough, for that would smack of rebellion against Rome, and Rome suffered nothing that even hinted at rebellion or disobedience. There seemed no way out for the Master. As a matter of fact, He not only got out, but in getting out He got His critics in. Their question to Him turned as a boomerang against them—"Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." "You dwell under Roman government; you profit by Roman protection; you receive blessings from Roman administration. Therefore, you are under obligation to render tribute to Rome." Rome might not be blameless, so far as government was concerned, but Rome represented the civil authority of that day and place. Therefore, the Jew ought to have respect for the government that represented authority.

But there is a higher authority than the authority of State. A man must yield obedience to the State, but he must also yield obedience to God, from whom ultimately the authority of the State comes. "Render unto God the things that are God's." The best citizen of the State is the best citizen of the kingdom, and vice versa.

Paul's Word for Rightful Authority.

Paul said that the powers that be are ordained of God. He was not setting forth a doctrine of "the divine right of kings"; that is, in the sense that the king had a right to do what and as he pleased. Paul was insisting that kings and rulers ultimately derived their power from God. They were, after all, simply the representatives of authority. And as such representatives, they were entitled to the respect and obedience of people. But the fact that the power did not belong to them was a fact of tremendous significance. They were not to use it wrongly, or to abuse it. To have power entrusted to one involves a tremendous responsibility.

Paul states that civil power is designed not only to curb the evil, but to help the good. As a matter of fact, the law-abiding citizen has nothing to fear from the law. Indeed, the law-abiding citizen hardly needs to know law. Law is on the other hand a terror to those who do evil. They fear its penalty.

Peter's Words on Rightful Authority.

Peter simply restates what Paul had already said in regard to the matter. He goes a little further and suggests that it is in the quiet pursuit of well-doing that the Christian most eloquently witnesses for Christ. Although Christians are free from the law in one sense, they are under the law of Christ. They are to use their liberty not to do as they please, but to do as they ought.

Some Practical Teaching Points.

1. Respect for rightful authority is a fundamental, or a foundation-stone, of character.
2. Respect for rightful authority is also a foundation for social security.
3. The individual or the nation which loses respect for rightful authority is doomed.
4. Protection on the part of the State involves responsibilities to the State.
5. There usually is no conflict between a man's duties to God and to the State. When there is, his first duty is to God.
6. The man who has power over others must give an account of the way in which he uses that power.
7. A clear conscience is to be preferred above pleasure purchased by lawlessness.
8. A law should be obeyed until it is changed.
9. The man who obeys law is above law.
10. A good place to begin to teach respect for rightful authority is in the home.
11. Obedience in its highest sense is a matter of inner spirit rather than of outer mechanics.
12. To obey is better than to sacrifice.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, November 3, 1929.

TOPIC: "Making My Body a Fit Temple for God."—1 Cor. 3:16, 17; 6:19-20. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

The body is God's temple. He made it Himself, and made it for this purpose (v. 16).

What is a defiled body? Jesus teaches that we are defiled not by things we eat, but by our own thoughts (v. 17).

If our bodies are temples, we are not our own. Think! We are inhabited by God Himself. That should make us careful (v. 19).

We can glorify God in our body by doing His will, by clean living, by loving service (v. 20).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Jesus drove the money-changers out of the temple. So must we drive evil thoughts out of the temple of the heart.

A temple is for service. It is the place of the revelation of God. This is what God means us to be, that the world may see Him in us.

A diseased body is a poor servant. It is our duty to keep the body well, that it may be a perfect instrument to carry out the will of God.

A Few Illustrations.

Health is good, but health does not always make us remember God. It may make us forget Him. Teach health not for its own sake, but for an effective life.

Would you fill a Church with the fumes of a distillery? That would annul its aim. But the fellow who drinks is destroying the inner temple of the heart.

Smoking is not only a filthy habit; it is positively dangerous for young people. It lowers both physical and mental powers and decreases efficiency.

To Think About.

- How do athletics help keep the body fit?
- Why are fit bodies not always used as temples?
- How can we overcome evil thoughts?

METHODIST PASTOR'S VIEW.

(Letter to Christian Advocate.)

Dear Bro. Rowland:

It is seldom that an article from my pen appears in the Advocate, not because of any lack of interest on my part in our Conference organ, but because of the multiplicity of duties on this charge that claim my attention and consume my time. However, I feel that the event about which I am now writing is of sufficient importance to the general welfare of the kingdom to justify the time and labor necessary for this communication.

I am quite sure that all former pastors of this charge will rejoice with me in the glad tidings that Prospect Church has just enjoyed a gracious revival that has brought our people closer together and nearer to God, and has reached and saved a number of souls that formerly lived in sin.

The services were conducted by Rev. and Mrs. Sam Leonard Davis, of Norfolk, and were largely attended, not only by the members of Prospect Church and the people of the immediate vicinity, but also by visitors from various sections of the country. In fact, the Church was comfortably filled at each afternoon service, and the congregations at night were so large that the Church building would not begin to accommodate the crowds who sought admittance.

Nothing sensational was resorted to in order to attract and hold the crowds. The old-time gospel was preached and only soul-stirring gospel hymns were used, and this combination clearly demonstrated the fact that the gospel has not lost its grip on men, but to the contrary wherever Christ is held up, He will draw unsaved men to Him.

Mr. Davis presided at the piano in a masterly manner. He contributed in no small degree to the success of the meeting and was responsible in a large measure for the ever-increasing interest in the meeting. People traveled many miles nightly to enjoy his sacred music, and were held spell-bound as he forced the instrument to proclaim the glad tidings of great joy. If it is possible for any one to make a piano practically talk and proclaim the glory of God, Mr. Davis will not take second place as a master of that art.

Mrs. Davis proclaimed the simple gospel message in a modest, impressive, dignified and convincing manner. Not once did she resort to the sensational in order to attract the crowd and win converts. She did not seem to be concerned about numbers, but was desperately in earnest in holding up Christ before a ruined and lost world. She did not compromise with sin, nor seek an easy way for entrance into the kingdom of God, but insisted upon repentance and regeneration that would lead to an unconditional surrender to God which would find expression in a life of consecration and service. During her services at Prospect Church she proved herself to be a sound gospel preacher. She took her text, intelligently analyzed the same, stated her premises clearly, proved her case, drew logical conclusions from the same and made a personal application of the truth to those to whom she was speaking or to those whom she was seeking to save. She also exercised a wonderful influence over her congregation with her vocal music, and did much in this direction to prepare the soul of man for the practical gospel message that she was about to present.

Prospect Church has been greatly benefitted by the visit of these faithful gospel workers, and the prayers of our people will follow them to their future fields of labor.

Christ's challenge today is to support prohibition and prevent liquor from coming back. It will come back if we do not fight.

O'KELLY MEMORIAL PROGRAM.

It is quite fitting to do the thing that you are doing here today, and I enter most heartily into the spirit of it. The men that have set the pace of history and worked out the destiny of humanity all down the ages and up to this glad hour have been the men with ideas and convictions, and it is that sort of man that we have met here today to honor. You confer an honor upon us in permitting our Church to share with you in the spirit and in the purpose of this occasion. If I would not be thought bold, I would suggest that you have done a beautiful and brotherly deed in the act of inviting us down here and of permitting our Church to have a part with you in the performance of this hour. It seems to me, President Harper and brethren, that you are having something of a family reunion here today and that you have invited your kinsmen to come down here to share the fellowship of our kinsmen. I am very happy to be in that relationship and to bring to you the loving greetings of my ecclesiastical household. The fact is, the Methodist Protestants and Christians are so alike that we don't know whether we are you or whether you are we. As I listened to the reading of that sketch of this venerable man that you love and that you delight to honor, my mind rather ran in my knowledge of Protestant history, and I wonder if some Methodist Protestant preacher did not write that article as I identify some passages that I find in our history of these days you were recounting. We live in our ecclesiastical household and you live in your ecclesiastical household, but there is a beautiful archway that connects us, and the distance is very short between those two households; and then there is a great historical boulevard that leads us all, Methodist Episcopalians, Methodist Protestants and Christians, right down to our ancestral family home. So, we are very much alike, very much alike in spirit, very much alike in peace and in faith, and we are so much alike that some folks at least are of the opinion that we are alike in physical form. Many times I have the honor of being taken for President Harper. They come up to me and say, "Howdydo, Dr. Harper." Now, that is a little hard on Dr. Harper, but it is a great source of satisfaction to me, and I also feel honored. In fact, I feel very much like an old colored man when a young man asked him if he could change $10, and he said, "No, sir, Boss, but I sure do appreciate the compliment."

I greet you today in the name of our kingdom friendship, and I bring to you on this fitting occasion the happy fellowship and love and greeting of our family of 30,000 strong. Recently I heard that the remains of the man whom we honor today sleep down in the soil in Chatham County. I had never been able to have that report confirmed somehow, but this is what I said to some others, "If I find this is true, I am going down to that burial place." I have learned for a fact from your program today that James O'Kelly's mortal remains do sleep down there peacefully in Chatham County, and on the first opportunity I have I am going to make a pilgrimage down there to his tomb, and I am going to stand there with bowed head and so in reverence pay honor to the man who in his day stood for that which we so much need in our day—evangelism. I greet you by the token of that thing in your Church for which every Church must stand. For evangelism is that above every other thing that is essential to the power, influence and program of Jesus Christ in the world. I greet you in the name of that token that has characterized your Church from its beginning down to this glad hour, and with all my soul I strike hands and join hearts with any Church that exalts the gospel of Jesus Christ in the salvation of men. Your Church was born in a time when the flames of evangelism were glowing and your Church was born close enough to the beginning of that spirit in Methodism that characterized the great Methodist Church in its birth. And when your Church was born, the spirit of evangelism glowed upon that altar. James O'Kelly was a prominent preacher in the revivals of his day. In the name of that spirit of evangelism that has characterized your Church down to this glad hour, I bring you the greetings of my ecclesiastical household and pray that God Almighty will never let that spirit cease to glow upon the altar of your Church.

By this token, I bring you the greeting of my ecclesiastical family. You have an honorable and progressive history of nearly a century and a half in making the world a better place in which to live, in bringing men and women into the closer knowledge of saving grace. By the standards of Christian living, those services would fill many interesting volumes. If I could recount the services you have rendered to the world through the Christian principles and ideas of noble living that you have inculcated as you send out your literature broadcast throughout the earth, there would be much that would inspire you to thank God and take courage. There is just one token of service I wish to call your attention to. Here it is: This group of splendid buildings, that group of young men and young women that make up your student body of a history of forty years of religious education through which you have made your contribution to the manhood and womanhood of this State and other States—by that token, I greet you. You have had your struggles in founding this institution. You have had your struggles in maintaining this institution. They have been also a challenge to your resources and sacrifices, and you have borne these burdens in a way that is worthy of your distinguished founder and the Principles and purposes of your splendid Church. Your sons and your daughters of this institution are filling places of honor in the commercial life and in the industrial life and in the professional life, and in all the relationships of the world. The graduates of this institution have gone out and have conferred honor on this institution and honor on the Church. And by the token of that splendid service, I bring you today the greetings of the Methodist Protestant Church of the North Carolina Conference.

From Southern Christian Convention.

Greetings from the Southern Christian Convention, by D. R. Fonville, in the absence of Dr. L. E. Smith:

You know what a keen disappointment it is when all the folks have their attention centered on some one and he strikes out. I am sure some of you have been reading the recent world series of baseball games, and you know what has happened on various occasions. I am very happy, in a very informal way, to be used as pinch-hitter for so distinguished a man as the President of the Southern Christian Convention and to be able to speak for the Convention in return.

Greeting for this audience, this distinguished assembly, from the Southern Christian Convention upon this happy occasion. You have noticed this is "Home-Coming Week" throughout the State of North Carolina. I do not know that that had anything to do with the setting of the date for this occasion. At any rate, it is very fitting, since we have set aside this week throughout the State of North Carolina for home-coming.

I am sure you must have been thrilled, as I was, at the facts revealed to us in the papers read. The papers have been read depicting the life of the times of the founder of the Christian Church, the love, the devotion to a principle, and a willingness to fight for it and to maintain it at all cost.

We love and honor the founder of our Church, who in that troubled time had the courage and the prophetic vision to stand for the principle of Christian liberty, for the individual's responsibilities to God and to maintain that principle with great personal courage and conviction. I say, in reading some of his comments and his letters of some experience which he passed through, it is almost a typical reading about one of the Old Testament prophets and the characters that are depicted in the Bible. A platform broad enough for the entire Christian world to stand upon without crowding; a principle of Christian union, which we believe and fervently pray will soon come to be the principle on which His disciples, of whatever name, may unite. In the same spirit coming to us from our founder, we are willing to come as far as the ways lead, to consummate that desired end. But it must be done in the spirit of God's leadership and upon such platform as that enunciated in the early days of our Lord. We honor ourselves in honoring the memory of James O'Kelly, who has for more than a century been a beacon-light to lead the Christian world into a full realization of that prayer that "they all might be one." We are happy to have these other denominations present to meet with us and to bring their greetings, and we greet you and them in the spirit of James O'Kelly, the founder of the Christian Church.

Solo by Mrs. Grace Hall Riheldoffer, "The Voice in the Wilderness."

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, then gave an address, "An Evaluation of Rev. James O'Kelly," printed elsewhere in this issue.

RESOLUTION.

The following resolution, offered by Dr. W. W. Staley, was adopted by a rising vote of the audience:

Resolved, That the committee and this audience express, by a rising vote, our appreciation of the service of Judge J. F. West, the chairman of this committee, who is detained by affliction, and the sincere prayer that he may be restored and continue his great service as a member of the Supreme Court of the great State of Virginia and in the Christian Church.

Recessional hymn No. 448, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

Unveiling, by little Miss Dorothy Ann Harward, on the campus.

Doxology.

Benediction by Dr. G. O. Lankford.

MARKER.

The marker is of granite, Egyptian design, in front of Alamance Hall facing south, stands eleven feet high and has on it the following wording:

On the north side—

He Gave His Life
That Religious Freedom Might be Vindicated for the Individual Christian.
Erected by the Southern Christian Convention.

On the south side—

Rev. James O'Kelly
Apostle of Religious Liberty
Founder of the Christian Church.
1794.

It is a dignified and impressive memorial, and is in exact line with the front of the Whitley Memorial and Mooney Christian Education buildings, being situated equidistant between the two.

Immediately following the unveiling exercises, all visitors present from a distance were the guests of the college at a wholesome, well-prepared and inviting luncheon. It was a great day in the annals of the Christian Church.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

WHAT IS YOUR LIFE?

Lesson: 2 Peter 1:3-11.

There is a little story of a lad who got a job. His companions tried to make him drink. He repeatedly refused. Finally they said, "We will throw it on you." He replied, "As you please. I came here with a clean jacket and a clean character; you can spoil my jacket, but you cannot spoil my soul."

Prayer.—Father, we thank Thee for all mercies, and for Jesus the power of the blood unto all righteousness. Build us up in the admonition of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

TUESDAY.

HELPLESSNESS AND CHRISTIANITY.

Lesson: 1 Cor. 12.

Are you content to live so that what you do will help you only, and if it does not you are not interested? Or if you help somebody, must it be a friend, or the best man in town?

The wall you build may shelter you at least, but how about shelter for others? In the lesson we are reminded that each one possesses different gifts, but all work in the same spirit. Each one needs the help of the other's gifts, and unless this principle obtains we shall be led astray.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, make us willing to sacrifice anything that we have for Christian character and brotherly helpfulness. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

PROGRESSIVE FAITH IN GRACE.

"Thou shalt grow up before Him as a tender plant."—Isa. 53:2.

Let a man dare to live a godly Christian life, and his faith organs begin to function. God gives him a consciousness of his true self, of the power of his will, and an understanding of truth and God. Then it can be said that he grows in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord and the beauty of holiness. Every day adds something to our lives that has been wrought before. And every thought, word, deed, book, passion, ambition, prayer cut into the life the character of its kind. If it is good, it is like Christ; if bad, it is like a demon. It is thus character is built and not bestowed, and we are the builders.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we seek a faith in Thee that acquires all spiritual blessings and reaches up to the time when faith will give way to sight, and Thou wilt say, "Well done. Thou has been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many; enter, thou, into the joys of thy Lord." Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD.

"I come that ye may have life, and have it more abundantly."—John 10:10.

The greatest thing in the world is life. Scientists say that life is correspondence with things around us, and death ensues only when we are out of touch. Spiritual life is correspondence with spiritual existence. Spiritual life, therefore, is correspondence with God, and that correspondence is said to be realized in love, joy, meekness, truth, righteousness. Anything that is opposed to these things breaks that correspondence. Adam walked with God until the devil came, when he did wrong and hid himself in shame. Immediately salvation became necessary, for from that point life began its decay, and all the workings of God since then have been to save man from death. Only the abiding in Christ saves and restores that life. Thus the gospel's invitation is, "Come unto me and live," and the whole message of Christ is, "That ye might live."

Many people live on the wrong side of life. They seek pleasure, the use of their powers, selfish gains, rather than to enter into life and give. They take life, while Christ gives. The world says, "Give me." Christ says, "I give." The world is selfish; Christ is unselfish. The world exercises lordship; Christ serveth.

He lives most who acts honestly, whatever the consequences, who endeavors to make the world around him better than he found it, and who gives to others in a way to make them happy.

"We live in deeds, not years;
In thoughts, not breath;
In feelings, not in figures on the dial.
We count time by heart-throbs;
He must live who things most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Life's but a means to an end—
That end, to those who dwell in him,
He most in them:
Is God.

FRIDAY.

SHIELDS.

"The shields of earth belong to God."

There are many obstacles which commonly inhabit the adventures of life. We find them at every turn. Each one, however, may be turned into a friend. How? Each is a challenge to our powers, and the struggle to overcome them increaseth our ingenuity and our power to overcome. Exercise increaseth strength.

We need not be told that there are enemies of the soul. But for every enemy, God has furnished us a shield of protection. For insanitation, there is the shield of sanitation. For disease, there is medical science; for smallpox, there is vaccine; for typhoid, there is virus; for diphtheria, there is antitoxin; for traffic, there are regulations; for ignorance, there is education; for death, there is life. There is not an unprotected corner in all the world. There is a weapon of defense for almost everything. Every protection is an act of God for us, and there is not a one, of God or of the devil, without a blessing.

The mighty enemies of the soul are powerless if we use the shields, but to resist them the weapon of defense must be used.

Therefore, urge thyself before God in prayer and devotion, and draw from Him thy soul's defense.

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, we need strength for the day's work; we need forgiveness for each wrong; we need hope in each failure; we need fortitude for each trial, charity for every mistake, courage for every problem, wisdom for each decision. We need Thee working with us, kind and forgiving, tender and strong. Deliver every known evil and give us eternal life. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WHOSE GAME ARE YOU ROASTING?

"The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in the hunting."—Prov. 12:27.

A boy never forgets his first rabbit, for two reasons: First, it is excitement to catch a rabbit; second, it is a keen disappointment to have the rabbit, at an unguarded moment, jump out of his hands. Those two experiences one never forgets, and these two experiences are common among boys brought up on the farm. A broken jaw was a terrible price to pay for a piece of pie which another took in a moment of carelessness. A boy lost his leg under a train running after a croquet ball. That was a terrible price to pay for a ball. But prices equally fearful are paid every day in pursuit of mere trifles. In a moment of thoughtlessness, sudden emotion, careless whims, foolish desires, unguarded moments, many a man has thrown away his whole life for things that were not worth risking anything for.

A good engineer keeps his hand upon the throttle and his eye upon the rail. The cautious tourist stops, looks and listens before crossing the blind track. The greatest hero is the one who always stops before he goes too far. Guard every moment. Watch and pray. Be steadfast, immovable.

Prayer.—O God, let Thy countenance, through Jesus Christ our Lord, burst upon us and shine along our way. Make so real the things of eternity and heaven that we dare not let go, but that each moment we may live and die for Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

A CATECHISM.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God."—2 Tim. 2:15.

1. When you die, how many folks will be sorry, and what for?
2. If you had to write your own obituary, what would you write?
3. How many enemies have you, and what makes them enemies?
4. What is the best thing you ever did?
5. What is your definition of God?
6. What is the source of your greatest pleasure?
7. Do you pray? If not, why not?

Answer these and you need not be told where you are going after death.

Prayer.—O God, Most High and Holy Father, reveal ourselves to us. Reveal Thyself to us, and we will follow Thee and Thy word. Amen.

CHAPEL HILL CONSIDERS UNION.

The United Church of Chapel Hill announced recently that it would undertake another program of expansion, in which it hopes to embrace some Churches of other denominations not having a Church in Chapel Hill, such as the Friends, the Methodist Protestants, and the Disciples of Christ.

The United Church here is the result of the union of Christian and Congregational Churches here under the name of the United Church of Chapel Hill has already been approved by the directors of the conference of the Congregational Churches of the Carolinas. In the charter the purpose of the United Church is set forth as the promotion of faith in God, the aiding of human beings in development of spirit, mind and body, and aiding in the cause of the union of Churches among the followers of Christ.

The object of the new program of expansion, it is stated, is a larger Church and greater efficiency with progress toward the ideal of the Christian Church for Church union. This new undertaking of the United Church of Chapel Hill is merely a continuation of the program outlined in the provisions of its charter.

The union of the Christian and Congregational Churches brought together property valued at $32,000. The United Church building, located on Cameron Avenue, is valued at $25,000, with no indebtedness. The parsonage is rated at $7,000, with $3,500 indebtedness.—Daily News (Greensboro, Oct. 4).

The First Congregational-Christian Merger

Very Important--Very Plain

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES:

DEAR FELLOW-CHRISTIANS,—I know how to appeal to Congregationalists for funds for Christian purposes. I have been doing it for over forty years, and have secured for various purposes between one and two million dollars, more than a million of which has been for Piedmont College; and I am now appealing for two million more for the same.

But I am new to the Christian Churches. I take it for granted, however, that the same motives that move Congregational Christians, move you—our present national merger pre-supposes this. If this supposition is true, the response to this page and my letters is sure, for I am making an appeal for your own institution, fully and officially approved by your Southern Convention, which is not only worthy of your support, but must have it or die.

I Must make the Facts Very Plain

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, Ala., was organized to meet a great need and to do a great service for your Churches and, in their name, for our Country and for the Kingdom of God. You have there a great field, a fine location, and a valuable property. Your Administration Building is a noble structure, but unfinished and unheated. Your fine Girls' Dormitory is only partially ready for use. You have a campus of over forty acres, and a property worth $100,000; but nothing fully ready for use. It will take $10,000 more to make available the $100,000 worth you already have; and more to give the equipment required for a Standard Junior College.

Surely, you do not want to lose this great beginning for want of the necessary finishing! But I must tell you plainly that losing it is certain, unless vigorous and speedy steps are taken to save it. Dr. Beougher and the local Trustees have done splendidly, but they have reached the end of their rope. Other help must come, or this Institution will soon be a thing of the past.

The Situation Briefly Stated

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing; not because its work and scholarship were not good, but because a Junior College cannot have independent recognition without a finished campus and the income of $200,000 endowment. Without scholastic standing, a Junior College cannot have students, as they cannot go on for their Junior and Senior years in a standard four-year College. BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing, and could not go on. It would have no students.

President Beougher then came to me, as President of Piedmont College, to help BETHLEHEM out of impending failure. An educational merger was then made by the two Colleges, so that the four-year College could stand for and give credits for the Junior College. No financial merger was made or is in contemplation. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE is still owned and controlled by the Christian Church. Its Trustees, of their own initiative, changed its name to "THE PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE" to enable the Senior College more securely to vouch for its credits. As a result, the enrollment of the Junior College has not only been retained, but increased.

But the campus is not finished, the buildings are not ready for use, and the scholastic standing cannot be long maintained by the present method alone.

The Trustees have asked me to find the money for finishing the buildings, equipping them, and meeting other pressing needs. I cannot go to Congregationalists for this, as I am asking them for two million dollars for Piedmont Senior College, and am pressing them hard. It must come from the members of the Christian Churches—or the Junior College must close.

I have nothing to gain personally. I am donating my services and advancing expense money, because I am deeply interested in our great merger of Churches and I want to see PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, saved for the great field it occupies and the great need it supplies. The South needs education far beyond any opportunities it has.

Please send your checks quickly to President Beougher, at Wadley, Ala., or to me at Demorest, Ga., made out to PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, and they will be turned over to the Treasurer as soon as record can be made. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE cannot wait long.

Yours fraternally and sincerely,

FRANK E. JENKINS

men in our business, to move as quietly as possible. I was taken prisoner by the Tories, and robbed; I was retaken before day by Captain Peter Robertson, the great and noted Whig. I was afterwards taken prisoner by the British. The chief officer urged me to subject myself to my king, and although I was in his hands I would not yield. He offered to release me if I would solemnly promise not to let any man know, asked or not asked, where the British lay. I refused to do that. Then I was despised, and very near famished for bread. At which time I resolved through grace to hold my integrity till death. My honor, my oath, my soul were at stake; till at last, Providence offered me an opportunity, which I gladly embraced, and narrowly escaped their hands. After these things, I went (not as a prisoner) into General Rutherford's camps, and there, by the testimony of two worthy gentlemen, viz: Colonel Robertson and Colonel Owens, of Bladen, did I establish my political and civil character. I stood my draft as other men. Once my substitute faithfully served a tour. Once I marched on foot as far as I was able. Which of my accusers have done more?"

"Let us proceed to show our receipts—which of the itinerant men have paid more to support government than I have done? This is in striking contrast to the experiences of some of Rev. James O'Kelly's brethren, for Dr. Bennett, in his memorials of Methodism in Virginia, says: "When the war was brought into Virginia, many Methodists were whipped for refusing to bear arms." The spirit of liberty in James O'Kelly was too strong for him to refuse the call of patriotism, and no such ignominious punishment as the whipping-post could ever have been his portion for refusing to bear arms in behalf of freedom.

Governor Swain, of North Carolina, in communicating to Rev. Dr. Caruthers an account of the Slingsby affair and published in Caruthers' "Old North State," in 1776, relates the following: "The anecdote of the Methodist preacher, which you wished me to relate, I had from the old gentleman's own lips. Mr. O'Kelly, then a young Methodist preacher, when traveling over the country and preaching, was taken at the house of a friend or acquaintance by a small party of Tories. His horse, saddle and saddle-bags were taken from him, and he was tied to a peach tree. A party of Whigs coming up just at the time, a skirmish ensued; and although he was between the two fires, he was not hurt. Before this skirmish was ended, Colonel Slingsby came up with a larger party of men, and the Whigs were dispersed. Recognizing O'Kelly, the colonel asked him to preach for them, which he did, and drawing up his men in good order, he stood with his head uncovered during the whole of the service."

Rev. John Wesley called the Christmas conference for the American Methodists to set up a form of government for the societies. They were directed to follow the Scriptures and the primitive Church, and to stand fast in the liberty wherewith God had so strangely made them free. This was Mr. O'Kelly's idea exactly, and had that idea been carried out, no separation would have ever taken place.

This conference met in Baltimore, December 24, 1784. The representative Methodists of America were there. The time-honored plan of Wesley could no longer be carried out in America with no established Church. The conference was held with closed doors, and nothing was put to the vote. The societies were organized into the Methodist Episcopal Church of America, though Mr. O'Kelly and many others wanted the word Episcopal left out. He did his uttermost to prevent its being used, but could not prevent it.

As soon as Mr. Asbury had been ordained, the other preachers present were ordained, severally, deacons and elders, and on Sunday, January 2, 1785, Rev. James O'Kelly, with twelve others of the most experienced ministers, were ordained presiding or president elders by Dr. Thomas Coke, Rev. Francis Asbury, Rev. Richard Whatcoat, Rev. Thomas Vasey, and Rev. P. W. Otterbein. Then and there Rev. James O'Kelly ceased to be a member of the Episcopal Church, ceased to be a lay Methodist preacher, and became an elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church of America.

When the organization was completed it was a Church of ministers, by ministers and for ministers, with Rev. Francis Asbury at its head in truth, if not in form. Mr. O'Kelly, with others, did not like this form of government, but could only express their disapproval, and hope that the time would come when it could be changed to a free and untrammelled Church, and the subordinate preachers get their rights and still be Methodists.

In organizing, they departed from the New Testament principles—the equality of the brethren, the parity of the ministry—and a hierarchy was inevitable. Virtually every official from the highest to the lowest was an appointee of the bishop. Mr. O'Kelly's influence in his history was great, and when he returned home he set about to instruct the people, and show them the weaknesses of the plan of government adopted and to try to have it remedied. Rev. Francis Asbury did not like this, for he thought a layman should only pay, pray and obey.

Mr. O'Kelly is put down in Methodist history as one of the strong men in the great revival in Virginia in 1788. This lasted for about a year. It is added that he was a man of great powers of endurance, mighty in prayer, full of the Holy Ghost. He was accustomed to arise at midnight and pour out his soul to God in prayer. In 1789 and several years before he was living in Mecklenburg County, Va., on a tract of forty acres given him and his wife by his friend and admirer, Tegal Jones. He attended the Council in Baltimore, in 1789. This meeting was to try to remedy some of the things adopted in 1784. He saw that the measures applied did not suit the case and would have nothing to do with its workings when he went home. Mr. O'Kelly was working for religious liberty and Rev. Francis Asbury was riveting an autocratic, or aristocratic, form of Church government on the Methodist Church. One instance of this we give. In 1790, Bishop Asbury turned out nineteen God-fearing, pious and devoted ministers, because they would not adopt his plans, and only two voted for the adoption.

About this time, Mr. O'Kelly began to correspond with the leading Methodists, both in America and England, and made a powerful impression on them for a more liberal polity for the Church. He won over Dr. Coke and had a general conference called November 1, 1792, and today some say the Methodists owe this most important part of their polity to Rev. James O'Kelly. The purpose of this conference was to revise the plan of government for the Church. After discussing other things, on the second day, Mr. O'Kelly offered the following resolution:

"After the bishop appoints the preachers at conference to their several circuits, if any one think himself injured by the appointment he shall have the liberty to appeal to the conference and state his objections; and if the conference approve his objections, the bishop shall appoint him to another circuit. This is known as the 'Right of Appeal.'"

A long and stormy debate followed, lasting nearly a week. The vote was taken and the resolution was lost.

When the motion was lost, Revs. James O'Kel-ly, Rice Haggard, William McKendree, and others, left the conference, and Mr. O'Kelly wrote a farewell letter to the conference. English Methodists had passed a similar resolution a few months before, but Mr. O'Kelly did not know of it.

Bishop Asbury and Dr. Coke at once set about to try to reconcile Mr. O'Kelly and his associates. They were asked on what terms they would return. The answer was "Only let an injured man have an appeal." This would not be granted. Mr. O'Kelly and his friends then went home. Bishop Asbury sent messengers to him, beseeching him to return, and telling him how he valued him. The Methodist pulpits were left open to him, if he would keep quiet, and he was to receive his usual pay. This, however, was never paid.

When he was leaving Baltimore, the false report was started that he denied the doctrine of the trinity. Did space permit it, we would give evidence to show how he was slandered. His account of his conversion, and the form of ordination of his ministers show where he stood. Mr. O'Kelly and his brethren met at Reese Chapel, in Charlotte County, Va., in 1792, to look over the situation. Another meeting was soon held at the same place. At these meetings the seceders strove hard for union with the Methodists, and sent messengers with their petitions for union to Bishop Asbury. They only asked for some amendments. These were not granted. Mr. O'Kelly then drew up an humble petition, pointing out a few of the evils he saw in the government of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and prayed for union. The Methodists were not allowed to sign these petitions under pain of expulsion. The seceders next met at Piney Grove, in Chesterfield County, Va., on August 2, 1793. They now asked permission to meet the bishop in conference, that the Methodist Episcopal Church government might be examined by the Scriptures and amended according to the Holy Word. Bishop Asbury's reply to this request was: "I have no power to call such a meeting as you wish; therefore, if five hundred preachers would come on their knees before me, I would not grant it."

This was the answer received at a conference of the seceders held at the Manakin Town, in Powhatan County, Va., December 25, 1793.

Only two courses were now left—to separate or to slavishly submit. They chose the former. Here is where Rev. James O'Kelly ceased to be a Methodist presiding elder, and became the first Christian minister. Here the plans were laid for a free and untrammelled Church, with the Bible as a creed. A constitution was adopted at this conference, but was discarded at the next conference. The ministers were to be on an equality, the laymen were to have votes, and the executive business was left with the Church collectively. Another conference was called before inaugurating the new plan. They called themselves "Republican Methodists." Missionaries were sent out and did wonderful work.

The next general meeting was held August 4, 1794, in Surry County, Va. It was held with open doors, that all might see and learn. A committee of seven was appointed to devise a permanent plan of Church government. Finally they determined to lay aside every manuscript and follow the Bible as their guide, and have no government besides the Scriptures as written by the apostles. The question of a name then came up again. Rev. Rice Haggard arose, holding a copy of the New Testament in his hand, and said: "Brethren, this is a sufficient rule of faith and practice. By it we are told that the disciples were called Christians, and I move that henceforth and forever the followers of Christ be known as Christians simply." The motion was carried.

Mr. O'Kelly says: "At this conference the blessed Jesus was proclaimed King and Head of the people without one dissenting voice. The holy qualifications of an elder as laid down by St. Paul were read and explained. Then after prayer we proceeded in the following manner to ordain ministers: In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, by the authority of the Holy Scriptures, with the approbation of the Church, and with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery, we set apart this our brother to the holy office of elder in the Church of God: in the name of the Father, and the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

There were about thirty ministers with Mr. O'Kelly at the organization, prominent among them being Rev. Richard Haggard, Burwell Barrett and others. The organization completed, aggressive work was begun. O'Kelly's Chapel, in North Carolina, was organized the same year, and he began his preaching tours afresh and planted Churches in the destitute places. For something like thirty-three years he labored faithfully to establish the Christian Church in the South, and before his death he saw it well established in the minds and hearts of the people. Prior to his death, he asserted that he believed the cause of full religious liberty would finally triumph. He often held open discussions with the enemies of the new Church, for they were many. One of these was held in the old Methodist Church in Portsmouth, Va. He was a firm believer in baptism by sprinkling or pouring. At the general meeting of 1807, at Raleigh, N. C., he baptized Rev. Joseph Thomas, the "White Pilgrim," by pouring.

In Mr. O'Kelly's day the territorial limits of the Christian Church in Virginia and North Carolina were as large, if not larger, than they are today. Commencing at his home in central North Carolina, it extended from there to Norfolk, Va., then up the Chesapeake Bay shore to the neighborhood of Mt. Vernon, from there to Winchester, Va., and then it seems that there were some Churches in Southwest Virginia. From this we get an idea of the size of his circuit, for he visited all the Churches, and while riding in his gig he wrote most of his books. It is said that he was an intimate friend of Patrick Henry and Thomas Jefferson, and perhaps visited these distinguished persons on his preaching tours.

While visiting in Washington, D. C., tradition says Mr. Jefferson secured the Hall of Representatives and invited Mr. O'Kelly to preach. He did preach twice, and on the second occasion Mr. Jefferson was the most delighted man in the audience.

Bishop Asbury has this to say in regard to the last meeting with Mr. O'Kelly, who was sick near Winchester, Va., on August 23, 1803: "We met in peace and asked of each other's welfare, talked of persons and things indifferently, prayed and parted in peace. Not a word was said of the troubles of former times."

James O'Kelly is said to have preached five sermons at different places in one day and none of these bore any sameness. The strongest Methodist preachers followed in his track to win back those who had joined the Christian Church.

He was the author of several books and pamphlets. We mention the following: "An Essay on Negro Slavery," published in 1789; "The Author's Apology for Protesting Against the Methodist Episcopal Government"; "The Christian Church"; "Annotation on His Book of Discipline"; "Letters from Heaven Consulted"; "A Tract on Baptism"; "Commentaries on the Books of the New Testament"; "Hymns and Spiritual Songs Designed for the Use of the Christians," and "The Prospect Before Us," by way of an address.

Hope did not desert him in age and feebleness extreme. He gave testimony to those around him at the close of his life that he went down to the grave satisfied with the past, and peaceful and trusting with respect to the future. He had a long, white flowing beard, and continued to preach after he was unable to stand, sometimes sitting while he preached.

He passed away at his home in Chatham County, N. C., on the 16th of October, 1826, in the triumphs of a living faith, after a painful and lingering illness which he bore with Christian fortitude and manifest resignation of the will of heaven. He was in the eighty-eighth year of his age and had been a minister of the gospel over fifty years. He was buried in the family cemetery on his farm, where his remains now rest.

For twenty-eight years it seems that no shaft was erected to his memory, but in 1854 the Christians, South, erected to his memory a monument bearing this inscription: "Erected by his Christian friends to the memory of James O'Kelly, of North Carolina. The Southern champion of Christian freedom." This short sentence sums up the lifework of the organizer of the first free and untrammelled Church in America. He lived far in advance of his time, and he will be admired more and more as the years go by until his creed shall become that of the Protestant world. He served his day and generation well.

Today, 103 years after his death, we are assembled here to unveil this monument to his memory on the campus of Elon College, so that generations yet unborn may learn more of our great leader, the American citizen and patriot; the minister of God, the revivalist, the reformer, and the man with a God-given vision for the future.

OBITUARIES.

CARLTON.

Joseph W. Carlton was the son of Thomas and Nancy Carlton, and was born in King and Queen County, Va., on January 31, 1841. When he was quite young, his parents moved to the State of Missouri, and there he spent his young manhood. He chose as the companion for his life journey Miss Mary Ellen Farmer, of Halifax County, Va., and to them were born seven children, three of which, with the mother, have preceded him to that spirit world.

On his return to Virginia he settled in Halifax County, Va., and there he took a deep interest in the affairs of his community. He was a farmer, a churchman, and a man of splendid wisdom, who had the respect of all who knew him. As age crept on apace, he retired from active labor and came to Richmond, Va., in 1911. On December 11, 1914, he suffered the loss of his wife, and in 1922 his son, Edgar, was taken by death.

Mr. Carlton has been an invalid for some years, but had retained his mental faculties till the last. He was lovingly cared for by his children, but death called him and he quietly went away on the morning of October 9, 1929, leaving three sons—L. E. and P. J., of Richmond, and Herbert, of Raleigh, N. C.—and one daughter, Mrs. Nannie Parrot, of Georgia; he also leaves four sisters to mourn their loss.

The funeral was largely attended at the home in Richmond on October 10th, and was in charge of Dr. C. C. Ryan, who was assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va., and Rev. P. T. Klapp, of Elon College, N. C. Mrs. Louise Francis sang very beautifully "Jesus, Lover of My Soul."

The following ministers were in attendance: Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Rev. J. E. McCauley, Rev. O. D. Poythress, Rev. H. C. Caviness, Rev. T. F. Wright, Rev. H. G. Robertson, Rev. P. T. Klapp, Rev. H. S. Hardeastle, and Dr. J. J. Sherer, of the Lutheran Church. He sleeps in Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond, Va., to await the resurrection day.

REJUVENATING A RELIGION.—

Mustapha Kemal has within recent years been making Turkey over to suit his modern ideas. He has, by governmental edict, literally made over the habits, customs and social relationships of his people. He has decreed that the people shall adopt European modes of dress, especially forbidding the wearing of the fez. He adopted a policy of universal education for his people, demanding that the illiterates of all ages should attend school until they had acquired the rudiments of learning.

His latest move is to enforce his modernization of Turkey by the teachings of religion. And the attempt is being made to bring the teachings of Mohammed up to date. The Mohammedan religion is no longer the State religion of Turkey; but since it is the faith of the masses it has been selected as the medium through which to teach the new ideas. The student of the history of religions can trace the gradual molding of religious ideas by the thought content of the ages through which the religion has lived. It is, however, something new to see a deliberate attempt being made to revolutionize the teachings of an old and well-established religion.

The process is to send out from Angora standardized sermons which are to be read in all the mosques of the land. These sermons are not issued in the name of the government. They are sent out from the new religious headquarters of the Moslem faith. It was formerly the custom for religious messages to be delivered in Arabic, which was unintelligible to the masses of the people. The modern sermons are in Turkish, that every one may hear and understand. They are designed to teach the people the spirit of industry and thrift. It is hoped by such a method to infuse a spirit of individual initiative into a people long steeped in fatalism.

If the attempt succeeds, it will certainly be something new under the sun. The fact that the masses have long been accustomed to accept unquestioningly everything that their priests have told them will contribute to the success of the plan. And the new learning that has been made accessible to the masses will not have gone far enough to enable the people to think for themselves. The old theological schools have been closed by the government, and if the movement can weather the opposition of the old priests it will bid fair to revolutionize the religious thought of Turkey.

CHINESE CONGREGATIONALISTS LEAD.—

Chinese Congregationalists are the first to have complete native control over their Churches. There has been insistent objection raised since China has been developing a national consciousness to the administration and control of the Chinese Churches by mission boards in other lands. In fact, that has been the principal objection to Christianity in China; that it was under the dominance of foreign officials. Most of the missionaries who have made public their views have agreed that native control is desirable wherever it is practical, which means wherever the Church is sufficiently well established to direct its own affairs. There might be some who would resent this desire of the Chinese to direct the affairs of their Churches, since they are so largely dependent upon financial support from outside sources if they are to extend their field of operation. But American Protestantism should understand, appreciate and sympathize with the position of the Chinese. Dr. Herbert C. Rugg comments thus upon the action of the Congregationalists: "The transfer of the control of all mission activities to the Chinese is in accordance with the declared policy of the American Board for all its missions, and has been the goal for the work in North China since it was started in 1860. The arrangement for entire Chinese control is also said to be in accordance with the findings of the International Missionary Council at its meeting in Jerusalem last year.

"The missionaries, under their new status, are to serve on a basis of complete equality with their Chinese associates. They are expected to become members of a local Chinese Church, and will receive their assignments from the Chinese board. All questions of location, transfer, furlough and resignation are to be settled by the Chinese board, in consultation with the missionary concerned. The missionaries are to receive their first appointments to China and to return after a furlough only upon invitation from the Chinese board. Their direct allegiance while in China is to be to the Chinese Churches, because experience teaches 'the importance of avoiding dual control.'

"The American missionaries who will be under the Chinese board number 117. They comprise twenty-five ordained men, five men physicians, one woman physician, eleven other men, thirty-six wives, and thirty-nine single women. The Chinese force comprises fourteen ordained men, 291 teachers, and 266 evangelistic workers, including eighty-seven women."

INDUSTRIAL STRIFE.—

Much has been written about the industrial strife which has broken out in the mills of North Carolina. It is indeed a most deplorable situation. Theorists can find in it that which will prove their contentions. Propagandists will find in it the opportunity to stir up agitation and strife. But we have seen nothing that to our minds so exactly portrays the situation as the prayer that is reported to have been made by Preacher Cicero Queens at the funeral of some of those who were killed in the recent disorder and fighting at Marion. Preacher Queens said: "O God, I have baptized a heap of people and I have been to a heap of funerals, but this is the saddest day this old man ever saw. The devil has got into the people. O God, what will become of the world if we don't get the devil out of it? Help us to drive him away from here. Amen."

From the standpoint of the Church, this old preacher has voiced a challenge that should ring constantly in the heart of every individual who is a professed follower of Jesus Christ until all of our Churches are moved to do something about the situation. It is indeed a time for prayer. It is a time for deep heart-searchings. It may come as a sort of shock to some of us, that sentence: "The devil has got into our people." You may call it what you will, but the situation as the preacher summed it up is the situation that the Churches of the South has got to face.

We must broaden our conception of the work of the Church until it is wide enough to take in Christ's conception of the kingdom of heaven. Abraham Lincoln shook our nation to its foundations when he declared that "A country cannot endure half slave and half free." It is time for the Churches to awake to the realization that a country cannot endure that is only half Christian. We have been thinking too much about the future welfare and destiny of the Church and not enough about the welfare and future destiny of a world, which the Church has been called to save. It is just as true of a Church as it is of an individual, that he who would save his life shall lose it, and it is equally as true that the Church which would lose its life for Christ's sake shall find it.

The murders and bloodshed are a disgrace to the fair name of the South. They are an index of the fact that we have not been planning big enough plans in the Church. We have not been practicing the teachings of Christ on a sufficiently wide scale. We have not been praying and working for the kingdom, as Christ taught us to work and pray. The day is by no means lost if we can read the signs of the times and have the faith to face the situation in the light of Christ's gospel. Unless we can drive out the devil and enthrone the Lord Jesus Christ in the hearts of the people of the South, we have had only a foretaste of that which we may expect in the future. These are times that call for a united Christendom. These are times that call for a boundless faith. These are times that call for a wholehearted allegiance to the Christian teachings of love and brotherhood. These are times that call for a heroic spirit of self-sacrifice. Is the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ equal to the demands of such a day as this? The arm of the Lord is not shortened. The power of love has not failed. The world is only waiting for the gospel of love to go into action.

TELEGRAM.

Suffolk, Va., Oct. 28, 1929.

Richmond, Va.

Regret of all, barn of Orphanage, Elon College, burned. Lost all winter feed for stock. Baracca Class, Suffolk Church, raised five hundred dollars yesterday for rebuilding barn. We appeal to all Churches and denominations for help at this time. Send contributions direct to Christian Orphanage. Superintendent Johnston ill from operation, Burlington Hospital.

J. M. DARDEN,
Chairman Board of Trustees.

We present a report from our colored brethren, made to the General Convention at Piqua, Ohio, last week, that we think carries much information to many SUN readers. How many of us knew, for instance, that our negro Christian Church membership numbered 40,000?

THE SUN editor was last week and this in attendance at the General Convention of the Christian Church, Piqua, Ohio, and in the work and program of that great gathering found little time, and less energy, for the editorial work on this issue of THE SUN. Next week he and others will tell more of this epoch-making Convention.

A special car on the Norfolk and Western Railroad from Norfolk and Lynchburg carried a delegation of eighteen from Virginia and North Carolina to the annual Convention at Piqua, Ohio, last week, and others from the South went by other routes and several in automobiles. The South was well represented, as were other parts of our Church in the notable Convention.

Dr. Daniel A. Poling has resigned the pastorate of the Marble Collegiate Dutch Reformed Church, on Fifth Avenue at Twenty-ninth Street, New York City, effective January 1, 1930, in order to give more of his time and strength to the young people's movement throughout the world. His duties as president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union and associated agencies, as successor to Dr. Francis E. Clark, have laid increasing duties upon him with the continuing growth of the Christian Endeavor movement. He is also leader of the National Youth Radio Conference and speaks to millions of young people each Sunday over the coast-to-coast hook-up of the National Broadcasting Company on the Blue Network. His other relationships include editor-in-chief of the Christian Herald, president of the General Synod of the Reformed Church of America, and director of the J. C. Penney Foundation, a philanthropic institution.

It is learned with sorrow that Judge J. F. West, of the Supreme Court of Virginia, passed away on the afternoon of October 25th, at his home in Waverly, Va., after an illness lasting several weeks. Judge West had been for many years active and influential in the councils of the Christian Church, of which he was a life-long member, and his presence and wisdom at our Conferences and Conventions will be sorely missed. He was chairman of the Committee on Memorial that brought about the erection and unveiling of the granite memorial on the campus at Elon College October 16th, but was too feeble to ever learn of the consummation of his good work in this behalf. Judge West was for many years superintendent of the Waverly Christian Sunday School, to which he gave loyal devotion and efficient and unstinted service. For many years, before being elevated by his State to the Supreme Court bench, he was judge in the circuit court and was held in high esteem throughout the Old Dominion as an able jurist, one who dealt out justice with mercy, according to the even tenor of the law. A lawyer of talent and ability, a judge capable, competent and esteemed, a Christian statesman and gentleman, he served well his country, his Church, and his God.

WADLEY, ALA.

It was my very great privilege to attend the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference, held recently at Lanett, Ala. This was indeed a very fine meeting. Churches all made very good reports, with some increase in membership. A most beautiful spirit was manifested throughout the Conference, and some constructive work was undertaken with the co-operation of our Alabama brethren, to-wit: the election of a general field worker for both Conferences for next year, whose duty it will be to raise the standard of efficiency among the Churches we already have and to organize new work as opportunity may present itself. Rev. J. D. Dollar was elected president of the Conference. The prospects are flattering for this Conference for next year.

Just last week the Alabama Conference met at Wadley, Ala., with a full attendance, and all business was transacted in harmony and fellowship, with every Church represented and reports better than we anticipated. The reports show a gain of about sixty in membership, and the Conference adopted the joint resolution with the Georgia and Alabama Conference as regards the general field worker.

The Communion service on the first day was very impressive, at the close of which an offering was taken for Bro. H. W. Elder amounting to $37.96. Bro. Elder's Conference gave him $50. God spare his life and bless his soul.

All in all, a great meeting was held, and a year of progress was made, but we must do larger and better things for the kingdom next year. Other details will be reported later. Suffice to say that there are three great interests of our Church to be conserved under our program for next year—education, missions and evangelism. These should be well cared for by our general field worker, and should this be faithfully done, our Church can go forward and our pastors will be better paid and every other interest will be increased and God will surely give us a good year.

These and all other plans are to be worked out by the joint board of the two Conferences. "And now, my brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of His grace, which is able to build you up and to give you a place among all them who are sanctified in Jesus Christ," and as your humble field worker, I do covet an interest in your prayers and the co-operation of every minister and pastor in the two Conferences.

G. D. HUNT,
President Alabama Conference.

CHRISTIANS AGREE TO MERGER.

Piqua, Oct. 26.—A union of Congregationalist and Christian groups of the Christian Church of America was effected yesterday afternoon at the General Convention of the Christian Church being held in this city. The merger was formally approved and acknowledged by several hundred delegates, who had gathered here from all parts of the United States and Canada and from several foreign countries. The unionization was unanimously approved, and the change will affect more than 1,125,000 persons.

The vote accepting the merger was made by roll call of the delegates, and this action followed an address given by Rev. Raymond Clark, pastor of the First Christian Church of this city. In his address, Rev. Clark, who paved the way for the merger, said in part: "We have come at last to one of those far-off divine events. It is this for which we have so long prayed and looked forward to. To most of us, it seemed that it would never come, and now that the hour is at hand we more fully comprehend and realize its significance.

"A few of the close followers of our Lord desired to see His glory, and when they beheld Him in His glory at the Mount of Transfiguration they were dazed by the experience. So now, most of us, when God is revealing His will to us and answering our prayers in some large way, it seems almost impossible that realization is about to come and our minds are dazed at the hope.

"There has been no apparent selfishness on the part of either Church group to want to drag into our merger plans that are not vital to human life, and if such does come in it, it is merely because our human minds have not been able to see the uselessness of it.

"The full plans submitted by our commission and recommended to us here today by our groups on Christian unity offer opportunities for universal loyalty to all people. We do not know the full details of what is to occur and the merger does not clear everything for the future, but it will, no doubt, set us off in the right direction. The plan, thank God, leaves room for adventure and heroic endeavor."

After Rev. Clark had completed his address, the vote was taken and the merger officially confirmed. The Congregationalist officials were entertained at a luncheon Friday noon at the Church by the officers of the General Convention.

The plan of the proposed union of the Congregational and Christian Churches was worked out by the commission on interdenominational relations of the Congregational Churches and the commission on Christian unity of the Christian Church, and was adopted June 3, 1929, by the National Council of Congregational Churches, in Detroit.—Dayton (Ohio) Daily News.

STRENGTH FOR THE EVERY-DAY THINGS OF LIFE.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

"They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; . . . they shall walk, and not faint."—Isa. 40:31.

These words were spoken to discouraged and dejected men. They were meant for the exiles in Babylon, and for the Jews who had been left in Judah, and in both cases they were people who were tired of the burdens of life. These words sounded a note of comfort and courage. In the verses leading up to the words of the text, the prophet has been giving a lofty conception of his Lord. He has been telling of His omnipotence as it was revealed in His creative power, and by His control of all the processes of both history and nature. Kings and nations are but tools in His hand. He predicts and governs the march of history. The prophet also contrasts His Lord with the impotent idols manufactured by men's hands and worshiped in pathetic ignorance by them. He then asserts that to those who wait upon the Lord there shall come a renewal of strength. In spite of His majesty and power, the Lord is tender and gracious, patient and loving even as a shepherd.

It would appear at first that the text in full—only a part of the thirty-first verse is given—is in the form of an anti-climax. Instead of reading, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings like eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint," it would seem that the logical order would be, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall walk and not faint, they shall run and not be weary, they shall mount up with wings like eagles." Walking, running, flying—that is the climactic order, it would seem. But, consciously or unconsciously, the prophet was putting the things as it should be. There is, as a matter of fact, a great and helpful truth here for busy, bustling, burdened people. Three things need to be said.

1. Life is made up of every-day things. For the most of us, most of the time, life is made up of every-day things. Into our lives occasionally there may come events or experiences, moments of exaltation, when we feel as if we were mounting up like eagles. Or again, life's ordinary pace may be quickened so that we may feel that we are running. But for the most of life is, after all, a matter of walking. It is pretty much a matter of plodding along in the even tenor of our way, without much of the glamour or the romance that is so often pictured as being an integral part of life. One day is pretty much like another day. He who lives an ordinary life must learn to walk and faint not, for life is made up of just that.

Illustrations of this principle are legion. In the realm of life as a foreign missionary or a minister, the exalted experiences of the call and the glorious days of preparation are inevitably followed by a round of activities, many of them common-place and in some cases hum-drum. The same principle applies to professional and business life, to school life, to youth, to marriage, to home-making, to every walk of life. And it applies with just as much point to the realm of the religious life. Being a Christian is not so much a matter of an exalted experience, such as Paul had on the road to Damascus, but of fighting temptations, overcoming weaknesses, entering into service, practicing self-control and self-denial in the every-day things of life. Teaching a Sunday School class is, after all, a rather taxing thing. Both in personal religious life and in group religious service we eventually come back to every-day things of life—we have to slow down to a walk.

2. The every-day things of life demand strength not of ourselves. The prophet, to make this point effective, said, "Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall"—they were the ones who ought to be able to keep strong. And his statement finds tragic confirmation in life. The highway of life is lined on both sides and many deep with those who are tired and worn and weary; those who did not have the strength for the every-day things of life. Multitudes are whipped inside, which is the only whipping that can really hurt a man. The every-day things of life have taken a heavy toll in all walks and realms of life.

There are, of course, those who have a larger measure of strength, who manage to get along in some way or other. Facing the demands of daily living, they clench their fists, grit their teeth, grin or groan and bear it, and, as the English say, "muddle through." But this plan has its painful limitations. It makes all of life a drudgery, and it is so unnecessary. Surely there must be a better way. Surely there must be some outside help that is available to those who need it and seek it. Life is a mockery and God is unkind unless there is just this help which men need.

3. Strength not of ourselves for every-day things comes to those who wait upon the Lord. The promise is here. "He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might He increaseth strength. The prerequisite is also here. "They that wait upon the Lord." This strength is not for every body. God cannot force His blessings upon those who are open to receive them. But to those who wait upon the Lord, to those who go to the house of God with open minds and open hearts, or to those who draw apart and in secret wait upon the Lord, there comes a renewal of strength. A loving Father gives power to bear any trouble that must be borne, and to do any duty that must be done. A host which no man can number can testify to this out of their own experience.

Is there one who reads this message who feels the need of strength for the every-day things of life? Let him wait upon the Lord, and he shall renew his strength, for our God giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might He increaseth strength. Yea, they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings like eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint. Wait on the Lord, be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thine heart. Wait, I say, on the Lord.

A DAY WITH MEBANE CHURCH.

The second Sunday in October was a full day for the Mebane Christian Church. Rev. A. P. Hurst went along with me to assist in the services. After a very interesting session of Sunday School, the writer preached on the subject, "Stephen the Deacon." Following the sermon, and with the assistance of Rev. Hurst, we proceeded to the ordination of Deacon-Elect T. C. Farrell. Immediately following this service, Bro. Hurst and the writer, assisted by Deacons T. C. Farrell and J. O. Fowler and two deacons from the Presbyterian Church, one of whom was a brother to Deacon T. C. Farrell, administered the Communion to those in attendance. In the afternoon Rev. Hurst preached a very helpful and true gospel sermon from John 3:14, "As Moses Lifted up the Serpent in the Wilderness."

A short business session was held after this service. Delegates were elected to Conference and the finances of the Church were reported in good shape.

As the writer will conclude his services with this Church at the close of the Conference year, having filled out the unexpired term of Rev. H. G. Robertson, the Church took certain definite action toward securing a pastor for the ensuing year.

The Church report showed a present membership of only thirty-three, yet they are a faithful and loyal little band, and it was a joyous day spent with them. I was informed that there are twenty-five direct descendants of James O'Kelly in this Church and Sunday School, and eighteen of them were present at the morning service. Several of them were in attendance at the unveiling of O'Kelly's Monument at Elon College, on October 16th.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Our Conference was a decided success from start to finish. All our Churches were represented except New Home and Macedonia. They have discontinued. We dropped them from our roll. We had an increase in membership of nearly a hundred the past year. Our Conference apportionments came up about $200 short because of financial strain. Our pastors' salaries were not as much as usual (with some exceptions). How that we shall "go forward."

ever, we have faith to start on a new year and We had one candidate for license to preach in the person of W. N. Archer, age about forty-five.

Our Conference and the Georgia and Alabama Conference are working together, securing funds to put a man in the field for full-time work for the best interest of the work in general.

We had for our guests the faculty and student body of Piedmont Junior College the morning of the second day. They favored us with special music. The college holds a greater interest in our two Conferences than ever before. In the midst of gloom, things really look prosperous to me.

The next session of Conference will meet with Noon Day. We paid more than twice as much to missions as we ever did, and all rejoice that we had a small part in helping to reach the goal.

There was a publicity committee appointed at Conference. I guess a report will be made by them soon. The same officers as last year were re-elected.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference will be held at the Franklin Christian Church on Tuesday, November 5th. A large representation from each Church and society is most earnestly desired. Mrs. John Ferguson, president of the National Commission of Protestant Church Women, comes as a special guest of the Conference. Pastors are urged to attend, and to give notice of time and place of meeting.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

UNION OF CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

THE SUN presents in full this week the plan of union of the Congregational and Christian Churches, as now adopted by both national bodies. Heretofore, these two bodies have borne the names "The General Convention of the Christian Church" and "The National Council of Congregational Churches." By vote of the latter at Detroit, June 3rd, and now the former, at Piqua, Ohio, October 25th, the two bodies are to become one under the name of the General Council of the Congregational and Christian Churches, (unincorporated).

It will be seen from a reading of the plan of union now adopted, much detail is left to be worked out in future. It is believed these problems can be met and solved as they arise. About this much, and only this so far, is agreed upon, that the two national bodies of the Churches will work as one and become one so far as the machinery of these bodies is concerned. All integral groups of the bodies—regional conventions, conferences, local Churches—are left to their own autonomy, as in the past.

The national bodies of the two communions have blazed the way and pointed out methods and plans whereby all local units may become identified in polity, spirit and program; but it has left those units free to adopt those methods and plans as they may through experience and history deem wise.

Friday, October 25, 1929, will go down in history as a memorable day. It was glorious indeed to be present with 500 or more delegates and representatives from Christian Conferences and Conventions throughout the United States and Canada registered their unanimous approval of every item, item by item, of the plan as presented elsewhere in THE SUN. There were present also, and deeply interested in the vote and proceedings, some twenty or more officials of the Congregational Churches. The following was carried by the Associated Press to the daily press throughout the whole country on October 26th:

"The proposed merger of the National Council of Congregational Churches and the General Convention of the Christian Church, bringing 1,800,000 members of the two denominations into a single organization, was effected here Friday when delegates of the Christian Church unanimously approved the action.

"The Christian Convention voted on a plan which had been offered by the Congregationalists at their national meeting in Detroit last May, and this was adopted with only minor changes.

"The action was regarded by many prominent clergymen gathered here as the first great step in the direction of Christian unity. The combined denominations will be known as the general council of Congregational and Christian Churches and an invitation will be extended to other evangelical bodies to join the union.

"The merger permits members of both denominations to retain their respective beliefs and to develop their own forms of expression, but the general council will perform on behalf of both Churches the various functions formerly exercised by both governing bodies.

"The union will be completed as soon as necessary legal steps can be taken. It is the plan during the first four years to have the moderator of the Congregationalists and the president of the Christian Convention serve co-ordinately in directing affairs of the organization. Rev. Frank G. Coffin, of Columbus, is president of the general convention, and Fred B. Smith, of White Plains, N. Y., is moderator of the National Council.

"The Christians originally were scheduled to elect officers for the year Friday, but the election was postponed in anticipation of a favorable vote on the merger." J. O. A.

KINGDOM LOYALTY.

A kingdom is a realm, with a king as its head. At Sinai, God spoke to the people through Moses, and said: "Ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation." John said: "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Jesus said: "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence." If there is any difference between the kingdom of God and the kingdom of heaven, it must be the difference between the Old and New Dispensations. The Jewish kingdom and the Messianic kingdom are one, for Jesus came to fulfill, not to destroy. The Christian dispensation grew out of the Jewish dispensation, and the Church is a part of this kingdom over which Christ rules. "The kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever."

Kingdom loyalty is devoted allegiance to the kingdom of God in all of its interests. Loyalty to the United States is loyalty to all the States, all the laws, and all the people. It is no small matter to be loyal to the kingdom of God, as that embraces all divine and human interests and obligations. To be a Christian is the greatest thing in the world.

1. Loyalty to God. (a) As Creator: "All things were made by Him; and without Him was not anything made that was made." He made man in His own image and crowned him with glory and honor. (b) As Saviour, through Jesus Christ who is King of kings and Lord of Lords. Jesus is Head of the Church, and loyalty to Him is loyalty to the kingdom. (c) As Holy Spirit, who inspired the writers of the Bible and reveals the Scriptures to men so that they may know their spiritual obligations in all relations of life. He will take the things of Christ and show them unto us. These three lines of loyalty to God, to Jesus Christ, and to the Holy Spirit are all inward, spiritual, and personal. Man cannot deceive God, it is fatal to deceive himself, and wrong to deceive others. Here is the foundation to character, and the hope of eternal life.

2. Loyalty to the Church. (a) Its mission, which is missionary. The love of God and the command of Jesus prove this. God so loved the world, and Jesus said, the field is the world. (b) Its institutions, publications, educational and benevolent. Disloyalty to the institutions of the Church is disloyalty to the kingdom, for they are all agencies of the kingdom. (c) The Sunday School, its literature, social welfare work, deserve the loyal support of members of the Church. It is a great privilege to be a member of the Church and, like good soldiers, to wear the whole armor of God and to fight the good fight of faith.

3. Loyalty to the local Church. (a) To its pastor; and it is equally important for the pastor to be loyal to the members. Such relationship between pastor and members is sacred and essential to kingdom loyalty. This relation is mutual and binding, and where it is cordial and permanent, the local Church will be loyal to God and influential among men. (b) Its organization: Its organization is based on its creed, its confession, or its principles, and tied up to the kingdom; if separate, it is not a New Testament Church. One need not be a member of all the societies in his Church, but should be friendly to all of them, its enterprises. The Sunday School, missionary societies, aid societies, all working for the kingdom, deserve the confidence and the encouragement to make them succeed in doing work for the Lord. (c) Its financial support for local expenses and Conference and Convention needs, and such special calls as local conditions require. The home cannot exist without money, the State cannot go without money, and the Church cannot grow without money. W. W. S.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS WILL CELEBRATE.

In June of 1930, Sunday Schools throughout the world will be called upon to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the birth and beginning of this now world-wide institution. There is to be among other events an international assembly at Toronto, Canada, during which assembly a great bronze statue of Robert Raikes, founder of the Sunday School movement, will be dedicated. Another great event celebrating the 150th anniversary of Sunday Schools will be the dedication of a similar statue at Gloucester, England, and near the site of the now world famous dwelling in which Robert Raikes held the first Sunday School. Little did this humble, modest man of God realize that he embodied and gave to the world an idea that was to sweep the face of the earth, even as a flame sweeps a great desert in a mighty conflagration.

For the first fifty years after Raikes gathered the first youths into a Sunday School to teach them spelling and reading, so that they might be able to read the Bible, the growth of the institution that began through his efforts was very slow and unpromising. But the last one hundred years has witnessed a marvelous growth, the membership of Sunday Schools in Protestant Churches throughout the world now numbering more than thirty million. Surely this army that goes forth each Sabbath quietly and silently under the banner of the cross is mightier than an army with guns and swords of steel.

Sunday Schools should even now, as many are already doing, begin to increase their numbers and make ready for the celebration in June, 1930, of one of the great epochal events of all time.

PLAN OF UNION.

As Adopted by the National Council of Congregational Churches, June 3, 1929, and the General Convention of the Christian Church at Piqua, Ohio, October 25, 1929.

I. That the National Council of the Congregational Churches and the General Convention of the Christian Church be united under the title of the General Council of the Congregational and Christian Churches (unincorporated), looking toward complete union so soon as necessary legal steps can be taken, both national bodies to continue for the time being their organizations to meet legal requirements, while constituting the membership of the general organization. (Invitation is extended to other evangelical bodies to join this union. In the event of favorable action by one or more national bodies, it is agreed that a new and more inclusive name shall be chosen for the General Council.)

That the basis of this new relation shall be the recognition by each group that the other group is constituted of the followers of Jesus Christ. Each individual Church and each group of Churches shall be free to retain and develop its own form of expression. Finding in the Bible the supreme rule of faith and life, but recognizing that there is wide room for differences of interpretation among equally good Christians, the union shall be conditioned upon the acceptance of Christianity as primarily a way of life, and not upon uniformity of theological opinion or any uniform practice of ordinances.

The purpose of the General Council shall be to perform on behalf of the united Churches the various functions heretofore performed by the National Council for the Congregational Churches and the General Convention for the Christian Churches, it being understood that where technical legal questions may be involved the action of the separate bodies shall be secured.

That for the first four years the moderator of the National Council and the President of the General Convention shall be co-ordinate presiding officers, their service to be arranged by mutual agreement; that for the time being the Secretary of the National Council and the Secretary of the General Convention, while continuing their respective positions, shall be secretaries of the General Council under such division of responsibility as shall be determined by the General Council or its Executive Committee.

That regular meetings of the General Council be held biennially in the spring or early summer of odd-numbered years, and that these be so arranged as that necessary business meetings of the National Council and of the General Convention may be held for legal action and other necessary business.

II. That pending possible mergers among themselves, the larger units (i. e., the five regional and Afro-Christian Conventions, the Congregational "State" Conferences), and after merger the united bodies shall severally be represented in the General Council by two delegates each, and each such Convention or Conference having Churches whose aggregate membership is more than ten thousand shall be entitled to elect two additional delegates for each additional ten thousand members or major fraction thereof.

III. That pending merger, local units (i. e., Christian conferences and Congregational district associations), and after merger the united bodies, be represented in the General Council on the basis of one delegate for every ten Churches or major fraction thereof.

IV. That heads of Church colleges and seminaries recognized by the General Council as affiliated with or co-operating with it, or with either communion, the National General Secretaries, as defined in the by-laws, and editors of national Church periodicals, together with the officers of the general national body, be members ex-officio of the General Council.

V. That in order to conserve legal interests, the charter of the General Convention of the Christian Church and that of the Corporation for the National Council of Congregational Churches be continued in force unless and until it becomes possible and seems wise to combine them.

VI. That the voluntary declaration of the representatives of each communion to the effect that they and their work ought not to be a charge on the financial resources of the other be recognized as the general principle to govern in adjustment of financial obligations; that therefore for the time being the miscellaneous expenses of the General Council shall be prorated on the basis of the relative membership of the two denominations, and that the expenses incident to continuing any officer, service or missionary enterprise now carried by either denomination, together with present indebtedness, shall be met from the resources of that fellowship. Here, however, the fact is taken into account that there may be natural shiftings of constituency from one denomination to the other, as also changes in the work to be done which will call for corresponding adjustments. It is recognized, however, that where the arrangement at the start is equitable the combined constituency can be trusted faithfully to care for the combined work without fear of discrimination. It is contemplated that during the period of transition, savings in overhead expense are not to be expected, but that gradually such savings will result. It is hoped, however, that all will think of such economies as making more kingdom building possible rather than as lessening the challenge to the grace of giving.

VII. That the promotion of income for missionary and educational work be committed to a Commission on Missions of the General Council, consisting of the members of the jointly elected official administrative mission boards (that is, for the Congregational Churches, the Prudential Committee of the American Board and the Directors of the Home Board), nine members-at-large (of whom at least one shall be from the Christian constituency) and the two presiding officers and the two secretaries of the General Council ex-officio.

VIII. That the functions of the General Council comparable to those now performed by the Executive Committee of the National Council, and of the General Convention not otherwise provided for, be committed to an Executive Committee of the General Council composed of the members of the Executive Committee of the National Council (14 members), together with the President, Secretary and Treasurer of the General Convention.

IX. That the functions of the Board of Missions of the Christian Convention in the foreign field and those of the Prudential Committee of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions be discharged by one body composed of identical members until such time as the constituent corporations may be legally merged.

X. That the functions of the Board of Missions in the home field, the Board of Christian Education and the Board of Publications of the General Convention, and those of the group of societies known as the Congregational Home Boards be discharged by one body composed of identical members until such time as the constituent corporations may be legally merged.

XI. It is conceived that the provisions of IX and X shall be worked out substantially as follows:

1. Until corporate merger can be effected, the Board of Missions of the Christian Church shall by necessary action constitute the Prudential Committee of the American Board its agent for the conduct of foreign mission work, exclusive of that in Porto Rico, and the American Board shall elect at least four members from the Christian constituency as full voting members of its Prudential Committee in the class of members at large.

2. That the Board of Missions, the Board of Christian Education, and the Board of Publication of the Christian Churches shall by necessary action constitute the Board of Directors of the Congregational Home Boards, with its several administrative committees of the Home Board be elected from the Christian constituency, also two members of the Foundation for Education.

3. That missionary secretaries shall be appointed by the General Convention in such number as it may deem needful.

4. That the work of the Board of Missions of the Christian Convention in Porto Rico and at Franklinton College be transferred to the administrative committee serving the American Missionary Association, together with the resources for the maintenance of the same.

5. That agreeably with present practice, responsibility for the work of home and foreign missions and Church extension of the Afro-Christian Convention continue with that convention, its successor or successors, on the principle of self-supporting states among the Congregational Churches.

XII. That the Christian Convention request the Administrative Committee on Ministerial Relief to further the cause of ministerial relief among the Christian Churches, with a view to bringing its ministry to a basis similar to that of the Congregational Churches and in the hope of ultimate oneness of this work. Further: That whereas the Christian Churches now give a certain amount of ministerial aid through local and regional conferences and understanding it to be the desire of the Christian Churches to bring about as soon as possible national administration of ministerial aid, and that the Christian Churches will welcome the leadership of the administrative committee on ministerial relief in perfecting an adequate plan for the aid of their own aged and retired ministers until such time as the merger shall become more nearly complete; and further,

That inasmuch as the annuity fund for Congregational ministers seems to be legally forbidden to admit as members any except "Congregational" ministers, a movement be put on foot among the Christian Churches to develop plans under which benefits comparable to those available for Congregational ministers shall be provided for ministers of the Christian Churches, utilizing the experience and good offices of the Congregational Ministerial Boards.

XIII. That of necessity trust funds and moneys given for specific purposes must be administered strictly in accordance with the terms of trusts and the intention of donors so far as expressed. And further,

That until complete unity can be worked out, all other moneys contributed by either group of Churches shall be administered for the established work of those Churches unless otherwise determined by the donors.

XIV. That the present status of educational institutions, with reference to their denominational bodies, be preserved, and that where mergers of educational institutions are possible they be encouraged.

XV. That the General Council name a commission on evangelism and devotional life to consist of the members of the Commission on Evangelism of the National Council, twenty-four in number,

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Henry Thomas West was born February 22, 1833, and married Susan Thomas Cox January 21, 1853, both of Sussex County, Va. They were faithful members of Spring Hill Christian Church, in Sussex County, and established a Christian home and reared a family, trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. There were nine children, four of whom are living—Robert T., John W., Junius Edgar, and Caleb Dwight; five deceased—William, Jasper Henry, Emmett Albright (in childhood), Mary Sue, Mrs. George Whitfield Watson, and last, Jesse Felix, who was buried in Waverly, Va., today (Sunday, October 27, 1929). There are thirteen grandchildren living and four dead.

Jesse Felix West was born July 16, 1862. He married Nannie Peebles Baird, daughter of Dr. Oscar H. Baird, September 27, 1887. His early life was spent in that splendid Christian country home, and he united with Spring Hill Church when eleven years of age. There was born to Jesse and Nannie five children—Jesseca, deceased; Grace, deceased; Jesse F., Jr., who married Isabel Flurnoy, and they have two children; Oscar H., who married Nelle Gray, who has passed away and left two children; Baird H.

The education of Jesse Felix West included courses in the public schools of Sussex County, Suffolk College Institute, and graduation from Chapel Hill, the University of North Carolina, in 1885. He then took a full course in law in the University of Virginia under John B. Miner, received license and began the practice of law in 1886. In his law class at the University of Virginia were Claude B. Swanson, now U. S. Senator; Henry D. Flood, and Francis R. Lassiter. He was superintendent of schools in Sussex county in 1890-1892.

He was made judge of Sussex County Court for 1892-1902—ten years. He was then made judge of the Circuit Court of Sussex, Surry, Greenville and Brunswick Counties, which position he occupied (1902-1922) twenty years. In 1922 he was promoted to the Supreme Court of Virginia and remained in that position for seven years, till his death on October 25, 1929, at his home in Waverly, Va. His service as judge lasted for thirty-seven years.

He not only became one of the most useful citizens in public life, but he was a deacon in Waverly Christian Church, and superintendent of its Sunday School for forty years. He filled many important positions in the Church, a member of the board of trustees of Elon College, N. C., was chairman of the committee that fostered the erection of the marker on the site of the Old Lebanon Church, in Sussex County, Va., and the monument, in honor of James O'Kelly, dedicated on the campus of Elon College, October 16, 1929. His life as a Christian, a citizen, and a judge perhaps has no equal in the State. He loved his home, his county, and his town with a devotion that combined love, character and patriotism.

He is survived by his companion for forty-two years and three sons, Jesse F., Jr., Oscar H., Baird H., and four grandchildren, besides four brothers—Robert T., John W., Lieutenant Governor Junius E., and Caleb Dwight, and their families.

His funeral service was held in the Waverly Christian Church, Sunday afternoon, October 27, 1929, conducted by his pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester, with the assistance of Chaplain H. E. Rountree, his pastor for nine years, and W. W. Staley.

Rev. F. B. Oglesby, pastor of the Methodist Church, had charge of the choir and led the music. Miss Margaret Duncan, of the Methodist Church, sang "Abide With Me"; Robert R. Prentis, Preston W. Campbell, and Henry W. Holt, of the Supreme Court, and John R. Saunders, Attorney General of the State, attended the funeral. There must have been fifteen hundred people who came, and the floral tributes were wonderful in designs and numbers.

AFRO-CHRISTIAN REPORT.

(ED. NOTE: The following report was read by Rev. Chas. A. Harris, president, Burlington, N. C., before the General Convention at Piqua, Ohio, October 23, 1929, and carries much information about our negro Christian Churches and enterprises that will be of interest to SUN readers.—J. O. A.)

It is indeed a source of very great pleasure to submit this report to the General Convention of the Christian Church. The Afro-Christian Convention has in its bounds nine conferences, namely: Western N. C. Conference, with 39 Churches and missions, 42 elders, 13 licentiates, President Rev. J. A. Henderson; Eastern Virginia Conference, with 23 Churches and missions, 40 elders, 22 licentiates, President Rev. S. A. Howell, D. D.; Eastern Atlantic Conference, with 18 Churches and missions, 20 elders, 3 licentiates, President Rev. F. A. Hargett; West Virginia Conference, with 23 Churches and missions, 16 elders, 2 licentiates, Rev. G. T. Hall, president; S. D. N. Conference, with 21 Churches and missions, 27 elders, 5 licentiates, Rev. D. C. Goodson, president; Lincoln N. C. Conference, with 22 Churches and missions, 16 elders, 8 licentiates, President Rev. S. W. Albright; N. Y., Phila. & N. J. Conference, with 10 Churches and missions, 8 elders, 3 licentiates, Rev. R. B. Brodie, president; Demarar Conference, S. A. (missionary), with 6 Churches and missions, President the late Rev. J. A. Johnson.

The Afro-Christian Convention has also a home and foreign missionary department, known as the Woman's National Home and Foreign Missionary Convention. The late Mrs. Roca Howell was its honored president from its organization until her death; vice-president, Mrs. Perla M. Lee, of Burlington, N. C. This convention has charge of all the women's missionary work of the Afro-Christian Convention. This department is a great factor in the work of the convention and has been the salvation of our foreign mission work and has stood as an anvil to the stroke in the work of Franklinton Christian College.

Our Sunday School department is alive, having in each conference a Sunday School convention. Our Christian Endeavor is alive and working all over the field. We have many other auxiliaries of our young people's work that are a great asset to the Churches in the struggle to put the program over for God.

We have about 170 elders, 60 licentiates, 165 Churches and missions, with a membership of about 40,000, with a working force of 30,000, and every department is alive and at work. Our financial system calls for $1.25 per capita annually, divided thus: 25 per cent for missions, 20 per cent for education, 15 per cent for publication, 15 per cent for convention fund, 25 per cent for the home conference. Taxation for other auxiliaries is levied according to the wish of its conferences. We are glad to say that very recently a movement was started to canvass the entire field of the convention to see if we can more systematically finance our foreign missionary work and Franklinton Christian College. These two activities are very dear to our hearts, and we intend to make them go. Franklinton has produced in the last five years seventy-four or more graduates that are preaching, teaching, and studying in other colleges to better prepare themselves for the work that awaits them.

We earnestly contend for a better prepared ministry, for a prepared pew, and men whose hearts are on fire to lift the standard of our Church upon higher plains of Christian activities. We especially refer to Franklinton School. It is our only educational enterprise, and we know that we have not been able in the past to inspire our group as a whole to do as much for Franklinton as we desired, but we are not discouraged. There are those in our group who have put their all on the altar and said that they intend, by the help of God, to continue to labor until we get the desire of our hearts. We are behind the college with our prayers, with our hearts, and with our means to do all we can to put the educational program over.

Our foreign missionary department is crying, "Come over into Macedonia" and help us. This work was organized twenty years ago by the Rev. S. A. Howell and Rev. N. E. Higgs. We are aware how near and dear this foreign mission work is to the heart of Dr. Howell, who has, with untiring effort, kept it alive. Through the efforts of Dr. Howell, the work spread from Georgetown, South America, to Trinidad, British Guiana, and to the Isthmus of Panama. The late Dr. W. T. Johnson was the minister and leader of that work, and from its organization the Afro-Christian Convention has supported the work and paid the missionary.

For some time we have been sending Sunday School literature to South America through the untiring efforts of our financial secretary and treasurer of foreign work, Mr. Wesley Rany, of Newport News, Va. We have been doing the best we could under adverse circumstances, but we are not satisfied. We feel that if we continue to labor and pray, God will give us the desire of our hearts. We are here to stand by and to register our vote with the General Convention in whatever it does for the betterment of the Christian Church.

The valuation of our property is $500,000, with less than $50,000 indebtedness.

CHAS. A. HARRIS, Pres.,
Burlington, N. C. Afro-Christian Convention.

REVIVAL SERVICES.

The different denominations of Windsor, Va., have just passed through one of the greatest revival meetings of three weeks' duration that has ever been known in the history of the town. The pastors of the town were assisted by the Rev. Bishop J. Willis, evangelist, of Sumter, S. C.

Denominational lines were broken down, and Christians, Methodists and Baptists went to the same altar to find God. The service last Sunday morning, held in the Christian Church, was the most impressive, as well as the most expressive, that the people here have ever witnessed.

God blessed the little town, and the blind received their spiritual sight and are on their way rejoicing. Thirty young people dedicated their lives to the service of the Master, and 150 decisions were made for Christ. Many family altars have been set up as a result of the meeting. May God give us more men who are filled with the spirit of God and who will not compromise with sin.

GOING TO CONFERENCE?

Ministers and delegates attending the Eastern North Carolina Conference, which convenes at Mt. Auburn, Warren County, N. C., November 19th and 20th, will please notify Bro. J. A. Kimball, Manson, N. C., when you will come, how you will travel, and where to meet you in case you do not come by automobile.

To reach the place of Conference by automobile, leave the highway at Manson, N. C., driving north by Drewery to Mt. Auburn. All Churches are requested to send a full delegation for the full time, with a full report, which will be called for the first day of Conference.

Churches are urged to raise all the apportionments for Conference. The denominational departments are in need of all possible financial support. Plan for a great Conference, expect a great Conference, come and make it a great Conference, and all will be happy.

Fraternally yours,
W. C. WICKER, President.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

KNOW HIM THROUGH DEVOTIONAL LIFE.

BY MRS. W. H. BOONE.

(Read by Mrs. W. H. Boone, Durham, N. C., at the annual Woman's Conference, meeting in Burlington, N. C., October 11, 1929.)

It is the highest ideal and purpose of the Christian life to know the Christ; for in that way alone can the individual come to the perfection of Christian development. Jesus Himself recognized that fact, and called around Him a devoted little group of followers and took them into the most intimate experiences of His life. He unfolded to them the deepest things of His mind and heart. He shared with them the purposes of His ministry. And He showed to them the manner by which He approached and changed the lives of those whom He would win.

Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles, clearly understood this truth. He revealed his life's purpose when he prayed: "That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death." And again, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." John, too, had firmly grasped this truth, for he wrote in his first epistle: "But we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is."

Not only is knowing the Christ the key to the development of Christian character; it is likewise the key to the solution of the missionary task. This is evidenced by the fact that Christ did not send His disciples out as missionaries until they had tarried with Him and learned to know Him in so intimate a way that they could reveal Him to those whom they would win. It is the impress of the Christ on the life of those who would proclaim Him that has always carried conviction. It was so even in the days of the apostles. In Acts 3:13, we are told: "Now, when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." It is true, likewise, in our own day that the more of Christ that is seen in the life of the missionary, the greater the winning power that is exerted over the non-Christian world. If we are going to be a power in the mission work, a power greater than the amount of money that we may be able to give, that power can be had only by knowing the Christ and becoming like Him. Let us notice some of the things in which we would know and be like the Christ.

We would know the Master's spirit of perfect forgiveness; that spirit of forgiveness that knew no bounds nor limitations. "And, behold, a woman in the city, which was a sinner, when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house, brought an alabaster box of ointment, and stood at His feet behind Him weeping, and began to wash His feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed His feet, and anointed them with the ointment. . . . And he said to the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee, go in peace." Do we know such a spirit of forgiveness?

Do we know the sort of forgiveness that Jesus manifested toward Simon Peter, who had denied Him on the night of His humiliation? Though Peter had denied Him after the strongest declarations of loyalty, on the morning of the resurrection, when Jesus was sending word to His disciples to meet him in Galilee, He expressly told them to include Peter in the invitation. And when Jesus had met them in Galilee, recall how He gave Peter an opportunity to three times declare his love. Do we know such a spirit of forgiveness as Jesus manifested when He looked into the faces of those who had clamored for His blood, and who were looking on approvingly as His life ebbed away, but even then He could pray, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do"?

We would know the Master's sorrow over those who are wilfully rejecting the light. Hear Him as He cries, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee: how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!"

We would know the Master's compassion for the destitute and the needy. "And it came to pass that as He was come nigh unto Jericho, a certain blind man sat by the wayside, begging; and hearing the multitude pass by, He asked what it meant. And they told him that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by. And he cried, saying, Jesus, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me. And they which went before rebuked him, that he should hold his peace; but he cried so much the more, Thou, Son of David, have mercy on me! And Jesus stood, and commanded him to be brought unto Him: and when he was come near, He asked him, saying, What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee? And he said, Lord, that I may receive my sight. And Jesus said unto him, Receive thy sight; thy faith hath saved thee." "Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw Him, she fell down at His feet, saying, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. When Jesus saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, He groaned in the spirit, and was troubled, and said, Where have ye laid him? They said unto him, Lord, come and see. Jesus wept."

We would know the Master's concern for the happiness of others. "And the third day there was a marriage in Cna, of Galilee; and the mother of Jesus was there: And both Jesus was called, and His disciples, to the marriage. And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus said unto Him, They have no wine. Jesus saith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? Mine hour is not yet come. His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it. And there were set there six waterpots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece. Jesus saith unto them, Fill the waterpots with water. And they filled them up to the brim. And He said unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast. And they bare it. When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was (but the servants which drew the water knew), the governor of the feast called the bridegroom, and saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the good wine until now."

We would know the Master's appreciation for the aspirations of others. There is no finer illustration of the spirit of Jesus than that recorded in the first chapter of John, when Jesus sees Nathanael coming, and says, "Behold, an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!" Whatever else Nathanael may or may not have been, he had the fine quality of guilelessness. And Jesus saw and appreciated that fine quality, and it won Nathanael's heart. Or again, there is the incident of Simon Peter, the impetuous, unstable man, who knew and was ashamed of his weakness and longed to be different. Jesus saw and appreciated the situation, and enheartened Simon with the promise, "Thou shalt be a rock."

We would know the Master's spirit of intercession for those who are struggling toward the divine ideal. Hear the Master's words to Simon Peter: "Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Time will not permit us to recount the petitions of the matchless intercessory prayer of Jesus for His own, which is given in the 17th chapter of John. But it gives us a glimpse into the very heart of Jesus, and shows us the way to power, both in ourselves and in others.

We would know the Master's love for all classes and conditions of men and women. We would know His tender love for the helplessness and promise of little children, as shown in His words: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." We would know the Master's love that leaped all bounds of racial prejudice and hate, as He manifested it in His tender instruction of the Samaritan woman, who was not only a member of a despised race, but she herself a woman of shame. We would know that love that would give our enemies the occasion to say of us, if they would, that we are the friend of publicans and sinners.

We would know the Master's faith that would enable us to trust men and women in spite of their weakness. He knew all the petty rivalries and selfish ambitions of those who had been with him; and yet He said to the Father, "As Thou has sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." He trusted so much that He was willing to entrust into the hands of weak humanity the plan of salvation for which He had given His life. "And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

"That I may win Christ. And be found in Him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith; that I may know him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death."

A TRIBUTE OF LOVE.

When the Woman's Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church was organized on February 10, 1912, Miss Bessie Norfleet was elected treasurer. She served two years and eight months, and at the end of that time she was elected treasurer of the Woman's Mission Board of Eastern Virginia Conference.

During Miss Norfleet's tenure of office as treasurer of the Suffolk society, the receipts amounted to $485.78. On November 9, 1914, Miss Norfleet resigned as treasurer of the Suffolk society, and on the same date Mrs. C. B. Duke was elected Miss Norfleet's successor. Ever since that date—month in and month out, year in and year out—for fifteen years, Mrs. Duke has given freely of her time and thought in efficient and praiseworthy "service for the King"; $12,544.12 has been received and disbursed with accuracy and expedition by Mrs. Duke. This amount and the amount received by Miss Norfleet makes a total of $13,029.90 received into the treasury of the society in its eighteen years of existence.

Mrs. Duke has been such an inspiration to the missionary activities of our Suffolk Church, so faithful in the performance of her duties as the official head of finance in our woman's society, and so pleasant in the work, our entire membership sighs over her resignation as treasurer—we accept her resignation with deep regret.

By unanimous rising vote, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church presents to Mrs. C. B. Duke a life membership on the Woman's Board of the Southern Christian Convention as a small token of love and appreciation.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VI—November 10, 1929.

WORLD PEACE THROUGH MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING.

LESSON: Isa. 2:2-4, 11:6-10, 19:23-25; Acts 17:22-28; Eph. 4:4-6, 13-19; John 4:20, 21.

GOLDEN TEXT: "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."—Isa. 11:9.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 98:1-9.

Armistice Day and World Peace.

Today's lesson comes the day before Armistice Day. The theme is, therefore, very appropriate. It is well enough for us to think soberly at this time, "Lest we forget, lest we forget." Unless those in whose memory we observe Armistice Day made some contribution to the cause of world peace, they died in vain, for at least in a limited sense, the World War was supposed to be the "War to End War." If that battle cry is to be something more than a camouflage to stimulate enlistments, we must give ourselves as fully in time of peace as they gave themselves in time of war.

World Peace Desirable.

World peace has always been desirable. From the beginning, God has desired that the world should live at peace. In view of the fact that all nations are but members of one great family, there is no reason why there should be wars and rumors of war. Brothers certainly ought to be able to get along with each other. And in the ideal order of things, peace is the normal order of things. It is the perverseness and the willfulness and the sinfulness of man that has written war so largely and deeply upon the pages of history. God did not intend it so. And He still patiently works in various ways to bring in an era of universal peace.

World Peace Imperative.

However desirable world peace may have been in other days, it is becoming more and more imperative now. War, hatred, prejudice were bad enough when nations lived apart. But the whole world is rapidly becoming a neighborhood. Modern inventions have bridged time and space and brought peoples who used to be isolated from each other into what might almost be called intimate contact. Whether we want to or not, we must live with others.

The implication is clear. If we must live with others, we must learn to get along with others. The situation is packed with T N T. Now that the peoples of all nations are so intimately in contact with each other, world peace becomes imperative. Some way must be found to develop and preserve the spirit of peace.

Understanding as a Means of Promoting World Peace.

Back of most of the ill will and the war-like spirit that smolders in the human heart, there lies misunderstanding. We often like not because we know not. One of the most effective ways to promote the spirit of world peace is to promote understanding. Indeed, it might be said that there can be no world peace without understanding.

Good understanding is not an end in itself, but rather a means to an end. For out of understanding there comes good will. There may not always be intellectual agreement, but when folks understand each other and when they get a friendly and sympathetic understanding of each other, it promotes the spirit of good will. There can never be peace until there is good will. Treaties or international law cannot insure peace. Peace must be of the heart. Its essence is good will.

The Gospel and World Peace.

The gospel insists upon the unity of the human race, and hence the brotherhood of the human race. "He hath made of one blood all nations for to dwell on the face of the earth." A recognition of this fact on the part of all is basic to the matter of world peace. In other words, the gospel has the message of world peace.

The gospel also has the spirit of world peace. The gospel has the power to produce the spirit of good will which is so necessary to world peace. Missionaries and lay Christians living in foreign countries can do more by their spirit than they can do by their message. And so can we here at home. He who manifests the spirit of indistinguishable good will is helping to promote world peace in a very effective manner.

The Signs of the Times.

There are indications that a new hour has struck in the history of nations. A great deal of thought and time is being given by the leaders of the great nations to the matter of paths to peace. The nations are beginning to devote some of the energies which they usually devoted to war to the matter of peace. The Kellogg-Briand peace pact is an epoch-making State paper. The nations have outlawed war. It stands condemned before the bar of civilized nations. And the recent friendly and informal visit of Ramsey MacDonald with President Hoover is going to bear fruit in the providence of God toward promoting a more general spirit of peace. We are not in the noon-day splendor of the age of peace. But the sun has risen, the dawn of a new day has come, and the light of a new hope is lighting up the world and lightening human hearts.

Teaching Points.

1. The unity of the human race is at the foundation of efforts toward world peace.
2. Prejudice and ignorance lie at the base of much ill will and hard feelings between individuals and nations.
3. In the ideal order of things, there will be no war.
4. War has been outlawed by the nations of the world in the Paris peace pact.
5. The fact that we have one Father makes us brothers.
6. The gospel of Jesus Christ in word and in spirit makes for peace.
7. Peace, that is abiding peace, must come from within, not from without.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, November 10, 1929.

TOPIC: "Uprooting the Cause of War."—Acts 17:24-31; Jas. 3:13-18, 4:1-3.

Some Bible Hints.

Men worship an unknown God still. When they know God, war will be impossible (v. 23).

Men are brothers, children of the same Father. To kill each other is, therefore, a crime (v. 26).

War is un wisdom; it is stupidity, a declaration of failure to be just (v. 13).

Envy and greed are fundamental causes of war; they must be chained, if they cannot be obliterated (v. 14).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Shear the war lords of their power. Wherever one man or group of men have power to declare war, they will want to try out their army.

Many wars are caused by misunderstanding. Where nations understand and like one another, there is no war. Friendship is the cure. Christian Endeavor is bringing young people of many nations together.

Most wars are a struggle for markets; that is, for bread. Until the door is opened wide to all markets, this cause may bring about war. Tariffs are dangerous, even if necessary.

Obstinacy will cause war. It should be possible for leaders to sit around a table and settle differences, rather than fight. It would have been far better to pay for the liberation of all slaves in the South than to have had the Civil War.

A Few Illustrations.

Injustice breeds war. Germany took Alsace-Lorraine in 1871, and this was one of the causes of the World War. Japan's injustice to Korea may cause another war in the future.

When nations have large armies and navies, there is danger that they will fight. We must have enough faith in one another to disarm, and trust to courts of law to settle disputes.

The day has gone by when kings and barons can make war at their own sweet will. In the same way, all in authority will be held in check.

The Franco-German War in 1871 was brought about by means of a lie told by Bismarck. Honesty and open diplomacy should help to curb the war spirit.

To Think About.

Why did America go to war with Spain over Cuba?

What good would a world court of international justice do?

Are wars profitable today? Why?

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

The people of the Pleasant Ridge and Shiloh Churches of our Western North Carolina Conference joined in the work of a teacher-training class during the week of October 14-18. This was the first teacher-training school that these people have ever had the privilege of attending. The interest shown in the school was very encouraging to the field secretary, who did the teaching. The course taught was one on the "Principles of Teaching." The text used was Weigle's book, "The Teacher." Several members of the class stated that they would like to take other courses leading up to the standard teacher-training diploma by correspondence. The people were very enthusiastic about the work and asked to have another teacher-training class held in their community next spring. Some of the workers in these two Sunday Schools are hoping to earn a standard leadership training diploma. Most of the members of the class were Sunday School teachers and officers.

The field secretary greatly enjoyed the privilege of teaching in the teacher-training class at Pleasant Ridge and Shiloh Churches, Ramseur, N. C., Route 1. The hospitality of the people made the week a most pleasant one. The field secretary hopes to see many of the leaders in these two Churches receive a diploma for the completion of the standard teacher-training course. These people feel that they are on the right track and are hoping to have "all of their teachers trained teachers."

The Pleasant Ridge Church, Ramseur, N. C., Route 1, is planning to build Sunday School rooms in the near future. This is a very progressive rural Church and the prospects for them are bright. Success to you as you work on your building program!

Have you been wondering where to get program material for special occasions in your Churches?

One good place is from our Church papers, the Herald of Gospel Liberty and the Sunday School Herald. The November Herald of Gospel Liberty contains "An Armistice Day Message," a Thanksgiving worship service program, and Christian Endeavor notes. The issues of the Sunday School Herald will have plans for a Thanksgiving party, worship services, Armistice Day, and Christian Endeavor meetings.

November 10-17 is "Father and Son Week" throughout the United States. Churches that have been observing "Father and Son Week" find it to be very helpful. Samples of literature for planning programs may be secured from Miss Lucy Eldredge, Dayton, Ohio. These samples include a folder telling about "Father and Son Week," a song sheet for the father-and-son banquet, and a worship program for the Sunday School or Church service.

The months of November and December are orphanage and stewardship months in our Church calendar. Mr. Johnson keeps us informed about our orphanage in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Some of our young people (and older ones, as well) might be interested in securing and reading "Young People and Money," by Harry Thomas Stock (15 cents), and "Stewardship in the Life of Youth," by Williamson-Wallace (50 cents). These booklets can be secured from Miss Lucy Eldredge, Dayton, Ohio.

F. C. LESTER.

SMITH HEADS LEAGUE.

Dear Mr. Editor:

The North Carolina Anti-Saloon League will greatly appreciate making an announcement to your readers.

We have always striven for education and for the creation and crystallizing of public sentiment to keep alive and strengthen the sentiment for temperance, law observance, and good citizenship. For four years we have striven to extend the work of the league along educational lines. We recognize that the need of the hour is that the public, and especially our youth, be informed about alcohol and its effects on the human body; that they be informed about the principles underlying prohibition, and that the matter of abstinence, obedience to law, and good citizenship be emphasized.

Our visual education department began work last night. It is in charge of Prof. S. M. Smith, who for many years has been well and favorably known in North Carolina. He was for a number of years a member of the faculty of Elon College. He has had experience in Y. M. C. A. work, educational vocational work with the United States War Veterans' Bureau, and in various lines of religious activity.

The main effort of this department, in the hands of Prof. Smith, will be to show our people how the old saloon operated and the sort of fruits it produced. We have one of the greatest temperance pictures ever filmed. It is a five-reel production, entitled "Lest We Forget," produced by Dr. James K. Shields.

We plan to make this picture work supplementary to the scientific temperance teaching in our public schools and the temperance teaching in our Sunday Schools.

Parents who believe in law and order, who love their homes, their country and their children, and who are opposed to the return of the licensed sale of intoxicating liquors in any form, should not fail to see this remarkable picture—a true story from real life.

No admission is charged. Engagements will be booked as nearly as possible in the order in which requests are sent to the office of the Anti-Saloon League at Raleigh.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE BREATH OF THE ALMIGHTY.

"There is a spirit in man, and the breath of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job. 32:6-14.

If there is any one thing regarding which we have no right to boast, it is that on which most men plume themselves, namely: the understanding. We are proud when we comprehend a difficult subject. We are exalted when we contribute, as we say, something original to it. What are we, that we can be in any way original? Whence came our mind but from the inbreathing of the Almighty? And what can we do, in our most inspired moments, but think God's thoughts after him?

This is why the thinkers who are really the greatest are at the same time the most humble. They have enough understanding to realize their own weakness. They know enough of God to realize in some degree His greatness. As one of the most eminent of them said, they feel themselves to be like little boys picking up pebbles on the shore, while the vast ocean of truth lies all undiscovered before them.

Prayer.—We are Thy pupils, Infinite Teacher. Make every day a school day. Give us severe examinations, for we learn very slowly. We are in Thy primer class. Help us to understand. Amen.

TUESDAY.

VALLEY AND HILL.

"Oh taste and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man that taketh refuge in Him."—Psa. 34:1-8.

"There's no deep valley but near some high hill." That sentence from John Webster has strengthening in it. Think of it that next time you find yourself in some valley of the shadow. Valleys are made by hills and most have hills for neighbors. It is easy down in the valley to forget the hills. The houses are in the valley, the workshops, the places where men buy and sell. It is not easy to get time to climb the hills and look off, far off, beyond the valley.

But take the time, for it pays richly. Take it in the morning, that the inspiration of it may go with you through all the day. Take it also in the evening, that the wonder of it may sweeten your slumbers. Take it with the Bible. Hills are transfiguring places. And the hills of the Spirit will transfigure my life.

Prayer.—And so, dear Lord, we would not spend all our time in the valley. We must work there and eat there and sleep there, but it is no place for our souls. Draw us up to the hilltop with Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

YOUR TRUST.

"Judas Iscariot . . . having the bag, took away what was put therein."—John 12:1-8.

It was Jesus Christ who gave Judas the bag, making him the treasurer of the twelve. Why did Jesus put that temptation in the way of Judas? Did He not know that the man of Kerioth was a potential thief? Surely, for "He knew what was in man." But He also knew that Judas was a potential honest man, a potential Christian hero. By making him a member of the twelve, our Lord did not make him a thief and a traitor; indeed, He gave Judas the best chance for nobility he could possibly have had. Judas had no one but himself to blame when he failed in his great opportunity.

And so it is with every charge committed to any one of us, we can find in it an opportunity for failure, for disloyalty, for sin, for we can make it a chance for glorious success. All depends on our obedience to Jesus Christ. If we are His friends, if we live so close to Him as to absorb His ideals and gain His power, then every charge He gives us will be a step upward, developing us for larger service.

Prayer.—We see in ourselves, our Master, possibilities of even the ultimate shame, such as that of Judas. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Be near to us at all times, most of all when we are self-sufficient and would be by ourselves. Put tests upon us, but, oh, help us to bear them. Amen.

THURSDAY.

PIG OR PUPPY.

"By faith Abraham, when he was called, obeyed to go out into a place which he was to receive for an inheritance, and he went out, not knowing whither he went."—Heb. 11:1-10.

You cannot go to Canaan and stay in Ur. There is no promised land for you if you insist on remaining in the old land. You cannot find the country of Otherworldliness except by abandoning the country of Worldliness. If you would have God, you cannot also have Satan.

The most common mistakes of this age—perhaps of all ages—is one that Abraham certainly did not make; it is the mistake of trying to hold on to God with one hand and mammon with the other. Terah made that mistake and died in Haran. Whoever makes that mistake dies as an idolater.

"Go out" has in all ages been the Lord's command to His children. One need not necessarily go from home, from loved ones, from one's usual occupation; but one must have the old desires, the old ambitions, the old anxieties, the old reliances, the old ideals, and march out into an entirely new region of thought and motive. It may be across a weary desert, but Canaan is at the end of the journey.

Prayer.—Send us forth, O God of Abraham. We are through with Ur of the Chaldees. We wish to break from its glittering temples, its mocking idols, its crafty priests. We long to be with Thee and about Thy glorious business. Lead us out, O God, by Thy strong right hand, westward to the Central Sea. Amen.

FRIDAY.

A SECOND ROLL.

"Take thee again another roll."—Jere. 36:20.

It is a terrible thing when a writer's valuable manuscript is destroyed, and the history of literature records a number of such calamities, one of the worst being the accidental burning of the first volume of Carlyle's "French Revolution." Such a catastrophe on the highest possible plane was the destruction of Jeremiah's book of prophecies. The loss seemed irreparable, but God told the prophet to take another roll of parchment and write it all over again. This Jeremiah did, dictating it to Baruch, the scribe, "and there were added besides unto them many like words."

Far better than the first achievement could have been in the courage which disregards its loss and builds out of it a nobler achievement. Our earthly accomplishments are perishable, but the character derived from them is permanent. That is the real result of our toil. No fire can burn it up, no king can cut it to pieces with his penknife. Get a worthy character from your life, and you need not worry if you get nothing else.

Prayer.—Thou hast a wise purpose in view, we know, our Father, in every untoward circumstance Thou dost send to Thy children. Disclose it to us, if it be Thy will, but whether we see it or not we will trust Thee and be sure it is there. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE BEST PAY.

"Thus saith Pharaoh. I will not give you straw."—Ex. 5:10-21.

It was the height of Pharaoh's cruelty to require his Hebrew slaves to make from clay the same number of sundried bricks as before, while forcing them to go out and find for themselves the straw that would bind the clay together. The fierce whips of the slave-drivers were like constantly whirling flails, and the poor Israelites were in the deepest mire of their despair.

Ever since that awful time, "bricks without straw" has expressed the extreme of difficulty in labor. But while we execrate Pharaoh, do we never do the like ourselves? Do we never impose tasks on others, while withholding some necessity for the task?

Perhaps among these necessities, the one which is most often omitted is praise. If workers know their labors are appreciated, they will work to the limit, and right cheerily; but if they feel that no one really knows or cares what they are doing, their activity will be dull, sodden, and hopeless. Praise is the cheapest pay, and the most valuable.

Others fail to give their workers co-operation; still others do not give them real understanding; still others neglect the prompt payment of wages. All of these matters are straw without which the making of bricks is almost impossible. Are we guilty along any of these lines? Are we pharaohs?

Prayer.—Heavenly Master, we are Thy servants, and we know how kindly and inspiringly Thou dost treat us. May we be as kind and inspiring toward all that are in our control in any way. Amen.

SUNDAY.

CANCELLATION.

"A worthless man deviseth mischief; and in his lips there is as a scorching fire."—Prov. 16:27-33.

A writer for children once suggested to them that they might apply to common speech the principle of cancellation, which they learn in their arithmetic. For instance, when some one says of a boy, "He is so slow in games," they may answer, "Yes, but he always plays fair." If some one says of a girl, "She is so stupid in school," the reply may be made, "But she always studies hard." Thus the ill-natured words will be canceled by the kind ones.

Solomon compares cruel speech to a scorching fire. That is true, and it is also true that every Christian may be a member of a fire department, and may play his hose on the fire and keep it from spreading; perhaps put it out altogether. It's always possible to say something good, even of the worst of men, as an offset to something bad.

Prayer.—Thou hast given us, O Creator, this vast power of speech. May we use it as befits our honor and in accordance with Thy loving purpose. Amen.

The First Congregational-Christian Merger

Very Important--Very Plain

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES:

DEAR FELLOW-CHRISTIANS,—I know how to appeal to Congregationalists for funds for Christian purposes. I have been doing it for over forty years, and have secured for various purposes between one and two million dollars, more than a million of which has been for Piedmont College; and I am now appealing for two million more for the same.

But I am new to the Christian Churches. I take it for granted, however, that the same motives that move Congregational Christians, move you—our present national merger pre-supposes this. If this supposition is true, the response to this page and my letters is sure, for I am making an appeal for your own institution, fully and officially approved by your Southern Convention, which is not only worthy of your support, but must have it or die.

I Must make the Facts Very Plain

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, Ala., was organized to meet a great need and to do a great service for your Churches and, in their name, for our Country and for the Kingdom of God. You have there a great field, a fine location, and a valuable property. Your Administration Building is a noble structure, but unfinished and unheated. Your fine Girls' Dormitory is only partially ready for use. You have a campus of over forty acres, and a property worth $100,000; but nothing fully ready for use. It will take $10,000 more to make available the $100,000 worth you already have; and more to give the equipment required for a Standard Junior College.

Surely, you do not want to lose this great beginning for want of the necessary finishing! But I must tell you plainly that losing it is certain, unless vigorous and speedy steps are taken to save it. Dr. Beougher and the local Trustees have done splendidly, but they have reached the end of their rope. Other help must come, or this Institution will soon be a thing of the past.

The Situation Briefly Stated

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing; not because its work and scholarship were not good, but because a Junior College cannot have independent recognition without a finished campus and the income of $200,000 endowment. Without scholastic standing, a Junior College cannot have students, as they cannot go on for their Junior and Senior years in a standard four-year College. BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing, and could not go on. It would have no students.

President Beougher then came to me, as President of Piedmont College, to help BETHLEHEM out of impending failure. An educational merger was then made by the two Colleges, so that the four-year College could stand for and give credits for the Junior College. No financial merger was made or is in contemplation. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE is still owned and controlled by the Christian Church. Its Trustees, of their own initiative, changed its name to "THE PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE" to enable the Senior College more securely to vouch for its credits. As a result, the enrollment of the Junior College has not only been retained, but increased.

But the campus is not finished, the buildings are not ready for use, and the scholastic standing cannot be long maintained by the present method alone.

The Trustees have asked me to find the money for finishing the buildings, equipping them, and meeting other pressing needs. I cannot go to Congregationalists for this, as I am asking them for two million dollars for Piedmont Senior College, and am pressing them hard. It must come from the members of the Christian Churches—or the Junior College must close.

I have nothing to gain personally. I am donating my services and advancing expense money, because I am deeply interested in our great merger of Churches and I want to see PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, saved for the great field it occupies and the great need it supplies. The South needs education far beyond any opportunities it has.

Please send your checks quickly to President Beougher, at Wadley, Ala., or to me at Demorest, Ga., made out to PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, and they will be turned over to the Treasurer as soon*as record can be made. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE cannot wait long.

Yours fraternally and sincerely,

FRANK E. JENKINS

PRESIDENT PIEDMONT COLLEGE, Demorest, Ga.

The above will appear in two or three more issues of The Sun, so that every member of the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention may be sure to read it.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Owing to sickness and operation, I am today dictating this letter lying flat of my back in the hospital room. Owing to the time being so short for the Thanksgiving campaign for the Christian Orphanage, I have a few things I want to say in the beginning.

In the first place, it will be impossible for me to visit many of the Churches in person, owing to the fact I will be confined in the hospital for several weeks more. But I have never called on the pastors or the laymen of the Christian Church in the time of a great need but what they have always come to my rescue in behalf of the little children in the Orphanage. At this time, when we will be compelled to raise $15,000 from November 1st to December 31st, I want to ask that every minister make a special plea from his own pulpit in behalf of this offering. I want to ask that every Sunday School superintendent, officer and teacher put forth a special effort through the Sunday School to help us reach that amount. If you can get a good organization in every Church and Sunday School I feel that it can be easily put across. And you can do the Orphanage a wonderful service by so doing. No one regrets more than I that on account of sickness I am temporarily taken out of the field. But we believe that through the prayers of our folks and loyalty which they have always shown, this goal can be reached.

I hope and trust that every pastor, every man, woman, boy and girl throughout the entire Church will become so interested in behalf of the 120 little children in the Christian Orphanage that we will even do more than to reach the $15,000—the balance needed to reach the goal set by the Southern Christian Convention. I am hoping and praying that the Lord will give me strength to win my battle for life, and that I will soon be restored to my usual work which I love so well.

I will have envelopes for the offering mailed out the first week in November, and hope every one of them will be used wisely and given to those who are able to contribute and who will contribute. And ask them to be liberal, because the need is great and the offering will be appreciated.

C. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

PLAN OF UNION.

plus three persons chosen from the Christian Church constituency. This commission shall promote a program of evangelism and devotional life in all the Churches. With a view to conserving all spiritual values, the Commission on Evangelism of the National Council shall be wholly free to adapt the general program to the needs of the Congregational Churches and the representatives of the Christian Church shall be equally free to do likewise for the Christian Churches. The work for life service, for which the Board of Evangelism is now responsible in the Christian Church, shall be committed to the Student Life Department of the Home Board.

XVI. The work of the Board of Finance of the Christian Convention in the field of benevolence being committed to the Commission on Missions, its responsibility for the finances of the General Convention itself and its share of the expenses of the General Council may be retained or committed to the members of the Executive Committee of the General Council who represent the Christian constituency, as may be determined by the General Convention.

XVII. That the business of publishing be combined, as far as possible; that in particular a common year-book shall be issued in the immediate future on the general tabular scheme of the Congregational Year-Book, and that in this year-book, for the time being at least, all Churches be published together for a given State or district, with separate sub-headings in each schedule for the Christian and Congregational Churches, or with distinguishing marks as may be determined.

In case the Home Board, as constituted above, should deem it unwise to administer the Christian Publishing Association Building and printing plant in Dayton, Ohio, the General Convention shall be wholly free to make use of or dispose of this plant as it deems wise.

XVIII. That periodicals be merged as soon as the way is clear and to the extent found desirable. The Herald of Gospel Liberty and the Congregationalist may well be merged, possibly under a wholly new name. If, however, it should seem better to either group to continue indefinitely both periodicals, this may be done without breach of the spirit of unity, financial responsibility being carried by the respective constituencies.

XIX. That the Woman's Mission Board of the General Convention of the Christian Church shall be entirely free to determine its own course of action. The recommendation is strongly made, however, that its activities be applied to the whole program of the Church in co-operation with the woman's organizations in the Congregational Church.

XX. That the appointment of bureaus and commissions be determined with the view of conserving all the recognized activities of both Churches.

XXI. That a similar policy apply to representation in interdenominational and other bodies.

XXII. That in view of the requirement that beneficiaries of the C. B. M. R. and members of the annuity fund for Congregational ministers must be Congregational ministers, ministerial ordination and standing be continued separately, but with the endeavor to reach common standards as soon as possible.

XXIII. That regional, State and local organizations of each denomination, being wholly self-determining, be free to continue as at present, with full fellowship in the General Council, but that conference with these bodies be had with a view to unification on lines comparable with the proposals for national union.

That in States or districts where the Churches of one denomination are very few, these might simply unite with the other body, retaining their name locally if desired; likewise, that in districts where the number is greater but still relatively quite few, these might be united with the other body as a unit, continuing their own name, as for example, the Christian Association of the Massachusetts Congregational Conference, thus retaining their denominational connection while uniting with the Congregationalists, but without requiring the organization of a new State body. Likewise, for example, there could be the Congregational Conference in affiliation with the North Carolina Christian Convention or Conference.

Each local Church may continue wholly unchanged in name and in organization. Any changes which seem wise may be made by the Churches themselves, but it is recommended that the joint commission appoint an advisory commission, representative of the General Convention and the National Council, to assist conferences, associations, conventions and Churches on all matters involved in the readjustment of their organization, legal affairs and programs in line with this plan of union, this commission to be empowered to appoint local commissions for such adjustments whenever and wherever occasion may cause and such advice be sought.

XXIV. That the General Convention of the Christian Church and the National Council of Congregational Churches be requested to act on the proposals at the earliest possible date; that so soon as these or other plans are approved by the two commissions, constitution and by-laws for the General Council be drawn up, embodying the principles decided upon, these to be offered to the National Council and to the General Convention for consideration.

XXV. In conclusion, these plans and recommendations of necessity deal with legal and technical details, but they have their justification in the spirit of unity which they presuppose and are designed to promote. If a desire for that unity for which the Master once prayed be the actuating motive of all plans and all acts, the way will become clear, as we proceed, where now it may appear filled with uncertainties, hesitation and hindrance. We may be sure that no legal entanglements will be too difficult, no ecclesiastical customs too deeply fixed, no sentiments seem too precious to yield, no ambitions or personal commitments too intense, if the will to achieve be ours and the Spirit of God lead us. Going forward, thus led, we may ourselves secure, and may make plain to others, the road to joyous fellowship and enlarged usefulness.

OBITUARIES.

SAVAGE.

In the passing away of Mrs. Hattie Lewis Savage, the Ladies' Aid and the Woman's Missionary Society of the Christian Temple lost a most valuable, faithful and loyal member. To these and other organizations of the Church she was regular in attendance, her very presence helping and inspiring, and her influence will long be felt by her co-workers. She was intensely interested not only in her local Church, but in every phase of the work of her denomination and gave liberally of her time, efforts and means.

Mrs. Savage possessed a keen mind and strong, winsome personality, made many friends, and was a friend to people in all walks of life. She was born in Harrellsville, N. C., April 1, 1864. Her parents, Dr. and Mrs. John Walker Lewis, moved to Eastern Virginia when she was a few years old. In September, 1894, she was married to Col. Alexander Savage, of Nausemond County, Va. While living there, she was a member of Berea Christian Church. Upon moving to Norfolk, in 1903, she joined the Memorial Christian Temple, and later the Third Church, now the Christian Temple. Col. Savage died April 6, 1911, after a long illness through which she patiently ministered to his comfort day and night, cheering him in his long hours of suffering and depression with her bright smile of hope.

While Mrs. Savage had been in failing health for several months, she was confined to her bed for only a short time. The end came peacefully at the home of her niece, Mrs. R. H. Flickinger, of Norfolk, Va., August 6, 1929. She is survived by one sister, Mrs. C. H. Ferrell; two brothers, John W. and Thomas Lewis; two nieces, Mrs. R. W. Flickinger and Miss Mary Lewis, all of Norfolk.

The funeral services were conducted from the Christian Temple on Friday morning at 11 o'clock by Dr. W. W. Staley, due to the absence of her pastor, Dr. L. E. Smith. And thus passed from earth to heaven one of God's noble women—our friend.

By order of the Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va.

JONES.

Mrs. Julia Womack Jones, relict of the late lamented Rev. John Andrew Jones, of the Wake Chapel community, Wake County, N. C., passed to her reward Sunday P. M., September 22nd, and the remains were interred in the Wake Chapel Cemetery Tuesday P. M., September 24th.

The services were in charge of the pastor, Rev. J. Lee Johnson, he being assisted by Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro; J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, and Rev. H. C. Caviness, Portsmouth, Va., who spoke loving words of appreciation for the beautiful life and spirit of the deceased.

Sister Jones was born May 24, 1855. Her husband, Rev. John Andrew Jones, died October 1, 1897. Sister Jones, at the age of fifteen, professed faith in Christ and united with the Wake Chapel Christian Church and remained a most faithful, true and devoted member till death. There were ten children of the family, seven of whom survive—Seaton F., Apex, N. C.; Boyd H., Varina, N. C.; J. B., Baltimore, Md.; Mrs. Pearl M. Hancock, Gastonia, N. C.; Mrs. Sallie E. Starling, Goldsboro, N. C.; Mrs. Cora N. Campbell, Raleigh, N. C., and Mrs. Maye Ola Champion, Varina, N. C. Their mother was a pure Christian woman, who leaves behind an influence for God and righteousness that cannot perish from the earth.

A large number of friends and relatives gathered for the funeral services, and the floral offering was abundant and beautiful. Surely, good Sister Jones has reaped the rewards of a faithful Christian life, and now rests from her labors while her works do follow her.

MARTIN.

Whereas, God, in His wisdom, has removed from our midst Bro. W. E. Martin; be it resolved:

First, That in the death of Bro. Martin we have lost a most worthy member.

Second, That we try to emulate those Christian graces so manifested in his life, and strive to exercise that same faith and fidelity shown in all his dealings.

Third, That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and point them to the Master, who is able to help in every time of need.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to The Christian Sun, and a copy entered on the records of the Men's Bible Class of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va.

DENNARD.

Mrs. Mattie Eugene Harris-Dennard was born March 19, 1875, and passed away August 29, 1929. She united with the Church at the age of 16 years. She was married to W. H. Dennard January 23, 1895. To this union was born three children—Mrs. Nannie Mae Allen, Mrs. Anna Pauline Milam, and Mrs. Fannie Ruth Brogdon. She leaves to mourn her going her husband, children, three grandchildren, four brothers and three sisters and a multitude of friends. Her parents, two brothers and three sisters preceded her to the grave.

Her sudden death came as a great shock. That she was dearly loved by all was evidenced by the great throng who attended her funeral and the beautiful floral tributes laid upon her grave. She was a true companion, a loving mother, an humble Christian, faithful to her Lord. She was the queen of one of the happiest homes we have ever visited. It brings sadness to our hearts to see such a home broken up. We rejoice in the fact that the joy of reunion is measured by the sorrow of separation.

A sainted soul has gone home to God. A pillow of Enigma Christian Church has been moved. Services were conducted by the writer, her pastor, assisted by Rev. A. H. Hammond, Baptist pastor. May the God bless Bro. Dennard, the children, and all who are left behind.

MICHAEL.

Mrs. Mary Florantine Michael, age 67 years, died at her home near McLeansville, N. C., October 1, 1929. She was the wife of George Michael, who, with four stepchildren, her three brothers, and a host of other relatives and friends, mourn her going. Her brothers surviving are John Michael, of McLeansville; Daniel Michael, of Brown Summit, and Joseph Michael, of Reidsville.

Burial services, in charge of the writer and Rev. G. W. McClanahan, were held in Frieden's Lutheran Church on the evening of October 3rd, after which her body was laid to rest in the Church cemetery.

Sister Michael was a devout Christian. She became a member of Apple's Chapel Church in her girlhood days and remained loyal to her Church until the time of her summons to the spirit world.

The Michael family are widely known throughout our brotherhood as people of deep consecration and loyal workers, and we feel sure that many will enter deeply with them in their sorrow.

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

THE CHURCH AND WORLD COMMUNITY.

By PRESIDENT A. G. CARIS,
Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio.

It is entirely impossible to summarize in logical fashion the implications and emphases of the meetings and activities of the Federal Council indicating definite currents of thought and action which are converging toward one mighty stream of human aspiration, endeavor and welfare. Such implications and emphases were continually in evidence during the entire week of the meetings. The writer had never before attended a meeting of the council. He had endeavored to keep himself acquainted in a general way with its activities, but found himself literally amazed and almost overwhelmed by the magnitude of its practical undertakings and the breadth of its vision and idealism. It recognizes the realities of world need and the common experience of human woes and discouragement. It has a magnificent faith in the ultimate realization of human brotherhood through the sharing of simple religious aspirations. It believes implicitly in the program of Jesus as the cure for the world's ills, but is not unmindful of the contribution made by forms of Christianity strange to us, or by other religions. To get at least a semblance of orderly presentation, let us think of the various ways in which these implications were manifested.

In the reports of commissions and committees of the Council and affiliated bodies. Naturally we would expect the Commission on International Justice and Good Will to indicate something of the development toward a world community. We were not disappointed. This agency of the Council has endeavored to develop the vague desire of the millions of Church members into an intelligent understanding of the implications of their Christianity with regard to war, and to furnish opportunity for concrete expressions of intelligent conviction. It reported active, patient and tactful co-operation with other organizations in America and Europe and with governmental agencies to promote understanding between nations first and peaceful settlement of misunderstandings when they arise. It has worked consistently for a world organized primarily for peace instead of for war. It prepared the recent Armistice Day folder issued by thousands of Churches in support especially of the Paris peace pact, which it considers the embodiment of the ideal of the Churches in treaty form, and gave the Churches opportunity for concrete expression of their support of that pact by issuing the memorial in its behalf which was signed by so many. It led in the protest of churchmen against the "big navy proposal" which was made last year.

In definite constructive projects for the cultivation of good will among the peoples of the world, it has been active. Through its committee for world friendship among children, the two projects, doll messengers of friendship for Japan and friendly school bags for Mexico, were promoted. It has been insistent in its plea for courteous and respectful treatment of the Oriental nations by our government, and specifically asks for the elimination of humiliating features of the Asiatic exclusion section of the immigration law. It assisted in promoting a campaign this year for famine sufferers in China. It has aided in reconstruction of Churches in Europe. It has co-operated in very close fashion with other great relief enterprises sending succor in the name of the Church.

With all its activities, it has been concerned with the education of the individual Church and Church member in world-wide friendship and accord. One of the most significant utterances of the report is that "the Church membership as a whole is still far from awake to the realities of the situation." One of the striking features of the reports of other commissions of the Council was the extent to which this central theme of world-wide community of interest and brotherhood found some emphasis in almost every report. We regret that there is no space for specific mention of each.

In the prepared program and agenda and the discussions from the floor. The program itself, as prepared by the leaders and adopted by the Council, was a clear indication of their thought of the importance of the topic. They were quite well advised of the reaction of the delegates to the challenge of the program. For the open discussions were indicative of much thought and concern on the part of the delegates and the bodies they represented concerning this great objective of the Church. It was curious to notice the two-fold condition in which most present seemed to think of themselves. They felt themselves without delegated authority from their Churches to speak as with the voice of their constituency on specific details. At the same time, they seemed to welcome the responsibility of speaking as the leaders of their people in favor of fundamental, established principles of Christianity. It was a Council, not a convention of set addresses.

Race problems, economic problems, social problems, international problems were discussed in the extempore talks in every session, no matter what particular topic had been assigned. This was true, though the discussions in the main adhered closely to the subject announced. No one could sit for six days in that assembly without being convinced that if the delegates were, in any degree, representative of the Church of America, the Church is moving in earnest thought and concrete action toward the ideal of world brotherhood on every level of society and in every phase of human relationship. And yet idealistic as was the spirit, there was ever a realistic facing of facts and conditions. A proposal to inaugurate a parliament or league of the religions of the world indicates the range of thought. The fact that it was not considered feasible at the present indicates the careful consideration of realities.

In the visitors and messages. A very real evidence of the far-reaching community of interest was in the fraternal messages from many lands. Then there were messages by the score from government officials, Church bodies, and prominent individuals in many lands testifying to their interest in the purposes of the Council and, in many cases, to their desire to be considered partners in the same great enterprise.

In the personnel of the Council and its set addresses. It is entirely impossible to mention individuals. The membership represented the outstanding leadership of the constituent bodies. Many have grown into capable leadership and have become internationally prominent through their labors in behalf of the causes the Council seeks to promote. Different races were represented and their representatives were brethren in a common task. Perhaps this circumstance is a clearer index of the reality of the acceptance of the principle of brotherhood than the speeches and written reports.

Only the evenings were given for addresses. Every one to which the writer listened had in it the same note of universal brotherhood. One evening was given to the consideration of the theme, "The Churches and World Peace." Judge Florence Allen, of Ohio, and Major-General John F. O'Ryan, of New York, were the speakers. Judge Allen spoke almost passionately in behalf of the Paris peace pact as the first definite expression of ethical law as the basis of international relations, and implied that the time was approaching when the same ethical principles considered right and proper for the basis of relations between individuals would be so considered for international relations. General O'Ryan told us that the world is so organized that war is easy to launch and peace is difficult to attain. He gave citizens of the United States food for grave thought in presenting the way in which he had discovered other peoples considered our attitude toward others than ourselves. He told us that the important factor in the whole problem was not armament, but the man behind the armament. Though he did not mention it specifically, his implication was clear that the Church's task is to motivate individuals and nations to seek real and just peace as earnestly and as passionately as they now seek war.

We shall mention only one other address, that of the first evening by Robert E. Speer, on "The World's Need and the Gospel to Meet It." It

NOTES-PERSONALS

Conference secretaries will please send in their minutes for "The Annual" as soon as possible.

And now the annual Conferences are on, and every Church should see to it that it is represented by interested and competent delegates.

Dr. C. H. Rowland was called home from the Piqua Convention on Sunday evening, October 27th, by a telegram advising that his brother, J. T. Rowland, was critically ill in a Raleigh hospital. At this writing, Bro. Rowland is still living, but his condition is regarded by his physicians as exceedingly critical.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va., on his way to Piqua, was stopped at Columbus, Ohio, by a telegram recalling him to Suffolk for the funeral of one of his members. Bro. Hardcastle returned to Suffolk, conducted the funeral, and then arrived in Piqua in time to take in much of the Convention, during which time he served on one or two very important committees.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield has recently closed a successful and very largely attended series of meetings at our Lynchburg, Va., Church. The Higgins sisters, nationally known singers, assisted in the meetings and in drawing overflow audiences that attended the services. They sang in many parts of Lynchburg and were most favorably received and heard with delight.

At this writing, Saturday P. M., November 2d, Superintendent C. D. Johnston is convalescing very promisingly at the hospital and is able to walk around some in his room and hopes to be brought to his home within a week. There is great rejoicing that this good man has been so abundantly blessed and spared, even through a trying ordeal and a serious operation.

All regretted that Rev. F. C. Lester, pastor, and Dr. W. W. Staley were summoned to Waverly, Va., from the Convention at Piqua on Friday evening, October 25th, to conduct the funeral of Judge J. F. West, at Waverly, on Sunday, the 27th. Other ministers at the Convention were anxious to attend the funeral, but were prevented by duties in the Convention.

Rev. T. Fred Wright, who had accepted the pastorate of our Sanford and Shallow Well Churches, has recently moved with his family to Sanford and takes up the work there. Sanford is one of our important and promising pastorates, and since they have had no pastor for about a year, Bro. Wright will find, by no means, an inactive or an unwilling Church and constituency.

Through a personal letter from Dr. W. W. Staley to the managing editor, THE SUN learns, with deep regret, of the death of Rev. Dr. Jesse T. Whitley, of Norfolk, Va. Dr. Staley says, "I went to see Dr. Jesse Whitley yesterday and he died last night. He preached in Suffolk Christian Church last Sunday, where he preached his first sermon. No doubt that would have been his wish if he had known it was the last."

There were many thrills in the Piqua Convention, and one who attended will not soon forget one or more of them. It would be useless for any one person to try to point them out, for we are sure that the thrills came, the moments of ecstasy and heavenly bliss, to every heart in that Convention. None of us are ever likely to attend its like again, and only this once will those of us who were there be carried to quite such noble heights of good feeling and spiritual fervor.

Rev. D. M. Spence, till recently the pastor of our Henderson Church, has been called to and has accepted the pastorate of our Ocean View Christian Church and is now located at 108 Chesapeake Street, Ocean View, Va. Bro. Spence is delighted at the prospects he finds at Ocean View, and we bespeak for him the very hearty co-operation of a willing and an anxious group of workers at Ocean View. Here is an opportunity for growth and development, and with a pastor located and giving all his time to the work, there seems to be no good reason why the Church there should not go forward with a strong constructive program.

It is learned with deep regret and sorrow that our beloved brother, Rev. H. W. Elder, who, though exceedingly feeble, having attended the sessions of his annual Conference and also the Alabama Conference, on his way home from these meetings suffered from another stroke of paralysis and is, at this writing, in a critical condition. Bro. Elder has carried too heavy a burden for the Church through many years, and we sorely lament that so early in life his body suffers from the strain of years. To his everlasting credit and honor, be it said, he has built more Churches than has any other minister of our entire brotherhood.

One of the great utterances of the Convention at Piqua, Ohio, was the sermon by Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., at the evening session October 24th, when he used for his topic "Financing the Kingdom." One felt in the meeting that Dr. Smith was not only uttering his own convictions and sentiments about stewardship, but that he was expressing the universal experience of those who have been burdened with the task and responsibility of carrying forward the work of the kingdom, especially as it pertained to finance. Dr. Smith drove home, to the hearts of his hearers, that which many already realized, that financing the kingdom of our Lord may and should be made a part of real worship and spiritual growth and power.

Rev. W. C. Hook, Holland, Va., was one of the very fortunate pastors at the Piqua Convention who enjoyed and appreciated the trip, with expenses borne by a liberal purse made up among and given to him by his appreciative Holland congregation. We were told also that Rev. J. F. Morgan, of South Norfolk, enjoyed a similar privilege, and this must have been true, because these two especially had smiles on their faces at the Convention that would not come off, and hearty handshakes that showed gladness from grateful hearts. It was indeed worth the while of any Church to send its pastor to a gathering of such spirit and proportions, for that pastor attending the Convention must certainly be a stronger man and a greater preacher because of what he saw and experienced at Piqua.

At their recent annual sessions, the two Conferences, the Georgia and Alabama and the Alabama, jointly elected a field worker to give his full time to the general work of these two bodies. Rev. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., was elected for this important work upon which he entered November 1st. Under a recent date, Bro. Hunt writes: "I am working out a program after the following order: education, missions and evangelism. I am to strengthen the things that are weak and to go into new territory and develop new work. I mean to put all I have and all of my ability in the work. I mean to bring every Church of these two Conferences into a closer relationship with our missionary interest and to place Piedmont Junior College upon the heart of our great Church in Georgia and Alabama. I mean to try, God being my helper, to bring souls to Christ through evangelistic effort. I am scheduled to attend the State meeting of the Congregational Churches of Georgia at Demorest, Ga., Tuesday, November 5th, and the Alabama State meeting November 8th, at Thorsby, Ala. Our two Conferences this year were great, and we feel encouraged to go forward with a larger program for the coming year in the name of our Lord."

CONFERENCES MEET.

North Carolina and Virginia meets with Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., Tuesday, November 12, 1929.

Eastern North Carolina meets Tuesday, November 19, 1929, with Mt. Auburn Church, Warren County, N. C.

NOTICE.

The Educational Committee of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference is called to meet in THE CHRISTIAN SUN office, Elon College, N. C., at 2:30 P. M., Monday, November 11, 1929. All those having business with the committee will confer a favor by being present at the time and place designated.

J. O. ATKINSON, Ch'n.

NOTICE.

The North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference convenes with the Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., November 12-14. Virgilina is on the Norfolk division of the Southern Railway, forty-seven miles east of Danville and fifteen miles west of Clarksville. The day trains from Danville arrive at 10:35 A. M. and 6:52 P. M.; from Norfolk, 3:50 P. M. Those coming by automobile, bear in mind that Virgilina is eighteen miles southeast of South Boston, eighteen miles north of Roxboro, and twenty-two miles northwest of Oxford.

All persons expecting to attend Conference will kindly notify Mr. Alfred Hayes, chairman of entertainment committee, and state whether you are coming by train or automobile.

C. E. NEWMAN, Pastor.

TO OUR PASTORS.

We have had the misfortune to lose our barn at the Orphanage, by fire, including feed for our stock. It is absolutely necessary to rebuild this barn and to buy feed for our cattle this winter. In order to do this, we are forced to call on our Churches and Sunday Schools for a special offering for this.

In view of the fact that our superintendent, Bro. Chas. D. Johnston, is ill in the hospital at Burlington, and therefore not able to visit the Churches and make an appeal for this cause, I have requested each member of the board of trustees to visit as many Churches as it is possible for them to, and personally make this appeal. If there has ever been a time that the Orphanage needed the assistance of the pastors and Churches, it is now.

If it is impossible for one of the members of the board of trustees to visit your Church, will you not please take this matter up with your congregation and ask for a special offering for the Orphanage at this time?

Thanking you in advance for your co-operation, I am,

Very truly,
J. M. DARDEN,
Chairman, Board of Trustees.

BEYOND DOUBT.

LIFE'S GREATEST CONVICTION.

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If any man will hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him and he with me."—Rev. 3:20.

"Unless you turn and become like little children, ye will never get into the kingdom of heaven at all."—Matt. 18:3 (Moffatt).

"Everything here, but the soul of man, is a passing shadow. The only enduring substance is within. When shall we awake to the sublime greatness, the perils, the accountableness, and the glorious destinies of the immortal soul?"—Channing.

There are a great many people to whom God is unknown; and that right openly. There are organizations of unbelievers who are binding themselves together to promote unbelief. They are teaching that there is no proof that there is a God, and that Jesus Christ was no more than any other man. They hold that the Bible is contradictory, that it was written by man and at various times during time, and therefore not certain. These things being true, there can be no sensible belief in God and Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world. These people call themselves atheists and agnostics. Their unbelief is called atheism and agnosticism.

This unbelief in God is affecting not only religion, but it is affecting life. Life is made worth while by men of deep convictions. The greatest men that history has ever afforded the world—men who have made the world worth while—have been the men of deepest conviction. These greatest men have been men not only with deep convictions, but with deep convictions about God. If we are to have an age without such convictions of the nobleness of character, humanness of man, and life more noble and free, it is a very poor outlook for the country.

The Influence of Doubtings.

When we talk about deep convictions in God, relations of God to man and man to God, we are aware that the Churches are divided and that they scarcely know themselves where they stand. However, it is encouraging to find that all the Churches are united in one thing, and that is, their search to maintain a reality of God in their life and their value of faith in their religion; and their experience is that when these have their way, agnosticism falls behind. However, we are face to face with the fact of a host of organized unbelievers, and the teachers of religion, whose business it is to persuade people that God is important in life, find that their chief enemy is the unbeliever. This influence has so settled itself upon life that it goes further than a mere disbelief in God. It used to be that folks doubted God. We have always had such with us. But now they doubt not only God, but they doubt the worth of one another.

The influence of this belief has reached its climax (perhaps I should say "impetus" rather than "climax") in the World War. So far as we are able to discern now, there has never been a time in all the history of the world when trust in one another has been struck such a blow as in the World War. It almost reduced man's thinking to mere animal regard for one another—mere beasts. Of course, man does belong to the animal kingdom, and there is much in him that is bestial, but he who thinks at all is compelled to know that there is something more to man than that which is bestial. For instance, man is not content to live on bestial levels. We are told that a bird in the cage flutters against the bars of his cage because his wings are made to fly, and that there is in him nature's impelling power to struggle for the great spaces outside where he can be satisfied and happy and live his normal life.

Likewise, there is something in man that struggles for something more than he is; something beyond all that is material and animal. He loves living. He loves value. He loves to know the truth. If he is a true man, he loves duty and honor, beauty and courage; and to obtain these he will pay any price. He will starve, and slave, and suffer, and die if need be, and counts himself happy to have had the chance. Animals do not act that way, and the most of us are miserable when we behave like animals. We have been made for something beyond, and that something Bishop Foster has called the completion of things. "I feel that I was made to complete things," he says. "To attempt only a mass of beginnings, without completion, would be only to make a failure. Perfection is the heritage of man, and since this short life does not give perfection, I must have immortal life in which to find it. God does nothing in vain. When He gives power, it is for an end. Since He has put in my soul a germ that grows unto eternity, He means that it shall grow to eternity. Shall man alone, imperial man, be sown in barren ground less privileged than the grain of the field?"

It is thus that man is conscious of realities beyond him and of the call of those realities, and he who has thought enough to have an honest disbelief has been brought by that thought to a threshold of thought wherein is a realm of larger realities, and where God is discovered. All one needs to do is to enter in. This is where Jesus says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him and he with me" (Rev. 3:20).

There is nothing the world needs more than the knowledge of the true God. It is that, and that alone, that lifts humanity toward the goal. When Jesus said, "If any man . . . will open the door, I will come in to him," He was repeating what He had said before to the disciple: "Seek and ye shall find," and He meant that there was in this could seek for. He was reiterating the life-long "beyond" through the open door all that man principle of finding what one looks for; which is to say, if one hungers for truth he will find truth; to hunger for beauty and goodness means that he shall have it; to seek God means to find Him and know Him. And the passion of his search is just like the passion for anything else—irresistible. To be converted and have a consuming desire for God, means that nothing will stop one in his search for Him. He will lay aside food and drink, motors and position, amusements and pleasures, and everything else, that he may feed his heart on his desire. He will find God, who to know means to shame one's sins into decency. That is the realm through the door beyond doubt.

How long are we going to have men too cowardly to enter in? How long are we going to ignore the one particular thing that means most to our lives? How long will we go without prayer, the Word of God, and the blessing of the Holy Spirit?

How long shall we regard the Church as a polite appendage to life, a good thing to have, but give it no support? How long shall we be initiated into the knowledge of crafts and human skill, the sciences and the world's knowledge, and neglect our approach to God and a knowledge of Him? There is a lesson we all must learn, and that is, no one can live nobly until he has learned to think grandly; and to think grandly, we must have a deep inner conviction of the destiny of man beyond a doubt, through the door into the realm of God and His blessing.

The Great Conviction.

If these things be true, I submit that the greatest conviction of life is that of man's ultimate destiny. Aristotle said, "The nature of a thing lies in its end, for what a thing is when it is developed is what it is, whether we speak of a horse or a man." Mr. H. Howard, in "Summits of the Soul," said:

"Cunning cast in clay:

Let science prove we are, and then

What matters science unto men—

At least to me? I would not stay.

"Let him, the wiser man, who springs

Hereafter, up from childhood's shape,

His action like the great ape;

But I was born to other things."

But we must know God before we can realize this. For example, only those who know the relation of Father and Son, and do all within their power to maintain that relation, rejoice in it. All others are prodigal sons, runaways from their father's house; but, like the prodigal, it matters not how far away one may go, and how low he may descend in iniquity, he still maintains his relation, he is still a son, and he still retains his ability to regain his departed purity. He may have lost his character, but that which belongs to his being he cannot lose. It is thus that we must realize that every one of us is a son of God, and we are sacred because we are; and, if sacred, what we need to do is open the door and enter in. How true is the Eastern fable:

"O ye who seek to solve the knot,
Ye live in God, yet know Him not;
Ye sit upon a river's brink,
Yet crave in vain a drop to drink;
Ye dwell besides a countless store,
Yet perish hungry at the door."

Our God "is the Lord of heaven and earth, and dwelleth not in temples made with hands," and until a man has thought things through beyond his own understanding, beyond his own reasoning, beyond that which he can prove, he has not been just to himself, he cannot be just to his fellow-man, and he cannot approach the reality of God—he has not even used ordinary common sense. Jesus must have meant this when He said, "Except ye become as little children, ye will never get into the kingdom of heaven at all" (Moffatt). There is one outstanding characteristic of a child, and that is, he instinctively looks forward to the years of his maturity and contemplates with enthusiasm what he is going to do and what he is going to be when he is a man. You and I shall be worth very little to ourselves or to any one else until we shall have decided that the most important thing to us is that we must have some sort of notion of the soul's maturity. Herrick Johnson said, "The saddest of all failures is that of the soul, with its capabilities and possibilities, failing of life everlasting, an entering upon the night of death upon which the morning never dawns." And never was there more fitting words said than those of A. MacLaren: "As the flowers follow the sun, and silently hold up their petals to be tinted by its shining glory, so must we, if we would know the way of God. For the most part, God speaks in such silence only.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

UNITED FOR SERVICE.

The plan of union of Congregational and Christian Churches, as now adopted by the two national bodies of these Churches, was printed in full in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of last week. The plan, however, gives but little indication of what has now been accomplished, and is likely to be accomplished, by the union. As stated already and repeatedly, the plan in no wise affects the local Church, either as to name or polity. Both among Congregationalists and Christians, the local Church is autonomous, and manages its own affairs, using the conference and conventional activities to express and to assert itself in institutional activities—missions, education, benevolence and the rest. In brief, what was effected by the Christians in their national gathering at Piqua, October 25, 1929, and the Congregationalists in their national meeting at Detroit, June 3, 1929, was to unify and consolidate the machinery of the two bodies as it pertained to institutional, national and international activities.

Two facts should be kept constantly in mind:

1. Every Christian Church remains a Christian Church, with its principles, polity and traditions, unless and until that Church shall prefer, in its own right to call itself a united Church, or by some equally significant name. The same is true of every Congregational Church. Christians and Congregationalists, through all their history, have been zealous of their thoroughly democratic organization and the autonomy and sovereignty of the local Church. These have not been violated by the decisions of the national bodies.

2. No load, burden or task has been lifted from the local Church or individuals in the local Church, financially or otherwise. Instead of this, our problems have become more weighty, our responsibilities have increased, and our tasks have been enlarged, for these are the inevitable consequences of enlarged opportunities. Our opportunities for service and for activity have been enlarged, and the enlargement of opportunities entails necessarily an increase of obligations. Congregationalists and Christians, in brief, have decided to unite their institutional, national and world-wide efforts under the leadership of our Lord only, in the endeavor to make this a better world and thus present a solid front and a united effort in kingdom activity and enlargement.

But we have done more than this. We have shown to a divided Protestantism that there is a possibility of union of forces for the larger task of the kingdom. We have blazed the way, and by that act invited other Christian bodies, certainly of all Protestant faiths, to follow in the way that our Lord is leading; to sink non-essential difference, and with charity to all and malice to none, forget the things that divide and reach after the things that unite; and with Him, our Lord, present a solid front to evil everywhere, and unite in proclaiming that we have one and the same Lord Christ who is over all and above all, blessed forever more. Thus is His prayer answered (John 17:21), "That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me."

There were many tense and thrilling moments and events of the great Convention. Even these, however, had their climax in the matchless event that occurred between 4:30 and 4:40 P. M. Friday, October 25th, when the final vote on the last item of "the plan" had been taken, and like all the other votes, was unanimous; and then the grand climax of the whole, when the vote was taken on "the plan as a whole," and it was realized by every one present that the whole plan of union was adopted unanimously and with hearty acclaim and approval. Neither the writer, nor any other member of that body, we fancy, can describe the feeling that pervaded the great audience and the holy affluat that seemed to fill the house and embrace the entire assembly in heavenly fellowship. The moment beggars description, for it was a time and an event such as one only sees and feels once in a lifetime. Somehow, one was carried beyond the power of earthly thinking and expression, because a great and far-reaching event, even in the history of Christianity, had occurred. In speaking of the same afterwards, Dr. F. G. Coffin, who was presiding, very appropriately observed that we have either killed a Church or made history in opening the way to a greater Church.

And now it is left to us, by our consecration and devotion to the union of Christians, to carry on in the name of our Lord a larger program for activity in His service. The Convention at Piqua, Ohio, did not lift the burden or solve the problem of any one, so far as sacrificial service and loyalty to our Lord are concerned. It only gave a larger opportunity for greatly increased responsibility, and set before all of us tasks and problems for the future which can only be wrought out by increased effort and wisdom through Christ, our Lord, who, we believe, is leading us on in this marvelous union and fellowship. THE FIRE LOSS AT THE ORPHANAGE.

As was announced in last week's SUN, a destructive fire visited our Orphanage between 10 and 12 o'clock on the night of October 24th, when the barn that housed a large supply of hay for the winter, and the herd cattle, went up in smoke. Fortunately, the cattle was saved, with the single exception of one so badly burned before driven from the building that he had to be butchered the next day. The feed was destroyed, of course, and the large barn was totally destroyed. The silo standing close by the barn was injured only slightly, and that at the top, so that the silage that it contained is saved and all right.

The farmer at the Orphanage estimates that he has in stacks and stored elsewhere at least fifteen tons of hay, but that it requires something like fifty tons to supply the herd of twenty or more through the year. This means that either through donations or purchase, approximately thirty-five tons of hay will have to be added to the supply during the year. The insurance on the building was $2,000. In the absence of the superintendent, who, at this writing, has not been consulted in the matter, the writer has no estimate as to the amount that will be required to rebuild. We are warranted in saying, however, that a much better and an improved barn will be built to take the place of the old one, just as soon as the funds can be collected with which to build the same. The estimate of the cost will be given through THE SUN as soon as the building committee and Bro. Johnston shall be able to secure the same.

Five of the trustees, living in North Carolina and not far from the Orphanage, met with the chairman, Bro. J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va., at the Orphanage Saturday, November 2nd, and decided, with the group of trustees that had previously met in Virginia, to proceed to collect funds with which to build the barn, which funds are to be no part of the Thanksgiving offering or the donations for current expenses. The trustees decided that they would themselves solicit a fund sufficient to rebuild, without laying any of the burden or responsibility thereof upon Bro. Johnston, who, though convalescent from a recent surgical operation, will need all of his strength and time to look after the Thanksgiving offering and otherwise direct the affairs of the institution.

The following motion was adopted and made a part of record: "Moved and adopted that J. M. Darden be appointed secretary and treasurer of the rebuilding fund of the barn burned at the Elon Orphanage on the evening of October 24th, and that all moneys received and contributed, including the $2,000 insurance on building, and its contents for this purpose, shall be sent to J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va. And all moneys received by him are to be deposited in the Farmers Bank of Nansemond, Suffolk, Va., to the credit of the rebuilding fund of the Christian Orphanage by J. M. Darden, chairman."

In addition to this, Bro. J. M. Darden was appointed to conduct a campaign for funds in the Churches and Sunday Schools of the Eastern Virginia Conference for the rebuilding fund; Bro. W. B. Truitt to conduct a similar campaign in the Eastern North Carolina Conference, the Western North Carolina Conference, and the North Carolina and Virginia Conference; Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va., to conduct a similar campaign in the Valley of Virginia Conference; and Rev. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., in the Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Conference. These brethren are to conduct the campaign for the "rebuilding fund," which the trustees wish the brotherhood at large to understand is a thing entirely separate and apart from the Thanksgiving offering, or any other offering, or donations, intended to or going for current expenses and support of the Orphanage.

As has often been said, the Orphanage is the heart of the Church, and its claims will find a ready response in the hearts and minds of those who care for the needy, the dependent and the unfortunate. We know that our constituency will not fail in this time of need and loss, and that it will not be long before Bro. Darden and his co-workers will be able to turn over to a building committee funds sufficient to replace the barn and the heavy loss sustained by the fire. Meanwhile, our people should bear in mind and heart the necessity of a liberal Thanksgiving offering. The expenses are heavy and increasing at the Orphanage. Bro. Johnston has undergone a serious surgical operation and will be confined to his room for many days, maybe some weeks, yet, and this should cause all of us to make an increased effort to see to it that the Thanksgiving offering this November shall be the largest in the history of the institution. CHRISTIAN UNION BEGINS.

Christian union begins. For 135 years and a little more, the Christian Church has stood for Christian union. To be exact, during the Conference held in Surry County, Va., at the old Lebanon Church, August 4th and 5, 1794, an historic Conference, in which the Church officially began, the passion for Christian union of our Church was voted, in a statement of purpose, based on the prayer of our Lord for the oneness of his followers.

In 1808, in the first volume of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, the great O'Kelly contributed an article, giving forty reasons for Christian union. Christian union has been a passion with the Christian Church from its beginning, and on the 25th of October, 1929, at 4:40, in the afternoon, in the city of Piqua, Ohio, the final vote, approving the union with the Congregational Church was taken. That this vote should be unanimous is a source of general satisfaction to all, but that it had to come eventually no one who is at all acquainted with the Christian Church would have hesitated to believe. One hundred and thirty-five years is a long time when viewed according to the span of human life, but when viewed in terms of divine processes and movements it is a brief space.

All of us feel, however, that the vote at this time consummating the union with the Congregationalists, is but the beginning of what we believe and pray will be a tidal wave of Christian union that will sweep the United States and the rest of the Christian world into a solid phalanx of unity as well as union for Christ.

On Saturday following the unanimous vote, the Commission on Christian Unity of the Christian Church and the Commission of Inter-Church Relations of the Congregational Church met and decided, for the future, to become a single body, in order to approach other denominations on the question of Christian union. The chairmen of the two national commissions and the secretaries of the national bodies, or perhaps I should say the former national bodies, were constituted an executive committee to arrange for such approaches and meetings with other denominations. Christian union has begun. May it never end.

OUR SAVIOUR'S PROGRAM.

It should be borne in mind that the program of the Church is not a human but a divine program. We are not endeavoring, through the Church, to build up merely human enterprises, interests or institutions. All institutions of the Church—missionary, educational and benevolent—are products and fruits of a divine institution. Man did not found, and man is not building, the Church. Bear in mind His words, "I will build my Church," said the Lord Christ, "and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it"; and so what we are seeking to do is to so live with Him and think with Him and plan with Him that we may be co-workers together with Him in carrying out, not our, but His program and purpose in the world.

Are there criticisms of missionary interests and enterprises? Then, let us ask ourselves if missions is an institution of man or an institution of God. If of God and the plans adopted are of God, we should be exceedingly careful of our criticisms, lest we criticize the plans and purposes of God and not of man. Are there criticisms of our educational and benevolent institutions and enterprises? If so, we should be very careful of those criticisms, lest we criticize not the institutions and the enterprises of man, but the purposes and the plans of Almighty God in projecting and establishing His work and His kingdom on the earth. We should bear in mind that God has chosen, in His wisdom, to employ only human beings as His agents and His co-workers in establishing His kingdom on earth and in enlarging it. It becomes Christians, therefore, to inquire first of all: Is this a legitimate enterprise, institution and program of the Church of the living God, and is this enterprise, institution and program in the hands of God and working according to the plans and purposes of God? If so, we can well afford to give the same our loving loyalty, our hearty support and our liberal donations. The Church of the living God is not a man-made enterprise, it is not an institution founded of man, by man or for man. It is an institution founded of God, for God's kingdom, for promoting His work in carrying out His program in the world. It will help to develop us individuals morally and spiritually to give the same our most loving and loyal interest, sympathy, support and co-operation. J. O. A.

"THEN CAME PROHIBITION."

By CARLTON M. SHERWOOD,

Ex. Sec'y, Citizens Committee of One Thousand.

THEN CAME PROHIBITION, by Bert H. Davis. A handbook of anti-alcohol facts, intended particularly for young people. Contains an array of scientific, economic, social and political facts about the old-time drink evil and modern prohibition. International Society of Christian Endeavor, publishers, 41 Mount Vernon St., Boston, Mass.; paper, 25c.

"Why do people drink?" "What was the saloon?" "What happened when a State sold liquor?" Bert H. Davis' brief textbook, "Then Came Prohibition," answers such questions as these and presents an array of arresting facts about the movement against intoxicating beverages. It was written as a "prohibition primer," and the response within a few weeks of publication indicates that older persons are as eager to refresh the memory and absorb new prohibition facts as young folks are to have these data in concise form.

Nor is the book a mere encyclopedia. Mr. Davis uses the same interesting and swift-moving style that characterizes "Citizenship Ideals for Christian Youth," which has attained popularity as a young people's study and reference book throughout the United States.

Alcohol's use by man is rooted in tradition. Social custom for centuries has sanctioned drinking habits. The literature and the folk-tales of countless nations are crowded with alcoholic episodes. "The pressure of daily living" seems to demand this mild but dangerous narcotic. In several brief quotations from authoritative writings, Mr. Davis shows the extent and relative "good intentions" of the alcoholic use of past generations.

Times have changed more than we realize, perhaps, until we read these transcripts from another day. Alcohol has lost prestige. How did this come to pass? The author shows in detail how industry, science, religious and moral forces, the will of the people expressed in laws, and finally the saloon itself have all brought prohibition to America.

The saloons fought control. Instances of the bitterness of their losing battle against public opinion are given. The coming of local option and of State prohibition is shown. The process of amending the Constitution by the action of all but two of the forty-eight States is given in interesting detail.

The text then takes up pointedly seven typical questions of the present day, which friends of prohibition must answer satisfactorily to convince the average, middle-of-the-road citizen. The forms which these answers may take are briefly indicated. A practical chapter on "How Youth Can Help" is included. The suggestions made are adaptable to the programs and projects of Sunday School classes, young people's societies, high school groups, and young people's organizations generally. The approach is civic in the best sense, rather than strictly religious.

"Prohibition has given democracy a new distinction," writes Mr. Davis in the closing message of the book. "Religious faith and practice made part of the world dry. Science and education have aided prohibition. Industry helped us to shake off the weight of the alcoholic system.

"But dictators in government have not dared to disrupt this blighting and sordid business. It remained for the first of the free republics of the world to set free countless victims of the liquor appetite and to relieve millions from coming into contact with this organized form of anti-social trade.

"Youth, with healthy bodies and alert minds, calls on the world to witness its defense of this great gain for democracy and humanity."

A NATION WITHOUT SUNDAYS.

Russia, by order of the Soviet government, has abolished Sunday from her calendar. Her people will have work days and rest days, but no Sundays and no religious holidays. Under the new twenty-four-hour system of labor, workers will have one day of rest every five days, but with the shifts so arranged that labor in the industries will be continuous. To a people brought up to observe the traditional Christian Sunday, the elimination of the Sabbath is a heavy blow to the religious life of the Russian people. Deprived of its Sundays, a religious community loses one of its most treasured institutions. The right observance of Sunday touches the character of the individual at every stage of his life.

The religious training of children has its emphasis in the Sunday School. The societies which train the youth of the Church for their future leadership all meet on Sunday. The Church carries forward its mighty work of saving the world through its preaching services on Sunday. And in addition, the Sunday brings its privilege of quiet communion, the study of God's Word, and spiritual cultivation. Without the sacred services which belong to the proper observance of Sunday, a people is grievously handicapped in developing its religious life. So it will prove with Russian Christians. The action of the Soviet Union is but another step in its plan of eliminating religion from the life of this people. The Soviets have declared that religion is an opiate, and must be banished from the land. What substitute for religion the government can offer the average Russian community, it is difficult to imagine. For the Russian people have, by nature, a mystical temperament and through centuries have grown accustomed to a highly ritualistic religious service. That the religious life of the people will suffer through the lack of Sunday observance is certain. That the Soviet plan to suppress Christianity in Russia may fail is the prayer of Christians throughout the world.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The most interesting thing known to man is life; and the next most interesting thing is death. These two occupy the thought, the feeling, and the heart of mankind. The new baby in the home and the new grave in the cemetery furnish suggestion enough to connect life and death in the mind of all who think and love. Between these two facts lie all the experiences that make up life as an experience in work, education, religion, and home. In all that history, God moves upon the heart and man obeys or neglects to obey His will. His word and His Spirit furnish the helps for the building of Christian character, without which there is nothing worthy in man.

Miss Hattie Francis Lewis was the daughter of Dr. John Walker Lewis, of Harrellsville, N. C. She was born the first day of April, 1864. Her childhood and young womanhood were spent in the Old North State. She married Col. Alexander Savage, and they lived happily together until his death, April 6, 1911. Col. Savage was an officer in the Confederate Army during the Civil War, and lost one leg. He was a man of sterling social, business and Christian character. He was a prominent and active member of the Christian Church, not only a brave soldier in the army of his country, but a true soldier in the army of the Lord. He was a member of the committee of seven from the Southern Christian Convention that united with a like committee from the American Christian Convention in recommending the union of the two Conventions at Marion, Ind., in 1890. That was the first union of Churches of the same denomination between the North and South, after the Civil War. He was eighty when he passed to his reward.

His wife, Mrs. Hattie Lewis Savage, survived her dear husband eighteen years, and joined him in that "house not made with hands on August 6, 1929, and was buried from the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., on August 8th. She had united with the Third Christian Church before it became the Christian Temple, and remained a devout and useful member of that Church till the time of her death. In many respects, Mrs. Savage (everybody called her Miss Hattie) was a remarkable woman. Religious to the core, sociable by nature and habit, true to her friends, active in the work of the Church, and sympathetic with the unfortunate, she made friends and held them with strong cords. Of a fine spirit, co-operative in Church work, full of humor, and a quick mind, she was very useful in the Lord's work in the Christian Temple. She passed away while her pastor, Dr. L. E. Smith, was abroad, and that made a sad spot in his return; but the memory of her sweet life and devotion to her Church and her loved ones brightens the future and the hope of reunion where parting is unknown. Her life was a bundle of faith, love and good cheer, and she is now at home with her dear husband in glory with crowns of righteousness on their heads.

She is survived by one sister, Mrs. Bettie Farrell, of Norfolk, with whom she spent her last years and her last day. She is also survived by two brothers. The sunset is as beautiful as the sunrise, and the afterglow floods the world with golden glory; so the lives of good people flood the world with good memories after they sink out of sight.

ELON LETTER.

The real test of a denominational college is the way it integrates itself into the life of the denomination that sponsors and supports it, and grasps every opportunity to espouse and promote it. Without any disposition to boast, the facts as revealed in the recent General Convention of the Christian Church, held in Piqua, Ohio, as they relate to the Elon Alumni, will be set forth in this letter.

The General Board of the Christian Church has fifty-two members, and four graduates of Elon College are members of this board. In addition to this, two graduates of the college are on the standing commissions of the General Convention. Elon is particularly happy that two of its alumni were among the seven on the Commission on Christian Union which worked out the plan of merger with the Congregational Church.

The recent session of our General Convention had on its program sixty-five speakers from the Christian Church, and fourteen of these were Elon graduates. If those were counted who hold honorary degrees from Elon, or who have been or are faculty members and trustees, this number would be considerably increased. Only those were counted who hold earned degrees from the college, or who have done undergraduate work here.

The General Convention enrolled 212 duly accredited delegates, in addition to a large number of visitors. Elon Alumni in this group numbered thirty-seven, although the Convention was held from 500 to 1,000 miles from the homes of the most of these delegates. The list of those who attended as delegates from the Southern Convention is as follows: Dr. L. E. Smith, Rev. O. D. Poythress, Rev. J. E. McCauley, Rev. J. F. Morgan, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Dr. N. G. Newman, Rev. W. C. Hook, Rev. J. W. Fix, Rev. F. C. Lester, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Rev. S. M. Lynam, Mrs. S. M. Lynam, Prof. C. J. Velie, Mr. C. M. Cannon, Mrs. C. M. Cannon, Dr. G. O. Lankford, Rev. S. C. Harrell, Dr. I. W. Johnson, Rev. B. J. Earp, Rev. A. W. Andes, Rev. R. L. Williamson, Rev. G. H. Veazey, Rev. G. D. Hunt, Mrs. J. A. Williams, Mrs. W. A. Harper, and the writer.

Elon Alumni from other sections of the Church attending as delegates were Rev. C. J. Felton, Rev. E. T. Cotten, Rev. Archie H. Hook, Rev. R. H. Peel, Rev. W. T. Scott, Rev. John G. Truitt, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Prof. Selden B. Humphrey, and Rev. E. H. Rainey. In addition to those who attended as delegates, there were several present as visitors.

During the past year, the Christian Church, in co-operation with the Congregational Church, has commissioned three missionaries, two for the foreign field and one for the home field—Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White, Jr., and Miss Graham Rowland. All three of these missionaries are Elon alumni.

The General Convention, in applying the conditions set forth in the merger, for co-operation on a national basis between the Christian Church and the Congregational Church, elected fifteen persons to the Congregational boards, and four of these are Elon alumni, although it was specifically stated that it would be necessary to elect at least half of these representatives in close proximity to Boston, Chicago or New York City, since these are the cities in which the Congregational boards meet, and frequent meetings are required.

As has been stated in the beginning, these facts are not set forth in any spirit of boasting, but that the Church may know in what way the college is serving the denomination. For an institution that is only forty years old, it would appear that the record is phenomenal. Those who have supported the college and made its life and work possible should take great satisfaction in this evidence that Elon is really fulfilling its mission.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

Ten thousand dollars must be raised at once. Dr. Frank E. Jenkins, with his co-workers, are undertaking this task, together with the $50,000 called for. Piedmont Junior College holds a note of the Convention for $12,500 as a part of its endowment. To give this note stability of value and make it acceptable as endowment to the standardizing agencies, the Convention pays out of that portion of its funds set aside as "undistributed" 6 per cent interest annually, or $750. This leaves $9,250 to be raised by the college in the name of the Convention from the following sources:

1. From quarterly Sunday School offerings in Georgia and Alabama Conferences, $250. The Alabama Conference has agreed to pay $150, and the Georgia and Alabama Conference, $100.

2. From the Church quotas in Georgia and Alabama Conferences, $1,000. In order to make this permanent, the Georgia and Alabama Conference gave their note for $7,500 endowment, which will draw 5 per cent, or $375. This is apportioned to the Churches. The Alabama Conference gave their note for $12,500 at 5 per cent, or $625. This amount is apportioned to the Churches on the same basis.

3. From members of the Southern Christian Convention outside of Georgia and Alabama Conferences, $5,000. The Conferences of Virginia and North Carolina are expected to make some such arrangement as the Georgia and Alabama Conferences to take care of the $5,000 to be raised in the bounds of the Conference for current expenses for Piedmont Junior College and to make proper adjustment for the $100,000 in bonds made to Bethlehem College and later turned over to Elon College as endowment in order to have enough endowment to become a member of the Southern Association of Colleges.

4. From the general public, $3,000. The appeal made by Dr. Jenkins is urgent, because we must have the money. Our people have the money which is necessary to meet the current expenses as outlined by the Convention, and we must have it. There is nowhere in the Convention territory where a college is more needed and where a small amount of money will bring larger returns. Thirty-five cents per member for the year would meet the Convention budget for this institution. Let us contribute the $10,000 at once.

S. L. BEUGHER.

DANVILLE, VA.

We held our first week of Bible study in our Church the week following the third Sunday in October, with classes as follows: Bible story telling from 7 to 8 P. M., by Miss Lillian White, for beginners; object lesson and Bible drill from 7 to 8 P. M., by Miss Liner McClanahan, for juniors. A course in chapter summary was given by our pastor from 7 to 7:30, and Bro. J. Lee Johnson gave a course on the study of the Church from 7:30 to 8 P. M.

At the 8 o'clock hour, Sister Gladys Barker and Bro. J. W. Dixon gave an interesting song service. After which, Bro. Johnson spoke. On Monday evening he brought a message on "The Threefold Gospel of Grace." First, the gospel of the kingdom in which he showed us very plainly that there could not be a kingdom without a king; second, the everlasting gospel. This was the angelic gospel (Rev. 14:6); third, the gospel of grace, in which he gave the threefold gospel—His death, resurrection, and His coming.

Tuesday and Wednesday evenings he spoke to us on some of the "Prophetic Untils." Thursday evening he spoke on "Four Judgments." These were: first, judgment of the believer's sin (John 5:25); second, judgment of believer's works (1 Cor. 3:9-12, 2 Cor. 5:10); third, judgment of the nations (Matt. 25:31-46); fourth judgment of the dead (Rev. 20:12-15). Friday evening he spoke on "Millenium." He spoke on the millenium in relationship to Christ, the Church, Israel, Satan, the nations, and the earth.

His messages were clear, forceful and enjoyed by all. It was stated by a number that attended this week of Bible study that it was one of the greatest events in the history of the Church.

UNITED CHRISTIAN CHURCH OF LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

LYNCHBURG, VA.

Sunday night, October 20th, brought to a close the revival services that had been in progress at the United Christian Church since Sunday, October 13th. Previous to these services there had been held a week of cottage prayer meetings in the various homes of the community. During the meeting there were prayer services held each afternoon. The pastor did most of the preaching. He was relieved on Tuesday night by the Rev. Joseph H. Lynch, pastor of the Methodist Protestant Church, and on Thursday night by the Rev. Joel Vause, pastor of Euclid Avenue Christian Church (Disciples). He was most ably assisted in song by the Higgins sisters' quartet, who are members of Pleasant Ridge Christian Church, Guilford County, N. C. These girls are all graduates of Shenandoah College, Dayton, Va., and in a contest at Boston, Mass., this summer, represented Virginia and won a silver loving cup for both vocal and instrumental music. They have entered the field of evangelistic singing and are making good in a great way. The Church here feels that they have been very fortunate indeed in securing them for a series of meetings, and hope to have them again next year. They are in great demand. Two other Churches here in Lynchburg have expressed a desire to secure them for their meetings. They arrived in town Friday before the meeting was to begin on Sunday, and sang at a cottage prayer meeting, and on Sunday morning went to Euclid Avenue Christian Church to sing for the Sunday School hour there. In the afternoon they put on a sacred concert at Miller Park before a crowd estimated at 3,000 people. After the concert, people crowded around to find out where they were to sing, and, beginning Sunday, the Church was packed at every service. Additional chairs were secured, but large numbers had to stand at each service and many were turned away.

These girls are artists of unusual talent, and many were heard to say that never in the history of the city had there been such singing rendered here. They sang each day at noon in some industrial plant in the city, and one day at Lynchburg College and one day at the E. C. Class high school. Each afternoon two of these girls conducted a children's service at the Church. This service was on the order of the daily vacation Bible school, and it was conducted on a very high plane and the girls did a great amount of good.

On Friday night, the employees of Thornhill Wagon Works presented the girls with an express wagon, to be given by them to their younger brother. The employees of the N. & W. Overall Company presented them a suit of overalls for another brother.

On Monday afternoon as the delegates to the General Convention passed through the city, the girls went down to the station and boarded the special car and sang for them. On Monday night they put on a secular concert at the Church, and though it had been raining all afternoon and was still very disagreeable, the Church was again filled to capacity and some were turned away for lack of space.

These girls have wonderful voices and are a great power for good, as they excel in harmony and enunciation. The Churches of the Christian Church should engage these young ladies to help with their revival campaigns, and they will be assured of real consecrated and efficient help in their song services.

The visible results were two conversions and two other candidates for membership in the local Church. At the service on Sunday night, the following resolutions were read:

We, your committee on resolutions, submit the following:

1. That we express our thanks and appreciation to the Higgins sisters for their splendid service rendered the United Christian Church during the revival meeting.

2. That we recommend that these sisters be secured for a similar campaign as near this time next year as their arrangements will permit.

3. That we express our thanks and deep appreciation to our pastor, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, for his splendid and efficient services during the campaign.

4. That we thank Revs. Joseph H. Lynch and Joel Vause for their assistance.

5. That we were glad to have with us Mr. Stephen White as pianist.

6. That we thank the West Lynchburg Baptist Church for the use of their hymnals.

7. That we express our thanks to the McGehee Furniture Company for the use of chairs.

8. That we also thank the Advance and the News for their co-operation in helping us with our program.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. W. T. TOLLEY, SR.

ROCKINGHAM-PAGE PASTORATE.

The revival began at Mayland September 9th and closed September 22nd. The attendance was good. Prospects were very discouraging at the beginning, but progress drove the fears away. We were soon enjoying the blessings of salvation. The truth of the matter is that we had three members there who would pray, but before the meeting closed, we had two dozen people praying—and one knows what prayer does. Many expressed the opinion that it was the best revival ever held at Mayland.

The Wednesday night service is a real prayer meeting. Three members were received into the Church. After services closed on the night of September 22nd, the people of Mayland gave me a good purse and told me to go home. Of course, I was happy to obey. I was in Alabama two weeks, and attended the Georgia and Alabama Conference. Bethlehem also contributed to my expense home. Our revival begins at Bethlehem November 11th.

Next Monday, October 28th, Bro. Earp begins his revival at Palmyra. He has asked me to assist him. I am hoping that the Convention acted favorably on the question of union.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

BY MRS. W. H. CARROLL.

(Report of Mrs. W. H. Carroll, superintendent, to the annual session of the Woman's Conference, meeting at Burlington, N. C., October 11, 1929.)

The four points of the department of spiritual life are prayer, Bible study, stewardship, family altar.

Our reasons for Bible study in missionary societies are based on the Scriptures, because the Bible is a missionary Book.

1. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the truth" (2 Tim. 2:15).

2. There is Christ's injunction, "Search the Scriptures: for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."

We should read our Bible as if it were written for us as individuals. "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we, through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope" (Rom. 15:4).

Prayer and Bible study being so closely related, it is an impossibility to gain an insight into God's Word without a prayerful heart. To that end, we use the psalmist's prayer, "Open, Thou, mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law" (Psa. 119:18). "Thou, Light of life, shine in my heart and reveal Thyself to me now from Thy Word."

Study the Bible, depending upon the Holy Spirit to teach us. "But the comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, He shall teach you all things and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you" (John 14:26).

The other two points, the family altar and stewardship, follow as direct results of Bible study and development of the prayer life. There is biblical authority for the family altar. In Deut. 6:6-7, we read, "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou art in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."

The sweetest hour in the home is when the family gathers together for a few moments of Bible reading and prayer. It requires only twenty-five seconds to repeat the model prayer that our Lord taught His disciples, commonly called the Lord's Prayer. This prayer, with a few well-chosen verses of Scripture, makes a wonderful family devotional. The impression that is hereby made upon the minds of children is a lasting one and is seed sown in good ground. Nothing will strengthen the influence and relations between parent and child as the habit of family prayer and Bible study.

Under the old Mosaic law, the Jew was required to give a tenth, but as stewards we have Jesus Christ as an example. Jesus gave all for us: not a tenth—He gave all! He is our Pattern of all giving. Jesus gave unstintingly of His time, His personality, and finally His life was given. God the Father so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever (without exception) believeth might have eternal life.

So, in our woman's work may we never be so compassed about by the thousand and one trivial things of every-day life that first things are not put first, but crowded out and possibly lost sight of. (2 Cor. 8:5) "But first gave their own selves to the Lord." (2 Cor. 8:9) "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye, through His poverty, might be rich."

One objective in our work that gives many of us great concern each year is the amount of money asked for by the Woman's Board that we are supposed to raise by gifts and offerings. This sum of money is absolutely necessary, as it is used to support our missionaries on the home and foreign fields. We are the "rope-holders," and also hold the strings to the pocketbooks for Miss Stacy, Miss Crew, Dr. Fry, and all the others in Japan; the Barretts and Miss Adams, in Porto Rico, and the workers in the mountains and in the far West. When we fail to reach our financial goal, their money to carry on with falls short; we fail them, and God's work in those far-off places suffers.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson says, "Our gifts to missions are just for Jesus' sake—that's all." We don't know the heathen, and the alien, and the far-off ones, but our Saviour does, and He loves them, too. So we just give to missions, not for the sake of the heathen, but for Jesus' sake; and not because we love them, but because our Saviour does and He wants them saved, and so commissions us to help save them by sending them His gospel. The motive of our missionary giving is the most unselfish and Christ-like motive that will ever prompt us to any sort of giving on earth.

The missionary motive, then, is Jesus the Christ. We give to missions, we pray for missions, we send out missionaries, or go as missionaries just for Jesus' sake—that's all. (1 Cor. 16:2, "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God has prospered him." This means all of us; no one is excused. "No gift will be made to God from the heart which He will not graciously acknowledge.")

The statistical report of this department does not come up to the standard which has been set; that is, a superintendent of spiritual life in each local society; the book for Bible study, as recommended by the Convention Woman's Board, used in every society; the prayer circle in daily use; a family altar in every home, and systematic giving practiced by every woman throughout the Conference. However, judging from the reports and letters received during the year, there is an awakening to the importance of those things that tend toward the development and upbuilding through the Holy Spirit of the lives of our membership. It is just another opportunity to "know Him and to make Him known."

May I close with the lines taken from the first stewardship lesson for the year?

"Oh, make Him the Master of all that you have,
The Lord of your heart and soul;
Yield Him all of yourself for His dwelling-place,
And let Him take the whole.

He will do for you, He will work with you,

He will reign in your life alone,

And you will find the blessing that you have missed,

And the joy you have never known."

NEWS ITEMS.

BY MRS. W. M. JAY.

The Willing Workers of the Franklin Christian Church has had a very successful year under the leadership of Mrs. T. Hayes and have reached the required standards. They have been a busy bunch, judging by the various things they have done. Last Thanksgiving they had a tea, and at Christmas time they gave a pageant in the Church, at which time they received the loose offering.

The children were given special envelopes to put their offerings in for the special days of the year. These envelopes were made attractive and appealing by adding seals for Christmas, baby chicks for Easter, etc., and were pasted on the envelopes.

A St. Patrick tea was given, which was very attractive and enjoyed, and a playlet was given on Easter Sunday night.

Missionary society programs for November:

Women's Society.

With last month's program, we began our new year—a year with two outstanding objectives, the enrichment of our own individual lives, and therefore of the life of our organization, and the extension of the kingdom of God on earth right where we live and to the farthest rim that we can touch.

Theme: Thankfulness.

Central thought: "There is a magic power that transforms the prayer of thanks into coins, the coins into spiritual power, the spiritual power into redeemed souls."

Song; prayer; business.

1. Devotional period—The Second Pillar.

2. Current news from the Herald of Gospel Liberty.

3. Discussion—Thanksgiving.

4. Poem—Love's blessings.

5. Heart-to-heart message.

Order the envelope of helps from Mrs. Emma S. Powers, Dayton, Ohio, C. P. A. Bldg., and you will get all the supplies needed to carry out these programs for the whole year; price, 75 cents. Then read the splendid suggestions by Mrs. Morrill in the magazine number of the Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Young People's Society.

Why missions?

Purpose: To make clear in our minds the "why" of missions.

1. Hymn, "Love Divine, All Love Excelling." Scripture, Matt. 4:18-22; Luke 4:31-37.

Prayer by leader.

Special music, 2 verses of "Just As I Am."

2. Project committee report.

3. Your reason.

4. Their reason.

5. Changing reasons, and why.

6. Why missions?

7. Hymn, "Lord, Speak to Me."

8. Benediction.

These world friendship programs for young people are based on a little booklet called "Youth and the World Outlook," by J. L. Loringia, and may be secured for 35 cents from the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio. Each month the Herald of Gospel Liberty will carry a column headed "World Friendship Programs," which will have suggestions for the month's program.

Willing Workers or Juniors (November).

Write to Miss Carrie Robison, North Springfield, Pa., about her plan for the birthdays of the missionaries.

Theme: Giving thanks.

(Plan for a party this month. Ask each child to bring a gift for some one else. These gifts may be hung on a Christmas tree, and afterwards packed in a box ready to send to the mission field which has been selected. If gifts are sent to Fort Apache or to the lumber camps, they must be sent this month.)

Quiet music, "In Christ There is no East, no West."

Call to worship.

Leader: This is the day the Lord hath made; we will be glad and rejoice in it.

Response: Surely the Lord is in this place. This is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate to heaven.

Unison prayer.

When I enter the house of prayer.

Let me remember that God is there.

Let me quiet and respectful be.

Knowing in all things Thou, God, seest me.

Song, "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come."

Memory Scripture for three months, Psa. 67.

Offering. All repeat together: "All things come of Thee, O Lord, and of Thine own have we given Thee."

Continue suggestions for last month. How may we give thanks? For what shall we give thanks? Our own Church? Our own home? Do we have better homes, better schools than children in other lands? Why is this true? If it is because our parents know God, and we want to be truly grateful, shall we not find the best way of sending the message of the Heavenly Father to other children? Discuss here why we have mission boards — to make a way whereby we can discover where help is needed, and to help us in sending it. (If suggestions for gifts, etc., are needed, write Miss Carrie Robison, North Springfield, Pa.)

Pictures for use with this. Use pictures of Churches, or begin a scrapbook of pictures of things for which we may give thanks, as food, homes, friends, Churches, etc.

Stories. Use some of stories in "Missionary Stories for Little Folks," Vol. I or II ($1.75 each from the Christian Publishing Association), or other missionary books, especially "The Jumping Bean," the home mission book for this year.

Closing song.

Benediction.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

A Few Illustrations.

Youth looks toward home-making, and young men and young women should expect of each other the qualities that go to build homes. What are these?

If marriage is contemplated, health should be demanded. Every young person should seek to be bodily and mentally fit.

A clean mind can be expected and demanded. The teller of smutty stories should be thrown out of decent company until he repents. Cleanse the temple of friendship.

To Think About.

Why should we expect good manners? Should anything be tolerated in boys that is condemned in girls?

What should be done with the flatterer?

ALONE WITH GOD.

Saul of Tarsus, as he journeyed with mind intent upon the work that he was doing with so much zeal for the advancement of the kingdom of God, as he saw it, was suddenly struck down by the divine light from heaven. It blinded him to all earthly things and the physical appetite for three days. He was alone with God! Alone with the God who searcheth the hearts and weigheth the unehstanding. In those three days, Saul's religion was changed and he saw the gospel of Jesus Christ in the divine revelation from heaven. Saul had been listening to "the voice of the herd" more than to the voice of God, and God had to blind him to the sights of the world before he (Saul) could hear God's voice speaking to him. He didn't seem to hear God's voice in the death of Stephen, nor in the cries of those whom he persecuted so relentlessly. He had to be alone with God before he could hear the voice of God.

It was so with saul, and it is the same with us. It has been said that man is more sensitive to the voice of the herd than to any other influence, and it is so true. Public opinion carries so much weight and is so erratic, and men are swayed so much by it, unless they are rooted and grounded in the love of God. So today men are stricken down by the power of God, some to sudden sickness or accidents—that they may be alone with God to hear His voice and to know His will. Others are awakened in the still hours of the night to listen to the voice of God. Tennyson has said, "Solitude is the mother country of the strong." God is our strength, and we only receive His strength when we take the time to be alone with Him, the world with all its allurements shut out, communing with Him, letting Him order our lives according to His perfect pattern, letting His love overrule all of our failures and mistakes. Should we chafe under the rod of His love and righteousness when He calls us to a closer walk with Him? May we be willing to learn the lesson that He has to teach us when we are called upon to be alone with Him, and may we esteem it a special privilege to be thus called to a special conference with the most high God.

John Ruskin has written with somewhat the same thought: "In our whole life melody, the music is broken off here, and thereby 'rests,' and we foolishly think that we have come to the end of the time. God sends a time of forced leisure, a time of sickness and disappointed plans, and makes a sudden pause in the choral hymn of our lives, and we lament that our voices must be silent and our part missing in the music which ever goes up to the ear of the Creator. Not without design does God write the music of our lives. Be it ours to learn the time and not be discouraged at the 'rests.' If we look up, God will beat the time for us." W.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VII—November 17, 1929.

LIVING WITH PEOPLE OF OTHER RACES.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Of a truth, I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is accepted of Him."—Acts 10:34, 35.

LESSON: Ruth 1:1-18; John 4:5-10; Acts 10:1-11:18; Rom. 1:14; Gal. 3:28, 29.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Eph. 3:14-21.

In Our Modern World.

Whether we want to or not, we must live with people of other races in our modern world. For in the average community, and especially in the towns and cities, there are usually those of other races. Even in the rural communities, and especially in the rural communities of the South, there is the contact between the white and the negro races. In a large city, there is a veritable polyglot of races touching each other at many points.

This problem of contacts with other peoples is also becoming an international fact. Modern means of transportation, modern commerce, travel in foreign countries, modern inventions like the airplane, the Zeplins, the radio, etc., are bringing the races of the world into closer contacts. The world is increasingly becoming a neighborhood in which peoples of many races live in increasingly closer contacts.

We Must Learn to Get Along with Other People.

There are two alternatives for those of us who live in the modern world—we must learn to get along together or we will perish together. Life is so complex, there are so many points of close contact that unless we can learn to get along with people of other races, dire consequences are in store for the human race. Friendliness is not only desirable in our modern world; it is imperative.

Underlying Principles of Amity.

1. Because God is the Father of all races, the men of all races are brothers.

2. There is no such thing as an inferior race in God's thinking; races may be "backward" or "underprivileged"; they are not inferior.

3. The men of all races are fundamentally alike.

4. Each race has some contribution to make to the family of God.

5. Race prejudice is usually based on ignorance and misunderstanding.

6. In Christ, there is no race distinction.

Teachings to Be Gleaned from This Lesson.

1. (Ruth 1:1-18.) The story of Ruth is the story of how two women of races that ordinarily had a deep racial antipathy lived on terms of a warm and mutually helpful friendship. It is also the story of the influence of a godly woman upon the life of a young woman. Their devotion to the God of Israel knit their hearts together in love.

2. (John 4:5-10.) The incident of Jesus and the Samaritan woman at the well of Sychar is told in an intriguing way. Jesus overstepped racial barriers—as the woman said the Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans; Jesus overstepped custom—it was not customary for a rabbi to talk with a woman; Jesus overstepped religious prejudice and bigotry—the Jews and the Samaritans differed in vital ways on matters of religion. But in the face of the fact of Christ, all these things became secondary. Jesus pronounced the basis on which all men might come into a new relationship. God is a Spirit, and those who worship Him in spirit and in truth are brought into a relationship far more vital than external creeds and ceremonies can ever bring them.

3. (Acts 10:1-11:18.) Peter had the idea that the Jews were "it." In keeping with the custom of his people, he looked upon the Gentiles as "common and unclean." In his vision on the house-top, and in his subsequent experience, God revealed to him that the Gentiles had a place both in His heart and in His program. The Holy Spirit came upon the Gentiles even as it had come upon the disciples themselves. This was the beginning of the expansion of the idea which Jesus had so insistently proclaimed and which Paul carried even farther than did Simon Peter.

4. (Rom. 1:14.) Jew and Gentile, Greek and Barbarian, all said Paul have contributed to the sum total of civilization. Every race has something that the entire human family needs. Let no man look lightly upon the gifts and capacities of even the so-called backward races.

5. (Gal. 3:28, 29.) "For all are one in Christ Jesus." Distinction of race and creed, color and sex disappear in Christ Jesus. The human heart and human life alone loom up. The closer we come to Christ, the more fully do all these things that divide us disappear. In Christ there is an inner unity that unites. He alone offers the basis of real union between His followers.

This lesson has some far-reaching implications. Every one who reads it should see in every person the ideals and the spirit of Jesus Christ. A Good test of a man's Christianity is his attitude toward the peoples of other races, even the most backward.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, November 17, 1929.

TOPIC: "What Should Young Men and Young Women Expect of Each Other?"—2 Peter 1:2-11.

Some Bible Hints.

Expect that each person is religious; that is, interested in the things of God and the spirit (v. 3).

Expect virtue or strength of character, power to stand against temptation (v. 5).

Expect kindness and love. The world's greatest sin is unkindness (v. 7).

Expect spiritual and moral vision, a knowledge of what is right and wrong, and a will to do right (v. 9).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Courtesy comes first. The first step on the downward path is familiarity. It may seem smart, but it is dangerous.

Expect self-respect. No man wants the woman he loves to be in questionable company, and vice versa. If we do not respect ourselves, no one else will.

We drag religion into the marriage relation by getting married in Church and by a minister. We need to begin any sort of relation, even friendship, by taking Christ into it.

Truthfulness is essential. Lies kill friendship, not to speak of respect, confidence, and love.

CONFIRMED UNTO THE END.

"Who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Cor. 1:8.

What God has provided, we shall surely need between this hour and the consummation of all things. Every promise of God and every provision of the covenant of grace will be brought in. The urgent need of the believing soul is confirmation, continuance, final perseverance, preservation, to the end. This is the great necessity of the most advanced believer, for Paul was writing to saints at Corinth, of whom he could say, "I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ." Such men are the very persons who most assuredly feel that they have daily need of new grace. If you were not saints, you would have no grace, and you would feel no need of more grace, but because you are men and women of God, therefore you feel the daily demands of the spiritual life.

"Who shall confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of the Lord Jesus Christ." This is the kind of confirmation that is above all things to be desired. It would be a deplorable thing for a man to be confirmed in unbelief and ungodliness. Divine confirmation can only be enjoyed by those to whom the grace of God has been already manifested. It is the work of the Holy Ghost. He who gives faith, strengthens and establishes it. He who kindles love in us preserves and increases its flames. Holy acts are confirmed till they become habits; experience and practice confirm our belief and our resolutions.

The mind is instructed, and in its growing knowledge it gathers reasons for persevering in the good way. The heart is comforted, and so it is made to cling more closely to consoling truth. The grip grows tighter and the tread grows firmer, and the man himself becomes more solid and substantial. This is not merely natural growth, but is as distinct a work of the Spirit as conversion. The Lord will surely give it to those who are relying upon Him for eternal life. One may look for this and shall not be disappointed. He whom you trust will make you to be as a tree planted by the rivers of water, so preserved that even your leaf shall not wither. What a strength to a Church is a confirmed Christian. He is a comfort to the sorrowful and a help to the weak. Confirmed believers are pillars in the house of our God. These are not carried away by every wind of doctrine, nor overthrown by sudden temptations.

They are a great stay to others, and act as anchors in time of Church trouble. Paul speaks of these as being confirmed unto the end. Indeed, he expected that the whole Church of God in every place and in all times would be kept to the end of the dispensation, till the Lord Jesus as the bridegroom should come to celebrate the wedding feast with his perfected bride. All who are in Christ will be confirmed in Him till that glorious day. "Because I live, ye shall live also." He also said, "I give unto my sheep eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." He that hath begun a good work in you will confirm it unto the day of Christ. We are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation. Of the sheep of His fold, Jesus will lose none, no member of His body shall die, no gem of His treasure shall be missing in the day when He makes up His jewels.

The salvation which is received by faith is not a thing of months and years, for our Lord Jesus hath obtained eternal salvation for us, and that which is eternal cannot come to an end. The lives of some professing Christians are a series of stumbles. They are never quite down, and yet they are seldom well on their feet. He is invited to walk with God, and by faith he can attain to steady perseverance in righteousness, and he ought to do so. The Lord is able not only to save us from hell, but to keep us from falling. We need not yield to temptation. Is it not written, "Sin shall not have dominion over you"? The Lord is able to keep the feet of His saints, and He will do it if we will trust Him to do so. We need not defile our garments, we may by His grace keep them unspotted from the world. The Lord cannot read our pardon written in the blood of His own Son and then smite us. That would be impossible. My only hope for heaven lies in the full atonement made upon the cross for the ungodly. May we all be able to look up and say, "Christ is my Saviour, God is my Father, heaven is my home." G. M. TALLEY.

POUNDED.

My, what a queer name for such a pleasant experience! But I suppose the time-worn custom received its name on some forgotten day in the long ago when it was customary to give one pound of each kind of gift. At any rate, one not acquainted with the practice would think it terrible for rural congregations to pay their preachers so poorly and then "pound" them so heavily. However, if that which pastors write be true, we doubt if one could be found who would object to being pounded by his congregation at stated intervals. Only twice, until recently, had the people whom I served become so discouraged that they felt a "pounding" was necessary. In 1927, the big-hearted people of Pope's Chapel thus served to us a most pleasant "pounding."

Not jealous now—not me! Why? The loyal people of Damascus Christian Church, by their strategy were able to take me by surprise on October 20, 1929. Poor car! When we found it after Church service, it was sweltering under its burden. After eating a sumptuous meal in the neighborhood, I took an early start for home. Mrs. Brady, who was there to greet me, is not always all smiles, but she was then. I suppose that it rejoiced her heart that the members of my Church had done that which she had often wanted to do—pound me!

Among the good things which we found when the car was relieved of its burden were these: several bags sugar, sweet and Irish potatoes, jars of jelly of various kind, lard, various containers filled with preserves, two bags flour, many cans of fruit, bath set, handkerchiefs, etc.

After being the recipients of these favors, one must conclude that former pastors have labored, and that now we are entering into their labors. May God be praised for each giver and each gift. Our closing desire is that, regardless of the etymological foundation of the word "pounded," the custom be continued.

RANDLEMAN CHURCH.

Sunday, November 2nd, brings one year's work to a close with the Randleman Christian Church, Rev. M. A. Pollard, pastor. We closed a two weeks revival Sunday night, October 27th, with fifty-three converts and the Church being greatly revived. Rev. J. W. Knight, of Stokesdale, N. C., assisted in the meeting the first week and did some fine preaching, but owing to his health had to give up and go home.

We did not feel, with the interest that was taken, that the meeting should close, so we secured Rev. Chas. H. Young, of Greensboro, N. C., and continued another week. All Churches, forgetting denomination, came together with one accord and worked as if for their own Church, and God poured His spirit out upon us in a marvelous way. Bro. Young stated that he did not believe he was ever in a greater revival where all denominations co-operated together so much. Mr. Young was a fine preacher and made many friends while in Randleman.

The members of the Randleman Christian Church are well pleased with their pastor, Rev. M. A. Pollard, and he is doing some great work at the Church. We have called him for the coming year.

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,

MONDAY.

THINKING.

Prove all things; hold fast to that which is good.—1 Thess. 5:21.

In all things we prove or disprove. We hold to things as we find them reliable or useful, and the things we find good become our most holy faith. We let go the things which we do not find good or useful, and these become the basis of our doubt. The great thing we should make certain of, then, is a well-founded understanding of what is permanently good and everlastingly useful to the betterment of our existence.

There is no way to obtain this understanding except through experience. We may be taught a lot and trained in certain channels of belief and thinking, and this unquestionably gives us our bent in life's issues. However, nothing becomes real to us until we have experienced it. We are told of a college girl, who, when asked if her college career had weakened her faith, replied, "I do not know. I have never had any sorrow, or trial, or temptation to prove my faith."

The proof of the realities of faith comes through the testing experiences. Those who go down in the test usually do so because they are unwilling to submit to the hardship it brings and the self-denial it may entail; or it may be the lack of courage to say "No." A great many assert what they believe without first thinking, and then they cluster their thinking around their assertion in an effort to justify their position.

When this idea is applied to moral conduct, one should not be judged too harshly for his first offense. That is an experience. But when he sees what an ass he has made of himself, what bitterness he (and perhaps others) have suffered, what damage he has done to his manhood, he is certainly held accountable for a little thinking on what is good and what is not good and improve that conduct. This lies within the possibility of every one. Resist the bad and the bad flees. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." "He that believeth hath life. He that disbelieveth (disobeys that law) shall not see life.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, give unto us the wisdom to be as true to the best light we have as the wise men were to their guiding star. Amen.

TUESDAY.

FAITH FOR FOLKS TODAY.

Let no man lead you astray. He that doeth righteousness is righteous.—1 John 3:7.

Is faith in Christ the best religion of today? The best religion for any one is that which is the best assistant to the development and enjoyment of all his powers to their best use, or, we may say, that which leads to the most satisfying life. In society, it is that which goes furthest to make us helpful to others and in the promotion of righteousness and general well-being. No author of other religions have gone so far as Christ in promoting such a life. Confucianism is a system of moral and political teachings. Buddhism's chief blessing is the cessation of desire. Mohammedism is absolutism in its tenets, and therefore is despotic and against progress. Christianity sets one free to improve himself physically, morally and spiritually. "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with thy Lord"; and the New Testament adds, "visit the fatherless and widows in their distresses and keep thyself unspotted from the world."

Is this sufficient for today? Whatever may be the diversities, the new thought, the new sciences, it is every one's duty to find out those things which improve him and his fellow-man physically, morally and spiritually, and follow that lead as conscientiously as he would pay his honest debts. The sum of all duty is to do right, and that duty makes it imperative to use all one's powers to accomplish it. No where in all man's experience is there anything so great a help to a man in the performance of this duty as faith in God and Jesus Christ.

Prayer.—O God, instill into our lives love for Christ. We desire Him to be King of our souls. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CULTIVATING THE BEST GIFTS.

"Covet earnestly the best gifts, and a more excellent way show I unto you."—1 Cor. 12:31.

How shall we cultivate the best side of life? Regard not evil influences too loosely; keep the good ever in mind. He who thinks so little of good cannot possibly see much result in it. Cultivate the spirit and the moods that get results. One may strike his friend because he is angry with him. If he loves that friend, he will not strike. If, therefore, one can love, or if even he can have right thoughts, he cannot go wrong. Herein is the whole condition of Christ's saving faith.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we realize that, notwithstanding all to the contrary, all the world is ours for good; forbid that we shall live only for the earth. But make the eternal divine things our treasured goal. Amen.

THURSDAY.

The following is a conversation which a "Little Spirit" may have had with the "Great Spirit":

Little Spirit—Dost thou not see that man praying to you?

Great Spirit—I do.

Little Spirit—Wilt thou answer his prayer?

Great Spirit—I will.

Little Spirit—But he is asking for ten thousand dollars. Wilt thou give that to him?

Great Spirit—No; I cannot give him ten thousand dollars.

Little Spirit—I do not understand.

Great Spirit—I will answer his prayer.

Little Spirit—But what dost thou mean?

Great Spirit—Why does he ask for ten thousand dollars?

Little Spirit—Because he wants it.

Great Spirit—Right; but why does he want it?

Little Spirit—I cannot tell.

Great Spirit—Because he thinks it will make him happy. I will answer his prayer.

Back of everything we ask for is the desire. We often fail to get what we ask for, but we often get our desires. These come to us in such natural and common-place ways that we fail to recognize them as the answer to prayer.

Prayer.—Dear Father, enable us to see our desires. Teach us how to set them right and to lean on Thee for all blessings. Amen.

FRIDAY.

MIXED WITH MUD.

"When one buildeth up a wall, behold, they daub it with untempered mortar. I say unto them that doubt with untempered mortar, that it shall fall—Lo! when the wall is fallen, shall it not be said unto you, Where is the daubing wherewith we have doubted?"—Ezek. 13:10-14.

This is the Lord's challenge to those who were insubordinate, challenging authority, having aversion to work, making pleasure their chief aim, and denying that God had anything to do with human life.

Character is the result of the harvest of years and of amalgamated labors with sufferings, joys and sorrows, decisions and choices, producing a perfect man.

The highest aim of life is an irreproachable character, but God has left each to build it. The little girl said, "God made me so long. I grewed the balance." It is a good question, "With what am I building my character?" The apostle teaches us to build of whatsoever things are just, honest, pure, lovely, virtuous and of good report." If ye do this, ye shall never stumble. On the contrary, it means putting mud in the mortar.

Prayer.—Dear Father, accept the praise we have brought Thee. Breathe on us Thy Holy Spirit. We pray for the heavenly things for the building of our character. Amen.

SATURDAY.

PURE AND SIMPLE.

"The kingdom of God is righteousness."—Rom. 14:17.

Some people think that the things that make up the kingdom of God are vague, mysterious and unnatural. The text is very simple, and, in its best analysis, that is all it is. "Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto Him as righteousness." So simple is that, we are told that he who hungers for righteousness shall have it; that he that worketh righteousness is accepted of him. We do not have to believe in a lot of doctrines and creeds unintelligible to the ordinary liver. All we have to do is to believe in God and live right. When every one believes that all crooked things can be made straight and right can prevail; that all wrong can be made right, then the kingdom is coming.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, we desire to know Thee and all Thy truth. Come, Lord Jesus, and be in us a real existence. Amen.

SUNDAY.

GOOD GIFTS.

"If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts. Unto your children, how much more shall your Father, who is in heaven, give good gifts to them that ask Him."—Matt. 7:11.

Jesus never spent any time or words proving the existence of God. His theme was, "Think right of God and do right, and you will know God."

Jesus never taught men by reading creeds and expounding doctrines, but He did teach that the humblest persons might be high in the kingdom.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, God, we thank Thee for refreshing truth, for the way of a good life. Reveal to us what is best. Establish Thou Thyself in us, and good shall reign. Amen.

CHURCH AND WORLD COMMUNITY.

really sounded the keynote of the conference and might well be taken, too, as the summary of all the proceedings which followed. In his direct, masterful way, he portrayed again the great world needs and declared that the solution of the world problems and needs may be found in a world in which Christ is alive and dominant.

The First Congregational-Christian Merger

Very Important--Very Plain

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES:

DEAR FELLOW-CHRISTIANS,—I know how to appeal to Congregationalists for funds for Christian purposes. I have been doing it for over forty years, and have secured for various purposes between one and two million dollars, more than a million of which has been for Piedmont College; and I am now appealing for two million more for the same.

But I am new to the Christian Churches. I take it for granted, however, that the same motives that move Congregational Christians, move you—our present national merger pre-supposes this. If this supposition is true, the response to this page and my letters is sure, for I am making an appeal for your own institution, fully and officially approved by your Southern Convention, which is not only worthy of your support, but must have it or die.

I Must make the Facts Very Plain

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, Ala., was organized to meet a great need and to do a great service for your Churches and, in their name, for our Country and for the Kingdom of God. You have there a great field, a fine location, and a valuable property. Your Administration Building is a noble structure, but unfinished and unheated. Your fine Girls' Dormitory is only partially ready for use. You have a campus of over forty acres, and a property worth $100,000; but nothing fully ready for use. It will take $10,000 more to make available the $100,000 worth you already have; and more to give the equipment required for a Standard Junior College.

Surely, you do not want to lose this great beginning for want of the necessary finishing! But I must tell you plainly that losing it is certain, unless vigorous and speedy steps are taken to save it. Dr. Beougher and the local Trustees have done splendidly, but they have reached the end of their rope. Other help must come, or this Institution will soon be a thing of the past.

The Situation Briefly Stated

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing; not because its work and scholarship were not good, but because a Junior College cannot have independent recognition without a finished campus and the income of $200,000 endowment. Without scholastic standing, a Junior College cannot have students, as they cannot go on for their Junior and Senior years in a standard four-year College. BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing, and could not go on. It would have no students.

President Beougher then came to me, as President of Piedmont College, to help BETHLEHEM out of impending failure. An educational merger was then made by the two Colleges, so that the four-year College could stand for and give credits for the Junior College. No financial merger was made or is in contemplation. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE is still owned and controlled by the Christian Church. Its Trustees, of their own initiative, changed its name to "THE PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE" to enable the Senior College more securely to vouch for its credits. As a result, the enrollment of the Junior College has not only been retained, but increased.

But the campus is not finished, the buildings are not ready for use, and the scholastic standing cannot be long maintained by the present method alone.

The Trustees have asked me to find the money for finishing the buildings, equipping them, and meeting other pressing needs. I cannot go to Congregationalists for this, as I am asking them for two million dollars for Piedmont Senior College, and am pressing them hard. It must come from the members of the Christian Churches—or the Junior College must close.

I have nothing to gain personally. I am donating my services and advancing expense money, because I am deeply interested in our great merger of Churches and I want to see PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, saved for the great field it occupies and the great need it supplies. The South needs education far beyond any opportunities it has.

Please send your checks quickly to President Beougher, at Wadley, Ala., or to me at Demorest, Ga., made out to PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, and they will be turned over to the Treasurer as soon as record can be made. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE cannot wait long.

Yours fraternally and sincerely,

FRANK E. JENKINS

PRESIDENT BOARD OF TRUSTEES, PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, Wadley, Ala.

PRESIDENT PIEDMONT COLLEGE, Demorest, Ga.

The above will appear in two or three more issues of The Sun, so that every member of the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention may be sure to read it.

Christian Orphanage

My dear Friends:

Reaching a goal always brings joy and happiness to the hearts of the one who has the responsibility of the campaign. It does not only bring joy to the heart of the one who is taking the lead, but it brings joy to the heart of every one who takes and has a part in the undertaking. When my beloved friend, Dr. Atkinson, reached his goal in the mission campaign some weeks ago, I hardly think there was a happier soul in all the Southern Convention than Dr. Atkinson. It gave him renewed vigor and seemed to make him twenty years younger. But Dr. Atkinson was not the only one that rejoiced in the success of reaching that goal. But hundreds of men and women all through the Southern Convention had watched it with a great deal of interest, and when the goal was reached and passed their hearts were filled with joy, too. And I know no one was happier or rejoiced more with Dr. Atkinson than the writer.

In starting out in our campaign to reach our goal for the Orphanage through this Thanksgiving season we know and realize that on account of our illness at this time we are greatly handicapped in our efforts. But having faith in our people, we believe the Churches, Sunday Schools and friends of the Orphanage will make a larger effort and see to it that we too will reach our goal which the Southern Convention has allotted to us and which we so much need to feed and clothe and care for our 120 little children. May God bless and enrich each and every one who takes a part, is our prayer.

Yours in the work,

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

- Final Adjournment.

GOING TO CONFERENCE?

Ministers and delegates attending the Eastern North Carolina Conference, which convenes at Mt. Auburn, Warren County, N. C., November 19th and 20th, will please notify Bro. J. A. Kimball, Manson, N. C., when you will come, how you will travel, and where to meet you in case you do not come by automobile.

To reach the place of Conference by automobile, leave the highway at Manson, N. C., driving north by Drewery to Mt. Auburn. All Churches are requested to send a full delegation for the full time, with a full report, which will be called for the first day of Conference.

Churches are urged to raise all the apportionments for Conference. The denominational departments are in need of all possible financial support. Plan for a great Conference, expect a great Conference, come and make it a great Conference, and all will be happy.

Fraternally yours,
W. C. WICKER, President.

OBITUARIES.

SMITH.

John William Smith was born February 13, 1854, and died October 8, 1929, making his age 75 years, 7 months, and 25 days. Bro. Smith was a quiet, good man, a faithful member of the Newport Christian Church and enjoyed the confidence and respect of the people of his community. He is survived by his widow and one son. Funeral services were held at Newport, October 9, 1929.

A. W. ANDES.

DERROW.

Mrs. Emma Pearl Derrow was born July 16, 1900, and died October 6, 1929, aged 29 years, 2 months, and 20 days. Her husband, Charley Derrow, is a member of our Bethlehem Church, though she was a member of the Church of the Brethren. Funeral services were held at Linville Creek, Church of the Brethren, October 8, 1929, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. S. Roller, of the Church of the Brethren.

A. W. ANDES.

WELDON.

Mr. David Weldon, resident of Franklin County, a member of Liberty, Vance, Christian Church, passed to his reward October 4, 1929, aged 88 years, 7 months, and 2 days. Bro. Weldon leaves to mourn his departure nine children, 64 grandchildren, 70 great-grandchildren, other relatives, and a host of friends. Services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Frank Edwards, a Baptist minister. Interment was made in the family cemetery. May the Lord comfort and guide the loved ones.

H. E. CRUTCHFIELD.

GERINGER.

Mary Geringer passed into the beyond on October 21st, aged 82 years. She had been a member of the Bethlehem Christian Church for forty years, and stated she was ready to go. She leaves to mourn their loss one daughter and four sons. The funeral services took place at Bethlehem, after which her body was laid to rest in the cemetery there to await the final day. God bless the bereaved. The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. O. C. Huston.

P. T. KLAPP.

FRANKS.

On the 19th day of October, 1929, Bro. Charlie B. Franks was called to his heavenly home. He was sixty-nine years of age and was feeling well, having been plowing in the field just a few moments before the end came. Bro. Franks was one of the most loyal and faithful members of Catawba Springs Christian Church, a devout Christian, a man of much prayer, and a worker in winning souls. He delighted greatly in visiting revival meetings and witnessing for the Lord Jesus Christ. He is survived by his widow, several children, one sister, Mrs. S. M. Rowland, and one brother, Robert Franks.

The interment was in Catawba Springs

Cemetery. An unusually large audience attended the burial service as a tribute of respect to this devout Christian. May the God of all comfort bless and provide for the bereaved family, and may each of them be ready for the call to reunion by implicit trust in Christ.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

FIELDS.

While we were sleeping, in the early hours of the morning of September 24, 1929, death entered our community, our Church, our hearts, and one of our best homes, and without warning took Bro. Brady W. Fields, age 44 years. For eleven years Bro. Fields was one of the best and most lovable Christian men the First Christian Church of Reidsville has ever had. He was faithful in the discharge of every duty his Church assigned to him. He was a deacon, and as first assistant superintendent of the Sunday School, he endeared himself to the hearts of every member of the school.

"Be thou faithful until death, and I will give you a crown of life," was certainly for him. He attended the last service held in his Church and prayed the last prayer that was offered there during his lifetime. As words fail to convey the joy of one's Christian experience, however much they may be desired, so do words fail us in describing this beautiful life. The highest honor that this writer knows how to confer upon the memory of so good a man is simply to say he was a Christian gentleman.

Left behind are a faithful and devoted wife and three children—Clyde, 17; Estelle, 15; Brady, Jr., 9—two brothers and many other relatives and friends who feel so keenly our loss, but rejoice in the faith which makes believe that heaven is sweeter because he is there.

May the Father comfort all those who are grieved, and may He help all of us to emulate the life of this godly man. We pray for another who can take up the work of the kingdom where Bro. Fields laid it down and carry on until the eternal day of our Lord.

The funeral was conducted by the pastor from the First Christian Church at 3 o'clock Wednesday, September 25th. The body rests in Greenview.

HOLLAND.

Whereas, Almighty God, in His wisdom, has seen fit to call out of his clay tabernacle the soul of Bro. Robert W. Holland, Sr., a faithful member of the Bible Class of the First Christian Church, of Portsmouth, Va.; and

Whereas, in his going away, this class has been deprived of the blessing of fellowship with one who followed Christ as his example; he it resolved:

First, That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt and loving sympathy, assuring them of our prayers, that they may find the grace of Jesus Christ sufficient for them in the night of sorrow.

Second, That we bow submissively to the will of Him who doeth all things well, and seek to profit by the example of this Christian brother.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent the family, a copy be sent to The Christian Sun, and a copy entered upon the records of the Men's Bible Class.

FANNY.

Mrs. John G. Fanny (nee Mary Lizzie Gorner) died at her home, Suffolk, Va., September 29, 1929, at the age of 57 years. The funeral services were conducted at Holy Neck Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. H. S. Hardeastle, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, and the remains were buried in the family cemetery near her childhood home.

She was the daughter of the late Thos. Gorner and Mary Jane Turlington. She leaves a husband, John G. Fanny, Suffolk; four sons—Dr. Witt Floyd, Benjamin Raleigh, and Clifton Theodore, of Suffolk, and John Irvin, of Washington, D. C.; four daughters—Mrs. J. H. Salmon, Suffolk; Mrs. L. J. West, Route 1, Holland; Mrs. Henry P. Gorner, Route 2, Holland, and Miss Ruth, Suffolk, and eighteen grandchildren. She is also survived by two brothers, Azra T., Route 2, Holland, and James J. Gorner, Whaleyville.

Mrs. Fanny had been a member of Holy Neck Church since her childhood, and lived an humble and trustful Christian life. May a Heavenly Father's comfort and care be extended to her loved ones.

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

By Rev. Stanley C. Harrell.

THE MEANING OF ARMISTICE DAY.—

By the time this comes to the attention of our readers, Armistice Day will be history. Not only has the occasion become a national holiday; it is a day that has an appeal for as many different organizations and classes and conditions of people as any other day in the calendar. It is a day the observance of which is fraught with tremendous possibilities. It speaks of the heroic sacrifice of millions of men. It speaks of the triumph not only of great nations. It speaks of the triumph of certain notable ideals. It should be not only a day of remembrance; it should be a day of high and holy consecration.

There were thousands who faced death, and many of whom paid the supreme price willingly, because they believed that they were engaged in a war to end war. It seems at times as if the world had forgotten that most soul-stirring challenge which was flung out to fire the enthusiasm of the masses. The time may have been when nations drifted blindly into war, or deliberately chose to wage a war that promised large national advantages. But today the causes and conditions which make for war are well known and easily recognized by any one versed in the signs of the times. If civilized nations ever go to war again, it will be because those who might avert war either do not take the trouble to bestir themselves or because they do not care. The masses of men and women should have learned by this time who bears the burden of war. They know who it is that faces the mud and blood and death.

ANOTHER UNITY CONFERENCE.—

Those who are vitally interested in Christian unity will await with more than ordinary interest the outcome of the conference which is to be held in New York, November 15-17. This is to be a conference on Christian unity of a new and different type. The representatives who will make up the conference will be there solely because they are interested in the question of unity. Each member of the conference will go purely as an individual. Doubtless, most of the leading denominations will have members in attendance, but they will not be official representatives. They will go solely for the purpose of voicing their own convictions. It is becoming increasingly apparent that there is a deep current of sentiment in favor of union which leaps the bounds of denominational barriers and outruns the consensus of opinion in the denominational connections which are most heartily in favor of union. It is this deep and abiding sentiment which is to be given voice in the proposed conference. Such a conference can do much to crystalize and clarify the longings for unity among the followers of Christ.

It is the purpose to approach the entire problem of Christian union from a new angle. The basis of the discussion will be what has been called the "reconciliation pact" of the Churches. Those who have signed the pact will be accorded the privileges of the floor. The pact presents a very good idea of the attitude that is taken to the problem. It is to this effect:

"We, Christians of various Churches, believing that only in a co-operative and united Christendom can the world be Christianized, deplore a divided Christendom as being opposed to the spirit of Christ and the needs of the world; and we are convinced that the Christianizing of the world is greatly hindered by divisive and rivaling Churches.

"We, therefore, desire to express our sympathetic interest in and prayerful attitude toward all conferences, small and large, that are looking toward reconciliation of the divided Church of Christ; and we propose to practice, in all our spiritual fellowships, the equality of all Christians before God, so that no Christian shall be denied membership in our Churches, nor a place in our celebration of the Lord's Supper, nor pulpit courtesies to other ministers; and, further, irrespective of denominational barriers, we pledge to be brethren one to another in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour, whose we are and whom we serve."

Those who have signed the pact number more than 1,000, and represent many denominations.

A BAD BUSINESS ALWAYS.—

There has never been any type of enterprise that has always and every where been so degrading and destructive as the liquor business. Any one who has made even a casual study of its history must have been impressed with the fact that there is but one way to deal with it, and that is to outlaw it and fight it to a finish. It is perfectly conceivable that one may be conscientiously opposed to prohibition, in theory. It does seem that in the light of the widespread diffusion of intellectual ability, and the teaching of self-control by every experience through which the human being is called upon to pass, that man ought to know how to use and to refrain from using alcoholic beverages to excess. But that is just what man does not seem to be able to do. Always the use of alcohol has tended to excess. It has debased and degraded humanity, broken homes, impoverished the rich, and starved the poor.

It appears that every conceivable means has been tried for its regulation and control. And always even the most carefully planned and conscientiously enforced measures have gradually broken down. It is not probable that we shall, as a nation, consent to any modification of our present liquor laws, despite all of the insistent pressure which is being brought to bear by those who love liquor and those who hope to profit by its sale. Most certainly it will not be done if we take heed to the experience of the past—our own experience and that of others. The only way that offers hope is to go forward with greater zeal and diligence in the path that we have entered. We are far from reaching the point where the liquor situation is controlled as it should be. But we might as well face the facts. There is no other way to deal with the liquor problems, save to destroy it, root and branch.

Propaganda is being spread broadcast that the ideal way of handling liquor has been discovered by Canada, and that is by government-controlled sale. The wet press would make us believe that conditions in Canada are so nearly ideal as to meet the approval of the W. C. T. U. But evidently those who are most interested with the moral and spiritual conditions in Canada are not satisfied that they have found the solution of anything except the way to supply thousands of the thirsty appetites with strong liquor, and to raise a generation of drinkers. The New Outlook, which is the weekly organ of the United Church of Canada, describes the conditions as follows:

"Ontario highways are among the finest in Canada, and her byways have long been considered trails of loveliness. Today the great roads and the little roads of Ontario are littered with empty bottles, whiskey and beer bottles by the hundred thousand. And you needn't take any one's word for it; you can start counting almost anywhere. But it is not safe to walk out there when so many drivers are sipping Ontario government liquor. Nor is it necessary to go out to the highways and byways at all. You can see the empty bottles in hotel rooms and corridors, in office and garage, in barn and bin. The thing has become a danger and a nuisance. It has been going on for some time, getting steadily worse. At first we blamed it on the tourists, but we now know that the tourists couldn't account for one-twentieth part of the empties, even at the border. 'The King's Highway' is the grand old title Ontario's Premier recently revived for the roads, and Ontario's government is making those highways a byword among the people and a danger to the traveling public by its ever-increasing flow of liquor under guise of government 'control.' So terrible is the truth in this matter that statistics dare not be published until after the forthcoming election. But the people of Ontario should know that their province is selling fifty million dollars' worth of liquor a year. Is it any wonder that tens of thousands of youth are being added annually to the list of drinkers? Is it strange that motor accidents are increasing at an appalling rate? Why should any one be surprised to find a few hundred empty bottles along a mile of the King's Highway?"

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. E. B. White, formerly of the Dendron, Va., pastorate, we are advised, has been called to and accepted the Windsor, Va., pastorate.

Richmond was well represented at the Eastern Virginia Conference this year. Besides Dr. Ryan and the two delegates, there were eight visitors, all of whom reported an enjoyable occasion.

Rev. J. L. Neese, Greensboro, in addition to his work at Palm Street Church, has been called to and accepted the pastorates of our Monticello and Hines Chapel Churches, located only a short distance from his home and present field of labor. Bro. Neese has been blessed as pastor of Palm Street Church the past year, and we trust that he will be continually blessed in his services with the good people of his larger field.

An outstanding feature that measured up in every way to the demands of an exacting and a momentous occasion at the great Convention was the address by the pastor of the Piqua, Ohio, Church, Rev. Raymond G. Clarke, who, just prior to the vote on Christian union Friday afternoon, delivered an address on that topic. THE SUN'S editor was fortunate enough to secure a copy of that address, and it is printed elsewhere in THE SUN this week. It voiced the sentiment of the great audience whose hearts were stirred by its sweet-spirited and heroic utterance.

The editor was permitted to enjoy the final day of the Western Conference at Smithwood, near Liberty, N. C. Rev. T. J. Green was president and was conducting a program of activity and service, concluding the sessions of the Conference. The report of the committee on apportionments evoked a lively and interesting discussion, and that of the committee on superannuation brought before the Conference invaluable facts for delegates in attendance. There were reports of special committees which showed that the Conference had had a very successful session and that the Churches, through the year, had made progress. The Conference is to meet next year with Hanks Chapel, near Pittsboro, N. C. Because of the fine fellowship and brotherly love that prevails, it is always a joy to attend this Conference. One candidate was licensed as a probationer—Bro. G. M. Talley, of our Glendon Church.

THE SUN editor was permitted to attend the Eastern Virginia Conference in session at Suffolk only on the first day of the Conference, but long enough to witness the beginning of that which gave promise of a happy and successful session. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, besides being host to the Conference, was its president, and was serving in the double capacity admirably. His annual address to the Conference will appear in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The report on home missions, by Col. J. E. West, chairman, and that on foreign missions by Dr. L. E. Smith, chairman, were presented, discussed and voted upon the first day, and revealed missionary activity and progress in the Conference and the Churches the past year. Rev. J. W. Fix presented also on the first day the report on stewardship, and conducted for an hour a most interesting and valuable discussion, by several, of this most important topic. Mrs. B. D. Jones read a paper of remarkable merit and cogency on the topic of "Tithing," which paper, we trust, will be available shortly to SUN readers. The Conference was being most royally entertained by the Suffolk Church.

THE MERGER.

The Ohio Congregational News, organ of the Congregational Conference of Ohio, speaks as follows of the Piqua Convention and union:

"At the meeting of the General Convention of the Christian Church, held at Piqua, October 22-29, the long-talked-of merger with the Congregational body was consummated. There was a large representation of the Christian Churches, with about four hundred regularly chosen delegates and at least five hundred interested members of the Churches besides. All the meetings of the Convention were filled with a spirit of expectancy. There was certainty that the proposed merger would carry, but it was also expected there would be opposition. However, when the vote was finally taken upon the articles of agreement, there was not a single vote cast against any of the proposed articles. Several of them were changed in minor particulars, but the articles as proposed by the National Council at Detroit were unanimously adopted. It is seldom one is permitted so great and high an experience as was the lot of every one of the thousand people assembled in that historic gathering. The Congregational group was most enthusiastically received. Committees will be appointed immediately by the Ohio Conference and the Christian Conferences in the State to plan for complete merger.

"If there were any doubters about the value and importance of the Congregational-Christian merger in the delegation of fifteen Congregationalists that traveled to Piqua October 26th, they were speedily convinced. A finer body of religious men and women than the 500 clear-headed delegates that assembled to do their national business and incidentally to vote on the plan of union endorsed by the National Council at Detroit, it would be hard to find. In that presence of able and eloquent religious leaders, the only superiority that a good Congregationalist could decently claim over them is that there are more of us.

The religious enthusiasm with which they, one and all, go into this merger, promises much for the future of our united body. The thing we are short on, enthusiasm, they have. With all their ability and idealism so apparent at the Piqua meeting, they furnish us as they come, with a great re-enforcement of spiritual fervor, and it is the fervor of the gospel sort. In every one of the great causes that have interested us they have entered effectively. Home and foreign missions, work among backward people of all races, education, social progress, are just as important to them as to us. There is not a good thing going among good men that we shall need to persuade them to work for. They are already there.

"The next steps of the merger will be easy. Already our finance and promotion commission have published a map including all the Churches of our united body in Ohio."

HAVE WE HELPED UNCLE CHARLEY?

Though a member of the Christian Church, and having heard of the struggle for existence of the Christian Orphanage all of my life, I did not realize until I went there the difficulties under which Mr. Johnston was laboring. Having been made a trustee, I could see further into the workings of an institution like this and the responsibility that rests upon the officers. For instance, the institution must be conducted according to the State laws and the Association of Orphanage Institutions. Mr. Johnston is meeting all of these requirements, and is graded No. 1 in the group in which he is classed by the Duke Foundation.

Every one who knows Mr. Johnston realizes that his sole ambition is to render aid to fatherless children. Through this fulfillment of his Christian duty, our brother finds the greatest satisfaction of his life. I believe that his recovery would be more speedy and more complete if he had some evidence that every member of the Church was in full sympathy with the Orphanage work.

So, in addition to the generous offerings which we have every reason to believe will be sent in this year at Thanksgiving, wouldn't it make "Uncle Charley" happy and make him well quicker if at some time during each month, each Church and each individual would send even a small gift to the Orphanage? Is it not worth a sacrifice to secure happiness for our honored leader and joy for ourselves in being able to help the orphans?

Raleigh, N. C.

H. A. CARLTON.

TO OUR PASTORS.

We have had the misfortune to lose our barn at the Orphanage, by fire, including feed for our stock. It is absolutely necessary to rebuild this barn and to buy feed for our cattle this winter. In order to do this, we are forced to call on our Churches and Sunday Schools for a special offering for this.

In view of the fact that our superintendent, Bro. Chas. D. Johnston, is ill in the hospital at Burlington, and therefore not able to visit the Churches and make an appeal for this cause, I have requested each member of the board of trustees to visit as many Churches as it is possible for them to, and personally make this appeal. If there has ever been a time that the Orphanage needed the assistance of the pastors and Churches, it is now.

If it is impossible for one of the members of the board of trustees to visit your Church, will you not please take this matter up with your congregation and ask for a special offering for the Orphanage at this time?

Thanking you in advance for your co-operation, I am,

Very truly,

J. M. DARDEN,

Chairman, Board of Trustees.

AN ORGY OF BUNCOMBE.

Not since the days when public opinion rose up in its might and smote the dangerous drug traffic; not since the days when the vendor of harmful nostrums was swept from our streets, has this country witnessed such an orgy of buncombe, quackery and downright falsehood and fraud as now marks the current campaign promoted by certain cigarette manufacturers to create a vast woman-and-child market for the use of their product.

In bringing to the attention of my colleagues in Congress a situation that demands strong legislative remedy if the health and welfare of the nation is not to be increasingly undermined by an evil which promises to be greater than alcohol, I rise to denounce the insidious cigarette campaigns now being promoted by those tobacco manufacturing interests whose only god is profit, whose only bible is the balance sheet, whose only principle is greed. I rise to denounce the unconscionable, heartless and destructive attempts to exploit the women and youth of our country in the interest of a few powerful tobacco organizations whose rapacity knows no bounds.

It is clear that the issue raised before the country in the current cigarette campaigns is the issue raised by urging excessive cigarette smoking; by flaunting appeal to the youth of our country; by misrepresenting established medical and health findings in order to encourage cigarette addiction. These great cigarette campaigns, into which millions are being poured in order to create new armies of cigarette addicts, have been accompanied by a barrage of most patent hypocrisy. —Senator Reed Smoot, from an address in U. S. Senate.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

"THE ROAD BUILDERS."

BY REV. SAMUEL W. PURVIS, D. D.

"Whither have ye made a road today?"

1 Sam. 27:10.

Roads are the land arteries of a nation. The road builder ranks high as an agent of civilization. And the road, being a creation of man, is the sign and symbol of the civilization in which he lives. Weak and insecure society lived within walls, or high in rocky fortresses. Dark ages built castles on inaccessible mountain-peaks to escape enemies—men now build cottages in the open, with fine roads leading to town. When Europe was emerging from the dark ages, its first struggle was to get roads. It was anxious to get away from its state of seclusion. Roads meant individual travel, personal safety, freer marts of trade, tribunals clear of bribery.

In Holy Writ, the Book of Judges says that "In the days of Shamgar, the son of Anath, in the days of Jael, the highways were unoccupied and the travelers walked through byways." There was no security or law. "Every one did that which was right in his own eyes"; that is, what was wrong in the eyes of everybody else. Gangs of highway robbers and lawless marauders prowled over the country, stripping every hapless traveler of clothing and goods and sometimes even rushing into the very gate of walled towns if it were left open or unguarded. Folks had to walk through by-ways or across fields, and pick their way through woods and over mountain-passes. What a picture of lawless society—the whole book of Judges in a sentence! But in the time of David and Solomon came the days of roads and road-making. Treaties were made with Hiram, King of Tyre, with Egypt, and other nations, and the Jewish nation experienced its greatest glory—the talk of the then-known world.

In ancient Egypt, chariots and commerce poured out the hundred gates of Thebes. Rome, the greatest road-builder of the world, constructed her thoroughfares from the Golden Milestone in the Forum to the most distant of her conquered provinces. The Appian Way was her great arterial highway, and helped make her mistress of the world. Mediaval and modern Europe had their highway foundation on Roman military roads, such as Watling Street from London to Chester and to York. I wonder what Herodotus, in his Egyptian travels, would have thought of the modern roads? In Italy today, heavily loaded auto-trucks roll over roads splendidly macadamized where in 225 B. C. Hannibal lost nearly three-fourths of his army. After the Crusades, roads marked a turn in the life of men—it began the period of cathedral-building. Road-building and temple-building went side by side.

Travel and motion are signs of life. Life implies the quickening presence of ideas; for a dead body cannot engendre motion, nor can a dead mind entertain a new idea. An age of roads is never an age of decay. If there is any kind of advancement going on—new trade, new ideas, new hopes, it will be shown by the roads that are building. All creative acts, whether in government, commerce, thought, or religion, creates roads. If there is any life in a community, the road, which is a symbol of motion, will indicate that fact.

Must Know Material.

Road building and spiritual character building have a very definite and tangible relation. If we are going anywhere, there must be a road. If we are going to achieve anything, there must be a way. Sometimes God asks us to make highways through the desert, that we may trek our way home. It is an honorable task and requires much thought and skill. Much science is used in material road building. One must know the kind of material best adapted and that will offer greatest resistance to constant and heavy traffic. Time was when men sought to get around difficulties, but the method of the modern engineer is to go through them. The straight and narrow path that the Master spoke of is not easy, but is always upward in its direction.

The building of a road in a new country offers a constant challenge. The highway of the mind must be well made in youth. Obstacles must be cleared that lie between a youth and his education. Said a great prophet, "Set thy heart toward the highway." The royal road of education opens up a new world in a marvelous way to an eager mind. The best mental equipment available ought to be sought, for life is worth the best we can put into it. New roads may find great trees athwart the way, great boulders have rolled down the mountain-side. Many visible obstacles are in the way, but the greatest difficulties are not always in the things that are seen, but in the things that are not seen. The master road-builder has to be concerned about the subsoil and the lower rock formation. He is not content with surface appearance.

The highway of character ought to be like the Roman Appian way, constructed to stand the hard and constant usage of time. I think we get to realize more and more that no well-trained mind can travel far unless there is bedrock stability and a high sense of honor. This character highway we are building every day, and we should build it with materials that will defy the wear and tear of time. This is not a day of depth and thoroughness. Light, shallow reading of tabloids makes poor mental foundations. We hear constantly slipshod English and lip-lazy enunciation, while a coarse slang ejaculation is offered to take the place of clear thought well expressed. "See?" "You know." "If you get what I mean"—easily and semi-smartly said, but they are expressions that place the boy or girl on a significant plane of mentality. The same skirking spirit shows in work, and the boy or girl wonders why some seemed doomed always to be hewers of wood and drawers of water.

Build mind and character highways so strong and substantial that they will carry to goals worth while here and build them straight, toward life's eternal values.

Spiritual Road Builders.

We are all road-makers. The bird in the air leaves no track, the fish in the sea find no trail, man everywhere makes a path for himself and blazes a route for his fellows to follow him. Consciously or unconsciously, we are opening up a way for others. There may seem to be no aim or purpose in it, and we may be unconscious of our work. Nevertheless, we are making roads. We cannot help it. Every step we take is the making of a track, even though it may be only like an uncertain trail through a forest. But we go the same way many times. Our acts become a habit. What was once a faint footpath becomes a broad, open road.

What kind of a road are we making? Is there anything beautiful, helpful or inspirational about it? Does it suggest dignity and strength? Is it fearless, going straight to a destination? Or is it winding and deceptive, leading at last to a precipice, or ending dismally and furtively in a swamp? Are we making rough roads, full of loose, sharp flints, or smooth roads, where sharp-edged stones and puncturing thorn points have been removed?

Why ask the question? Because some one is following on after us. The writer of the book of Hebrews says, "Make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way." That is quite a thought! The wayfarer following you may be lame in will and purpose, lame in desire and self-control. He may be lame in affection and maimed in affliction. The lame one may be one of your own household, possibly your own son—and he is coming down your road! What about that road—is it all right? Is it safe for him? Is it safe for the weak one of your little flock? Is your road safe for anybody and everybody else? Will they get astray by following you? Will they become pilgrims of the light, or pilgrims of the night?

Achish said to David, "Whither have ye made a road today?" Fine question for today! In what direction have our roads led—toward the darkness or toward the dawn? Around the hill of difficulty or over the hill? How have we built it? Of what material? Has our road-making formula been "Macadam, with lots of grit and sand?" Some try to build their roads on luck, but that is mighty uncertain engineering. One cannot depend on trusting that tomorrow will be fair weather. Real highways must be built to stand rain or shine, winter snow or summer sun. Some trust to cleverness, superficial roadbed, taking chances that no one will discover the poor foundation. I think one of the weaknesses of American ideals of today is believing that cleverness, smartness, fastness, is all right—if you can get away with it. Culture is not a showy garment that one may wear for an evening dress—it is a thing of the heart.

Over in the Navigator, or Samoan Islands of Polynesia, they have a highway with a peculiar name. It is called "The Road of the Loving Hearts." It was built by natives in affection for a man whose presence evoked love wherever he went. It ran from his island home to the sea which he loved. I know such a one. He said, "I am the way—the road—the truth and the life." His road was the road of loving hearts. I wish you and I could build our path like unto His—a love-constructed road. I wish we could start it today, for "we shall pass this way but once"!

GOING TO CONFERENCE?

Ministers and delegates attending the Eastern North Carolina Conference, which convenes at Mt. Auburn, Warren County, N. C., November 19th and 20th, will please notify Bro. J. A. Kimball, Manson, N. C., when you will come, how you will travel, and where to meet you in case you do not come by automobile.

To reach the place of Conference by automobile, leave the highway at Manson, N. C., driving north by Drewery to Mt. Auburn. All Churches are requested to send a full delegation for the full time, with a full report, which will be called for the first day of Conference.

Churches are urged to raise all the apportionments for Conference. The denominational departments are in need of all possible financial support. Plan for a great Conference, expect a great Conference, come and make it a great Conference, and all will be happy.

Fraternally yours,

W. C. WICKER, President.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

EASTERN VA. MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

This body convened with the Christian Church, Franklin, Va., for a full day's session November 5th. The day was perfect, the attendance at the meeting was phenomenal, the interest was tense, the program and spirit of the two sessions were glorious, and the event was an epoch. It is a joy unspeakable to attend such a service and gathering. The women had planned ahead, with the greatest efficiency in every detail; their hearts were centered and their minds were set upon having the best of all the great meetings they have thus far held. Every available space of the main auditorium of Franklin Christian Church was occupied, and many had to stand in and about the doors, from lack of seats and room within. Mrs. M. L. Bryant, who presided, called attention to the fact that the Conference had now been organized just seventeen years, and during that period there had been only two presidents and three treasurers, and the annual gathering had grown from a mere handful to a capacity house, there being five hundred or more delegates and visitors present for this meeting.

During these seventeen years the Conference had raised for missions $85,000, thus making an average of $5,000 per year from the beginning; though, of course, the first few years by no means reached this amount. The goal for the past year was $7,000, and the treasurer's chart showed $7,141.49 sent in. The goal set for next year is $7,500. However, the president and others of the Conference feel that the money contributed is only one, and a very small part, of results achieved. The women have been drawn together in a closer fellowship, their meetings through the years have quickened and developed their spiritual lives and activities, and the lessons of patience and of self-denial that have been taught and learned through the years are assets by no means to be discounted. They have wrought in their Master's name and for His sake; and to His praise and glory, be it said, their offerings and their service have been graciously and gladly rendered.

Every event of the program had the closest attention of the great gathering, but that which especially thrilled and edified was the president's message, "What Vision Hath Wrought," and that of Mrs. George Martin, Norfolk, Va., president Southern Council of Baptist Women, on "Shall We Work Together?" and the superb address of Mrs. John Ferguson, of New York, chairman of the National Council of Protestant Church Women, who used for her subject and discussed for an hour with the rapt attention of her audience "Opportunities of Church Women in the Light of World Trends and Needs." These were really messages of inspiration and power. The treasurer of the Conference, Mrs. W. V. Leathers, had prepared a great chart which showed, in full view of everybody and at a glance, the financial achievements of every society of the Conference. It was a masterpiece of art and accuracy, which spoke eloquently of the work of the treasurer and of every one of the constituent societies of the great Conference.

The superintendents of each of the four districts of the Conference were present with a report of what had been done the past year in the several districts. The districts of this Conference have grown in interest and achievement, each equaling, if not surpassing, the entire work of the whole Conference less than a decade ago. The departmental superintendents all gave interesting and exceedingly helpful reports from their departments, contributing to the Conference both needed information and corresponding inspiration. Mrs. O. M. Cokes, vice-president of the Conference, presented a beautiful and most appropriate report on "Memoirs," in which loving tribute was paid to members of the Conference who had been called to their reward the past year. Mrs. J. W. Manning, of Norfolk, presented in a most striking manner the salient facts about the study books for the year and emphasized the merits of each, as well as the necessity of studying these valuable volumes. There was no happier event of the day than the result of the spirited rivalry for the banners that the Conference awards, and the most beautiful and striking manner and spirit in which Mrs. Joe Bynum Gay, of the Franklin Society, presented the same. Mrs. L. W. Vaughan, of Norfolk, added much to the joy and spirit of the Conference by rendering most efficiently and with genuine musical talent and skill two solos, one in the forenoon and another in the afternoon service.

Mrs. M. L. Bryant was re-elected president; Mrs. O. M. Cokes was elected vice-president; Mrs. L. W. Stagg was re-elected secretary, and Mrs. W. V. Leathers, treasurer.

The theme of the meeting was "Unrestricted Vision," and surely all who attended and caught the spirit of the day and the occasion went away with a larger and clearer vision of our Lord and the work which He is doing to make ours a world of fellowship and of friendship.

It is useless to say that the Franklin Society spread a most bountiful and beautiful luncheon, to which more than five hundred people sat down and which abundantly evidenced the hospitality and the delightful fellowship of the day.

TO KNOW AND TO DO.

Prof. Hightower, of Butler University, is credited with this statement: "People have been saying for years that if you give children a knowledge of the Bible, they will walk the straight and narrow way. The result shows that they won't walk the straight and narrow way. It indicates very definitely that mere knowledge of the Bible is not sufficient to insure proper character attitudes." It must have been a very narrow and shallow teacher who would say that a mere knowledge of the Bible is sufficient to insure proper character. We wonder where this Prof. Hightower ever found such a teacher. One might as well say that a mere knowledge of the almanac is sufficient to insure one against any ignorance of the weather, past, present or future, as to say that a mere knowledge of the Bible is sufficient to insure character. And in fact, one might as well read the almanac as the Bible if one is reading simply to get a knowledge of the letter, while careless about the spirit and deep meaning of the Book. Many rogues, rascals and renegades can quote Scripture glibly. They know the letter, but they fail to make the spirit of the Book a part of their life or conduct. All of us know far better than we do. The fact that one must have knowledge before one can do right, by no means indicates that one will do right because one has knowledge. James gets at the very heart of it when he says (Jas. 1:21) it is "the engrafted word which is able to save your soul." To engraft means "to fix deeply, to insert, as a scion of one tree or plant in another for propagation."

It may be truly said that if children, young and grown-up, are really taught the Bible, get the engrafted word into their own lives, they will walk the straight and narrow way. The trouble with so many is that they confuse a knowledge about the Bible with a living knowledge of the Bible, its spirit, its life, its light. One may know all about a candle or a lamp and yet sit in darkness all the night. If one is to get the benefit of the candle or the lamp, one must receive and be a witness to the light that the candle or the lamp is shedding. Paul realized this when he said, "Knowledge puffeth up." One may have all knowledge—all that science and literature and philosophy can give, and yet live in the deep darkness of a starless night, so far as one's soul and inner life is concerned.

Here is the very trouble with the so-called higher critics and much of the so-called "modernism." They confuse "the approved results of scholarship with the approved results of character." Mere scholarship cannot make character, nor enrich conduct. Until knowledge gets hold of the conscience and illumines the soul and stirs to activity the inner and hidden depths of life, it is useless. The trouble with many critics of the Bible, and its teachings, is the trouble that Prof. Hightower seems to be burdened with, viz: they are not seeking to do that which the Book itself enjoins, viz: "To feed upon the sincere milk of the word." J. O. A.

Virtue by itself is not enough, or anything like enough. Strength must be added to it, and the determination to use that strength. The good man who is ineffective is not able to make his goodness of much account to the people as a whole. No matter how much a man hears the word, small is the credit attached to him if he fails to be a doer also; and in serving the Lord he must remember that he needs to avoid sloth in his business as well as cultivate fervency of spirit.—Theodore Roosevelt.

God is the fountain whence
Ten thousand blessings flow.
To Him my life, my health and friends,
And every good, I owe

The comforts He affords,
And neither few nor small;
He is the source of fresh delights,
My portion and my all.

A DIVINE EVENT.

BY REV. RAYMOND G. CLARK, M. A., B. D.

(An address on Christian unity to the General Convention of the Christian Church, in session at Piqua, Ohio, Friday, October 26, 1929.)

Members of the General Convention, Visitors, Honorary Guests and Friends of Christianity:

We have come at last to one of those far-off divine events. It is this for which we have so long prayed and looked. To the most of us it seemed as if it would never come; perhaps to all of us it has come more speedily than we dreamed; and now that the hour has come for some large measure of expression of an age-old ideal, we can scarcely realize its significance or comprehend its power. A few of the close followers of our Lord desired to see His glory, and when they beheld Him in His glory at the Mount of Transfiguration, they were dazed by the experience. So now with most of us, when God is revealing His will to us and answering our prayers in some large way, it seems almost impossible that that realization has come. Our minds are dazed at the thought.

We hope that none are ridiculing us for terming this as one of the divine events, for truly it is so strange, so far removed from any bare human ingenuity or attainment, that we are all led to believe today that God is the power behind the throne. If it is true that this is a divine event, then we ought to be able to detect divine aspects or principles in it.

In the first place, if divinity is moving in our midst and directing our action today, that which is vital to the life of Christians must be conserved by the merging of two great fellowships. There has been no apparent selfishness on the part of either group to want to drag into our merger plans that which is not vital to human life; and if such does come in, it is merely because our human minds have not been able to see the uselessness of it. And whatever is vital to a better humanity, we have prayerfully sought to make that a part of our future program. None of us should consider any element of either body as being sacred unless it is capable of adapting itself to the good of the world.

In the second place, if this is a divine event, it should usher in a larger fellowship. None of us have the moral right to pray for, or to ask others to accept that which is not good for people everywhere in principle. We can scarcely think of a being worthy of being called God, who limits Himself in His fellowship. Judaism did that, so have practically all isms and creeds made by men; but to say that God our Father limits His fellowship does not seem to present Him as the Father of Christ. If we insist on a limited fellowship, we ought to look again into the mirror of that Jewish home when the elder brother objected to his younger brother's return. Because we are going into an enlarged fellowship, it does not mean we cannot still cherish and maintain those close relations and those intimate experiences that we have always cherished. None of us are able to comprehend the ability of a loving life, to love. Our daily experiences teach us that when we love the many the more, we love the few the better. Are world Christians like John R. Mott, Sherwood Eddy, the early apostles, or Jesus Christ less appreciative of small groups than those of us whose scope of thinking is less limited? Can we imagine that parents' love for the one child is diminished when other children come into the home?

The third principle that must mark this action if it is worthy of being called a divine event, is the principle of change, for change is the principle of creation itself, and God is still in the act of creating moral men in His image. Change is the law of life. Let us not overlook the fact, however, that there can be both constancy and change among Christian people. There can be a constant attitude of good will toward everybody, and such an attitude will in itself demand constant change.

Fourth, if this is a divine event, loyalty must have its full share. We must think in terms of principles rather than in terms of rules or schemes. A rule deals with particulars; a principle deals with universal loyalty. Divine loyalty must always be thorough-going. It must involve principles which can be projected indefinitely and result in the common best. If that can be done, we can see how speedily changes may come. We can also imagine that these changes may be met graciously. If today we are going to declare our willingness to unite with the Congregationalists, we should not place any other interpretation upon that term loyalty than that of universal good will. That implies that if a person is to be loyal to one, even himself, he must be loyal to everybody, regardless of race, color, intelligence, occupation or religious belief. One cannot be loyal to his own family until he is loyal to his whole community. We can now see that one cannot be loyal to his own nation without being loyal to all the nations. He who is not loyal to all peoples is not loyal to any people. Loyalty will demand sacrifice; it will demand the surrender of some things that individuals may like, but if all of us can take that attitude of universal loyalty, we will rejoice at the privilege of giving up that which we may have cherished in former days, if by that sort of surrender a greater good may be accomplished. Loyalty or Church union does not in anywise overlook or obscure the rights and privileges of any individual. Christian loyalty makes the individual offer himself for everybody rather than asking everybody to bend to his likes or dislikes. Christian loyalty makes everybody take the attitude of Christ toward everybody.

The plans submitted by our commission and recommended by our Committee on Christian Unity this afternoon offer opportunities for universal loyalty to all people. We do not know the details of all that is going to happen. Our proposed plan of merger does not aim to clear all the future; it does, however, aim to set us in the right direction. It leaves room, thank God, for adventure and heroic endeavor. It leaves room for us to exercise that type of Christian faith which another has defined as "reason grown courageous." It brings us back to that sort of adventurous spirit that made the ancient patriot go out "not knowing whither he went." All that he knew was that God had called him to go out in that direction. There flashes before our minds now that panorama of the bygone ages that demonstrate that whenever people have gone out in response to the call of the divine, the divine has been able to take care of the event. Our plan does not aim to solve all difficulties; there are difficulties of which we did not dream, and we can only pray that if this is God's will we may have the courage to try the unseen.

There sat on evening in a school room in France a boy whom God had in the making, and that boy knew it not. He had been assigned a hard task of making figures harmonize in a mathematical problem, and after he had tried the difficulty for a while, he wrote on the fly-leaf of his book that he was going to give it up and quit trying. The next morning when the boy appeared and opened that book to read again the cruel strokes of yesterday's hand, he read the words of wisdom inscribed by his teacher. They read: "Go on, my boy, go on; face the difficulties, and as you proceed new light will come with increased clearness."

If we are the children of Christ, the Master, today, can we not venture into this new and difficult problem of Christian adventure? Can we not believe that if we will go on, light will shine with increased clearness upon our path? Some of our minds today may be dazzled with the thought of complicated and intricate situations. There are details of organization that have troubled your committees and your commission. There are problems of finance that we have not been able to fathom, and must frankly admit that we do not see clearly yet how it will all work out. There are questions of legality that none of us propose to understand thoroughly. There are matters of publication that are going to try our hearts. There are names with which we are to contend, names that are precious, that have in a measure brought us thus far. It may be, in fact does mean, that some names will have to be changed, but our attention today should not be centered upon these difficult and complicated matters, for even though we should remain as separate entities, as we have during the past, we should still be surrounded with questions of legal nature, organizations, publications, names. Those of us who are members of the General Board of the Convention know too well how our hearts have been tried again and again in our annual sessions with just such things as these. Our Congregational brethren evidently are not unlike us in this; neither are any other organizations unlike us in this. There should then come to us that sense of freshness that we are this day entering upon a union that will make us share our common problems as one. We should say, if necessary:

"We lay in the dust life's glories dead,
That from the ground there may blossom
Red life that shall endless be."

We do not mean to belittle any of these things.

Organization is important, publication is important, a name is important; but Jesus Christ is more important than all of them. This merger with our Congregational brethren must be one minor event in the great divine event toward which all Christians must move in making the brethren all one. Our division or our staying apart keeps back the coming of the brotherhood of man.

"Life's final power is brotherhood,
The crest and crowning of all good,
For it will bring again to earth
Her long lost pose and mirth;
Will send new light on every face,
A kingly power upon the race:
And 'til it comes, we men are slaves,
And travel downward to the dust of graves.

"Come, clear the way, then; clear the way!
Blind creeds and kings have had their day.
Break the dead branches from the path,
Our hope is in the aftermath!
Our hope is in the heroic men—
Star lead to build the world again.
To this event the ages ran—
Make way for the brotherhood of man."

A HALF-MINUTE SERMON.

"And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God" (Mark 11:22).

In the American war, the flag was in danger of being captured. The captain shouted: "Bring the colors back to the company!" But just at that moment a brave soldier dashed forward, shouting: "Bring the company up to the colors!" And soon that flag was surrounded by a hundred fearless hearts. So we may lower God's standard and bring it down to the level of our unbelief; or we may bring our faith up to the great and glorious standard of His mighty promises, his own mighty proffered faith.—A. B. Simpson.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

November 5th will go down in history as red-letter day in the Franklin, Va., Christian Church. It was the seventeenth annual session of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference. The day was ideal. The congregation was immense. The delegation was full. The hospitality was cordial. The dinner was superb. Mrs. M. L. Bryant, the president, presided, and her message, "What Vision Hath Wrought," was illuminating and stimulating. Two outside speakers won the confidence, and praise of the captivated audience. Mrs. George Martin, president of Southern Council of Baptist Women, spoke on "Shall We Work Together?" and all felt that it was Christ's way of working. Mrs. John Ferguson, chairman of the National Council of Protestant Church Women, spoke on "Opportunities of Church Women in the Light of World Trends and Needs," and her address captivated the spell-bound audience. Mrs. Martin came from Norfolk and Mrs. Ferguson from New York City. Then followed a great address by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, secretary of Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention, on "A Vision of World Fellowship." Everybody knows what effect his address had on the congregation. His vision, his grasp on the subject of missions, aroused interest, determination and faith in missions.

The work of the women in this Conference, within these seventeen years, is the most encouraging experience in Christian missions, and shows what could be done if the entire Church were engaged heartily in this great cause. The women are leading in the education, organization of missionary forces, and they reported that they had raised $85,000 in the seventeen years of their history. That means that they have raised in cash, per year, $5,000. When people talk about the "good old days," when they were more religious than they are today, they forget that our Church had done nothing for missions before 1886. Many others made fine contributions to the exercises of the day, and of the years the day included, but, like all great things, one cannot mention all the names and subjects in that great meeting. Enough to say, that Franklin Church, as hostess, was sweet and liberal, and the Conference, as guest, was grateful and appreciative.

Following the great day in Franklin came the annual Conference in Suffolk. This annual gathering was well attended, the interest was unbroken and the work in good condition, though some Churches failed to get in their reports in full. The ministers seem to be determined to make their Churches comply with Conference requirements and to increase the spiritual life of their congregations. With Rev. H. S. Hardcastle as president, Dr. I. W. Johnson as secretary, and W. E. MacClenny as treasurer, the Conference is well officered for work.

A group of three Congregationalists came as fraternal delegates from the Congregational Association of Washington, D. C. Their names are Rev. Harvey W. Goddard, Rev. Dr. B. B. James, and Mr. Nerten M. Little. Revs. C. C. Ryan, L. E. Smith, and W. W. Staley were elected fraternal delegates to the Washington Congregational Association, which will meet in Washington, D. C., November 19th.

ELON LETTER.

One of America's greatest philosophers said that the man with an idea will, sooner or later, be discovered by his fellow-men, and that though he may live in a desert or a trackless forest, the world will make a beaten pathway to his door.

The late J. P. Morgan was one of America's most successful business men. He had the courage to adventure in industrial matters. When he was convinced that there was hope of financial progress in a certain direction, he would pin his faith to that venture, win or lose. It is reported that when his private accounts were investigated after his death, it was discovered that he had written off more than one-half billion dollars in losses from business ventures in which he had confidence, but which proved to be financially unprofitable. However, he succeeded in more instances than he lost, and became the founder of one of America's greatest fortunes.

Near the end of his life he is reported to have said that if he were young, and beginning his business career anew, he would select a business with the "repeat" idea as foundational in it. For example, in a negative way, he said that he would never enter upon the manufacture of furniture or pianos, which people purchase only once in a while. He also stated that he would not undertake the manufacture of cradles or coffins. Both of these he acknowledged to be necessities, but they were not "repeaters." Food, clothing and other things that people purchase day after day, or week after week, he said, offered the greatest opportunity for industrial success for the future. The shrewdness and keenness of the man are discerned in this statement.

Three of America's greatest living captains of industry are Thomas A. Edison, Henry Ford, and Harvey Firestone. They have recently been interviewed with reference to their business philosophy, and the answers they gave are worthy of serious consideration.

On the eve of the great gathering that recently honored Thomas A. Edison for having invented the electric light, on the fiftieth anniversary of this invention, Edison was requested to state his philosophy of business achievement. His reply was that any man who expected to succeed in a business way should bring the world something new, and that would at the same time prove useful and serviceable to human life. President Hoover, at the celebration referred to, paid Mr. Edison a great compliment when he said that he was not only a great inventor in the realm of science, but that he had brought to science and invention the method of laboratory experimentation. Young people who expect to be successful will certainly keep in mind Mr. Edison's business philosophy, that the world will honor the man with promotion who can bring it a new idea. Mr. Edison has certainly done that, and has deserved his success.

Henry Ford's business philosophy is very different from that of Mr. Edison. He says that the man who expects to succeed in a business way should make a thing that the world wants, make it cheaper than anybody else can make it, and continue to reduce the price on it without any reference to the demand for the article, just as rapidly as he can. His fortune, the greatest in human history to be accomplished by a single man, is the result of this philosophy, the very opposite of that which actuated Jay Gould, in his dealings with people. Jay Gould stated that we should charge the highest prices that the public would endure. Henry Ford has taken the exact opposite view and has achieved remarkable success.

Harvey Firestone differs both from Mr. Edison and Mr. Ford in his business philosophy. He said that the man who hopes to succeed in business should make the article which he proposes the public of the very highest quality that it is possible to make it. The public, he believes, will appreciate this desire to produce a high-grade article and will enrich the man who endeavors thus to serve.

It is noteworthy that these four great captains of industry in America, one of them deceased and three living, have each a different view of what is requisite to successful business achievement. It is likely that still other ideas will occur to leading thinkers in the business realm for the future. Meanwhile, it would be well for those who aspire to business success to keep these four ideas steadily in mind.

W. A. HARPER.

A SPECIAL DAY AND ITS SIGNIFICANCE.

It is indeed a beneficent influence that for a season, however brief, deflects or withdraws the mind from the mad rush of commerce and industry and directs it into the ways of pleasantness and peace. And it is indeed a blessing to have the turmoil and hurry of life slowed down a bit annually for the sake of humanities.

Our calendar year is marked by days, weeks and months. We live not by months or weeks, but by days. It is, therefore, important that we take account of the contribution each day makes to our lives. We look "special days" as more attractive, enlivening and conducive to increasing our happiness and enriching our domestic and social relations than other days.

Thanksgiving is one of the "special days" which, during recent years, comes to North Carolinians freighted with the spirit of good will, of cheerfulness, of happy greetings fragrant with friendship that means service where service may be needed. If we would enter into and enjoy the real spirit of Thanksgiving we must keep our minds and our hearts fixed upon the star of Bethlehem's manger from which emanated a spirit of meekness, love and helpfulness unsurpassed in the history of mankind.

To rightly appreciate the spirit of Thanksgiving, we must have the spirit of the Christ who called the little ones to Himself and said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." It is when we have the sweetness of love and the spirit of the Master in our lives that we brighten and cheer the lives of those around us. Each of us has an individual part to perform in life's drama; each has a duty incumbent upon him, each has a responsibility to meet. Our future success will depend on individualizing our allotted share of the service to be rendered in making the world a better place in which to live.

Few situations in life are more distressing than that of children without homes. No loss seems so great as that of parental love. Bereavement inflicts its stroke with acutest anguish when it cuts all the tender ties that bind the loving lives of father and mother to our devoted heart. Other sorrows, other losses we may bear with fortitude. Other bereavements, even, seem not to fill our spirit with such bitter humiliation; for they come to us in after-life, when we have somewhat learned to hear the lessons of grief, and when manhood or womanhood has brought us increased power or endurance.

Childhood, with all its ignorance of worldly sorrow, and with all its frailty of spirit, is overwhelmed by tribulation of being orphaned. The orphan, therefore, is entitled to peculiar sympathy and protection. The child bereaved of its natural guardianship and left, in its innocence and tears, to the mercies of a cold world, becomes the very symbol of defenseless affliction; and as such, it should receive the protection of every man's arm and the affection of every woman's heart.

To the North Carolina Orphan Association, it is the solemn consideration that God Himself has made especial promises of protection to the orphan, friends who will "stick closer than a brother." Friends who come in the hour of need and become vehicles of mercy; truth and justice flashing no rates of stocks or pageantry of kings, but making the circuit of the world with help for the destitute and honor for the lowly.

Those capable of estimating the value of the life of a child bereft of the blessings and comforts of a home, should realize what it means to enlist in the movement to swell the treasuries of the orphan homes in the State at Thanksgiving, remembering that the Master Himself gave expression to the inspirational pronouncement, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." To those who are looking for some outlet for the joyful spirit of Thanksgiving, we commend to their consideration the appeal of the North Carolina Orphan Association, which is once again asking every citizen of the good old North State to contribute the income of one day out of 365 to the orphanage of his or her choice on or before Thursday, November 28th, the day set apart by the President of the United States and the Governor of North Carolina for the celebration of divine goodness.

Everybody, old and young, rich and poor, learned and illiterate, are asked to join in this holy movement and thus "visit the fatherless in their affliction." Respond in the right spirit and realize a continual thanksgiving in your soul which will enable you to scatter sunshine along the pathway of others on the journey toward the "setting sun." Make the offering on the basis of your earning capacity for a single day—more, if you will; less, if you can do no better. Make it through your Church, your lodge, or forward direct to the orphanage in which you are most interested.

The need for liberal Thanksgiving offerings has not been so apparent in a long time as it is this year. Let us rise to the dignity and demand of the hour by each doing his level best to bless the State and lift it to a higher plane of beneficence and good will. The Thanksgiving season is a most appropriate period during which our people may show their appreciation of the splendid service the orphan homes are rendering in the care, protection, training and education of orphaned children who might otherwise become a menace to society and a care upon the public.

Citizens of North Carolina, do your duty to yourselves, to your community, and to the State at Thanksgiving this year, and realize the full delights of service by making glad the lives of hundreds of bright boys and girls, bereft of parents, who are now under the fostering care of the fine orphanage homes located in various sections of this splendid old Commonwealth.

Very respectfully,

LOOK TO THE FOUNDATIONS.

President Hoover has struck at the root of all national and social problems by appointing an extraordinary Child Welfare Commission. He perceives—as does everybody else who gives thought to the subject—that the most important concern of any nation is the well-being of its youth. The health, the intelligence and the moral ideals of the country's boys and girls are obviously of first importance; as the President said, "the greatest asset of a race is its children." Here is one major public issue upon which the minds of all the people are united, and their hearts warm.

The call from the White House should resound in the deepest consciousness of the Church, as a summons to special activity in her own field of work for childhood and youth, which is the Sunday School. Naturally, the new Child Welfare Commission cannot deal with the religious training of young people, and so will leave this most important phase of the problem outside of its scope. But parallel activity by the Churches, stimulated by public interest in the national movement, is opportune and proper. All the considerations which weigh with the President's commission apply, with added force, to the Christian agencies of child-nurture.

Here we have a clear challenge to revivify and enlarge the Sunday School. Only about half of the children who are the natural field of the Protestant Sunday Schools are at present enrolled. First and plainest of all the activities indicated for the Churches by this new national enterprise is to get the boys and girls into the Sunday School. Other steps will logically follow—we may trust the brains and devotion and resourcefulness of the Sunday School teachers and officers themselves to see to these—but, first and fundamentally, get the boys and girls into the Sunday School.

As a general statement, the situation calls for a doubling of every school's present enrollment. Also the formation of many new rural schools will be necessary. And an enlarged personnel of workers is required. All of those ends are attainable if once the Churches give themselves to the appealing and congenial task of getting every last boy and girl into the Sunday School.

Here is a slogan for all of the denominations, and for all of the individual congregations: "A doubled Sunday School membership within five years!" Each communion may make its own plans, and every Sunday School association or council may swing into support by its own methods; but all should concentrate upon the one simple, central aim of securing the attendance at Sunday School of all the youth of the land. Preliminary censuses of child population and Church relationship will stimulate interest.

For the time being, let the advanced theories of "religious education"—which have of late years supplanted enthusiasm and activity for the simple promotion of Sunday School organization and growth—be set aside. The more important and immediate objective is to get the boys and girls into the Sunday School itself, where even the simplest form of Bible teaching is bound to affect their character.

Parents will be found in a mood to co-operate; for the moral and social unsettlement of the post-war period has brought concern to the mind of everybody. Even the most worldly parents want their children to be good. All conditions make this a most opportune time for doubling the Sunday School enrollment.

Incidentally, a nation-wide movement for the Sunday School, under the prestige and impulse of the national activities of the Child Welfare Commission, will call forth a new crop of lay leaders. In the past fifteen years, the great leaders of Sunday School work, like Jacobs, Bailey, Hartshorn, Warren, Wanamaker and Heinz, have passed away, leaving no successors. Here is a field for the fullest expression of strong men's powers and consecration. In the denominations and States, and in the national field, there is crying need for the clear-headed leadership of laymen who seek to serve Christ and their own day in most effective form. Already there are a legion of such in the posts of Sunday School teachers and superintendents, and this present emergency should enlarge their sphere.

An enthusiasm for the Sunday School is easily created. Every Rotary Club and Woman's Club and fraternal organization in the land will lend a sympathetic ear to a plea for co-operation in getting the boys and girls into Sunday School. The Hoover commission will surely go to the limit of propriety in lending aid.

Adult Bible classes, already an immeasurable force in the nation's life, will naturally multiply in number and membership under the impetus of a nation-wide Sunday School "drive." Fathers and mothers will find it easier to take the children where they go themselves.

No mention is here made of the large consequences which will inevitably flow from a doubled Sunday School enrollment, such as the increase in Church membership, the diversion of boys and girls from the associations and influences which breed criminals, and the putting of a high moral purpose and of Bible standards into life. The one thought to be held central is that this is the hour to get boys and girls into the Sunday School. All incidental questions of curricula and methods should be held in abeyance; and it will not be easy to repress the day's rampageous theorists and the highbrows. Our present objective is to get all the boys and girls of the land into the ranks of the Sunday School, where the mass psychology will favor righteousness, and where the Bible itself will be studied and the influence of godly men and women felt.

Will the reader make it his personal business to bring this proposal to the attention of the Church? Let the Church at least keep in step with the State in caring for the boys and girls. —William T. Ellis.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

SKETCH OF MISSIONARIES IN JAPAN.

In the fall of 1886, the American Christian Convention and the Southern Christian Convention placed under appointment the Rev. and Mrs. D. F. Jones, of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference as the first missionaries to go from our Christian Church to Japan. Rev. and Mrs. Jones sailed from New York City on January 7, 1887. A long trip was before them. Had they a big wallet of money to start with? Let us see. The two Conventions contributed $425 each, which equaled $850. This to take Rev. Jones, his wife and little daughter all the way to Japan, via England, nearly 16,000 miles, and then enable them to locate and start the Christians' mission. Cabin rooms and first-class fare in shipboard for nearly two months. Impossible! Talk about self-sacrificing heroism! Missionary annals, and our own first missionaries furnish that. After a great deal of deliberation and thought, they finally decided to go to Ishinomaki, which is thirty-five miles northeast of Sendai, in Japan. So we find the Christians' first Sunday School and Church in Japan were organized at Ishinomaki the last Sunday in August, 1887. Would time permit, it would be interesting to study the history and growth of our missionary work in Japan, but since time will not allow that, let us devote the few minutes that we have to our present work and workers who are giving their lives for the cause of Christian missions in the "Sunrise Kingdom."

Japan proper is made up of four large islands and some four thousand smaller ones. Of the four large islands, Hondo is by far the greatest, and upon it all our mission work is located. Our work is located in three fields.

First, Tokyo, which is the headquarters of the Southern field. At this station we find the following missionaries: Rev. and Mrs. A. D. Woodworth, Rev. and Mrs. C. P. Garman, Miss Martha Stacy, and Miss Angie Crew. May we get a brief sketch of the lives of these noble and heroic persons. Dr. Woodworth was born in Irwin County, Ohio, the fifteenth of sixteen children. The farm life allowed a very meager education, but Mr. Woodworth was a lover of books, and after stopping five times to teach school to get money to continue his education, he finally graduated from college. For nine years he taught at Union Christian College, in Merom, Ind., which work he described as a "heaven on earth." In 1892, Rev. Harry Rhodes returned from Japan, and the Mission Board was seeking a successor. Dr. and Mrs. Woodworth decided to go, and sailed in September, 1892. Dr. Woodworth is skilled in the art of personal evangelism, and God has signally honored his consecrated efforts. From his personal contact with the young men in Japan, many have been drawn into his Bible classes and eventually led to Christ.

The following charming sketch of Mrs. Woodworth was written in her own inimitable fashion: "Born near Manson, Ind., April 11, 1866 (still living); always a country girl; always went to Sunday School; always hated tobacco; always loved to read; always sent to the district school; joined the Christian Church; married a man who was called to be a foreign missionary; also went; always have been second fiddle in life; always worked hard at it; always will; mother of two daughters, one ready-made son and three granddaughters—and that is all, thus far."

Rev. C. P. Garman was born on a farm near Troy, Ohio. From youth up, he was interested in C. E., Y. M. C. A., and other forms of Church work. While in Cleveland, Mr. Garman became acquainted with Miss Katherine Wise, whom he afterward married and whose keen interest in missions was an added stimulus to his own ambitions to serve. So in April, 1906, Rev. and Mrs. Garman sailed to Japan. Mr. Garman has a thorough knowledge of our work in Japan, and represents our mission on several interdenominational organizations, in addition to his regular work.

Mrs. Garman was born in Cleveland, Ohio. When but a child, she united with the Church and became a very active worker. From her early childhood her one ambition was to become a missionary, and, with Mr. Garman, has spent many years of active service in Japan. They have four children, one of whom is attending college in America. The Garmans are at home on furlough.

Our next missionary of the Southern field is Miss Martha Stacy, who was born in Haverhill, Mass. At the age of eight, she joined the Christian Church and grew up in Church work through Sunday School, Junior Endeavor and the Young People's Society. During her school days, Miss Stacy signed the student volunteer pledge, and in later years, although she was giving her active time to home missions in the city in which she resided, she felt that she was not fulfilling her vow. She applied for an appointment and immediately took an intensive kindergarten course, sailing for Japan in the fall of 1919. She is doing most effective work among the women and girls. She says, "Now, I have arrived at the fulfillment of some of my desires, but my desires grow with the days of my life, and I can never work fast enough to keep up with them."

Our youngest missionary in Japan is Miss Angie Crew. Miss Crew was born in West Milton, Ohio, where she constantly attended the Christian Church. It was while she was attending college that she decided to become a foreign missionary. Miss Crew has spent her first term of five years in Japan, where she has done splendid work. The story of Miss Crew is the story of the deep and abiding influence of a Christian home and early Christian training in the Church.

Our second field of service is at Utsunomiya, which is headquarters for the middle field. Our missionary there is Dr. E. C. Fry. Dr. Fry was born in Foster, R. I. In his early manhood, Dr. Fry was converted and began to feel a definite call to the missionary and foreign missions. In 1895, Dr. Fry married Miss Susie Gullett, who was also going out to the fields for the first time, and in that same year went to Sendai and began to develop the work of the northern field. After his first furlough home, Dr. and Mrs. Fry settled in Utsunomiya and started the work in that province of 800,000 people. Mrs. Fry's work, until her death last year, was in conducting the school for girls and the oversight of some eleven or twelve branch Sunday Schools. Dr. Fry is in charge of all the stations in this middle field, in addition to his teaching English in the schools, Bible classes in the various stations, and his official work in connection with our missions. On his present furlough, many of us had the honor and pleasure of hearing Dr. Fry. He has now returned to his beloved work in Japan.

And so we come to our third field of service, which is Sendai, headquarters of our northern field. Here we have two missionaries—Rev. and Mrs. W. Q. McKnight. Rev. Mr. McKnight was born on a farm near Hillsboro, Ind. (not a missionary in Japan at present from the Southern Convention). He graduated from high school and college, and it was while he was in college that gradually his cherished dreams of becoming a lawyer faded. After leaving college, he went to Princeton University, and here he definitely decided to go to the foreign fields. In 1919, Rev. and Mrs. McKnight went to Japan and are fulfilling their desire to serve their Master on the foreign field. Mr. McKnight is fitting right into the work, making regular trips into the various stations of his large field, conducting Bible classes and countless other activities, connected with the oversight of the field. He is also representing our Church interdenominationally as northern secretary of the great newspaper evangelism enterprise in Japan.

Mrs. Mary E. McKnight was born at Attica, Ind. At an early age she united with the Church and became a devoted member and a loyal worker. While attending De Pew University, in 1916-'17, she became a member of the student volunteer band, so that her marriage to a missionary candidate brought her one step nearer the fulfillment of her missionary desire which is now being realized in her years of service with her husband.

Through the untiring efforts and unlimited devotion expressed through service, these missionaries have brought many fine and noble characters and souls in the work for the extension of the kingdom of God in Japan. Four of the Japanese who have been converted through our missionaries and who are themselves preaching, teaching and showing to thousands of others the wonderful things taught them through the knowledge of Christ are Rev. Y. Irokawa, Rev. Q. Sano, Rev. K. Kitano, Jr., and Rev. K. Kimura. These four native preachers are doing a wonderful work. Through their lives of devotion to God and a desire to serve Him, thousands are being brought into the kingdom. After reading of the wonderful good they are doing, it causes one to feel that if our missionaries have done little more than bring these four earnest and devoted men into the service, all the money spent for them has been well worth while.

APPRECIATION OF THE MISSIONARY.

The Hon. J. Ramsay MacDonald, Prime Minister of Great Britain, whose territory stretches into Africa, India and other parts of the earth, and under whose flag hundreds of missionaries are protected and at work, pays a tribute to missionaries that ought to silence the criticism so often thoughtlessly aimed at these servants of the King, who, out of loyalty to their Lord, have gone forth through trial and hardship to make this a better world. Premier MacDonald, speaking at the Congo Jubilee Exhibition, is reported as saying:

"As soon as the missionary appears, slavery is doomed. I do not say that it is doomed in twenty-four hours; but I do say that the presence of the missionary has this effect, explain it as you may, that from the moment he becomes a part of the atmosphere of a race, slavery dwindles and education begins. Men whose lives have been long lived in the atmosphere of ignorant superstition and mortal terror are enabled to lift up their heads and to discover that there is something giving them power, enabling them to walk about with heads uplifted, obedient to the law, but not victims of the law, enabling them not only to look out on the world but within themselves. There begins responsible care, which at last emerges into a conception of the responsibilities of usefulness, lending them the idea of responsibility to the universe. I think the missionary requires no further justification. We, who have been called to the secular affairs of life rather than the spiritual will never fail to be grateful, I hope, to the missionaries who have carried into effect the gospel of human justice as well as of spiritual power."

This, indeed, is going a long way from the time and the spirit when the same government of Great Britain enacted a law preventing missionaries from going out to India, to China, to Africa, or any of her possessions, lest they seem to interfere with the religious rights and privileges even of the pagan beliefs of their colonists or allies. William Carey, in going to India, and Robert Morrison, in going to China, had to sail on ships bearing other flags than that of Great Britain and go as representatives and citizens from other countries than Great Britain. The faithful missionary, through more than a century of service and toil in the name and for the sake of their Lord, have made a contribution to world peace, to international justice and good will, to friendship among the nations, to mercy and to relief, far beyond that which can now be computed. MISSION LITERATURE.

The missionary spirit should prevail at such a wonderful event as Christmas, celebrating the birth of our Saviour. Since it was He that told us to go into all the world with His gospel, the missionary idea should be a part of our Christmas exercises.

The following pageants are recommended: In the November issue of Review of the World will be found a splendid program; also "Won't You Walk Into My Parlor," price 10 cents. This can be ordered from the Board of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The study books for missionary societies this year are as follows: Woman's Society, "From Jerusalem," price 50 cents; young people, "Going to Jerusalem," price 50 cents; Willing Workers, "Jumping Beans," price 75 cents; beginners, "Little Lord Jesus," price 25 cents. Other good books: "Seven Thousand Emeralds," price 75 cents; "The Crowded Ways," price 60 cents; "The City's Church," price 75 cents; "Mitsie, a Little Girl of Japan," price 50 cents. Above books can be ordered from the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio.

THE HIGHER PATRIOTISM.

(The Book of Jonah.)

GOLDEN TEXT: "He made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth."—Acts 17:26.

LESSON: Book of Jonah.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isa. 55:1-7.

What a tragedy that the book of Jonah has been the center of a storm of controversy over the question as to whether it must be accepted absolutely literally! How unfortunate that it has been made a test of orthodoxy! How pathetic it is that in the thinking of so many people the central thing in the book is the account of Jonah being swallowed by a great fish! How tragic it is that its lofty idealism has been obscured by bondage to literalism!

As a matter of fact, the Book of Jonah is one of the most thrilling and one of the most vital books in the Bible. There are few books in the Bible that give a more universal aspect of the love of God and of His benevolent purpose for all men, a more clear portrayal of the individual relationship which he bears to all men, and a more insistent challenge to missionary activity. It presents in splendid literary form an account of God's effort to show Israel, the chosen nation, its world-wide mission, and its moral responsibility for sharing with others, even their most hated enemies, the knowledge of God which Israel enjoyed.

A Man with a Commission from God.

"Now, the world of the Lord came unto Jonah." God has to depend upon men to do His work. And God has a way of speaking in no uncertain terms to men. Happy is that man who feels called to a definite task. Happy is that man who is not disobedient to the heavenly vision and the heavenly voice.

How God thinks of cities. "Go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up before me." Nineveh was a great city, the capital of the Assyrian empire, the monstrous embodiment of cruelty and violence and wickedness, and the hated enemy of Israel. Humanly speaking, it had forfeited its claim upon God's mercy. But as the hymn writer has put it, "There's a wideness in God's mercy like the wideness of the sea." In spite of and by virtue of the city's wickedness, God loved it. These notes are written on Saturday night, and as they are being written the writer thinks of the tragedies and the sins of the great cities of the world on this Saturday night. How God's heart must yearn for our modern cities!

Running away from God. "But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish, from the presence of the Lord." Jonah had a little God. He thought of God as being limited to the bounds of Israel. He thought that by going to another country he might get away "from the presence of the Lord." But like many another man, he learned that it is impossible to get away from God. Psalm 139 is worth reading in this connection.

The gospel of a second chance. "And the word of the Lord came unto Jonah a second time." God is rather persistent. Thank God, He is. He will not leave us to our own devices. He will not allow us to go our own ways unchallenged. And when men have missed the way, He is faithful and just to forgive them and to give them another chance, and another chance, even unto seventy times seventy, and then some more.

Preaching that brought forth repentance. "And Jonah went unto Nineveh . . . and he cried, and said, Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be over-come. . . . So the people believed God." We do not know the details of Jonah's preaching, but we know the general outline. He proclaimed the ultimate penalty of sin. And he proclaimed it in such a clear and convincing way that the people repented and brought forth works meet for repentance. Preaching ought to be designed to change men's conduct as well as their thinking.

A Man Outside of a City Sulking.

Jonah became angry when the people of Nineveh repented. He would have liked to see these hated foreigners destroyed. In fact, he frankly told the Lord as much. And he intimated that he had come with misgivings and fears that the Lord was not going to do the things that he wanted done. It would appear that he had come not because he wanted to, and not because he wanted his preaching to save Nineveh, but rather because he hoped to see their discomfiture. He sits down, therefore, and sulks—sulks because God has shown His love for the hated foreigners. Also the species is not extinct. There are those who think that God loves their nation or their race, but they do not think of or want God to love other nations and other races. They like to think of God as loving the white race or the American people, but the thought of God loving the negro or the Japanese or the Chinese or the people of the isles of the sea is almost abhorrent to them.

God deals so graciously with the sulky prophet. He shields Jonah with a gourd vine, and then causes a worm to eat it off so that the prophet is subjected to the burning sun and the vehement east wind. Then he makes this an object lesson. Jonah is concerned over the gourd, in the making of which he had no part. It was a selfish interest. How much more must God be concerned over the large number of men and women, and boys and girls who lived in the great city, whom He had formed, and whose destiny He had shaped.

God's care for the individual. "Wherein are more than six-score thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand?—children who had not come to years of moral discernment, and were therefore innocent of the crimes of Nineveh against humanity. "And also much cattle"—what delicate irony. God cares even for brute creation.

The moral of the story is clear. Israel is the chosen people, not in the sense that they are to receive the blessings from God for themselves, but in the sense that they were to be the means through which God expressed His love for the other nations. God's love includes all nations and all peoples. The Book of Jonah still stands as a rebuke to those who have a little God, to those who are exclusive, to those who are non-missionary in spirit and in giving.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, November 24, 1929.

TOPIC: "Thanksgiving Through Thanks-living." Psa. 116:12-14, 17-19.

Some Bible Hints.

To recall God's goodness is to drink of the cup of salvation and is true thanksgiving (v. 13).

Simple prayer of thanksgiving is one of the best ways in which to show our gratitude. God wants us to talk with Him (v. 14).

A sacrifice always costs something. We can thank God by giving generously to His people (v. 17).

When we keep our pledges, we are expressing gratitude for blessings He has given us (v. 18).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The Christian should be an optimist. He should feel that he is on the side of the angels, and should rejoice evermore.

What we give to meet human need is a fair index of the depth of our gratitude. Shallow natures give nothing. Deep natures enter into the fellowship of suffering.

We live gratefully when we acknowledge Him in all our ways. Few carry the thought of God into the acts of their daily lives; yet that can be done, and should be done.

A kind and beautiful life is a poem of thanksgiving. It is far more eloquent than words, and it is easily understood.

A Few Illustrations.

If Governor Bradford could appoint a special day of thanksgiving for the meager crops—barley and Indian corn—of 1621, surely we need to thank God for the prosperity of 1929.

We should learn to use our opportunities. As an object floating on a river drifts past a ship, so do we let chances to do good pass us, never to return.

When, in spite of pain and sorrow, we can look up to God and say, "I thank Thee for life," we are living our thanks for His goodness. That is humility.

In thanksgiving we also come back to the idea of sharing what we have with those less fortunate. This is practical—something we can do.

To Think About.

What shall we do this Thanksgiving?

What are some needs in our community?

How express thanks to God in daily life?

THE NEW SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

The International Sunday School Uniform Lessons are scheduled for six months' studies in the gospel according to St. Matthew, beginning in January, 1930. For twenty-six weeks there will be detailed study of these twenty-eight chapters which portray Jesus Christ as the Messiah, the King of the Jews, who came "to fulfill all righteousness."

It is to be noted that most of the Protestant denominations are planning special emphasis this year upon personal evangelism, looking forward not only to Easter in April, but also to a climax at the 1900th anniversary of Pentecost on June 8, 1930.

The American Scripture Gift Mission, 119 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia, Pa., which publishes unusually attractive pocket gospels, is suggesting a campaign of "seed-sowing" and evangelism in connection with the adult Bible classes which will use the International Uniform Lessons in 1930. It is suggested that every member of such a class be furnished with at least two of the little red gospels of Matthew, one to be carried and studied from week to week—the lesson and the context, so that this great God-given message may be mastered in these six months—the other to be given away to some one who is drafting and who should be brought into the fellowship of the class, challenged with the claims of Christ, and won to Him into saving faith. The unique value of these gospels is in the fact that they carry a brief "way of life" in the front, with eleven verses of Scripture presenting the Christian gospel. Two other pages give "the A B C of the gospel," with reference in Matthew, and "the X Y Z of the gospel," with other New Testament references. Then there are four bright-colored pictures of appropriate scenes in Bible lands, four gospel hymns, and, best of all, for use in personal evangelism is the decision form in the back. (The gospels according to Mark, Luke and John are also published in uniform character; and the cost of these is only 2 cents each in any quantity. Write for samples at once.)

If one-half of the people who are now enrolled in adult classes who truly love their Lord and Saviour would let some "overflow" of the profession touch the lives of others with the love and claims of Christ, what a harvest of souls there might result! We must first sow the seed, and there is none better than the written word, watered by prayer.

WM. H. RICHIE.

THE CHURCH AT WORK.

Importance of Stewardship Period.

Rev. J. W. Fix, Franklin, Va., writes: "I have read and reread 'The Larger Stewardship,' by Cooke, and 'The Competent Church,' by Agar. I am now completing my first reading of 'Life as a Stewardship,' by Morrill, and 'The New Christian,' by Cushman. I have found these books exceedingly interesting. Two of my board of finance have read one of them. I purpose to have each of my deacons and each member of my board of finance read at least one stewardship book this year."

Rev. Judson E. Fiebigler, Toledo, Ohio, writes: "Life is transcendingly beautiful when man cooperates with God's plan. The grandeur of nature, the joy of friendship, the comforts of life, and the hope of life eternal are gifts from God. He entrusts everything to us, thus we become His stewards. He expects in return a portion of His gifts to be used in His service. It is His only plan for extending the work of His kingdom. Dare we use less than one-tenth of His money for Him? 'As ye sow, so shall ye reap.' So abundantly for His work and reap the joys of Christian stewardship."

It is Easy to Deceive One's Self.

Some Churches are deceiving themselves. Adopting the Convention budget plan carries with it some implications. It implies that a Church actually recognizes its allotment; that is, its fair share of the regular, established denominational benevolences. It is evident to all who give it a moment's consideration that the denominational obligations must be met weekly, or monthly, just as your pastor's salary, your janitor's salary, or other obligations. Every pastor and member knows that there is no reason why the pastor's salary should be paid every week or month any more than why your missionary's salary, or your denominational secretary's salary, or your college instructor's salary. We are all one. The work is one. There is the same responsibility to every one of our workers. They cannot eat, pay rent, buy clothes without regular and definite income. The budget plans for this, and asks for one-twelfth of your allotment each month; and rightly so. This budget business is sensible, right. It is Christian. Churches, in adopting the Convention budget plan, show their fairness to all phases of the regular work; the less popular in appear, as well as the more popular phases.

WARREN H. DENISON, Sec'y.

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR THE CHURCHES.

Grace be unto you and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America joins with the World's Evangelical Alliance of Great Britain, urging all the Churches and followers of Christ to unite in a "universal week of prayer" at the beginning of the new year. The devotional program here presented will not only be circulated through all English-speaking lands, but will be translated for use throughout the world.

The year 1930 will be significant beyond any year in the recent history of the Church. Most of the great communions of our country are uniting to observe it as the nineteen hundredth anniversary of Pentecost. By appointing bishops and other leaders, lay and clerical, and by the passing of most urgent resolutions at conferences, synods and assemblies, the Churches have declared their purpose to make this year a year of waiting before the Lord for the coming of the same power which fell upon the disciples. Each communion will do this according to its own plan and method, but may we not urge that the vital thing that shall be uppermost in the thought of the Church shall be waiting before God until the coming of the Holy Spirit was a necessity for the birth of the Church, is it not a necessity for its continued life?

While we shall adopt in general the program which has been suggested for the Churches throughout the world, a program looking toward Christian unity every where, can we not insist upon the fact that as at the first Pentecost the common purpose of the endowment of power which Jesus said should come through the Holy Spirit may bring us into one accord? Could anything be more desirable than that, from every Church or assembly gathered for the "Week of Prayer," the same message should be sent out to the world as that which told the story of the first Pentecost: "They were all with one accord in one place, and suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled the house where they were sitting, and there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." As a preliminary to this baptism of power, it is recorded, "They all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication." It is to this fact, which was the one essential to the glorious equipment which gave the Church its power, that the "Week of Prayer" at the opening of the new year calls attention. The machinery of the Church would seem to be adequate. Its methods and plans are multiplied on every side, but the greater the machinery, the greater is the need for power, and this must come not in mass movements but by the surrender of the individual soul, waiting before God for a personal equipment.

"Holy Spirit, dwell with me,
I myself would holy be;
Separate from sin, I would Choose and cherish all things good.
And whatever I can be,
Give to him, who gave me Thee."

In view of the need for enlarged spiritual victories and in view of the great challenge which the year 1930 thus brings, may we urge upon Christians every where to unite in a deeper consecration than ever before and give themselves without reservation to the supreme task which God has laid upon His Church, to be "the light of the world and the salt of the earth"?

Faithfully and fraternally yours,
A. R. CLIPPINGER, Ch'n,
C. L. GOODELL, Ex. Sec.,
Commission on Evangelism and Life Service.

NOTE: The Federal Council will furnish programs to Churches desiring them, fully made out for each day of the week, at $1.50 per hundred copies. Orders should be addressed to Federal Council, National Offices 612 United Charities Building, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

Lesson: Rom. 12:6-16.

What glorious exhortations! It means do the things we can do, and not to try to do the things we cannot do. It means have unfeigned piety. It means abhor evil. It means delight in good. It means have genuine respect and love for one another. It means be zealous in Christian service. It means that virtue, humility and modesty should adorn our walk and characterize our homes and lives. It means that we can put our trust in the power of Jesus, who enables us to do it. It means that the world, the flesh and the devil are against us, that often we are sailing up-stream, and must not give way to desire for ease, self-will, or sloth. Fill the water-pail of thy soul and draw out of it for the Master of life, who works in us that which He commands.

Prayer.—Dear Father, in the name of Christ, we submit to Thee. Command us as Thou wilt, and work in us that which Thou dost command. We hunger and thirst for Thy blessings. Let us receive them by Thy rich grace. Amen.

TUESDAY.

MARRIAGE'S HOLIEST BOND.

"Thou shalt go into my country . . . and take a wife."—Gen. 24:1-7.

The holiest bond of marriage is the Christian one. Would that all parents were as careful as Abraham to secure this for their children. Would that all children were as obedient as Isaac!

Some are more interested in marrying wealth than they are that their spouse shall be a Christian. To be sure, marriage that is distasteful should not be forced on children, but experience, wisdom and Christian judgment should be the guiding lights.

A happy marriage between a believer and a non-believer is possible, and it is also possible that the unbelieving may be won to the Lord, but it is impossible for complete unity to exist where each goes his own way. The Scripture gives no promise that a divided home shall be a blessing. Ultimately, the opposite is true.

Prayer.—O God, in Jesus' name, give our children piety and love in their hearts; bless them with good sense, preserve them from unhappy marriages, and whether in palaces of the rich or cottages of the poor, let the bond of perfection unite them. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CAN A CHRISTIAN LIVE IN EASE?

"Count it all joy, my brethren, when ye fall into many trials. The trying of faith worketh patience . . . that ye may be perfect, lacking nothing."—James 1:2-27.

So often we see afflictions with the righteous. We are told that by this means hearts learn to put their trust in God, and not in things of this world. It is earnestly believed that we cannot expect a quiet, easy time on earth.

How weak we are to believe this! Before we are aware of it, we find ourselves saying, "When this is over, when this debt is paid, when I shall save some money, etc." then we will be at ease and enjoy the rest of life. That is what the rich man said, and just then God called him to answer for his life. We shall have riches, rest, and unmixed joys, but not this side of heaven; and in order to attain that, it is necessary to suffer on earth and learn the value of affliction and rejoice in it.

One can, as many do, cut loose from the Lord and seek enjoyment in the pleasures of the world, and find some sort of happiness in it for a time. But none knows what tomorrow may bring forth. Life is but a vapor that soon vanisheth away. Earthly wealth and splendor vanisheth like dew before the morning sun.

Patience and endurance are needed in order that the old Adam of riches and honor, sensual pleasures and worldly lusts, and idolatrous ways may die in us and we may learn to trust God alone; to believe in Him with a whole heart in order to have the victory over the soul's enemies. Such a heart no one can have except through tribulations. For, whether we are rich or poor, we love good things; whether we be sinful or pious, we love to trust ourselves. It is necessary to have things taken away from us. We must be subjected to the fire, we must have temptations, that we may prove our faith and produce a perfect heart before God.

Whether rich or poor, exalted or debased, if we can learn to rejoice in being made low, we shall know that the heart belongs to the Lord. He has promised us His wisdom that we may do this, and He has promised to reward the faithful with the crown of life.

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, give us true wisdom, abundant grace to believe in Thee with a whole heart; give us patience, that we may honor Thee with gratitude in suffering, and give us the crown of life at the end. Amen.

THURSDAY.

ANSWERING INSULTS.

"That I may have wherewith to answer him that reproacheth me."—Psa. 119:41-50.

This is a very vital question. The most of us find ourselves offended at some time or other. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" At His altar none can injure us. To dwell with the Lord means to wear an impenetrable shield against attacks, for in such times we can say, "Lord, I trust in Thy Word and await the fulfillment of Thy promises."

To be sure, life is full of trouble and countless ills, and we often suffer misfortunes which we cannot understand, and loving care seems to be rewarded only with hopelessness. Yet, to him who puts his trust in the Lord, it will be as it was with Peter, who toiled all the night and caught nothing, but in the morning found his boat filled. Though we cannot find joy now, Thy word ought to comfort us. One day, all losses will be turned to gains. Be faithful.

Prayer.—All our trust is in Thee, O Lord. Thou art our comfort and the joy of our hearts. Pity our frailty and endow us with confidence. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE LAW OF THE LORD.

Lesson: Matt. 5:20-26.

The law of the Lord demands love out of a pure heart. The least spark of anger or selfishness is enough to ultimately destroy our righteousness. As the law of the Lord is perfect, so our lives may be blameless by those laws and be pronounced righteous before God.

In aspiring to this righteousness, it is mighty fine to be told by Him that He counts our faith as righteousness, and he who so believes and strives to attain righteousness in God "Shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." He is a child of God and an heir to the kingdom of heaven.

Prayer.—Dear Father, it is Thy righteousness we crave as our richest treasure. Fire our souls with a passion for Thy kingdom to come to all men, and make Thy word life and truth to us. Amen.

SATURDAY.

BEYOND SIN'S DOMINION.

"For sin shall not have dominion over you."—Rom. 6:14.

After Christ's death, sin had no more dominion over Him. Neither has it any dominion over us who are baptized unto His death. If He rose again and lives, so shall we be like Him, and as it was by His resurrection that He was acquitted of all charges brought against him, and for which they had condemned Him, so shall we.

If this truth were not, what would the world be? Our salvation is in "I in them, and they in me." In Him we are partakers of all that He is and all that He has.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, give us light, grace and spirit to understand Thy word, to believe it, and to show it obedience. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE LAW OF SALVATION.

"Justified freely by His grace, through redemption that is in Jesus Christ."—Rom. 3:23-28.

The opportunities a sinner has are marvelous. When one believes and turns from his sins, there is imputed to him the merit of Christ, he is adjudged righteous, as though he had never sinned. This is exactly opposite what he deserves.

But God reveals His righteousness and saves souls by forgiving and not by punishment. This is the law of faith given in the eternal counsel of God. Whosoever stands with Christ is declared righteous. It is in this that nothing is laid to his charge to condemn him. How could it be otherwise, since Christ is wholly righteous?

Prayer.—Dear Father, give us the light of Thy Holy Spirit, that we, from the bottom of our hearts, may acknowledge that we have sinned and come short of the glory of God; and let Thy Spirit make known to us Thy laws, and our salvation through grace, that we may believe with all our hearts, find comfort therein, and be eternally saved. Amen.

GIRLS BETTER THAN COWS.

Some thirty years ago the missionaries in China were told "Girls cannot learn any more than cows." It was when Miss Frances K. Bement, under the American Board, founded the Elizabeth Shelden Lombard School in Shaower, China. Last June the middle school enrolled 32, the higher primary 30, and the kindergarten 40, a total of 102.

While better government schools make the need for missionary or Church schools less pressing, from a purely educational point of view, Chinese Christians want the mission and Church schools to remain because of the great demand in China today for educated women. They realize that education without character is of minor importance. It is told that of the 3,000 pupils of Confucius, only 72 turned out well. Miss Bement feels that the average for well doing of the Lombard School's 1,000 is much higher. The 27 girls who took a nurse's training course are very far removed from the "cow" standard.

The First Congregational-Christian Merger

Very Important--Very Plain

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES:

DEAR FELLOW-CHRISTIANS,—I know how to appeal to Congregationalists for funds for Christian purposes. I have been doing it for over forty years, and have secured for various purposes between one and two million dollars, more than a million of which has been for Piedmont College; and I am now appealing for two million more for the same.

But I am new to the Christian Churches. I take it for granted, however, that the same motives that move Congregational Christians, move you—our present national merger pre-supposes this. If this supposition is true, the response to this page and my letters is sure, for I am making an appeal for your own institution, fully and officially approved by your Southern Convention, which is not only worthy of your support, but must have it or die.

I Must make the Facts Very Plain

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, Ala., was organized to meet a great need and to do a great service for your Churches and, in their name, for our Country and for the Kingdom of God. You have there a great field, a fine location, and a valuable property. Your Administration Building is a noble structure, but unfinished and unheated. Your fine Girls' Dormitory is only partially ready for use. You have a campus of over forty acres, and a property worth $100,000; but nothing fully ready for use. It will take $10,000 more to make available the $100,000 worth you already have; and more to give the equipment required for a Standard Junior College.

Surely, you do not want to lose this great beginning for want of the necessary finishing! But I must tell you plainly that losing it is certain, unless vigorous and speedy steps are taken to save it. Dr. Beougher and the local Trustees have done splendidly, but they have reached the end of their rope. Other help must come, or this Institution will soon be a thing of the past.

The Situation Briefly Stated

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing; not because its work and scholarship were not good, but because a Junior College cannot have independent recognition without a finished campus and the income of $200,000 endowment. Without scholastic standing, a Junior College cannot have students, as they cannot go on for their Junior and Senior years in a standard four-year College. BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing, and could not go on. It would have no students.

President Beougher then came to me, as President of Piedmont College, to help BETHLEHEM out of impending failure. An educational merger was then made by the two Colleges, so that the four-year College could stand for and give credits for the Junior College. No financial merger was made or is in contemplation. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE is still owned and controlled by the Christian Church. Its Trustees, of their own initiative, changed its name to "THE PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE" to enable the Senior College more securely to vouch for its credits. As a result, the enrollment of the Junior College has not only been retained, but increased.

But the campus is not finished, the buildings are not ready for use, and the scholastic standing cannot be long maintained by the present method alone.

The Trustees have asked me to find the money for finishing the buildings, equipping them, and meeting other pressing needs. I cannot go to Congregationalists for this, as I am asking them for two million dollars for Piedmont Senior College, and am pressing them hard. It must come from the members of the Christian Churches—or the Junior College must close.

I have nothing to gain personally. I am donating my services and advancing expense money, because I am deeply interested in our great merger of Churches and I want to see PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, saved for the great field it occupies and the great need it supplies. The South needs education far beyond any opportunities it has.

Please send your checks quickly to President Beougher, at Wadley, Ala., or to me at Demorest, Ga., made out to PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, and they will be turned over to the Treasurer as soon as record can be made. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE cannot wait long.

Yours fraternally and sincerely,

FRANK E. JENKINS

PRESIDENT BOARD OF TRUSTEES, PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, Wadley, Ala.

PRESIDENT PIEDMONT COLLEGE, Demorest, Ga.

The above will appear in two or three more issues of The Sun, so that every member of the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention may be sure to read it.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

If there is a season during the year that we should be thankful it should be at the Thanksgiving season, when the year is nearing the close and on the farm the crops are gathered in and we begin to realize how good the Lord has been to us. And in business life, as we see how the profits have piled up during the year, we, too, can realize how rich our blessings have been. And as we realize the success of the year's work and feel happy over the bountiful blessings that the Lord has given us, we should take time to stop and consider a little while, because there are those who have not been so fortunate as we.

We are thankful that we have homes and the blessings of homes; but all do not have homes, and neither do they have the blessing of a home. Some are fortunate and some are unfortunate. The fortunate should remember the unfortunate. And as we stop to consider, we should think of the hundred and twenty little fatherless and motherless and homeless children in the Christian Orphanage at Elon College, N. C. And the Christian denomination should realize that this is its institution, and that the children there are in the care of the Christian denomination, and that it is its duty to supply their needs.

Let us stop and consider whether or not, after the Lord has so richly blessed us during the year, if we have done our part for that hundred and twenty little children in the Orphanage. Let us consider just how much we have contributed during the entire year towards their support. And then let us consider whether or not we have done our duty. The Christian Orphanage gives us an opportunity to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and it should be a joyful privilege to us to divide our blessings with them.

We want to appeal to every member of the Christian denomination, whether man, woman, boy or girl, to give something during the Thanksgiving season to help feed and clothe and care for these children. Give it through your Church and Sunday School, or send it direct to the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C. Let us remember, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world." And then let us remember, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." And if we have been bountifully blessed during the year, let us give freely.

Yours in the work,

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLES.

Authorized and Edited by American Revision Committee, and Published by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

These Bibles contain the Concise Bible Dictionary which forms the helps to these Teachers' Bibles. It supplies, in the most condensed and convenient form, all the latest information about the Bible, its writers, its language, the various versions, complete chronology, life of Christ, with harmony of the Gospels, life and travels of St. Paul, etc. The illustrations are reproduced from recent photographs, and truly illustrate the articles. The Combined Concordance is entirely new, and has been made expressly for the American Standard Version. It combines with the Concordance, Subject-Index, Scripture Proper Names, etc. The 12 Maps have been carefully revised and are beautifully colored. In making orders, give the number and price.

OBITUARIES.

WAYNICK.

Mrs. Maggie Waynick, wife of Chas. H. Waynick, of Bessimer, N. C., passed to her reward October 13, 1929. Had she lived to November 10th, she would have been 25 years of age. Besides her husband and two small children, she leaves father, mother and a number of sisters and one brother to lament her early going.

She had been a faithful member of Hines Chapel for twelve years. She was much beloved, as was evidenced by the many pretty flowers and the very large congregation attending the burial, which was at her home Church. May the Heavenly Father richly bless and comfort her loved ones.

T. J. GREEN.

HUFFMAN.

Hilda Catherine Huffman, little daughter of Bro. Vincent Huffman and wife, at Coneord Church, departed this life on September 23, 1929, at the age of 2 years, 7 months, and 15 days. Little Hilda Catherine filled a large place in the happiness of the Huffman home, and her death so early in life not only leaves the immediate family broken-hearted, but casts a gloom over the entire neighborhood.

Funeral services were conducted at Coneord, September 25, 1929, and the remains laid to rest in the Church cemetery, amidst the flowers and tears of many sympathizing friends.

A. W. ANDES.

LINEWEAVER.

Mrs. Josie E. Lineweaver was born December 24, 1846, and died September 25, 1929, aged 82 years, 9 months, and 1 day. Sister Lineweaver was a faithful member of Antioch Christian Church, although, because of old age, affliction and distance from the Church, she had not been able to attend for some years.

She was a woman of strong Christian character, and was held in high esteem by all who knew her. She is survived by three daughters, one son, and one sister. Funeral services were held at Antioch, September 26, 1929, and the remains laid to rest by the side of her husband, who died seven years ago.

A. W. ANDES.

WALDEN.

Little Blanch Walden, youngest child of Mrs. Lillian G. Walden, died October 21, 1929. She was born January 17, 1919, making her 10 years and 9 months of age. She leaves to mourn their loss her mother, three brothers, one sister and two uncles. Her afflictions were severe, but were bourn in much patience. She has gained the victory, and doubtless is resting sweetly from all her sufferings on earth.

Mother, brothers and sisters, she cannot come back to you, but you may go to be with her. "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." Funeral services were held in her home, near Elberon, Surry County, Va. She was laid away to rest in the family cemetery nearby. Funeral services by the writer.

JAY WM. BARRETT.

DICKENS.

Mrs. Elizabeth Dickens, who was a very faithful servant in this world, was, on October 5, 1929, called to go, and to be with her Lord and the faithful who had gone before her to the heavenly world. The deceased was an obedient daughter, a loving wife, a kind sister, and a faithful Christian, being a member of Zion Christian Church for many years.

She leaves to mourn their loss her aged father, her husband, two brothers, one sister, and a host of friends. May the blessings of heaven rest upon the family and those who mourn. The funeral was conducted at Zion Christian Church on Sunday, October 7th, by the writer, assisted by Bro. D. A. Mann.

J. A. DENTON.

As Christ was moved with compassion for the untaught multitude, so is the Church's compassion on a world sunk in sin, misery, and superstition. To have the key to the soul's prison and not open the door would be a crime.—Wallerman.

CLAPP.

Daniel F. Clapp was born July 16, 1853, and departed this life September 21, 1929, aged 76 years, 2 months and five days. He was married to Alice Bell Waynick on June 2, 1889. To this union were born five children, all of whom are living, as follows: D. Burton Clapp, McCleansville, N. C.; Mrs. Bessie Trollinger Green, Mrs. Colia Anna Neal, and Harry L. Clapp, all of Washington, D. C., and John M. Clapp, of Evergreen, Va.

Besides the wife and five children, he is survived by one sister, eight grandchildren and many other relatives and a host of friends. Burial was at Hines Chapel, where he had long held his Church membership. A good man has passed to his reward.

T. J. GREEN.

WEST.

Alma M. West, daughter of the late Deacon R. C. and Lucy V. West, was born in Sussex County, Va., August 28, 1876, and fell asleep October 21, 1929, age 53 years, 1 month, and 24 days. Early in life she accepted Christ as her personal Saviour, and united with Waverly Christian Church, remaining faithful and true until the end of her brief life.

She chose as her life-work that noble profession of teaching school, and for thirty-two consecutive years she not only gave her time, but her efforts, energy and life to the work of enlightening minds, lightening burdens, and molding and shaping character. Her life was that of noble service, and those who came in contact with her were made to feel the presence and power of her Lord.

The funeral service was held from the Spring Hill Christian Church, in charge of the writer, in the presence of a host of friends, after which the body was borne by her nephews to the cemetery to be placed beside that of her parents and loved ones.

Miss Alma is survived by her sister, Mrs. A. N. Branch, Newport News, in whose home the end came; two brothers, M. H. West, Waverly, Va., and R. T. West, Newport News, Va., and several nephews and neices, who are drawn closer to their God because of having known her. God comfort those who mourn, and give us more spirits like Miss Alma.

STUDYING INTOLERANCE.—

A most unusual meeting is being held this week at Harvard University. The conference is studying the causes of religious hatreds and suspicions. Representative Jews, Catholics and Protestants compose the personnel of the conference. Many lay members are among those in attendance. The conference was conducted according to the round-table method. Every effort was put forth to insure absolute freedom of expression. Representatives of the press were forbidden to quote any of the speakers directly.

President A. Lawrence, of Harvard, opened the session. President Lowell summarized the spirit and purpose of the meeting in these words: "Is mankind forever to have its love linked with its hatred, its best with its worst propensities? Our problem for the future is to arouse religious fervor without religious rancor. An attempt to prepare the way for a better state of that kind is the mark set by the round-table, and there can be none greater."

Such meetings may be productive of untold good. If nothing more is done than to afford the opportunity to talk it out, even that will be worth while. Grievances and hatreds grow when they are hidden away in the heart. Bringing such feelings out into the light will often do much to dissipate them. Most certainly those who are in attendance will have the opportunity to get the point of view of the other groups, and that, too, is worth while. Religious intolerance and hatred is the worst blot upon modern civilization, and the gravest stumbling-block in the path of future progress. Anything that will serve to lessen it even in the slightest degree is to be welcomed.

SAD PREACHING.—

Sometimes a sentence literally leaps out at one from the printed page. We have recently met such a sentence. The writer was describing the preaching of Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, of Pittsburgh. He said of Dr. Morgan: "He allows his keen wit to play rather freely and the people like that. They have enough to make them serious and plenty of preachers to make them sad!" "Plenty of preachers to make them sad!" What a thought for the preacher to pause and consider! We are not admitting the truth or justice of the indictment. The writer was evidently exercising wit, of which he was speaking. But wit is wit because it contains an element of truth.

Most of us will have to admit that we have heard preachers and sermons that have left us sad and depressed because of the nature and content of the message to which we had listened. Is such preaching ever justifiable? It is related of at least one individual that he went sorrowfully away from the Master's presence. But the sorrow was not occasioned by the nature and content of the message to which he had listened; but because of the unwillingness on the part of the listener to accept the conditions which were laid down by which he might attain the boon which he was seeking. A real distinction is involved here. The very nature of the gospel is such that it must bring sorrow to those who are unwilling to accept it. But it is another thing when the preacher's message brings sorrow to hearts that are honestly and earnestly seeking to do all that the Master commands. A message that has a saddening effect upon such hearers must have left out a vital and necessary part of the gospel message. For the very term gospel means good news. If the people who have heard the preacher's message go away with sad hearts, then it is time for the preacher to find out whether their sadness is occasioned because of what they have "left off" or because of what the preacher has "left out."

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING.—

The recent action of the General Convention of the Christian Church, in unanimously approving the merger with the Congregational Churches, is calling forth much comment on the part of people of other denominations. The reaction on the part of the public generally is most encouraging to the friends of Christian union. There have been several editorial comments in the daily papers which have come to our attention. All of these have voiced a whole-hearted approval of the steps which have been taken, and indicate an earnest desire for union which shall include all the Protestant bodies. One of the most immediate results of the union is the opportunity and occasion which has been afforded for the voicing of the longing for the union of Christ's followers which was already existent in the minds and the hearts of so many men and women.

It was of course to be expected that the religious press would take large notice of the steps toward union—and such has been the case. That our own people may know what others are saying about the union, we are reproducing, in its entirety, an editorial in the Christian Century, under the heading "Congregational and Christian Churches Unite."

"The union of the Congregational and Christian Churches was virtually completed by the Christian convention's unanimous approval, at Piqua, Ohio, of the plan of union which was accepted last May by the National Council of Congregational Churches. Minor adjustments remain to be made, and the local application of the union must be worked out in various communities as occasion arises. As both bodies are thoroughly congregational in their polity, the act of their conventions imposes no mandate upon individual congregations or upon the organizations by States and districts, but the unanimity of sentiment on both sides is a guarantee that complete unification will proceed as rapidly as possible. This is one of the most significant among the many recent steps toward the union of denominations and the first, among those recently promoted, to come to fruition. The basis of union, it will be remembered, involves an acceptance of the Bible as the supreme rule of faith and life, and a recognition of the right of Christians to differ in opinion without breach of fellowship. The union is conditioned upon the acceptance of Christianity as primarily a way of life and not upon uniformity of theological opinion or uniform practice of ordinances. Here is a practical program of union. Who follows in their train?"

INDIA RENOUNCES CHILD MARRIAGE.—

The legislative assembly of India has recently passed, by a large majority, a bill which puts an end to the ancient custom of child marriage. The bill decrees that fourteen shall be the minimum age at which girls shall be permitted to marry, and provides legal penalty for those who violate the provision of the bill. The bill met with very determined opposition on the part of religious leaders, both among the Hindus and the Moslems. When it became evident that the bill would pass, there were many attempts both to lower the minimum age and to secure exemptions for certain communities, all of which failed. There was a public sentiment in favor of the bill so strong that it could not be ignored.

This is a social reform of the most far-reaching significance, and is an indication of how the new heaven is breaking down the deeply entrenched ancient evils. The custom of child marriage originated in the religious system of caste. One of the strongest traditions of the caste system is that no one may marry outside the caste in which the individual is born. It is difficult to arrange desirable marriages within the ranks of caste. The only possible solution was to arrange marriage at the earliest possible date. There was no law as to the minimum age at which such marriages might be consummated, and thousands of children were married and made widows or widowers before they ever reached their teens. The physical and moral consequences of such a custom can easily be imagined.

Widowerhood for the men and boys was not such a serious matter, as they were permitted and generally did remarry. But for the women and girls, the custom worked a horrible evil. The woman was regarded as being in some way responsible for her husband's death. Her head was shaved as a mark of her guilt, and she was forced to give up all her ornaments which were a symbol of her rank. She was not permitted to remarry, and unless she had borne sons, which fact entitled her to a certain amount of respect, her position

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. E. B. White writes: "We expect to move to Windsor, Va., this week. However, it is with deepest regret that we leave the splendid people of Dendron and vicinity. I will continue to preach at Damascus.

Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor, reports a very successful revival at Palmyra Church, Valley Virginia Conference, which revival closed on November 10th, with eight additions to the Church. Rev. Joe French, of Broadway, Va., assisted the pastor and did the preaching during the revival to the delight of both pastor and people.

In last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, on page 10, appeared an article on "The New Sunday School Lessons," by Wm. H. Richie. This splendid write-up should suggest that you get the best commentaries published. Order "Peloubet's Select Notes" or "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide," each priced $2.00, postpaid. Address THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va.

It is good to report that Superintendent C. D. Johnston is recovered of his recent surgical operation and hospital experience sufficiently to be back again at his desk and carrying on his daily work at the orphanage. His neighbors and friends, as well as the Church at large, are grateful indeed that this good and useful servant of the Church has been spared and so speedily restored to health and activity again.

His many brethren and friends at the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, of which he has been a faithful and active member for more than half a century, were glad indeed to see Rev. P. T. Klapp, now past fourscore years, recovered from a serious illness of last summer and looking stronger and more vigorous than ever. He was keenly alert to every item on the program of the Conference, and was often on the floor addressing the Conference with the zeal and vigor of youth which seems to have come back to him in increased measure since the ordeal through which he passed. Our Heavenly Father sometimes makes us lie down so as to get up rested and refreshed, stronger and more ready than ever.

At the recent memorable session of the General Convention at Piqua, Ohio, among those looking in on the Convention and catching something of its fine spirit was Rev. Joseph T. Ware, rector of St. James Episcopal Church, of Piqua, who has a magnificent Church edifice at the very center of Piqua's population. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, preached in this Church at the 11 o'clock hour on the Sunday of the Convention and reported brotherly greeting and warm welcome from the rector and his people. The rector during the Convention wrote a ringing editorial in the Piqua Daily Call, heartily approving the union of the Christian and Congregational Churches, concluding his contributed editorial with these significant words: "May God grant that the example your Church has set us may go far to heal the rents in the robe of Christendom."

The North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference held its annual session last week with Union Church, Virgilina, Va. Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C., was re-elected president for the fifth time; Rev. R. A. Whitten, Elon College, N. C., vice-president; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C., secretary; Dr. Waldo H.

Boone, Durham, N. C., is the treasurer. It was a very agreeable and, with all, a profitable session. Items on the program that touched every interest of the Church were treated intelligently and constructively. The delegation was large and exceedingly attentive, and the spirit of the occasion was harmonious and beautiful throughout. The Conference ordained two licentiates to the full ministry as elders, viz: Rev. J. L. Neese, Palm Street, Greensboro, N. C.; Rev. S. E. Madren, Fancy Gap, Va. Many able addresses featured the Conference, and the general feeling was that it was a most profitable session. Rev. C. E. Newman, the pastor, and the good people of Virgilina saw to it that delegates and visitors had royal entertainment and abundant hospitality. It was, indeed, good to be there.

Recently there has been discovered in Exeter Cathedral, England, a copy of the original Old Testament which John Elliot, the noted missionary among the American Indians (the first missionary to come to this country), translated into the Indian language. The Book is dated in 1661 and is the earliest known copy in existence of the Old Testament that was translated into a foreign tongue as a means of missionary evangelization. This is supposed to have been the first Bible printed in America and the first book ever printed in the Indian language. John Eliot gave his life to mission work among the Indians, and possibly did more than any other man to create a friendly relationship in the early days when whites and Indians were more often in a fighting than in a friendly mood toward each other. The missionary has led the work, both in reducing language to writing and in translating books, particularly the Bible, into languages hitherto without any book of any kind. In brief, the Bible has blazed the way for the translation and the publication of other literature and books among millions of people who, prior to such translation, never had a written language or a book.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., writes that he has entered upon his work as general secretary of Alabama and the Georgia and Alabama Conferences, to which work he is to give his entire time. Bro. Hunt has adopted for himself and issued to the people of the Churches of the two Conferences the following as his program of work the coming year: "Education—First, a better understanding of our own Piedmont Junior College; second, a better support of the institution financially; third, the summer school of Christian education supported by every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society; fourth, 100 students for Piedmont Junior College. Missions—First, a woman's missionary society in every Church; second, our men enlisted in missionary work, both home and foreign. Evangelism—First, 200 new members for the two Conferences; second, a personal effort by every Church to get people saved from sin and death; third, the co-operation of every preacher and pastor; fourth, the co-operation of every Church to help us put on a large program of kingdom service." Bro. Hunt is to move his family to Wadley at an early date, that he may be more conveniently situated for the work now to engage him.

FRANKLIN LETTER.

The fathers and sons of Franklin Christian Church will go on record in a fine way for having observed a portion of "National Father and Son Week." On Friday night the boys and dads all met at the Church for a social fellowship meeting. Games were played by all. Fathers and sons played alike and sang songs of good will together. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Fix, led the games and the songs. After a general good time in this fashion, refreshments were served and delightfully enjoyed. The real feature of the evening was an address of timely nature by Dr. N. G. Newman, of Holland.

On Sunday night, November 17th, fathers and sons came to Church together and sat in specially reserved seats. The pastor spoke on the text, "Is the Young Man Absalom Safe?" The Scripture lessons were read by a father from Luke 15 on "The Father who loved greatly," and by a son who read about the "Wandering Son."

Prayers were offered by Vaughan Neale, one of the leading Boy Scouts of the Franklin Christian Church troop. The offering was taken by Mr. George I. Earnest and his son, George, Jr., and by Mr. W. H. Norfleet and his son Jack. Rev. F. C. Lester, a former pastor of the Church, was present and offered the closing prayer. Thus ended two very impressive and effective gatherings of fathers and sons for the specific purpose of developing good will among each and creating better friendship.

POUNDED.

Sunday, November 10, 1929, was our closing service with Bethel Church, Wake County, in Eastern North Carolina Conference. This was our first year of acquaintance and service with this good people. It is a small organization in membership, but a loyal and congenial congregation to serve. We have enjoyed the work and appreciate the opportunity of being with them. We have been called for another year and have accepted.

After closing service in the house and preparing to leave the Church, on approaching our car we discovered something in it. It was a pounding—not the kind that beats up, but the kind that puts something to eat in your pantry. Among the items found were flour, meal, sugar, potatoes, preserves, catsup, canned and dried fruit, butter, cake, popcorn, peanuts, etc. We hereby acknowledge and thank all who had a part. May the Lord bless richly this good people and lead us as pastor to serve in a more efficient manner.

APPRECIATION.

Rev. E. B. White, who has been our pastor for about three years, has now accepted the Windsor charge. I deeply appreciate the faithful service of Bro. White, and regret the loss of him as our pastor. I have found him to be a gentleman of Christian character, a talented speaker, a kind and sympathetic friend, always on hand in time of sickness or distress and ready to render assistance in any way that he can, ministering to the physical as well as the spiritual needs of those who suffer. We shall miss Mr. and Mrs. White and their little family, yet I rejoice that he has a better field with larger opportunities, which he deserves. I wish Bro. White and family much happiness in their new home and trust that success may crown his efforts in this new field of labor.

Respectfully,

L. T. WILLIAMS,
Deacon.

IS KNOWLEDGE ENOUGH?

BY JOSEPH E. McCAULEY.

(Delivered before the Eastern Virginia Conference, Suffolk, Va., November 6, 1929.)

"I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it; and that no lie is of the truth."—John 1:2.

I. Is Knowing Sufficient?

1. In education. The educational work of our age should claim the attention and support of every individual. The main task that confronts this Conference is education in the fourth R. Our State and nation is concerned with and insists on teaching the youth of our land the three Rs. But to the Church of the modern age is delegated the task of teaching the fourth R—righteousness. The government has assumed the task of trying to teach the youth of our land, that they might become better citizens and that illiteracy might be eradicated from our civilization. But the dismaying fact remains that twenty-six million of America's young people are without any religious instruction or training.

"In potentialities of danger to our fair land, this overtops boll weevil, farm depression and flood disaster, all three combined."

To know this is not enough. The Church must wake up to the spiritual illiteracy. Some one has said an educated thief is more dangerous than an ignorant thief. The ignorant thief steals a ride on the train, while the educated thief steals the railroad. Both might be equal in the degree of spiritual illiteracy. Both might say, "No man hath cared for my soul." But if a man must be unregenerate and untrained in righteous living, the fruit of that fourth R, it is perhaps better for society to have him ignorant of the other three Rs.

America has more and more year after year poured out of her money, giving of her best sons and daughters for the building of a great public school system of education, until we are becoming very clever. And yet, in the midst of the world's greatest intellectual era, a world war breaks upon us, bloodier than any war in all history.

2. In preventing present crime. Perhaps there was never an age when the per cent of illiteracy was as small as it is at the present time. And yet there was never a period of the world's history and surely not in the American annals, when crime was as prevalent. In the face of our advancement in the process of teaching and acquiring knowledge, no year preceding the year of 1928 ever cost the government as much for crime. Less than a decade ago the annual cost for the criminality in this country was six billion dollars. During the year of 1928, the cost was thirteen billion dollars. This crime was not committed by the ignorant altogether; neither by the pauper. It consists of all classes. But that with which we are most concerned just here is that class which is educated in the three Rs and ignorant in the fourth R.

I am told by good authority that if the faculty of the University of Georgia should resign in a body late this evening that it could be supplied well on tomorrow from the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta. If the same occurrence should take place at Columbia University, the faculty could be supplied, and supplied well, from the Federal penitentiary in New York. Thus we see that the crime not only costs in dollars and cents, but in ideals and spiritual fervor. It is increasing until the tax burden is hard to bear, all because we have had an unbalanced ration in education. "I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth."

3. In material wealth. Through our modern way of doing things we can check up on ourselves in religion as well as in industry. But that is not enough. If we know that we have failed and endeavor not to correct that failure, then we are doomed. We know that there is a wild, mad rush for pleasure, amusements, and ease throughout our land today. We know that the kingdom of God is suffering as a result, and we are losing in character and in the production of that type of citizen that God would have us to produce; and yet there seems to be a very little done about it. We are well aware of the fact that an automobile race takes in gate receipts for one day of one million and six hundred thousands dollars, and no one complains, while the missions boards have difficulty in raising their funds. We also know that there is an annual expenditure of sixty-two million dollars for chewing-gum, one hundred and forty-seven million dollars for perfumes and cosmetics, and more than three hundred million dollars for candy. No one seems to complain of these conditions. But when the Church sends out its call for funds, the people begin to accuse it of grafting. After all is said and done, the way we spend our means is a key to the character of our people. Jesus said, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." The above-stated facts say nothing of the extravagant amount we spend as tourists, for automobiles, and moving pictures. It cannot be determined as to what per cent of this amount the Church-folk spend. But we do know that if the average individual had the kingdom at heart as much as the above-mentioned, life would be enriched and Christ would become a living factor in the hearts of men.

Some one has said, "Our people have more wealth than any other nation; but in twenty-eight years the Nobel prize for literature has not been won by an American. We have been so busy doing things, so much wrapped up in "power and service," that we have forgotten what real spiritual culture is.

4. Church losses. We know that 85 per cent of the membership of the Protestant Churches come through our Sunday School, and yet every Sunday School is much smaller in membership than the Church. We are also informed by good authority that 73 per cent of those who enroll in the Sunday School drop out before they are lined up with the Church. Is it any wonder that the un-Christian forces are increasing in number, while the Church either holds its own or loses?

Dr. J. A. Lytor says that six out of every ten members who are received into the Protestant Churches of America on profession of faith are lost to the Church. The reason for this condition may be easily observed. First, we live in an age when it is an honorable thing to be a member of the Church. It is often a doorway into some circle of society. Often there is not the religious background that brings the individual to the place where that individual realizes the importance of the Christian life and Church membership. Again the desire on the part of the Church to increase its membership by large numbers; and therefore overpersuasion is used. Every minister in this Conference is aware that there is a large number on his roll who are inactive. It is not enough to know this. The burden of John's epistle was to get the professed followers of Christ to do what they knew could be done.

5. Knowledge without action in the right way means failure. As we stated in the beginning, it would probably be better for our nation not to educate the youth if righteousness is not a part of that education. We know that in every instance where knowledge was the dominant attribute of a life's character, that life ended in disaster.

Solomon, who was reputed to have been the wisest of all men, made a miserable failure of life. We see him starting out as a young man with knowledge that attracts the attention of the world. His knowledge of a constructive national program, his ability to handle men and his knowledge of solving hard problems placed him in the limelight of the world. But in the face of all that he wrought destruction to his nation and his individual life. He knew that his forefathers had failed to live according to God's law. He knew how to advise all the world as to right living, but he himself was a failure.

Belshazzar knew how his father Nebuchadnezzar was driven from the children of men and made to dwell with the wild asses. He knew that at one time he had power to put up or to put down, to slay or to keep alive, and to rule over the children of men, and yet he lost it all because he exercised his knowledge in the wrong way. Though he knew all this, he never humbled his heart nor improved his own life, because of his knowledge of his father's failure. His knowledge profited him nothing and his life ended in misery.

Agrippa sat before Paul and heard the message of the Christ—His love, His suffering, and His sacrificial death. He heard him expound the Scriptures with such force that he knew Paul was right. So he said, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Agrippa knew that he was an unclean man, but the knowledge of such did not change his life.

Men of today know that sin will destroy, and yet they keep on engaging in the acts that are daily sapping the moral and spiritual fibre from their lives. Some time ago a man came into my study. As he began telling me his purpose for coming, his opening sentence was, "I am a sinner." He acknowledged that he was guilty of almost everything in the category of sin. Then he asked my advice. I tried as best I could to point him to Christ. I tried to get him to make his decision for Christ. He would not promise to take him as his Saviour, but acknowledged that these men and women who followed Christ were happier, better off, and contributed more to the world than any other group. But he went out a sinner and still remains an unsaved man. His knowledge of conditions of the world and a historical Christ is not enough. If I am to deal with him further, I am not to impart knowledge but to get him to act upon what he knows.

Our task is identical with the task of John. "I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it and that no lie is of the truth."

II. What Is Enough?

1. Doing righteousness. "If ye know that He is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of Him."

"And the world passeth away and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

The purport of this scripture is not that of a humanitarian act but an act in the spirit of Christ. There are those dwarfed souls who are constantly doing things for others in their own strength for which they are expecting just re-

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

The custom of observing Thanksgiving was not created out of hand, but has grown. It is very much like the mistaken idea of little Johnny, who, when first taught that God made him, said, "He was not made at all; he had just growed." True, the origin of Thanksgiving is easily traced from a decision on the part of the Plymouth colony, who, after harvesting their first crop, sent some of their good huntsmen into the forest to kill turkey and deer, so as to have a feast and give gratitude to God for His blessing and protection through the year. The idea was so fitting and worth while that it has survived through a rather checkered career. At some periods of American history, the day was quite universally observed; at others, almost neglected. The stamp of approval was finally put upon the custom by the President of the United States in issuing a proclamation that the people stop for the day, gather in their houses of worship and return thanks to Almighty God for His protection and bounty through the year, and then go out and care for the poor and the needy who did not have the wherewith to feed themselves and make glad.

Possibly no one has expressed better the spirit and procedure that should characterize the day than was expressed nearly five hundred years before our Christian era began (Neh. 8:10): "Then He said unto them, Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto our Lord; neither be ye sorry, for the joy of the Lord is your strength." The writer of these sacred lines realized that there was strength in the joy of the Lord, joy in His name, joy to His glory, gladness, praise and thanksgiving to Him, because of His wonderful works.

This has been and is the strength of our nation. The joy of the Lord is our strength. This nation, as long as it has been a nation, and this people, before it was a nation, recognized that their strength was in the joy of the Lord, and they have magnified and glorified His name through the years of our existence as a people and a nation. Every one who carries in his pocket a coin of the United States accepts our national declaration, "In God we trust," and every one who shall rejoice and be glad on Thanksgiving Day, because of the bounty and blessings our Lord has poured out during the past year, will help to give strength to our nation and power to our people.

The President of the United States has issued a proclamation, which we print elsewhere, calling upon the people to observe Thanksgiving. Let us do so with gladness of heart, cheerfulness of mind and disposition, "eating the fat and drinking the sweet," as we praise and give thanks to our Lord; and then, by no means, forget to send or carry portions to those who are unfortunate and in need. Surely at no period of the year is it quite so fitting that we make our offering to our Orphanage, our offerings of benevolence to the less fortunate around about us, all out of gratitude to Almighty God for His goodness and lovingkindness to us.

"LAZY AND CONFUSED THINKING."

We are hearing much about "liberalism" these days. Just what the term signifies, one hardly knows. The so-called "liberalists" seem to have no clearly defined position, polity or program, other than that of subtle and often malicious attacks on things as they are and have been. They will attack "Sabbath observance" by calling it "puritanical," a custom that sprang up "in the strait-jacket days," and will end their attack by saying that even the Lord Himself declared that "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath"; therefore, man is to use it for his own personal pursuits and pleasures without any particular regard either to Himself who made the day and pronounced it sacred, or the day itself. They will attack, these "advanced liberalists" will, the pentateuch, declaring that Moses wrote neither Genesis nor Deuteronomy, and that whoever wrote them put much in these books that were fiction, symbolic only of improbable and impossible situations. These "advanced liberals" will not stop in the fury of their assault on things that are and have been to show what invaluable contributions they have made to the thinking and welfare of mankind. They will attack the miracles of the Bible and declare that many of them are unreasonable and unthinkable, but will not stop to reflect, nor to declare that these miracles, as recorded, have made invaluable contributions to mankind, and have so lodged themselves in the lives and souls of millions as to lead to better the University of Virginia, recently declared in an address before the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Virginia that "advanced liberalism" was a lazy and confused type of thinking. One who will face the matter squarely and without prejudice, must agree with Dr. Kincaid, for it is only lazy and confused thinking that will try to supplant the very definite and specific things that have been and are with a hazy and undefined scheme that carries us nowhere.

Prof. Josiah Royce, of Harvard University, certainly one of the greatest philosophers America has produced, used to say over and over again to his students: "Young men, never abandon an hypothesis or a position that has made a real contribution to your life and to the world until you have secured in its stead a better and a bigger hypothesis which is able to contribute more to your life and your thinking." We often think of these wise words of Dr. Royce, as they came from his lips repeatedly, as he was leading his students into the realms of speculation in the field of science and philosophy. The world of our day seems to need just what Dr. Royce used to tell his students. In our craze for the new, we seem to have accepted the uncertain for the certain and substituted the less for the greater, for God in heaven knows that the sacred things of Scripture, the holy things of the Bible, have made their contribution to the character of man, to the building of nations, and to the friendship of the world.

The result of this "advanced liberalism," coming as it does from lazy and confused thinking, Dr. Kincaid declares, "has had the effect of breaking down hitherto accepted standards of ethics and has liberalized conduct as well as theology." Has not Dr. Kincaid, in this declaration, put his finger on the weak spot in the thinking and the conduct of our time? Our thinking and our teaching have become so liberal that we have both liberalized conduct and given it license. And does not this account for much of the conduct about us that is shocking society, filling the front pages of our papers with scandal and tragedy, and sending daggers to the very heart of our unsettled and confused "social order"? J. O. A.

THE HOPE OF HUMANITY.

Dr. Benjamin F. Farber told his Presbyterian congregation in New York recently that the Church faces extinction unless it practices the doctrines of Jesus; and Dr. Stanley High, who recently returned from the Orient, declared that, unless the Church put Jesus Christ and kept Him first and sent out missionaries who were to give Him first place and exalt His name above every name, foreign missions would become extinct. Both of these men agree that if we are to make the gospel at home and abroad a matter of charity, benevolence and philanthropy, and put the gospel and missions on the basis of benevolence and philanthropy, then the gospel loses its power and will become extinct, and missions lose their dynamic, and likewise become extinct.

"Humanism"—the love for humanity, the concern for humanity, the philosophy for humanity, even the benevolent care for humanity is not a sufficient dynamic to reach this world and lift it, nor even a sufficient power to reach humanity and save it. We must exalt Jesus Christ as the one and the only one who can save and lift humanity. The most trying ordeal that the Church is to face in the near future is just this: Will the Church exalt and practice the doctrines of Jesus, or will it exalt and practice the doctrine of humanity, care and concern and worship of humanity alone?

Two of the most widely read and quoted books on religion at the present time declare emphatically that man must have religion as a dynamic, but that the only religion that can save him is a religion divorced from any idea or thought of a personal God; that the theocratic idea in conduct and government must disappear, and that the democratic idea of service to man, the uplift and exaltation of man, in the name and for the sake of man, must obtain. You will hear people say that he who serves his fellowman serves God, for "Whosoever giveth the cup of water to drink shall in no wise lose his reward." This is glibly repeated as if it were a teaching of the Word of God. However, the Bible teaches no such thing. Nowhere from Genesis to Revelation is the idea taught that man can serve his fellowman best by divorcing man from God or by taking God out of first place. The Bible opens with the words, "In the beginning God." That Book puts God first and makes Him central every motive and movement of the Book, and nowhere teaches that man can best serve his fellow-man by simply exalting man.

Get our Scripture straight on this point (Matt. 10:42): "Whosoever shall give a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple, he shall in no wise lose his reward." Your "humanitarian" teacher leaves out the heart from that Scripture when he omits in his glib quotation the words "in the name of a disciple." The other sacred writer gives even more emphasis than does Matthew to the centrality of Jesus in this teaching. Read Mark 9:41: "Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward." Here, the inspired writer repeats the idea for emphasis, using both the words "in my name" and "because ye belong to Christ."

The pulpit can go before the world with a conviction and a definite message when it exalts the Christ, puts His doctrine, His message and His life first and foremost. True, He identified Himself with mankind and taught that we should love our neighbor as ourselves, but He nowhere obliterated Himself from the reckoning; and even before the burning words, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," He put the eternal words, "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart, and all thy soul." When one does that, puts God first, he is then prepared to love his neighbor as himself, and there is a sufficient dynamic for his doing so. Truly, our gospel and our missionary endeavor will become extinct when we make them matters of benevolence, charity, philanthropy, only in the name and for the sake of our fellow-man. We must do these things as unto the Lord.

THE LADDER OF LIFE.

A ladder is a means of ascending and descending, and the means of using it is by rounds. It may be used to descend into a cellar or pit. In the one case, the climber begins at the bottom; in the other case, the climber begins at the top. In both cases, the movement is step by step. The more common use of the ladder is for climbing upward, and it illustrates life—movements up and down. Life that begins at the top is in danger of going downward. It was so with Adam and Eve. They were at the top when they started their lives. They were made in the image of God. "Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor" (Psa. 8:5). Since the fall of man, he begins his life at the bottom of the ladder. The sinner is at the foot, and, by the help of God, he climbs upward until he reaches the top with Jesus Christ. Religious life is a climb upward from that of a lost sinner to that of a child of God. All that Adam lost in the fall, man can gain in Jesus Christ. Jacob saw a ladder that extended from earth to heaven, and he saw the angels ascending and descending upon it. For man now, that ladder is Jesus Christ the hope of glory.

What is true in the religious or spiritual experience of man is true in all his experiences. In his education, his business, his position and calling, in all the way of his life. To be born at the top of the ladder, to have prestige, position, wealth at birth, makes climbing difficult, and danger, by falling, great. It is an advantage to begin life at the bottom of the ladder, and then to climb up, round by round. It is a misfortune to be born rich, of distinguished parents, and at the top in the social world. The great men of the world were rocked in rude cradles or in no cradles at all—simply rocked on a plain mother's knee and caressed by a loving heart rather than by a learned head. The lap of a good mother is better than the finest crib in the finest nursery of the rich. It is better to be born at the foot of the ladder than at the top. Rich babies have a poor chance in life; poor babies have a rich chance. The poor of the world produce the wealth of the world. It is the unseen that moves the world and changes the heart of man. The world pities the poor children; the rich children deserve their pity most. We live in a conglomerate world, and the rich and the poor minister to each other and help to make what is known as society. There is not enough of sympathy and respect for these two opposite conditions to make the world good for both. They are both necessary for progress, and both would be better satisfied if they respected each other in a Christian manner. They are really complements of each other, and should love each other and co-operate in the most friendly manner. God and man co-operate in all the work of life and in all the progress of society. Man plants and God makes the harvest. Man makes the machine, and electricity runs it. But, after all is said and done, the best place to start life is at the foot of the ladder, for it is the climbing that makes the man.

A PROPHET OF OUR DAY.

On October 25th, the day when the union of the Congregational and Christian Churches was consummated, George A. Gordon, the most eminent Congregational minister of our day, passed to his reward. Dr. Gordon was born in Scotland. After coming to this country, he took first a seminary course, and then a college course. The council that was to install him as minister of the Old South Church in Boston nearly a half-century ago, found him so outspoken for liberty as a Christian thinker that it came very near refusing to endorse him. It finally did, and thereupon began one of the most fruitful ministries of our day. The Old South Church in Boston became a national citadel of religious liberty, not radical and destructive, but reverent and constructive Christian freedom.

It is not strange that Dr. Gordon never held any responsible office in the Congregational fellowship, while universally accepted by all as their most illustrious leader, a genuine prophet of the Lord in our day. It is not strange, because Dr. Gordon was too busy interpreting the mind of Christ to our day to consume his time with denominational organization and officialdom. He preached Christ. A great spiritual prophet is no more.

THANKSGIVING DAY PROCLAMATION.

President Hoover has issued his Thanksgiving proclamation, setting aside Thursday, November 28th, as the day of annual thanksgiving for blessings of the past year. It says:

"At this season of the year, when the harvest has been gathered in, the thoughts of our forefathers turned toward God with thanksgiving for the blessings of plenty and provision against the needs of winter.

"They came by custom to look to the chief magistrate to set apart a day of prayer and praise whereon thanks as a united people might be given with one voice in unison.

"God has greatly blessed us as a nation in the year now drawing to a close. The earth has yielded an abundant harvest in most parts of our country.

"The fruits of industry have been of unexampled quantity and value. Both capital and labor have enjoyed an exceptional prosperity.

"Assurances of peace, at home and abroad, have been strengthened and enlarged. Progress has been made in provision against preventable disasters from flood and pestilence. Enlightenment has grown apace in new revelations of scientific truth and in diffusion of knowledge.

"Educational opportunities have steadily enlarged. Enduring advances have been gained in the protection of the public health. Childhood is measurably more secure. New experience and new knowledge in many fields have been reported from which a deeper wisdom may grow. We should accept these blessings with resolution to devote them to service of Almighty God.

"Now, therefore, I, Herbert Hoover, President of the United States of America, do appoint and set aside Thursday, the 28th day of November, as a day of national thanksgiving, and do recommend that all our people on that day rest from their daily work, that they should extend to others less fortunately placed a share of their abundance, and that they gather at their accustomed places of worship, there to render up thanks to Almighty God for his many blessings upon them, for His forbearance and goodness."

THANKSGIVING.

By JANE BLAKESLEE RICHARDS.

Burr of business, whirl of barter,
Wheels of commerce, cogs of trade,
Crowding, jostling confusion
That the noisy marts have made,
Hearken to the voice celestial,
Halt the rushing human ranks,
Check the breathless pace of living,
Take the time for giving thanks.

Thanks for food and homes to shelter,
Social joys of neighborhood,
Grains in harvest yellow gathered,
All the old familiar good.
As an Angelus is sounding
Nation-wide today the call,
Stand with hand and heart uplifted,
Thank the Giver of it all.

Sons of the stout-hearted fathers,
Brave ones of the by-gone day,
Armed with faith and gun who gathered
Grateful in the wilds to pray,
We, secure from savage riot,
Safe on dear-bought freedom's sod,
For our days of peace and quiet
Own our debt of thanks to God.

In a land and age of wonder,
People, happy, peaceful, free,
Ships that bird-like soar the heavens
As the ships have sailed the sea,
It is meet that man aspiring
Earth and ocean's might to dare,
Mind him of the God who made him
Master of the sea and air.

From the coast of California
To the East historic shore
Rise today the tuneful anthem
That shall silence never more.
From the rural groves and pastures
To the city's teeming ward,
Upward roll the tones majestic
Of the nation's "Praise the Lord."

became that of a family slave or drudge. For years about the only way a widow might attain some little consideration and respect was for her to mount the funeral pyre of her husband and be burned to death with his body. This was frequently done until a hundred years ago, when the British government put an end to the practice. And now the whole system of child marriage has been put under the ban. Thus, slowly are the worst social evils being gradually obliterated from the face of the earth.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Rebecca Elizabeth Gaskins was born in Isle of Wight County, Va., September 27, 1845. She married John Clinton Griffin in January, 1866. Her husband died December 27, 1892. She was the mother of seven children—Nettie, deceased; Ida, died in infancy; Ada E.; Charles Lee, deceased, leaving five children; D. Jeter, in Norfolk, and has two children; and Annie S. Mrs. Griffin and her two daughters came to Suffolk in 1910, and lived together at 300 South Broad Street, until her death, November 11, 1929, at the age of 84 years, 1 month, and four days.

Mrs. Griffin united with the Antioch Christian Church when a girl, and had been a faithful member of that Church for more than seventy years. Antioch is one of the oldest Churches in Virginia, having been an English Church in colonial days, and, after it became a Christian Church, it has had as pastors some of the most eminent ministers in the Church, as W. B. Weltons and E. W. Beale. Mrs. Griffin never changed her Church membership, and on November 12, 1929, after service at the home, her remains were carried to Antioch and placed by the side of her husband. Age adds value to human life, and especially when the life has been devoted to God and the Church. "The days of our years are three-score years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be four-score years, yet is there strength, labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away" (Psa. 90:10). Life, at best, is short, and when old age comes, it is soon cut off and we fly away. Mrs. Griffin, in her eighty-fourth year, left her loved ones—two sons and two daughters, and thirteen grandchildren, other relatives and many friends—to join many loved ones who had gone before. The two daughters, Ada and Annie, are left alone, but sweet memories of a dear mother and bright hopes of meeting her again in heaven will sustain them in their bereavement.

Just the day before, we buried a Suffolk official, chief clerk to City Manager R. H. Brinkley since 1920. He served in France during the World War, and his health was impaired by overseas service. Lyman Henry Potter had been in failing health for some time. Members of the American Legion, the city manager, and members of the city council, and other city officials attended the funeral. Mrs. Claudia Jacobs, Mrs. Ray Saunders, W. W. Ballard and James Harrell, at the funeral, sang "I Love to Tell the Story" and "Some Time We'll Understand," with Alton Howell at the organ. Mr. Potter is survived by his wife, one son, Lyman Henry Potter, Jr.; his mother, Mrs. Rufus Potter; three sisters—Mrs. Clyde Gurley, Mrs. Courtney Griffin, all of Suffolk, and Mrs. Harry Clarke, of Alger, Ohio; and one brother, Geddes Potter, of Edenton, N. C.

The services in both cases were conducted by Revs. W. W. Staley and H. S. Hardcastle. The floral designs were beautiful. The sympathy of friends was genuine, and the prayers felt in the hearts of those who witnessed the services made an atmosphere most spiritual. Deaths and funerals hold the world together in love and sympathy.

ELON LETTER.

I was officially requested to represent the Southern Christian Convention at the meeting of the advisory board of the Congregational Church of the Southeast, which met in Charleston, S. C.,

November 6, 7, 8, in the historic Circular Church, of which the Rev. George N. Edwards is pastor. This Church has been in continuous existence since 1680, and was originally known corporately as "The Independent-Presbyterian-Congregational Church."

I was, of course, interested in all of the proceedings of the advisory board, but particularly in the reaction of the group of the Congregational leaders in the South respecting the consequences of the merger voted at Piqua, Ohio.

Acting upon the recommendation of their findings committee, this group of Christian leaders felt that we face the necessity jointly in the South of an inclusive Church, and that all the Southern States, beginning with Virginia and Kentucky, south and east of the Mississippi, should be included in the program of this group. At present, there is no Congregational Church in Mississippi, and no Christian Church in Tennessee, South Carolina or Florida. If the plan which was suggested there is carried out, the united work in the South will include the present seven Conferences of the Southern Christian Convention, the two Kentucky Conferences of the Christian Church, and the six Conferences of the Congregational Church in the same area, making a total of fifteen Conferences joined in a regional convention.

I suspect that the best thing I can do is to quote verbatim the action of the findings committee:

Report of the Committee on Findings to the Advisory Board, November 7, 1929.

The following resolutions are presented as tentative working principles until the time of the meeting of the two bodies in April and May, 1930, at Raleigh, at which time the whole matter will be restudied and reshaped in harmony with the best wisdom of the united body.

Part I—On the Merger: 1. That the several local Conferences of the two constituent bodies be kept in accordance with the present forms of organization, but that they unite with the Christian Convention of the South in a "Southern Convention of Christian and Congregational Churches," under the general form now taken by the Southern Christian Convention. This united body should meet biennially in alternation with the General Council at a place central in the Southeast, or near a large constituency of the United Church. It should be promotional, inspirational, educational, and policy-determining.

2. That a special committee of five be appointed here to co-operate with a like committee of the Southern Christian Convention: (a) To confer about the arrangement of a like representation in a Southern Convention. (b) To draft a constitution to be submitted at a proposed joint meeting of the advisory board and the Southern Christian Convention, to be held April-May, 1930. (c) To arrange a basis for the publication of conference statistics and minutes in a Southern "Annual" or year-book, and to arrange for some statement in the forthcoming Southern Christian Convention "Annual," if the Convention favors that. (d) To arrange for consolidating the Southern Congregationalist with THE CHRISTIAN SUN on the basis of a weekly paper, under the management of the Southern Christian Convention, with co-operation by the Congregational Board of Publications of the Southeast. (Item (d) was postponed for specific discussion until 4:30, and I could not be present when it was acted upon. After I left the advisory meeting, I received the following telegram from Rev. F. P. Ensminger: "Board appointed committee to consult regarding consolidation of Southern papers.")

3. That in our meeting next May with the Southern Christian Convention, we ask the cooperation of the national committee on organization, that, together, unified plans for union may be carried through in the Southeast.

4. That a committee of twenty-four, composed of twelve representatives from each of the constituent bodies, be appointed to recommend to the several responsible boards and agencies the administration of the affairs of the United Church in this area, and to meet annually.

5. That, for the present, the advisory board and the Southern Christian Convention be continued and specifically charged to appoint the above committee.

W. A. HARPER.

HAS ANYTHING BEEN DONE?

The above question refers to the final vote on organic union of the Christian and Congregational Churches, and the answer may be "yes" or "no." If it means that organic union has taken place—no. If it means "Are we given permission to unite our institutions organically?"—yes. Now, if those who cast their vote representing the membership of both bodies were not voting for organic union, what were they voting for? Now, what does organic union mean? I can't imagine it meaning anything short of coming under one organization from the General Convention down. Now, that is what was asked by the historical unanimous vote at Detroit and Piqua, as well as all the other constituent bodies. Anything short of that will surely be disappointing to all our people. The work has just begun. I was happy to see how quickly the Commission on Christian Unity and the Commission on Interchurch Relations merged and became one body. They have set the precedent for all the rest. Why not let's go? Why should there be two general conventions, two mission boards, two Southern conventions, two State conferences, two district conferences, two national publications—THE CHRISTIAN SUN and Southern Congregationalist—two publishing associations, etc.? In short, what is the wisdom of voting for union and then refusing to unite?

The biggest objection we are going to meet with amounts, in the last analysis, to sentimentalism. This will be especially true of our older brethren. They will offer this and that objection to the discontinuance of certain things and institutions, and finally say, "That paper has been coming to my home for forty years," or "I have been contributing to that institution for years." But, honestly, brother, are these within themselves very good reasons for the continuance of this or that? Now, the people can't see the wisdom of retaining a thing just as a keepsake, especially when there is unnecessary expense attached to the keeping of it.

I pray that the same sweet spirit that has led us so far will continue, that we approach all the questions of consolidation like men in a business-like way and consider only the good of the people. Nothing should be allowed to continue to exist merely for the sake of itself alone. A certain friend approached me in behalf of a relative of his securing a place in my school. One of the main reasons given for electing her was that she needed the job. I told him that the school existed for the sake of the child and not for the sake of the teacher. It is not the wish of our people to create secretaryships, etc., for the sake of giving some needy person a job, but to serve the people, and when that service ceases or is provided more efficiently from another source or in another way, it is time to discontinue. Christianity removes the sting of death with the hope of a larger life. I am glad to see both Churches die, for I know it is the gateway to a larger and more useful life.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

OUR CHURCH AND SOME UNFINISHED TASKS OF THE KINGDOM.

(Annual address of the President of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, in session at the Suffolk Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., November 6-8, 1929.)

There is a significant statement in the first verse of the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. Luke tells Theophilus that his former treatise, i. e., the gospel of Luke, was an account of the things that "Jesus began both to do and to teach." It dealt with an unfinished task.

Although he does not put it in so many words, this idea of the unfinished task is also in Luke's second literary work, the Acts of the Apostles. Any one who has a sympathetic spirit knows that Luke did not think of the task involved in the proclamation of the gospel was finished. Like many a story in a modern magazine, the Acts of the Apostles might have had at its last verse these words: "To be continued." To put it in another way, it might be said that twenty-eight chapters of the Acts of the Apostles have been written. The twenty-ninth chapter is in the process of being written. There are still unfinished tasks for the Church of Jesus Christ. This paper will deal briefly with three of the outstanding ones.

Unfinished Task of Union.

1. Our Church and the unfinished task of Church union. Those of us who were at the General Convention at Piqua, Ohio, on Friday afternoon, October 25th, will never forget that history-making event when our General Convention voted unanimously to unite with the Congregational Church, thereby consummating a union that apparently had been born of God. There was a spirit of reverence, of awe, of Christian brotherhood, of spiritual adventure, of faith, that made an indelible impression upon the minds and hearts of those who were present. Somehow or other, that Convention felt that it stood on holy ground, that it had embarked on a high spiritual enterprise, that it had gone forward on the long road that ultimately leads to the union of all of Christ's followers and the answer to our Lord's Prayer that they all may be one, even as He and the Father are one.

But no man who sees things clearly or sees things whole, thinks for one minute that that is the end of the matter. Church union does not come simply by the vote of a council and a convention. Church union is a far more inner and vital thing than a thing like that. As Dr. Coffin said, the action of the Convention was not the end, but rather the beginning of the matter. The matter of Church union is still an unfinished task in a double sense. In the first place, it is an unfinished task as concerns the Congregational and the Christian Churches themselves. There is still a great deal of work to be done. There are adjustments to be made, information to be disseminated, mutual understanding to be promoted, mergers to be effected, unification to be achieved. This does not mean that the union formed was not a sincere and real union. This union is no companionate-marriage affair. It does mean, however, that we cannot take it for granted that the thing will work itself. There is still the unfinished task of uniting in spirit those who have united by resolution. In other words, formal union must become inner and vital union.

But taking it for granted that the union of the Congregational and Christian Churches was absolute and complete, there would still be the unfinished task of Church union. The most optimistic one of us would hardly dare to assert that the matter of Church union was settled when these historic communions, as great and as good as they are, united. When one thinks of the large and almost discouraging number of divisions within the Protestant Church; when one thinks of the great cleavages, both in faith and polity and practice, among them; when one thinks of the deeply rooted denominational loyalties that have been developed through the years; when one begins to seek a common and practical basis on which these denominations can meet—one begins to see something of the great unfinished task of Church union. And this does not even touch the matter of union between the Catholic and the Protestant Church, which may not be such a visionary and impossible thing as some might suppose and suggest. In any event, those of us who pray and work for Church union have not and will not see the end of the matter. Like Moses on Nebo, we can see it only afar off. But like him, we can dare to believe that it will come.

In all this, our Church has a part. With the Congregationalists, we have demonstrated that there is a way to get together. It is now up to them and to us to show that we can keep together. In solving our problems of adjustment by the mind of and in the spirit of Christ, and especially by practicing union in the many ways that will come to us as we try to understand what the will of the Lord is to do it, we can continue to make a distinctive contribution to the cause of Church union. Having come thus far we must go further. The heights which we have reached are not our goal; they are but the starting point for the ultimate goal of the union of all of Christ's followers.

Unfinished Task of World Missions.

2. Our Church and the unfinished task of world missions. One of the most thrilling and most amazing things in history is the story of missions. This is true whether one thinks of it in terms of the seemingly impossible achievements of the Apostolic Church of the first century or of the unparalleled achievements of the Church of the twentieth century. If any man's faith in a living God has become weak, let him read the history of Christian missions, and it will become strong and living again. Missions bear convincing testimony to the presence and the power of a living God in the world, and to the supremacy and adequacy of Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world. It might be added, too, that they bear eloquent testimony to the possibilities and glory of human life, for missionaries have been men and women of like passions as we, who have given themselves in such measure of consecration that God has been able to use them as His co-workers in accomplishing this miracle of missions.

There is not time to tell the story of missions. It is not necessary. But it is well to keep in mind the fact that the missionary enterprise cannot be reckoned simply in terms of the number of missionaries in the field, the number of mission stations, the number of members of the Churches abroad, the value of mission property, or the amount of money involved. Missions must be interpreted also in other terms. One must think of lives that have been transformed—a great host which no man can number who have been redeemed and renewed by the gospel of Jesus Christ. And one must also think of the penetration of the ideals of Jesus, and the influence of His Spirit into all the phases of the life of the nations in which missions have gone. The Church has achieved so much that it cannot possibly be computed.

But the task is not finished. Indeed, in some respects it has just begun. Not only are there great numbers who have not heard or have not responded to the gospel of Christ; there are great areas of life into which the ideals and spirit of Jesus have not become effective. In spite of all that has been done in missions, the task of evangelizing the world is still so stupendous that it stagger the imagination and takes the breath of those who see it in all its implications. It is the most monumental task to which ever man set his hands and his head and his heart. It is going to take all of us, and all of those who are to come, with all that we have, to make any showing at all in this world-wide enterprise.

Now, it is worth while to note that missions has its critics. There are those, even within the Church, who are raising rather pertinent and in some ways perplexing questions. They are suggesting that "the religions of other races and peoples are suited to them and are good enough for them." They are cynically telling us that there "are plenty of heathen at home, and plenty of work to be done here"; and they tell us that "we can best serve the world, not by foreign missions, but by concentrating all our forces on making America a sample Christian nation." They are saying that "it costs a dollar to send a dollar to the foreign field"; that the "foreign mission enterprise requires too much money as compared with the other Church causes"; or they level their criticism at the missionaries themselves, saying that "they live luxuriously." These critics of foreign missions sum up their charges against missions with the statement that "missionaries are accomplishing little and making no real impression on foreign countries." The worst feature about the whole thing is the fact that these subtle and pernicious ideas have penetrated the lives and colored the thinking of so many Church members. That the leaders in missions recognize this fact is evidenced by a number of books, such as Speer's "Are Foreign Missions Done For?" Patton's "Foreign Missions Under Fire," and Smith's "The Desire of All Nations," which have been written primarily to correct and to refute these dangerous doctrines.

In addition to these subtle criticisms which threaten to cut the nerve of missionary endeavor and to quench the missionary passion in the Church of Christ generally, there is danger for the Christian Church from another angle. I refer to the wrong interpretation which might be put on the status of missions in the light of our union with the Congregational Church. The fact that we have united with a denomination over nine times as large as our denomination, the fact that this denomination is known to have an extensive and an efficient missionary program, and the fact that this denomination annually raises a tremendous sum for missions, may react unfavorably on our mission work unless the situation is clearly understood. Some of our people may feel that there is no longer any special need of sacrificial giving to missions. It would be a tragedy indeed if this idea should get abroad. As a matter of fact, our union with the Congregational Church is an occasion for greater, not less, interest in and gifts to missions. We are to be workers together with them in a greater enterprise than heretofore we have ever undertaken. In other words, the Congregational and the Christian Churches must give themselves with new zeal and with deepened consecration to the unfinished task of world missions. Having set our hands to the plow, we cannot, we dare not turn back; that is, if we are to be worthy of the one whose name we bear. As individuals and as a Church, we must not allow our interest in missions to wane or our passion to burn low. If we fail here, we fail everywhere.

Unfinished Task of World Peace.

3. Our Church and the unfinished task of world peace. World peace, like world missions, has been eternal in the heart of God. Because He is the Father and because all men are His children, and hence brothers, God has had it in His heart to establish peace as the governing principle

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

SPIRITUAL DYNAMIC IN MISSIONS.

The charge that the spiritual dynamic which for a hundred years has been powerfully expressing itself in the foreign mission enterprise of the Protestant Churches of America, is headed toward extinction in its present philanthropic tendencies, was made by Stanley High, Litt.D., editor of the Christian Herald, New York, N. Y., in the opening address Saturday morning, October 26, 1929, at the annual regional meeting of the Congregational Churches of New England in First Church, New Britain.

"Foreign missions, from having been an agency of spiritual regeneration," Dr. High said, "is fast becoming merely a Church-supported philanthropy. As a philanthropy, it is doomed not only to failure, but to extinction. The emptying treasuries of many mission boards is tragic testimony to the fact that men and women who might be enlisted in a world enterprise that was dynamically religious, will simply not give their money to one that seems to them to constitute chiefly an ecclesiastical rival of State and privately supported charities. In my opinion, the dying missionary zeal of the Church will not be revived without a revolution as fundamental as that which led the Churches, in the first, to dare to proclaim their gospel to the ends of the earth."

Dr. High, in protracted tours of Asia, Africa and Europe since the World War, is reported to have visited practically every mission station. Before becoming an editor of the Christian Herald, last December, he was a secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Foreign Mission Board.

The delegates at the regional meeting represent 1,611 Churches, with nearly a million members and adherents in the six New England States. The meeting is under the auspices of the regional committee of the National Congregational Commission on Missions in the interest of the denominational "Plan of Advance" for Church and missionary activities in 1930.

"Now, I have no desire," Dr. High continued, "to belittle the practical ministries represented by the hospitals and schools built up by foreign missions. I have seen those schools and hospitals in operation on three continents. I know how in countless forgotten communities these institutions have stood—and continue to stand—as a concrete and understandable personification of Jesus Christ Himself. But for us on the home end, I think a re-examination of the purposes behind those institutions is in order.

"As I understand it, we send out our doctors and our teachers for two chief reasons. In the first place, across the mission world there stalked the sinister figure of indescribable human need. There were no agencies whose purpose it was to meet that need. We could not consistently take our Christian faith into the presence of such want and suffering without interpreting that suffering in terms of healing, helpful ministries.

But in the second place, we—in those early days of our missionary activity—had no doubt as to the fundamental purpose of these institutions. They were to minister to human need. Yes! But they were to make that physical and mental ministry an avenue over which they might enter upon a spiritual ministry that was even more fundamental. The primary business for which missionaries went out to the field and for which we gave of our resources to support them was evangelical. Soon or late, as we knew, these various peoples, however backward, might be able to run their own schools and man their own hospitals. One thing, and one thing only we had, uniquely, to give them; that one thing was the transforming gospel of Jesus Christ.

"Unfortunately for our missionary program, and also, I believe, for our own souls, this fundamental purpose has been slipping more and more in the background. What are the concerns of the mission board and the mission agency? To what do we tie up our present-day appeals for money? Isn't our language today the language of ecclesiastical institutionalism? And are not our major missionary energies devoted these days to the perpetuation of these institutions? Where does the individual, life-changing process which, I repeat, is the only fundamental thing that the Christians of the West have to give to the non-Christian world—just where does that regenerating process come in? Well, in my estimation, it comes in for a decidedly minor emphasis. And a declining missionary income which is only a reflection of a declined missionary interest is the result.

"A return to first principles in the foreign missionary program will probably only come, however, as a result of a return to first principles in the Church at home. Missions will have a rebirth when we, ourselves, are reborn, and probably not before. Until that rebirth comes to us, we will not only have difficulty raising money for foreign missions, but, in my estimation, we will be unfitted to be foreign missionaries."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE.

The second annual Young People's Missionary Conference was held in the Suffolk Christian Church on Thursday evening, November 7, 1929, beginning at 8 o'clock. This meeting was sponsored by the Woman's Missionary Conference of the Eastern Virginia Conference, and was presented on the second night of the conference, in session at the Suffolk Christian Church. It was a most fortunate thing that this missionary conference was held in connection with the Eastern Virginia Conference, for it brought the delegates and visitors of the conference into closer contact with the young people, brought the young people into a closer contact with the conference itself, and to both young and old furnished inspiration for the impulse to greater things in missions. The Church was crowded with a large congregation, numbering perhaps eight hundred people; but in spite of the number, there was a deep interest and a reverent spirit throughout the entire program. In many ways, this meeting was the climax of what was a great conference, and those who sponsored the meeting and planned the program are to be congratulated upon the success of the occasion.

The meeting was presided over by Mrs. M. L. Bryant, president of the Woman's Missionary Conference of the Eastern Virginia Conference, and Mrs. Bryant presided in her usual efficient, graceful and gracious manner. She presented Miss Mary Lee Williams, who conducted the devotional service, using a combination of songs, Scriptures, prayer, remarks and pictures in an impressive way. The service was a unit and emphasized consecration in response to the call of Christ, and was in keeping with the theme of the evening's program, "Youth and Missions."

Mrs. R. T. Bradford, superintendent of young people, was to have brought greetings to the young people, but she was detained by illness. The next item on the program was an important one, namely: organization. An organization was effected, with the following young people as officers: president, Mary Lee Williams; vice-president, Miss Carolyn Gort; secretary, Miss Rachael Brinkley; assistant secretary, Miss Sara Norfleet Daughtrey. An effort is to be made to organize the young people of the conference for more effective missionary service. The young people are to be congratulated on their new leaders.

Miss Mary D. Atkinson sang very effectively "The Silent Voice," and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle gave a brief report on the young people's meeting held at Piqua, Ohio, in connection with the recent General Convention of the Christian Church. A recognition service was held, but due to the lack of time and the largeness of numbers, the young people were recognized as a group, rather than by individual Churches. It appeared that about half of the large audience were young people. An offering was received for missions. Mr. Joel Cook Holland, of Franklin, a young man who has appeared before the microphone on many occasions, sang in a most effective way a prayer hymn, which created an atmosphere for the feature of the evening, an address by Miss Ida Patterson, of the University of Virginia. Miss Patterson was presented by Mrs. L. W. Stagg, secretary of the Woman's Missionary Conference.

Miss Patterson has already spent five years in China in educational work, and after she receives her Ph.D. degree from the University of Virginia, at the end of the present school year, she will return to China for educational work in a higher institution of learning. Her address was one of the most unique and most inspiring that the writer has ever heard. In a quiet, intimate, fascinating and inspiring way, she spoke on the theme, "The Call of Christ," using as the text of her remarks the words, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee." Out of her training, her acquaintance with Chinese young people, her experience, her religious consciousness, her reading and observation, she spoke with conviction and with tremendous appeal. One soon felt that he was listening to a young woman who knew whereof she spoke, and who spoke out of the abundance of her heart. It was a most appropriate message for a great occasion, and eternity alone will reveal the response which the message received in the hearts of the young people present. Life took on new dignity, service presented a new appeal, consecration became more necessary as one responded to the message.

Mr. L. E. Huber, formerly connected with the First Christian Church of Portsmouth, who was later licensed by the Eastern Virginia Conference, and Mrs. Huber sang, with mandolin accompaniment by Mrs. Huber, a very appropriate gospel number in keeping with the spirit of Miss Patterson's address.

Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Conference treasurer, explained in an effective and brief way the chart representing the amount raised by the Young People's Societies, the goals, and the membership. Immediately following this, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle presented banners to the winning societies, the banner for the society making the highest average on the standard of excellence going to the Franklin Young People's Society, and the banner of attendance, not only in the young people's society, but throughout the Conference, going to the Liberty Spring Young People's Society.

Rev. F. C. Lester offered the closing prayer and pronounced the benediction. The meeting itself thus came to a close, but its influence will abide in the hearts and lives of those who were present in the days to come.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson IX—December 1, 1929.

THE CHRISTIAN HOME IN A MODERN WORLD.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Honor thy father and mother."
Eph. 6:2.

LESSON: Deut. 6:3-9; Matt. 19:3-9; Luke 2:40-52, 24:28-32; Eph. 6:1-9; 2 Tim. 1:3-5, 3:14, 15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Col. 1:9-18.

This lesson is dealing with fundamental things. The home is not only the fundamental unit of society; it is the foundation of society. It might be said, "As are the homes, so will be society and civilization." And one of the most pressing and the most vital problems confronting us today is the problem of how to maintain a Christian home in the modern world.

1. The supreme importance of the home. The home is of supreme importance, especially in its relation to children, for several reasons:

It has the child first.

It has the child for such a long time.

It has the child in the impressionable and suggestive period.

It has the child when lasting impressions are being formed.

It has the child at the time when habits and attitudes are most easily established.

It offers the child intimacy with those whom it loves and those who are its teachers.

It teaches by atmosphere and influence and example as well as by precept.

It is the best school in which a child can learn to get along with others.

It offers a concrete example of the family idea of the kingdom of God.

2. The supreme importance of the Christian home. If the home is the place where life's habits and attitudes and ideals are first, and in large measure, permanently formed, it goes without saying that the home ought to be a Christian home. The atmosphere—that is, the whole tone and influence of the home—the ideals, the training, the example, the teaching of the home ought to be Christian. Parents ought to make a most earnest effort to give their children a Christian home and Christian training in the years that count so much. God has so ordained it that the home has the child first, so that He can have the first chance at the child and so that there can be builded into the life of the child Christian ideals and attitudes and habits, so that after the child goes out of the home he will have a foundation that will help him in his fight for character. If we have more Christian homes, both in number and in spirit, we will have fewer wayward young men and women.

Christian Home Ideals.

3. Ideals of a Christian home. There are certain ideals or principles that should mark the Christian home.

Permanency.—Marriage, according to Jesus, is a lifetime contract. What God hath joined together let not man put asunder. And what God hath not joined has no right to be joined anyway. It is not very acceptable to some to have it said that in case a man and woman cannot get along and must separate, that they have no right to marry again, but Jesus Himself is authority for this statement.

Fidelity.—One man for one woman as long as both shall live. Whatever may be the circumstances, no man or woman married to each other has a right to have "affairs" with another. God, have mercy on any man or woman who looks lightly upon the marriage vow.

Equality.—In the Christian home, neither husband or wife is the "boss." Life in the Christian home is a great partnership. Husband and wife, parents and children have certain rights and privileges. There should be equality of opportunity. There is no place in a Christian home for autocracy.

Courtesy.—That same spirit of shivalry and good manners which usually characterizes the man in the "courting days" should become a permanent quality of life in the Christian home. Courtesy in the common things of life goes a long way in making home life happy.

Purity.—Reverence for the personality of each other, a high conception of every married relationship, especially sex relationships, purity of life within and without is a mark of the Christian home.

Spirituality.—Not mere slavish obedience to the external forms of religion, and not long-faced religion, but a spirit of reverence for God and the Church and the Bible and the abiding values of life; an honest attempt to live a Christian life in the home and in all the home relationships; an expression of the spirit of Christ in such a wholesome and natural way that it will make religion attractive.

4. Dangers that threaten the Christian home.

The commercialization of life, with its consequent false standards of life and false standards of living.

Cheap views of marriage and the cynicism that abounds in such large measure in regard to marriage.

Childless marriages. Deliberate refusal to have children often makes it difficult to preserve the home.

The amazing number of divorces, made possible by the comparative ease with which divorce may be secured.

Companionate marriage. A very comfortable doctrine for those who are looking for some easy way out of the responsibility of real married life.

Modern literature and amusements. In some respects, the modern movie is one of the greatest menaces to the sanctity of the Christian home. The same is true of the unspeakably vile and vicious literature which so many people, especially young people, are reading.

Materialistic conceptions of life. Life has been cheapened and coarsened by so many of these things noted above.

5. The Christian home in the modern world. We need to say the least the following factors in solving this problem:

Parents with a sense of the responsibility involved in parenthood and the opportunities involved in home life.

Definite home instruction in matters that concern the Christian religion.

Personal and vital Christian living in the home. Companionship, even at the price of some other things, with children.

Constant holding up of the sanctity of marriage and home life.

Active support of and participation in the work of the Church and Sunday School.

A family altar, not necessarily the so-called old-fashioned family altar, but something that brings before the family, as a group, recognition of God's place in the home and participation of the family in common worship.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, December 1, 1929.

TOPIC: "Why is Christianity a Missionary Religion?"—Matt. 28:18-20. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

Christ is the world's saviour, and therefore His message must be given to the whole world (v. 19).

Jesus is supreme in heaven and earth. It is essential that all shall know this and bow to His authority and follow His commands (v. 18).

The true God as the divine Father is unknown except where Jesus is proclaimed. Christianity stands for knowledge of Him (v. 19).

Jesus means His followers to carry on His work and enlarge their field, making it the world. By this commission, He made Christianity a missionary enterprise.

Suggestive Thoughts.

Christ came to earth to reveal God. If Christianity has no missionary zeal, that revelation cannot spread into the dark places of the earth.

When a movement ceases to be aggressive, it begins to die. Only by seeking to win the world to Christ can Christianity live.

One instinct is to impart to others the good things that we have found. When we have found Christ, we cannot but want to tell others about Him.

Christianity believes that without Christ men are lost. It is a missionary religion because it brings salvation to the lost, and without this salvation men perish.

A Few Illustrations.

Christianity is a missionary religion because Christ made it so. The great Commander sets up His ideal for it, a world proclamation of salvation, a world led into obedience to Him.

Curiously enough, the best things of life have to be thrust upon backward nations. It is not enough to tell the world about Christ; He must be urged upon it.

When the members of the family are scattered, the father cannot be content until he has found them and brought them home. Christianity is God's attempt to gather His children together and bring them home.

Christianity will cease to be a missionary religion (as it actually did cease for many years) when men have no vision of the world's need. The suffering of the world is a tremendous challenge.

To Think About.

What has Christianity that is better than other religions?

What would happen to the Church if all missions ceased?

How may we increase interest in missions?

THE CHURCH AT WORK.

The Stewardship Period is On.

Every Church should now be united in an emphasis on Christian stewardship. The program should be so clear-cut and definite that when the period reaches its climax in enlistment and enrollment of stewards and tithers on December 15th, that a Church will feel that it got somewhere during this stewardship period. The superintendent, pastor, or other officer who thinks he can teach stewardship, enlist stewards, enroll tithers by a stewardship gesture now and then, by an incidental reference, will find that he has missed the whole matter. The whole Church needs to be earnestly engaged in the study of it. The pastor needs to do his most careful planning to present the subject so that it will appeal, and that stewards will be enlisted. Tithers do not enroll without real effort. Tithing, in all practical application, is the usual beginning of stewardship enlistment. Nearly all stewards will testify that tithing is the place where they began their realization of the meaning of stewardship. The pastor who practices tithing will have no trouble in leading a goodly number to do so. This is the time for united effort by pastor, superintendent, official board, stewardship secretary. Not many Churches will go far in stewardship until they carefully select a stewardship secretary. As much care needs to be taken in choosing him as in choosing a superintendent, treasurer, or teacher. Many folks have not yet taken this stewardship matter at all seriously.

New Body Meets.

The executive committee of the General Council of the Congregational and Christian Churches will meet in New York November 26th. This new body is composed of sixteen members of the National Council Executive Committee; also four members of the General Convention—President F. G. Coffin, Vice-President D. B. Atkinson, Secretary Warren H. Denison, Treasurer J. L. Reck.

SUN'S PULPIT.

turns in earthly honors or contributions. But the righteousness spoken of in these scriptures is that of the Master, which is done because of that life having been touched by the spirit of Christ. Such an individual has been born from above. It is not enough for any one to know the facts about the way of righteousness. It is enough only when the individual does that which is right. "And everyone that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand."

Could not people of other countries rightly point to America and say, "Surely she has built upon the sands"? It is true that the false philosophy of love of material substance, ease, and pleasure has dominated the nation as a whole. Could not the adherents of other religions point to us and say you are not building upon the solid rock, Christ Jesus? We profess to know Christ, but do not manifest Him. When I say we do not manifest Him, I am not taking a pessimistic viewpoint; it is only stating a fact. I could not call my family Christian if six out of ten did not attend Church or contribute to its upkeep. Neither could I call my family thrifty if there was only one working from choice. Neither can we claim for our Church the high place in efficiency that some would have us believe.

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." I maintain that no preacher, Church or member can be happy that is not trying to do the will of our Father.

2. Suffering with Christ. There is a possibility of doing the things that are right, and yet not get the greatest joy from it. The greatest joy comes only to the Christian who has given something that really costs to the cause of Christ. The craving of the life of Paul was to fellowship Christ in His suffering. That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection and the fellowship of His suffering, being made conformable unto His death.

Paul counted it a joy to fellowship Christ in carrying the burden of humanity. It will not be enough for the Church of Jesus Christ until it arrives at the place where it will joyously and lovingly fellowship Christ by denying itself and taking up the cross and following Him even unto Calvary's brow. Then, and not until then, will the world recognize that we have been with Jesus.

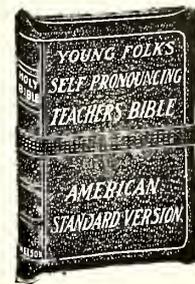

THANKSGIVING.

By presidential decree, a day of national observance is annually set aside to the end that the American people may offer their devotions to the Creator of the universe in special recognition of the many blessings that have been manifested to them during the year.

Our people are not unmindful of the graciousness that Providence has extended to this nation. They deeply appreciate the significance of this annual day of meditation and thanksgiving, and attest this sentiment by gathering in their respective houses of worship to voice their gratitude for the many good things that they share alike.

We, as a nation, may, with entire appropriateness, make every day of the year an occasion of rejoicing for the many and varied beneficences which we commonly enjoy.

AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLES.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
 One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

WHAT THE LORD HAS COMMANDED US.

"I come, that ye may have life, and may have it more abundantly."

What is our sacrifice to God? Whoever we may be, father, mother, child, servant, laborer, teacher, lawyer, etc., our tongues may praise Him, our hands may help our neighbors, our means may help the poor. Thus we may grow better and better, reach a better understanding of God and His will and ways, and God takes a more pronounced shape in his life, making his daily walk more pleasing to Him.

"Give me a calm, a thankful heart,
 From every murmur free;
 The blessing of Thy grace impart,
 And let me live to Thee."

TUESDAY.

HOLD THE FORT.

"Continue, thou, in the things which thou hast learned . . . which are able to make thee wise unto salvation."—2 Tim. 3:14-17.

All life, to grow, must be nourished. The word of God is the nourishment of spiritual life. From a child, Timothy had known the word of God. It should be thus in the case of all children. To do so, first it must be a conscious passion of fathers and mothers.

This does not mean that children are to be overloaded with instructions or education and compelled to go to Church every Sunday whether they wish it or not; but it does mean that parents should teach them out of their own hearts and aid them in the exercise of Christian discipline. An outstanding sin of the fathers today is side-stepping the issue. This is directly contrary to the Lord's command, "Thou shalt teach them."

Prayer.—Lord, give to us parents the spirit of wisdom and diligence, understanding and strength that our children may know Thee, and by instruction and discipline of Thy word, be regenerated, and throughout life may know the love of God that passeth knowledge. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

BOLDLY BEFORE THE THRONE.

"And she said, Oh, my Lord, . . . I am the Woman that stood by Thee, praying unto the Lord . . . and the Lord hath given my petition."—Sam. 20:24-28.

We believe that children who are dedicated to the Lord by parents, with believing and persistent prayer, shall become blessed and happy men and women. The grandest men the world has ever known have been of such. On the other hand, we can remember that the men and women who are criminals and fill prisons were once little, innocent children. What made the difference? God creates no one to destroy Him. There is no evil fate hanging over any one. There is nothing that compels one to be a villain.

To be sure, often children of godly parents go astray. But that is no sign that God has failed.

God has given the child in the beginning, and if thou dost give him back, and persistently continue to give him back, in faith and devotion, Satan has no power over him. Prodigals will come back. It is impossible for them to be lost.

Prayer.—Help us, O God, to believe, and gladly to give ourselves and our children as offerings to Thee always. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

REJOICING IN THE WORD OF THE LORD.

Lesson: Psa. 119:9-20.

Do we? If not, our joy does not lead to the home of light and glory. If we would enjoy it, take it and read it, and as we do so ask God to enlighten us, that we may understand it and inspire us, that we may obey it, and let nothing turn us from the course. If you would resemble Jesus, imitate Him and hide His word in thy heart and watch how He reveals Himself to you.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, teach us Thy statutes, that we may keep them to the end. Turn our affections from pride and vanity and quicken us in Thy way. Amen.

FRIDAY.

SPIRITUAL FOOD.

"My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me."—Jno. 4:30-34.

Jesus was always alert to His Father's business. His Father's will was His delight. He even found refreshment in body and mind in fulfilling His purpose in life. He was hungry and thirsty at the well of Sychar, but to save the Samaritans was His meat and drink. To do His Father's will meant much bitterness and suffering, yet that was His meat and drink. He had to die like a villain, but he went willingly, for it was His meat, and to accomplish His Father's purpose was refreshing to him. What is our chiefest delight?

Prayer.—O Lord, we acknowledge that our thanks are nothing compared with Thy boundless love. Give us Thy righteousness and let Thy mind be in us. Make Thy will more and more our delight in life, and whatever sacrifice it may mean, may we take up Thy crosses willingly. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THY WAY AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

Lesson: Eccl. 11:9, 12:2.

Young and healthy people are happy, and they cannot go about mourning. God would not diminish their pleasure, but He would not have them grow callous to sorrow and to the more serious things of life. This cannot be, however, unless true piety and the fear of God govern their souls in all things from earliest childhood. If not, all manner of wickedness will prey on their lives.

When one walks before his God and daily renews the covenant of his baptism by sincere prayer and true faith; when he flees away from youthful lusts and trains himself in self-denial and piety; when the name of Jesus is a sun that lights his way, and the word of God is a star which he consults in order to learn how to act and what to do, then the glad spirit of childhood is preserved through the time of youth and manhood and gives happiness in the gloomy days of old age.

The world is full of vanity and bitterness and foolish dreams of ambition, and our young people are a long way from remembering Christ. What must old age be?

Prayer.—Lord, have mercy on us. Enlighten us all with Thy Holy Spirit, and give us the true fear of God in our hearts. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE FIRST MIRACLE.

Lesson: John 2:1-11.

Why did the Lord choose a wedding for the first manifestation of His glory? Why was His first miracle to assist a couple of young folks in getting married? Could it be that He wanted to drive the devil out of the path of life and set this young pair off holy?

What is this path of life? Here it is: He takes the little children in His lap and blesses them. He educates the young people in the word and the fear of God. He is with them when they are wed and He makes that step holy, and He sanctifies their children. Thus continues the circle. In this way, as He watches over His own during the course of life, He prepares unto Himself a happy family who shall sing His praise and be perfected at last.

There is a meaning to this miracle beyond all this. There comes to married people many trials of various kinds; they have temptations and troubles of many sorts; there are many dry places when the vessels of life seem empty and they draw nothing from them; but the faithful in the Lord who take Him with them in their wedded experiences shall find that, in His own appointed time, the water will be turned into wine. The poorest of cheer becomes the richest of joy and hope. The message of this miracle is: Take Jesus with you in your wedded and every-day life.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, teach us how to make Thee a guest at our weddings and in our homes. Be our guide and ruler, and help us. Amen.

MRS. W. R. SELLARS,
 Treasurer.

Burlington, N. C., Nov. 14, 1929.

This is to certify that I have examined the books of Mrs. W. R. Sellars, treasurer current expense fund of North Carolina Conference Woman's Mission Board, for the period beginning November 22, 1928, and ending October 9, 1929. I find the receipts amount to $227.13, and disbursements $162.91, leaving a balance of $64.22, which, according to her bank statement, she has on deposit at the Atlantic Bank and Trust Company.

The First Congregational-Christian Merger

Very Important--Very Plain

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES:

DEAR FELLOW-CHRISTIANS,—I know how to appeal to Congregationalists for funds for Christian purposes. I have been doing it for over forty years, and have secured for various purposes between one and two million dollars, more than a million of which has been for Piedmont College; and I am now appealing for two million more for the same.

But I am new to the Christian Churches. I take it for granted, however, that the same motives that move Congregational Christians, move you—our present national merger pre-supposes this. If this supposition is true, the response to this page and my letters is sure, for I am making an appeal for your own institution, fully and officially approved by your Southern Convention, which is not only worthy of your support, but must have it or die.

I Must make the Facts Very Plain

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, Ala., was organized to meet a great need and to do a great service for your Churches and, in their name, for our Country and for the Kingdom of God. You have there a great field, a fine location, and a valuable property. Your Administration Building is a noble structure, but unfinished and unheated. Your fine Girls' Dormitory is only partially ready for use. You have a campus of over forty acres, and a property worth $100,000; but nothing fully ready for use. It will take $10,000 more to make available the $100,000 worth you already have; and more to give the equipment required for a Standard Junior College.

Surely, you do not want to lose this great beginning for want of the necessary finishing! But I must tell you plainly that losing it is certain, unless vigorous and speedy steps are taken to save it. Dr. Beougher and the local Trustees have done splendidly, but they have reached the end of their rope. Other help must come, or this Institution will soon be a thing of the past.

The Situation Briefly Stated

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing; not because its work and scholarship were not good, but because a Junior College cannot have independent recognition without a finished campus and the income of $200,000 endowment. Without scholastic standing, a Junior College cannot have students, as they cannot go on for their Junior and Senior years in a standard four-year College. BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing, and could not go on. It would have no students.

President Beougher then came to me, as President of Piedmont College, to help BETHLEHEM out of impending failure. An educational merger was then made by the two Colleges, so that the four-year College could stand for and give credits for the Junior College. No financial merger was made or is in contemplation. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE is still owned and controlled by the Christian Church. Its Trustees, of their own initiative, changed its name to "THE PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE" to enable the Senior College more securely to vouch for its credits. As a result, the enrollment of the Junior College has not only been retained, but increased.

But the campus is not finished, the buildings are not ready for use, and the scholastic standing cannot be long maintained by the present method alone.

The Trustees have asked me to find the money for finishing the buildings, equipping them, and meeting other pressing needs. I cannot go to Congregationalists for this, as I am asking them for two million dollars for Piedmont Senior College, and am pressing them hard. It must come from the members of the Christian Churches—or the Junior College must close.

I have nothing to gain personally. I am donating my services and advancing expense money, because I am deeply interested in our great merger of Churches and I want to see PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, saved for the great field it occupies and the great need it supplies. The South needs education far beyond any opportunities it has.

Please send your checks quickly to President Beougher, at Wadley, Ala., or to me at Demorest, Ga., made out to PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, and they will be turned over to the Treasurer as soon as record can be made. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE cannot wait long.

Yours fraternally and sincerely,

FRANK E. JENKINS

PRESIDENT BOARD OF TRUSTEES, PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, Wadley, Ala.

PRESIDENT PIEDMONT COLLEGE, Demorest, Ga.

The above will appear in two or three more issues of The Sun, so that every member of the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention may be sure to read it.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Thanksgiving Day is near. We wonder if all our Churches and Sunday Schools have their plans made to make a large offering to the Christian Orphanage this year. Our goal is thirty thousand dollars for the year. We have fifteen thousand dollars to raise by January 1st to reach it. Have you made up your mind just how much you are going to give to help reach the goal. The North Carolina Orphan Association is asking every individual to give at least the value of one day's income this year, and more if one feels inclined to do so. If your income is five dollars per day, won't you contribute that much to help the little fatherless children? Just the value of one day's income more, if you like. It is easy to calculate what the goal should be in your Church. If you have 100 members, then the goal for your Church should be $50. If you have 200 members, your goal should be $100. If you have 600 members, then your goal should be $300. We have some Churches that will do more, and want to.

If the Christian Orphanage ever needed friends and a liberal offering, it is this year. I am quoting you a clipping from the appeal of the North Carolina Orphans' Association, which I think is very fitting "To rightly appreciate the spirit of Thanksgiving we must have the spirit of the Christ who called the little ones to Himself and said, 'Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.'" It is when we have the sweetness of love and the spirit of the Master in our lives that we brighten and cheer the lives of those around us. Each of us have an individual part to perform in life's drama; each has a duty incumbent upon him; each has a responsibility to meet. Our future success will depend on individualizing our allotted share of the service to be rendered in making the world a better place in which to live.

"Few situations in life are more distressing than that of children without homes. No loss seems so great as that of parental love. Bereavement inflicts its stroke with acutest anguish when it cuts all the tender ties that bind the loving lives of father and mother to our devoted heart. Other sorrows, other losses we may bear with fortitude. Other bereavements, even, seem not to fill our spirit with such bitter humiliation, for they come to us in after life, when we have somewhat learned to bear the lessons of grief, and when manhood or womanhood has brought us increased power of endurance.

"Childhood, with all its ignorance of worldly sorrow, and with all its frailty of spirit, is overwhelmed by tribulation of being orphaned. The orphan, therefore, is entitled to peculiar sympathy and protection. The child bereaved of its natural guardianship and left, in its innocence and tears, to the mercies of a cold world, because the very symbol of defenseless affliction; and as such, it should receive the protection of every man's arm and the affection of every woman's heart."

We truly hope and pray that every member of the Christian Church will feel such an interest in the 120 children in its orphanage this year that it will be a real joy to make an offering to help them. You have always been loyal in the past to push us up to our goal. We are counting on you this year, and, under the circumstances, we don't believe you will fail us.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

of life between men and nations. The fact that His Son whom He sent into the world to reveal His character and spirit has been called the Prince of Peace is very significant. Whatever other factors may enter into the coming of the kingdom, it will never come until peace is established throughout the world.

There are encouraging signs of the times. It would appear that there has never been a time in the history of the world when men not only more earnestly desired peace, but when they set themselves in a definite and concerted way to establish peace. The climax of a long, long trail to peace came with the adoption and the signing of the Paris peace pact by the leading nations of the world. It was a long step in the right direction when war was at last seen in its true light and was branded and outlawed by the civilized nations of the world. Thank God for that peace pact and its implications.

But let no man think that the Paris peace pact guarantees once and for all peace. Alas! peace is not to be had at so cheap a price. And in spite of the fact that this peace pact opens the way for entirely new attitudes and new methods, the matter of world peace is still an unfinished task. There are still many, many barriers in the way. And after all has been said and done, and in all justice to all the agencies that are developing and promoting the spirit of peace, it is the Church of Jesus Christ which has the solution to the matter. Her Lord and His gospel alone furnish the foundation for abiding peace. Her message and her ministry of service are the key to the situation. She must not rest on her labors thus far. She must arise and gird herself for the unfinished task.

Our own Church must do her part. She must proclaim insistently the fundamental place of indiscourageable good will and justice as between individuals and nations; she must practice as well as preach an inclusive brotherhood; she must create and cultivate attitudes of peace on the part of the coming generation; she must give her moral support to every agency devoted to the cause of peace; and through prayer she must generate and release the spirit of peace in the hearts of men, which is the only guarantee of peace. If the Church is really the body of Christ, she must join with Him in a crusade for a warless world and the reign of peace, for He is the Prince of Peace. And insofar as she does this, she is helping to establish the kingdom of God.

It can readily be seen that in the light of these facts, belonging to the Church really means something. Here are great and challenging unfinished tasks—tasks that are vitally related to the kingdom of God. And the Church of Jesus Christ is the body of Christ, the instrument through which He must express His mind and His heart. We who are members of the Church are members of His body. And for each of us and for all of us, there is a place and a need. This is, after all, the glory of life. To know that there are worthwhile tasks to do, to know that all of us, even the least of us, have a part in those tasks, to know that we are workers together with Him in these great unfinished tasks—what more than one ask? Let us do with our might what our hands and our heads and our hearts find to do. Let us rise up and follow Him.

Rise up, O men of God,
Have done with lesser things;
Give heart and soul and mind and strength,
To serve the King of kings.

Rise up, O men of God,
His kingdom carries long;
Bring in the day of brotherhood,
And end the night of wrong.

Rise up, O men of God,
The Church for you doth wait;
Her strength unequal to her task—
Rise up, and make her great.

Lift high the cross of Christ!
Tread where His feet have trod.
As brothers of the Son of man,
Rise up, O men of God!

MEMOIRS.

(Presented by Mrs. O. M. Cokes to the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference.)

We are glad for the opportunity to offer during the session of this Conference, in sacred memory, a tribute of love and respect to some of our sisters-in-Christ and faithful workers, who have given of their time, talent and means to help fulfill the commission of our Lord, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," and hold up the blood-stained banner of Jesus Christ to a lost world by their godly example, whom God our Father hath seen fit, in His wise providence, to call home to the mansion He has gone to prepare for all of His children, where there will be no more parting, sorrow or deaths.

Their untold gain is our great loss, but we have the promise from the Father, if we are true to the trust He has committed unto us, we, too, may go to be with our loved ones and friends who have gone on before. Our rank and file are being broken, and we are going down the valley one by one; but, beloved, may we "be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might," and so run that we may attain the race and obtain life everlasting. Names: Holy Neck, Mrs. Luther Rawles, Mrs. Sarah Hedgepeth; Antioch, Mrs. J. W. Bradshaw; Elm Avenue, Mrs. P. F. Turner; Christian Temple, Mrs. Hattie Savage.

May God bless their memory, and may we be faithful in the tasks they have left for us to finish.

OBITUARIES.

DREWRY.

Emmett Talbert Drewry, son of the late A. G. and Mattie Louise Drewry, was born in Sussex County, Va., January 25, 1872, and died October 5, 1929, at the age of 57 years, 8 months, and 10 days. He united with Spring Hill Christian Church, Sussex County, Va., early in life and remained a faithful member until death. In 1894 he was married to Miss Maggie Mae Richardson, daughter of Deacon C. C. and Mary Elizabeth Richardson. To this union were born ten children, two of whom preceded him in death. He leaves to mourn their loss his widow and eight children: L. T. and H. E. Drewry, of Wakefield; Amos and Richardson Drewry, of Waverly; Mrs. C. C. Cox, of Windsor; Mrs. I. A. O'Neal, of Dendron; Mrs. R. T. Wheeler and Miss Margaret Drewry, of Waverly; two brothers, J. A. Drewry, of Waverly, and W. H. Drewry, of Sedley; two sisters, Mrs. J. N. Cooper and Miss Fannie Mae Drewry, of Waverly. He was a devoted husband and father, and a devout Christian and was loved and respected by all who knew him.

The funeral was conducted by his pastor, assisted by Rev. C. E. Geringer, of Wakefield. The interment was in Spring Hill Cemetery. An unusually large audience attended the burial service as a tribute of respect.

DANIEL.

Little William Ernest Daniel, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Daniel, died November 13, 1929. Had he lived until February 17, 1930, he would have been three years old. He was one of our active cradle-roll members. He is missed so much in the home, both by parents and grandparents. His affliction was severe, but was borne with much patience. Little William has gained the victory, and is resting sweetly from all his suffering on earth.

Mother, father and grandparents, he cannot come back to you, but you may go to be with him. "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the son of man cometh." He was laid to rest in a newly made cemetery nearby.

"THE CHRIST OF EVERY ROAD."—

E. Stanley Jones, the widely known missionary in India, has completed a new volume entitled "The Christ of Every Road; A Study in Pentecost." This book is expected to have a distinct interest in connection with the nineteenth hundredth anniversary of Pentecost in the coming year.

CONFERENCE ON WORLD PEACE.—

No better indication of the rising tide of interest throughout the Churches in the question of world peace could be found than the national study conferences bringing together representatives of the committees on peace or international relations in practically all of the major Protestant denominations. The third national gathering of this character is announced to meet in Evanston, Ill., in First Methodist Episcopal Church, February 25-27. This conference, like the earlier ones, held in Washington in 1925 and in Columbus in 1929, will not be a popular convention, but an occasion for intensive study of the program and policies which the denominations should follow in their work for peace.

DECREASING CRIME.—

Railroad Data recently carried an interesting item taken from the Findlay Republican (Ohio). The item contains not only a bit of interesting news, but it makes a suggestion which expresses what we have long believed as to the way whereby crime may be greatly diminished. The item is as follows:

"Despite the increasing number of crimes, the railroads report that the thefts of freight and other articles from them have decreased 93 per cent in the past ten years. In 1920, losses to railroads from theft were $12,726,947, while in 1928 they were only $928,563, and indications point to an even greater reduction this year.

"An important factor has also been that 97 out of every 100 men arrested charged with having stolen something from a railroad have been convicted and punished. It is swift and certain punishment that is the biggest deterrent from crime."

THE GIVING OF THANKS.—

There is no day in the religious calendar that ought to be more universally observed than our Thanksgiving Day. It is difficult to see how any individual who is not an atheist or an agnostic could fail to enter into the spirit and purpose of Thanksgiving. The observance of Thanksgiving as it is kept in America is peculiarly our own. There is no other nation that has a day set aside for the giving of thanks which passes beyond the bounds of religion and creed, and takes on a nation-wide aspect. And there is certainly no other nation on the face of the globe that has so great an occasion for Thanksgiving as does America.

It is true that not every one enters into the spiritual observance of Thanksgiving. There are so many who see in it only an occasion for a holiday and for types of celebration which have in them no suggestion of religion. That fact should have for the religious an added significance. The fact that some do not use the day for the sacred purpose for which it is intended should cause those who are deeply religious to observe the day with a spirit of deeper reverence and earnestness. It may be that those who profess to be religious are, in a measure, responsible for the fact that others do not have more of the spiritual regard for our sacred days. There is a beautiful story told in the Bible about Job; how that he sanctifies his children and prayed for them, offering sacrifice, lest as he said they might have forgotten their duty to their God and had sinned against Him. Our Thanksgiving should contain a prayer for those who may be forgetful of the day and all that it ought to mean.

It does most certainly seem as if all men might take one day in the year to express their thanks to God for all the blessings which He hath bestowed with such a lavish hand. We recognize appreciation and thanks as being rightfully due to the human individual who has shown a kindness, and certainly it is due to Almighty God, who giveth us all things richly to enjoy. But God does not need or desire our thanks half so much as we need to express it. The ungrateful heart is chilled and cramped by its own coldness. The heart in which an altar fire is lighted is warmed and caused to glow by the act of devotion. For He who lights a fire is always warmed thereby.

There is nothing that will do so much to arouse us to a sense of our responsibility as the consideration of all the things for which we ought to be thankful. If you are a novice at the task of giving thanks, there can be no more helpful ritual than to sit down with paper and pencil and enumerate the things which have come to you in the form of blessings. Begin with the simple homely every-day sort of things that have been enjoyed, the food and the drink, the clothing and the shelter, the devotion of loved ones, and the loyalty of friends; and it will not be long before there will be a spark enkindled even in the coldest heart. No matter how elaborate may be the public services of thanksgiving, it must ever remain largely a matter between the individual soul and its God.

CONFERENCE ENTHUSIASM.—

If I were just a lay member of the Church and had never attended an entire session of an annual Conference, I should certainly begin to plan to attend the next session of the Conference of my Church. If I were afraid that it might not occur to the membership of my Church to elect me, I should tell the preacher and the deacons and all the other members of the Church that I got a chance at that I wanted to go to Conference next year. No matter what business duties might have claims upon me, I should try to so arrange my affairs that I could be there when the first session opened and stay until the last session closed. For the Church member who has never thus attended an annual Conference, there is a surprise in store. Until you have attended such a gathering, you have not seen a religious meeting at its best.

There is a reason why there are certain individuals who almost always attend annual Conferences. Some one has called them "chronic delegates." They have learned what a real good time at a religious meeting is like. It is not possible to get into the real spirit of a Conference session by merely attending for one day or a part of a day. To attend Conference that way is like reading a single installment of a continued story, one spends the most of the time trying to put together the threads of the story and then leaves too soon to find out just how it all turns out.

It may not be possible to analyze all that goes into the making of a religious conference, but there are some things that one can readily see are important. There is the fact that those who have assembled are deeply conscious of the fact that they are about the Master's business. And they are aware of the fact that it is business of tremendous importance. And another contributing factor is that those who come, come with a sense of expectancy. It is not difficult to get an atmosphere that is charged with spiritual power when there is assembled a congregation of expectant souls. Then, too, account must be taken of the fact that those who have come up to Conference are generally those who have been working hard to accomplish the work of the Church. There is something about such a gathering that is indefinable, but which is potent with spiritual significance.

These are some of the reasons why religious conferences have such an abiding interest. Everything that takes place has an unusual meaning. Even the wrangling—and it is not betraying any secret to say that religious conferences do sometimes get into wrangles—but the wrangling, too, has a meaning for those who are engaged in the debate are earnestly seeking to find a way to accomplish that which they believe the Christ would have accomplished. And these suggestions have been made not with the avowed purpose of boosting the attendance of Conference, but in the hope that they might suggest a way whereby the gatherings in our individual Churches might be made productive of greater interest and power.

No doubt, many of our nervous and impatient brethren will think that there should come about great and wonderful changes overnight, as a result of Christian and Congregationalist merging. Such are marked for disappointment, for the work of "merging" has just made a beginning "and the kingdom of heaven is like leaven." It requires time and patience for growth that counts and abides.

Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, so well known to CHRISTIAN SUN readers, and especially our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor people, is supplying notes to the Christian Endeavor World for young people's meetings during December. Whatever Miss Lucy undertakes in behalf of the young people is always thoroughly and efficiently achieved. We are sure the Christian Endeavor World will carry exceptionally good notes for their young people's meetings for a month.

January 16, 1930, marks the tenth anniversary of the going into effect of the eighteenth amendment and the national prohibition law. On that day, the Anti-Saloon League of America, through its department of education, is calling upon the Churches of America to ring their Church bells simultaneously at 12 o'clock noon. It is believed that such a simultaneous ringing of Church bells will tend to arrest the attention of every person in the community and to impress upon each one the observance and the enforcement of the law.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge, managing editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty and chairman of the publications of the merger committee of the Christian Church, who presided over the joint committee of Congregationalists and Christians of the merger in Boston, November 13th and 14th, writes in the Herald of November 21st: "That it was the unanimous consensus of opinion of all the members of the joint committee on merging publications: (1) That the merging of The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty into one periodical of the United Church was desirable. (2) That the merger should be consummated at the earliest possible moment, with the date of March 1, 1930, suggested. (3) That the subscription and advertising rates of the combined publication correspond to the present rates of The Congregationalist. (4) That the name cover the names of both periodicals without discrimination in position or type except that the shorter name of The Congregationalist might appear first, something in the following order: The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty. It is the understanding in the agreement that the editorial and financial responsibility will be with the Congregationalists, with an associate editor or editors from the Christian Church to be named by the Christian Church, and the remuneration and expense of such editor or editors named by the Christian Church shall be borne by said Church."

From the Winchester, Va., Evening Star of Wednesday, November 20th, it is learned with sorrow that Bro. Augustine B. Richards, "for many years one of the outstanding business men of Frederick County, and with many interests in Winchester, was found dead this morning in bed at his home several miles southwest of town, on the Cedar Creek grade." Bro. Richards was one of the leading members of our Winchester Church and was a man of solid worth and many Christian virtues. A man of quiet dignity and refined manner, he carried weight and worth into every sphere and activity with which he had identified himself, and thus made for himself an enviable name as a good citizen and a Christian gentleman. Funeral services, according to the Evening Star, were held from his home by his pastor, Rev. R. L. Williamson, on Friday, the 22nd. He is survived by six sons—Boyd R., Alvis C., Roy F., and Nelson F. Richards, of Winchester, and Adolph, of Washington, D. C., and Harry Richards of the county; and four daughters—Mrs. W. T. Walters, of Everett, Pa.; Mrs. Chas. H. Cooper, Mrs. Ralph Pollard, of Frederick County, and Mrs. C. V. Turner, of Rome, Ga. Our Winchester Church, as well as the community, sustains a great loss in the going away of Bro. Richards, who was deeply interested in the Church from its organization at Winchester, and to which he remained faithful till the end. The bereaved family have our deepest sympathy.

Dr. W. H. Denison, Secretary of the General Convention, gives to the Herald of Gospel Liberty officially the names of the persons from the Christian Church elected to the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches, in harmony with the adopted plan of union. The members of the Executive Committee of the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches are Revs. F. C. Coffin, D. B. Atkinson, Warren H. Denison, Mr. J. Lewis Reck; members of the Prudential Committee of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions—Revs. W. G. Sargent, Frank H. Peters, J. O. Atkinson, Mrs. Alice V. Morrill; directors of the Congregational home boards—Revs. W. H. Hainer, H. Shelton Smith, L. E. Smith, Mrs. Athella M. Howsare; Administrative Committee of the Congregational Church extension boards—Mrs. T. G. Robinson, Rev. W. H. Hainer (director); Administrative Committee of Congregational Education Society and Publishing Society—Rev. H. M. Hainer, Rev. H. Shelton Smith (director); foundation for education—Presidents W. A. Harper and A. G. Carris; Administrative Committee of Congregational Board of Ministerial Relief—Rev. L. E. Smith (director); Administrative Committee of American Missionary Association—Rev. Omer S. Thomas; member-at-large on Commission of Missions—Rev. Raymond G. Clark; Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life of the General Council—Revs. R. C. Helfenstein, McD. Howsare; H. S. Hardcastle.

Rev. J. H. Dollar, pastor of our Reidsville Church, preached the Armistice Day sermon in Reidsville, which the Reidsville Review carried on its front page and in full in its issue of Monday, November 11th. The sermon was a most fitting one for the occasion, and of the occasion, The Review, besides printing the sermon, says: "Reidsville solemnly observed the anniversary of the cessation of the world war in a simple service marked with a spiritual significance in sharp contrast to the blazing blare of the celebration that shook the very foundation of the city eleven years ago when news was received that an armistice had been signed ending the greatest of human conflicts. About forty ex-service men attended service in a body at the First Christian Church on Sunday. Rev. J. H. Dollar, pastor, conducted a special Armistice Day service, and after the excellent sermon, C. E. Brewer made a brief talk in memory of the departed comrades. The Church was filled to capacity and chairs were placed in the aisles to seat many. Music was furnished by the Rotary Band and a large chorus. Rev. Mr. Dollar's text was from Luke 20:25, "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and unto God the things which are God's." The minister said, in part: "The declaration of the text by our Lord gave expression to His convictions along the lines of good citizenship. He said, in meaning, that there are two points of view which must be taken from a common consideration. There are two kingdoms in the world which have to be reckoned with in summing up one's responsibilities as a citizen. If one expects to be a citizen in that larger and better way, two kingdoms must take their respective places in one's program of life. If either kingdom is left out of that program the life itself is one-sided, and the service which one renders has ill effect."

ROSEMONT.

The Ladies' Missionary Society of the Rosemont Christian Church held its special thank-offering and home-coming service on the afternoon of November 20th. The attendance was large, and the program most entertaining and helpful. The thankoffering was $27, dues $4, and a special offering to the new Church fund of $32, making a total offering of $63. This society is doing a most helpful work, of which the whole Church is proud.

Our Church is now in an intensive campaign to raise in cash by the first of next July $5,000, to be applied on our new Church fund, and if we can do this, better equipment will be in sight. This new equipment, however, is dependent on our raising the entire amount mentioned above. We hope to be able to go over the top in this campaign, for better equipment is so badly needed. Will the reader please pray that this undertaking may be successful.

Our services last Sunday (November 17th) were the best we have had this fall, and we hope this interest will continue, and also increase, during the coming days.

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

A THANKSGIVING SERMON.

By REV. J. W. FIX.

"Give thanks always, for all things, unto God."—Eph. 5:20.

In the early days of our country, the pilgrims gave thanks always for all things unto God. There was none other to whom they should give thanks, for from Him came to them every good and every perfect gift. As we think of the early days of the colonists, we see them as they march to their crudely built Churches, there to give thanks. The old Puritan minister and his wife walk side by side with the Bible held securely. Other members of the band carry guns, lest some enemy arise to prevent them from obeying the scriptural injunction to "give thanks always for all things unto God." And even though they carried guns, their trust was not so much in their firearms as in the God whose guiding hand led them safely across the waters. On that first Thanksgiving Day the grateful pilgrims gave thanks to Him for their crops, though meagre they were. When we recall the scarcity of their provisions, the fewness of their numbers, and the great distance that separated them from their mother land, we cannot but marvel at their simple faith, their intense courage, and continuous thankfulness unto Him.

The historian tells us that later colonists adopted the custom of putting five grains of corn beneath each plate of every child before his Thanksgiving dinner was served. This was to remind them of the long ago when their forefathers were confronted with hardships and hunger and when they had to fare on only five grains of corn per day. But these stalwart pioneers were willing to suffer hunger rather than surrender a noble purpose. Indeed, it was worth such a struggle, if by so doing they might gain access to the throne of God.

"Not for wealth of golden store,
The glad Thanksgiving song of praise,
From stern New England's barren shore,
Ascended in the Pilgrim days;
But for the hopes of future years,
For dangers past, for freedom won,
And for the mingling smiles and tears
That came with every circling sun."

The descendants of the Pilgrims who put five grains of corn under each plate on Thanksgiving Day rendered a real service to their children as well as to future generations by teaching the contrast between the days of scarcity and the days of prosperous plenty. As we look around about us, there are many things for which we should gladly give thanks. Not only should we give thanks for the five grains of corn and what they represent, but for all things.

Last Sunday, every member of a certain young people's Sunday School class partook in making a Thanksgiving alphabet. In it they set forth some of the things for which they were truly thankful. Each letter represented a grain of corn. In groups of five, they set forth God's richest blessings. Here are some of them: (a) appetite, America; (b) books, beauty, brotherhood and Bible; (c) children, Church and crops; (d) democracy, duties and dawns; (e) education, eyesight and everything; (f) friendships, fun, faith, flowers and freedom; (g) God; (h) hope and home; (i) immortality; (j) Jesus; (k) knocks; (l) life, love, labor and law; (m) mother and music; (n) night and nature; (o) opportunity;

(p) progress, power, play, prayer, peace and prohibition; (q) quests, quietness; (r) rest, right, Red Cross; (s) sleep, strength, sacrifice and sunsets; (t) truth, turkey, tomorrow; (u) utopias; (v) victories; (w) work, worship and wages; (x) xtras; (y) yesterdays and you; (z) zest and zoos.

From the above alphabet, let us select our five grains of corn and "give thanks always for all things unto God." These we shall select from the alphabet at random. Beginning first with a word of thanksgiving for our country.

1. America. Most of us easily forget the wonderful benefits afforded us by our prosperous native land. Over and over again we need to hear the President's Thanksgiving proclamation. Often we need to open our eyes and look around about us and behold our goodly heritage. We are blessed with all the benefits of the past and with the progress attained by all our forefathers. America is the wealthiest nation on the globe. We know not what suffering and poverty is like unto. Therefore, let us give thanks for such a prosperous country. We rejoice in pointing with pride to our American schools and colleges. These offer every American youth untold opportunities for advancement toward fame and success.

We point with pride to our schools, colleges and universities as an indication of the advantages we offer our youth for education. No other nation offers such opportunities in offering such a democratic spirit for advancement among all classes. America says to every child, "Live right, prepare yourself, prove yourself worthy, and you may climb the ladder of success and fame."

To be an American citizen implies that every one of us recognize God as the Giver of all things that we enjoy. Let us be thankful for our beautiful America and remember the words of Miss Katherine Lee Bates, who as she looked out upon the land of her nativity from the top of Pikes Peak exclaimed in words of praise and thanksgiving:

"O beautiful for spacious skies, for amber waves of grain,
For purple mountain majesties above the fruited plain!
O beautiful for pilgrim feet, whose stern impassioned stress
A thoroughfare for freedom beat across the wilderness!
America! America! God shed His grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood, from sea to shining sea."

2. Friends. Let us take our second grain of corn from the alphabet and call it "Friendship." As we consider the goodness of God, we are conscious that our greatest wealth lies not in our material possessions, but in our friends. For these, let us be thankful. The inspiration of their lives shall ever live on. Who are our friends? And for what reason should we give thanks for them? Listen to these definitions of a friend. They are the products of a contest sponsored by a certain English publication which offered a prize for the best definition of friend. Among the thousands received, we read a friend is "one who multiplies joys, divides grief, and whose honesty is inviolable." "A friend is one who understands our silence." "A friend is as a watch which beats true for all time and never runs down." And now let us hear the prize-winning definition: "A friend is the one who comes in when the whole world has gone out." Even as David thanked God for Jonathan and praised Him for his wonderful friendship, so let us on this happy Thanksgiving Day thank God for the second grain of corn, which represents our numerous friends. Let us also resolve to keep these friendships in constant repair. This we can only do by being just such a friend as we would like to have as our own.

Jesus is the greatest Friend of all. He is our unseen and eternal Friend. He understands us and is ever ready and willing to comfort and sustain us. Let us sing:

"What a Friend we have in Jesus, all our sins and griefs to bear!

What a privilege to carry everything to Him in prayer!"

3. Work. The third grain of corn from our Thanksgiving alphabet is work or labor. For this privilege we ought always to be thankful unto God. Work keeps us out of trouble and greatly prevents worry. It has a power that nothing else has, in that it helps us appreciate the effort of others. We ought all to be thankful for the opportunity of honest labor and for the splendid industrial conditions round about us.

God always picks a working man to do His work. Seldom if ever does He select a man of ease. In the Old and New Testament we see Him selecting Moses for leadership, because Moses was already a working man. Saul was busy searching for his father's cattle when God called him to do His work. David was busy at work with his flocks when God called him. Nehemiah was busy bearing the king's cup when called to rebuild the walls of the city of Jerusalem. He called men who were busy at work casting nets to be fishers of men. He called Matthew from the busy office of the tax-gatherer to follow Him. He will call you if you are busy and give unto you a higher place in the kingdom. Let us, therefore, thank Him for the opportunity of labor.

4. Peace. The fourth grain of corn represents peace. Never before, since the World War, have we so much to be thankful for when it comes to progress for peace. More has been done in the past eleven years than in all of our American history to prevent war and establish peace. Let us, therefore, give thanks for some of the prominent steps toward peace. Let us begin with the League of Nations in 1920, with its 55 members. Then think of the great disarmament conference in Washington in 1921. The Stockholm conference on peace represented by thirty-seven nations in 1925 is worthy of our thanksgiving. The flight of the lone eagle, Charles Lindbergh, is another milestone toward good will and peace among the Latin countries. Let us be thankful for the peace pact of Paris in 1928 which met to outlaw war and for the friendly visit of Ramsay MacDonald with Herbert Hoover, our great peace-loving President.

5. Victories. Let the final grain of corn from our Thanksgiving alphabet be for victories. God has granted us many happy victories this past year; victories over obstacles and hardships that at the time seemed almost impossible. Then we have won victories over disease and affliction. Let us not fail to give thanks unto Him for the kind doctors, nurses and hospitals that have enabled us to win victory of physical weakness.

Finally, let us give thanks for victory over sin by remembering the words of Paul to the Church at Corinth, when he exclaimed, "Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

EASTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

This Conference was in annual session at Mt. Auburn Church, Warren County, Tuesday and Wednesday of last week. The sessions were largely attended, and there was deep interest in every theme presented throughout the sessions. Dr. W. C. Wicker, pastor of the Church and also president of the Conference, read a historical sketch of merit and value, which he was asked by Conference to have published in THE SUN for wider hearing and preservation. Mt. Auburn has made history in its more than one hundred years of existence, having been the house in which it was voted upon to publish THE CHRISTIAN SUN back in 1843, the paper actually beginning publication a year later. It was in this Church that the Principles and Government of the Christian Church were discussed from beginning to end and passed upon to be printed in book form. Possibly no single act of any Conference or Convention in the South, at least, was ever quite so fruitful of results as was this decision, because prior to the printing of our position as a Church there were devious and sundry accusations, false and otherwise, made against the Christians. Publishing the Principles and position of the Church disarmed the critics and reassured the constituency of the Church, and gave a real and well-defined foundation on which to stand and to build.

In the afternoon of the first day, Rev. J. Lee Johnson, reporting for the Committee on Education, put on record the fact that Rev. R. Lee House, a graduate of Duke University, now serving several Churches, had been ordained as elder during the year, and that there were at present four candidates for the ministry in school as members of the biblical class, one of whom, H. C. Hilliard, of the Mt. Auburn Church, was recommended for licensure at this Conference. Following this report, a very interesting program was conducted on the theme of "Christian Education," Revs. S. A. Bennett, A. W. Hurst, and Dr. W. A. Harper, of Elon College, taking part and making addresses pertaining both to the work of Elon College and to the field of Christian education. The four young men of the Conference, candidates for the ministry, all students of Elon College, were presented to the Conference. It was an impressive and inspirational service.

Mr. C. H. Stephenson, of Raleigh, treasurer of the Board of Religious Education, presented the report of the Committee on Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor, which report reviewed the work undertaken by this department and by Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor the past year. Rev. J. A. Denton read the report on evangelism, particularly emphasizing the need of an evangelistic effort, than which there is at present no greater need, for it is through this effort that souls are won to Christ in the Church and the kingdom of our Lord is enlarged.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro, was present by invitation and gave to the Conference a report from the General Convention at Piqua, Ohio, relating to the merger of Christian and Congregationalists. Dr. Rowland had at last realized the dream of a lifetime and felt that a bigger and brighter day had dawned, not merely for the Christian and Congregational Churches, but for Protestantism, and for the Church of the living God on earth, because the time had come at last when two great denominations were demonstrating to the world the possibility and the reality of working hand in hand and heart in heart with the single thought of promoting in Christian fellowship the enlargement of the kingdom of God. While thus far only the machinery of the Church is united, which means more power and less expense in overhead and mechanical operation, the national bodies had blazed the way and opened the road to real spiritual unity in Christ Jesus, when and as the people and local Churches were ready to share that fellowship and enjoy that union.

Mrs. C. H. Rowland made a report of the woman's work for the State, particularly in relationship to the annual session of the Woman's Conference held at Burlington in October. Mrs. Rowland is president of the North Carolina Woman's Christian Conference and gave an interesting and inspiring report of the great things the women are doing in missionary activity in the Churches.

On the morning of the second day of the Conference, the general topic was missions, home and foreign, Rev. M. T. Sorrell making the report for the Home Mission Board, and Rev. B. J. Howard for the Foreign Mission Board. Both of these brethren reported interesting items relative to the missionary work in the Conference, Bro. Sorrell making the plea for more liberal giving to, and support of missions, his report showing that in a Conference whose membership numbers, according to the report of last year, 4,888, they had only given to missions, home and foreign, the past year, both in Sunday School and Church, $1,781.88, about 36 cents per Church member throughout the Conference. Think of a Conference membership of Christian workers only giving thirty-six cents per year for the spread of the gospel at home and abroad! Rev. B. J. Howard, for foreign missions, insisted that we needed to think in terms of rendering real service, both at home and abroad, which service should look to the uplift of mankind through every effort of missionary activity in the name of the Church. Mrs. G. H. Leonard, of Chapel Hill, reported to the Conference what the women of her district had done for missions in the past year, and Mrs. Margaret Alston a similar report of the woman's work for missions in her Conference.

In the afternoon, Bro. Chas. N. Johnson, of Wake Chapel, presented the report of the Committee on Stewardship, insisting that the Church and the world were intoxicated with luxuries and indulgences, and that the work of the Lord was to be carried forward only through sacrifice, and the people were not sacrificing as was their privilege. The Conference regretted the absence of Superintendent C. D. Johnston, of the orphanage. However, when the report was made on the orphanage, there were several talks and pleas made for an increased offering for the orphanage, both because of the increased number of children in the orphanage and the recent loss of the barn by fire. The remainder of the day was given to routine business, and the Conference agreed that its sessions had been too short, and next year they would convene at Catawba Springs, Wake County, N. C., in a three-day session, thus giving more time for discussion of the vital matters pertaining to the work of the Conference.

The officers of the past year were re-elected, as follows: W. C. Wicker, president, Elon College, N. C.; J. Lee Johnson, vice-president, Fuquay Springs, N. C.; L. L. Vaughan, secretary, Raleigh, N. C.; W. J. Ballentine, treasurer, Fuquay Springs, N. C.

It was decided to publish the minutes in the "Annual," and for the secretary of the Conference to distribute same as soon as published.

Mt. Auburn, of course, maintained its reputation, both for Christian fellowship and royal hospitality. There are no people anywhere whose association in Christian service is more agreeable and whose hospitality is more regal and generous. It was great to be at Mt. Auburn and, for two days, breathe the atmosphere of spiritual refreshing and revel in the joy of genuine Christian fellowship.

THE CALL OF GOD FROM THE CROSS.

Bishop Mouzon, of the Methodist Church, declares that no rallying cry has ever appealed to men like the call, "Come and suffer with us." "This is," says Bishop Mouzon, "the call of God to man from the cross." If one will seek out and find the sin and the sorrow of the world, sit down by the suffering ones and take their burdens to heart, one will realize what this call of God from the cross really signifies. There is no challenge, there is no plea equal to that of sin and suffering, and there is certainly nothing on this earth that is able to relieve that sin and suffering save the cross on which our Saviour died. That's the reason Paul scorned making what he called "a fair show in the flesh," and wrote to the Galatians and to the world, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." Paul elsewhere declared that those who "suffer with Him shall also reign with Him." It was this realization, that He who had come down from the Father alone could lift mankind, that He and He alone had a love broad and deep enough to lift mankind, that gave Paul a courage, a persistence, and a power that the world, the flesh and the devil could not overcome. It is this same power in the Church today that makes it invincible and gives to it a glory that the world can neither understand nor take away.

Paul gloried not in the strength of man, nor in the power of the State, nor in the machinery of organization, nor in any earthly achievement; Paul gloried only in the cross, because he realized that the cry and the need of the world came out of suffering, and that Jesus the Christ had come into the world and died on the cross that He might therein and thereby bear the burden of a sin-cursed world, and through the gift of the Holy Spirit endow others with power to help bear that burden, and thus serve best their fellowman.

The stream of healing and refreshing for the nations flows out from beneath the throne of God, and the only power sufficient to relieve the suffering of mankind and lift the burdens from the shoulders of mankind is the power of the cross of Jesus Christ. He Himself said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." Call this mysticism, ancient theology, dogma or what-not, but, from the day of Calvary till now, it has been the power that has lifted men up and sent them out into the world with a passion for service to their fellowmen.

It is an easy thing now to talk about serving our fellowman in the name of man and for man's sake, but God knows and history proves that the service that has reached down to suffering man and lifted the fallen and cheered the faint, that service which has been permanent and progressive and powerful in building institutions for the fatherless, homes for the needy and decrepit, has been and is a service emanating out of the love of God, gleaming through the darkness from the cross of Christ, a service in the name, and for the sake, of our Lord, who alone can save men from their sins. Paul gloried in the cross, not the cross that he himself was bearing, nor the suffering that he was enduring as a man, but in the cross of Christ and the suffering that he endured in His name. In this name, Bishop Mouzon makes a plea worthy of attention in these words:

"Come, share in the work of the world's Redeemer. Take up your cross and follow Christ. In your own flesh and soul, fill up on your own part 'that which is lacking in the afflictions of Christ' for the sake of saving men and women and little children from sin and sorrow, and you will enter into 'the fellowship of His sufferings' and experience the highest joy that comes to man, the joy that seeketh us through pain." CONGREGATIONALISTS AND CHRISTIANS.

The origin of the two Churches was similar in many important respects. The Christian Church was first the Republican Methodist. The Congregational Church was the Independents. The Congregational Church, under its present name, came into existence in the sixteenth century, during the reign of Elizabeth. The Christian Church took its present form in the eighteenth century. Both were trying to put off episcopal forms, human creeds, and dominating heads. Both took the Bible as their creed, personal liberty in interpretation as the right of the individual, and the local Church as the agent to determine government. The chief difference during their entire history has been their name; and that is a cardinal difference. Congregational implies that the authority of the loyal congregation is supreme; Christian implies allegiance to Christ as the Head of the Church. It is the only name that all believers can bear without the surrender of any principle or right.

These two bodies have recently voted, through their highest bodies, to unite and become one and "endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. 4:3). Like two lovers, they have been courting for some time; and, long before they made love to each other in a formal way, they had been loving each other. Leaders in both communions had been feeling for years that the difference between them was so small and the points of agreement were so vital that they ought to be one. Love-making has its ups and downs, but what the heart feels, the head must express in some fashion. The word has been spoken and the National Council of the Congregational Church has spoken to the General Convention, and it has said, "I will." The two lovers reached the point where they could talk over the future without embarrassment, and so, October 25, 1929, the General Convention of the Christian Church, in Piqua, Ohio, said, "I will" to the proposition made by the National Council of the Congregational Church, in Detroit, on June 3, 1929. That was a real engagement of the two bodies, and the marriage will take place after the legal steps are completed for real union. After the marriage, which is sure to be consummated, details will be worked out for real union. After marriage, husband and wife are one in their legal as well as their purpose to be one; but they are not married until they are one in their life, their purpose, their work, and their home.

The two bodies will move on steadily and with increasing love and common purpose until they are married and settle down to carry on the work that is common to both and in accord with the divine purpose and the prayer of Jesus.

In marriage, the bride takes the name of the bridegroom. The Church is the bride. Christ is the bridegroom. To combine the two names of Christian and Congregational will not express their relation to Jesus Christ as His bride. "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members one of another" (1 Cor. 12:27). "Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife" (Rev. 21:9). If the Church is the bride of Christ, she should bear His name. No other name will stand the test of time and express the relation of the Church to the Head of the Church, Jesus Christ. The Church is not our Church, but His Church. We will wait to see what the future will be when the Congregational Church and the Christian Church are really married—united—and live together as one in Christ. W. W. S.

STEWARDSHIP AND TITHING.

In THE SUN this week is presented an article from the pen of Mrs. B. D. Jones, of Holy Neck Church, that will prove helpful to every one who reads it. Sister Jones is the companion and inspiration of Bro. B. D. Jones, of the board of trustees of the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C., and for many years a deacon and most active servant in the Church and in the work of the kingdom. This article was given to the Eastern Virginia Conference, at Suffolk, and those present who heard its reading realized that a great theme was being treated in a masterly manner. Dr. C. H. Rowland, president of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, declared in a recent address before the Conference that the diagnosis of the present spiritual condition of the Church led one inevitably to the conclusion that the ailment was financial. He claims that men and women are thinking in terms of finance, of money, of gain, of getting, of indulgence, and in order to reach the spirit of men and touch the soul of man, you have got to go through the financial crust and covering, penetrate the materialistic veneer.

The mind of man, the thought of man, and frequently the very souls of men, are covered over with financial conversation, consideration and consecration. Recently a campaign for the year's Church budget was put on in Dr. Rowland's Church. That campaign was conducted in such a spirit of devotion, reverence, consecration and efficiency that when it was over there were those who felt the time was ripe for a revival, and some felt spiritually edified as if they had been through a revival. Of course they did. God is able to revive the soul when the soul is penetrated and reached through its conventional and superficial coating, and the whole world about us is conventionally and superficially coating its soul, immersing its life in financial consideration and conquest. In her article, Sister Jones gives a remedy and points the way to the finding again of our souls, and thus make ourselves, through conquest of an insidious foe, masters of our souls under the leadership of our God. It is a good day for any one when one obeys the teaching of Scripture and becomes a tither, and to that extent begins to practice real stewardship for God. J. O. A.

A MOVEMENT WITHOUT MONEY.

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS.

Something must be done, and done quickly and with vigor, about the reported condition that less than half the children of the land are in Sunday Schools.

A recent article proposing a five-year campaign for the doubling of Sunday School enrollment has been widely reprinted in the religious press. In some quarters, active steps have been taken to put the plan into immediate effect. There is no division of opinion anywhere upon the fundamental importance of giving every child a fair chance to know the clear teachings of Scripture upon character and conduct. Any nation, community or Church that neglects the spiritual culture of its boys and girls is manifestly failing in a primary responsibility.

In our new zest to "do something about it," the old American boggy of organization at once arises. In one case, a new society has been proposed and a financial budget called for, to carry on an intensive activity for the promotion of an increase of attendance upon the Sunday School.

May it not be said, bluntly and even indiscreetly, that this is one movement which should march without the shackles of over-organization or the load of money-raising? Not a man or woman anywhere should get a salaried job out of this effort to do with increased efficiency the Church's basic work. There is no necessity for new literature, or any other expense, except as legitimately provided by the local Sunday School, Church and denomination. If the task of recruiting the Sunday Schools to full strength cannot be done by the voluntary efforts of concerned Christians, it cannot be done at all.

Here is a situation that makes its appeal to every normal Christian, and to every normal parent. It must be remedied by local action. In every neighborhood there are children who receive no religious instruction; in the nation as a whole, their number exceeds the total of those already enrolled in Sunday Schools. Obviously, the indicated procedure is for the absentees to be found and brought in, mostly by other girls and boys, incited by their teachers, parents and pastors. The methods may be as varied as the ingenuity of concerned Christians can suggest, but the one objective is to get the boys and girls into the Sunday School.

Of course, the effect upon every Church will be vitalizing, even to the point of raising acute problems, such as those of additional teachers and accommodations. These problems should not be allowed to obscure the primary purpose, which is to bring young people into the Sunday School and within the influence of the teaching of the Bible.

Any kind of Sunday School, staffed by Christians who love children, love the Bible and love God, is able to do the task. It may be a one-room school at a rural cross-roads or a modern religious education building in a city; it may use the Uniform Lessons or one of the many graded courses; it may meet in the morning or it may meet in the afternoon. It may utilize promotional prizes, of class banners, individual badges, or what-not. All of these matters are incidental. The one immediate aim is to secure one hundred per cent of possible attendance. The quest for boys and girls will stimulate vitality and increase efficiency. It will quicken the adult classes and the cradle roll. It will react upon family life and intensify parental responsibility.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Life is a school in which no diplomas are given. There is no graduation. Progress may be made, but new lessons come up all the way from the cradle to the grave. Schools graduate students because their courses are so limited; but life, like history, is adding new studies all the time. Studies may be optional, but even in carefully selected lines of life, years add new angles and new questions that require new investigations. There is no end to chemistry, law, medicine, economics, or even as simple a thing as housekeeping. The kitchen is a bigger school than the college, and factory is bigger than the university. The pulpit is bigger than the seminary, and the sick-room is bigger than the medical college. The factory may require new machinery for the manufacture of as universal a product as dress goods. Styles change for hats, curtains, dresses, coats, shoes, carpets, rugs, mats, bed-spreads, and hose. Architecture keeps the architect at his desk for study. A Corinthian architect never dreamed of a skyscraper.

In agriculture, new conditions arise, new machinery is introduced, markets change, uses of products change, and all these are lessons for the farmer to study and determine what to plant, how to fertilize, what machinery to use, and what quality to produce, when and where to market. Even in the poultry business, which is larger than any one farm product, as the money value of eggs alone is more than any one farm product, it is important to know how to house, feed, and improve breeds. The cackle of the hen after she lays an egg is just as important as the scream of the whistle or the sound of the bell at the mill.

In dairy business we have passed from the hand to the electric milker; from the hand churn to the electric churn; from the hand dish-washing to the electric dish-washer, and then from the iron heated by the fire to the electric iron. New machines and new conditions assign new lessons for study, so that men and women must continue to study and learn in order to keep up with the procession that marches on to more work and greater results.

Diplomas spoil a lot of students. They seem to think that their education is complete when they win that precious parchment. If they would stop to think that they receive that parchment on commencement, they would see that it is the beginning of their life-study in the field of education. The truth is, that education in the school simply qualifies men and women to learn without professors. If the college graduate does not learn that, his college course is a failure. The world is the great university where true students continue to learn. Public school teachers find this true in their profession. They learn from the pupils as well as from the professors. The same is true of ministers. The most awkward experience of the minister is when he leaves the seminary. He is in touch with books, but not with folks. The congregation is the new school. He finds that men and women have a theology that is both biblical and human. Ignorance is as great a study as science, and folks as great a study as language; and it requires more faith and patience to master these studies. Religion is more in homes than in seminaries, and the minister learns in pastoral visits as well as in his study. He never becomes too old or too wise to learn, and he should be obedient to his teachers, in books, men and women, generations past and present.

ELON LETTER.

On Wednesday, the 13th of November, the Publications Merger Committee of the Christian Church met with the Business Committee of the Congregational Educational and Publishing Societies, in Boston, to consider what practical steps should be taken to merge our national Church periodicals—The Congregationalist and the Herald of Gospel Liberty—and also what could be done to carry out the further action of the General Convention with reference to the merging of Sunday School literature.

This meeting was to precede the meeting of the administrative committee of the home boards on the 14th, and was to serve as a buffer, in case insuperable difficulties should arise. To the great surprise of all, every issue that arose was disposed of unanimously, and when the administrative committee met on the 14th similar unanimity prevailed in the ratification of the several recommendations agreed upon in the preliminary sessions of the day before.

The spirit of mutual trust and good fellowship pervaded every utterance. The Congregational and Christian Churches are already a spiritual brotherhood. They are evidently destined to demonstrate the beauty as well as the desirability of Christian union. If other Churches beholding how good and how pleasant a thing it is to these former separate bodies to dwell in unity with each other, do not decide to join with them in answering our Lord's prayer for the oneness of His followers, then this writer is no discerner of events.

Respecting the Herald of Gospel Liberty and The Congregationalist, it was voted to merge these publications as of March 1, 1930, under the title, "The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty."

With reference to the Sunday School literature, it was voted to dispense with our Sunday School Herald and issue The Mayflower, Boyland, Firelight, and The Wellspring under a joint imprint for both constituencies, to close the publication of our Boys' and Girls' Quarterly and our Children's Quarterly perhaps as of October 1, 1930, and to issue under a joint imprint the present Pilgrim Quarterlies for primary and junior ages, and to continue all other quarterlies and teachers' helps of both constituencies under a joint imprint and for circulation in both.

This action means that our Young People's Quarterly, edited by Hermon Eldredge, and our Bible Class Quarterly, edited by Dr. S. Q. Helfenstein, will continue to be published by the C. P. A., but for both Churches. It further means the imprint of the United Church on all the Sunday School literature of the Congregational Church and its circulation among our schools that want it.

Aside from the closely graded lessons, which we may buy from the Pilgrim Press, or any other place we may desire, our Sunday School workers will have the following to select from:

Sunday School papers—Mayflower, for children; Boyland, for boys; Firelight, for girls; Wellspring, for young people.

Children's division—"Pilgrim Bible Stories for Children," primaries; "The Pilgrim Boys' and Girls' Quarterly," juniors.

Young people's division—"The Pilgrim Intermediate Quarterly," intermediates; "The Pilgrim Senior Quarterly," seniors; "The Pilgrim High School quarterly," intermediates and seniors; "The Pilgrim Advanced Textbook," young people and adults; "The Christian Young People's Quarterly," intermediate, seniors and young people.

Adult division—"The Pilgrim Advanced Textbook" (listed also for young people); "The Christian Adult Bible Class Quarterly," adults; "The Home Magazine," adults; "The Adult Bible Class Magazine," adults.

Teachers' helps—"Teachers' Edition of Pilgrim Bible Stories for Children, primary; "Teachers' Edition of Pilgrim Boys' and Girls' Quarterly," junior; "The Pilgrim Teacher Quarterly," intermediate, senior, young people and adult.

Missionary Interests.

The home mission interests are to be cared for in the monthly magazine number of "The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty," known as the "American Missionary Magazine." The foreign mission interests are to be cared for in "The Missionary Herald," a monthly magazine devoted exclusively to foreign missions.

No provision has been definitely made for the field covered by the Journal of Christian Education, designed to be a clearing-house and forum for religious education in which the ripest scholarship should be given opportunity to express itself respecting the vital religious educational problems and issues of our time. The Journal never attained its ideal, and perhaps it never would have. Not a few, however, think there is a real need for such a publication. There are certainly such problems and issues to be found.

The Christian Publishing Association will lose considerable printing business through these mergers. To offset this loss, the Congregational Publishing Society will give the C. P. A. opportunity to bid on its publications.

The administrative committee of the Congregational Home Boards set up a small continuing committee to represent it with power in making adjustment of details involved in the proposed merger of publications, nothing of which will be effective till ratified by our General Board when it meets in Dayton, Ohio, December 9-12, 1929.

BRO. FLOWERS' WORK.

Rev. A. R. Flowers, who is giving his best service to the young people's work in south Georgia during the months of November and December, will go to Florida the first of the year and spend January and February working with different auxiliaries in the interest of young people. He will spend the first week in January speaking in Jacksonville and in talking with different pastors about the needs of the young people.

Mr. Flowers has been spending about four months in the winter, now and then, in this State and in Florida during the past ten years, and during these stays he has made a host of friends in the different denominations, who are very glad to have him acknowledge their invitation to come this way.

MISS OPAL BAXTER.

ROANOKE, ALA.

We have often heard the true saying, "Smile, and the world smiles with you." Then, let's see how many smiles we can give the one hundred and twenty little orphanage children at Elon College by dropping a few nickels, dimes and dollars in the Sunday School plates for Thanksgiving morning. Let's see how big an offering we can make this year. By doing this, I feel sure we can all smile together, and God will bless each and every one who has a part in this offering.

MRS. J. F. BROWN.

"GOD IS LOVE."

Dwight L. Moody will live on. His creative personality touched life in so many ways that he is permanently enshrined in the religious institutions and literature of the English-speaking peoples. His powerful consecration, unique union of faith and action; galvanic love for God and his fellow-men make him a never-ending source of inspiration. His free use of men of theological diversity argued to be a wholesome lesson to us today in our attack upon sin. He introduced and used George Adam Smith, the Christian scholar and higher critic; Henry Drummond, the scientist, and others. Strange theological bedfellows, for Moody, they were, but he harnessed them to his great program of evangelism and drew such stalwarts to his own altar of conservatism. Moody's sermons would not survive through intrinsic homiletic value, but they will long be read because of their wonderful background and as sharp tools once used by a mighty spiritual craftsman. The following selection is from one of my favorite Moody sermons on "God is Love." It is quite typical of the man's sermonic form and emphasis, of his illustrations from his own observations, and his direct speech to his hearers.

"My text is taken from the first epistle of John, and it is one of those texts the world does not believe. If I could make every one in this building believe this text, I would not preach a sermon. 'God is Love.' That is one of the texts the devil would like to blot out of the Bible. For six thousand years he has been going up and down the world trying to make men believe that God is not love. Love begets love, and hate begets hate. Let me tell any one of you that I heard a man say this week that you were one of the meanest men in town, and you will soon come to the conclusion that the man who said that was the meanest man you ever heard of. Let me tell you that I heard a man say he thought more of you than of any other man in the city, and though you may not have thought about him before, your love will spring up and you will say, 'I think a great deal of that man.'

"Now, men are believing the devil's lies when they don't believe God is love. A few years ago, when we built a Church in Chicago, a friend put upon the pulpit in gas-jets the words, 'God is love.' We thought, if we couldn't preach it into the hearts of the people we would burn it in. A man happened to see that text up there, and he said to himself: 'God is not love; God does not love me'; and he came around into the Church, not to hear the sermon, but to see the text as it was burning there upon the wall. The arrow reached its mark. He went into the inquiry meeting. I inquired what it was that impressed him. He said it was not the sermon; it was those words that had burned into his soul. He was weeping, and he wanted to know what he should do to be saved.

"'God is love.' I hope this text will find its way into every heart here. I want to prove it from Scripture. The great trouble with men is, they are all the time trying to measure God by their own rules, and from their own standpoint. A man is apt to judge others from his own standard. If a man is covetous, he thinks every one else is covetous. If he is a selfish man, he thinks every one else is selfish. If a man is guilty of adultery, he thinks every other man is. If a man is dishonest, he thinks every other man is. They don't know that between human love and divine love there is as much difference as there is between darkness and light. God's love is deep and high; Paul says it passeth knowledge. We love a man as long as he is worthy of our love, and when he is not we cast him off, but we don't find in the Word of God that God casts off those who are not worthy of His love. If he did, there would be no one in the kingdom of God except Jesus Himself. He was obedient unto death. He was worthy of love.

"In 1867, when I was preaching in Dublin, in a large hall, at the close of the service, a young man, who did not look over seventeen, though he was older, came up to me and said he would like to go back to America with me and preach the gospel. I thought he could not preach it, and I said I was undecided when I could go back. He asked me if I would write to him when I went, and he would come with me. When I went, I thought I would not write to him, as I did not know whether I wanted him or not. After I arrived at Chicago, I got a letter saying he had just arrived at New York, and he would come and preach. I wrote him a cold letter, asking him to call on me if he came West. A few days after, I got a letter stating he would be in Chicago next Thursday. I didn't know what to do with him. I said to the officers of the Church: 'There is a man coming from England, and he wants to preach. I am going to be absent on Thursday and Friday. If you will let him preach on those days, I will be back on Saturday and take him off your hands.' They did not care about him preaching, being a stranger; but at my request they let him preach. On my return on Saturday I was anxious to hear how the people liked him, and I asked my wife how that young Englishman got along. 'How did they like him?' She said, 'They like him very much. He preaches a little different from what you do. He tells people God loves them. I think you will like him.' I said he was wrong. I thought I could not like a man who preached contrary to what I was preaching. I went down Saturday night to hear him, but I had made up my mind not to like him because he preached different from me. He took his text—and I saw everybody had brought their Bible with them. 'Now,' he says, 'if you will turn to the third chapter of John and the sixteenth verse, you will find my text.'

"He preached a wonderful sermon from that text 'For God so loved the world that he gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.' My wife had told me he had preached the two previous sermons from that text, and I noticed there was a smile over the house when he took the same text. Instead of preaching that God was behind them with a double-edged sword to hew them down, he told them God wanted every sinner to be saved, and He loved them. I could not keep back the tears. I didn't know God thought so much of me.

"It was wonderful to hear the way he brought out Scripture. He went from Genesis to Revelation, and preached that in all ages God loved the sinner. On Sunday night there was a great crowd who came to hear him. He took for his text the third chapter of John and sixteenth verse, and he preached his fourth sermon from that wonderful text, 'For God so loved the world,' etc., and he went from Genesis to Revelation to show that it was love, love, love, that brought Christ from heaven, that made Him step from the throne to lift up this poor, fallen world. He struck a higher chord that night, and it was glorious. The next night there was an immense crowd, and he said: 'Turn to the third chapter and sixteenth verse of John,' and he preached his fifth sermon from that wonderful text. He did not divide the text up into firstly secondly, and thirdly, but he took the whole text and threw it at them. I thought that sermon was better than ever. I got so full of love that I got up and told my friends how much God loved them. The whole Church was on fire before the week was over. Tuesday night came, and there was a greater crowd than ever. The preacher said: 'Turn to the third chapter of John and the sixteenth verse, and you will find my text,' and he preached his sixth sermon from that wonderful text, 'God so loved the world,' etc. They thought that sermon was better than any of the rest. It seemed as if every heart was on fire, and sinners came pressing into the kingdom of God. On Wednesday night people thought that probably he would change his text now, as he could not talk any longer on love. There was great excitement to see what he was going to say. He stood before us again and he said: 'My friends, I have been trying to get a new text, but I cannot find any as good as the old one, so we will again turn to the third chapter of John and the sixteenth verse.' He preached his seventh sermon from that wonderful text. I have never forgotten those nights. I have preached a different gospel since, and I have had more power with God and man since then. In closing up that seventh sermon, he said: 'For seven nights I have been trying to tell you how much God loved you, but this poor stammering tongue of mine will not let me. If I could ascend Jacob's ladder and ask Gabriel, who stands in the presence of the Almighty, to tell me how much love God the Father has for this poor lost world, all that Gabriel could say would be "That God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."'

"When he got through preaching in Chicago we had to get the largest building there, and then thousands went away because they could not get in. He went to Europe and returned again. In the meantime our Church had been burned and the people of Philadelphia had put us up a temporary building. When he came there he preached in this temporary building, and he said: 'Although the old building is burned up, the old text is not burned up, and we will preach from that.' So he preached from where he had left off preaching about the love of God.

"Do not believe that God does not love you. He loves you with an everlasting love. 'God is love.' He wants to save you."—Methodist-Protestant Herald.

BEREA (NORFOLK).

The official board of Berea (Norfolk) Christian Church met at the home of Mrs. B. O. Hall on the night of November 12th, and held a most interesting session. After the transaction of many matters of interest, the following officers were elected to serve for this Conference year: F. N. Hall, chairman; J. J. Halstead, vice-chairman, and Miss Bettie Whitehurst, secretary.

This Church enjoyed last year one of the most successful years of its life, receiving more members and giving more money than it has ever done before, or at least in many years.

The Sunday School, under the leadership of Superintendent F. N. Hall and his corps of workers, is doing the best work it has done for some time. It now holds the banner of the Sunday School Conference of Greater Norfolk for the best work having been done last quarter.

The Ladies' Aid Society, under the leadership of the president, Mrs. F. N. Hall, and the Woman's Missionary Society, with Mrs. J. F. Morgan, president, are both doing good work.

We feel sure that the work of this great old Church will continue to go forward in the years to come, because of the very fine people who compose her membership.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

THE MISSION OF THE CHURCH.

BY ANNA A. MILLIGAN,

Sec'y W. B. of F. M., United Presbyterian Church.

Ancient religions and institutions are changing, are even being dissolved, but Jesus Christ is the same, yesterday and today and forever. Standards of moral conduct are being questioned and absolute truth is being doubted; but God's law is perfect, unchanging and sure.

Knowing the need of the world—social, industrial, racial, national and spiritual, and knowing the need of every individual heart throughout all time, Christ gave His message to the world. It is unique. It is universal. It is adequate.

That message is ours to give to the world. Giving it to the world constitutes the mission of Christianity. That message is the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is not merely a philosophy of life; it is not merely a theological doctrine; it is not merely a social service program. It is more than all of these. It is the revelation of God to men, empowering them to become sons of God.

Christ expects every individual Christian to carry this good news wherever it is not known. It is dishonoring to Christ for any one to claim to love Christ and then fail to tell others of His love. "The mission of the Church is missions," and the mission of every individual Christian is missions. The mission of Christianity and the mission of the individual Christian is to make Christ known and to lead every man and woman in the world into saving relation to Jesus Christ, to know Him and the power of His resurrection. This mission has not changed during the ages.

There would be no missionary enterprise if Christians did not have what the whole world needs and does not have. There would be no missionaries if those people in the uttermost parts had what they must have in order to know life and light, peace and joy. If the other religions of the world were adequate to meet the needs of men and could satisfy the hearts of men, there would have been no great commission. There would be no mission boards. There would be no missionaries to spread the gospel of His love.

The fact that there is truth found in the other religions is not sufficient ground for leaving people alone; they must have Him who is Truth. The fact that there are spiritual values in other religions is not enough; these may be good, so far as they go. They do not go far enough. The fact that there are ethical elements in those religions is not sufficient ground for remaining at home. The ethical teachings of the other religions do not give a sense of sin, nor show the way to pardon and cleansing and power.

We have taken modern education to the people of other religions. That is good and desirable, but education is not enough. Every educational institution in the mission fields today should be measured by the evangelistic standard. If students are not born again, the schools in mission lands are failing in their purpose.

Medical institutions can do a vast amount of humanitarian work in relieving suffering, staying disease and curing the ills of mankind. A missionary physician will do all this; but his success is measured by the number who come to know the Great Physician, with all His healing sympathy.

Every evangelist will estimate his work by the number of new creatures who have been born into the kingdom of God, not by the number of men who have become better neighbors or more honorable citizens. He will measure his success by the number of lives that give evidence of a power to overcome sin and to live a new life. The standard which we must set before us, as Churches, mission boards, missionaries and individual Christians is the presentation of Jesus Christ as the only way of salvation, of the atonement and the resurrection as the great doctrines of our faith, and the abundant life that is in Christ Jesus.

Some claim that the ultimate aim of missions is to establish a world brotherhood. This is a noble purpose, but it falls far short of the standard which Christ has set for His Church. There are those who make the ultimate goal the establishment of friendship and good will. These good results will surely come when once the earth becomes filled with the knowledge of the Lord and when once the people of the earth take the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour and King. A new world order is our goal, where Christ will have His way.

The kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. "If there is anything certain in this world, it is that Christ is raised from the dead and is living now in myriads of triumphant and radiant lives. We need only to extend the conquest, to go farther in the direction in which we have started."

Men may not hear the gospel we bring, but we must give this message, whether they hear or not. They may threaten life and property. We must give it, counting not life dear. We must "place no value upon anything we have or may possess, except in relation to the kingdom of God." We must give this message of the gospel of Christ in spite of scorn or ridicule, in spite of contempt or shame, remembering that "the disciple is not above his Master." We must give it in humility and love. Because we have it and men need it, because men cannot live without it, we must share it. If we do not, it will mean irreparable loss to us and loss to those who sit in darkness—terrible loss, and it will mean loss to Christ, who died that all might come to know Him. We can give the world nothing more. We dare not give less.

Not only must we give the gospel, but we must live it. There must be evidence in our lives that what we proclaim is a reality. We must show such love in all we do and say that men will be convinced that there is a God of love. Men everywhere admit the beauty and the glory of the life of Christ; but unless they see in us the evidences of a Christ-like character, they will not believe that He can transform men into His image by faith in Himself. "It is the present miracle of spiritual grace and power triumphant in a human life," that will be the argument unanswerable, the proof irrefutable. It is our glorious privilege to live this life and to make Christ's message effective at any cost.—Missionary Review of the World.

TITHING.

How thankful we should be that God, in His goodness, has left to us the matter of financing His kingdom on earth! There are thousands who think this a burden. They are mistaken. It is a genuine and an unmixed blessing. Recognizing that God is owner of all things, and that we have only been entrusted with the use of them, we therefore are stewards and can never get away from this great fundamental truth.

The Bible speaks more often of the stewardship of money, of man's attitude and relationship to money, than any other specific theme or subject whatever. The stewardship of money as expressed in the law of the tithe was not placed by Moses in the Ten Commandments for the very obvious reason that it was already an established law and custom before the Ten Commandments were given.

The practice of stewardship through the law of the tithe was already in vogue and well established in Abraham's day. And Jacob recognized it as a matter of fact when he first discovered himself in the presence of the Lord. Older than the most ancient patriarchs, well established and constantly practiced by them as a divine and sacred fact, it did not require to be in the laws given through Moses and to be established by those who followed him. Taught and practiced specifically in the first book and by the most ancient records of the Old Testament, it is not without significance that the whole of the last book of the Old Testament treats of this as its only and central theme.

The prophet Malachi realized that his whole nation was robbing God, and unless they could be brought to realize this sin of robbery and repent, there was no hope for them. Then Jesus came, and two-thirds of the parables He uttered had to do with man's relationship to his possessions; his stewardship of that which God owned. We are stewards, trustees in possession for a season, and God is owner of all. Through paying the tithe we acknowledge God as a personal being and as owner of all; for only a person can own, hold, possess.

The law of the tithe finds its source and power in the personality of God. When we pay tithes we recognize the ownership and the personality of God. But how can we pay our tithes to God? How show our stewardship of possessions? Clear enough. He has established agencies whereby this may be done. These agencies are nothing more or less than the enterprises and interests of the Church. God gave us the Church, that He might have in the world that which would provoke us to the practice of stewardship and keep before us the needs and demands of stewardship. "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also," said Lord Christ. God wanted us to practice the stewardship of money in relationship to the Church in order that our hearts might go into this divine institution. He gave us the Church, He wants us to love the Church, to be loyal to the Church, to be tied to the Church with hooks of steel that cannot be broken. Hence, He refused to sustain it, and called not upon angels and principalities to support it. He made His Church dependent upon the treasure that man would put into it; limited its activities to the resources that man would supply it, and capitalized it solely with the stewardship of man's money. God did all this not because of any limitations of poverty on His part, but because through this agency He wished the heart, the loyalty, the love, the devotion of men.

God wants man's heart. This He knew could never be His as long as that heart was centered on something that was not His. The stewardship of money declares that God is owner of all, and that He has entrusted for the time being some of His belongings to us. It is easy to put prayers, faith and hope into an enterprise. These may not cost us much—just words and some of our spare or idle time. But it is hard to put money into an enterprise. This for the reason that our money counts and has cost us something—has cost us effort, sacrifice, service, self-denial, consecration, devotion.

God wants our loyalty to His divine agencies and enterprises of His Church. This He can get in liberal and unstinted measure only when we have realized that God is owner of all and we are stewards in possession, for a time, and that we shall sooner or later be called upon to render an account of our stewardship. May we then be found not unwilling nor unjust stewards. The world asks: "What does a man own?" Christ asks: "How does he use it?" The world thinks more about the money-getting; Christ, about the money-giving. When a man gives, the world asks: "What does he give?" Christ asks: "How does he give?" The world looks at the money and its amount; Christ looks at the man and his motive and sees what is kept back for self, and He rewards accordingly.

At the present time one thing alone hinders the progress of Christ's kingdom, and that one thing is lack of money. There is money enough in the hands of Church members to sow every acre of the earth with the seed of truth.

The man who prays, "Thy kingdom come," and does not give some just proportion of his income to promote the kingdom is a conscious or unconscious hypocrite. Nine-tenths with God is worth far more than ten-tenths without God. I am tired hearing people talk about raising money. It is time for us to give it. Tilling the soil is the first, and it will be the last, occupation of man. When God placed Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, He gave them all it contained, but reserved one tree as sacred to Himself. Just so, He always has claimed a portion of all a man possessed for Himself to be used as He should direct. We are told by those who have studied the question that giving is mentioned 1,565 times in the Bible, and one verse in every seven of the four gospels deals with man in relation to his property; sixteen of the thirty-eight parables spoken by Jesus refer to property. Let us think for a moment what would happen if the members of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference should actually obey God's law of the tithe. Just suppose the farmer would use a tenth of his corn, wheat, cotton or peanuts for the kingdom's work. These are not produced by great corporations, but by man, plow and mule working in harmony with God's seasons and rain. No class of men practice faith more than those who cultivate the soil. They plant and sow with faith in God, and harvests reward their faith and their labors.

The attitude of the farmer to Christianity is more important than that of any other class, because so many of our business men, statesmen, preachers, teachers, pioneers in industry come from farm homes. What counts in the country Church is character, not opinion; honesty, not theory; constructive work and not criticism. Let us for a few moments think of the three R's—not reading, 'riting and 'rithmetic, that they use to stand for, if you please; but let our first R stand for robbers. Will a man rob God? But ye say, "Wherein have we robbed Thee?" In tithes and offerings we are cursed with a curse, for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation.

Our second R stands for ruler. In contrast to the man Malachi pictures as a robber, is the man who recognizes himself as a steward and faithfully invests his money for the glory of God; because he was faithful in a few things he was made ruler over many things. Are you a robber or a ruler?

Our third R stands for results. Money invested in God's work always brings a rich harvest. Our tithes, no matter how small, are multiplied and made powerful in the advancement of the kingdom.

What a wonderful change in the world will be wrought

When Christians all learn how to tithe!
We will then reach a goal for which long we have sought

When Christians all learn how to tithe.
By our schools and our orphanage then we will stand

We will build them and make them the best in the land.

Not a child will be homeless or wanting a friend,
And the preachers' sorrows will all have an end;
Not a soul will be left to its darkness and woe,
But of God and His love every creature shall know—

When Christians all learn how to tithe.

The Judgment of the Nations.

"When the Son of man shall come in His glory . . . then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory." God people differ as to the time and manner of Jesus' coming, but practically all are agreed that eventually the kingdom of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ. Jesus is to be King as well as Saviour. The forces of evil are to be overthrown. He will sit upon the throne of His glory—a throne symbolizes sovereignty and ruling power. The wise man puts himself in harmony with the onward march of triumphant moral and spiritual forces.

"And before Him shall be gathered all nations; and He shall separate them one from another . . . and He shall set the sheep on His right hand, but the goats on the left." It is significant that not only here, but in all of Jesus' teachings He divides men sharply into two groups—the sheep and the goats, the wheat and the tares, the righteous and the wicked, the good fish and the bad. Ultimately, and in the sight of Him who can see all things, men are good or evil; that is, when their true nature has run its course, the result is evident. And in the final analysis the ultimate test in their attitude to the best as revealed in Jesus Christ.

"Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." It is the Father's good pleasure to give to His children the kingdom. He has so prepared it. But men forfeit their inheritance and renounce their birthright.

It is significant that in this picture of the judgment of the nations, Jesus does not commend or condemn on the basis of creedal beliefs, or ceremonial practice. It was on the basis of the kindly, neighborly, humble deed, done as unto him that the righteous were admitted into their inheritance. The ultimate basis of judgment is the kind of spirit which a man has shown to those in need. The spirit which prompts to loving service is the kind of spirit which makes a man eligible to and at home in the kingdom of God.

It is significant, too, that those who were blessed of the Father were not even cognizant of the fact that they had done anything. They said, "When saw we thee an hungered," etc.? Some of the most effective forms of service are those which spring spontaneously out of a life that is bent on helping others. And is it not significant that the very things which entitled the righteous to an eternal reward were humble, simple, unpretentious things. It suggests that there are at hand for all of us ample opportunities for doing the things that assure an eternal reward.

It must not be taken for granted, however, that the way to enter into the reward of the righteous is by good works. A man is not saved by works, but by grace. The heart of the matter is that the saved life finds expression in doing the kind of things which Jesus suggests.

"Inasmuch as ye did it not." Men are often shut out of the kingdom of God on the basis of what they did not, as well as on the basis of what they did. There are sins of omission as well as sins of commission. Alas! for the man who willfully and habitually neglects that which he recognizes as his duty.

"Ye did it unto me . . . ye did it not unto me." That involves a great deal. Jesus Christ identifies Himself with humanity, even the least and the outcast. He who would serve God must serve Him by serving God's children, with whom God identifies Himself. Every person in need presents a challenge to serve Christ, and the readiness or unreadiness to serve as best we can determines our destiny.

The Good Samaritan.

This immortal story by the matchless Storyteller was designed primarily to answer the question, "Who is my neighbor?" The parable had significance in Jesus' day, but how much more significance does it have for our day when the world is fast becoming a neighborhood in a very real way? "Go thou and do likewise," applies today as well as in Jesus' day. Wherever and whenever there is some one in need, that some one is our neighbor. The ministry of helpfulness ought to overleap the barriers of racial prejudice and nationality. It is suggestive that the man who helped the man who fell among thieves was not one who could have qualified as a religious man according to the standards of those who passed by, and yet who were supposed to be the "religious four hundred."

Religion in Action—Faith and Works.

James suggests that the way to show one's faith is by works. Jesus Himself said that it was by their fruits that men were known. One might well raise a question about anybody's religion, that is religion in terms of Jesus' way of life, unless that person was manifesting that religion in helpfulness to others. Faith without works is dead. And works without a living faith is just about as dead. Humanitarianism is not enough. We must have more than a sentimental love for humanity if we are to continue in good works. Faith in a loving God—faith that believes that the loving God expects loving service—is the well-spring of works that have the stamp of the divine upon them.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, December 8, 1929.

TOPIC: "What is Back of Our Christmas Giving?"—Matt. 2:1-11; 1 Cor. 13:3.

Some Bible Hints.

The impulse to give should come from above, like the impulse that sent the wise men to seek the King (v. 2).

God sometimes uses our impulses to help His people. Joseph was a poor man, and gifts were welcome (v. 11).

The spirit of worship or love to God should be behind our giving. Our gifts should first be consecrated to Christ (v. 11).

Those that love their fellow-men and sympathize with their need are those that give generously (v. 3).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Too often pride is back of our giving. We want to outdo all others in the lavishness of our gifts.

Too often selfishness is back of our giving.

We give because we think we can get something in return.

Flattery is back of some giving. We often want to make the recipient of our gift feel that we admire him, when we really despise him.

Custom also is the mainspring behind a great deal of Christmas-giving. We give because others give, and we grumble because we must follow the custom.

A Few Illustrations.

Giving must be from the heart, or it is like ointment which grows quickly rancid and worthless.

A small gift, made by the giver and obviously the result of thoughtfulness and love, is far more appreciated than expensive gifts that carry no thought of love. Not the size of the gift, but the thought in it is paramount.

Christmas gifts should express our happiness. When the giver delights to give, one gets a thrill from the gift. We are all hungry for love.

I have a little anvil, a paper weight, made by a boy whom I helped to get a trade, and this is the first thing he made as a journeyman. It was an expression of gratitude.

To Think About.

How express brotherliness at Christmas?

What need exists in our community?

How may we give without patronizing those to whom we give?

OTHER CHURCHES UNITE.

The union of Churches goes on apace. The feeling that a "pagan world is the price that a divided Protestantism is paying for its division into so many sects and camps" grows and deepens in the minds of churchmen everywhere. On October 2nd, after eighty-six years of separation, the established Church of Scotland and the United Free Church, composing two branches of the Scotch Presbyterians, held, according to an account in the New York Times, a most impressive service, consummating and celebrating the union of the two bodies. After the general assemblies of the two Churches had voted to unite and had held their last meetings as separate organizations, both bodies marched in procession to St. Giles Cathedral for a service, a part of which the New York Times describes as follows:

"There was no more impressive moment than when a great rainbow spanned the sky just as the members of the two Churches now united were marching through Edinburgh. They were greeted on the steps of the cathedral by the moderators of the two assemblies—Dr. Joseph Mitchell, of the Church of Scotland, and Principal Alexander Martin, of the United Free Church—and also by Dr. John White, of Glasgow, chosen to be the first moderator of the reunited Church of Scotland. Few will forget the scene when the members of the assemblies rose and pledged their approval of reunion by holding up their right hands."

Following this united service, greetings from Presbyterian Churches and other denominations in all parts of the world poured in upon the united body, and in the first united service many other denominations, through their officials—the Church of England, the Lutheran Church and others—took a part and rejoiced with the united body. The King of England, through his representative, the Duke of York, attended and gave greetings to the assembly. So, on the other side, as well as on this, men and women of the Christian faith of every name and persuasion seem to be considering the necessity of presenting a united front for service against the united forces of evil. The denominations seem to have decided to quit fighting each other and to direct their energies and activities to far better and nobler purposes.

A CHOICE BETWEEN CIVILIZATIONS.

By DR. ERNEST H. CHERRINGTON.

The ultimate type of civilization developed in this country will be determined by the final attitude taken by the American people upon the prohibition question. Ultimately the issue is, not merely how much alcohol may be permitted in legal beverages, but whether the nation will continue to develop our high-pressure industrial civilization or, abandoning this, revert to some modification of one of the various "cultures" prevalent in Europe.

No one disputes that the civilization of wine-using countries is historic, beautiful and of a very high order. Equally indisputable is the fact that it is essentially different from the civilization we have been evolving in this land. Ivy-covered ruins, traditions that reach back through centuries and give color and life to the customs and habits of today, a classicism which expresses itself not alone in literature and art, but through more or less well-defined social distinctions which sometimes approach the caste system, leisure, patina: all these have their charm. They are a part of the heritage of an aristocracy which still gives color even to such democracy as prevails in the old world. In that civilization wine has played its part.

Compared to the ancient civilizations in the wine countries of the world, American life may seem crude to some. Mass production is one of the keystones of our life. Standardization is a shibboleth. We have set our tempo not to the measured pace of an historic past—although we have, through inheritance, an equal claim upon those legacies of history bequeathed by the past generations of Europe—but to the present and the future. In that quickened pace of swiftly moving men and machinery, there is no place for the retarding enemy of speed, beverage alcohol. When expert students of our industrial life, such as Herbert Hoover, Henry Ford, Roger Babson, Irving Fisher, Thomas N. Carver, Paul H. Nystrom, Herman Feldman, B. C. Forbes—to name only a handful out of a host—find that our production ratio, our standards of living, our high wages, our general distribution of wealth and prosperity or our homes and automobile ownership have a direct relation to our policy of national prohibition, it is quite evident that the type of civilization now developing in America can be maintained only by the continuance of that policy. There may be more romance, more ivy, more ruins, more long-established social order, more charm in the wine civilizations of the old world than in what some love to call our raw, crude industrialism. It is noteworthy, however, that Congress has been compelled to build a wall of immigration laws against an exodus from the wine lands to dry America. Thatched roofs and immemorial castles alike may be lacking in America, but equally lacking are the poverty, the hopelessness, the discomforts and the fixed social condition which is the lot of so many in other lands. While no wine-shop portals swing open here to the seeker of surcease of sorrow in the flowing bowl, wide doors of opportunity open in their stead. None here are taught to be "content with that station in life to which it doth please the Lord to call them." Nor need any drug themselves with nepenthe or mandragora into forgetfulness of their hard lot.

The old challenge "Under which king, Bezonian?" cannot be ignored. America may make herself a pale copy of Europe on a magnified scale with the wine and the beer which hitherto have been one of the significant factors in the character of civilization Europe has developed. We may turn from our high-pressure industrial methods to the slower speed by which European workers earn from one-fourth to one-tenth the amount an American worker receives for a day's work. Instead of our present ratio of one automobile for every five people, we might reduce this number to the ratio of one to each sixty-four people which prevails throughout the world outside of the United States. Instead of democracy we might devise a stately, although parasitic, aristocracy. We might turn savings accounts into debts and exchange the widely diffused comfort and ease of the average American worker for the less enviable condition of his European fellow. We might substitute for the gateways of opportunity the swinging doors of the debit, the tavern, the inn and the wine shop. It should be done. More, it would be done if the apologists for the vintner and the brewer should have their way. But in the way of realization of their aims, there stands the cold common sense of the American citizen who prefers crude American prosperity with prohibition to the alternative presented by the wine lands of the world.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

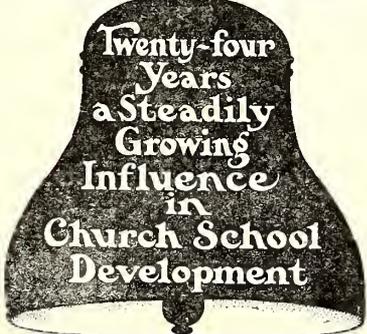

When the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church recently celebrated its sixtieth anniversary, President Hoover sent a message expressing his high appreciation of the work of the missionary. In a letter to Mrs. William F. McDowell, one of the officers of the society, Mr. Hoover said:

"I have had occasion over many years to witness the actual labors in the field of the American missionary societies, and have come to have the highest regard for their self-sacrifice and their single-minded devotion. I wish for their continued activity and success."

Another convincing testimony to the service of the missionary is that of Dr. Frederick P. Keppel, president of the Carnegie Corporation. After an extensive and first-hand examination of present conditions in British Africa, he says:

"I must begin by confessing that I had entirely underestimated the importance of Christian missions as a factor in the development of peoples of low cultural level. . . . My impressions of what I saw may be summarized as follows: first and foremost is the earnestness and devotion of the individual missionary. I do not recall a single incident of service which I would call perfunctory. Secondly, I would place the high quality of results obtained in view of the limitations existing."

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE

One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

GOD'S FAITH IN MAN.

"To them gave He power to become 'sons of God.'"

The Church has a great deal to say about the necessity of our having faith in God. I wonder that comparatively little is heard of the less renowned, though no less important, doctrine of "God's faith in man."

The gospel of John teaches that "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God"; and the life of Jesus reveals that He had a confidence in men and women which was so implicit that it inspired in them the belief that they could become the children of God.

The great faith of Jesus in mankind is quaintly expressed in the words of the negro spiritual, "All God's Chillun Got Wings." The record is that even hopelessly broken men and women so caught the faith which Jesus had in them that they "got wings" on which they might rise to divine sonship. John Wesley records in his "journal" that he preached, on the text just quoted, to a group of poor and sin-stricken people; and he adds the note, "They seemed greatly encouraged." Small wonder!

Clement of Alexandria interpreted salvation to mean a life brought into harmony with God. He explained that God became man in Christ, that man might become like God. That was in the second century. This doctrine of salvation has not been uniformly accepted by the Church, possibly because "becoming like God" has been thought too ambitious an ideal; nevertheless, the idea has run like a great subterranean stream down the course of Christian history, has warmed the coldest hearts and has provided an impetus to right living for those whom the most of us would have declared to be "hopelessly lost."

Prayer.—Enlighten us, Holy Father, by Thy Spirit, that we may understand Thy way, that we may be moved to a sincere knowledge of sin, that we may seek Thy face, be true to Thy faith in us, and be justified in faith. Amen.

TUESDAY.

FORGIVE ME.

One of the many problems in child-training I have never been able to solve is this matter of the apology. When I had only Primus to wrestle with, I thought his hatred of saying "I'm sorry" was temperamental and peculiar to him. But as Secunda and Tertia have come along, have left the charm of babyhood behind them, I find them quite as stubborn as Primus. They loathe to admit they have been wrong. My theory is this: Secunda, we'll say, has been impudent. I punish her by putting her in covery from the time she gets home from school until the following morning. Then I want her to feel sorry and ashamed and to tell me so. Does she do it? Not Secunda! Secunda feels that she is a martyr and that when she is dead I'll look back and regret my harsh treatment of her. Secunda finds me picky and far too strict about unimportant things.

What shall I do about it? When the three were very small, the punishment did not end until they had convinced me that they were sorry. But Secunda is old enough now to have learned that it not be punishment that forces lip-deep apologies. She is old enough to realize that only in truly humbling one's self does one show true conditions.

Living in harmony with one's fellows is a most difficult art. The human being who has learned to feel and express quick sorrow at another's hurt without regard to whose was the actual fault, has solved one of the most difficult problems of social adjustment. How shall I teach this to Secunda?—H. W. M.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, all that we are we owe Thee; make us what Christ was, in love and charity toward the faults of others and for going in th's transpasses. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

Lesson: Psa. 103:1-22.

John Burroughs once said, during later years of his life, that every time he took a couple of people into the woods he felt strongly that all mankind were divided into two classes. The classifications of men which really mattered, he said, were not these dividing them into Republicans and Democrats, young and old, or men and women. The only significant division into classes was the quick and the dead. By the quick, he meant those who had sensitiveness, those who could really see what they were looking at, those who had antennae by which they could reach out and grasp the meaning of the world. The others were the dead—these whose senses and imagination were dulled.

There is no quality which is more of a life-preserver to the moral and spiritual nature than that of thankfulness. The person who is keenly aware of his blessings and who renders thanks to God for them, has brought a force into his life which keeps it fresh. The person who goes through life taking things for granted, never humbled by a keen realization of what he has received as an unearned gift, is a dull scholar in the school of life.

The psalms which forms our Scripture lesson today pictures a great awakening of soul in the presence of the mercies of God. The expression of such a feeling made into a habit will save us from the deadening habit of just taking things for granted. When we do that we never notice when a fine and beautiful thing has been done for us. We get out of the habit of noticing fine and beautiful things. We become dull to the acts of kindness and affection about us.

Prayer.—O praise the Lord, all ye nations; praise Him, all ye people, for His merciful kindness is great toward us, and the truth of the Lord endureth forever. Praise ye the Lord. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE WASTE OF LIFE.

"We are bound to give thanks to God always for you, brethren."—Thess. 1:3.

Charles William Eliot, who was president of Harvard University and who knew thousands of students in very intimate relationship, used to say that "the most effective appeal I could use to draw men back from a start on a life of dissipation was to bring out how much their parents and families had done for them. What a disappointment it would be if they wasted their lives!" In other words, it was an appeal to the motive of reverent gratitude. Without this habit of thankfulness, we have lost one of the strongest helps we might have.

One beauty of the habit of thankfulness is that by being thankful we find more to be thankful for. We do not take things for granted. We discover that there are more benefits and blessings in our lives than we have ever realized. A person who is looking for different varieties of birds finds them where the ordinary passer-by does not see them at all. It is just the same with our blessings.

The truest kind of patriotism has a large element of thankfulness in it. The yearly observance of Thanksgiving Day links these two great emotions together. The same is true of our religious life. The apostle Paul gave the strongest motive for righteous living when he exclaimed, "Thanks be to God for His unspeakable gift." We have Christ to be thankful for.

When a person finds it hard to make his religion real; very often one reason is that this element of thankfulness is lacking in his daily life.

There is no surer way to cultivate thankfulness than to make a daily practice of it. If you have not been in the habit of thinking what you should be thankful for, it would be worth while to sit down and write out a list of what you think are the real gifts and blessings of your life. That list will grow immeasurably from day to day if you really think about it.

Thankfulness grows by expressing it, just as love does. The thankfulness that is unexpressed soon withers and dies. A sure way of cultivating a habit of thankfulness is to look for the beauties and benefits in your life.

FRIDAY.

SELF-MADE FOLKS.

"Were there not ten cleansed, but where are the nine?"—Luke 17:17.

"Self-made folks!" Are there any? We all stand on the shoulders of those who have gone before us, who have given of themselves, that we might be something more than we are. It is conceit for one to think that he is self-made, and thankfulness will save one from that peril. He who is conscious of how much folks really do for him, and how much less he would have been if he had not had the support of friends will never fall into the foolishness of thinking he is self-made.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, give us the wisdom to know the help others give us. The blessings of Christ and what He does for us, and be thankful. Amen.

SATURDAY.

GOD CARES.

"Cast all your cares upon Him, because He careth for you."—1 Peter 5:7.

The sun makes fields green by shining upon each individual blade of corn. The death of the stalk is no evidence that the sun did not care for it.

The idea that God does not care is based upon the many conceptions of an individual God. To fall in the fire, or suffer death accidentally otherwise, is no evidence that God does not care. If God made fire to burn at sometimes and not at others, what use would be fire? If we wish special provision for our own convenience, that is childish.

Our week's reflections should bring us to a careful examination of all the things outside of us which have contributed to our well being and realize God's hand and helpfulness.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, teach us how to spread abroad the perfume of Thy name and Thy love for us. Enable us to realize Thy blessings and look upward and see what others do not see, that Thy children's hearts belong to the invisible world, and that they follow better laws than those of unbelief. Amen.

The First Congregational-Christian Merger

Very Important--Very Plain

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES:

DEAR FELLOW-CHRISTIANS,—I know how to appeal to Congregationalists for funds for Christian purposes. I have been doing it for over forty years, and have secured for various purposes between one and two million dollars, more than a million of which has been for Piedmont College; and I am now appealing for two million more for the same.

But I am new to the Christian Churches. I take it for granted, however, that the same motives that move Congregational Christians, move you—our present national merger pre-supposes this. If this supposition is true, the response to this page and my letters is sure, for I am making an appeal for your own institution, fully and officially approved by your Southern Convention, which is not only worthy of your support, but must have it or die.

I Must make the Facts Very Plain

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, Ala., was organized to meet a great need and to do a great service for your Churches and, in their name, for our Country and for the Kingdom of God. You have there a great field, a fine location, and a valuable property. Your Administration Building is a noble structure, but unfinished and unheated. Your fine Girls' Dormitory is only partially ready for use. You have a campus of over forty acres, and a property worth $100,000; but nothing fully ready for use. It will take $10,000 more to make available the $100,000 worth you already have; and more to give the equipment required for a Standard Junior College.

Surely, you do not want to lose this great beginning for want of the necessary finishing! But I must tell you plainly that losing it is certain, unless vigorous and speedy steps are taken to save it. Dr. Beougher and the local Trustees have done splendidly, but they have reached the end of their rope. Other help must come, or this Institution will soon be a thing of the past.

The Situation Briefly Stated

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing; not because its work and scholarship were not good, but because a Junior College cannot have independent recognition without a finished campus and the income of $200,000 endowment. Without scholastic standing, a Junior College cannot have students, as they cannot go on for their Junior and Senior years in a standard four-year College. BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing, and could not go on. It would have no students.

President Beougher then came to me, as President of Piedmont College, to help BETHLEHEM out of impending failure. An educational merger was then made by the two Colleges, so that the four-year College could stand for and give credits for the Junior College. No financial merger was made or is in contemplation. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE is still owned and controlled by the Christian Church. Its Trustees, of their own initiative, changed its name to "THE PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE" to enable the Senior College more securely to vouch for its credits. As a result, the enrollment of the Junior College has not only been retained, but increased.

But the campus is not finished, the buildings are not ready for use, and the scholastic standing cannot be long maintained by the present method alone.

The Trustees have asked me to find the money for finishing the buildings, equipping them, and meeting other pressing needs. I cannot go to Congregationalists for this, as I am asking them for two million dollars for Piedmont Senior College, and am pressing them hard. It must come from the members of the Christian Churches—or the Junior College must close.

I have nothing to gain personally. I am donating my services and advancing expense money, because I am deeply interested in our great merger of Churches and I want to see PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, saved for the great field it occupies and the great need it supplies. The South needs education far beyond any opportunities it has.

Please send your checks quickly to President Beougher, at Wadley, Ala., or to me at Demorest, Ga., made out to PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, and they will be turned over to the Treasurer as soon as record can be made. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE cannot wait long.

Yours fraternally and sincerely,

FRANK E. JENKINS

PRESIDENT BOARD OF TRUSTEES, PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, Wadley, Ala.

PRESIDENT PIEDMONT COLLEGE, Demorest, Ga.

The above will appear in two or three more issues of The Sun, so that every member of the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention may be sure to read it.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

When you read this letter you will probably have had your Thanksgiving dinner, attended Thanksgiving service, and made your Thanksgiving offering. At this Thanksgiving season, all the orphanages as well as the Christian Orphanage are making strong appeals for a generous offering because the demands for the year have been more than usual and the needs are greater than ever before. If all of us will look back over the year and count our blessings one by one we will really be suprised what a number we would have. God is good to us all. I sometimes wonder if we are really appreciative for His many blessings, and show our appreciation by the deeds we do, or will we count our many blessings all our own and use them for ourselves? or will we think of those who are unfortunate and have but few blessings and divide our blessings with them?

When we count our blessings one by one, then let's count the number of times we have been a blessing to others during the year. I dare say we would feel ashamed of the little we have done.

The North Carolina Orphan Association is asking for just one day's income during the year from each individual—one day's salary out of the 365 days. This applies to Virginia, Georgia and Alabama, too, so far as the Christian Orphanage is concerned. How many will do this? If all would, the Thanksgiving offering would push us up to our goal. We are hoping and praying to reach our goal through this offering, and if all our Churches will do their part, I feel sure we can.

When we made our report for November we had reached $17,159. This leaves us $12,841 to raise during the month of December.

Now, let every Church do its best to make a splendid offering for the Christian Orphanage and push it up to its goal. Let each individual ask himself or herself two questions, "What have I done this year for the support of the 120 children in the Christian Orphanage?" Then let us do our duty.

GENERAL CONVENTION ACTIONS.

Franklinton Christian College was given the privilege of asking for a Christmas offering this year through the home mission office.

The Convention unanimously approved a plan of union for the National Council of Congregational Churches and the General Convention of the Christian Church, and amended the constitution and by-laws to conform to the plan of union.

The Jubilee Year celebration was continued beyond Easter to Pentecost, 1930.

The next sessions of the General Convention and the National Council will be held together in 1931. The time and place will be determined by the Executive Committee of the merged body—the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches. The term of office of the present officials of the General Convention was extended to the time of the 1931 meeting. The General Board and the Executive Committee of the General Convention were authorized to adjust administrative measures and personnel.

The General Board of the Christian Church will meet in regular annual session in Dayton, Ohio, beginning Monday evening, December 9th. This meeting will be an important one, as there will be many matters relating to the union to be considered in addition to the full promotion of our own regular work.

A committee consisting of F. G. Coffin, D. B. Atkinson, W. P. Minton, A. W. Sparks, H. E. Sims, and W. A. Harper was appointed to act with a similar committee from the National Council of Congregational Churches to prepare a constitution and by-laws and a working plan for the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches.

The Convention budget plan was heartily endorsed, and all Churches were asked to adopt it without delay, and all conference officers were urged to plan at once to faithfully promote it in all the Churches.

The following personnel from the Christian Church was duly elected to serve as officers in the new body—the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches—in harmony with the adopted plan of union:

Members of the Executive Committee of the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches: Rev. E. G. Coffin, D. S. Atkinson, Warren H. Denison, Mr. J. Lewis Reck.

Members of Prudential Committee of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions: Revs. W. G. Sargent, Frank H. Peters, J. O. Atkinson, Mrs. Alice V. Morrill.

Directors of the Congregational Home Boards: Revs. W. H. Hainer, H. Shelton Smith, L. E. Smith, Mrs. Athella M. Howsare.

Administrative Committee or Congregational Church Extension Boards: Mrs. T. G. Robinson, Rev. W. H. Hainer (director).

Administrative Committee of Congregational Education Society and Publishing Society: Rev. H. M. Hainer, Rev. H. Shelton Smith (director).

Foundation for education: Presidents W. A. Harper and A. G. Caris.

Administrative Committee of Congregational Board of Ministerial Relief: Rev. L. E. Smith (director).

Administrative Committee of American Missionary Association: Rev. Omer B. Thomas.

Member-at-large of Commission of Missions: Rev. Raymond G. Clark.

Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life of the General Council: Revs. R. C. Helfenstein, McD. Howsare, H. S. Hardcastle.

SUNDAY.GOD AND OUR DESIRES.

"And He gave them their desires."—Psa. 78:29.

Desire is the measure of a man. It is the basis of achievement. But there may be a tragedy in getting what we want. Adam desired the fruit, but that desire was based in disobedience. You know the result. Esau desired a mess of pottage and lost his birthright, and so forth. Wishing, of all employments, is the worst when untempered with reason and sound sense, and when out of harmony with God's will. It is philosophy's reverse and health's decay. There is no more outstanding biblical example than the story of the prodigal son, which indeed is applicable with our present generation of inordinate desires.

How different from the spirit of the shepherd boy tending his flock, singing all the time. The king passing by, asked him why he was so merry. He replied: "The day is beautiful, the flowers are pretty, the air is balmy, and I feel fine." I am rich as a king."

In this fretful, feverish, bustling and hustling age, we are prone to forget our blessings and say, like the brother of the prodigal son, "Thou gavest me no kid."

Desire is natural, yea, hungerings and cravings, but to find enduring satisfaction, they are to be trained after "righteousness." Then "they shall be filled."

Prayer.—O Lord Jesus, Thou art our king, and our desires are far from promoting always Thy honor. Give unto us to understand what is good, what is Thy will, and search us and empower us until we shall make this life one of peace and joy. Amen.

OBITUARIES.

BROWN.

John Henry Brown, age sixty years, died at his home, near Reidsville, November 18, 1929. He was married to Le Dora Brannock December 16, 1900. Mrs. Brown and two children died about fifteen years ago. Five children, one sister, three brothers and a number of other relatives survive Bro. Brown.

Burial service for deceased was conducted from Apples Chapel November 19th by Rev. R. A. Whitten, Rev. J. H. Dollar and Rev. William Stadler. Burial was in the Church cemetery. He was a devoted father, a noble friend, and a Christian gentleman; a member of Apples Church from boyhood days, remaining loyal till death.

R. A. WHITTEN.

SWANN.

Bro. Grover Swann was born July 24, 1888, and died August, 1929. He was 41 years old and leaves to mourn his going his widow and three boys. For seventeen years he had been a loyal member of the Christian Church. At the time of his death he was a member of Lowell Christian Church, Roanoke, Ala. His faith in his Saviour was humble and genuine, expressing itself in good deeds. His life was beautiful, his example an inspiration. In his own gentle way he exerted a lasting influence in his community and in his home. It was in his home that he rendered his greatest service.

He was a worker with God. His death was unexpected, being electrocuted while repairing a loom at the W. A. Handley Manufacturing Company, where he was an employee. He was a true husband, a devoted father, an humble Christian, and a loyal friend, and has now entered into the joy of his Lord. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. D. Dollar, of Lanette, Ala.

WHEN IS HOME WORK MISSIONARY?—

We are well aware of the fact that the terms home missions and foreign missions denote an arbitrary distinction. There is no such distinction drawn in the New Testament. There was evidently no such distinction in the mind of Jesus, or some evidence of it would be found in His teachings. It was all a work of carrying the gospel to those who did not have it and of helping to establish the kingdom of heaven here upon earth.

But today we have the curious anomaly of people who profess to believe in home missions, but who declare that they do not believe in foreign missions. There can be but two reasons for such a position—either such individuals do not believe in the all-inclusive love of God, or they have been confusing the desire to spread their own denominational bounds with the spirit of missionary zeal. Many denominational enterprises that go under the name of home mission work are nothing but competing and rival organizations of Churches that are already established upon the field.

Such Churches are monuments to the selfishness and folly of denominational pride. In so far as we know, there has never been any denomination which claimed that the communities that were ministered to by Churches of its own faith were better communities than those which were served by Churches of other denominational connections. No matter how thoroughly we may be convinced that our own people are better than any others, we would hardly dare make such a claim. We would most certainly not care to hear such a claim debated. There are some of our folks to whom we could point with pride; and there are others that we would prefer not to have discussed.

If, then, the Churches of our own denomination do not produce members who are, beyond question, superior to members of other denominations, then there can be no excuse for the establishing of new Churches that will compete with Churches already established, save that such new Churches shall serve to extend our own denominational boundaries.

The time has come when kingdom interests should be placed ahead of denominational ambitions. Before any denomination should consider the establishing of a new Church in a field that is already occupied, they should secure the impartial judgment of other religious workers that there is a real kingdom need for another Church in that field. This is no utopian ideal. There are already many Church leaders who are acting up to this high and unselfish ideal. A few years ago this writer was told by a minister of another denomination that his own Church had considered establishing a mission work in a section of the town where there was a Church of our own connection; but had decided not to do so lest they interfere with the work already established. This wisdom of their decision has been justified in the fact that the particular Christian Church of that town has just closed a year of extraordinary growth and expansion. It is greatly to be deplored that every one has not caught such an unselfish ideal. There are still those who do not hesitate to further their own denominational interests at the expense of others; and to divide communities and implant a spirit of competition, where only brotherly love should reign.

JUDGMENTS FROM A DISTANCE.—

There is no finer or more hopeful fact in connection with the modern course of Christian development than that an effort is being made to apply the teachings of Christ to the relationships which maintain in the fields of industry and commerce. Christianity has not reached its perfect development until it has touched and transformed every realm, phase, and relationship of life. Every honest effort to think out and state the applications of Christianity to the complicated relationships of these modern times, is to be eagerly welcomed.

But the effort to apply the principles of the social gospel has recently taken certain turns that are to be deplored. We refer to the way in which certain religious leaders are manifesting what seems to be almost an eagerness to seize upon the actions of others and pronounce them un-Christian. Some weeks ago the rector of an Episcopal Church in one of our large northern cities, after consultation with the officials of his Church, made the announcement that his Church did not wish to encourage colored people in affiliating themselves with this particular Church. As soon as the announcement was made, a storm of discussion and protest was launched. The action was denounced as being un-Christian, as actuated by race prejudice, and as being inimical to the spread and development of the kingdom. So much was said and written, that one cannot be quite sure that the true motive of the action has been discovered. It appears, however, that the rector was moved by the consideration that the cultured and educated members of the colored race could render a larger service to the kingdom by connecting themselves with and becoming leaders in the colored Churches of the city, rather than in a sense losing themselves in the white Churches that were blessed with educated and competent leaders already. No one could possibly pronounce just judgment upon the action until the motives that prompted it were clearly understood. But how few of the self-appointed judges waited for such an understanding?

Another instance of the sort of thing we are discussing is to be found in what has been said and written about the trouble that has occurred in Marion and in other textile centers of the South. From what has been written, one who was unacquainted with the South would get the idea that the Churches of the South have either sold their souls to the cotton-mill owners or are so devoid of all Christian emotions of sympathy, justice and interest in the welfare of humanity that they do not care what happens.

The editor of the Christian Century, writing under the heading, "Saving the Honor of the Church," likens Mr. James Myers, representative of the Federal Council of Churches, to the "thin red line" that saved the world on the European battlefields during the World War. The opening paragraph concludes with this sentence: "If it had not been for James Myers (and also, for a time, William B. Spofford, of the Church League for Industrial Democracy), who went to Charlotte and Marion to be of service in the name of the Church, the forces of organized religion would have to confess to an amazing indifference when confronted by the most acute industrial conflict of the year." The editorial concludes with this sentence: "We would only say that if, in North Carolina, the alienation of labor from the Church is less than some have thought, it is due almost entirely to a few brave and far-seeing souls like Mr. Myers who have constituted our 'thin red line,' saving the honor of the Church."

If it be granted that the only way for the Church to manifest its interest in industrial strife be by passing resolutions or taking some action that will be accounted by the secular press as worthy of screaming headlines, then the editor is perfectly correct in his contention that Mr. Myers and Mr. Spofford saved the honor of the Church. To assume that the Churches of the South are entirely indifferent to riot and bloodshed and strife is to be far beside the mark. That the Churches have not rushed into the foreground with denunciations of the principals involved in the conflicts and with suggestions as to how all the difficulties may be smoothed away, is due to the fact that they know how far-reaching are the questions involved, how complicated are the problems to be dealt with; and not to the fact that they are totally indifferent to the distressing situation. There be some in the South who believe that labor's friendliness toward and confidence in the Church is due to the fact that labor knows that the Church is trying to do more than deal with conditions that appear on the surface; and to the fact that the Church is undertaking to bring about changes more far-reaching than ever the most talented official, coming from another section of the country, could possibly accomplish in a three weeks' sojourn.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Congregational Churches, through the American Missionary Association, supports regularly twenty-three schools for negroes in the Southern States, several schools formerly under the care of the American Board having become self-supporting.

All of the Conferences have been over for some time, yet we have received minutes from but three secretaries. "The Annual" cannot be printed until the last secretary sends in the minutes of his Conference. Ask your secretary if he is helping to delay "The Annual."

Rev. J. F. Morgan, Berkley, Va., who has tithed since 1910, writes, "We have been reading and studying about stewardship for some time, but it will be of little avail unless we put it in practice December 15th by enlisting as tithers, which will bring a new joy into our hearts."

Rev. G. D. Hunt, general secretary of Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Christian Conferences, is enjoying his work in the two Conferences immensely and is meeting with a hearty welcome and response from every Church thus far visited. Bro. Hunt is seeking to put on the whole program of the Church and to push every enterprise of the two Conferences.

On last Sunday evening a sacred concert was given by the vocal class of Mrs. Grace Cosby Hudgings, in the Shrine Mosque auditorium, at Richmond, Va. The class was assisted by the thirty-five-piece Sunday School orchestra of our Richmond Church, which is under the direction of Mr. Ernest G. Carr. Mr. Shepherd Webb, of the First Baptist Church, was accompanist for the vocal numbers. Over 3,500 people were in attendance, and the concert was a decided success.

If any one did not remember our Christian Orphanage on Thanksgiving Day, it is not too late. This is the season when our minds and hearts should be open to this charity and benevolence, and while the Churches are taking and sending in their annual offering to the orphanage, many individuals who were not at their Church on the day of the offering may make glad Superintendent Johnston's heart by sending direct to him an offering to help care for the children in his charge.

Rev. D. M. Spence, who recently took charge of our Ocean View Church, writes: "We are having cottage prayer meetings preparatory to a revival next week. We have some fine people to work with here, and many are eager to see the work move forward. The attendance is increasing at each service, and the people are looking forward in earnest prayer for a revival which is to begin, the Lord willing, Sunday, December 1st. We have been real busy since arriving on the work here, and we are happy in the work and feel that God is blessing our efforts in His name here."

It is learned with sorrow and regret that Bro. D. J. Sipe, News Ferry, Va., member of our Pleasant Grove Church, passed from earth Saturday morning, November 30th, after an illness lasting several weeks. Bro. Sipe was a brother of the late Mrs. P. H. Fleming, of Burlington, N. C., and of Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, of New Jersey; was a graduate of Elon College and had been active and prominent in business circles for some years. The funeral was conducted by the pastor, Dr. W. C. Wicker, from Pleasant Grove Church, Sunday, December 1st. He was a well-known and much-beloved man; yet in the prime of life, he was stricken down. He leaves a wife, who before marriage was Miss Lizzie Pierce, to mourn his going away. We extend to her and all who mourn our deep and sincere sympathy.

The Woman's Board of the North Carolina Conference, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, president; Mrs. W. R. Sellars, treasurer, met in the Burlington Christian Church on November 29th and spent the day in planning the work for the societies as laid out and directed by the annual session of the body. Herein again these women show the men, and all of us, how a great task in Church work may be achieved. We meet in our annual Conferences, we men and the Churches do, and pass our resolutions and make high and noble resolves, and then go home. The women meet in annual session and adopt their resolutions and make their high resolves, too, as they pertain to the work of the year; and then soon after their annual sessions adjourn, their board, corresponding to the executive committee of a Conference, meets and spends the day in laying plans to carry out and to execute the resolutions and the program made by their annual sessions. It is a great and a good way to do things, and this explains, in a measure, how it happens that our women accomplish so much, because they not only lay their plans, but they go about working those plans after they are laid.

One of our pastors who preaches sacrificial giving and whose people practice it, too, explains the secret of it by saying confidentially: "I myself fast each Sabbath Day, taking the money I would spend on food and giving it to missions. While this is not much, and is not related even to you confidentially as a matter to glory in, to me it is a real opportunity to engage in self-denial and to help me in pointing my people toward self-denial and at the same time affords me the consciousness that the bread represented in the gift can be translated into the 'Bread of Life' to some herat-weary soul. Then, too, there is a kind of devil possession of which Jesus said, 'This kind cometh forth by nothing but by prayer and fasting,' and today we see evidences as possibly never before, perhaps, of the kind of devil possession which our Lord confronted and of which He spake. Moreover, fasting is a splendid hygienic process, adopted in many sanatoriums as a primary method in the treatment of many ailments." At any rate, our brother gets a joy out of his own discipline and a joy which enables him to bring his people to the practice of self-sacrifice.

The women of the Missionary Society of Elon College put on a striking and beautiful thank-offering program in the Christian Education Building on the evening of November 26th. Mrs. Ross Ensminger was in charge and gave the welcome, which revealed the spirit that should obtain at Thanksgiving time. Mrs. J. H. Hornaday and Mrs. J. P. Barrett gave antiphonal readings that were impressive and quite fitting. Mrs. R. B. Tower told the story, in her own language and manner, of the prodigal son, and revealed to her audience from that story the impressive and age-old fact that, however far away the children of our Father may wander, He still loves them. Mesdames C. M. Cannon, H. D. Lambeth and O. W. Johnson were the principals in a pageant, "Boxes," one representing a candy box, the other a flower box, another the mission box, Mrs. Cannon showing that the mission box was very small in comparison with other boxes, and that even the Christian world spent far more for candy and flowers than it gave to carry the gospel to a needy world. Mrs. W. A. Harper gave a most excellent report of the Woman's Conference at the Piqua, Ohio, General Convention in October, and made all who heard her regret that they themselves were not fortunate enough to be at that great epoch-making and Spirit-filled Convention. This was followed by a delightful offering service, and a thankoffering was taken in keeping with the custom and counsel of the Woman's Board. A liberal donation was received, and the occasion was, in all respects, a happy one.

Rev. J. Lee Johnson, writing the editor a personal line, tells of an automobile accident on Saturday evening near Varina, N. C., in which Mrs. Ammie Judd and sister, Miss Dora Ballantine, with their brother, Mr. Lennie Ballentine, were more or less injured, Miss Dora receiving a broken arm, from the effect of which and from the shock and nervous strain she died on November 25th and was buried in Wake Chapel Cemetery November 26th. This one paragraph of praise and appreciation of the life of Miss Dora Ballentine shall be written here. Afflicted from youth, bent and deformed, this frail body carried through more than three-score years a beautiful soul and a radiant spirit. Every preacher who for many, many years has visited and preached from the pulpit of Wake Chapel Church saw the beaming, upturned face of this fragile form, and this faithful soul, sitting there bending and crumpled on her seat, listening, her mind alert and active, her soul awake and inspiring to the message of eternal life and of everlasting love. She loved the home and the worship of her God. Quiet, gentle, unassuming, devoted to righteousness and the Church with a passion and an ardor that could not be measured nor checked, she walked through this life reflecting a radiance of soul that her bent body could not express, and a charm of spirit that her frail form could not conceal. This writer has seen roses of unspeakable fragrance and bloom, even on a broken stem, and he has plucked luscious fruit from a limb that was withered, worn and torn. And these marks of inner life, in the material world, have their counterpart in the world of spirits around about us. The heart and the soul of Miss Dora Ballentine, of Wake Chapel community and Church, was the type of which these are the symbol. A heart of less magnitude, a soul of less richness, would have withdrawn from the world and would seldom have found resort and refuge in the Church and at the house of God. Not so with Miss Dora. With her the house of God was the place of joy and gladness, and the people of God were her friends and associates, and the worship of God was her solace and her joy. If this writer had a wreath of flowers of special fragrance and beauty, he would lay that wreath on the tomb that marks the last resting-place of that deformed, frail and decrepit body which through many long and tedious years was the house and the home of a soul that was born of God, and a spirit that walked with God, and was beautiful in defiance of deformity and disease and decrepitude.

POUNDED.

Pounded—or rather "loaded and dollared" is a better term for what happened to this pastor on his last visit to Apple's Chapel, November 10, 1929. The Ford was thoroughly and completely loaded with such things as flour, meat, sugar, coffee, syrup, honey, canned fruits, preserves, sausage, lard, and many other good things suitable for home use. Besides all of these good things, there was tied to the steering wheel and switch and handed to the driver thirty dollars in cash.

We extend our heartfelt thanks to these good people for these and many other kindnesses shown us during the five years as pastor.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

THE MEANING OF WORSHIP.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

"God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit."—Jno. 4:24.

We are frequently reminded of the truth which Joseph Anderson so well states that a "man always worships something; always sees the infinite shadowed forth in something finite; and indeed can and must so see it in finite things once he is tempted well to fix his eyes thereon." We are also certain that Emerson is right in his statement that "worship stands in certain relations to the health of a man, and to his highest powers, so as to be in some manner the source of intellect." In this connection, Hammerton says that "symbols will pass away, temples of stone will pass away, but that which will endure forever is worship in spirit and truth. . . . In the world, there is neither temple nor tabernacle so dear to Him as the soul of a just man."

Notwithstanding these assurances, we find that a great many people stay away from the worship of God for the same reasons which have been assigned through the ages and poetically expressed by Crabbe:

"That from your meetings I refrain, is true;
I meet with nothing pleasant, nothing new.
But the same proofs, that not one text explains,
And the same lights where all things dark remain."

It is the purpose of this sermon to declare the nature of worship and to point some of the glaring faults in worshiping.

Definition: Let us consider first the definition. We are told that the word worship comes from the Anglo-Saxon derivation "to acknowledge the worth of." In the beginning it was used as a term to express a service rendered to another person in recognition of his superiority. It is still used that way, and may be applied to things as well as persons. When it comes to a matter of divine worship, it means anything that we do toward God as an evidence of our deliberate acknowledgment of not only His superiority to us, but of His divinity in us.

With this in mind, it may not be hard to see some of the things that may be wrong with our worship.

Faults of Worship.

The first fault, then, that we see in our worship lies in the reasons given for going to worship, and there are almost as many reasons as there are persons. It lies basically in what one goes to Church for. Many will say, "I don't go because I don't feel like it." Whenever one refrains from the act of worship of God because he "does not feel like it," he indicates that his chief concern is his feelings, and not his devotional practice. It is to be acknowledged that satisfactory worship does impart satisfactory feelings, and if satisfactory worship cannot be had, then there cannot be satisfactory feelings; but in this connection it is to be remembered that feelings are only incidental and often accidental. That being so, we are to let common sense and reasoning and love for God control our action rather than our moods. The fact is that there is a central idea in the act of worship which gives contact with God and with eternal realities, whether we feel like it or not. We are to bear in mind that worship is not to give thrills to worshippers, but it is an experience of the worshiper in expressing his love and his loyalty to God.

There are others who say, "I do not go to Church because I do not get anything out of it." Such an excuse rarely reflects upon one's religious intelligence. To go to Church merely to get something out of it is the wrong approach, and such a worshiper is insulated against the reception of the very thing he seeks. He is in the position of Sam Jones' Texas steer. It is said that in Texas they have automatic watering-places for cattle. The idea is that the cattle walk upon a platform which is connected with the valve. This presses the valve and the trough is filled and they drink. We are told that occasionally some old steer would rather have his own idea about it, and comes up on the off side. Of course, the valve is not pressed and there is no water. He goes away saying that there is no water. Self-willed Christians are much in the same position in worshiping God. They come rather in the worship of self to get something. In their critical attitude they get nothing, and they go away and say that there is no worship. To go to Church and find God and worship Him is the true idea, and he who does not has failed in his worship and the Church has also failed to reveal God to that one.

Worship in Divine Contact.

How many of us realize this contact? I expect it would be heart-breaking to hear the answer. Now, we make contact with God quite like we make contact with any other person. First of all, we must believe that God is there. We are not apt to pay much attention to some one who is not present with us. A man does not sit down in his room at a hotel in Europe and stroke the hair of his wife and embrace her who is four thousand miles away. According to the way many people sit bolt upright during prayers, or bow and whisper to one another concerning things, it would appear that they have no sense of the presence of God. There are others who are reverent, but who regard their attendance at Church as a satisfactory part of being good, and they evince no vital contact with God. They feel that there is nothing to it. So long as these ideas exist and the many others which might be mentioned, there is no real worship. The effort is unsatisfactory and finally lapses into indifference and non-attendance. It takes a belief and a faith in the presence of God in the holy place and in the worship to interest us and call forth our adoration.

There may be reasons to believe that God is not there, at times. If the Church can offer nothing but chatty friendly groups, sitting in comfortable pews, or going to picnics, etc., it is no wonder that others find nothing there. But when the people of the Church are found in prayer, and when it is known that their daily living is a witness of that presence, when it is known that the rich and poor alike meet there and forget their differences and their inequalities before God, then worship means something, and others may go there and find that presence of God for them as well. The greatest problem of the Church today, yea, its greatest challenge, is to present God through Jesus Christ the Lord in a way that others will take knowledge that Jesus is there.

Whatever our differences may be, we are compelled to admire some phases of the worship of the Catholic Church. Their reverent attention from the time they enter the sanctuary until they leave it is centered on the altar and the priest who stands there to represent Christ. Nothing is said or done in the entire service to attract any one's attention from that idea. In the altar, in the images, in the Word, in the surpluses worn by the priest, in the sacrament—God is there; and these things are concepts and symbols for seeing Him. They have developed a highly cultivated art of imaging the presence of God by physical media which transmits to them their spiritual perceptions.

We believe that God is just as much there in Protestant devotions. He is in the sanctuary, in the preacher, in the Word, in the truth, in the prayers, in the instruction, in the altar, in the singing, etc., as much as He is in the Catholic sanctuary. In the Protestant sanctuary it is the altar of the heart, and it is the temple not made with hands where the invisible presence dwells. It may be a highly cultivated art to image the presence of God by physical media, but it is a higher art still to be able to image God in the soul through Jesus Christ without the physical concept, and an art as easily acquired as the other. It is the challenge of the Church today to see that God is so represented. We may build Churches as fine as we may; we may beautify them with the world's finest of arts; the services may be charming with form and music, but unless the heart of these things is perfect with the presence of God it is but a shell that surrounds a rattling kernel. There may be art there, but there is no worship.

The whole Church and the act of attendance at Church is the world's devotional aspect of God, and it is this aspect that the believing soul is invited into. We must get out of the indifferent attitude, we must forget the form of standing merely because others stand, we must know that it is hard to worship sitting bolt upright at prayers, and that such an attitude keeps others from worshiping; we must know that bowing even merely for reverence sake (though better than no worship at all) is not taking hold of the heart of God. Worship is visualizing the presence of God and bowing the soul before the presence in communion with Him. The value of worship to any individual is in proportion to one's ability to do this. John told the world to "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." That is the call of worship unto us. When we realize that our sins are taken away by Him and we can become like Him, it is believed that we will have a sufficient urge to worship Him in spirit and in truth and to live a holy life.

The Great Result.

When humanity realizes that the worship of God improves the quality of soul in relation to life; when it realizes that the man who worships God is better than an atheist—then we believe that humanity will be turning toward God. A man who worships stone is better than a man who worships nothing. One who worships beasts of the field is of a grander nature than one who never bows his head in prayer and never lifts his heart in inspiration and desire. It is impossible to worship, however ignorantly, without being better for the worship, widened in outlook, led away from self-distrust, and taught to depend upon the higher power whose estimation is better than his own.

So placed before God, the rich and poor alike may say, "Father, this is your Church, a place of refuge for me, where I can forget myself and all others for a time and realize that I am only a little soul, but I am dreadfully glad that you know it and treat me that way. It is restful to me to play my thoughts with your thoughts and to contemplate all you are to the world and me.

"Father, just as I am without one plea, I bring

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CHURCH HAS ONE TASK ALONE.

While the Church lends a helping hand in many directions, it has one task which it alone must accomplish, or it will be a task undone. This task is that of preaching the gospel of the Son of God to those who haven't that gospel. When our Lord Christ gave the great commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach," He seems to have entrusted that stupendous task to the Church alone, of all institutions or enterprises on earth. When the Church undertakes a task of benevolence and philanthropy, it finds allies and helpers in orders, lodges, fraternities around about. The various fraternal orders and agencies lend themselves readily to the benevolent task of caring for the helpless and the needy, the poor and the distressed. When the Church undertakes to educate its youth, it will find allies and co-workers in the State and in the generosity of philanthropists. When the Church undertakes to publish journals and books of human uplift and progress, it will find allies in a willing press and nameless agencies, individuals and corporations in giving to the world the printed page. But when the Church undertakes to carry the gospel to remote places, to preach the gospel in fields afar, and to bear the banner of the cross of the Christ into unconquered territory and out on to uncharted seas of human depravity and pagan darkness, the Church finds itself without allies and, in this world-wide task, finds itself alone. The Church is the only organization on earth that has sought and is seeking to penetrate the gloom and the darkness of the unreached and unsaved portions of mankind and to carry the light, the lift and the love of the Son of God to those who know Him not.

Human society shares in the beneficent results and fruits of the gospel, and benevolent societies and States take up the task of human uplift, human protection, and human betterment, and unite their forces with the forces of the Church in building up the waste places of Zion; but the heralds of Zion, the preachers of the gospel, the harbingers of light and life, like their Lord Christ, must tread the wine-press alone, for only the Church of the living God undertakes to carry out the commission of their Lord, which commission is the missionary dynamic and motive.

It is the life and the love, not of man for man that is to reach and to lift man, but the love of our Lord for man that breaks down the middle wall of partition, and thus makes of one all nations of the earth. We seek to give the gospel to others—certainly the others who are far, far away, not out of love for them, whom we have never seen and do not know, but out of love for our Lord. It is His love that constrains us, His life that woos us, His gospel that wins us, and in His name, His strength, His love, we set ourselves to the task He assigned to the Church, and which the Church alone of all institutions and enterprises on this earth must accomplish, or it will never be accomplished. The Church has many tasks, and her interest, in saving the world and uplifting man, run in many directions, and for those tasks and in those various directions, she has her allies and helpers in the world; but in performing the one task of carrying the gospel, of preaching righteousness and salvation to a lost world through the power of the cross, the Church stands alone and works alone, and alone occupies that field, and will occupy it till the task is finished. Preaching the gospel of the Son of God till the nations and the peoples of the earth shall hear that gospel is a task that the Church alone of all institutions has so far undertaken, and until the Church shall perform that task this will be the unfinished work of God in the world. A PRAYER FOR CHRISTIAN UNION.

O God, our Father, our help in ages past, our hope in years to come, our ever-present inspiration and guide, give us, we pray, a new vision and a new sense of our privilege as brothers and sisters in Christ, in whom bond and free, in whom Greek and barbarian, in whom male and female, in whom high Church and low Church, in whom apostolic succession and free grace, in whom every race and kindred and people and tongue, in whom every creed and confession and sect find their full and complete fruition—give us, we beseech Thee, a new sense of our privilege as brothers and sisters in Christ.

Give us a new wisdom, a fresh understanding, a new insight, that we may comprehend the brotherhood our Master came to establish, and a new will that we may exemplify it in personal, social, and institutional relations. May this eternal message of brotherhood, undefiled by the traditions of men, undarkened by our sectarian or other divisions, revive our hearts and inspire us to work for the renewal of the Church's unity. Help us to make brotherhood in Christ the good news of our day; help us to make Thy Church the haven of all peoples of whatever condition or circumstance, that the world may believe through our unity, through our oneness, our loving fellowship, that Thou didst send Him to become the Saviour of the nations and the Unifier of men's hearts.

O God, we pray for the nations. Thou hast made of one blood all the nations of mankind, so that they were knit together in unity, even as the members of our bodies are knit together. Help us to see in all peoples our brothers and sisters. Help us to trace the family likeness and to proclaim our common kinship by blood and in the spirit. Make the nations speedily one in Christ, we pray. Unite the followers of Christ, we beseech Thee, broken, scattered, dismembered though we be, unite us, we pray, as those who follow our Lord and hold a common faith. Purge us of our vanity, of our intolerance, of our bigotry, of our sectarianism, of our unforgiving spirit, of our divisive and narrow interpretations of Thy truth and Thy Church. May these hindering causes, these petty loyalties, these unhallowed scandals, not keep us further separated one from another and from the fullness of Thy love. Grant Thy Church, we beseech Thee, denominational disarmament, that, following her example, the nations of the world may beat their spears into pruning-hooks and their swords into plowshares, and know war no more in what is greater and better than "a parliament of mankind, a federation of the world," in what shall be the spiritual brotherhood of the human race.

Help us to repent for the pain, the suffering, the continual crucifixion and humiliation to which we have subjected our Lord, in our unwillingness to answer His prayer for the oneness of His followers. May we not bruise His broken body further. We have learned, O Lord, to co-operate and work together on the lower levels. Forbid that in our highest interests, on the highest levels, we should find fellowship and brotherhood far removed. May the spirit of Christ, expressing itself in our love for Thee and for Him and for one another, break down every barrier and bring us into that sense of unity and spiritual solidarity for which our hearts now so eagerly yearn.

O God, Thou Giver of life and of every good gift, we pray for union, union so deep, so abiding, so universal that it shall gather all within one fold; a union that shall truly represent in one inclusive spiritual brotherhood the kingdom of heaven on earth. May we never be content so long as any group of Thy children anywhere entertain aught that excludes another from the fullness of Thy grace, that erects a barrier to keep a single soul from the welcome of Thy heart. May no legal entanglements be too difficult, no ecclesiastical customs too deeply fixed, no sentiments too precious to yield, no ambitions or personal commitments too intense, to prevent our traveling for ourselves and making plain to all the joyous road to united fellowship in Christ.

And now abideth faith, hope, love and unity—faith, hope, and love fulfilling themselves in Christian unity—these four, but the greatest of these and the all-inclusive, is unity. So may it ever be, world without end. Amen. W. A. H.

A PRAYER.

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, uttered or unexpressed." It is the only conscious contact of man with God. Access to God is through Jesus Christ as the "Mediator between God and man." That relation is the most sacred and the most satisfying of all relations known to man. There can be no deception in real prayer. There may be outward form without inward spirit, as in the case of the Pharisee; but sincerity marked the prayer of the publican. God said, "My house shall be called the house of prayer," and that is the place where God has promised to "meet with His people." That is the sacred place for public prayer and the closet is the most sacred place for private prayer. These are the two places vitally related in Christian experience, and most sacred to Christian prayer is the one exercise in which all believers can take part. All Christians cannot sing, read, attend Church, or give; but all can pray, and all Christians do pray. That is the first thing—religious—that parents can teach their children. They kneel with the family in family prayers, and then say, "Now I lay me down to sleep," by the mother's knee or the bedside. Prayer is the humblest attitude, and the most exalting exercise of the soul. A praying Christian is a growing Christian, and a growing Christian is an active Christian.

The prayer in Matthew 6:9-13, commonly called the Lord's Prayer, is really a prayer given to God's people for their use, and not His use. There is one word in that prayer that is rarely used, and it is the word "debts." The word trespasses is used in place of debts. The word trespass means the voluntary violation of law, rule, or duty; the word debt means that which one owes to another in money, goods, or service. A trespass is voluntary; a debt may be voluntary or involuntary. Obedience to parents is an obligation that grows out of the relation of children to parents, whether they promise to obey or not; trespass is a voluntary act that violates the law of parents, the law of the State, or the law of God. It is, therefore, better to use the phrase "forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors," than to use the common phrase "forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us." Involuntary sins are more numerous than voluntary sins, and we need to include all our sins in prayer for forgiveness. It would be an improvement if all people could change the common use of this prayer and say, "forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors."

MT. AUBURN IN HISTORY.

(At the annual session of the Eastern North Carolina Conference, held at Mt. Auburn Church, Warren County, N. C., Dr. W. C. Wicker, the president, read the following historical sketch, which the Conference voted to have published in The Sun.—Ed. note.)

By way of introduction, I wish to mention a little Church history connected with this Church where the Conference is in session. This Church was organized over a hundred years ago and has been the center of some important history connected with the denomination. The historian, in referring to a group of Churches of our faith in central Virginia and the adjoining counties of North Carolina, includes Bethel, which came to us from the Baptists, Pleasant Grove, Halifax County, Va.; Pleasant Springs (now Catawba Springs), Shallow Well, O'Kelly's Chapel, Pope's Chapel, Old Kedar (now Mt. Auburn), and refers to some Churches in Mecklenburg County, Virginia, without mentioning their names. There is no doubt about these Churches being over a hundred years old.

The general meeting of the denomination, including the Christian Churches of North Carolina and Virginia, was held here at Mt. Auburn, then called Old Kedar, in 1833. At this meeting, which was held in October of that year, Rev. Jarratt W. Cook, Sr., was elected moderator of the meeting, and Rev. John P. Lemay, who was elected secretary of the general meeting at Providence meeting-house, in Orange County (now Alamance), in 1830, was chosen secretary again and also elected treasurer.

In attendance at this meeting, there were a number of the ministers whose names are known in our Church records. Rev. Stephen Turner, who also attended the general meetings held at Raleigh, 1807, and again in 1808, and was associated with Revs. Thomas Reeves, James Warren, and James O'Kelly in his early ministry; Rev. Leonard Prather, who began preaching as a member of the Methodist Church, but withdrew with O'Kelly and worked with him in the Christian ministry during the early history of the Christian Church. Rev. Daniel W. Kerr attended this meeting in 1833, and it was at this meeting that it was decided to publish a Church paper for the young Christian Church, under the name of "Christian Intelligencer," and Rev. D. W. Kerr was appointed on the editorial committee. At the meeting held with Pleasant Grove, Randolph County, in 1843, he reported that Church paper designed to be published would be commenced soon. He was continued on the committee of publications, and by motion it was left discretionary with Editor Kerr to commence the publication as soon as practicable. In 1844, THE CHRISTIAN SUN was first published at Junto Academy, in Orange County, about three hundred yards from Mt. Zion Church. The general meeting held at Hanks Chapel, Chatham County, in 1844, unanimously favored the continuance of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Rev. Johnathan Fuller was in attendance at the general meeting here in 1833. He was an ancestor of Rev. W. B. Fuller, a minister in the Valley Virginia Christian Conference, but was once a member of the Eastern North Carolina Conference. Elder Fuller united with the Church of our faith in the latter part of the eighteenth century and was associated with Rev. James O'Kelly and other pioneers of our Church.

Rev. Thomas J. Fowler, who was born in 1800, married Miss Aurelia O'Kelly, a granddaughter of Rev. James O'Kelly, was present at the meeting here in 1833. He has descendants in Alamance County, particularly about Mebane, N. C., and some of them are doubtless delegates to this Conference. Elder Fowler also attended the general meeting, 1832, at Lebanon, Surry County, Va., and New Providence in 1834, and at O'Kelly's Chapel in 1836, and Pope's Chapel in 1838.

Rev. John Lambeth, who was born in Guilford County, and who was ordained to the office of elder in the general meeting at Union Ridge, Alamance County, in 1828, attended the meeting here in 1833.

Rev. Thomas J. Drumwright attended the meeting at Lebanon, in Surry County, Va., in 1832 (Dr. Graves' office was used for a meeting-place after the Conference was organized) and attended the meeting here in 1833, but was assigned to the Surry circuit with Rev. Alfred Apple, who was licensed at that time.

Rev. Joseph H. Bland, a native of North Carolina, attended the meeting here in 1833. There are many people who are doubtless relatives to this preacher in Chatham County about Pittsboro, N. C.

Rev. Lewis Craven, born in Randolph County, was present at the Kedar meeting in 1833, and was assigned with Rev. Solomon Apple to the Neuse circuit. Craven is a household name in Randolph County today, and there are several ministers in the Methodist Church today named Craven.

Rev. Thomas C. Moffitt, grandfather of Dr. E. L. Moffitt, a former president of Elon College, attended the general meeting here in 1833, and was ordained at this Conference, and one member of the ordaining presbytery was Rev. Daniel W. Kerr. Dr. Moffitt had another grandfather who was a preacher, viz: Rev. J. W. Hatch, on his maternal side.

Rev. Wesley W. Paschall attended this meeting in 1838, and was assigned, with Rev. B. B. King, to the Staunton River circuit in Virginia. He was buried at Pope's Chapel, Franklin County.

Rev. Alfred Apple was licensed to preach at this Church in 1833 and assigned, with Rev. Thomas J. Drumwright, to the Surry circuit in Virginia, and was ordained at Pleasant Grove, Va., in 1835, and assigned to the Staunton River circuit.

Rev. Solomon Apple was also licensed at this Conference in 1833, when he was only about twenty-one years of age.

Rev. H. Burger, a member of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, attended the meeting here in 1833, but very little is known as to his work or when he was ordained.

Rev. John T. Petty attended the general meeting at Kedar in 1833 and was assigned to the Haw River circuit with Rev. Shubal Evans.

In 1841, Rev. Jesse K. Cole served as pastor of this Church. In 1848, Rev. Alfred Iseley held a six-day meeting here at Old Kedar.

The Southern Christian Convention met here in 1866 and again in 1867. At the session in 1866 Rev. Alfred Apple, Rev. Solomon Apple, Rev. Stephen S. Barrett, Rev. W. B. Wellons, D. D., and Rev. J. W. Wellons, and numerous others whose names we do not have were present. Rev. W. B. Wellons, D. D., was elected president of the Convention. The Principles and Government of the Christian Church was seriously considered at this Convention, but not completed. The purpose of this work was to define the powers and duties of the Churches, to improve the organization of the Convention and Conferences, and to prepare a directory of worship. The basis of this work was laid at the Convention in 1856, at the session held at Union Ridge, Alamance County. The work was not completed in the regular session of the Convention in 1866, and an extraordinary session was called for 1867 at Mt. Auburn, to complete the work on the Principles and Government of the Church.

At this same session of the Convention, it was decided to publish the Christian Hymn Book, and the hymn book was completed in 1870 by Dr. W. B. Wellons.

It was decided to resume the publication of THE CHRISTIAN SUN at this same session. The war had interrupted its publication until this time.

Dr. Wellons, in his address before the Convention at the 1867 session, said that the purpose of publishing the Principles and Government of the Christian Church was to bring order out of confusion, beauty out of deformity, symmetry out of irregularity, system out of derangement. This was the aim of those lovers of our Church who met in council at Mt. Auburn in the spring of 1867.

Previous to that time, when asked for our doctrinal views, we pointed to the Bible as our creed. When misrepresented by opponents and sentiments and doctrines were charged upon us which we never held or taught, we had no efficient means of refuting the slander. Consequently, in most every place, designing persons either classed us with Unitarians, Disciples or Campbellites, when the truth was everywhere known among us that we never sympathized with or held the views of either the one or the other of these parties. We never denied the truth of the divinity of Christ, our Head, or practiced water baptism for the remission of sins. And yet these things had been everywhere charged against us, and we had been set down by some historians with sects holding these heretical views, and the door of prosperity, expansion and denominational usefulness had been closed against us, and for long years we had seemed content to remain under a cloud and to be denied sympathy and fellowship with the denominations around us whose orthodoxy had never been questioned.

There have been several Conferences held with this Church at Mt. Auburn. I do not know how many before my memory, but this is the third Conference I have attended here since 1893.

The General Convention, at Piqua, voted to give Franklinton Christian College the privilege of asking for a Christmas offering this year through the home mission office of the Convention. This college has an honorable history of real service in behalf of our colored brethren, and deserves recognition at the hands of the Convention as well as generosity and liberality on the part of the Churches.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The age of the big man is gradually disappearing. The time was when the rich man stood out in such prominence that the poor man stood back in embarrassment in all public assemblies—wealth is now so widely distributed that you can hardly tell men from one another on the score of property possession. The time was when you could tell rich women from poor women by their dress. That day has gone, to return no more. There was a time when the educated man felt conscious of superiority and others recognized his superiority. That day passed away by the introduction of good roads, the high school, and the printing press. The educated man now takes his place among the many who hold diplomas and have been abroad. Even women are on the platform, in the legislatures, behind the desk, and express their mind on all great questions that relate to public welfare. She uttered her voice and the saloon disappeared. She spoke and cleanliness marked the cities as well as the homes. Wealth and education are within the reach of all, and class distinctions are fading as fast as the forests yield to the march of civilization. The public is larger than any man, and progress is greater than any mind. Democracy, in its truest sense, has entered this world to remain and control. The regulating element in all these signs of progress is the religion of Jesus Christ. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus, who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men" (Phil. 2: 5-7). The greatest came to the lowest to lift up men to equality with Himself.

In all that has been written above, the lesson is given for us to help to make this world a unit in the progress of mankind. Differences are disappearing between men, Churches, continents, and nations. Oceans used to separate continents and islands; now all are joined together by steamboats, telegraph and telephone wires, and even radios. The world is unified geographically. Nations are being unified commercially, and Churches and nations are longing and even trying to make the Church one and the nations cooperate in the bringing in of peace. What the world needs for peace is Christ in men as the Prince of peace. When all men follow Jesus in their thought, their aspirations, and their way of life, war will cease. When brotherhood becomes the passion of men, peace will reign and the "kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ." Conferences and pacts, interchange of ideas and expressions of good will will help, but what the world needs is a united Church, the message of salvation through Jesus Christ, the willingness to prefer others to self, and the life that is tied with Christ in God made manifest to all nations, all races, and all conditions of men.

ELON LETTER.

THAT THEY ALL MAY BE ONE.

When the historian of the Church in our times undertakes to write the achievements of the age and the moving spirit characterizing it, he will undoubtedly give first place to the sincere and prayerful desire of Christians for unity.

The spirit that is manifest in the Christian world today growing out of the yearning of Christians of all denominations and divisions for unity, is something marvelous. A generation ago the mention of Christian union was hardly heard in the land, and any voice which undertook to advocate it was almost immediately silenced by a chorus of opposition, and oftentimes of ridicule. It was even difficult to get religious editors in those days to publish articles advocating the union of Christians.

But the spirit of the times has completely changed, so much so that two world conferences have been held, approaching this problem, it is true, from two diametrically opposite viewpoints. The fact that these conferences were held, however, the one on "Life and Work" as a basis of union in Stockholm, in 1925, and the other on "Faith and Order" as a basis of such approach in Lausanne, in 1927, is one of the most significant facts in Christian history. Nothing since the Protestant Reformation has happened that is to be compared in importance with the holding of these world conferences. It is impossible for us to compute now the influence that they will exert on the thinking and the conduct of the various Christian bodies, but that they will be without serious significance is not to be thought of.

There was held in New York City, at St. George's Church, from November 13-15th, a most significant gathering of Christians of all Protestant denominations in the United States. The moving spirit in this conference was that apostle of Christian unity, Dr. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore. Prior to the assembling of this conference he had prepared "The Pact of Reconciliation," which had been signed by more than one thousand Christians. Some who did not sign this pact were in the meeting, but most of those who were there had previously signed it. I suspect that in all there were some two thousand separate individuals present at the New York Conference.

A most dramatic situation in connection with the conference was created by a letter made public from Bishop Manning, of the Episcopal Diocese of New York, addressed to the rector of St. George's, the Rev. Karl Reiland, in which Bishop Manning prohibited the celebration of the Communion on the closing evening of the conference, the celebrant to be the Rev. Henry S. Coffin, president of Union Theological Seminary. It is needless to say, this evidence of the sectarianism of a certain section of the Protestant Church in America was a bomb in the minds and hearts of those who were present. However, they accepted it in a fine spirit and proceeded with their conference, adjourning to the chapel of the theological seminary for the celebration of the Lord's Supper. However, thirteen rectors of the Protestant Episcopal Church signed a round-robin, in which they sharply criticised "usurpation of authority as well as narrowness of spirit."

This round-robin contended that the congregation of St. George's had a perfect right to lend their Church to the Christian Unity League, and that the league would be privileged to use the edifice in such ways as its own conscience and judgment would direct. It was felt to be particularly inappropriate for Bishop Manning to wait until the 12th of November to issue his prohibition, when it was known for months in advance, not only that the league was to hold its sessions in the St. George's Church, but that the Communion was to be celebrated by Dr. Coffin, as a part of the program. The general feeling was that Bishop Manning had unwittingly done a real service to Christian unity by his pronouncement. He had served, in the judgment of the delegates, to draw sharp and unfavorable attention to the high Church claims of certain sections of the Episcopal Church, and that the reaction against his untenable position would greatly benefit and advance the cause of Christian unity not only in other Churches but in the Episcopal Church itself.

It will be recalled in this connection that it was Editor Moorhouse, of "The Living Church," the organ of the high Church Episcopal party in this country, that made it impossible for the conference held in Lausanne in 1927 to celebrate the Lord's Supper, by injecting into this conference in its closing moments the same spirit which Bishop Manning evinced in his recent pronouncement.

In addition to "findings" respecting the whole spirit of Christian unity and its progress in the world, the conference, without a dissenting voice, adopted a revised form of "The Pact of Reconciliation" previously submitted privately by Dr. Ainslie, as the basis of continuing the work for the advancement of Christian unity. The revised pact reads as follows:

"We, Christians of various Churches, believing that only in a co-operative and united Christendom can the world be Christianized, deplore a divided Christendom as being opposed to the Spirit of Christ and the needs of the world.

"We, therefore, desire to express our sympathetic interest in and prayerful attitude toward all conferences, small and large, that are working toward reconciliation of the divided Church of Christ. We recognize the equality of all Christians before God, and propose to practice this principle as far as possible in all our spiritual fellowships. We will strive to bring the practices of our several communions into conformity with this principle, so that no Christian shall be denied membership in any of our Churches or the privilege of participation in the observance of the Lord's Supper, and that the competence of Christian ministers of communions other than our own to exercise the functions of a fully Christian and valid ministry shall not be denied by reason of differences in forms of ordination. Irrespective of denominational barriers, we pledge ourselves to be brethren one to another in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour, whose we are and whom we serve."

It is the intention of the Christian Unity League through a continuation committee to hold conferences in various parts of the country every year, and to further the cause of Christian unity in particular by securing as many signers as possible to this "pact of reconciliation."

There is no doubt that we live in a new day—a day that shall bring together the scattered followers of Christ in answer to His prayer "that they all may be one."

W. A. HARPER.

THE MIND OF JESUS.

What was the mind of Jesus concerning Himself? This is a most important question, and the correct answer to it involves the very essence of the Christian religion. We are exhorted often, and not too often, to have the mind of the Master. Indeed, this exhortation has become almost cant as it is uttered by some men. They seem to desire to get away from the person of the Christ and concern themselves and others with his ethical principles alone. They seek to interpret the mind of Jesus concerning social issues and moral duties as if all that He taught concerning His own person and place in the universe were a matter of indifference or at best a matter of secondary importance.

Such a view misreads the mind of the Christ. His most striking utterances were about Himself, and no one can claim truly to have His mind who minimizes or ignores these utterances.

In the Sermon on the Mount, which is so highly praised by rationalists, He asserted for Himself a position of authority above all the teachers who had gone before Him in the history of the Hebrew people, which nation was ordained to be the religious teacher of mankind. Hear him: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment. But I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment" (Matt. 5:21, 22). In the same passage, He makes this claim of supreme moral authority no less than six times. Can one have the mind of Christ who refuses to allow this claim?

In the Sermon on the Mount He declares that the final destiny of human souls will be determined by their obedience or disobedience to His teachings: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils? and in Thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me ye that work iniquity. Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand, and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it."

Did any teacher among men ever assert a higher authority than Jesus asserted in this closing paragraph of the Sermon on the Mount? Has any one His mind who questions or rejects the authority which He thus asserted?

Again, the Christ called Himself the Son of man with power on earth to forgive sins: "And behold they brought to Him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed: and Jesus seeing their faith said unto the sick of the palsy, Son be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee. And, behold, certain of the scribes said within themselves, This man blasphemeth. And Jesus knowing their thoughts said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? For whether it is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee, or to say, Arise and walk. But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins (then saith he to the sick of the palsy) arise, take up thy bed, and go into thine house. And he arose, and departed to his house. But when the multitude saw it they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given such power unto men" (Matt. 9:2-8). If the palsied man had remained after the words of Jesus, incapable of arising and walking, the charge of arrogant blasphemy made by the scribes against Christ would have been fully justified, and in that case the wondering multitude would not have given glory to God. Has one who agrees with the scribes or one who rejoices with the multitude the mind of the Master?

Yet again, Jesus lays upon men a mandate which none but God has a right to impose: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels: and then he shall reward every man according to his works" (Matt. 16:24-27). Has any man the mind of Christ who rejects the authority of the Master to make such a hard, high mandate or who denies that he will come in the glory of the Father with his angels to reward every man according to his works?

No man has or can have the mind of Christ who would reduce his divine stature to that of mere man or who would make the majesty of his person less than the worth of his moral principles. Moreover, it is a delusive assumption that the mind of Jesus can be possessed without his regenerating life being imparted to the soul. His mind cannot be acquired by an exertion of the human will without the renewal of the heart by the grace of his indwelling presence.

And it is not so easy to obey his ethical teachings as some would have us suppose. Without

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

DR. FRANK E. JENKINS.

As many of THE CHRISTIAN SUN readers do not know Dr. Jenkins, this will introduce him to them. Here is his record:

Born in Walton, N. Y.; Walton Academy graduate; holds the following degrees from Williams College: A. B., M. A., D. D.; graduate of Hartford Theological Seminary; was pastor of Churches in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Kentucky, Alabama, Georgia; field superintendent of the American Missionary Association for the South, including six colleges and universities, fifty secondary schools and one hundred and forty Churches of Congregationalism; superintendent of the home missionary work of the Congregational Church in the whole South as far as El Paso, Texas; president of Atlanta Seminary two years; president of Piedmont College twenty years; started Country Life Academy, Star, N. C., and Atlanta Theological Seminary; president of the board of trustees of Piedmont College, Thorsby Institute, Country Life Academy, and Piedmont Junior College; wrote and published "History of the Anglo-Saxon, or Congregationalism in the South," "The Master Profession," and numerous magazine and newspaper articles; executive secretary of the National Service Commission during the World War, raising funds and directing the work; has raised for Congregational work nearly two million dollars, and has now a campaign on to raise two million dollars for Piedmont College, and one on to raise three hundred thousand dollars for Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., being selected by the board and chairman of the committee on finance.

divine help the Sermon on the Mount reveals human impotency in the presence of divine law and tortures it with its hopeless helplessness. The men who turn away from the effort of faith to accept Jesus as a divine Person, thinking that they can substitute for such faith the easier matter of obeying his moral teachings, delude themselves. It is far easier to live by the faith of the Son of God than by the force of the human will to conform to his commandments. It is a notable fact that the liberalistic teachers who exhort most strongly that men have "the mind of Christ" and who glide over lightly the claims of his divine personality show little of "the mind" about which they speak so constantly. They never tire of deriding men of orthodox faith, and they never weary of belittling the evangelical Churches and denouncing their creeds. Why such intolerance? What is the source of "the bigotry of liberalism"? Is it not quite destitute of the mind of the Master? By faith and not by doubt is the mind of Jesus acquired and expressed, and without faith it is impossible to know him or to please him. No measure of self-starting activity and superserviceable zeal for moral returns can attain to the mind of Christ.

Very significant with respect to this matter is an incident recorded in the Fourth Gospel: "Then said they unto him, What shall we do, that we might work the works of God? Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that we believe on him whom he hath sent" (John 6:28, 29).

Men are quite willing to displace Christ in the heart by making a show of spurious deeds in their hands. They would prophesy in his name and in his name do many wonderful works without knowing him in their inmost souls. But all such purposes are foreign to his mind and utterly vain and futile. In his life one must share before participating in his labors.

"Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love (that is, love to the Lord as well as to men), it profiteth me nothing" (1 Cor. 13:3). And how can any one love the Christ or have his mind who does not accept the Lord's claims for himself and submit to his divine authority?—Bishop Warren A. Candler, in Nashville Christian Advocate.

INCARNATION.

What the doctrine of the incarnation really means is not that God has invaded a world that is alien to Him and taken on a nature different from the divine, but rather that man and God are akin, that they belong to the same family. The doctrine of the incarnation means that this is God's world, and that history is the sphere of His activity. God and man are not unlike and totally distinct with reference to ultimate nature; they do not differ in kind. And the incarnation of God in Christ is not altogether something new and strange, something totally different from what we see going on in the world around us all the time. Indeed, if I may so speak, God is evermore incarnating Himself. He incarnates something of His beauty in a flower, something of His majesty in a storm, something of His vastness in the wide-extending sea, something of His eternity in the steadfast mountains—"God's eternities in stone." He puts something of His holiness in every saintly soul. He incarnated Himself perfectly in Jesus Christ. As a matter of historical fact, "God was in Christ." Said Jesus, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." And Paul was telling what Christ had come to mean in his own experience when he wrote, "In Him dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily."—Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

WOMEN'S WORK IN PORTSMOUTH.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, recently adopted a very unique plan to raise some money for the cause of Jesus Christ, which has proved highly effective and inspirational to the entire Church. The plan is this: Each member of the society who would do so voluntarily was requested to take 50 cents, and then upon the original capital, adding to the original gift in such way as they might be directed of the Lord. The basis of the entire procedure is the parable of the talents as recorded in Matthew 25th chapter, beginning at the 14th verse. "The kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods, and unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents, and likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two."

So these women of the Church, with their original contribution of 50 cents each to themselves, as a gift from God, went forth to trade upon and add to. There were two circles in our Church at the time, and a friendly rivalry arose between them as to which of the circles would secure the larger sum of money.

When the day of accounting came, for as we read the account in Matthew further, we find that "after a long time the lord of these servants cometh, and reckoneth with them"—it was found that the two circles had raised the total sum of $200.

Mrs. William Capell, a member of our Church, had traded upon and added to her original gift of 50 cents in many ways, making and selling aprons, etc., until the total amount of her stewardship amounted to $42.80, she having secured a larger return than any member of the organization, although a more recent addition to our Church, and for this reason her work was the more appreciated. A special vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Capell, and in further recognition of her fine service she was presented with a beautiful and appropriate Scripture verse motto as a gift for the home.

Mrs. C. J. Heath, another member of the Church, had traded upon and added to her original gift in many ways—ways which entailed real sacrifice, effort and denial—and as the total amount of her stewardship was $25. As Mrs. Heath recited her various deeds, evidencing denial, work and sacrifice in the stewardship campaign and accounting, all present were conscious that she had been wonderfully faithful in the discharge of her obligations.

These two ladies secured larger sums of money than any other individual; however, the recitals made by many others who participated in this unique plan they used in adding to the original 50-cent gift, was marvelously inspirational—some sewed, others held rummage sales, others swept floors, some scoured them, others bought articles and sold them, one lady purchasing a 10-cent article and resold it to her husband for 50 cents—incidentally teaching those present a lesson in high finance. This lady was Mrs. C. J. Wright. Many deeds reciting denial and sacrifice were noted, and a vote of thanks was given all those participating in the endeavor. Somehow, as the service closed in which these reports were made, the words of Jesus Christ became wondrously real as is recorded in Matthew 25th chapter when

He said, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things."

No Church could ever have any more loyal organization of women than the First Church, Portsmouth. As their pastor, I have never asked them for anything in line of Church service that they have not wondrously responded, evidencing a love for the cause of Christ, which is cause for inspiration. And what is true of the older women of the Church is true of the younger women as well. We are looking to God for the accomplishment of great things this year through the First Christian Church of Portsmouth.

H. C. CAVINESS, Pastor.

WORLD-WIDE CHURCH NEWS.

Kagawa Honored by Japanese Government.

Toyohiko Kagawa, the outstanding Christian of Japan, if not of the whole continent of Asia, has lately been appointed honorary adviser to the social bureau of the government of Tokyo. A few years ago, Kagawa was being viewed with grave suspicion by the Japanese government because of his views on social questions, but now he is considered one of the bulwarks of the empire against Communism.

Often described as the modern St. Francis, Kagawa is known in Christian circles throughout the world for his sacrificial labors in behalf of the poorest classes of Japan. He has been the leader in the development both of the labor movement in Japan and also of the peasants' unions, as well as in the organizing of social settlements.

Combined with this great interest in social welfare is an intense passion for evangelism. At the present time, Kagawa is leading the "One Million Souls" movement, a remarkable effort to build up the Church of Christ in Japan.

Anglican Church Plans Lambeth Conference.

The year 1930 will mark the holding of the Lambeth Conference, which, once in a decade, brings together the bishops of the Anglican communion throughout the world. The conference will be held from July 7th to August 29th, and invitations have already been addressed by the Archbishop of Canterbury to the 370 bishops of the Anglican body. The central theme of the gathering is to be "The Faith and Witness of the Church in this Generation." Included in this general heading are the following concrete topics:

1. The Christian doctrine of God.
2. The life and witness of the Christian community.
3. The unity of the Church.
4. The Anglican communion.
5. The ministry.
6. Youth and its vocation.

New Presidents of Theological Seminaries.

Succeeding Dr. E. Y. Mullins, who was for many years the internationally known head of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., Prof. John R. Sampey was inaugurated as president on September 16th.

The Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational) has called to its presidency Rev. Albert W. Palmer, minister of the First Congregational Church, of Oak Park, Ill., who will assume his duties on January 1st. Dr. Palmer succeeds Dr. Ozora S. Davis, who was forced to resign last year on account of failing health. It is a source of great satisfaction to a host of Dr. Davis' friends and admirers throughout the country that his health has sufficiently recovered so that he has been able to resume his teaching (although not his administrative responsibilities) at the seminary.

MacDonald's Appreciation of the Missionary.

In view of the visit of J. Ramsay MacDonald, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, to this country, his glowing tribute to the work of the missionaries in Africa has a special timeliness. Speaking at the Congo Jubilee Exhibition, he said:

"As soon as the missionary appears, slavery is doomed. I do not say that it is doomed in twenty-four hours; but I do say that the presence of the missionary has this effect, explain it as you may, that from the moment he becomes a part of the atmosphere of a race, slavery dwindles and education begins. Men whose lives have been long lived in the atmosphere of ignorant superstition and mortal terror are enabled to lift up their heads and to discover that there is something giving them power, enabling them to walk about with heads uplifted, obedient to the law, but not victims of the law, enabling them not only to look out on the world, but within themselves. There begins responsible care, which at last emerges into a conception of the responsibilities of usefulness, lending them the idea of responsibility to the universe. I think the missionary requires no further justification. We who have been called to the secular affairs of life rather than the spiritual will never fail to be grateful, I hope, to the missionaries who have carried into effect the gospel of human justice as well as of spiritual power."

Reformed Church Records Steady Gain.

The statistics of the Reformed Church in America (often called Dutch Reformed), which have lately been issued, show that there has been a continuous advance throughout the last quarter of a century. In 1900, the communicant membership of the denomination stood at 109,899. In 1929, the figure was 159,662. During the same period, the Sunday School membership has gained 17,000, so that the present enrollment is 141,629. The total contributions to denominational benevolences are now $1,300,000, in round numbers, and the local congregational expenses are somewhat in excess of four million dollars.

Growing Interest in Labor Sunday.

The observance of "Labor Sunday," 1929, surpassed all previous records from the point of view of the wide distribution of printed copies of the Labor Sunday Message, issued by the Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of Churches, the publicity accorded the Message particularly in the labor and religious press, the number of services at which speakers representing labor, the Churches and the community spoke, and the use of radio broadcasting.

Typical of a number of outdoor services were those held at New Bedford, Mass., and Atlanta, Ga. Rev. John M. Trout, executive secretary of the New Bedford Council of Churches, arranged an outdoor mass-meeting in the park on "Labor Sunday" evening. The principal speakers were Dr. John MacDowell, secretary of the Board of National Missions of the Presbyterian Church; William E. G. Batty, of the New Bedford Textile Council, an organization of labor unions, and Jacob Minkin, a leading citizen. Music was supplied by the Liberty Band. Invitations were extended to all loyal labor organizations and Churches to attend this special service. It was the last of the series of outdoor meetings conducted by the Council of Churches in the park, in cooperation with the "Bigger and Better New Bedford Movement," which had the support of the Chamber of Commerce as well as labor and civic organizations.

In Atlanta, Ga., for the fifth year the Committee on Church Co-operation, at the invitation of the Atlanta Federation of Trades, put on a "Labor Sunday" service in the park, which was attended by over 1,000 people seated in chairs on the lawn of the State Capitol. The Church committee also was represented by a beautiful float in the Labor Day parade.

Scotch Presbyterians Get Together.

October 2, 1929, will stand as an historic date in the history of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland. That day marks the consummation of the reunion of the Church of Scotland and the United Free Church. The main division in Scotch Presbyterianism took place in 1843 and was precipitated by a conflict over the relation of Church and State. The changes which have since been made in the constitution of the Church of Scotland make it free from State interference, so that the occasion for the disruption no longer exists. It is understood that a very small group in the United Free Church still declines to get into the union.

The representative of the United Presbyterian Church of America at the impressive reunion service was Dr. John McNaugher, the moderator of the General Assembly of that body. The representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. were Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, of the Union Theological Seminary, and Dr. John H. Finley, assistant editor of the New York Times.

Great Scientist also a Mystic.

Prof. Arthur S. Eddington, the professor of astronomy at the University of Cambridge, England, and the best-known English-speaking exponent of Einstein's theory of relativity, delivered the Swarthmore lecture to the British Quakers this year. Prof. Eddington is himself a member of that body. His lecture has been printed in a little volume entitled "Science and the Unseen World." In this lecture, he develops further the point of view which he earlier outlined in his famous volume, "The Nature of the Physical World," concerning the relation of science and religion. He holds that the older physics, which emphasized materialism and mechanism, is out of date. He also insists that man's intuitive experience of moral and spiritual values is justly as truly a part of reality as his sense impressions.

World Conference on Faith and Order.

The Continuance Committee of the World Conference on Faith and Order, meeting at Maloja, Switzerland, during the last week in August, elected the Archbishop of Canterbury (William Temple) as the chairman, succeeding Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, whose lamented death occurred last winter.

One of the most important results of the conference this year was the decision to give special study to theological questions, in an effort to prepare the way for the settlement of controverted issues, and with this end in view, an international theological committee was appointed, under the chairmanship of the Bishop of Gloucester. The American members of this committee of thirteen include Prof. William Adams Brown (Presbyterian) and Prof. Frank Gavin (Episcopal). Dr. Edmund D. Scoper, president of Ohio Wesleyan University (Methodist), is an alternate member of the committee.

Congregational Pilgrimage to England.

In connection with the meeting of the International Council of Congregational Churches, which will be held July 1-8, 1930, at Bournemouth, England, there is to be a good-will pilgrimage of American Congregationalists to England next summer. The S. S. Adriatic, of the White Star Line, sailing on June 14th, has been assigned as the special ship for the party. The general theme of the international council is to be "The Living Church," and the council sermon on this subject is to be delivered by Rev. J. T. Stocking, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo.

Something New in Biography.

The latent capacities of the negro race were never better disclosed than in the new life of the African, J. E. K. Aggrey, as portrayed by Dr. Edwin W. Smith. Dr. Aggrey, one of the foremost leaders of his race in the educational and religious field, is quoted in this volume as saying:

"I am proud of my color; whoever is not proud of his color is not fit to live. I tell the Southern people of America, with whom I have lived for over twenty years, that they have a special contribution to make toward the solving of the race problem, and of the civilization of Africa. They have lived side by side with us; they know our faith, our loyalty, our honesty, our sensitiveness; they know the things we prize the most—such knowledge should be used for the extension of God's kingdom. I want all my people, my countrymen, women and men, to be educated in the larger sense, in heart, hand and head, and thus render Africa indispensable in spiritual, intellectual and commercial products to the world."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XI—December 15, 1929.

THE CHRISTIAN SPIRIT IN INDUSTRY.

GOLDEN TEXT: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."—Luke 6:31.

LESSON: Ex. 1:8-14, 20:17; Deut. 24:14, 15; Amos 5:1-15; Zech. 8:16, 17; Matt. 20:1-16; Mark 12:1-9; Luke 3:14; Eph. 6:5-9; 1 Tim. 6:17-19.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matt. 7:1-5.

If religion is to apply to every-day life; if it is something more than a matter of merely worshipping on Sunday, then this lesson is a very practical and appropriate one. For the majority of those who read these notes are folks who work. Much of their every-day life is made up of work, in many cases at practically the same old thing day after day. The problem of Christian living for them, therefore, is largely the problem of applying the spirit of Christ to their work. There are two sides to the question.

Christianity and Industry.

Christianity recognizes the dignity and worth of labor. Jesus Himself was a worker. Jesus also said that God worked. A new dignity and a new meaning was given to work by the life and teachings of Jesus. Let no man be ashamed of the fact that he works, even if he works at the most menial task. All work, no matter how humble and menial, has dignity in the sight of God, if it is honest, legitimate work. There is no respect of work with God just as there is no respect of persons. It is a shame and a sin for parents to train children not to work or to look down on work. It is the mark of a little mind and a little spirit to look down on positions that are not "white collar" jobs. Christianity recognizes the necessity for and dignity of industry, and it also demands the application of Christian principles to industry on the part of both the employer and the employee.

Christian Principles in Industry.

"Servants be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh . . . not with eyeservice, as men-pleasers, but as servants of Christ doing the will of God from the heart; with good will doing service as to the Lord and not to men." The employee is to do an honest day's work and to do it well. He is not to be content simply with doing enough to get by with; he is to remember that after all His real Master is Christ. As a Christian, a man ought to have a sense of pride, and a desire to do the best possible work, because he is a follower of Christ. When he works he is representing Christ in industry. There is to be no grudging spirit. There is to be no divided allegiance. There is to be whole-hearted service because he recognizes that he is really working for the Master Himself.

Alas, how many professing Christians there are who have never applied the spirit of Christianity to their work. They work just as little as possible, and they do just as shoddy work as possible. They take little if any interest in their employer's interests. Their chief concern is in their pay check or their pay envelope. They need to learn that Christ demands an honest day's work done in a willing spirit and as unto Him. Those who read these notes will do well to examine themselves to see how much real Christianity they are bringing to their work.

"And ye masters, do the same things unto them, forbearing threatening, knowing that your Master also is in heaven; neither is there respect of persons with Him." It is not a one-sided proposition. If the employed is expected to give a full day's work, well done, the employer is expected to be fair, to pay just rewards for work, to practice the Golden Rule in regard to his employees. A man does not employ so many "hands." He employs so many "men." He is dealing with so many persons, children of God and his brothers. It is extremely important, therefore, that he deal fairly with them. He must see to it that they get a living wage, that they work under sanitary conditions, that they have decent working hours, that their personality is respected.

There is perhaps no area of human life in which there is greater need for the application of the principles of Jesus than in the field of industry. Capital and labor have too long looked upon each other as competitors rather than as co-operators. Both must respect the rights of the other. Both must work for the rights of others.

A Word of Warning.

"Charge them that are rich in this world that they be not high-minded." Riches are not necessarily an evidence of superiority, they are not an occasion for pride; they are a responsibility, they constitute a real menace to the spiritual life. Jesus Himself is authority for this statement.

"Nor trust in uncertain riches." The recent crash in the stock market shows how uncertain and how unstable material riches are. Men are not to trust in them, but in the living God, who gives us richly all things to enjoy.

"That they be rich in good works." We are not to lay up for ourselves treasures on earth, but we are to be rich in good works; ready to distribute. Those who have are to give as God has prospered them; willing to communicate—they are to have the willing and generous spirit. Laying up for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life—riches are to be used in such a way that humanity is helped, and in such a way that the man himself develops a richer and fuller life.

In this materialistic age which interprets so many things in terms of dollars and cents, it is well enough to be reminded again that a man's life does not consist in the abundance of the things which he possesses, but in certain qualities of mind and heart. It is no disgrace to be poor. It may be dangerous to be rich. The problem of the rich and poor is to use what one has where one is in such a way that character shall be developed and the kingdom of God helped.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, December 15, 1929.

TOPIC: "What Have Young People to Give?"
—2 Cor. 8:1-15.

Some Bible Hints.

Young people may give themselves, which is the first and best gift of all (v. 5).

We must contribute our prayers for the kingdom. These gifts are often overlooked (v. 4).

We may give money according to our circumstances. There are few who cannot give anything, however little (v. 4).

We can give friendship and love. The smallest gift, given with love, is better than a large gift without it (v. 7).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Most of us have pocket-money, a part of which we may give to help others. We can tithe it. It is income.

We think we are busy, but we waste hours every day that might be given to the service of God; that is, the service of His Church and people.

We have capacity for friendship that is worth more than gold. Many a lonely soul and a shut-in would rather have a friendly visit than anything we could give or send them.

Many of us earn wages. What portion do we set aside for the work of the Lord? Many give nothing. Others give only a trifle. We forget that we are stewards and must give an accounting of our stewardship to Him.

A Few Illustrations.

A high-school boy had an old Ford. He found some old people who could not go to Church, and he called for them Sunday mornings with his flivver. He gave what he had.

During one of our great floods, one woman, who was very poor, said, "All I had was an extra pair of shoes, and I gave them to the sufferers." That was like the widow's mite, a gift of love and sympathy.

A high-school girl gave Sunday afternoons to visiting two or three shut-ins. She told them about the Church service and the sermon, and often read to them. Not all gifts must be in cash.

At Christmas we can give service. We can make toys for the kiddies. If we cannot buy the material, the Church or some generous soul will.

To Think About.

Is clothing for the poor needed in our community?

How arrange for a community Christmas tree? What is most needed in our town?

CHRISTMAS PROGRAMS.

Many Church workers have difficulty in deciding just what kind of a Christmas program to put on. Those in charge of the Christmas program may well ask themselves the following question: "Should the program be purely for entertainment, or should it have some value in addition to entertainment?"

Pageants and plays have come into general favor in recent years. And more Churches are finding that a pageant or a play can be put on with the same expenditure of time and energy as can the music and recitation programs. A play should be given occasionally in every Church where it is at all possible to do so. The play should not always be presented by the adults. Children love to take parts in plays, and plays adapted to children can be found.

A carefully selected and well presented play has a great value. The audience learns by seeing and hearing at the same time. This method of teaching is very effective. The persons who take the parts in the play live the story as they act it. They are feeling the action of the story even more than the members of the audience. The pageant and the play have great educational possibilities that Church workers should try to utilize. Those who have charge of the Christmas program have a wonderful privilege and a very great responsibility. They help to determine what Christmas means to the people who are present when the program is presented. It is up to the Church to help people get the real meaning of Christmas, whether it be by sermon, song, story or play.

Below is given a list of Christmas plays and pageants that may be found helpful by those searching for Christmas program material. A short description is given of each play in order to enable readers to judge a little about whether it will fit their own needs. These plays and pageants may be secured from the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio.

The Quest of Christmas. By Julia M. Martin. The story of a father who, because of financial troubles, doesn't want to bother with Christmas; of patient mother, of impatient children, of some fanciful but very real characters who persuade the family that money is not the big thing at Christmas time. Plays about 25 minutes and calls for 12 or more children. 25 cents.

The Christmas Idea. A pretty sketch for five girls. By Alice Cook Fuller. Four selfish girls are bemoaning their Christmas disappointments, when their attention is brought to the real idea of Christmas giving. A good number for the Christmas entertainment in Church or school. Plain interior setting. Time, about 15 minutes. 25 cents.

A Radio Christmas. By Mae Culp Wick. An up-to-date play for six older girls. Having met in Mary's room to sew on gifts for the poor children, they are given a surprise by hearing a radio concert. This concert is given by hidden singers, and a short program is suggested. Good for Church or Sunday School. Plays about 45 minutes. 25 cents.

When Christmas Came. By Harlow Haas. A very playable dramatization of the scenes attending the very first Christmas. An effective number for young men's classes or adults. The scenery can be as simple or as elaborate as desired. Plays about 45 minutes. 25 cents.

The Heavenly Host. A pageant of the Nativity. A most convincing visualization of the Scripture on this beloved theme, with its beauty and simplicity, and its atmosphere of reverence and worship. 50 cents per copy.

Joyous Christmas Chimes is a book containing recitations, drills, and suggested music for making a bright and pleasing entertainment. By Alice Cook Fuller. Price 25 cents.

JEWEL TRUITT.

TITHING ENROLLMENT DAY.

Below Dr. W. H. Denison, Secretary of the General Convention and Secretary of Stewardship and Tithing, presents testimonies of those who tithe, and makes a plea for tithing enrollment day in the Churches. I trust every SUN reader will give this good heed. Any and every Church will find it worth while to put on such a day and seek to enroll tithers. Tithing is a plain and very definite teaching of the Bible, and none can enjoy the blessings of tithing who do not practice it. Get the Church to enroll tithers and there will be joyous Christians, a spiritual-minded and a progressive Church.

Are You in Line with Our Workers?

Rev. Clarence Defur, D. D., Madrid, Iowa, tells how his Church is doing it: "Following an instructive and well-directed stewardship institute of about two days, put on by our General Secretary, Dr. Denison, we selected a capable and interested superintendent of stewardship, who made a special study of the subject. A small appropriation was made for necessary literature. The Layman Company's literature is to be distributed to each family for ten weeks each Sunday of the period. 'The Larger Stewardship,' by Cook, is being used as a study for eight periods. Reading circles are meeting in the homes. It is expected that two Sunday School classes will adopt a book for study at their monthly meetings during the period. It has been suggested that the junior Church school superintendent relate stewardship stories at the opening periods. At the close of the time set (ten weeks), the minister is to deliver one or more sermons on the subject. It is expected that a program of conservation will follow this intensive work."

Mr. Leslie James, Mansfield, Ill., one of our young leaders, says: "Giving with a spirit of cheer and gratitude is purely a habit with the true steward. But there is a large percentage of our people who have never developed this habit, and it is these who are reached in our stewardship period. Such a period of intensive and constant thought will often bring about changes and results which equal the habit in effectiveness."

Mrs. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va., tells how she does it, and recommends tithing to others. She says: "Do you care for a blessing from God? In your prayers are you always asking God to bless you? If so, help Him to answer your prayers by doing your part. God will surely keep His word. I, for one, have proved Him for over twenty consecutive years. I thought as a minister's wife and Sunday School teacher that it was my business to tithe, as we have no right to ask the other fellow to do something we will not do ourselves. Get a little notebook and at the front write, 'Received'; under that put down every dollar and every penny you receive, with the date, for a year. At the back of your book write 'Given,' and record every gift, for you will find you want to pay your tithe and then make an offering. When God says, 'Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse,' that is a command to you and to me. Obey that command and see what a blessing God bestows on you. God surely appreciates obedience, as you will see by reading 1 Sam. 15:22. I beseech you, 'tote fair' with your Maker."

Mrs. Anna B. Liggett, Danville, Ill., sends a message to Sunday School teachers: "The Sunday School teacher, if he be Christ-like, practices in his daily life the principles that he would build into the character of the pupil. The uttermost parts of the earth are to be the boundary lines of Christ's kingdom in the world when every Sunday School teacher practices the principles of Christian stewardship among those whom he teaches the principles of Christian living."

Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, Elon College, N. C., urges tithing enrollment day. He says: "The Church which does not seek to enroll tithers at some time during the stewardship period of the Church is neglecting one of the most effective means of making the stewardship teaching of real value. We hold great ideals before our people and exhort them to devote their lives to religious service, but fail to give them definite plans and programs through which to make that service effective. Too much of our so-called Christian consecration is general and indefinite. By enrolling our people in a 'Tithers' League' we give them something definite to do."

AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLES.

Authorized and Edited by American Revision Committee, and Published by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

These Bibles contain the Concise Bible Dictionary which forms the helps to these Teachers' Bibles. It supplies, in the most condensed and convenient form, all the latest information about the Bible, its writers, its language, the various versions, complete chronology, life of Christ, with harmony of the Gospels, life and travels of St. Paul, etc. The illustrations are reproduced from recent photographs, and truly illustrate the articles. The Combined Concordance is entirely new, and has been made expressly for the American Standard Version. It combines with the Concordance, Subject-Index, Scripture Proper Names, etc. The 12 Maps have been carefully revised and are beautifully colored. In making orders, give the number and price.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE

One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

HEARING ONE'S SELF.

"In the last days, grievous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of self."—2 Tim. 3:1-7.

There is a very wise passage in Amiel's "journal," in which he goes to the very heart of selfishness. "So long," he says, "as we are conscious of self, we are limited, selfish, held in bondage; when we are in harmony with the universal order, when we vibrate in unison with God, self disappears." And he goes on with this singularly illuminating comparison: "Thus, in a perfectly harmonious choir, the individual can not hear himself unless he makes a false note."

So it is also with the highest values of religion. They are blessings that come to us through harmony with God. We can not hear ourselves in the orchestra of love.

Prayer.—Blessed Saviour, we would be at one with Thee: Thou in us and we in Thee, that we may be perfected in one. Bend down to our human frailty and lift us up into Thyself. Amen.

TUESDAY.

HEAVEN.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee; because he trusteth in Thee."—Isa. 26:1-7.

Who does not want perfect peace? Who is not vexed by endless worries and fears, tormented by temptations, harassed by difficulties, worn by griefs? Who would not rush into the arms of perfect peace?

And to be kept in perfect peace, not for an hour or a day, but forever—what joy were that! To know that the evening will be serene, and the morrow will bring no discord or disturbance, and that all the glad future will have a cloudless sky—that hope would seem beyond the bounds of possibility!

But Isaiah, prophet of the Most High God, promises it to all who trust in God. Isaiah says that this trust stays the mind on Jehovah, fastens the soul to the Eternal. God is (must be) perfect Peace, and whoever is made at one with God is made at one with peace forever.

Prayer.—Lord, we trust; help Thou our lack of trust. Fill out the measure of our faith. So forgive our unrest that we shall rest in Thee, calmly, surely and ceaselessly. For Thou art the Prince of peace. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CERTAINTY IN THE OUTLOOK.

"The Lord will keep thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth and for evermore."—Psa. 121:1-8.

"The thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts," sang Longfellow; and the soul in which God dwells is perpetually youthful. Like its divine Inmate, it is "from everlasting to everlasting." Its trust and its confidence are "from this time forth and for evermore." There is nothing transitory, nothing uncertain, in the life that is hid with Christ in God. It is a kept life.

As A. B. Simpson once wrote: "The coming in of Christ puts 'eternity in the heart.' As we leek out into the coming years, the vista stretches away into 'a land of far distances,' and the soul exults in a hope big with immortality." Where others dwell in mists, the Christian has a clear and illimitable view of the future, marred with no misgiving and peopled with no specters.

But when the Lord does not keep our going out and coming in, we issue forth on dark and treacherous paths and we return with many bruises and wounds. We feel our way through fogs, and the next step may be into a thicket, or a bog, or over a precipice. There is no sureness in our walk unless we walk with the Lord.

Prayer.—O Thou the Way, we pray for Thy safe conduct through the treacherous mazes. If Thou do not guide us, our steps will slip. If Thou do not uphold us, we shall fall. Be Thou our Comrade, and wherever we walk, we shall arrive at happiness and home. Thy home, Lord Jesus, and ours eternally. Amen.

THURSDAY.

COME UNTO ME.

"Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."—Matt. 25:34-40.

An unbeliever took a tray of tasty food to a sick and aged lady. She accepted his visit as a god-send and asked him to pray for her. He could not refuse. In his effort to do so, he caught a vision of the reality of God and that he was doing something for Him. After that, this man was an active believer and worker in the kingdom.

This illustrates what Christ meant when He declared that every kindness, however small, or even to the least of the brethren, is really done to Him. We cannot always see Jesus in poor, sick, suffering and needy humanity, whom we aid, but some day we will. We have His word for it. If one wishes to be happy and to know Christ better, come close to the sick and the needy and help them.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, when the way to Thee is so easy, forbid that we would not take it. Save us from the hypocrisy of singing our longings for Thee and never putting it into deeds. Amen.

FRIDAY.

DOUBLING YOUR STRENGTH.

"And Elisha said, I pray thee, let a double portion of Thy Spirit be upon me."—2 Kings 2:6-12.

John Wilson had often asked himself the question how the Church might be doubled in strength without any additions to its membership, and he found the plain answer: that this could be done if every member now in the Churches should become twice as strong a Christian as he is today. Doubling the strength of the Church by doubling its membership would be a long and arduous task.

We should, of course, be working at it all the time, though a Church twice as large would not necessarily be twice as strong, and might even be weakened in the process. But increasing the strength of the Church by doubling the power of each Christian is an absolutely sure process, and is attended with no perils.

Moreover, every Christian can inaugurate the movement in his own house and his own life. He need wait for no one else. He need not tarry for the forming of an organization, the framing of a constitution, the election of officers and the appointing of committees. He is himself the organization, and all the officers and committees. The only motion necessary to put is to put himself in motion.

So, if we are praying in earnest, "Thy kingdom come," we can answer our prayer, as far as we ourselves are concerned, by inaugurating the kingdom of heaven fully in our own hearts and lives. And we can begin this very minute.

Prayer.—Yes, Lord, this very minute. For we pray Thee to enter our hearts now, and take complete possession. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in us and through us forever. Amen.

SATURDAY.

ONE WITH OTHERS.

"Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt."—Col. 4:1-6.

Once, after a certain Philadelphia minister had completed the service, as he was leaving the pulpit, he was met by an old colored man, a former slave. The tears were rolling down his cheeks, and he said: "Oh, Massa Allen! dat was a heap-good sermon yo' gave today. I understood ev'ry word. Yo' preached it just as if yo' was one of us niggers." The minister was delighted with the compliment. It was one of the best he had ever received.

Nor let us apply this anecdote merely to ministers. It fits as closely our wayside conversations, the casual talks that usually mean so little and may mean so much.

Prayer.—Thou has given us, our Creator, this marvelous faculty of speech. May we use it for Thee. May our words be with grace to win and with salt to keep. For the sake of Him who spake as never man spake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

WHAT GOD CANNOT ACCEPT.

"Jehovah had respect unto Abel and to his offering; but unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect."—Gen. 4:17.

The tragic story of the first murderer stands ever before mankind as a warning against the spirit of self. It was the exaltation of self in Cain that drove him into his own way of sacrifice rather than God's way, and roused in him that fatal jealousy of his more righteous brother, Abel.

Are we making any offering to our God? It may be an offering of time, of thought, of talent, unless we make it in reverential love. If we ask first what we want to give and not first what God desires to receive, it is the offering of Cain, the sacrifice of self-willed pride. God will not accept it, cannot accept it.

Prayer.—Infinite One, who holdest all existence in the hollow of Thy hand, what are we that we should dictate to Thee, or choose Thy way of worship? We bow before Thy throne in all humility. We bring Thee, first ourselves, and then our possessions, such as Thou requirest. Accept us and them, O Eternal, in all graciousness. Amen.

SO-CALLED LIBERAL CHRISTIANITY.

Liberal Christianity is based on philosophy rather than on faith. By its revelation is set aside for rationalism, and personality is supplanted by the idea of law. Liberalism would put logic in place of the Holy Spirit and the fatalism of evolution instead of human thought and energy.

It is plain, therefore, that liberal Christianity falls short of satisfactory light and leading. If followed to the limit it would halt progress and disorganize Christianity. It is the antithesis of co-operative effort. It would make Christian union and even Christian unity impossible. It could form no basis upon which people could work together; for by its view every man is both law and canon to himself. For liberalism is mere individualism.—Christian Evangelist.

The First Congregational-Christian Merger

Very Important--Very Plain

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES:

DEAR FELLOW-CHRISTIANS,—I know how to appeal to Congregationalists for funds for Christian purposes. I have been doing it for over forty years, and have secured for various purposes between one and two million dollars, more than a million of which has been for Piedmont College; and I am now appealing for two million more for the same.

But I am new to the Christian Churches. I take it for granted, however, that the same motives that move Congregational Christians, move you—our present national merger pre-supposes this. If this supposition is true, the response to this page and my letters is sure, for I am making an appeal for your own institution, fully and officially approved by your Southern Convention, which is not only worthy of your support, but must have it or die.

I Must make the Facts Very Plain

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, Ala., was organized to meet a great need and to do a great service for your Churches and, in their name, for our Country and for the Kingdom of God. You have there a great field, a fine location, and a valuable property. Your Administration Building is a noble structure, but unfinished and unheated. Your fine Girls' Dormitory is only partially ready for use. You have a campus of over forty acres, and a property worth $100,000; but nothing fully ready for use. It will take $10,000 more to make available the $100,000 worth you already have; and more to give the equipment required for a Standard Junior College.

Surely, you do not want to lose this great beginning for want of the necessary finishing! But I must tell you plainly that losing it is certain, unless vigorous and speedy steps are taken to save it. Dr. Beougher and the local Trustees have done splendidly, but they have reached the end of their rope. Other help must come, or this Institution will soon be a thing of the past.

The Situation Briefly Stated

BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing; not because its work and scholarship were not good, but because a Junior College cannot have independent recognition without a finished campus and the income of $200,000 endowment. Without scholastic standing, a Junior College cannot have students, as they cannot go on for their Junior and Senior years in a standard four-year College. BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE found itself without scholastic standing, and could not go on. It would have no students.

President Beougher then came to me, as President of Piedmont College, to help BETHLEHEM out of impending failure. An educational merger was then made by the two Colleges, so that the four-year College could stand for and give credits for the Junior College. No financial merger was made or is in contemplation. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE is still owned and controlled by the Christian Church. Its Trustees, of their own initiative, changed its name to "THE PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE" to enable the Senior College more securely to vouch for its credits. As a result, the enrollment of the Junior College has not only been retained, but increased.

But the campus is not finished, the buildings are not ready for use, and the scholastic standing cannot be long maintained by the present method alone.

The Trustees have asked me to find the money for finishing the buildings, equipping them, and meeting other pressing needs. I cannot go to Congregationalists for this, as I am asking them for two million dollars for Piedmont Senior College, and am pressing them hard. It must come from the members of the Christian Churches—or the Junior College must close.

I have nothing to gain personally. I am donating my services and advancing expense money, because I am deeply interested in our great merger of Churches and I want to see PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, saved for the great field it occupies and the great need it supplies. The South needs education far beyond any opportunities it has.

Please send your checks quickly to President Beougher, at Wadley, Ala., or to me at Demorest, Ga., made out to PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, and they will be turned over to the Treasurer as soon as record can be made. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE cannot wait long.

Yours fraternally and sincerely,

FRANK E. JENKINS

PRESIDENT BOARD OF TRUSTEES, PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, Wadley, Ala.

PRESIDENT PIEDMONT COLLEGE, Demorest, Ga.

The above will appear in two or three more issues of The Sun, so that every member of the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention may be sure to read it.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The Thanksgiving season is on, and all of our Churches will rejoice to have an opportunity to make a special Thanksgiving offering for the support of the Christian Orphanage. This is the only special offering we now ask for during the year. This is one year every Church should do its best. The cry of the fatherless and motherless should appeal to us all. They appeal to us for bread. Shall we give them a stone? The recent loss of our large feed barn, with its contents of many tons of hay which had been stored for the cattle, just in the beginning of winter, makes us more in need than ever before.

Perhaps some will be detained from Church on account of sickness or bad weather and will not have the opportunity to make their offering. In this case, mail it direct to the Christian Orphanage and give name of Church of which you are a member. We have reached the sum of $18,302.58. We still have $11,699.42 to raise to reach our goal. We want to raise this amount by January 1st through the Thanksgiving offering and individual offerings. Let every Church and individual feel keenly our need at this time.

EDUCATION'S GOAL.

Character education—moral training or citizenship—is the ultimate goal of all educational endeavor. In this new age of humanism, in this day of functional education as contrasted with the older ideal of "discipline," the whole emphasis is upon the dynamic characteristic of students as manifested in the organic relations with life.

Our schools must provide practice in self-control, opportunity for self-expression, initiative and individual responsibility and an occasion for perfecting all those personal qualities that go to make up personality and character.

to you and beg of you to forgive me. I bring to you my tired brain and my weak and unworthy thoughts; and here is my offering, a little money and a little service for Thy cause. It is nothing beside Thy glory.

"I can't be like an angel, but I can be my best, and that I give you. Come to me, God, and let me see you in my soul, and let me love you, and do Thou make me brave and strong."

And God says, "Child, I see thee and I know how little thou art. Thou hast done thy best, and I love thee for it. Thy altar is my throne. Thy Bible is my Word. Thy prayers are in my ears. Thy songs are sweet to me. None of it is pretense. I will make them real. I am in them all. Bow low and worship. In all these things the Word is made flesh and dwells among you, and in it you behold my glory."

That is worship. That is fellowship's highest expression. That is presenting self in due and blessed adoration. That is the nearest approach to God. Every sentiment of righteousness is included in it. It is man's approach to his highest destiny. It is that which tunes one's soul to the infinite. It is that which lifts the burdens of life and makes them easier to be borne. It is that which releases the soul from the power of temptation. It is the place of spiritual satisfaction, where the wistful, the weary, the colorless, the jubilant, the successful, the defeated, all draw their natural instincts and mingle their souls in a kindred thought. It makes dull-gray living shine through and through with magic and sheds into the spirit and the life the beauty and the glory of God.

Marcus Aurelius, a man who perhaps came nearer than any other non-Christian of the West to the Christian life, said: "I reverence the God who is within." That God is fully made known to us through Jesus Christ, and we can give a grander significance to this expression. We can say, "Our God is within us, enlightening our thoughts, quickening our spirits, constraining righteousness, and leading on to the perfection of all things." That is practicing true worship.

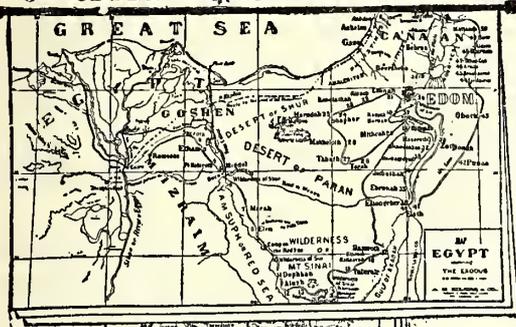

PRIVATE SCHOOLS DECRIED.

It is the belief of the superdemocrats of the new Turkey that all private schools of a secondary nature promote social distinctions and are not in accord with the principles of democracy. They have started a movement to have all private schools in the republic turned over to the State.

In a true democracy, the leaders of this movement argue, private schools should not exist, as they are symbolic of social distinctions. All secondary schools must be run by the State, they conclude, in order that social inequality may be avoided and also in order that uniformity, "the essence of the republic," may be obtained.

The American colleges in Turkey would not be affected if such amovement were carried out, as the 100 per cent State control is projected only for primary and secondary schools.

FURNISHING THE MIND.

"Instead of making your mind a garret crowded with rubbish, make it a parlor substantially furnished, beautifully arranged, in which you would not be ashamed to have the whole world enter."

These vivid words from the pen of T. DeWitt Tammage, the great Brooklyn preacher, help us to get a new conception of the mind and what it ought to contain. When Paul enumerated things true, honorable, just, pure, lovely, and of good report, he besought his Philippian readers to think on them.

We must be selective in our thinking. We may clutter our minds with refuse, or we may furnish them with fine things. Each of us is responsible for the condition of the room over which he presides.—Sel.

WHY I GO TO CHURCH.

I go to Church because I want my children to go to Church. I want them to know something more of this life than business, sport, and selfish amusement. I know only one institution that will teach them that they are divine. The Church will interfere with their pleasures at times, but their mother and I sometimes have to do that, and we hope that they will love us none the less because of it. The Church will mystify and puzzle them and seem irksome to them now and then; but all things worth while demand something of us in sacrifice. I believe that the Church and the things it stands for are necessary to our well being.—Edgar A. Guest, in American Magazine.

You cannot run away from a weakness; you must fight it out of you or perish. Why not fight it out of you now, right where you stand?—Stevenson.

A VALUABLE GEM.—

Pearl fishers in the Persian Gulf recently brought up a gem worth about $250,000, the largest and most valuable pearl found in that region for more than a century. When the money was distributed among the divers, the sums were so large that one of the divers went crazy, never having seen so much money before.

VIEWS OF JAPAN ON DISARMAMENT.—

Premier Hamaguchi, of Japan, delivered a speech before a rally of his political party recently pleading for a real reduction of armament. He hopes the conference of the five-power conference to assemble in London next January will take decided steps in that direction. The prospects for world peace never seemed to be so bright as now. The Christian teachings are taking hold on the heart of mankind. It is for the Churches especially to keep on with their work for peace on earth and good will toward man.—Exchange.

ELIOT'S INDIAN BIBLE FOUND.—

The famous pioneer work of John Eliot as a missionary among the American Indians has been called freshly to mind by the discovery of the original Old Testament which he had translated into an Indian language. The discovery was made in Exeter Cathedral, England, by Rev. W. W. Rockwell, liberian of Union Theological Seminary, New York, in connection with a recent visit to England. He recognized the volume as a result of his having seen a copy of it in the seminary library.

The book is dated 1661, and is the earliest known instance of the Old Testament's having been translated into a foreign tongue as a means of missionary evangelization. John Eliot's Bible is also supposed to have been the first Bible printed in America and the first book printed in an Indian language.

STUDENTS WORK IN INDUSTRY.—

Five groups of college students, both men and women, worked in factories last summer, meeting twice a week for seminar discussions of the industrial problems with which they came in contact. The groups were under the auspices of the student department of the Y. M. C. A. or the Y. W. C. A. with two groups under the combined auspices of them both. Chicago, Detroit, Denver, Los Angeles, and Houston, Texas, were the cities in which groups were held. The students found their own jobs, lived on the wages received and endeavored without fear or favor to experience first-hand the conditions which surround wage-earners in our industries. The seminars were under the direction of competent leaders. Speakers addressed the groups, including employers, labor union leaders, State officials, experts in social legislation, economists, engineers. The students felt that in a few weeks of actual experience and study they "got a whole college education" and were better able sympathetically to understand the problems of the workers.

CHICAGO'S NEW OPERA HOUSE.—

This season, Chicagoans have a new opera house. It is one of the finest in the world. Around and above it are seven hundred and thirty-nine thousand square feet of office space, the entire income of which will be turned to artistic account. The man who stands back of Chicago's opera is Samuel Insull, the great traction and power magnate. His holdings extend all over the United States and in the same way the Chicago Opera Company is sent on tour over the country. It gives the benefit of opera not to a few cultural centers, as does the Metropolitan, but to many cities in many parts of the country.

Singer Mary Garden is the leading figure in Chicago opera. She has this summer discovered a new opera composer, Hamilton Forrester, one of Samuel Insull's office boys. His opera is on this season's repertoire of the Chicago Opera Company. In the company are many American names. When Mr. Insull became interested in the Chicago Opera Company it was losing a million dollars a year for Harold F. McCormick, and it was from his grateful shoulders that Mr. Insull lifted it to make it one of his own toys. Now it is expected that, with the proceeds of the opera-house office space, the company will pay as do the other Insull toys.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

WORLD FRIENDSHIP AMONG CHILDREN.—

During the coming winter and spring, while statesmen are wrestling with the problems of arbitration treaties, of plans for the reduction of armaments, and of squaring national policies with the peace pact of Paris, children also will be acquiring ideals of international peace and understanding through a new good-will project sponsored by the Committee on World Friendship Among Children. This undertaking will carry forward with another country the remarkable plans already so successfully carried out for generating good will between the children of the United States and those of Japan three years ago by means of doll messengers of friendship, and last year those of Mexico by means of friendship school bags.

The project this coming winter and spring is with the Philippine Islands, and consist of friendship treasure chests. The pamphlet of directions, just issued by the committee, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York, is most attractive as well as complete. It answers every question that those who wish to share in this project will be likely to ask.

The chests are 10x6x5 inches in size, made of metal to resist the white ants. They have brass handles and locks and keys. They are delightfully lithographed in eleven colors. The committee believes that children, both here and in the Philippines, will study with zeal the charming old maps of the oceans and continents, the pictures of Washington and Rizal, of Columbus and Magellan, the sea serpent and the spouting whale, and old Boreas and Father Neptune controlling the winds and the waves.

SHOULD WE MIX POLITICS AND RELIGION?—

In the days of John the Baptist, who reproved Herod for his sins, until today, when there are apparently but few Herods left, there has been a friction between the prophets of God and the politicians. We do not mean to intimate that political leaders are like Herod, and we hope that none of the preachers will fare like John the Baptist. However, many of them who speak needed moral truth boldly are driven out from their pulpits by those who feel reproved.

It is the opinion of Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, of New York, that it is good for both politics and religion to mix them. For ourselves we do not see how the world will ever be Christianized without penetrating the political aspects of life with Christian motives and aims. Dr. Jefferson says:

"We ought to mix religion and politics. What is religion worth if it is not mixed with life? Our political life is of tremendous importance, and if religion and politics are not mixed, politics becomes rotten and religion a superstition. We must mix conscience with politics. If conscience is divorced from politics, then politics becomes degraded. We must mix moral idealism with politics. If we refuse to do it democracy deteriorates and decays.

"Many Americans never give thought to political matters. They hold aloof in supercilious disdain. They are too busy or too intellectual or too cultured to take interest in public affairs. They are dangerous citizens. Others are skeptical as to the value of voting.

"They say that all parties are alike and all candidates are alike, and, therefore, what is the use of voting? But it is worth while to vote to keep one's self-respect. How can one respect himself if he shirks his duty? By voting, one keeps alive his sense of civic responsibility.

"Some are so confused and undecided that they will not vote at all. This is a mistake. No man should run away from a duty. If a man votes he may vote wrong, but if he does not vote at all he is always wrong. We do not throw away our vote when we cast a ballot for a candidate who has no chance of election. Minorities are carefully watched by political leaders and future policies are often shaped by the size of the vote for men who were not elected."—Christian-Evangelist.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Our congratulations to Rev. John G. Truitt and Mrs. Truitt, Dayton, Ohio. Ann Rawles Truitt arrived December 1, 1929, to rejoice their heart and make home complete.

Order a copy of "Peloubet's Select Notes" or "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" for some friend for Christmas. It will be a gift usable fifty-two times during the coming year.

In renewing for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, why not remember some friend with a subscription for a year as a Christmas gift? This would be a real Christmas gift, carrying cheer and helpfulness throughout the year.

This new interpretation of "Merry Christmas" Comes: Let "C" stand for Christ; substitute this "C" for the second "R" in merry, and you have a very fitting "Mercy Christmas." Acts of mercy and benevolence will make it a merry Christmas, indeed.

The "Week of Prayer" for the Churches this year, as designated by the Federal Council, is Sunday, January 5th, to Saturday, January 11th, inclusive. The council presents a promising program, copies of which may be secured from the council at $1.50 per hundred. Address, 612 United Charities Building, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City.

We learn, with deep regret, of the death of Bro. Boyd H. Jones, Fuquay Springs, N. C., which sad event occurred December 5th. Boyd was the son of the late lamented Rev. John A. Jones, and was a member of our Wake Chapel Church, in whose cemetery the interment was made on Saturday, December 7th. Bro. Jones leaves a wife and three children, and many friends to mourn his going away.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, writing recently, reveals that he is busy visiting many Churches in the Georgia and Alabama Conference, and adds: "So far as I can discern, our people are delighted with the program I am presenting, and they are more than paying expenses. I hope to visit all the Churches of the two Conferences just as soon as I can, and already have two or three points presented where I trust work may begin. I do not see why our Conferences have not undertaken something like this sooner. I am expecting great success."

The General Board of the Christian Church is in session this week, Dayton, Ohio. This meeting is considered of great import, since many details of the plan of merger adopted at Piqua, Ohio, in October, will have to be worked out and made adaptable to the larger form of organization. Dr. W. A. Harper, of the Board of Christian Education, and J. O. Atkinson, of the Mission Board, are attending the sessions from Elon College. Other members of the Board are Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., and Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va.

The Men of the Church, of Elon, held its monthly meeting and enjoyed together a fellowship supper Friday evening, December 6th. The speaker for the occasion was Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C., who brought a real message on "Stewardship." There were about fifty men present, and the occasion was delightful. These monthly meetings of the Men of the Church to discuss and consider together the problems of Church life and activity are highly worth while. Dr. W. M. Jay is the chairman of the body and deserves much credit for the activities and large membership of the organization. The last session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference elected him secretary of the Men of the Church organization for the Conference.

The Herald of Gospel Liberty last week carried a striking likeness of our beloved Dr. Staley, of Suffolk, and beneath the picture were these lines, every one of which contains a sentiment approved by every CHRISTIAN SUN reader: "To very many people all over the Christian Church, this picture will bring pleasant memories. Dr. Staley is not only, as he is often called, 'Pastor of Suffolk, Va.,' as well as pastor-emeritus for six years of Suffolk Christian Church, after an active pastorate of forty-one years, but he has been guide, counselor, and friend to all the people everywhere with whom he has come in contact during the past forty-seven years, for he is as active a pastor among his people today as he ever has been. This snapshot, taken by a friend and admirer just in front of the market-place in Suffolk, Va., his home town, is typical of him. He is ready to speak a word of greeting, or to start at almost an instant's notice for any place any where that he can be of service. And with it all, he is so modest that this little tribute is given without his knowledge or consent or it would never be given at all. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, his successor in the pastorate and his more than son, says of him: 'He is in a real sense a man of God, fruitful in all the things that concern the kingdom of God.' Amen! So say we, all of us. And he is, too, so human, so understanding, so friendly, that we are all better for knowing him."

The General Convention, in session at Piqua, Ohio, voted that a Christmas offering be taken this year for Franklinton, N. C., Christian College. Many Churches and individuals will remember this, and in their Christmas gift will not forget one of the most worthy, as well as deserving, enterprises of benevolence amongst us anywhere. Through the years, Franklinton Christian College has been doing a work of human uplift for the negro race and people that cannot be estimated in words or figures. From it has gone ministers into various pulpits here in the South among our negro friends and citizens, preaching the gospel of righteousness and making their contribution to improved citizenship in our midst. It is doubtful if there is to be found a better balanced citizen, a more worthy man, a more consecrated and devout Christian than is Rev. J. A. Henderson, president of Franklinton Christian College. He has the loyal support and devotion of his own race, and, by the worth, stability and merit of his own character and conduct, has won the esteem and the confidence of the white race, among whom he has a large acquaintance who trust him implicitly and esteem him for what he is and for the contribution he is making to Christian citizenship. We, white people, of the Southern Christian Convention, have been so pressed with the needs and opportunities for service among our own people that we have given scant consideration and contribution in kind or money to these worthy friends about us of a different race, but who are one with us in citizenship and Christian fellowship and who are struggling upward under the leadership of the same Lord and Christ that we are. And His love is sufficient to raise up the weakest as well as the strongest, the lowliest as well as the highest. THE SUN's editor enjoys the acquaintance of President Henderson, of Franklinton and some of his unselfish and consecrated co-workers in the school there, and he knows whereof he speaks when he says that these men and women are making sacrifices in the name of their Master for the service of youth and the Church and are making a real contribution, through that sacrifice, not only to the citizenship of the State, but to the kingdom of righteousness and of God amongst us. It will not hurt any of us, nor decrease our generosity and contribution to other worthy enterprises and institutions, to remember with donations Franklinton Christian College, an institution dedicated to the services of the underprivileged, an institution of Christian conduct and character that has proven itself worthy of our confidence and our contributions.

ALABAMA-GEORGIA PASTORS.

We are undertaking some very definite work, with an enlarged program, in the Alabama and the Georgia and Alabama Conferences. Rev. G. D. Hunt has been employed for his whole time by a joint board of these two Conferences, at a salary of $1,500 for the year, and expenses. About $1,200 of this amount has been subscribed by the members of these two Conferences, which amount is to be paid quarterly. Bro. Hunt's salary is to be paid monthly. So, as chairman of the finance committee, we are requesting that all who have made subscriptions to this fund send their quarterly payments to Prof. W. E. Edge, Daviston, Ala., who is treasurer of the joint board, and he will take care of Bro. Hunt's salary and expense account.

There are a number of good men and women in these two Conferences who want a part in this work who have not had a chance to subscribe to this fund. So we are asking that every pastor in the two Conferences take this matter up at their earliest convenience and give all our good people a chance to help in this work, which we feel is of such great importance to our work here in the far South. We feel that we have the right man in the right place, and we feel that we have as good people as anybody has, who are going to get behind the movement with their prayers and their means and help to put it over for the glory of God. So come on, right quick, with your subscriptions from your Sunday School classes, Christian Endeavor Societies and missionary societies. We know that we can count on the good women to do their part, for they are already interested in missions and the Church. Our young people all over our work are becoming interested, and they can be counted on, for they will accept when they are challenged to an effort.

Together let us work,
Together let us pray,
Together let us walk
God's own glorious way.

FEASTING AT THE KING'S TABLE.

BY REV. JOS. W. FIX.

"And he did eat continually at the king's table."—2 Sam. 9:13.

The friendship of Jonathan and David is known throughout Christendom as one of the most beautiful expressions of love mentioned in the Old Testament. These two men were inseparable in their devotion. Not only was it confined to each other, but from the lesson recorded in the second book of Samuel, we find that David, out of love for Jonathan, takes his only son, and allows him to feast at his table continually . . . even the king's table.

We read that Jonathan was slain at Mt. Gilboa, and when the defeat of the Israelitish army by the Philistines reached Jonathan's home, behold! Jonathan's son was taken in the arms of his nurse, Jezerel, and carried to safety. As she fled from the approach of the invading army, she dropped the five-year-old child and he was crippled in his feet for life. And his name was Mephibosheth. For years and years, this lad lived in this afflicted state of being . . . suffering and suffering. Never do we hear of his complaint. Nevertheless, he was forced to live in degradation and sorrow. Finally, he is about forgotten, even by the great King David, who at one time was the great friend of his father, Jonathan.

And now that David is king and is feasting on the fat of the land, he begins to ponder over days gone by. In the silent moments of his palace he thinks of the good old days with Jonathan, for friendship lives on and on. Death does not sever the bonds of true friendship between men. David is conscious of having a goodly heritage, of being blessed with talents and riches. But what is he doing to make other people happy? What is he doing to preserve the memory of his good friend Jonathan, who was killed in battle? Nothing! Doing nothing to commemorate the memory of one who loved him better than his own life. Now he might have erected a granite monument to the memory of Jonathan, but stone will wear away as the years pass into nothingness. Truly there is some other way of doing honor to one who was his friend. Listen to the words of 2 Sam. 9: "And David said, is there any that is left in the house of Saul, that I may show him kindness for Jonathan's sake? And there was of the house of Saul a servant whose name was Ziba, and when they had called him to David, he said, Is there not one of the house of Saul to whom I may show the kindness of God for the sake of my good friend Jonathan?" And we read that Ziba said unto the king, "There is one son, a lame boy who was known as the crippled son of Jonathan." And David sent and fetched him from Lodebar, where he was living in sin and in filth. And when the lame boy, whose name was Mephibosheth, came before David, the king, he fell on his face and did reverence unto David for having thought of him, as he barely existed in Lodebar.

And David said unto him, "Fear not, for I will surely shew thee kindness for Jonathan, thy father's sake, and will restore thee all the land of Saul, thy grandfather, and thou shalt eat bread at my table continually."

Mephibosheth Taken from the Devil's Table.

1. Mephibosheth a picture of sin from having eaten at the devil's table. The placid look on the face of the unfortunate boy is a picture of what sin will do for any man. Here he stands . . . afraid to move. And when for the first time in his life, he is shown kindness, he hardly knows what to do. Listen to him, "Why shouldst thou look upon such a dead dog as I am?" Up until this time, he had been dead. He knew nothing of the feasts that were continually spread upon the king's table. He might have been feasting there at the king's table all of his life, but sin had separated him from the good things of life. He had been crippled because of the sin of carelessness—dropped by the arms of a nurse—neglected and forced to flee from the invaders of the army of the Philistines who were searching for property that did not belong to them, seeking lives to destroy. Since that unfortunate day when dropped and left alone, no one had cared for him. He found refuge, such as it was, in Lodebar, which means famine, half starved and half clothed. Careless and indifferent; he cares not for himself, less for God. He is ashamed and fearful, afraid all the time, lest he might be called by King David and destroyed. He knows nothing of the friendship of his father, Jonathan, and David. But now, he is to inherit a continual feast; he is to eat continually at the king's table. Just as David sent for this poor boy and brought him forth from the famine lands of Lodebar, so God sent His only begotten Son into the world to seek and save the lost. "From sinking sands He lifted me; with tender hands He lifted me: from shades of night to plains of light, O praise His name, He lifted me."

He is the only one who can lift us; He is the only one who can invite us to eat continually at the King's table. There is no other name given under heaven whereby men shall be saved. Thou shall call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from sin. Today He invites you and me to leave the unpleasant hiding-places of Lodebar and come and feast at the King's table. "And he (Mephibosheth) did eat continually at the king's table."

While in Lodebar, he lived continually in unpleasant suspense. Sin forever causes men to fear. It never gives him rest and comfort. Jesus alone says, "Come unto me and I will give you rest." Jesus promises to bear our burdens. His atonement on the cross is sufficient for all who will come unto Him. Just as David sent Ziba, his servant, for this poor lame boy and brought him to feast at the king's table, so God sends the Good Shepherd for you and for me.

Mephibosheth Dines at King's Table.

2. Mephibosheth forsakes the devil's table and eats continually at the king's table. Sin always leaves its scars upon its victims. This poor crippled boy had thus far been eating of the bitter meats of the devil's table, but now he is a child of a king. He is to eat continually at the king's table. What are some of the dishes that are served on the king's table that are unknown down in Lodebar at the devil's table. The first one that King David serves this hungry boy is kindness.

Kindness is Real Treat.

1. Kindness. "Fear not, for I will surely show thee kindness." Kindness is a word that is closely akin to such beautiful words as mother, love, home, heaven and even Jesus. Kindness is one of the most excellent virtues known to man. Kindness works miracles. Kindness is the golden key to heaven. Kindness is of God. Hear Paul as he writes to the Ephesians, saying, "Be ye kind one to another" (Eph. 4:32).

Frederick W. Faber, the great hymn writer, who was born in England in 1814, contributed many great hymns to the world. Every Church in Protestantism sings his "Faith of Our Fathers," "Hark! Hark! My Soul!" and "There's a Wideness in God's Mercy like the Wideness of the Sea." These hymns are great works of a soul who knew God, but none of them are truer than the brief words of the poet, "Kindness has converted more sinners than zeal, eloquence or learning." Again he said, "Kind words are the music of the world."

Kindness is the most helpful attribute known to mankind. Even animals respond to kindness. In great city parks, the squirrels will run to a stranger, fearing not, for they know that visitors in the parks will not do them harm, but will rather show kindness. If kindness will attract and win the favor of dumb animals, how much more will it work wonders in breaking down the barriers that often exist between men. Kindness is from above, for as the moon reflects the sun's rays, so the human heart reflects the love of God and goes forth on missions of kindness. Kindness has been organized today. The Red Cross is organized kindness. Orphan homes are institutions of kindness for unfortunate children. Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.'s are associations for promoting kindness to young men and women who come to great cities and need kindness, good cheer and a hand of welcome. The Church is God's greatest institution of kindness. Its kindest act is that of extending an invitation to all men to "feast at the King's table."

Property of Grandfather Restored.

2. Property. "I will restore thee all the land of Saul, thy grandfather . . . bring in the fruits, that thy master's son may have food to eat." Dining at the king's table differs greatly from dining at the devil's table. On the latter one finds the scraps and the leavings. The devil's food is unpalatable and very poisoning. One sees evidence of its malnutrition upon the young man Mephibosheth. But the king's table is covered with good things. There is a provision that whosoever will come shall eat and be satisfied. His storehouses are full. The fat of the land is provided. Oh, what a joy to eat at the king's table after having eaten at the devil's. Truly God provides for His own. They shall not want. "My cup runneth over . . . for thou hast prepared a table before me."

Not only does God's children need food, but a certain amount of property is necessary for the welfare of mankind. All property, such as land and mineral, water and timber, belongs to God. He has kindly entrusted His children with the use thereof for a short space of years. Unfortunately, man has gotten the idea that he actually owns the land on which he lives. He who feasts at the King's table, knows that God is owner. He is content to let God own all things. He gets great joy out of serving God as a steward.

As long as one eats from the table at Lodebar, he is fearful, lest he might lose his property and never receive enough for a livelihood. As long as Mephibosheth ate there he was destitute, but as soon as he came to the king's table, he hears David say, "I will restore all the land of thy grandfather, Saul." Thus he was given more land than he knew how to use. So he does not worry, but just lets the king help him use it. They have become fast friends and are partners in the cause. He who eats at the king's table

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CHRISTMAS.

By the calendar, two weeks off; by events and activities, already here. One can feel Christmas in the atmosphere; one can see it in the pursuits, purposes and plans of everybody. Truly, the outstanding miracle of all times is Christmas. Looked at from any point of view, Christmas is a miracle unsurpassed, unequalled, by any other happening or event of the world. Go into the country, and people are hurrying hither and yon with Christmas in view. Go into the city, the shop windows are adorned, beautified, glorified with toys and trinkets, wares and wonders for Christmas. Jew and Gentile, skeptic and atheist, doubter and believer have already joined in universal plans and pursuits for Christmas. They believe in, accept and pay tribute to the strangest and the most marvelous miracle of all time.

Just a Child, born nineteen hundred years ago, of humble parentage, in an insignificant village, the Son of a carpenter. He grew up as other boys grow, and worked in His father's shop as other boys work. He had no fortune to give Him prestige, no family name to give Him fame. He held no office to elevate Him to a position of confidence or power. He never painted a picture, wrote a song, published a book, composed a poem.

He found human slavery around about Him, but never denounced it; He found corruption in government, but did not reform it; He saw autocracy in power, but never overthrew it; He saw the need of education, but never built a school; sympathized with the fatherless and the motherless about Him, but never started an orphanage; pitied the blind, the halt, the maim, but never erected a hospital; and, after thirty years of silence and obscurity, spent three years with a few chosen men, and then died the death of a malefactor under the curse of custom and the law. This Child came to the earth in obscurity, passed most of His life in silence, was put to death after three years of service, and went away from the world unhonored, discredited, despised.

Today His life is celebrated as no other life that ever came to earth. Alexander and Caesar, and Napoleon, and Washington, and Lincoln have the anniversaries of their birth, and maybe a few hours of a day are observed in idleness or in pleasure to do them honor. But there is no birthday anniversary, save that of the carpenter's Son, for which men and women in every sphere and field of activity spend weeks and millions in getting ready, and for which the whole course of human events is changed. In preparing for Christmas, the hardest heart has a kind word for you, the coldest hand gives you glad greeting, and the scowling face lights up with a smile; the miserly and the close-fisted become generous now, the busy business man gives greetings to his neighbor, the skeptic refuses to talk of his doubts, and the whole world about us assumes a benevolent attitude, and get ready to be glad and generous, and to say, "Merry Christmas" and "The Greetings of the Season."

There is only one way to explain Christmas. It is the world's most marvelous miracle. This is no accident, no happen-so, no human event or contrivance; only the hand of God, the power of Him who fashioned the stars and set them in their courses, planned the planets and put them in their places, could put the dynamic and the power into the attitudes and activities of the world that make Christmas what it is. Man may desecrate it, and will desecrate it, but God in heaven created and consecrated it, and has put into it a prestige and a power, the like of which the world has never seen and history makes no record of. Christmas is itself a miracle, the greatest of all miracles.

RELIGION WITHOUT GOD.

That is exactly what the religion of "humanism" is and means. There are individuals, plenty of them, high and low, that claim now that if we are to render our best service to mankind and do our best work, we shall have to eliminate God, and the idea of God, and serve man for man's sake. This is the religion of "humanism." It claims that we must be religious, that man, by nature, is religious, but that his religion has been directed to the worship and service of God; whereas, it should be directed to the worship and service of man. "He that giveth the cup of cold water to drink shall not lose his reward," say these "humanists," and there are Christian people who are ready to accept this as if it were Christianity as taught in the Bible. No such doctrine is to be found in the Bible. The Word of God plainly teaches that service to God, and worship of God come first, and then out of this service and this worship we come logically, naturally, inevitably to the service of man.

The Bible plainly teaches that we should love our neighbor as ourselves, and these "humanists" are teaching that in order to love our neighbor as ourselves we must think in terms of that neighbor, and only of that neighbor. The Bible, however, prefaces that commandment with the first and greatest of all commandments, "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart." Having done this, then one is prepared to love one's neighbor as one's self. Now, as to the cup-of-cold-water doctrine, turn to Matthew 10:42: "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward." Now, the "humanists" and these man-serving, man-worshipping preachers and philosophers leave out the words "in the name of a disciple." When those words are left out, you have torn the heart out of that Scripture and put your theology and your philosophy into the realm of "humanism." Take the other reference, Mark 9:41. This makes the matter even plainer: "For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward." These two references plainly show that the service we render to our fellow-man, to be effectual and of such character as not to lose its reward, must be in the name of our Lord. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick declares, in a recent magazine article (December Harper's), "Humanism is religion without God." In describing the religion of "humanism," the same writer says:

"In so far as humanism has become deliberate, it may be described as the endeavor to keep the best spiritual values of religion while surrendering any theological interpretation of the universe. To be sure, humanism is a fluid term, and in some of its meanings represents ideas to which any Christian could give hearty assent, but specifically the word is claimed by those who, like a recent exponent, say, 'The belief in God and the belief in immortality are gone.'

"Such humanists not only give up God; the more jubilant of them are glad to be rid of Him. At least, they are sure that faith in God has had its dangerous disadvantages. Men have trusted God instead of scientifically mastering nature's law-abiding forces and achieving their ends of their own knowledge and skill. Men have made of God a place of soft retreat, imagining themselves in 'the everlasting arms' when they should have been grappling with life's realities. Men have laid on God the responsibility of having made the world in the first place and of carrying it on to a successful issue; whereas, so humanists think, nobody made the world and nobody will make a success of it if we do not. From all reliance on superhuman aid, the humanist turns away. He essays a definite and final break, not from an old to a new theology, but from any theology to none at all. He draws a circle around man's spiritual life, personal and social, on this planet and proposes that religion shall stay at home within that compass and mind its business."

This, then, is the religion coming as the latest form of a modified atheism to claim the service and the devotion of the mind and heart of man. Ours is to be a better world through service to mankind.

These "humanists" surely forget that the best service ever rendered to mankind, that service that has done more to uplift mankind than all other services and sorts of service combined, has been that which was rendered in the name of God, and for the sake of God, and to the glory of God. Men and women in the service and in the name of God have gone to their Churches on the Sabbath to worship God, to hold communion with God, and then have gone out in the world to build homes for the needy, to carry food to the hungry, to preach redemption to the fallen, the pitiful, the unsaved, to open the eyes of the blind, and give medicine to the sick. These are they who, under the leadership and the love of God, have made such contributions to mankind as these "humanists" have never made and can never make; for in order to serve man best, we must love God most, the God who made us, and the God in whom there is sufficient love to lift man from the low to the high places in moral and spiritual betterment and achievement.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

The earliest harvest thanksgiving in America was kept by the Pilgrim fathers at Plymouth, in 1621. Congress recommended days of thanksgiving annually during the Revolution, and in 1784 for the return of peace. President Madison did the same thing in 1815. Washington had appointed such a day in 1789, after the adoption of the Constitution, and in 1795 for the general welfare of the nation. Since 1817 it has been observed annually in New York, and since 1863 the Presidents have issued proclamations appointing the last Thursday in November as Thanksgiving Day. In 1789 the Episcopal Church recognized the civil government's authority to appoint such a day, and in 1888 the Roman Catholic Church did the same thing. All religious organizations now recognize the President's proclamation and observe the day in a religious way. Some Churches have their own services, and in many cities the denominations unite in union services, going from Church to Church year by year. Such services help to make the United States a Christian nation and to promote unity among the people of God. Offerings are taken for charity and the heart of benevolence is enlarged.

The closing of business, even the postoffices, banks, and stores, releases workers and gives them the privilege of repairing to the house of God to give thanks for the harvests of the year and the blessings God has bestowed upon the nation. It is also celebrated by family reunions, big dinners, the same among friends, and gifts to the poor. It is meant to be a glad day, full of thanksgiving and religious joy.

Like all good things, this day is abused. In fact, all sin is the abuse of good. The violation of the Sabbath is the abuse of that good day. One of the evils of Thanksgiving Day is the great football or baseball games. "Two-score or more Thanksgiving Day tussles were slated for Dixie" on November 28th, in this good year of 1929. How does that read with this from President Hoover: "Now, therefore, I Herbert Hoover, President of the United States of America, do appoint and set aside Thursday, the 28th day of November, as a day of national thanksgiving, and do recommend that all our people on that day rest from their daily work, that they should extend to others less fortunately placed a share of their abundance, and that they gather at their accustomed places of worship, there to render up thanks to Almighty God for His many blessings upon them, for His forbearance and goodness." To turn this day into ball games, one is not a good citizen much less a good Christian. Christian citizens will have to outlaw ball games on Thanksgiving Day and firecrackers on Christmas Day or this nation will lose its prestige as a Christian nation. And this is saying nothing against ball games or firecrackers on other days. These two days are too sacred to be disregarded and abused.

HAPPINESS OR BLESSEDNESS.

This is the happy season of the year. We are fresh from the cheering scenes and associations of Thanksgiving. Our visions are alert and our minds are busy with the thought of the approaching Christmas season. Our steps are quickened just a little, our energies are stimulated and our activities are heightened by the thoughts of achievement through the year, and of favors and friendships we are shortly now to give or receive. This is a mark, and an evidence of happiness; but there is that within reach of all of us even better than happiness and more to be coveted than pleasures or possessions. Beyond all these is blessedness, even that blessedness that comes not from a consciousness of earthly possessions and pursuits, nor that happiness that comes from giving and receiving, but that blessedness which comes from the consciousness of God's presence and God's love. "Blessed are the poor in spirit: blessed are the meek: blessed are the poor in heart: blessed are the peacemakers;" for these have a consciousness of the presence of their God, and out of their pure hearts they see God and realize Him. No wonder they are more than happy, they are blessed. No outward belongings, no personal achievements, no worldly possessions can bring this deeper joy, this more complete life, this sense of things that is more than happiness. It embraces all that happiness is, but it goes beyond happiness. Our Saviour talked very little of happiness and less of pleasure; but He talked and preached much of blessedness, because in this sphere He was superlative and supreme, for while He enjoyed, or craved, very little of that which pertained to earthly happiness, He did enjoy and crave that blessedness which comes from a conscious association and fellowship with God. This is the real joy of human existence—this blessedness which is more than pleasure, even more than happiness, even more than all possessions. One sensed this who recently declared, "Nothing which the senses can give of pleasure, none of the higher enjoyments of literature and art, neither the happiness of discovering truth nor the joys of friendship, can equal the blessedness of him who walks constantly conscious of God's presence and God's love."

THE REALITY OF GOD'S PRESENCE.

The story is told of a certain lady who was a great reader of history, and delved in pictures illustrating scenes in many lands, and was equipped with good imaginative powers, yet had until more than thirty years of age traveled very little.

Finally the time came for a trip to Egypt. On the way, one morning, the ship came to a standstill. On going to the port-hole, the traveler saw the rock of Gibraltar within a stone's throw, just as pictured and read about, but with one difference; it was real. So it was along the voyage as one after another of the points of interest became actually visible to the outward eye; everything was just as pictured in the mind, but everything was real instead of only imagined.

This experience made a deep impression on her in connection with her sense of the reality of God to her soul. It may well be to us a parable of the difference between thought about God and the real experience of Him.

How many of us are there who have for years read of and pictured in our minds our Heavenly Father and the riches of the Christian life, when, suddenly, He appears to us as a reality, unmistakably, a real felt presence in our work-a-day life! Sometimes He comes to us in response to prayer; at other times, unsought perhaps, to warn us against embarking on some improper course, or to prick our consciences for some unguarded act or thought already past. There is no denying the fact that God does make Himself real to us, and we are made to realize that He is "nearer to us than breathing, closer than hands or feet." He will keep close to us to direct our acts and thoughts if allowed to have a rightful place in our hearts. Even though we have been sinful, He can do wonderful things for us. He gave His own Son as a sacrifice, that sinners might be saved if they believe in Him.

To make God real in our own lives, it is only reasonable that we should obey certain divine laws; the felt presence comes by obeying these laws.

God's way of making salvation real is by and through Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour. We have known people who were unable to believe that it was possible or necessary for our Heavenly Father to permit the sacrifice of His only begotten Son in order for the salvation of the souls of mankind; but "there is a perfectness and completeness in the act of the cross which leaves every other achievement behind it a distance which cannot be measured."

Christ Himself chose the cross as a means of returning from earth to glory with His Father after the completion of His ministry here. Note what He says to the two disciples who journeyed to Emmaus: "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into His glory?" "Thus it was written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day" (Luke 24:26, 46).

In order to enjoy God's presence, we must have faith; it should be an abounding, abiding faith, a faith that will give a bit of a foretaste of heaven even here on earth.

We cannot say too much of the importance of prayer. Prayer is our effort to commune with God; it is the outreaching of our souls for the felt presence of the Father. The prayer of faith does prove effective in opening the door to Him and the joy of being "at one" with the Father surpasses earthly joys.

The reality of the presence of God is made manifest in a ministry of service for Him. This may be vocal, or it may be in less obvious ways. In these days of world stress there is service for every one, and our Master rewards His servants with His felt presence.

F. W. Robertson well says: "Life is not done, and our Christian character is not won, so long as God has anything left for us to suffer or anything left for us to do."

A very rich service is rendered to our fellowmen when we make God real to them by allowing His reality in us to have full sway in our own lives. Those who have been privileged to see that wonderful painting in Keble College, Oxford, "The Light of the World," should have a vision of the importance of a life dedicated to the service of the best of Masters. If we open the door of the heart to Him, even though it may be now more or less overgrown with the things of earth, then there will be experienced in very truth a presence in the midst, the reality of God.—Wm. B. Harvey.

HOW DO WE FACE SUFFERING?

Affiliation does not always indicate sin in the life. Many Christians whose lives are fully yielded to the Lord are suffering physical or mental pain. It is often hard to understand why some should suffer as they do, but God sometimes allows it as a trial of faith (1 Pet. 1:6, 7), or to cause us to find our joy and peace in Him alone. Satan seeks to destroy the value of testing times by leading the sufferer to believe that they are always brought on by his own mistakes and sins. As the suffering continues and this thought takes possession of the mind, discouragement is likely to be the result. Job passed through such an experience. Bildad said to him (Job 8:5, 6): "If thou wouldst seek unto God betimes, and make thy supplication to the Almighty; if thou wert pure and upright; surely now he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy righteousness prosperous." This reasoning was not sound, for God Himself called Job "a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil" (Job 1:8). So let us not be discouraged by continued trials. If we have sincerely confessed all known sin in our life and are fully yielded to the Lord, let us trust Him to work out His will for us, remembering (1 Pet. 1:7), "That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ."—Sunday School Times.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Won'ts and don'ts, wills and does. People who won't do, don't do. People who will, do things. This is a world of work, and it is of many kinds and on the increase all the time. The more men invent machinery for doing what man only used to do, the busier people are. There are more people working in printing offices today than when the type was all set by hand and presses run in the same way. The typewriter has not decreased the work of secretaries and bookkeepers, but increased their work, to say nothing of those who manufacture the machines and handle them in trade. Work is not getting less, but increasing all the time. A mother and housekeeper was never so busy in all the centuries as she is today. It is simply a question of whether she will or she won't. If she won't, she don't. Idleness was never so scorned as at the present time. Industries multiply and men and women are busy or in trouble because they have no job. There is a busy city where idlers are sahaled to go on the street.

Professional men were never so busy. Ministers never had so much to do. School teachers were never so engrossed as they are today. As people work more for other people, life increases in its demands; and the world is coming more and more to understand that real human service is for others. When people worked to themselves and for themselves only, they did not have much to do; but as they learned that we are servants one of another, they discovered that demands upon energy and skill increased. When people did not come in contact with one another, except in a limited way, they did not feel the need of good roads; but when social, religious, educational and business contacts increased, the demand for good roads increased, and that meant more work. When better homes, better Churches, better stores, and better schools came into society, that meant more work and more kinds of work. The same is true in the home and the Church. When the Church had preaching and little pastoral work, there was not much for the preacher to do. But that has all changed. The minister must now be preacher, leader, financier, pastor, always ready to answer the demands of increased work. If he won't, the congregation don't. If he wills to do, they do. When men had few clothes, the laundry business was small. As dress for men, women and children increase, the laundry business increases. When people went to Church once a month, the demand on time and spiritual energy was small; but Sunday School, twice-a-Sunday preaching, prayer meeting Wednesday night, Christian Endeavor, missionary meetings, class meetings, all demand attendance and support, it means that religion requires time, prayer, thought, money, and continued work.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

Elon College looks upon Christian missions as vital to Christian education, and so every year there is delivered by the Mission Secretary of the Southern Christian Convention a series of three lectures, the first being in the form of a sermon on Sunday morning, and the following two given on Monday and Tuesday at the regular chapel service. A very happy arrangement has been entered into between the Mission Board and the college whereby the mission offices are located in the Alamance Building of the college, rent free, with heat, light and janitor service supplied without cost, and whereby the Mission Secretary is permitted to give this series of lectures without cost to the college. This is a very happy arrangement, and, as one good friend and devoted member of the Christian Church once said, "it is as it should be," since both the college and mission work belong to the Church.

Dr. Atkinson's three lectures this time centered around the theme of "Missinos, an Adventure in Righteousness." On Sunday morning, the particular topic was "An Adventure in Romance," in which the book of Ruth was used as a basis for the discussion.

On Monday, at the chapel hour, the book of Daniel was discussed as "An Adventure in Character," and on Tuesday the book of Jonah was treated as "An Adventure in Obedience." Original interpretations of each of these books characterized these lectures throughout, and they were listened to by a large audience of students and faculty members, and on Sunday by those from outside the college as well.

By way of summary in his concluding lecture, Dr. Atkinson said: "This, then, is the missionary message. Man, by nature, wants his own way. God, by His own nature, will ultimately have His own way. Man's nature is that of self-getting, of compulsion and of power. God's nature is that of self-giving, of liberty and of love, and it is out of the nature of God that those streams shall flow which shall prove yet a blessing to mankind and make this world a brotherhood. If you will recall when Job, the revelator, was permitted to see the scroll of the heavens unroll and God seated upon His throne, he saw a river flowing out from under the throne of God, and that river emanating from God as its sources went out to all the nations, and on the banks of that river grew strong and mighty trees, and those trees had leaves which were for the healing of the nations. The fountain of love and of life flows out from the throne of God, and the trees that draw their life from that fountain shall bear a foliage that will protect the weary travelers from the burning sun of prejudice and passion, and will yet prove the healing of all nations and usher in that time when the nations of the earth 'shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more'" (Isa. 2:4).

THE BOOK OF REVELATION.

BY REV. H. C. CAVINESS.

This, the last book of the Book of books, is not, in our opinion, the revelation of John, but of Jesus Christ. The revelation of Jesus Christ (Rev. 1:1) is the beginning introduction by the Holy Spirit, contained in the first verse. The word "revelation" is derived from the Latin word "revelatio," which means unveiling, and in this book we have signs, symbols and mysteries revealing the things Christ is yet to do, and unveiling of dreams which are centuries old.

The human author was a Jewish Christian, whose universalistic outlook was one of noble characteristics, and who was conversant with the Old Testament and its teachings, because he had learned much at the feet of his Master, and standing upon the apex of Hermon's peak he had moved from the limits of time into the sweep of eternity at the hour of transfiguration of Christ, beholding the glories and grandeur of a kingdom yet to be established; an eternal empire founded not upon force nor perpetuated by laws of sociology, but by Him who only dared to call Himself "I am"—"alpha and omega," the "beginning and the ending." Alpha and omega are the beginning and ending letters of the Greek alphabet. He, Christ Jesus, is the complete alphabet of God, the revelation of Jehovah, for assuredly the Jehovah of the Old Testament is the Jesus of the New.

The approximate date of its writing was A. D. 96. Scholars are largely agreed that John was imprisoned in Patmos by Domitian, and returned to Ephesus after that tyrant's death. The interpretations of Revelation have been innumerable, but out of the various interpretations four general classes may be distinguished:

1. The praeterist interpretation. The proposition presented here is that the things described in the Book occurred while the Book was being written. This view, of course, destroys the prophetic conception, and assuredly is wrong.

2. The futurist interpretation. This construction claims that all the events described in the Book are yet to transpire, after the described events of the third chapter. The futurist interpretation is predicated upon a portion of Rev. 1:19, "Write the things which shall be hereafter."

3. The historic-prophetic interpretation. This interpretation envisions a successive presentation of the events of Christian history. This view has occasioned so much discord, and few expositors seem able to agree upon the details of fulfillment, and, of course, this disregards the contemporaneous character of the seven series of visions.

4. The spiritual-symbolic interpretation. This regards the visions as figurative portraits of certain truths, destined to find their place in the history of the Church, and in the contemplation thereof the heart of the Christian may be encouraged and comforted until Christ comes again in great glory and judgment; and in the form of pictures we may see great and important truths.

This Book, to the Bible, is what a roof is to a home. It is the crowning culmination of the work of Christ. It begins in exile, portraying a night scene. John is at Patmos, the vision concerned candlesticks and stars—the exile of the Christian, the night-time of the Christian Church; then moves on in mighty cycles and marvelous consummations to the completion of work begun at creation, and expressed on Calvary. The theme of Revelation is "Jesus Christ, presented in a three-fold way."

1. As to time, "which is, and which was, and which is to come" (1:4).

2. As to relationships (a) to the Churches, (b) to the tribulation, (c) to the kingdom.

3. In His offices (a) High Priest (8:3-6), (b) Bridegroom (19:7-9), (c) King and Judge (20:1-15).

The student must always bear in mind that this Book is a prophecy (1:3), and closes forever the great controversy between heaven and earth, which began in Genesis, and the visible appearing of the Messiah in judgment is the great climax of the Book. Just as the four gospels unveil the first advent, so does Revelation unveil the second advent of Jesus Christ. The four major Bible divisions are the Old Testament (the King promised), the gospels and acts (the King rejected), the epistles (the King hidden), the revelation (the King revealed). Revelation teaches how to understand the times, not the times how to interpret the revelation.

Failure and its causes is the message addressed to the seven Churches, except Philadelphia. The judgment upon Ephesus was that they no longer loved Him as they did at first; service and orthodoxy had displaced Christ. In Ephesus there was much truth, but little love; in Thyatira, much love, but little truth; toleration being the sin lodged against Thyatira. Pergamos contained a temple of fame and great magnificence, devoted to the worship of the serpent as the god of healing, having in its ministry the disciples of Balaam.

The seven Church messages may be summarized in their prophetic meaning as follows: Ephesus, the post-apostolic period (vs. 1-7); Smyrna, the period of persecution (vs. 8-11); Pergamos, the corruption period (vs. 12-17); Thyatira, the Romish corruption (vs. 18-29); Sardis, the Reformation period (vs. 1-6); Philadelphia, the faithful remnant (vs. 7-13); Laodicea, the indifferent and apostate Church (vs. 14-22).

The great prophecies concerning the people, Israel, and nations of the world are found in the Old Testament Scriptures. In the New Testament, there is but one book of prophecy (the Revelation), and the Bible would be an unfinished Book were it not for Revelation. "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy" (1:3). When we come to the close of the third chapter we find a significant promise and equally significant pronouncement of judgment. This promise was addressed to the Church, "I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation (the tribulation period) which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth."

In this Book we have a marvelous picture of heaven, but the greatest doctrine therein is the atonement, and of the person of the slain Lamb, it becomes a place of tears and bitter weeping (Rev. 5:4). Christ crucified is the center of heavenly glory.

In the sixth chapter we find the anti-Christ is symbolized by the rider upon the white horse. He is to bear a crown and bow, the insignia of imperial power; presenting himself as the Prince of peace, but the effect of his rule is pictured in verses 3-11; for the world it means bloodshed, famine, pestilence, and for Messiah's people persecution.

WADLEY, ALA.

It is a great pleasure to give a bit of information concerning the work of our two Conferences thus far. I have visited twelve Churches since Conference and have had five services at each place visited. All of our people in both Conferences are delighted with our program, and they are showing their appreciation in so many ways that it makes one feel as if we were all one any way. I am just now beginning to enter fully into the great task, and trust that I may have the prayers and co-operation of all our pastors and people.

I have been with Pastors Beougher, at Wadley, and Hanson, at LaGrange, Ga., and at Oak Grove, Ga., and Rev. W. T. Meacham, at Dingers Chapel, in the Alabama Conference, and Rev. W. C. Carpenter, at Ambrose, Enigma, and Vanceville, in South Georgia.

While the weather has been very cold and rough, we had fine services at all places visited. It is my purpose to get to all the Churches just as soon as I possibly can. Will appreciate any pastor, who desires my services, to drop me a line and thus inform me of his meeting days, so I can make arrangements to visit them on their regular appointments.

Remember, brethren, I have laid aside all else but service to these two Conferences, for the glory of our Lord and the strengthening of His kingdom. I will also appreciate it if the pastors will notify me as early as is possible regarding the time of their revivals, especially those who desire my assistance in such work.

Our minimum goal is 200 souls for the Church this year. We are praying that we may go far beyond that number. I already have engagements until the new year. Please do not expect too much of your field worker, but keep him busy. I am yours to serve.

G. D. HUNT.

A CONVENTION RESOLUTION.

The pure in heart shall see God.

This should be a guarantee that every preacher of righteousness would put the subject of purity of life and purpose at the very heart of his message. Since there is so much impurity of life, conduct and character, we are persuaded that this aspect of the gospe of our Lord needs repeated and especial emphasis. On this account, be it resolved:

1. That our Church programs and preaching emphasize the importance and necessity of purity of life and purpose.

2. That we give our endorsement to the World-wide Purity Legion as represented by our Bro. Albert Godley, superintendent, Tenaflly, N. J., and bid him and that organization godspeed in their good work for purity and righteousness.

The above resolution, written by Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, was unanimously adopted October 25th by the General Christian Convention, in session from the 18th to 20th of October, 1929, at Piqua, Ohio.

October 25, 1929, delegates of the General Council of the Congregational Church were also present for the merging of the two bodies into one under the bonds of the blessed Holy Spirit. This was gloriously accomplished. God's praises were very heartily sung by the large audience. God will greatly bless.

As to the Christian mission for the promotion of Bible truth on genuine purity of heart and life in Jesus' name, conducted without thought of money gain, but for great good to individuals and the strengthening of the Church for greater Spirit power and the saving of more souls, pastors and Christian periodicals should help to make this free work of Christians known widely by God's help.

For list of graded purity pamphlets, write the World-wide Purity Legion, Tenaflly, N. J.

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3¾x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text. The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

Holman Jewel Testament

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2½x4½ inches x¾ inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made. The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength. One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together. The size, 2½x4½ inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

STEAM AND STEWARDSHIP.

An English school teacher had come to Chicago with her husband. They were very poor, worn down with typhoid fever and poverty. The very afternoon when the new preacher arrived, her husband had been out to gather coal on the Illinois Central tracks and had been killed by a passing train. Neighbors contributed money for the burial, as there was less than three dollars in the house.

Then began the fierce fight to care for the five children, four girls and a boy, the oldest a daughter in high school. The mother did family washing, scrubbed floors, cleaned house or anything she could find to do. Among her patrons was the young preacher, newly married and on his first charge.

A few weeks later, the Church was dedicated. Eight hundred dollars was needed to complete the payment. This woman and her oldest daughter subscribed five dollars. The preacher and his wife agreed that "this woman was too poor to give"—as if any of God's children are ever too poor to share with Him. So the preacher's wife called and suggested that, in their poverty, they had no right to give.

The woman was deep in the washtub, surrounded by suds and steam. She straightened to her full height, and, with a dignity that becomes God's children, said, "When I was a girl in England, I promised God that I would always pay Him the tithe of my income. Tom and I were poor, but we always kept that pledge. God knows how poor we are now; but, God helping me, I shall never rob Him of what we owe Him." She went on with her washing.

At family worship that night, the preacher and his wife pledged themselves to tithing stewardship. For more than twenty years they have kept that pledge with unmeasured joy to themselves and their children. Meanwhile, God enabled the little English school teacher to put all her children through school and to live to see them full-grown Christians.—Christian Vanguard.

NEWS ITEMS.

The Holland, Va., Woman's Missionary Society enjoyed a most successful year and reached the standard of excellence, with few exceptions. On February 15th they observed the "World's Day of Prayer" in a union service with the Holy Neck Woman's Society. They report an interesting and helpful meeting.

In April, the society sponsored the recital given by the Elon College Men's Glee Club in the high school auditorium.

The fifth Sunday in June they rendered a very beautiful program in the Church, assisted by the Barrett and Willing Workers' Societies.

Their new year has started off very well, and a great deal of interest and enthusiasm is being manifested. Mrs. Charles Daughtrey is the corresponding secretary of the Holland society.

A WORTHY CHRISTIAN MISSION.

For years an unwarranted prudery has prevented preaching Bible truths on the very great need of proper purity teaching for the saving of many, body and soul, by the help of Christ.

At a conference nearly ten years ago, Albert Godley, a pastor of experience, was given an opportunity to tour twenty Churches in Pennsylvania, teaching purity principles. Praying God for direction, he was deeply impressed that there are a goodly number, a legion, of believers in purity in every good Church community, world-wide.

With this thought in mind, he spoke night after night, and successfully finished the tour, by God's grace. An organization was effected; a report was made to the Purity Association, Inc., Chicago; the World-Wide Purity Legion was made a department of said association; Albert Godley was accepted as superintendent of the legion, eastern office, Tenafly, N. J., U. S. A.

The superintendent felt keenly his inability and his lack of funds for a world-wide work of so great importance, and he often prayed the Lord to send a proper leader with money. No such leader offered. Being in the spirit of prayer this 1st day of August, 1929, the Lord seemed plainly to say to him, "I have sent you."

Then for three days he fasted and prayed. Still very anxious as to the need of much money, he continued to pray. Weary and tired, he went to bed early August 5th, and early in the morning, August 6th, a remarkable dream was given him. He dreamed that a large bunch of bank checks was given him—checks ranging from one to five or more dollars; that bunch of checks amounting to $1,000. He awoke refreshed. He declared, "It is of the Lord; I must not make further excuse, but go forward in faith and diligently work; have faith in God; He is able to supply all needs," and other good Bible texts came forcibly to mind.

Not money profit, but great good to millions in Jesus' name, is the object of this, among the greatest of Christian missions; all other Christian missions will be strengthened by it. Many, many will be saved, body and soul, by God's grace. The superintendent and other officers serve free.

Many true pastors and other Christian workers, when informed will gladly send gifts to help publish the helpful, inexpensive purity booklets founded upon Bible and hygienic truth to be sent world-wide. To true missionaries free, and at cost to helpers. To God be the glory. He will impress the faithful as to their duty in giving and helping. The booklets are graded to different ages in the homes. This makes them welcome to true parents. We have faith that many will wish to be on the honor roll soon, even if their gift be small. God will bless all the faithful. Do not doubt. Many, many helpers will make the work succeed.

"GENIUS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH."

Accept congratulations from far and near for the victory of going over the top for missions. Again let us rejoice with the Christian Church in her efforts towards Christian union at Piqua. May the Lord lead us on and on to the consummation of all Christians being one in Christ and in truth. I have been very much interested in reading the pamphlet on "The Genius of the Christian Church," by Dr. Harper, especially the introductory page signed by Dr. Atkinson. Since I had mentioned that I hoped Christians would not bring up debatable questions between Unitarians and Trinitarians, I was so glad to get this pamphlet which helps me to clarify some things in the South of the proceedings of the Christian Church after the Revolutionary War. From page 14-A in the South to page 31-B, New England, the statement says, "to this day there are numbered in the Christian Church men and women of Christian faith, both Trinitarians and Unitarians." I believe that as a Southern woman, and never can see why Christians should not worship together, let them be of whatever Church or society they may. In the last analysis, if we believe Christianity is the way of life, this is the basis of the merger of the Congregational and Christian Churches. Christian character or vital piety is the only test of Church fellowship or membership.

I am still clinging to the Christian Church. My interest is kept up by reading our Church paper. And if I have misinterpreted the little booklet by Dr. Harper, who is a great teacher and educator, as well as Christian gentleman, please correct my ideas and set me straight, since I am an old-timer down in old Virginia, enjoying old-time religion sung over the radio.

MRS. J. I. JOYNER.

GRATEFUL.

We take this privilege and opportunity of expressing our thanks and appreciation to the Western North Carolina Christian Conference for their 1929 session, held with Smithwood Church, November 5-7, 1929. This Church had not had this privilege in thirty years. It was our desire to make every pastor and delegate to Conference at home; also the visitors of other Conferences and denominations.

We are proud of the attendance and of the right to welcome them back at any time in the future. We feel that it was the greatest session in the history of our Conference, the outstanding theme being that of unity. May our efforts to this end not be in vain.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XII—December 22, 1929.

THE CHILD IN A CHRISTIAN WORLD.

(Christmas Lesson.)

GOLDEN TEXT: "Suffer the little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for to such belongeth the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 19:14.

LESSON: Matt. 18:1-6; Mark 9:36, 37, 42, 10:13-16; Luke 2:1-20.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isa. 11:1-9.

Christmas is a perennial miracle. That modern nations and civilized peoples, living twenty centuries from the event which they celebrate, should not only celebrate, but become so excited about the birth of one who was born in an obscure country, of humble parents, amid lowly circumstances, is something that defies explanation on merely human grounds. When one takes into consideration, too, the fact that events are dated in terms of whether they happened before or after that Child's birth, one begins to see that he is dealing with a fact that has no ordinary significance. Things like that do not happen in the realm of the mere human phase of life. It all came about because the Babe of Bethlehem ushered in a new era in history, and set in motion spiritual ideals and motives that have and are transforming the world into which He came. This is true of childhood, and it is fitting that this lesson, coming as it does on the Sunday before Christmas, should deal with the child in a Christian world.

The Child in the Midst.

"And Jesus called a little child unto Him, and set him in the midst of them." The disciples were disturbed about who was greatest in the kingdom. Jesus said that those who were as little children were greatest in the kingdom of heaven. To such as possessed the child-like—not childish—spirit, the kingdom belongs. Only those who have the spirit of humility, of teachableness, of simple faith, of uncalculated devotion, of modesty, of simplicity—only these have the qualities that grant them entrance into the kingdom. Jesus thus took a child and preached a sermon on true greatness.

He also gave a new value of childhood. He asserted "that the interests of that little life were so sacred that in the realm of moral values the unseen forces which have to do with the child's well-being stand in the very forefront of the divine interest—in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father." The nineteenth century has witnessed the rediscovery of the child. Artists, poets, psychologists, educators, business men, social welfare workers, and above all the Church have given new attention to the child and have set about to see to it that these little ones shall not be hindered or hurt in the unfolding of their inner lives. Woe to that individual or that institution which "offends"; that is, "causes to stumble" the opening mind and the responsive heart. Child welfare, child health, child labor laws—these and other similar things are the gospel of Christ in action. And Christian education is the Church's attempt to keep the child in the midst, to afford that nurture that will help it to become all that is inherent in its nature.

Jesus and Children.

"And they brought little children to Him . . . and He took them up in His arms, put His hands upon them, and blessed them . . . and He said, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Jesus loved children. In the divine heart there is room for children. And children love Jesus. In the child heart there is a warm and generous response to Jesus. Those who are older can learn much from the religion of a little child.

The Coming of the Christ-Child.

The best comment that any one can make on the lesson as printed is to suggest that every one who reads these notes get alone and quietly and reverently and unhurriedly read again this old, old, and yet ever-new story. There is a simplicity, a charm, an appeal about it that defies, or rather makes unnecessary any further comment. The Scripture account is the best comment and interpretation. One feels after reading this simple story that the glory of God has again appeared on the earth, that Jesus Christ does have a place in the life of the world, that our common humanity is capable of great things, that the ordinary tasks of life take on new meaning when one has seen Christ, that life never comes into its highest meaning until we have given ourselves in worship and obedience to the Babe in the manger. Let any man read this story for himself, let him reconstruct the scene in his imagination, let him meditate on its profound significance, let him respond to the finer impulses which stir within him, and for him there will come a new significance to the whole Christmas season.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, December 22, 1929.

TOPIC: "How Christmas Sets the Whole World Singing."—Luke 2:1-14.

Some Bible Hints.

When a child is born, new possibilities enter into the world. He will create something—sorrow or joy (v. 7).

The song of the angels had a great message. It was not mere jazz or noises, but profound sense (v. 10).

Song sometimes comes out of sorrow, but more of it comes out of joy. When a soul is exalted and happy, it is natural to praise (v. 10).

The angels praised God because all good comes from Him. The first songs should be songs of praise—not of man, but of God (v. 13).

Suggestive Thoughts.

We do not sing when our hearts are contracted with fear. We sing when they are expanded by love. Hence, the Christmas songs.

Christmas makes us sing of salvation. That may mean different things to different people, but to all it means something good and beautiful.

Angels set an example in Christmas song, because they understand the deep significance of Christmas so much better than we do.

Good will, which Christmas stands for, puts the soul into a singing mood. Men have sung at Christmastide from sheer happiness without understanding the real meaning of Christmas.

A Few Illustrations.

In the middle ages a truce was proclaimed each Christmastide and all warfare (and there was plenty of it) ceased. Songs took the place of swords.

The human heart is like a lyre; it is made for song, and especially for a song of good will and brotherhood. We can sing brotherhood into men's souls easier than beat it in.

Great songs must be based on great themes. There is no jazz in the angels' song. It deals with eternal truth.

A musical instrument may yield divine music, but the instrument knows nothing about it. So, often do we fail to realize the meaning of the words we sing. Let us sing with the understanding.

To Think About.

What is your favorite Christmas song?

What great truths stand out in our Christmas songs?

Are the new Christmas songs as good as the old? Why?

RALLY DAY OFFERINGS.

The Board of Christian Education of the Southern Christian Convention is very grateful to those Churches, Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies which have made contributions to our work as a result of the offering on "Rally Day." It is by means of these offerings that the Board is able to continue the work. This is our only source of income except funds from the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions.

During this year we have received rally day offerings from the Churches listed below. We understand that other schools have made offerings. If your school is not listed below, please see that the offering is sent to Mr. C. H. Stephenson, 120 W. Martin St., Raleigh, N. C.

JEWEL TRUITT.

HALF-MINUTE SERMON.

"Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth: therefore, despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty."—Job 5:17.

Trials are also God's trust. Job's trial is the great example. When a man has a trial he is very apt to turn around and say, "Now, I wonder what God is angry with me for; I wonder for what God is punishing me." My brother, God knows that you can stand that trial; He would not give it to you if you could not. It is His trust in you that explains the trials of life, however bitter they may be. God knows our strength and He measures it to the last inch, and a trial was never given to any man that was greater than that man's strength, through God, to bear it.—John Kelman.

DECEMBER FIFTEENTH.

By DR. W. H. DENISON, Sec'y.

This should be a day long to be remembered in your Church. The spiritual tide should reach its highest at that time. It should be a time of most earnest prayer. The service of enlistment of stewards should be a most inspiring one. There should be no failure in any Church, Sunday School, class or group to actually enroll tithers. Christians need to become enrolled tithers infinitely more than your cause needs their funds. Tithing is not a matter of supporting causes nearly so much as it is a spiritual affair of the life. Stewardship teaching will amount to but very little unless there is an actual enrollment. Every Church should have a "Tithers' League," with a very simple but responsible organization. We have tithers' enrollment cards and league charts free for the asking.

What Our Workers are Doing and Saying.

Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, Va.: "We are using the Layman Company's bulletins for Sunday services. Sermons on stewardship and Church finance are preached. Similar topics are discussed at the mid-week service. Pamphlets are distributed. The needs of the Church are presented both at public services and through the mails. People are asked to work, pray, and give for the sake of Christ and His Church."

Goshen, Ind., Church, Rev. Archie H. Hook, pastor, is emphasizing stewardship in the following six ways:

- 1. Missionary society using "Some Stewardship Pillars," as recommended by the Mission Board.
2. Young people's department using series of six stewardship devotion programs for their worship period in support of the Congress Stewardship rallies.
3. Alumni Christian Endeavor studying "The Message of Stewardship," by Cushman.
4. Series of six stewardship sermons.
5. Stewardship message in Church calendar each week.
6. Prayer meeting, "Quest Period." Individuals bringing stewardship problems and questions for discussions.

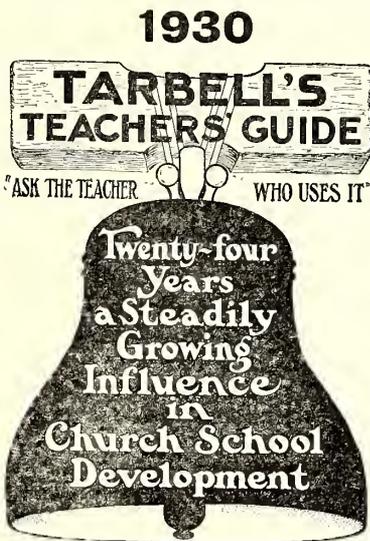

General Council Items.

Actual steps are being taken in harmony with the class of union adopted at Piqua. The two general secretaries who edit the Church year-books, were instructed to combine the same at the earliest possible date. They held a conference November 25th and found no insurmountable obstacles, and it now appears likely that there will be one publication this year.

The plan of union authorized the joint commission (the Commission on Interchurch relations and the Commission on Christian Unity) to appoint an advisory commission "to assist conferences, associations, conventions and Churches on all matters involved in the readjustment of their organizations, legal affairs and programs, in line with this plan of union; this commission to be empowered to appoint local commissions for such adjustments whenever and wherever occasion may cause and such advice be sought." The joint commission has been at work. Each denomination will have seven members on it. The seven appointed from the Christian Church are Revs. F. G. Coffin, Warren H. Denison, Frank H. Gardner, Roy C. Helfenstein, J. A. Henderson, Chas. H. Rowland, and Mr. John V. Sees. I do not have the Congregational list at hand. This advisory commission is at work forming some general suggestive principles that may well help any group that desires suggestive aid.

The first meeting of the Executive Committee of the General Council (composed of sixteen Congregational members and four Christian members) has been held and various matters considered. The location of the first meeting of the General Council in 1931 was deferred for further study. A program committee for the same was elected. The Christian Church members of this committee are the President and Secretary of the Convention and Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

EPI TAPHIS.

"Ye are our glory and our joy."—1 Thess. 2:13-20.

Not every epitaph is a true one, and some epitaphs are so far from the reality as to be absurd; but there is one in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, to which all the world gives heartfelt assent. It reads as follows: "Major-General Gordon, who at all times, everywhere, gave his strength to the weak, his substance to the poor, his sympathy to the suffering, his heart to God; he died at Khartoum, 26th January, 1885."

General Gordon was a Christian hero, a most sincere follower of the Saviour, and of him as of his divine Commander it may be said that he "went about doing good." He was writing this noble epitaph all his life long, and all mankind would subscribe to it.

Paul paid the Thessalonian Christians a glorious tribute when he said that they were his glory and his joy. He was composing their epitaph while they were living, and that is the way true epitaphs are written. That is the way the people around us are writing our epitaphs from day to day.

Prayer—May we so live, our Father, that when we leave this world the verdict on our living, from men and angels and from Thee, the Infinite Judge, shall be that it was good. At all times and everywhere may we help the weak, the poor, and the suffering, and keep our hearts true to Thee. In Christ's name. Amen.

TUESDAY.

DROPPING AWAY.

"He serve in newness of the spirit."—Rom. 7:1-6.

There are two ways of getting rid of old, dead leaves that hang on a tree. One is by pulling them off one by one, with enormous trouble and pains; the other is by letting the new buds of the spring, forced out by the upleaping sap, push off the old leaves and put vigorous, lovely green leaves in their place.

Now, no one tries to go over an oak tree and pick off its dead leaves; but many a man is silly enough to do this with regard to the dead, dry things of his spiritual life, his sins. But the only way to get rid of a dead and barren past is by getting a fresh present and a hopeful future. Let the life of Christ course through your veins. Let the power of Christ bathe your being. Get into the vitalizing current of God's providence. Throw yourself with all your heart into the work that God wants you to do. And as you begin to bring forth new fruit, the old incubi will drop off, and the winds of heaven will whirl them away to oblivion. The Christian life is not a process of throwing away or of giving up; it is a process of taking on and of giving out.

Prayer.—Infinite Giver of life, we open our hearts to Thee. Enter as the full tide of spring. Crowd every channel with vitality. Bless us with Thyself so completely that there shall be no room for anything not Thyself. Amen.

WEDNESDAY

BEING STILL.

"Stand still, and see the salvation of Jehovah." "Their strength is to sit still." "Be still, and know that I am God."—Ex. 14:13, 14; Isa. 30:7 (A. V.); Psa. 46:10.

Margaret Bottome brought together those three sentences, and said concerning them, "You may depend upon it, God never says to us, 'Stand still,' or 'Sit still,' or 'Be still,' unless He is going to do something."

We need to remember this when life comes to a sudden halt, when we are apparently making no progress, when all our plans fail and our hopes collapse and depressing stagnation settles down upon us. Those still times are among the very hardest we have to endure.

But when we are kept still, God is marching on before. He is selecting ground for a fresh advance. Soon He will summon us to go on where He is, and launch out in a new campaign. We can well afford to bide His time.

Do not forget Paul's experience in his second missionary journey. He wanted to reach out into fresh territory. He longed for the great city of Ephesus, but the Holy Spirit told him not to go there. He longed for Bithynia to the north, but the Spirit bade him keep away from there. So he stopped in Troas and waited for orders, and they came in the Macedonian vision which sent him over into Europe on the greatest advance that Christianity ever made.

Prayer.—Lord, it pays us to stand still. How often we have found our strength in sitting still. How often, by being still, we have come into a deeper knowledge of Thee and of Thy ways. May we learn the power of Thy quiet, and ever hear Thy still, small voice. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A PRESENT LOVER.

"Unto him that loveth us."—Rev. 1:1-7.

Dr. Cleland B. McAfee calls our attention to this change of tense, in the old version "loved," and in the new translation "loveth." He says that the reason why so many lives are anxious and fretful is because they lack a realization of Christ's present love and power. They are living in the old version, letting Christ's love be a completed, past-tense fact; what they need is to get over into the revised version, and know the present love of the Saviour.

Is Christ dead? Or has the risen Christ so joined Himself to your soul that He is a daily Companion, the divine and most real Partner of all your undertakings? The answer will show what kind of Christian you are, or whether you should really be called a Christian at all.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, Thou hast loved us in the past, and hast died for us. By virtue of that love and that death, Thou art still loving us, still crucified for us. Oh, may our love for Thee be as steady and persistent as Thy love for us! Amen.

FRIDAY.

ON THE SIDE OF THE TEMPTED.

"God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will, with the temptation, make also the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it."—1 Cor. 10:1-13.

Who is struggling against temptation? Let him never for an instant forget that God has pledged His fidelity on his side. God has said that otherwise He Himself would not be faithful.

If you hate sin and fear the tempter, God will take your stand against him and will not allow the arch enemy to tempt you more than you can stand.

Note the way in which God provides our safety. Note that in the very temptation itself He sets a way out, in the very trap of the tempter He hides a rescue, so that the evil one is made to defeat himself. To God's child, while he is fighting sin, sin grows ever more and more despicable, his nature turns ever more strongly against it, he fears it more as he realizes its awful power, and his instinctive prayer to God is the ladder that lifts him out of the pit.

Prayer.—Daily and hourly, our Saviour, we need to be saved from sin. Thou who hast made the eternal sacrifice once for all, extend it to us continually, for we are in constant peril. If the tempter leave us, it is only for a season. In his next onslaught, be Thou by our side! Amen.

SATURDAY.

READY FOR SLANDER.

"Every neighbor will go about with slanders."—Jer. 9:1-9.

Jeremiah longed for a "lodge in some vast wilderness," that he might escape from his slanderous people, who bent their tongues for falsehood as if they were bows. Many a man since Jeremiah has entertained the same desire.

Slander is one of the worst harms that one man can do another. Slander is murder, murder of reputation, murder of influence, murder of peace. Slander often slays body as well as spirit.

Innocence is not always proof against the slanderer, for those who hear the slander will not investigate its truth. If men were all true Christians, there could be no sting in slander; it would fall as harmless as from the ears of a deaf man. "Love thinketh no evil." As we have love in our hearts, we cannot admit slander. Love is a steel fortress from which the arrows of slander fall back broken and ashamed.

Prayer.—Grant us the spirit of love, O Thou, loving Christ. May we speak no evil, think no evil, listen to no evil. When slanderers approach us, help us to rebuke and repulse them. May we be eager to believe all good things of all men. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE JOY OF FINISHING A TASK.

"He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied."—Isa. 53:7-12.

One of the superior joys of life is finishing a worthy task; and the nobler the task, the greater the joy. Looked at in this light, how exalted must have been Christ's satisfaction when on the cross He could say, "It is finished."

In anything, the longer the toil the more oppressive the burden, and the severer the difficulties surmounted, the more delightful will be our satisfaction when we see the work gloriously ended. It is our privilege to so work that we shall know when we have finished. A task may lie in a field that seems at first to be vague and misty, like the conquest of a bad habit; but clear insight will reveal the outlines of the work to be done, and as we persist in it we shall come to have a sharp understanding of what we are trying to do, and shall know with great joy when we, with Christ's aid, have done it.

Prayer.—Yes, with Thy aid, O Christ! By ourselves we can finish no worthy task. Thou alone can complete the good work in us and through us. Be Thou with us the Strengthened, the Worker and the Finisher. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

All our Churches are expected to make our special Thanksgiving offering one Sunday in December. We truly hope each Church and Sunday School will feel that much interest in the 120 children in its orphanage to make an offering to help support them. Remember, when you give your money to support the orphanage you are not giving your money away, but you are making an investment in human life and human character. If you should not be at Church the day the offering is taken, won't you be so kind as to take a family offering and send it direct to us, and we will be glad to give you and your Church credit for it. We ought to get 500 such offerings between now and Christmas, and our friends who are interested in us will have to come to our rescue if we reach our goal by January 1st. We must reach it.

One of our boys is in the U. S. Navy, in China. We had a letter from him this week, and among many other things he had to say, he said this: "I am proud of what the orphanage did for me. It is the only home I can remember." The orphanage took the boy when a little tot and reared him to young manhood. It is the only home he can remember. He still loves his home.

Our financial report this week carries us to $19,335.57. We must raise $10,664.43 by January 1st to reach our goal. If I saw you when you needed help, I would be delighted to help you if it was in my power to do so. I need your help now. It may cost you a few dollars to help me reach this goal, but you may save a child to society and help make a good citizen. Freely you have received; freely give. Send us personal contributions—five dollars, ten dollars, or any other amount you feel in your heart you want to give. Help us now.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

The First Congregational-Christian Merger

Finally, Brethren

Dear Members of the Christian Church:

For weeks I have used this page in the interests of your College in Wadley, Alabama, one of the two that serve your Church in the vast Southeast. I have shown—

(1) That it is a field of unparalleled need and opportunity in all America.

(2) That it has a well-located property worth, as it is, $100,000; but that it imperatively needs $50,000 more with which to complete it and make it not only ready for its far-reaching work, but worthy of the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention, whose it is and who have voted to support it.

(3) That the Congregational Churches have already furnished their College with which your College is now educationally associated with a plant worth $500,000, and are now adding $2,000,000 to endowment and plant, as their share in this united educational work for the great Southeast.

For the past few weeks I have left standing a plain statement of the case that I thought would move the hearts of the members of the Christian Churches.

But I have not succeeded. Evidently I do not know your hearts. I have secured hundreds of thousands of dollars from Congregationalists for needs and work just like this; and I anticipated a hearty response from you.

I wish scores of you would write me, telling what I have said or failed to say that would have reached your hearts. Wherein have I blundered? I am determined not to give up your College at Wadley, for I believe in it, in Dr. Beougher, and in his fine faculty. I want to know the reason of my failure, for I must find the way to succeed. If you hesitate to tell me the truth about my failure, please write Dr. Beougher and give him the facts; for he and I are going to save and complete PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE if we can find any way to do it.

Yours in conscious defeat,

FRANK E. JENKINS,
President Board of Trustees, Demorest, Ga.

P. S.: When you write Dr. Beougher, please inclose a check, if you can, to encourage him and the faculty.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

knows that if he shall seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, all these things shall be added unto him.

It is fine to have lots of property, but what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and then lose his soul? It is better to live each day than to be overanxious about the future. If God so clothe the birds of the air, how much more will He care for His own children. Come, let us go to the King's table.

Eats as King's Son.

3. Sonship. "As for Mephibosheth, he shall eat at my table as one of the king's sons." Mephibosheth is called forth and given the property that is justly due him; for all this he is gratefully thankful. But something more awaits him from the king's table. It is one of the greatest fruits that ever grew—sonship. David made Mephibosheth to become an inmate of his own household, gave him a place at his table, just as though he were one of his own sons. And that he might not be embarrassed with having the land, above mentioned, to care for, he entrusts it to Ziba, his servant. Every arrangement that was possible for his comfort was made. The fact that he was a cripple did not debar him from a place as son, nor did it deprive him of a place of honor at the royal table. David loved him for his affliction, just as much as if he had been well and strong. Regard for outward appearance was swallowed up by a high regard for what was right and just. David had never before shown such profound love for God as when he made this unfortunate to become a son. The same principle that led David to make Mephibosheth to become a son, led God to send forth His Son in search of the crippled and the lame and bring them home to the King's table. The Son of God came to seek and to save.

Today you and I might become sons of God and joint heirs with Him. The invitation is, "Come." The table is spread and the Father is calling us home. Let us go and feast at his table, and there enjoy the rich fruits of a King's table.

DISASTROUS WORK OF THE WEEVILS.

Some four weeks ago we spoke of the possibilities of a large cotton crop in Georgia, provided the weevils did not attack it. At that time South Georgia had the finest prospects for a cotton crop in many years. But the rains came, and with the rain came the weevils. And today it is a sad spectacle to ride through South Georgia and see vast stretches of fine cotton stalks, bare of bolls and stripped of all squares and blossoms. In the upper portion of the State there will be some cotton made. A few counties have fine prospects. Carroll County, for instance, will likely make a banner yield. But for the most part, Georgia cotton farmers are again defeated by the weevil. Our hearts go out to those good people who have worked hard and hopefully. Maybe another year will bring better seasons. We will hope so, earnestly, and pray God's blessings upon these friends who have been disappointed this year.

OBITUARIES.

DARDEN.

Clarissa Ann Darden was born in Nansmond County, Va., near the Holy Neck Christian Church, July 25, 1861. She died at the home of her sister, Mrs. Eva Hines, Franklin, Va., November 8, 1929.

At a very early age, she united with the Holy Neck Christian Church and was a faithful member there until a few years before her death, when she transferred her membership to the Franklin Church. Miss Darden was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elisha and Nancy Darden, who were members of long standing at the Holy Neck Church. Miss Clarissa is survived by two sisters, Mrs. R. B. Eure and Eva Hines, of Franklin, and one brother, W. B. Darden, of Suffolk, Va.

Funeral services were conducted at the home of Mrs. Hines by her pastor, Rev. J. W. Fix, assisted by her former pastors, Rev. F. C. Lester and Dr. N. G. Newman. She was laid to rest in the Poplar Spring Cemetery, of Franklin, on Sunday afternoon, November 10, 1929.

J. W. FIX.

BELL.

Mrs. Mary Eliza Rawles Bell died at the home of her stepson, Joseph Bell, Petersburg, Va., November 17, 1929, just thirteen days of being eighty years of age. She was a daughter of the late Randolph and Kitty Miltzer Rawles, of Holy Neck community, in Nansmond County. She married Benjamin Bell, of Ivor, Va., April 18, 1888. She leaves six grandchildren, one stepson, two brothers, David, of Portsmouth, Va., and Braxton, of Georgia, and a very large number of nieces and nephews.

Mrs. Bell was a member of Ivor Christian Church. Her life was characterized by her gentleness of spirit, quiet faith, and trust in God and good will and kind deeds to those among whom she loved.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer and Rev. C. E. Geringer at the home of her niece, Miss Lydia Daughtrey, Franklin, Va., and the interment was in the Franklin Cemetery.

Why the Angels Sang!

BY H. H. SMITH.

What was it that moved the heavenly host to sing on the Judean hills, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men"? The advent of the long-promised Messiah was at hand. The prophecies of the centuries were about to be fulfilled. The blessing was to come to "all nations," and those that had walked in darkness so long (the Gentiles especially) were to "see a great light." The house of the Lord established on the mountains should see "all nations flow unto it." The redeemed would be numbered from every point of the compass—"from the East and West, and from the North and South." And the blessing that the Saviour was to bring to the world was not only extensive—to all mankind; it was also intensive: He would "save unto the uttermost." It was to reach both body and soul. He would give them "new hearts" and "bind up the broken-hearted."

If the deliverance of the Jews from Babylon was enough to make the prophet declare that all nature was in such sympathy with the momentous event that even "the mountains and the hills would break forth into singing and all the trees of the field clap their hands for joy," we need not be surprised that angels should come to earth to announce the advent of the Messiah who would bring deliverance from sin to all mankind.

The prophets have not spoken in vain. "From North and South and East and West they come; from every land beneath the sun they come." Turn to the Far North and hear Beck, Edgerton Young, Grenfell, and others tell how those of the frozen North have been transformed by the Gospel of Christ. Among the early missionaries to Greenland was John Beck, a Moravian missionary. The outlook for the success of the Gospel was anything but promising; but, as Dr. A. J. Gordon says, "One seed of the Scripture from his (Beck's) lips—the story of the Saviour's agony in the garden—fell into the heart of a savage by the name of Kajarnak; into a heart all overgrown and choked with the thorns of barbarism, and immediately it germinated and brought forth fruit. The stolid savage became a disciple; the disciple became an evangelist. His dull heart kindled with an astonishing glow, while with flowing tears and resistless pathos he recited to his countrymen the story of the cross. This was the beginning of success in that field, and Kajarnak is counted among the miracles of grace in modern missions.

Now turn from the "icy fields of Greenland to the torrid plains of the Dark Continent," Africa, and hear how Africaner, who was "such an incarinate fiend that he actually made a virtue of cruelty and a diversion of murder, killing men in order to make drum heads of their skins and drinking-cups of their skulls," was reached by the Gospel. Dr. Gordon says: "The audacity of his crimes created a reign of terror throughout the country where he dwelt, and neither savage

"I do not once remember having occasion to be grieved with him or to complain of any part of his conduct; his very faults seemed to lean to virtue's side."

His dying testimony was: "I feel that I love God, and that He has done much for me, of which I am totally unworthy. My former life is stained with blood; but the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." Do we wonder now that "the angels sang"?

Dr. Morrison, a missionary to the Congo, related this incident at a missionary conference a few years ago: "Only a few days before I left Luebo, an old woman about sixty years of age came to the station, and her right arm from her finger-tips to her shoulder was a reeking mass of sores. The bones of the elbow and hand were protruding through the rotten flesh. I asked her what was the matter. She said they accused her of being a witch, and in order to test it compelled her to put her arm into a pot of boiling oil. The poor woman lived along a few weeks, and died in great agony." When we think of the great multitudes that the Gospel of Christ has saved from such inhuman cruelties and superstitions, no wonder "the angels sang"!

The people of Tierra del Fuego were described by Darwin, in 1833, as follows: "The Fuegians are in a more miserable state of barbarism than I ever expected to have seen any human being. The expression of their faces is inconceivably wild, and their tones and gesticulations are far less intelligible than those of domestic animals." Some thirty or forty years later, after missionary efforts, Darwin said: "I certainly should have predicted that not all the missionaries in the world could have done what has been done." Darwin became a contributor to the South American Missionary Society, and, in a letter to the secretary, said: "It is wonderful, and it shames me, as I always predicted failure. It is a grand success. I shall feel proud if your committee think fit to elect me an honorary member of your society." No wonder "the angels sang"!

Think of what Christianity has meant to the world these nineteen hundred years, and we are not surprised that the Heavenly Host came to earth to announce the birth of Christ. We have not yet a warless world, it is true, but hopeful progress is being made toward that goal. When it shall have been reached, as it surely will be, it will be seen that it was brought about by the practice of the principles of the Prince of Peace, of whom "the angels sang."

Advent.

By Richard T. Elliott.

The life of a babe is a tiny place
Where the power of Life breaks through,
To tell to us all of a world beyond,
Above, around and new.
But all may know how that life can grow,
And all responsive be,
When reaching far he pulls ajar
The door of reality.

In Mary's heart and Jesus' life
Is a story old and true,
For the heart of man is pondering still
The secret Jesus knew.
His name on the air blown everywhere
Still quickens a great desire,
His wondrous life in the midst of strife
Lights in all hearts His fire.

The manger-cradle still is here,
Its Occupant of wonder:
Still while it lingers, man and God
Cannot be torn asunder.
In all who live wakes the will to give,
And the joy of the gift which is giving,
And over the earth the Babe and His birth
Awakens the strength of living.

chiefs nor colonial governments had found out any way to tame him. But Robert Moffat went to him in spite of earnest warnings to the contrary. He conquered him, not with carnal weapons, but with the living Word. The germ-principle of that Word being implanted in his heart, a whole harvest of sweet and Christ-like virtues sprang up. The demon of cruelty became a meek disciple of Christ, and such a disciple that Moffat was able to say of him, concerning the whole time of his association with him after his conversion,

NOTES-PERSONALS

A Merry and a Happy Christmas to all SUN readers.

There will be no CHRISTIAN SUN next week. The week of Christmas is observed by our publishers and workers, and we should not begrudge them their Christmas rest and festivities.

Rev. W. H. Garman, pastor of Old Zion Church, Norfolk, and Rev. H. C. Caviness, pastor of our First Church, Portsmouth, were welcome visitors at THE SUN office Tuesday of this week.

"Christmas is a great interpreter of the beautiful. It shows the real values of time and eternity. The commonplace becomes exceptional—the simplest words of appreciation put us in a kind of rhapsody, and the ordinary scene becomes dramatic, historic, lovely, eternal."

After April 1, 1930, Mr. Hermon Eldredge, now managing editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, becomes associate editor of The Congregationalist and the Herald of Gospel Liberty. Bro. Eldredge is an incessant worker and a man of deep consecration and superb energy, and will carry merit, experience and enthusiasm into his great task.

One of the most esteemed and beloved members of the General Board of the Christian Church, meeting at Dayton, Ohio, last week, is our own beloved and trusted Dr. W. W. Staley. For more than thirty years now Dr. Staley, we believe, without a break, has attended every meeting of the General Board and served with great wisdom and worth on the Board of Publications, of which he is a member and has been throughout these three decades.

"I have been a reader of THE SUN for about five (5) years; have always enjoyed reading it. But not so much as I have this year, for it has been spiritual food to me all of the year through. I want to take this opportunity of thanking all of the writers, and wishing you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. May God's richest blessings be with you all. (Signed) W. L. Bayette, Hopewell, Va." The managing and editorial staff of THE SUN appreciate such letters as the one above. They give them the courage to go forward with what, at times, may seem to be a hard task.

According to The Congregationalist, there are in the Southeastern States (covering the territory of the Southern Christian Convention), 128 Congregational Churches, with a total membership of 7,857, a Sunday School enrollment of 6,413, and property valuations amounting to $1,140,730. In the same paper, it is stated that the Southern Christian Convention is composed of seven Conferences, made up of 227 Christian Churches, with a Church membership of 32,000, with Church buildings, plant and equipment valued at $2,124,159. This valuation does not include the plant and equipment of Elon College, estimated at a cost and value of $1,177,719.70 and an endowment of $533,000.53.

Our Christian fellowship is great. Some of us have to travel a long way to go to Dayton, Ohio, once a year and spend days together in trying unitedly to solve problems that are difficult, indeed, to solve, and to make programs which will mean Church progress, soul-saving and the enlargement of the kingdom. And yet all the hardships of travel and all the trials of toil, the sleepless nights and output of nervous energy, are all more than compensated for in the enjoyment of Christian fellowship. The Christian Church has men of great hearts as well as of big heads, of noble souls as well as of wide wisdom, of great outlook as well as of rich experience, whose acquaintance it is a joy to have, and whose minds and counsels it is a blessing and a benefit to witness and to share. To sit down at the council table with good and great souls, consecrated to the single task of promoting friendship and fellowship and salvation through Jesus Christ, and to take counsel about the things that pertain to local, to community, to national and international and world-wide welfare and friendship, is a privilege for which much has to be paid, but which, at any price, is worth the cost, for it brings enlargement of souls, a sharpening of intellect, and a spiritual revival.

The meeting of the General Boards, in Dayton, Ohio, last week was an event in our Church life as all who attended can testify. Four days of intense, consecrated and strenuous service were given to the consideration and working out of problems looking to the perfection of union with the Congregationalists, as voted by the General Convention at Piqua in October. It will take months to bring the machinery of the two Churches together, but everything can be done is being done by both Churches to unite the forces of the two in publications, in education, in missions, and in kingdom enlargement. It was found in a practical working-out of our plans for union that the proposals of the Congregationalists made at the Piqua Convention, October 25th, have, in a large measure, been acted upon by the various boards of the Congregationalists, and that the spirit of fellowship and confidence and liberality which characterized the original proposals, obtain so far in every detail of the work. For example, the Congregationalists are willing to merge their national organ, The Congregationalist, with our national organ, The Herald of Gospel Liberty, only on condition that the name of both publications and the writers on both publications be kept in tact. Again, the Congregationalists are ready for us to come in with them in supporting missionaries in the Philippines, in China, in India, in Africa, on condition that they come in, to an equal extent, with us in supporting our mission work in Japan and Porto Rico. Members of the united boards are made up of members of boards already obtaining in the two Churches before union was effected. There is no disposition on the part of Christians or Congregationalists, so far as we have learned anywhere, to interfere in the least with local congregations, local autonomy, local authority and activity. Christian Churches will remain Christian Churches, Congregational Churches will remain Congregational Churches, but from henceforth Congregationalists and Christians will not compete, but will unite in building Churches where Churches are needed, in building colleges where colleges are needed, in planting Sunday Schools where Sunday Schools are needed, and in carrying the gospel where the gospel is needed. And the results of these union efforts will be The United Church.

REVIVAL SERVICES.

We take pleasure in letting the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN know of our efforts to accomplish the will and work of the good Lord and of our thankfulness to Him for His continued blessings.

We began our revival at Smithwood the fourth Sunday in August, with Rev. W. J. Edwards, of High Point, N. C., doing the preaching. The interest was good from the beginning, as usual at Smithwood, and Bro. Edwards brought uplifting and soul-stirring messages. Appreciative audiences were large at all services. The spirit of co-operation was fine, and all seemed to forget denominations and to think only of "Jesus and Him crucified." He was wonderfully good to us. As we obey the Spirit, He always crowns our efforts with success. There were twenty-two conversions, nineteen uniting with the Church.

From Smithwood we went to Randleman the second Sunday night in September to begin our revival there. Here we were met by a large audience of souls hungry for the gospel of Christ, with a yearning desire to reach those out of Christ. I have never met a people who were better equipped through prayer and consecration than our Randleman people, and I believe all who have attended our regular prayer services that are held every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock will agree with me. It is something wonderful to attend one of these services and see the large crowds who gather there, let the Spirit have His way in their lives, giving testimonies of their rich experiences with Christ as their saviour. Many places that pastors go they either have to do the praying themselves or be careful whom to call upon to lead in prayer; but in Randleman we have so many who are eager to lead prayer and we hardly know who to call on. We appreciate that as pastors, and often feel we are unworthy to be their pastor. We have learned to love them during our year's work with them. Having accepted this invitation to remain pastor this coming year, we are praying God that we may do His will toward Him.

Rev. J. W. Knight came to our assistance on Monday night with purely gospel sermons and was with us through Friday night. It seemed that the spirit of unity of God's people in this meeting was as near perfection as we could expect, all forgetting their Church affiliation, coming together for the great purpose of our Lord to worship Him in deed and in truth. I have never witnessed so many denominations working together in a revival for the one great cause as we had here.

The Lord moved upon us in mysterious ways His wonders to perform. One could not attend one of these services without realizing the presence of the Lord.

As we did not feel Friday night the meeting should close, the pastor did the preaching through Sunday night. On the following Monday, Rev. Charles Young, of the Baptist Church, came to assist the remainder of the meeting, which closed the following Sunday night. The gospel messages of Bro. Young were very much appreciated by all present and were the gospel of salvation to all who would accept. This being Bro. Young's first time to preach for us, we both, pastor and people, formed ties to be broken only by death. Souls were born into His kingdom at almost every service, there being fifty-three conversions in all. May the God of grace who is rich in blessings watch over and care for those who have entrusted their lives to Him. We are hoping that arrangements can be made for an even greater revival this coming summer for Randleman.

We take this method of thanking the people whom we have served there for their hearty support and co-operation in our efforts to build up the spirit of unity among all denominations with whom we have been working and visiting. We take great pleasure in going into the homes of all and trying to make them feel we are their servant. The Lord bless and care for them all.

PEOPLE WHO GREET THE INFANT JESUS.

BY DR. R. C. GILLIE.

"And there were shepherds in the same country abiding in the field, and keeping watch by night over their flock."—Luke 2:8.

"Now, when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the King, behold, wise men from the East came to Jerusalem."—Matt. 2:1.

"And behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and this man was righteous and devout, looking for the consolation of Israel."—Luke 2:25.

There was a poor welcome for the Christ Child, but it is a mistake to say there was none. There were a few watchers for the dawn, and there were others who, though unexpectant, were ready to greet Him when the tiding of His birth came. Those who "waited for the consolation of Israel" were on the watch-tower in the temple at Jerusalem; the star-gazers of Chaldea were scanning the skies for some token of hope, and the Shepherds of Bethlehem, these sentinels of the night, startled by the great news in the midst of ordinary service, hastened to the Babe in the manger.

It is noteworthy that the three groups who gathered round the Infant Christ each represented a different class and a different type of mankind. To each group a differing token of the new Presence was granted.

The Shepherds represent the toilers of earth, men who work with their hands and have most to do with the physical side of life. To them was given the sign most readily recognized—the angel's glory and the angels' song. It was a sign to eye and ear and mind, impossible to mistake.

There is something akin between the gospel and the worker. Jesus chose His comrades from among fishermen, men of toil; and it was shepherds who were the favored ones of earth on the first Christmas Day. In the path of honest labor there is a place where God can speak to man. There is nothing artificial about the normal life of a working man, no invitation to idleness or fastidiousness. He is honestly hungry, rightfully weary, helping to get the work of the world done. Such are the people to whom Christ can make His appeal.

The second group who hailed our Lord's coming were the "wise men of the East." Who were they? Little we know of them, but this is clear: they were students who were also seekers. These were men on the alert, searching the skies and the records, inquiring for the truth of things in unfamiliar ways denied to many. They were investigators, the scientific men of the time, pondering the old, watching for the new.

They were also venturers, not only refusing the closed mind, but also willing to launch on a great quest. Imagination was their method as well as investigation. They were ready for any clue, wherever it might lead them. That is the picture of the higher scientific mind. At the best, it is bold as well as cautious, awake to every token of the truth. Otherwise, radium and the X-ray and chloroform would not have been added to men's possessions. Routine scientists abound. But the best are seekers who are prepared to make ventures.

Men say that the thinkers have deserted the Church. It is not true today. Pascal and Pasteur, Clerk Maxwell and Lord Kelvin all died in the faith which is celebrated on Christmas Day. But the Church has often failed to welcome the "wise men" and has doubted their gifts. This is one of its heavy shames. It has been afraid of knowledge, faint-hearted about truth. It has shrunk from the new unfolding of the wonders of God's earth and sky. The Church has the right to refuse to be stampeded. All that professes to be discovery is not truth. But the Church must unflinchingly believe that all truth is one as God is one. The open mind must be maintained on all questions concerning which there is no unmistakable revelation from God. There must be a welcome for the thinkers as well as the toilers.

There was a third group to greet the Infant Jesus. It consisted of those aged, devout people, deeply religious and with a special quality in their faith. They "waited for the consolation of Israel," they "looked for the redemption of Jerusalem." Simeon and Anna were the elect of the nation. God had whispered in their ear. They knew a great deliverer was at hand. Other Jews were excited at the thought of the possibility of a Messiah. They knew.

One ponders them. They were the people with the unconquerable hope, though so old. Their expectation came wholly from the unseen. Their whole life was devotion, prayer, and yet more prayer. Removed from earth's toils and struggles, half in heaven already, they had developed a rare spiritual sensitiveness, an unshakable religious certainty.

Their successors are still among us. These are people with simple hearts, often unknown to fame, whose chief interest is God and God's way with men. They have the forward look, for much intercourse with God creates expectancy. To them, Christ is akin and they bear witness to what God is to be to mankind. They keep open the doors whereby God can communicate with men, help us to believe in the Unseen, and give us spiritual courage. Wise, very wise, they are with the wisdom of the child's heart and the mature mind. They cannot argue for their faith, but their testimony is unimpeachable and carries a rare power of conviction with it. Blessed the Church which possesses such saints who are also watchers for the dawn.

Where can Jesus Christ look for new welcomes today? He is ever seeking to enter the heart of man and to be born anew within each human soul. The toiler may say, "I have no time to investigate, and much is uncertain," but our Lord suits His signs and tokens to our need. Where there is an honest and wistful heart, His message can come as certainly as the angel-message from the skies.

The thinker may find Christ approach him in another way. He may say to himself, "I cannot easily pray; I must ponder, study, investigate. I am staggered by this assertion that God became man. It is too great to be easily believed." But there is no star to lead you, no manifestation in your mind to guide you on the way? What if it be true that "God grew likest God in being born"? Are your eyes toward the sky?

The naturally Christian for whom prayer is no effort, but a delight, they, too, can give the added welcome on this Christmas Day. Not for your lips complaints and repinings, because of the blessed past; but the steady testimony: "Christ still comes to men. Silently, surely, He enters in. We know."—Advent and Christmas Sermons, Doran Co., Publishers, New York.

ARE MISSIONS ESSENTIAL?

Prof. Searle Bates, of the University of Nanking, who is at the heart of the missionary work of China, has sent the following statement on "Why are Christian Missions Essential?" It is a thorough-going and strong challenge, coming from a very difficult field.

1. It is a natural and necessary function of the Christian Church to give its message and life to every creature, without national or racial limitations.

2. To save itself from selfishness and narrowness, the Church must be alert and diligent in Christian service well outside its immediate community. There is spiritual peril in using most of our "gifts to the Lord" to provide comfortable and attractive services for our own folks.

3. There is especial obligation upon the relatively strong and prosperous Christian groups in western countries, rich in tradition, organization, trained leaders, and material resources, to foster Christian effort in those lands where it is barely beginning, amid poverty of life and money.

4. The people of other countries are in themselves "worth saving." Many of them demonstrate character and possibilities which deserve every quickening and leading that may bring them to their best.

5. The kingdom of God and the very human Church have need of the variety of life and view which may come from peoples as yet almost unrepresented. The Christian world needs new appreciations of Jesus and His message from Indian mysticism and humility, Chinese emphasis of human relations, Japanese simplicity and love of beauty.

6. Much of the earth is in desperate privation of body and of spirit. Hunger and disease, ignorance and harmful superstitions, evil and deceit, selfishness and aimlessness ruin the lives of hundreds of millions. The great compulsion upon the life of Jesus was the overwhelming needs of men. Do we follow Him to meet those needs with every resource we have?

7. The peoples of the world are in contact. What shall be the character of their relationship? It is too often determined by profit-seeking, by warships, by sensational and trouble-making journalism, by tourists who are thoughtless and overbearing spendthrifts. In the high service of missions is the opportunity of Christians to raise the level of world association by the power of helpfulness and mutual regard.—World Call.

Premier Mussolini, in a speech to a gathering of war veterans, which was a glorification of war as well as a tribute to the veterans themselves, declared that "the effectiveness of any disarmament scheme is doubted all over the world," inasmuch as "nobody among the peace talkers is frankly and effectively disarming." He declared further that in the event of war he would apply some of his own theories, the first of which is "to shoot those defeatists who talk against war."

In striking contrast to Mussolini's utterances is the following statement of Prime Minister MacDonald on his return from America: "I believe sincerely that my meeting with President Hoover and my conversations with him and with other United States statesmen have brought our two peoples much closer together and improved enormously their mutual understanding. My mission has also, I am convinced, paved the way for more effectual co-operation with the other powers in maintaining the peace of the world. Strong in this conviction, I feel that thus far the purpose of my mission has been fulfilled, and that the way is now cleared for the next steps."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

NOT GIVEN TO SEE THE STAR.

*It was not given me to see the star,
Whose splendor flooded old Judea's plains;
Nor was it given me to hear the strains
Of music when, with Heaven's door ajar,
Bright angels sang the glorious words that are Still echoing their "Peace, good will" refrain,
Not mine to journey with the Majis' trains
And bring the Infant King gifts from afar.*

*But it is mine, today, amid the throng,
To keep a Christmas candle burning bright
To symbolize the star that told His birth;
Mine to repeat the angels' deathless song;
Mine, mine to give a gift, however slight,
In memory of God's great gift to earth!*

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS AND GLADNESS.

No scholar, composer, writer has been able to improve upon the following record and description of the first Christmas, and the event that started the world on its way to the present widespread celebration of the event. The description was written by a physician of the time, Dr. Luke, and so well is this event described that no Christmas is complete without first reading it:

"And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed. (And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was Governor of Syria.) And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city. And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem (because he was of the house and lineage of David) to be taxed, with Mary, his espoused wife, being great with child. And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered. And she brought forth her first-born Son, and wrapped Him in swaddling clothes, and laid Him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn. And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And, lo! the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone around about them; and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:1-11).

Because of what has come of this event, and the fruit it has borne, one knows that Luke's testimony was true and his description accurate. No human event, however significant or insignificant in origin, has ever reached such proportions and produced such results as the event Luke describes. With what strange and divine simplicity, God initiates great measures and movements in the world. When He originates an event of worldwide, or universal, proportions, He begins with an individual. The most individualistic ceremony in this world is Christmas. It isn't a resolution of "the social order," or the movement of "a group" or an "organization." Christmas is tremendously personal, intensely individualistic. It all began with a Person. That Person dominates the whole situation and movement. He was of humble origin, and the world at the time took little notice of Him, and they had no room for Him in the ordinary inns or hotels. He was born in a manger.

At this Christmas time we will hear group singing, we will gather in our groups to celebrate and hear great sermons, and to share the fellowship of others. But all this celebration will be in honor of a Person, and where there is genuine celebration, it will be the offering of individual honest and sincere, they ought not to celebrate hearts and the service of personal touch. "It is more blessed to give than to receive"; therefore, individuals will make their gifts as their hearts go out in gladness and good wishes to all around about them. Thousands and millions who will not have the privilege of going to a Church or hearing a sermon, will celebrate Christmas in their own individual way. Many will desecrate the day and will forget the power of the Personality who gave us Christmas, but all of every walk and class, remote and far, will join in glad acclaim to the Child about whom Luke speaks with such accuracy and vividness. The world of skeptics, agnostics and atheists may say they doubt Christ; but they cannot doubt Christmas, for it is here in all of its fullness, glee and gladness. And Christmas came from Christ. It has come out of Him. It has come because of Him. It has come in honor of Him. It has come to glorify Him. It has come to exalt Him. It has come to declare Him. If the atheists, agnostics and skeptics were Christmas; they ought to have nothing to do with it. And one of the sad events of the world today is the announcement in the papers that Soviet Russia has decreed against any celebration or festivity that will mark or emphasize Christmas. In order to counteract the spirit and celebration of the day, that government proposes to hold anti-religious celebrations and festivities. The children of Russia are to be given plays, picnics, frolic and fun that will divert their minds and the attention of the nation from Christmas. Soviet Russia is in a pathetic plight and is trying to do the impossible. That government can no more stop, by fiat and decree, the flow of Christmas cheer and gladness than one could stop the onrush of Niagara by casting into that plunging flood a log or a brush. The flood of Christmas cheer and joy flows over the world, and the stream has gone too far, and is now too deep to be stopped by any sort of human attitude or activity.

It is a day of personal greeting and joy and gladness. The song of the angels will sing itself through a million voices, and the star of hope will again shine out through the darkness of the night to point, with accuracy, the way for the pilgrims of the night to a better and a gladder day.

Glorious is Christmas, for in it we glorify the name that is above every name, and the one altogether lovely. J. O. A.

THE CHURCHES AND CHRISTMAS.

The Churches of Christendom, especially Protestant Churches, may celebrate Christmas this year with genuine praise and gratitude. The Prince of Peace goes marching on, and truly the Babe of Bethlehem who gave us Christmas is leading in the way of tolerance and brotherly love among the Churches and peoples of the world. It was He who so earnestly and fervently prayed to the Father, "That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me."

There was more progress made and more effort put forth during the year 1929 in unifying the Churches and forces of Christendom than in any previous year. There is not a great Church or communion of Protestantism in the United States that has not debated the matter of Christian union, and in most instances overtures for Christian union, with one or more bodies, have been made. So thick and fast have these overtures and proposals come that they cannot be enumerated. Episcopal Churches, Presbyterian Churches, Reformed, Methodists, Disciples, Baptists, Lutherans, Christians and Congregationalists have preached union, and have approached union, and have dared face the problem of union of the forces of Christendom. One cannot tell the results or the outcome, but the very spirit of union is in the thinking, writing and speaking of Church people.

So the Churches may chant their glad Hosanna around an uplifted Christ, because the One who was cradled in a manger was also nailed to a cross, having before declared, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." He is drawing men and women, old and young, communions and Churches, groups and sects, congregations and creeds up to Him as the central Figure; and as the various ways and by-ways of the earth lead to the uplifted Christ, they must converge ever closer and closer until the divergent ways have become one, just the converged way—that way which leads as the star of Bethlehem directs: to the Babe of Bethlehem. J. O. A.

THE MAN OF INFLUENCE.

It is not always the man of most learning, wealth, or social position that has the most influence, and makes the most valuable contribution to his day and the world. It may be the man not often appearing on the front page, and whose bank account runs in small figures and whose learning in the classics is limited. A striking evidence of this was the life and contribution to the world of the late General Booth, of the Salvation Army. Writing to the Harvard Theological Review in 1916, Honorable John Morley, English writer and statesman, who had very little in common with Booth, said, "We have all been on the wrong track, and the result is that the whole of us have less to show for their work than one man, Booth of the Salvation Army. Herbert Spencer and Matthew Arnold, Frederick Harrison and the rest of us, who have spent their lives in endeavoring to dispel superstitions and to bring in a new era, have to admit that Booth has had more direct effect upon our generation than all of us put together." That is, indeed, amazing testimony, coming from a man who was of that group of philosophers and scientists the most eminent of their day, who had given their great minds to the fields of scientific truth, and dispelling ignorance.

The same truth is verified through another statement to similar, and even more striking, effect. The names most prominent in Greek learning and philosophy, and conceded by scholars to be the three who made the most pronounced and permanent contribution to human logic and learning are Socrates, Plato, Aristotle. These three immortals wrote and taught for a combined period of about one hundred and fifty years, and during that time revealed such sweep of thought and breadth for learning as never has been surpassed in history. And yet our Lord, the Christ, taught His disciples for the brief period of just three years. In these three years of His earthly teaching, the Man of Galilee made a contribution to the thinking, the scholarship, the uplift of the world, with which the combined teachings and influence of Socrates, Plato and Aristotle are not to be compared. If any one wishes proof of the simple biblical statement, "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation," one has it in this comparison. Human scholarship and human learning make their contributions to departments of life and to certain phases of human experience; divine scholarship and learning, or the Gospel of the Son of God, makes its contribution to the whole of life, and for the benefit of all mankind. He who walks with God and reflects the truth of God, the whole, full truth of God in his life and labors, makes a contribution to the world that is permanent, powerful, eternal. J. O. A.

THE CALLING OF MINISTERS.

There is no more interesting question for those who are interested in the why of things in religion than the situations amid which preachers are born. In so far as we know, there has been no adequate study of the sources from which we get our preachers and missionaries. One cannot, however, escape certain striking facts in even a casual knowledge of the Churches and communities from which preachers come. There are certain Churches that have been prolific in the production of preachers. There are even families from which have come preachers in almost every generation. There are other Churches from which no preacher has ever gone forth. Oftentimes there are Churches that, in every other respect, have made notable contributions to every phase of kingdom service, but that have never sent out of their number men who devote their lives to the preaching of the Word.

Such a consideration as this in which we are engaged does not question the old idea of the divine call to the ministry as it has always been accepted throughout the Church. We are raising the question as to why God calls men to the ministry from certain families, Churches and communities, and does not call them from other sources which, in the eyes of men are equally promising. For certainly there are few in this day and generation who would contend that God bases His calling of men to the ministry upon an arbitrary and reasonless exercise of His divine will. Such an idea is denied by every other manifestation of divine providence.

There must be certain conditions and circumstances in some Churches and communities that produce the type of youth that offers the best material from which the Lord selects those who are to be the proclaimers of his truth. This is especially noticeable in the case of the men and women who have devoted their lives to the work on the mission fields. There are certain colleges and universities from whose ranks large numbers have devoted their lives to mission work, while among other such institutions the selection of mission work as the field of life endeavor is the notable exception.

It is certainly not to be desired or presumed that any one or any institution should usurp the prerogative of the divine call. But it is a just and insistent question as to whether our Churches and our Church institutions are producing young men and young women who are meet for the Master's use. And it seems equally possible to recognize in a general way the conditions that will most likely produce the type of youth that is best suited for the service of the Lord.

We are suggesting certain things that seem to us to be necessary if we are to have such young people in our Churches; and we are suggesting them in the hope that they will provoke further thought and suggestions on the part of our readers. Such a type of youth is not likely to come from a Church where spiritual things are not lifted to a pre-eminent place in the thinking and in the doing of the people. It is a question of relative emphasis. This may account for the fact stated above, viz: that certain Churches that have made notable contributions in kingdom work have sent out none of their number to devote their lives exclusively to kingdom service. It is possible that even while doing much for the kingdom, they are putting forth greater emphasis and effort in other realms.

It also seems equally obvious that such young people are not likely to be produced where there is no recognition of the responsibility to supply material from which to recruit the ranks of the ministry. When most Churches are in need of a pastor, their only idea seems to be to go outside of their ranks and call such a man as seems to be possessed of the necessary qualifications. What would happen to our educational system if it made no provision for the production of young men and women qualified to fill the teaching staffs of our schools. What would happen to the nation that gave no thought to producing young men trained to defend their country's cause? We know what has happened to the nations which have depended upon hiring soldiers to fight their battles. Will the Church always be able to call men who are qualified for the ministry if no thought is given to producing young men fit for the ministerial office?

Finally, there is the direct scriptural injunction to pray the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth laborers unto the harvest. I know of no home, no Church, and no educational institution that is qualified to train young people for the work of the kingdom. But I know of no Church that, if surrendered to the divine guidance which has been promised, which might not be used of God for the influencing and training of such young people. Certainly it is time for us to be thinking about whether we are doing our part in creating the proper spiritual atmosphere in which great-souled young people may grow. S. C. H.

ADVERTISING DENOMINATIONAL BARRIERS.

It seems as if the path to a closer fellowship among the followers of Christ is beset with innumerable obstacles. Every movement toward the union of Christ's followers encounters opposition from the most unexpected quarters. Such an incident occurred in connection with the New York conference of the Christian Unity League. This conference was composed of the friends of Christian union from all denominational connections. It was to be held in St. George's Episcopal Church. One of the items of the program was the observance of the Lord's Supper, which was to be administered by Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, a Presbyterian minister and president of Union Theological Seminary, New York. This Communion service was intended as an evidence of the bond that links the hearts of Christ's children.

Such a rite would come as a beautiful climax to such a conference. But Bishop William T. Manning, bishop of the diocese, intervened and forbade the celebration of the Communion in an Episcopal Church, by one who had not had the benefit of Episcopal ordination. The bishop ruled that it was contrary to the canon law of his Church. The Communion service was held; but it was held in the chapel of Union Theological Seminary, upon the invitation of President Coffin.

Bishop Manning was evidently correct in his strict interpretation of canon law. The incident seems at first to have aroused a most distressing state of mind among the members of the conference. But it may be the means of serving the cause of Christian union in a larger way than any conclusions that might have been agreed upon by the conference; for it calls attention in a way that must reach to the farthest bounds of our land, to the artificial barriers that have been erected between the members of the Christian Church. We must know how grievous are the divisions that separate us before we shall properly bestir ourselves to bring about the union which every one, even Bishop Manning, admits to be so desirable. Sooner or later, the suggestion is bound to find lodgment in the minds and hearts of men, that when ecclesiastical law is contrary to the spirit, purpose, and prayer of Jesus Christ, that something ought to be done to ecclesiastical law.

THE DEATH OF RELIGION.

A very earnest layman bitterly regretted, in a recent conversation "all this discussion about religion." If it isn't stopped, he insisted, it will kill religion.

On the other hand, if it is stopped, religion will die. Religion is not a calm, but a tempest; not a desert, but a cultivated field requiring constant attention. Religion arises out of wonder, out of a question, if you please.

How did I come to be? Where will I ultimately land? What is life, and what use is it? How does my knowledge of the universe, constantly advancing, integrate with my conception of God, and of Christ, and of the Holy Spirit? These questions will not down. We go as far as we can; then we end in wonder, which is another name for worship. Worship leads to trust, to faith, and they train to humility, and there find their fulfillment through love, love of God and love of fellow-man.

Now, humanism is an attempt to ignore ultimate questions. It has discovered, or thinks it has, in man a certain sense or disposition or will to goodness. Let us take this and utilize it in practical ways, humanism says, and we will have no need of God, and then these eternally recurring questions will die of neglect.

Not so. Religion will die and man will become a hopeless derelict on the sea of spiritual experience. Man cannot be man long if he confines himself to time-space relations only. Humanism will mean religion's death. W. A. H.

As has been customary for the past several years, the office force of THE SUN will have a short vacation at Christmas time. Consequently there will be no paper issued for the 26th. May we wish now for each and every one of THE SUN'S readers a Happy Christmas, indeed, and a very prosperous New Year THE OFFICE FORCE.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America held its annual meeting in St. James Methodist Episcopal Church, Forty-sixth Street and Ellis Avenue, Chicago, Ill., on December 4-6, 1929. The attendance was reported at a total of 222, with sixty-four members of the executive committee present. The thought, activities and location of the twenty-nine Protestant denominations that compose the Federal Council, by delegated representation, makes a meeting of vast interests; and to see them all in reports and discussion in unity impresses the mind with the growing spirit of fellowship and co-operation among the denominations. In fact, nothing so small as the peculiarities that distinguish one denomination from another shows itself in the discussion of great questions that concern the kingdom of God.

The Federal Council deals with kingdom questions, and leaves denominational questions to the denominations. The twenty-one years of the Council's history have bridged many of the streams and tunneled many of the mountains that separated Protestant denominations. Co-operation in sweet fellowship has produced a spirit of unity, and that has strengthened the aspiration and purpose of the Church to seek to find out the will of God and then to unite in doing it.

Some of the great questions upon which reports were made and discussions extended were "How to Avoid the Trend of Industrial Workers Away from the Church," "Current Movements in America and Abroad Looking Toward the Uniting of Certain Denominations," "Race Relations," "The Paris Peace Pact, the London Conference on Reduction of Armaments, and American Entry into the Permanent Court of International Justice," "The Philippine Project on World Friendship Among Children."

In 1928, 13,000 dolls were sent to Japan; in 1929, 30,000 school bags were sent to Mexico; and in 1930, the plan is to send 50,000 treasure chests to the children in the Philippine Islands. These are to be metal chests, beautifully decorated and filled with presents for children. The dolls sent to Japan created such a spirit of Christian gratitude that they sent, in return, many beautiful pictures as an expression of appreciation. It seems that much of the work of Christianity has its best beginnings among the children. The Sunday School is a good witness to this fact.

The Federal Council works on such a large scale that only a few hints can be given in a brief letter of its far-reaching purpose and the good already accomplished. Prohibition was not left out of its program, and evangelism and Pentecost were all supported by unanimous vote. A false report over the country, through the press, that Dr. Cadman was receiving $25,000 from the Federal Council was corrected by the statement that the Council has never paid Dr. Cadman a cent as radio preacher. Such a report is unjust to Dr. Cadman and the Federal Council.

Thursday night was given over to a public meeting in the main auditorium of the Church, with Dr. Herbert Willett presiding and Bishop Francis J. McConnell, president of the Council, as speaker. This meeting celebrated the twenty-first anniversary of the Council. Dr. F. G. Coffin, Dr. Martyn Summerbel and I from the Christian Church.

ELON LETTER.

Since this is the final issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN before the fifty Sunday in December, I am giving a list of the Sunday Schools that have co-operated in the Southern Christian Convention's plan of supporting our college by sending an offering once a quarter, preferably on fifth Sundays, for that purpose.

The next offering will regularly be received on December 29th. It is hoped that the Christmas spirit will suggest to many schools that have not done so the propriety of making a sacrifice to carry out the Convention's plan. It is hoped that the sending of an offering quarterly to the college will not only help it financially, but that it will turn the minds and hearts of our young people toward our college.

The remittances for the quarter which began with the fifth Sunday in September are as follows:

The following schools that have previously sent offerings did not do so the past quarter. Regularity of giving, thus bringing the college at intervals before the schools, is one of the great advantages of the plan adopted by the Convention. It is hoped that each of these schools will send in their offering for the past quarter even yet, and that they will certainly resume their good habit of support and co-operation on December 29th. The list follows:

Eastern Virginia—Antioch, Berea (Nans.), Damascus; First, Portsmouth; First, Richmond; Franklin, Hopewell (writes will resume), Liberty Springs, Union (Surry).

N. C. & Va.—Bew Creek, Haw River, Monticello, Mt. Bethel, Mt. Zion, New Hope, Salem Chapel.

Western N. C.—Grace's Chapel, High Point, Mt. Pleasant, Parks X Roads, Zion.

Eastern N. C.—Antioch (Va.), Chapel Hill, Moore Union, Pleasant Union, Raleigh, Sanford, Va. Valley Central—Bethlehem, Leaksville.

The college appreciates every evidence of interest in its behalf and seeks the earnest prayers of all God's people as the season for the next offering approaches. May the spirit of sacrifice, the spirit of Christmas stir our people to be liberal in their response to Elon's appeal on December 29th.

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to all.

OCEAN VIEW CHURCH.

We had services all of the past week at our Church. It was thought that a revival would aid wonderfully in getting the work here lined up and started. It was also thought that since we were just taking the work over that it would be wise for the pastor to conduct the meeting, which he did. Although a rainy day or so of cold weather was experienced during the week, the attendance was encouraging throughout the meeting and many expressed a desire to see the services continue for another week.

There were several reconsecrations, but no open conversions. It is believed that the Church and the cause of Christ has been greatly strengthened as a result of these services. All of our people were glad yesterday (December 8th) at the regular Sunday services to see such a splendid attendance and keen interest manifested on the part of many who are not our members.

There may be some who are not familiar with this field who are under the impression that there are very few people at Ocean View during the winter months, but there are many who have lived here the year around for several years. It is the desire of many of these people to see this Church built up, to grow in grace, that the cause of Christ may become to permeate the entire life here. Surely it will require time and efforts wisely put forth, but there are enough people here, and in the name of Christ we shall labor with the faith that the future has in store that which will not only gladden the hearts of our people here and the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, but, above all, that our Father shall be glad.

UNITY INVADES PROTESTANTISM.

BY H. C. ARMSTRONG.

A significant event in the annals of Protestantism took place at Piqua, Ohio, Friday afternoon, October 25, 1929. It was the session of the General Convention of the Christian Church at which the question of union between the Christian and Congregational Churches was finally decided. A plan of union had been prepared by the commissions of the two bodies through several years of diligent labor. The National Council of Congregational Churches had unanimously adopted the plan at its meeting at Detroit last June. The outcome of the whole venture depended, therefore, on what should be done at Piqua. It was a moment of great expectancy, and it turned out to be one of happy fulfillment. After a full discussion of the whole matter and of the plan of union, article by article, the Convention, without one word of opposition and with no dissenting voice, voted unanimously and heartily to adopt the plan and consummate the union. It was one of those Pentecostal moments of which there have been too few in the long travail of the Church.

The union comes as the result of many years of cultivation and preparation. Forty years ago the Congregational National Council appointed a committee to approach other communions with a view to union. This committee looked over the field and made a list of four bodies which, by reason of their general similarity and agreement, seemed most likely to be interested in such a proposal of unity. The first on the list was the Christian Church, at that time commonly called "New Lights" because they believed with "the learned and sweet-tempered" John Robinson, of Scrooby, "that the Lord hath more truth and light yet to break forth from His Holy Word." This marked them at once as spiritually akin to Congregationalists. A conference was soon held, and the long trail begun which ended at Piqua. Some five years ago, committees of the two bodies began work on the basis and plan of union now adopted. Thus a long-cherished dream comes true.

There are important features in which this union is unique, and in which it may be instructive for the whole Christian union movement. It is the first union of Churches in the United States to cross major denominational lines. Other unions, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Baptist, have brought together bodies separated from each other but belonging to the same general Church family. This union brings together two communions of entirely separate families. It is a distinct and definite step forward in Christian unity in this country. Also, it is a union effected in fellowship and freedom. Its foundation is laid not in creedal uniformity and ecclesiastical conformity, but in unity of spiritual life and common loyalty to Christ. The two bodies unite on the mutual acknowledgment of each other as Christian and on the gospel of Christ as a way of life. The plan states "that the basis of this new relation shall be the recognition by each group that the other group is constituted of the followers of Jesus Christ. Each individual Church and each group of Churches shall be free to retain and develop its own form of expression. Finding in the Bible the supreme rule of faith and life, but recognizing that there is wide room for differences of interpretation among equally good Christians, this union shall be conditioned upon the acceptance of Christianity as primarily a way of life, and not upon uniformity of theological opinion or any uniform practice of ordinances."

Furthermore, this union is conceived by the parties to it not as the end but as the beginning of a great adventure. It is the hope of these bodies that their union will prove so satisfactory that it will lead to further unions with other bodies. The plan provides that "invitation be extended to other bodies to join this union. In the event of favorable action by one or more national bodies, it is agreed that a new and more inclusive name shall be chosen for the General Council."

The union proceeds, so to speak, on three levels. It provides for the uniting of the general conventions of the two bodies in one general council. It provides for the co-ordination of their organized work and agencies, missionary, educational and benevolent, in a co-operative program. It brings the people and Churches of the two communions together in fellowship and co-operation. It is a union accomplished without compromise of principle on either side, with no sacrifice of precious heritage, and no loss of spiritual treasure.

Naturally, there are many matters for time to adjust, and much for future growth in spirit to achieve and perfect. The union now achieved is but the beginning of a deeper unity to come as the result of work and life in the new and larger fellowship. The concluding article of the plan says: "If a desire for that unity for which the Master once prayed be the actuating motive of all plans and acts, the way will become clear, as we proceed, where now it may appear filled with uncertainties, hesitation and hindrance."—World Call.

SAVED FOR WHAT?

For what are we saved? Every true believer answers at once, "We are saved from being lost forever." For this God sent His Son into the world, "that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." We are therefore saved from wrath, from judgment and the guilt of our sins, because the Lord Jesus Christ died for our sins and tasted death in our stead. We are also saved to live a holy life unto God. The people whom God has redeemed He has redeemed unto holiness. Furthermore, we are saved to serve and to walk even as He walked. Above all, we are saved for glory.—Selected.

If your father left in his will an inheritance for you and your brother, and your brother, being at a distance, could receive his inheritance only if you sent it to him, would you feel free to decide whether to send it to him or not? And if you did send it to him, would you take considerable credit to yourself for doing so? That is like foreign missions. People talk complacently about the "poor heathen." Why "poor"? Because the heathen have not received their share of the inheritance which the Father left us to give them.

Moslem women are not allowed to marry Christians by the terms of the modified form of the Swiss civil code now before the Turkish National Assembly for ratification. The law, which prohibits polygamy and divorce by the mere whim of the husband, declares as null marriages contracted with Christians.

CHALMERS, THE BOY.

(Born 1841, Martyred 1901.)

The rain had poured down in such torrents that even the hardy boys of Inverary, in Scotland, had been driven indoors. Now the sky had cleared, and the sun was shining again after the great storm. The boys were out again, and a group of them were walking toward the little stream of Aray which tumbled through the glen down to Loch Fyne. But the stream was "little" no longer.

As the boys came near the place called "The Three Bridges," where a rough, wooden bridge crossed the torrent, they walked faster towards the stream, for they could hear it roaring in a perfect flood which shook the timbers of the bridge. The great rainfall was running from the hills through a thousand streamlets into the main torrent.

Suddenly there came a shout and a scream. A boy dashed toward them, saying that one of his schoolmates had fallen into the rushing water, and that the full spate of the Aray was carrying him away down to the sea. The boys stood horrified—all except one, who rushed forward, pulling off his jacket as he ran, leaped down the bank to the lower side of the bridge, and, clinging to the timber, held to it with one arm while he stretched out the other as the drowning boy was being carried under the bridge, seized him, and held him tightly with his left hand.

James Chalmers—the boy who had gone to the rescue—though only ten years old, could swim. Letting go of the bridge, while still holding the other boy with one arm, he allowed the current to carry them both down to where the branches hung over the bank to the water's surface. Seizing one of these, he dragged himself and the boy toward the bank, whence he was helped to dry land by his friends.

The boy whom young James Chalmers had saved belonged to a rival school. Often the wild-blooded boys (like their fierce Highland ancestors who fought clan against clan) had attacked the boys of this school and had fought them. James, whose father was a stone-mason and whose mother was a Highland lassie born near Loch Lomond, was the leader in these battles; but all the fighting was forgotten when he heard that a boy was in danger of his life, and so he had plunged in as swiftly to save him as he would have done for any boy from his own school.

We do not hear that James was clever at lessons in his school, but when there was anything to be done, he had the quickest hand, the keenest eye, the swiftest mind, and the most daring heart in all the village.

Though he loved the hills and glens and the mountain torrent, James, above everything else, revelled in the sea. One day, a little later on after the rescue of his friend from drowning, James stood on the quay at Inverary gazing across the loch and watching the sails of the fishing boats, when he heard a loud cry. He looked around. There, on the edge of the quay, stood a mother wringing her hands and calling out that her child had fallen into the water and was drowning. James ran along the quay, and taking off his coat as he dashed to the spot, he dived into the water, and seizing the little child by the dress, drew him ashore. The child seemed dead, but when they laid him on the quayside and moved his arms, his breath began to come and go again and the color returned to his cheeks.

Twice Chalmers had saved others from drowning. Three times he himself, as the result of his daring adventures in the sea, was carried home, supposed to be dead by drowning.

At another time he, with two other boys, thrust a tarred herring-box into the sea from the sandy shore between the two rocky points where the western sea came up the narrow Loch Fyne.

"Look at James!" shouted one of the boys to his companions as Chalmers leaped into the box. It almost turned over, and he swayed and rolled, and then steadied as the box swung out from the shore.

The other boys, laughing and shouting, towed him and his boat through the sea as they walked along the shore. Suddenly, as they talked, they staggered forward. The cord had snapped and they fell on the sand, still laughing; but when they stood up again the laughter died on their lips. James was being swiftly carried out by the current to sea—and in a tarred herring-box! He had no paddle, and his hands were of no effect in trying to move the boat toward the shore.

The boys shouted. There came an answering cry from the door of a cottage in the village. A fisherman came swinging down the beach, strode to his boat, took the two boys into it, and taking an oar himself and giving the other to the two boys, they pulled out with the tide. They reached James and rescued him just as the herring-box was sinking. He went home to the little cottage where he lived, and his mother gave him a proper thrashing.

Some of James' school-fellows used to go on Sundays to a school in Inverary. He made up his mind to join them. The class met in the vestry of the United Presbyterian Church there. After their lesson they went together into the Church to hear a closing address. Mr. Meikle, the minister, who was also superintendent of the school, one afternoon took from his pocket a magazine (a copy of the Presbyterian Record). From this magazine he read a letter from a brave missionary in the far-off cannibal islands of Fiji. The letter told of the savage life there and of how already the story of Jesus was leading the men no longer to drag their victims to the cannibal ovens or to pile up the skulls of their enemies so as to show their own bravery. The writer said they were beginning happier lives in which the awful terror of the javelin and the club, and the horror of demons and witches was gone.

When Mr. Meikle had finished reading the magazine, he folded it up again and then looked around on all the boys in the school, saying: "I wonder if there is a boy here this afternoon who will become a missionary, and by and by bring the gospel to other such cannibals as those?"

Even as the minister said those words, the adventurous heart of young Chalmers leaped in reply as he said to himself, "Yes; God helping me, I will."

He was just a freckled, dark-haired boy, with hazel eyes; a boy tingling with the joy of the open air and with the love of the heave and flow of the sea. But when he made up his mind to do a thing, however great the difficulties or dangers, James usually carried it through.

So it came about that some years later, in 1866, having been trained and accepted by the London Missionary Society, Chalmers, as a young man, walked across the gangway to a fine new British-built clipper ship. It had been Christened "John Williams," after the great hero missionary who gave up his life on the beach of Erromanga.

This boy, who loved the sea and breathed deep with joy in the face of the adventure and peril, had set his face towards the deep, long breakers of the far-off Pacific. He was going to carry to the South Seas the story of the Hero and Saviour whom he had learned to love within the sound of the Atlantic breakers that dashed and fretted against the rocks of western Scotland.—Book of Missionary Heroes, by Matthews.

THE RESERVES.

In a letter received from a missionary friend, the thought was given that the mission field is the front of the battle; the thought immediately came, that we at home are the reserves.

In looking at the definitions in the dictionary, the following seemed to fit the case best: "Body of reserve; in military affairs, a select body of troops in the rear of an army drawn up for battle, reserved to sustain the other lines as occasion may require."

Paul, the great missionary apostle, often spoke of the Christian life as being warfare, and we know it is. How much more so is the mission field? It is indeed the front line, for they have more enemies to meet and vanquish than we at home can begin to comprehend, and the missionaries look to us at home to sustain them in the great battle that they are waging against sin and evil. They need our aid in many different ways, and the little things are so needful; keeping the missionary fires burning in the little corner where God has placed us, by our attendance and interest in the missionary meetings, our prayers, our money, and perhaps an encouraging letter to some one at the front of the battle. The letters written to the boys in France during the World War were what they needed to keep their spirits courageous and ready to obey the commands to go forward. How much more do the missionaries need the encouragement that we can give them in their bloodless battles? They are in the front of the battle, and we are the reserves. May God help us to hold up their hands in prayer, that they may have the physical strength and spiritual grace to press the battle, rescuing souls that will shine as stars in that day when our Lord shall come back to earth again. Sometimes we feel that we are doing so little, and get discouraged; yet even the smallest effort is needed, and if it is done "for Jesus' sake" and claiming the promise of Psalms 2:8, the reserves will have a part, in that great day, with these who have been in the front of the battle, for they will have been "faithful over a few things," and shall not lose their reward. THE PROGRAM.

Our program consists of three great agencies of the Church—education, missions, and evangelism. It is of the first one of these that I desire to write in this letter. Education in our program means that we must develop the heart as well as the brain; that we must look well to the moral and spiritual development of the entire life, as well as to increase mental capacity. This great privilege has been brought to us through the establishment of Piedmont Junior College, which is our Church school for these two Conferences of the far South. We are happy to know that many people besides our own are interested in our junior college. It is serving a class of young men and women who, doubtless, would not be able to prepare themselves for life's great task otherwise. We have a fine body of boys and girls this year. We have a pleasant, progressive faculty, who are giving fine service with satisfactory results. Our student body is loyal and true and not afraid to undertake things. They have conceived the idea of finishing the auditorium of the new building. It needs to be floored and ceiled. These students are on the job. Now, I wonder if we do not have young people enough in these two Conferences to complete this work by the time of commencement next spring? What say you, boys and girls?

Let every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society make this a matter for discussion and prayer, and let each individual adopt some plan of their own to raise a little money for this work, and next spring when we come to commencement we will all be glad we can have our closing exercises in our own auditorium and we will rejoice together. And, too, we are working for 100 students in Piedmont Junior next year. Suppose each one who is there should win one. We will have them. Suppose our high school graduates in this section who are inclined to go to college could be turned to Piedmont Junior—we would double the student body again. What about it, pastors? What about it, Sunday School teachers? Why not let us all get under the load and make it lighter for the few who have borne the burden. Send your money to Prof. Buford Jennings, who is dean of the school, or to Mr. V. L. Carter, who is treasurer of the board of trustees.

Let us all pray, especially for Dr. Jenkins, who is giving such unselfish efforts to raise the money to meet pressing demands. All together, now, to finish the auditorium and to beautify the campus. And remember that every dollar given enhances the value of the property many times its value. Why, brethren and sisters, now is the time to begin our redemption. It's hard times, and we are in hard circumstances, and we will be until we deal justly with our Lord, and the innocent will suffer with the guilty until we distinguish ourselves as His sons and daughters by willing obedience.

We must pray daily for our educational institution, and for its every interest, and for the boys and girls of our Church. May God give us a leadership with high ideals, and may we set ourselves to the task that is before us.

Yours to serve,
G. D. HUNT, Sec'y,
Alabama & Georgia & Ala. Conferences.

GIFTS.

"And the angel said unto them, Fear not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you: ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger."—Luke 2:10-12.

At the Christmas season, as we watch the more or less elaborate preparations made to celebrate the anniversary of our Saviour's birth, our thoughts turn to the story of His coming to earth as a tiny Babe, and we read again the story so beautifully told by Luke and Matthew. There is something about a baby so adorable, so full of the very essence of purity, innocence and potential power, even in its weakness, that we stand in awe at the miracle of life opened up before us.

And our Saviour, the King of heaven, came "out of the ivory palaces into a world of war" as a tiny Babe, and the angels sang the glad tidings to the humble shepherds on the hillsides of Bethlehem, and the radiant star guided the wise men to the lowly manger of Bethlehem, where they knelt in adoration and presented their gifts to the great Gift sent from heaven. He gladly laid down His sceptre and crown to come to earth and live as man lived, that He might understand and sympathize with men in their trials and temptations, and by His death on the cross to reconcile all men unto God.

May we learn anew this Christmas time the joy of giving ourselves to Him and to His service. May we worship as did the shepherds so long ago in humble adoration, with our whole heart filled with love which will overflow to those around us, not in perishable gifts, but in a love like unto His eternal love.

May we bring our gifts as the wise men did, and lay them at the feet of our Saviour. The gold that typifies His Kingship over our hearts and lives; the frankincense of our service which we may willingly and joyfully give; and the myrrh of our sacrifice, "that in all things He may have the pre-eminence." RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XIII—December 29, 1929.

FELLOWSHIP THROUGH WORSHIP.

GOLDEN TEXT: "He entered, as his custom was, into the synagogue on the Sabbath Day."—Luke 4:16.

LESSON: Neh. 8:1-12; Micah 4:1-2; Psa. 122:1-9; Matt. 28:18-20; Heb. 10:19-25.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Rev. 7:9-17.

Religion is first of all a personal matter. It concerns a man's relationship to God. Private devotion, therefore, is a very vital factor in a man's religious life. A man neglects it at his peril. A great deal of the indifference and the unfruitfulness of many Christians is due to the fact that no provision is made for private devotion. People do not make—it is not a case of not having time, it is a case of not making time—time for private prayer, Bible reading, meditation. And then they wonder why they do not find a greater peace and joy and power in religion. One of the great dangers that threaten our religious life is the neglect of private worship and devotion.

But there is a social side to religion, and hence there is a necessity for fellowship through worship. There is an undeniable value in worshiping with others. However much a man may worship in private, he needs the inspiration and the impulse which comes from fellowship through worship. A striking illustration of the relation between fellowship in worship and the religious life came to the writer's attention this week. It seems that the pastor of a certain Church had become concerned about a member of the Church who had been absent from the worship services of the Church for several months. One night, after a service, he went to call on this member, who is representative of so many Church members. The man received his pastor and invited him to have a seat before the open grate on which there burned a glowing coal fire. There he awaited what he thought would be some rather plain talk from his pastor. He felt in a way that he deserved anything that the pastor might say, and yet he rather resented the idea of the pastor taking him to task. His pastor, however, said nothing. Instead, he took the tongs from their hook by the fire-place and plucked from the fire a glowing coal. He placed it on the bricks in front of the fire-place, and together the men watched the inevitable result. As the negligent Church member saw the glowing coal gradually lose its glow, he saw the point. With tears in his eyes, and with trembling voice, he said, "I see it all, Brother Pastor; I'll be at service next Sunday."

Just as there is a great danger that men will neglect the private aspect of worship, just so is there an increasing danger that men will neglect the social aspect of worship. The matter of Church attendance is becoming a real problem in many, many Churches. It has become such a problem in some Churches that they have either done away with the Sunday evening service or they have resorted to all kinds of devices to get a congregation. It is not a question of whether people go to Church like they used to, but rather a question of whether they go to Church as they ought to.

Among the many factors that have entered into the matter of poor Church attendance, it is unde-niable that the radio has been one of them. Many a person is justifying his absence from Church on the grounds that he heard a sermon or two sermons over the radio. Now, there is undoubtedly value in hearing a service over the radio; that is, if the listener enters soberly and reverently into the service. But a radio service or no other service can be a substitute for the fellowship in worship which is to be had in the house of God, where men and women meet on common ground to worship a common Father, and where through hymns and prayers and responses they give common expression to their religious impulses. As in so many other things, it is a case of the good being the enemy of the best when a radio service is made a substitute for a service in the house of God. For shut-ins, for those who cannot possibly get out to service, the radio is a great blessing. But it has its distinctive limitations and its real dangers for those who are using it as an excuse for not doing what they know is their duty.

Another factor which has entered into the matter of Church attendance is the organized class. The writer rejoices in the splendid work which organized classes are doing in promoting fellowship, in teaching the Word, in rendering actual service. But if one takes issue with the statement that the large organized classes have become a menace to the matter of Church attendance, especially on the part of men, let him stand outside the class-room of any organized class on Sunday morning and see the amazingly large proportion of men who go from Sunday School to their homes or to other places. And the point at issue is the fact that the large majority of these men are members of the Church. It is perhaps an unpleasant truth, but it needs saying, that a man's first loyalty is not to his class, but to his Church. Attendance at a class is not a substitute for fellowship through worship in the Church. All this is written in good spirit. But it emphasizes a point which many have overlooked.

It is interesting to note in this connection that Jesus made it his custom to seek fellowship in worship. "As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath Day." That is a hard fact to get around. If Jesus were here in the flesh today, He would be a regular attendant at services of worship.

Perhaps it might be added that Church services ought to afford fellowship through true worship. Men and women have an instinctive need of God, and except in perverted cases they have an instinctive hunger for God. The Church ought to offer men and women a place and a program of worship. The services ought to be of such a nature that they are as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, as springs of water in a desert, as a place of shade in a treeless waste. People do not, or at least they should not, go to Church to be entertained. The services of worship ought to send men from Church with the consciousness that they have been in the house of God, that they have seen the Lord high and lifted up, that they have heard His voice speaking to them, that they must order their lives on a higher level, and that they must yield their Master a fuller measure of service. He who finds in the fellowship of worship these things will say with the psalmist, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the house of the Lord."

May I tell you why it seems to me a good thing for us to remember wrong that has been done us? That we may forgive it.—Dickens.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, December 29, 1929.

TOPIC: "Youth's Needs that Christ can Meet."
—Matt. 4:1-11; Heb. 4:14-16.

Some Bible Hints.

Youth should follow Christ's example and fill the mind with the Scriptures, in order to meet the hour of temptation (v. 4).

Christ gives us the right view of ambition. It should not be selfish, personal gain, but ambition to do the will of God, whatever that may be (v. 8).

We need to trust God more, and Christ, if we stop and follow Him, will lead us into this experience (v. 7).

Youth needs friendship. It feels itself often misunderstood. But Jesus understands. We can take our troubles to Him (vs. 14-16).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Youth needs guidance. This is natural for youth. Whatever else it has, it lacks experience. Why repeat the mistakes of others? Listen and learn.

Youth needs patience. It is impetuous. It hates delays. Jesus waited until He was thirty before beginning His work.

Youth needs love and appreciation, and does not always get them. He is strong who feels that Jesus understands and approves.

Youth needs to work for others. Idleness is a curse. Selfish work is also a curse. We must follow Christ in His love for man and His efforts to help and lift.

A Few Illustrations.

Leave a rosebush alone, and it may grow a lot of roses, but they will grow smaller. Pruning is necessary if we want the best. Youth needs discipline.

When Garibaldi, the Italian patriot, offered his men not riches but sacrifice, hardship, and death, they declared themselves with him to the end. Youth needs a big challenge, and Christ gives it.

The crusaders of old misinterpreted a great idea. Crusades were right, but not with the sword. Christ will not conquer the world by the sword, but by love. Christ's crusade is love's service.

Christ chose twelve young men to be with Him to learn not only His message but to understand and live His life. Youth needs training. We can do little for Christ unless we learn of Him.

To Think About.

What is your greatest need today?

Where may we find help to meet our needs?

Do we find aid in the Scriptures?

FOUNDER'S WEEK AT THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE.

For a quarter of a century Bible students and Christian workers have assembled in Chicago during the first week of February for the "Founder's Week Conference" at the Moody Bible Institute. The twenty-fifth annual concourse is announced for February 3rd to 6th in the institute auditorium, North LaSalle Street and Chicago Avenue.

While Wednesday and Thursday, the 5th and 6th, will be alumni day and missionary day, respectively, each day of the Conference will present programs of strength and challenging import. Distinguished speakers already announced include Bishop Horace M. Du Bose, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; Mr. H. A. Ironside, Oakland, Calif.; Rev. H. W. Bieber, D. D., Bala-Cynwyd, Pa.; Rev. William Lamb, Sydney, Australia, and Rev. Charles W. Abel, for many years associated with missionary work in the British East Indies at Kwato, New Guinea.

FROM REV. ELDER.

Dear Readers of THE SUN:

I am at this writing at Dorrin, Ga., with my son, Jim Staley Elder. I intend to go from here and spend a few days with my daughter, Inez Corbrey, at Moultrie, Ga. My children are very kind to me, and they do every thing they can for my comfort and pleasure in my affliction. My sons-in-law and daughters-in-law are equally kind to me. My friends are equally as kind to me, for which I praise the Lord. As David said, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving friends rather than silver and gold." Some one made a report that I had another stroke, but it was a mistake. I was on my way from the Alabama Conference, and when I got to Columbia I got on the train for home. I had some kind of spell, and there was twenty-four hours that I was unconscious. I don't know what was the matter, but I think I was poisoned. The doctor said I did not have a stroke. Any way, I had a close call. The conductor was very kind to me. God bless him for his kindness to me.

I attended the two Conferences and enjoyed them more than tongue can express. I don't think I will attend another. I wanted to be at the General Convention, but I was not physically able to go, though my thoughts and prayers were there. I am glad that I lived to see that day. I cannot talk, and can hardly write, but I thank God that every thing is as well with me as it is. Pray for me when you may. H. W. ELDER.

SPIRIT GUIDANCE.

The time has come for a new and greater emphasis upon the guidance of the Holy Spirit which is promised in the New Testament and evidenced throughout the entire history of the Christian movement. At the present time, about the only Christians who are laying great emphasis upon Spirit-filling and Spirit-guidance are the believers in the more extreme forms of holiness beliefs and practices. And the Spirit leads them into the practice of certain forms and ceremonies that are not particularly interesting or appealing to the great majority of Christians.

The notable instances of Spirit-guidance in the past have occurred when the Church was confronting great human problems as extensive as humanity itself, and as momentous as life and death. In such cases, the Spirit has led into ways fraught with the most practical and far-reaching changes in human destiny. It may be that we have come to rely too largely upon human wisdom and human understanding. What we need is not to abandon human wisdom and human understanding, but to seek to have the best powers with which humanity is endowed, enlightened and energized with the power of the Spirit. A careful analysis of the work of the notable leaders of the past reveals the fact that they were guided by a sort of sanctified common sense. There could be no greater blessing to come to the Christian cause in our day than the leadership of men endowed with this sanctified common sense.

S. C. HARRELL.

LINCOLN, LINDBERGH, AND DADDY GOOD ENOUGH FOR DANNY.

"Daddy, I nearly had a fight with a fellow today."

"What was the trouble, Danny?"

"He said something mean about you."

"Was what he said true?"

"No. He lied about you. That is why I wanted to fight him."

"Lying about me did not hurt me. Why fight about it?"

"I was mad enough to fight, but I thought you would not like it."

"I am proud of you. What did he say to make you fighting-mad?"

"The boys were all bragging about their daddies. Bill said you did not amount to much because you did not use tobacco."

"Well, I don't use tobacco, do I?"

"No, you don't. Daddy, why don't you use tobacco like other men?"

"One reason is because I promised my mother when a boy that I would not."

"Why, mother got me to promise that, too."

"Now, that I am older, I know that mother was right, as mothers generally are."

"Is that the only reason why you do not use it?"

"Oh, no! I have studied about it and believe I am better off without it."

"But, Daddy, lots of good men use it."

"Yes; but I believe they would be better off without it. I cannot see how it really helps them."

"I had not thought about that. I think you are right."

"Lincoln, when a small boy, promised his mother never to use tobacco, and never did. And Lindbergh did the same."

"Well, Lincoln and Lindy are good enough for me! I am glad I have not used it, and I never will."—No-Tobacco Journal.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

CHRISTMAS WEEK.

MONDAY.

ANNUNCIATION.

"Thou shalt call His name Jesus."—Matt. 1:21.

The Lord solves all difficulties for His own. Joseph is informed of the blessed mystery, and he hears from an angel the blessed name of the Child who is to be Saviour of the world.

This announcement is in entire agreement with the prophecies which are the central doctrine of the Scriptures. In the Old Testament this was vague and dark, but the information came like a cloudburst in the sky, flooding everything with light.

Today we find ourselves in a sanctuary in which Jesus Christ, the eternal God and precious Saviour, is filling everything with His grace and glory. As we approach the annual celebration of His birth and as we contemplate all it means to us, we should pray that God will help us to be right-minded and just, as Joseph was, and obedient to the truth, however much it may conflict with our own wills and ways of thinking. We can learn today that a righteous man is not shamed, but comes to rely on God for a solution of the enigmas of life, and that the secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him.

Prayer.—Lord, let Thy word enlighten us and lead us on the right path. Give us understanding and grace by the Holy Ghost. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE PROPHECY.

"The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this."—Isa. 9:6-7.

Today we will get ready to rejoice in the spirit of the righteous and the free. This Child Jesus is our Brother, one of us, and yet at the same time mighty and everlasting God. The lost are found, the bound are free, the dying now live, and none shall be without help by reason of unworthiness. The devil is defeated. No power of infidelity about us or in us is able to stand His power.

Let Christmas, the children's festival, make us all child-like, and we all will be happy. It is a day when even misery may be turned into happiness, distress to glorying, sins to righteousness, death to life. May you have a most blessed Christmas.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, in the name of Jesus, we pray Thee to open our hearts to Jesus, that we may let Him make His abode in our hearts. We pray that those who have not given Him room may let Him be born in the manger of their hearts today. May we all accept the salvation of Jesus Christ. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE BIRTH.

"For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."—Luke 2:11.

Our joy today is that which we do to join with the angels of heaven in singing and making merry. In this act, heaven comes down and makes its temple on earth, and God is at the altar and becomes our Saviour. The earth from now on is to be the home of the saints, where God is worshiped in spirit and truth, and where love, peace and good will is to abound. To every one who receives Him and follows Him comes the blessedness of seeing the truth, cleansing the heart, filling the life with love, and uniting with His holiness.

The blessed joy that fills the heavenly host is ours, and none can rob us of it. God is Father and Brother, and Christmas is a symbol of the world's greatest delight in looking into the counsel of God forever.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, let Thy tidings of joy permeate our hearts. Awaken us to the glad music of the soul. Keep thine own Christmas in our hearts, and make our joys a part of heaven's song. Amen.

THURSDAY.

VISITORS.

"Let us see this thing which is come to pass."—Luke 2:16.

The shepherds believed what they had heard, and visited Jesus. They who believe God find the true revelations.

Jesus is in the Church, and the saints have Him in their hearts. In the Word and in their prayers He is with them. We do not have to lift ourselves up to heaven to find Him, but have only to look for Him where He abides around us. The shepherds found Him where they were told He was, and that was enough for them.

Let this be a day of making Jesus real to us, and this year one of more intense desire to make Him known to others.

Prayer.—Lord, we pray that every day may be a day when we seek Jesus, and every day a reality of His presence, and every day out of grace in our hearts. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE IMPOSSIBLE SALVATION.

"Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord."—Matt 23:34-39.

Is there an unbeliever still? The enmity of the devil-spirit in the world does still blind the eyes of many, and they will not believe. But God's love is greater than all the might and power of hell, and He loves more than the devil can hate. The apostle David expressed it by saying, "Where sin doth abound, grace doth much more abound." The fires of heaven burn a thousand times more fiercely than the fires of hell. That this grace does not conquer every one's heart is a deep mystery, but we believe that some day it will have a solution. We do know that any one who receives of His Spirit is allowed to taste of His love.

"Greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world."

Prayer.—We thank Thee, Lord Jesus, that Thou didst come to the world, enter into its misery, and lifted all from the mire to glory. Enlighten us more and more in Thee, to know Thy ways, to love and serve Thee, and that we may never tire in bearing witness of Thee to the world. Amen.

SATURDAY.

A CHRISTMAS SOUL.

"They saw His face as it had been the face of an angel."—Acts 6:8-15, 7:54-60.

Stephen is a glorious example of the coming of Christ into a soul, showing that the Son of God came into the world that man might be heavenly and go to heaven. By the same grace and faithfulness of Stephen, you and I also shall be like him, perhaps not to have the same rank in glory, but to have the rank that belongs to us. Look forward to it with joy, let your thoughts dwell upon it, let the same song of praise be upon your lips, let the same spirit that was in him be in you, and pray that your soul may be imbued with his love. By this victory or sin, death and the devil is yours.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, sanctify us while we live and grant our faith to be true and living, rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, abounding in love. Live, Thou, in us and let our end be a happy one in Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

LIFE AND SONSHIP.

"In Him was life; and the life was the light of men. . . . and as many as received Him, to them gave He the power to become the Sons of God."—John 1:1-13.

Jesus is God from beginning, and He is the Light of God. In Him is all the fullness of life. We can see this in all things around us—the stars, the flowers, good people, creatures of the earth, the fowls of the air, the fishes of the sea, and in every living thing. While there are a great many who will not receive him, there are thousands who, by believing in Him, have become children of God and are made partakers of His divine nature.

Let none say, "He will not come to me." He has come already, knocking at thy door, seeking to come in and dwell with thee. Only believe and follow all the way.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, speak to us, that we may believe in Thee with a true and living faith. Create this faith in us this New Year, and preserve it there unto the end. Amen.

TO WHOM GIVE.

Just as our copy is going in for this Christmas issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the following telegram comes from Dr. Clarence Poe, editor of Progressive Farmer, Raleigh, N. C.:

"I hope you will urge all town and city Churches this year to extend the limits of their Christmas giving to include the adjacent farm territory and look out for families, especially tenant families, suffering from sickness, crop disaster and other misfortunes."

This is a timely telegram, and one that the Churches may well consider and act upon. In many rural sections, 1929 has been a trying time. Flood devastated areas and boll weevil ravages, with short crops and inadequate prices have entailed hardships and brought devastation and need, poverty and want, to many a family. It is easy to overlook these in rural districts where the agencies of benevolence and charity are not organized or active. If we would enjoy our Christmas in the spirit of Him who gave us the event and the season and who taught us that it was more blessed to give than to receive, we will put ourselves to the pains of finding out some who are suffering from want and need, and we will make our gifts to help relieve that suffering.

Christmas is a time of giving. Do not let us waste our efforts and gifts upon those who have plenty and abundance without our gifts, but let us emphasize in our thinking and activities, and be sure to take notice of and make a contribution to some at least who are in a position to receive with grateful hearts and who will be truly blessed and benefitted by our Christmas giving. J. O. A.

Christian Orphanage

The following articles of clothing, etc., have been received since our last report: Woman's Missionary, Wake Chapel, 5 dresses; Mr. and Mrs. Mayo Reeves, hats, shoes, etc.; Mr. and Mrs. Ben T. Holden, hats; Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va., dresses, etc.; Allen Moore, 1 lot half-hose; Mrs. C. V. Dunn, 1 suit; Woman's Missionary Society, Goshen, Ind., 2 quilts; E. W. Cather, 5 bbls. apples; Cove Exp. & Com. Co., 100 yds. flannel; Virginia Cotton Mills, 64 yds. gingham; Golden Rule Class, 1 box clothing for little girls; Missionary Society, Henderson Christian Church, 1 box clothing for little girls; Mr. Montgomery's class, Raleigh, N. C., clothing for little girls; Young Ladies' Class, Liberty-Vance, N. C., dresses, shoes, etc.; Mrs. J. P. Barrett, 1 coat; Pleasant Ridge Missionary Society, N. C., dress-goods, suit, stockings; Mrs. W. A. Peone, N. C., 1 quilt; Mrs. Ambur B. Sharpe, Va., 1 quilt; Pomora Mills, Greensboro, N. C., 140 yds. cloth; Woman's Missionary Society, Durham, 2 suits, 1 overcoat, etc.; Columbia Mfg. Co., 100 yds sheeting; Linville Missionary Society, Linville, N. C., socks, towels, dresses, many other garments; E. W. Hart Plaid Mills, N. C., 179 yds. gingham; Consolidated Mills Corp., N. C., 218 yds. outing; L. Banks Hart Mfg. Co., 252 yds shirt cloth; United Church, Chapel Hill, N. C., stockings, canned goods, etc.; Revolution Cotton Mills, N. C., 418 yds. cotton flannels; Puxminly Mfg. Co., N. C., 893 yds blue denims; Columbia Mfg. Co., N. C., 98 yds. sheeting; Edgar Long, N. C., 1 bbl. apples; Mable I. Higgs, Stanley, Va., 1 box clothing; Mrs. H. B. Coney, Portsmouth, Va., 1 box 6 doz. golf hose, 2 doz. half-hose, 2 doz. hose; Mrs. C. W. Parker, Portsmouth, Va., clothing; Philathea Class, Winchester, Va., clothing, etc.; Philathea Closs, High Point, N. C., 15 dresses, etc.; Farms Butter Oil Co., N. C., 20 bags cotton-seed hulls, 10 bags cotton-seed meal.

The circles Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the Burlington Christian Church gave us as a Thanksgiving offering a shower of towels, pillow-cases, and dresses, articles which were very much needed and certainly appreciated. Then circles 4 and 5 wanted the children to have a good dinner on Thanksgiving Day, so circle No. 4 sent us three chickens and circle No. 5 sent us ten chickens, with provisions such as jellies, pickles, canned goods, cakes and many other articles. The children had a good chicken dinner, with cranberry sauce. The ice cream company at Burlington gave us ice cream, and the children were happy.

The Burlington people take a great interest in the orphanage, and when they see we are in need they undertake to supply the need. The members of these circles get a real joy out of doing these real kind acts of love to help us in this work and to make the children happy. May God bless these good women in all their undertakings.

Bro. H. A. Carlton, of Raleigh, came by the orphanage last week in his car and picked up eight of our largest boys and carried them to Raleigh and then to the cafe and gave them a good feed; then carried them to the clothing store and set them up to a nice suit of clothes and sent them back home. Last Sunday morning, when they all got ready for Sunday School, dressed up in their new suits, we had a handsome crowd of happy boys. I believe Bro. Carlton gets as much joy out of doing kind deeds to help others as any one I have ever met. I wish the orphanage had a thousand friends like him.

Our financial report shows our income for the year to be $21,873.28. We must raise by the time we close our books for the year $8,126.72 to reach our goal. We have hundreds of members in our Church who could send the orphanage ten dollars and be the richer and happier for the Christmas season. Try it and see. Will you help us reach our goal?

Superintendent.

WINDSOR, VA.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Windsor Christian Church were delightfully entertained Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. W. S. Wilkinson. Those present enjoyed a most inspiring review of the mission study book by Rev. E. B. White.

On Wednesday night, at the Baptist Church, Rev. J. Sidney Cobb was leader of a community welcome service in honor of the Rev. E. B. White, new pastor of the Windsor Christian Church, and family. J. W. Roberts, mayor, extended greetings from the town; Superintendent L. T. Hall welcomed the minister and family on behalf of the schools; S. T. Holland represented the Christian Church; the Rev. E. T. Clrak extended a most cordial welcome from the ministers; Mrs. J. M. Raby extended greetings to Mrs. White and children from the ladies of the town. The Rev. and Mrs. White graciously responded.

WHAT NOTABLES SAY ABOUT THE BIBLE.

Sunday, December 8th, was observed as "Universal Bible Sunday." Anticipating this, the American Bible Society addressed a letter to President Hoover and to the Governors of all the States in the Union. We append a few of the numerous replies:

President Herbert Hoover: "The annual observance of 'Universal Bible Sunday' is a valuable aid in spreading knowledge of the Book of books, from the pages of which have come those ideals that root our government and our national life firmly in the consciences of men and women."

Gov. Harvey Purnell of Arkansas: "I unhesitatingly commend the occasion of 'Universal Bible Sunday.' The very foundation of civilized society rests upon the rock of faithful religion regardless of creed, and without its influences the civilized nations and peoples would disintegrate into oblivion."

Gov. H. C. Baldrige of Idaho: "The more I observe the activities of men, the more thoroughly I become convinced that a literal interpretation and application of Christ's teachings would solve all the problems of society. The observances of Bible Sunday should serve to call effectively to the attention of all people the fundamental truths of life that the Bible reveals."

Gov. L. L. Emmerson of Illinois: "Permit me to express the hope that 'Universal Bible Sunday' will not only be generally observed throughout the country, but that it will impress on the public consciousness the fact that our present civilization is based on the teachings of the Bible. Without the great moral precepts, taught and lived by Jesus of Nazareth, our world would indeed be in a topsy-turvy condition. Any nation which forgets its religion is well along the road to decadence."

Gov. H. G. Leslie of Indiana: "The biggest influence in the lives of men today is the open Bible. No man's education is complete without a good working knowledge of the Bible. Its influence upon individuals and society is so marked that the outstanding men and nations of today are those whose lives and actions are guided accordingly."

Gov. W. T. Gardiner of Maine: "The ministry of the Bible to individuals and to humanity holds a significant place, unique in the foundations of our country's history and foremost as a factor contributing to its greatness and success. We may well stress the value of lessons to be gained from its study."

Gov. F. G. Allen of Massachusetts: "I welcome the opportunity of endorsing 'Universal Bible Sunday,' and I find it very difficult to express in words the high appreciation and value I place upon the Holy Bible. The Book has exerted a tremendous influence upon the destinies of the world—a greater influence than any of us realize. No one of the Christian faith cares to contemplate what the world would be without the Bible. It is the foundation and corner-stone of our Christian faith and worship."

Gov. F. D. Roosevelt of New York: "I feel that a comprehensive study of the Bible is a liberal education for any one. Nearly all of the great men of our country have been well versed in teachings of the Bible, and I sincerely hope that the habit of Bible study will be developed among the people."

Gov. O. Max Gardner of North Carolina: "The great benefits which I have derived personally from a study of the Bible prompt me to endorse wholeheartedly the suggestion for the celebration of a universal Bible Sunday."

Gov. N. S. Case of Rhode Island: "The Bible, the Book of books, is my guide and that of my family, day by day, throughout the year."

Gov. J. G. Richards of South Carolina: "The Bible is the only book that lies at all times upon my desk in the executive offices of South Carolina, and it is my light and guide as I try to do the difficult work that confronts me as a Governor of this great State."

Gov. R. H. Hartley of Washington: "There is not anything more needed in America today than righteousness among the people. No book will have a more righteous effect upon the reader than the Holy Bible. Therefore, any effort that is put forth that will cause people to read this 'Book of the law' will be a benefit to the nation."

Gov. F. C. Emerson, of Wyoming: "Throughout the centuries, the Bible has remained the Book of books. It is well that the importance of the Bible should be emphasized, for folks are too prone to overlook the great values which will come to them through study and contemplation of the beautiful and helpful ideals which find expression in the Holy Book."

OBITUARIES.

SIPE.

David Jennings Sipe was born August 19, 1874, in Rockingham County, Va., and died November 30, 1929, at News Ferry, Va. He was the youngest son of Col. Emanuel Sipe and Penelope Jennings Sipe, of Linville, Va. There were eleven children in the Sipe family—four sons and seven daughters. Of these eleven, there are living Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, Lawrenceville, N. J.; Mrs. C. E. Beery, Hagerstown, Md., and Mr. W. H. Sipe, of Bridgewater, Va.

Bro. Sipe made a profession of religion and united with the Church at Linville, Va., in early life. He graduated from Elon College in the class of 1899. After graduation he became assistant secretary of Y. M. C. A., in Galveston, Texas, during the Galveston flood, and remained in this service until 1901. On October 2, 1901, he was married to Elizabeth Pierce, of News Ferry, Va. To this union there was born one child, who died in infancy.

After marriage, Bro. Sipe taught school at Waverly, Va., and in North Carolina, after which he engaged in insurance business with the Southern Life and Trust Company, now Pilot Insurance Company, of Greensboro, N. C.; later he engaged with the Jefferson Standard Company and remained with this company for seventeen years; later he engaged with the Atlantic Life Insurance Company of Richmond, Va., as special inspector.

He was an active, faithful, earnest Christian worker, modest, sincere, conservative member of the Pleasant Grove Christian Church, with which he united after his marriage, and was a member of the Masonic fraternity.

His funeral services were conducted by his pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Wilson, of the Presbyterian Church. The burial services were conducted by the Masonic fraternity. Many friends and relatives from North Carolina and Virginia attended these services in evidence of the high esteem in which he was held by those who knew him.

JONES.

On the fifth day of December, 1929, Boyd H. Jones departed this life, being 48 years of age. He was the son of the late Rev. John A. Jones, of sacred memory, a minister of the Christian Church, much loved for his saintliness.

Boyd was a member of Wake Chapel Christian Church, having united, I think, at about the age of eight years. He was always a faithful and loyal member to his Church, helping in all her enterprises. Those who knew him best speak in word of no uncertain sound as to his Christian character.

He leaves to miss him his wife and three children, two brothers and four sisters. The interment was in Wake Chapel Cemetery and the service was conducted by the writer, assisted by Bro. Davenport of the Presbyterian Church.

May our Lord's rich blessing rest with and comfort the bereaved.

SPAIN.

Mrs. Amy Williams Spain was born September 27, 1857, and died December 8, 1929, at her home near Mt. Auburn Christian Church. She was married to Mr. Sy Spain, of Warren County, N. C. To this union were born four children—Richard Young, Myrtle Long, Lola Alene, and one who died in infancy.

Sister Spain was the youngest child of a family of thirteen, all of whom preceded her to the spirit-world. She was converted in early life and united with Mt. Auburn Christian Church and lived a quiet Christian life, charitable in spirit, faithful in service, generous in nature, modest in bearing, and beautiful in character.

The funeral services were conducted by her pastor from Mt. Auburn Christian Church December 9th, and was attended by a large number of friends, and she was buried in the cemetery at the Church she loved.

CARROLL.

Emma Whitt Carroll was born September 27, 1858, and died May 26, 1929, at her home in Reidsville, N. C. She was the wife of J. D. Carroll, who, with five children, eleven grand-children, and three great-grandchildren, survive her. She was a member of the Reidsville Christian Church and her funeral was conducted from the Church on the evening of May 27th by the writer and Rev. J. H. Dollar, pastor of the Church. Burial was in the family lot in Greenview Cemetery.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved in the loss of wife, mother and friend. May the Christian graces of our sister's life ever be remembered as a guiding light to lead her loved ones in paths of righteousness.

WEST.

Whereas, for about forty years Judge Jesse Felix West was superintendent of the Waverly Christian Sunday School, and by his wisdom, personality, loyalty, and Christian spirit, led us in Christian education so that life has been richer for those of us who have followed his leadership and shared the joy of his good spirit; and

Whereas, on October 25, 1929, our beloved leader answered the summons of the Judge of all the earth to come from labor to reward;

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we acknowledge with gratitude the greatness of the man who for nearly half a century has been our leader in the field of Bible study and Christian character building.

2. That we bow in humble submission to the will of the Father, "who doeth all things well," and give Him thanks for the hope of meeting our superintendent again "in the temple not made with hands," where angel choirs fill God's house with gladness.

3. That we do solemnly resolve to keep sacred the memory of our departed leader by carrying on the work which was dear to his heart, in order that the Church he so loyally loved and freely served shall prove worthy of his leadership and sacrifice. This we will do by regular attendance at services, Bible study and prayer, and by seeking to radiate that spirit of Christian love that was dominant in the deceased.

4. That we extend sincere sympathy to the bereaved family and offer to them the consolation of sacred Scripture, which was the strength of their loved one.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the brothers, the wife and children of the deceased, a copy be filed with the records of the Sunday School, a copy be sent to the local paper and to "The Christian Sun" for publication.
