And what is the secret of so large a share of the world's leadership in the hands of men from a bleak, rugged island in North Atlantic waters? You are familiar with that touching description of Scotch family life in Burns' "The Cotter's Saturday Night." After the children have gathered from the neighbors where they worked all week, exchanged news and experiences, eaten the hot, plain supper served by the adoring mother and are about ready to return to the houses where they work, comes the unstaged, dramatic moment—the climax of the scene and the shining light in the home life of peasant Scotland. The father gets down the Holy Bible and doffs the old coonskin cap he has been wearing up to this time. In voice a-quiver with genuine reverence, he calls, "Let us worship God!" Here flashes the secret of Scotland's greatness. Rising to heights to which his genius could soar, Burns confesses: "From scenes like these, old Scotia's grandeur springs."

A glimpse at the Bible in the light of British and American history will reveal some important principles in nation-building. One could scarcely choose a more intriguing subject for study than this.

The Bible is valuable in nation-building because of its very strong insistence on righteousness. From first to last it stresses over and over the necessity of righteousness in private and in national living. Nations, great and small, have endured or decayed as they fostered or neglected righteousness in their fundamental pursuits. History bears incontrovertible testimony that righteousness is the only bedrock upon which an enduring civilization can be built. A survey of peoples who have come and gone swells into one vast crescendo this major strain of the Bible:

"Righteousness exalteth a nation;
But sin is a reproach to any people."

The Bible is valuable in nation-building because it brings its reader in touch with the spirits of great personalities. There is transforming power in the touch of greatness. That Dutch immigrant lad to America, Edward Bok, was practically made and set on the road to greatness by his association with commanding personalities of our nation in his youth. The Bible affords its readers contact with an unparalleled fund of biographical wealth covering a thousand years of the most pregnant portion of a race's history. A similar accumulation from any other source would involve a fair-sized library which the ordinary man would scarcely find time to read. In this literature are shown the hopes and disappointments, the achievements and disasters, the lamentations and the yearnings of a people as these alternating currents have shot back and forth through human transformers; and their realities serve as warnings and as assurances in nation-building through the ages.

The Bible is valuable in nation-building because of the great worth it places on persons. Here is the seed from which democracy sprouted. Democracy puts its signature to the certificate of man's dignity. Democracy does not blot out nobility and royalty as is so often accused; it raises every soul within its circle to this coveted rank. It clothes the most obscure citizen with ermine, sets a coronet upon his brow, and places a scepter in his hand. By their experiments in self-government, English-speaking peoples have advanced the implications of democracy further than any other race. France, Russia and Mexico have not done so well. English-speaking peoples have been readers of the Bible; these others have not. Where is the inherent worth, the dignity, yea the majesty, of man revealed in its purest form? Was it not Jesus, the supreme figure of the Bible, who taught that man is worth more than property and more than institutions—more than both combined? It was He who exalted human personality above everything else on earth, and thus laid the corner-stone for an enduring social order.—Christian-Evangelist.

OBITUARIES:

SAWYER—HALL.

A quiet wedding was solemnized Saturday afternoon, June 29th, at the parsonage of the Rosemont Christian Church, when Miss Lucy Virginia Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Hall, of Great Bridge, Va., became the bride of Mr. Fletcher Lee Sawyer, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Sawyer, of Campostella Heights, Norfolk, Va.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. F. Morgan, the bride's pastor, in the presence of a few friends and relatives of the couple. The parlors of the parsonage were decorated with cut-flowers, and the wedding party entered to the strains of Lohengrin's "Bridal March," which was played by Mrs. J. F. Morgan.

The bride was attired in a tan Georgette dress of uneven hem line, with accessories to match, and wore a corsage of butterfly roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Edna Hall, sister of the bride, was her only attendant, and wore beige Georgette ensemble, with horse-hair hat to match. She wore a corsage of sunset roses and lilies of the valley.

The bridegroom had as his best man Rev. G. S. Carlton, of Hampton, Va., former pastor of Campostella Heights M. E. Church. Both the bride and the groom are great Christian workers, the bride being one of the most active workers in Berea Christian Church, and the groom one of the best workers in the Methodist Episcopal Church in Campostella Heights, Norfolk, Va.

Immediately after the ceremony, the happy couple left for a Northern trip, and on their return will make their home at 215 Indian River Road, Norfolk, Va.
J. F. MORGAN.

The man who wins is the average man: Not built on any particular plan, Not blest with any particular luck; Just steady and earnest and full of pluck.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

ELECTIVE OBEDIENCE.—

We have indeed fallen upon strange times, when obedience is determined by whether or not that which one is called upon to obey is to one's personal taste. It is threatening to undermine all respect for law, and to plunge the world into chaos and anarchy, this idea that one is privileged to disregard that which is not in accordance with one's personal inclinations. Such a course is always attended with difficulties, contradictions and conflicts. In no instance is this more evident than in the international relationships of the present day. Forty of the leading nations have signed a treaty to outlaw war. But when confronted with the question of disarmament, the hesitancy, the bickerings, and the matching of diplomatic wits are all evidence in point of the fact that the nations which have signed the treaty are still hesitating between the old dependence upon armed force and the new way of mutual confidence, fellowship and good will.

The United States has, in recent years, been playing the part of philanthropist and benefactor to the nations and peoples who were in dire need because of earthquake and famine, and thus building up confidence and respect for the benevolent intentions of the American people. But when there is a bill pending in Congress for tariff revision, then is manifested the determination on the part of vested interests to boost duties until the other nations of the world are cut off and restricted in their hopes of economic expansion and the opportunity to pay their debts. Jesus foresaw where such a course must inevitably lead, and declared the impossibility of serving two masters.

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY.—

The following excerpts from a radio address, delivered by R. P. Lamont, Secretary of Commerce, was published by Railroad Data:

Safety is a serious national problem, primarily because our people generally are not fully aware of the increasing hazards of life and the alarming facts that confront us.

There are 10,000,000 accidents each year in the United States—fatal, serious, or otherwise. Fatal "accidents" alone run close to 95,000. One person out of every twelve is injured or killed through accidental causes every year.

Let us look for a moment at the economic phase of accidents. It is reliably estimated that the cash value of human sacrifice each year—the price-tag on carelessness—is $3,200,000,000.

A constant splendid fight is being waged against accidents in America, but the trouble is that only a comparatively few of our citizens are fighting a battle that should be waged by every one of our many millions of people.

Good government guarantees protection to its citizens. That is one of the fundamental purposes of government. Strictly speaking, "protection" in this sense implies protection against external and internal enemies.

Surely it is important to provide safety for our citizens in times of peace. A life is a life, a fatality is a fatality, whether caused in a modern war, in a modern factory, in a street, or in a home.

We are not "waging peace" successfully when 95,000 of our citizens are killed annually in peace times.

Reliable safety experts tell us that 98 per cent of all accidents can be avoided. That's why we say that the 95,000 fatalities annually are caused by "so-called" accidents.

Think what it all means! One human being killed by accident every six minutes during the year; and eighteen persons injured every minute throughout the year.

We must look the facts squarely in the face. We must realize that, in this entire matter, responsibility is personal. Social and governmental agencies will do their part, but you cannot justly shift the entire burden on to them. Your own viewpoint is most vital—your action and reaction are the most potent factors in the problem.

Develop and inculcate care! Resolve to exercise discretion, caution, constant watchfulness. Train yourself to avoid instinctively all heedless, rash exposure to unnecessary risks. Remember that to miss a minute is infinitely better than to maim a member or to lose a life.

PLACING WORKERS.—

One of the most difficult tasks which faces Church officials is the placing of workers in the Churches in those positions where they can do most effective work. No other phase of Church management requires such patience, such persistence, and such a keen insight into human nature and human relationships. One cannot but wonder if sufficient time and attention is given to this matter. It is of the utmost importance in the developing of Church efficiency, and it is equally as important in the spiritual development of the individual that he be given a work to do for which he has the qualifications and training and for which the individual has a natural liking. The army found it necessary to have a personnel officer in every regiment to help locate each individual where he could render the most efficient service. Manufacturing concerns and large commercial organizations have the best-trained men that they can secure working upon this problem. The Church cannot afford to do less.

In the larger Church organizations, it might be found advantageous to have one individual whose sole duty should be to seek to place the individual workers in those capacities where they could render the largest service. And there should be some means to place at this person's disposal all the information that could be collected from and about the individual members of the Church. At the present time, the majority of Church workers are selected on the ground of their willingness to undertake a specific task. It is of the utmost importance that the Church worker enter willingly and enthusiastically into the task. But as every experienced Church official knows, willingness is not always a necessary accompaniment to ability.

One of the facts that made the personnel work in the army so effective was that for each soldier there was a card giving all the facts that could be learned as to the training for any special kind of work which the individual had received, together with the experience that he had in that field of endeavor. In the larger Churches, especially in the city, it is often the case that almost the entire membership is canvassed, seeking some one that is qualified for a certain task, and then it is discovered that there is some individual who has had just the training and experience to qualify for the place, but none knew about it.

Then there is the necessity for searching out the potential workers. The most amazing fact in religious work is the way that some of the most unpretentious individuals develop into the most useful and most successful workers. It may be that there is no more efficient way for the Church to discover these potential workers than the trial-and-error method. But after all, that is the method that is most used in all other fields of endeavor. It is not necessary to elect an individual to a most responsible position in the Church in order to find out whether there are hopes of success in that capacity. In most Churches there are those who feel qualified to advise those in authority how their work ought to be done. Give them a limited opportunity to try out some of their ideas. If caution is observed, they cannot wreck the machinery, and it may be that some of their ideas really will work.

There are in most Churches a great many people who underestimate their ability. If it is left for them to volunteer, they never will; not because they are not willing to work, but because timidity and reserve makes them shrink from anything that savors of pushiness on their part. They must be persuaded to try out their abilities. Then there are those who honestly believe they are too busy to undertake definite responsibility in the Church. When some of these reluctant ones have been persuaded to undertake definite kingdom service, they have not only been found to be invaluable workers, but some of them have found such a joy in service as they never dreamed that it was possible for them to experience. It is most certainly desirable to get more of the people in the Churches to working at definite tasks. And it is just as imperative to set them at tasks where they can render the most efficient service.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Why not dedicate to the enlargement of the kingdom of God on earth the first bill of the new money you receive?

"Watch for the new money. You will have opportunity to see it some time soon. Why not take the first dollar you get and give it to the Lord as an earnest of your resolution to give God His tithe in all your various financial ways?"—Western Christian Advocate, July 11th.

The condition of Rev. P. T. Klapp, at this writing, is not improved, and day by day those who attend him say that they can see a gradual weakening of the body and the slow ebb of life as it calmly and quietly recedes. His physician gives no hope of recovery, and says the end draws near.

Rev. W. C. Carpenter, pastor, Ambrose, Ga., writes that a great revival has been going on in his Church the past week. The pastor was assisted by Rev. C. W. Hanson, La Grange, Ga. "The spirit moved mightily amongst us last night. This is the beginning of my revival work this summer, and I earnestly covet the prayers of friends."

Have you consecrated the new money that may come into your hands by sending the first bill of it to missions? Tell your friends, your Sunday School, your class about the fine suggestion of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, that every one send the first new bill received to missions to promote and build up the kingdom of righteousness in the earth.

"Dr. John L. Nevins was one of the most cautious and prudent of all the missionaries of the Church. I heard him say that he never had come home from China on a furlough without meeting ministers at home who regretted that they had not gone as missionaries, but that he never, in his long life, had met a foreign missionary who regretted having gone."—Missionary Review.

Members of the Elon College faculty taking work in the University of Chicago this summer are President W. A. Harper, Dean A. L. Hook, Prof. Simon A. Bennett, and Prof. Ross Ensminger. Mrs. Harper is also in Chicago, taking study in music. President Harper writes that they are having a most delightful as well as helpful stay and study at this great university.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, whose engagement with Elon College closed July 1st, preached at the 11 o'clock service at Elon College in the absence of the pastor Sunday, July 7th, and in the chapel at the Christian Orphanage at 3 P. M. the same day. Bro. Whitten has agreed to assist in several revivals this summer and is open for evangelistic and pastoral service. His address is Elon College, N. C.

Dr. W. S. Alexander, pastor of Elon College Church, spent the past ten days visiting friends and relatives in Illinois. On Sunday, July 7th, he had the joy of preaching in the Church in which he was reared and of which he was pastor for years—Hope Church, Illinois. This is one of our leading missionary Churches, having pioneered in the work of home and foreign missions years ago—a good habit which it has never broken.

Rev. E. B. White, Dendron, Va., is open to a call to any field that may desire his services the coming year. Bro. White is a consecrated Christian minister, who carries commendable zeal and ability into his task as preacher and pastor. He is held in high esteem by the Dendron people, whom he has served for some years. We commend him to any Church or pastorate desiring an active, faithful, consecrated, zealous preacher and pastor.

It's glad news, indeed, to carry through THE SUN a message from our dearly beloved brother, Rev. H. W. Elder, Ambrose, Ga. Yet paralyzed and unable to talk distinctly, he sends a written message to the hundreds of his friends who read THE SUN: "It pays to live right and serve God." Bro. Elder has given his strength through the years, and now, with calm resignation, as he says, abides the will of God. It is beautiful beyond words for one to be able, when health is gone, to look so calmly and with such happiness upon the present and the future. Surely, our brother hath exemplified in his life the subject about which he writes.

The new dollars are beginning to come in for missions as per announcement made in THE SUN and in the press throughout the country by suggestion and request of the Federal Council of Churches. It is a great and a good idea for Christian people throughout the land to make this effort at consecrating the first new money they receive to the glory of God and the spread of His kingdom. If all Church and Sunday School people will send in the first piece of this new money, as all can do without hurt to themselves or any one, and with help to all, the cause of Christ and His message will be quickened and helped in the world to the glory of God and the winning of souls to Him.

It was the great privilege and pleasure of THE SUN's editor to supply for Dr. L. E. Smith, Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., 11 A. M. and 8 P. M. Sunday, July 7th. Dr. Smith is in a Bible school in New York trying to get a change, a rest and a new grip upon the great task that confronts him. In all our Churches there is no group or membership more loyal, devoted and spiritually minded than the audience one faces in Christian Temple Sunday after Sunday. They are doing things for the kingdom of righteousness and world betterment far out of proportion to their strength and numbers as compared with other Churches. A few Churches like Christian Temple would make any people strong and mighty in good works.

His many brethren and beloved friends throughout the Church will learn with regret that Rev. G. R. Underwood still lingers in very feeble health at a hospital in Sanford, N. C., where he went from his home some weeks ago for treatment. Bro. Underwood was permitted to return home some days ago, but, suffering a relapse, went back to the hospital last week, where THE SUN's editor found and visited him Sunday, the 14th. He is cheerful and hopeful in his affliction, and looks out upon his present and future with calm courage and fixed faith in God. This man of God has served his Church well, and has been permitted, by the grace of God, to win many souls for Christ and the Church, and even now in his affliction rejoices that God has been, and is, so good to him and has blessed him so abundantly through the years of a long, useful and happy life.

The Summer School of Christian Education opens at Elon College on July 27th, with registration at 3 P. M. of that day, followed by a fellowship supper at 6 and a vesper service at 7 conducted by Dr. Edwin E. White, the distinguished author of "The Story of Missions," of Pleasant Hill, Tenn. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, of Suffolk, is to bring the message on the following Sunday at 11 A. M. There is to be an organ vesper service at 4 P. M. the same day. Regular classes, both for credit and non-credit courses, begin on Monday morning at 8:30 and will continue through Friday, August 2nd. This announcement should be made in every Church and Sunday School, and our young people as well as adults should avail themselves of this fine opportunity of a week's instruction and inspiration in things that are spiritually edifying as well as mentally and morally constructive and delightful.

First Christian Church, Greensboro, Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor, and Mrs. Dr. C. H. Rowland, co-pastor, and Mrs. Stewart, pastor-assistant, has recently closed a largely attended and a most interesting daily vacation Bible school. Miss Graham Rowland, who graduated from Elon College in the class of '28 and spent the past year in Boston University taking a post-graduate course in training young people, was a great help and an inspiration as well as a fine leader in the daily vacation Bible School. And this gives opportunity of saying that any one of our good Churches would be most fortunate, indeed, to secure Miss Graham Rowland as director of young people's work and pastor-assistant. She is a consecrated young woman, full of enthusiasm and fine ideas, and is splendidly trained for work among the young people and as pastor-assistant. Unless she has been engaged, here is a fine opportunity for some Church in need of such a leader.

Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White, Jr., were the speakers at the Wednesday night service, July 10th, in the Burlington Christian Church. Quite a few of us, their friends, from Elon were in the audience, and all who heard them were delighted with their description of the new field to which they go as missionaries and their prospect and enthusiasm for their work. Dr. White has spent six years in training as a medical missionary since graduating from Elon College in 1923, and is, therefore, professionally and by experience exceedingly well equipped for the great task before him. Mrs. White has also been in training for some years for missionary work, especially among the young people. The Congregational Church was most fortunate, indeed, in securing these fine young people to go out as their representatives, and the only source of grief and regret amongst us Christians is that we did not have the money with which to send them out and to support them. When we Christians get to be missionary in spirit and in giving, we will not suffer the humiliation of requesting other communions to take charge of our volunteers, especially those of our own faithful household and rearing, and send them out as their and not our representatives. Our sole source of comfort in the present situation is that we Christians and Congregationalists seem to be headed in the same direction and are soon to be one in our missionary plans, purposes and policies. Dr. and Mrs. White can but prove a glorious asset to any people who stand behind them with their prayers and contributions while they go out themselves in the name of their Lord to minister the balm of healing to body and to soul in His name and for His sake. They are to sail for the Philippines August 16th. They are to be located in a city (in one of the islands of the Philippines) of about 18,000 population and are to be in charge of a hospital with fifty beds, having as their sole assistance, and the only hospital in that city, one native helper and one trained nurse.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

THE MEEK INHERIT THE EARTH.

"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."—Matt. 5:5.

In the third beatitude spoken in the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus portrays a bit of prophesy in beholding the meek. He foresees the time when the meek shall be in power, rather than the haughty and forward persons. Jesus had often seen the false pride and failure of Judaism's hatred for other races; He had known of the pride of the Romans for power; and of the extreme exaltation of the Greeks in their love for high culture. He also knew that such pride would some day be done away and that the meek would inherit the earth. In His reflection on meekness, He beheld men of his own day, who possessed rare qualities that always accompany the virtue of meekness. Jesus thought of the meek person as one whose life embodied an inward calmness and tranquility of mind which was expressed in an outward and friendly attitude toward God and man. By meekness, we think of that element of character which makes a man to become lazy and lowly, unworthy and without initiative. Jesus thought of the meek as one who was the greatest of all men—as one who would come to inherit the earth. Such a person truly possessed the ability to overcome and be happy, whereas the person of a haughty nature was so full of pride that he could not attain the world for his inheritance. Some of the reasons for the superiority of the meek are apparent when one makes a study of the person whose life embodies the rare virtue of meekness.

1. Slow to anger. When Jesus said, "Blessed are the meek, He said the same thing as the modern translation gives us today, "Happy are the meek." That which makes a person happy is being able to control his temper. The meek person possesses that seemingly lost art more so than any other type of person in all the world. The meek man realizes the folly of the outbursts of anger. He knows that such rampages are foolish and accomplish nothing whatsoever. In the epistle of St. James, we read his words of warning in the very first chapter. "My beloved brethren, let every one of you . . . be slow to wrath, for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." And now turning to the Old Testament, we hear the wise man exclaim: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; he that ruleth his spirit, better than he who taketh a city" (Prov. 16:32). The man of meekness is happy because he knows how to abstain from quarrels and trouble. He does not easily become irritated, provoked or annoyed.

A missionary was teaching the Sermon on the Mount to a group of native children. She then had various ones to repeat certain verses, and give the meaning contained in each. When she called for Matthew 5:5, the little black boy said, in his own language, "Blessed are the meek." The teacher asked what was meant by "Blessed are the meek"? whereupon he replied, "It means a person who gives soft answers to rough questions." So it is that "a soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger" (Prov. 15:1).

On the occasion when the prodigal son returned and there was joy in the heart of the old father, the happy event was soon brought to an end when the older son neared the house, became angry and would not go in. He lost control of his tongue, his temper and his real senses. Pride and haughtiness elevated his head and he would not go in. In contrast to this picture is that of the Christ, who never became unruly but was always meek, humble and gentle. In losing His life in service, He never resorted to periods of outbursts of anger and temper, but became the Friend of the world.

One experiences a very unpleasant atmosphere when, in the presence of a person who is easily provoked and quick to anger. One never knows what to say, lest he stir up wrath. Indeed, it is dangerous to be around a person who loses self-control and is quickly given to seizures of madness; but, oh, the person who is meek and humble is a delight unto all who are in his presence. Every one feels at ease, for there is no fear of trouble, for the meek and humble are always peaceable and kindly.

2. Blessed are the meek, because they have many friends. Friendship is a rare possession. All of us crave companionship. I went to see a man in the county jail last week. He said the thing that hurts so badly is the loneliness. One who is away from friends is doomed to endure bitterness beyond expression. Sir Joshua Reynolds was once told by Samuel Johnson that if a man does not make new friends and acquaintances as he advanced through life he would some day find himself without friends. He then advised him that "a man should always keep his friendships in repair."

Too often we fail to make friends because we fail to be friends. Worth-while friendship costs dearly. It demands sympathy, sacrifice and service. It requires love and good will. It must always be accompanied by co-operation and meekness. Pride and selfishness break up friendship. No one cares to be around the person who thinks too highly of himself. One refrains from the presence of the overbearing, self-assertive individual. His or her friendship is not much of a credit to life's stock of good things. An incident that illustrates the meekness of character over against that of pride and forwardness occurred when a group of tourists were visiting the house of Beethoven, in Bonn. One of the tourists, a girl of about twenty years of age, rushed forward and sat down at the master's piano and played the "Moonlight Sonata." This she did none too well, for it was the work of a genius in composition. Nevertheless, she had attained her glory by playing Beethoven's composition, in his own room and on his own piano. When she had finished, she looked up and saw the caretaker of the house, to whom she loudly asked, "Don't most of the world's famous musicians come here and play on this piano?" To this question the caretaker said, very gravely, "Well, Miss, last year Paderewski was here and his friends urged him to play, but he shook his head and said, 'No, I am not worthy to play on the master's piano.'" True friendship feels itself meek and unworthy. Like love, it is not boastful, envieth not itself, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up and doth not behave itself unseemingly. True friendship is not easily provoked and thinketh no evil. It rejoiceth not in iniquity, but in the truth. True friendship never fails.

The meek of the earth have many friends. These they are enabled to have because of their kindly disposition and unassuming nature. Meekness is characterized by quietness and simplicity, which is far more attractive than pomp and loudness. The great friendships of all times have been between men and women who were meek and humble. One easily recalls the happy relationship between Johnathan and David, Ruth and Boaz, Tennyson and Sir Arthur Hallam, Whittier and Emerson.

3. The meek shall inherit the earth. In the thirty-seventh psalm, David declares that the meek shall inherit the land. In this statement he has reference to the land of Caanan. But years after, when Jesus made a similar statement, "that the meek shall inherit the earth," He was not thinking of a particular country or section of the earth; rather, He thought of the meek as being those of the world who would become conquerors over hardships, discouragements, and failures, and therefore inherit happiness and success to a much greater degree than the haughty Pharasic type of person. Jesus reckoned that the meek would inherit eternal life as their reward for faithfulness and humility. Indeed, we read that Jesus says, "He hath put down the mighty from their seat and exalted the meek." Our Lord's brother, St. James, says, "Receive with meekness the word that is able to save your souls." Again Jesus declares that "Whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased, and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted."

The meek shall inherit the earth by regarding diligently the true mission of Christian service to which he, in the footsteps of the Master, quickly turns. He hears Him say, "He that is greatest among you shall be your servant," for "one is your Master, even Christ the Lord, and he that is greatest shall be your servant. And he riseth up from supper and laid aside His garments, took a towel and girded Himself, poured water into a basin and began to wash His disciples' feet. So that after He had washed their feet and was sat down again, He said unto them, 'Know ye what I have done unto you'? Ye call me Lord and Master, and so I am; if I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye ought to wash one another's feet, for I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done unto you. If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them" (John 13).

ONE STEP AT A TIME.

In accomplishing your day's work, you have simply to take one step at a time. To take that step wisely is all that you need to think about. If I am climbing a mountain, to look down may make me dizzy; to look too far up may make me tired and discouraged. Take no anxious thought for the morrow. Sufficient for the day—yes, and for each hour in the day—is the toil or the trial thereof. There is not a child of God in this world who is strong enough to stand the strain of today's duties and all the load of tomorrow's anxieties piled upon the top of them. Paul himself would have broken down if he had attempted the experiment. We have a perfect right to ask our Heavenly Father for strength equal to the day; but we have no right to ask him for one extra ounce of strength for anything beyond it. When the morrow comes, grace will come with it sufficient for its tasks or for its troubles.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

Saturday morning, July 13th, comes this splendid note from one of our young loyal, faithful pastors: "It gives me great pleasure to donate to the great mission cause this new $5.00 bill, which is my first one to receive. It is my prayer that many Christians everywhere will respond to this plan and request and make it result in an enlargement of the kingdom of Christ. I look forward with pleasure to announcing the request to our Church Sunday" (that every one send in to missions the first bill of the new money that he or she receives).

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE HOUSE OF GOD.

The best that heaven has to offer and earth has to give is to be found in the house of God. We study our daily work and become so engrossed in material and transient things that we are nigh distraught and become perplexed beyond measure. This world, with its theories, human philosophy and varied experience, has little to offer that is permanent, purposeful and assuring.

The house of God offers that which is permanent, powerful and satisfying. One may well pity the man, or the woman, who seldom or never goes to the house of God to get the comfort, the satisfaction and the sublime teaching offered there. We see those around about us, even Church members sometimes, neglecting the house of God, staying away from its service and desecrating the holy day. Suppose all Church members were to do that way, and the Churches, thus neglected, were to close their doors? We would soon have chaos, anarchy, pandemonium. There is no institution that teaches respect for law like the house of God; there is no institution that teaches honesty, virtue, integrity, and insists so emphatically on righteousness as does the house of God. There is no other institution or enterprise that gives to the world such wholesome warning, such helpful exhortation, such noble teaching and such high ideals as the house of God. Fact is, the house of God even makes possible the enjoyment and the unmolested privileges, pleasures and indulgencies of those who turn their backs upon Church and decline to attend or support it. For, as already stated, if all were thus to decline and fail to support it, we would have a society of chaos, pandemonium, and bedlam instead of order sobriety and decency.

The most eloquent and wholesome messages that ever fall from the lips of mortals come from those who speak in the name of their Lord in the house of God, and certainly the sweetest music that ever gladdened and strengthened the heart of man are the songs and tuned instruments in the house of God. No wonder the youthful Jacob said, on awaking from his vision of heaven and of God, "This is the gate of heaven." If the house of God is not the gate of heaven that opens from this to a better world, then there is no such gate on earth or among the children of men.

That was indeed one noble resolution the inspired writer made for Israel when he purposed and declared, "And we will not forsake the house of our God" (Neh. 10:39). J. O. A.

CONSECRATING THE NEW MONEY.

That is certainly a noble idea and request sponsored and sent out to the Protestant Churches by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. The government, through the banks, is now supplying the country with a new issue of paper money, a rare occurrence of our nation's history, and the high probability is that it will be many, many years before there is a different issue. In order that the people who champion the cause of righteousness and the spread of the kingdom throughout the world may do at least one act in helping to consecrate this new money, the Federal Council requests that the people of the Churches and Sunday Schools send as a donation to missions, in their own denomination, the first bill of this new money coming into their hands. As Dr. L. E. Smith, Christian Temple, Norfolk, writes in a personal letter to the editor of THE SUN, "If all our people will act on this suggestion and consecrate the first bill they receive by sending it in to missions, our mission cause will triumph and we will reach the quota so much desired and for which so many are praying and longing."

It certainly will be a fine thing, a holy and heavenly one, if the announcement is made in all the Churches and in all Sunday Schools and Sunday School classes and religious groups, and those who hear will respond, as some are doing. The first three dollars of the new money THE SUN's editor has seen have been sent in by those who have seen the suggestion in THE SUN and other papers, and it will be a most gracious and goodly thing if all SUN readers, on receipt of their first new money, will dedicate the same to the service of the Lord by donating it to missions for the enlargement of the kingdom of our Lord on the earth and of winning souls to Him and building up His Church and His cause in the world.

Every SUN reader should give as wide publicity as possible to this splendid idea, sponsored, as it is, by an organization numbering millions in its constituency.

There are biblical grounds for this deed, for in ancient times the Lord commanded that the first of all the fruits be brought and given to Him and His use as a signal that those making such an offering desired to consecrate all subsequent fruits and gifts to Him. J. O. A.

BELIEFS THAT MATTER.

There are beliefs that matter. There are beliefs that matter very much. There are beliefs that make all the difference in the world. Conduct and character are based on belief, and are the result of belief. To say that what one does or does not believe "makes no difference: conduct is the thing," is the same as saying, "It matters not what ails the tree, or of what sort the tree is, the fruit is the thing." Unless the tree is kept vigorous and free from disease, there would soon be dwarfed fruit or no fruit at all. And unless one's beliefs are kept healthy, vigorous, strong and free of disease, there will soon be enervated character, unstable conduct, a doubtful and dilettante life. Again and again, the New Testament insists on belief; "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Belief is fundamental in New Testament doctrine.

Dr. Conrad, in his "Gospel for an Age of Thought," very emphatically declares: "A man never lives right who does not believe the truth. It makes all the difference in the world what you believe. Belief governs conduct. We are told that Christianity is not a doctrine, but a 'way of life.' It is doubtful whether there was ever so much sophistical untruth put into a single sentence as in that one. Jesus Christ was the Truth before He could ever become the Way. Christianity must be a faith before it can become a force." The sophistical untruth of which Dr. Conrad speaks is evidently found in separating or contrasting "doctrine" with the "way of life." The truth is in declaring that the proper and right way of life grows out of the proper and righteous doctrine of our Lord; belief in Him as the incarnate Son of God, the soul's only Saviour and the world's only Redeemer. If one is to connect up savingly with God, to hear the unmistakable voice and obey the will of God, one must believe whole-heartedly in God and in His way of saving this world and lost souls in this world, by believing in Him whom He hath sent.

There is nothing that dwarfs and paralyzes the spiritual in man like doubt, or a half-hearted and nebulous belief about some sort of an indefinite, far-away God. Unless we believe God and the revelation we find of Him in His Word, we falter and flounder in a maze of doubt and uncertainty. Quoting Dr. Conrad again: "The light we need to light the way of God and goodness and glory, comes straight from the ever-living, ever-true and ever-inspired Word of God and direct to the soul by the Holy Spirit. So fundamental and final is the Christo-centric nature of Christianity that it reaches out into every other department of human thinking. All systems of truth must revolve around this eternal fact: Christ incarnate, sinless, crucified, dead, buried, risen, ascended; He is Christianity." If we are to be Christian, we must put Christ at the center of our thinking, our striving, our conduct. And we must believe in Him with all our heart; and in this firm belief and fixed faith, there is the hope of the right sort of conduct, the right sort of character, the right way of life. The doctrine and the dogma and the belief that we hold is our way of life, for it shapes our conduct, forms our character and fixes our eternal destiny. J. O. A.

PROHIBITION.

The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States has provoked more discussion, more newspaper publicity, more opposition, and more violations, than any other law enacted by the Congress of the United States. Many people seem to have forgotten the condition of this country during the time of the saloon. The matter of moonshine liquor is one of the bugbears that many think is ruining the country. They forget that there was more moonshine liquor made in saloon days than is made in prohibition days. It was made then to avoid the tax. Distillers had the right to manufacture brandy and whiskey, but the barrels had to be stamped before they had the right to sell. But barrels were sold to saloon-keepers and emptied into barrels that had stamps on them. The saving could be divided between the distiller and the saloon-keeper. Such violations were made by men who were more respectable than the bootlegger of this day. Personal liberty then and personal liberty now was and is the ground on which citizens tried to justify themselves in the violation of the law; but in both cases they were conscious of their guilt, or they would not have tried to carry on the work in secret.

Law is negative as well as positive. The Ten Commandments may settle that question. God makes no mistakes, and eight of the ten are negative, and of the other two one is partly negative. "Thou shalt not" leads in that Divine law for mankind. The closer the nations get to God, the more negative laws will be enacted. The Fourth Commandment is both positive and negative. "Remember the Sabbath Day, to keep it hold. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work," etc.

The Christian state is justified in passing laws in harmony with the laws of God. As to the results of prohibition, no one who knows conditions before and after this law went into effect can truthfully claim that conditions have not greatly improved in home life, Church life, education, progress in business, and in all the relations that measure human standards and behavior. Sunday Schools have improved, public schools have improved, Churches have improved, colleges have improved, legislatures have improved, courts have improved, and it would be difficult to find any phase of society that has not improved. When liquor was free to voters on election day, and candidates patronized saloons, and drunkenness was common around the polls, this day is a great improvement over those days. The opposition to prohibition, and the violation of the law by makers, sellers and users, will gradually decrease until the nation will be dry not only in theory but in fact. What the nation needs is an enlightened conscience on this subject and willing obedience to this good law. W. W. S.

THE CONQUEST OF THE VIOLENT.

Complacency never won a kingdom. Self-satisfaction never made a conquest. It takes driving force in the soul of man to register the achievements of conquest. Resolution, not resignation, makes the world go forward. Our Lord saw this when He said, "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force" (Matt. 11:12). He meant that the kingdom of heaven could be made a subject of violent attack. "Suffereth violence"—that is, it bears with it. It receives it and becomes a subject of it. Strange that this should be true. Why should the kingdom of heaven submit itself to the violent, or in any way give recognition to the approach of violence? It is a kingdom established in the interests of peace. Why should the violent have given them consideration as they approached it?

The kingdom of heaven does not come. It has to be taken, Jesus declares, by the violent, the eager, the restless, the distressed, the irreconcilables.

The passive complacent member of the Church never brings in the kingdom. He stands for the "status quo." He cannot better conditions; therefore, he stands for things as they are. If the kingdom is to be brought in, resolution is required, daring and adventure are demanded. The easy-go, the conformist, the fearful, the irresolute, the "wet-log Church member," the visionless and the broken-spirited minister can never bring in the kingdom.

Where is the kingdom of heaven? It is out yonder—just a short distance away. Will it draw near? Do not expect it to come near you if you are doing nothing more than wait for it, or are spending your time contemplating it. You must will it to come. You must train yourself to look in its direction. You must not patiently wait. It does not come. It must be approached. You must go to it. It draws the eager and the restless.

Jesus saw it—"the violent take it by force," He declared. "By force?" you inquire. So said Jesus. Force! Yes, at the hands of the violent. Why did Jesus make a place in His thought for the violent? Why did He recognize the place of chevalier, the adventurer? The violent take the kingdom of heaven by force! They rush the gates of the kingdom. They refuse to be reconciled without its conquest.

What did Jesus mean when He declared the kingdom must be taken by storm, by force? Why did He not say that the kingdom was to be received by all those who wait and prepare for it? This is not an inscrutable problem. It lends itself to a ready solution. The kingdom of heaven is an achievement, and not an acquirement. It is a conquest, and not a heritage. It is a challenge, and not something to be requisitioned from the commissary of God's providence.

The violent man who has the power of inward reaction will dash past the complacent man and take the kingdom by storm while the other man lingers by the way. Yes, the violent man who has served the devil, who as the prodigal son has ruthlessly spent his energy and patrimony, may sweep past the easy-going brother and come into possession of all the blessings of the kingdom. The man who has suffered the pangs of an outraged conscience will not consider deliberately the kingdom of heaven. He will not wait for it to come. He will run out to meet it. He will rush its gates and unceremoniously take possession of its streets with their proffered blessings of security and forgiveness.

Thank God, the kingdom of heaven is amenable to the violent human spirit. Men of restless energy may take it by storm. It is especially within their reach. Who would hold them back? Why not let them have the fling of their impulse? Let them pass the lingering, the fearful, and the phlegmatic. Give them rein. Applaud them as they go. Hush the mouths of those who cry, "Peace, when their is no peace." When the world goes wrong, make way for the violent. Make way for the man with a spiritual urge! Applaud the man with the moral drive! When humanity is perishing for want of reaction against unrighteousness, call forth the battalions of the violent, the unreconcilable. For it is decreed that they shall bring in the kingdom of heaven.—Western Christian Advocate.

HE IS ABLE.

The believer's faith is not a mere speculation, but he has sufficient evidence of its truth to inspire confidence. He knows when he commits his soul with all its immortal interests to the Lamb of Calvary he is eternally saved. Then he can say, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day."

He is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever lives to make intercession for them. There is no way to come to God, only through His Son, who paid the price of our redemption upon Calvary. When we have taken Him as our personal Saviour, then we know when we sin we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the Christ who died; yea, rather that is risen again, who is even now at the right hand of God, making intercession for us. Jesus Christ the righteous, beloved Son of God, crucified, risen, ascended, now at the Father's right hand, pleading for all who have believed upon Him—what a wonderful Saviour! First dying in our stead, now pleading for each and every believer.

He is not only able to save, but He is able to keep. For the word tells us, "He is able to succor them that are tempted, for He Himself hath suffered being tempted in all points, just as we are. He knows our frame, He remembers we are but dust, He knows the tempter's power, and the suffering it brings; He knows our weakness. In the hour of temptation, have you proved Him so you can now say, I know God is faithful, who will not suffer me to be tempted above that I am able, but will with the temptation also make a way of escape, that I may be able to bear it?

Again the Word tells us, "He is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory." All who believe upon Him and His finished work upon Calvary's cross, are safe now and forevermore in the hand of Jesus. That blessed nail-pierced hand which no man is able to pluck us out of! For our Lord's "Believe ye that I am able to do this," if we can answer with a "Yes, Lord," then we will feel His tender touch and hear His gentle voice saying, "According to your faith be it unto you."

MAKING CHURCH WORK EFFECTIVE.

The "Labor Sunday" message this year issued by the Federal Council, through its Commission on the Church and Social Service, is a strong one. It should be distributed in the Church, sermons should be given on "Labor Sunday," September 1st. It is a message of great importance. It may be secured by writing to 105 East Twentw-second Street, New York, for four cents, and in quantities of 100 for sixty cents. The Federal Council is doing a great work for the Churches. Few realize the magnitude of its great and growing work.

Information Wanted.

We hope you will help us in an important bit of information by telling us on a postal card what stewardship book you have read during 1929, and whether you would recommend it to others. The writer happens to be chairman of the publications committee of the United Stewardship Council, and would like to know your judgment. Our own General Board urgently requested every pastor, Church official, and Conference officer to read at least one recent stewardship book during 1929. Will you take the time to let the writer know whether he can wisely recommend the one you have just read? Please do this today.

The General Convention Support.

There is great need at this time in the Convention treasury. The Convention will be soon held in Piqua, and the expenses connected with it will be some two thousand dollars. The Convention funds are suffering greatly on account of the death of three loyal and devoted friends this year who always make personal gifts to the Convention fund to the amount of approximately one thousand dollars. These expenses of the Convention cannot be omitted, reduced or delayed. They are vital to the maintenance of the administrative work of the Church. We believe that there are individuals who so understand its importance that they will make personal gifts; and each Church should carefully examine its records to see if its offering was worthy and has been sent in; and each Conference which composes the Convention should make its annual offering commensurate with the occasion and the needs.

WARREN H. DENISON, Sec'y.

Love stoops to conquer. Stiff necks and stiff knees, no matter what rigidity of righteousness produces them, always are the product of something a little less than love.

The fruits of the spirit—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance—are all natural and normal reactions of a healthy soul. It is the fruits of evil that are unnatural and abnormal.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Going along the Seaboard Air Line Railroad track recently to visit a sick woman, I found a negro man cleaning up the weeds and trash along the track. I asked him if he were a member of the Church. He replied that he was not. I was surprised, because negroes usually belong to the Church, and the negro race is the most religious of all the five races. And it is the most musical race, as religion and music go together.

I said to him, "Have you never professed religion?" and he said he had. Then I asked, "Why do you not join the Church?" He said, "Because there are so many members that are no good." Then I said, "That is a common excuse, and one without much foundation." I knew a white man who was a colonel that gave that same excuse. He said: "There are members of the Church not as good as I am." I said, "Colonel, is that the reason you do not join the Church?" He said, "That is the reason." Then I said, "Will you stick to your logic?" He said, "I guess so." Then I said, "Is every person in Suffolk as good as you are?" and he "reckoned not." I said, "I grant that there are people in the Church not as good as you are, but if you stick to your logic I will drive you out of the world." He said no more. The old negro said, "Is that so?"

Then I said to the old negro, "Look here, I want to show you something"; and he said, "All right." I said, "You see the main-line rails here?" "Yes, sar." "You see how bright the top of these rails is? The car wheels run over these rails every day and keep them bright. You see these sidetrack rails how brown they are? They are not bright like the main-line rails because they are not used as much; but they are a part of the Seaboard road. They are members of the road. Then, look here at the main-line rails again; the top is bright and the sides and bottoms are rusty, but the rusty parts are parts of the rails. Now, that is the way with Church members: some are used for the main work of the Church, and they keep bright and last longer than the members that just hang on or are used occasionally; but they are all members and help to make up the Church. A good rail off of the ties and not in use is not worth as much as a rusty rail in use. A good man, as people call him, is not worth as much outside of the Church as a poor member inside."

Then I said, "It is that way in business. You are not as important as the engineer or the conductor, or the president of the road, but the road would soon go down if there were no men to clean up the road and keep the track in condition for the passenger trains and the freight trains to make their runs and carry men, mail and merchandise. Some of those who are looked upon as sorry members are of great value to the cause of Christ. Again, you see that the rail that is used the most is the brightest and lasts the longest?" "I never seed it dat way befor'," he said, "and I will think about it, and I expect I will jine de Church."

ELON LETTER.

On October 16, 1826, the Rev. James O'Kelly, founder of the Christian Church in the South, died in Chatham County, N. C. A committee of our Southern Church has for several years been raising money to erect a monument to this champion of religious liberty on the Elon campus. The committee certainly deserves every praise for its achievements and for the noble decision animating them to commemorate the life and service of this great and good man.

There is no place more fitting for the erection of this monument than the college campus, which is an outgrowth of the initiating genius of this prophet of Christian freedom. Elon is anticipating splendid results to follow in the character-building of its students because of the presence on its campus of the monument to James O'Kelly. It will be a silent witness to the cause of freedom and an inspiration to students ever to emulate the spirit of the founder of our movement.

Personally, I am anxious for another very definite reason that this monument should be paid for and erected at the coming anniversary of James O'Kelly's death, the 16th of October. We are expecting this year that the ultimate purpose for which James O'Kelly hoped and prayed—the union of the followers of Christ—will be consummated on a national scale for the first time since the beginning of the American republic. I am referring, of course, to the expected favorable action of our General Convention at Piqua, Ohio, beginning October 21st, on the proposed merger with the Congregationalists. It seems to me that we should have this monument on our campus before this merger.

I trust that the occasion of this unveiling may be a notable one in the history of the denomination, and that our leaders from all over the South will be present to participate in and signalize the importance of this outstanding man in the history of a united Protestantism. We are happy that James O'Kelly had the vision and the prophetic insight sufficient to qualify him to plead for the cause of Christian union as the goal of religious freedom in a day when both were misunderstood, unappreciated, and actively opposed by not a few persons who thought that they were doing the will of Christ.

Shall we not make this a signal occasion on October 16, 1929?

DESECRATING THE SABBATH.

The desecration of the Sabbath, the Lord's Day, tendeth to idolatry. Our nation is headed toward the rocks by this neglect or desecration. I was a railroad agent and telegraph operator for twenty-four years. In the beginning, and until the latter part of the time (1903), the railroad company was not supposed to have us work on Sunday, but it finally came to the point where I had to lay down my job or my Sunday School. I was about $1,000 in debt, had a family of seven to support, but I let them have the job (salary, $60 per month) and went to work for $35. And now the Lord is paying it back in so many ways. A part of the time in recent years my salary per week has been more than it was per month when I resigned as railroad agent. Am satisfied if the Lord had not given me the courage (for it all came from Him) to act as I did, I would have been in my grave long since, and my Christian experience would have been limited or crushed. But, praise the Lord, my health is as good as, or better than, it has been in thirty or thirty-five years. Am enjoying my Christian work and other duties more than ever, and realize more and more the realities of a life given to Him and for His use. "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for His goodness and for His wonderful works to the children of men" (Psa. 107:8, 15, 21, 31, repeated).

VALLEY LETTER.

We are now looking forward to the meeting of our Conference. Our session this year will be held at our Timber Ridge Church, twenty miles west of Winchester, Va., beginning at 10 o'clock Wednesday, August 14th, and closing Friday, the 16th. We are expecting this year as visitors Dr. W. P. Minton, Dayton, Ohio; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.; C. D. Johnston, Elon College, and perhaps Dr. W. A. Harper, Elon College. We are hoping also that any of our ministers who may be attending the Massanetta Springs Bible Conference at that time will attend our Conference. With the splendid help we are expecting, we feel sure we should have a good Conference and one that our people ought to enjoy and be blessed by.

Delegates should be elected, and they should plan to attend from the beginning to the end, and not just one day. Conference apportionments should be looked after, and other financial matters attended to, so that good reports may be made. Church secretaries should exercise care and persistence in getting their report blanks properly filled out and sent in on time.

May we also be in prayer that the Holy Spirit may guide us aright in all things.

Harrisonburg, Va.

A. W. ANDES.

IT PAYS TO LIVE RIGHT.

I was stricken down two years ago in April, and I went to the hospital at Plains, Ga. I was there six months. When I left there, I paid my bills and had more money than I had when I went there. I received help from people and Churches where I had never been. But I had given my strength and had tried to live so as to build a reputation among the best people, and the hundreds of letters that come to me bring messages of love and sympathy as balm to my poor heart.

When I laid there for months and couldn't get out of my bed, the doctors and nurses were kind to me, and may the God of us all be kind to them. I had never been but a few days in my life that I could not get up and go. I have been very active and enjoyed being busy. It was hard to be confined and be detained from my pulpit work. It seems to me that I would have been discouraged, but I was not. I was so near death's door, and yet so happy! I did not know what a day would bring forth, and yet I was happy and resigned. I have never asked God to let me get well unless it is His will. If He can get more out of my life by my present condition, I am willing to suffer, that His will may be done.

My friends by the hundreds and thousands have been so good to me, and God has been so real to me that I have been so happy I cannot tell. Sometimes I want to preach and tell the old story of Jesus and His love that I don't know how to behave myself.

Ambrose, Ga.

H. W. ELDER.

The breaking down of the barriers that have separated us in the past, is coming about solely through the discovery that the leaven of love is working in the hearts and lives of those who are outside of our exclusive little groups. Everything that Christ taught and lived was designed to make men and women lovely and lovable. Whenever anything that passes for Christian belief causes its professors to behave in an unloving way toward Christ's other children, it is perfectly obvious that it is a false belief, or that it has been either misunderstood or misapplied. It is becoming increasingly obvious that love speaks a universal language. The Churches that are offering love in action are the ones that are attracting the people.

SOME THINGS THE APOSTLE PAUL KNEW.

Paul was a man subject to like passions as we are. Without Christ and His sustaining grace, he was just as weak and unprepared to meet the enemy of our souls and overcome him as we are. By repentance toward God and faith in Jesus Christ, he received the overcoming power, so that day by day and moment by moment he overcame the devil and stood complete in the saving and keeping power of Jesus Christ. His inward man was renewed day by day. His knowledge of present salvation was such that he could say, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal."

For we know that if this earthly house of our tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Paul realized his weakness and inability to live a Christian life, if left to himself; that is, without the indwelling and keeping power and leadership of the Holy Spirit.

In view of this fact, he says, "I know that within me; that is, in my flesh dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not."

In the flesh there is no power by which the soul can be brought into the light. We must have help from another source if sin's rule is to be destroyed. "For this purpose, the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil" (1 Jno. 3:8).

The apostle says, "And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men."

Paul said, "I know nothing by (against) myself." He was conscious of no evil thing in his heart. He said before the council, "Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day."

To the Corinthians, he said, "Receive us; we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man."

Paul said he was determined not to know anything among them save Jesus Christ and Him crucified. He was determined not to take part with them in any thing that was contrary, but in keeping with Christ and Him crucified. Again he said, "I know in part, then shall I know even as also I am known." He said he could not know it all till he was changed in the resurrection. The Word of God is our looking-glass. In it we have the way of salvation made plain before us. Isaiah says, "The wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

In the Word of God, our looking-glass, the life of Jesus Christ as our Example is set before us. By the grace of God we may follow Him if we will. Many of God's plans and purposes we cannot see now. For instance, we do not know exactly how it is with the dead. We do not understand the glorified body nor just what we shall be doing in eternity. Paul knew, and we may know if we will let the Holy Spirit teach us in the Word of God, just how to meet the conditions of salvation, get saved, keep saved, and so serve the Lord acceptably in this world and be ready to meet the Lord at any moment. This is our privilege and duty.

Again the apostle says, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose." Paul knew that God would supply all his needs according to his riches in glory by Jesus Christ.

Again he said, "I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound; every where and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

He was able to do all this because of the indwelling Christ. This indwelling, victory-giving presence is for you and me just the same as for the apostle Paul. We are complete in Him. We have no need as followers of Jesus that God will not supply. Believing the Scriptures, we know this to be the truth. The apostle says, "I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him." He knew that if this earthly house of his tabernacle were dissolved, he had a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Having this knowledge in him, the apostle was able to meet every trial, trouble and testing with real victory over them all. That same triumphant life is for you and me.

COMMISSIONING OF DR. AND MRS. WHITE.

BY DR. W. G. SARGENT.

The commissioning service of Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White, in Elmwood Christian Church, Providence, R. I., will stand out as one of the red-letter days in the history of a Church with many such days already to its credit.

The Elmwood Church, it will be recalled, is, as we believe, the first Church in the country to work out, locally, the union of the Christian and Congregational bodies. Both of the Churches in the union have history behind them. The Temple Congregational Church was organized under a different name in 1832 in a community with only a few houses, at that time outside the city of Providence. The pastor of the first small Church, which located in a frame structure across the street from the present building, gave the name to this section of Providence, now the second in importance, as a residential section in the city. The Broad Street Christian Church was founded two years later, in 1834, nearer the center of the city. At the close of the last century, business had practically left no near constituency to the Christian Church, and in 1912, three years after the present pastor had taken charge of the work, the governing board began looking about for another location. They refused to take ground already pre-empted, and so interfere with the work of any other Church, but did propose federation with the Temple Congregational Church, located in one of the finest sections of the city for Christian service. The committee of the latter Church proposed union, which was eventually accomplished, after much discussion, the first service of the united Church being held in September, 1912. Since that time, a new Church building of modern equipment has been constructed and paid for, a manse has been purchased as a residence for the minister, the entire property being worth $12,000. Between six and seven hundred members have been added to the Church roll. The united Church seems to have demonstrated its efficiency both in the community to which it belongs and in outside activities, the present benevolent budget being greater than the entire budget of either of the Churches at the time of the union.

It seemed very fitting, then, that Dr. and Mrs. White, the former a member of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., under appointment of the American Board, should be commissioned in the Elmwood Church, particularly as they were the first members of the Christian Church to be elected by the American Board since the discussion regarding the merger of the two denominations began, and especially following so closely on the favorable action of the Congregational Council at Detroit in May,

The commissioning of Dr. and Mrs. White was performed by Dr. Enoch F. Bell, secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. The service was conducted by Dr. Sargent, and the address made by Rev. Donato Galia, a native Filipino. It was expected that Dr. Frank Leubach, of Benton, Pa., missionary professor in Union Seminary, Manila, Philippine Islands, would make the address. Dr. Laubach is probably the foremost authority on Christianity in the Philippines, the author of several books bearing upon the Christian Church in these islands, and confidant of the government in matters moral and religious that affect the well-being of the islands under U. S. control. His address was consequently looked forward to with anticipation. The week prior to the service, he was taken sick and sent Mr. Galia in his place. Mr. Galia is a brilliant young Filipino student and preacher, a graduate of the Union Seminary of Manila, and at present holding a scholarship in Union Theological Seminary, N. Y. His address was a strong appeal for the Christian Church to express, both in America, be it noted, and in the Philippines, the Christianity of Jesus. To those who were privileged to talk with Mr. Galia, he disclosed a keen mind, thoroughly aware of the trend of modern thought. Indeed, he was intimately acquainted with the writings of such men as Profs. Moffitt, Coffin, Fosdick, Fleming and others of forthstanding reputation in the United States, having used their books as texts in his native land. His English was flawless. And East met West and West met East when Dr. Bell and Mr. Galia and the pastor of the Church placed their hands on the heads of Dr. and Mrs. White as they knelt while the prayer of dedication was offered. Mr. Galia will be a colleague of Dr. and Mrs. White in the southern part of the island.

Dr. and Mrs. White are both Virginians, the former born and schooled in Norfolk, the latter a native of Luray. Dr. White is a graduate of Elon College and of the University of Virginia medical college. He joined the Student Volunteer Movement during his course at Elon. He served during the war overseas for eighteen months in the U. S. Navy, and after his graduation from the medical college spent two years in hospitals in Washington and New York. Mrs. White also attended Elon, spent four years in Washington in government offices, and went with Dr. White to the Kennedy School of Missions, at Hartford, in 1928, where they received their appointment by the American Board.

The service in the Elmwood Church seems prophetic of the newer and larger day before the Christian and Congregational Churches in view of the more than likely consolidation of the two bodies, after the Christian Church has taken action at Piqua, which we have every confidence to believe will be favorable to the union. For the Christian Church, the resultant good will be unmeasured. As I sat with the members of the prudential committee of the American Board, in Boston, at their final meeting before the summer vacation, I saw the map of the world figuratively unrolled before me and the Christian Church. I heard a new appeal to the youth of the Christian Church to enlist in the foreign missionary enterprise. I saw developing opportunities for every pastor in the Christian Church, and a new incitement to effort to supply funds for the promulgation of the gospel of Christ. I saw a united Church accepting a world task in the spirit and faith of Jesus, and I rejoiced in the new day.

Not soon will the people of Providence forget the commissioning service which sends our friends Dr. and Mrs. White to their chosen field with the Cagayan Hospital, to spend and be spent for the Filipino race.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

ANNUAL MEETING OF JAPAN MISSION.

The annual meeting was held at the Shibuya Church, Tokyo, May 18, 1929. Members present, Dr. and Mrs. Woodworth, Mr. and Mrs. Garman, Mr. and Mrs. McKnight, and Miss Stacy. Mrs. McKnight led in prayer. Hours of meeting were set from 9-12 and 1:30-5:30. Shadan meeting at 9:20. Devotional hour at 1:30. Mr. Garman was chosen leader of the devotional hour.

The Shadan meeting was held, and we proceeded to reading of reports. The statistical report for the year 1928 was accepted with a footnote added. The treasurer read a statement of present state of the treasury for information. The ad interim and co-operative board reports were read for information. The printed reports of the Federation of Christian Missions and the National Christian Council, and the Sendai Newspaper Evangelism Agency were accepted as reports of our delegates and representatives of those bodies. No report was presented by our representative to Aoyama Theological School.

The property committee reported that the Shibuya Mission Home is rented to the Baptist Mission for one year from July 1, 1929, at 175 yen per month. Mr. Garman presented report of the kindergarten teacher training loan fund. Mr. Garman reported, as trustee of the American School, that the drive for funds in America ended and land and buildings have been acquired, and endowment increased by $20,000, now being $100,000.

Officers and committees were elected as follows: chairman, Dr. Woodworth; secretary, Miss Stacy; treasurer from January 1, 1930, Dr. Fry; auditor, Dr. Fry. Ad interim committee, Dr. Woodworth, Dr. Fry, Mr. McKnight, and Miss Stacy. Co-operative board members, Dr. Woodworth, Dr. Fry, Mr. McKnight, and Miss Stacy. Repairs committee, Dr. Fry, Mr. McKnight. Delegates to Federation of Christian Missions, Dr. Woodworth, Miss Stacy. Delegate to National Christian Council, Mr. McKnight. Leader of devotional hour, 1930, Dr. Fry. Delegates to the American Board Mission meeting, May 29th to June 4th, Mr. Garman, Mr. McKnight.

Reports of missionaries were read as follows: Mr. Garman, Mr. McKnight, Miss Stacy, and Mrs. Woodworth. Communications were read from Dr. Berry, of Aoyama Theological School; Dr. Minton to Mr. Garman, Dr. Minton to Miss Stacy, Dr. Fry to Mr. Garman, Miss Topping to Mr. Garman. Morning session closed with prayer led by Mrs. Woodworth. Devotional hour with Communion was led by Mr. Garman at 1:30, being a very helpful period of prayer.

1. Voted to inform the board that Dr. Woodworth is in good health at present and continuing his work as usual; that we desire his continuance in the work.

2. Voted that Miss Stacy be appointed supervisor of kindergarten training students and to have charge of loan fund.

3. Voted that we express a willingness to hold for Iwagasaki Church the property acquired there, pending the organization of a holding corporation.

4. Voted to reply to Miss Topping that we express our unanimous approval of the Kagawa campaign, and regret that heavy cuts to our appropriation prevent us from contributing toward it.

5. Voted that on the return of Miss Crew she stop at Tokyo and be given an opportunity to review language study, and that her permanent location be left until after her return; that in harmony with co-operative board action, Miss Stacy be located at Ishinomaki, and Dr. Fry at Utsunomiya.

After a full and free discussion of the inadequacy of missionary salaries, a committee consisting of Mr. McKnight, Miss Stacy and Dr. Woodworth were appointed to draw up data to present to the board on this matter.

6. Voted to ask the Mission Board that a portion of the rental of the Shibuya Missionary Home be used if necessary to rent a house for other missionaries for the remainder of this year.

7. Voted to increase the grant to the Aoyama Theological School from Y500 to Y750, this amount being still less than the original pledge by Y250.

8. Voted that we approve the estimates of the co-operative board for 1930, as follows:

| | | |
|--------------------------------------|----------------|-----------------|
| Salaries | Y15,600 | |
| Repairs | 2,000 | |
| Conference expenses | 300 | |
| Co-operative Board expenses | 300 | |
| Retirement fund | 500 | |
| Rent | 1,000 | |
| Travel | 1,000 | |
| Conference grant | 250 | |
| Literature | 600 | |
| Relief fund | 200 | |
| Total regular estimates | Y21,650 | $10,825 |

Co-operative Board Specials:

| | | |

| Total regular estimates | $17,060 |

Mission Specials:

|---|--------|
| Kindergarten equipment for Okuzawa | $ 175 |
| Kindergarten equipment for Wakayanagi | 175 |

We also call the attention of the Mission Board to the following items not included in the above estimates:

1. Furlough travel by any missionary.
2. Support of students.
3. Dental and medical bills.
4. The item for welfare work is omitted this year, but we feel that such work should be reopened in the future.

The minutes of this meeting were read and approved. Adjourned at 5:30 P. M.

NEWS ITEMS.

BY MRS. W. M. JAY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Antioch Christian Church reports a most successful year so far. They have had a good attendance at their meetings, which have been very inspiring, due to their wide-awake spiritual life superintendent. They have used as their study book "New Africa," and found it most helpful and interesting. One life membership has been secured, and they have already raised their quota, with the promise of more. This is a very encouraging report, and shows that these good people are working at the task assigned to them. Keep up the good work, and may we hear from several other societies soon.

Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White, Jr., of Hartford, Conn., are visiting friends at Elon College this week, and many social events are being held in their honor. Dr. and Mrs. White are en route to San Francisco, where they will sail August 16th for the Philippine Islands, where Dr. White is to do medical missionary work and Mrs. White is to assist him and do welfare work. They were commissioned at the Providence, R. I., Christian Church by the Congregational Board recently, and it was a most impressive service.

On Wednesday evening, July 10th, they were invited to speak at the prayer service of the Burlington Christian Church. A large crowd of Elon College and local Church people gathered to hear these consecrated young people, and it was good to be there. Dr. White told of the geography and history of the Philippine Islands and of his work which he will do there. He said that there are 7,000 islands in the Philippine group and a population of 10,000,000 people, composed of Catholics, Mohammedans, Protestants and barbarians. The island to which they go is about as large as Ireland, and the town has a population of about 10,000. He will have charge of a new fifty-bed hospital, with a native doctor and an American nurse to assist.

They will sail from San Francisco August 16th with about fifty other missionaries, and will visit Honolulu, Japan and China, arriving at Manila about November 1st, where he will take the medical examination before going to their station at Cagayan.

Dr. White was graduated from Elon College in 1923, spent four years in the University of Virginia, one summer in the mountain work at Fancy Gap, Va., and the last two years in interne work in various hospitals, specializing in different lines. The last two months were spent in a mission school at Hartford.

Dr. and Mrs. White have thoroughly prepared themselves for their chosen work, and the good wishes and prayers of our people at large go with them as they launch out on this great enterprise, and may God's blessing be upon them.

The women of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention met in regular session at the Franklin, Va., Church, June 26th, and a most profitable day was spent discussing and laying plans for a larger and better program for our women. Turn to THE SUN of July 4th and read the detailed report of this meeting if you haven't already read it.

We have now crossed the thirty-four-thousand-dollar mark. Our ever loyal and true friend to the Church and righteousness, Bro. P. J. Carlton, Richmond, gave the lift with a check for $2,500 that sent us upward with a bound. We are grateful. Then one minister got as his first new money a $5.00 bill, and from laymen (two of them women) got as their first new money one dollar bills, and all sent this in. One devoted Christian woman wrote last week, "Our society had prayer for you last Monday that you might reach the goal, and we are helping." Fine and inspiring.

Mission Secretary.

DOLLS OF FRIENDSHIP.

Some 13,800 doll messengers of friendship went to Japan in 1926 and 1927, sent by the children and young people of the United States, and in response, late in 1928, came fifty-eight superb doll ambassadors of good will to the United States, to whom welcomes were given in more than a thousand receptions in all parts of our land.

A fascinating illustrated volume, just issued, gives the first full account of that remarkable adventure in doll-dom as well as in international relations, unique in the annals of human history. The volume is artistic in make-up and includes many photographs of the dolls individually and in groups and also of some of the official receptions. The multi-colored frontispiece of smiling Miss Mariko wins the heart at the very opening, and the charming letters of the children and the songs of welcome—both American and Japanese—afford glimpses of life, east and west, and reveal throbbings of loving hearts.

In the closing chapter is a statement of the principles and objectives underlying these projects of the Committee on World Friendship Among Children, which makes the volume doubly valuable for leaders in religious and secular education.

The book may be secured from the Committee on World Friendship Among Children, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York, for $1.50, postpaid. Order early, as the edition is limited.—Sidney L. Gulick, Federal Council of Churches.

CONSECRATING NEW MONEY TO CHRIST.

The issuance of the new paper money by the United States government on July 10th is to be made the occasion for a fresh emphasis on Christian stewardship in a great number of Churches. The proposal originated in the World Service Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which is suggesting a special stewardship program in all its congregations. The plan is also being taken up in other communions, through a suggestion made by the Federal Council of Churches, and it is expected that, with various modifications, it will be widely used.

The central idea is that each Church member be invited to symbolize the dedication of this new money to the Christian cause by giving the first new bill which he receives to helping spread the message of Christ through the missionary movement. Announcement of the plan will be made in local Churches on July 7th or July 14th, the Sunday immediately preceding or following the issuance of the new currency. It is also planned that on September 8th, the first Sunday after the summer vacation, the local Church arrange a service of dedication of the money thus contributed. The new money given in this way, it is urged, is to be in addition to all the regular missionary gifts.

The whole plan is meant to stand as a concrete and vivid symbol of the principle of the Christian's stewardship of his possessions, and the order of service for the dedicatory feature is being built around this central purpose.

Further information may be secured from the Methodist World Service Commission, 740 Rush Street, Chicago, Ill., or the Federal Council of Churches, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York.

Are you fearful and afraid? There are ghosts that fright us in this life we live. But it is the will of our Christ that we shall find, as did the disciples of old, that the ghost that walks upon the stormy waters is the Christ who is on His way to turn our fears into jubilant joy.

NOW THE TIME—HERE THE PLACE!

Your Church is making an effort to reach its goal for Missions this year, namely: one-third the amount of pastor's salary. If your Church, and all the other Churches, reach this goal, we will reach the total goal of $45,000 for the year ending September 30th, the amount asked of us by the Southern Christian Convention.

Will you, by an individual gift, help your Church to achieve this desired end? Now is the time! Here is the place! By a pull together, every Church can reach the goal. Help now.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By Rev. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson IV—July 28, 1929.

THE STORY OF DANIEL.

GOLDEN TEXT: "They that are wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."—Dan. 12:3.

LESSON: Dan. 1:1-21, 2:12-19, 4:19, 7:28, 8:15-18, 9:20-23, 10:1-19, 12:9.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 46.

"Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning," wrote Paul. It is doubtful, however, whether there is anything in all Scripture that contains as much practical common sense and as much inspiring teaching as the story of Daniel. Here is a story that every young person ought to know intimately and ought to live consistently.

Daniel Purposed.

Daniel had a great purpose in his heart. His life was not like a mere pleasure bark, driven hither and thither by every capricious wind, nor was it like a barge towed by another boat and subject to the will of that boat; it was like a great ocean liner, choosing its own course and making its own way against all opposing obstacles. Daniel had power because he had a purpose, some dominant, dynamic purpose, that gave driving power to his life. The man who aims at nothing is more than likely to hit the mark. The man who does not know where he is going is not likely to arrive, or he will not know when he does arrive. It is imperative that young people have a purpose in life if life is to have its fullest meaning.

It is noticed, too, that Daniel had a great and worthy purpose. He purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself. Daniel had a true sense of values. He knew that the most important thing in life was not to have something or to get something or to know something, but to be something! To be a man, to live by high ideals, to keep one's self pure was his purpose. Whatever else young people may purpose, they ought to make up their minds, and they ought to purpose in their hearts that they are going to be good men and good women. That purpose, rooted deeply in life and wrought out in action, is the primary thing in life.

Daniel Persevered.

It was not an easy thing to stick by his purpose. He was in a foreign country, away from so many restraining influences, and among those who were doing the thing that he was tempted to do. It would have been so easy to excuse himself and to compromise his ideals and his principles. Then, too, there was actual danger involved in sticking by his convictions. But because Daniel had thought things through, because he saw what was involved in eating the king's meat and in drinking the king's wine—it was more than a matter of eating a certain kind of food; it was a denial of his religious ideals and convictions—he persevered in his course. The little boy summed it up when he misread a sentence about Daniel to the effect that Daniel had a fine spirit in him, by reading it "Daniel had a fine spine in him." It takes more than wishbone in life; it takes backbone.

Daniel Proposed.

Daniel proposed a test. He was willing to allow results to speak for themselves. He suggested that he and his friends be allowed to eat what he proposed for ten days, and the other young man involved to eat the king's portion for that length of time, and at the end of ten days let results speak for themselves. It was a bold thing to do, but, after all, it is the only thing a man can do. A man's religion ought to stand the test of practical things. Unless it makes him a better man, a better husband, a better workman, a better citizen, it is faulty somewhere. Righteousness can vindicate itself every time. Christianity is willing to be judged by its fruits in individual and social life. Plain living makes for high thinking and better character. "By their fruits ye shall know them," said Jesus. What kind of argument are you for religion, and not what kind of argument can you put up for religion, is the ultimate test.

Daniel Prayed.

It is not enough simply to have a purpose. We need help. There is a power not of ourselves which makes for righteousness, and man comes into his heritage of victory when he summons to his aid through prayer this power that will bolster him up from within. One feels that the secret of failure in so many cases, not only among young people, but among adults as well, is in the fact that the prayer life has been neglected until there is no inner reserves, and hence no victory. Prayer has a very practical and definite place in the life of every young person. That young person is most wise who, through prayer, asks the Father for that grace which will help him to be true to his worthy purpose.

Daniel Prevailed.

It is not simply a matter of having the story "turn out right" when we read that at the end of ten days "their countenances appeared fairer and fatter in flesh than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat." It is in keeping with the facts of life. Loyalty to high ideals, wholesome living, attention to religion in a sincere way brings a man out more than conqueror. It is significant, too, that Daniel's example had a wholesome influence over his companions. He helped them into a larger life and into a larger sphere of service.

Daniel Prospered.

Daniel stood before the king. Blessed is the man that walketh in the way of righteousness. The wages of sin is death, but the rewards of right living cannot be computed in terms of anything less than eternal life. A man's life does not consist in the abundance of the things which he possesses, and success is not to be measured in terms of the standards of the world. He who sets himself to follow high ideals and who gives himself to the best things in life will prosper in the things that give life its ultimate meaning and its abiding satisfactions.

TOPIC: "How the Church is Making Our Nation Better."—Matt. 13:31-33; Luke 4:18, 19.

Some Bible Hints.

There is a strange power in the Church, as there is in a seed—power to grow, power to provide protection and shelter (vs. 31, 32).

Leaven or yeast permeates the batch of dough.

The Church is leavening, changing, and influencing the nation (v. 33).

The Church is the first and greatest institution whose primary duty is to the poor, the weak, the sinful, the sorrowing. It is a ministry of comfort (v. 18).

The Church is a liberating power. It is the Church's ideals that lift the nation (v. 18).

Suggestive Thoughts.

1. By preaching. Nothing can be done with men until they know the truth. It is the truth that makes us free.

2. By inspiring national leaders. Only as Christian men get into office can we expect to see Christian principles applied in politics and international affairs.

3. By entering unchurched communities. There are thousands of square miles and hundreds of thousands of our population without the benefit of a Church. The home missionary problem is an important one.

4. By supplying leaders for other organizations that help—the Y. M. C. A. and similar groups. These may be apart from the Church, but they are only offshoots, carrying out the Church's principles.

A Few Illustrations.

A man's body expresses the will of his spirit. The Church, the body of Christ, must carry on the work of Christ. What Christ wanted to do for Israel, He can do for America if the Church is faithful.

America needs rousing. That is, it needs evangelism. The dead need a loud trumpet to awaken them. Every awakened soul means a better nation.

The Church is helping by her benevolence. Where does the bulk of the money come from that goes to war and flood sufferers, that supports the Y. M. C. A. and multitudes of other institutions? From Church members!

The Church is helping the nation by all sorts of service, by insistence on obedience to law, by support of authority, by combating crime, and by reforming the criminal.

To Think About.

What is the Church doing for our community?

How may young people help to make our nation better?

How do good laws help our nation?

ECHOES FROM ELON SUMMER SCHOOL.

We left Suffolk on Saturday morning, June 23, 1928, and arrived at Elon just in time for supper. The trip through the country is lovely. After supper we had vesper services on the campus, and then a get-acquainted period in the Y. W. C. A., with games and songs and a delightful time.

Sunday morning we were awakened early, and at 7:15 we were served a delightful breakfast. Sunday School was at 10 o'clock, and after attending a very interesting class we went to the morning service and heard a wonderful sermon by Dr. W. Knighton Bloom.

After supper there was a Christian Endeavor meeting on the campus which was very interesting. The sermon in the evening was preached by Dr. C. H. Rowland and greatly enjoyed.

Monday morning our classes begun. I took "Materials and Methods," taught by Miss Clara Gill, which was a credit course, and "The Story of the Bible," taught by Mr. Herman Eldredge, which was not a credit course. I greatly enjoyed and feel that I received much benefit from each of these classes. After the second class period each morning we had a recreation period which refreshed us greatly for our next class.

In the early afternoon we could study or rest, after which we had various kinds of amusements directed by Mr. Thornton Smith.

At 7 o'clock each evening we had a very interesting vesper service on the campus. At 8 o'clock each evening, very interesting and delightful programs were given which were enjoyed by the people of the town as well as those attending the school. It was with regret that we had to say good-by to Elon and the lovely people we had met. I just wish more people will go this year.

Suffolk, Va. MISS SARAH SAUNDERS.

Last summer we had a lovely and enjoyable trip to and from Elon. We left home early Saturday morning and arrived there that afternoon in time for supper. After supper we went to vesper service, and then to the recreation period where we played games and sang. We were tired after our long trip, so went to bed early.

Sunday morning we went to Sunday School, and since I'm teaching in the beginners' department, I attended their class and saw how the little children were taught. Sunday night there was a Christian Endeavor meeting on the campus, which was very effective and greatly enjoyed by all the young people.

Every morning after breakfast we had a thirty-minute period which was called the watch period. During this time we went somewhere by ourselves and read a Bible scripture which was given us by our group leaders. This private devotion gave us much courage and strength for the day.

Our first class period at 8:45 was "The Story of the Bible," which was taught by Mr. Hermon Eldredge. This course was very interesting. The second period began at 9:40. I took a course on "Materials and Methods," since it dealt with the smaller children. Our teacher was Miss Clara Gill, who made the course very interesting. After the second period, every day, we had very interesting surprises in recreation. The fourth period we took our second class for our credit course. Then came dinner, and we were always ready for that.

In the afternoon some of the people attending the school visited places of interest near Elon, such as Guilford College and battle-grounds. We were divided into groups, with a leader to assist in our various group activities. The last night was stunt night. Each group had to get up some kind of a stunt in which every one took a part. After that, we had a marshmallow roast on the back campus.

All of us hated for the end of the week to come, for we knew it would be the end of that session. I wish each of you would put forth an effort to go, and I hope you will have as good time as we had.

THE SUN LETTER.

In order to get THE SUN into as many new homes as possible, I am going to continue the club rate of five new subscribers for $7.50 through the month of July. We trust that many Churches will take advantage of this offer and get at least five new subscribers.

Elon College, N. C. CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Circulation Manager.

NOTICE.

In submission to the Master's will, I shall end my stay in the Windsor pastorate with the close of this Conference year. We have made friends since being here whom we shall regret to leave; however, it seems to be the Lord's will that we make a change. So will be pleased to correspond with any Church or group of Churches desiring a pastor.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE CODE OF THE KINGDOM.

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Mark 12:28-34.

Human laws sometimes become so numerous that a recodification is necessary; and this recodification is accomplished with a vast amount of labor and study. The scribes and rabbis of Christ's day, and for many decades before, had been heaping up great masses of rules, of laws and interpretations and comments and traditions, until some simplification was sadly needed. The recodification which Christ made is a marvelous one. It has stood for two thousand years, and will stand forever. If we have a love for both God and man which has the allegiance of our whole nature, we are obeying the entire law of God.

Prayer.—Not without Thy help, dear Lord, can this be true of us. Let Thy love take possession of us, and then we can love God and our neighbor perfectly. Drive out of us all that is foreign to Thy love, O Christ! Become incarnate in us, Divine love. May we live and move and breathe in the atmosphere of love. So shall we keep Thy law, and in keeping of it shall find our great delight. Amen.

TUESDAY.

HAPPINESS AND HEARING.

"The common people heard him gladly."—Mark 12:35-37.

People of all kinds, common and uncommon, heard the Master, and some of the uncommon people like Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea, heard Him gladly; but most of the uncommon people heard Him with suspicion, or doubt, or surly antagonism. It remained for the common people—whom Lincoln said God must have loved because He made so many of them—to hear the Lord with joy and thanksgiving. And, therefore, the uncommon people, who did not hear Christ gladly, did not really hear Him at all. His gracious words fell on their outer ears, but there was a barrier inside which shut them out of their soul. Only when men listen gladly to Jesus do they listen to any true purpose. Happiness and hearing go together. Eagerness and enjoyment open the doors of our hearts. If our religion is not glad, it is not religion.

Prayer.—Great Teacher, we long for Thy words. They shall be as honey in the mouth, as a couch to our spirit. We seek for Thee, as for the shadow of a rock in a weary land. Thou art the chief of our desires, the blessed fulfillment of all our wants. And to Thee we give endless praise and gratitude. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

DOWN TO THE GROUND.

"Whosoever shall exalt himself shall be humbled, and whosoever shall humble himself shall be exalted."—Matt. 23:1-2.

It is not too much to say that Christianity is based on humility. Even the fundamental Christian virtue of love rests on humility as a substructure. There is a foundation below a foundation, and no one can love most deeply until he is humble.

Men of the world say of some one in disparagement that he is low; his birth is low, his thoughts and aims are low. But Christians see in lowliness the lordliest praise, and never tire of exalting the meek and lowly Saviour.

Humus is the ground, the soil. Humility is the ground quality. If you are uplifted in your own esteem, it is because your spirit is low and contemptible.

Prayer.—Our Blessed Redeemer, we are not worthy! We do not think of thrones or dream of crowns. We bow at Thy feet. Lord, be merciful to us, miserable offenders! Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHITEWASH.

"Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which outwardly appear beautiful, but inwardly are full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness."—Matt. 23:23-28.

In walking to Jerusalem to celebrate the Passover, the pilgrims were likely to incur ceremonial defilement by walking on a grave, since persons found dead in fields were buried where they were found. Therefore, it was the law that, a month before the Passover, all graves should be whitewashed so as to become conspicuous, as they were at the time when Christ spoke. Hypocrites, He said, are like those whitewashed graves.

We have carried the comparison over into political, social, and business life, and wrongdoing, over which a thin coating of excuses and false appearances has been drawn is said to be whitewashed. Men know it is there, but it can not be seen, and may be forgotten.

Let us clean out our lives! Let us get Christ to make them fresh and pure, inside and out! If any whitewash, let it be lime within! For the inner shall be outer some day, and we shall be disclosed to all the hosts of heaven as we really are.

Prayer.—Great Judge, make today a judgment, and show us ourselves; show us ourselves, convict, and cleanse. In Jesus' name. Amen.

FRIDAY.

OUT OF OUR SURPLUS.

"They all did cast in of their superfluity, but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living."—Mark 12:41-44.

We are often urged to "give till it hurts," not because Christ wants our giving to hurt us, but because He knows that giving until it hurts is the only way toward giving that does not hurt. Those rich men who cast into the temple treasury what they would not miss—mere trifles out of their surplus—cannot be said to have given at all; but the poor woman whose sole wealth was only half a cent, and who did not hold back even one of the two mites, was a genuine giver, such as puts most of us to shame. "I'll give my mite," we say, when we want to excuse a small gift; no one gives his mite till he gives his all.

The Lord measures our gifts not by themselves, but by what remains. Are they from the bottom of the bin, or from the overflow of it? Are they from our income or our capital? We are not in our giving to wrong those dependent on us, or even ourselves; our giving is to be sensible, but also it is to be sacrificial. And it is not really sensible till it is sacrificial.

Prayer.—Our Saviour, help us, we pray Thee, into an understanding of relative values. May we see so clearly the supreme importance of Thy work, that we shall gladly spend and be spent in Thy service. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE CROSS A MAGNET.

"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself."—John 12:20-33.

The coming of the Greeks to find Jesus was one of the shining events in the last week of our Lord's life. It showed that His influence had reached out beyond the Jews, and was taking hold of the Gentiles. It was the beginning of the end, that end which was to be the beginning of the kingdom of God on earth. It set Christ to speaking of His approaching death on the cross, which was to draw all men to Him, and it drew forth one of the three recorded voices from God, granted to the Son of God from the opened heavens.

The sacrifice on Calvary was an infinite expiation; and because it was that, it was also an infinite invitation and attraction. Men could not fail to go where so much was given, and given freely. The secret of attracting men to Christianity is to show what Christ will do for them if they come. Detract from Christ, and you cannot expect Him to attract men. But lift Him up before men as the cross-enthroned Son of the Most High, His hands held out full of unimaginable blessings to be had for the taking, and men will rush to the place of gifts, their faces eager and their souls exultant.

Prayer.—Thine the beneficence, precious Lord Jesus, and ours the begging and receiving. All the world is before Thee, kneeling to receive Thy bounty. How we rejoice in the overflowing of Thine infinite love! Amen.

SUNDAY.

OUR DOUBLE TAX.

"Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."—Luke 20:20-26.

No answer more acute, more comprehensive, and more clinching was ever made than this reply of Christ's to the crafty spies who sought to embroil Him with one or the other of the Jewish factions, the unyielding patriots or those submissive to Rome. "Of these two conflicting and seemingly contradictory allegiances," said our Lord virtually, "choose—both."

The nearer we live with Christ, the nearer we shall live with our human brothers and sisters. The more carefully we pay our great debt to our Saviour, the more prompt and heedful shall we be in the payment of our earthly debts. Christ placed us in this world not to scorn it but to serve it, and to draw from it all the service it has to give us. God and Caesar—let us pay all our debts.

Prayer.—Saviour, help us to render unto Caesar his just dues, and above all, unto God His. Amen.

RELIGIOUS STATISTICS.

Some interesting figures have recently been made public by the Stuttgart Statistical Bureau. They relate to the number of adherents of the leading religions of the world. Of course, such figures can be no more than reasonably accurate estimates; but for all purposes they are sufficiently accurate as an indication of relative strength of these religions. They are: Christians, 534,940,000; Confucianists, 300,000,000; Brahmanists, 214,000,000; Mohammedans, 175,290,000; Buddhists, 121,000,000; Jews, 10,860,000.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The Orphanage had its wheat-threshing last week and made 640 bushels of wheat, 94 bushels of oats, 66 bushels of rye, making a total of 800 bushels in all; also 1,000 bales of straw.

If our wheat keeps all right, we will have bread for another year. Last year we had wheat enough to bread our entire family. It seems to us when we have flour to buy that the children eat more, and a barrel of flour does not go very far; but I guess we just notice it more. It gives us a very comfortable feeling when we have plenty of wheat in the granary and meat in the meat-house. One hundred and twenty children consume lots of bread and meat during the year, as well as shoes and clothing. But when we take children who are homeless in the Christian Orphanage and they develop into fine young men and women, we feel that every dollar invested in this worthy work is money well invested. Who can place a value on a life beautifully lived?

GENERAL CONVENTION ITEMS.

The Executive Committee has extended an invitation to the National Council of Congregational Churches to send an official delegation to the Piqua Convention, October 22-29. Our delegation to their Detroit convention was heartily welcomed and made honorary members. We believe that our Convention will show the same fine and gracious spirit.

The Executive Committee has appointed another pre-Convention committee to be called the "Ministerial Relief and Pensions Committee," with the following members: President A. C. Carris (chairman), Rev. J. O. Atkinson, Rev. W. P. Minton, Hon. John B. Hutton, J. Frank Barnes, and Obed May.

Some few changes have been found necessary in a few pre-Convention committees: Rev. Clarence S. Bennett has been elected as chairman of the home mission committee, and Rev. Jesse M. Kauffman takes Mr. Bennet's place on the committee on organization. Rev. Orland C. Huff has been elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Ellery Kyle on the foreign missions committee. Rev. Robert Karn has been substituted for Mr. Herman W. Meyer on the committee on survey.

The foreign missions committee reports that Rev. Simon A. Bennett has been elected secretary of that committee.

Men's Banquet at Piqua Convention.

A great men's banquet will be held on Friday night of the Convention. It is expected that men will drive in fifty or more miles to attend it. Not only will all the men delegates and visitors of the Convention be present, but Piqua is in the very center of a great Christian Church constituency, and thus affords an unusual opportunity to bring together a great group of our men.

The speaker will be Mr. Fred B. Smith. Isn't it fine to be able to have that great world-renowned Christian leader to speak, with our own well-known President W. A. Harper, of Elon College? Mr. Smith is now the new moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches. There will be plenty of good music with these two great speakers, and Mr. Hermon Eldredge as toastmaster. A special local committee will have the promotion of the banquet, with Mr. H. E. Sims as its chairman. The other members are A. E. Buchanan, Piqua; Perry G. Yantis, Troy; Elmer Schaffer, Covington; Jesse Beery, Pleasant Hill; O. S. Walker, Dayton. Do not miss the banquet.

Do It Today.

Sign a tither's pledge card today and start right in setting aside one-tenth of your income as it comes in for the Lord's work. It is the Bible way. It is the basic plane for starting. That is the Lord's. It is holy unto the Lord. Separate it and then use it for his work. It will pay you spiritually and financially. It will give you joy. Giving will become a genuine pleasure. The tithe will become the door into larger blessings than you have dreamed. Begin today, then send to this office for more pledge cards and secure the signatures of others to join with you.

HOME DEPT. SUPERINTENDENTS.

The secretary of the Home Department of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention is anxiously awaiting the reports from the superintendents of the home departments in the Churches. I shall appreciate your kindness if you send them in promptly. July 23-24 is close at hand, and my report for the convention at Liberty Springs Christian Church can not be ready nor correct unless you co-operate. Thank you.

JUBILEE NEWS.

Great Uplift Expected at Piqua.

This Convention year is also our Jubilee Year. We have set our heads, hearts and purses to make it truly a year of marked enrichment and extension. The Piqua Convention program will ever have this in mind. Here is one item: an upper-room prayer service will be held daily at 8 o'clock, lasting three-quarters of an hour only, and those who attend that place of power may go directly into the Convention room, where for some twenty minutes each morning an outstanding leader will bring a message. Those "morning meditations" at the Urbana Convention were most helpful, and we expect them to be even more so at Piqua. That upper-room service will help prepare for it, too. They will begin on time and close on time and will be under full direction of a special committee, consisting of Rev. W. J. Young, of Indiana; Rev. Raymond G. Clark, pastor; Mrs. C. H. Rowland, of North Carolina; Rev. J. E. Fry, of Indiana, and Rev. Ross McNeal, of Ohio. This committee will appoint leaders, or may themselves lead the services, and look after all the details of each day's meeting. Make your plans for the upper-room services.

For or Against War.

This office, in conjunction with the Bureau of Social Service, Rev. A. E. Kemp, D. D., secretary, has sent out some 300 copies of a forty-eight-page booklet, "The Words of Christ Commonly Quoted For or Against War," to active pastors of our Churches. It is a valuable compendium prepared for study groups. It will be of great help to our pastors, and it should not be passed by unused. Every week or so we are asked for the official action of our Church on the great world problem of war and peace. We anticipate that the pre-Convention committee on "the Church and world problems" will express the real thought of the Christian Church on this important question in its report at Piqua.

This is No Time—

For any Church to be dropping down from full-time service of a minister to part-time service.

For any Church to be divided in its own forces, and thus present to the world a divided front and neutralize its own power in the community.

For any Church to be decreasing its benevolences or even maintaining them status quo, for heaven knows our people last year just barely averaged one cent a day per capita for all benevolent work.

For anything but team-work among all the Churches and Conferences in the whole program of our Christian Church.

For any Church to fail to recognize the great help its young people will be if it will get into sympathetic touch with them, for there has never been such a stream of young people ready to serve and help in our Church.

For the members of any Church to be drawn into the materialistic spirit of our day, and thus fail to know the real meaning of sacrifice.

For the officials of the local Church and of the Conferences to be contented with present attainments and programs, or to have a smug complacency as to their work.

For any Church to delay or treat lightly this Jubilee Year without a very definite and sacrificial program for itself. Make it worth-while and definite. This is the 1900th anniversary of our Lord's last year in person on earth. Does it mean anything to you and your Church? If ever there was a time when those who know Christ at all should "be abounding in the work of the Lord," it is now.

The Bureau of Ministerial Supply.

This bureau desires to be of every possible service to Churches that are without pastors, and to pastors who are without Churches. This bureau carries on a vast correspondence and is in close touch with Churches and pastors and will be glad to render any service it can. Its work is done impartially. Its best judgment and information will be given to all who have legitimate claim upon it.

Loyalty Days.

"Loyalty days"—what are they? Oh, yes: days when you expect every member to be loyal to the plans of the Church! You want each one to subscribe to the budget of your Church. Fine! Has your Church been loyal and actually subscribed to the Convention budget and sought to oversubscribe it, or does the Convention work have what it can get and when it can get it? Do you want the members of your Church to act toward your Church and toward you as pastor as your Church is now acting toward your Conference and the General Convention, of which your Church is a member? "Loyalty days"—what are they? Loyal to your Church, loyal to your pastor, loyal to the Church program, loyal to your full budget.

Would your pastor, janitor, music director be satisfied to take what they can get, and get it about once a year? How about missionaries, secretaries, printers, stenographers? "Loyalty days," loyalty days"; let's see, what are they? Time for thought, and time for action!

THE LARGER OUTLOOK.

"And he brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven!"

The tent was changed for the sky! Abraham sat moodily in his tent; God brought him forth beneath the stars. And that is always the line of the Divine leading. He brings us forth out of our small imprisonments and He sets our feet in a large place. He desires for us height and breadth of view. For, "as the heavens are high above the earth," so are His thoughts higher than our thoughts, and His ways than our ways. He wishes us, I say, to exchange the tent for the sky, and to live and move in great, spacious thoughts of His purpose and will.

How is it with our love? Is it a thing of the tent or of the sky? Does it range over mighty spaces seeking benedictions for a multitude? Or does it dwell in selfish seclusion, imprisoned in merely selfish quest? How is it with our prayers? How big are they? Will a tent contain them, or do they move with the scope and greatness of the heavens? Do they just contain our own families or is China in them, and India, and "the uttermost parts of the earth?" "Look now towards the heavens!" Such must be our outlook if we are the companions of God.—John H. Jowett.

THEN spake Jesus to the multitude, and to his disciples,

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3 3/4 x 4 1/2 inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text. The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2 1/4 x 4 1/2 inches x 3/4 inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made. The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength. One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together. The size, 2 1/4 x 4 1/2 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

DOVER, DEL.

Special summer services have been planned at People's Christian Church, Dover, Del., for each Sunday from July 7th to August 11th, inclusive. Dr. James T. Mordy, pastor of the Cottage Grove Avenue Presbyterian Church, of Des Moines, Iowa, will be the speaker. In order to stimulate Church attendance during the month of July, and to cultivate a spirit of interdenominational fellowship, a number of pastors in recent years have practiced exchanging pulpits during the month of July with other pastors from other sections of the country, and from other denominations.

Several weeks ago the official board of People's Church voted unanimously to accept the proposal previously endorsed by the session of the Cottage Grove Avenue Presbyterian Church, of Des Moines, Iowa, said proposal being that the pastors of said Churches exchange pulpits during the month of July. The plan of exchange of pastoral service for the month of July has been supplemented in this case by Dr. Helfenstein and Dr. Mordy in their volunteering to give two weeks of their vacation month in August also in service to the other Church. Dr. Helfenstein and family will occupy the manse of the Des Moines Church, and Dr. Mordy and family will occupy the parsonage of People's Christian Church. This pastoral exchange includes all the usual pastoral services required at any time, in addition to being responsible for the regular Sunday program of worship. Other Churches and pastors that have adopted this plan of exchange have found that it helps to solve the Church-attendance problem during the summer weeks.

The Churches have the benefit of hearing the gospel message during the period from a different voice, and to receive the inspiration in the Church work from a leader who has brought things to pass in his own Church in another section of the country, and in another denomination. Also the pastors are given the privilege of viewing firsthand the life and fellowship of a different Church than he is regularly serving.

The session of the Des Moines Church and the official board of the Dover Church both voted unanimously for this exchange in the belief that it would prove a blessing both to the Churches and the pastors.

Dr. Mordy is a native of Kansas, a graduate of Park College in 1910, and of McCormick Theological Seminary in 1913. He attended Auburn Theological Seminary two years, and while at Auburn was assistant pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of that city. He has been pastor of the Cottage Grove Avenue Presbyterian Church of Des Moines, Iowa, for six years, a Church which has a membership of eleven hundred, and which is one of the most progressive Churches in that hustling capital city of considerably more than a hundred thousand population.

Dr. Mordy is a member of the Kiwanis Club, the Chamber of Commerce, the Golf and Country Club, and is affiliated with numerous other organizations touching the life of his city. Dr. Mordy is an unusually forceful speaker and is one of the most popular ministers of his city.

Dr. Mordy's subjects at the People's Church will be as follows: July 7—morning, "Life's Affirmative"; evening, "Pageant in Community Hall." July 14—morning, "Shifting Burdens"; evening, "A Spoiled Child who Made Good." July 21—morning, "Links and Kinks"; evening, "A Popular Hero." July 28—morning, "The God of Our Children"; evening, "A King Who Committed Hari-Kari." August 4—morning, "The Radius of Reality"; evening, "Pageant in Community Hall." August 11—morning, "An Urge Supreme"; evening, "A Fearless Youth—A Courageous Statesman." Morning services each Sunday will begin at 11 o'clock, and evening services at 7:30 o'clock.

This is an unusually interesting service of subjects, and they will be dealt with in an inspiring and instructive manner. Hear Dr. Mordy's first sermon of the series and you will want to hear every sermon of the series.

Dr. Helfenstein will return to Dover to occupy his pulpit the first Sunday in September, giving a special Labor Day message at the morning service, and at the evening service he will speak on the subject, "Greetings From the West," giving some of the most interesting experiences of his trip to and sojourn in Iowa.

The first Sunday in October, Dr. Helfenstein will start the program of his tenth year as pastor of People's Church. He stated Sunday that the schedule of messages from the pulpit and Church activities that he was outlining would, he believed, prove greatly beneficial to the members of the Church as individual Christians, to every organization in the Church, and to the Church as a whole. He said it was his ambition to make the coming year the best year of the ten.

The first Sunday in October will also mark the fifth anniversary of the dedication of the new building. A special program is being planned as a fitting celebration of this important date in the Church calendar. Rally day will likely be held the last Sunday in September. Dr. Helfenstein and family left on Monday by automobile for Des Moines, expecting to reach the city by Friday.—Delaware State News.

COSTLY CHURCH EDIFICES.—

The public press is calling attention to the millions of dollars being expended in the erection of magnificent Church edifices. Prominent ministers and congregations are either actively engaged in the process of building or are planning for building projects that run into the millions. There are most excellent and worthy reasons why beautiful and costly Church buildings are desirable. The idea that Church buildings should be somewhat in keeping with neighboring buildings that are used for other purposes is worthy of consideration. Shabby, dilapidated and unsightly Church buildings certainly do not reflect the proper spirit of reverence and regard for the God whom we worship, especially if the membership, in the main, lives in dwellings that are costly and luxurious.

The intensive study of the question of worship which is now engaging the attention of Church leaders, is revealing the importance of beauty as related to worship. There is no question but that beautiful, harmonious surroundings are most conducive to the worshipful mood. Nor are worshipful Church appointments to be had only by enormous cash expenditures. There are to be found everywhere throughout our land Church buildings whose cost runs into hundreds of thousands, but whose architecture and decorations are no more conducive to worshipful atmosphere than many courthouses and public buildings. On the other hand, there are Churches that are admirably adapted to the most exalted worship, whose cost is within the reach of the average large congregation. It is not so much a question of the amount of money expended as it is of knowing what is desired and how to attain it.

It is hard to find any valid objection to the congregation that is financially able to build and pay for an expensive Church building having just the sort of building which is desired. But the question we are raising is: should the congregation plan a costly building, which will tax the resources of the membership and pile up a debt which can be paid only by the most severe self-denial throughout a score or more of years? Such a course certainly calls for sacrifice on the part of the membership; but is it the sort of sacrifice which Jesus Commended so highly? Has the present Church membership the moral right to mortgage the future usefulness of the Church?

Recently a most devout layman, whose Church had gone deeply in debt for a Church building which cost nearly a half-million dollars, said that he was convinced that they had made a mistake. He testified that he had been most enthusiastic for the costly building. He was saying we (not they) have made a mistake! He saw that they were unable, because of the debt for which they were responsible, to do their part to advance the interests of the kingdom beyond their local borders. It was a question of spending too much for the local congregation, and not being able to help the more needy causes. Churches, as well as individuals, must consider the claims of their stewardship and maintain the proper proportion in their spending.

THE WISDOM OF THE UNGODLY.—

One of the most interesting features of the experiment being conducted in Russia to rule a great nation according to Soviet principles, has been the attitude toward religion. The Soviet has always maintained an attitude of un concealed hatred for all forms of religion. The reason that has been assigned for this hostility toward religion is that religion is the mainstay of the capitalistic regime. The fact is that religion is unalterably opposed to the principles upon which the Soviet is organized. While the Soviet is based upon the Communistic principle, which is supposed to be the medium for affording equal rights and privileges for all, in its actual working it has sought for the development and protection of the special interests of a limited group, at the expense of all the rest of the nation. It has maintained the power of the proletariat by the most ruthless and inhuman methods.

For a time, the policy was to crush religion by force. The Churches were closed. Men and women were forbidden to hold religious assemblies; and those who disregarded the orders were arrested, fined and subjected to other indignities and persecutions. The authorities have learned that religion cannot be crushed by such methods, and have announced a new policy. This new policy gives a certain form of religious freedom, but provides restrictions and limitations designed to effectually cut off the possibility of religious influence and growth.

According to article 17 of the new law: "Religious societies are forbidden (1) to create mutual aid societies, co-operatives, productive units, or generally use the properties at their command for any purposes save those of satisfying religious needs; (2) to render material aid to their members; (3) to organize special gatherings of children, young people, or women, general Bible meetings, literary, sewing, or working circles, or circles to teach religion, or arrange excursions, open children's playgrounds, libraries, reading-rooms, organize sanitariums and medical aid." "Article 19 provides that ministers of a cult can serve and preach only in the Church to which they are attached."

This government that hates the name of God and hates everything that suggests religion, and which is determined to drive religion out of the boundaries over which it exercises its authority, says that Christians may meet, sing their songs, read their Bibles, offer their prayers, and listen to sermons from their ministers. But it likewise says that Christians must not engage in any efforts designed to render material aid to their members or to others. They are forbidden to undertake any work of religious education for the benefit of the young people or for the mature individuals who are at present outside of the Church. No work of evangelism can be engaged in that might be instrumental in winning converts to religious faith. The fact that the activity of the minister and the Church membership is limited to their own immediate circles precludes every possibility of any form of missionary endeavor.

Now, if we be permitted to judge by their present attitudes and activities, would not the Russian situation exactly suit thousands of our American Christians? Those Church members who are so tired of so many collections for orphanages, and for the relief of the poor, the sick, the destitute, and all those who are the victims of the misfortunes and catastrophies of life would find just the conditions they are looking for in Russia. The government forbids such things to be done in the Churches. The Church member who can see nothing in the work of the Sunday School to enlist his interest and his activity is in perfect accord with the Bolshevik regime of Russia. Those thousands of professing Christians who do not believe in missions or who are unwilling to make any sacrifice on their part that the gospel may be preached to those who know it not, would delight the heart of the officials of Soviet Russia who hate God and Jesus Christ and everything connected with Christianity.

If the devil himself hates Christianity more intensely than does the Soviet, it is only because his Satanic Majesty is capable of blacker and more abysmal hatred. If anything in the world can stir the hearts of the inactive Church members who are striving for nothing save the salvation of their individual souls, it should be the fact that the arch-enemies of Jesus Christ see nothing alarming and nothing worthy of active opposition in the course which they are following.

Whatever we may think of the principles and policies of the Soviet, we must acknowledge that those who are responsible for the new laws dealing with religion have clearly grasped the essential nature and characteristics of Christianity. They know that if the channels through which the outflow of Christianity bears its pity, its charity, its works of mercy, and its gracious invitations of forgiveness and life in Jesus Christ can be stopped, that Christianity will have been dealt a mortal blow. There is no doubt but that this new policy is going to do the Church and the cause of religion incalculable harm. But the one fact that must always be borne in mind is that Christ can never be betrayed save by those who are within the circle of his own followers.

NOTES-PERSONALS

One of our young pastors writes: "I am enclosing the first bill of the new currency that has come into my hands. I believe the suggestion of the Federal Council to be a fine one. I trust that great numbers of our people will respond by consecrating their first fruits to the service of the Lord."

One of our faithful, self-denying, consecrated pastors writes: "I am sending enclosed the first new $1.00 bill that I have received, in accordance with the request that same be given to missions. I wish I had more to send, but I have not. My salary is very small this year. Hoping you success in your work, yours in Christ."

About forty members of our Burlington Sunday School and congregation went to Elks Spur, Fancy Gap, Va., on Sunday, July 14th, and of their coming Miss Jewel Truitt, teaching and working there, says: "We were very happy to have the Burlington folks visit us yesterday. A goodly number of them came, and they rendered two very fine programs."

The nine Christian Churches of Greater Norfolk, Va.—First, Christian Temple, Old Zion, Rosemont, South Norfolk, Portsmouth, Berea, Newport News, and Ocean View—will hold a union training school October 6-11. At a recent meeting of representatives of these Churches, the holding of such a school, with International Council standards, was endorsed and a committee of arrangements appointed to complete plans.

Mrs. B. F. Frank, secretary, Route 4, Harrisonburg, Va., calls attention to the fact that the Woman's Missionary Meeting of the Virginia Valley Central Conference will be held with Leaksville Church August 1st. This body has been holding its sessions at some time during the annual Conference, but has decided to have a separate session for a day prior to the Conference, and then at the annual Conference put on an evening program. Mrs. Frank hopes to see a large attendance of the women of the Conference at Leaksville.

Mrs. Alfred Hayes, faithful in good works and deeply interested in missions in Union Church, Virgilina, Va., writes under date of July 15th: "Our Sunday School has decided to give our offering on second Sundays to missions, and my class had a missionary program yesterday. I take great pleasure in sending you check for $2.75 from the class as a result of the program, and I only wish it was more. Our pastor announced at the morning service the matter of consecrating the new money by giving the first bill any individual receives to missions."

Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, Henderson, N. C., was so happy the past week that he was unwilling to send, but came to the office of the Mission Secretary to bring the first new dollar he had received and to report also (and that which was even more joyous to him) that the first new baby had arrived in his home in the Christian parsonage at Liberty (Vance) on July 10th, christened Mary Elizabeth Crutchfield. Besides extending congratulations to the happy father and mother, we are hoping that this child of the manse will grow to the life of beauty and loveliness signified by the beautiful name given her—Mary Elizabeth.

Rev. G. H. Veazey, Roanoke, Ala., writes July 15th: "I am expecting some great revivals this summer. Rev. O. D. Poythress, South Norfolk, Va., will be with us in Roanoke beginning the first Sunday in August. Later, Rev. J. H. Dollar, of Reidsville, N. C., will assist me at Richland. Our meeting for ministers' and laymen's conference at Pisgah the fifth Sunday in June was fine. Bro. Hughes, pastor, is doing a great work there. Pisgah has the only parsonage in the Alabama Conference, and it is a good one. The School of Christian Education at Wadley last week was the best I have ever attended. The teachers and leaders were all at their best."

Rev. J. T. Whitley, D. D., 228 Thirty-sixth Street, Norfolk, Va., in presenting to readers of THE SUN this week "An Old Preacher's First Sermon," says in a personal letter: "If we old men are somewhat reminiscient and garrulous at times, our younger brethren will perhaps excuse us." If younger brethren enjoy any reading or conversation of one type more than another, it is that from men and women of culture, dignity and righteousness, who through the years have sought the better things of life, and now out of rich and ripe experience tell of those better things just as Dr. Whitley has done and always does in his articles to THE SUN. We only wish he would write more often.

At this writing, the condition of Rev. P. T. Klapp, faithful man of God, for some weeks past ill at his home, Elon College, N. C., is somewhat improved and now and then is able to recognize and speak to his family and friends. It may be that our Heavenly Father yet has other plans for him than to call him away, and that the current of life will again surge through a body that till this affliction was exceedingly vigorous and full of energy. It has seemed a little short of a miracle to those attending him that, having gone so near death's door, he shows such signs of returning strength and clear consciousness. He greatly appreciates visits from his friends, and when able rejoices to converse with them.

One good brother did this way about the first new money: "Dear Brother,—I heard your letter read (in our Sunday School) yesterday, asking for the first new money we receive. The first I received was two $1.00 bills and the third was a $5.00 bill, so I am sending you for missions the $5.00 bill. If I can help any more by September 1st I will do so." That is fine, since it carries out not only the letter of the request, but the whole soul and spirit of it. On our coins are stamped "In God We Trust," and our paper money goes out as a representative and circulating medium of the gold and silver held in the government vaults. So, as we make a contribution to missions of the first new money received, we are carrying out in practice the declaration of our national government, "In God We Trust."

Rev. T. J. Green and Rev. H. V. Cox, of Ramseur, N. C., were very pleasant visitors at THE SUN office, Elon College, N. C., Friday, the 19th. They have been engaged the past week in a revival at Shallow Ford Church, of which Bro. Green is pastor. They reported a good attendance and a good meeting. Bro. Green, having recently moved from Elon College to Ramseur, will not serve his present field next year, but expects to serve Churches in the Western North Carolina Conference nearer his home. Bro. Cox is to begin his meeting at Pleasant Cross the first Sunday in August, and Rev. J. W. Knight, Stokesdale, N. C., is to assist. He is looking forward to a good meeting. Bro. Cox is a faithful man of God and is being used to build up Churches and the work to which he is called. Bro. Green has rendered faithful service during the years he has been pastor of a group of Churches in Guilford and Alamance, and these Churches regret exceedingly that he is to leave them.

On June 10th, Senator Borah introduced into the United States Senate a bill to amend the food and drug act of June 30, 1906, by extending its provisions to tobacco and tobacco products. In advocating his bill, the brilliant senator from Idaho "charges the tobaccoists with indulging in an 'orgy of buncombe, quackery, and downright falsehood and fraud to create a vast woman-and-child market for their products.'" The increase in the consumption of cigarettes surpasses comprehension, and much of this increase is due, so the knowing ones declare, to the subtle and insistent propaganda and advertising by the manufacturers of cigarettes to induce women, girls and children to smoke. The revenue to the national government from the manufacture of tobacco amounts to more than a million dollars a day, and the one source of this revenue, which surpasses all others combined, is that from cigarettes.

Friend R. O. Rothgeb, Luray, Va., writes an interesting and suggestive personal letter that we print it: "Dear Bro. Atkinson,—Last Sunday was the Sunday on which we take the Sunday School offering for missions, and as you know from your records the offering is often less than $2.00, so I felt that probably a little talk on missions would result in better offerings. So before taking the offering last Sunday I made a little talk on missions, which resulted in an offering of $4.03. I am adding to this amount $4.00 more, making $8.03, for which please credit Leaksville Sunday School. I don't give myself credit for the increase in the offering from the Sunday School, but the spirit which prompted me to make the little talk also prompted the school to contribute more liberally. I do believe, though, that God does use us as instruments to advance His kingdom, and when we are jealous in His cause, He gives power to our words. Hoping that the mission goal will be reached, and with my kindest regards to you."

FIELD NEWS.

It is not in speaking what we think that causes heart-aches and broken friendships, but it's the way we speak. It is not so much in what we do, to the glory of God, that counts, but it's in the quality of the doing.

The person who thinks our people in the country, as a whole, are more ignorant than our city folks, as a whole, is certainly allowing his partialities to run on high tide, or he has failed to acquaint himself with conditions as they are.

You can tell me that young men and young ladies are educated as much as you please, but if they haven't enough sense to behave themselves, as becometh cultured people, you will have a hard job making me believe you.

Little more than a year ago I heard one of these smarties from a city of about twenty thousand population speaking of a certain worthy rural district minister as a "two by four." About a month ago I had an opportunity to visit a Church where this good minister has been laboring, as pastor, for about fourteen years, and during this time he has seen three young men go from this Church into the ministry. He has seen two young men go into the practice of medicine. He has seen two young men and four young ladies take their place among the leading high school teachers of our State. He has seen one young man become a great musician, who is now in New York; while others have taken their places as business men, bookkeepers, stenographers and farmers. God send us some more just such "two by four" preachers!

WEIGHED IN THE BALANCE.

"Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting."—Dan. 5:27.

"Mene, mene, tekel, peres" are the words of mystery that appeared on the walls of the palace during King Belshazzar's feast. One cannot easily imagine how disturbed was the Babylonian ruler when he beheld a part of a human inscribing these queer words upon the walls of the banquet room during the midst of the feast. The puzzle would not have been so terrifying had some one been able to decipher the meaning therefrom, but nobody knew anything about the cause or the effect of such strange performances. The wise men from far and near came to look at the handwriting upon the wall, but none of them knew the meaning or interpretation of the words. What was the King to do? He was greatly annoyed. His countenance fell and he could not sleep for the worry and anxiety caused by the strange handwriting upon the wall. He offered a reward, consisting of a scarlet robe and gold necklaces to any one who could tell him the meaning of the words.

"Now, the Queen, by reason of the words of the King and his lords, came into the banquet hall: and the Queen spake and said, 'O King, live forever: let not thy thoughts trouble thee, nor let thy countenance be changed: there is a man in thy kingdom, in whom is the spirit of the holy gods; and in the days of thy father, light and understanding and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, found itself in him: whom the King Nebuchadnezzar, thy father, made master of the magicians. Forasmuch as an excellent spirit, and knowledge, and understanding, and interpreting of dreams, and showing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in this same Daniel. Now let Daniel be called and he will show the interpretation.'"

And young Daniel was brought in before the King and offered gifts if he could but read for the King the meaning of the words on the wall. Daniel said, "Let thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy rewards to another: I will read the writing and make known the interpretation. And Daniel read the writing on the wall and the interpretation of the words. "Mene, mene" meant that God had numbered the kingdom and finished it; "tekel" meant that "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting"; "peres" meant that the kingdom was divided and given to the Medes and Persians.

And true to his promise, the King clothed Daniel with scarlet robes and put a chain of gold about his neck and proclaimed that he should be the third ruler of the kingdom. That part of the interpretation that is most personal is the second statement which we choose this day for a text. It must have been this phrase that caused the King such great disturbance. Up until this time he held a high head and felt that he was a perfect man, but now he knows that he is found wanting. He is incomplete. So it is that the world today is full of men and women who are weighed in the balances and found wanting. Let us think of the various kinds of balances in which people are weighed and found wanting.

1. Some people are weighed in their own balances and found wanting. There is a grave danger in weighing one's self in his own balances. He is nearly always likely to overrate his actual worth and be found wanting. His own opinion of self is not always reliable. He sometimes leads himself to believe, according to his own balances, that he is better than people think he is, and that, regardless of what others may think, he is the final judge as to his status. It is indeed folly to think of a person who is trying to reduce weight, standing on the scales and tipping them in his favor. He is like the person who cheats himself when he plays solitaire. And so it is folly to make one's self believe he is better than he actually is. This fault of ours usually occurs when we weigh ourselves in our own balances.

One cannot easily judge himself or see himself as others see him, because he lives too close to himself. Endeavoring to weigh one's self accurately in his own balances is like trying to behold the mountain-peaks while standing too close to the base of the foundation off of which the mountain rises.

Too often one finds himself to be better than he really is when weighed in his own balances. The terrible characteristic of conceit manifests itself in one's own balances and he is found wanting. I know of a man who wanted to be appointed postmaster of a certain town not far away during Wilson's administration, whose life embodied this deplorable element of conceit. When weighed in his own balances, he was the only man available to do things, and for fear that President Wilson would appoint another to be postmaster in his town, he wired him, saying: "Don't do anything till you have heard from me." But for some unaccountable reason, the telegram failed to stop the machinery of the nation and the other man was appointed. In celebrating his victory, his friends staged a big parade, and on a banner they placed the words, "Don't do anything till you have heard from me." There are lots of people who seem to think that their pastor should do nothing till he has heard from them. Such people are like icebergs which sometimes suddenly turn over in the midst of the sea. Such phenomenon results from the warm ocean current, which slowly and invisibly melts the submerged part of the iceberg. Thus slowly the huge mass of ice becomes topheavy. Woe to the person who, in weighing himself in his own balances, becomes topheavy.

When one things too highly of himself he becomes wrapped up, so to speak, in himself. He then makes a very small parcel, for when he shrinks to the size that he can be wrapped up in himself, there's not very much to wrap up.

People who weigh themselves in their own balances easily become puffed up. They are like that peculiar species of fish called the blow-fish to toad fish. It has no particular value unless it is that of cultivating the patience of the fishermen. It is a very unattractive fish, with a great mouth and a motly, wrinkled body that looks like worn-out leather. But when one turns this homely little creature over and tickles its throat it will puff up until it is swollen to the appearance of a huge globe. Some people think so much of themselves that they easily blow themselves up until they resemble a beautiful globe, but there is nothing substantial about them—just air. Even the commonest tramp that visits the backdoors thinks himself to be something, when he is nothing. He has weighed himself in his own opinion, and seldom if ever is at fault or is found wanting, but the world knows, and God knows.

Our business is to see ourselves as we are. To grow and not to swell, to be built up in Christ; not to be puffed up with pride. In this connection it is well to remember Paul's words, "Knowledge puffeth up, but love buildeth up." Let none of us be satisfied with our own opinion of ourselves, nor of the findings of others, for when weighed in their balances we are most often found wanting.

2. Some people are weighed in the balances of others and found wanting. When we are weighed in the balances of another, we are most often found wanting, for the other person seldom sees us at our best. He fails to evaluate his neighbor's real worth, and therefore severely underrates him. If he wants a favor, he will flatteringly tip the scales in his favor, but most often we are underrated and found wanting when placed in the balances of another. Sometimes this unfortunate experience occurs because of prejudice, sometimes from lack of actual knowledge, and sometimes because the truth is known. It is impossible for any man to accurately judge another. It is hard to behold the mote in a brother's eye when a beam is in thine own eye.

When weighed in the balances of another, one is found wanting because he is declared to be incapable, narrow-minded, hypocritical and unworthy of responsibility and assistance. Let us, therefore, beware of the balances of another, for we are sure to be found wanting. Then let us see ourselves as God knows us to be, by placing ourselves in His balances.

3. Some people are weighed in the balances of God and found wanting. When weighed in the balances of one's own self, or the balances of another and found wanting, one does not always need to become alarmed, for human balances are not altogether accurate. But when weighed in the balance of God and found wanting, one may rest assured that something is really lacking in his life. God never makes mistakes. His balances are correct—they never vary.

He finds us to be wanting when His Son, Jesus Christ, is not in our lives. We are incomplete without Him. The Great Father planned that each person accept Him, and to refuse is to be wanting. If He is wanting in our lives, all other powers and virtues are absent. Without Him we have not the love of God. We know not the full measure of faith or hope unless He resides in our souls.

A road sign appeared along the highway marked, "Turn Right and Keep Going Straight." And as we search our lives and find ourselves to be wanting in the balances of God, let us resolve to "Turn right and keep going straight." He is our Leader. Let us follow Him, singing:

"If Jesus goes with me, I'll go anywhere!
'Tis heaven to me, where'r I be, if He is there!
I count it a privilege here, His cross to bear:
If Jesus goes with me, I'll go anywhere."

RISING FROM THE RUINS.

Porto Rico is slowly recovering from the disaster of the cyclone. Nature has wrought wonders in the production of vegetation by which barrenness is relieved. We are now getting in the market green beans, lettuce and other vegetables which have been produced since the storm, and some oranges and grapefruits which in the more protected parts of the fields have now come to maturity. The popular song of a few years ago, "Yes, we have no bananas," has been a sad reality for the poor people who depend so much upon that fruit for food, and it will be some months before any bananas will be produced. The recent action of Congress in the appropriation of funds for seeds to the farmers and loans to the coffee growers will bring relief to a large number of such agriculturists and will provide labor for the peon class.—World Call.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE SOUL'S DEPOSITORY.

Our conscious acts are based on what the psychologists term the "subconscious." In the Bible, this "subconscious" is called "the heart," "the soul," "the life." This is what Paul had in mind when he wrote (Rom. 10:10): "With the heart, man believeth unto righteousness." Or as another inspired writer says: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." It is not the passing thought of the mind that reveals the real life of the individual, but the inner thought, the subconscious, that which has become real and permanent.

Five hundred billion dollars are in circulation in the United States. In addition to this, checks are drawn annually by individuals to the amount of seven hundred billion dollars. Now, this currency and these checks in circulation represent the conscious activity of the business world. Back of all this, and making all this possible and real, are the gold and the silver, coin and bullion, which the government has stored in its vaults and mints. This corresponds to what is termed the "subconscious." It lies there as the guarantee, and the source of safety, to the constant and rapid transactions of the business world. Back of our daily conversation and conduct before the world is the soul of us, the heart of us, the storehouse of character, from which we draw and from which we transact our affairs in the world.

If one wishes to know why we build Churches and support them, why we observe the Sabbath and obey the commandments, one finds the explanation here. Men and women are seeking by worship and contact with God to store up in the soul that depository of durable and eternal wealth on which checks are drawn and deeds are done in the every-day affairs of life. If one thinks only of the temporary, and lives only with the transient and the passing, one becomes a moral and a spiritual bankrupt, just as one becomes a financial bankrupt if he draws checks constantly on funds or credits that he has not established for himself in some safe depository. Many "progressives" in thought and many "moderns" in activity are ready to make light of the Church, turn their backs upon the sanctuary and discredit the sacred institutions and activities among men. Such are short-sighted, indeed, and are living only in the present and for the present, when, in truth, man was made not for any moment or passing event, but for all eternity and for the deep things of God. Our Saviour taught and warned us of this when He said: "Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness." The emphasis should be put on the word "first," making the search of the kingdom of God primary, and putting it ahead of and deeper than any of our other seeking. And then emphasis should be placed upon the words "His righteousness." Man's righteousness can never get him anywhere, beyond the passing day, and the events of the time. God's righteousness, however, abides forever, and as man seeks and hides, in the depository of his soul, the righteousness of God, and not the righteousness of man, he has a source of safety and of credit upon which he may daily draw. THE POPE WINS.

The Vatican never gave up its fight for temporal power. In 1870 the Italian government wrested from the Pope of Rome and the Church of which he is head, the last vestige of temporal power. From that date till the present year, each succeeding Pope has vigorously sought to reinstate himself in a temporal kingdom and thus become king as well as Pope. The present Pope has, at last, won the fight, and the Italian government has paid the Pope a large indemnity and granted him a temporal kingdom over which he is now king and ruler with all the powers of any sovereign government—his own postoffice, stamps, mint for coining money, the right to confer titles and to receive and send ambassadors. So, the Pope is not only the sovereign pontiff of the Church of Rome; he is also a real king. True, his kingdom is not large, embracing only one hundred and sixty acres in extent, and only four hundred subjects. This is at present the smallest of earthly kingdoms, with a real king, and all the powers of governmental authority—the power to make war, treat for peace, and all the rest of it that any large government may possess. From this beginning, the Pope and the Church of Rome, of course, hope and expect to gradually enlarge their kingdom and again, as in medieval times, have a real authority and dominion in government. This is in keeping with the polity and practice of Rome, which has always been more jealous of temporal than of spiritual power.

Over against the establishment of this papal State in Italy, one puts naturally the words of our Lord: "My kingdom is not of this world" (John 18:36). One feels that ultimately the Church can only hope to triumph in spiritual things. The Church was not planted in the world as a temporal, political, or human agency, but as a divine institution to reach and guide men and women spiritually, and to build upon earth a spiritual kingdom, even as it is in heaven—a kingdom in which the will of God may rule and reign in the heart of man for his spiritual redemption and salvation. GREAT BRITAIN TO HAVE COMMISSION.

King George of England, in transmitting his address to the new Parliament recently assembled, included this information, highly interesting and gratifying, no doubt, to very many Americans: "My ministers decided that the time has come to investigate the whole field of legislation relating to sale and supply of intoxicating liquor, and, on their recommendation, I propose to appoint an early date commissioners for this purpose."

England staggers beneath the burden of an intolerable expenditure for intoxicating liquors and the curse of the open saloon. Lady Astor, a member of Parliament (and a native of Virginia), in her recent campaign, as well as in previous speeches in Parliament, made it known that she favored investigation and some legislation touching the liquor problem, which is the bane and the curse of England today and of all other countries that still tolerate the open saloon. The example of the United States is being observed and felt throughout the civilized world, and it can be only a matter of years before the nations of the earth will outlaw an institution and a business which has proven itself to be a burden and a curse to society and civilization. EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTION.

The annual Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, Eastern North Carolina Conference, was held at Pleasant Union Church, Lillington, N. C., July 16-17. Rev. J. Lee Johnson is pastor of the Church and was present and conducted the opening devotionals. Bro. M. E. Wilder, superintendent of the local Sunday School, told how happy the Sunday School and people of the community were to have the Convention meet in their midst. Bro. W. A. Newman, of our Henderson Sunday School, in turn, told how glad the people of the Convention were to be there and how much they expected to get out of the sessions and what they hoped to bring to and receive from the Convention. Bro. Geo. McCullers, McCullers, N. C., the veteran song leader of the Convention, was present and in charge of the music. That means that the music was good, inspiring, well rendered and helpful throughout. Bro. McCullers does not believe in "jazz" music even in a Sunday School, and thinks that there is far better music for Sunday School and Church worship than the modern "jazz" which so often comes to us under a pious label. This writer could wish that all of our Sunday School music leaders felt that way about it, and that we could in some way abolish "jazz" from the Sunday School, even though many of the books that contain it sell so much cheaper than books that contain real music suited to worship.

After the routine of the morning session there was an address by the Mission Secretary, J. O. Atkinson, having as its central thought "The training of our youth for world friendship and the dynamic and source of such training." If the nations and peoples of the world are to be brought to friendly terms, and war is ever to be abolished and love instead of force is to rule mankind, then it must look to the proper source, even to that name that is above every name who was Himself man's greatest and only sufficient friend, and is the Prince of Peace. No store of philosophy, science, politics and scheme of man is sufficient to bring the nations and the peoples, young or old, to a common basis of friendship; only Jesus Christ, the Saviour of man, can do that.

In the afternoon of the first day, Rev. J. A. Denton conducted the devotionals, choosing as the central thought: "Ye are ambassadors for Christ." Those who have been redeemed and saved are sent out by their Lord as His representatives, and if the work of saving the world is ever done, it will be through His redeeming and saving power.

The Convention was then divided into sections, and Miss Pattie Coghill, Secretary of the Board of Christian Education, took charge of and conducted the children's work; Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, Va., the young people's work, and Bro. Grady H. Leonard, of Chapel Hill, the adults' work. These groups gave themselves under these leaders to the study of problems that pertain to these three natural divisions of the Sunday School. Rev. R. Lee House conducted the devotional service at the evening session and spoke interestingly of the methods by which we grow in Christian experience. The feature of the evening session was an address by Bro. W. B. Truitt from the Greensboro Sunday School, who journeyed a distance of eighty miles to speak to the Convention about "Our Orphanage." Bro. Truitt is a member of the board of trustees of the Christian Orphanage, and knows whereof he speaks when he refers both to the needs of the institution and to the achievements and results of the work done there. While the Orphanage has contributed much to the denomination and to the world, Bro. Truitt feels that it would have contributed more if it had had the means, and will contribute more as additional funds are supplied. The present management is all that individuals or Church could desire, as everybody who knows him has the profoundest respect for and utmost confidence in Superintendent Charles D. Johnston. There are now one hundred and twenty children in the institution, and they would take more if means justified.

At the opening service of the Wednesday morning session, E. B. Atkinson, Spartanburg, S. C., brother of THE SUN's editor and an active Christian layman, conducted the devotional service, using a Bible reading, calling for Scripture verses, and expounding them with apt illustration and comment. Dr. T. C. Amick, of the Elon College faculty, addressed the Convention on "Christian Education and Our Colleges." Dr. Amick realizes that if the Sunday School and the Church shall grow as they might, they will do so even as Christ Himself grew, first in wisdom, then in stature, and third in favor with God and man. Prior to His increase in stature, Luke 3:52 says: "There was an increase in wisdom," and Dr. Amick takes it that this means that while our Lord was growing in stature, his parents sent Him to the rabbinical schools and gave Him the advantages of the best within His reach for obtaining wisdom. What the Church needs first and foremost of all is a trained and a prepared ministry and membership, and if it will look well to the wisdom of its way, it will then be enlarged in stature and will grow in favor with God and man. The remainder of the morning session was devoted to reports of departmental secretaries till almost noon, when Rev. F. C. Lester, president of the Board of Religious Education, delivered an address on "Christian Education" as represented by our board. Bro. Lester told the Convention why he was on the board and what he was trying to do as a member of the board, and what the board would do if it only had the means with which to do. The reason why a secretary has not been kept in the field and among the Sunday Schools and Endeavor Societies all the while is because the board hasn't the funds to finance the work. The Southern Convention has asked the Sunday Schools to raise for the board $4,500 per year, but not much more than a third of this amount had come in in any one year. One of the constructive pieces of work done by the board, and that which Bro. Lester feels is the best thus far, is that of putting on and conducting the Summer School of Christian Education, Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., which school has already been held this year and was the very best thus far held, and the Elon Summer School which is to begin July 27th and continue till August 4th. Bro. Lester made a plea for funds with which to carry on the work, and also for attendance at these schools.

The Convention departed from the regular work of the session to give a presbytery of the Conference opportunity to ordain to the ministry Rev.

Robert Lee House, from Pope's Chapel, Franklin County, N. C., and who is a graduate of Duke University and is now pursuing his post-graduate work for bachelor of divinity degree at Duke. The ordaining presbytery consisted of Revs. J. Lee Johnson, who propounded the questions and held the ordination service; J. A. Denton, who presented the candidate for ordination; Rev. H. C. Caviness, who led the ordination prayer; J. O. Atkinson, who delivered the charge, and F. C. Lester, who presented the Bible. Bro. House is already pastor of some of our rural Churches and is a young man of splendid report, who is spending years in preparation for the great work to which he feels divinely called.

The afternoon session of the second day was given to Christian Endeavor. The writer, through his regret, was not privileged to be present at this session. He is advised Mrs. Murdock Newman gave a most enthusiastic and inspiring paper on "Christian Endeavor, the Pastor's Assistant," and that the reports on Christian Endeavor were encouraging.

The Convention is to meet in its next annual session Tuesday after the second Sunday in July, 1930, with the Liberty (Vance) Church. Mr. H. W. Johnson, of Wake Chapel Sunday School, was elected president the coming year; Mr. W. A. Newman, Henderson, N. C., vice-president; Mrs. R. J. Newton, Route 1, Henderson, N. C., recording secretary; Miss Ruth Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C., corresponding secretary; and Mr. C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C., treasurer.

Of course, the Convention was royally entertained. The people of Pleasant Union did everything within their reach to make the stay of the people agreeable and happy and to make the work of the Convention a success. All members and visitors of the Convention could only carry away the happiest recollection of a delightful fellowship and of friends who added to the joy and privileges of the sessions. J. O. A.

THE BEST EFFECTIVE PLAN.

The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is one of the topics discussed by individuals, the press, and Congress more than all others at the present time. The background of all this discussion is money, appetite, and history. If money could be eliminated, the bootlegger would go out of business; if appetite for liquor could be eliminated, the bootlegger would have no customers; and if the history of saloon days could be eliminated, the question would not arise in the public mind. These three facts are stubborn facts, and must be considered in making plans for making the eighteenth amendment effective. There is one element in the consideration of this question, and that is the question of permanence of the amendment. It can be safely assumed that the eighteenth amendment will remain while the Constitution remains. It would be as easy to restore slavery as to restore the saloon. Freedom and prohibition are fixed quantities in this republic. Now, what is the best plan to make this law effective? A few suggestions may be offered for personal consideration apart from money, appetite, and history.

1. Improve the moral condition of American citizenship through teaching and example in the Church, school, home and civic organizations.

2. Through personal, social and club conversations and behavior in support of this special law and its implications.

3. A changed attitude of the public press towards this law by reporting the good and not the bad results from this enactment.

4. The courts to treat gentlemen and private homes that buy, possess or use intoxicating liquors just as they treat makers, venders, and users of liquor from the back allies of cities, mountains or swamps in the country.

5. To impress upon the public mind the improvement in business, the increase in the efficiency of labor, improved homes among the working people, bank accounts, schools, and especially the improvement in the condition of the negro population in all that benefits that race, and thereby benefits the nation.

6. It is the background of the national and international desire for, and the movements toward peace; and the cultivation of this spirit will do much toward making the eighteenth amendment effective. A sober nation is a prosperous and a peace-loving nation; and the same would be true of the world. W. W. S.

BELIEFS OF PREACHERS.

Prof. George Herbert Betts, of Northwestern University, has made a careful study of religious beliefs on fifty-six points of 700 ministers. Five hundred of these ministers are active pastors, and 200 are students in theological seminaries.

Prof. Betts assumes that belief has its fundamental place in the Christian experience. He finds, however, after a scientific investigation of this question, that there is not enough difference between the beliefs of the evangelical ministers to warrant the denominations in remaining apart. He does not carry his conclusion to its ultimate meaning and recommend that the denominations should come together on the assumption and basic conviction that Christianity is a way of life rather than a series of doctrines or beliefs. His book would be far more valuable if it were to take this position.

He finds that the minimum statement of belief arising out of this study would include the following items:

There is a Supreme Being; God exists (100 per cent).

God is omnipotent (80 per cent).

God's relation to man is that of Father (98 per cent).

God controls the universe through His personal presence and power (82 per cent).

God is a being with personal attributes, complete and perfect in all moral qualities (90 per cent).

Jesus, while on earth, was subject to temptation as are other men (97 per cent).

Jesus met His problems and difficulties, using only those powers and resources available to all men (76 per cent).

Jesus lived a life on earth without sin (87 per cent).

Life continues after death (95 per cent).

Forgiveness of sin is essential to a right relationship with God (96 per cent).

God operates on human lives through the agency and person of the Holy Spirit (91 per cent).

It would seem from his investigation that the Christian world is not about to go to the "bow-wows" when its leaders are agreed in their beliefs, touching vital points as indicated by the eleven statements above enumerated. W. A. H.

Isn't it a sacrilege and a desecration beyond comprehension that Catholic Spain can celebrate on Sunday, the eve of "St. Peter's Day," with such a spectacle of death, horror and blood as Chaplain Rountree tells of in another column, as he writes of a Sunday's experience at a bull fight. We are not surprised that the chaplain has seen his last of such horrors, for it sounds, indeed, like a description from mediaeval days, before Protestantism had restrained some of the bloody activities of the Spanish and other Catholic inquisitions.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Sarah Jane Williams, daughter of Sarah Jane and Dyalie Williams, was born in King and Queen County, Va., on March 2, 1845. Her childhood days were spent in Chesterfield County, Va.

She was married to James M. Butler on May 10, 1866, and moved to Suffolk as a bride, arriving on the first through passenger train over the Norfolk and Western between Petersburg and Norfolk after the Civil War. Mrs. Butler died in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Emily Crocker, in Riverview, Suffolk, Va., on June 14, 1929, at the age of 84 years, 3 months, and 12 days, and was buried in Cedar Hill Cemetery by the side of her husband, who was buried April 8, 1892—37 years, 2 months, and 8 days before she was buried by his side.

Mrs. Butler is survived by two sons, Harvey M. and Frank E. Butler; and two daughters, Mrs. Annie Ballance, of Portsmouth, and Mrs. Emily Crocker, of Suffolk; fifteen grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren.

Mrs. Butler united with the Suffolk Christian Church on October 17, 1872, and had been a member of the Church more than fifty-six years. She was one of the oldest members and one of the most faithful followers of Jesus Christ. She had been long afflicted, and bore her affliction with Christian resignation and possessed a vein of humor that made her an agreeable neighbor and friend.

Few people could bear long affliction with such fortitude as Mrs. Butler possessed and at the same time be jovial with her friends. Her life was given to her home and her loved ones, and she was a real "helpmeet" for her husband. "Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies." The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her. Her children arise up and call her blessed: her husband also, and he praiseth her" (Prov. 31:10, 11, 28). She leaves a name and a record that her family and friends cherish as a rich legacy and sweet memory. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold" (Prov. 22:1). She had all that, and leaves a family that bear the marks of a good mother. The daughter, Mrs. Emily, was a mother to her in her last years of confinement and affliction; and all the other children shared with her in love, sympathy, and service.

There is no service which a woman can render that equals that of a good mother; and there is no other institution that equals a Christian home. Home-builders are nation-builders, and Christian homes are Church-builders and school-builders. Good society does not rest on money and position, but on character and service. To close the door of home is to shut out progress and safety. "There is no place like home" is not all poetry; it is the experience of every true heart. The best thought of heaven is that it is an eternal home with our Father and His Son, our elder brother, and all of our loved ones who have gone before us and will come after us.

ELON LETTER.

Counseling students in college is as natural as breathing, and goes back to the first time that Adam gave advice to his son Cain. But Adam had not had any special training for counseling, and so made a miserable botch of his effort to guide his son in the right direction. From that day to this the obligation of age to enrich youth by its experiences has been recognized as fundamental.

Prof. Maverick, of Harvard, says, "The guidance of college students is not new. It has always been the duty and privilege of instructors"; and likewise Prof. Doermann, of Johns Hopkins, says: "Guidance has always been a recognized function of educational institutions. Personnel work is nothing new in the college."

But, as is well known, the increased enrollment in institutions of higher learning has produced a situation which calls for organized treatment. The beginning of organized personnel service may be seen in a resolution of the faculty of Dartmouth College, under date of March 29, 1910, as follows:

"Resolved, That it be the function of the advisers to inform themselves regarding the circumstances and character of the students under their supervision, their manner of life and their college work, their antecedents, interests and ideals. That the relation between adviser and student be regarded as friendly and confidential. That advisers meet their students at regular intervals, at the beginning of the freshman year about once in every two weeks, once toward the end of the freshman year, and again at the end of the first and second semesters of the sophomore year for the special purpose of discussing with them the election of courses for the following semester."

This resolution established a closely knit body of student advisers under the general direction of an executive committee composed of the president, the dean and three other members, and is the beginning of modern college organization in the field of personnel work.

In 1911, Reed College offered the first orientation course, including such topics as the history and meaning of the college, the choice of studies, methods of study, student activities, college ethics, and choice of a vocation.

Also in 1911 the University of Michigan began its system of mentors, in accordance with which a faculty mentor was appointed to serve throughout the freshman year for each of ten students. These mentors had nothing to do with the faculty, but were a separate body responsible directly to the dean, being his personal representatives to deal with the social life of the students and to advise them on all matters arising in the spirit of an older brother.

Other institutions began experimentation in the same direction, and such organizations as the National Vocational Guidance Association, the Personnel Research Federation, the Psychological Corporation, the National Research Council, the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education, the Bureau of Vocational Guidance of Harvard University, the Intercollegiate Guidance Association, the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, and the American Management Association came into being to promote the interests and further the objectives of counseling. Particular mention should be made of the National Association of Psychologists and Sociologists, and to the Christian associations for their contribution to vocational guidance and personnel research. Nor must we overlook the services rendered in this field by the educational foundations, such as the Rockefeller funds, the Carnegie endowment, the Commonwealth fund, and the Harmon foundation.

The World War gave an opportunity to subject to the pragmatic test the fundamental principles which a growing group of psychologists and educators felt to be scientifically correct in reference to personnel work. The commissioned personnel branch of the general staff was headed by Dr. Walter Dill Scott. This branch of the service made use of psychological test and rating schedules in selecting officers. Its success was so pronounced that it gave a new impetus to personnel work in industry as well as in education. It is hardly accurate to say, however, that college personnel work had its origin from the work of this branch of the service in the World War.

AT NORTHFIELD.

My dear Dr. Atkinson:

Am having the great pleasure of spending a week at Northfield, attending the Foreign Missionary Conference. Again the program committee has secured some of the cream of the earth. Among the speakers are a number of missionaries, a woman from China, Korea and Japan. Two of the lecturers have just returned from a trip around the world, having been sent by their boards to study the needs of the various mission fields.

The Conference is well attended—something like 900 delegates. The denominations have their annual rally this afternoon. Guess I'll have to "rally" with the Congregationalists, as there are few, if any, of our denomination here other than myself.

AN OLD PREACHER'S FIRST SERMON.

BY REV. J. T. WHITLEY.

My apology for writing this note, if any be necessary, lies in the fact that today, July 18, 1929, is the sixtieth anniversary of my first sermon, and that it was preached in the Berkley Christian Church on the 18th of July, 1869. I might well call it an "assault with intent to preach," as I was only five months and a few days past my nineteenth birthday. I had not received a formal license, but my pastor and sponsor, Rev. W. B. Wellons, made the appointment for me to preach that afternoon, and I was not loath to respond.

When I ascended the pulpit that afternoon, I was in the presence of a full congregation, including three veteran ministers—Bro. Wellons, Rev. Stephen S. Barrett, pastor of the Church, and Rev. Maurice J. Langhorne, of the Methodist Protestant Church. My text was Luke 8:18, "Take heed, therefore, how ye hear." I do not recall why I chose that particular passage, nor do I remember the plan of the sermon, though I suppose it had some sort of a plan. The general truth which I tried to present, as I remember, was that people are quite ready to hold the ministry responsible for the way in which they preach, but that few are equally ready to hold the laity responsible for the manner in which they receive the Word as preached. I recall that I illustrated the theme by the parable of the sower, with which it stands connected in the gospels. The discourse was brief, as it ought to have been, and appeared to have been appreciated by such persons as commented in my hearing. The three elderly ministers gave me encouragement by judicious commendation. Less than three months afterwards I was licensed by the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, and in November, 1871, I was ordained an elder.

Ten years ago—Sunday, July 20, 1919—the fiftieth anniversary of the foregoing occasion, I preached from the same text in the First Christian Church, Berkley, at the courteous invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan. On the fifty-fifth anniversary—July 20, 1924—I preached from the same text in the Park Place Methodist Church, Norfolk. Today I am quietly observing the sixtieth anniversary by writing this not for the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, in the office of which I began my journalistic activities. During the past thirteen years and four months I have printed and sent out to many thousands of readers through the columns of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot 670 weekly messages upon vital spiritual and moral subjects. Now, in my eightieth year, I am still at work in the cause of the same Divine Master who engaged my loyalty sixty years ago.

Of those whom I knew and loved in that far-away time, but few remain in the flesh. Bros. Wellons, Barrett and Langhorne have long since passed on to their reward. Many other ministerial friends among both Christians and Methodists have joined the hosts above. Of those remaining, I am glad to mention Dr. D. A. Long, Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. J. U. Newman (whom I taught a little theology when he was aspiring to the ministry), and Bro. P. T. Klapp, whose recent illness excited my sympathy and prayers. No doubt, there are others yet living. To any who may see this note, I send my brotherly love, with the delightful anticipation of joining them before a great while in our Father's house of many homes, where ties long dormant will be revived, and parting no more feared.

Let me add that if I had the opportunity to address a body of preachers, I could say some important things about such a text as this: "Take heed, therefore, how ye preach." I fear that much of the preaching of this age is lacking in simplicity and straightforward appeal to conscience and heart. After all, "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," with its implications, is the main thing for pulpit use.

PUGH FAMILY REUNION.

The Pugh families, their kindred, and many of their friends will hold their annual reunion this year on the Guilford battleground, near Greensboro, N. C. This meeting-place is especially appropriate because of the fact that on the battlefield at Guilford stands the Colonial Monument, and a tablet is inscribed to James Pugh, martyr to the cause of freedom, in the struggle of the Regulators against Governor William Tryon.

The historical address will be delivered by Dr. W. T. Whitsett, historian for Guilford County, who has made extensive researches and found much new information concerning the Pugh family, beginning with its earliest history in South Wales, from whence it first came to America. Many of the members of the Pugh family have played an active and important part in our country's history. The occasion promises to be one of unusual interest, and a large crowd is expected to gather for this year's exercises.

THE SUN LETTER.

We get quite a number of good letters from subscribers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, telling us how much they enjoy reading THE SUN and of their appreciation of its weekly visits in their home. Such letters bring us real joy. We know the effort our editor puts in it to make it carry SUN—"shine" into every home in which it goes. I know something of the time the circulation manager gives to it in trying to get it in more homes, so that more of our people will enjoy its weekly message from each department of our Church. His chief disappointment is in the small number he is able to interest. We are hoping and praying that a brighter day is coming, when all our people will subscribe for THE SUN and receive its weekly visits in their homes.

A GOOD DEACON PASSES.

Deacon Jesse E. Langston was born May 18, 1846, and died June 26, 1929, at the age of 83 years, 1 month, and 8 days. He was the son of Elias Langston and wife, who more than one hundred years ago established a home in Wake County, N. C., some twelve miles southwest of Raleigh, not far from the present site of Catawba Springs Church. To this union fourteen children were born. Two of these died when young. The remaining twelve, eight boys and four girls, lived to be grown. This home was a real type of the plain Christian home of those days. God's Word was read and fully accepted.

They were blessed with the necessities of life, esteeming them as God-given, with the deepest gratitude. They had but few of the luxuries; did not know of or expect them. Therefore, they were free from the sin of covetousness, and were content and happy with the social enjoyment of the family and the immediate community. Under these conditions, the children grew to maturity, healthy and robust of body and mind. And with one exception, all became active members of the Church and devout followers of the blessed Christ.

It was from this home that five boys answered their country's call and became soldiers in the Civil War. Two of these gave their lives on the battlefield. Jesse was the ninth child and the fifth and youngest boy to enter the war. It was quite evident even from early life that he was a model boy of this splendid, large family. Having accepted Christ when young, he gave evidence of a converted and consecrated Christian life. Joining the Church at Catawba Springs, he began to develop ability of leadership. On April 22, 1872, he was married to Miss Josephine Ellen, who because of her consecration proved to be a real helpmeet in spiritual things. To this union, seven children were born. Five of these are living. Some seven years after the death of his first wife, he was married to Miss Octavia Murray, who survives him. To them four children were born. Three of these are living. The names of the living children are as follows: David, of Henderson; Jim, of Oaksboro; Jesse, of Raleigh; Mrs. Bessie Palston, Henderson; Mrs. Iola Parish, of Auburn; Mrs. Ruth Parish, of Auburn; Mrs. Ruby Johnson, of Raleigh, and Mrs. Vernie Poole, of Auburn. In addition to these, there are thirty-three living grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Shortly after his first marriage he took a strong stand for the temperance cause. He took his last drink of intoxicants shortly after the birth of his first child. He became very active as a temperance lecturer in the community, doing this amid much severe and adverse criticism. Notwithstanding the unpopular position, he showed great strength of character and conviction by standing firmly against this evil, and finally rejoiced to see his cause triumph.

He was successful in Sunday School work as a leader, and developed splendid talent in prayer and exhortation, because of his consecration and unwavering faith in God, without fear of man, he steadily gained in popular favor until he got to be quite an acceptable lay preacher, working successfully in revival meetings, filling special appointments for ministers, and finally having the pastoral charge of several Churches for some succeeding years. Perhaps the climax of his ministerial work was a revival meeting held at Catawba Springs, his home Church, more than thirty years ago. One of the most wonderful in spiritual power, this Church ever experienced. This meeting was conducted under the most unfavorable circumstances. The Church was divided, and out of harmony, to the extent that it was thought useless to even undertake the annual revival at all. Bro. Langston, who had moved from the community and become a charter member of Auburn Church, heard of this distressing news, and took the matter to God in special prayer. God gave him a direct answer and a Moses-like commission to lead in the work. Thus he came and announced what he had been directed to do. Oh! the hissing, slurring and discouragement that this man met from one and all. Nevertheless, he again showed strength of purpose and faith in God and declared that God had promised to meet him. Thus he made his appointment, many saying, "I shall have nothing to do with it"; and others, quite as unsympathetic, went out to see what would be the outcome. As was the case of the Jerusalem upper-room experience, when the news was spread abroad of the power of God, the conviction, and conversion of outstanding sinners crying, "What must I do to be saved?" The people came. Bro. Langston shouted, "This is no more than what God promised me, as I told you at the beginning." And again his faith was wonderfully awarded by the conversion of outstanding sinners and a never-to-be-forgotten revival of the saints. Doubtless, there were many of these converts in glory ready to greet Bro. Langston on his coming.

Deacon Langston's activities continued until he was about seventy. Since then, though enjoying the best of health, with an active mind, his limbs have been too feeble to carry the body. Nevertheless, one who knew him would note how his spiritual life continued to broaden and deepen as the days passed. For some time since he lost his life of supplication, but had been given a life of praise and adoration. He also almost completely lost interest in worldly news of any material or transient nature. His inquiry invariably was, when seeing a friend, "Tell me the good news." Hearing of another sinner "saved by grace" or a child of God renewed in the faith, he would rejoice more and more.

Without one ache or pain, after this fashion for years he lived on. Many visitors called. Groups of individuals would meet and sing and hold religious services. Eternity will only reveal the lives that were blessed by these visits even during his last days.

Eventually he became blind and lost all natural sight, which only helped apparently to illuminate his spiritual vision. Anxious to go, but perfectly submissive to the will of God, he took his bed and gradually weakened, yet without pain or ever complaining. For one year or more before this he very fittingly selected the text of his funeral from 2 Tim. 4th chapter, 7th and 8th verses, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course: I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love His appearing"—directing that Dr. J. O. Atkinson should preach the funeral at Catawba Springs after the writer had preached at Auburn. His request was obeyed. His own pastor, Rev. J. A. Denton, and Rev. D. M. Spence, of Henderson, the pastor of several of his children, assisting. His body was laid to rest in Catawba Springs Cemetery under a beautiful mound of flowers, to await the first resurrection.

THE PRAYER MEETING.

There were only two or three of us
Who came to the place of prayer;
Came in the teeth of a driving storm,
But for that we did not care,
Since, after our hymns of praise had risen,
And our earnest prayers were said,
The Master himself was present there,
And gave us the living bread.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

CHANGED HIS MIND.

I went out to visit the mission fields of Asia and Africa, a victim of the prevalent American uncertainty. It had been bred in me, as in many, by ignorance of the life of non-Christian peoples, lack of conviction of the power of Christianity, and an earnest desire, above all things, to be tolerant. It was determined to eliminate "heathen" and "heathenism" from my vocabulary. I resented that "holier than thou" sentiments of many of our missionary hymns. It was definitely arranged that I should write a series of articles upon my return, which would indicate the fundamental unity of all faiths and endorse the idea of their eventual synthesis. But the articles were never written, "heathenism" went back into my vocabulary, and the missionary hymns, for the most part, are no longer offensive. . . . It was not made a condition of my going that I should change my mind. But it proved to be the unescapable consequence of the things I saw and heard. Out where the missionary works, the Christian gospel is a matter of transformation. People are not comfortable. They are dying. Academic zeal is not an asset. The Christian preaches a gospel of redemption because he dares preach nothing else. He is called on daily not to defend Christianity, but to test it.—Stanley High.

BRO. FLOWERS' WORK.

Rev. A. R. Flowers has just finished up a six weeks' lecture tour in eastern North Carolina. During this time, Bro. Flowers has gone east to Elizabeth City, and south as far as Bladenboro. His one definite purpose is to create a greater interest in our young people along the line of Christian education, and while he is a representative of Elon College, he certainly does play fair with other educational institutions and has really made it possible for several young people to go to our different institutions of learning by bringing them in touch with different sources of self-help. There are few men who are touching the lives of so many of our young people in eastern North Carolina as is Bro. Flowers. His deep interest in all our young people, regardless of denominational affiliations, is doubtless a great reason for his success.

J. W. DIXON.

Rocky Mount, N. C.

WHAT SHALL I DO TO BE SAVED?

As in the heart of the rich young ruler, so today the desire to be saved burns in every human heart. The Scripture says that Jesus loved that young man, and He loves every human being. He loves them so much that He died for them. There is no doubt that the young ruler was a good moral young man, with no evil habits, clean, courteous, kind to his parents and friends, economical with his means, and well spoken of. But he was lacking in one thing, and that one thing was enough to keep him out of the kingdom of God. Sad to say, we never again hear of that young man, for he went away sorrowful. We do not know of his after life; however, we can imagine that it was not a happy life. The opportunity for eternal happiness knocked at his door, and he did not know it. He sold his birthright for wealth. "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

There are thousands who are good moral people; they go to Church, pay their tithes, they are kind and courteous; they lack but one thing in the perfection of Christian character, but that one will keep them out of the kingdom of God. Only one little sin—eating of the forbidden fruit—excluded Adam and Eve from the Garden of Eden. Moses, by speaking unadvisedly with his lips, was not permitted to enter the Promised Land. Saul did not think that his little sin of covetousness amounted to much, but what a sad history we have of his life. Aaron's sons did not think it of much importance whether or not they put strange fire upon the altar of God, but it meant death to them. Achan had no idea what his sin of covetousness would lead to. And this same sin plunged Judas, one of the twelve disciples, into perdition. Many other examples could be given.

We know from the word of God and the testimonies that we must get the victory over sin. Each one knows what his besetting sin is; or if he does not know, let him ask the Lord to show him. Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation. Reader, let us search our hearts daily and put away "the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." May God help us all to be found of Him without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, that we may finally hear the "Welcome, ye blessed of my Father."—Review-Herald.

NOW THE TIME—HERE THE PLACE!

Your Church is making an effort to reach its goal for Missions this year, namely: one-third the amount of pastor's salary. If your Church, and all the other Churches, reach this goal, we will reach the total goal of $45,000 for the year ending September 30th, the amount asked of us by the Southern Christian Convention.

Will you, by an individual gift, help your Church to achieve this desired end? Now is the time! Here is the place! By a pull together, every Church can reach the goal. Help now.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson V—August 4, 1929.

BELSHAZZAR'S FEAST.
(Temperance Lesson.)

GOLDEN TEXT: "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is riot."—Eph. 5:18.

LESSON: Daniel 5:1-31.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 1.

The king was having a "whoopie party," and he was having it on a large scale. A thousand of his princes and lords, their wives and their concubines were gathered together in the palace for an orgy of eating and drinking and all that goes with it. Things began to warm up a bit, and as is usually the case with people who give themselves to this kind of life, the folks wanted a "new thrill." They did not get much "kick" out of the thing they had been doing so long. Sin has a way of losing its original freshness and appeal, and those who follow its ways are constantly looking for something to guard against its threadbareness.

Folks who are usually intelligent and sensible people will do some strange and pathetic things when under the influence of alcohol. When one comes to think of it, there is something just about as pathetic about a man who is drunk as there is about a man who is mentally defective. For the time being, he ceases to act as a sensible and, often, as a decent person ought to act. To do the thing that so muddles the faculties, so warps the judgment, and so weakens self-control, as to drink intoxicating beverages is, after all, no laughing matter. This matter of prohibition is a rather serious matter after all.

"Belshazzar, while he tasted the wine, commanded to bring the golden and silver vessels which his father, Nebuchadnezzar, had taken out of the temple which was in Jerusalem. . . . and the king and his princes and his wives and his concubines drank in them." It was the highest act of impious blasphemy. Here were vessels originally dedicated to God and to be used in His worship, being used by a crowd of drunken pagans to satisfy an insatiable thirst. And as they drank, they praised their own gods of gold and silver and wood and stone. It is a merciful God that would allow such things to go on. As has been stated above, it is simply a picture of what happens when men give themselves over to unbridled license.

"In the same hour came forth the fingers of a man's hand, and wrote . . . then the king's countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, and his knees smote one against another." Those who are often most impious and depraved are usually those who are most afraid when they see the day of reckoning. There is to be noted here, too, the fact that even to the most debauched there comes the timely warning of God. He does not leave us to our own devices. To one and all alike there come warnings in one way or another of the things that are wrong. Happy is that man who keeps his heart open to all such warnings and who turns from the thing that he knows is out of harmony with the will of God.

"There is a man in thy kingdom in whom is the spirit of the holy gods." One of the tragedies about the worship of anything less than the true God is the fact that all other gods are nothing and cannot help in time of trouble. Happy is that nation and that people which has men and women who have the spirit of the holy gods, the one true and living God, to teach and to interpret the will of God.

"And Daniel answered and said before the king, Let thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy rewards to another. Yet I will read the writing unto the king, and make known to him the interpretation." The true servant of God is not a money-grabber. He is not working primarily for material gain. He is concerned primarily with serving those who need him. This does not mean, however, that the minister should not be paid for his work. The minister renders an essential type of work which the community cannot afford to be without, and the community ought to pay the minister a living salary. There are two sides to the question. The Church ought to pay an adequate salary and the minister ought to live within his salary.

Daniel reminds Belshazzar of the greatness of his father's empire. He tactfully suggests that all that Nebuchadnezzar had and was is a trust from God. But because Nebuchadnezzar, like so many people, could not stand prosperity, and because he thought that he was the big "I," he had been ignominiously brought down to shame and disgrace. Daniel very frankly told Belshazzar that he knew this. But, alas! Belshazzar, like us, had not profited by the experiences of others. Because of this fact, there was only one thing for God to do. It was because of this fact that the doom had been sealed.

"Numbered, and finished, weighed and found wanting, divided and given to another"—thus in enigmatic form the sentence was pronounced. And thus it is with us. It has not been given to all of us to be kings over empires, but there has been committed unto us life and its capacities and possibilities. We are being weighed in the balances. If we do not render a good account of our stewardship, that which we have shall be taken from us. If we, by diligence, develop and multiply that which has been committed unto us, we are to keep humble and in all that we have and are to glorify God, in whose hand our breath is, and whose are all our ways.

Teaching Points.

1. Sin oversteps all bounds.
2. The pleasures of sin are only for a season.
3. God warns all those who are in the way of wrong-doing.
4. The things that belong to God are to be used in right ways.
5. Sin causes men to worship false gods, and the worship of false gods causes men to sin.
6. A guilty conscience makes cowards of us all.
7. God is the giver of every good and perfect gift.
8. Pride goeth before a fall.
9. Genuine humility is a real virtue.
10. Drink is the open door to many evils.
11. Life is a matter of measuring and weighing.
12. The experiences of others should be one of our teachers.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, August 4, 1929.

TOPIC: "Jesus' Teaching on God's Loving Care."
—Matt. 6:26-32. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

In His loving care, God has provided for all according to their nature. Surely He has not forgotten man, the crown of creation (v. 30).

Worry and anxiety are futile if God is caring for us. We must do our part as well as we can, and leave Him to do His (vs. 27, 28).

The point of Jesus' argument is that God knows our needs. He has provided for the needs of all His creatures; therefore He will provide for us (v. 32).

The condition of all this is that we first and continuously seek the kingdom of God. Nothing is promised to the parson who is not in tune with the purposes of God (v. 33).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Jesus Himself trusted implicitly in God's care. He could even say to Pilate, "You have no power over me except it were given you from above."

When Jesus sent out the seventy disciples "without scrip or purse" (see Matt. 10), He was teaching them a lesson in God's care while they were serving Him. "Lacked ye anything?" He asked. "Nothing," they said. His plan worked.

God's care does not mean that we may be careless. He does not feed the birds directly, but through natural and human instruments. So does He feed us. We must live the life we are fitted for.

Only as we walk in the way of God can we expect His provision. This is a challenge to make us seek to know and do His will.

A Few Illustrations.

God provided for a starving Russian family through an American friend who took food to them. Sometimes God uses people in answering prayer.

George Muller, who conducted an orphanage with hundreds of children in it, never asked money from any one. He prayed to God and trusted Him. God never failed, although faith was sometimes sorely tried.

The China Inland Mission operates on the faith principle. Money is not solicited, but the facts and the need are stated. God has cared for a host of missionaries in this way.

God's care is for essentials. When a boy prays to win a game of football, which the other side may also be praying to win, he is dealing with a nonessential.

To Think About.

- Have we seen instances of God's care?
- How did Elijah discover God's care?
- Does trusting in God's care imply doing less than otherwise we would?

GOODNESS REMEMBERED.

It is a remarkable thing that the tomb of General Charles Gordon, in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, is seldom if ever without flowers. There are many other tombs of men, equal and greater in fame than Gordon, but somehow the public does not pay its tribute to them in just the same way. There are makers of empire, besides whose tombs the people stand in awe, but the tender gifts of flowers is humanity's constant tribute to Gordon.

Were it not that the little general has been so constantly used with his name, most people would scarcely think of Gordon as a military man. The deep religious fervor of his life and his tender sympathies are so well known that it is as a great Christian rather than a general that he is known. But Gordon was a soldier, and a brave one, following, may be sure, what he believed to be the call of duty in his nation's need. Nevertheless, it is because of his goodness that he will be remembered. Men will tell, not of his military skill, but of the deep respect that even his enemies had for him, and the absolute confidence which they placed in his word.

He was a soldier of Christ, and his great victories were over sin. His transparent sincerity and genuine goodness were his most characteristic qualities. It has been fittingly said that no one ever refers to Christ as clever; that would be almost sacrilegious. It is His goodness that men speak of when they think of Christ. And, somehow, deep down in men's hearts, there is a conviction that goodness is the most divine quality of humanity. When Moses prayed that he might see God's glory, God said: "I will cause my goodness to pass before you."—Christian Vanguard.

Authorized and Edited by American Revision Committee, and Published by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

These Bibles contain the Concise Bible Dictionary which forms the helps to these Teachers' Bibles. It supplies, in the most condensed and convenient form, all the latest information about the Bible, its writers, its language, the various versions, complete chronology, life of Christ, with harmony of the Gospels, life and travels of St. Paul, etc. The illustrations are reproduced from recent photographs, and truly illustrate the articles. The Combined Concordance is entirely new, and has been made expressly for the American Standard Version. It combines with the Concordance, Subject-Index, Scripture Proper Names, etc. The 12 Maps have been carefully revised and are beautifully colored. In making orders, give the number and price.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE FOUNTAIN OF CLEANSING.

"This is my blood of the covenant, which is poured out for many unto remission of sins."—Matt. 26:26-30.

Was ever a great institution more simply founded than the Lord's Supper? Here is one of the two central rites of Christianity, a rite observed repeatedly every year for two thousand years in all the Christian Churches throughout the world, and it is established by only two sentences of our Lord, and one brief paragraph in each of three gospels.

Ah, but that is only the outward and formal establishing of the Lord's Supper! In reality, it goes back through all Jewish history to the bondage in Egypt, the passover deliverance from the death angel, the exodus under Moses, the sacrifices of the tabernacle, and Solomon's temple, and Zerubbabel's, and Herod's. And ages before all this, the rite has its roots in the very creation of man, the primary plan of salvation, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

Of all this history we are heirs when we receive the elements of the Lord's Supper. That fountain of cleansing, opened on Calvary, flows down through all the ages of man.

Prayer.—Saviour of sinners, divine Sacrifice, our soul bows within us as we approach Thy table. Make us more worthy of the blood and the bread. As they enter into our bodies, wilt Thou form a part of our spirits? Yea, wilt Thou become the very life of our lives? Amen.

TUESDAY.

OUR PLACES IN HEAVEN.

"I go to prepare a place for you."—John 14:1.

The chapter of the Bible that is dearest to many Christian hearts is the fourteenth of John, recording a part of Christ's last words with His disciples before His crucifixion. In comforting them, Christ comforts us. The promises He made to them, we take to ourselves, and rightfully. They spring from the universal relationship between Christ and His followers.

For it is inevitable that our Lord should prepare places in the next world for each of His brothers and sisters as they come to Him from this world. Is it not His home to which He calls us? Is He not the Host there? Has He not provided beautiful and comfortable places for us in this world, and could He do less for us in the world to come?

Prayer.—Dear Lord of Heaven, make us ready for that prepared place. We look forward to it eagerly, trustingly. We know we shall be unworthy of it, but Thou dost not wait for our worthiness. What joy it is to think of Thee making it ready for use even now! Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

EXCISED CHRISTIANS.

"Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh it away."—John 15:1-8.

This is a hard saying from Christ's last discourse. How can a branch be in Christ and not bear fruit? How can a branch of the true vine be lopped off?

Of course, the solution of the puzzle is that there is a nominal, an exterior, an unreal connection with Christ, which does not insure fruit-bearing. It is like a graft that does not "take." It is allowed to remain on the tree until it is certain that no vital connection with the tree has been established, and then it is cut off.

That is the way with some Christians. We call them "Christians" because they claim to be, and we have no right to judge them. But they do not seem to be bearing Christian fruit in their lives. Only Christ, however, can read the heart and know whether the life-connection with the Saviour has been made or not. If it has not, He will cut the dead branch decisively off at the judgment day, as it has in reality cut itself off long ago!

Prayer.—Forbid, dear Lord, that this fate should be ours! May we, joined to Thee, feel coursing through our veins the life that if life indeed. May it bear fruit in us and through us the fruit of peace, the fruit of joy, the fruit of helpfulness and love. We ask it in Thy name. Amen.

THURSDAY.

CHRIST'S PRAYER FOR US.

"Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word."—John 17:13-26.

No chapter of the Bible should be more precious to the individual Christian than John 17, our Lord's last prayer with His disciples before His crucifixion. It would in any case be sacred to us as a wonderful revelation of the Saviour's heart, but it is doubly blessed when each of us realize that the prayer is as much for him as if it were prayed for him alone.

All of Christ's petitions in the "upper room" we may take to ourselves in that room where we are now meditating, and hear the Son of God lifting them to heaven on our behalf. He prays for our eternal life for our knowledge of God and of Himself; for our safety, that we may be kept from all harm; best of all, that we may be with Christ, where He is.

Prayer.—And they shall be our longing desires for ourselves, dear Jesus. As we hear Thy voice raised in tender yearning, we make Thy prayers our own. This Thy death song shall be our life song. We shall hymn it over and over until we exult in the realization of it all with Thee in heaven. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE LORD'S PRAYER FOR HIMSELF.

"My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass away from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt."—Matt. 26:36-46.

We have the Lord's prayer on the Mount, which He gave as a model for our prayers. We have the Lord's prayer in the "upper room" which was uttered on behalf of His disciples, those around Him, and others to the end of time. And now we have the Lord's prayer in Gethsemane, which was His prayer for Himself, His prayer for His own bitter need.

And it is also a prayer for us, a model prayer for our own deepest distress. For, we, too, if we are Christians, are to be crucified with Christ. What life but has its Gethsemane, soon or late? Who has not lifted to heaven with agonized soul the Lord's prayer, "Let this cup pass away from me?"

Well for us if we remember that this is only half of the Lord's prayer, the human half, the half of weakness and of woe. Well for us if we finish the Lord's prayer as He finished it, "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt." This is the divine half, and we may pray it as well as the God-man.

Prayer.—Christ of Gethsemane, help us to pray Thy prayer clear through. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE LORD'S LOOK.

"And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered."—Luke 22:54-62.

How much was in that look of the Saviour! How many memories it roused in the soul of the denying disciple! It brought to Peter's mind his full recognition of Christ's deity, the first of the disciples, and of the high praise it brought him. It reminded him of the glorious scene on the Mount of Transfiguration and of his slumber there. It recalled the sad scene he had just left in Gethsemane, and his slumber there also. I think, too, it must some way have brought to Peter's mind the washing of feet in the upper room. How many, many things surged back through Peter's memory; and now this last terrific memory of the prophesied denial. The thrice-repeated denial, which had horribly come to pass. No wonder he went out and wept bitterly. It was the darkest hour of Peter's life; darker even than the darkest hour of Golgotha.

Prayer.—Our Blessed Redeemer, may we never see that look upon Thy face. May we never deny Thee, by word that men may hear, by act that men may see, or by the inward thought that only Thou dost know. Amen.

SUNDAY.

NO TASK TOO LOWLY.

"If I, then, the Lord and the Teacher, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet."—John 13:6-15.

Probably there will always be earnest Christians who, in their laudable desire to obey all of Christ's commands, insist on the literal washing of one another's feet. Such persons have no sense of differing times and circumstances, and do not see that an action which was simple, reasonable, and kindly in a hot and dusty land, where men went barefoot or wore only sandals, would be forced, unnecessary, and affected in a cold country where men wear shoes and stockings.

But aside from the literal following of Christ's example here, the spiritual following is always beautiful and necessary. Once I crossed the Atlantic in the same stateroom with Dr. Malthie D. Babcock, and saw the tender way in which that prince of preachers, writers, and Christian gentlemen, ministered to the seasick. That was the equivalent of feet-washing. The lesson in it is one of the most precious of all the things that have come to us from the paschal week.

Prayer.—O Lord, help us to apply Christ's acts to our daily life. Amen.

Material evidence explaining biblical accounts of the flood recorded in the Old Testament has been discovered by Prof. C. Leonard Woolery, archeologist, in ancient Ur of Chaldees, in Mesopotamia. A strata of earth has been discovered which was deposited during an overflowing of the Euphrates River around 4500 B. C., called Noah's flood in biblical accounts. The deposit showed unmistakable evidence of another civilization, one which had reached a high peak of cultural development. These were potteries and utensils in native fashion and expertly molded bricks which men of Noah's time had used in constructing homes.—World Call.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

This week's financial report carries us one-third of the way to our goal for this year. We had expected to be nearer one-half way at this time than we are. The year is more than half gone, and the goal not half reached. One hundred and twenty children to care for and appeals from many who want to come—worthy to come and ought to be in this home or some other of similar kind.

In this work you reach human-kind and the kind that needs your help. When you contribute your money in His name to feed and clothe the fatherless, you carry out His command when He said, "Visit the widow and the fatherless."

We have tried very hard this year to get every Sunday School on the list of monthly contributors. Looking over the list this week, we find the following facts: Valley Virginia Central Conference—24 Churches, 6 not giving; Eastern Virginia—45 Churches, 9 not giving; North Carolina and Virginia, 37 Churches, 4 not giving; Eastern North Carolina—41 Churches, 8 not giving; Western North Carolina—34 Churches, 10 not giving; Georgia and Alabama—13 Churches, not giving; Alabama—28 Churches, 19 not giving. All these Churches ought to be on our list and helping to support the Christian Orphanage with its 120 children.

FROM ACROSS THE SEA.

BY DR. C. C. RYAN.

ON BOARD THE ALESIA (in the Mediterranean Sea, with Algiers in sight), July 1.—We are having a wonderful voyage. We sailed from New York on time June 18th. We touched Providence, R. I., on June 19th, and then East. Early on the morning of June 25th, we sighted the first of the Azores Islands, and at 11 A. M. we landed at Horta, on the Island of Foyal. The islands are all (and there are nine of them) of volcanic origin. The people are people of the old world. The islands are a part of Portugal and the people mostly speak Portuguese, but they are Spanish in life and manners. There are 1,000 people in Horta, with five Catholic Churches, two convents, and one monastery; no school, and one person out of fourteen can read and write. The islands are tropical, and vegetation is very luxuriant.

One June 26th, we spent almost the entire day in Ponta Delgada, on the Island of St. Michael. This is the largest of all the islands. Ponta Delgada is a beautiful old city of some 20,000 people. Nearly everybody goes barefoot, even the policeman in the public square. Here we saw two million pineapples growing. There are on the Island of St. Michael 120,000 people, of which there are 25 Jews, 400 Protestants, and the rest Catholics. We met Rev. Mr. Cox, who is pastor of the only Protestant Church, which is Episcopal. On this island there are still many openings from which steam and smoke issue.

At 6 A. M. on Saturday, June 30th, we anchored at the dock in Lisbon, which is the capital of Portugal and its population is estimated at from 700,000 to 1,000,000 people. Here we were met by a Rev. Luper, a Baptist missionary, and under his direction, with the aid of a professional guide, we saw the city. Old Churches, botanical gardens, the amphitheater where the bull fights are held, museums, the beautiful drives, palm trees and flowers everywhere. There was great excitement around the bull pen, for there was to be a prize fight there the next day (Sunday).

We saw the embalmed remains of four dead kings in the dead house of the "Church of the Outside." In the population of nearly a million, I think you will find almost every type of mankind. The women with their great baskets of fish on their heads, the men with their little donkey carts and big oxen. Here many of the stores have a good display of articles for sale.

We lifted anchor at 7:30 and set sail for Gibraltar. Sunday morning, June 30th, the weather was ideal. At 3 P. M. we sighted the coast of Spain, and at 4 P. M., on the other side, we sighted the coast of Africa, and the ship drew closer until at 6:30 P. M. we came to the Rock of Gibraltar. It must be seen to be really appreciated. It is fortified by Great Britain and stands guard at the entrance to the great sea in the middle of the land. We are now sailing for Athens, and we are almost to Algiers. I had, on June 24th and 25th, a light touch of sea-sickness which only lasted eighteen hours. It is something else that must be experienced. I am reminded today of what Van Dyke said:

"London is a man's town, with power in the air; Paris is a woman's town, with flowers in her hair. It is sweet to dream in Venice, it is great to stroll in Rome; But when it comes to living, there is no place like home."

A BULL FIGHT.

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE.

Barcelona, Spain.

Does the Lord forgive? If so, one soul may recover his pristine innocence. The sight-seeing of Barcelona, Spain, during our visit of eight days here included a bull fight Saturday and Sunday. I went on Saturday, and for nothing more or less than to see it; and see it it did! One performance was enough, the horrors of which, try as I may, I will never forget. I came away praying God to forgive me and cause this brutality to cease.

The bull fight is the national sport of Spain. It is a contest between men and a big bull, conducted as a public spectacle, and it smacks of the days of the martyrs when saints were torn to pieces in the Coliseum at Rome as a sport and pastime for the barbarians. This form of entertainment was introduced into Spain by the Moors, and it has been universally adopted in the cities; and although it is a relic of barbarism, it is still in high favor with the common people, and they throng the arena by the ten thousands, applauding every victory of the picadors and the matadors.

Yesterday it happened in this way: Promptly at 5 o'clock, with about five thousand people in the arena, called Plaza de Toros, the horsemen, picadors and toradors staged a grand parade. They were arrayed in brilliant costume, and to the music of a band they sallied forth in many forms of pomp and solemn ceremony. At the conclusion of this, the horsemen disappeared and a bull was turned into the arena, where footmen, called chulas, provided with crimson banners and armed with sharp, barbed fish-hook darts, worried the bull by teasing him and slinging the darts into the top of his shoulder until he was covered with these shafts, tortured and bleeding profusely.

The fury of the beast yet unsatisfactory to them, two horsemen dashed into the arena. The horses were blindfolded. The bull attacked one, knocked him down flat. The rider jumped for his life and left the horse to be gored until he was disemboweled. They then attracted the bull away from the horse, and while teasing him further, the horse was helped up and led away with his intestines dragging the ground and the faithful animal ready to die.

Then came the last act of the tragedy, when the skillful (?) matadors entered the arena, clothed in black and gold, and armed with a long, straight sword and a piece of red silk. For fifteen minutes or more he challenged the enraged animal and sidestepped his mad rushes until the beast was fatigued to exhaustion, when, as the animal made a weakened dash toward him, he thrust the sword into his body just at the juncture of the neck and spine, and the blood gushed out like a spring. He had missed, however, and the horrors continued. The sword was recovered and the process of torture repeated until the enraged but losing taurus made one last effort to get his torturer. As he approached, the hero thrust the sheathing crimson blade again up to the hilt into the animal's body, and with a pause, head down, blood gushing from his mouth and nose, he dropped dead, and the spectators went wild with applause.

A couple of hroses dragged the slaughtered carcass away, amid the sound of trumpets and acclamations of the spectators. The arena was made fresh and ready for another performance, for the combat must continue until six bulls, and probably as many horses, had been slaughtered for the delight of the spectators.

And they call this sport! Every Sunday the people of Barcelona are so entertained. This occasion was a special one in celebration of the eve of "St. Peter's Day," which is a national holiday to them.

The bull fight is a vile horror. One performance is enough for a sensitive soul. My soul was infuriated. If I could have done so, I would have helped the bull. He made no scores except against the poor blind, defenseless horse led in front of him to be sacrificed. I was a nervous wreck the balance of the day. To be sure, there is skill in being able to poise before a rushing, raging bull and thrust darts over his head into his body at a given point and at the same time sidestep him. There is skill in being able to thrust a sword into the running beast's neck exactly at a point where the sword enters his heart. There may be some skill in being able to sidestep his onrushes. But when it is understood that the bull rushes at the red rag and not a man, it is easy; and what possible skill can there be to playing the animal until his strength is all gone and then make the final thrust when there is least danger?

As to sportsmanship, what possible element of sportsmanship can there be to blindfolding a horse and placing him before the enraged beast to be sacrificed for the sake of stirring the animal to greater rage and winning more applause? Perhaps this was not the most skillful performance; perhaps the most skillful may be able to jump on the head of an oncoming enraged animal and land again on his feet—but why such torture? and why kill? Besides, with poor blinded horses lying dead and a poor animal forced into a torturous, losing combat for the sake of blood-thirsty spectators—is there no sense of feeling for defenseless brutes?

The occasion, which was a glorious success and a howling good time to the Spanish people who were there, was an event of horror to me and a nightmare to my memory. However many the opportunities, I shall never witness another, and it is believed that nobler thinking people, yea the world, will welcome the day of the passing of this stupendous, monstrous, beastly, vile, heathenish, nefarious, unspeakable, horrifying practice.

NOTICE.

In submission to the Master's will, I shall end my stay in the Windsor pastorate with the close of this Conference year. We have made friends since being here whom we shall regret to leave; however, it seems to be the Lord's will that we make a change. So will be pleased to correspond with any Church or group of Churches desiring a pastor.

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3 3/4 x 4 1/2 inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

Holman Jewel Testament

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2 1/2 x 4 1/4 inches x 3/4 inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2 1/2 x 4 1/4 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

STRICKEN WITH A FEVER.

After the long days of summer proceed to count themselves out, there will be many people stricken with a fever. This is part of the experience of the season. Somehow, the human body becomes infected with a germ which produces an inner heat. Its presence is marked by an increased register of the body heat. Thy physician knows that many things are the cause of the evidence of illness. There is the undue exposure to the sun, the drinking of too much water, and sometimes infected water, the eating of food and other things which set up within the human body a form of fermentation that causes illness.

One day Jesus ministered to a man stricken with a fever. He spoke the word, and the man was healed. Afterwards it was said, "Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him" (John 4:52). This was written in order to identify the moment of the departing fever and the spoken word of our Lord.

The man himself stricken with a fever is always an object of interest. We have seen many suffering from typhoid. We have seen them go down to death's door. We have watched the register of the thermometer while it gave indication that the patient was being slowly, inwardly consumed. We were instructed that it was a contest between the disease and the vitality of the individual. If he had more vitality in his life tissues, so that he could feed the fire of the disease until it expanded itself, he would survive; otherwise it would burn him out.

There is a fever of modern life operating today, contagious and infectious. It will catch the patient with its contagion. He has only to move in the vicinity where it is operating. He does not need to touch it. All that is necessary for him is to witness the excitement, the thrill, the restlessness, the apparent marvelous good time of the world about him to catch its contagion and to become a victim. Also, it is infectious.

Think, for a moment, first of the nature of the fever of modern life. Yes, then think of its cure. What is this fever? It is an inner burning desire for amusement, for luxury, for freedom, for escape from drudgery and humdrum, for the liberty to do as we will. When a man becomes a victim of it he is carried into a realm where the infection is all about him. He cannot hope to become its master. He will naturally become its victim. When a man once gives way to the appeal of the fever of modern life, he becomes a servant of his automobile, of his radio, of the movie-picture show, of the open dance hall, of dog racing, horse racing, golf, Sunday fishing, and Sabbath desecration; of charge accounts that drag from month to month, of debts that accumulate through the years. This is the nature of the fever of modern life.

Second, consider the ravages of the fever of modern life. It is the explanation of all our failure at law observance, of all our breaking of the commandments of God. Why are we so restless and discontented and irritable? Because the fever of modern life is burning up the life tissues and the vitality of the human spirit. It is working like an inner fire. It is breaking into our home life. It causes mother to bob her hair, to paint her lips, to tint her cheeks, to be satisfied with attenuated skirts and flesh stockings. It is the old-time sex instinct making its last struggle for the survival of the inner soul. What is the matter with mother? Why is she not serene, commanding, and loving and satisfying in her home and in the circle of her children? She has become infected with the fever of modern life. Something is ravaging her soul. She is a victim of a burning flame.

Then again, why does this woman, held in the bonds of marriage, seek to remain stereo, refusing to have children about her, loving rather a dog in her arms, loving rather the laughter at the bridge table, loving rather the swing of the dance, and the social swirl, loving rather fine dresses and gowns and diamond bracelets and pearl necklaces? Yes, what will she do in the judgment when a child's cry shall awaken her to the crime against her womanhood?

Third, let us think of the treatment of the fever of modern life. Shall we look into yesterday to find it? Shall we repeat the words of our Lord Christ, "Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him"? There was a cure, identical and positive. Yesterday the word was spoken, not today.

Can we look back and say, The cure was provided yesterday, may we use it today? Shall we look into tomorrow, saying that as yet no cure has been found? If so, then let the fever burn. There is no cure.

Blessed is the man who can hear the voice of Jesus speaking the word of the fever cure. He has power to extinguish the burning flame of the inner fire that consumes the life's tissues and vitality of the human spirit. We have gone in so far, even stepped so deep, that there is no possibility of retracing our steps. It will not get better. It will get worse. There is no one to whom we may turn but to Him, even the Christ of God. —Western Christian Advocate.

OBITUARIES.

EASON.

Marion Hope Eason, the five-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Duke Eason, of Sunbury, N. C., departed this life June 17th in Johns Hopkins Hospital. Her little curly head and cheerful smile will be long remembered by those surviving her. She leaves to mourn her loss, besides her mother and father, three sisters—Bernice A., Elsie V., and Mabel Starr; and one brother, John Rufus. May our Heavenly Father's blessing comfort the bereaved.

TRUITT.

"Done with the sorrows of earth land,
Done with the shadows of night;
Over the mountains of glory
Into the city of light."
—This is that which has come to Mrs. Henrietta Jane Truitt, who gently and quietly fell on sleep on June 7, 1929, aged 87 years.

Grandma Truitt had been a shut-in for a number of years, and for the last few months she had been gradually weakening away. Death came as a sweet release to her weak and tired body. She made her home during her last days with her daughter, Mrs. John R. Foster, who tenderly cared for her during her days of helplessness and waiting with a devotion that was an inspiration. She leaves, besides Mrs. Foster, two sons, J. R. and W. B. Truitt, and a number of grandchildren.

Funeral services were conducted from the First Christian Church on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and her body was laid beside that of Father Truitt, beneath a profusion of flowers sent by loving and sympathizing friends. A good woman has gone to her reward.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

PEACE THREATENED AGAIN.—

The plan and the treaty to outlaw war is being put to the test almost before the signatures of the participating nations has dried. It is a question between China and Russia that threatens to unleash the dogs of war. Both nations have signed the treaty, and it is going to be an opportunity to test the strength of the peace efforts. If war is averted, it will do much to increase the faith of the world in the new order which is in process of being established.

China is developing a strong national consciousness, and is bending every effort to co-ordinate and integrate its people and its forces. Manchuria is one of the most fertile of the Chinese provinces, but because it is situated on the boundary of China and the Chinese government has not been in a position to maintain its claim, Manchuria has been eagerly sought after by both Japan and Russia. It was the question of the possession of Manchurian resources and opportunities of exploitation which caused the Russo-Japanese War of 1905. The Japanese were victorious, and for a time the Russian efforts to control Manchuria were stopped. But since the conclusion of the World War, China has offered the most promising field for the sowing of Communist propaganda by the Soviet of Russia. There was a time when it looked as if the Bolshevik propaganda might be successful in China. But events in China have taken a different turn, and China is asserting her rights by ousting the Russian officials who have been controlling the Chinese Eastern Railway. Doubtless, there were many of the higher Soviet officials who would have welcomed an opportunity to make war. A few years ago such a situation would almost inevitably have led to war. But the world is bent upon trying a better way. Should the efforts to preserve peace fail at this time, it may be that it would serve to stimulate even greater efforts to make war an impossibility in the future.

A MAN AND HIS CHILDREN.—

There is perhaps no finer testimonial to the worth of a man's work and the way in which he does it than the attitude of his children toward the vocation in which a man has spent his life. The Cleveland correspondent of the Christian Century, writing of the retirement of Robert E. Lewis from the secretaryship of the Cleveland Y. M. C. A. after twenty years of service in that position, has this to say: "Perhaps nothing reveals the spirit of Robert E. Lewis more than the account which his eight children have given of themselves. Brackett Lewis is general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Prague, the largest association in Europe, while Charles Lewis is associate secretary at Manila. Philip Lewis is with the Cleveland Association. Mrs. Miriam Lewis Frick is connected with the International Institute of the Cleveland Y. W. C. A. Dr. Neil H. Lewis is head of the American Board Hospital in Foochow, China, while Arthur Lewis is under appointment to Durban, South Africa, with the same board. Of the two other children, both girls, one is a librarian in East Cleveland and the other is unmarried."

It is perhaps neither natural nor desirable that the son should always adopt the vocation in which the father has spent his life. The inclinations, disposition, and temperament of the child are by no means always the same as those of the parent. But if the father has had the right sort of attitude toward his vocation and has entered into its duties in the right sort of spirit, one would certainly expect a sympathetic attitude on the part of the child toward that calling. It is sometimes the case that in families where there has been a great outward show of piety on the part of the parents that the children are hostile to the Church and religion, or if not hostile totally indifferent.

THE CHURCH AND ITS MEMBERS.—

An unusual action has been taken by a Church in Dallas, Texas. Governor Dan Moody has paroled a prisoner who was serving a long term in the penitentiary. The prisoner was granted a sixty-day furlough in order that he might return to his home and make provision for the care of his family. This consideration was granted upon the petition of the Church of which the prisoner's mother is a member. The pastor and the Church assumes the responsibility for the prisoner during the time that he is on parole from the prison. The procedure is so novel that it gained a notice in the pages of the Literary Digest, which took the following quotation from the Dallas Morning News, which published the incident:

"The interest of churchmen in those undergoing penal sentence is always commendable, although it is not always exercised in so intelligent and helpful a fashion as in the case under consideration. Sympathy is always easier than usefulness. And yet there is plenty of room for both in handling those out of prison either by executive clemency or by completion of their term of incarceration.

"But the idea that a Church can afford to stand good for a convict is worth turning over. It is something of an adventure in practical Christianity of that sort that appeals instantly, even to the man on the outside of the Church. If Churches could go a bit further and stand good for their own members, the last arrow in the quiver of the unchurched would lose its barbs. Suppose that Church life progressed to the point where the debts of a member were guaranteed by the congregation and his character underwritten by his brethren in the faith. In that case, of course, it would be a bit harder to get into the Church—but getting in would mean more, wouldn't it?"

This action of the Church in being a friend to the man who is urgently in need of a friend is worthy of the deepest consideration. The faith to trust those who have not shown themselves worthy of trust is of the very spirit of Christ. It is a faith that humanity will in the future show itself more worthy of confidence than it is reasonable to expect, when the future is judged solely in the light of the past. There can be no greater stimulus to a man than to know when he has erred that some one still believes in him and is willing to stand good for his future. That was just what the Master did when, following the resurrection, He commanded to go tell His disciples and Peter that He was risen. Christ was willing to trust the man who had denied that he was a follower. There has been a tendency during recent years for the Church to assume the role of a policeman. Police duty needs to be done, and done more effectively than it is being done at present, by those who have been commissioned for the task. But there is a question whether, when the policeman fails in his duty, that it then behooves the Churchman to turn policeman.

The suggestion that the Church might with profit assume full responsibility for the conduct of its members, is also one that stirs a response in the mind of the thinking man. There can be no doubt but that Church membership should signify a great deal more than it does as to the honesty and integrity of those who are members of the Church. But for the Church to assume the responsibility for the financial transactions of its members would mean that the Church would have to become a mighty close corporation. There are a great many people who believe that Church membership should be limited to those who are strong, capable and unblemished in character and reputation.

But the New Testament has a great deal to say about the "babes in Christ" and "them that are weak in the faith." It also makes plain a method of loving dealing with those who are weak and who are in need of encouragement and intelligent direction in meeting the issues of life. If the Church were to become the assembly of the perfect, many of those who are most in need of the Church's kindly ministry would have to be denied membership. The Church is not an assembly of the perfect, but it is a congregation of those who are in the process of becoming. Even the Apostle Paul declared that he had not yet attained nor been made perfect, but that he was pressing toward the mark. It is the mission of the Church to help those who have not yet been made perfect, and by love and trust to help them on the way to the attainment of the higher ideal.

Mrs. N. T. Farmer

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. Joe French, of Broadway, Va., assisted Pastor B. J. Earp in a ten days' revival at Mt. Olivet (G). There were twenty-two additions.

Rev. J. W. Knight, Stokesdale, N. C., is assisting Rev. L. L. Wyrick, pastor, in a revival at Concord Church this week. Assisted by Rev. R. A. Whitten, Bro Knight last week enjoyed a glorious revival at Mt. Bethel, Rockingham, of which he is the beloved pastor.

From the Church "Bulletin" of First Christian Church, Richmond, Va.: "Next Sunday morning Dr. W. W. Staley, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, will be with us to preach the sermon and conduct the Communion service." Rev. H. G. Robertson will preach at the evening services.

Rev. E. B. White, Dendron, Va., one of our consecrated and competent preachers, will be open for some pastoral work, beginning with the next Conference year. Any Church desiring the services of an energetic preacher of power and influence would do well to correspond with Brother White. The reason for the change is due to the industrial situation at Dendron, Va.

Rev. W. C. Wicker, pastor, assisted by Rev. O. D. Poythress, conducted a very successful revival at Pleasant Ridge, Guilford County, last week. The Church was very much revived, congregations were large and attentive throughout the meeting, and there were about a dozen or more conversions. Dr. Wicker and Bro. Poythress are in meetings this week at Belew Creek, of which Church Dr. Wicker is also pastor.

His many friends will be rejoiced to learn that at this writing Rev. P. T. Klapp is much improved, and the prospect now seems hopeful for sufficient recovery for him to be up again and able to walk about the house. This is, indeed, a marvelous restoration, as there seemed no hope from any human point of view and outlook a few weeks ago. Surely our Heavenly Father is sparing this good man for some good work he has yet to do.

Rev. J. W. Patton, pastor, reports a gracious revival at Bethlehem the past week. There was a large attendance at the services, three each day, and the Spirit was present in power throughout the meeting to the edifying and spiritual upbuilding of the Church. Dr. W. S. Alexander assisted Bro. Patton to the edification of all. The pastor feels that Dr. Alexander is a power in the hands of God in presenting the gospel message to hungry souls.

A good woman, sending in to missions the first new dollar she had received, and also for her daughter the first one she had received, writes: "I think it a fine idea to call on the Church for this small amount. Surely many members will respond, and I hope that you may realize a large sum for missions in this way. I think it pathetic the way you have to dig mission money out of our Church members, but I do hope that we will go well over the $45,000 goal for this great and good cause before the close of the Church year." And this, I think, is the wish of many, many SUN readers.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, who assisted the pastor, Rev. J. W. Knight, in an evangelistic meeting at New Lebanon (Rockingham), says: "We had a great and good meeting at New Lebanon last week with seventeen conversions and sixteen additions to the Church and many rededications. The Church seemed much revived. God blessed us in many ways." The meeting at Mt. Bethel, Bro. Whitten assisting, was in progress the past week. This is the revival season with many of our Churches, and the good news of large ingatherings is inspiring indeed. Nothing increases the life and vigor of a Church more than a wholesome and gracious revival.

Rev. E. B. White, of Dendron, Va., writes: "God is still blessing the Churches of which I am pastor. I am happy to say that unity prevails among the members, and a sweet fellowship between pastor and people. Due to the industrial situation here at Dendron, I deem it expedient that I seek another field. I am open to a call to any Church or pastorate desiring my services the coming year. I had a full day yesterday. I preached to a splendid congregation at Dendron; in the afternoon at Spring Hill, and at night at Waverly. I am to assist Bro. F. C. Lester in a revival the first week in August at the Centerville Christian Church."

Rev. M. T. Sorrell, pastor, has recently "closed a very good meeting at Happy Home, with twenty additions to the Church roll." Bro. Sorrell did the preaching, with the exception of a few services conducted by Bro. P. H. Ricketts, of Danville. In commenting, the pastor says: "We not only feel that the Church has been revived and souls saved, but we believe also we will soon be able to start on a new Church building." Happy Home is one of our substantial rural Churches, is located in a thickly settled, thrifty community, and the growing needs of the congregation for Sunday School and Church worship seem to require a new building or an extensive addition to the present one.

If a sorrow comes upon you, and you omit prayer, you fall out of God's testing into the devil's temptation; you get angry, hard of heart, reckless. But meet the dreadful hour with prayer, cast your care on God, claim Him as your Father, though He seems cruel—and the degrading, paralyzing, embittering effects of pain and sorrow pass away, a stream of sanctifying and softening thought pours into the soul, and that which might have wrought your fall but works in you the peaceful fruits of righteousness. You pass from bitterness into the courage of endurance and from endurance into battle, and from battle into victory, till at last the trial dignifies and blesses your life.—S. Brooke.

Bro. R. H. Joyner, R. F. D. 1, Franklin, Va., faithful and true man of God in our Union (Southampton) Church, sends his greetings to SUN readers and adds these interesting lines: "Your letter was received, and note what you have to say in regard to giving the first piece of new money to missions. I think that this is a fine thought concerning missions. If all Christian people would comply with this call! I wish to say that I had the clerk of our Sunday School to read this letter last Sunday, and I tried to make a little talk on same, and I hope there are many that will comply with the call. As for myself, it seemed there wasn't a piece of new money being paid to me fast, so I walked in the bank and gave the cashier my check for a dollar and requested him to give me a new bill, which I am enclosing to you for missions. I hope there will be much received in this way to advance this worthy cause. With my prayers and best wishes for the work."

Especial attention is called to a report presented by the Committee on Music, Bro. George M. McCullers, chairman, to the recent session of the Eastern North Carolina S. S. & C. E. Convention. In the light of facts, as they obtain in many Sunday Schools and C. E. Societies at present, one could most heartily wish that this committee's report could be carried out in spirit and in letter throughout the Church. The present use of "jazz" music, much of it conducted purely in "jazz" method and tone, and much of it meaningless jargon, so far as words are concerned, is widespread and deplorable. We are persuaded that many of our schools and even of our Churches buy the books with such music solely because they can be had at a small price, little realizing at what a great price they are using these books, neither suited to the house of God, to the Sunday School classes, nor to the youths that meet and sing and worship there. Wholesome music always helps any service and any worship, but the light, frivolous "jazz" which has crept into so many of our schools and Churches is neither wholesome nor helpful, and cannot be constructive in character building.

Mr. J. T. Cross, Gates, N. C., sends us a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, published at Suffolk, Va., Friday, September 5, 1879. The request is that the same be presented to the library, Elon College. Although the copy is badly worn, many of the articles are readable. This copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN was sent, at the time of publication, to E. T. Cross, who was the father of J. T. Cross. It will be a valuable addition to the Elon College Library, which is a safe and suitable receptacle for all of our ancient and valuable historical doctrines. At the time the paper was published, Dunbar & Barrett were the proprietors, and Rev. J. Pressley Barrett was the editor. Among other interesting editorial notes is the following: "Will some one of our subscribers who has a copy of THE SUN, March 14, 1879, do us a favor by sending it to Rev. Dr. J. G. Sullivan, Brandon Church, Prince George County, Va.?" One wonders who Dr. Sullivan was and what has become of Brandon Church, Prince George County, Va. Another note of interest is the following: "We have heard only from a few of our Churches that have organized Ladies' and Children's Missionary Societies. Now we want to know if each Church has these societies and wishes to surprise us by letting us find out how nicely they are doing their work? If the ladies commence a society, we have no fears about its success." So it seems that there were missionary societies back in the past century. There are interesting articles in this old issue, some of which we will reproduce later.

COMMUNION SERMON.

"Guests at God's Supper Table."—Psa. 15.

Today we are to be guests at God's supper table. To each of us this is a most wonderful privilege as well as a sacred honor. As we come to His house to eat with Him, we are truly conscious of our unworthiness, and we sometimes hesitate to partake of His bread and wine. Yes, we are unworthy! Even the best of us feel a sense of need to be better before Communion. Some people are so conscious of this weakness that they refuse to attend Church altogether. They have not been God's guests in such a long time that they have become the devil's guests and constantly attend his luring feasts. On such occasions they spend their hard-earned money in riotous living, commit sins beyond description, and allow themselves to be tempted and made to believe that God is not interested in their welfare. In reality, God loves all of His children, and to them He extends a constant invitation to become guests at His table. Many of those who refrain from accepting the invitation are no worse than some of those men who attended the First Supper. From what we can gather from the writings of the New Testament, they were unfit to be God's guests, in the strictest sense of the word, but they were ready to be made better. They were common-place folks—one a publican, another a taxgatherer, another a revolutionist, and others were fishermen. These men had little concern at first about religion, for they had lived lives that were far remote from the new kingdom into which they were called. They were common men, with common faults like many of us today. Yet, only one of them actually proved to be wholly unworthy of being God's guest. This man had absolutely no right to be a holder of the sacred cup or to break the precious bread, for, though love appeared on his lips, hatred poisoned his heart. So it is that no one today is eligible to be God's guest whose heart is filled with malice, hatred, dishonesty, impurity and infidelity. For all others, God's table is prepared. Let all come!

We have seen that no one should come whose life does not ring true. Let us, in the words of our morning lesson, read the characteristics of God's guest, as written in the long ago by one who knew the love of God. This information comes in the form of a question and an answer. It is taken from the Fifteenth Psalm. "Lord, who shall be a guest in Thy tent? Who shall dwell in Thy holy hill?" These are the questions asked by the man, who in the following words proceeds to answer his own questions in words that reveal to this generation the type of person who is eligible to become a guest at God's supper tables:

"He that walketh uprightly and worketh righteousness,

And speaketh truth in his heart.

He that slandereth not with his tongue

Nor doeth evil to his friend,

Nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor.

In whose eyes a reprobate is despised;

But he honoreth them that fear the Lord.

He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not.

He that putteth not out his money to usury,

Nor taketh a bribe against the innocent.

He that doeth these things shall never be moved."

Such is he who is worthy to be admitted to the Divine hospitality of God's supper table and to be given the opportunity of supping with the Master. While these words fall far short of the sublimity of the New Testament teachings; and while they are mainly negative and lack a certain inwardness, there is truth in them for all who would be God's guest. Let us, therefore, take them and apply them, one by one, to our own lives. As one makes this test, he becomes conscious that he who slanders with his tongue, who wrongs his neighbor, who condemns the innocent for gain, and whose word does not bind him, cannot truthfully be God's guest.

"Lord, who shall be a guest in Thy tent?

Who shall dwell in Thy holy hill?"

As we ponder this question in our minds, we realize that there is not a better time to make an answer than during such a moment as when preparing our hearts to partake of the Holy Communion. When we come to His table we need most of all to remind ourselves of the manner of men His guests must be. As we sit around the table, we hear Him say: "Ye call me Master and Lord; and ye say well, for so I am. If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you. A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, even as I have loved you."

Before Thomas a' Kempis went to the Communion table as God's guest, he always examined himself in the light of God's commandment of love through Jesus Christ. Listen to the words of his "Self-Examination," as recorded by Dr. George Jackson, in his little book on "The Guests of God":

"Above all things, thou oughtest to receive this sacrament with great humility of heart and lowly reverence.

"And if thou hadst time, confess unto God in the secret of thine heart all the miseries of thy disordered passions. Lament and grieve that thou art yet so carnal, so worldly, so unmortified as to thy passions; so unwatchful over thy outward senses, so often entangled with vain imaginations; so quickly distracted, so seldom wholly recollected; so suddenly moved to anger; so apt to take displeasure against another, and speak evil of others; so prone to judge; so often purposing much good, and yet performing little.

"These and other of thy defects being confessed, with full resignation and with thy whole will, offer up thyself a perpetual sacrifice to the honor of my name on the altar of thy heart, faithfully committing thy body and soul unto me; that so thou mayest receive profitably the Sacrament of my Body."

These sublime words came from a clear voice that spoke out of the middle ages. Let us now turn to the Common Book of Prayer and hear the exhortation to those who come to be God's guests:

"If any of you be a blasphemer of God, a hinderer or slanderer of His word, and adulterer, or be in malice, or envy, or in any other grievous crime, repent you of your sins or else come not to the holy table, lest after taking the Sacrament the devil enter into you, as he did into Judas, and fill you full of all iniquities and bring you to destruction, both of body and soul."

NATIONAL ORIGINS PLAN.

"Nothing could be more vital than the make-up of the future population of this country, and the decision of Congress with respect to the national origins law will affect the destinies of our country and the welfare of our people for generations to come," declared Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, in support of this clause of the immigration act of 1924.

"To abandon the principles involved would be to surrender to foreign blocs and to discriminate in favor of some European countries and against others," he continued. "It transcends in importance every other question which is now before us, for if we change the composition of our population, then our democracy will change with it.

"We are an orderly, law-abiding people, to whom liberty does not mean the right to defy the government and flaunt the law, and means more than the opportunity to prosper. Unless we are to yield to the dictation of alien groups whose first loyalty is to the land of their birth rather than that of their adoption, we shall deal with the question as Americans always have dealt with their national problems, and hold fast to the good which has come down to us from the past.

"All the national origins law attempts to do is to preserve our present racial balance, so far as this can be controlled by immigration restriction. To my mind, there is only one course open. To compromise with that issue is to invite destruction."

IT WORKS WONDERS.

Some years ago, says the Public Leader, a lady, who tells the story herself, went to consult a famous physician about her health. She was a woman of nervous temperament, whose troubles—and she had many—had worried and excited her to such a pitch that the strain threatened her physical strength and even her reason. She gave the doctor a list of her symptoms, and answered the questions, only to be astonished at the brief prescription: "Madam, what you need is to read the Bible more."

"But doctor—" began the bewildered patient. "Go home and read your Bible an hour a day," the great man reiterated, with kindly authority. "Then come back to me a month from today." And he bowed her out without a possibility of further protest. At first his patient was inclined to be angry. Then she reflected that, at least, the prescription was not an expensive one. Besides, it certainly had been a long time since she had read the Bible regularly, she reflected with a pang of conscience. Worldly cares had crowded out her prayer and Bible study for years, and though she would have resented being called an irreligious woman, she had undoubtedly become a most careless Christian. She went home and set herself conscientiously to try the physician's remedy. In one month she went back to his office.

"Well," he said, smiling, as he looked at her face, "I see you are an obedient patient, and have taken my prescription faithfully. Do you feel as if you needed any other medicine now?"

"No, doctor, I feel like a different person. But how did you know this was just what I needed?" For answer, the famous physician turned to his desk. There, worn and marked, lay an open Bible. "Madam," he said, with deep earnestness, "if I were to omit my daily reading of this Book I should lose my greatest source of strength and skill. I never go to an operation without reading my Bible.

"I never attend a distressing case without finding help in its pages. Your case called not for medicine, but for source of peace and strength outside your own mind, and I showed you my own prescription. I knew it would cure." Yes, I confess, doctor," said the patient, "that I came very near not taking it."

"Very few are willing to try it, I find," said the physician, smiling again. "But there are many, many cases in my practice where, if tried, it would work wonders." This is a true story. —Southern Churchman.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

RUTH.

The name "Ruth" is found in the Old Testament only in the book that bears her name. It is a very brief book, made up of four short chapters. And yet that book, standing alone, makes its central character immortal, and the name "Ruth" has lived and has been glorified by untold numbers of namesakes. Somehow, the name itself is sanctified and hallowed because of the life the first and original "Ruth" lived. The name itself is a contraction of two Hebrew words and means "comrade," "companion," and then abstractly "friendship." In reading the book of Ruth, one realizes that the character in this instance lived up to and glorified the name.

It's a love story. It's a gem. There is just enough of tragedy and cloud in the background to make the rays of this life shine out with a softer radiance. It's more than a love story. It's a story of friendship, triumphing over all barriers and obstacles. The book of Ruth is an idyl, gloriously exhibiting the truth that the principles and recompense of righteous living are not dependent upon race, but are as valid for a Moabitess as for a Jewess. Ruth comes out of a people scorned by the Jews, just as illegitimate and disgraced kin are scorned by respectable people. The Moabites, as a race, had their origin in shame and disgrace, a nation born in illegitimacy, revelry and debauchery. And yet coming out of this despised race, the lovely Ruth develops such devotion to her mother-in-law and to the God of her mother-in-law, and such loyalty to all that was chaste, pure and comely, that all who see and know her come to love her.

But the book and the character of Ruth have a far deeper significance than this. The friendship and loyalty herein displayed are not of human but of divine origin, and have their culmination not in earthly but in heavenly attainment.

Naomi, the mother-in-law of Ruth, herself a pure and chaste woman, so lived a godly life among a heathen people as to win a soul from the worship of idols to the worship of the true and living God. Moreover, in reading the book of Ruth, one is led by the strong grip of marvelous language, and the matchless description, from Moab to Jerusalem, and from an unknown ruler to King David, who was himself establishing a kingdom, whose fame and glory should be known in the whole world. And Ruth, the Moabitess, led by the mercy and the grace of Jehovah, comes to be the great-grandmother of Israel's greatest king and the ancestress of our Lord Himself, who centuries later first saw the light of day in Bethlehem and carried on His earthly ministry in and about Jerusalem. The love of God is the one dynamic of sufficient power to bind a world together in ties of enduring friendship. If ever the barriers between races and nations are broken down, and love takes the place of hatred between the tongues and tribes of earth, it will be based and founded upon love and loyalty to the true and living God. Love will triumph. It will break down barriers, overcome obstacles and prove himself invincible and eternal. Such love, however, will have divine and not human origin and will be based on the very love that Ruth proclaimed: "Thy people shall be my people, thy God my God." The book of Ruth is the world's first immortal missionary document. In all literature it has few equals and no superiors. It was written for the purpose of illustrating the fact that the love of God breaks down barriers and makes the nations and peoples of the earth one in Him.

SMASHING RECORDS.

Every day of these strenuous times witnesses the unusual and the spectacular. Only that which hasn't happened interests us. The "latest" only attracts. One who breaks with the past and establishes something unheard of at the present is the hero, not of the month or of the week, but only of the day or of the hour. The first new bale of cotton of the crop of 1929 was ginned in Corpus Christi, Texas, a few days ago. Only forty-eight hours intervened between the picking of that cotton in Texas and its sale by auction in New York. That was the first bale of cotton ever shipped by airplane from Texas to New York, and it was done in a day. Ordinarily that bale of cotton would have sold in New York for about $100, but it was smashing records, and so it brought in actual cash on the New York market $1,211. That excitement thrilled for a day. And then an endurance record and another long-distance, non-stop flight record by airplane were smashed. And then next day somebody else smashed some other record. Excitement is in the air; ideas are in the air; religion is in the air.

We cannot in these days too often and too emphatically remind ourselves that the spectacular is the transient and the transient is the temporary. That which endures is invisible and hath foundations. We may lift our heads among the clouds, but we must keep our feet on solid ground and look where and how we walk, or there will be stumbling and fatal falling. We should not lose faith in the foundations, and bear in mind that we can endure only as we keep our eye on Him who is invisible. We still live and move and have our being in God, and from Him and in communion with Him must come that which shall stand the shock of time and endure beyond the things that are transient.

IN THE "GOOD OLD DAYS."

Fifty years ago, THE CHRISTIAN SUN was published in Suffolk, Va., and in those good days THE SUN, we presume, along with other Church papers of the time, boosted local enterprises of an industrial nature and carried what was termed "our secular department." From the issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, September 5, 1879, a copy of which is now before us, we copy an item likely to be of interest to many Suffolk readers:

"Cotton Factory.—A meeting of the citizens of Suffolk was held on Wednesday afternoon at the Masenic Hall looking to the establishment of a cotton factory in our midst. The meeting was called to order, and Mr. Wm. R. Ellis elected chairman, and T. G. Elam, Esq., of the Herald, appointed secretary. Mr. Jacob Peyer, a gentleman from Georgia, and fully conversant with the matter under discussion, gave the meeting a clear and practical talk. After which a committee was appointed to solicit subscriptions of stock from the citizens present, and about ten thousand dollars' worth of stock was taken. A committee of six was then appointed to solicit stock and report at a future meeting. The meeting then adjourned."

One-half century later, one wonders what became of that movement for a cotton factory in Suffolk for which $10,000 in stock was subscribed at one meeting, and one further wonders what would be the present status and dimensions of the city of Suffolk had that cotton factory been established.

Another item of interest is the following: "Rev. W. T. Walker left for his home in North Carolina Monday last. He will return in time to fill his appointment in Suffolk the third Sunday." There was no Christian Church in Suffolk at that time, and the issue of THE SUN in question carried under its local news the regular appointments of the preachers at the four Churches of the city of that day: "Baptist pulpit by Rev. O. F. Flippe, pastor, preaching second and fourth Sundays; Episcopal Church, Rev. Jas. B. Craighill, rector, who will preach next Sabbath, morning and night; Methodist Church, Rev. James C. Martin, pastor, regular services both in the morning and evening; Presbyterian Church, Rev. Mr. Scott, pastor; services at the Suffolk Collegiate Institute, on Kilby Street, every second and fourth Sunday, morning and night."

Another item: "The Suffolk Collegiate Institute is being repainted this week; Mr. B. C. Roberts has the contract. He is also painting the residence of Rev. E. W. Beale."

Another item indicates that travel was not quite as rapid half a century ago as at the present: "Col. D. J. Godwin, of Portsmouth, was in Suffolk on Monday morning last, on his way to Isle of Wight Courthouse." We wonder when the good colonel arrived!

J. O. A.

[The cotton factory was built and operated for a time. There was a Christian Church in Suffolk. The first sermon your humble servant heard preached in it was "The Hidden Talent," by Rev. J. T. Whitley, pastor. Rev. W. T. Walker succeeded him in the pastorate.—MANAGING ED.]

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The first Christian Endeavor Society was formed by Dr. Frances E. Clark, of the Congregational Church, at Portland, Maine, in 1881. The object was the promotion of life and service among young people. The movement flourished rapidly after 1895, when the "World Christian Endeavor Union" was formed and branches were formed in all Christian lands. The movement was hindered for a time by the formation of denominational societies under different names. But in 1910 there were 73,521 societies, with a membership of 3,676,000, chiefly in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, and Australia. Like all interdenominational movements, Christian Endeavor has had its hard experiences at times, but it has done wonders in developing self-expression and individual service on the part of young people. A fine young woman said to me today that she never could say a word in public until she attended the Christian Endeavor Society in the Suffolk Christian Church. She has been a successful school teacher and is an accomplished young woman who can do public service. She is only one out of millions who learned to lead in prayer, make a religious talk, and conduct worship for the Lord.

Christian Endeavor is the parent society of the denominational societies that are doing such a wonderful work in the Churches throughout the world. Christian Endeavor has been a wonderful agent in the cultivation of the spirit of unity and fraternal co-operation among the denominations. Dr. Clark must have been led by the Holy Spirit in this great movement that meant to cultivate not only active service among the young people, but loyalty to their denominations in attendance and support. The pledge covers that ground.

As the Christian Church has no organization based upon the principles of Christian Endeavor, and as those principles harmonize with the Principles of the Christian Church, it seems to be an opportunity for all the Christian Churches to organize Christian Endeavor Societies and to develop the capacities and spiritual talents of the young people. So far as it has been tested by actual experience, Christian Endeavor Societies furnish the best opportunity or school in which to develop young people for real leadership in the work of the Church. It appeals to young people because it gives them the chance to express themselves in terms of Christian thinking and Christian worship. There is no more beautiful service than that of young people conducting worship through song, prayer, reading of the Scripture, and expressing their feelings and convictions on religious conditions and experiences.

If pastors will encourage young people in the organization of a Christian Endeavor Society in the Church, with regular meetings, it will stimulate the whole Church in the work which should be done.

CONGREGATIONALISTS AND CHRISTIANS.

Though the event was not marked by the spectacular interest and enthusiasm that one might have anticipated, the incident of the National Congregational Council of deepest permanent significance and importance was undoubtedly the vote approving the proposals for union with the Christian body. The unanimity of the council's action probably meant more than any emotional outburst, such as might have followed a period of prolonged debate or the triumph of the proposals over manifest opposition. The point is that the proposals were adopted unanimously and practically without debate. They have yet to be passed upon by the Christian General Convention, which meets this coming October, but as far as Congregationalists are concerned, the way to union is clear.

Three causes evidently contributed to the quietude and placidity with which the council expressed its unanimous decision. The first of these was the fact that in many minds the matter was already determined and the council's action was a foregone conclusion. The difficulties and questionings that had arisen—and it may be stated frankly that difficulties and questionings had been raised—had been dealt with largely, prior to the council, by boards and groups whose organizations and interests were concerned, and the general matters affecting the feasibility of union had also been freely canvassed. The mass of our leadership had come to Detroit convinced that there were no real barriers to union. The matters that might have occasioned, or enlivened, debate had already been given deep consideration.

The second of these cases had to do with the form in which union was finally proposed. The text of the proposals from the beginning has already been before our readers and we need not stress the fact that in their final form the proposals differed in some important respects from the basis of union as first drafted. In general, the union as endorsed by the council is federal rather than organic. In Congregational circles there will always be questioning and difficulty about union that is organic, except as the larger organism is made up of free organisms. Union between the Christians and ourselves, as it was first proposed, partook too much of a union between denominations; and each group, upon rather specific grounds, would disclaim being denominational in the sense of having organized and centralized authority. The union as now proposed, and endorsed by the council, is a union of free groups, each Congregational in fact and in spirit, and each retaining its full liberties. What the union, if finally consummated, does effect, is the hope and privilege of bringing these two groups together with the same purpose and the same cohesive spiritual fellowship which has hitherto bound the Churches of each group to one another. Congregationalists were unanimous for this union because they found in it nothing out of harmony with their own life and spirit. They have welcomed the hope of enlarging their sphere of interest, fellowship and activity without weakening their organized fellowship and purpose by needless compromise.

The third, and at this stage the most important, cause of the council's complacency in unanimity was the fact that many of the delegates who voted for the proposals were taking the matter on trust, without personal knowledge of the Christian group. The present writer, for instance, has never been in a Christian Church, and never met any of that communion until he was well advanced in manhood. Later contacts with individuals, though exceedingly pleasant and welcome, have been at long range and chiefly through correspondence. There is nothing particularly reprehensible about this situation. The writer has simply never happened to live in a community in which, or near which, there was a Christian Church. The lack of contact has been incidental, rather than intentional.

How many of the voting delegates and visitors to this council, we wonder, have found themselves in exactly this situation? They welcome fellowship as large and as free as it can be; and they look forward expectantly to these new associations; but their background is one of hope rather than of knowledge. In this situation great importance attaches to the suggestion of Rev. Horace Holton, of Brockton, Mass., a member of the Congregational Commission on Unity, that vital opportunities for mutual acquaintance must be sought and furthered. We must take steps to make the larger fellowship effective; otherwise, the unanimous vote of the council will be a pretentious nothing.

Nor should this new association be only between individuals, or between ministers and Churches. Let local groups develop new contacts, making this proposed union, as it ought to be, a matter of local autonomy, and not one chiefly of official and overhead contact. Already in New Bedford, Mass., a Congregational and a Christian Church are uniting. That may not be everywhere feasible or advisable, but the spirit of this anticipated Federal association ought to be present, ready to manifest itself in organic union wherever and whenever the occasion seems favorable.

We speak of the federation as "anticipated," for the Christians have yet to act officially. But as Congregationalists we stand committed. Let our commitment be given with open-hearted sincerity, with open-minded hope, and with open-handed good will!—The Congregationalist.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference held its sixtieth annual session in Liberty Spring Christian Church July 23, 24, 1929. Dr. I. W. Johnson is pastor of the Church, Jesse F. West, Jr., is the president of the convention, and Rev. F. C. Lester, secretary. The weather was ideal, the attendance was the largest in its history. Thirty-two schools out of forty-two were represented by 283 delegates; seventeen ministers were present, and a throng of local people and visitors. The average delegates from the schools was nine. The song service was conducted by Rev. J. F. Morgan and W. H. Baker. The opening and closing service was led by Pastor I. W. Johnson. The forenoon of the first day was given over largely to routine business and reports from departments.

A very touching incident was the introduction of Rev. and Mrs. M. J. W. White, who are under appointment as medical missionaries to the Philippine Islands. They responded graciously, and the great congregation responded with inward appreciation and prayers for their success. Dr. White is the son of our well-known M. J. W. White of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., and Mrs. Dr. White was from Luray, Va.

Following the introduction of Dr. and Mrs. White, Dr. J. O. Atkinson delivered one of his greatest addresses on "Putting the Sunday School in Missions." That form of the subject reversed the usual way of saying "to put missions in the Sunday School." Though the address lasted a full hour, it lost none of its interest or appeal; and the verdict was that Dr. Atkinson had never delivered a finer address. An offering of $45.00 was taken for missions, and a check for same was turned over to Dr. Atkinson, Secretary of the Mission Board.

At 12:15 the convention adjourned for dinner, when more than nine hundred enjoyed the Liberty Spring hospitality expressed in rolls, loaf-bread, ham, fried chicken, potato salad, tomatoes, iced tea, and tables in the shade on which to enjoy the well-prepared meal. The same provision was enjoyed by a still larger number the second day. The home entertainment for those who remained overnight was enjoyed by the guests, whose rest was sweet.

The afternoon session heard reports from departments and a fine address on "Children's Work," by Miss Pattie Coghill. The interest manifested in the convention by attendance and attention was a mark of devotion to the cause of Christ and the Church.

The local choir and a Suffolk orchestra rendered music at the evening session, and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle delivered the main address, on "The Why and How of Leadership Training."

The second day was a surprise in attendance, interest, and repeated hospitality by twenty-nine who gave the same kind of dinner as the twenty-nine did the first day. Devotional services, reports of departments, addresses by Dr. N. G. Newman on "Adults," and "The Christian Orphanage," by Mr. C. D. West, of Newport News, in the absence of Superintendent C. D. Johnston, added new inspiration to the work.

Rev. Dr. Charles Eldred Shelton, pastor of the Congregational Church in Portsmouth, delivered a telling address on "These Youngsters of Ours."

The afternoon session was characterized by a lively discussion on "Christian Endeavor" and a motion to nourish this work for the coming year. The greatest convention of the sixty, and too much to put in this letter.

ELON LETTER.

Eighteen years ago in Elon College a one-hour course in the Old Testament was given in the freshman year, and a one-hour course in the New Testament in the sophomore year. This constituted the total requirement of the college in the field of religion, except for ministerial students. No religious education whatsoever was offered.

Today we offer in the field of religion forty-eight semester hours in Bible and forty-eight semester hours in religious education. We permit a major in Bible alone or in religious education alone, or a combined major in both subjects. We require a course of three hours per week for a year in Bible or religious education for all freshmen, and we have the magnificent Christian Education Building in which to do the work.

For students who have completed two courses in Bible or religious education and who are pursuing the third or fourth course, laboratory work is required in the week-day school of religion maintained by the college in its Christian Education Building. In this laboratory work, students are given actual experience in teaching religion to the children of the Orphanage and the graded high school of the village, being excused from the public school by grades for this purpose. Our students also teach religion to the colored children at their school and Church.

Our freshman work in Bible and religious education is so organized that the student who has completed these two courses has completed more than the equivalent of the twelve units required in the standard teacher-training course of the International Council, and consequently diplomas are awarded those students who have completed these two courses by our denominational headquarters for leadership training and with the counter-signature of the leadership training superintendent of the International Council.

In making these provisions for the teaching of religion in Elon College, we feel that we have, so far as curriculum requirements are concerned at least, met the obligations of a Church college in the field of religion, and we have given the answer of a good conscience to the fundamental conception which we entertain and for which Elon was founded, that it is impossible to teach without teaching religion.

It is manifestly impossible to separate education and religion if we expect to produce the highest type of character. As the Jerusalem Missionary Conference said, "Education without religion is a contradiction in terms." It certainly is unless the psychological view that the mind reacts as a unit to every situation or experience and unless also the view that the religious quality permeates the entire vital process, are entirely mistaken. Wherever personal forces, therefore, are present, religious values are involved, and that means every experience which living human beings have.

This situation makes it necessary for us to re-think the consequences of a free Church and a State limited to civil matters, a primal American doctrine. Does this mean the divorce of education and religion? If so, the American people have attempted the impossible. We must find ways of wedding into harmonious wedlock two forces that were never intended to be separated and that cannot be separated even if their divorce were intended. As a matter of fact, religion as distinct from sectarianism, has always been taught in public schools and in our tax-supported institutions of higher learning, though not with the Christian emphasis and interpretation which we think at Elon is absolutely required if the best character is to result. The Catholic knows this, and so maintains his parochial school system. We should cease to bootleg religion into our tax-supported schools, whether of secondary or collegiate grade, and should frankly do open and above board what from the very nature of things we must do, namely: teach religion if we teach at all.

STATEMENT OF FINANCE BOARD.

Much emphasis has been laid upon the fact that the last session of the Southern Christian Convention adopted a financial plan which eliminated Convention missions and foreign missions from the Conference apportionments. The fund for Conference home missions is retained in all the apportionments made by the Conference for the local Churches. This action was taken because of emergency conditions. It is well known that the Convention has to raise nearly $4,000 each year to care for the deficit in publishing THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The only source of securing this money seemed to be from the local Conferences. It seemed unwise to increase the present Conference apportionments when the Churches have been in so many instances failing to raise the present apportionment. The only practical source, under the circumstances, was to appropriate this money from the funds sent to the Convention by the Conferences.

The same conditions were faced in the matter of funds for Bethlehem and Elon College. Both of the colleges have grave financial difficulties. Naturally the situation at Elon is better known because the greater part of the Convention is in closer touch with the situation. While Elon has a very valuable group of buildings and some endowment funds, it is passing through a financial crisis which seriously threatens the future of the institution. There is no prophet among us who has yet been able to see the way out of this trying hour without raising a larger amount of money. The people are getting sick of "financial drives" and "campaigns" for money in Churches. The Churches seemed to be unwilling to increase the Conference apportionment for any cause. But the college must have more money. Therefore, the only feasible way seemed to be to increase the percentage of the Conference funds sent to the Convention for colleges.

The Convention believed that the people were willing to try to raise the present Conference apportionments, and send in the funds designated for the Convention in a lump sum to be divided by the Board of Finance as provided by the Convention. At the same time, it should be dearly borne in mind that the Convention adopted a plan for missions, which if followed will greatly increase the amount raised for missions each year. Under the former plan, no one knew how much each Church was giving for missions through the Conference apportionment unless a very careful study of the percentage was made. Now the Mission Board has a direct appeal to the Sunday Schools, Churches, societies and individuals, and the people may know what they are doing. This plan should help the mission work of the Convention.

Of course, this plan is not perfect, but it is practical. Some day our people will understand the needs of the kingdom and will be willing to give as the Lord has prospered them. Every department of the Convention is important. At this time there are certain emergencies which demand consideration. If our colleges are closed, the mission cause will die. Our Church will fail. Our Church paper must live. Very frankly, it should be said that the Convention is in a crisis. Disaster threatens our work. We call for prayer. We call for co-operation. We plead for support. We are one. Let us pull together. Let us provide the money.

The Financial Program of S. C. C.

A statement of the Executive Committee and the Board of Finance.

The Southern Christian Convention at its Richmond session unanimously adopted a financial program, and it behooves every Church, every minister, every member to co-operate fully with it. In united effort and sympathetic, prayerful co-operation is success. The Executive Committee and the Board of Finance herewith explains this program fully and pleads for completer support of it.

We are this year expecting to unite with the Congregational Church. Let's go as a one hundred per cent organized brotherhood. This means we must raise the Convention apportionment of $25,000 fully and all the askings of our enterprise. We can do it. Let's do it for the Church and our Christ.

I. The Convention.

The Convention apportions to the Conference $25,000 annually. The allotment to each Conference is by it apportioned to the Churches. Here it must be raised. We urge the Conference officials to call upon their local Churches to get this fund up in full. We herewith ourselves urge each local Church to do the same. The good name and integrity of our denomination are at stake. We plead for generous response.

This money the Convention uses as follows:
 For the Convention itself..... $ 2,000.00
 For The Christian Sun 4,000.00
 For superannuation 3,000.00
 For the Convention's obligations..... 12,000.00
 Undistributed 3,250.00

Total $25,250.00

Each Conference is requested to send its Convention apportionment in promptly in lump sum.

II. Our Enterprises.

We have four enterprises, and they are to be supported in various ways as follows:

(a) The Orphanage—$30,000.

To care for the 108 children of our Orphanage, we must raise each year $30,000. Three sources are provided for this purpose.

1. Monthly offerings in Sunday Schools.
2. The annual Thanksgiving offering in the Churches.
3. Gifts from individuals.

Our people have always supported the Orphanage. We urge them to continue to do so.

(b) The Board of Religious Education—$4,500.

This board has not had the support its importance deserves, and has been forced to take its field secretary out of the field. The funds should be provided it to employ a field secretary and to conduct our two summer schools at Elon and (Bethlehem) Piedmont Junior Colleges, as well as its daily vacation Bible school and institute work in our local Churches.

The Convention provides two ways of supporting this work:

1. Gifts from the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Societies.

(c) Home and foreign missions—$45,000.

In the desire to carry out the great commission at home and abroad, the Convention voted that $45,000 be raised for missions.

Four methods were provided for raising this money:

1. Missionary organizations in local Churches.
2. Monthly Sunday School offerings.
3. The annual Easter offerings in Churches. (The Mission Board set as the goal for this offering one-third of the pastor's salary.)
4. Individual gifts.

Should the funds from 1, 2 or 3 fall short, gifts from individuals must make up the difference. The Mission Board must have the full amount.

(d) Colleges.

Piedmont Junior (Bethlehem)—$10,000.

Piedmont Junior (Bethlehem) College holds a note of the Convention for $12,500 as a part of its endowment. To give this note stability of value and make it acceptable as endowment to the standardizing agencies, the Convention pays out of that portion of its funds set aside as "undistributed" 6 per cent interest annually, of $750. This leaves $9,250 to be raised by the college in the name of the Convention from the following sources:

|---|------------|
| 1. From quarterly S. S. offerings in Georgia and Alabama Conferences..... | $ 250.00 |
| 2. From Church quotas in Georgia and Alabama Conferences | 1,000.00 |
| 3. From members of S. C. C. outside of Georgia and Alabama Conferences... | 5,000.00 |
| 4. From the general public | 3,000.00 |
| Total | $9,250.00 |

Piedmont Junior (Bethlehem) College has done wisely to suggest a quota for each Church in the Georgia and Alabama Conference, and should collect the same from individual members of the Churches. People like to know what they are expected to do if a project is to succeed. The rest of the Churches should also help Piedmont Junior (Bethlehem) College.

Elon College—$36,750.

Years ago the Convention gave the Elon endowment fund a note for $112,500, and later bonds in the sum of $100,000, both obligations bearing 5 per cent interest annually. The Convention pays out of that portion of its funds set aside for Convention obligations 6 per cent interest annually, or $12,750. This leaves $24,000 to be raised by the college in the name of the Convention from the following sources:

1. Quarterly Sunday School offerings in the North Carolina and Virginia Conferences.
2. Gifts from individuals.

Elon College, acting on the authority of its trustees and the Convention's Finance Board, has suggested a goal for each Church in the Conferences in North Carolina and Virginia to be raised from individual members of the Churches and others and which if raised by all would provide this $24,000 without hardship to any one. The quarterly Sunday School offerings are credited on the suggested goal of each Church.

III. General Observations.

Please note that the colleges cannot appeal to the Churches as organizations. It is hoped and urged, however, that our ministers will have at least one "College Day" annually, not to take an offering but to interest our people in the college and the cause of Christian education.

Let it also be distinctly understood that the colleges did not suggest the payment of interest on the endowment obligations given them by the Convention from the apportionment fund. The Finance Board did it, and the Convention approved it. It was a wise decision, else the standardizing agencies would not count these obligations as endowments, and our colleges would be discredited.

We suggest that the annual offering for the Board of Religious Education be taken in the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Societies on "Promotion Day," or "Children's Day."

Our enterprises must be cared for or our Church will die. We cannot let any one of them suffer. They are equally dear to us and to the heart of our Saviour.

Further, if a Church has a budget and includes all the enterprises according to the askings, no offerings will be taken or individual gifts be solicited from individuals to raise quotas.

Finally.

Finally, brethren and beloved, we call upon you to rally whole-heartedly to the support of our enterprises in full sympathetic and prayerful co-operation with the financial program adopted by your Convention and approved by your Conference.

In particular, raise and send in full the Conference apportionments for the Convention.

With earnest prayers for the blessings of God upon you and our Church and its enterprises, we are

REPORT OF MUSIC COMMITTEE.

Realizing the fact that a religious song is a song that truly voices the emotional experience of sincere religious life, we, your committee on music, beg to offer the following suggestions:

1. That more prayerful consideration be given to song books selected for use in our Sunday Schools and C. E. Society work.
2. We suggest that only those who can realize and convey to singers the difference between spiritual and secular music be elected song leaders.
3. It is a regrettable fact that too many song leaders of today are bringing into use in our Sunday Schools too much secular, or "jazz," music.
4. We, therefore, recommend that our pastors and superintendents see to it that more soul-inspiring music be taught and used in our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor work.
5. We further recommend that only song books published and approved by an authorized publishing board of our Church be purchased or used in our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies.

JAPANESE NEWSPAPER FORESEES UNIFIED INDIGENOUS CHRISTIANITY.

The Japan Advertiser is perhaps the best-known foreign newspaper in Japan. It is an American daily. Commenting on the fruits of Christianity in the island kingdom, where there are only 300,000 Christians, or one-half of one per cent of the total population, this paper says:

"The influence of Christianity in Japan cannot be measured, but none can live in the country without being conscious of it. It is doing more than anything else to raise the status of women from an Oriental to a modern level. It has put new life into the religious consciousness of the nation and has taught the Japanese the dignity of service to the weak. Innumerable Japanese who have never embraced Christianity have absorbed its influence. The missionaries' great achievement is not the conversion of a certain number of Japanese, but the establishment of vigorous native Churches, which are developing in their own lines and are likely eventually to evoke a Japanese form of Christianity in which the fifty different sects now conducting missions in Japan will be merged."—The Congregationalist.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

THE GIVER OR THE GIFT?

Perhaps no group in the Church has been more sinned against in the realm of giving than have the young people. Too often Church leaders have looked on the young people's society as a money-raising organization. Its efficiency has been judged by the amount of cash it could produce, regardless of the means by which the money was secured, the effect which the employment of such means had on the young people themselves, or the harm such methods do in cheapening the Church in the eyes of the world.

This custom of judging a group by the money it could produce has been the means of encouraging all sorts of hurtful practices among young people's groups. Most young people have a proportionately small amount of money of their own. Therefore, there is a tendency to resort to tag days, sales, and other such questionable means of raising money. When we hold up a man on the street and sell him a "tag" or get him to drop a quarter in a bank, or wheedle him out of a penny for every inch of his height, we need not flatter ourselves that he is giving to missions. He is giving to get rid of us or to relieve himself of an embarrassing situation. It is an insult to the Church and the great cause for which it stands to resort to such petty, trivial and unworthy methods.

Real Christian giving on the part of each individual should be our goal. The money we get is always a by-product. The character of youth is too precious to be trifled with. Right attitudes toward giving, a genuine sympathy with the needs of others, a sense of obligation towards one's fellow-man, a spirit of sacrifice, a regard for the dignity and worth of the Church are far too precious to be sold for a mess of pottage in the form of a few dollars or even a few hundred dollars raised by tag days, miles of pennies, or any of the other questionable methods which cheapen the Church and breed in the young people a feeling that the Church is on the outer fringe of life's interest and can be served with the crumbs which fall from life's table.

A word here might be said about earning money for Church purposes. The complaint sometimes comes to us that by condemning all such methods we quell the enthusiasm of young people who have no money but who are honest in their enthusiasm to do something for a given cause. The enthusiasm of any young person should never be quelled. Very often it should be redirected. While it is true that many young people have no incomes, they all have spending money. Instead of using that enthusiasm in wheedling money out of other people who give it grudgingly, why not direct it into channels of real self-sacrifice on the part of the young people? Suppose you tactfully suggest that it is their job and they should find some way to meet it. Ask each one to keep a careful account of every cent he has spent the past week on non-essentials, such as candy, cold drinks, cigarettes, ice cream, picture shows, or gasoline for pleasure rides. Or if the need is great, why not a larger self-denial—wearing your last year's hat, or less expensive stockings, or foregoing the new beads or the coveted pin or the tie or dress one could get along without. A self-denial bank will produce more funds than the various schemes of wheedling money out of the public and, more important still, will save the Church from being cheapened in the eyes of the world. It will help produce character in the individual who makes the sacrifice, as well as tie his interests to the cause for which he made the denial. We always care more for the things that cost us dear. Even then, young people should not be made to feel that they have done a great and noble thing because they have given up a few non-essentials. The real value comes in making them see that those things are non-essentials compared to the abundant life for others. If properly handled, the resultant feeling will not be one of self-gratification over the denials, but a sense of the importance of the subject to which it is given—a new sense of the relative value of things—"Training for World Friendship," Ina Corinne Brown.

THE LESSENING CONSCIOUSNESS OF SIN.

It is difficult for us to realize how rapidly the lessened consciousness of sin has affected the public mind during the last ten or fifteen years. Consciences are becoming deadened, minds less sensitive, the sight and hearing dulled. Scenes which shocked us a decade ago cause hardly a ripple in our thoughts today. Terrible crimes and atrocities which ten or fifteen years ago occupied for days the first page of the newspapers, are given only passing notice, oftentimes in a brief paragraph. Achievements in discovery and inventions which thrilled us yesterday, produce hardly more than passing thought today. Crimes are committed with unusual atrociousness in order to give a thrill to the murderer. And, appalling to contemplate, the murderers are too often youth and even children. The adventure of youth is finding its field of experiment in channels of infamy and notoriety.

What will be the end of this mad race for money, for pleasure, for thrill in crime? These are questions worthy of our serious consideration. Those who are acquainted with the prophetic forecast of the Bible know that the picture, as it unrolls before us from day to day in the happenings of the world, is only a duplicate of the picture drawn by the inspired penman centuries ago. Let us place in contrast these two pictures. Consider first the picture drawn by Isaiah seven hundred years before Christ, as he looked down the long centuries and saw the condition of the world immediately preceding the coming of the Lord.

The Prophetic Pen-Picture.

"Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither His ear heavy, that it cannot hear: but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid

His face from you, that He will not hear. For your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquity; your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness. None calleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth; they trust in vanity, and speak lies; they conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity.

"Their feet run to evil, and they make haste to shed innocent blood; their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and destruction are in their goings; they have made them crooked paths: whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace. . . . Judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off, for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey; and the Lord saw it, and it displeased Him that there was no judgment" (Isa. 59:1-15).

The Responsive Historical Picture.

The second picture is from the pen of Mr. Barton Currie, editor of the World's Work, in that journal for April, 1929, under the title, "Hard Boiled." The editor of this great journal presents the condition of society today in the following words:

"Murderers more or less wholesale or retail scarcely caused a ripple of comment. Seven undesirable wiped out with incredible brutality either by bandit policemen or gang opponents—and the newspapers are through with it in forty-eight hours. Flaring headlines one day, casual mention the second, and a submerged paragraph the third. . . .

"This hard-boiled state of mind has become very nearly universal on this continent, and it's a pretty terrible thing to contemplate if you happen to have even a very little bit of sentimentality left in your make-up. It makes you feel rather fearful that the killers, the footpads, the big or little crooks in and out of politics, can get away with anything. The entire body politic, embracing both sexes that have the vote, appears to be sensation proof, utterly indifferent to all manner of explosions and cataclysms, unless an immediate injury is brought to its own threshold.

"We have been preaching and ranting for a decade or so about the hard-boiled younger generation who were corrupted by the motion pictures and the intelligentsia are twittering sentimentalists, compared to the elder generation who run the works and fail to bat an eyelash at the news of the latest frightfulness or atrocity.

"A million-dollar gift to a college was front-page news a few years ago. This very day, as these words are written, an eight-million-dollar gift to an Illinois university is announced in one tiny paragraph in one of the last pages of a New York newspaper. . . . You hear it casually mentioned that there are ten thousand American multimillionaires who are bored to desolation by their great fortunes and their inability to get a kick out of either spending the income or winning a few more millions in a stock pool.

"Social climbers could make quite a splash a few years since by going to Palm Beach and providing a few ten-thousand-dollar dinners for the local boosters. Now, going to Palm Beach is a good deal like going to Coney Island or Atlantic City. As for going to Europe, unless you cross in a Zeppelin or fly your own plane, you are almost ashamed to mention it with eagerness and enthusiasm in any sort of social gathering.

"Day by day announcements of fifty, sixty, seventy-story skyscrapers have dulled our senses to the architectural marvels that surround us. Radio broadcasting to tens of millions of listeners, talking pictures that are seen and heard round the world, telephoning from London to a friend in San Francisco, flying across the continent in thirty-six hours—these feats leave us little as a basis for excitement. No wonder the drama is turning sour and the crime story has replaced Pollyanna.

"But where will it land us, if the pace continues?"

"If science cannot help us, save to revise relative values, there is left only some powerful spiritual appeal. Yet either the grip of religion is slipping or we are racing out of its clutches. The one way out is for a great number of us to search within, discover just how hard-boiled we are likely to become, and then decide whether we want to go on with it, or whether it wouldn't be a fine thing to soften up a bit and try for some exhilarating satisfaction in being sentimental and human."

The Grip of Religion Slipping.

As one considers the situation in the world as he sees it with his own eyes and as it is pictured to him in the daily press, he is impressed with the correctness of the picture drawn by the prophet of the Lord, as given in the sacred word, and by the chronicler of the present day as expressed in the World's Work.

We believe that Mr. Currie suggests the true cause of the present situation when he says that "either the grip of religion is slipping or we are racing out of its clutches." The grip of religion is slipping. God has not forsaken the earth, and His Spirit is still striving with men, but men are forsaking God. The great, unregenerate world is going on in its wickedness, the same as it has gone for centuries, only it is plunging more deeply.

But the saddest part of the whole situation is that the great professed Church of Christ has so lost from her experience the converting power of the gospel, has herself so departed from God in yielding to the worldly influences around her that she is weak and powerless to cope with the present situation. "Ichabod" is written over her portals. As acknowledged by some of her own recognized leaders, she has no message for the world today. Skepticism has invaded her own ranks in a marked measure, and men occupying the holy office of the ministry are leading in a shameful apostasy from God, denying the very fundamentals of Bible truth and divine revelation.—Review and Herald.

BEARING THE CROSS.

Smoothly along we cannot sail—
One day the calm, one day the gale;
Ever the rocks on either side,
Ever the prow against the tide.

Shorter the life by every breath—
One day disease and one day death;
Ever the falling shades of night,
Ever the grave in open sight.

Nearer the port by every wave,
Be strong, my soul; my heart, be brave:
Theirs is the gain who suffer loss,
Theirs is the crowd who bear the cross.

NOW THE TIME—HERE THE PLACE!

Your Church is making an effort to reach its goal for Missions this year, namely: one-third the amount of pastor's salary. If your Church, and all the other Churches, reach this goal, we will reach the total goal of $45,000 for the year ending September 30th, the amount asked of us by the Southern Christian Convention.

Will you, by an individual gift, help your Church to achieve this desired end? Now is the time! Here is the place! By a pull together, every Church can reach the goal. Help now.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VI—August 11, 1929.

DANIEL AMONG THE LIONS.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The angel of Jehovah encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them."—Psa. 34:7.

LESSON: Daniel 6:1-28.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 91:9-16.

The Background of the Book of Daniel.

The Book of Daniel was undoubtedly written in the period of Antiochus Epiphanes, a tyrant who terribly mistreated and persecuted the Jews and who tried in every way to abolish their religion. The situation became so terrible that many of the Jews became discouraged. Something was needed to quicken faith and awaken hope, and the Book of Daniel was born out of this situation and helped to meet the pressing need. In this story of an earlier day, there was the example of how a man had kept the faith, how God had kept him, and how the living God had vindicated himself. The message of the book is "Be faithful, stand by your convictions, God is on your side, eventually the right will triumph."

Teaching Materials from This Story.

"And Daniel was first." Daniel was preferred above the presidents and princes. The book of Daniel and the stories of Daniel emphasize again and again the value of plain living and high thinking and faithfulness to duty. Every young man and young woman cannot become President of the United States, but every young man who lives clean, thinks straight, and does well what he has to do, will increase in efficiency and will rise in the eyes of the Master, before whom each of us stands or falls. There is a need today for young people who live clean, and who are faithful to their trusts.

"Because an excellent spirit was in him." The ultimate test or measure of a man is not to be found primarily in his natural endowment or in his acquired training, but rather in that mysterious thing called his spirit. A man's ideals, his spirit toward his work, his fellowmen, toward life, the qualities which we call the human qualities—in short, the spirit of the man is the ultimate test. The training of the heart is perhaps more important than the training of the head and the hand.

"The presidents and princes sought to find occasion against Daniel." It was a case of jealousy. Like so many people of all time, they could not bear to see another excel them, even if he did it by honest effort. Jealousy is one of the ugly words of the English language, because it is one of the ugly phases of the human spirit. One of the most acid tests of a man's character is his attitude toward the success of another, especially the success of his competitor or rival.

"We shall not find any occasion against this Daniel, except we find it against him concerning the law of his God." It was a high tribute to Daniel, but it was a pathetic reflection upon the men. How petty indeed is the man who finds fault with another simply on the grounds of religion! One of the unfortunate things about the last election was the introduction of the religious factor into the campaign.

"Now, when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house, and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed and gave thanks before his God as he did aforetime." Get the words, "he knew" and "the windows being open," and "as he did aforetime." This is sheer moral courage. The boy was right in principle, even if he was wrong in fact when he misread the sentence, "Now, Daniel had an excellent spirit in him," to read, "Now, Daniel had an excellent spine in him." We need young people and older people who will do openly what their conscience tells them in secret. We need people who will follow conscience instead of custom.

"Now, the king spake and said unto Daniel, Thy God whom thou servest continually, He will deliver thee." Somehow or other, rightly or wrongly, people expect more of those who worship the true and living God than they expect of those who make no profession of religion.

"Then the king went to his palace . . . and his sleep went from him." Conscience, a sense of guilt, is no modern development. There is within man that which reproves him when he does wrong, and which gives a sense of restlessness and dissatisfaction until he has made amends. Let us thank God for conscience, and let us try to keep it sensitive and to obey it.

"So Daniel was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him." The statement cannot be applied literally to every situation in life. The fact that a man is a Christian is no guarantee that trouble or disaster will not come. What this simple story means to tell us is that no ultimate harm can come to those who commit themselves unto God. We are not to fear as the greatest evil of life the things that kill the body, but the things that mar the soul. Come what may, the soul that is keeping company with God shall come out more than conqueror.

"And the king commanded, and they brought those men which had accused Daniel, and they cast them into the den of lions; and the lions had the mastery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces." Here is the unalterable truth, expressed in picturesque form, that the man who plans another's downfall is in fact planning his own downfall. This spirit acts as a boomerang. The man who refuses to forgive his fellow-man thereby cuts himself off from forgiveness for himself. The man who tries to wrong another, really wrongs himself.

"And Daniel prospered." The man who keeps company with God will prosper, not necessarily in the material sense, but in the things that constitute the abiding values of life.

It is to be noted that the king recognized the superiority of the living God of Daniel. There are those in Christian lands who have not done this in actual practice.

TOPIC: "God's Goodness Revealed in Nature's Laws."—Psa. 104:10-18.

Some Bible Hints.

The Jews ascribed all things in nature to God. They were right (v. 10).

God's goodness is seen in the exactness of nature's provision for all creation and in the wonderful way in which His creatures understand that provision (v. 12).

There is infinite wisdom in forcing man to toil for food. On this depends his mental and moral growth (v. 14).

God has forgotten nothing—trees for birds, hills for refuge for wild animals, rock homes for conies. Love penetrates all creation (v. 18).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Take the stability of God's laws. If we could not be sure of the laws of nature, who would ever plant a field?

Even snow is a warm blanket, as many farmers will tell us, protecting tender roots. "Safely sleeps the flower beneath the snow." God's love is seen even in adversity.

The Bible draws many lessons from natural life. The ant and its industry, for example. God provides for it, but it must also take hold of His provision.

Suppose rain fell only on the good man's field and not on that of the evil man, the world would be filled with hypocrites. What a blessing it is that God plays no favorites!

A Few Illustrations.

We think that man is the only animal provided with tools. Not so. Many animals have tools. There is the sword of the swordfish and the saw of the saw-fly. It took man ages to think of a saw; God had thought of it from the beginning.

The law of pain, which hurts, is really beneficial. If we felt no pain, we should destroy ourselves.

What a poor place the world would be to live in if we did not have in it the law of love and friendship, for that is a law of nature as real as gravitation is. God evidently thought of the comfort as well as the safety of His creatures.

There is a law that binds us to the future, and even shuts away from us the vision of heaven. Good? Yes, for without it we could not have developed to maturity; we should not have learned patience and faith.

To Think About.

Is nature cruel? Why?

What are some good laws of nature?

What good things do nature's laws force us to do?

OUR JUBILEE YEAR—EASTER TO EASTER.

TIME: Summer of A. D. 29.

PLACE: Capernaum.

PERSONS: Jesus and His disciples.

RECORD: Matt. 18:10-14.

Midsummer, with its Host in Capernaum.

The Feast of the Passover and Pentecost, with its "first fruits," are far gone, and the Master and His men have come down to this Jewish-Roman city by the Sea of Galilee after earlier summer days in the foothills of Mt. Hermon. Surely Jesus' example here would endorse our summer vacations, provided they were for real re-creation of body, mind and spirit for a coming year. He and His disciples had brought from the hills strength for this coming year. It may have been in August, and was surely in late summer, nineteen hundred years ago that Jesus sat in Peter's house by the sea and continued His talk and training of His disciples. He began when they had quarreled about which should be the greatest in the coming kingdom. He placed a child in the midst, that they might the better catch the child-like spirit of the gospel in its faith and love and purity. He continues the talk, turning it easily to the weak and immature in the kingdom and to those who would offend them (Matt. 18:1-9). It were better for such offender that a millstone be hanged about his neck and that he be drowned in the midst of the sea.

The Shepherd and the Sheep.

The shepherd picture was a tender and touching way to bring the lesson home to these men. For two thousand years their ancestry had the background of shepherd life. It seemed to be in the blood of Israel from Abraham their father and David their shepherd-king, and their history and traditions were full of it. The mountainous country of Palestine was more fitted for flocks and herds than for farming. They knew sheep and shepherding as well as an Illinois farmer knows corn and hogs, or a North Carolinian knows tobacco and cotton. Jesus talked and taught them on the plane of their own knowledge.

Caring for the Child (v. 10).

The past generations have preached millions of adult evangelistic sermons on this parable of the lost sheep, but the fact is that Jesus was still on the subject and spirit of child-life as He is throughout the whole first part of this chapter (Matt. 18:1-14). He is drawing a picture of the worth of the "least of these" children whose "angels behold the face of my Father which is in heaven" (v. 10). He was not talking about the old and hardened sinner pictured by the evangelist in his "Ninety-and-Nine" sermon. It is a child that is lost and "the Son of man has come to seek and to save" (v. 11) that child. It may seem a little thing for these big, burly men to think about just now. They were especially interested in the coming glorious kingdom, which they felt sure was to be established with Jesus as King and they as His cabinet and counselors. But Jesus talks about the child and the worth of the child, and no matter if ninety and nine of the elect were settled and safe in the fold, yet the child was lost out in the hills and the shepherd's heart was out there.

Jesus' Love for Childhood (v. 12).

Jesus had the shepherd heart in the nth degree. His love for a lost child was such that no storms were so fierce and no night was so dark and no rivers so swift and no mountains so high but that He would dare them all that a child of His Father's should be found and brought back safely to the fold of His love and care.

Meditation.

God's greatness and Jesus' love is shown more in a love "for the least of these" than in the mighty mountains or the endless seas. Jesus revealingly lived God's love to the small and weak and helpless, and taught us that the gospel is not just "God helps them that helps themselves," but that God helps them who can't help themselves. He compared the kingdom of heaven to a child's loving, innocent, trusting heart, and not to a whirling universe or any other such great thing. He loved the hills, but He loved the people who lived there more, and every child was His friend.

The following is from the New York Times, Saturday, July 6th, and contains the announcement on which Protestant Churches are acting in their efforts to help consecrate to the service of God the new issue of money now reaching the people from the national government and through the banks: "The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America has suggested to Protestant Churches throughout the United States that all members dedicate to mission work the first bill which they receive in the new paper currency to be issued on Wednesday. Announcement of the plan will be made tomorrow and next Sunday from thousands of pulpits. It is also planned that on September 8th, the first Sunday after the summer vacation, each local Church hold a "service of dedication" of the money raised. The new money is to be in addition to all the regular missionary gifts. The suggestion was originally made by the Rev. Dr. Ralph A. Ward, executive secretary of the world service of the Methodist Church. An information pamphlet and a suggested order of service for the 'Dedication Day' will be issued by some of the denominations."

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

IMPATIENCE AND ITS DEVILISH RELATION.

Lesson: Gal. 5:19-21.

As patience is vitally related to all the graces of the Holy Spirit, which together make righteousness, impatience has a vital relation to all the fruits of that other spirit described in our lesson which make unrighteousness.

Every act of real patience under severe trial, tends to strengthen itself and gives the soul a trend toward the fruits of the flesh above described. Impatience indulged is a war on all the Holy Spirit's graces, and in the case of uncounted thousands has been the stepping-stones to backsliding and despair. We insist that but few people, either justified or sanctified, ever backslide till impatience has paved the way. It is probably the devil's best entering wedge to put down a holy soul.

Prayer.—Dear Father, save us from all that disunites the heart, destroys true fellowship and brings death to our souls. Amen.

TUESDAY.

WHAT GOD WANTS.

"Present yourselves."—Rom. 12:1.

If the teachings of the widow's mite are rightly understood, it means that God does not want gifts, but love. "God is love."

Prayer.—O Father, Lord of our hearts, we would drink of the fountain of Thy love and be filled with Thy spirit and be immune to all sin, and free from every symptom of evil. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

STEADFAST.

"Be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."—1 Cor. 15:58.

"Steadfast," "unmovable"—that is very hard to do when things go wrong; when friends become enemies; when shadows fall along the way; when loved ones are unfaithful; when life's course separates us from those held dear.

But to be victorious Christians we have to consider what Jesus meant when He said, "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." We need to pray for Him to teach us how to trust Him through sun and cloud. Paul puts it this way, "Hold fast to the confession of hope, that it waver not." "The Lord is faithful who will establish you." "Be thou faithful unto death."

Prayer.—Our Father and our God, teach us how to believe and trust and know Thee. Help us to take the Scripture and make them our daily food. Amen.

THURSDAY.

IS COMMITTAL HARD?

"Commit Thy way unto the Lord."—Psa. 37:5.

Why is it so hard to commit our way unto the Lord? It isn't hard for us to commit to any one else. We commit our money to the bank, our jewels to the value, and as we think of these things we think of the great building that houses them, its walls, its vaults, its safes, its locks, and no fear exists.

The truth is plain. After everything else has failed, we turn to God and, like Paul, become persuaded that He is able to keep what we will commit to Him.

But this is not all: troubles come, business fails, health fails, doctor's bills pile up, and we wonder why. We even ask, "Where is God?" It is hard to commit when we can't see; but if we believe that "He doeth all things well to them that love God," we can commit these things, and we have to before our committal is perfect and before we can say it is easy. Cares go with the keeping. Paul said, "That which I have committed"; not "That which I have got"—meaning that God's blessing is promised only upon that which is committed.

Prayer.—Lord, this life which I now yield to Thee, I know not what is best for it, but Thou dost. In my own way, there is nothing but failure and disappointment. Help me to commit it all to Thee. Whether in prosperity or adversity, rest or toil, Thy will be done. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE JOY OF SALVATION.

"Great peace have they which love Thy law, and nothing shall offend them."—Psa. 119:165.

David, from the morning light of his life, patterned his life after God's and practiced His presence, and that presence gave him great joy. It is possible to please God, and to do so is the source of a great soul-stay.

This does not come for the asking. It is not a "hand me down" suit of clothes; it comes at the bidding of a cause.

We heard a man say of another the other day, "You cannot treat him unkindly because he is so kind to you." A little girl gave as her reason for always smiling at her teacher, "Because she always smiles at me." What a joy this world would be if everybody were such to others that others could be nothing but loving and just and kind to them! And yet this is within the reach of all. Since the devil is still at large making it hard for us, nothing less than God reigning in our desires will enable us to reach it.

Prayer.—God grant unto us that of love of Thine is the living cement of heaven's and earth's love in a human soul. Amen.

SATURDAY.

A SPECIAL GIFT.

"Nothing shall offend them."—Psa. 119:165.

The lover of the law and God has the special gift of not taking offense at everything. His right of heart and his joy of mind softens the steps, turns the age and countenance with sunshine, checks impatience, bites the harsh rebuke, is polite, deferential to superiors, considerate of friends and breathes peace. Life looks blue when we leave God out and forget His love. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" "All things are yours."

Prayer.—O Lord, and great high priest, we offer unto Thee our hearts. Make them clean with Thy precious blood, and may we and our everyday work be acceptable unto Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"COME" AND "GO."

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matt. 11:28.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation."—Mark 16:15.

"Set at liberty them that are bruised."—Luke 4:18.

This is heaven's invitation and its commission to us—its purpose for us. Humanity needs to realize this more than it does. The Church itself spends much time holding Church fairs, Church socials, putting on methods of attendance and memberships. How much time do they give to carrying Christ to the hearts of folks? With the same energy and less of the one and more of the other, the desired results would be accomplished.

Jesus went visiting one day, calling on two maiden ladies. One thought a special dinner must be prepared and spent her time preparing it. The other was not so fussy about the dinner, choosing rather to spend the time talking with her Guest. The one thought that the other should help her about the dinner, and the difference seems to have come to a show-down. Jesus settled it by saying that Mary, His entertainer, had chosen the right thing to do. Be a friend and make other folks friends of Jesus.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, humble our hearts before Thee. Be merciful unto us and forgive us of our miserable offenses. Show us ourselves and cleanse us from all iniquity. Not without Thy help can we love nor can we go out and fulfill Thy commission. Be with us and make us example unto all men. Amen.

A CHAPLAIN VISITS THE POPE.

Rome, Italy, July 8, 1929.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

Among the many interesting things I have seen and done today has been a visit to the Vatican and a personal presentation to the Pope in the ante-room next to his apartments. There were about twenty of us officers who had this privilege. They all kissed the hand of the Pope except myself. I shook it genuinely and found him to be only a very human being and very cordial. After this, he said, "Come along," and we followed him to the audience chamber, where he spoke through an interpreter to the whole party of about six hundred midshipmen and sailors of the U. S. Navy.

An interesting thing is that an ex-chaplain of our navy is the Pope's first assistant and president of the American College here. We are indebted to him for this audience with the Pope.

Other places visited were the Bargenese Museum, where all the art of the centuries is collected in panintings (fresco) on the walls and ceilings, and all the sculpturing of the ages is assembled. Here all the handiwork of the great artists speaks for itself.

We were shown the catacombs. This is an underground city of the martyred dead, five stories under the surface—a real honeycomb of passageways, tombs and temples, and chapels. Here over a half-million martyred bodies were laid away, only to be destroyed by the barbarians when they conquered Rome. A few of the bodies they did not find, and the bones of them are still there stretched out in their little niche. Four bodies were buried in air-tight caskets and are still recognizable as bodies, decayed of course to mere dust, but the hair is still recognizable.

We were shown the Colliseum, and vivid descriptions given of the ancient assemblies and the games and martyrdoms that took place there.

Some one said as we approached the Vatican, "Here we are on sacred ground now." I said, "Yes, but not more so than that we have already trod."

The previous three days we have been seeing Pompeii, Vesuvius and Naples. We are to spend another day in this city, and then we turn toward Gibraltar and England.

Yours very truly,

H. E. ROUNTREE,
Chaplain U. S. N.

Dear Friends:

We are still climbing on toward our goal, and the climbing is hard work. It takes energy and strength; it takes grit to just keep climbing up toward the goal, and sometimes when the climbing is hard, a little push will do lots of good. Our goal for this year is $30,000. We have been doing our best, while the climbing has been hard, and sometimes we almost feel like giving up. (Did you ever get blue and discouraged?) But we look to Him who is able to strengthen us, and with renewed energy we go forward.

We wish we could get our people to realize that it takes quite a lot of food, clothes and other supplies to care for 120 children; and if all our Church folks would give us a push it would be so encouraging to us and we would be happy. We are hoping that our report will carry us to the eleven thousand dollar mark next week. Will you help us to go forward in this worthy work of helping those who really need help?

"SELLING RELIGION."

A prominent preacher is quoted as having recently said, "Selling the Christian religion is much like selling other things." We hear much of that kind of talk in these days. Because we are living in a commercial age, and almost everything we need and use is made by machinery and sold to consumers by high-powered methods of salesmanship, we include religion among the other commodities and think and speak of selling it. An influential member of the Church, himself successful in business, so far as money goes, was in the habit of saying that the Church should be run like a chain of grocery stores if it is to hold its own among the competitive interests of the day.

But why be so serious about a trifling matter? To speak of selling religion is only a form of speech. No one thinks of taking it literally except some dull-minded critic.

If that were true, we could forget it and go on to something else. But talk of the kind we are discussing is a symptom. It indicates a way of looking at life that is capturing many minds and influencing the method of our presentation of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the men of our day. Many preachers are trying so to think and speak of the realities of the inner life that when their hearers come straight from business conferences and conventions of boosters they will feel so much at ease in the atmosphere of religion that they will scarcely be conscious of any change in their environment. Religion is something to be "put over."

We can easily cheapen and vulgarize the highest spiritual values simply by speaking of them as though we were talking about dry goods or real estate.

The preacher is neither a salesman nor a sales manager. He is a prophet. The way for him to commend the gospel to his own time is to be true to his prophetic function.—Western Christian Advocate.

LIFE-GIVING CONVICTIONS.

In the hot crucible of affliction, one makes a test of his religious views. Before the suffering came, he may have thought his mind settled upon the essential features of faith, but never was he so sure as after the time of trial.

An illustration of how one sees life and the future more surely as he views them from the borderland is found in the experience of Dr. Ozora S. Davis, who used his hospital meditations for the body of his address as retiring moderator of the recent National Council of the Congregational Church at Detroit. The executive committee had selected for the watchword of the meeting "Life-Giving Convictions." Dr. Davis made those words the subject of his address, and with the deepest feeling and the greatest assurance narrated the convictions which the presence of death had clarified and crystalized. He said, "I am going to try to tell council what living convictions I have won, as I have been far out on the margins of mortal life where the boundaries of the eternal were waving and tenuous." These convictions proved to be just those which Christian people have held firm in their hearts all the years. They were doctrinal beliefs which sickness and immanent death do not shake, but rather confirm. In them was no line of sectarian division. They were as universal as Christian experience. No room was left for doubt. He said, "I heard his (Christ's) words with the clearness of bugles in the morning. . . . I may read again what I have read before, that we have no proof that Jesus ever spoke the words reported in the gospels; but He has said them to me and He has confirmed them to me, and I know this and affirm it to you."

Just such affirmations as these are the conquering proclamations of Christianity. The processes of rationalization do not win. But the testimony of believers is irresistible. This message of calm assurance from the retiring moderator will be more effective in the ministry of the members of the Congregational Council than would have been the most brilliant and scholarly dissertation upon some disputed subject.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

PASTOR WANTED.

A committee from Big Oak, Browns Chapel, Shady Grove and Biscoe Christian Churches met in Biscoe Christian Church at 4 P. M., Sunday, July 21st, in an effort to work out a plan to group several of the Churches in this section and secure the services of a pastor to serve the group, and if possible secure the services of one who can and will locate in the midst of the group at a point as near the center of the group and at a point as convenient to himself as possible.

The Churches mentioned for the proposed group are as follows: Big Oak, Shady Grove, Biscoe, Browns Chapel, Ether, Seagrove, New Center, and Needhams Grove. The meeting was called by Bro. Cole, of the Big Oak Church. I do not know whether all the Churches mentioned above were notified to send a committee to the meeting; however, the last four Churches mentioned were not represented, but the representatives from the first four Churches mutually agreed that they would be perfectly satisfied with a pastor whom the majority of the Churches in the proposed group would decide upon, and that the agreement should be entirely mutual.

I was requested by the different committees present to make an effort to ascertain whose services could be secured for the pastorate for the group mentioned above, or at least five Churches from the above-mentioned Churches, at a rate of pay similar to the amounts which the different Churches have hitherto been paying, which information can be secured from the Conference Annual.

It was also decided by the committee present that Bro. Cole should notify each of the above-mentioned Churches to send a committee to meet together in Biscoe Christian Church again at 4

P. M. the third Sunday in August for the purpose of selecting or deciding upon a pastor for the group. I therefore desire to have your written reply to this letter before the third Sunday in August, in order that same can be made known at the meeting and the different committees be in position to know who will be available to serve the group next year. Your answer should state whether or not it will be possible to move in the midst of the group in the event you are interested in the pastorate. I will, therefore, thank you to please let me have your written reply as early as convenient, and if possible not later than the third Sunday in August.

I remain, Yours very truly, O. H. LAMBERT, Sec'y-Treas., Biscoe Christian Church, Biscoe, N. C.

HISTORICAL BOOK AND POEM.

Three verses were found in a copy of the book, "The Life of the Pilgrim, Joseph Thomas," which contains an accurate account of his trials, travels and gospel labors "up to the present time." The book was printed by J. Foster, printer, Winchester, Va., in 1817, and is now the property of Rev. Robert H. Peel, of Gasport, N. Y. Bro. Peel writes that the book was given to him by a Mrs. Hines, while he was pastor of Barrett's Church, in Southampton County, Va. This book was originally purchased from the author by Edwin Travis, and the following appears in ink on the front page: "Price $1.25. Edwin Travis. His book Bot. of Joseph Thomas. Steal not this book for fear of shame, for above is written the owner's name."

I wrote Bro. Peel for Mr. Charles C. Richardson, of Spring Hill Church, who was very anxious to read this book. The book is now in my possession but will be duly returned, with the verses found in it. J. F. W., Jr.

Waverly, Va.

(Lebnaon Chapel, Surry County, Va., the birth-place of the Christian Church.)

In Surry County, ancient shire Of Old Dominion State, A great event doth now transpire, Which let us here relate.

A little band of earnest men At Lebanon are met; God's guiding hand they crave, and then In council grave they sit.

The right to worship God they claim In way they best approve; The right to bear whatever name Seems fit, in Christian love.

And long their cause they weigh, and well, For caution there is need; And one by one their rules they tell— A plain and simple creed.

And now a title new they choose To designate their band; All narrow names they will refuse, On broader ground to stand.

The Bible being their only creed, A Bible name they make; Rice Haggard moves, the rest give heed, And "Christian," name they take.

Ah, Lebanon, within thy walls Great things are seen today— Great truths, to echo down the halls Of Time's remotest way.

Men's right to private faith in all Concerns his private life; Free will, free praise for great and small, And union void of strife.

And pampered priest and man-made rules 'These earnest brothers spurn; They cast adrift from creeds and schools, And back to Christ return.

Great day! Let time the record guard With holy care for aye; And let the future Christian bard Wend here his prayerful way.

Alas! Thy walls are fallen low, The sacred pile is gone, And naught remains the spot to show Where deathless deeds were done.

But time nor fate can ever mar The record thou hast won; While shines above us freedom's star, Thou'lt live, old Lebanon.

NOTICE.

In submission to the Master's will, I shall end my stay in the Windsor pastorate with the close of this Conference year. We have made friends since being here whom we shall regret to leave; however, it seems to be the Lord's will that we make a change. So will be pleased to correspond with any Church or group of Churches desiring a pastor. GEO. A. PEARCE.

OBITUARIES.

CLEM.

Hugh E. Clem was born July 17, 1886, and died June 19, 1929, aged 42 years, 11 months, and 2 days. He was the son of the late Ashford Clem, and formerly lived in Powells Fort, near Joppa, but for some years has lived in Ohio. He was a brother of Rev. H. Russel Clem, a well-known minister of our Church. Surviving are his aged mother, three brothers, and one sister. The remains were shipped back to the old home neighborhood for burial, and funeral services were held at Joppa June 24, 1929.

A. W. ANDES.

DANIELS.

The death angel knocked at the home of Bro. W. H. Daniels on June 28, 1929, and took to the mansions of rest little Thurman Ray Daniels, who lived to be only 3 months and 2 days old. A bud it was in all its innocence, purity and beauty, and it was precious in the sight of Jesus, to the extent that He took him to Himself. Although he was spared but a short time, sufficient was that time for those who knew him to become attached to him, and he was the pride of his home and his fond parents' hearts.

He leaves to mourn his going his parents, Bro. and Sister W. H. Daniels, of Weldon, N. C., and one sister about six years old.

On June 29th, a company of relatives and friends met at Cypress Chapel Christian Church, where his little body was laid to rest. Services were conducted by the writer. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

R. E. BRITTLE.

THOMAS.

As a friend and former pastor, I wish to add a few words in regard to Mrs. Eliza Thomas, wife of Deacon M. H. Thomas, of our Bethlehem Church. Sister Thomas passed away July 7, 1929, at the age of 74 years. For about forty-five years she was a member of Bethlehem Christian Church, and a faithful member she was, and a good Christian woman, loved and respected by all who knew her.

One seldom meets with better Christian people than Bro. Thomas and wife, and to visit in their home occasionally during my pastorate at Bethlehem was always a pleasure and inspiration to me.

Funeral services were conducted at the home July 9, 1929, by her pastor, Rev. Joe French, who will likely prepare a suitable sketch of her life. I was prevented by a similar service at the same hour from being present on the occasion of her funeral, much to my regret.

A. W. ANDES.

SILVIUS.

Mrs. Hannah S. Silvius was born February 24, 1851, and departed this life June 19, 1929, making her age, therefore, 78 years, 3 months, and 25 days. Her husband died many years ago, and an only daughter died several years ago, since which time she either lived alone or with a granddaughter. She was a member of the Mayland Christian Church, though living near Coucord. She was interested in her Church and stood faithfully for what she believed to be right. A large congregation attended the funeral services at Concord, June 21, 1929.

A. W. ANDES.

KERNODLE.

Lydia M. Garrison was born March 29, 1852, and departed this life June 30, 1929, being 77 years, 3 months, and 1 day of age. She was married to D. F. Kernodle April 13, 1876. Besides her husband, she leaves the following children, Mr. W. A. Kernodle, Dr. C. E. Kernodle, Mrs. T. F. Fausette, and Dr. J. F. Kernodle; eighteen grandchildren, and one great-grandchild also survive her.

Early in life Sister Kernodle became a Christian, uniting with Union Ridge Church. After her marriage, she moved her membership to Bethlehem Church, where her husband belonged, and remained a loyal and faithful member until her death. She was known to a host of friends as a woman of rare personality and an exemplary Christian character.

Her funeral was conducted from the Monticello Christian Church Monday P.

M., July 1st, in the presence of a large concourse of relatives and friends, services being in charge of the writer and Dr. J. U. Newman. Her body was laid to rest in the Church cemetery and her grave covered with many beautiful flowers. She hath wrought well, and the excellent character of her children is a monument to her earthly career. Now, that she has been called from labor to enter into that perfect rest and glory of the eternal world, may each sorrowing loved one rejoice in her triumph and bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will.

By REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

The items appearing on this page this week are taken from the issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN of September 16, 1886. At that time, THE SUN was edited by Rev. J. P. Barrett and printed at Raleigh, N. C. The history of this particular copy is as follows: It was addressed to Monroe Simpson, and was found by Mr. J. A. Rigsbee, a member of a Durham furniture company dealing in antiques; it had been used to pack between the picture and the back of the frame of an old painting purchased by the antique dealer. Mr. Rigsbee handed the copy to this writer.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.—

The Indian War is ended, and Geronimo, chief of the Apaches, and thirty-two of his men are prisoners.

The President has appointed Hon. Mr. Manning, of Louisiana, minister to Mexico in place of Mr. Jackson, resigned, and Mr. Belo, of Texas, minister to Austria.

Large contributions have been sent to the citizens of Charleston, S. C., to enable them to repair the damage done by the earthquake. The citizens of the North have been specially prompt and generous in their sympathy and help.

It has not yet been decided by our learned men what caused the late earthquake, nor is it even certain that it was such. It may have been a violent electric disturbance. Many reports of a strange phenomena are current, and it will be some time yet before the true can be separated from the false.

OUR SUFFOLK LETTER.—

Thirty-one years ago yesterday, during great excitement over yellow fever in this section, I am told there was baptizing of Bethlehem members in Kilby's pond. Eleven persons were baptized yesterday morning at 9 o'clock.

A good meeting at Berea has been in progress for over a week.

Some twenty horses have died recently in that section of the country.

Mrs. A. L. Hill, of Norfolk, and daughter, Mrs. Baxter, of Memphis, Tenn., spent yesterday in Suffolk.

Mrs. E. E. Holland is well again, and Prof. Kernodle will be ready to open school next Monday.

Miss Florence Harvey, so well and favorably known among our people and who assists Prof. Kernodle again this year, is already in town. (Signed) W. W. Staley. Sept. 13, 1886.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.—

Dear SUN,—We spent last week with Bro. S. B. Klapp at Hebron, Va., in their protracted meeting. Had a good meeting, and they made me believe my labors were appreciated among them by the nice purse of money they handed me on leaving them. We had a splendid meeting at Pope's. The members were greatly revived. Several converts; not certain how many, but six joined the Church. I am now conducting a revival meeting in our little town. It is very interesting. Ten young men bowed in the altar night before last as penitents, and one young lady. Brethren, pray for us. The rain hindered the meeting last night. (Signed) P. T. Klapp. Youngsville, September 9, 1886.

We have just closed three protracted meetings, with glorious results and a building up of Christians in our midst.

At Christian Chapel we were assisted by Bro. D. F. Jones and wife. An outpouring of God's Holy Spirit resulted in thirteen conversions and six accessions to the Church.

At New Elam Church, assisted by Bro. C. A. Boone, we were greatly blessed from on high. Eighteen converts, six or eight reformers, and eight accessions to the Church ended a most soul-stirring meeting.

Our new Church at Bela was greatly built up by precious souls coming boldly to the throne of grace and acknowledging their sins before their crucified Saviour. Fourteen converts and thirteen accessions to the Church was indeed a rich harvest from a new field.

Thus the Spirit of God has given us the victory through the atoning blood of the Lamb. To Him be all the glory, honor, dominion and power. (Signed) J. D. Wicker. Osgood, N. C., Sept. 4, 1886.

My dear Brother,—During the protracted meeting at Hines Chapel, eight made professions and three accessions to the Church.

Rev. D. T. Deans aided me on Sunday and Monday, and would have remained longer, but circumstances would not permit. Rev. Mr. Madison, a dear good old man, was present nearly all the time, and Rev. J. W. Fonville aided me all the meeting. Bro. Fonville is only a beginner in the ministry, but if he will perceive, he can do much good for the cause of the Master.

The Church aims to make some changes in the house of worship soon. The pulpit is to be changed, and there is other work of which some few members have been privately speaking.

How much good it does my heart to see Hines Chapel in perfect peace and harmony can better be conceived than explained. May she ever be thus, and may heaven's blessings ever attend her. (Signed) J. W. Patton. Company Shops (Burlington), N. C., Sept. 6, 1886.

Last Sabbath at Bethlehem, Nansemond County, Va., Rev. W. W. Staley raised the collections assessed that Church for ministerial education and home missions. He says Suffolk will do as well. Berea will no doubt do the same. And Berkley and Antioch and Holy Neck and Bethany and Franklin—why may not all do so? If they will try right, they can, we think. Let not a single Church come behind this year. We are not doing enough, and yet how the Lord has blessed what we have done! Let every Church come to Conference paid up squarely.

The saloon people are fighting prohibition in the usual way. In Rhode Island they say more rum is sold in some places than before prohibition was adopted. In Atlanta they talk about grass growing in the streets because the saloons are closed; and in Iowa they creep upon active temperance men in the dark and "brain" them with bludgeons. What folly and wickedness will men not commit in behalf of the saloon!

All States which have aspired to power and permanency have made much of the family. They have established institutions for the promotion of family life, and passed laws for its protection. The family is the source of the power and prosperity of the State, and the State is vitally concerned in its welfare. But it is comparatively little, after all, that the State can do for the family. It can protect it; it can secure for it favorable conditions of development; but it cannot bring to bear any set of influences at all comparable to the influence of religion. Where this influence operates, the State has its most loyal and trusted supporters, society its best friends, and the Church its staunchest members.

The Livingstonia Mission, on Lake Nyassa, is full of vigor. Recently a comparatively large party of missionaries left Scotland as re-enforcements. The natives attended the services eagerly "by the hundreds." On one occasion 2,000 were present, and many times the congregation has exceeded 500. The neighboring chiefs attend. Men and women squat together on the floor, listening with breathless interest to the story of the cross of Jesus. Dr. Cross seems to be almost an ideal missionary. There are three hundred boys in the school. Three of them are sons of chiefs; some of them were mere slaves.

The veriest unbeliever must accept one word of Christ, that "by their fruits ye shall know them." If in such a matter, for example, as business activity we wish to test the influence of the Christian religion, we must compare the condition of business and trade in Christian lands with their condition in non-Christian lands. We will take the best of all non-Christian religions—Mohammedanism in Turkey. We may say broadly that in Turkey the meaning of the word business is scarcely known. There is one bank in Constantinople and that is controlled by Christians. Other cities of a hundred thousand inhabitants have not a single bank. There are almost no highways nor

NOTES-PERSONALS

We are advised that Rev. R. A. Whitten has accepted the pastorate of Hank's Chapel and Christian Light Churches for the remainder of the year till the annual conference, and that Rev. J. E. Franks has accepted the pastorate of the New Elam Church for the same period of time.

Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White sail from San Francisco August 16th on the S. S. President Taft for the Philippines, where Bro. White is to be a medical missionary and in charge of a hospital. They have our very best wishes for a successful voyage, and prayers of many anxious hearts will be for their health and happiness in the great work to which they go.

Mr. J. F. West, Jr., Waverly, Va., president of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, was an interested and welcome visitor at Elon College the past week and took a look in on the summer school in session while he was here. Bro. West is one of our progressive young men who rejoices in the progress and success of every Christian enterprise and undertaking of his Church.

The heart of THE SUN editor has rejoiced the past week in the visit of his beloved brother, E. B. Atkinson, Spartanburg, S. C., who after many years of home-making and service to the Church and to his Lord came to visit our home and gladdened us with his gracious presence. He greatly enjoyed a day of fellowship at the Summer School at Elon and feels that our college and our orphanage are institutions of real worth in character-building and in Christian service.

A good woman, in sending the first bill she had received of the new money to missions for kingdom enlargement, says: "Just think what it would mean if every member in the Christian Church would give the first new dollar to missions. How much good it would do in carrying out our dear Lord's command, 'Go, ye, into all the world.'" As our columns this week and last week show, many are doing as this good woman, and we trust that many, many more will do so as the first new bill comes into their hands.

Rev. J. L. Neese, the beloved and happy pastor, is planning a home-coming and dinner for everybody that comes at Palm Street Church, Greensboro, second Sunday of August. This Church now rejoices in just having completed six new Sunday School rooms and in remodeling the Church building. A great day is planned and expected August 11th, since the Church and Sunday School wish their friends to come and rejoice with them in the victory they have achieved through their efforts for an adequate Church plant.

One of the great spirits of the recent Summer School at Elon College was Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va. In the history of the school, which began years ago at Virginia Beach, Dr. Staley has only missed two sessions, and Dr. C. H. Rowland, who was present, has never missed a session of the Summer School. These are records that the rest of us ministers may view with envy for coming in contact with the very best of the religious life of our young people at the Summer School renews youth and gives a brighter and larger outlook on life.

Dr. W. C. Wicker, pastor, assisted by Rev. O. D. Poythress, held a very successful series of meetings at Belew Creek last week, closing Friday evening with twenty additions in the closing service. Large and attentive audiences attended throughout the week, and the Church was much revived. This Church is planning to put on a building program this fall, some material having been purchased for this purpose. The pastor reports that the Church at Pleasant Ridge expects to move in a building program this fall. The pastor reports progress and prospects of growth and expansion in these Churches.

Rev. W. S. Alexander, D. D., changes his address from Elon College, N. C., to 4712 Foster Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. Dr. Alexander, with his family, left Elon July 31st for his new field of labor as pastor of Hyde Park Christian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. He and his family carry with them the love and the very best wishes of the people of Elon College, of whose life they had become an important and invaluable factor. Dr. Alexander has served well and faithfully as pastor of the Community Church, and the community recognizes in him a real friend and a true man of God.

It seems like a veritable miracle to those who have visited him and watched him in his recent illness, that Rev. P. T. Klapp, who a few weeks ago seemed, without doubt or question, to be passing from us, has been sufficiently restored as to be able at present to sit up and be about the room some. Bro. Klapp is not well by any means, but seems now on the road to some activity again, and therein his hosts of friends rejoice. Through the long years, this man of God has served his Church and his God faithfully, having a few days ago passed his eighty-first anniversary and having served most zealously and untiringly as pastor for fifty-six years. It seems that our Heavenly Father whom he has served so abundantly and devotedly, has yet in store for him more work to do in a world that needs so much life and labors of such a devout man.

Rev. Joe French, Broadway, Va., writes of a good revival at Concord Church, Valley Virginia Conference, in which the Church was much revived and there were seven to join the Church at the close of the meeting, and two others to be received later. Continuing, Bro. French says: "For the past two weeks I have been with Bro. B. J. Earp in a revival at Mt. Olivet (G). It was a spiritual feast for us, and one that I greatly enjoyed. Twenty-two members were received into the Church fellowship and the Church was greatly revived. A large number of covenants were made for family worship. We had this year a good daily vacation Bible school at Bethlehem. The leaders for the departments were: primaries, Miss Angelene Chapman; juniors, Miss Blanche Chapman; young people, Joe French. Miss Pauline Brown was our pianist. Other helpers were Misses Catherine Lohr and Madeleen Grim. Pupils seemed to enjoy the two weeks to the fullest extent."

WINCHESTER, VA.

All about us we find mingled together pain and pleasure, joy and sorrow, life and death. While experiencing the pleasure, fellowship, instruction and inspiration of the Summer School at Elon College, we were saddened by the message of the passing of our good friend and brother, Prof. B. F. Sine, of Winchester, Va.; and while hundreds of miles away, we wept with those who weep because of his going.

Prof. Sine was for many years engaged in educational work, being for six years principal of a large private school at Reliance, Va., and was for several years principal of the Gore School. Many who occupy places of prominence, and many who are faithfully rendering service in the various spheres of life sat as pupils at his feet.

He was a member of the Disciples of Christ Church, and as a lay reader in that Church he often filled the pulpit, not only of his own Church but of others. His messages were always well received. During recent years he had been engaged in banking, occupying positions in the Capon Valley Bank of Wardensville, W. Va., and in the Shenandoah Valley National Bank of Winchester, Va., serving as cashier of the former. He was twice married; his first wife was Miss Kern, of Gore, Va. He is survived by his second wife, who was Miss Beall Garvin, of near High View, W. Va.

He was a friend of humanity, true and sympathetic. He was loyal to his Church and an earnest worker for the building up of the Master's kingdom. He had a broad fellowship with all true followers of Christ in other Churches than his own. As a citizen he was forward-looking, and his ideals were high.

May the Father comfort his bereaved companion, son Paul, of Washington, D. C., and brothers and sisters.

MY BIBLE AND I.

We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
Through all kinds of weather with smile or with sigh;

In sorrow and sunshine, in tempest or calm,
Thy friendship unchanging, my lamp and my psalm.

We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
When life had grown weary, and death e'en was nigh;

But all through the darkness of mist or of wrong,
I found there solace, a prayer, or a song.

So who now shall part us, my Bible and I?
Shall "isms" or "schisms" or "new lights" who try?

Shall shadow for substance or stone for good bread
Supplant divine wisdom, give folly instead?

Ah! no, my dear Bible, exponent of light,
Thou sword of the Spirit, put error to flight,
And still through life's journey, until my last sigh,
We'll travel together, my Bible and I.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

THE UPPER ROOM.

BY REV. JOHN G. TRUITT.

"And He will shew you a large upper room, furnished."—Luke 22:12.

If the recording angel had taken an inventory at the door of that "large upper room, furnished," when Jesus and the disciples began entering, I wonder what he would have found. I had the pleasure once of entering a large upper room in which stood the President to the United States, and of shaking hands with him; but both hands must be bared before we were allowed to shake the President's hand. What do you bring in with you? If you bring good will and good motives only, then welcome; but if deadly weapons or sinister motives come in with you, then out, you cannot enter. What if the recording angel could have bared the hearts of those entering Jesus' sacred room! Would he have found there such things as would warrant the entering of each of those men. There was blood on somebody's hands, and murder in somebody's heart.

And that was not all. There was a wee bit of cowardice lurking in the heart of some of the others, and an unwonted wealth of fear in the heart of others still. Perhaps there was ugly ambitions living in the hearts of some, and jealousy in the hearts of still others. They carried in no knife or staff in their hands, but what did they bear in their hearts? I am sure most of them bore love, reverence, and respect for their great Teacher and Friend; but was there growing by the side of that love a living determination to coin it into service for others, which is the true currency of love? Silently, quickly, surely did those standing on either side of the door which entered into the President's room bare the hands of those entering. May not the Holy Spirit make bare our hearts as we approach the table of our Lord?

Stop as you enter the door! Are your shoes soiled? Are your hands laden with ugly implements of hatred, jealousy, or selfishness? Does your heart bear the deadly germs of evil thinking? your lips words of falsehood or blasphemy? Have you spoken the name of Jesus in jest, or told funny stories about sacred things? Have you been false to Him in some test when the world has been looking on you as one of His followers? I ask myself these questions as I ask them of you. And may the Holy Spirit help us to know the answer to each of them. Have we limited in our thinking the power of God to achieve through us the things He desires? Have we measured as men measure? or, as Christians, have we measured as God would have us measure? Have we said no when yes was the answer, or yes when all heaven hoped we would be big enough and brave enough to say no? How do we enter the upper room? If the recording angel should record the condition of our lives, what would he write?

When that little group of twelve entered that upper room it was furnished. Furnished was it with more than mortal had ever dreamed; more than it has yet ever fully realized. It had in it the makings of a feast, and the paraphernalia for its delightful consumption; but the real furnishings entered as they entered and with them! Jesus was its equipment! Out in the open, along the roads of Palestine, by the placid Galilean Sea, sin had often walked in them beside the Saviour. But now the door was shut. Here was an awful hour; a holy moment. The Son of the living God was looking into the very souls of each one present. The room was furnished with food, but far more it was furnished with a heavenly searchlight, making bare the souls of men. Into the room had walked a lowly Nazarene, followed by some good men; but all of them better equipped in this world's goods than was He, all of them feeling a sort of smug satisfaction in the fact that they were a chosen band, one of them possessed with the upper hand in the situation for the time being; all of them ready to boast their bravery and bigness. But now there was a closed door. A Teacher busy with towel and basin washing the worldly pride from their hearts, as well as the dust of a sin-cursed earth from their feet! A Teacher hiding nothing, but telling all and leaving no depth of burden of His soul unfathomed before them.

Under the spell of that heavenly hour, and in the presence of the Holy One of God, leave-taking began. The turnings-away from Jesus is a wonderful study, whether it be the rich young ruler turning sorrowfully away, or that vast congregation getting up, one by one, and going out, when Jesus asked the disciples if they also would go; or whether it be the going of a group of black-minded and filthy-handed men who had expected to trap Him by presenting to Him a sinning woman for His judgment; or whether it be the turning away of Judas; or the forsaking Him and fleeing from His tormentors, which was done by the disciples on the day of His trial: it is an interesting study. But, as I say, in the presence of Jesus began this upper room leave-taking; began to go pride—Peter became quite humble, as did also ten others of them. All self-righteousness began to forsake them and leave, with the words, "Lord, is it I?" Eyes to see the sins of others were closed—they did not even know what Jesus meant when He told Judas to do what he would quickly—but eyes to see whether or not their own hearts and lives were guiltless were opened eternity-wide.

In the spirit of that upper room, our question will not be, Why did some one do me certain wrongs, but rather, all entirely forgetful of that, it will be, Why have I treated Jesus as I have? We come in big with our own grievances against our neighbor, our friend, or our family; but before the leave-taking we are truly humbled into repentance for our own sins against our Saviour! No longer is it, "Lord, is it they?" but always, "Lord, is it I?" If such be the case in our own experiences as it was in that of the eleven, then we, too, shall make our leave-taking with a memory and a motive which the world cannot give and which it cannot take away. We shall then shew forth His death and suffering by our subsequent life and serving.

LOVE AS A BUILDER.

In one of Prof. Deissmann's fine studies he tells us that Paul regards love as the power of ethical action toward our neighbors, derived from communion with Christ. This lifts Christian love above the level of sentimentality and emotionalism and places it on the level of serious, purposeful action. We take up an attitude toward our neighbors which is determined by our ideals of the good, the true, the beautiful, and we find the power to perform the deeds required, in our communion with Christ.

Such love demands the willing acceptance of loyalties that take us entirely out of ourselves and often away from the pursuits which would seem to lead directly to our own good.

This is the kind of love that builds the kingdom of God in the earth: the power of ethical action toward our neighbors, derived from communion with Christ.

As Christians, we must cultivate fellowship with Christ until the spirit that was in Him becomes the spirit that is in us. We must fill our minds with His thoughts about the meaning and value of life. We must saturate our wills with His courage. We must steel ourselves against much of the current talk and opinion of the time and regard the whole of life from the viewpoint of Him to whom the value of the individual, living and working for the kingdom of God, was always supreme.

Love as the power of ethical action creates a new world wherever it has the opportunity of working through men and women devoted to it.

It is not until we as members of the family group treat each other as persons who deserve the consideration that high moral and spiritual ideals require, that we have anything approaching ideal family relationships.

Love as the power of ethical action is able to build a new business world in which, instead of antagonism, compromise and ruthless competition, we increasingly have understanding and co-operation.

Permanent conditions of justice and good will are being established throughout the world wherever love in this Pauline sense is at work, banishing age-long prejudices, revealing deeper unities of heart and spirit and setting up new habits of co-operation for the highest good of mankind.

Out of communion with Christ there comes into the hearts of those who desire and seek it the power of ethical action whereby the ideals of the Christian kingdom are applied with creative effect to all the interests and relationships of human life. Here we find an added reason, perhaps the deepest and strongest reason for the cultivation of such communion amid the rush and business of the world as we know it.—Western Christian Advocate.

MT. ZION.

Revival services started at Mt. Zion Church July 14th, with three services on Sunday. Rev. J. F. Apple preached in the afternoon. On Monday evening, Rev. C. E. Newman, of Virgilina, Va., came and did the preaching through the week. Bro. Newman's messages were of the highest type, characteristic of his Christian living. The services were well attended. The interest was good. The Church seemed greatly revived. Five united with the Church.

Liberty (Vance).

Revival services started at Liberty (Vance) July 21st. Rev. W. C. Hook, of Holland, Va., came on Monday evening and was with us through the following Sunday night. Brother Hook is an excellent speaker and Christian worker. The messages showed careful and prayerful study and were laden with spiritual food. Bro. Hook's experience as pastor enabled him to enter into the services in a practical way that appealed to the Church and those outside.

Large crowds attended each service. We feel that much good was done. Thirty-four united with the Church on profession of faith, two by letter. The Church seemed to take on new life. Much praise to our Heavenly Father.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SCHOOL OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

This school closed its annual session at Elon College Friday P. M., August 2nd, having begun Saturday, July 27th. The following constituted the faculty: Rev. F. C. Lester, dean, Waverly, Va.; Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, secretary, Henderson, N. C.; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.; Miss Priscilla Chase, Congregational Executive Board, Raleigh, N. C.; Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio; Miss Clara E. Gill, Henderson, N. C.; Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va.; Rev. Stanley Harrell, Durham, N. C.; Rev. Joseph E. McCauley, Norfolk, Va.; Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C.; Mrs. Grace E. Stewart, Greensboro, N. C.; Rev. Edwin E. White, Pleasant Hill, Tenn.

In addition to the faculty, there were seven counselors, each in charge of a group of ten to fifteen, to give counsel and to lead and give suggestions to the various groups in social and religious activities: Mrs. E. H. Bobbitt, Durham, N. C.; Mrs. Randolph Chapman, Suffolk, Va.; Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va.; Mr. Grady Leonard, Chapel Hill, N. C.; Miss Bernice Lochr, Waverly, Va.; Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C.; Miss Graham Rowland, Greensboro, N. C.

There is much serious and constructive work done in this school in the course of a week, as every faculty member seeks, with due diligence and energy, to condense into the teaching of a week the very best that they know and have learned in a life time. The writer was privileged to attend several of the classes, and it is difficult to conceive of a more important and worthwhile work for instruction in the essentials of Christianity and for character building than is heard in these classes. Not only are there several courses in Bible study, approached from various angles, but many courses are given which have to do with methods of leading and instructing in various Church activities—Sunday School, administration and teaching, Christian Endeavor, missions and methods, missionary programs and projects, etc.

In the school this year, as possibly never before, the high spiritual note was struck again and again, and by the time the week was over there was a feeling on the part of all that we had been carried to the high places in heavenly things, and that we were indeed enjoying a mountain-top experience. It was worth spending the week together to go into the final meeting and be prepared for it when the grand climax of the program was reached. At the conclusion of a beautiful missionary pageant, conducted by Mrs. C. H. Rowland, with talent from members of the school on Friday night. Rev. F. C. Lester, dean of the school, between two lighted candles, symbolizing, as he solemnly declared, the light from the life of the Christ and the light that comes from Him and shines through the Church, invited all the members of the faculty and school to come forward and, from these two major lights, light a small candle each, symbolizing the light that we were to carry back to our Churches and communities. Then, with the two larger lights going before, the members of the school, with their small lights, marched in single line from the chapel out on to the open campus to the refrain of "Where He Leads Me I will Follow," and formed a large circle. The night scene was beautiful, with some seventy-five smaller lights flickering under the star-light skies, and the two larger candle lights. With a few words from the leaders that we put forth an effort to keep the lights burning, and a prayer of reconsecration and dedication of ourselves to the service of Him of whom we had heard so much, and of whom we had caught new and larger visions during the week. It was a scene never to be forgotten, and there were young lives participating who will carry memories of the service through all their years.

To Rev. F. C. Lester, chairman of the Board of Christian Education and dean of the school, is due much credit for the matchless program put on and the fine, spiritual tone of the school throughout. Bro. Lester had put his heart and soul into the effort to make the school worth while and had worked to the very limit of his strength to make every detail of the school wholesome and constructive. Surely this man will never live long enough to see the fruits of his faithful labors in making the summer school of religion what it was at Elon College in the summer of 1929. The schools and Churches that were represented will certainly be the beneficiaries in the months and years to come of the instruction and inspiration that their representatives received while at Elon this year.

Miss Pattie Coghill, secretary of the Board of Religious Education, finishing her school work at Washington, N. C., last spring, had thrown her whole life into the labor of creating interest in the summer school, helping to secure a competent and consecrated faculty to do the work, and in awakening interest in Churches and Sunday schools to have their representatives present. Too much gratitude cannot be given to Miss Coghill for her matchless and wholly unselfish work in helping to bring together the faculty and the students in the summer school this year. She made an invaluable contribution through her intelligent and devoted efforts to the cause and progress of Christianity. In her plans and efforts, she was ably assisted by Miss Lucy Eldredge, of Dayton, Ohio, whose services in our summer schools, from rich and wide experience and training, are invaluable. There were eighty-five enrolled pupils in the school, and while this number is not as large as in some previous years, those who have attended previous sessions are of the unanimous opinion that no company of pupils in any previous year ever did more serious and faithful work and showed a more earnest spirit of co-operation and eagerness to learn and to contribute to the school.

The Board of Christian Education met in annual session during the school, and Rev. F. C. Lester was continued as chairman, and as such will be responsible for putting on the school again next year, both at Piedmont Junior College and Elon College. And while Miss Coghill does not continue with the board, a secretarial assistant and field worker will be secured for at least a part of the time, certainly the time necessary to interest the people in the schools of next year.

Our colleges are ideal places for these schools, and with the magnificent equipment at Elon, her ample rooms, her spacious halls, her beautiful and shady campus, inviting assembly rooms, there is no reason why this school and place should not be a veritable mecca in years to come and the Summer School of Christian Education become an outstanding enterprise of our Church life and growth. No charges are made for the use of the plant, including the cook-room, dining-room and dormitories of the college for the school, and this constitutes an invaluable asset to the enterprise.

It was decided to hold the school at Elon next year, about the same time of year as this, and to urge all pastors to be present and to bring with them from their Churches young people who are eager to be taught and trained in Christian activity, learning and efficient methods. The delegations making up the school this year came from those Churches, for the most part, whose pastors took an interest in the same and came along with their representatives. Dr. C. H. Rowland, of our Greensboro Church, brought the largest single delegation; Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, of our Suffolk Church ran him a close second. Our pastors and Sunday School superintendents can make of our Summer Schools of Christian Education institutions of unsurpassed worth, merit and power. Let us hope and pray that they will do so. J. O. A.

THE COLLEGE CALLS.

Many of our high school graduates are "on the fence" just now regarding their future school work. Parents and young people should not fail to remember that not only scholarship but character is to be considered in young people going away to school. Educators and leaders agree that the smaller Christian College is preferable to the great university for high school graduates.

The above is from the Herald of Gospel Liberty, last week, in connection with a cut from a cozy and charming corner of the Elon College group, and the cut happens to be the scene just out of the window of THE SUN office. Looking on this scene from time to time, the editor has the same feeling so finely expressed in the words quoted above: "The College Calls." This editor hopes with all his heart that before Christian parents make up their minds to do otherwise, they will consider well the call of Elon College to them for their sons and daughters. After thirty-nine years of marvelous and matchless success in the educational world, and looking back over the contribution that those have made to society and the Church, and in the cause of Christian education, just naturally wants to herald forth to the world, "The College Calls."

We cannot think in terms of the Southern Christian Convention, her Church life and activity in these days and in the past three decades without thinking in terms of Elon College. Those who occupy today positions of trust, responsibility and leadership in the Church received, for the most part, their training and equipment for such at Elon College, and hundreds, not to say thousands, of those who have taken their places and are taking their places in the leadership of their local Churches received their training at Elon College. "The College Calls."

Dr. Frank S. Child, of sainted memory and one of the most discriminating of scholars and observers, who used to come with never-to-be-forgotten sermons and addresses to Elon College, said again and again that the ideal scholarship, training and equipment for life were to be had in the small Christian college first, and then in the larger university. In this, Dr. Child was eminently correct. The young man and the young woman yet in their teens and twenties, minds alert, active and impressionable, need the personal guidance, in their quest of thought and learning, of Christian men and women who are interested in them. This can be had at a Christian college. Moreover, each individual is more or less controlled and impressed by the group of which he is a part, and with which he associates, and for the most part those who go to the small Christian college go there from Christian homes, Sunday Schools, Churches, and so represent the finest type of young Christian manhood and womanhood. Such are to be found on the campus of our Christian college, and parents who care, as parents do, for the Christian character and conduct of their children, should certainly be exceedingly solicitous about the character of the institution to which they are to commit the training of their loved ones.

Elon College points with pardonable pride to those who have been trained and gone out from its class-rooms as the strongest and the most emphatic invitation to consider well and to heed the call of the college. Our own Elon College and our own Piedmont Junior College call for the students from our Christian homes, and those calls cannot with impunity be ignored. J. O. A.

THE SCANDAL OF CHRISTIANITY.

A scathing denunciation of the whole denominational program has been written by that apostle of Christian union, Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore. Dr. Ainslie for years has been recognized as a leading exponent of the Christian union program. He takes for granted that Christian union is desirable from the standpoint of the Scriptures, and likewise from the standpoint of practical efficiency in the Church. He thinks that our present divided condition is nothing more nor less than a scandal, and he does not mince words in painting the situation just as he sees it and feels it.

Dr. Ainslie feels that the Lord's Supper and baptism, the two ordinances of the Protestant Church, should not be allowed to separate the Churches or denominations from one another, and he is also of the opinion that the name which Martin Luther desired to give the Protestant movement would be far better as the designation for this cause than the word "Protestant." He means, of course, to call the movement we know as the Protestant movement the Christian movement. We would certainly agree with him on this point.

He is particularly caustic in denouncing denominational newspapers and colleges. He thinks that they are the stronghold of sectarianism and that the scandal of Christianity will be perpetuated so long as these arsenals of narrowness are continued. He thinks they should be interdenominationalized.

Dr. Ainslie, however, forgets that it is possible for a denomination to be interdenominational-minded, as has been the case with the Christian denomination all through its history. Strange to say, the only mention that he makes of our Church is in connection with the program of union now pending with the Congregationalists. This is all the more strange because Dr. Ainslie is thoroughly acquainted with the Church and knows its non-sectarian characteristics.

However, we will agree with Dr. Ainslie in his summary of his book, when he says: "All of our Churches must become genuinely Christian. Then, and not until then, shall we have a united Church of Christ." Dr. Ainslie's book is a worthy plea for Christian union, and those who believe this doctrine to be fundamental in the success of the kingdom will rejoice that this book has been written. W. A. H.

THE IGNORANCE OF LEARNING.

There are two classes of ignorant persons: the unlearned and the learned. The unlearned embraces children and illiterate adults. Both of these classes are willing to admit their lack of knowledge, ask questions, and risk their opinion on many subjects. They are not so conscious of their ignorance as to be ashamed of it. That class is willing to receive instruction, and that is the basis of schools. This is a large part of human society and it includes the spiritually ignorant as well as the mentally ignorant. This furnishes a large class of human beings for instruction in the Sunday School and the Church. Ignorant sinners will listen to the gospel sympathetically without embarrassment, and that explains, in some measure, why the "old fashioned" revival meeting, as it is called, has passed out of the Churches. There is not enough of that type of ignorance to make a large group in the average congregation. The public school, the Sunday School, good roads and intelligent association have reduced that type of ignorance that used to listen penitently to simple gospel preaching.

There is in this day another type of ignorance that is easily embarrassed and slow to learn. People of means and education are unwilling to confess their ignorance, and hence are slow to learn. That class is backward in asking questions, as they are too proud to admit their lack of knowledge. The more learned one is, the more humiliating it is to have his ignorance uncovered. This is true in the social, literary, artistic and religious world. It is easier to get an unlearned person to admit that he is a sinner, and in need of regeneration than it is to get a learned man to confess his sin and his need of a Saviour. He conforms to the human standards of good society, respects the moral standards of State and Church, and practically claims exemption from the necessity of repentance of sin and confession of Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour. It is more embarrassing to such a person to kneel at the altar in confession than it is for the illiterate. That is one reason why educated people often cease to learn. They are unwilling to admit that they do not know. That is the reason why the earnest gospel has its strongest appeal to the common people. Recognizing the condition in human society is why special evangelists, tents and tabernacles are employed to arouse religious enthusiasm in great cities. It is a problem to get a good man to confess that he is a sinner doomed to eternal punishment unless he is born again of the Spirit. W. W. S.

DOES PROHIBITION PROHIBIT?

It is well not to believe all you hear, and to remember that the newspapers feature the unusual and not the regular life of the world. The headlines of newspapers would lead one to believe that about everybody everywhere is selling or drinking intoxicating liquors and that conditions are far worse than they were before prohibition.

Especially is this true of the big cities, and as one goes about he hears country people and people from the smaller cities tell of how awful the drinking business is in Chicago and New York, but the writer has spent days in these cities without seeing a single drunken person, and it is possible that drunkenness even in the big centers is

"news" and decency is not news and that is not carried in the headlines.

Evangeline Booth, of the Salvation Army, with headquarters in the heart of New York, testifies that drinking and drunkenness have been so decreased in that city that the whole work of the Salvation Army has been changed to reach a different sort of people and the old bum and the suffering wife and children of the drunkard are no longer the field of their work because there is so little of it in proportion to what it was before prohibition went into effect.

So much from New York City from one who lives in the heart of it and should know more of this than any other person who has to do with it, as the Salvation Army formerly was full of reformed drunks and helpless folks who were victims of drink.

But now comes word from Chicago from one who knows the situation there. Jane Addams has been called the foremost woman of America because of her touch and ministrations to the poor. For thirty years she has lived and worked in the lowest parts of Chicago in social settlement work, and if there is a woman or a person in Chicago who knows the ways and habits of the poor and the criminal of that city, that woman is, by common consent, Jane Addams, founder and superintendent of Hull House.

Recently Jane Addams gave the following testimony regarding drink and drunkenness in Chicago, and those who "believe all they see in the papers" need to remember this as they read:

"Here around Hull House we used to watch whiskey and beer being left at saloons by the drayload. The poverty and suffering from drink was appalling. There is such a difference now that it seems like another world. Our poor are moving away into better places. The whole standard of living is rising for them. Drinking has decreased, and so has our work of rehabilitating families wrecked through intemperance. We have hardly any more squalid homes and neglected families to deal with. The stuff folks get now makes them uglier, but its evils are offset by the difficulties of getting it. I would not see the old system again for anything."

Prohibition does prohibit. If it didn't, the fellows who do not want it would not be so resentful about it.

To this I am adding a word: A temperance and mission worker ran two or more what he called "gospel missions," his object being to reclaim those who had become addicted to drink. He had some rooms and beds, and would give one night's lodging free and a "hand out," which I learned was a piece of pie or a sandwich of some kind. When prohibition went into effect, he said, "Prohibition has broken up my business." And, "thank the Lord, I am glad of it." The facts are literally true, but he is still doing mission work and of a different order. It is not necessary to state in what city this took place, but the reference is mild when the facts are considered.

railroads, and these only when they have been forced on the country by Christians. Trades are few and are confined to the barest necessities of life. What enterprise there is in business is confined to the resident Christians, Greeks, Armenians and Protestants. An absolute stagnation seems to rest on the ruling Mohammedan population. What is true of Mohammedan Turkey is true in great measure of all other non-Christian nations. The trade of the world is in the hands of its Christian nations.

The warning to lukewarm Christians misses its mark when applied to a man who neither prays nor gives; he is dead!

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Miss Willie Blanche Brothers was born in Suffolk, Va., August 17, 1871. Her parents were William Riddick and Martha Sarah Brinkley Brothers. She was a victim of infantile paralysis, which left one side weak all her life. She was educated in private schools and graduated from Suffolk Collegiate Institute. She taught a private school at her home for several years.

She was accidentally shot on February 7, 1899, and thereby lost one leg. Her sister, Hattie A. Brothers, about fourteen, was instantly killed at the same time. From that time she never walked except on crutches. After the death of her father, June 13, 1905, she made her home in Suffolk with her sisters and brothers. She united with the Suffolk Christian Church, and no truer member and sweeter spirit ever worshiped at that altar.

"Miss Willie," as everybody called her, was taken sick the first part of March, 1929, taken to Lakeview Hospital, and then to the home of her brother, William Edward Brothers, in Suffolk, where she lingered under the care of the family and the nurse, Mrs. Powell, until her life ended sweetly on July 4, 1929. Funeral services were held in her Church on July 6, conducted by Revs. W. W. Staley, H. S. Hardcastle, and Dr. H. J. Goodwin, of the Baptist Church, and the choir rendered appropriate hymns and the altar and casket were covered with beautiful flowers. She was buried in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

She is survived by two brothers, William E. and Lyman R. Brothers, of Suffolk; and two sisters, Mrs. Nettie Jones and Irene (Mrs. Wilbur MacClenny), and a number of nieces and nephews, all of Suffolk.

She won a medal at Suffolk Collegiate Institute, and a crown of righteousness in the school of Jesus Christ. There has been found what seems to be an original poem by Miss Willie, one stanza of which is here given:

"Some day, perhaps it will not be long,
It may be sooner than I think,
When I shall step across the bar
And stand upon the river's brink.
It may be when the flowers bloom,
Or when the ground is white with snow:
It does not matter when or how—
I'm ready, Lord; oh, let me go."

Her father, alone in bed in his bachelor home, on July 27, 1857, had a tragic experience. Two slaves, Jim and Harvey, entered the house while he was asleep, cut off one hand and broke the other arm with an axe, and left the room. He recovered from the shock, walked to the home of his brother, Henry, about a mile distant, for protection and medical aid. The next morning, one of his own slaves went to his master's house and found his hand in a pool of blood. He picked up the hand, carried it to Mr. Henry Brothers' home, and said, "Here is Marsa Willi'm's hand, but I do not know where my Marsa is."

Jim and Harvey had been hired by a white man to do this deed on the promise of money, which Mr. Brothers was known to have at that time. In their haste, the negroes had thrown back the cover over his pants which contained a large sum of money, and did not get it. After a trial, the slaves were hanged, and while standing on the gallows, one of the slaves said: "That white man yonder in the jail ought to be between us, as he put us up to it."

The Brothers family has been located on the lower Nansmond, on Mossy Creek Swamp, since 1695.

ELON LETTER.

The college is fortunate each year to be able to entertain the Summer School of Christian Methods of the Southern Christian Convention. We have this week enjoyed this privilege again for another year, and from all reports the school has been a very decided success.

The general financial depression throughout this section of the country, no doubt, accounts for the fact that the enrollment is not as large this year as in former years, but the quality of the work has certainly been superior, the spirit has been beautiful, and great good has been accomplished. Full credit for the success that has been achieved is due to Dean F. C. Lester of the Summer School, and Secretary Miss Pattie L. Coghill.

Coming back from a six weeks' absence in the University of Chicago, two days after the school opened, it has been physically impossible for me to attend the class sessions, and because of other complications I have not been able to attend even all the night sessions, though I have kept in touch with the school and realize that it has been a good success. Future years will reveal what this school this year has meant in the leadership of our Church.

If I mistake not, this is the seventh session of the Summer School that has been held at Elon. There have been four changes in the leadership responsibility for the conduct of the school since it first came to the college, and it was felt to be well to reduce to writing the conditions under which the college originally secured the location of the Summer School here, and I have felt it will be well to publish these conditions so that the Church at large may know just what has been done. There has only been one change in the plan from the beginning. The college agreed to pay $100 a year to the Summer School should there be a deficit in its conduct. This was done for the first five years. Last year the Summer School paid all expenses and had a little surplus and the $100 was not paid. Under the agreement just mutually signed by the dean of the Summer School and the president of the college, the college was relieved permanently of this obligation. Beyond that, the Summer School is to operate here under the terms of the original agreement, which is set forth as follows:

Agreement Between the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Christian Convention and Elon College.

Elon College invites the Board of Christian Education to conduct a summer school annually at Elon College, and extends this invitation upon the following mutually agreed upon terms:

1. The college will extend the use of its physical plant free of charge to the summer school, the buildings to be cleaned before and after use at the expense of the summer school. The college will also furnish free of cost heat, light, hot water each day and fuel. It is understood that the summer school will assume responsibility for damage to furniture and equipment.

2. The library of the college is to be opened under a competent librarian to be mutually approved by the dean of the summer school and the college head librarian.

3. The organist for the summer school will be mutually approved by the dean of the summer school and the head of the college music department.

4. The dietician for the conduct of the boarding-department during the summer school will be mutually approved by the dean of the summer school and the business manager of the college.

5. Any matters that need to be adjusted at any time by the Board of Christian Education and the college will be cared for by a committee to be appointed by the Board of Christian Education, meeting in conference with the president of the college and the business manager.

This agreement, entered into this the 31st day of July, 1929, shall continue in force until it is mutually dissolved.

BOARD OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION,

ELON COLLEGE,
By W. A. Harper, Pres.

As I said in the beginning, the college is fortunate in having this Summer School here, and hopes that it will continue from year to year. Let it be said, too, in this connection that numbers are not necessary for the success of such a school. It is better to have a group smaller in number relatively, but deeply concerned in the purposes for which the school is maintained and highly motivated for Christian service. I cannot but feel that this has been the situation happily for the session of the school just closed. There are some things that can be accomplished in small groups better than in larger ones, and leadership training is one of these things.

W. A. HARPER.

FROM ORANGEPORT.

From what one sees in the periodicals of our time, the spirit of union is undoubtedly in the air. The question of uniting the different denominations is being more seriously considered perhaps than ever before. In our section, one kind of Church unity is being practiced. Eight or more Christian Endeavor Societies, coming from Methodist, Baptist, Friend, Congregational and Christian Churches, have decided to hold group meetings every two weeks during July and August. The first of these meetings was held at a Baptist Church; the next, July 28th, was held at Orangeport Christian Church; the next is scheduled to be held at Gasport Friends Church.

The ministers in our section from the Methodist Episcopal, Wesleyan Methodist, Methodist Protestant, Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Universalist and Christian Churches have formed a ministerial association which meets once a month, ten months in the year. We meet together as brethren working for one great cause and consider subjects of mutual interest. Whatever our opinions are in religion or politics, our interests are inseparably bound together. Regardless of location, language, race or color, we are all folks, and our best interests demand that we regard and treat each other as such. When one can sit in his home and hear news from over the world a short time after events take place, it makes one think that our world is quite small and that we are all near-neighbors. The present home bureau agent for Niagara County is from North Carolina. She took her course at Columbia, served three years as agent in our county, and will soon leave for her home in Sanford, N. C., to marry a man formerly from Nova Scotia.

The writer and his family are now recovering from an automobile accident, which took place on the afternoon of May 24th. The wife and daughter were somewhat seriously injured. The writer was driving and escaped with a few cuts, a severe shaking up and a crippled Ford. We are very thankful it was no worse. The accident was caused by another driver going against the traffic lights at a road intersection.

Our Church work here is moving on quietly.

THE AMALFI DRIVE.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE.

The Amalfi Drive is a high, hard-paved road from Naples to the city of Amalfi, over and through the mountains about five thousand feet and back again around the cliffed shore of the Mediterranean. Nearly the whole way it is hewn in the cliffs of the mountains and of the coast, frequently supported by vast viaducts and bridge-work of masonry, now ages old, the trail itself from 100 to 500 feet above the water's edge. I do not wish to yield too much to the ecstasy with which the beauty and glory thrilled me, lest I overestimate it and forget the glory of our own fair land; but the magnificence of it all is stupendous beyond comprehension, utterly impossible to those who have not seen it.

Much of the mountain-sides and cliffs are bare, but most of it is clothed in verdant growth, and here and there the slopes are laid out in terraces from the bottom of the valleys to the top, and are planted with vines, veritable vineyards, olives, lemon and orange groves and fruit trees. Town after town, centuries old, lie in the little valleys and all along set in against the slopes. The road itself is walled on the outer side, and often on the inner side, by massive stone masonry. The terraces are built in masonry, and there are here and there massive square watch-towers, erected under Charles V as a protection against pirates. These are now partly converted into dwellings, where the peasantry abide and work out their own salvation.

Finally we reach the peak and the pass where, between two conical rocks, we see both the sea and the valley behind us. Our descent to the sea is begun, and along the way are ruins of ancient dwellers, monasteries, towers, castles, dwellings, etc., as it were, setting in the lemon and olive plantations, giving a quaint touch of beauty to the sad story of ancient history. Here and there, hair-pin curves high upon the cliffs gave us a thrill as we felt the wheels of the big car almost skid toward the brink where only a wall protected us from a thousand feet below. These turns were punctuated with enchanting gorges and ravines which yawned to swallow us up if we made a mistake. But we did not think of the danger of these, for side by side were clean little villages rising most beautifully and picturesquely against their sides and in the hollows, and these gave a wonderful assurance of safety.

After passing a lofty rocky eminence where there were many ruins of castles, we came to Amalfi, the chief beauty-spot of the drive. This is a small but lively town of about 7,000 souls whose chief occupation is the manufacture of paper, soap, and macaroni. It is situated at the entrance of a deep ravine, surrounded by imposing mountains and rocks of the most picturesque forms. In the early ages, we are told, it was a seaport and numbered about 50,000 inhabitants. Now it is mainly a tourist town, and well may it be.

The chief structures here are the St. Andrews Cathedral and Hotel Coppuccini. The cathedral is an eleventh century structure, built in the Lombard Norman style. The hotel was once a Copuchion Monastery, founded in the twelfth century, the building itself rising abruptly from the sea to a height of 230 feet. After leaving our car, we climbed two hundred steps to the promenade leading to its entrance. There were men there with crude chairs on poles, and for the proper amount of lire, would save us the climb. Although the experience would have been worth while, we did our own climbing. Fortunate or unfortunate it was for us, for we met some pretty girls, who relieved us of some of our coin for a few pictures and postcards they had to sell. It would have been embarrassing to have been patrons of both the chair-holders and the girls too, and the latter were far preferable.

The hotel is outlined by vine-cloistered verandas and promenades, with most magnificent outlooks over the deep blue sea. The rooms and apartments are Italian, but well appointed, with all modern conveniences, a lovely place to spend a summer for those who can afford it. In the back is a most pleasant walk up Mill Valley, where there are many paper mills driven by the water power of the brook.

Dinner was served to us on one of its verandas, and before we realized it two hours had passed during the meal.

From here we returned to Naples by the sea route. It is a long road of one hundred to four hundred feet above the water's edge, cut in the almost precipitous cliffs, abridging ravines, and outlined both below and above with grape vines well arboresced and continuous groves. For kilometer after kilometer we passed tunnels, fountains, garden walls, descending lanes, fantastic courts, gateways, the whole skirting the coast bus often high above the houses of the towns until we snaked out to the valley by Vesuvius and hit the main highway back to Naples. The girls at the fountains, water carriers, reminded us of Rebecca at the well. Unlike Rebecca, there were no Isaacs to press their suits.

This Amalfi Drive is an eight-hour drive, but one in which one does not tire. It is beautiful because modern civilization has not harmed its quaint picturesqueness. It is wondrous because wondrous engineering has conceived the necessity not only of their work for the good of the populace, but has kept in mind the harmonies of nature's handiwork. There is an old saying, "See Naples and die," so surpassingly beautiful is its surroundings. To be sure, one should not feel that way about it, but it could be said, "See Amalfi and live forever."

Naples, Italy.

RELIGIOUS CENSUS OF THE WORLD.

According to the estimate of statisticians about one-third of the earth's population is classed as Christian. The world's census is 1,750,000,000. The religious census gives Christianity 534,940,000 adherents; Confucianism, 300,000,000; Brahmanism, 214,000,000; Mohammedanism, 175,290,000; Buddhism, 121,000,000; Judaism, 10,860,000. The figures as to the religious census are supplied by the Stuttgart statistical bureau.

The nearly 400,000,000 people who are not included in these estimates are not to be regarded as being without religion of some kind. They all have their forms of worship. Religion is universal.

When shall Christianity become the one religion of all mankind? Possibly sooner than we dare to hope. Its leaven is now working strongly. Incalculable advantages are accruing to it. Its mind and heart are easily made known in a day to nine-tenths of the expanse of the earth. Whenever a calamity befalls a section of humanity, the philanthropy of Christian people becomes known. The awakened intelligence of the world gives Christians an opportunity to impress their faith. Men everywhere are inquiring the way. Books are being read, history is being searched, every possible highway of the mind and the soul is being investigated. The truth will gradually take hold. Has any Christian a doubt as to the foundations of his belief? Rather does every Christian rejoice to have the world go about Zion and count her towers. The more our religion is investigated, the better. Even criticism directs attention to it.

The numerical growth of Christianity has been rapid; its influence has multiplied much faster. Far beyond the borders of Christian communities, the light of the gospel shines. Mohammedanism and Judaism are affected by it. Changes due to Christianity are coming in the Oriental religions. Throughout the world, in medicine, in law, in education, in government, in relief, the Christian mind controls.

Our philanthropies alone are among the most far-reaching messengers of Christianity. Especially since the great war these life-saving agencies have touched millions of lives with unmeasured possibilities for spreading Christian influence.

The religious census only in part tells the story of the relative standing of Christianity among the religions of the earth. Its truth and its spirit are keeping the nations in the way of progress and are creating an expectation of a universal and permanent peace. The era of earth-wide good will, which is now at the dawn, will be the time of the power of our Lord.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

VALLEY MISSION CONFERENCE.

The women of the Virginia Valley Central Woman's Missionary Conference met in annual session at Leaksville, August 1st. The meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. R. A. Larrick. Prayer by Rev. Joe French.

"Jesus Calls Us" was sung as an opening song. Scripture references were read by Mrs. Turner, Mrs. Earp and Mrs. Larrick. Prayer by Rev. B. J. Earp.

The following Churches were represented; Linville, Leaksville, Bethlehem, Winchester, Mayland, Antioch, Mt. Olivet (R) and New Hope.

Mrs. R. C. Myers, the superintendent of women's societies, reported six societies, with 174 members. Among special things, the women's societies did were: sent books and pictures to Fancy Gap and Porto Rico, and clothing to the Orphanage and Porto Rico.

Superintendents of young people and spiritual life had no reports.

Mrs. Mary Davis, superintendent of cradle rolls, reported five cradle rolls, only two of which gave special cradle roll parties.

Committees on resolutions, nominations, place of next meeting, and finance were appointed.

Revs. B. J. Earp, W. B. Fuller and A. W. Andes gave short talks. Mrs. B. R. Richards led in prayer. Treasurer Miss Virdie Showalter reported $296 raised by the women's societies, $168.14 by the young people, $19.30 by cradle rolls, $58.84 by rallies, and $87.93 from miscellaneous sources, making a total for the year of $630.21.

Representatives from Winchester gave a dialog entitled, "The Delegates' Mission." Prayer by Rev. A. W. Andes. The ladies of Leaksville served a wonderful dinner on tables on the lawn.

The afternoon session was called to order. Rev. B. J. Earp conducted the devotional period. Representatives from Linville, New Hope and Antioch gave a pageant entitled "A Missionary Clinic." Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White were present and gave interesting talks about the work they are soon to take up as medical missionaries in the Philippine Islands.

The committee on goals reported Winchester Woman's Society as the banner society, having reached all ten points. The committee on place for next meeting recommended Antioch.

The committee on nominations recommended officers for next year as follows: president, Mrs. R. A. Larrick; vice-president, Mrs. A. F. Kite; secretary, Mrs. B. F. Frank; treasurer, Miss Virdie Showalter; superintendent of young people's work, Mrs. B. J. Earp; superintendent of woman's work, Mrs. R. C. Myers; superintendent of literature and mite boxes, Miss Ella Pickering; superintendent of cradle rolls, Mrs. Mary Davis; superintendent of spiritual life, Miss Ora Scott.

The committees on resolutions and finance made their reports. An offering was taken for Porto Rico work, amounting to $12.51. Rev. Joe French led in closing prayer.

We appreciate the "new money" and trust that every reader of the suggestion will send in their first new bill for kingdom enlargement. The Woman's Board report reached us in time for this report and pushes our total to $39,281.23. We yet lack $5,718.77 of reaching the goal by September 1st. If the Churches that have not yet sent in their final and full offerings will do so, and all will help, it certainly will be appreciated.

THE CHURCH AT WORK.

BY DR. W. H. DENISON, Sec'y.

Convention Items.

The Convention Secretary has been in Piqua in consultation with Pastor Rev. Raymond G. Clark about many details of the Convention arrangements.

The Amphion Quartet of the First Christian Church, Dayton, will sing at the men's banquet. This quartet is hard to beat.

Prof. C. James Velie, head of the department of music at Elon College, will be the Convention director of music. He is president of the North Carolina State Music Teachers' Association and will make a real contribution to the Convention.

All Conferences should send in their official list of delegates immediately following their election, and notify this office at once if any change is made in the delegation for any cause.

Every delegate, committeeman, pastor, Conference officer should watch this column, which gives the official Convention matters each week.

Great Care in Naming Delegates.

The following from the Constitution will guide your Conference:

"(a) The members of the General Board shall be members of the General Convention during their term of office.

"(b) Each local Conference, except those of the Southern Christian Convention, which is itself so entitled, may be represented by its president and by one minister and one layman for each seven hundred members or major fraction thereof, provided that no Conference shall be deprived of representation by one minister and one layman in addition to its president.

"(c) Presidents of State associations or conferences and of regional conventions, auxiliary to the Convention or co-operating with it, shall be members of the Convention.

"(d) The Afro-Christian Convention may be represented by its president, secretary, and three elected delegates."

Ex-officio members (General Board members and Conference presidents) cannot have alternates or substitutes. Ministers cannot be alternates for laymen nor laymen for ministers. Lay delegations cannot be filled with ministers, nor ministerial delegations with laymen.

Convention Sunday Preachers.

Morning—Rev. William G. Sargeant, D. D., Providence, R. I.; devotions conducted by Rev. Charles H. Rowland, D. D., Greensboro, N. C.

Afternoon—Rev. Edward W. Cross, D. D., New York City; devotions conducted by Prof. Selden B. Humphrey, Defiance, Ohio.

Evening—Rev. James O. Atkinson, D. D., Elon College, N. C.; devotions conducted by Rev. W. R. Caldwell, Nontesano, Wash.

Stewardship Books.

Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, Lawrenceville, N. J., says: "Stewardship for All of Life," by Lovejoy, is outstanding. It is very inclusive, easy, comprehensive." What one that you have read this year can you heartily recommend to others?

It will be necessary for pastors to think ahead and plan early for the proper observance of stewardship period. October will be Convention month, and the planning will need be done long before you start to the Convention. Order your literature early, for our office will be a busy one with all the Convention preparation. It is our deep conviction that there will be no general widespread, deep evangelistic spiritual revival in our nation and Churches until there has been a deep study and faithful practice of Christian stewardship of possessions.

THE SUN AND MOTHER PRAISED.

My dear Dr. Atkinson:

It is like getting a letter from home to get THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I read every page, and sometimes glance at the number on the top of the page I am reading, regretting that I am drawing so near to the sixteenth. Whatever I am doing, almost surely has to go undone when I get THE CHRISTIAN SUN until every page has been well "Fix-ed," and I can even see the squint in Dr. Staley's eyes as I read his delightful messages. And what shall I say more? for the time would fail me to tell of Harrell, and Harper, and Johnston, and Rountree, and Hardcastle, and half a dozen others who help rather regularly to radiate THE SUN'S rays. Let them go to it—and may their kind increase!

I am sending a little sermon to help Friend Fix along for one week, as I remember how happy I was when some one supplied an issue in other days.

Allow me to also ask your prayers for my beloved mother, who is so seriously ill at her home near our Mt. Bethel Christian Church. She has been quite ill for several months. I can but be proud of my mother. So well has she presided over her home and family as to turn it from an insignificant little house among the hills to a veritable place of beauty, both physically and spiritually. Few were those who cared to find that little log home thirty years ago, but more than one hundred and sixty-five persons from every walk of life have sought it out in recent weeks to say God bless you to a health-broken mother of six graduates of Elon College.

She knows how much I think of you, Dr. Atkinson, and she and my father would be very happy if you could run out on road 65 to see them.

With sincere good wishes to you and all readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, I am,

Fraternally yours,

Dayton, Ohio.

NOW THE TIME—HERE THE PLACE!

Your Church is making an effort to reach its goal for Missions this year, namely: one-third the amount of pastor's salary. If your Church, and all the other Churches, reach this goal, we will reach the total goal of $45,000 for the year ending September 30th, the amount asked of us by the Southern Christian Convention.

Will you, by an individual gift, help your Church to achieve this desired end? Now is the time! Here is the place! By a pull together, every Church can reach the goal. Help now.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VII—August 18, 1929.

THE RETURN FROM CAPTIVITY.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Jehovah hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."—Psa. 126:3.

LESSON: Jere. 29:10-14; Ezra 1:1-11; Psa. 126:1-6.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 124.

Jeremiah's Letter to the Captives.

The first of the above Scripture sections is a part of a letter that Jeremiah wrote to the captives in Babylon, telling them that they might as well settle down, build houses, marry, plant gardens, and seek to live in such a way that they would promote the peace and the prosperity of Babylon. There was no indication that the Jews would return to Palestine in the immediate future. But Jeremiah promised that in God's good time those who did desire to return to their native country would be permitted to do so. "God's thoughts toward the exiles were thoughts of peace, and not of evil." There is nothing vindictive in the dealings of God with men. He seeks only their highest welfare, but there are times when he must resort to stern methods in order to accomplish his purpose.

"And ye shall seek me and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart." The man who sets out on the quest for God is not following an illusion. God is more eager to be found of His children than they are to find Him. A sincere purpose and an obedient spirit will bring us to God.

The Return of the Captives.

"Now, in the first year of Cyrus, King of Persia, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Syrus." Cyrus was a great leader of a great empire. He adopted a policy of tolerance toward his subjects and he exercised a beneficent rule over his people. The point in this serve of Scripture is to be found in the reference to the fact that "the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus." Cyrus was a pagan, but in God's purpose, he had a place and a mission. One of the most far-reaching changes in missionary strategy took place when missionaries came to recognize that God had not left Himself without witness, and that in the so-called heathens there were evidences of His Spirit. There is a world of meaning in the simple statement that God spoke to this man and used this man in accomplishing His purpose. We are too prone to restrict the zone of God's activity to the so-called privileged or superior races. God is at work among all peoples and in a limited way He speaks through the sacred literature of pagan and heathen peoples.

"The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth, and He hath charged me to build Him a house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah." This heathen king had recognized a principle which so many modern Christians have not yet recognized—the power that a man has is not his own; it is a stewardship from God. And it is to be used for advancing the interests of the kingdom of God.

"Who is there among you of all His people? His God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem to build the house of the Lord." "And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver and with gold and with goods and with beasts, besides the free will offering for the house of God." It was a big task, and it was going to take the combined resources of all. Some could go, and they must do their part. And some could not go, but they were to do their part, nonetheless. What a great text for missions! The establishment of the kingdom demands the combined resources of us all. Some must go. Others cannot go. But upon all of us there is the responsibility to make our contribution. And this applies to those who are in the Church and out of it. As a matter of fact, a man who lives in a community and receives the benefits from the Church is under obligation to support the Church even if he is not a member. If he does not, he is a parasite.

"Also Cyrus the King brought forth the vessels of the house of the Lord which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth from Jerusalem." What emotions must have swept over the Jews as they saw the sacred vessels which had been associated with the worship of Jehovah and were a reminder of the glory that was Israel's!

It is very improbable that any great number of Jews took advantage of this opportunity to go back. For the most part, they were settled, and perhaps only a comparatively small number made the trip, at least at first. As a matter of fact, God was to fulfill His purpose in another and more vital way.

The Joy of the Captives Over Their Return.

It is reported that when some of the soldiers who went overseas during the World War first stepped on land, they knelt down and kissed the earth, so glad were they to get back. It must have been with a feeling akin to this that the Jews first saw their native land. Any one who reads the one hundred and twenty-sixth Psalm, which was undoubtedly written upon the return, will readily detect an overwhelming current of emotion and joy. Words fail the psalmist. He says that they felt as if it were all a dream. And out of the abundance of their hearts, their mouths spoke of the goodness and greatness of God who had "turned again their captivity."

Perhaps it is not amiss to suggest that every Christian should continually sing praises unto God for His goodness and His greatness, for in a very real sense they have been redeemed from captivity. Through Jesus Christ, men and women, boys and girls are brought out of captivity and bondage and into an ever-increasing freedom and liberty. All such can say with the psalmist, "The Lord hath done great things for them."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, August 18, 1929.

TOPIC: "Making the Best Use of Nature's Laws."—Gal. 6:7; Matt. 13:8; Mark 4:28.

Some Bible Hints.

In the spiritual life, a man reaps what he sows and more than he sows. Goodness yields goodness, evil yields evil (v. 7).

"God is not mocked." You cannot break His law; if you try to break it you illustrate it, and it breaks you (v. 7).

Good seed in bad ground is useless. Do we prepare the ground of the heart to receive the Word? (v. 8.)

There is a law of development. The fruit comes last, and we must patiently wait for it. It is so in the development of the divine life (v. 28).

Suggestive Thoughts.

In Matt. 7:1, 2, Jesus states a spiritual law. You get what you give, and more than you give. Watch, then, the things you do and say.

When we discover a law of nature, it is wisdom to harness it. We use the lightning to illuminate our homes because we obey the law. We can work successfully only with and never against nature.

In all our building, we must observe the law of gravitation. We cannot suspend it. If we try to do that, we find it will break us.

Some day man will harness the power of the ocean tides, and perhaps, also the power of earthquakes. To use a law of nature, we must first understand it. Danger lies not in knowledge, but in ignorance.

A Few Illustrations.

Formerly fevers were thought to be a punishment from God, and the only thing to do was to bow before God's will. When we learned the cause of fevers, this view changed. Using the law, we conquered.

In flying, man has made use of laws which formerly he did not understand. The laws were there, the air was there, but what was lacking was understanding. Knowledge is power.

For ages man has found his way across the sea by study of the stars. Knowledge is safety and guidance.

What is the radio but the application of natural laws which have only recently been discovered? Now, through knowledge, we can speak around the world.

To Think About.

What natural law is easily broken?

What value has Drummond's book, "Natural Law in the Spiritual World"?

Can we change nature's laws? Why?

JUBILEE NEWS.

TIME: Late summer A. D. 29.

PLACE: Capernaum on Galilee.

RECORD: Matt. 18:15-20.

How strangely quiet it is in Capernaum! The multitudes which once flocked to the door of Peter's house are nowhere in evidence. Even the carping critics from Jerusalem who followed him every where with their whine are silent and unseen. The crowds who sought to hail Him as their king have come to the conclusion that it is all past since He has refused them and reviled them for their selfishness in seeking the loaves and fishes. If He had been the Messiah He would surely have championed their cause and led the way to victory when they had acclaimed Him. But he did not, and they have turned their faces and their interest to other heroes or back to the common drudge of life again to wait for that new Messiah, since this one has failed them.

The Master in the Midst.

These days are precious days with the Master. He sees the narrowness of His disciples' vision of the coming kingdom. It has been drilled into them from childhood, and has the background of a thousand years since Solomon and David's time, and now it has sprung into a flame of hope in knowing Him. Surely to them there was no mere man like this ever lived—He was surely their Messiah, and with Him was the answer to all their dreams and the dreams of their nation. What a glorious thing it was to be living and how much more glorious was it to be in that "inner circle" who would reign with Him in Jerusalem and cast Caesar aside and rule the world.

Jesus knew that all this was passing in their thoughts and kept patiently teaching them those things which they could not understand but which would in days to come be "brought to their remembrance" by the Holy Spirit, and in that day they would be men ready to go out and give their very lives for the things He was now teaching them.

They Understood Not.

But just now they could not understand Him. Why should He talk of such little things when such great things were before them? Why should he talk to them of childhood and not of kingship? Why should He talk of weak children of His and their need when it was a day of days to talk about strong men and their work? Why should He talk about single lost sheep in the mountains when there was a lost nation waiting for Him and His leadership. They still believe in Him, but they could not understand Him. They were looking for greater things than these He was bringing to their attention these days in Capernaum. They knew that the feast of Tabernacles was near, and that they were to go to Jerusalem, and why did He not talk of plans for setting up the kingdom when there?

Living Together in the Church.

(Verses 15-18.) And here is Jesus talking again about a matter of common, every-day life—difficulties between Church members. He is preparing them (and us) for the coming days. They would soon know their need of all this.

If the Church today would literally take this way of settling all Church and individual quarrels, it would be richer in love and greater in power. I knew of one Church quarrel between individuals which was settled literally in this way, and it came out finely, but have known of no more. It will pay us to read these verses and act on them if we would follow Jesus in mind and in spirit (Matt. 18:15-17).

Power in United Prayer.

(Verses 19, 20.) Those disciples and us both need that lesson. They needed it then and we need it now. The old-fashioned prayer meeting is going out, but united prayer need and must not go out. It will be a sorry day for the Church when the preacher does all its praying. It will be a sorry day for the Church when "two or three" cannot pray together and, believing, receive the promise of Jesus' presence. It will be a sorry day when there is not some united prayer in the home and around the table with the children. Bobbie Burns tells us that it was in "scenes such as these" that old Scotland's glories rose. In the great Interworld Church Movement, a poster of a child at its mother's knees in prayer was labeled: "The Faith that Made America Great," and it is in touch and fulfillment of this thought and teaching of our Lord this day at Capernaum. It was a needful and a vital thing for them to know and to live. It is a needful and vital thing for us to know and to live.

Meditation.

Is there sin or trespass or hate between me and my brother? Is there need for me to go to him alone? Am I ready to go all the way Jesus marks out here that His kingdom shall not be hindered in my Church, in my family, in my neighborhood by my sin or by stubbornness? Help me to pray about it and to seek the prayers of others in the Jesus spirit about my relations with my brother, that they may be right with my great Elder Brother and with the Father.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE SPIRIT AND THE MIND.

"Be renewed in the spirit of your mind."—Eph. 4:23.

David, it seems, prayed often for a renewal of the spirit within him. The apostles prayed for their minds to be right, and Jesus taught that the mind was one equal part of the triangle of ourselves that must be kept right. We know this, too. Spencer has said:

"It is the mind that maketh good will;
That maketh wretch or happy, rich or poor."

Milton wrote:

"The mind is in its own place, and in itself
Can make a heaven of hell or a hell of heaven."

Now, "God hath given us the spirit of power and love and discipline for a sound mind" (1 Tim. 1:7), with which to control our spirits, and the man of wisdom is the man who, with his mind, guards the entrance to his soul and spirit, that he may be kept in perfect peace. Conversely, the spirit is the motive power within which one sets his house in order and controls the guard at the door. It is this spirit which must have the sanctification of the Holy Spirit from God.

Right living cannot come by a dominating mind, but must come through bringing the spirit, mind and body to the subordination of the Holy Spirit.

Prayer.—Our Father, in Thee we live and move and have our being. Teach us, train us, guide us, control our spirit, mind and body, through all the vexatious things of life and help us to grow a little more like Christ all the time. Amen.

TUESDAY.

WHITHER BOUND?

"Be renewed in the spirit of your mind."—Psa. 51:10.

Birds sing because they want to. Man writes poetry by impulse. Youth writes love letters because of his affections.

But likes and dislikes, desires and impulses emanate from the mind, or from carnal inclinations. If we act upon them before they are approved by the spirit, it is the same as doing something thoughtlessly and thinking about it afterwards. It is often wrong and too late to make amends. The only excuse we can offer is "I didn't think." It is foolhardy not to deliberate well upon things before doing them, in order to keep the rudder true. For instance, if we assert ourselves merely upon an impulse or a whim, or a prejudice, we are apt to be wrong; but having asserted ourselves, the tendency is that every thought after that shall conform to the stand we have taken. The wisdom of it is clear. If we are careful in spirit and make our assertions well-founded it is easier and far more satisfying to stand firm in an honest conviction.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, without Thee we can do nothing well. Renew a right spirit within us every day. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

WHAT IS RELIGION?

"Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep one's self unspotted from the world."—Jas. 1:27.

Religion is not sentiment, nor acts, nor is it moral conduct, but it is devotion to God, keeping clean and working to make better the welfare of those who need. Life is superior and overcoming only in this spirit. The inferiorities, weaknesses and things that are wrong about humanity are so because man's mind has been unholy and unbaptized, and has been harnessed to the wrong spirit. The only hope is what Paul gave, "Christ in you the hope of glory." "Walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit."

Joan of Arc, at the stake, when asked by the bishop, "Do you believe that you are in a state of grace?" replied, "If I am not, God will put me in; if I am, He will keep me in." She had religion.

Captain Scott, the south pole explorer in 1922, took thirty grains of opium with him for every man in case of extremity. When they came to extremity they decided to use it. He had his. Later when members of his party dug the snow from his body, a pencil was found in one hand and his journal in another. He had written, "Have decided that it shall be natural." He had religion, and would die like a man.

Prayer.—Dear Father, give us this day our daily bread and help us to live simply beautiful because of Thy indwelling Spirit. Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHEN DO WE KNOW?

"We know we have passed from death to life because we love the brethren."—1 Jno. 3:14.

When is a man a child of God? When he goes to Church? When he joins the Church? When he is baptized?

The word "urge" is a much-used word today. We have an "urge" to keep alive; we have an "urge" to assert self; we have an "urge" to pleasure, etc., and all these "urges" are gratified. There is still another "urge": it is the "urge" to our higher selves, an "urge" to know God. Are all the other "urges" to be satisfied and this one left to die? There is as much answer to this "urge" as the others. It is satisfied in the same way: "Seek and ye shall find." A man is a man of God only when he is responding to this "urge," and is putting his life to its proper use.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou who dost give us all our passions and dost satisfy them, create within us a desire for our higher and better self and complete us in Jesus Christ. Amen.

FRIDAY.

DUTY.

"What do ye more than others?"—Mat. 5:27.

Some think that duty consists in doing just what they are told to do, or just what they are compelled to do, or just that they can get by with, and no more. "Is zat so!"

Suppose a fire company responding to the alarm would stop first to ascertain their duty, and telephone to see if it is a false alarm, how long it will take to reach it? It is just as sensible to deliberate upon the evil of sin and the wisdom of Christianity. Christ's way was, "What do ye more than others?"

In the Russo-Japanese War, a Japanese student left Auburn College. When asked why, he replied, "I have received a letter from home saying

'any son of mine will be on hand not when he is called for, but in advance of his duty.'

Duty does not watch the clock. It stays till the work is done. It completes the task. A mother, whether watching over a sick child or mending its clothes, never watches the clock. Andrew Carnegie said, "There are three classes of men: those that do not do their duty, those who do their duty, and those who do more than their duty. No one can cheat the latter out of success." This is applied Christianity.

Prayer.—Dear Lord of heaven and earth, and our souls, show us the way to true success and give us the delight of it, and make us ever faithful to Thee. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE WAY OF HAPPINESS.

"If they hearken (to) and serve Him (God), they shall spend their days in prosperity and their years in pleasure."—Job 36:11.

Everybody is in search for happiness. There is an orgy of pleasure today.

Life is a way—not acts, but a way—and true happiness comes in the pursuit of the way. There is a lot of passing pleasures that appeal to us. They give us a thrill. They allure us. But they are not in the way which God has given us. In their way there is death to our higher selves.

The first duty of a tourist is to watch the signs of his way. These signs will not take him to his destination, but they do tell him the way. If you would know God and find Him, if you would have the true and enduring happiness, follow the signs of the way.

Our failure lies so often in trying to keep our own way. Every thing has to be kept by a superior power. The Father must keep the child, or the child is apt to go astray. Man has the keeping of beast. God has the keeping of man.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we know that Thou art our Keeper. As dear children, we pray that we may be found dutiful, loving and loyal, and ever found following Jesus, the way, the truth and the life. Amen.

SUNDAY.

A SERIOUS BUSINESS.

Parable of the talents.—Matt. 25:14-30.

Jesus was a man who never growled about the boss. In this parable He taught that the unproductive life is sin, and that "by their fruits ye shall know them." Of this, there are many examples, viz: the parable of the fig tree, the parable of the prodigal son, the parable of the vineyard, the parable of the marriage feast, the sermon about the True Vine and fruit. In all of them He rebuked excuses; no half-heartedness could be accepted. His was a big business, and every one must snap in in a genuine fashion. The fellow who gushed was soon cooled off by being informed that the foxes have holes—but the Son of man has nowhere to lay His head.

The fellow who delayed was lost. There was no time to spend in burying the dead. Others could do that.

The man who indulged retrospect was not fit, for he was told that you can't plow straight furrows and look back. "You've got to attend to your job."

Jesus felt deeply the uselessness of "fireworks"—just talk. Our engagement should mean something, and the kingdom is big business.

Prayer.—Dear Lord God, guide us into the thoughts of making life count not only in our soul security, but in our profitableness to all, and especially in the Christian life. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our financial report this week carries us over the eleven-thousand-dollar mark. We are always happy when we reach the half-way mark. We trust that our income will grow a little faster during the next few months and get us up to our half-way mark at least. The Christian Orphanage will have its first "Home Coming Day" Saturday, August 31st. We want to have all our boys and girls with us on that day. We hope to have a very happy occasion. Every boy and girl who has been in the institution has a cordial invitation to come back home on that day. We make this one request: we want each one who can come to write us one week in advance, so we will know how many to prepare for.

A VISIT TO THE VATICAN.

To undertake to describe the beauty and glory of the Vatican, Rome, is like trying to describe Jesus Christ or a glorious sunset.

The entire building is a repository of original fine arts; those in fresco, mosaic, tapestry and sculpture.

If it is possible to say that one thing is more attractive than another, it might be said that St. Helena, holding the decapitated head of her husband in a towel, weeping, while his body lay at her feet, is the most beautiful painting ever seen.

St. Peter's Cathedral, a part of the Vatican, is the largest building in the world, covering about forty acres of ground and guarded by 200 Swiss soldiers.

It is holy ground here in every place. One can live here and see something new every day. Even now excavations are under way right in the heart of the city, unearthing and revealing history.

It cannot be said that Rome is a beautiful city from an exterior point of view, but it can be said that it is magnificent and its great buildings are imposing.

Roma! Roma! Roma! city of the ancient dead and of a million murders in the horrible onslaught against oncoming irresistible Christianity!

H. E. ROUNTREE, Chaplain U. S. N.

STATEMENT BY BISHOP CANNON.

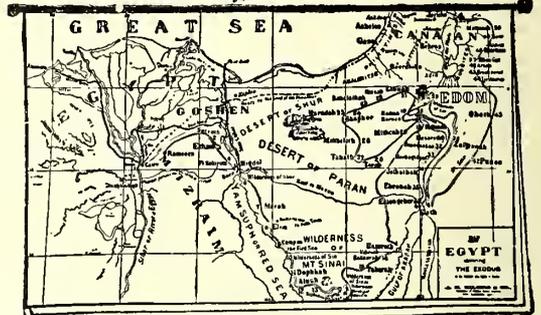

This paper has published a communication from Bishop James Cannon, Jr., in which he said he purposes to ask the Church to investigate all the charges that have been brought against him in connection with his stock-market transactions.

He has frankly stated that for many years he has bought and sold stocks of various kinds and has traded in real estate.

Let the Church be sure there will be no disposition to shield Bishop Cannon from any fair criticism or charges; but also let the enemies of the Church know they cannot stampede it into an inconsiderate condemnation of one of its servants.

"If you have a duty to perform and you have the opportunity, now and not tomorrow is the time to do it. You cannot keep your self-respect by putting off the performance of duty.

OBITUARIES.

BROTHERS.

We, the members of the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Society of the Suffolk Christian Church, feel very keenly the passing of one of our most faithful and interested members, Miss Willie Brothers, on July 4, 1929. While we mourn the passing of our dear sister and co-worker, who had been a patient sufferer for some months, and while we miss her cheerful presence in our meetings, we feel that our loss is her gain, and may we strive to imitate her good example by being more faithful in our duties to God's cause. We bow in humble submission to God's will and extend to her loved ones our deepest sympathy, and recommend that a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, a copy to her family, and a copy recorded in the minutes of our society.

MRS. J. W. HOLLAND.
MRS. E. C. LUKE.
MRS. R. L. SMITH.

ACKER.

Mrs. Mary J. Acker was born September 3, 1846, and died July 7, 1929, at the age of 82 years, 10 months, and 4 days. In the passing of Sister Acker, another one of the good old mothers in Israel has gone. She was an outstanding Christian character, faithful and conscientious in every Christian duty. She united with Antioch Christian Church in early life, and was a faithful and loyal member the rest of her long life, though not able to attend Church during her latter years. She is survived by her husband, four sons, and five daughters. Funeral services were held at the home of a son, John T. Acker, near Harrisonburg, Va., July 9, 1929, and the remains laid to rest in Woodbine Cemetery.

A. W. ANDES.

SHUFF.

Jesse Shuff was born February 14, 1841, and died July 27, 1929, aged 88 years, 5 months, and 13 days. Deceased was a native of Powell's Ford, in Shenandoah County, Va. In young manhood he went to Ohio and lived until old age forced him to retire from active life, and he then came back to his old home neighborhood to spend his remaining years. He was a hard-working man, kind and obliging to all, and lived on a high moral plane, enjoying the respect and confidence of all who knew him. He was never married, and is survived by a brother, one sister, and a number of nephews and nieces. Funeral services at Oak Level Methodist Church, near Joppa, July 30, 1929.

A. W. ANDES.

HEDGEPEETH.

Mrs. Sarah Augustus Hedgepeeth, R. F. D., Franklin, Va., died July 9, 1929, aged 61 years. The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Revs. W. C. Hook and R. E. Brittle. The burial was in Holland Cemetery.

Mrs. Hedgepeeth was the daughter of her Church, to her loved ones, and to her friends and neighbors.

N. G. NEWMAN.

SIMPSON.
Little Marie Simpson, infant daughter of A. W. and Ollie Mae Simpson, of Cypress Chapel, Va., was born at Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va., on July 14, 1929, and lived only one day. She was spared to live such a short time that she never knew or bore the heat and the burdens of life's short day, but "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord."

She was the only child. On July 15th the little body was laid to rest in Cypress Chapel Christian Church Cemetery, and the little mound was completely covered with flowers. Services were conducted by the writer.

R. E. BRITTLE.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SABBATH.

The French infidel Voltaire realized that there is some stupendous force back of the Christian's weekly day of rest and worship. He said: "We shall not destroy the Christian faith till we have killed the Sabbath Day."—Selected.

HOLLAND.

Mrs. May Elizabeth Holland, R. F. D., Holland, Va., departed this life July 21, 1929, aged 77 years. She was the daughter of the late Henry and Mariah Duke, of Isle of Wight County, and widow of the late George Washington Holland. The funeral was conducted at the home by the writer and the remains buried in the family cemetery. She leaves two brothers, Joseph D. and Lazarus Duke, and a sister, Mrs. Emlie Langford, all of Isle of Wight County. She was the mother of fifteen children, of whom seven survive, as follows: Charles E., Mrs. Josephine Holland, Mrs. J. W. Turner, Lemuel H., Mrs. R. D. Johnston, Mrs. R. W. Luter, and Mrs. L. F. Porter, all of Holland, Va. She also leaves thirty-nine grandchildren and sixteen great-grandchildren.

Mrs. Holland was a member of Holland Christian Church and a woman of simple faith and trust. The burdens of life fell heavily upon her, but they were borne with a spirit of faith and sacrificial service.
N. G. NEWMAN.

DUKE.

Mr. J. A. Duke passed from labor to reward on June 15, 1929, at his home near Cypress Chapel, Va., at the age of seventy-four years. For several years before going, he was a constant sufferer, but bore it all patiently.

Early in life Bro. Duke joined Cypress Chapel Christian Church, where he held his membership until the end came. He was not privileged to attend Church as he liked to, but he showed a fine Christian spirit. The writer enrolled him as a member of the home department of the Sunday School about two weeks before he went to his reward.

He leaves behind his widow, Mrs. Christine Duke; two sons, Billie and Henry Duke, and seven grandchildren and one brother, David Duke, besides a host of distant relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer at his home on June 17th, and burial was made in the family cemetery. May the Lord bless those who feel their loss.

THEME FOR BIBLE SUNDAY.—

The American Bible Society announces that "For Such an Age as This" has been agreed upon as the theme for Universal Bible Sunday to be observed this year on Sunday, December 8th. The Rev. Lynn Harold Hough, D. D., pastor of the American Presbyterian Church of Montreal, has prepared the 7,500-word brochure which, as in previous years, will be mailed to 80,000 pastors all over the United States. The background of Dr. Hough's ministerial experience as pastor of important Methodist pulpits, including the Central Methodist Episcopal Church of Detroit, is a guarantee that this brochure will be acceptable to ministers. His recognized literary skill as an author and contributor to religious periodicals is an assurance that the release of this, his most recent publication, will be eagerly awaited.

ALIEN LABOR RESTRICTED IN BRITAIN —

The unemployment situation in England has forced the British government to guard very carefully the right of entry of foreigners for employment in that country, it is reported by the Bureau of Labor of the Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

An order was issued in 1920 by the British government prohibiting the entry, without written permit, of a foreigner into the United Kingdom to enter employment. Under that order, the employer must first guarantee that no worker already employed will be displaced by the foreigner; second, prove that he cannot fill the position from the workers available; and third, prove that the prevailing rate of wages will be paid to the foreigner. Permits are usually issued for only a limited period of time.

Permits are usually issued for young foreigners, male or female, who desire to take minor positions in banks, offices, and the like, with a view to obtaining some knowledge of the English language and English business methods, as it is felt that such persons are a valuable link later on in life for the furtherance of British export trade.

PHYSICAL vs. MENTAL.—

An announcement from the White House forecasts an expenditure for the army, navy, public works and postal deficit of approximately $1,100,800,000 for this year, an increase of $91,800,000 over last year. For next year it was estimated that those expenditures would reach $1,129,200,000, an increase of $28,400,000. For 1932 the estimate placed the figures at $1,145,800,000, an increase of $16,600,000, and in 1933 at $1,148,800,000, an increase of $3,000,000, bringing the total estimated increase to $139,800,000 and the total expenditure for the period to $4,524,600,000.

Thus billions will be spent by the government on guns, cruisers, and the maintenance of the army and navy; farm relief to protect the food supply, and on roads, harbors and waterways to secure rapid communication.

Measures providing for the establishment of a department of education ask for the comparatively small annual appropriation of $1,500,000. If those huge sums can be expended in increasingly large amounts for the physical welfare of this country's population, is it possible that there could be a protest against this small additional appropriation to aid in their mental development?

WHERE PEOPLE WORSHIP.—

Mayor Childs, of Newton, Mass., who is a member of Eliot Church, in Newton, speaking not long ago at the Central Church in Newtonville, paid his respects to the people who spend the Church hours on golf links. "I have friends," said Mayor Childs, "who say to me, 'I can worship God as well out on the golf links on Sunday morning as in Church.' I always reply to them, 'You can, but you don't.'"

That is a very apt reply. A fair number of people fail to discriminate between real worship and a merely exuberant feeling in the presence of nature, or in association with one's fellowmen. We recall the artist who remarked upon this effect of nature, as an apology for the neglect of the Church. He described the view of a beautiful landscape from a great height: "It makes one feel like embracing everybody in the universe"—a remark suggestive of that vague and ineffectual feeling that has really little relationship to man or God, unless it becomes crystalized in definite relationship and service. One's fellowmen are not likely to be near enough for much embracing in that moment of expansiveness.

The Church and its services of worship, when rightly conceived and expressed, represent points of definite contact and influence. They ought to bring the latent religion in the soul into active function. A Church that realizes its true nature and mission represents something in the life of man that nothing else can supply—and the man who denies this simply reveals the fact that he has never found what such a Church has to give.

Unfortunately not all Churches attain that ideal. But Churches are made up of people, and we must bring something even to the Church, if we would find what it has to give in return.

A young man in the West remarked to the editor the other day, after speaking of his early association with a Congregational Church, near Lawrence, Mass., "But nobody goes to Church out here." That, of course, is an exaggeration; but it suggests the need of safeguarding the frontiers of our spiritual life. Busy America, and holiday America, are hardly realizing the need of taking time to be holy, and the fact that in some measure it does take time to be holy.—The Congregationalist.

ZIONISTS END CONGRESS.—

The sixteenth Zionist biennial Congress, at Zurich, which was in session for two weeks, with 322 delegates from all parts of the world, adjourned this Sunday morning following a night meeting of twelve hours.

Resolutions of protest against anti-Jewish persecutions in Soviet Russia and in Yemen, Central Arabia, were adopted at the final session.

The British administration of Palestine, under the mandate of the League of Nations, was charged with continuing its "passive attitude" toward the needs and the development of the Jewish National Home in another resolution unanimously adopted.

The resolution stated that the Palestine government has fulfilled few of the demands made by the fifteenth Zionist Congress, which met two years ago in Basle. The resolution expresses the view that the London authorities have a favorable attitude toward the development of the Jewish National Home in Palestine, but much of this good will and willingness to co-operate is lost on the way from London to Jerusalem.

Leaders of the Jewish communities on four continents, Zionists and non-Zionists alike, gathered in the Town Hall for the opening session of the council of extended Jewish agency for Palestine. The American delegation, headed by Louis Marshall and Felix M. Warburg, representing the non-Zionists, and by Louis Lipsky and Morris Rollenberg, representing the American Zionists, was the largest.

The colorful assembly which included some of the most prominent statesmen, bankers and philanthropists, side by side with humble farm workers from the valley of Jezreel, Palestine, gave a great ovation to Dr. Chaim Weizmann, prime mover of the Jewish agency extension plan to unite Zionists and non-Zionists when he entered the hall accompanied by Dr. Albert Einstein, the famous scientist; Louis Marshall, president of the American Jewish committee; Sir Herbert Samuel, British Liberal leader and former high commissioner of Palestine; Lord Melchett, Felix M. Warburg, New York banker; Oscar Wassermann, director of the Deutschbank, Berlin, and Max Warburg, Hamburg banker.

"We American Jews," Louis Marshall told the assembly, "are unknown to you. Our traditions and habits differ. The idea prevails among some of you that Americans are 'money bags.' We are not 'money bags.' We are flesh and blood. We are Jews; Jews who respond to every cause in Judaism, who have done our duty to our brethren in Eastern Europe, and will continue to do so. We have done our duty to Palestine and will continue to do so, if you will let us. We feel confident that you will let us. We have been united through Dr. Weizmann's statesmanship. We have one God. We are one people. Let us be of one spirit!"

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Congregationalist, Boston, Mass., great national weekly of the Congregationalist Church, carried on its front cover page last week the familiar faces of ten active ministers and laymen of the Christian Churches.

Rev. J. F. Morgan and family, of Norfolk, driving through to the Valley of Virginia, stopped a while in Richmond and made a short visit to THE CHRISTIAN SUN office. They were hither bound for the Bible Conference and also the Valley Central Conference, which is in session this week at Timber Ridge Christian Church.

Miss Lucy E. Branch, Garner, N. C., in sending her first new dollar as a gift to missions, adds: "The suggestion in regard to the new money is fine, and I trust that many will share their new money with you for the great mission cause." As report on page 8 this week shows, quite a few are sharing their first new money, and this is deeply appreciated.

President Beougher and his associates are working with commendable zeal and loyalty to make Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., worthy the patronage and support of our Christian constituency in Alabama and Georgia. Parents contemplating sending their sons and daughters to a junior college of Christian character and repute should see or write Dr. Beougher.

"It gives us much pleasure to donate to missions the first two new dollars we have received, and trust that you may receive many more. Your friends, Dr. and Mrs. J. T. Clack, Abanda, Ala." Many more of similar mind and heart are remembering the request to help consecrate the new issue of money to kingdom enlargement, as our acknowledgments on page 8 of this week's SUN show.

Mr. John T. Kernodle, Richmond, Va., whose efficient services go a long way toward making THE CHRISTIAN SUN prompt in its arrival each week, neat, attractive and easy to read when it does arrive, was an agreeable visitor at Elon College last week, where he has many warm and admiring friends. John T. is one of the secure, stout young men of our active and progressive First Church, Richmond, in which Church he has been a real factor from its organization.

Rev. A. W. Hurst, president of Palmer College, Albany, Mo., is to move into the parsonage at Elon College and became pastor of the Elon Community Church September 1st. Bro. Hurst will receive warm welcome at Elon where he is so favorably recalled as preacher of the baccalaureate sermon at last commencement. Under date of August 6th, President Hurst writes, "I am anxious to become as intimately acquainted with our work in the Southern Convention as possible, since I am to move to that territory."

This line from Porto Rico is of more than personal interest: "Dear Dr. Atkinson,—I have been enjoying THE SUN these days more than ever. I noticed a call for a gift of the first new dollar received by all SUN readers for missions. I have just gotten the enclosed dollar, which I send with pleasure and hope that all SUN readers may do the same. I know that they would not miss it in a month's time, and I am sure you could do lots with it for the cause you are striving so hard to make a success. Yours most faithfully, (signed) D. P. Barrett."

Rev. D. M. Spence, pastor of our Henderson, N. C., Church, is resigning as pastor of that Church and of Fullers Chapel, his resignation to take effect November 1st, at the close of the present Conference year. Bro. Spence will have served Henderson as pastor for two years and was gratified to receive a unanimous call from the Church to continue, but on prayerful consideration has decided to make a change. Any of our Churches wishing a conscientious, competent and consistent preacher, pastor and builder will do well to correspond with Bro. Spence.

The following announcement is received with appreciation: "Mr. and Mrs. George Berman Cox announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary Vivian, to Rev. G. D. Underhill, Saturday, August 10, 1929, Washington, D. C." Rev. G. D. Underhill graduated from Elon College at its recent commencement and is located as director of Christian education, St. Paul's M. E. Church, Goldsboro, N. C. Mrs. Underhill was also a student at Elon College and is from Waverly, Va. We wish this promising and popular young couple all the joys that a happy wedded life can bring.

Rev. T. J. Green, pastor, reports good meetings at Apple's Chapel week ending August 3rd, and at Hines' Chapel week ending August 10th. Rev. R. A. Whitten assisted the pastor at Apple's. There was a good attendance, much interest was manifest, the spiritual life of the Church was greatly built up, there were many reclamations, and at the close of the meeting six united with the Church. Rev. J. M. Allred assisted at Hines. The interest in the meeting throughout was good, and the pastor feels that the Church was strengthened spiritually. At the close of the meeting four united with the Church, and there are others to unite.

That is an apt reply the Mayor of Newton, Mass., says he always gives to his friends of the Sunday golf-link habit. "I have friends," says the Mayor, "who say to me, 'I can worship God as well out on the golf links Sunday morning as in Church.' I always reply, 'You can, but you don't.'" That covers Sunday golfing and all other Sunday sports and outings. We can worship God out on a Sunday morning auto ride or at a Sunday picnic in the open country—but the bare truth is that we don't. The folks who create a quiet, restful Sabbath, even for the non-churchgoers and pleasure-seekers to desecrate are those who with David can say, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of our Lord."

Rev. H. George Robertson writes encouragingly of the work and outlook in First Church, Richmond. Besides being director of Christian education and pastor's assistant, Bro. Robertson is having to do the preaching in the absence of the pastor, Dr. C. C. Ryan, who is now on a visit to the Holy Land. Both Sunday School and Church attendance are holding up well for the summer, and the spirit of co-operation is noteworthy and most commendable, Brother Robertson thinks. And then this line, "I enclose a five-dollar bill of the new money handed to me yesterday as a contribution from the Men's Bible Class of our Sunday School." And from another source THE SUN editor learns that the weekly prayer-meeting in the Church is not only holding up, but actually increasing in interest and attendance during the summer.

Our Congregationalist brethren, as page 8 of this week's SUN will show, are blazing the way in China for other mission boards in foreign fields. Having a great work in China for nearly seventy years, they have labored with the thought of establishing an indigenous Church, a Chinese-governed Christian Church, of building up in China the kingdom of our Lord. They have at last put their enormous Chinese work in control of the Chinese Board and under the constitution of that board. This is that toward which the Christian Churches of all communions are, or should be, working, for when all is done and said, Chinese Christians can win Chinese to Christ and find access to the Chinese heart more effectually than foreigners can hope to do. The same is true of other nations. Still, the foreign missionary must go to establish and to help carry on such a work. We congratulate our Congregationalist brethren in pioneering in China in a manner that must become ultimately prevalent with missionary work in all countries. The news they send us for our page 8 this week is worth-while news indeed and will be read with wide interest.

Rev. J. L. Neese, Palm Street Christian Church, Greensboro, is a happy pastor, and the people of his Sunday School and congregation are about as happy as he is. They have done a beautiful piece of work for their Church in adding to their plant six class-rooms to the three and the main auditorium which the Church already had. The opening and thanksgiving service was held Sunday, August 11th, with three services and large, happy audiences. THE SUN editor, with Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, a former pastor, participated in the 11 o'clock service immediately following the Sunday School, when the new rooms were all thrown open as additions to the main auditorium and were well filled with young and old who had gathered for the joyous occasion. After a bountiful luncheon served at the rear of the Church under the shade of the trees, a thanksgiving and praise service was held, in which there were several talks and musical features that were exceedingly interesting and inspiring. At the evening service, Rev. J. L. Foster, Elon College, preached, administered the Communion and baptismal service. It was a great and a good day at Palm Street. This Church has some most faithful and devoted members and friends who have certainly sacrificed to put the addition to their Church at a cost of about $2,500, which has been paid with the exception of about $400, and this is being raised, and the Church expects to come to Conference clear of indebtedness. Be it said to the everlasting credit of this congregation that while they were building something for themselves they did not cease or even decrease their offering to missions and the other enterprises of the Church, thus showing a spirit of willingness to share with others the joy that they were getting out of the work they were doing and the sacrifice they were making for their Lord.

MAN'S INFALLIBLE GUIDE.

"I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I go away, I will send Him unto you, and when He is come, will convict the world in respect of sin and of righteousness—when the Spirit of truth is come He will guide you into all truth."—John 16:7, 13.

Man's infallible Guide is the Holy Spirit. Christ personifies this power by calling Him the Comforter. He possesses the power of enlightenment, truth, and conviction. By the Holy Spirit we not only mean the third person of the Trinity, but the personal representative of the first and second persons. The Comforter is the ever-living and ever-present spiritual manifestation of Jesus Christ. Just as the gospel means the good news about the ministry of our Lord upon the earth, so the Holy Spirit is the gospel or good news to us, that God has not forgotten His children, but rather has furnished them with an infallible Guide, which is the Holy Spirit.

1. The comforting power of the Holy Spirit. "If I go away, I will send the Comforter unto you." Thus spake Jesus as He was about to depart from this world to sit with His Father on the right hand of His throne to make intercession for the world. It is expedient for you that I go away, said He. And they began to be sorrowful and despondency filled their hearts, for the twelve disciples feared a life of failure which would come to them if Jesus left. There was never a more discouraged group of men in all the world than on the day when Jesus announced His departure. What would they do without Him? For these years they had relied entirely upon his teaching, advice and inspiration in spreading the good news of the new kingdom. Now He is to leave them, and furthermore he tells them that they are to have a hard time without Him. He even reminded them that they would be thrown out of various synagogues and on every hand would meet rebuffs, but he said, by way of comfort, "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before you. If ye were of the world, the world would love you, but because ye are not of the world, the world hateth you." But be not discouraged, for when the Holy Spirit is come upon you, which I shall send, ye shall bear witness of me and the Holy Spirit shall comfort you, sustain and help you to bear your burdens. Jesus said in the fourteenth chapter of John's gospel that the Holy Comforter which He would give them would abide with them forever. In times of perplexity they would be guided into all truth, and in times of persecution it would remind them of His closing words when on the mountain he preached to them, saying, "Rejoice and be exceedingly glad; for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."

The comforting power of the Holy Spirit is helpful to us, one and all. It may be likened to the work of the farmer who stores his barn with hay during the summer season. From that supply he feeds the stock and cattle all during the winter. When the winter comes and all of life seems desolate and bare, and when the weary horses are neighing in their stalls, the farmer goes up into the hayloft and pushes down great arms-ful of sweet clover and timothy hay and every horse and cow has an abundance. So Jesus has given the rich treasures of His truth unto men and women. Many of them, they have forgotten and become hungry. Often they grow cold and discouraged, and the Holy Spirit comes and takes of the things of Christ, and by them gives us comfort and food.

There was a student in university who was blind. He used to depend totally upon the assistance of his fellow-students to help him from class to class. When he received his M. A. diploma, he called upon me to read the inscription on his diploma, bearing the names of the university chancellor and board of trustees. The students in the university were a comfort to this man. In like manner, the Holy Spirit is a comforter to us all. We are like blind men—many of us need to be led from place to place. And Jesus has promised not to leave us comfortless, but to be with us always, even unto the end of the world. As long as the world stands, this pledge is infallible. Though we cannot always feel His presence, we can know that He is the same yesterday, today and forever. There may be times when He seems far removed, even in times of greatest need and distress. As one is under surgical operation, he stretches forth his hand to a nurse or friend and exclaims, "Don't leave me." The anesthetic is given, and the last thing you feel is the clasp of that hand; the last thing you see is the face of that friend or nurse. Then a moment of darkness, and the first thing you see is the face of the friend again. So God stands by us one and all. His ministering angels bend over us, and by faith in Him we know he will not forsake us. Hear his own words, "I will not leave thee nor forsake thee. In all thy afflictions I will be with thee, and the angel of my face shall save thee."

2. The convicting power of the Holy Spirit. "When He is come, He will convict the world in respect of sin." Not only did the early followers of Jesus need comfort, such as the Holy Spirit gave them; but they needed assistance in their work. Their burdened souls needed to realize their load was not as heavy as it looked. Hence, the work of the Holy Spirit in going ahead as a forerunner. And when they preached, behold the ground was prepared and the soil was ready for the seeds. Like a giant plow, the Holy Spirit had gone deep into the lives of men and upturned sin, for even the strongest heart could not help from breaking as it became conscious of the awfulness of sin. Nothing is more overwhelming than to see one's self as God sees Him. This wonderful revelation of self can only be attained through the convicting power of the Spirit. Once while visiting Fort Monroe, a man in the party was looking at some of the great guns, when an officer guide said, "With this gun we can tear to pieces yonder wall and shatter thousands of lives even thousands of yards away." The visitor quickly said, "No, sir; the gun itself is harmless." "Of course," said the officer, "we must first place in it the necessary powder and the shell, and then the disastrous work will be done." "No," said the other; "all of your guns and powder and shell are harmless in themselves." "You are right," said the officer, "there must be a spark of fire to ignite the powder, and then the great work of destruction is wrought." There may be big guns in our Churches and communities. They may use all kinds of tactics in business and for years get by; but when the power of the Holy Spirit is touched off with the fire of God, men's lives are laid threadbare and we realize the truth in the proverbial statement that we "Be sure our sins will find us out."

3. The Holy Spirit will convict the world of righteousness because I go unto my Father. Not only is the office of the Holy Spirit to convict men of sin, but to convince of righteousness. Thus it serves a twofold purpose. He is a spirit of holiness. When it works through men and women it dwells in their hearts and makes them to become holy. In the words of Paul, we are reminded that our bodies are the temple of the Holy Spirit and the temple is holy unto God. When once convicted of sin against the body, or the mind, or self, or another, the work of the Holy Spirit begins to convince one of the harm thereto and lift one's self upward to a better way. Paul used the figure of temple to teach this message to the Jew. To most of them the temple was the most sacred place in existence: it was a place of purification. Hence, if God was to dwell in the body, it must of necessity be kept pure and clean.

The Holy Spirit illuminates our judgments and fashions our decisions for righteousness. It opens up the buried faults and sins, and shows us what we might become. It unfolds visions of glory and ideal possibilities for us one and all. The significant meaning of the word reveal is "to uncover" or to make manifest. The Holy Spirit hath uncovered the fact that God made man in His own image, created Him to have dominion over the beasts of the field and to be the greatest of all his creatures. But time has dulled his ears. The Holy Spirit must minister unto him. He is like a deaf person going through the woods at the break of a spring morning. The birds are singing, but to him their world of melody is as though it did not exist. To appreciate what is going on, he must be endowed with the sense of hearing. He is like a man going into an orchard whose trees are heavily laden with rich, ripe varieties of fruit. But unless the man has a sense of smell and sight and taste, all of its delicacies are hidden and unknown. To give him a new sense of vision and sight and endow him with the ability to taste and smell the fruits of the garden is to reveal unto him a new world.

The Lord speaks of the things that are prepared for them that love Him. But many a man is devoid of the things that are prepared for him. He knows not the feasts that await him. He has not the power to see and appreciate them. Hence, the Holy Spirit comes to reveal them unto him by endowing him with the necessary taste. It gave him a desire for the Lord's fellowship.

It is not by might or by power that man is led to appreciate the better things of the world, but by the Spirit indwelling in the recesses of his heart. There comes to each person, who is convinced of the wonderful workings of the Holy Spirit, a power such as he has never experienced. It came upon the saints of old, who were told to tarry until the Holy Spirit should come upon them. They were promised that they should receive power when it was come upon them, and it was so. One can hardly imagine a person so foolish as to attempt to run a piece of heavy machinery by hand power when wires but await connection to convey irresistible electric current from the dynamos of the great power-house. Yet most people are living in such a neglectful short-sighted way that they need to be strengthened by the power of the Holy Spirit. Indeed, it is a great inspiration to meet people whose lives are filled with divine power and who have a passion for serving others. Such people carry on the great transforming work of the world.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

FINISHING HIS WORK.

Christians should bear in mind that it is Christ's work, and not our work, that we are doing in trying to make the world Christian. Christ did not finish His work. He left the work unfinished, depending upon two forces, two forces that were to co-operate as if one force, to finish His unfinished task. Jesus realized that He was only making a beginning, a very safe, successful and powerful beginning, but still only a beginning.

In the opening verses of the Acts, Luke, the writer, very clearly points this out. "A former treatise" (the third gospel), Luke had written of "all that Jesus began to do and to teach." Then Luke supplies the words of Christ Himself to show how His unfinished work was to be finished, and upon whom He was depending as a force in the world to finish that work: "Ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and ye shall be my witnesses" (Acts 1:8). The forces upon which our Lord then was depending to finish His work and to co-operate as if one force were, first, the Holy Spirit, whom He had promised should come, and renewed men. These were to constitute in the world a power that would be resistless and would build up the kingdom of heaven on earth. Transforming a world, and redeeming men, from a life of evil and error and sin was the most stupendous task ever conceived in the plan of God, and planted in the heart of man.

Evangelizing our community and the world is the work of the Holy Spirit through redeemed and renewed souls. The part of man is to inquire and learn of God His will and way of doing this, and then patiently, persistently and fearlessly pursue the course directed of the Holy Spirit. We are to witness for Christ in the power of the Holy Spirit. It is well to have this in mind. This power may employ culture, psychology, science, learning, but none of these can be substituted for this power, nor can either or all supplant this power. We are to bear witness of Him by and through the power of the Holy Spirit.

And this is a salient factor in the life of every Christian who would win souls and build up the kingdom, namely: we receive this power, not by and through study, and learning and pursuit of earthly plans and purposes, but through worship and through tarrying with God and communing with Him in prayer and meditation and devotion. No achievement or plan or pursuit of man can ever evangelize this world and make it a friendly world. Men have tried every conceivable device, only to find themselves entangled and ensnared in the net of their own weaving. Mankind, left to his own way and device, has always spent more, and done more, to destroy than to save and elevate his fellowmen. He has always spent more, even civilized man has, for war and destruction, than he has for enlightenment, improvement and progress.

The work of making this a friendly world is the work of our Lord, and only by following His purposes and His plans will the world ever become friendly. We shall learn these plans and purposes by studying His Word, meditating upon His precepts, and tarrying in meditation and in prayer to learn His will. Winning souls to Him and building up a world brotherhood is His work, but He is depending upon us, under the power of His Spirit, to do that work in His name and for His sake.

A CUP OF COLD WATER.

The Bible does not teach nor sponsor the doctrine that "Whosoever shall give a cup of cold water shall have his reward." There is no such quotation or teaching in Scripture, as far as this writer has ever found. This is a part of the cheap and shallow thinking of our day that "he who serves his fellowman, serves his Lord." One may serve his fellowman all his days and yet vehemently deny that there is any Lord or God. The most passionate plea of most, if not all, atheists is the plea to serve mankind and leave God out of it, He being, according to their foolishness, "a myth or an invention of the mind of man." This writer does not recall reading or hearing of any considerable length the utterances of an agnostic, or an atheist, that did not seek to elevate man and make humanity and the service of humanity the supreme thing, putting humanity and service of humanity above God and thus ruling God out altogether. This writer has talked with individuals who claimed no belief in a Supreme Being whatever, and yet claimed that humanity was the chief power in the world, and if one wanted to do good, one could find plenty of needy people around about whom one might help and thus do good.

Christ did identify Himself with man. He it was who first made humanity conscious of itself. Till He came, Medes and Persians, Greeks and Romans, reckoned all other nations than themselves as barbarians. And even the Jews, likewise used the word "Gentile," to distinguish all the other nations as aliens except themselves. Even Aristotle, the great Greek philosopher and scholar of all time, taught that men were naturally divided into Greeks and barbarians, "the former fitted to rule, the latter to be slaves."

The followers of our Lord gained a new conception of mankind, and Paul, in Colossians, declares that in Christ "There is neither Greek, nor Jew, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Christ is all and in all." It was in and through Christ that the middle wall of partition between Greek, Roman, Jew and Gentile was broken down, and in Him all became one, and through Him and by service to Him do we serve best and effectually our fellowman.

Now, as to the cup-of-cold-water doctrine, read Matthew 10:42: "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, he shall in no wise lose his reward." Whoever leaves from that Scripture the words "only in the name of a disciple" tears the heart out of it and eliminates the soul from it, for those are the words that link up mankind to his Lord. And the other Scripture referring to the cup of cold water is Mark 9:41, which makes the matter even clearer: "Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, he shall not lose his reward."

The most wicked and most ungodly sinner on earth will even, and does often, serve well his fellow-man by giving not only a cup of cold water but maybe also some food and money to his fellow-man in need; but there is no promise in Scripture that such a person shall have a reward for his deed. Christ did identify Himself with man by making humanity conscious of itself, and thus making of man a new creature in Him, but be it borne in mind that Christ did not eliminate Himself from the equation. It is, therefore, to be done in His name, for His sake, and to His glory, if a reward is to come, and if there is to be a blessing. No wonder a writer said recently that the most pernicious thing to vice in our day is much of the so-called "charity." This, for the reason that such charity is carried on solely in the name of man, and for the sake of man, and even to relieve the need of man, and maybe to help man, with never a thought of glorifying the God who made man and in whose image man is made. He serves God best who serves his fellowmen most; only, however, when such service is rendered in the name of God, and for the sake of His Son, who alone has the power to reach down to the lowest and the most needy, and the most despondent, and lift them to high levels of righteousness and right conduct in His name. J. O. A.

CHRISTIANS "NOT OF THE WORLD."

In the last two chapters of the Book of Revelation is given a description of the world, and of heaven, as they are to be. This was a new heaven and a new earth which John saw, after the wickedness of man had done its worst and the righteousness of man, through the power of God, had done its best. Through all the struggles and trials, warfare, death, destruction, ruin, despair, darkness, John was permitted to see, there came at least a new heaven and a new earth. This was given to John in the spirit of prophecy. This same John had long since heard the words of His Lord: "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world" (John 17:16). These words were having their weight and were doing their work in the world, even while John was alone on Patmos. That which John could not with his natural eye discern, he was permitted, with prophetic vision, to see, namely: how this declaration of our Lord had gotten hold of His disciples. How this was working in the world is told of in a matchless description by a Christian writing in the second century. Barry, in his "Social Philosophy" quotes "An Epistle to Diognetus," written less than two hundred years after Christ, as follows:

"By the second century the average Christian had come to regard himself as a member of a new world-wide fellowship. 'Christians' are not different from the rest of mankind in country or language or customs. They do not live in special cities of their own. They do not speak a peculiar dialect or practice any social idiosyncrasies. They live in Greek or Barbarian cities according as each man's lot has fallen to him. They follow the customs in which they were brought up in dress and diet, and in other ways of life. And yet in a marvelous and admittedly startling way they show forth the constitution of their own Commonwealth. They live in their own countries, but are there as pilgrims. They share in everything as citizens, and yet submit to everything as aliens. Every foreign land is their country, yet every country a foreign land to them. They pass their time upon the earth, but their citizenship is in heaven. . . . They are attacked by the Jews and persecuted by the Greeks as belonging to another race, yet those who hate them can give no reason for their hostility. In one word, what the soul is to the body, that Christians are to the world. The soul extends through all the limbs of the body; so do Christians through all the cities of the world. The soul has its habitation in the body, but yet it is not of the body; so Christians have their habitation in the world and yet are not of the world."

In this it will be seen that the Christians of the second century were subordinating all earthly loyalty, practice and patriotism to a spiritual loyalty to their Lord. And while they were true to whatever land and country they lived in, their first and chief allegiance was to their Lord; for they realized, as Christians have always done, that they were strangers and pilgrims here, and while seeking with zeal, purpose and energy to make this the very best of all possible worlds, they were at the same time seeking a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. They, like Christians of all time, were in the world, and as true Christians, did as their Lord would have them do—make this a brighter, a better and a happier world, but ever realizing that they were not of the world, and that there was to be a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth were to pass away and all things were to become new.

MINISTERS' CONFERENCE.

No class needs the sum of experience, vision, and knowledge of the whole class more than ministers. Their work is so important, so vital in its relation to the welfare of human society, as well as the salvation of souls, that they need get-together meetings and conferences for sympathy, unity, and co-operative service in preaching, pastoral visitation, and finance. Finance, in this day, is more important than it was a half-century ago. The all-important work of the Church was at that period the proclamation of the gospel and the conversion of sinners. The great task now is the edification of believers, and the creation of a missionary, educational and benevolent mind for real service. In most communities the majority of adults are identified with the Church by membership or association. This is the working period of Christianity in this country. The period of preaching to sinners, and leading them to repentance for sin and faith in Jesus Christ, was the emotional period of the gospel. It was a great period. Sermons, songs, and prayers, all united in making a great spiritual appeal; and the mourners' bench, regeneration, and shouts of praise to God made glorious times in Churches, tents, and bush arbors. That stage, under enlightened conditions, seems to have passed, and we are now in the time not only of believing, but of doing.

The emphasis of the gospel proclamation is now upon living, giving, and working. Apprenticeship in the field of business is a limited period. Then comes a life of service. Learning of Jesus Christ as a Saviour, the experience of the new birth, profession and union with the Church may be called spiritual apprenticeship. Then comes a life of service as members of the Church and workers in the kingdom of God. It amounts to nothing to pass examination in apprenticeship and then not follow a trade. It amounts to little to pass the emotional experience of salvation and then do nothing more. And it may safely be stated that the second step in religion is the most difficult of the two. It is easier to get sinners converted than to get Christians to work. Yet, the cause of Christ depends on the followers of Jesus Christ to do several things in a liberal and systematic way. The support of the local Church by attendance, living and giving is an obligation that rests upon all members. The support of missions by sympathy, prayer and contributions is an added obligation that appeals to all souls devoted to Him who directed His followers to "go" and preach the gospel to every creature. A like obligation rests upon members for the support of the enterprises of the Church. Ministers' conferences emphasize these obligations.

CHAPLAIN ROUNTREE IN ENGLAND.

Dear SUN Readers:

We are now about thirty-six hours from Weymouth, England, which is our next and last stop before heading for home. From Gibraltar the days and nights have passed without special incident. Daily duties in gunnery, navigation and cleaning have engaged us steadily. The athletes give us some shining promises for the ship in their afternoon work-outs. Motion pictures every evening entertain us, and often there is singing for all hands just before the movies. Nobody is sick and everybody seems to be happy.

On the eve of our arrival at Gibraltar, on the date of my last letter, all hands were made happy by a whale of a "happy hour" which the boys put on. It was a "wow!" not because it was so artistic or professional, but because of clever foolishness and some very unusual features. It consisted of band numbers, dancing skits, impersonators, wrestling, boxing and movies—"The Million-Dollar Handicap," with Vera Reynolds. Midshipmen Sass, Hindrelet, Patton and Kenna, the "Personality Boys," introduced a little comedy that almost cracked our ribs with laughter and made us wonder why "Flo" Ziegfeld goes about the country looking for talent. I say that he sure "sk'ps" "Crabtown by the Sea." Patton played the role of a Spanish girl who was a good dancer, but being unable to speak English she had to be thrown out. Sergeant Stewart, of the Marines, a wrestler, demonstrated some rare manhood, which but few ever see. He went into the ring against two other "bone crushers" (we call them), who were apparently as fine specimens of American manhood as he. From start to finish, things were hot—those two men trying to pin his shoulders to the mat, and he struggling in Goliath proportions to keep them from it and pin their own shoulders there. The interest of the captain and the officers was almost violent. I thought they were going through the ropes to see what it was all about. It turned out to be a "draw." The Navy has great pride in its athletes, and the Utah expects Stewart to be the all-Navy champion next spring when we meet the other ships.

Jackson, a Virginia negro, and Tromino, a Filipino, were a scream. Jackson himself is a comic sketch ordinarily, and the comedy of his fighting stuff was enough for a whole evening. These are some enlivening things a thousand men-o'-war may do at sea to make life worth while to one another.

Our stay in Gibraltar was a short but pleasant one. This is an English port, besides being one of their mighty forts. Liberty was granted all hands and many availed themselves of it to see the town, to take a little European refreshment "for the stomach's sake," and to buy a few souvenirs.

The rock of Gibraltar is 1,400 feet above the sea level. As a fort, it is pierced through by numerous caves and labyrinthic passages which are used as a means of communication and access. On the summit are the British barracks and the signal station, and around it are the towns of Gibraltar, Spanish Town, Algeciras, about 20,000 people in all. The town is divided by the Alameda Gardens into North Town and South Town. In the latter can still be seen in evidence the old Moorish fortifications. Gibraltar is very attractive at a distance—my only disappointment being that it had no Prudential Insurance Company sign on it. Ha! ha!

One sad thing happened to mar our hoyday. The Arkansas challenged the Utah for that big silver trophy, the Battenburg cup, which is awarded to the winning raceboat crew. Our crew has won this cup three times successively. Of course, we accepted the challenge. It was a thrilling race from start to finish, and we lost by two boat-lengths. The crew did nobly, and we are mighty proud of them. We expect to have the treasure back in its old roosting-place on the Utah before many moons.

The fellows are now all cocked and primed for Weymouth and London. I understand that only about 200 are able to afford London. They will have a big time, and don't forget that the rest of them will also. Weymouth may not be big enough for a fleet overnight, but "overday" the men-o'-wars' men will go as far as their money will let them and see all there is to be seen.

A WORD OF REMEMBRANCE.

On Wednesday following the fourth Sunday in July, it was my privilege to attend the Elder reunion at New Hope Church, in Chambers County, Ala. This is always an occasion of interest and pleasure. It is interesting to meet the descendants of this great and good man, Rev. W. M. J. Elder, who was the pioneer preacher of the Christian Church in the far South. It is a great pleasure to me to have known for all these years the illustrious family. It was a joy indeed to meet the members of the family who were present at the last reunion.

Not so many relatives were present as usual, but some were there who had not attended former reunions. Much interest was manifested in erecting a suitable marker at the graves of Bro. and Sister Elder.

The treasurer reported something over $100 already in hand for this purpose. This effort is commendable from the fact that he founded the first Church of our order in this section, namely: New Hope, where the family reunion is held annually during the week of our annual revival meeting.

Here at Old New Hope Church, we have had a great meeting this week; I think one of the best meetings held here during my pastorate of twenty-three years. It was a joy to my heart to have as my helper Staley Hunt, my own son, who did the preaching during the meeting and whose efforts were highly appreciated by the large and attentive audiences who attended. Eight new names were added to the roll.

G. D. HUNT.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Chautauqua and Summer School of Christian Education held its eighth annual session at Elon College, N. C., July 27th to August 2, 1929. It is conducted on the plan of a regular school, with well-equipped teachers in each department. The standards of the International Council of Religious Education are met, and both denominational and international credit is given for all work done. The time is occupied in worship, lectures, study, regular class work and examinations. Vesper services, followed by inspirational programs, close the busy days. Credit courses include Bible, missions, teaching, story-telling, children's work, and young people's work. Courses apart from credits are life investment, educational task of the Church, preachers, and their work.

The faculty this year was composed of Rev. E. E. White, Pleasant Hill, Tenn.; Miss Lucy Eldredge, Dayton, Ohio; Miss Priscilla Chace, Raleigh, N. C.; Rev. J. E. McCauley, Norfolk, Va.; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.; Miss Clara E. Gill, Henderson, N. C.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C.; Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va.; Dr. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va.; Miss Pattie Cogbill, Waverly, Va.; Rev. F. C. Lester, dean; and Mrs. Grace E. Stewart, hostess and dietician. Dr. Newman was absent on account of the sickness of his wife. The ministerial group selected other ministers to substitute for Dr. Newman and had interesting discussions of subjects considered of vital importance to preachers.

There seemed to be earnest desire on the part of teachers and students to learn what is most needed in Sunday School education and Church work. The atmosphere, all the way through, in worship, study, and recreation, seemed to be filled with spiritual inspiration, aspiration, and Christian purpose. The fellowship was spiritual in quality, lovely in expression, and prophetic in service. Every Church in the Southern Christian Convention should be represented in this school next summer. There is no other one thing of such potential value to the Convention as this Elon Summer School of Religious Education. Dean Lester has the cause in his heart, and puts his mind and energy into it. Pastors and Sunday School superintendents can do no one thing to promote the activity of their young people in the Sunday Schools and Churches equal to representation in person and by delegates from their schools next year.

The cost for the week is: registration, $2.00; room and board, $8.00, and perhaps for books $2.00, making the total $12.00, outside of transportation; and most of the transportation can be by automobile. There is no other place where a week can be spent with so little expense and such profit as at this Elon Summer School.

The registration this year was nearly a hundred. Forty-five did the work required and about a dozen obtained regular credit. When the cards were delivered by Dean Lester, it was as impressive as the delivery of diplomas at the close of a high school.

The close took place with Dean Lester behind a desk on the platform with a Bible, and on each side of the Bible a candle—one representing Christ and the other the Church. Then all the school lighted little candles from these and marched out of the chapel, singing as they marched in front of the dormitory, and closed with prayer.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

One of the compensations of one who travels for our college and meets its growing company of friends in various places is that he frequently receives refreshing ideas from the mottoes on the walls of the offices of professional and business men. I have had three such experiences quite recently, and I want to pass them on to the readers of the Elon Letter.

Not so long ago I walked in the office of a distinguished professional leader—a man who has really done things in his profession and who has received heart-aching stabs, as he described them, from persons. He found great comfort, he said, from a poster prominently displayed in his office under the title of "The Penalty of Leadership." This poster read as follows:

"In every field of human endeavor, he that is first must perpetually live in the white light of publicity. Whether the leadership be vested in a man or in a manufactured product, emulation and envy are ever at work. In art, in literature, in music, in industry, the reward and the punishment are always the same. The reward is widespread recognition; the punishment, fierce denial and detraction. When a man's work becomes a standard for the whole world, it also becomes a target for the shafts of the envious few. If his work be merely mediocre, he will be left severely alone; if he achieves a masterpiece, it will set a million tongues a-wagging. Jealousy does not protrude its forked tongue at the artist who produces a commonplace painting. Whatsoever you write, or paint, or play, or sing, or build, no one will strive to surpass or to slander you, unless your work be stamped with the seal of genius. Long, long after a great work or a good work has been done, those who are disappointed or envious continue to cry out that it cannot be done. Spiteful little voices in the domain of art were raised against our own Whistler as a mountebank long after the big world had acclaimed him its greatest artistic genius. Multitudes flocked to Bayreuth to worship at the musical shrine of Wagner, while the little group of whom he had dethroned and displaced argued angrily that he was no musician at all. The little world contained a protest that Fulton could never build a steamboat, while the big world flocked to the river banks to see his boat steam by. The leader is assailed because he is a leader, and the effort to equal him is merely added proof of that leadership. Failing to equal or excel, the follower seeks to depreciate and to destroy—but only confirms once more the superiority of that which he strives to supplant. There is nothing new in this. It is as old as the world and as old as the human passions—envy, fear, greed, ambition, and the desire to surpass. And it all avails nothing. If the leader truly leads, he remains the leader. Master-poet, master-painter, master-workman, each in his turn is assailed, and each holds his laurels through the ages. That which is good or great makes itself known, no matter how loud the clamor or denial. That which deserves to live, lives."

Some weeks thereafter I was in the office of a truly successful business man, but who is at the same time a devout and consecrated Christian.

Displayed on a poster in his office was this sentiment, "God Dwells Within the Heart":

"I took a day to search for God,
And found Him not. But as I trod
By rocky ledge, through woods untamed,
Just where one scarlet lily flamed,

I saw His footprint in the sod.
Then suddenly, all unaware,
Far off in the deep shadows, where
A solitary hermit thrush
Sang through the holy twilight hush,
I heard His voice upon the air;
And even as I marveled how
God gives us heaven here and now,
In a stir of wind that hardly shook
The poplar leaves beside the brook,
His hand was light upon my brow.
At last, with evening, as I turned Homeward, and thought what I had learned
And all that there was still to probe,
I caught the glory of His robe
Where the last fires of sunset burned.
Back to the world with quickening start,
I looked and longed for any part
In making saving Beauty be,
And from that kindling ecstasy
I knew God dwelt within my heart."

I was in the office later of a third friend, and under the glass that was immediately in front of his office chair I found a sentiment which he said he had quoted from one of the Elon Letters to which was given the title "A Morning Prayer":

"Another day has come;

O help me, God, I pray,
To full forget the bitter things

That happened yesterday.

And give me strength, O Lord,

Each issue so to meet,

That I may face Thee unashamed

Before the judgment seat.

Help me to rule myself

And kindly let me live,

To all my work, to all mankind,

My very best to give.

And should, in Thy great plan,

This day my labors end,

Forgive my sins, my soul receive

For Jesus' sake. Amen."

It is most refreshing to me as I look around among the leaders of our Church and the friends of our college to find the evidences of a deep and vital spiritual interest and concern present in the life ideals and prominent in the offices of not a few. Surely men who entertain such sentiments as these must prove to be a power for righteousness in the Church, in the community, in the kingdom.

W. A. HARPER.

A CHALLENGE TO LIBERALITY.

Evidently THE CHRISTIAN SUN has a reader in Texas who loves his Church and his Lord. He writes, of his own volition and without solicitation, so far as we know, under recent date: "You pick out ten Sunday Schools or Churches not now making a monthly offering (to missions), and for every dollar they give for a period of three months I will match it with another dollar, and their Church or school will get full credit for all they and I give. You make up your list of Churches or Sunday Schools and get their promise of cooperation. Then at the end of each month mail me a list of what each gave, and I will mail you a check for the total amount of all."

Now, what do some of our Churches and Sunday Schools not contributing anything to missions think of that? Then this brother proceeds: "I also make an offer of a dollar for each dollar you can get my own Church to give. This last offer to hold good until further notice."

This brother still holds his membership in a rural Church (whose name he gives THE SUN editor) in North Carolina, from which he went out some years ago to win his place and do his work in the world. He is yet a young man, by no means a rich man, but tithes his earnings and wants his Church to share with him the joy and gladness of helping make the world Christian. He strictly enjoins us not to use his name or let his name be known in the matter, as he wishes no praise or honor for anything he may do or amount he may give, since it is all in the name and for the sake of His Lord.

Where are the ten Churches or Sunday Schools that will accept this wonderful challenge to good works in the name of their Lord? J. O. A.

DR. AINSLIE REPLIES.

We have the following communication from Bro. Peter Ainslie concerning our recent criticism of an editorial in the Christian Union Quarterly:

"I thank you for your note on me in a recent copy of the Christian-Evangelist. You are perfectly correct in saying that I would not have written what I did years ago, because twenty years ago I actually believed the Disciples were as definitely committed to Christian union as were the Quakers to peace. In fact, I often made the comparison. Of course, there were some Quakers who went to war, as I found Disciples here and there who were not interested in Christian unity; but I sincerely believed that the great body of Disciples were committed to Christian unity ideals, as the Quakers were to peace ideals. I went so far as to affirm in the Topeka general convention, where I was presiding, that it was our commission from God. I really believed it and would then have resented its contradiction. You cannot imagine how deeply pained I was when I discovered that the great body of the Disciples were no more interested in Christian unity than the great body of the Methodists, or Presbyterians, or Baptists. Of course, there were some few Disciples, like yourself, as there were some few Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists, who were advocates of Christian unity. If the Disciples would only come out as dogmatically as the Roman Catholics for everybody to join us as the only basis for Christian unity, or on the basis of baptism by immersion as dogmatically as some of the Episcopalians on the basis of the episcopacy, I would have some relief. Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists and Christians show, by their conventional actions and literature output, far more interest in Christian unity than the Disciples. Nobody is more pained over this condition than I am. My heart cries like Isaiah for Israel; but the Disciples, as a religious body, do not care any more about Christian unity than any of the smaller bodies of Protestantism. And we are so regarded in the eyes of American Christianity. As a member of the editorial board of one of the best-known encyclopedias, it fell to my lot to write the articles on Christian unity and the Disciples. I sought modestly to give the Disciples a place in the modern Christian unity movement. Every member of the board was of the opinion that as a body the Disciples had made no more contribution to Christian unity than any other denomination; in fact, much less than some others. The only way this can be contradicted is to prove by passion and action that the Disciples are interested."

Bro. Ainslie will recall that his statement at the Topeka convention was received with great approval by our people as a whole, and that cordial support was given to the Commission on Christian Union, which was organized at that time, and later to the Association for the Promotion of Christian Unity, which succeeded the commission. This continued until the time when a more radical policy was substituted for the original program of the organization. It is quite true that the Disciples as a whole are not interested in this later program for union because they cannot separate it in essence from the platform of the Christian connection which they rejected almost at the beginning of their history.

As to the failure of other Church representatives to give us credit for any part in the development of the Christian union sentiment which has now become so popular, we cannot see that the fault rests with us. It is, primarily, a matter of history and ultimately we shall receive the credit which is now so frequently withheld. The statement of Dr. deBlois in his recent appraisal of our work, is an earnest of better things. After all, the question of credit is of small moment. We agree heartily with Dr. Ainslie that we should continue to prove our interest in our own program by steadfast and thorough-going loyalty to our original message.—Christian-Evangelist (Disciples).

"Let us remember that unto all men charity is due; give what we ask; and pity while we blame."

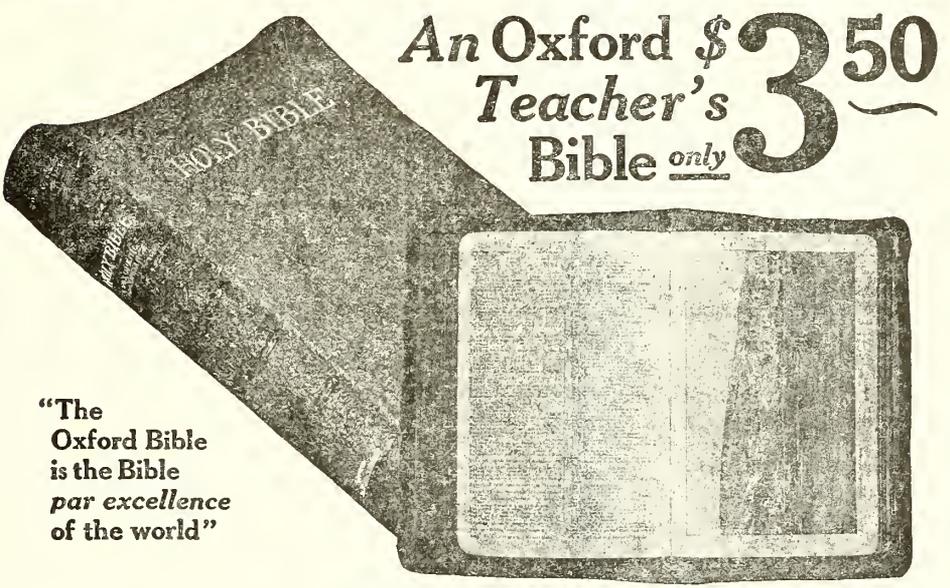

THE SUN LETTER.

We received a check this week from our dear brother, Rev. J. F. Morgan, renewing the subscription of Mrs. M. E. Stewart, Norfolk, Va. Route 3. Bro. Morgan tells me that Mrs. Stewart is a faithful member of the Berea Christian Church and has been taking THE SUN for more than fifty years. We hope to have the pleasure of meeting this faithful subscriber some time and shaking her hand. Faithful to her Church and faithful to her Church paper; may the kind Master spare her many years yet to come, and we trust that THE CHRISTIAN SUN will always carry its rays of sunshine in her home and life. We wish we had five thousand just as faithful.

MISSIONS
 REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

CONGREGATIONALISTS LEAD IN CHINA.

The complete transfer of all work and property of the North China Mission of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions into Chinese control is announced. This transfer gives full recognition to the nationalistic aspirations expressed by the Chinese Christians of the North China Mission in May when their representatives drafted a constitution for an indigenous or purely Chinese Church organization.

The American Board is the foreign mission agency of the Congregational Churches in the United States. The Churches of the North China Mission have established their own independent ecclesiastical organization under the name of "the Promotional Board of the Chinese Congregational Churches of North China." This board will control all property of the Congregationalists in North China except the residences of the missionaries. The missionaries themselves will be loaned by the American Board and will be entirely responsible to the Chinese Board.

The American Board is the first missionary organization to place the entire responsibility and control of its Chinese work and property in Chinese hands.

The transfer of the control of all mission activities to the Chinese is in accordance with the declared policy of the American Board for all its missions, and has been the goal for the work in North China since it was started in 1860. The formation of the North China Board was accomplished with the counsel of the missionaries on the field, among whom was the Rev. Dr. Fairfield, who had served in north China twenty years until this spring when he was appointed a secretary for this country.

The arrangement for entire Chinese control is also said to be in accordance with the findings of the International Missionary Council at its meeting in Jerusalem last year.

The new relationship between the Churches of the North China Board and the American Board and the Churches it represents in the United States is indicated in the constitution of the Chinese Board:

"This board is directly responsible to the Congregational Churches of north China in the conduct of a missionary program for the advancement of the kingdom of God in China. However, this board recognizes a stewardship on behalf of the American Board in administration of property, funds and personnel granted or loaned by the American Board for the purpose for which this promotional board is established.

"While this promotional board now relies largely upon support of its work by Christians in America, it looks forward to the day and seeks to encourage an increasing support of the missionary work in China from the Congregational Churches of North China."

The missionaries under their new status are to serve on a basis of complete equality with their Chinese associates. They are expected to become members of a local Chinese Church and will receive their assignments from the Chinese Board. All questions of location, transfer, furlough and resignation are to be settled by the Chinese Board in consultation with the missionary concerned. The missionaries are to receive their first appointments to China and to return after a furlough only upon invitation from the Chinese Board. Their direct allegiance while in China is to be to the Chinese Churches because experiences teach "the importance of avoiding dual control."

The American missionaries who will be under the Chinese Board are 117. They comprise twenty-five ordained men, five men physicians, one woman physician, eleven other men, thirty-six wives and thirty-nine single women. The Chinese force comprises fourteen ordained men, 291 teachers and 266 evangelistic workers, including eighty-seven women.

The organized Churches number 225, and the places where services are held 557. The communicant membership is 17,349, and the affiliated constituency 45,760. The cost of the Church and evangelistic work is $110,000 annually, of which 10 per cent comes from Chinese contributions.

The educational work includes participation in Yenching University, Peking, and Shantung Christian University, Tsi-nan. In addition, there are two theological schools, thirteen middle schools and eighty-three primary schools and kindergartens, a total of 109 schools with 6,879 under instruction. The cost of the education work is $130,000, of which $95,000 is paid by the Chinese in tuition and fees.

Eight hospitals, nine dispensaries, and two nurses' training schools comprise the established medical work which will be under the Chinese Board. Last year the in-patients numbered 3,286, and the out-patients 17,266. The cost of the medical work was $100,000, of which 40 per cent was met from fees and Chinese contributions. Ten per cent was appropriated by the American Board and 50 per cent was raised through special gifts in America.

PIQUA CONVENTION NEWS.

By DR. W. H. DENISON, Sec'y.

The memorial service on Saturday afternoon will be conducted by Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Suffolk, Va. Death has claimed many outstanding leaders among us since the Urbana Convention.

Dr. Frank H. Peters, Defiance, Ohio, will be in charge of the Communion service on Saturday afternoon, preceding the memorial service conducted by Dr. Staley.

The new Treasurer of the Convention, Mr. J. Lewis Reek, Covington, Ohio, will make his report on the opening afternoon of the Convention. Mr. Reek succeeds John G. Myers, deceased, who served the Convention for more than two quadrenniums.

The President's Convention address will be given on the first evening of the Convention. No man in our history has served so long in this place as has Dr. Coffin. Surely no one has served more faithfully.

Pre-Convention Committees.

Very great matters of importance now center in the thirteen pre-Convention committees. There will not be a series of addresses upon each phase of our work, as heretofore. It will be summed up in the committee reports. The chosen secretary of the committee will read the report; the chairman will speak twenty minutes on the report and its general subject. That will be the address on that subject, when the report will be discussed from the floor. If you have any idea upon any phase of our work, please get it at once to its proper committee through the chairman, as follows:

Christian education, Rev. H. S. Harcastle, Suffolk, Va.; Christian unity, Rev. Raymond G. Clark, Piqua, Ohio; the Church and world problems, Rev. George C. Enders, Defiance, Ohio; evangelism and life service, Rev. H. H. Short, Hagerstown, Ind.; finance, H. E. Sims, Piqua, Ohio; foreign missions, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Troy, Ohio; home missions, Rev. Clarence S. Bennett, 5823 Maryland Avenue, Chicago, Ill.; ministerial relief and pensions, President A. G. Caris, Defiance, Ohio; organization, Rev. D. B. Atkinson, Albany, Mo.; publications, Rev. W. G. Sargent, 215 Bucklin Street, Providence, R. I.; social service, Rev. P. S. Sailer, 634 East Forty-second Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.; stewardship, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C.; survey (state of the Church), Rev. R. C. Helfenstein, Dover, Del.

Delegates to the General Convention.

If any Conference does not meet in time to elect its delegates before the Piqua Convention, October 22-29, they should be selected by the Conference board or other legal agency. The committee reports are to be in the hands of the Convention secretary by September 14th, so that they may be printed in the Blue Book and mailed to delegates in time to reach them before they start for the Convention.

Conference Membership in the Convention.

At Urbana, in 1926, the General Convention authorized the General Board to prepare an official roll of member-Conferences and Conventions and adopt regulations governing admission and continuing membership of Conferences and Conventions. At its December meeting, 1926, it appointed a committee, consisting of Dr. J. F. Burnett, President A. G. Caris, Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson to consider and report on the matter. After studying the subject two years, their report was adopted by the General Board last October and all Conferences should take notice of the action and govern themselves accordingly. The item of special interest to present Conferences is as follows:

"A Conference holding membership in the General Convention of the Christian Church, failing to represent itself in the quadrennial session according to the constitutional provision, or failing to co-operate with the Convention in its plans and purposes during one regular quadrennium, shall terminate its membership unless it can give a reason for such lack of co-operation wholly satisfactory to the Convention. Co-operation with the Convention in its plans and purposes shall include the following, and such others of like character as the Convention may determine: representation in the quadrennial session; an effort on the part of the Conference officers to make effective the Convention plans in local Churches of its membership; to so plan the program for its annual sessions as to have at least one representative of the General Convention and the presentation of the Convention's plans at a stated time and in a formal way; to distribute such Convention literature among the Churches of its membership as may be provided by the Convention from time to time; to see that each and every Church in its membership shall respond to the call of the Convention for an offering to each department of its work.

"A Conference holding membership in the General Convention of the Christian Church shall be left free and untrammelled in all matters pertaining to its local interests, but should there arise a condition in the Conference involving the future usefulness of the Conference, its existence or its property, the General Convention of the Christian Church shall have the right and it shall be its duty, upon its own initiative, to protect any equity, either moral, legal or financial, that the Christian Church may have in the Conference: its territory or its property.

"A Conference holding membership in the General Convention of the Christian Church, and wishing to inaugurate an enterprise of large or denominational proportions, such as orphanages, homes, colleges, hospitals, printing establishments, and the like, shall first secure the opinion and advice of the General Convention, and should this not be done, the Convention and the Conferences holding membership in it shall be under no obligation to co-operate in the undertaking, but shall be free from all responsibility in the matter. And in no case shall a Conference or Conferences holding membership in the Convention inaugurate plans or carry forward enterprises that are not in harmony with the plans and purposes of the Convention.

"Should a Conference holding membership in the General Convention of the Christian Church be divided as the result of rival leaders, the membership of such Conference shall automatically cease until the Convention shall satisfy itself as to which division, if either, or both, is entitled to membership.

Conferences holding membership in the General Convention of the Christian Church shall not divide nor effect a merger without the knowledge and consent of the Convention."

NOW THE TIME—HERE THE PLACE!

Your Church is making an effort to reach its goal for Missions this year, namely: one-third the amount of pastor's salary. If your Church, and all the other Churches, reach this goal, we will reach the total goal of $45,000 for the year ending September 30th, the amount asked of us by the Southern Christian Convention.

Will you, by an individual gift, help your Church to achieve this desired end? Now is the time! Here is the place! By a pull together, every Church can reach the goal. Help now.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VIII—August 25, 1929.

REBUILDING THE TEMPLE.

GOLDEN TEXT: "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of Jehovah."—Psa. 122:1.

LESSON: Ezra 3:1-6:22.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 122.

Historical Summary.

The lesson recounts historical facts which it will be well to pass briefly in review. Last Sunday's lesson dealt with the return of some of the Jews from Babylon and the captivity. Jerusalem naturally became the center of their hopes and aspirations, and "they gathered themselves together as one man" there. They had as their leaders, Joshua, representing the religious forces, and Zerubbabel representing the evil forces. They builded an altar and resumed the regular sacrifices, and later they made plans for and actually began to rebuild the temple. They refused to grant to the people living in the land—probably the Samaritans—the privilege of having any part in the work. These people immediately became offended and took steps to stop the work. They wrote to Artaxerxes, or Darius (it seems there are two accounts at this point) and told him what was going on, and reminded him that these Jews had always been a troublesome people. It appears that at first the work was stopped, but later, when Haggai and Zechariah the prophets again inspired the people to take up the work again, and when another letter was dispatched to Darius, he ordered the records searched, and finding that Cyrus had authorized the return and the rebuilding of the temple, and being sympathetic and generous, he told the Jews to proceed, and not only warned the trouble-makers, but actually ordered them to make contributions to the work. It seems that the work went forward rapidly and the temple, probably reconstructed on the plan of the former temple, was rebuilt and dedicated. The Passover was reinstated and the regular feasts of the Jewish year were observed. So much for the bare historical facts of the lesson. What practical truths are there in these facts?

Putting Religion First.

As soon as the Jews returned, they "builded an altar to the God of Israel." They made provision in their national and in their personal lives for the nurture and the development of the religious life. They realized that worship must have a place in normal life. They knew that man could not live by bread alone. Worship, prayer, aspiration, sacrifice, praise, confession—in short, religion must have a place and a primary place in the life that would live above the mere animal plane. The altar was the symbol of Jehovah's presence; it was a reminder of His goodness; it was a perpetual challenge to a life of righteousness and to service in His name.

Our modern life, more than any other period of history, needs to have its altars, its places of worship and all that is associated with worship. We are so busy and we are so absorbed with things that there is danger of completely crowding out the things of the spirit. The individual, the community, the nation—all need to make the worship of God and service for God fundamental and primary.

Doing the Best One Can with What One Has.

"From the first day of the seventh month they began to offer burnt offerings unto the Lord. But the foundation of the temple of the Lord was not yet laid." These people could have said that they did not have a temple, so they could not worship. Instead, they used what they had, did the best with what they had, until they could get something better. The fact that they could not have everything just as they wanted it, did not keep them from doing the best they could with what they had. There was a great gulf between the glory of the temple and the simple altar on the ruins of that temple, but under the circumstances it was the best they could do, and they did it.

How many there are who need to learn this lesson! Because they cannot do something as well as somebody else; because they cannot give as much as somebody else; because things are not what they would like to have them be, they do nothing. Here is one of the great tragedies of life, because it is one of the great sins of life. God's law is that we use what we have and do the best we can. The owner of the foal of the ass might have said that he was sorry the colt was not larger, or that he was sorry that he did not have a fine-spirited horse, or a chariot, but he placed what he had at the disposal of the Master, and Jesus made the colt immortal in literature by making His triumphant entry into Jerusalem upon it. Let every man and woman, every young person determine that he or she is going to use what God has given as a sacred trust.

Sticking to it When the Going is Rough.

It was no easy thing to rebuild the temple under ideal conditions. But it was difficult and discouraging when there was real opposition and even interference. But these people knew they had God on their side, and they stuck to the thing until it was accomplished. Needless to say, this ability to stick to it when the going is rough is a very desirable quality in ordinary life. It is just as essential in the realm of religion. The boy or girl or the man or woman who sets out to follow Christ is going to find some rough going, both because of forces from within and from without. In one of His parables, Jesus says that some people are like seed which springs up and grows, but when the sun shines the plant is scorched, and withereth, and people because of tribulation or persecution, they are offended or caused to stumble. A Christian who sails the sea of life must be a foul-weather as well as a fair-weather Christian. Sunday School teachers and Church workers need to form the habit of sticking to it even when the going is rough.

Looking Backward and Looking Forward.

When the foundations of the temple were laid, the older people mourned, for they recalled the magnificent temple which had stood there in the "good old days," and they could not believe that it was possible for another temple to be at all like the first.

The younger people shouted for joy because of the hope of better days to come. As Dr. Lynn H. Hough writes: "It is still true that the same situation inspires some men to shout and others to weep. And on the whole, the men who shout have the future on their side. To appreciate the good in the present has more promise than merely to bewail the good that is lost. And after all, a man may appreciate the past even while he makes the best of the present. The new temple may not be so glorious as the old, but the worship may be just as deep and just as sincere." Dr. Meyer puts it thus: "Let the optimism of our anticipation drown the pessimism of retrospection."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, August 25, 1929.

TOPIC: "Are Missions Proving Successful?"—Rom. 10:9-16.

Some Bible Hints.

If success is to be measured by the saving and transforming of life, then missions have been wonderfully successful (v. 9).

Success is shown in the winning of men to faith in Christ, which changes their lives, and not merely in material progress (v. 10).

The gospel has proved effectual in reaching all classes and races; its effect on cannibals is the same as on civilized peoples—it makes them new creatures (v. 12).

The success of the gospel is limited by the scarcity of missionaries. After all, there are only a very few workers in the great harvest field of the world (v. 14).

Suggestive Thoughts.

What is our measure of success? You cannot expect to take backward races and in a year or two make them our equals. It is enough if their feet are placed on the right way.

Missions do not attempt national success. They work primarily with the individual, and this is the field of their real success, although they do influence the nation.

China's revolution has been blamed on missionaries because they have made China discontented. Well, that is something like success. To arouse a people to aspire for better things is a great thing.

We must always ask what a given mission is trying to do before judging its success or failure, and we must remember the tools with which it has to work.

A Few Illustrations.

When Paton first went to the New Hebrides, the people were cannibals, and more than once he was in danger of being killed and eaten. Today these islands are civilized. Is that not success?

Missionaries found Japan a closed kingdom. Christianity was everywhere forbidden and reviled. But missionaries established the Japanese system of education, and are honored today—an immense change.

Are home missions successful? In many a town where the saloon destroyed the people, you will find no saloons, but only Churches. Home missions have leavened the nation.

Missions have proved a success as educators and as instructors in industries. The Near East Relief is a missionary enterprise which cannot be said to have failed.

To Think About.

Should we give up unsuccessful missions?

What are the missions of our Church?

What are some signs of success in missions?

OUR JUBILEE YEAR.

TIME: Late summer, A. D. 29.

PLACE: Capernaum.

PERSONS: Jesus and His Disciples.

RECORD: Matt. 18:21-35.

Capernaum was the queen city of Galilee and its blue waters were sometimes called the "Sea of Capernaum." It was the "home city" of Jesus' manhood days and had been "exalted to heaven" with the presence and demonstrated power of Jesus. It was the home city also of Matthew the

CHURCH NOTES.

Speakers of both national and international reputation from without our Church, as well as many of our own most noted speakers, are accepting places on our Convention program at Piqua, October 22-29th. Among them are Bishop Francis J. McConnell, president of the Federal Council of Churches; Mr. Fred B. Smith, moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches; Dr. Peter Ainslie, Baltimore, the well-known leader in Christian union movements.

These men are world speakers, and they appear on any worth-while Christian program in every part of the world. Others will be announced from week to week, and all our people should be subscribers to the Herald and readers of the columns that will give the Convention news.

Church Clerks.

Church clerks have a high and honorable position in the Church, and it should be their ambition to make good in their important work. One of their responsible tasks is that of preparing reports for their conference and denomination.

Great care should be taken to follow in full the instructions on the Church report blanks. Every question and detail are important. This is Convention year and every item is necessary, no matter how much time it takes. The information can be had from no other source than from your office. No report from any Church anywhere should be sent in to your conference until it has been read to the congregation and approved by it, or at least by the official board of the Church if a congregational meeting is out of the question. It is not sufficient for the Church clerk to sign and send it. We must do the Lord's business in a careful, business-like way, with accuracy and completeness. The Lord's business is the most important of any business. Our Church clerks are improving and great accuracy is needed this Convention year.

Pre-Convention Committees.

Probably in no year in our history have the pre-Convention committees had more important tasks than they will have this year. These reports are to be printed and sent to all delegates before they leave for the Convention. Their reports, therefore, must be in the hands of the Convention Secretary by September 14th at the latest. He will appreciate it if they can be in his hands before that. An entirely new procedure will be followed at this Convention. There will not be a special program under each department of our work with several speakers. These carefully selected, widely representative committees will sum up the work and recommendations and the chairman will be the speaker on that subject, setting forth the reasons for their conclusions, and this presentation of twenty minutes by him will be followed by discussion from the floor. The committee will choose its own secretary, who will read the report. As soon as these secretaries are chosen your secretary desires their names.

WARREN H. DENISON,
Secretary.

RELIGION NEW AND OLD.

Faith feels the impact of the changes that take place in school and factory. Mediaeval religion, says William Adams Brown, in "Beliefs that Matter," made contemplation central. Our religion today is primarily a religion of action. For one believer who says, "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth," there are thousands who say, "Hear, Lord, for Thy servant speaketh." The difficulty is to bring these two together. God has joined them into one—meditation and service—and let not man put them asunder.

AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLES.

Authorized and Edited by American Revision Committee, and Published by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

These Bibles contain the Concise Bible Dictionary which forms the helps to these Teachers' Bibles. It supplies, in the most condensed and convenient form, all the latest information about the Bible, its writers, its language, the various versions, complete chronology, life of Christ, with harmony of the Gospels, life and travels of St. Paul, etc. The illustrations are reproduced from recent photographs, and truly illustrate the articles. The Combined Concordance is entirely new, and has been made expressly for the American Standard Version. It combines with the Concordance, Subject-Index, Scripture Proper Names, etc. The 12 Maps have been carefully revised and are beautifully colored. In making orders, give the number and price.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

REVENGE NEVER DELIVERS FROM EVIL.

The foolishness and wickedness of this indulgence lie in the fact that it never delivers you from the evils complained of, but ever tends to increase their number, and intensifies their aggravation. Impatience delivers from nothing that is evil, but infallibility produces more impatience in yourself and others. We will find for all this a sovereign remedy in a completely holy heart, and subsequently walk with God.

"If you can't earn, you needn't waste," was what I heard a mother say the other day to her two boys pretty sharply. What so you suppose they were doing? Playing ball with their books. Just throwing them back and forth for fun. "Fun!" said their mother; "do you suppose it is fun for your father to shove a plane and hammer nails all day to buy books to treat that way?"

Prayer.—Let a member of the family lead in extempore.

TUESDAY.

A MAN WITH A MARGIN.

"Abstain from the very appearance of evil."—1 Thess. 5:22.

The statement is often heard, "That is a matter of opinion," when it is intended only as a matter of courtesy. Some things are a matter of opinion, but many things are not. If it is a matter of likes and dislikes merely, yes; but if it is a matter of principle, no.

A man can afford to be opposed, disliked, defeated, unpopular, faith and moral worthiness questioned. The man who lives so close to the line between right and wrong that he can cross over and back again and not be seen, or the man who can cross over and back again in a night has no margin, and there will come a time when some one will suspect him of doing so and distrust him. But he who lives so far from the line that he has to go some before he crosses it, is safe from suspicion, and a man of irreproachable character is not apt to be hated.

We once heard at a funeral the following eulogy: "His conduct being on no perilous edge of doubtful practice." Isn't that splendid! Thousands do hang over. From such come the thousands of sneers at hypocritical Christians.

Prayer.—Our Father, make us not only safe but dependable. Fill us with reserve goodness so that when emergencies come, as they must, we may stand. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE LIGHT OF GOD.

"In Thy light shall we see light."—Psa. 36:9. Other references: Jno. 6:12; Luke 8:16; Jno. 1:4, 9, 3:21; Eph. 5:14.

Figuratively speaking, light is the increasing of knowledge, saving knowledge, understanding things, truth, wholesomeness, purity, horrors of sin, etc., ad infinitum. As astronomy is to navigation, as architecture is to the building, as the plumb line is to construction, as truth to the student, as information to ignorance, so is Christ to man. But the acquirement of knowledge or trade, or skill, is no easy street, neither is the acquirement of Christ's light peptonized food which makes no demands on our mastication or digestion. When the Lord called the disciples to follow Him, he promised no easy road; but He called them to work—to be fishers of men. With it, however, he promised to help them achieve and never did He send one away empty-handed. He did not always solve their problems, but He always gave them light and equipped them mentally and spiritually to solve their own problems and be victorious. It remains for us to seek the light if our footing is to be sure.

This bars all haphazard living. The school of education is not haphazard. It is a system of light which, if the student applies himself, qualifies him in achievement. Christianity is heaven's school of light which is to be applied in a regular increasing growing sort of way. He who applies himself in a haphazard sort of way misses God's richest and deepest blessings. The great plea is, "Learn of me."

Prayer.—Dear Lord God, to Thee we look as the great Architect, great Light, and great Blessor of our souls. Teach us day by day to apply our thought and our desires to all that thou hast to teach us that we may know Thee, serve Thee and live with Thee forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

CHURCH THE WAY.

"I am the way."—John 14:6.

Read the above lessons, and we will learn that Christ enjoins regard for the rights and feelings of others as the only principle which saves us from "Me first, and you get what you can," and which makes us people comfortable to live with.

The menace of American life is the privilege of folks to do as they please and their greed for self. We cannot do as we please without becoming a menace to society. As gentlemen, we are under obligation to others to help them and not harass them, and our living is made a heaven or hell as the Golden Rule is applied. The superior motive of life is not good living, but living good. Paul says, "What things are for me are lost for Christ." The supreme motive for living is goodness, not happiness.

Prayer.—Our Father, we desire to be seekers of Thy truth. Grant unto us more of that desire and fulfill Thy promise that we shall find. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE BEAUTY OF HOLINESS.

"Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness."—Chron. 16:29.

We witnessed a motion picture the other evening in which a Christian character was represented as being too good to help a fallen woman. He regarded her with such contempt that he would not turn a hand to relieve her distress. He even brushed his clothes where her hands touched his in her plea for help. Is this a type of piety which does really exist?

The beauty of holiness lies in harmony with Christ, who forgave the woman of adultery and told her to sin no more. He was separated indeed from sin, but not from sinners. He visited them. He ate with them. He loved them. He called them to repentance.

He was separate from them in ideals, but being Himself tempted as they, He sympathizes with them.

He was separate in the righteousness and purity of His own life, but His life was to serve and to ransom Himself to do so.

Holiness is beautiful in humility and not morbid self-depreciation or self-righteousness. Holiness is beautiful when helping the weary, the distressed and the needy, pointing to the Blessor of souls. Holiness is beautiful when patient toward the erring and when sacrificing its time for the ignorant and sorrowing. These are the things that enthroned Christ in the hearts of myriads of generations, and these are the things that enable and make happy the lives of all who follow in His footsteps.

Prayer.—Dear Lord Jesus, how lacking we are! How far from Thee we are! We would be like Thee. O Thou Son of God, make us, until we shall rest in the fullness of God. Amen.

SATURDAY.

A THOUGHT FOR SUNDAY.

"The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by Him."—Deut. 33:12.

"The Lord is that Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."—Luke 32:17.

Of all the teachings of the Scripture, none of it alone will save. Sinners scarcely ever read it. Of all the preaching, none of it alone saves. Only a few people go to Church. Of all the religious literature published that does not save, the masses are not interested. Only the consistent Christian makes God's word and God's salvation effective. Everybody listens to the conversation of Christians, reads their lives, looks for evidence of God in their living. (Read again the text.)

Is it not a unique arrangement? The beloved of the Lord is safe, has the support of His arm, which never fails, and they themselves are written epistles, knowing and read of all men, and in Him, what freedom of life!

Prayer.—Dear Lord, our Father, in the name of Jesus, we pray for a consecrated life and a deep consciousness of His power, that our lives may prepare His way in the lives of others. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN GOOD AND EVIL.

(A Bible study.)

The difference between good and evil is the difference between heaven and hell. The following is a brief study of what is meant by "goodness:"

"Goodness" is that which contributes to man's physical, moral and spiritual betterment.

"The physical ideal" is that which is 100 per cent alert, efficient and exercises full power in life's required duties.

"The moral ideal" is that which serves the community's highest good in truth and beauty. It is that which conforms to right in virtue and in the practice of duty. It is that which considers others and applies the Golden Rule.

"The spiritual ideal" is "a good man." A good man is no less than the possessor of the Spirit of Christ, "who went about doing good" (Rom. 8:9). This ideal is verified in the truth of the following God-given axioms:

"What doth the Lord require of Thee but to do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with thy Lord?"

"Pure religion and undefiled before God is to visit the fatherless and widows in their distress, and keep thyself unspotted from the world."

"He that doeth righteousness is righteous" (1 Jno. 3:7), and "is accepted of Him" (Acts 10:35).

"Every one that doeth righteousness is born of God" (1 Jno. 2:29).

Prayer.—Dear Lord of heaven and earth and Blessor of our souls, give us the power of the inner man with God on the throne, that what we are may be all manhood in moral and spiritual life. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We are looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to our "Home-Coming Day," Saturday, August 31st. This is the first time all the boys and girls who have been reared in the Christian Orphanage have been invited to a special home-coming day. We hope to have quite a number here. We would like to send each one a special invitation, but we do not have their address and will not be able to do this; but a cordial invitation is extended to each one and hope all our boys and girls who read this letter will accept this as a special invitation. All we ask is that you notify us of your intention to come, so we will know how many to prepare for. Entertainment will be free.

We needed a piano. We mentioned it to one of our loyal friends. He mentioned it to one of his friends who happened to be a member of the Men's Bible Class of the Rosemont Christian Church. Last week a splendid piano was placed in the sitting-room of the Christian Orphanage building. We certainly are grateful to the Men's Bible Class for supplying this need. It was a blessing bestowed right at the time of need and will be so much help to us in this work. Rev. J. F. Morgan is pastor of Rosemont Church, and when Bro. Morgan is pastor we know he and his people will stand loyally by us in this work.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

FROM ACROSS THE SEA.

Damascus Palace Hotel,
Damascus, Syrie, July 19, 1929.

My dear Friends:

I am in old Damascus this morning; arrived day before yesterday, and leave for Tiberias this evening. We had a wonderful drive from Berouth to Baalbek over the mountains of Lebanon. It is a drive that I will never forget, and the ruins of the old temple at Baalbek are beyond description. Baalbek was, as you know, the home of the prophet of Baal. Among the great stones there are some that should they fall, there is no known arrangement whereby they could be righted (65x-12x14 feet, and weighing 800 tons). There is one stone still in the quarry that is 69x14x16 feet and would weigh 1,000 tons. Between the Lebanon mountains and the Anti-Lebanon mountains there is a wonderful valley, and to me this would have been a wonderful place for the Garden of Eden. Here I saw thousands of people working at the threshing floors just as they did thousands of years ago. We came from Baalbek by Mt. Hermon to Damascus. For miles we came the course of the Abana River, one of the rivers of which Gen. Naaman was so proud when Elisha told him to wash in the muddy Jordan.

Damascus is the oldest, dustiest and dirtiest city, I think, in the world; a Moslem city of 400,000; just a few Jews and a few Greek Catholic Churches. We saw and were in the "Street called Stroylt"; we were in the home of Ananias, who taught Paul; we saw the window where Paul was let out over the wall; the house of Gen. Naaman, and many other things.

It is a city which must be seen to be appreciated—camels, donkeys, beggars, sheep, goats, and the covered-faced women everywhere. Right at the east gate, where Paul came in, was the carcass of a dead camel, with stench and filth which cannot be imagined in the twentieth century. We saw the great brass factories, where children seven years old work ten or twelve hours a day for 8 cents per day. Girls in the weaving rooms work twelve hours a day for 30 to 40 cents a day.

We leave this P. M. for Tiberias, where we spend the next two nights; then on to Capernium for the Sunday. I'll never, no never, in all my life complain of my wife's cooking any more.

With love to all,

Yours,

C. C. RYAN.

publican and of four of the other disciples at least—Peter, Andrew, James and John—and Philip lived in the suburbs of the city in Bethesda which was also the native place of Andrew and Philip before they "moved to town" and set up in Capernaum.

These were "good-by days" to Capernaum, as far as Jesus was concerned. In a little time He was to depart to Jerusalem and never to return. He was spending His time preparing His disciples for the coming hard days which were before them. They were unwilling learners, but the attractiveness of His personality never left them, and, after all, the great thing about a teacher is himself.

Peter's Question (v. 21).

Peter felt himself in quite a generous and virtuous mood when he came to the Master with this question: "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? Till seven times?" That was big in Peter, and he felt that he was showing his bigness in granting such a generous spirit toward one who had sinned and sinned again against him. Jesus had just told them (Matt. 18:15-20) that they should make things right with their brother and forgive him before they could expect forgiveness and fellowship with the Father. Now, Peter generously (?) asks if he should forgive him if he repeated his offense seven times.

Seventy Times Seven (v. 22).

Not only seven times, but seventy times seven should his brother be forgiven. That was the answer of Jesus, and that meant simply unlimited forgiveness, for no man on earth could keep account of forgiveness a literal four hundred and ninety times. By that time it would become such a habit of forgiving that he could not stop.

Governor Taylor, the Christian Governor of Tennessee, pardoned so many criminals that one of the State officials came to him one day and protested, and the Governor's reply was: "Jim, you and I would be in a pretty bad shape if Jesus had not forgiven us."

If we would come to reckon how much and how many times Jesus has forgiven us, we will begin to see the forgiving spirit of God in Jesus, and maybe we will then begin to catch that spirit and give unlimited forgiveness to those who trespass against us.

"The Forgiveness Parable (vs. 23-34).

Jesus preached and taught constantly by the use of illustration, and we will do well to study His method more fully and closely. It was the earliest and most effective way of preaching and teaching. The Old Testament is full of it, and not only Jesus, but Peter and Paul, in their greatest efforts, used it again and again. If one's object is to display his scholarship, it may not be as attractive a method to him, but if he wants to reach people and wants them to get and retain his message, he will do well to study the way Jesus used illustration.

The story is of a king and his servants. The day of accounting for their stewardship had come, and there was brought before him one who had abused his confidence and had defaulted to the extent of ten thousand talents, which put into our American money would be $14,400,000 (a huge sum), and Jesus used it (as He did the "seventy times seven") to picture a limitless amount.

The king demanded that servant make good, and when the poor fellow could not possibly do so, he was doomed to be sold as a slave, together with his wife and children and all that he possessed. Overwhelmed with the fearful thing that had come upon him, the servant fell at his lord's feet and recklessly promised that if his master would have patience that he would repay all he had misappropriated. This, his master knew he could not do, but seeing his remorse and his pitiful state he freely forgave him all the debt and made him a free man.

Then that forgiven servant went out and fell on one who owed him a hundred pence, which in our money would be about $15.00, and because the man did not give him the amount at once he took him by the throat and threatened him and cast him into prison and condemned him to stay there until the debt be paid. His fellow servants, moved with compassion, went and told their master, who called the unmerciful servant to account and delivered him over to the tormentors.

The Earthly Meaning (v. 35).

A little girl said that Jesus' parables were "heavenly stories with earthly meanings," and we will not need to go far to get the "earthly meaning" of this parable. We who have been forgiven so much and so many times need to learn to forgive even as we have been forgiven. If we forgive not we have the word of Jesus as to the consequences.

She had been a member of New Center Christian Church for more than forty years and was a good woman. Burial services were held by the writer and Rev. J. C. Cummings at Pleasant Hill M. E. Church, and her remains were placed by the side of her mother in the Church cemetery.

THOMAS.

In the early part of the year Mrs. M. H. Thomas fell and broke her arm. This, with complications, caused her death on July 7th. Miss Anna Eliza Brady married Mr. M. H. Thomas in 1873, to whom two children were born; one died in infancy, while William Oscar Thomas survives.

Mrs. Thomas was a valuable member of Bethlehem Church for some forty-five years. Funeral services were conducted at the home July 9th by the writer. She was laid to rest in the St. Matthews Cemetery, at New Market, Va.

To her husband and son and friends, she leaves a memory that will challenge them to service for her Master.

Broadway, Va. JOE FRENCH.

CHADWICK.

Mrs. Lemmie Chadwick was born February 24, 1879, and quietly departed this life July 12, 1929, age 50 years, 4 months and 18 days. The deceased was united in marriage to Mr. O. D. Chadwick, and to this union was born one child, Millard, who resides at Girard, Ala.

Sister Chadwick suffered for three years, but bore her suffering patiently until the end came. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Beulah Christian Church, Girard, Ala., where she was a faithful and loyal member. The beautiful floral offerings and the large congregation were evidences of the high esteem in which she was held by her many friends and acquaintances.

She was laid away to rest in Godwin Cemetery to await the resurrection morning. May our Heavenly Father comfort the bereaved ones.

A. H. SHEPPARD.

Columbus, Ga.

TUCK.

Mrs. Betty Tuck, daughter of Henry and Margarette Tuck, departed this life at the home of her sister, Mrs. Young, Virgilina, Va., Route 4, on July 13th, age about 70 years. She was married to Alec Tuck early in life. Their son, Holland, was killed a few years ago in handling dynamite in road construction work near Greensboro, N. C. Her husband has been dead for about twenty years. She leaves ten grandchildren, three sisters and a large number of nieces and nephews. Early in life she united with Union Christian Church, where her membership remained till death.

The funeral and burial was at the Church cemetery on Sunday afternoon, July 14, 1929, in the presence of a number of friends, conducted by the writer.

Many were the sorrows through which Sister Tuck passed, but we believe she is where joy reigns supreme.

C. E. NEWMAN.

McGILL.

Mrs. Jossie Estelle McGill was born April 28, 1899, and died July 21, 1929.

She was the faithful wife of Bro. John D. McGill and a member of Vanceville Christian Church. She leaves to mourn her going her faithful husband, three sweet little children, and a host of other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer at Vanceville Church, and interment was made in the local cemetery. May the good Lord bless that sad home, the Holy Spirit mother the orphans and companion the father. May her death be sanctified to the good of the living.

BISHOP.

Mrs. Mary Wheeler Bishop was born September 2, 1900, and died July 12, 1929. She was a Kentuckian by birth, and was married to Jesse L. Bishop on November 11, 1920. To this union were born three children—Allene Rex, Jesse, Jr., and Charles Wheeler Bishop, all of whom survive their mother, with the devoted father. Her suffering was brief, but intense. All that physicians and trained nurses could do in Chattanooga Hospital was done for her. A good woman, a faithful wife, and a loving mother has passed to her reward.

She made a profession of religion some years ago and had never joined any Church. She was a woman of strong character, kind, charitable and helpful. She leaves to mourn their loss a loving husband, Jesse L. Bishop, three children, many kindred and friends. One characteristic of her life was never to speak evil of any one.

May God bless the father and the motherless children and the dear one who care for them. Burial services were held in Salem Chapel Christian Church, and her remains were laid away in the splendid cemetery, beneath beautiful flowers and surrounded by sympathetic friends, to await the resurrection morning. Services by the pastor,

Nancy Cladora Michael was born February 9, 1855, and died July 17, 1929. She was married to Eli F. Smith December 28, 1879. She leaves to mourn their loss her husband, one daughter, Mrs. E. L. Carter, two grandsons, three brothers, and three sisters, besides many other relatives and friends.

She had been a member of Hines Chapel Christian Church for more than fifty years, and was faithful to her Church and Lord to the end. A good woman has gone, but we feel sure that our loss is her gain, and those who knew her best can rise up and call her blessed. Burial was at Hines Chapel by her pastor, assisted by Rev. J. H. Abernethy.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

PROPERTY vs. HUMAN LIFE.—

The news of the day carries an announcement that China is rushing 100,000 troops to the border to resist advances of the Russians, and that daily conflicts are taking place. The controversy between the two powers has arisen over the possession and control of a railway system. The nations of the world have been engaged in a serious attempt to outlaw war. Every effort in that direction is to be most highly commended, but there is a question as to whether the abolition of war can ever be accomplished until more has been done than the mere outlawing of armed conflicts.

What the world most urgently needs is a complete revision of its standards of values. It has long been the custom to place a higher value upon property than upon human life. Especially have nations been guilty of this atrocity of judgment. There was a time when an effort was made to cover up the effort to secure national possessions by the term "national honor." But in recent years even that has been abandoned, and national officials talk openly of protecting material possessions and securing economic advantages. And always there is back of this talk the idea of using armies to protect property and to secure trade advantages. This is not to question the right of nations to protect their possessions; but we raise the question as to whether or not there should be at least some consideration of the lives of the men who are to be called upon to defend national possessions by the offering up of their lives. It should not be forgotten that the nations which did not hesitate to engage in a war which involved almost the entire world, did not hesitate to talk of human beings as cannon fodder. Somehow, the two ideas of waging war and the wanton destruction of human life have always gone hand in hand. Many of the world's most successful generals have spilled blood as if it were no more than water. The fact that they did not hesitate to sacrifice the lives of thousands of their men was the very factor that made them successful.

The outstanding teaching of the Christ is the supreme value which is placed upon human life. But today human life is about the cheapest commodity which the world knows. There is not a single social problem of the day that would be very difficult to solve if we had the Master's conception of the infinite worth of human life. What agency or institution is so well qualified to proclaim this message as the Church, which calls her Head the Lord of Life.

LABELS.—

Labels are most convenient things when applied to commodities, such as drugs, medicines, groceries, and such like. But when they are applied to men and women, they are pitifully inadequate and most misleading. They might serve a useful purpose if in our use of them we were to be always careful to restrict them to that particular phase of realm in which they were originally meant to apply. But the trouble is that very few of us are ever able to do just that. To illustrate what we mean, consider what is suggested to the average individual by such a word as American, German, or English. Obviously, such words were never intended to express anything save the idea of national origin. To say that a man is a German, means nothing except that he was born in Germany, and the same is true of the word American. But within the memory of most of those whose eyes will see this, there was a time when in certain nations of Europe the word American, when applied to an individual, would create a most favorable impression in his behalf. And since the close of the war, in the very same countries where the mere mention of the fact that one was an American would have secured an enthusiastic reception, the same information would have brought to one a very cool reception. Now, clearly in either case the land from which one may have come would be no indication whatever of the worth or deserts of the individual. There are Americans who are grasping and mean, and there are Americans who are generous and noble. The point is that in all these labels which are intended to define one's national, political and religious affiliations, we lump together all our previous associations, experiences and prejudices.

There was never any national, political, social, or religious label big enough to describe a true man. If a man is a man, he is more than even the sum total of all the labels that might be used to describe his manifold relationships. In no realm are labels more inadequate and misleading than in the realm of religion. One will never find a man who is worthy of admiration and respect merely because he bears some denominational label or trade-mark. St. Paul was eminently correct when he wrote to the Corinthians that the only name that was really worthy of being coveted was the name of Christ. One should have a care as to how he permits himself to be labeled and classified. One should be equally careful in committing himself too irrevocably with parties and movements and sects until he is sure that he can afford to accept all the positions and beliefs to which such organizations are committed. The glory of God's creation is man, and his highest possible affiliation is with Jesus Christ.

THE HIGH LORD.—

There is a story told in an ancient book of a man who had a vision, and in that vision he saw the Lord, high and lifted up. We are not given an account of the personal history of this man who saw the vision, previous to the time that the vision came to him. Perhaps it is as well that we do not have the personal facts of his early life, for after all the thing that really matters is what he did after he had received the vision of the Lord, high and lifted up. It is reasonable to assume that he was a religious young man, as religious as the other young men of his nation which was pre-eminently a religious people. One might dare say that he had about the same idea of God that is prevalent among the people who are inclined toward religion in this present age.

It is one's idea of God that really matters above everything else in this life. Of course, we are not talking about the ideas of God that are expounded in the ponderous volumes of theology. But we are talking of the ideas about God which form the working basis of one's religion. It seems at times as if too many of us are thinking of God as being upon a level with ourselves. It is well enough that we should think of God as being interested in the things in which we are interested; and as desiring to help us attain the worthwhile things for which we are striving. But our religion has not yet become the power in our lives that it ought to be unless we have caught a vision of the Lord, high and lifted up.

We need more than a God to help us attain the highest ambitions of our lives. We need a high God who shall implant in our souls ideals and ambitions which are far above any of which we have ever dreamed. It is not only power which will enable us to achieve the ideals of human perfection that we so urgently need. We need a God who can set for us the ideals of divine perfection, and then give us the power to achieve them. It was just that which Jesus did for man. We are sorely tempted today to preach an eclectic gospel. We look at the lives of those around us and see the weaknesses and imperfections, and preach to them the things which they can do to amend and correct their lives. Religion is in danger of becoming a system of self-culture. Christ set for man an ideal of divine perfection. He did not hesitate to say, "Be ye, therefore, perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect."

The man in the street may say of the gospel of Christ that it is too idealistic and that it is impossible of practical achievement. It would be a reflection upon the gospel if the man in the street could attain to its ideals. It was never intended to be an ideal for the man in the street. It was intended to be the ideal for the man under the inspiration of the Most High God. It was designed to set a goal that can be attained only by the individual who is absolutely surrendered to the will of God, and who is walking in such close fellowship with Christ that the Holy Spirit can work in him and through him, for the attainment of the divine ideal.

Our age, like Isaiah, needs a vision of God that will cause us to fall down and worship. We need a vision that will awaken in us a sense of our own imperfections and unworthiness.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va., is to be the preacher at the union services at Chapel Hill, N. C., next Sunday. Rev. Sparks W. Melton, D. D., of Norfolk, was the preacher last Sunday.

Bro. L. A. Boyette, Wilson Mills, N. C., reports that "Rev. A. R. Flowers spent the week from August 4th to August 10th with the people of the Archer Lodge section and has promised to spend a week with us some time in the spring. The co-operation that he receives from all the denomination in his work is a positive proof of the high regard we have for him and for his labors among our boys and girls."

Rev. G. H. Veazey, Roanoke, Ala., writes: "We have just closed a great revival at our Roanoke Church. Fifteen members were received and others are to join. Bro. O. D. Poythress was at his best and did wonderful and effective preaching. The Church was greatly revived. The house was crowded every night, and we had good attendance every morning. We are really doing something at Roanoke. Rev. J. H. Dollar is assisting me this week in a glorious revival at Rock Springs, his old home Church."

Rev. A. P. Hurst, father of President Hurst, of Palmer College, Albany, Mo., who becomes pastor of the Elon College Church September 1st, is to come South and live with his son, and will be glad to take Church work if there are Churches in the vicinity that should desire him as pastor. Bro. Hurst is a man of ripe experience and wisdom in pastoral service. Any Church desiring to communicate with him can address him at Elon College, N. C. We trust our good brother will find work in keeping with his talent and consecrated endeavors for the kingdom of his Lord.

Our good Sister Mrs. Alice A. Barrett, who has already sacrificed much to the glory of her Lord and the joy of the Christian Church, in a personal letter, says: "While I am enclosing to you this one dollar, the first new money I have had, I only wish I had twenty just like it to accompany this one." This is, indeed, the widow's mite, which she trusts the Lord will use to His glory. Sister Barrett is one of those faithful mothers whose all belong to her Lord, and whose stewardship has long since been acknowledged in the gift of her son to go out to carry the message of redeeming love and salvation to fields afar.

Now congratulations are in order and ours are herewith extended to our congenial neighbor and friend, George Colclough, assistant business manager and representative of Elon College: "Mr. and Mrs. James Cyrus Watts announce the marriage of their daughter, Sue Ella, to Mr. George Dewey Colclough, on Monday, August 12, 1929. At home after September 1st, Elon College, N. C." Mrs. Colclough is from Wadesboro, N. C., and was a former student in Elon College, where she made many friends and a wide circle of acquaintances. Our best wishes and long life to the happy pair!

The very newest of the "new money" comes to missions from Joe Bynum Gay, III, who himself arrived at the home of his happy parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Bynum Gay, Jr., Franklin, Va., August 13th, smiling, happy, healthy, for on the 14th this glorious youngster greets us with this: "Enclosed you will find my first new paper money, which is to go for missions." Now that is what we call starting on time and in the right direction. Beginning thus, may the light of this precious little life shine out till it, with his mission money, shall reach to the uttermost parts and help tell the story there of another Babe born centuries ago in Bethlehem.

Our friend, Capt. W. H. Turrentine, Burlington, read with deep interest references in THE CHRISTIAN SUN recently to "Suffolk of fifty years ago." Capt. Turrentine went to Suffolk in 1859 and found that a Christian Church was beginning to be built there, as the scaffold used in building was then up, and the first Christian Church building supplanted, was then in course of construction. Capt. Turrentine does not claim to be an old man now, and, with his good wife, occupies his place in the Christian Church at Burlington almost as regularly every Sunday as the preacher occupies his pulpit.

Our dear friend and co-laborer of other days (good times they were, too) as teacher of mathematics in Elon College, Prof. S. A. Holleman, now of High Point, N. C., known and loved by many SUN readers, sends voluntarily, as our acknowledgement on page eight will show, his check for $100 for missions to help swell the total and do the good work which the Church is undertaking through its missionary appeal and endeavor. Though his lot has been cast with others, our friend has not forgotten his first love and the associates of other days, and but for the tenderness and personal intimacy of the good lines that accompanied his generous check, we would love to reproduce them in these columns. Our friend's assistance is appreciated and his example, we trust, will inspire others to help in a most worthy and, at this time, a most pressing and needy cause—that of missions.

Through THE CHRISTIAN SUN, many absentee Church members keep in touch with the Church of their choice and their real love. Before me, as I write, is a fair and fine illustration of this. This is from a good brother in Philadelphia, Pa., and represents no small portion of our CHRISTIAN SUN family: "Enclosed find check for $5.00 for missions, which may not be credited to a Church but received as an individual gift. I am connected with a Church of another denomination here, but I belong to it solely because there is no Christian Church here. I believe in the Principles of the Christian Church, and that is the reason I subscribe for THE SUN. I certainly do enjoy reading it, too, and if I am able I expect to continue reading it as long as I live. I hope you will succeed in raising the full sum for missions." Those who subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN SUN do more than buy something for themselves—they make it possible for others, like this good brother, to have a medium of contact and allegiance to the Church of their choice and of their heart.

Rev. T. Fred Wright, Paces, Va., has resigned the pastorate of Pleasant Grove and Ingram Churches, Halifax County, Va. Bro. Wright has been pastor for some years of these two strong, progressive rural Churches which formed a pastorate and engaged him for all of his time. It is a splendid pastorate, both in the fine spirit of the good people who compose the Churches and the community, and in promise and prospect for growth and development. Bro. Wright says: "We had a splendid meeting at Ingram in July. Rev. J. H. Dollar, Reidsville, N. C., assisted us and preached strong, timely messages to large audiences. There were thirteen additions to the Church. Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, was with us at Pleasant Grove, and the Church was filled at practically every service during the week; his messages were strong and well received, and there were eighteen additions to the Church at the close of the meeting." Bro. Wright is one of our loyal, consecrated, successful pastors, and we are sure he will decide at an early date on work for the coming year. Fortunate will the pastorate be that secures his services, and happy also will the pastor be who shall be chosen for and accepts the Pleasant Grove-Ingram pastorate.

Now this is the way to treat newcomers in Church and Sunday School work: "A 'surprise shower' was given at the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., Tuesday night, for Mr. and Mrs. George Robertson. Sixty people gathered in the Sunday School auditorium. A short sketch was put on by Miss Louise Ellsworth and Charles Parker, Jr., in which the new spirit of co-operation of the Sunday School was mentioned, and an invitation extended to others to come to the school. At the close of the sketch, a wagon, covered as in the days of yore, and labeled, 'Robertson Moving Van, Long and Short-Distance Hauling,' was rolled in. Mr. C. E. Savedge presented the van to Mr. and Mrs. Robertson. It was found to be loaded with household articles, ranging from a floor lamp to the old familiar rolling-pin. Many articles of usefulness and value were given by the many new friends of the Robertsons to be used in their home. After an inspection of the gifts, Mr. and Mrs. Robertson extended their thanks and appreciation for the splendid shower. Refreshments were served, and the crowd dispersed, with everybody happy over the event. Mr. Robertson is director of religious education and assistant pastor of the First Christian Church. Both he and his wife are recent graduates of Elon College."

A CHALLENGE TO LIBERALITY.

Evidently THE CHRISTIAN SUN has a reader in Texas who loves his Church and his Lord. He writes, of his own volition and without solicitation, so far as we know, under recent date: "You pick out ten Sunday Schools or Churches not now making a monthly offering (to missions), and for every dollar they give for a period of three months I will match it with another dollar, and their Church or school will get full credit for all they and I give. You make up your list of Churches or Sunday Schools and get their promise of co-operation. Then at the end of each month mail me a list of what each gave, and I will mail you a check for the total amount of all."

Now, what do some of our Churches and Sunday Schools not contributing anything to missions think of that? Then this brother proceeds: "I also make an offer of a dollar for each dollar you can get my own Church to give. This last offer to hold good until further notice."

This brother still holds his membership in a rural Church (whose name he gives THE SUN editor) in North Carolina, from which he went out some years ago to win his place and do his work in the world. He is yet a young man, by no means a rich man, but tithes his earnings and wants his Church to share with him the joy and gladness of helping make the world Christian. He strictly enjoins us not to use his name or let his name be known in the matter, as he wishes no praise or honor for anything he may do or amount he may give, since it is all in the name and for the sake of his Lord.

Where are the ten Churches or Sunday Schools that will accept this wonderful challenge to good works in the name of their Lord? J. O. A.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

SAFE IS HE WHOSE TRUST IS IN GOD.

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved. The Lord is thy keeper, the Lord is thy shade—the Lord shall preserve thee from evil; He shall preserve thy soul. The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth and forevermore."—Psa. 121.

Some time ago, an editorial came out in a leading denominational publication on the theme of "The Hundred and Twenty-first Psalm." This great psalm is one of the most outstanding of all the psalms, for it comforts those who daily make sacrifice in order to live close to God.

Many, many generations ago, this psalm comforted and consoled God's people. Its author was a very religious man and the same God about whom he spake then may speak now. Let us hear Him in this generation.

Moreover, to him God was not an object of fear and dread, but rather one to whom he turned with eager confidence as the source of his peace and the ground of his confidence. What an exalted and uplifting conception of God finds expression in this psalm! How little it has in common with that cold and unsatisfying conception that most men apparently have!

We do not know the circumstances under which this psalm was penned. Whatever his outward condition, it is clear that the writer had been the victim of at least temporary despondency. He wrote out of a consciousness of his own helplessness. "From whence shall come my help?" (Revised Version) is a cry that rises from the depths. In the midst of such anguish as try men's souls, however, he turns his eyes toward the hills of Jerusalem, where sat the temple in which Jehovah was enshrined, and this led him to bethink himself of that God whom for the time being he had forgotten. That was all that was needed to enable him to make the triumphant reply, "My help cometh from Jehovah, who made heaven and earth." Then he gives fuller expression to the ground of his confidence: "He will not suffer thy foot to be moved; he that keepeth thee will not slumber. Behold, he that keepeth Israel will neither slumber nor sleep. Jehovah is thy Keeper; Jehovah is thy shade upon thy right hand. The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night. Jehovah will keep thee from all evil; He will keep thy soul. Jehovah will keep thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth and forevermore."

The key-thought is that of Jehovah as our Keeper. This thought is iterated and reiterated. Six times Jehovah is spoken of as the Keeper of the individual or of Israel. It was this conviction—the conviction that he who watches over us neither slumbers or sleeps; that heartened and encouraged, the psalmist amid the trials and perplexities of his mortal life. And to how many in all ages has the same conviction brought comfort and strength.

Most men apparently do not share the psalmist's conception of God. There are many to whom God is little more than the first great Cause. As thinking men, they realize the need of God to account for the existence of the universe. And so they hold that infinite ages ago God created the original world stuff with all its potentialities, but that all subsequent development has been the evolving, the unfolding of what was contained in germ in that original stuff. According to these, God's activity ceased with that first act of creation; since that time, things have gone their way for all practical purposes as though God did not exist. It is clear that such a conception is far removed from that of the psalmist. Such do not think of God as their keeper and protector. God, for them, is an absentee, a far-away reality, quite uninterested in what befalls them. It is obvious that there is no place in their thoughts for Christianity with its doctrine of an incarnation, its belief that God's own Son tabernacled among us; no place for the thought that as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. These cannot believe that the Bible contains a revelation from God because that would imply an interest in us on God's part that simply does not exist. According to these, we may surmise and speculate, but we can have no certain knowledge concerning eternal verities, concerning such questions as "Whence did we come?" "Why are we here?" "Whither are we going?" Such a view is little better than blank atheism. It may in some degree satisfy the intellect in its search after a first cause, but it leaves the heart cold and dejected. How can we suppose that God exists and yet suppose that He takes no real interest in the creatures of His hand?

There are others whose conception more nearly approximates that of the psalmist, and yet which falls far short of it. They do not hold that God's activity ceased, and yet for them also God is in large degree an absentee God. They think that God's attitude toward the world is similar to that which the clockmaker sustains to a clock, to use a classical illustration. He constructs the clock and turns it over to the purchaser; but that ends his part, unless something goes wrong. So these think of God as concerning himself with the workings of the world, only when something goes wrong or when its resident energies prove unequal to produce the desired results. Then He intervenes to readjust matters or even to introduce new forces. There is room here for belief in the Bible as the Word of God, for belief in the incarnation, atonement, resurrection and descent of the Holy Spirit. These deny that all that is and all that will be may be explained as the operation of forces resident in nature from the beginning. None the less, such a view is not only inadequate as a theory, its tendency is to lead men to see the hand of God only in the great events and crises of life and to forget that he is also active in the ordinary events, the petty trials and perplexities of life. For practical purposes, it is as though God were awake only at intervals; for the most part, it is as though He were asleep, unconcerned with the affairs of this world of ours. Under such a conception, this psalm would never have been written.

The God of this psalm, as of the Scripture as a whole, is not an absentee God, a far-away reality. He is one from whose thought and care we are never removed. He is active in all life. Nothing happens apart from Him. And yet how prone we are to forget this—to see the hand of God in the extraordinary events of life, but to forget that he is active even in the petty and ordinary events of which our lives are for the most part composed. With the psalmist, we should realize that God is present in all life and in every event as truly, though not as directly, in natural events as in miraculous events. They err who suppose that God was active in darkening the sun that shone on Calvary, but that He is inactive in producing the daily sunlight that blesses and cheers; who suppose that God was active when He caused the manna to fall from heaven, but is inactive in connection with our obtaining our daily bread; who suppose that He was active in calling Lazarus back to newness of life, but inactive in preserving our lives from day to day.

How consoling the thought that the Lord keeps us, that the sleepless God is guarding us from all evil. We may forget Him, but He never forgets us. At all times the everlasting arms are underneath us and round about us. Not only are we told that the Lord will keep us from all evil, we are told that He will keep us forevermore. No real harm befalls the people of God. There is much apparent harm, much want and sorrow and suffering. In their case, however, these things prove to be blessings in disguise. Many have said what the psalmist says elsewhere: "Before I was afflicted, I went astray, but now have I kept thy word." God causes all things to work together for good to those who love, trust and obey Him, to those who are called according to His purpose. What is more, it is no fickle love that God has set upon us. God's love is an unchanging love, His covenant is an everlasting covenant. "For the mountains may depart, and the hills be removed; but my lovingkindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall my covenant of peace be removed, saith Jehovah, that hath mercy on thee." The God who protects us today will not neglect us tomorrow.

There is comfort here for the Church of the living God. While God's tender mercies are over all His works, and while none are beyond His care and protection, yet it is Israel who is the special object of His solicitude. Israel may be understood as including all those who, having turned away from sin, have sought the Father's face. These are in a unique sense the objects of His sleepless vigilance. The gates of hell shall never prevail against the Church of God. Particular Churches or particular denominations may go down in the struggle, but the Church itself is bound to be victorious. God is for her; what matters it who or what is against her?

Franklin, Va.

On June 10th, the United States Senate received a shock. Senator Smoot introduced a bill to amend the food and drug act of June 30, 1906, by extending its provisions to tobacco and tobacco products.

He said he introduced the bill because "the manufacture and sale of tobacco products are matters that affect the public health and welfare of millions of our population"; that "various drug products are contained in tobacco"; and that "false and deceptive statements made through advertising media in the interest of tobacco products should be brought under government regulation."

In introducing his bill, the senator delivered a scathing address in which he charges the tobaccoists with indulging in "an orgy of buncombe, quackery, and downright falsehood and fraud to create a vast woman-and-child market for their products."

Any one interested in having a part in the campaign in this matter so vital to the "public health and welfare of millions of the population" can obtain copies of the senator's address and suggested form of petition by writing to the No-Tobacco League, Box 578, Indianapolis, Ind., and enclosing 5 cents for postage.—Christian Evangelist.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CONFERENCE.

Sitting down this Saturday morning in his office at Elon College, three hundred miles away from where the sessions of Conference were held the past week, the editor will not be able to write with any degree either of composure or accuracy about the Conference and its doings. Such a halo of delight and ecstasy hangs about the whole experience that it is not only difficult but impossible for him to think straight and express himself composedly about the events of the trip to and from the Conference and the items of the program during the Conference. He hardly knows to whom he shall attribute this upset of his nerves and this inability to accurately put down events as they happened. Possibly no one person or event is to blame or should be called to account for this totality of happy experiences which he finds himself unable now to analyze and separate and reproduce in print.

To begin with, Bro. C. D. Johnston and his good wife of the Christian Orphanage, and J. O. Atkinson, Jr., and his good wife packed us into the extra seat of the Johnston Ford and assumed all responsibilities and liabilities of the trip, beginning early Tuesday morning, and by 11 o'clock of that day planted our feet on terra firma at Natural Bridge, Va. Now, this "bridge" is a freak and wonder of nature that never ceases to thrill and delight the pilgrims from all over the earth who come to visit, to wonder and to admire not merely the massive bridge of earth that spans a stream now gone and forgotten, but the wild scene that surrounds and magnifies the same. And, then, an hour later, at Lexington, Va., one stands with uncovered head and in adoring silence at the tomb of Stonewall Jackson, that Christian soldier who moved fearlessly amid the flying bullets of numberless battles and was sustained by a courage born of an implicit faith in God. History tells us that before every battle Jackson spent much time in prayer, and his soldiers came to understand that when he spent long hours in prayer they knew that some hard fighting was about to begin, and whenever they saw his lips moving during a hotly contested battle, they knew that those lips were moving in prayer to God.

And then in the chapel, not far away at Lexington, lies the stately form of Robert E. Lee, that uncrowned King of the Southern Confederacy, and who, because they were unable to crown him by deed of hand and openly, crowned him in their hearts; and men and women will honor this man's name as long as Christian courtesy, fortitude and genteel human conduct shall have a name and place in the minds and hearts of mankind.

And then out by Staunton, where Woodrow Wilson was born, and down through the lovely Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. No wonder the Indians named it "Shenandoah"—"The Light of the Stars." Green grass grows abundantly here, and fat sheep and sleek cattle graze and browse leisurely on a thousand farms, where beautiful farm-houses with their great barns adorn and beautify the far-spreading acres in every direction as far as the eye can see. One finds beauty, glory and grandeur in three layers, or "three deep," in the Valley of Virginia. Under the surface are great caverns and grottoes, wonders of the world, lighted by day and by night, inviting the ceaseless stream of tourists to visit and be amazed at these subterranean displays of matchless art and indescribable beauty. The second layer, or strata, of attractiveness in the Valley is the wide-spreading acres of fertile fields with growing grain and cattle. The third strata, the towering and gently sloping mountains on either side of the Valley, mountains that temper the winds and give health and vigor and refreshing breezes to happy and prosperous multitudes of men and women who cultivate and are enriched by the fertile acres that intervene.

But, at this rate, how are we ever going to reach this Conference at Timber Ridge in West Virginia, just across the border-line, twenty-odd miles out from Winchester? From this beautiful plateau, rich, luxurious, productive, one views towering mountains in the distance, and hundreds of happy homes dotted here and there on the hilltops, or in the favored valleys intervening.

This was the eighty-first session of the Conference which was meeting at Timber Ridge Christian Church, Rev. A. W. Andes, pastor. Rev. B. J. Earp is the President of the Conference, and called the same in session at 10:30 A. M. August 14th. Dr. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary, Dayton, Ohio, led the opening devotionals, making an inspiring talk on the relationship that the individual should sustain to the Church and the Lord as represented by "the vine and the branches." Bro. N. L. Morris, of the local Church, welcomed the delegates and visitors. Rev. R. L. Williamson, from the Winchester Church, responded in fitting terms. Rev. B. J. Earp, in lieu of a formal annual address, gave to the Conference a diagram and drawing of the location of the various Churches of the Conference, and in doing so presented for the consideration of Conference a suggested form of grouping the Churches into pastorates. The speaker seemed to have studied the field thoroughly, and his map revealed a very suggestive plan of grouping the Churches in the Conference as to locality. Later in the Conference a committee of five was appointed to take under consideration the advisability of trying to induce the Churches, through committees from each, to group themselves into convenient pastorates, following or rejecting the lines laid down in the diagram of the Conference President as they may see fit. This committee was elected by the Conference and is to take the matter under advisement with the prospect of returning the results of their work to the Conference in the 1930 annual session.

In the afternoon, Rev. Joe French led the devotional service, and Mr. Marvin Seldon presented to the Conference the report on religious literature. Rev. W. P. Minton, speaking for our publications in general, emphasized especially the value of the Herald of Gospel Liberty to the Church and also the value and merit of our Sunday School literature. Bro. C. D. Johnston, business manager, emphasized the claims of THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the members of Conference and urged that the Conference give THE SUN a wider reading and a more liberal support by increasing the number of subscribers.

Rev. Joe French submitted the report on social service, and Rev. A. W. Andes that on Christian union. This latter report evoked interesting discussion, and it was found that the Conference was quite emphatic and unanimous in its desire and decision to enter the proposed merger of our Christian and Congregational Churches. The desire was expressed that if any delegate or visitor had objection to the proposed union the same be named, and no objection was uttered. The committee's report strongly endorsed the proposed union. Mrs. A. W. Andes presented the report of the committee on evangelism, which report showed the result of the evangelistic effort in the Conference the past year; and while there has been many conversions and additions to Churches through evangelism, the report recommended that more emphasis the coming year be placed on this all-important theme.

At the evening session, Miss Verdie Showalter presented the report of the committee on foreign missions, highly endorsing our foreign missionary work and recommending that efforts be increased to give a more liberal support to our foreign missionary work and workers. The Mission Secretary of the Southern Convention spoke on "World Brotherhood," and received, after the address, a compliment which he very much appreciated, since it came from a very intelligent and courteous member of the congregation: "If your address had not been so interesting, I am sure I would have slept even more than I did while you were speaking." We wonder, since that remark was made, while all those who on going to sleep during a long address, are not as courteous and considerate as this good woman was, and instead of saying, "I was so sleepy I just could not help sleeping while you spoke," say as this courteous and honest sister said: "I would have slept more if your address had not been so interesting." That gives the speaker more comfort and at the same time entirely excuses the listener for sleeping during a long address.

Thursday, the 15th, was an exceedingly busy day, and the sessions were very largely attended. Rev. R. L. Williamson opened the morning service with devotional exercises helpful to all. Rev. A. W. Andes, the chairman, presented the report of the committee on education, which strongly endorsed Elon College for the great work it had done in our denomination and for Christian education. It also urged that the Sunday Schools take an offering for Elon College on each fifth Sunday of the year. The report expressed the regret that Bro. Alfred Dofflemyre, who attended Elon College the past year as a ministerial student of the Conference, could not be in school the coming year, but would continue in his work of preparation for the ministry. Rev. Joe French was transferred from the Alabama Conference, and Rev. R. L. Williamson from the Eastern North Carolina Conference to membership in this Conference. Dean A. L. Hook, of Elon, made a choice and an exceedingly appropriate address and a most telling plea for Elon College and the support of the same by the Conference constituency. Dean Hook was among homefolks and never spoke publicly to greater effectiveness and acceptance than on this occasion. Mrs. J. J. Lincoln made a most intelligent and worth-while report on "Stewardship," emphasizing her recommendations with a well-prepared address on this engaging theme. This was followed by an address on "Stewardship" by Dr. W. P. Minton which gripped the entire Conference and certainly gave to the great audience a lesson it cannot forget in the meaning and value of stewardship. By special vote, an offering for foreign missions was taken, which amounted to $33.25.

In the afternoon, Superintendent C. D. Johnston, to the delight of all, addressed the assembly on "Our Orphanage." In his talk, Bro. Johnston showed how our Orphanage compares in running expenses with other orphanages, and that ours ranks among the foremost in the matter of economy. And then he told of some of the assets in real character and achievement of those who have had home and training at our Orphanage and gone out in the world as useful citizens.

Following this address, after miscellaneous items of interest were attended to and officers were elected for the coming year, being the same as those the past year, Mr. Roy A. Larrick presided over the Conference Missionary Association, which paid into the home mission fund of the Conference in a few moments $170. Bro. Larrick is president of the Sunday School Convention of the Conference, and in his report on Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor told of the Convention and of the points of excellence the Convention was trying to achieve, that of giving impetus to all the Sunday Schools and emphasizing in all the schools the need and the opportunity of the once-a-month offering to missions, once-a-month offering to the Orphanage, and the fifth Sunday offerings to the college. J. O. Atkinson made a report to the Conference at this point of what the various Churches, with the aid of the Sunday Schools, had contributed to home and foreign missions the past year, showing a total of $1,086.91. (To this some individual donations were handed him immediately after the close of the session, which carried the total from the members of this Conference the past year to $1,100.) Five Churches with their Sunday Schools of the Conference gave each $100 or more. Bethlehem, $100; Leaksville, $119.67; Winchester, $124.92; Linville, $137.38, and Antioch (leading them all in the amount given and reaching a total of) $200.82. Sunday Schools and Churches of this Conference are cultivating the missionary spirit as is evidenced by their missionary giving and the many missionary programs that are being put on through the year. Much of this is due to the consecrated activities of the many faithful women throughout the Conference.

At the evening session, the Woman's Mission Board had charge of the program, and Rev. W. P. Minton was the speaker, who gave by picture and the use of slides graphic description of much of our work on the foreign field.

It was the editor's great regret that he had to travel all day Friday, which was the last day of the Conference, and so could not be present at the closing session of the Conference Friday A. M., and cannot give in detail the business items. It was a good session of a great Conference. The spirit of the meeting was fine, the discussions were lively, intelligent and informative, and there was a deep interest throughout in all parts of the program. The large delegation was gloriously entertained in the happy homes of the people of Timber Ridge, each guest feeling that surely he had been assigned the best home in the community.

This writer had the joy of being entertained by the lovely family of Bro. and Sister Luther Johnson, in which there are three lovely daughters and a son, and whose intelligent, courteous and congenial company made the visitor feel welcome and at home. This home is, indeed, as a light upon a candlestick, or a city set on a hill, for the wide orchard and great spreading fields make the heart glad; and the glorious mountain-peaks stretching out as far as the eye can see from the lawn of the lovely home, cause one to repeat again and again with the psalmist: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills whence cometh my help."

Going to and returning from the Conference, our company of five were joyously entertained in the hospitable home of Friend J. C. Bradford and wife, of Bethlehem Church, whose hospitality knows no bounds, and whose fellowship is a delight to the heart and the soul.

And now the reader will understand the opening sentence of this long paper (if any reader has followed it through)—that sentence which indicated that our heart was still singing, and our mind was still dazed and overwhelmed by the halo, the glory and the gladness of untold incidents and events that transpired during four days, every moment of which was packed with peace and plenty and with the joy of delightful fellowship and all that makes life glad. J. O. A.

WHY AND HOW?

All questions involve why and how. Why should one keep the Sabbath and how should one keep the Sabbath? Why should one become a Christian and how can one become a Christian? Why should parents train their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord and how can parents train their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord? Why and how are endless in their application, and there is no obligation that does not embrace both of them.

Why should a citizen obey the eighteenth amendment? Because it is a part of the law of the nation, and the sworn obligation of citizenship binds the citizen to obey the law. There is no exception to this duty on the part of citizens. Then how should a citizen obey the eighteenth amendment? By total abstinence from intoxicating liquors; by his attitude toward public sentiment. The citizen is more than an individual. He is a part of society, and he should help to cultivate a public sentiment obedient to law.

Why should members of the Church attend Church services regularly? Because non-attendance would destroy worship and make it impossible to preach the gospel; because God requires it: "forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is." Not only so; but for the benefit of the person himself and his help to others. Regular attendance of all the members of any Church would improve the preaching, singing, worship, fellowship, and contributions; and all these are necessary for the best results in the salvation of sinners, and the creation of a public sentiment that would bless the community. How can attendance be regular and useful? By arranging personal and home affairs so as to create the habit of attendance until the community catches the spirit and joins the people of God in the house of prayer. "No man lives to himself," and in regular Church attendance his life is enlarged. The reaction of such influence upon others comes back to the individual with a satisfaction that always comes from self-denial in doing what benefits self and others. It can be done by making Church attendance a real Christian obligation.

Why should all members make contributions to the support of the Church and its enterprises? Because God requires His followers to lay aside the first day of the week and to honor the Lord with his substance as the Lord has prospered him. How can this be done? By carefully considering the obligation, the needs of the Church and personal ability to give. Such consideration begets a desire to give and the ability to give. Exercise in anything, the cultivation of any habit, the sense of obligation felt in the heart, the habit of such giving enables the individual to give beyond what he thought he could give. Giving becomes a satisfaction just as any other habit furnishes its own reward. "Give, and it shall be given unto you." No Christian service is lost.

CO-OPERATION.

During the World War, the allied armies came to the sad realization that the German army was defeating them along their several fronts. The French were brave fighters, and so were the English, and so were the Belgians, and so were the Americans, but they were proving unequal to the unified army of the imperial German government.

Then something happened which brought the speedy defeat of that great fighting machine. The allied armies pooled their strength under the direction of Marshal Foch. The doom of the German hope of world domination was ended when this method of co-operation became effective.

The Church is beginning to realize that it is in a similar situation, and that co-operation is necessary for it, too. Its divided state is making it ineffective, and consequently we have talk of union projects in various groups of the Protestant Church. The union of our own Church with the Congregational Church, which is scheduled to take place this fall, is in keeping with this general spirit and conviction.

Rudyard Kipling never said a truer thing than the sentiment of these two couplets:

"It ain't the guns, nor armament,
Nor funds that they can pay,
But the close co-operation
That makes them win the day.

"It ain't the individuals,
Nor the army as a whole,
But the everlastin' team-work
Of every bloomin' soul."

CONFERENCES MEET.

Georgia and Alabama meets with the Church at Lanett, Ala., Tuesday, October 8, 1929.

Alabama meets with the Church at Wadley, Ala., Tuesday, October 15, 1929.

Eastern Virginia meets Wednesday, October 30, 1929.

Western North Carolina meets Tuesday, November 5, 1929, at Smithwood, Randolph County, N. C.

North Carolina and Virginia meets with Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., Tuesday, November 12, 1929.

Eastern North Carolina meets Tuesday, November 19, 1929.

NOTICE.

In submission to the Master's will, I shall end my stay in the Windsor pastorate with the close of this Conference year. We have made friends since being here whom we shall regret to leave; however, it seems to be the Lord's will that we make a change. So will be pleased to correspond with any Church or group of Churches desiring a pastor.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the mother of the Southern Christian Convention, Elon College, the Christian Orphanage, missionary activity, and the spirit of unity manifest in the Convention at Marion, Ind., in 1890, and that spirit that is so outspoken for harmony between denominations. Its motto, "In Essentials, Unity"; "In Non-essentials, Liberty"; "In All Things, Charity." The Christian Church has inoculated other denominations with this spirit, and that explains the denominational movement toward unity in foreign missions, and the elimination of overlapping in the home field. There has been not only a waste of money and energy, but a generation of competition and jealousy that has produced selfishness on the part of denominations. Three Churches, three Sunday Schools, and three choirs in a village of three hundred is a travesty on common sense, much less religion. The Church needs to admit that "united, we stand; divided, we fall." "In union there is strength."

In present-day expression, the emphasis is placed on union rather than on unity. Jesus prayed, in John 17, for unity, not uniformity; and that has been the position of the Christian Church from its origin: It has done several things as first in history, and these things have been taken up by other denominations and become real working elements of power. The Christian Church published the first religious paper in the world—the Herald of Gospel Liberty—still published weekly in Dayton, Ohio; and now all denominations issue denominational religious papers, and many independent religious papers are published. Had the Christian Church increased in numbers and wealth in proportion to the multiplication of Church papers, it no doubt would have become vain and proud. Its limited growth has kept the Church humble and prevented jealousy on the part of other denominations. The humble sphere in which Jesus moved, and the great lessons He taught made Him the great power that is overcoming the world.

The introduction of co-education in Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, was the beginning of a revolution in education. It has changed the attitude, not only of the Church but of the State, towards education of women. It has liberalized and unified the public mind toward this great subject that concerns all mankind. THE CHRISTIAN SUN has advocated these great ideas and the children of them for eighty-five years, and encouraged the members of the Christian Church to support them in their work for the salvation of men. Such a paper deserves and should have the loyal support of all the families in the Southern Christian Convention by subscribing for and reading THE SUN. The cost is so small—$2.00 a year, or 4 cents a week—that hardly any family is too poor to take the paper. Those who take THE SUN should encourage others to subscribe for it. It is an invaluable weekly visitor to any Christian home. Like sunshine, it lights the home when admitted into it. A home would be dark without windows and the sunlight. It is essential to life, work and enjoyment. THE CHRISTIAN SUN does the same for the Christian home.

ELON LETTER.

Occasionally one comes across a sentiment in his reading which sets in motion a train of thought. I recently ran across such an arresting statement. It read as follows: "It is a principle in psychology as well as in experience, that whenever an organization takes on itself an obligation for a cause outside of its local needs, new life is infused into that organization." I have found myself thinking on the implications of this statement many times since and I cannot escape the conviction that it will be most helpful for leaders in Christian Churches and the allied organizations to consider this statement and to consider it well.

This summer, in motoring through Kentucky, I passed through the Cane Ridge Revival section where the Christian Church began in the West and where, through a working agreement with the Christians, the Disciples of Christ also began. I passed by one of the wealthiest churches in Kentucky of the Disciples of Christ, a rural church with many millionaires in its membership, a church to which people on Sunday drive only in the highest priced automobiles and whose country homes are rural palaces. But this church, a leader in that denomination told me, is dying, dying because it has no interest in anything but itself.

Some years ago Dr. Walter S. Athearn made a survey of the Religious Education situation in the State of Indiana. We have in that State a very wealthy rural church, one of the wealthiest in our denomination. He rated this church 5 per cent efficient in its educational work. This church has no vision, and it too is dying, dying in accordance with that all too true sentiment of the Scriptures, "Where there is no vision, the people perish," and also their churches.

I have made some little study of the local churches in the Southern Christian Convention since 1794. More churches have died than have survived in the 135 years of our history. Is it safe to say that these churches died because they had no sense of obligation for any cause outside their local needs.

Is the Sunday School in your Church sick? Does it find it hard to get enough money to buy the literature? Does it feel that it must buy the David C. Cook literature because it is cheaper than the literature of our own denomination? Then, let the Sunday School give an offering each month to the Orphanage, and another each month to missions, and each fifth Sunday's offering to the college. According to the wisdom of the world, this procedure will kill the feeble Sunday School, but according to the mathematics of the kingdom, it will infuse new life in it. Try it and see.

Is the Church house in bad state of repair? Is the attendance on the preaching services irregular? Is the preacher's salary in arrears? Then let the Church raise its Conference apportionments in full and petition the apportionment committee at the next annual session to double the same. Let the Church take the Thanksgiving offering for the Orphanage and the Easter offering for missions, and let the whole membership help the women of the Church raise as much through missionary organizations as the pastor's salary. I predict that the feeble Church which undertakes such drastic measures of cure will suddenly find itself flourishing in health and spiritual vigor.

For "it is a principle of psychology as well as in experience that whenever an organization takes on itself an obligation for a cause outside of its local needs, new life is infused into that organization."

FROM NAPLES, ITALY.

Enroute to Gibraltar,
Saturday, July 13, 1929.

The past ten days have afforded me and my shipmates experiences beyond description, limited only by the lack of "spondoolix." Those who have been blessed with the much-loved "filthy lucre" had a big time, and those who did not, have had to make their own good time without it. Anyway, to put our feet on Italian shore was the fulfillment of one of our dreams, and it is believed we have gotten about as much out of our liras (Italian name for our 5 cents) as any one could.

I wish you could have been with us on the deck of our ship the morning of the fifth as we were steaming into the Bay of Naples. Vesuvius was dead ahead and due East. The gray dawn of the day, rapidly shifting into the lighter hues, with a few drifting clouds draping across it, was magnificence itself, and, set with the big funnel-shaped Vesuvius belching out smoke drifting off into the sky, was beautiful to the uh degree. The sun came up directly behind it and gave a red glow to the whole, which made it appear divine. As it ascended, the sky became more and more of a light gold, pierced through by the oft-pictured sun-streaks shooting, as it were, from the mouth of the volcano, high up into the sky. The beauty and grandeur of this beggars description. Folks spend a lot of money to see pictures like this. One would think that the God of nature had thrown up this rupture of the earth's surface and then suspended it to the sun with all its golden glow and sparkling to attract the world to the beauty and glory of ordinary things.

As soon as we "dropped the hook," the fireworks began. A party of midshipmen were off on a trip to examine the old burning demon and see what it was all about. From that hour until the night of the tenth, the gang was going ashore somewhere to see something and be relieved of their coin. Saturday and Sunday, about 500 went to Rome, and on Monday and Tuesday about 600. Nearly every day parties of smaller groups were taking in Vesuvius, Pompeii, Amalfi Drive, and the interesting points of the city of Naples.

The city of Pompeii is a city which was destroyed by Vesuvius' eruption in the year 79 A. D. The whole city has been excavated and all treasures removed to the museum. All we see now are the streets, the buildings, fountains, statues, columns, baths, gardens, art on the walls, etc.

Vesuvius is rich in vegetation, orchards of apricots, olives, and vineyards of grapes, for quite a way up it. At the top, one has a magnificent view of the city and surrounding country, and there is quite a thrill in going down into the crater to the inner one where the sulphuric smoke is belching out.

At Rome, the tourist guide showed the party the Borgenes Museum of Arts, containing specimens dating back to the twelfth century. He showed them the catacombs—the underground city of the dead five stories deep—where over a half-million bodies were laid to rest and where only four are left now, which, we were told, the Lombards failed to find when Rome was sacked and the catacombs were ravaged about the seventh century and the relics of the martyrs were removed to the Churches. They were taken to the Coliseum, where the gladiators, with pride, fought to death for the amusement of the people, and where, as the combat was about to begin, each contestant saluted the emperor and said, "We who are about to die, salute thee." Where chariot races were held, and where Christian martyrs were dragged to the slaughter and thrown to the wild beasts. They took them to the Vatican, the home of the Pope and the seat of the Catholic Church, covering a territory of about 300 acres, the building itself covering forty. The Vatican contains a collection of all the fine arts of ancient days, the richest treasure house of the world. St. Peter's Cathedral is here, and the largest and finest Church in the world, accommodating 100,000 worshipers at once. St. Peter's body rests under the high altar. (?)

One of the most interesting incidents was the reception of the Pope, who very kindly consented to give an audience to each party. The officers were presented in person, and he addressed the whole party and blessed a rosary which each one held in his hand. For a Catholic to have a rosary blessed personally by the Pope is a thing to be very proud of.

There are many other places and things which we have seen. It would fill a book to write about them. Those who could not see all, have put in a good time seeing what they could and enjoying (?) the beer and wine and real spaghetti. (It is but fair to say that while the majority of our men indulge in these refreshments, there are a great many who do not.) The behavior of all has been such as to merit the commendation of the admiral and the captain, and that is worth a lot.

We could write much more, but space forbids. The trip is a great one. We are all well and having a good time.

Yours truly,

U. S. S. Utah.

FROM ACROSS THE SEA.

Jerusalem, Palestine, July 26, 1929.

Dear Friends:

We have now been in Syria and Palestine almost two weeks. Every minute has been taken in either sight-seeing or study, and as a result there comes a strange new conception of not only the Bible but of the Bible lands. These days in Jerusalem especially have brought to me the fact that in this very sacred spot where our Lord lived and performed His great works and where He died for the world, it is all so commercialized that we fail to see Jesus Christ because of the Church. A Catholic Church or a Mohammedan mosque over every sacred spot. The only place that we have found not covered thus is the Mount of Beatitudes. Some of the most absurd traditions! For example, in the Mosque of Omar, on the Rock of Sacrifice, where they claim Abraham offered up his son, Isaac, and from which rock Mohammed ascended to heaven, there is a bottle with some of the whiskers of Mohammed, and they claim that at the day of judgment Jesus will stand on Mount of Olives, a mile and a half away, and Mohammed will stand on the Rock of Sacrifice, and each will hold to the end of a rope made of these whiskers, and all who can walk the rope are saved.

This afternoon we went to the Jews' wailing place, where the Jews were gathered in great numbers crying and praying and kissing the big stones in the wall with the idea that these stones are all that remain of the former kingdom of the Jews, but that their wailing and moaning will restore again the kingdom to Israel. There were here beggars of the most impoverished type by the scores. It is all so different from what I expected to find the land that we have called "Holy" that my mind is all in a whirl. I have not as yet seen "Gordon's Calvary," so I cannot say as to which I think the real place of crucifixion. Solomon's quarries are very interesting to me, and I can see some of the greatness of the builders of his temple in the manner of their procedure.

We are leaving here next Tuesday for Cairo, Egypt. The weather has been hot and peculiarly depressing. With all good wishes, I am,

C. C. RYAN.

STEWARDSHIP RECOMMENDATIONS.

(Presented by Mrs. J. J. Lincoln and adopted by the Valley of Virginia Conference, August 11, 1929.)

Information.

1. Continued and continuous reading of all current stewardship matter at hand, especially the weekly writings of our own "st'ship" leaders in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Herald of Gospel Liberty. Also books on Christian stewardship, such as can be purchased or made available through a Church or community library, or otherwise.

2. The adoption of a stewardship book to be used for class study during the special stewardship period—November and December.

Administration.

3. Creation or continuance, as the case may be, of a finance committee to be composed of the pastor, financial secretary, treasurers, stewardship secretary, and from one to three other members whose obligation shall be to study and, as rapidly as can be made practicable to a given situation, apply to the Church's financial management the best methods known to good business.

4. Looking toward acquiring the highest standard of Christian character and to a more commensurate and adequate Church and benevolence support through systematic, individual paying and giving; the finance committee and the pastor conferring and concurring, immediate urge of definite, constructive preparation for early introduction of the annual every-member canvass.

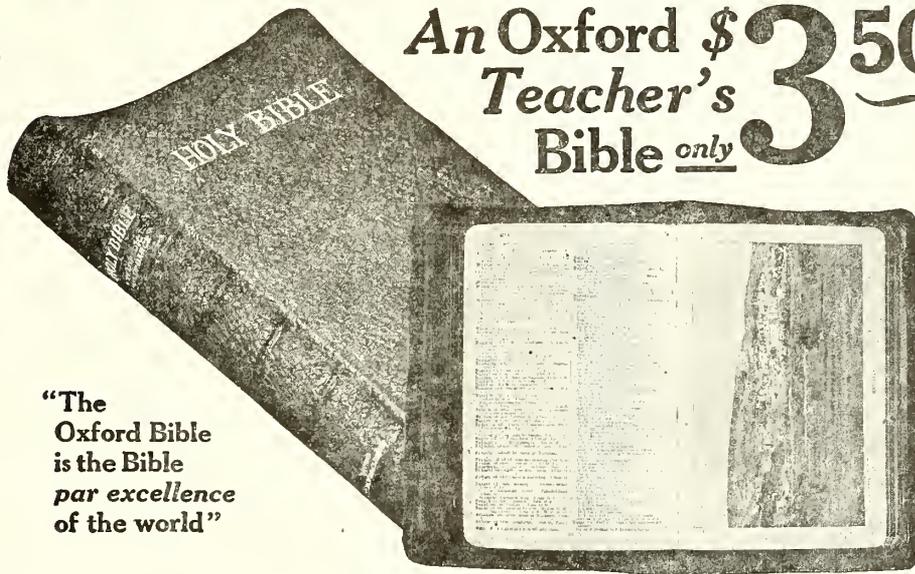

Dedication.

5. Where a pulpit is occupied by the pastor every Sunday, a series of four to six stewardship sermons; and where preaching is monthly, stewardship expressly to be stressed in not less than three consecutive sermons—in either instance preferably immediately preceding tithers' enrollment day, second Sunday in December.

6. Signers of the tithers' enrollment card definitely to be sought and enrolled at the preaching service second Sunday in December or nearest Sunday thereto.

OXFORD BIBLES

An Oxford $3.50
Teacher's Bible only

"The Oxford Bible is the Bible par excellence of the world"

The best recommendation of the OXFORD TEACHER'S BIBLES is the fact that over 3,000,000 copies have been sold. The wonderful helps they contain save your time because they are alphabetically arranged, making reference easy. They take the place of many books about the Bible, and can be depended upon, being written by eminent scholars. The Helps contain 32 graphic illustrations, besides 15 beautifully colored maps. The text is the Authorized or King James version, with over 50,000 centre column references.

MINTON ON STEWARDSHIP.

Of course, one cannot carry in one's mind a clear outline even of a great address for many hours, especially when that address was one of many with others. But three days from the time and the scene of its delivery, THE SUN editor still has in his mind vividly certain points of emphasis on stewardship that Dr. W. P. Minton made in an address on the subject at the Valley of Virginia Conference this week.

First: God, by right of creation, is owner of all things. We ourselves cannot create, and we at our best can only manage for a season that which the Creator has permitted us to have charge of. This emphasis is increased to all Christians, for we belong to our Father by redemption, He having not only created but, through His Son, redeemed us, and, therefore, we stand in a peculiarly sacred and intimate relationship as stewards with our Father.

Secondly: Then it is by redemption that we become partners with God in kingdom service. Unhappy and unfriendly partnerships are brought about because of disagreeable partners, but we have as our partner in business the One who has both created all that we have and redeemed us, that we may be brought into a more sacred and secure relationship with Him as partner and guide in building up the kingdom of heaven on earth. It is not, therefore, a trial and a hardship, but a blessing and a joy to work in such a partnership.

Third: Acknowledgment of stewardship, which every one should make, and certainly every one who has been redeemed can make by setting aside some definite measures of our possessions. Some definite portion of our time should be set aside and sanctified by using it to acknowledge our indebtedness and our relationship to Him. A certain amount of our means should be sanctified by donating the same to furthering the work of our Lord, whose stewards we are. In thus making such acknowledgment of time, of talent, of means, of devotion, we help to sanctify the whole and make all our possessions the more sacred and more wholesome and divine.

Fourth: In acknowledging our stewardship, we owe it to God, our Partner and Creator, to give Him at all times the best we have and of which we are capable. We cannot afford to be dishonest, unkind, faithless, ungenerous, because our Partner and the one who has created all and owns all is Himself generous, kind, honest, courteous, liberal and true. We owe it to Him to give our best to every task and thus honor Him with an honorable partnership.

Fifth: This makes us personally responsible not only in our giving but in our getting. As faithful stewards of our Lord, we must get what we possess with honest hands and pure hearts, or we will dishonor our Partner.

Sixth: Then every steward, every Christian, in fact, in giving his substance will make it an act of worship. No one gives with the right spirit who does not do so as a part of worship, and with joy and gladness. This is the cheerful giver whom God loves, not sparingly or unwillingly or niggardly, but giving with a pure heart and as an act of praise to and of worship of Him from whom cometh all our blessings and to whom we owe all that we are and have and ever hope to be.

While we cannot from memory reproduce clearly the outline of the address, these facts stand out and are worth printing, that we may the better grasp what it means to get and to give in the name of our Lord.

MISSION WORK IS NOW "BIG BUSINESS."

Within the past few years, by the introduction of genuine business methods into the process of helping backward races, the combined American missionary fund has increased from $9,000,000 a year to $50,000,000 annually, and the number of missionaries from less than 6,000 to more than 16,000. Modern efficiency methods have become necessary to meet the increased demand, it was found through a survey of the situation, the results of which appear in the April number of Woman's Home Companion.

In the old days, declares the article, the potato barrels of the community were carefully saved, and on "Mission Saturdays" zealous Church women cleared their attics and confiscated their husbands' wearing apparel—even the toys of the children—and packed them in barrels to be sent to foreign lands. "Usually the chifton underwear went to the cold climates and the sleds and skates to tropical countries," says the article. The missionaries were forced to clothe themselves, their families and natives from the misfit garments that went abroad.

"Then," the writer continues, "men of affairs got together and decided to do a little missionary work on their own account. They came home after dealing with enterprises involving hundreds of thousands of dollars to find their wives and daughters trying to raise some missionary money by peddling on a lawn three oysters and a quarter of a tablespoonful of ice cream and strawberries for fifteen cents. But once they were aroused they did a mighty good job.

"Now a modern warehouse for supplying foreign missions has all the aspects of a big exporting house. The Rev. Smithson, in some far-away jungle, used to live a life of uncertainty. One year he would get eight derby hats, six woolen mufflers and as many boiled shirts as a bride gets saltcellars. Under the new system, he asks for what he needs and gets it.

"One sample modern requisition asked for window machines, pumps, windmills, maps, globes and kindergarten material, medicines, plows, motorcycles, seeds, plumbing materials, a seismograph, a gravestone and a glass eye. Thus, all the romance has not gone out of missionary work. The gravestone made that plain, as did the glass eye. Both told the story of life and death in the foreign field as effectively as the orators of the old days of 'packing-bees' told it.

"One thing is certain: if we are going to have missionaries, we should feed and clothe them properly. These Smithsons and Mrs. Smithsons stand not only for the Christian religion, but for Christian America in the eyes of hundreds of thousands of people who have no other standards by which to judge us. And, human nature being what it is, even in darkest Africa, they are all too apt to judge God's work and God's own country by the fit of Smithson's hat.

PORTO RICO LETTER.

Probably most SUN readers would be interested to know a little of what the religious education program has been accomplishing. This department is in its infancy on this island, but it is steadily growing. The natives are taking the leadership everywhere, and recognizing the value of religious education for their children. Of course, we must remember that the Churches on this island have not yet passed beyond the mission stage of development. They are struggling toward the idea of self-support in the midst of their poverty. From studying the conditions of the Churches in general, I know that the demands which would arise from the introduction of a new program could be taken almost as an imposition. There is not one of the Church buildings, including our own mission, that has been modified for educational purposes that offers bright prospects for graded Sunday School work, nor daily vacation schools, nor other departmental work. Can you imagine a Sunday School or D. V. B. school without any literature, or any separate rooms for the different department, or material for teachers, etc.? It is not an easy task to try to work under such conditions with a new program.

Or can you imagine trying to run four daily vacation Bible schools without any equipment and trained teachers? This year our own mission has had four schools fighting these problems, but I am happy to say that with the help of our Heavenly Father, all four schools have proved a great success, and two hundred and fifty-four children enjoyed the privileges and opportunities of this agency of religious instruction. It would be of some interest to the reader to know how the funds were raised for the above schools. Since last September, I had been collecting material that was useful for handwork, from the cyclonic boxes, and receiving a little offering from those that did not want to receive charity, but needed clothing; also daily offerings of the children helped to make it possible to have these four schools. I wish to thank all those who have been sending me boxes of material for such programs.

This year two new schools were added to our mission program of religious education, and a uniform program was carried by all the schools of the mission. Also this year I managed to arrange this program so that I could help all our schools. Since July 1st I have been living in my suitcase and meeting with many hardships and undesirable living conditions in order to make our program a success. I certainly have had an experience that could not be expressed.

This island needs your daily prayers and support, as well as good, active, earnest, willing leadership. Are you willing to help this island to be saved for Christ? If so, let us do our part.

OBSERVING NEW-DOLLAR DAY.

The following letter was sent out by Franklin Christian Church, Franklin, Va., and signed by the following officers: J. A. Williams, Sunday School teacher; L. R. Jones, Sunday School superintendent; Mrs. E. L. Beale, secretary of missions; J. W. Fix, pastor:

Dear Friend:

Dollar-day advertisements in our newspapers indicate bargain sales in department stores. Dollar day implies that the customer may receive more than a dollar's worth of goods by taking advantage of the opportunity. Human nature says, "Get your money's worth."

The purpose of this friendly letter is to tell you of the new-dollar day in your Sunday School, Sunday, August 18th. This special day will afford you an opportunity to make one of the greatest dollar investments of your life. Here is the proposition;

Invest a New Dollar in Missions.

Every dollar invested will help carry the gospel to others, even unto the uttermost parts. The Federal Council of Churches, of which we are a part, recommends that every Church member invest his first piece of new money in missions. God gave His best to the world. The ancient Jew gave the first fruits of his harvest to Jehovah. Will you not give one of your first new bills to Christ and His work of establishing the kingdom of heaven throughout the world?

Our Mission Board is badly in need of funds to "carry on." Dr. Atkinson's books close September 30th. He urges us to send our money by September 1st. Our apportionment is $800. To date we have sent $415. He is counting on the Franklin Church for the additional $385. Every dollar brought in Sunday morning will be sent to our Mission Secretary, and each person will receive credit. A list of those giving will be printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Let each one of us make a real investment in missions next Sunday morning. We are counting on you.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

LESSON IX—September 1, 1929.

EZRA'S RETURN TO JERUSALEM.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The hand of our God is upon all of them that seek Him, for good."—Ezra 8:22.

LESSON: Ezra 7:1-8:36.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 63:1-8.

About eighty years from the first return of the Jews from captivity, which was made under the decree of Cyrus, a second was made, with the permission of Artaxerxes, under Ezra, to Jerusalem. He was "a ready scribe of the law which the Lord God of Israel had given." He studied the law, and not only copied it but interpreted it. He requested permission from King Artaxerxes to go to Jerusalem, and this the king readily granted. With a company of Jews who wished to settle in Judea, and with priests, scribes and singers for the temple service, porters to keep the temple gates and Nethinim, servants for the temple, he left Babylon the first month (Nisan, March-April) of the seventh year of King Artaxerxes, and reached there in the fifth month (Ab, July-August), after a journey of nearly four months. His purpose in going to Jerusalem was to teach the statutes and ordinances of the law to the people there. As for himself, he had "set his heart to seek the law of Jehovah," and what was more, "to do it."

Artaxerxes not only granted Ezra's request, but also gave him much gold and silver for the temple, and also a letter in which he directed his officers in Judea to do whatever Ezra might ask. "Blessed be Jehovah, the God of our fathers," exclaimed Ezra, "who hath put such a thing as this in the king's heart, to beautify the house of Jehovah; and hath extended lovingkindness unto me."

"It is interesting to notice names that had occurred in the earlier lists of the followers of Zerubbabel, showing that some of the descendants of those who refused to go on the first expedition took part in the second. But there was little at Jerusalem to attract a new expedition, for the glamor which had surrounded the first return, with a son of David at its head, had faded in grievous disappointment; and the second series of pilgrims had to carry with them the torch with which to rekindle the flames of devotion" (Walter F. Adeney).

Ezra and his company encamped for three days at the River Ahava. On reviewing his followers, Ezra discovered the absence of Levites for the temple service, upon whom he was depending for the work of teaching in Israel the statutes and ordinances. "The Levites were those who, before Josiah's reformation, had served as priests at the high places, and for this reason Ezekiel's program assigned to them a distinctly subordinate place in the reconstructed temple. Naturally, then, the prospect of return had little attraction for them, and that accounts for their absence from Ezra's company." Ezra sent to Casiphia, where there must have been a Jewish colony, and about forty Levites and two hundred and twenty Nethinim, temple servants, were secured. Then he proclaimed a fast by the river and all humbled themselves before God.

The treasures of gold and silver and sacred vessels which the king and counsellors and the Israelites had given for the temple, Ezra had weighed and counted and given into the charge of twelve priests and ten Levites, making them responsible for their safe-keeping until the treasure could be again weighed and counted before witnesses in the chamber of the temple—the store-rooms around the outer walls of the court of the temple.

The River Ahava was left on the twelfth of the first month, and Jerusalem was reached on the first day of the fifth month. God delivered them "from the hand of the enemy and the lie-in-wait by the way." After retiring three days, the treasure was weighed in the temple, and burnt-offerings were offered.

TOPIC: "Being Loyal to Our Work."—Matt. 16:21-25; Neh. 6:1-3. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

Jesus did not shrink from even the hardest tasks or the greatest dangers. He knowingly marched straight to His death (v. 21).

Sometimes our friends, through love, seek to turn us from the path of duty. Spiritual loyalty should come first (v. 23).

Loyalty may call for self-denial, taking the heavy, crushing burdens, and bearing them quietly and without murmuring (v. 24).

Sometimes Satan tries to wheedle us into trying to stop our work for Christ and the Church. Nehemiah's answer is fitting (Neh. 6:1-3).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Christian work is like no other work. It calls for self-effacement, the losing of our life, and it offers little immediate reward.

Christian work is voluntary. If we promise to do a task, and then do not do it, no one can punish us for our neglect; but we have been disloyal, and that in itself is a punishment.

Christ calls also for loyalty to all the work of life. We must be loyal to our employers, for example, and give them one hundred per cent service. In doing that we are honoring Christ.

Sometimes we see a youth shirking his work because he hates it. That is unchristian. The thing to do is to look for the good points of the task and love them, at the same time fitting one's self for more congenial work.

A Few Illustrations.

Watered work is just as bad as watered stock; that is, it is an evil practice to hold back the best. What would you think of that if you were an employer?

To a minister who wanted to retire, General Booth gave this motto: "Fight to the finish." Can you conceive of Paul's retiring or giving less than his very best?

A Hungarian woman had the right idea of loyalty when she said: "I work hard. But I like to work. I work for God! He is everything."

Our loyalty must include the little things. It is "he that is faithful in least," he is made ruler over many things. Jesus clearly promises that the loyal worker will be promoted.

To Think About.

What is loyalty?

When are people disloyal to their work?

How cultivate the spirit of loyalty?

OUR JUBILEE YEAR.

TIME: Late summer A. D. 29.

PLACE: Capernaum in Galilee.

PERSONS: The Lord and the seventy evangelists.

RECORD: Luke 10:1-16.

The last act of Jesus in Capernaum, so far as we have any record, was his sending out the seventy "heralds," or evangelists, who were to go "two and two before his face into every city and place whither he himself would come."

Jesus had come to Capernaum two years before this final departure, and had, no doubt, made His home in the house of Simon Peter. He Himself had no home, even though the "foxes had holes" and the "birds of the air had nests," yet He had not where to lay His head except on a borrowed pillow.

Sending Forth the Seventy.

A new program is being entered upon. Herald to the number of seventy are being sent forth by the Master in a somewhat spectacular way to prepare the way for His coming. He had previously sent forth the twelve to preach the gospel of the kingdom and to heal the sick, but there was no promise that He Himself would follow in the places where they labored. But here He sends out a much greater number with the avowed object of preparing the way for His personal coming to the places which they should visit. There is less emphasis in this commission regarding miraculous powers such as He gave the twelve when He sent them forth. These seventy seem more invested as "heralds" proclaiming that "The kingdom of heaven has come nigh unto you," and to thus prepare the way for Jesus' coming.

Sent Forth Two and Two.

Two and two seems to be "the Jesus way" of evangelism. These should go forth as brotherly pairs instead of as lone individuals. One should vouch for and supplement the other and carry with the very fact of their coming together the social fellowship of Christian service.

We have come back again in this our day to realize the unending wisdom of Jesus in this. One person is an individual, and it needs a devout Matthew to team up with a doubting Thomas; a practical Philip to match and work with a dreaming Nathaniel; a quiet Andrew to balance an impetuous Peter; a matter-of-fact James to pair with a visionary John, and so, no doubt, with those others of whom we know little, James the less, and Thaddeus, and Simon the zealot, and Judas Iscariot who also betrayed Him. And it may be that the last team was the most incompatible of all and precipitated the catastrophe of betrayal. "The Zealot" may not have balanced well with him "who had a devil," and even Jesus took men as they are. Whatever became of "The Zealot" we do not know and have only tradition's answer, but his zeal without knowledge may have something to answer for in that day when all things are known. Another team-mate might have changed even Judas.

He Himself was to Come.

These were new John the Baptists to "prepare the way of the Lord." Herod had murdered one John Baptist, but now seventy spring up in his place proclaiming the coming of the kingdom and the king. They were to go before into every place to stir up and prepare the people for His personal coming. This is new. Before this, he had shunned the crowds, but now the issue is to be put up fairly and fully to them. Before this were days of training and preparation; now the day of the kingdom is at hand and they are challenged to face it.

Harvest Time.

The days of seed-sowing are past, and the day of harvest is here. Laborers are needed in the coming kingdom. The Church is to be born and Pentecost is only nine months away. Those three thousand at Pentecost and those thousands that followed did not all come out of one day's work. There was the seed-sowing of Jesus' life and ministry behind it as well as the Spirit which brought all these things to their remembrance. Harvest time was coming and laborers were needed. Jesus saw far ahead of his disciples, and He saw that ingathering at Pentecost and that untold multitude in the coming days which needed laborers in His vineyard. God has so ordained that even the kingdom of heaven could not come without laborers of earth to go into the harvest fields to gather and to care for the fruitage of the work which was being inaugurated by Jesus.

Lambs Among Wolves.

It was a glorious mission on which they were sent—it was gloriously dangerous. But men seem to be challenged by danger, and the army in way has a hundred recruits where it had one in time of peace. The writer has seen men lie about their health and age to get into the army in time of war and great adventure who could not have been persuaded to have "joined the army" on a peace basis. The feast of life seems to need a spice of danger to make it palatable to the taste of the average man. The Church today is "too easy" for him. There is no call to "come and do and dare," but rather a call to accept a good seat and hear a good sermon and listen to elegant music and there is little of the Jesus "man's religion" of "glorious danger" in it all. Instead of a call for lambs to go out into the midst of wolves, there is a call for more lambs to come into the fold, that there may be more lambs to pay the bills. And meantime the wolves see no cause for attack, as the lambs seem to give them food as well as they feed the Church. There is need for more of the heroic in religion if it is to win the adventuresome youth and the strong men of the age or of any age.

Blessings on the Faithful.

In spite of the look of the world, and in spite of what "men say in their blindness," there is a great unreached inarticulate company of men and women classed as "ungodly" who will respond when the Christianity of Jesus is put squarely up to them. It has been said, and it cannot be too often repeated, that many do not accept the gospel of Jesus for two reasons. It is sometimes (oft-times) wrongly presented, and it is sometimes (oft-times) misinterpreted by those who hear. If Jesus himself could be truly and rightly presented, we might multiply our successes in the winning of men. Never would we reach all for Jesus Himself failed in this, but we would reach strong men who would carry on as his disciples did. To such as hear and accept the "kingdom of heaven has come nigh unto them."

Curses on the Unfaithful.

This is a terrible invective which Jesus utters against those who have heard and refused the gospel. His home country in Galilee is especially brought under the ban of condemnation and woe because of its privilege, while the nearer cities of his ministry shall be "cast down to hell" because they had every chance and refused them all.

This terrible accusation and condemnation is Jesus' farewell to the city of his manhood home.

Meditation.

Do we boast of our Christian homes? If so, we but place ourselves with the favored cities of Galilee, and if we do not profit by that favor of God on us and around us, we will be as likely to come under the curse of Capernaum, which was exalted to heaven by spiritual favor but cast into hell because it did not and would not live up to its opportunities and privileges.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

IMPATIENCE A BREEDER OF REVENGE.

The spirit of revenge could hardly be reached without this stepping-stone of impatience. Itself is the spirit of revenge. It cannot rule your breast without producing the desire to do injury. This spirit of revenge is the parent of the scold and rattle in the home circle. A man scolds his wife, or the wife scolds her husband, only when impatient. The scolding spirit is from a desire to hurt somebody. Itself is devilish! It is the spirit of murder in its infancy, and begets that spirit in those affected by our spirit. What mother ever struck her child in the face or on the side of the head after her fit was over? What father ever jerked his child unmercifully or threatened to break its neck who afterwards did not see himself to be a fool? Right reproofs are indispensable, and punishment is, some form or other, a necessity to the right government of human children. Reproofs given to vent your impatient soul are one thing; and reproofs given to bless and save your child are another thing! The correction, or punishment, of a child to relieve your spirit of revenge and his correction or punishment for his highest good in both worlds are fearfully distinct transactions. The one is right, the other wrong. The one is commanded, the other forbidden. The one is an act of obedience to God, the other is an act of disobedience. The one will help save your child, the other will help ruin him.

Prayer.—The Lord's Prayer.

TUESDAY.

DOES YOUR FAITH INCREASE?

"Lord, increase our faith."—Luke 17:5.

There is a faith that submits and there is a faith that aspires. The former is passive and barely keeps alive. The latter not only hangs on to what it has with desperation, but it seeks out the things that give reason for more faith. This faith is robust and growing.

In order to have this faith, we must accept most trustfully all the truths of God and realize our utter dependence upon Him; we must govern our ambitions by His principles of living: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you; we must feel that we are partners with Him in making the world right and a fit place to live in.

Therefore, we must have a faith that is as constant in difficulties, trials and misfortune as in the more favorable circumstances, "Letting patience have her perfect work, "Never weary in well-doing," whether we see the fruit of our labors or not, for "We shall reap if we faint not."

God has not promised us freedom from the above adversities, but He has promised to be with us in them, and if we can realize that promise, adversities may be open doors of triumph in something infinitely greater for which we may be his servant.

Prayer.—Our God and loving Father, through Jesus Christ the Headstone of the building and our High Priest, teach us how to build the walls of the building of our lives and our characters according to Thy plans. Give us growing faith that reaches Thy heart. Give us clean hearts and make us Thine. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

RIGHT AND WRONG.

"Study to show thyself approved of God."—1 Tim. 2:15.

"Keep thyself unspotted from the world."—Jas. 1:27.

Between right and wrong there is an invisible line. Every one has to determine for himself where that line is. Between temperance and excess there is no line. One can pass from the country of temperance into the country of excess and never know it, and altogether without intending to do so. In having a good time, but few people intend to go beyond moderation, but many get over the line without knowing it.

But not all moral boundaries are so undefined. Many are sharply defined, such as purity and impurity, truth and falsehood, love and hate, etc.

In the former, one needs discretion, that he may stay so far away from excess that he will not be found in it. In this he needs to make his own line according to well-defined principles of living. In the latter he finds it is as easy to say "no" to the wrong as it is to stop when one has reached the seashore.

According to our texts today, this is Christianity, and a conscientious obedience to these texts will be a sufficient guide to Thee.

Prayer.—Dear Father, Thou art our strength and song, and Thou art our light and way; Thou art our salvation. Teach us to believe in Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

LOYALTY.

"Righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins."—Isa. 11:5.

Loyalty is said to be faithfulness to one's duty, one's trust, one's interest both in self and others. Isaiah calls it the girdle of a man's life.

We hardly admire the man who is just good. We admire the man who is good for something, and that something abides only in a superior and unchangeable loyalty to truth in all the relations of life.

Everybody has some loyalty, but with many it is a petty selfish kind and only goes as far as his personal interest may seem to have the advantage. True loyalty involves ideals—and sticking to those ideals. It may involve counting the cost. When choosing friends, setting standards for ourselves, making promises, do not be rash and "bite off more than one can chew," but count the cost. Can you meet it? Can you and will you go through with it? It is better to refuse to act or make obligations because of the price than to have to face the cost later. This is Christianity.

Prayer.—Dear Father, grant us Thy grace, through Jesus Christ. May we belong to the communion of the loyal, the faithful and true, and do Thou sanctify us more and more each day until we shall appear before Thee without blemish. Amen.

FRIDAY.

SOUL HEALTH.

"Exercise yourself unto godliness."—1 Tim. 4:7.

Soul health comes to the soul just like personal health comes to the body. Of the body, there is orderliness in the arrangement and function of every organ, and they work with one another to keep the body in shape to do its work. Any interruption in this order or function makes sick and incapacitates one.

The body must exercise itself throughout for development to its maximum ability. If not exercised at all, it must weaken and waste away.

Likewise, the soul, like the former, must embrace mind, heart, truth, passions, in an orderly sort of way and a regulated life. These are to be exercised unto godliness by cultivating such attributes of ourselves in their highest functions.

Prayer.—Our Father, we know we must enter into the kingdom of God. Every day has its evils which are enemies to us, but Thou hast promised that Thy grace will be sufficient for us; hence, we need not bear the ills of yesterday into tomorrow. Help us to lift our souls upward with open eyes and see the truth of Thy glory shining over all. Amen.

SATURDAY.

SEEING THE INVISIBLE.

"He endured as seeing Him who is invisible."—Heb. 11:27.

The writer is speaking of Moses here. This patriarch saw the triumphant end of things, and nothing was impossible to him.

Success in anything is not possible to him who can see no further than his day's drudgery. It is impossible to take interest in the immediate task if we can see nothing further on to be accomplished by it. There is no eight-hour day to him who is running his own business. Why? Because he has a life or he lives to support a family or he has a fortune to make and a service to render, and he must prevent being ditched. Paul said, except a grain of wheat fall in the ground and die, it cannot bear another grain of wheat. Life's invisible call is to forget time and self and die, as it were, in the service to bring forth the fruitful end. That is Christianity.

Prayer.—Dear Lord God, Thou who hast called us to the glory of a perfect day, help us never to lose sight of the commission invisible, and give us courage and faith, and love, and stick-to-itiveness to be faithful unto the end. Amen.

SUNDAY.

STRIPPING FOR BATTLE.

"Let us lay aside every weight that doth so easily beset us."—Heb. 12:1.

Men in military war service get rid of everything personal except those actual necessities. These are arranged in a most compact form and as light as possible, that the man may be at his best and carry on.

Men in the World War learned to discard every little thing, even treasured photographs, in order to stand the marches. The slightest thing was a burden. A battleship, getting ready for action, "strips for action" by removing everything from the decks, that there may be no losses and no hindrances.

Our text is the rule for successful Christian achievement. Unload! "Cast all your cares on Him, for He careth for you." Children play all day and scarcely seem to tire. Why? Because they have not a care. They leave that to their parents. Can we cast our cares on Jesus, who will bear our burdens for us? We are told of a man in the World War who, as he went to battle one morning, merrily said, "Lord, if I forget you, don't forget me."

Whatever our cares, this we know: that God has not left us out of His love and sympathy; that "He doeth all things well," and He will be with us in the sixth trouble and in the seventh not forsake us; yea, he will not leave our souls in hell. This cannot fail to lighten our weight, make us glad, and save us from lots of trouble.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Several years ago we had two little girls in the Christian Orphanage. They were fine little fellows; just as nice and kind as could be. Their mother was living and remarried. She took the little girls to live with her, so they could have a mother's love and care, which was very fine indeed; but all did not turn out well. The step-father drank. He was unkind and made the home unhappy and the lives of the wife and children so unpleasant it was necessary for them to part. Today they are living in a little hut and I am told that they do not have clothes to wear sufficient to keep them comfortable, and last winter really suffered. They often go hungry for the lack of bread. A few days ago I received a letter from one of these little girls pleading with me to take them back. I thought it so sweet of her, as she said: "If you cannot take both of us, take one of us." She left it to me as to the one to take; one was willing to suffer, that the other might have a home and care.

We have the room, if we had the funds to support them. It costs us $20 per month to care for a child. I wonder if we have some kind friends in the Christian denomination who want to do a real act of charity; an act that will help two little helpless girls and give them a chance in life. If you have charity money to invest, this is an opportunity offered you.

THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD.

I think from reading the psalms, David had his greatest trials and unrest up to the 23rd Psalm. Read the 22nd Psalm. It reads as if David felt he was lost, for he said with all the earnestness of his soul, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" Next we come to the 23rd Psalm. Here we find David much relieved. There is a different ring to the words of this psalm. I think that there is more real comfort in the six verses than in any other in the Bible. Notice "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." What a comforting promise! "The Lord is my Shepherd." When I am hard pressed and in need, He says, "I shall not want."

The Lord is my Shepherd when I am worn and weary. "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures"—not in the barren and dry pastures, but green pastures. The Lord is my Shepherd when I am thirsty: "He leadeth me beside the still waters"—not the rough, roaring waters, but the still waters. The Lord is my Shepherd when I feel like my soul is almost gone: "He restoreth my soul." The Lord is my Shepherd when I feel that I have wandered out in the paths of sin and vice, "for He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake." The Lord is my Shepherd when I come to the end of life and "walk through the valley of the shadow of death," I will fear no evil, for "Thou art with me, Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me."

The Lord is my Shepherd, for "when mine enemies oppress and curse me, He "prepareth a table before me in the presence of mine enemies." The Lord is my Shepherd, for when I feel that my head is dull and void, and my cup is empty, "Thou anointest my head with oil, my cup runneth over." The Lord is my Shepherd, for I know I shall not want as long as I follow Him and be guided and led in green pastures and by the still waters. Read the 6th verse, "Surely, goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever." Now read the 24th Psalm and see how differently it is worded and sounds: "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein."

From the reading of the remainder of the remainder of the psalms, I feel sure David followed the Good Shepherd, for he is singing praises unto the Lord and so trustful. May we all follow the Good Shepherd all the way.

BETTIE J. ELLIOTT.

There was no hesitation on the part of Congress to appropriate the first amount asked by President Hoover for farm relief work. The sum was $151,500,000—the $1,500,000 to be used for the expenses of the farm board. The $150,000,000 will be used for loans to co-operative marketing agencies and for setting up stabilization corporations to take care of surpluses. There was no objection in the House except an expressed desire to appropriate at once the whole $500,000,000 authorized in the bill. The Senate acted without debate. President Hoover explained that the board, when created, would be the best judge of the amounts needed, and when needed, and that no doubt Congress would be in session again before need for further funds was felt.—Ex.

THE PASTOR'S ASSISTANT.

By Mrs. Murdock Newman.

(Read by Mrs. Murdock Newman, Henderson, N. C., before the Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at Pleasant Union Church, and printed by vote of that body.)

We must be initiated before we can become the pastor's assistant or, in other words, a leader.

First, we must take the D. T. C. J. degree—"Daring to Claim Jesus." Peter dared to claim Jesus, but denied Him when faced with what that implied. Too many of us own Jesus with our lips, but not with our lives.

Jesus came to give life, and to give it more abundantly. Seek that life. Be where people are who live it, read what God's word says about it. Jesus said that those who follow Him must not only say Lord, Lord, but must do the things he has commanded. God can reshape a life after it has gone wrong, but the greatest thing to do is to really show to the world that we have been transformed by living a life that will be acceptable in His sight.

When young people dare to follow Christ they are not ashamed to be friendly or to show any friendly feeling which they may have. Let us strive to be first—to give a friendly sign, to bow first, to smile first, speak first, give first, and, if necessary, forgive first and forget first.

This is one step, as I see it, in becoming a Christian Endeavor leader or the pastor's assistant.

On time is the place where so many of us fall down. A man was asked why he did not vote on election day. He replied that it was a waste of time to vote. "What difference would my one vote make in Washington? They are going to do as they please any way." I want you to think for a moment that "every little helps," and that "no effort for good is lost." Benjamin Franklin once said that "time is the stuff life is made of." Many souls have been lost because people put off accepting Jesus. Time waits for no man, so we must run the race on time.

In Christian Endeavor, much more efficient work could be accomplished by starting on time and starting on time. What becomes of a man's business if he is supposed to open at 9 o'clock and instead opens at 10? He loses customers and soon his business is gone. Just so with Christian Endeavor. We hear people say, "I went to Christian Endeavor last evening, but had to wait fifteen minutes before they started. I was so worried out that I didn't enjoy the program."

A person who hasn't received the A. D. degree can be of little help to the pastor. He must be "absolutely dependable." Can your friends, your home, your pastor, and your God depend on you? The first thing we ask of a friend is loyalty. Nothing can take its place. We cannot be God's friend unless we are loyal to our earthly friends.

Stephen, a Christian martyr, was loyal to Christ Jesus even when it caused him an unjust and a brutal death. In a certain school, a boy was made treasurer of the senior class. This boy came from a well-to-do family. Apparently he had plenty of spending money, but in some way he misused the class funds. It was found out, and the boy's father made the money good, but what about the impression of his classmates, his teachers and his principal? What about the recommendation the principal could give this boy? He could not truthfully say that he was absolutely dependable.

Can your pastor and your God depend on you? In order to enjoy life fully and give of our best to the Master, we must keep our bodies strong physically, mentally and spiritually.

That boy in the Indian cabin who became the president of the United States spent his boyhood studying Shakespeare, the Bible, Robert Burns, and the lives of great men. His friends laughed at him, but he replied, "I'll get ready, and maybe some day my chance will come." Lincoln lived to see that day.

The Christian Endeavor is the place where we attain self-expression; even the junior boys and girls are given a chance. The boys and girls are the future Church. So by all means have a society where they can become prepared for leadership. I think it very essential that every Church have a junior society.

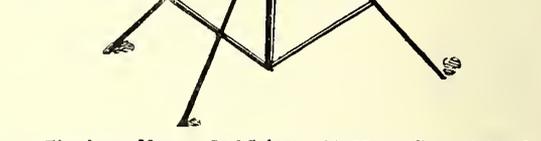

The young people are the Church of tomorrow. The older people will soon be gone and the burden will fall upon younger shoulders. In the Christian Endeavor Society, young people receive training that will enable them to carry on this work. They are not ashamed to testify and are willing workers. I challenge any pastor or Church worker to give a young person in his Church something he wants done, then watch the results and see how quickly and how well it is done. All we need is a chance and the right backing.

Older folks, don't criticise us too severely. Just remember that you were once young. We are living in a fast age, and we demand something to do.

If we young people are not doing the right thing, we are doing the wrong. So it is up to the Church and other Christian organizations to give us the right thing to do.

Before we can give active service, we must manifest eagerness to serve; zeal, earnestness, love and patience to accomplish tasks for the Master, be they great or small. I once read a book which said, "If you want a thrill in life, do something for somebody quick—something which you do not have to do. There is a greater joy and a greater thrill in making another happy or contented or in being of real service to a sick, poor or weaker one than there is in getting something for yourself."

David Livingston was of service to the black race in Africa. His heroic deeds and true living give us a thrill to try to do something for others. Which was the more thrilling, when Lindberg landed in France and refused all stimulants, or when Levine called for a glass of wine when he landed in Germany?

The greatest thrill life has in store for us is real service and living up to our ideals. To my mind, Christian Endeavor is the school of the Church. The Sunday School teaches the Word of God, but Christian Endeavor trains for public service. There is more to be done than preaching the Word, and the pastor needs the congregation to help him carry on the work in a successful way. In the Baptist Church, B. Y. P. U. means to their young people, "Back Your Preacher Up." Just so, C. E. means Christian Endeavoring to work for Christ and His Church.

It is in the Christian Endeavor training school that we are trained for public speech, public prayer, daily Bible reading, and by obedience to our pledge we are fitted to assist the pastor in soul-winning. No pastor can do his best without the co-operation of a good live Christian Endeavor to help him.

WANDERING AROUND.

On the third Sunday in May I was at Auburn with Bro. W. C. Carpenter, and had two good services. From there I went to Brunswick and spent four days with Mr. Harry Vickers and Mrs. M. J. Duckworth, members of the Church at Ambrose. While at Auburn, I had the pleasure of visiting the following homes: Bro. Oswald Vickers, Bro. Henry Vickers, Bro. George Powell, Rev. W. C. Carpenter, and Bro. T. J. Holland.

I went to Brookfield to visit Bro. Willie Hand. I went then to their Church on the fourth Sunday and heard Rev. Carpenter preach two fine sermons. I took dinner and supper with Sister Marie Kirk and her husband at the Myron Hotel in Tifton, Ga., and spent the night with Bro. John Cotney and his family.

Monday I went to my daughter, Mrs. Ines Cookney, at Moulton, Ga. I went to Wadley to the commencement at Piedmont College and attended the trustees' meeting while there. I took dinner with John Gibson, and the rest of the time with Hiram Reardon, the cashier of the bank there. I spent one night with my brother-in-law, John Floyd, at Alexandria. I went from there with Bro. J. D. Dollar to Lanett, Ala., and spent a most delightful time of three weeks in that city. While there I had the pleasure of being at the dedication of their beautiful Church building that cost nearly $20,000. It was all paid for before the day of dedication. Rev. G. D. Hunt preached the dedicatory sermon in a wonderful message. The Spirit-marked meeting lasted for two weeks, with Bro. H. M. Gray doing the preaching. He built the Church and served the Church for several years, and he had a large, consecrated following. He did some excellent preaching, and we had a good meeting. I organized this Church and built the first house. The following preachers have acted as pastors: H. W. Elder (17 years), B. F. Young, M. L. Hurley, E. M. Carter, H. M. Gray, J. D. Dollar.

I went to Enigma on the first Sunday in July; in fact, I was there several days before with my good friend and brother, Bill Martin. I attended a meeting here for eight days. We had a good meeting, with Bro. C. W. Hanson, of La Grange, doing the preaching, and he did it in a way that got a hold of the people. We visited among the good people and had a grand time.

I went to Oak Grove on the third Sunday in July and attended a real good meeting for two days. Bro. Hanson is pastor there, and he did the preaching. Everybody seemed to enjoy the meeting, and it was a feast to my soul. Bro. Hanson fed my soul on the bread of life day and night, and the good people of the community fed my body on the good things of their homes. It was a treat to me to be in that meeting. I organized this Church and preached here seventeen years. I received an average of forty-seven members a year for seventeen years. I built the second Church building here. It has a place in my heart.

I went from there to New Hope, in Alabama, to attend the family reunion in memory of my grandfather. It was good to be there and to meet so many of my kinfolks. I am back at home for a few days, and then I will be gone again.

VICKERS.

Charles Dennis Vickers, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Vickers, Ambrose, Ga., was born February 3, 1927, and passed away June 8, 1929. Another—the third—sunbeam has ceased to shine in this good home. May we be consoled by the fact that our Heavenly Father lovingly and wisely transplanted this little human flower in His heavenly garden. Heaven is more precious and earth less attractive by this sad dispensation of Divine providence. May we resolve with David: "Though he can't return to me, I may go to him."

VAUGHAN.

Bro. Albert Vaughan departed this life at his home near Oak Hill, Granville County, N. C., June 28, 1929, at the age of 77 years. Bro. Vaughan was twice ried. Two sons survive by the first marriage—Andrew and Jimmy—and a number of grandchildren. He is also survived by his second wife, who was Miss Nellie West, and one brother.

The deceased was an industrious, honest man and a good farmer. Everybody seemed to be his friend. One had to be in his presence but a short while to be drawn to him because of his friendly, genial disposition. For the last year of his life he suffered much. I visited him several times and can give evidence to the fact that he trusted his Saviour and was assured of a home prepared by his Saviour. For more than a quarter of a century he was a faithful member of Hebron Christian Church. The funeral was held at Hebron on the afternoon of June 29th, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Teague, of the Baptist Church, and the burial was in the family cemetery a short distance from the Church. Seldom does one see a larger crowd than attended his funeral.

A faithful, honest man of God has gone to his reward, but the influence of such a Christian gentleman will live on to bless his Church, friends and community.

A DISTURBING QUESTION.—

It is impossible as yet to determine the ultimate results of all the discussion about Church union. But attention is being drawn to certain aspects of the situation that it is impossible to ignore. One such phase is the spending of Church extension funds for the establishment of new Churches in fields that are already woefully over-churched. It is frequently the case that home mission boards and Church extension committees are spending funds to maintain two or three competing Churches in a field that could be adequately served by one Church, and this one Church could be self-supporting. Such a condition, when viewed solely in its own light, must seem wasteful and foolish. Viewed along with the millions who have never had an opportunity to hear the Christian gospel, for no other reason than that the money has not been available to send the messengers, such a course must seem like sinful misappropriation of the Lord's money.

We hear a great deal about the dead and dying country Churches. But in all of the dead and dying country Churches that we have seen, it is a question of the competition with other Churches. It is in the overchurched fields that the country Church is threatened with extinction. Of the thriving and prosperous country Churches with which this scribe is familiar, practically all of them are in one-Church communities.

HARVEST TIME.—

What a wonderful wealth of suggestion harvest time brings to the mind! But we were not thinking primarily of the gathering in of the crops that represent the reward of the farmer's diligent toil. We were thinking of the fact that at this season of the year so many of the Churches, especially the rural Churches, are engaged in series of protracted meetings. These meetings are often called revivals. And in many cases revivals are just what they are. The major portion of the effort is of necessity directed to arouse the interest and the enthusiasm of the Church membership itself.

What is the special season going to be in your Church? Is it going to be a harvest time, or is it going to be merely a revival? The question is one of necessity if the season of special meetings is at hand. There are times when nothing can be accomplished until a revival has begun. There are certain Churches where this is taken to be a matter of course. But it by no means needs to be so. If it is the case this time that you are forced to direct all your efforts toward a revival, then just as soon as the special meetings have closed, begin your planning to make the series of meetings a harvest time next year. And a year is not a bit too early to begin. I once heard a good farmer say that even while this year's crop was growing, he was planning for the coming year. It ought to be that way in the Churches.

There is a recruiting work for the Church that must be going on all the year. Contacts must be established. Acquaintances must be developed. There ought to be a constant work going on to enlist the interests of those within the Church's field and to draw the unchurched closer to the work of the kingdom. Of those who are already under the influence of the Church or Sunday School, there ought to be careful instruction that will prepare them for making the final decision and that will prepare them for the work they will be expected to do when the decision has been made. There is urgent need for the constant efforts of a wise master-builder in this field.

SUNDAY EVENING SERVICES.—

Much publicity is being given in the religious press to the union Sunday evening services that are being held in many towns and cities throughout the country. In most instances the services alternate in the co-operating Churches, one minister doing the preaching and another conducting the services. The question might be raised as to the reason for holding these union services. Is it done in an effort to promote a more friendly and co-operative spirit among the Churches? or is it a combining of congregations in order to give the preacher a respectable hearing. There can be little doubt but that such services have a most beneficial effect in promoting a spirit of better understanding and good will. The fact is that for a long time individual Church members who are loyal to their Churches, and who attend Sunday School and the morning worship in their own Churches, have been in the habit of worshipping with other congregations in the evening.

It would be interesting to see the results of a vote taken among Church members as to their attitude toward evening services on Sunday. Certainly there are large numbers who do not believe that they are necessary for their spiritual welfare or else they are most careless about their spiritual interests. The fact is that many Church members feel that when they have attended one service of worship on Sunday that they have done all that could be reasonably expected of them, and they either stay at home in the evening or go to some other place rather than Church. The testimony may be frequently heard from those who are devout in their habits that to miss attending a service of worship on Sunday leaves them with a sense of distinct loss.

THE CHURCH'S CHANGING TASK.—

In the main, there are increasing evidences of the falling off in Church attendance. There are a few notable preachers who are still preaching to packed houses. There are certain localities and towns in which Church attendance seems to be very much the vogue. But in the average Church there is little danger of the late-comer not being able to find a seat. If the exact figures were available it would probably be found that as large a per cent of the population attends Church as was the case in the days which we think of as being noted for piety. There are so many more Churches today than there were in the old days, and services are held more often.

Among both the attendants and the non-attendants upon the services of the Church there is sounding an increasing demand for the Church to minister more largely to distinctly spiritual needs. There was a time when the Church was about the only institution which was in a position to minister to social needs. It was also one of the most effective mediums through which political and moral questions might be carried to the masses of the people. If the grave social questions of the day were to be adequately presented, it must be done through the Church. In this present age the ideals and standards of the Church have become the controlling and directing principles by which great social organizations are organized and operated.

Today the printed page has become so prevalent as to become almost a menace. It is so easy for every form and shade of opinion to be carried to the ears of the people that they are in danger of being swamped under the deluge of information and misinformation. The masses of people are sufficiently well educated to weigh facts and draw conclusions for themselves. All public questions are discussed from every possible angle in the current newspapers and magazines. There are even those who resent the entrance of the Church into political and social controversies. There are thousands who are sufficiently acute to detect the fact when the Church takes unwarranted or ill-advised positions.

But in the field of ministering to the spiritual needs and heart hungerings of men and women, the Church has the field entirely to herself. No other institution is interested in these things. No other is prepared to deliver a message concerning the spiritual realities of life. Yet there never was a time when such a message was so urgently needed. The majority of men and women know where and how to satisfy all their needs, save the needs of the spirit. And because of this lack of knowledge, many lives are being broken upon the rocks. The minister is pre-eminently a shepherd of souls. It is in this capacity that his most effective work is done. His task is difficult enough if he is to instruct and lead his people in the practice of righteousness, justice and love. It is too much to expect him to do the work of an executive and of a promotional agent in causes that do not bear directly upon the work of the kingdom.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Mr. and Mrs. C. James Velie, of the music department at Elon College and favorably known to many SUN readers, happily announce the arrival of Mignon Yvette Velie on August 16, 1929. We are wishing for the new arrival all the health, joy and happiness that Christian rearing and a devoted parentage can give.

Mt. Auburn Church, we learn, has invited the Eastern North Carolina Conference to convene there in its next annual session. We are sure that no Church in the Conference would entertain the body more royally. The session of this Conference, according to resolution of last Conference, will be for two days only, beginning at 10 A. M. Tuesday, November 19th.

That is extremely good news that comes from Newport News by way of a letter from Rev. M. F. Allen, pastor, in this week's SUN. The loyal and true Christians at Newport News have felt for months, not to say years, that they must build a suitable house, and we rejoice with pastor and people that the hour has struck and the work has made such flattering beginnings.

Miss Lilly Spain, of our Waverly Church, proved herself a real worker and Bible teacher in the daily vacation Bible schools at Elk Spur and Rocky Ford, in Carroll County, Va., where she assisted the pastor, Rev. S. E. Madren, and Miss Jewel Truitt in two weeks of real Bible teaching and work. Bro. Madren gives an exceedingly encouraging report of the work done and results achieved. We only wish these schools could have lasted longer.

Elon College is making energetic and ample preparation for the opening of its doors and beginning its scholastic year Wednesday, September 4th. Prospects are good for the opening, and all our people in Carolina and Virginia who are sending their sons and daughters away to college should have them here for the opening day. The campus and the buildings are beautiful and inviting now. The faculty members are arriving, and all things are being made ready for the fortieth annual session, which we trust will be the best, as it should be, of all sessions thus far.

Our good brother, Rev. G. R. Underwood, has recently undergone a very serious operation in a hospital at Charlotte, N. C. A line from Sister Underwood brings the good news that Bro. Underwood now seems to be recovering nicely and is still bright and hopeful and as deeply interested as ever in the work of his Church. Any SUN reader wishing to communicate can use the following address: Rev. G. R. Underwood, Room 306 Charlotte Sanitarium, Charlotte, N. C. We are hoping that our venerable brother will soon be fully restored and able to return to his home and loved ones.

Dr. W. C. Wicker, Elon College, N. C., is in position to give full-time service to Churches desiring him as pastor, provided he secures Churches sufficient to give him support. Churches have already called him for all Sundays of the month except the first, and he will be glad to correspond with any Church that may desire his services for that Sunday. Dr. Wicker is president of the Eastern North Carolina Conference and is one of our ablest and best-known pastors. The Churches he has served the past few years have made progress and show growth in kingdom enlargement.

It is a genuine pleasure to report that Rev. P. T. Klapp still improves, and most wonderfully. He is now able to walk to the dining-room and about the place some. Many of us who visited him some weeks ago can hardly realize the change which seems nothing short of a miracle for a man of his age to go so close to the verge and yet come back with renewed strength and energy. Surely God, who has used this man so abundantly for good, in winning souls and building up the Church the past years, has other work for him yet.

However worthy and meritorious a contribution to the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN may be, it cannot be inserted without the editor having in his possession the name of the author and sender. We publish articles without giving the name of author if desired, but never without having in our possession the name of the person responsible for the article. This has been stated in THE SUN many times, and yet even good contributions reach us signed "Anonymous" and have to go to the waste-basket, because the author was not considerate enough to send along his or her name for our files.

Miss Graham Rowland, daughter of Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, who has had special training at Elon College and Boston University in religious education, and much practical experience in her own home Church, has been chosen religious work director of the Theodore Roosevelt Indian School, at Fort Apache, Ariz., by the Home Mission Board of our General Convention. Her superb achievement and marks of leadership as a college student, her boundless energy and resourcefulness, and her deep consecration to her Church and Christian activity, bespeak for her a career of great usefulness and results in the field of labor to which she goes.

The following from the Herald of Gospel Liberty with reference to the Church relationship of Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White, who recently went out to the Philippines as missionaries under the auspices of the Congregational Church, will prove of interest to SUN readers: "It will be of interest to our readers to know that if the proposed merger with the Congregational Church is voted by us in October, Dr. and Mrs. White will be able to continue their work as members of the Christian Church, though under the Congregational Board at present. It is altogether likely that in the new arrangement their support will be allocated to the Christian Church as part of our larger service."

From Mrs. Geo. D. Eastes, widowed now of a husband (whose name is enshrined in many a heart and loved far and wide in the Christian Church for the wonderful work and the beautiful spirit he manifested while amongst us), sends us from her home in Portsmouth, Va., this line which many SUN readers, as well as the Mission Secretary, will enjoy: "My first new dollar was received about a week ago, but I felt that I wanted to send more than that, and I only wish that the five which I enclose now could be many times more, and I am hoping by God's help to be able to send a larger amount by September, for I assure you of my interest in and prayers for the success in the wonderful work of our growing missionary enterprises."

Many Church papers come to our desk, but for artistic make-up, proper arrangement of material, and mechanical appearance, we are not prejudiced in saying that few, if any, surpass or equal THE CHRISTIAN SUN. This is due to the splendid work of Dr. P. J. Kernodle and the Central Publishing Company, Richmond, who evidently spare no pains on their part, and lavishly indulge a passionate pride in making up, printing and mailing the paper. We doubt if any Church paper has a more competent and devoted publisher and printer than THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and too much praise cannot be given to Dr. Kernodle and his helpers, who are certainly making an invaluable contribution to the Church and a great enterprise of the Church to which they are devoted.

We trust that all SUN readers will pursue closely the material appearing in THE SUN from time to time supplied us by Bro. Hermon Eldredge, managing editor of the publications of our Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, and appearing under the caption, "Our Jubilee Year." In 1930, all Christendom is called upon to celebrate the last year of our Lord's ministry on earth, nineteen hundred years ago, and the 1900th anniversary of the birth of the Christian Church on the Day of Pentecost. The centennial pentecostal celebrations are to be held in the Church in 1930, and Christian pastors and forces should be praying and preparing now for another Pentecost in all the Churches of Christendom, with the hope and expectation that the Spirit of our Lord will again be poured out in flaming abundance upon God's people everywhere who wish to see the Church quickened to newness of life and the enlargement of His kingdom on earth.

The Herald of Gospel Liberty is one hundred and twenty years old, and in the month of September will celebrate its one hundred and twenty-first birthday anniversary. This is the oldest religious weekly in the world, so far as the claim has been established, and was the first to proclaim, through the weekly press, religious liberty to all mankind. The Herald is rich with the experience of years, and yet virile in activity for all that pertains to Christian unity and the growth of the kingdom of our Lord. It has had a most honorable career, and all of us Christians indulge a pardonable pride, not only in its past but in its present contribution to religious thought and activity. We wish every CHRISTIAN SUN reader had also in his home the Herald of Gospel Liberty, for it stands for and advocates all that the traditions and polity of the Christian Church stands for and advocates. Here is wishing for it not only another one hundred and twenty years of activity and growth, but of unbroken service in the great work which is best expressed in a single sentence by the name it bears—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

From the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Magazine Number for September: "Dr. J. O. Atkinson, president of the Mission Board of the Christian Church, chairman of the Foreign Department of that board, and Secretary of Missions for the Southern Christian Convention, reports in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which he edits 'on the side,' that the Southland has raised to date $34,500.88 of the goal of $45,000 for home and foreign missions set for this year. The year closes in September, as we understand it, and here is the hope expressed that Dr. Atkinson's heart may be made glad by the successful completion of the fund by that date." On the morning of August 19th, the mails brought us contributions from Sunday Schools and Churches sufficient to put us beyond the $40,000 mark, and the editors of the Herald may be assured that there are hundreds, not to say thousands, of others whose hearts will be just as glad as that of the Mission Secretary of the Southern Convention if the $45,000 goal is reached in September, and whose hearts also will be as sad as his if we fail to reach our goal. But we must not fail, unless God wills it so, after all of us have done our very best.

THE ASSURANCE OF SALVATION.

"What must I do to be saved?"—Acts 16:30.

In answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" the Scriptures give one, and only one, answer: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Paul himself had acted on that representation, had found that it was true, and could say as he stood face to face with death: "I know Him whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to guard that which I have committed unto Him against that day."

It is clear that when Paul penned his final epistle to Timothy, he possessed full assurance as to his personal salvation. It is not to be assumed, however, that he possessed such assurance throughout the whole of his Christian life. In fact, on earlier occasions, he used language expressive of uncertainty. "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection," he writes to the Corinthians, "lest by any means when I have preached to others I myself should prove a cast-away." However, even if Paul had possessed full assurance from the day of his conversion, it would not necessarily follow that all true Christians possess the same assurance, and so that our faith is not genuine unless it produces such assurance. The general teaching of Scripture as well as the experiences of God's people in all ages accord with this inference. The fact that so many Biblical characters speak with such confidence of their personal salvation, as well as the fact that the Scriptures exhort us to make our calling and election sure, make clear that assurance is attainable in this life, and that such a state of mind is by no means akin to presumption. On the other hand, the fact the Scriptures speak of those weak in faith and that so many Bible saints use language expressive of uncertainty indicate that a man may be in a saved condition without being wholly aware of it, somewhat as a man may be the real owner of a piece of property without being altogether certain that his title is a valid one. And though regrettable, it will scarcely be denied that in the lives of most Christians, assurance has been the exception rather than the rule. There has been an if, a perhaps, an interrogation point in the experience of most.

The relation between faith and assurance finds many illustrations. Suppose ourselves in a burning building, the only way of escape from which is a ladder that has been extended from an adjoining building. But two things would be needful for our escape: (1) the ladder would have to be strong enough to sustain our weight; (2) we would have to have sufficient confidence in its strength to lead us to attempt to escape by means of it. The strength of the ladder would be of primary importance. No matter how strong it might look, no matter how fully we might be persuaded of its strength, if, as a matter of fact, it lacks the necessary strength, our attempt to escape would end in our meeting death in the street below. But if the ladder possesses the requisite strength, it would not be necessary for us to be wholly persuaded of that fact. It would only be necessary for us to be sufficiently persuaded to induce us to escape by means of it. We might be more than doubtful, we might think it more than probable that it would break under our weight, and yet that would not prevent our getting to the other building in safety. And when we had gotten to a place of safety, we would know that our doubts and fears were unwarranted—that they were due to our imperfect estimate of the ladder's strength. So as regards faith in Jesus Christ. Here the thing of primary importance is the sufficiency of Jesus. If Jesus be a cunningly devised fable, or though real and living lacks the power and wisdom to save, our faith, however strong, will aid us nothing. On the other hand, if Jesus has the power to save, we need not be fully persuaded of that fact. It is only necessary that we be sufficiently persuaded to lead us to put our trust in Him. Our faith may be weak and wavering, we may be beset with fears and anxieties; but that will not prevent our being saved. And the time will come when we will perceive that our fears were uncalled for, that they sprang, not from the facts themselves, but from our imperfect knowledge of Him in whom we had put our trust.

It should be clear to all that assurance is not of the essence of faith, that it is the existence of faith rather than the strength of faith that is the essential thing. And that because the power of Christian faith resides not in faith itself, as a state of mind, but in the object on which faith terminates, namely: Jesus Christ as Saviour. Christ is able to save, and does save, all those who put their trust in Him, even though their faith be weak.

It should be clear to all also that the ground of Christian assurance is not so much within as without. No doubt it is easy to imagine the existence of a man who, with adequate knowledge of the situation, possesses assurance of his salvation from looking only within, from contemplating the purity and uprightness of his own life and character. It would be an impossible thing to discover such a man, however. Because such a man would need to be without sin, he would need to be able to place his life alongside that of Jesus Christ without being conscious of any contrast between what he was and what he ought to be. If such persons as ourselves are to have any well-grounded assurance of our personal salvation, it must be because we have placed our confidence in that strong Son of God who is able to save unto the uttermost all those who come unto God through Him. It must be because we can say: "I know Him whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that He is able to guard that which I have committed unto Him."—The Presbyterian.

STATEMENT OF FINANCE BOARD.

Much emphasis has been laid upon the fact that the last session of the Southern Christian Convention adopted a financial plan which eliminated Convention missions and foreign missions from the Conference apportionments. The fund for Conference home missions is retained in all the apportionments made by the Conferences for the local Churches. This action was taken because of emergency conditions. It is well known that the Convention has to raise nearly $4,000 each year to care for the deficit in publishing THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The only source of securing this money seemed to be from the local Conferences. It seemed unwise to increase the present Conference apportionments when the Churches have been in so many instances failing to raise the present apportionment. The only practical course, under the circumstances, was to appropriate this money from the funds sent to the Convention by the Conferences.

The same conditions were faced in the matter of funds for Bethlehem and Elon Colleges. Both of the colleges have grave financial difficulties. Naturally, the situation at Elon is better known because the greater part of the Convention is in close touch with the situation. While Elon has a very valuable group of buildings and some endowment funds, it is passing through a financial crisis which seriously threatens the future of the institution. There is no prophet among us who has yet been able to see the way out of this trying hour without raising a larger amount of money. The people are getting sick of "financial drives" and "campaigns" for money in Churches. The Churches seemed to be unwilling to increase the Conference apportionment for any cause. But the college must have more money. Therefore, the only feasible way seemed to be to increase the percentage of the Conference funds sent to the Convention for colleges.

The Convention believed that the people were willing to try to raise the present Conference apportionments, and send in the funds designated for the Convention in a lump sum to be divided by the Board of Finance as provided by the Convention. At the same time, it should be clearly borne in mind that the Convention adopted a plan for missions, which, if followed, will greatly increase the amount raised for missions each year. Under the former plan, no one knew how much each Church was giving for missions through the Conference apportionment unless a very careful study of the percentage was made. Now, the Mission Board has a direct appeal to the Sunday Schools, Churches, societies and individuals, and the people may know what they are doing. This plan should help the mission work of the Convention.

It should be stated that the plan provides that the Woman's Missionary organizations seek to raise $12,500 annually for missions. Under Convention obligations, $12,750 may be allotted to college needs from amounts sent to the Convention from Conference apportionments. On this basis, it appears that the direct apportionment for colleges is about $250 more than the goal set for the women's organizations for missions. At the same time, between $3,000 and $4,000 is raised annually for missions through the Sunday School offerings. Now, to all intents and purposes, it appears that the last session of the Convention sought to equalize the emphasis and provision for the great causes of missions and education. We hope the women will raise the full amount suggested for missions. At the same time, we plead with equal emphasis for our Churches to raise the Conference apportionments in full, so as to help the other worthy enterprises of the Convention.

Of course, we all know this plan is not perfect. But it is simple and practical. Some day our people will have a clearer vision of the kingdom, and will, we trust, be willing to give as the Lord has prospered them. Every department of the Convention is important, but there are certain emergencies which demand immediate consideration and support. Our colleges are fighting for their existence. They never can become self-supporting. Our mission effort should be increased and should have more liberal support. We call for prayer. We plead for co-operation. Let us all pull together for every enterprise of our Convention.

The Financial Program of the Southern Christian Convention—A Statement of the Executive Committee and the Board of Finance.

The Southern Christian Convention, at its Richmond session, unanimously adopted a financial program, and it behooves every Church, every minister, every member, to co-operate fully with it. In united effort and sympathetic, prayerful co-operation is success. The Executive Commit-

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

AN ATHEIST IS A FOOL!

The Bible says so. Experience proves it. And atheists themselves will not let people of common sense think otherwise about them. "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God" (Psa. 14:1). Nobody but a fool would say that or does say it. Any sane person, looking around at the wonders, beauties, glories of this world, must either say that the world created itself or that it had a Creator. Now, none but a fool would say that such a world as ours could create itself.

And whenever these atheists speak or write seriously, they prove themselves to be fools. Now comes Charley Smith, president of the "American Association for the Advancement of Atheism." He is trying to bombard the reading public with his ranting and raving. Take this as a specimen of his wisdom (?): "Religion is romantic nonsense." Nobody but a fool would say that, because religion is the most powerful force and the greatest reality in the life and history of mankind. Take another specimen from the wisdom (?) of this spokesman for the atheists: "If the dogma of God were not endowed, it would disappear." One wonders in that event why the dogma of God did not disappear before it was endowed, or one wonders further why people have endowed institutions whose business it is to proclaim the truth of the living God. Another specimen: "The Bible contradicts the Declaration of Independence." The only trouble with that declaration is that it is a plain falsehood, for the Bible was certainly written long before the Declaration of Independence, and if there is any contradiction, which there is not, the sentence should have been cast the other way around and said, "The Declaration of Independence contradicts the Bible." If Charley Smith, president of the "American Association for the Advancement of Atheism, had had a regard for truth, he would have put his sentence that way.

Come now to a specimen of supreme folly of Charley Smith's: "For nobleness of character, how Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll stand in contrast with David, Joshua and Moses!" Evidently, this man does not know enough about the Bible to understand the first rudiments of it. Whoever said that David, Joshua and Moses were held up in the Bible as men of perfect type, or as examples, or as men for the world to follow? Charley Smith should know that the Bible does not even undertake to picture perfect men, but a perfect God who is dealing with imperfect men and making out of them, in so far as they yield their heart and life to Him, better men than they were, or than they could have been without Him. The Bible is no treatise on the perfection of manhood or womanhood. It is the Word of God which sets forth God's relation to man, God seeking to reveal Himself to man, God making Himself known through men—often, very often, through very imperfect men, but never an imperfect or an unholy God.

The Bible is the Word of God—literally and really just that. God speaking to men. How very imperfectly many of the men to whom He speaks respond to His speech and obey His voice. When David obeyed the voice of God, and in the spirit of the Most High sang praises to His holy name, how sublime were those songs, how sweet and inspiring those utterances! When David disobeys and the weakness of human nature asserts itself, causes murder, takes another man's wife to be his wife, how very weak, how very frail, how very sinful, how very low in the scale of human conduct David descends then! The Bible doesn't leave out, or cover up these things, nor pass lightly over the shortcomings of these characters. But it does show how the Word of God can, and often does, sound to the low depths and lift men up to the high and holy places. Moses, Joshua and David have made contributions to the human family to the life and welfare of mankind, such as Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll, and the whole line of atheists, never have made and never can make, not because the men of the Bible were perfect, but because they realized their own human weakness, and that the God they worshiped was perfect and was able to lift them up and set their feet upon the solid rock. And this the atheists have never done, and the foundation of sand on which they try to stand is ever and always swept away.

THE CHURCH AND EDUCATION.

The Church sponsored education before the State did. During the first two hundred years of American history, the Church sponsored every college and university that was started. The University of Virginia, we believe, was the first tax-supported school in America. Thomas Jefferson deemed it wise to separate education from religion and leave religion and the teaching of it solely to the Churches. This was the beginning in America of the separation of religion, and the teaching of religion, from college education. This beginning, however, had quick and rapid following, and it was not long till tax-supported colleges and universities sprung up in all directions, and the matter of teaching religion was left out of the college curriculum. However, there are those in the Church who have never given up the idea that religion is an essential part of education, and while State universities, tax-supported, are maintained in all the States, Church colleges are also maintained, and even today there are more students in the Church schools—those colleges sponsored by the Church—than in the tax-supported and State institutions.

The fact is, no person is educated who has left off the training and the development of the moral and the spiritual man. It takes body, mind and soul to make a person, and when the education of either is omitted, the result is incompetency or "lopsidedness." It is folly to try to train a person physically and intellectually and to leave off the training of the soul, expecting it to take care of itself.

It would seem that some States are discovering this, for it is a fact that some of the universities are now establishing schools of religion on their campus. The University of Michigan is a notable example, and the University of Iowa and of Texas, all doing the same, and one writer says: "The fact is, there are those who prophesy that the time is not far distant when the State universities, which began by excluding religion, would quite universally be placing it in their curricula." Man is by nature religious. It is innate with him, and to leave this side of his nature untrained and undeveloped results in catastrophe, often in shocking tragedy.

The safeguard of the moral, religious and the spiritual life of those seeking education in our day is to get their collegiate training in a college sponsored by the Church, for it is in such institutions that the completest system of education is offered and the widest scope given for the development of the best in men and women. It is folly and nonsense to say that the Church college is lacking in breadth or in depth, when in very truth the Church college, rightly directed and governed by the spirit of Christ, gives the broadest scope of freedom, for it was Jesus Himself who declared that "I am the way, the truth and the life." The purpose of education is to explore the realms of truth, and when Jesus is left out a large area of the territory of truth is excluded from the search.

WET PRESS AND FICTION WRITERS.

The press has announced, in great gusto, that a group of New York authors, artists and fiction writers, under the leadership of Irvin S. Cobb, the noted humorist, will work for the modification of the eighteenth amendment and do all they can against prohibition. So far as this writer has ever seen, this group of men and women never have done much to bring about prohibition, or any other movement that made for permanent progress and development. For the most part, they take life easily and seek to make a living and fame out of gibes and fun-making over the moral order and the established standards of conduct. It is one thing to write fiction and absorb the attention, by way of diversion in reading, for a few hours; it is quite another thing to engage the mind and heart of men and women in things that make for moral stamina and progress. Moreover, it is one thing to write in light vein and make people laugh at the ludicrous and the idiosyncrasies of the day; it is quite another thing to make people think and to lead them to constructive activity in character-building and social welfare.

It will be difficult for the public to take Irvin S. Cobb and his kind seriously enough to affect their views materially on temperance, prohibition and social welfare.

One views with amazement the attempt of the wet press to mislead the public in the matter of prohibition and modification of the eighteenth amendment. No opportunity is lost by the wet press to herald to the world every gesture and movement from any quarter that will discredit prohibition and the eighteenth amendment. Here is a case in point: One Dr. James Emperingham was heralded far and wide as a churchman who was "wet" through and through. This gentleman, we were told, was secretary of the "Church Temperance Society," which claimed a connection with the Episcopal denomination. Now, the facts come out that this society had no such official connection, but as long as Emperingham, its secretary, gave out interviews and opinions discrediting prohibition, we were told again and again that this man was "an Episcopalian leader." Now we are hearing quite a different story. This Dr. Emperingham was recently convicted in court of plagiarism and was ordered to pay $8,500 as a penalty. Now, instead of the same wet press referring to Emperingham as "an Episcopalian leader," it calls him "a dry crusader." There seems to be no depths to which the wet press will not go in trying to cajole the public into believing that the eighteenth amendment is a failure and prohibition is a farce.

One day Emperingham stands before the world as secretary of the "Church Temperance Society" and is hailed as an "Episcopalian leader who is against prohibition"; the next day, when convicted in court, the same papers declare him in great headlines thus: "Minister is found guilty of plagiarism in suit; Dr. Emperingham, dry crusader, must pay $8,500 for stealing articles on health." And yet there are thousands of people ready to believe, to swallow, and make their own, all the wet propaganda that the wet press spreads before them day after day.

Now comes information that women of high social life in Chicago have organized themselves to fight the Christian Temperance Union and to fight for the modification of the eighteenth amendment and prohibition laws. "Well, so much the worse for these 'social lights.'" They never have yet led the world in the way of righteousness, truth, sobriety and morality. So, let the wet press have them and make the most of them while, the sober, law-abiding people of America go on endeavoring to build up a constituency that favors the enforcement of a law whose only purpose is to make, through sobriety, a right social order and good government.

HELPING THE CHURCH PAPER.

Dr. W. W. Staley, in his last week's Suffolk Letter, directed attention to the worth and value of the Church paper. We presume every minister in the Southern Convention will agree with all that Dr. Staley said. The strange thing, however, is that the great majority of them agree and just leave it right there. The Church paper is the pastor's aid and helps him in his work. How we do wish that all our pastors would realize this and do the paper a good deed in return! We are compelled, as a Church, to have the paper; and, economize in every way we can, THE SUN costs more by far than the income from subscriptions. What the paper lacks in revenue from subscriptions to pay its way has to be paid out of the Church funds to the Convention. The Convention, in its last two sessions, has tried to provide a fund of about $4,000. We do not know how much of this fund is required to supplement the income from subscriptions; we do know, however, that subscription money is not paying for the printing of THE SUN.

By proper effort on the part of interested laymen and the pulpit, the Convention and Churches could be saved this amount and THE SUN could be made to pay its way. It seems that all Church papers face this difficulty and have to be subsidized. Last week's Richmond Christian Advocate notes the following about Methodist papers, official organs of the various conferences, and the amount that Methodist conferences are assessed to keep their Church papers going: "The Oklahoma Conferences have $8,500 assessment; the Baltimore Conference, $7,500; the Alabama Conferences, $4,000; the Arkansas Conference, $10,000; the St. Louis Conference, $3,900; the New Orleans Advocate has a subsidy from its patronizing conferences of $3,579; the Central Methodist, $3,000; the Southern Christian Advocate, $4,000. The Richmond Christian Advocate has an appropriation of four thousand dollars, and last year we realized from this 63 per cent."

Superintendent C. D. Johnston, circulation manager, is doing his best to make THE SUN self-supporting. This he can do by the hearty co-operation of ministers and laymen. As the fall begins, we wonder if the Churches will not bestir themselves, through pew and pulpit, to so increase the subscription list and renewals to THE SUN as to give a sufficient income from subscriptions to enable the paper to pay off the printer without recourse to the funds of the Convention. IMPLICATIONS OF CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

Membership in the Church of Jesus Christ is the most important human relation, because it determines the value of all other relations. The basis of the best citizenship is the relation of citizens to the teachings of God's word. Christian civilization is unknown where the Bible has never been taught. To be a good Church member qualifies the individual to be a good parent, a good child, a good servant, a good teacher, a good neighbor, a good business man, a good citizen. If a good Church member qualifies a person for all other positions, it is important to know what elements enter into a good Church member. Four elements may be named as implied in Church membership:

1. Regeneration or the new birth. "Ye must be born again," and this is the work of the Holy Spirit in the penitent believing heart. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Regeneration is an inner experience, and entrance into the Church is a confession of that experience. Mental choice and decision of the will may be of great value to the new-born soul, but they can never be a substitute for the experience felt in the soul when the individual becomes conscious of forgiven sin. This experience is not apart from knowledge, for "we know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren" (1 John 3:14).

2. Daily living before men. "Ye are the light of the world." "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father, which is in heaven" (Matt. 5:14, 16). The people outside of the Church read the members of the Church more than they read the Bible. The weakness of the Church is in the lack of spiritual influence of her members over outsiders. If all Church members lived so as to win the confidence of others, home missions and foreign missions would win the world for Christ. This is one sphere in which all members can shine. It is not education, not family standing, not wealth, but life that counts most in the membership of the Church.

3. Church attendance. If the workers in a mill did not go regularly, it would mean reduction of products, loss of pay, and partial failure in business. It is the regular attendance of the workers, the steady operation of the machinery, and the large output of goods that makes the business thrive and minister to the home and the world. Regular attendance of Church members to the regular services of the Church would create a public opinion that would turn the mind and heart of the world to Jesus Christ. Where the crowd goes, the individual will follow. "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together."

4. Financial support. That is only a grateful and thoughtful return to God for what He has given to us. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning" (James 1:17).

The giving should be "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come" (1 Cor. 16:2). In other words, the giving should be systematic and generous. The nations that give the most to carry on God's work among men are the richest nations; and what is true of nations is true of Church members. These are four things implied in Church membership: (1) regeneration—a change of heart and life; (2) a life that witnesses for the life of Jesus Christ, so that others can see it; (3) regular attendance upon the services of the Church as individuals and families; (4) systematic and liberal financial support of the Church, so that missions, institutions and help for the unfortunate may all prosper.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., resumes this week a movement to raise the sum of $50,000.

The campaign will be conducted among members of the Southern Christian Convention, among friends of the college in Wadley and vicinity and Randolph County, and among other men and women who believe in the fostering of Christian Americanism and the carrying on of the ideals of our Anglo-Saxon heritage.

The $50,000 will be used as follows: $25,000 for payment of indebtedness, $10,000 for 1929-30 maintenance, $8,000 for completing construction of the administration building, $5,000 for equipment of the administration building, $2,000 for campus improvement.

Dr. S. L. Beougher, president of the college, announces that the need for the funds is urgent, so that the school may be able to begin work on a firm foundation and care for the increased number of students to be enrolled this year.

Then, too, the campaign will be the prelude to a general program of development that includes the recent agreement of co-ordination of activities with Piedmont College, an accredited senior institution located at Demorest, Ga. Plans for the co-ordination have been worked out by Dr. Beougher and Dr. Frank E. Jenkins, president of the senior college and head of the board of trustees of the junior college, with the approval of the Southern Christian Convention at its last session.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Rebecca Jane Andrews was the daughter of Everett Gay and Priscilla Wright Gay, of Isle of Wight County, Va. She was born December 3, 1832. She married William H. Andrews July 6, 1856. Her husband, a soldier in the Confederate service during the Civil War, died in the Naval Hospital, Portsmouth, Va., in 1862, leaving her a widow, with three children—Ida Virginia Andrews, Benjamin Everett Andrews, and William Henry Andrews. Mrs. Andrews died in Parrish Memorial Hospital, Portsmouth, Va., by the same body of water July 20, 1929, at the age of 96 years, 7 months, and 17 days. She had lived, as a widow, about sixty-seven years. The most touching verse in the Bible is in Luke 7:12, when Jesus came to the city of Nain, a dead man was being carried out, "the only son of his mother, and she was a widow."

Mrs. Andrews is survived by one son, B. E. Andrews; twelve grandchildren, seventeen great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren. Before her death there were five generations of her family living. In her girlhood she united with Antioch Christian Church in Isle of Wight County, Va., but at the time of her death she was a member of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. She was a staunch member of the Christian Church and loyal to its Principles and its worship. She was twelve years older than THE CHRISTIAN SUN, was born before railroads were in use, and lived through all the modern years of progress in heat, light, and power. She possessed a personality unique in faith, humor, loyalty to convictions and friends, sweet and agreeable in all social relations. The memory of such a person enriches life and inspires her loved ones to noble endeavor.

Some years ago she had a fall that broke one of her limbs, was carried to St. Vincent's Hospital in Norfolk, where her Christian patience won the hearts of those who ministered to her. She would repeat Scripture, offer prayer, and fill the room with brightness. Age did not rob her of life and interest in home, family, and Church affairs. Her funeral services were held in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., on July 21, 1929, and the service was surcharged with sympathy, flowers, and a sweet song by Mordaunt Etheredge, one of Norfolk's great singers. She was laid to rest in Elmwood Cemetery and her grave was covered with flowers, as her life had been with love and kindness.

For the last thirty-three years she had made her home with her granddaughter, Mrs. Cora Johnson, six miles from Portsmouth, Va. Cora had lived with her grandmother in her girlhood years, so that they lived together most of Cora's life; and it was sweet that Cora could minister to grandmother in her old age. She left dear ones on earth to join dear ones in heaven. The flowers on her grave will fade, but her crown in heaven will never fade. She left the Christian Temple for the temple where Jesus went to "prepare a place for His followers, and promised that He would come again and receive them unto Himself, that where He is, there they may be also." The Church never suffers by the death of such saints as Aunt Jane Andrews was, but gains by adding another soul to the saints in glory.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

The alumni publication of Willamette University, Salem, Oregon, has just concluded a contest among high school students in respect to "What Constitutes a Good College"? Scores of essays were submitted and examined. The publication awarded first prize to Miss Eleanor Gettman, of Newberg, Oreg. Her essay is as follows:

"What Constitutes a Good College?"

"It has been said that the ideal college is as simple a thing as this: a log, with Mark Hopkins on one end and a boy on the other—inquiry and knowledge face to face. But there are so many boys, so much inquiry, in comparison to the number of intelligent, learned men who are willing to sit on the end of a log and answer questions that we have the college, whose library, gymnasium, art building and museum, make the college a great improvement upon the log-method of enlightenment.

"Granting that the college of today is an 'imperfect means to the attainment of education,' but assuming that it is the best means of education at present available, we might ask the question, 'What constitutes a good college?'

"It cannot be dogmatically said that a small college is good, a large one bad; a sectarian college bad, a State college good; a college situated in the city good, one located in less densely populated districts bad. All these factors have relative values.

"A relatively small college, however, is the preference of most educators. Its primary asset is one which is impossible in a large college, namely: if well-endowed it can place its best professors, perhaps men of wisdom and experience, in touch with its students, even the freshmen. Concerning this idea, Charles Franklin Thwing, president-emeritus of the Western Reserve University, writes: 'If the metaphor for the large college be a plant in the mechanical sense, for the small, the metaphor is a plant in the botanical sense. The one stands for the machine, the other for the garden.' The Association of American Colleges says that in order to be reasonably efficient, a college should have an enrollment of at least four hundred. If it were much more than twice as large as this it would not provide as truly a liberal education as would a smaller college.

"A good college need be neither urban nor rural, for, despite the more varied educational advantages offered by the urban, the distinction is rather social than educational.

"As to denominational and State universities, the denominational colleges have departed from narrow sectarian interests, making the two types very similar in this respect. President W. W. Comfort, of Haverford College, says: 'The State institutions, being both large and undenominational, pay less official attention to the religious and spiritual development of the students. They do, however, gladly co-operate with city Churches and encourage the work of student pastors on the campus.' Besides, he says, 'Spiritual development is the result of example, of intimate contacts and of the ideals that are lived up to by those who direct the institution and who teach in it.'

"There are certain things which a good college, be it sectarian or nonsectarian, be it rural or urban, must have. It has such things as a reasonably large endowment and an efficient budget, athletics for every one, stimulating social life, an adequate curriculum, and a good faculty and president.

"A good college would have a budget system, and that system would be the effective instrument of financial control, for a good college is not habitually in financial straits. Rather, it is fixed well enough financially so that it will be able to secure the services of the better professors for the students and provide generously for the equipment of educational facilities.

"Clean athletics and wholesome social life help to constitute a good college. Every student should have an opportunity to develop physically, for education should provide for mens sana in corpore sano. There is, however, no need for worry that 'Jack will become a dull boy because of all work and no play' if opportunity for athletics and social activities be distributed more equally than is customary in many colleges.

"The 'liberalizing' influences should be derived from college life as well as from its studies, for, as Woodrow Wilson has well said, 'The real enlightenments of life come not from tasks or from books so much as from free intercourse with other persons, who in spite of you, inform you and stimulate you, and make you realize how big and various the world is, how many things there are in it to think about, and how necessary it is to think about the subjects you are especially interested in in their right relations to many, many others, if you would think of them correctly and get to the bottom of what you are trying to do.' A good college would be sort of a community, where opportunities for such intercourse would be provided.

"A good college does not necessarily have a greatly extended curriculum. It has been said that colleges are making an attempt to cover the whole field of knowledge, both human and divine, and that 'the curriculum is being diluted in a way that is detrimental to the best interest of education.' Certainly there should be courses in philosophy, literature, history, economics, science, sociology, and foreign languages, but it is not necessary that subjects from 'assyriology to whatnot' be taught. Mr. Roland G. Usher has said, 'What the college curriculum needs is unity, content, a tangible object worth the student's while; something which will commend itself to him as obviously valuable in his first state of ignorance. . . . I would make political social history not a portion of the curriculum, but its backbone, the necessary approach to all subjects.'

"The personnel of a college might be considered the greatest single factor in the worth of a college, certainly of more importance than the curriculum. Mr. W. B. Munro has warned us of the danger of forgetting what James Russell Lowell said many years ago: 'The fame of a college depends on the teachers who teach therein.' The faculty should include men of wisdom and wide experience, men who are capable of interesting students in intellectual things and of holding ground against attractive diversions such as athletics and 'campus activities.' The influence of a teacher, and especially of a teacher in a comparatively small college, is seen by the following, which President James Burrill Angell wrote, near the close of his great life upon his experience while at the head of the University of Vermont: 'My teaching gave me peculiar pleasure with each pupil, and in many cases with his parents. . . . I was able to guide and impress them, to direct them in their reading and help shape their character and their plans.'

"The president of a good college (I refer here to a college whose aim is liberal education as I have defined it) would be a scholarly administrator, since the size of the school would not make it necessary that he be a purely executive type of man.

"The college of today may be 'an imperfect means to the attainment of education,' but a 'good' college, as this essay has defined it, is not all idealism. There are colleges with all or most of these criteria which those who understand the needs of our colleges have generally agreed upon—colleges which provide what is most needed, a truly liberal education instead of merely technical or vocational training."

I feel sure that the readers of the Elon Letter will be glad to know what this representative high school graduate feels should constitute a good college.

W. A. HARPER.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

On Monday evening, August 19, 1929, at sunset, the congregation of the Newport News Christian Church formally "broke ground" for the new building. A large crowd assembled to witness the ceremonies, and it was a delightful service. A choir of about twenty-five voices sang "The Awakening Chorus," and the children sang "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The entire congregation offered the Lord's Prayer in concert.

Mr. Solomon J. Holland, one of the charter members, now eighty-six years of age, was present, and was on the program to read the twenty-third psalm, but low, overhanging clouds brought darkness so early that he was unable to see to read. He is very enthusiastic over the new building project, and his presence was inspiring.

Little eight-year-old Matthew F. Allen, Jr., the youngest member of the Church, presented the spade to Mrs. Mary L. Holland, who moved the first dirt toward starting the new building. Mrs. Holland is eighty-three years of age. In presenting the spade, Matthew said: "This is a solemn occasion, Grandmother. We are laying the foundation for a new Church. Jesus said the wise man built his house on a rock. Experience has taught you that Jesus was right. Jesus is always right. But I am very, very young, Grandmother, and you are very, very old. I do not know how to begin. Therefore, I am going to give this spade to you. Dig deep, Grandmother, dig deep; for within the walls of the Church that shall rise from this ground our children's children will be brought to Jesus."

The Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., the organizer and first pastor of the Church, was present and gave an interesting address on the "History of the Organization of this Church." Thirteen of the charter members are still connected with the Church. There were forty-one charter members, and about twenty-five of them are still living, but some have moved away and a few have united with other Churches in this city. In the twenty-eight years from the organization, the membership has grown from forty-one to three hundred and thirty.

For a long time the congregation has felt the need of a new building. About two years ago we started laying plans for it, and had hoped to be in it in time to entertain the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, which met at Liberty Spring Church in July, but it took more time in getting started than we had anticipated. But, at last, our prayers have been answered and our dreams have come true. Great piles of material are already on the ground. The contract has been signed. The finances have been provided for, and the contractors have agreed to rush the work on the structure and to deliver it to us on or before January 1, 1930.

The building is designed on the style of the old Spanish Mission. The roof will be flat, and the monotony which would result from this will be offset by parapets around the walls. Several rows of tiling of contrasting color will also project from near the top of the wall to represent eaves. The entire building will be constructed of the Duntile cement-sand block. We are using the rough-surface block, and will cover this with stucco. We expect also to use wrought-iron light fixtures to correspond with this ancient style of building.

The main auditorium will be one-story, with gallery, and will seat 534 persons. A wing will extend from the back of the building, which will have three floors of available Sunday School space—a basement, and two floors. Only a few of the class rooms are to be enclosed at present. For others, we expect to use curtains till the present debt is paid. But, by use of curtains, we will have twenty-eight class rooms, and at the present time we have only eighteen classes. We are building for the future.

We have pledges sufficient to pay the building debt in five years. But we expect to do better than that. Only about thirty per cent of the membership made pledges toward the building fund. Many of the remaining seventy per cent will do their part. This Church, when finished, will be a good illustration of what "little things" may accomplish when consecrated to the Lord. The Church is being paid for by "little bits." The largest contribution to it was $1,000; but co-operation, such as we have in Newport News, and a little bit from each one, and the help of the Lord, can accomplish wonders.

M. F. ALLEN, Pastor.

ZION MEETING.

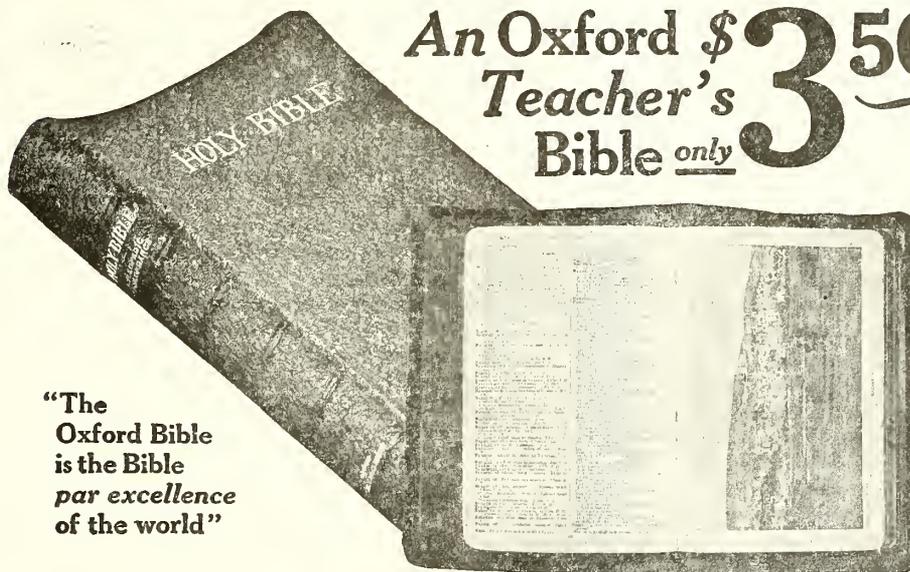

We just closed a few days ago a very successful meeting at Zion Christian Church. Christians were greatly revived and a number of the unsaved were born into the kingdom of God. Bro. H. C. Caviness, of Portsmouth, did the preaching. The Church and pastor thank God for the services of a man such as Bro. Caviness, who still believes in and preaches salvation by grace through faith in the blood and sacrifice of Christ. There were fifteen additions to the Church, most of them being on profession of faith.

Chaplain H. E. Rountree, who has just returned from an extended tour of Europe, visited the publishing office of THE SUN Tuesday, accompanied by his wife. We were glad to see them.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

CONGREGATIONAL NEWS.

Rev. John Luther Kilbon, executive secretary of the New York City Association of Congregational Churches, died unexpectedly at the breakfast table in his home, 993 East Nineteenth Street, Brooklyn, Saturday, August 10, 1929. He was at his office, 287 Fourth Avenue, Manhattan, as usual on Friday and was scheduled to preach tomorrow morning in the Heights Church, Mount Vernon.

Mr. Kilbon had been executive secretary of the association since 1924. He gave particular attention to financing new Churches, and during the five years of his leadership five new Churches were added—Queens Villegge Church, in Queens; Oakwood Heights and Swedish Immanuel, in Richmond; and new Churches at Bronxville, Westchester County, and at Rockville Center, Nassau County. The association now numbers seventy-two Churches in Greater New York and in Westchester and Nassau Counties. The total membership is 33,191, a growth of 2,433 since 1924.

At the time of his death, Mr. Kilbon was engaged upon plans for launching two or more new Churches in 1929-1930. In addition to his Church extension work, Mr. Kilbon directed the co-operation of the Churches of the association in the missionary, evangelistic, religious education and other programs of the denomination. He preached regularly every Sunday in a different Church.

Mr. Kilbon's father for forty years was cashier of the First National Bank, Lee, Mass., and his own work in the Congregational denomination during the last ten years was especially along financial lines. He was treasurer of the Massachusetts Congregational Home Missionary Society and Conference at Boston, Mass., from 1918 to 1920, and from 1920 to 1924 he was financial secretary of the National Congregational Commission on Missions in New York, N. Y.

At the time of his death he was a member of the National Council of Congregational Churches, of the executive committee of the National Armenia and India Relief Association, of the Williams College Club of New York City, and of the Clergy Club. He belonged to the Ocean Avenue Church, Brooklyn.

Mr. Kilbon graduated from Williams College in 1886, and from Hartford Theological Seminary in 1889. His first pastorate was at East Haddam, Conn. From 1891 to 1902 he was engaged in editorial work for the Congregational Publishing Society, Boston, Mass. He was then pastor of the Park Church, Springfield, Mass., sixteen years, 1902 to 1918.

Mr. Kilbon is survived by his wife, Lena Gillette Kilbon, and by three children and two grandchildren. The children are Roland Kilbon, Lynbrook, N. Y., and Ralph and Rachael Kilbon, who live at the family home in Brooklyn. The grandchildren are a son and daughter of Roland. Roland Kilbon is the New York correspondent of the Paris Edition of the New York Herald.

JESUS, GOD'S MESSAGE.

It was not without deep meaning that both John and Jesus began their work and continued it to the end without in any organic way connecting it with the authority and the forms of Jewish religious organizations of the day. The kingdom which they constantly preached was that which Jehovah had promised and planned, but it was never entangled or corrupted with political elements or material ambitions. This kingdom ideal was the central, the dominating, the constructive idea in all the teaching, work and hope of Jesus. He succeeded only a little while before His death in making even His followers understand that He was concerned with righteousness and redemption, not with power and world rule. Then most of His followers left Him, while He held unflatteringly to His ideal, and to His course, "steadfastly setting His face to go to Jerusalem."

It was not just because His Messianic ideal so contradicted that which the Jewish authorities cherished and demanded that they turned upon Him with rage and dragged Him to the cross. They could have allowed Him to go on with His fine idealism to lose His following and fail as many an impractical idealist has failed to found any permanent enterprise. Jesus constantly declared Himself God's representative, God's very Son, and made His teaching and His person the divine standard of judgment, not of His followers alone, not even of His own nation alone, but of all men. He grew bold to denounce the constituted authorities in religious as in civil affairs, as blind guides, hypocritical hinderers of God's will. He announced that the kingdom would be taken away from them and given to another people who would honor God with the fruits of His kingdom. If He were right, their scriptures, as understood by them, were false, their hope was gone, and their God was turning from them to become the God of sinners and outcasts. He was profane, blasphemous, despicable in their eyes. They slew Him and buried Him. The resurrection was God's verdict in favor of Jesus against the Pharisees, in favor of His interpretation of God as against theirs. He was the only true Son of God. God's attitude toward men had been revealed to Him. He was God's message to mankind.—From "The Bible a Missionary Message," by Carver.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF LIFE.

No one can read Dr. Crawford's new book, "The Stewardship of Life," without wishing that it could be taught to every member of his Church. He has made a definite contribution in a statesman-like interpretation to all who wish a sane presentation of the great theme of Christian stewardship. This book, centering around the stewardship of personality, has presented a work that will be valuable to those who are seeking to build Christian character. Religious education workers will find much help in this phase of their challenging task.—Warren H. Denison, Sec'y Stewardship and Promotion, Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN ACTION.

Piqua Convention Items.

Remember that the same delegates constitute both the General Convention and the Christian Publishing Association.

If we are to have a great Convention, you and your Conference are to help make it so. The Piqua Church will do its part; the program committee is doing its part; the pre-convention committees are hard at work; all delegates should be present and stay throughout; all the Church should pray for the Convention.

All Convention matters should be addressed to the President, Rev. F. G. Coffin, D. D., 47 West Fourth Avenue, Columbus, Ohio, or to the Convention Secretary, Rev. Warren H. Denison, D. D., C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio. All Christian Publishing Association matters should be addressed to Harvey E. Sims, President, Piqua, Ohio, or to Rev. W. J. Young, Secretary, 614 N. Elm Street, Muncie, Ind.

The various board secretaries will be glad to give any data or other information to the several pre-convention committees that will be helpful in their work.

Rev. Raymond G. Clark, Piqua, Ohio, is the pastor of the Convention Church.

Piqua is on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which runs from Louisville, Ky., to Detroit, Mich., through Cincinnati, Dayton, Deshler and Toledo. Piqua is between Dayton and Toledo. It is also on the Pennsylvania lines, running from New York through Columbus to St. Louis and Chicago. It is seventy-three miles west of Columbus, and on the line from Columbus to Chicago (table 42 Pennsylvania time-table); also on the line from Columbus to Indianapolis, via Piqua (tables 44 and 45). There are bus lines and traction lines also.

All Conferences should select their most representative delegates—men and women, ministers and laymen—who are informed as to our work and its needs.

There will be a committee room for each regular committee.

Sunday will be a great day. Piqua pulpits and nearby Christian Church pulpits in other towns will be supplied by visiting Christian and Congregational ministers.

There will be special features: college reunions, exhibits, book store, upper-room prayer meeting services, men's banquet, etc.

The Convention opens Tuesday, October 22nd, at 2 o'clock sharp. It will be in session eight days.

If you have any matters to bring before the Convention, please send them now to the proper committee, so that they may receive full consideration.

This is the educational period of the Christian Education Department of our work. Every pastor, Church, young people's congress should be using this time in the year's program of the Church to show our people the importance of developing Christian character and the need of sending our own sons and daughters to our own colleges. Do not make a mistake. They need to attend our own colleges. The offering in October should surpass any educational offering we ever made. Our colleges cannot be supported by quarters and dimes alone. The giving for Christian education, our colleges, young people's congresses, literature should be sacrificial giving. This is our Jubilee Year. Let us go up to our Convention at Piqua the 22nd of October feeling that our October educational offering was worthy of the Christian Church.

A LIVE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

(Attending our Palm Street Church, Greensboro, N. C., August 11th, to rejoice with the pastor and people on the opening day of their new six additional Sunday School rooms, we discovered a host of young people, a veritable bee-hive of life and activity, and a whole Church full of radiant faces. It was easily discovered that there were evidences of real growth and progress here. We asked the secretary of the Sunday School, who is also deeply interested in Christian Endeavor, for his record last Sunday. Here is what he handed us, and it needs no comment.—J. O. A.)

I am sending you the report of our Sunday School for last Sunday, as per your request, as follows: Total on roll, 246; present today, 232; present last Sunday, 138; present year ago, 124; offering today, $6.00; offering last Sunday, $5.80. We give our regular Sunday School offerings one Sunday each month to the Orphanage, and one Sunday each month to missions.

A word also for our Christian Endeavor Society, which we feel very proud of. The idea of Christian Endeavor in our Church was conceived by one of its most active young ladies in the young people's departments of both the Church and the Sunday School, namely: Miss Lettie Scott.

About nine years ago she, with the assistance of Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, then pastor, organized the Junior C. E. Society, with nine charter members. Since that time, this society has continued to flourish under the faithful leadership of the organizer, Mrs. Lettie Lumley, with Miss Maud Apple as assistant, and the membership is now 54.

As many became too old during this period for this department, it became necessary about two years ago to make some change to accommodate the older ones; so the Senior C. E. Society was organized, and we are glad to say that it is thriving under the leadership of Mr. Shelton C. Brady, president, and Mr. Morris Clark, vice-president, with a membership at present of 48.

After organizing the senior department, it was still a difficult task to make the programs interesting for all ages; so about one year ago the Intermediate C. E. Society was organized, and while this department only has a membership of 12, the superintendent, W. B. Lumley, is justly proud of the fact that they have a 100 per cent active society.

We are justly proud of C. E. work in our Church, and feel that it means everything to our young people and to the Church.

W. B. LUMLEY, Sec'y.

NOW THE TIME—HERE THE PLACE!

Your Church is making an effort to reach its goal for Missions this year, namely: one-third the amount of pastor's salary. If your Church, and all the other Churches, reach this goal, we will reach the total goal of $45,000 for the year ending September 30th, the amount asked of us by the Southern Christian Convention.

Will you, by an individual gift, help your Church to achieve this desired end? Now is the time! Here is the place! By a pull together, every Church can reach the goal. Help now.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

September 8, 1929.

NEHEMIAH REBUILDS WALLS OF JERUSALEM.

(NOTE: These notes are written while the writer is away on his vacation. In some way, he has misplaced his Lesson Guide, which has the titles, dates, etc., of the Sunday School Lessons. He is not sure that the title given above is the title for this particular lesson, but he thinks that today's lesson is concerned with the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem. He hopes to have the guide before the next week's notes are written, so that he can be sure of the title, golden text, etc.)

A Man Who was Concerned About Others.

Nehemiah had a good job. He was cup-bearer for the king. In modern slang, he was on "easy street." But when certain of his brethren came from Judah and he learned of the condition of Jerusalem and the lot of the people, he felt a great compassion, he besought the king for permission to go back, he gave up his position, and with great personal sacrifice and at the risk of real danger, he went back to the city of his fathers and spent and was spent. The world needs nothing more than it needs men and women and young people of Nehemiah's spirit, people who are so interested in others and in the things that concern the kingdom that they give themselves unstintedly and gladly to these causes.

Men Who Were Enemies of Human Welfare.

"When Sanballat and Tobiah heard of it, it grieved them exceedingly that there was come a man to seek the welfare of the children of Israel." These fellows were seeking their own selfish interests. They were going to prey upon the more or less helpless Jews who had returned. They were absolutely selfish, and it grieved them to know that some one was seeking the welfare of their intended victims. The species is not extinct. The "wet" element is grieved because high-minded people are seeking to do humanity well by ridding the country and the world of a great curse. "White slavers" are grieved whenever unselfish people seek to save young girls from their clutches. Industry resents it when social workers seek to secure better housing conditions, better wages, better living conditions; that is, if there is the least possibility that such action will reduce profits. The "war jingoists" put up a great howl when lovers of peace seek to rid the world of mankind's greatest collective sin. Strange as it may seem, there are always those who are grieved when there comes into human life he who is concerned for the welfare of his fellow-men.

People Who Had a Mind to Work.

"So we built the wall; for the people had a mind to work." It was a tremendous undertaking to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, especially considering the limited resources of the people from the material standpoint, but the job was done and done quickly, for the people had a mind to work. This is one of the most desirable and necessary qualities or spirits for any task. Mere willingness is not all, but when people are willing, miracles can be accomplished. And what a joy it is to work with people who have a mind to work!

The Devices of the Devil.

Sanballat and Tobiah used the devices of the devil in trying to stop the work. They resorted to ridicule, to threatening, to intrigue, to open opposition, to scorn, to a show of force. The devil works with these weapons, not only as touching the person who is beginning the Christian life, and not only as touching those who are more mature, but as touching the organized forces of religion. Many a young person finds the Christian life a problem because of the fear of ridicule on the part of some of his "crowd." Many a mature Christian, and many of the forces of organized religion are afraid to do what they know they ought to do.

Common Sense in Religion.

"Nevertheless we made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch against them day and night." Faith in God does not discount common sense and human resources. Faith in the promises of God does not relieve a man from the responsibility of making provision for this family, of taking out life insurance, of exercising due care in the matter of health, of watching against temptation, and of using all that he is and has in the right way. We ought to pray as if everything depended upon God and then work as if everything depended upon us, as some one has tritely said. Jesus said, "Watch and pray."

Perspective in Life.

"And I sent messengers unto them, saying, I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down. As a matter of fact, he was probably laying bricks or putting stones in place. But he saw the ultimate implications of the common-place thing. Because of this fact, he refused to be drawn aside by his enemies. We all need this sense of perspective. The minister, the Sunday School teacher, the father and mother in the home or in the place of business, the young person in school or college—all of us need to see the ultimate significance of what often seems the common-place thing to us. The things we do every day are related both to the development of character and the extension of the kingdom of God. We should not be drawn aside, and we should not be lured back to the lower levels of life, either by our enemies or by the siren voices of pleasure.

The Reward of Work Well Done.

"So the wall was finished." Because they prayed about their work, because they had a mind to work, because they stuck at their tasks, they finished the wall. It is not always given to men to finish the things they start, but he who practices the principles of these people will receive their reward.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, September 8, 1929.

TOPIC: "What Does Our Church Ask of Us?" Rom. 12:4-8.

Some Bible Hints.

The Church asks that we act as members of a body, not as self-willed individuals (v. 4).

We must learn to act "in Christ"; that is, under His influence, act as He would act if He were here (v. 5).

The Church wants to use whatever gift we have—speaking, praying, writing, drawing posters, even washing dishes (v. 6).

The Church asks cheerfulness, good will, kindness, each doing his own work and recognizing the work of others (v. 8).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The Church asks our attendance. Empty pews are poor witnesses for Christ. Nothing can be done if we absent ourselves.

The Church asks financial support. Money talks, it is said, but in Church life it only whispers. Generosity is needed.

The Church asks volunteers who will serve without pay. Its service is one of love. When we begin to look for monetary reward, we are on the wrong track.

The Church asks for loyalty, and Christian Endeavor, at least, promises it. The religious hobo who drifts from Church to Church is of value to no Church.

A Few Illustrations.

As the most important thing in nature is life, so is it in the Church. Christians must be alive and alert and Christ-like. A Church composed of indifferent people has no witnessing power.

The Church is a school. It asks for pupils. It seeks to promote thought and study. The Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, and all sorts of classes are parts of its methods.

An egg is composed of two things—the shell and its contents, the shell merely carrying the contents. A Church is like a shell that carries the message of the spirit. It asks that its contents in the hearts of its members be divine.

What a Church asks should be determined by what Christ asks. The Roman Catholic Church asks a great deal more, and its asking should be resisted.

To Think About.

What does our Church ask of us?

With what big task does our Church challenge us?

What does our denomination ask of us?

OUR JUBILEE YEAR.

TIME: Autumn A. D. 29.

PLACE: Galilee and Judea.

PERSONS: Jesus and His Brethren.

RECORD: John 7:2-10.

John's gospel introduces this period by stating (John 7:1) that Jesus had remained in Galilee up to this time because of the plots of the Jews who had planned to kill Him if He came to Judea. It may have been this situation which kept Him from attending the Passover, and it surely was this which kept Him from going openly to the Feast of Tabernacles.

But it was not fear of the Jews, but fear of not fulfilling the will of God in His life. In the plan of God, "His hour would come" at the coming Feast of the Passover, when the Lamb of God should be slain for the sin of the world. It was of that "hour" and that plan that Moses and Elijah talked with Him on the holy mount. It was that "hour" to which He referred often during these years, and when in the last week of His life He was faced with the crisis of the cross He plainly said for the first time (John 12:23), "The hour is come," and He went forth to meet it.

The Feast was Nigh.

Israel reveled in her feasts. They had been given by the law and these great religious "get-togethers" had held the nation for a thousand years. Every man of Israel was commanded to attend these feasts three times a year—at the Passover, at Pentecost, and at the Feast of Tabernacles. There must be good reason for the absence of Jew from these great gatherings at Jerusalem. Jesus attended regularly, but had missed the last feast of the Passover because of the plots against His life and "hour had not come" in which He was ready to give up His life for the world. There was much of preparation yet to do, but now much of that work had been done and He is freer to face the situation in Judea.

Show Yourself in Jerusalem.

His unbelieving brethren sought to force the issue. They taunted Him with the idea that He was doing things in a corner when the way to be known was to go to the center of things at Jerusalem and at the great gathering of the people at the feast and there proclaim His leadership.

There is little doubt but that these "brethren" were His own brothers of His Nazareth home. The gospels use this word for them whenever He refers to them elsewhere as well as here (Matt. 12:46; Mark 3:31; Acts 1:14). Those closest to Him in His own family could not believe in that one whom they knew so well as being the very Son of God. They rather thought that He "was beside Himself" and wanted Him to go to Jerusalem to rid Himself of His delusion as they considered it.

My Time and Your Time.

They could go openly to the feast, and it was their duty to do so, but as for Him "His hour had not yet come" to openly meet His foes and give His life. He knew the situation and the plots which faced His life when He went to Judea, and He knew that in the plan of God it was not the hour for Him to go. That hour would come, and when it did it would find Him ready with His life. He knew that it was to come and tried repeatedly to get that knowledge to His disciples, but though He told them plainly, they could not reconcile death with His being the Leader of Israel and the conquering King for whom they were looking and whom they believed Him to be.

The Hate of the World.

The world is bent on pleasure and profit, and it hates that man who spoils either one for them. Jesus was spoiling the business of the ungodly priesthood and was not catering to the whim of the crowd, and so they hated Him. There was a year when the crowds adoringly and wonderingly followed Him and would have fought to give Him any earthly thing He wanted, even to the kingship of the nation and a war of rebellion against Rome. They pled with Him to lead them on to earthly conquest, but when He failed to do as they desired and talked of love and peace when their hearts were hot against Rome, they began to hate Him and to desert Him and to let the Pharisees and leaders have their way in plotting to kill Him if they would—the people had ceased to care what happened to Him, and the leaders had their plots laid to kill Him if he appeared at Jerusalem.

He Went in Secret.

When we first read this, we think it so unlike Jesus. He was always so open and brave and ready to face anything; but now He goes not with the crowds to the feast, but "secretly."

But if we will read on in the records we will find that He went a secret way, which was made secret by the prejudices and forms of the Jews. He went by the way of Samaria to the Feast of Tabernacles, and no devout Jew would go that way. It was the direct way to go from Galilee to Samaria, but his brethren and their devout and formal friends would go that round-about way down the Jordan valley and almost twice the distance, taking hills and valleys into consideration, but they refused to be "contaminated" by passing through that nearer way through Samaria. So Jesus could "abide still in Galilee" (Luke 7:9) and seem to give up all idea of going as the great company wend their way down the Jordan valley while He waits and takes the shorter route through "despised Samaria."

Secret Service.

But there is a deeper reason than that for His going in secret. We well know of His bravery and that it was not simply shrinking from danger which led Him to go in secret to the feast. When that day of danger came, He was there to face it when all His followers "forsook Him and fled," and He bravely stood alone and gave up His life when He might have had ten legions of angels to guard and fight for Him.

But there is a time to do things quietly and secretly, and there is a time when it is a crime not to come out into the open. Some men are eternally hollering their convictions until after a while men pay no attention to them. Others quietly go on about their way and say little until the time comes when something must be said, and then that silent man is listened to far above his vociferous brother. There is a time to be silent, and there is a time to shout the truth from the housetops. He is wise who follows his Master and faces the situations of life in such a way to "hold thy peace" than it is to shout. The brave man is not necessarily the noisy one, and that quiet and controlled man who waits for his "hour to come" and then speaks with his life is the one who shapes the destinies of the world.

Prayer.

"Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
 Forgive our feverish ways;
 Reclothe us in our rightful mind:
 In purer lives Thy service find,
 In deeper reverence, praise." AMER.
 HERMON ELDRIDGE.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

UNANSWERED PRAYER.

"And when Saul prayed unto the Lord, the Lord answered him not . . . because he obeyed not the voice of the Lord."—1 Sam. 28:6, 17.

We wonder how many believing children are like Saul, praying to the Lord and finding no answer to their prayers. We wonder still how thoroughly we have dedicated ourselves to the Lord and how thoroughly we have walked in obedience to His way and will. The voice of God is as impossible to be heard by a wayward and faithless child as is music to the ears from a fiddle out of tune.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we have great reason to thank Thee for all Thy goodness toward us in our unfaithfulness. Thou hast surrounded us with love and grace, goodness and mercy. Forgive us of all our sins, and may we follow Thee all of our days. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A FULL SOUL.

"Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full."—John 16:24.

Life these days is a rush for pleasure and happiness. Whether engaged in business, politics, social relations, eating or sleeping, joy comes as a process, and the most of us are trying to obtain it with as little of the process as possible.

In religion we do not see that the process is unnecessary. We feel that the all-wise and ever-present God, who knows and sees our needs, should provide the pleasures, and that the mere asking should be sufficient. To pray without ceasing when money and fortunes are competent, or against darkness and barriers, or in dire need without immediate answer, is not consistent with the Lord's love and goodness. If one thinks this way, he mistakes God. We have to be in tune with His infinite love and goodness, and we have to realize that there is a process we must undergo to get in tune. The dam overflows by a process of little drops of rain and by a gradual filling. The real joy of an automobile is the climax of a desire for it through a long previous period and the many sacrifices for savings which have made it possible to realize that it is paid for. The joy of a meal is the hunger for it, and then when we get it, what a joy! Furthermore, when we go to a hole in the wall and call for a beefsteak, and it appears there, we believe that there is life back there somewhere.

Blessed is he that hungers and thirsts after righteousness, for he shall be filled," and the filling not only gives us joy, but a belief that God is and that He is the rewarder of them that diligently seek Him.

God gives many things in general, such as rain, sunshine, crops, personal living every day, but there are many things He withholds for the hungering for, for the labor of. Like the rain in the clouds waiting for the coming of the cool currents of air before it rains, so He waits for the fresh streams of prayer to condense His blessings into showers upon those that diligently seek Him.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, teach us how to trust not in our feelings, but to trust Thee and the realities of Thy providences. Thou art our strength and our life and the fullness of our joy and salvation. Teach us how to abide in Thee and in the prayer life and to have Thy joy forever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THAT WHICH IS BETTER.

"The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

The apostle does not say that all prayer shall be answered, but that it availeth much, as if to say that He will answer in a way that is best for us. Jesus did not get the answer to His prayer as he asked it, but He said, "Not my will but Thine be done." This was harmony with the Father's will, and the Father gave Him what was better, viz (angels from heaven).

We may not get what we ask for. Often we are not competent to ask for what would be best for us. But we may get a character which may be reflected in glory, and that is infinitely better. So amidst our temporal daily needs, it is the transcending spirit, true manhood knowing the meaning and the values of life, that we need to make our objective, and which will be given us if we desire it. Let us work for it and bring our lives to bear to that end.

Prayer.—O Lord, we pray to Thee this day that our wells of salvation may not run dry amidst the brunts and fights of life. Bring to us the real victories. As Thou dost stand, so may we stand, and because Thou art with us we shall never be utterly stricken down. Amen.

THURSDAY.

PURITY AND VISION.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God"—Matt. 5:8.

The pure in heart shall see God. Then, purity is the means of seeing God. Now, purity does not come through study nor through education, but it comes through a manner of living. Even the wings of imagination cannot reach the dwelling-place of the good that comes to those of spiritual attainment.

On the contrary, our perceptions are blunted and benumbed by coarseness and undisciplined living. So many are on the wrong track. They encourage their passions for pleasure as the world gives it, instead of subduing them into a chastened and refined soul. Such are like those who refine their manners with touching the heart-life. They are cultivating finished courtesies without curbing and drilling their passions. They cleanse the outside of the cup, while within they are full of excess.

Prayer.—Dear Father, in Thy life all things are thrilling and delightful. Make our lives new and fresh daily. Amen.

FRIDAY.

JESUS THE CONQUEROR.

"It is not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."—Zech. 4:6.

In a little country forty-five miles wide and 145 miles long, less than the State of Ohio, with all the great outer world unknown, Jesus was born. He possessed neither name nor wealth, place nor influence. He was the Son of a carpenter, inconspicuous and inconsequential. He had neither training nor education. He went with common people and ate with sinners. He moved along the highways and among the hills, stopped by public drinking fountains and walked by the sea. He spent much time alone in the wilderness and silent places. He liked the solitude of the hills better than He did the halls of State. He liked valleys and gardens better than he did palaces. He was poor and had no home and when He died He left nothing but a seamless garment.

But His life amounted to something the greatest of all the ages. He was not a physician, but He was the greatest of physicians. He was not a lawyer, but He knew all law and administered higher laws. He was not an author; He never wrote a word in His life, but His doings have produced the greatest literature of the ages. He was not an orator, but His truths are the most eloquent of men. He was not an artist, but He is the background of all our arts. He was not an architect, but His soul-building in character has staggered the world. He was not a statesman, but He has moved governments.

He never commanded an army, stormed a fortress, led a charge, nor spilled blood, but He has fought and conquered the moral battles of the world through purity, sheer moral worth and dignity of character. Quality of soul is His weapon, and with this He will conquer the devil. The best of it is He gives us the same power to do these things.

In all His life He is blameless and unscarred by sin, or even marred by the taint of wrong. His life ended as a malefactor, but it was only a new birth into immortal life. He died and rose again, that we might do the same. We, too, may come to the end of our way, saying, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" These facts challenge contradiction. In spite of it all, men will not believe.

Prayer.—O Lord, make perfect our love toward Thee through Jesus Christ our Lord. Give us a true appreciation of the value of love and virtue and godliness. Forgive us of our sins and strengthen us against temptations, and make us conquerors through Him who hath redeemed us by Thy power. Amen.

SATURDAY.

TRUE VALUES.

"He that trusteth in riches shall fall; but the righteous shall flourish as a green leaf."—Prov. 11:28.

One of the supreme functions of the Church is a leveling of the spirit of the people to a common thought of the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God. Everybody faces the problem of riches and poverty. Some are enormously rich and abjectly poor. Others are abjectly poor and abjectly rich.

Usually our estimate of values lies in material possessions, honors, power of influence, but we have learned that often such things debase us. Take the Sabbath problem—it is not a question of whether amusement is right or wrong on the Sabbath Day, but it is a question of whether we obey God or whether we are losing our sense of true values. Often it appears that we give too much attention to superficialities, running after money, honors and things that hang on our chest and that make "lions" of us. What we need more is a study of things that make for self-control, that produce true statesmanship, that gives lasting prosperity to business and makes industry solid and personal life impeccable. Folks who can do nothing but be amused and have no capacity for spending time with themselves profitable, cannot do much in the building of character, cannot know much about God, and must find God and religion a very vague affair. We must "be still and know God."

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The year is rapidly passing, and time to gather in the crops on the farm will soon be at hand. The silo to fill with 100 tons of green corn is one of our hard jobs. We have a very fine field of silage corn this year to fill it with. Then forty-five acres of soy-bean hay to cut, cure and haul to the barn is another hard job, but both make excellent winter food for our herd of cattle to furnish us so much nice milk and butter. Then putting in cultivation forty acres of land for wheat and twenty-five for oats is another job. When we see and realize what is to be done in the next few weeks it looks like a mountain of work, and it is. But with favorable weather and constant effort, it will all be accomplished on time. Seasons in this section have been fine this year and our crops are good.

We crossed the twelve-thousand-dollar mark in our financial report this week. We are still climbing toward our goal of thirty thousand dollars and have faith in our people to believe we will reach it. One orphanage in North Carolina last year had an income of $212,787.63 and cared for 632 children in the institution. We sometimes wonder if our people love their orphanage as much? Surely we do! Let us show our love by our works. Let us increase our monthly Sunday School offerings. Let us remember it with personal contributions. Let us begin to think about the Thanksgiving offering this fall and plan to make it a splendid one. Then let us remember the orphanage in our will; whether this amount is large or small, it will help.

FROM ALABAMA.

We have just closed our revival at Rock Stand. Rev. H. M. Gray was with us and did the preaching. Bro. Gray is one of our best revivalists. He preaches the Bible and condemns sin without fear. We feel that much good was done and our Church greatly revived. We had six additions to the Church upon confession of faith.

From ten to eleven o'clock every day we put on a training class, and the young people were greatly interested. It was the first time we had tried a training course, but we are beginning to see the need of training in Church work and the future looks brighter for the Church in the far South.

Lord help us to be as progressive in our Churches as we are in our other institutions.

SUNDAY.

INCURABLY RELIGIOUS.

"He hath shown thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with thy Lord."—Micah 6:6.

In spite of all that is irreligious, humanity is religious and can't help it. Amidst all the complexities of life, human needs, mystery of existence, thirst for knowledge, passions for adventure, heartaches and loneliness and all other vicissitudes of life, there is an overwhelming sense of dependence upon a higher power, a sense of righteousness, and an urge to what seems best. This urge may be sometimes misdirected and distorted, but it is a sense just the same born of God, and a smoldering fire in the life which God has put there to be fanned into a flame for glory.

The worst of men have this sense. They endeavor to settle differences among themselves and harmonize feelings with one another. Who put that spirit in them? No man approaches the solution of a problem without the innate guidance of Him who is good. No man works with his back to the future. What spirit leads him on? The settlement of every quarrel is spiritual. The solution of every problem is spiritual. The endeavor to go forward and extract the best from the future is spiritual. Therefore, religion is more than a Church or a sect or a set of beliefs. Religion lies in the motives that prompt action, and it is found in due application to every-day life. It is not found in a Sunday frame of mind and then not applied to Monday practices.

Christianity must come to us, and it must lead us on until humanity has found a courage to say that the only thing to do is to live true to moral worth, to the practice of righteousness and justice, and honesty clear through. No short cuts.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, we pray for the life in God. We pray for the life of Christ in our daily lives. We pray for the daily food of his body and His blood to nourish us into a healthy, God-like life all the way. Amen.

VIRGILINA LETTER.

What one of the great annual festivals at Jerusalem was to the Jew, so is the annual revival season to the country Church.

The first of the series of meetings in this field was at Liberty (Halifax), following the first Sunday in July.

The third week in July, Rev. J. H. Dollar was with me at Lebanon, Semora, N. C.

Beginning on July 28th and closing on August 2nd, the annual revival services were held at Union, Virgilina, Va.

The Church was strengthened in the faith, scores expressing a desire to live closer to God, a goodly number professed faith in Christ, and ten were received into the Church.

Hebron held no series of meetings this summer as it has been a custom to alternate with the Baptist Church nearby.

tee and the Board of Finance herewith explain this program fully and pleads for completer support of it.

We are this year expecting to unite with the Congregational Church. Let's go as a 100 per cent organized brotherhood.

I. The Convention.

The Convention apportionments to the Conference $25,000 annually. The allotment to each Conference is by it apportioned to the Churches.

Table with 2 columns: Item, Amount. Includes 'For the Convention itself $ 2,000.00', 'For The Christian Sun 4,000.00', 'For superannuation 3,000.00', 'For the Convention's obligations 12,750.00', 'Undistributed 3,250.00', 'Total $25,000.00'.

Each Conference is requested to send its Convention apportionment in promptly in lump sum.

II. Our Enterprises.

We have four enterprises, and they are to be supported in various ways, as follows:

(a) The Orphanage, $30,000. To care for the 108 children of our Orphanage, we must raise each year $30,000.

- 1. Monthly offerings in Sunday Schools.
2. The annual Thanksgiving offering in the Churches.
3. Gifts from individuals.

Our people have always supported the Orphanage. We urge them to continue to do so.

(b) The Board of Religious Education, $4,500. This board has not had the support its importance deserves, and has been forced to take its field secretary out of the field.

daily vacation Bible school and institute work in our local Churches. The Convention provided two ways of supporting this work.

1. Gifts from the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Societies.

2. Gifts from the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions.

(c) Home and foreign missions, $45,000. In the desire to carry out the great commission at home and abroad, the Convention voted that $45,000 be raised for missions. Four methods were provided for raising this money:

1. Missionary organizations in local Churches.
2. Monthly Sunday School offerings.
3. The annual Easter offerings in Churches. (The Mission Board set as the goal for this offering one-third of the pastor's salary.)
4. Individual gifts.

Should the funds from 1, 2 or 3 fall short, gifts from individuals must make up the difference. The Mission Board must have the full amount.

(d) Colleges. Piedmont Junior College (Bethlehem), $10,000. Piedmont Junior College holds a note of the Convention for $12,500 as a part of its endowment. To give this note stability of value and make it acceptable as endowment to the standardizing agencies, the Convention pays out of that portion of its funds set aside as "undistributed" 6 per cent interest annually, or $750. This leaves $9,250 to be raised by the college in the name of the Convention from the following sources:

|---|-------------------|
| 1. From quarterly Sunday School offerings in Georgia and Alabama Conferences. | $ 250.00 |
| 2. From Church quotas in Georgia and Alabama Conferences | 1,000.00 |
| 3. From members of S. C. C. outside of Georgia and Alabama Conferences.... | 5,000.00 |
| 4. From the general public | 3,000.00 |
| Total | $9,250.00 |

Piedmont Junior (Bethlehem) College has done wisely to suggest a quota for each Church in the Georgia and Alabama Conference, and should collect the same from individual members of the Churches. People like to know what they are expected to do if a project is to succeed. The rest of the Churches should also help Piedmont Junior (Bethlehem) College.

Elon College, $36,750. Years ago the Convention gave the Elon endowment fund a note for $112,500, and later bonds in the sum of $100,000, both obligations bearing 6 per cent interest annually. The Convention pays out of that portion of its funds set aside for Convention obligations 6 per cent interest annually, or $12,750. This leaves $24,000 to be raised by the college in the name of the Convention from the following sources:

1. Quarterly Sunday School offerings in the North Carolina and Virginia Conferences.
2. Gifts from individuals.

Elon College, acting on the authority of its trustees and the Convention's Finance Board, has suggested a goal for each Church in the Conferences in North Carolina and Virginia, to be raised from individual members of the Churches and others, and which if raised by all would provide this $24,000 without hardship on any one. The quarterly Sunday School offerings are credited on the suggested goal of each Church.

III. General Observations.

Please note that the colleges cannot appeal to the Churches as organizations. It is hoped and urged, however, that our ministers will have at least one "College Day" annually, not to take an offering, but to interest our people in the college and the cause of Christian education.

Let it also be distinctly understood that the colleges did not suggest the payment of interest on the endowment obligations given them by the Convention from the apportionment fund. The Finance Board did it and the Convention approved it. It was a wise decision, else the standardizing agencies would not count these obligations as endowments, and our colleges would be discredited.

We suggest that the annual offering for the Board of Religious Education be taken in the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Societies on "Promotion Day" or "Children's Day."

Our enterprises must be cared for or our Church will die. We cannot let any one of them suffer. They are equally dear to us and to the heart of our Saviour.

Further as a Church has a budget and includes all the enterprises according to the askings; no offerings will be taken or individual gifts be solicited from individuals to raise quotas.

Finally.

Finally, brethren and beloved, we call upon you to rally whole-heartedly to the support of our enterprises in full, sympathetic and prayerful cooperation with the financial program adopted by your Convention and approved by your Conferences.

In particular, raise and send in full the Conference apportionments for the Convention.

With earnest prayer for the blessings of God upon you and our Church and its enterprises, we are,

L. E. SMITH, Chairman,
I. W. JOHNSON, Secretary,
Executive Committee, Finance Board.

OBITUARIES.

BLED SOE.

At her home, near Henderson, N. C., Miss Fannie Bledsoe, age 73 years, passed from labor to reward on July 22, 1929. She was left an orphan at the age of 12 years, and came into the Coghill home sixty-one years ago and lived there as one of the family till her death.

In early life she united with the Christian Church and gave her services to the Church and the home which she loved.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. D. M. Spence, at Fuller's Chapel Christian Church, where she held her membership, and her body was laid to rest in the Coghill family burying-ground near the home. A life of loving service on earth has ended and she rests in peace, awaiting the resurrection call.

THOMPSON.

"Servant of God, well done! Thy glorious warfare's past: The battle's fought, the race is won, And thou art crowned at last."

Such could be fittingly said of our departed sister, Mrs. Martha Christine Thompson, who quietly fell on sleep July 8, 1929, at the ripe age of 85 years. In girlhood she gave her heart to Christ and united with the Church at her home in Rockingham County, later transferring it to the First Christian Church, Greensboro. She loved the Church, and when her health would permit was present at worship. In the home, among her grandchildren and great-grandchildren, she was the center of interest and devotion. Through the long months of gradual weakening and decline, she was the object of their tenderest care and affection.

Funeral services were conducted from the Church by her pastor, and the interment was in Green Hill Cemetery. Her children rise up and call her blessed, and all who knew her testify of the beauty of her character.

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

CLINICAL TRAINING FOR MINISTERS.—

The word "clinic" is distinctly a medical term, and yet I know of no other word that quite conveys the desired meaning. There has never been a time when so much was being done for the training of prospective candidates for the ministry. But we know of no theological seminary that offers just the sort of training that we have in mind. Pastoral theology is a most excellent thing, but it deals with the pastoral duties from the theoretical viewpoint. The average young minister needs training not only in the theories of pastoral duties, but he needs practical training in the doing of the things that are required of him. Inquire of the minister, no matter how long may have been his period of service in the ministry, and see if he does not distinctly recall his feeling of unreality and absolute incompetence to meet the demands of the occasion when first he entered the active duties of his office. Not long ago a minister who has had more than twenty-five years' experience as a pastor, stated that he was just beginning to learn how to meet the demands of his office, with some degree of satisfaction to himself. It had taken him years to acquire what might be called an adequate technique. Men are differently endowed with tact and a sense of the eternal fitness of things. But both the gifted and the less gifted would be greatly helped by observing the methods of those who have achieved skill in the discharge of the duties of the pastoral office. When we recall the blundering way in which we have handled the most delicate situations, most of us must confess that we might have been saved from much humiliation and inefficiency had we been given the proper training in how to measure up to what was demanded of us.

PLEDGES FOR BUILDING FUNDS.—

Sooner or later almost every Church is confronted with the problem of securing funds for erecting a new building or for the remodeling of old buildings. And not many congregations are financially able to raise sufficient funds to pay for the needed buildings and equipment on a cash basis. It seems to be the generally accepted custom to take subscriptions on a five-year basis and to endeavor to secure pledges from the entire membership. This plan has a certain practical value in that it indicates just what money each member is willing to give to support the building project. But there are grave objections to the plan as it usually works itself out.

Such campaigns or canvasses are generally preceded by efforts to work the enthusiasm up to a high pitch. Certain members are stimulated to give by being told what other members have pledged. Often pledges are made not in the light of what the individual making the pledge is able to give, but in the light of the entire amount asked for, and in proportion to what others are doing. It is generally the custom to launch such movements when business conditions are booming; often at the crest of a wave of prosperity.

It is always easier to secure pledges than it is to collect them. The majority of Church members resent insistent efforts to collect overdue pledges. Even when pledges are made in the utmost good faith, it is embarrassing not to be able to meet them, no matter what may be the reason for the inability to pay. Many of those who are delinquent in the payment of their pledges will become irregular in their attendance and indifferent to their other Church obligations. Such a situation reacts unfavorably upon the entire work of the Church.

These objections do not apply to pledges for the yearly budget of the Church. Most people have at least a general idea of what their income and expenses will be for a year. They know from past experience about what they will be able to pay for the support of the Church. There is not the stimulus of high-pressure enthusiasm and competition. The average individual, under ordinary circumstances, is generally able to meet the yearly pledge for the support of the Church, where there is a desire to do so. But no Church would think of asking for five-year pledges for the Church budget.

Where a building program is to be launched, it would seem a better way to determine the amount to be expended in the light of what is needed and the ability of the congregation to pay. If money has to be borrowed, it always has to be secured by the endorsement of those who are financially able to pay. The pledge of the average Church member is not negotiable. Let it, then, be understood that every three months payments will be received to curtail the indebtedness. Set a goal for each quarterly payment, and then each individual member will be in a position to give according to the financial condition in which he finds himself. There is then no occasion for those who are not able to give to feel that they have defaulted in their pledges. It sometimes happens that the advantages of new and enlarged physical equipment for Churches are offset by the disastrous results of unwise methods of raising funds with which to pay for them.

ARE WE PRACTICING CHRISTIANITY?—

These lines are being written amid the thoughts and suggestions prompted by the observance of Labor Day. At this time, in Charlotte, N. C., the State is engaged in the trial of sixteen men and women who are charged with murder in connection with the killing of the chief of police of Gastonia, N. C. The killing occurred last June, while a strike was on among the employees of the Loray Mills, of Gastonia. The chief of police was shot as he, together with four other policemen, were entering the tent colony of strikers, the police having been called to investigate and quiet fights that were going on.

At the same time that the murder trial was getting under way in Charlotte, another strike among mill employees was going on at Marion, N. C. On August 29th, the daily press carried the following news item from Marion: "The strike situation in Marion today appeared threatening, after the collapse late yesterday of negotiations to end the strike at the Clinchfield Manufacturing Company, which came when the mill's representatives on the arbitration board declined to meet further with Judge N. A. Townsend and representatives of the strikers.

"An outbreak of some kind appeared inevitable. Shortly before the Clinchfield mill opened for work this morning at 6 o'clock, four sticks of dynamite, with caps affixed, were found on the switch-track leading into the mill. It would have been set off if a car had passed over the tracks, it was said by authorities.

"A stick of dynamite was hurled at the home of the Rev. J. N. Wise, Methodist preacher, who has been outspoken in his opposition to some of the actions of the strikers. The dynamite was lighted, but failed to explode."

In the same week that all this was happening in North Carolina, the Christian Herald carried an account of the work of the Japanese evangelist, Kagawa, by Galan Fisher, under the title, "The Friend of a Nation's Outcasts," which makes one wonder if, after all, we do not need some one to show us the right way. This is what is told of Kagawa's work:

"Kagawa's first active plunge into social reconstruction was when the leaderless and infuriated strikers of the Kobe dockyard went 'on the rampage,' burning, threatening, and destroying. Kagawa faced them when it seemed that one opposing them would be torn to pieces. 'That is not the way,' he told them. 'This is what Christ would do.' And he spoke to them strange words: 'To forgive those who come against us, to die for those who harm us; that is the ideal, and Christ did just that.' No violence, he counseled—and that enraged mob heard him and believed.

"For his part in espousing the cause of the Kobe strikers, Kagawa was sent to jail. After his release, for several years he was hounded by detectives, treated as the Japanese government knows how to treat anarchists and radical suspects. But when the earthquake of 1923 confronted the police and other officials with stupendous problems of employment and housing, Kagawa was one of the first advisers they summoned. And later, when that same government was confronted with an atheistic and revolution-

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. H. G. Robertson, director of religious education of the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., has moved into his new home at 4719 Leonard Parkway, and will be pleased to have his friends call.

Dr. S. L. Beougher and Mr. Frank E. Skelton, of Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., were in Richmond, Va., this week and made a brief but pleasant call at THE CHRISTIAN SUN office. They report prospects fine for the opening of the college.

Ernest G. Carr, musical director of our Richmond Church, has returned from a tour of the New England States, where he was accompanied by his wife and little daughter, Ethel. He resumed his work last Sunday.

Mr. W. A. Newman, of the Henderson Church, Henderson, N. C., was in Richmond last week and made THE CHRISTIAN SUN office a short visit. Glad to see Bro. Newman and have a few words with him. His interest in Church work is inspiring.

Rev. E. B. White, of Dendron, Va., called by the office after a pleasant trip through the historic Valley of Virginia, Washington, D. C., and Baltimore, Md. Bro. White has just closed two successful revivals, one for Rev. F. C. Lester, at Centerville Church, and assisted Rev. G. A. Pearce at Isle of Wight Church.

Rev. L. L. Wyrick, one of the faithful and beloved pastors, residing at Elon College, from which institution he graduated in 1918, and since which time he has served Churches within reach successfully, is open for work the coming year on first, second and third Sundays. Bro. Wyrick is one of our very loyal and consecrated pastors, and renders faithful service in the field to which he gives himself. Any Churches desiring his services would do well to communicate with him at an early date.

President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, last week attended the first session of the Hazen Conference of fifty men chosen from as many colleges in different parts of the country to assemble at Lisle, N. Y., and spend some days together discussing the moral and spiritual betterment of the colleges. Dr. Harper reports a wonderful conference, and feels that Mr. Hazen, a wealthy philanthropist, is making a great contribution to college life in America in choosing a group of fifty men to come together once a year, as the plan contemplates to discuss the absorbing topic of college betterment. We congratulate President Harper on being one of the fifty favored ones of the first conference.

From the Herald of Gospel Liberty, August 29th: "The question of the merger of the Christians and Congregationalists was presented at the centennial session of the Ohio Central Christian Convention, held in Milford Center, August 15-18, and the vote was unanimous in favor of the union. Some of our Conferences have not yet voted on the merger of the two Churches, but in every case where there has been a vote taken it has been overwhelmingly favorable. It will be greatly to the credit of our Church if its action at Piqua is as fraternal and as unanimous as was the action of the Congregationalists in their National Council at Detroit, and from all present indications this will be the case.

Sunday, August 25th, was a great day, with exercises of intense interest and rejoicing, at Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va. The people of the Church, under the consecrated leadership of their devoted pastor, Rev. T. N. Lowe, were determined to wipe out their indebtedness and prepare for further progress of their Church. Within three weeks, culminating on the 25th, they contributed over $1,000. We are looking for great and good things in this Church, in which the spirit of brotherly love prevails and good fellowship abounds. As one brother expressed it, "The way seems now open for a great revival, and the revival spirit was abroad, and the people were as anxious and as ready to work for the ingathering of souls as they had been for the ingathering of mission money."

From the Herald of Gospel Liberty August 29: "The Piqua General Convention program is shaping, and promises to be the most interesting and helpful one we have ever been privileged to see. Piqua is on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and the Pennsylvania lines between Columbus, Ohio, and Richmond, Ind. There are also many bus and traction lines and perfect roads for automobiles. A record attendance is expected. Piqua's new building will add greatly to the convenience of the Convention. The Herald of Gospel Liberty is planning to broadcast the news of the Convention by wire (night letter) on Friday night of the convention to all the Churches which arrange for this service, that they may have the latest from the Convention to be read in local pulpits on Convention Sunday, October 27th. The Convention opens on Tuesday, October 22nd at 2 P. M., and all delegates should be in place at that time."

We sympathize most deeply with our friends, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Proctor, of Lumberton, over the loss of their only son, Dick Proctor, Jr., by sudden death, following an operation on Thursday, August 22nd. This devoted father and mother were wrapped up in their only son, and only those who have passed through a similar bereavement can realize in any measure the depth of their grief. Mrs. Proctor is favorably remembered as Miss Sarah Kernodle, daughter of Bro. J. D. Kernodle, of Graham, N. C., and a graduate of Elon College. Mr. Proctor is a prominent attorney of Lumberton, and well known throughout the State. The funeral services for their beloved boy was conducted by Rev. M. L. Kessler, D. D., superintendent of the Baptist Orphanage at Thomasville, N. C., of whose board of trustees Mr. Proctor is a member, and by Dr. W. C. Wicker, of Elon College, pastor of our Graham Church, of which Mrs. Proctor was a member. We pray our Father's blessings upon this heart-broken father and mother.

An official statement has been issued calling a "Standard Leadership Training Institute" of the Congregational and Christian Churches of the greater Norfolk, Va., district, which institute is to be held in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, October 6-11, 1929. The institute is to begin at 3 P. M. on Sunday, October 6th, with a chapel service led by Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Dayton, Ohio, and is to close with commencement address and exercises led by Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, Va., on the evening of October 11th. The administrative officers are Dr. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C., dean, and the secretary to Dr. L. E. Smith, registrar and librarian. The faculty as announced are Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., missions; Rev. Geo. H. Edwards, B. D., D. D., psychology of religious experience; Hermon Eldredge, worship; Mrs. J. W. Fix, A. B., story-telling; Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, A. B., B. D., young people's administration; W. A. Harper, M. A., LL.D., Church school administration; Rev. J. E. McCauley, M. A., B. D., the teaching work of the Church; Rev. Charles E. Shelton, D. D., psychology of adolescence; Rev. L. E. Smith, B. D., D. D., the New Testament; Mrs. W. R. Taylor, M. A., primary administration.

This is the revival season with many of our Churches, and we trust the pastors will send in reports of their meetings. We heard once of a very timid (?) pastor who said the reason he didn't send in any news from his Churches was that he did not wish to "blow his own horn" or seem to "boast of what he was doing." It certainly is a pity for the timidity of a pastor when he decides that he is the whole show and outfit of a Church, and that what the Spirit of God and the power of the Holy Spirit accomplishes in his Church are his works and will be interpreted as his works. Verily, some pastors have a strange notion about the Church of the living God on earth. Our Lord said that He would build His Church, and then when John on Patmos was permitted to have a revelation of his Lord, he saw his Lord walking among the Churches, furnishing them the power, and in His right hand were seven stars—the seven stars being the seven messengers (preachers) to the seven Churches. If a pastor decides that he is the whole outfit in the Church and that whatever the Church does magnifies him, he ought never to write to his Church paper, for he has left out of consideration the one who is supposed to be working in and through the Church as the power of God unto righteousness and the salvation of souls. If there is any news that is worth publishing in a Church paper, and that people read with gladness, it is the news of souls born into the kingdom of God, a revival of spiritual power and the manifestation of that power in the Churches. This, indeed, is the good news that a Church paper wants to herald to the world, not to the exultation or glorification of a pastor, but to the glory of that name which alone can save to the uttermost.

FRANKLIN LETTER.

The Churches of Franklin have gone together in a wonderful union revival campaign. The meetings are being held under a mammoth tent, and Evangelist Carey Barker, of Lynchburg, Va., is doing the preaching in a most dynamic fashion. Mr. Barker is a layman, who, like Matthew of old, heard the voice of Jesus speak in one of Billy Sunday's meetings, and left his business and office work to preach the gospel.

It is wonderful how God calls men to do his work. One remembers that from the River Nile and the ancient court of Pharaoh he called Moses to be a leader for the chosen race of His world. In years later He raised up prophets and priests. In this age, He calls men from their several places of work and sends them forth to be fishers of men.

Mr. Barker is doing wonderful work wherever he goes. He has preached in Norfolk, Petersburg and other cities of Virginia with great success. The fact that four Churches join in this campaign is evidence of the work he is enabled for his Lord. Union revival meetings surpass denominational meetings. Here in Franklin, all of the forces of all of the Churches are backing Mr. Barker and his company. Along with his preaching, he trains and sends out men and women to do visitation evangelism. Prayer meetings are held each morning in several homes of the city, and store and shop meetings are held for the business men.

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

HAS JESUS THE RIGHT TO CONTROL LIVES?

The question, "Has Jesus Christ the right to control our lives?" is being asked by a large number of the youth of today. This question is, in the main, being asked because the youth is searching for and is hungry for the real God, Friend and Saviour of Mankind. The youth wants to know whether or not Jesus Christ has the right to control or dominate his life. And if He has the right, youth wants to live more like Christ than his predecessors have.

At that great students' convention held in Indianapolis in 1924, Dr. John R. Mott said: "Jesus Christ has the right to dominate each one of us because of what He has done. . . . Jesus Christ has the right to dominate each one of us because of what His dominance over us makes possible. . . . Jesus Christ has the right to dominate us because He has the program and the work for our particular generation and for this moment in the life of the world."

Has Jesus Christ the right to dominate each one of us because of what He has done?

Jesus came as a poor Jew, preaching the Word of God. He did not come to form an empire; He did not come to gain great wealth; He did not come to gain power over other men! He did not come for any selfish end. He came healing the afflicted, giving sight to the blind, giving food to the hungry, giving hope to the down-hearted, giving joy to the sorrowful, giving rest to the tired, giving strength to the weak, giving comfort to the lonely. . . . He came giving Himself, that we, through Him, might know the way of God.

Then, "Jesus has the right to dominate each one of us because of what His dominance over us makes possible."

The Christian life is the change which the dominance of Christ makes possible. And, this change to a Christian life is so wonderful that it is sufficient to challenge each one of us to let Christ dominate our lives. Not only is it sufficient to challenge each one of us; but it is the only life which has a right to claim our attention. It is the only one which can present a task worthy of the investment of a young life. The Christian is the only life that is so real, so fascinating, and so romantic that a person is willing to completely bury himself in it.

"The Son of Man came that they might have life, and that they might have life more abundantly." The Christian life is the happiest and the most joyous life possible. The Christian life is positive and not negative. In most of the religions of the world, there is found no positive force. Some religions have as their golden rule, "Do not unto others that which you would not have them do unto you." Here there is no positive force. There is no challenge given for a more abundant life or for growth. It is dead and lifeless. But, Christ put new force into this old saying. He said, "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you." The dead negative is here replaced by the living positive.

The Christian life makes it possible for us to live the abundant life which our Creator intended for us to live. He gave each one of us a special task to perform, and He equipped us with talents with which we are able by His guidance to use in the accomplishment of our task. The Christian life does not only make possible the living of one's life as it should be lived; but it is the only life which presents such an opportunity.

The Christian life gives new power to each one of us. A Christian has more strength and more ability, some way, somehow, than other men. It has been said that the world is yet to see what can be done with a young life fully consecrated to God. The poor and ignorant boy Dwight Moody, heard this statement, and we all know what Moody's life amounted to. We have today the example of that ex-coal miner, Raymond Robbins. After I had first heard Mr. Robbins speak, I asked how it was possible for a man to change like Mr. Robbins must have changed. Dr. Sherwood Eddy answered, "It is just the power of Christ over a man's life." Christ gives new power to His followers, for the Christian life awakens in each individual untouched talents and power.

Therefore, Jesus Christ has the right to dominate us because His dominance makes possible the most abundant life—the Christian life.

"Jesus Christ has the right to dominate our lives because He has the program and the word for our particular generation and for this moment in the life of the world." The program of Jesus is that of service, and His work is that of love. "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many."

"Before we can enter upon this life of unselfishness, we must first let love guide our entire thought and action. If love guided our thought and action today, we would not have the world problems which we have. "These problems exist simply because millions of men and women, just ordinary men and women like ourselves, prefer the way of selfishness to the way of God."

Why have we the problem of war and peace today? Simply because we "prefer the way of selfishness to the way of God." If two nations decided that their policy toward each other would be one of trust, one of love, and one of service, war would not be possible.

There would be no industrial problem today if we took the word and the program of Jesus Christ. We have the industrial problem because we are selfish. He who owns the factory, or rather hires labor often, considers his employees as so many tools, or lifeless and soulless things to be used for a day and then cast aside. He does not realize that his employees are just as much the children of God as he and his are. He does not say: "Yes, I built the factory, but it is not mine. I am only holding it in trust and managing it for those who labor in it daily."

There would be no race problem today if we only took Jesus at His word, and dared to live as He taught. Christ taught the universal brotherhood of mankind and the universal Fatherhood of God. He took the hated and despised Samaritan and showed the self-righteous Jew what a neighbor was like. No, a race problem can't exist in a Christian nation or world. Christ believed in fair play and equal opportunity for all. Should not a Christian do the same?

Jesus has a right to dominate our lives because His program of service and His word of love will solve the problems of war and peace, of industry, and of race, and every other problem with which the world is confronted today.

The control of our lives by Jesus Christ means the existence of a bond of love and friendship between Christ and each of us. It is not that of an angry one whose anger has to be appeased; it is not that of a stern, hard, and cruel ruler. The dominance of Christ Jesus over each one of us means the forming of the closest of friendships with the best of friends. It means knowing Him who can and will help you through all trouble, who is always strong and kind, who has an "undisguised sympathy" for each of us, and whose love is everlasting.

All of the above is true, but that is not all of the story. Jesus Christ has the right to dominate our lives because all of us, especially the youth, are searching for and are hungry for Him. The trouble is that we have not stopped long enough to "think clean, clear, and courageously" about the proper relation of Christ Jesus to our lives. The world is still crying out, "We would see Jesus?" We want the truth. We want the joyous life. We want the living positive life. We want to live the life our Creator intended for us to live. We want the power of Christ in our lives. We want the most abundant life. We want the problems of the world to be solved, and we know that only the spirit of love put into service can ever solve the problems, and, we want the love and the friendship of Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ has the right, the only right, to control our lives, because He alone can satisfy the yearning of our souls.—James T. Walker, in Epworth Era.

A CHALLENGE TO LIBERALITY.

Evidently THE CHRISTIAN SUN has a reader in Texas who loves his Church and his Lord. He writes, of his own volition and without solicitation, so far as we know, under recent date: "You pick out ten Sunday Schools or Churches not now making a monthly offering (to missions), and for every dollar they give for a period of three months I will match it with another dollar, and their Church or school will get full credit for all they and I give. You make up your list of Churches or Sunday Schools and get their promise of co-operation. Then at the end of each month mail me a list of what each gave, and I will mail you a check for the total amount of all."

Now, what do some of our Churches and Sunday Schools not contributing anything to missions think of that? Then this brother proceeds: "I also make an offer of a dollar for each dollar you can get my own Church to give. This last offer to hold good until further notice."

This brother still holds his membership in a rural Church (whose name he gives THE SUN editor) in North Carolina, from which he went out some years ago to win his place and do his work in the world. He is yet a young man, by no means a rich man, but tithes his earnings and wants his Church to share with him the joy and gladness of helping make the world Christian. He strictly enjoins us not to use his name or let his name be known in the matter, as he wishes no praise or honor for anything he may do or amount he may give, since it is all in the name and for the sake of his Lord.

Where are the ten Churches or Sunday Schools that will accept this wonderful challenge to good works in the name of their Lord? J. O. A.

NOTICE.

The Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention is called to meet in regular annual session in the Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., at 9:30 A. M., Wednesday, September 11, 1929. The members of the board are Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West (chairman), Dr. W. W. Staley, Mr. J. M. Darden, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Williams, Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, Mr. K. B. Johnson, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Dr. G. O. Lankford. Mr. R. W. Malone, Burlington, N. C., is treasurer of the board, and J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., executive secretary.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

RESPONSIBILITY TO ALMIGHTY GOD.

We may deceive men; we cannot deceive God. His all-seeing eye searches the depth of the human heart and understands all that is in man. In much of our conduct and conversation, we are as if our accounting was altogether with man, and that our sole responsibility was to man. The Boston Transcript tells the story, often repeated, of how a man once asked Daniel Webster, the great orator and statesman, what had been his greatest thought. At once the reply was, "A consciousness of my responsibility to Almighty God." It is before God that we are to stand or fall in the final make-up of things. This was the feeling of Peter and the other apostles when they stood before the indignant high priests and Sadducees and said: "We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts 5:29). It was this same conviction that made Paul a prophet and a man unafraid before the forces and factors of all human councils, principalities and powers. Moreover, this is the plain revelation in the Word of God.

There is nothing that restrains man in his waywardness, and nothing that inspires him to his best like the conviction that he is responsible to Almighty God. History is replete with evidences of this patent truth. The closest contest for the presidency of the United States in all its history, we are told, was that between Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr. The matter was thrown into Congress, as the electoral college, because of its even division, was unable to settle elect. And after thirty-five ballots in Congress, Jefferson won out over Burr by one majority. Thus, by the narrowest margin ever given a candidate for the presidency, Thomas Jefferson became the chief executive of our nation, and from that day forth, with the weight of responsibility of a great government upon him, and with the added conviction that he was responsible to Almighty God, Jefferson began to be a different and a greater man. On the other hand, with the weight of responsibility gone, and with the feeling that he was answerable to himself alone for his own conduct, Aaron Burr begins a career of irresponsibility that ultimately brings him to an end of shame and disgrace, and to one of the darkest of human tragedies. An individual is headed for danger and the rocks when he throws off the weight of responsibility and begins to realize his own self-sufficiency, and that he is answerable only to himself and to his fellowman for his conduct. This is also the tragedy of the rich fool of the Bible, who, having torn down his barns and built larger ones, said to his soul that the weight of responsibility had been thrown off, and now his soul could feast and take its ease without having to give answer to any sense of responsibility to Almighty God.

This is the one great boon and blessing of the Christian religion. It makes every individual who professes it feel his responsibility to Almighty God. This applies to the least as well as the largest, and has done more to stabilize human society and give weight and worth to human character than any other factor ever given to man. Jesus, while here on earth, went out of His way to find the outcast, the diseased, the afflicted, the ostracized of society, and to make each feel that while He did not count Himself much in the sight of the world, He was responsible to Almighty God and must answer some day at a bar of justice and of judgment for the deeds done in the body. Jesus makes men aware of their responsibility to Almighty God.

ORPHANAGE HOME-COMING DAY.

Our Christian Orphanage celebrated its first home-coming day Saturday, August 31st. It was a great occasion and a gala day, seemingly, for all concerned. Superintendent C. D. Johnston invited back to the institution all those who had lived there as their home, but who had now gone out to make their homes elsewhere. A goodly number returned, and they certainly had a great day. One who returned said publicly that she had traveled most of the night before in order to attend the event and had slept very little from the delightful anticipations of the day. One young man went further and said he had traveled all night to be present, and that he was having the time of his life in meeting friends and associates of other days and getting acquainted with those in the institution now. A brief but very appropriate program was rendered, beginning at 11:30 A. M. with a song by the audience, followed by prayer. Superintendent Johnston delivered a most fitting welcome address to all present, and a hearty response was given by Clarence McKinney. Then a most delightful program of song and recitation and pantomime was rendered by the Orphanage class. A brief address was given by J. O. Atkinson, and then to the delight and thrill of all present, Bro. Sam Leonard Davis, of Norfolk, rendered in his own incomparable manner, "Home, Sweet Home." Bro. J. M. Darden, chairman of the board of trustees, made the address of the day and told what the Orphanage was trying to accomplish through its institutional effort and, incidentally, also through this home-coming day. Chairman Darden declared there would be no orphanages but for Him who before leaving the earth said, "I go to prepare a home for you." Because Jesus loved little children and stressed the home life, orphanages had sprung up in the world to the glory of His great name. It was an address worthy of the occasion and exceedingly appropriate for the day.

Those who trained the children for their recitation and song deserve credit, as the exercises were of a high order and perfectly carried out. Sam Davis delighted the children with his musical renditions, and the remarks by former children of the institution were exceedingly interesting. After the benediction, a sumptuous feast was held under the great oak tree of the Orphanage lawn, the principal and sufficient item on the menu being a genuine, thoroughly cooked, perfectly seasoned Brunswick stew. We are sorry for all SUN readers who were not present to enjoy the first home-coming day of the Orphanage and indulge their palate in the delights of Brunswick stew, followed by ice-cream and watermelons.

We have an idea that home-coming day at the Christian Orphanage will grow into a great event, as it is to be made an annual celebration, and that in the years to come hundreds, if not thousands, will gather to enjoy the fellowship of the fine young men and young women who have gone out from the institution and the splendid boys and girls who are in rearing and in Christian training there. We congratulate the board of trustees and the superintendent on the successful outcome of their first home-coming day.

IS THE WORLD GROWING WORSE?

There are so many lines in the examination of this question that it seems difficult to answer yes or no. If we examine roads, houses, means of transportation, the way people live in their homes, as to food and dress, school and Church buildings, books, magazines, and papers, the answer would be that the world is not growing worse than it used to be. If the financial condition is considered, the world is improving all the time. If geographic, race, national, contacts are thought of, the world is closer together than ever before. If one thinks of trade in the world of commerce, he finds that the products of the world become the possession of smallest localities. The fruits of the islands, of Florida, California, and other parts of the world are distributed over the globe. The thought of the world becomes the thought of the individual. The speech and song of the artists of the world are heard over the radio in the humblest homes. "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; and hid that shall not be known" (Matt. 10:26). This is an age of revelation. The secrets of nature, and the secrets of man are being disclosed more and more as man advances in the knowledge of nature and mankind. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him; and He will show them His covenant" (Psa. 25:14). God is better known than ever before in the history of the world. More Bibles are printed, and in more languages, than any other book ever written; and more people read the Bible than any other book.

The question turns upon the moral, religious, and spiritual condition of society in its business, political, social and Church relations. Banks represent the business world, and they have improved the character of business. The bank is the financial Church, teaching promptness in meeting financial obligations, and cultivates the habit in other business relations. Whatever may be said about political conditions, they improve with the increase of education. Citizens are not dominated by designing leaders as they were in days of the saloon, where plans were laid and candidates were selected. The friendly relations of denominations indicate improved spiritual conditions. The tendency is toward Christian unity in a larger and more brotherly spirit than known before since the Reformation. The Church places less emphasis upon creed and more emphasis upon Christ.

The social world is coming more and more to a level in dress, behavior, and thought of others. The distinctions that once separated men and women in society are passing as rapidly as the bad roads. The moral conditions improve with all other religious and domestic conditions, and the difference as seen is the more public all human relations become in the progress of society. The world is not growing worse, unless the Bible and Christianity are failures. W. W. S.

PENTECOST.

Under the auspices of the Federal Council of Churches, functioning especially through the Commission on Evangelism, the day and event of the first great Pentecost, now nearly nineteen hundred years ago, are to be celebrated during the year 1930. The council, through its Commission on Evangelism, calls all the Christian Churches of America to a campaign of evangelism and soul-saving during the whole of the year 1930.

As this great event is to be celebrated, its spiritual worth and value should, above all things, be emphasized. It will be a sad spectacle, indeed, if the Churches shall make of this a mere memorial of a dead past. And even worse than this will the event be observed if it is to be merely an intellectual array of platitudes and exhortations or sentimental outbursts on this divine theme. What the occasion is designed to be in the minds of those who are calling us to the event is the return of a pentecostal visitation as of old, so that all Churches of whatever name shall be, with one accord, in heavenly places and with a new-born love for God and souls, we will proclaim to the world the saving power of an ascended but of an ever-present Lord. If 1930 is to be a year in which the Churches shall be visited with pentecostal showers, it will only be by the grace of God and the sending of His power after His people shall have tarried much and long in earnest and devout supplication to Him, from whom come all blessings, and who alone holds in His hand the power to revive the Church and to save immortal souls from sin and death. *MAN'S SOCIAL DESTINY.

Prof. Ellwood, in his book, which has the title of this editorial, surpasses his well-established reputation as a writer and thinker in the field of the social sciences. Its six chapters constitute "The Cole Lectures, 1929," given before the Vanderbilt University.

This volume is an explicit treatment of the implicit attitude embodied in Prof. Ellwood's "The Reconstruction of Religion" (1922), a book that produced a profound impression and has been translated into more than one foreign language. "The Reconstruction of Religion" was an epoch-making book, because it insisted that our civilization is pagan at heart and not Christian. This present volume also insists that we are pagans, though it strikes the note of optimism by pointing out the resources we possess to make our civilization Christian. It is heartening to read such a pronouncement from such a source. This book, too, will become an epoch-making book. Social scientists will be more considerate of religion from now on.

Prof. Ellwood's view that science is tested knowledge, and that each science should also enter the realm of values, will, however, hardly commend itself to all scholars. It would appear that science (including the social sciences) should devote its energies to the discovery of facts, philosophy to the consideration of reality, and religion to the realm of ultimate values. On this basis, religion may be treated scientifically and philosophically in tax-supported institutions, but not "religiously" as involving the choice, with commitment thereto on the part of the student, of one religious viewpoint or system out of the various systems or sects of systems now prevalent in the world. This is a situation that demands a careful treatment by some outstanding thinker.

The limitations of the lectureship, no doubt, account for the omission from the discussion of three very important items—the future of the home, the future of industry, and the future of leisure. Any thorough-going treatment of man's destiny socially must certainly cover these three major concerns.

The weak spot in the book is the discussion with reference to the future of education. Prof. Ellwood looks upon education as "that phase of the cultural process which concerns itself with the transmission and enhancement of culture." And again he says: "A socialized education means that the studies—history, anthropology, sociology, politics, economics, and ethics—shall be given the central place in the curriculum of our schools, flanked on the one side by language, on the other by the natural sciences." Manifestly he has not heard of the insistence that the learner's experience should constitute the curriculum, or having heard, has not accepted. Certainly education is not the means of transmitting culture. It is rather the process of discovering meanings in experience, personal and racial, and the use of those meanings as purposive controls for conduct. Prof. Ellwood's theory of education needs radical revision.

However, his discussions of government and religion are excellent. Government is not a necessary evil, but a social necessity and a social good—a view which our best thinkers will heartily endorse. No Christian could ring clearer in his understanding of and appreciation for the way of life revealed by Christ than Prof. Ellwood does. This is the heart of his message, and it will do a tremendous service to the Christian cause at this uncertain time.

The book is destined to become a helpful signpost along the highway of Christian progress. It will prove a tonic for every class of reader, confirming the faithful, encouraging the faint, and steadying the vacillating and doubtful. W. A. H.

THE CHURCH AT WORK.

Piqua is only thirty miles north of Dayton. Why not plan to visit the headquarters after the Convention?

Whatever else you do, be sure to be on hand when the Convention opens, and stay until it closes. Be on time at each session. It is just as easy to be on time as a little behind hand.

Each speaker and each committee should provide several typewritten copies of addresses and reports, so that secretaries and reporters may have them promptly if desired. Typewriters save errors.

The men's banquet on Friday night will likely be a great event. A special committee is promoting the attendance, and that committee will reach our men far and near. If they have the information, our laymen will be there by the hundreds. Put a ring in your diary around Friday night, October 25th. The women will have a great meeting in another Church at the same time, with Dr. Mary Cushman, of Africa, as speaker.

Evening Convention Speakers.

Tuesday, Rev. F. G. Coffin, D. D., President of General Convention; Wednesday, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, president Federal Council; Thursday, Rev. Leon E. Smith, D. D., pastor of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va.; Friday, Mr.

Fred B. Smith, moderator National Council Congregational Churches; Dr. W. A. Harper, president Elon College, and Dr. Mary F. Cushman, missionary to Africa; Sunday, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.; Monday, Dr. Peter Ainslie, Baltimore, Md.

Those Stewardship Books.

What have you read in 1929? Miss Mary Rountree, Lincoln, Kans., stewardship secretary of the Northern Kansas and Nebraska Conference, says: "I have read 'Jesus' Teaching on the Use of Money,' which I think is surely worthwhile reading, and I wish especially that many parents would read it."

We have a few 1929 "Christian Annuals" on hand which you may have for sixty cents, plus postage.

We are anxious to have the name and address of all attorneys belonging to the Christian Church.

Valuable Literature.

The various denominational secretaries take great care to select literature and forward it to the various conferences at their annual sitting. This literature is valuable, and worthy of reaching the workers in the Conference. None of it should be overlooked, wasted or remain unused. Conference workers will do well to get it into the hands of the delegates and visitors, and some of it should be carried home to the Churches. Not only should we not waste this valuable matter, but we must become an informed people and we need to cultivate an appetite for the reading of religious literature. The literature end of the Conference session is important.

Calling a Minister or Hiring a Preacher?

There is a vast difference between "calling a minister" and "hiring a preacher." Which does your Church do? Is the matter one of much prayer on the part of the Church? Do you consider one only at a time? Do you know his previous record? It is a serious matter for a Church to call a minister—one who will give his full time to the work, not just his Sundays. If a minister is called by a Church to serve one-half time, it means one-half time, not one-half of his Sundays. This calling of a minister is one thing and hiring a preacher is entirely another thing. We have known ministers and Churches who sought bargains and prices as they would a sale at a store. Is there anything that needs more prayer and faithful consideration than this very matter?

Every-Member Canvass.

If you are going to use the every-member canvass at all, do it well. Plan, prepare for it and work it. Please do not botch it and call it the every-member canvass, and thus bring reflection upon one of the greatest spiritual financial and enlistment agencies the Church has ever used. Please do not dishonor such a great Christian agency by abusing it. It surely is a God-given means of blessing to Church and members alike.

CONFERENCES MEET.

Georgia and Alabama meets with the Church at Lanett, Ala., Tuesday, October 8, 1929.

Alabama meets with the Church at Wadley, Ala., Tuesday, October 15, 1929.

Eastern Virginia meets Wednesday, October 30, 1929.

Western North Carolina meets Tuesday, November 5, 1929, at Smithwood, Randolph County, N. C.

North Carolina and Virginia meets with Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., Tuesday, November 12, 1929.

Eastern North Carolina meets Tuesday, November 19, 1929.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Revival meetings in this section of Virginia are in progress at Liberty Spring Christian Church, Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro, N. C., assisting Pastor Dr. I. W. Johnson; Rev. J. E. McCauley, of Norfolk, assisting Rev. G. A. Pearce, at Bethlehem; Dr. James Assisting Pastor Cobb, at Windsor, Va., Baptist Church; and Carey Barker, in a tent union meeting in Franklin, Va. These meetings are all well attended and in fine spiritual condition. The best time a Church ever has is during a revival, and "revival" sounds better than "protracted meeting." Revival includes the conversion of sinners and the improvement in the spiritual condition of Church members; and, sometimes and in some Churches, the latter is more important than the former. Pastors are sometimes discouraged in a revival because there are so few unconverted people in the congregation, and even in the community. That need not discourage the pastor, but should be a new urgent to the higher cultivation of real spirituality and activity in the service of the Master.

The pastor's task in this day is more difficult than the pastor's task in the evangelistic period. Fifty years ago there were many in every community who had never been to Sunday School, public school, or regular attendants at Church. It was emotional in type and appeal. Preaching unconsciously appealed to the unconverted. The Church members were concerned about the salvation of sinners. A revival meant a stir, an excitement, a shout when souls came to the altar and were born again. Those were great times in the Churches. In the average Christian community, that day has passed. Many children become Christian through the Sunday School, enter the Church quietly without the annual or semi-annual protracted meeting. The task now for the preacher is harder than the task then.

Farmers know that when land is first cleared and the soil is fresh, crops flourish; but when the land runs down it requires greater effort and fertilizer to make crops good; and yet the good farmer works harder, improves his land, and makes better harvests. That happy shouting time of the old-time meeting passes, members lose the conscious sense of that experience, become indifferent, drop out of spiritual enjoyment and need stimulation. Boll weevil, bean beetles, and other enemies enter the growing crops, and greater effort becomes necessary to make progress and profit. It is even so in religion. Evils multiply in the progress of Christianity, and that makes successful preaching more difficult. It is harder to make a living now than fifty years ago, because living demands are greater; it is more difficult to live a Christian life now, as it must be of a higher type to overcome more subtle temptations. To meet such conditions, the preacher must be cleaner and more spiritual in his personal life, more edifying in his sermons, and more consecrated in his ministry. This increases the importance of pastoral visitations.

WHAT IS COLLEGE FOR?

BY PRESIDENT W. A. HARPER.

(Address before the freshman class of Elon College September 4, 1929.)

College is an experience worth while in itself. The time has been when the emphasis on the college experience has been in respect to its preparation for a future life. College speakers, visitors, alumni, professors, never lost an opportunity in a former generation to remind college students that they were enjoying a rare opportunity to equip themselves for service in the coming years. A generation ago, however, a new spirit appeared on the college campus and a new note was sounded, to the effect that college life is actual life and need not be haloed in terms of larger service, of responsibility or of leadership in some time and place removed from the college campus.

I well remember the first time this new thought sounded in my ears. A Y. M. C. A. secretary, in visiting the colleges in North Carolina, had just received his doctor's degree in education and philosophy under the inspiring instruction of John Dewey. He was eloquent in his assurances to us in our undergraduate days that college life is life, and that we should seize each sparkling moment as an opportunity for expression and enjoy it to the full. I quite well remember the discussion that a group of us engaged in following his animated presentation of the new philosophy of education when we gathered in our room that night. We felt that the young Y. M. C. A. secretary, in the enthusiasm of youth, was entirely too epicurean and utilitarian, not to say opportunistic in his viewpoint. We were in the habit of regarding our college days as a preparation for life, and his insistence that we should regard these days as actual life worth while in themselves and for themselves, challenged the fundamental conception in accordance with which we were ordering our lives. We discussed this matter away into the night and in accordance with the wisdom of our inexperience and purpose decided that this young fellow would soon change his mind or else be dropped from the student secretaryship of the Y. M. C. A. It did not occur to us that we had too great a slant toward the future and too meager appreciation of our then present situation.

In the years that have come and gone since that initial presentation of the worthwhileness of the present and actual college experience sounded in our ears, the entire philosophy of education has been reconstructed. Today we exalt the experience of the learner to the central place in educational procedure. In terms of his experience, we weigh and evaluate the past experience of the race as it is represented in the several bodies of knowledge which have come down to us in the form of the arts, the literatures, and the sciences of the world. Education is not something as we conceive it today to be put over on college students, but self-activity on their part in the environment in which they find themselves, a pursuit for meanings in personal and racial experience and the organization of those meanings into programs of living and a philosophy of life.

Colleges today from the outward appearance present very much the same aspect as colleges a generation ago, but a new viewpoint, a new spirit, a completely changed attitude and approach toward life have come into these institutions and made them over again. They have ceased to be laboratories of abstraction and have become genuine laboratories of life.

This makes it entirely worth while, therefore, for us at this time to raise the question, "What are we in college for?" Last year I submitted this question to a group of seniors in the institution to which you have just hopefully come. Perhaps it would be well to review the conclusions to which they came. These reasons were written out on the spur of the moment and were not signed. Summarized briefly, they read as follows:

- Because others were going to college.
- To get and to carry good.
- To serve myself and my fellow-man.
- Because my people wish it.
- To broaden knowledge and help in my life's work.
- To prepare myself for future living.
- To broaden my view of education, secure new associates, and prepare for my vocation.
- To better understand our world.
- To make myself the best possible teacher.
- Because you must have an education to count in life.
- Because I love reading and study.
- To fit myself to stand equally with others in the financial and social world.
- To be able to live a better life in my profession.
- To render service to mankind.
- To get an A. B. degree.
- To learn how to see life and see it whole.
- To contribute more to the world.
- Because of an inner urge.
- To secure a broader outlook on life and be better able to cope with its problems.

After four sessions of research and discussion, this group of seniors decided that the actual experience of being in college is worth while in itself, and at the same time that it is a preparation for a large contribution on the part of the educated man in his effort to solve the world's problems as they are related to citizenship, politics, social democracy, education, industry, religion, and the home. They were of the opinion that a man never completes his education, but that he may be said to be well on his way toward education if his college experience has done certain things for him. Among these certain things, they listed the following:

1. Ability to use the tools of human intercourse.
2. The habit of study and thought without guidance.
3. An acquaintance with the achievements of the race.
4. A grasp of the processes upon which life and service depends.
5. An acquaintance with methods of satisfying the intellectual and aesthetic interests of life.
6. Ability to use occupational interests to advance general culture.
7. An appreciation of the good, the beautiful, and the true.
8. The ability to discover the meanings inherent in personal and racial experiences and to use the same in the service of fellow-man.
9. A Christian philosophy of life.

FELLOWSHIP WITH LOVED ONES.

Having recently returned from one of the most delightful trips of many years, I feel called upon to speak out in meeting and commend, or thank, at least a few who were responsible for a large part of my joy. Arriving in Greensboro, N. C., July 15th, Dr. Chas. H. Rowland, one of the living lights of the Christian Church, and who carries the close favor of his saintly mother in his face to brighten the pathway of all who know and mingle with him in daily life, met and took me to his splendid home for dinner. After a few pleasant hours with his lovely family, he was kind enough to take me over to Elon College, where I spent a very pleasant evening with my two brothers and families. On the morning of the 16th, the good superintendent of the Orphanage, Charles D. Johnston, offered Bro. J. O. and me a ride with him to the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention near Lillington, N. C. We arrived soon after organization of the morning session and found a goodly number present, but not as many as there would have been but for the very busy time with the farmer on account of crop conditions.

The two delightful days spent at the convention were profitable to us on account of the spiritual atmosphere noticeable in the speakers and in the song service led by our long-time and much-loved friend, George McCullers.

On the morning of the 17th, hearing that our former schoolmate, who, from what we learned, has proved himself a prince in Christian education, Rev. J. Archie Campbell, lived near, we called to see him and the college now bearing his name. The splendid crops and nice homes and general improvements in that section show what has been done since the public spirit and welfare of the community has been properly directed.

Leaving the convention Wednesday afternoon, by the kindness of one of the fortunate Manns who got into our family by marriage, took us by Fuquay Springs and to visit his relatives, thence on to our dear aunt's (Mrs. A. D. Sorrells), where we spent the evening and night so pleasantly; next day on to visit so many dear relatives. My good friend John Murray insisted upon our spending the night with him, which we were so glad we took advantage of. We ask ourselves the question, "What would Catawba Springs Church have been without the Murrays and other like spirits?" God bless and multiply their efficiency for service in the Master's name.

Bro. Murray was kind enough to take us to see our old childhood home, and on to our good cousin's. Rev. Jesse Franks, where we enjoyed the fellowship of his splendid family and saw some of the best crops it has been our pleasure to see in North or South Carolina. But the thing that touched our heart and made us glad was that Cousin Jesse has long since committed all to Him who doeth all things well, whom he loves to serve with his very best, and is putting his time and talent into the channel where it counts most.

After visiting others, we returned to our brothers at Elon College on August 1st, to find the summer school of religion in session, which we enjoyed very much indeed, and from our observation it was one of the most helpful meetings it has been our pleasure to attend in years. Sorry more of the pastors and Sunday School superintendents and teachers could not or did not avail themselves of this study course. The missionary pageant put on the last evening by Mrs. C. H. Rowland was a grand climax. The illustration of the Christ and the Church from which we can get our light not only to light up our pathway, but light up the pathway of those who are in darkness about us who are lost was impressing indeed. Then when that circle was formed upon the campus, with their lights shining representing Him (the Light of the world) who gave His all that we might have power to represent Him, O such a joy filled our hearts, as all had a silent prayer of thanksgiving and then joined in song, "Where He Leads Me, I will Follow." The Holy Spirit was recognized with His presence to guide into "all truth" (John 16:13, 14). We pray that that scene may live with and make us more efficient for service each day.

Returning to Greensboro Saturday, August 3rd, by the kindness of our good brother, J. O. A., we spent the week-end with Dr. Rowland and family and had the joy of worshiping with him and his great Church people on Sunday. Then, think of a hard-worked preacher arising early enough on Monday morning to make a cup of coffee and scramble an egg for the unworthy traveling man in time to catch a 6:20 train for his home in Spartanburg, S. C.

We pray God's richest blessings upon every one who had a part in making our visit among good Christians in North Carolina a real joy.

FROM LONDON.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

I.

Since our trip to London and England has been completed and we are on our way home, nothing gives me more pleasure than to tell you about it.

There is nothing to say, of course, about London that has not been said by a great many others, but perhaps your interest in our cruise and the pleasure and privileges it affords us warrants my story.

Chalmondeley Pennell is quoted as saying:

"London! That deck'st thyself with wave-won wealth, sea-spoils, fanes, palaces,

And temples high:

Well said the turbaned traveler of the East,
'Behold . . . and die!'"

As this is also said about Rome, it is not certain how many beautiful cities enjoy the same distinction, but it can be truly said that London glitters in the sunlight like a spring-blown flower, and steadfastly preserves her majesty and charm when canopied with cloud and fog. Her age-long increasing glow of eternal endurance flashes the brilliancy of the centuries. Her parks are rich in fair foliage and the exquisite bloom of her flowers are aglow with every color of the rainbow. Her streets and thoroughfares sparkle colorful cameos, and where the dusty travelers stream by, the flower women stand, their trays heaped high with carnations and roses, and their cries lost in the thunder of the surging traffic. Here and there peddlers stand offering bright-painted tags for sale, nodding policemen, tumbling monkeys in scarlet coats, gay balloons in the likeness of strange fish or fowl. Down the narrow and less attractive streets tanned men and women scurry hither and thither, bearing flowers to sell in the more prim sections, or bent on a thousand other missions.

During the past week, the Royal Gardens were en fete with garden parties, and Her Royal Highness Princess Mary received helpers of the League of Mercy where George I once strolled in his "dark wig, plain, snuff-colored coat and blue riband." We are told that once roses were plucked in the Temple Gardens, and the Bishop of Ely leased his palace to Sir Christopher Hatton for the rental of a single red rose and for the right to gather twenty bushels of bloom a year. Though few roses flourish in the heart of the city today, the care given to their culture in the parks and outlying open sections, fostered by the National Rose Society, shows that Londoners still appreciate beauty though it be cultivated out of town.

The dignified sports of bowling, tennis, golf, cricket, polo, horse and gray hound racing, have brought to the city many experts in the arts from all over the country, and the parks and tea gardens are alive with thousands of spectators who love these sports of the centuries. One is reminded of the days which Pepy describes "Where lords and ladies stayed, talking and singing, and drinking of claret, and eating botarg and bread and butter till 12 at night, it being moonshine."

Some of the outstanding events of the week were the Mansion House dinner, where the Lord Mayor entertained the bankers and merchants of London. We are told that it was not in fine clothes as it used to be when "their feast, and guests were temptingly drest," but it is an evidence that King Carnival still holds sway upon the Thames. The Thames itself was alive with champion regattas of various speed crafts, and sunburn and blister were the order of the day. That the battleship Arkansas's baseball team played the Anglo-American Association on Sunday on London's diamond bespeaks a national good will, to say nothing about their sense of sport and fun.

Those of us who had the privilege of spending Sunday there, found all that one could wish, whether in attendance at Church or visiting the parks where the populace was on parade, or touring to the outlying points of interest.

Those who attended Church found old Westminster Abbey, built in the sixth century A. D., breathing with the very spirit of the presence of God, and it was packed to its mammoth portals with worshipers who had come from near and far to worship there. The message of Dr. Storr on "What Is Religion?" in its simplicity, was a masterful appeal for the Christ's standard for which this age-long edifice itself stands as an impressive symbol. At Spurgeon's old Church, the voice long silent still speaks. Here we heard a great sermon on the attitude of Jesus towards a high standard of living every day, and that it was His implicit trust in a God who does everything well that led Him to victory, and that it is that same attitude which is the hope of humanity.

The tours afforded us took us in parties of twelve to twenty-four, in deluxe coaches, with guide to explain things, to all sorts of places. We went to the Natural History Museum, Kew Gardens, Mansion of King George IV, where there is a monument on the spot where Lord Bradbury erected a telescope and discovered the aberrations of light and mutations of the earth's axis; through the east end, Jewish and Chinatowns, and the noted "lime house." It took us on a visit to Milton's and John Wesley's Churches and the manse where John Wesley lived and died; to the old cemetery where the bodies of John Bunyan, Daniel Defoe and other celebrities lie, and to the British Museum, where in sculpture, art, literature, metal and crockery, all peoples, from the stone age up, are represented.

It was an interesting drive we had to Hampton Court, the palace and gardens of the kings of England from the time of Cardinal Woolsey, who built the palace for King George III in the seventeenth century. It is most interesting to visit such ancient soil and enter the palace rooms where centuries ago these noted statesmen spent their lives and wrought their country's cause as they saw fit. Here all the paintings, tapestries, statuary, and a part of the furniture then used is still retained as a national museum. Even the garden designs are maintained as they were originally under the direction of Henry VIII. Here is also a grape vine, the body of which is more than six feet in circumference. This vine, more than two centuries old, still bears luscious grapes, although it is permitted to bear only five hundred bunches a year.

There are but two days remaining, but these are easily most delightful. We went to see the beautiful grounds of the King's abode—Buckingham Palace. We were there at the time of the change of the guard. No visitor comes to London and overlooks this event. All in full dress, with band at the head of the parade, the King's guard of the day was relieved by another one. It was a spectacular affair. A thousand or more people, mostly American tourists, were packed out front to witness this ceremony, the most gorgeous known in the world. We were told that never a day passes without such a gathering to witness the ceremony.

Other interesting rambles took us to old St. Paul's, London's famous tower, the World War Museum, and Westminster Abbey. Old St. Paul's dates back to 404 A. D. It has been burned three times and the present structure was erected in the fifteenth century. In the crypt lie the bodies of many notables, among them the famous Duke of Wellington, who died in 1852. In this crypt is the funeral car used to bear his body from West England to this place.

MISSIONS
 REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

TO OUR MISSIONARIES.

BY BERTHA D. MARTIN.

Soldiers of Christ, on your far-flung lines
 Of the world-wide battlefield,
 Where the days are long, and the ways are lone,
 And heavy the sword you wield;
 From over the sea that rolls between
 You and your homeland dear,
 We who are tarrying by the stuff,
 Send greetings of love and cheer.

Soldiers of Christ, with your faces pale
 And lined with the battle's strain,
 Think not, if the onward march be slow,
 That your labor is all in vain.
 We strive, and may we more willing be,
 To answer your earnest calls;
 In silent tribute our hearts are bowed
 With yours when a comrade falls.

Soldiers of Christ, from afar we see
 The glorious victories won;
 Your Captain is leading the way before,
 And soon shall the war be done.
 All honor and love to you we send,
 Who are bringing the promise near,
 For soon as "the uttermost parts" are reached,
 Triumphant our King will appear.

NEW MONEY FOR MISSIONS.

Our beloved Mission Secretary has asked us to give the first bill of the new currency which we receive to the cause of missions. Many have responded, and the figures have grown from week to week as we have read them over in THE SUN. Yet many have failed to respond, perhaps saying, "Charity begins at home—our own Church needs the money to meet expenses." The wisest man in Proverbs 11:24-26 says, "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that withholdeth shall be watered also himself. He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him; but blessing shall be upon the head of him that selleth it." And Jesus the Christ said, "Give, and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again." Which applies to Churches as well as to individuals.

Recently, in reading, the following paragraph met my eye and made a deep impression on my brain: "The word mission carries with it the idea of labor and service. One on a mission is not carried; he runs. He runs not even on a mission of his own; he labors for others, he runs on an errand." And so as we give of our new money to missions, we send it on a mission, on an errand, that it may help the missionaries in their great work of converting the heathen from the gross darkness of false teaching to the wonderful light of the gospel of Jesus Christ. And though we may feel that what we give or are able to do is so seeming small, yet if we do it "for Jesus' sake" He will own and bless the giver and the gift.

It is what He would have us do, and so our new money goes on an errand for us, carrying the gospel message to places where we could never go and doing a work that we could never do in person. Shall we withhold it from Him and His service?

"Signs of His coming multiply," and it will not be long until we will all be gathered from the East and from the West, from the North and South to meet around the throne of "Him who loved us and gave Himself for us," and be asked to give an account of our stewardship of life and service—yes, and new money also! God grant that we may all be true to the trust that He has given us, and as we look at those who have labored in the mission fields so faithfully, may we be able to say, "We have done what we could." Read the beautiful words written by Annie Johnson Flint:

"Oh, make Him the Master of all that you have,
 The Lord of your heart and soul;
 Yield Him all of yourself for His dwelling-place,
 And let Him take the whole.
 He will do for you, He will work with you,
 He will reign in your life alone;
 And you will find the blessing that you have missed,
 And the joy you never have known."

We are profoundly grateful for the liberal and numerous responses coming in the past week. That was a most timely offering coming from Holy Neck Church and Sunday School, $82.00. Of this amount, our good friend and brother, Deacon R. C. Norfleet, donated $20.00. And, then, Elm Avenue and South Norfolk always do their best. Two new dollars last week were credited to Berea (Norfolk) Sunday School that were sent in by Bro. M. W. Hall and Bro. E. W. Hodges. Berea has "gone over the top" and is happy. So are we.

STATEMENT OF DR. DEBLOIS.

The little booklet which has just appeared from the press of the American Baptist Publication Society, as a result of the joint authorship of Dr. Edgar DeWitt Jones, of Detroit, Mich., and President Austen K. deBlois, of the Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary, is a noteworthy production. It is hardly in our place to say anything about Dr. Jones' paper, inasmuch as it should be reviewed by our Baptist brethren who are in the best position to pass upon its merits. The paper of Dr. deBlois, entitled "An Appreciation of the Disciples of Christ," more properly comes within the field of our criticism and review.

Aside from a certain almost oversensitive politeness which is commendable at a time when such vast issues are at stake, the statement seems to us to be remarkably accurate and convincing. Assuredly, if all the Baptists are like Dr. deBlois, we need have no concern as to the successful fruition of the union negotiations. Moreover, we should have no anxiety with regard to the preservation of those ideals for which our brotherhood has stood from the beginning of its history. Dr. deBlois knows what these ideals are, and believes in them. The fact is, he appears to know them better and accept them more fully than some of our own leaders who claim to be full-fledged Disciples. Union with Baptists like Dr. deBlois would add an element of strength to the advocacy of our plea which all of us would welcome.

One fine thing about the article is the fact that the author, quite contrary to the established practice of most Church historians of the last century, gives us at least some credit for the development of the Christian union sentiment in Christendom. Concerning this matter, he says:

"The spirit of Christian union is abroad in the world. Various influences have contributed toward this astounding change (from the separatist to the union attitude). Probably the greatest single factor entering into the account, however, has been the magnificent and continued protest of the Disciples of Christ. It would be both unjust and absurd to deny them credit where assuredly credit is due. By their dauntless delivery of the message of Jesus Christ concerning the beauty and power of Christian unity, and by their ceaseless emphasis upon the principles of New Testament Christianity, they have wrought mightily for God and men."

This is a fine word of appreciation, and we believe that ultimately history will agree with Dr. deBlois. We are grateful to the Baptist committee for sponsoring so excellent a production, and we congratulate President deBlois upon the admirable manner in which he has executed the very difficult task which was assigned him.—Christian-Evangelist (Disciples).

NOW THE TIME—HERE THE PLACE!

Your Church is making an effort to reach its goal for Missions this year, namely: one-third the amount of pastor's salary. If your Church, and all the other Churches, reach this goal, we will reach the total goal of $45,000 for the year ending September 30th, the amount asked of us by the Southern Christian Convention.

Will you, by an individual gift, help your Church to achieve this desired end? Now is the time! Here is the place! By a pull together, every Church can reach the goal. Help now.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XI—September 15, 1929.

TEACHING THE LAW OF GOD.

GOLDEN RULE: "The opening of Thy words giveth light."—Psa. 119:130.

LESSON: Nehemiah 8:1-18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 119:97-104.

Explanations and Comments.

The first day of the seventh month is the day which, from the time of Alexander the Great, has been celebrated by the Jews as their New Year's Day. On this day occurred the festival known as the Feast of Trumpets, which was observed with special rites. In the year 445 B. C., on this day the people of Jerusalem assembled in the broad place before the water gate, and Ezra, the priest and scribe, read to them the Book of the Law of Moses. "In Ezra the title of 'scribe' came to mean 'the man of the book.' It is evident that the scribes were the nearest originals to the clergy of later times" (Dean Stanley).

Ezra stood upon a wooden platform above the people and was aided by thirteen Levites, who gave the sense, so that the people understood the reading. Evidently Ezra read the law sentence by sentence, and briefly expounded it, and then the Levites made the explanation clear to the people. Men, women, and children, old enough to understand, listened attentively to the reading from early morning until midday. On account of the heat, they had their customary rest during the noon hour. To the reading the people responded with Amen, amen (so be it), with a lifting up of the hands, evidently with the palms upward in supplication for the divine blessing, and then they bowed their heads and worshiped Jehovah with their faces to the ground.

"By Ezra's inspiration and under his guidance the law was now for the first time put before the Jews in such a way as to convince them that it was the most important thing in the world that their lives should be conducted wholly in accordance with its precepts" (A. S. Peake).

"The best way to create joy in our own hearts is to set ourselves to create it in others. It is not enough to eat the fat and drink the sweet in our own selfish little corner; we must send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared. In every circle there are many who look across a desolate world, which has no reassuring smile, no greeting voice, no loving or loyal heart. Look out for these. They hide for the most part like wounded game in the thicket. Go forth to be a joy-bringer to such as sit in darkness and the shadow of death" (F. B. Meyer).

"And does not joy make us strong? What nimbleness joy gives to the feet! The sad heart wearies in a smile, the joyful heart is fresh and exuberant at the end of the tenth mile. 'He maketh my feet like hinds' feet.' How exultant and joyful must the psalmist's heart have been! He felt ready for anything. Just as we sometimes say when the heart is glad and sunny, that we feel we could jump over the moon. Yes, joy makes us strong" (J. H. Jowett).

And the Levites stilled the people, saying, "Hold your peace, for the day is holy." It was an ill-omen to use words or signs of lamentation on a feast day. And all the people obeyed. They kept the festival with mirth, rejoicing especially because they had heard and understood the words of the law.

"If, then, the joy of the Lord is a man's strength, it must be a bounden duty to cultivate it, and with God's help, enlarge it. The man is sinful as well as unwise who holds stubbornly by sorrow and depression."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

TOPIC: "Putting God in the Budget."—2 Cor. 9:6-8; 1 Cor. 6:20.

Some Bible Hints.

Natural law often illustrates spiritual law. Give little material good, and you get little spiritual blessing (v. 6).

Giving must be according to a real purpose. The value of the gift depends entirely on the spirit that prompts it (v. 7).

After all, the things we give have already been given to us by God. Our financial limitations may be caused by our niggardliness (v. 8).

God owns us. He created and redeemed us. All our life belongs to Him (v. 20).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Planned giving yields better results than desultory giving. A budget is simply a plan laid out ahead for giving.

Every home should have a budget; so much to be spent for clothes, so much for food, pleasure, etc., so that the family does not live beyond its income. Do we put our gifts to God into our budget?

After laying out a plan or a budget, we must keep it before us, and try to carry it out. It is a guide at hand. Laid aside and forgotten, it is useless. It is not a mere resolution.

A vote in any Church would show that very few members plan to set aside for God a definite sum weekly or monthly, and carry out their plan. Giving is more or less haphazard, according to the nature of the appeals made from the pulpit.

A Few Illustrations.

The envelope system helps to remind us of God's share of our income. There is a difference between a collection and an offering.

Endeavorers who are tithers not only keep a bank at home in which they place their weekly tithe, but also keep a book to account for the tithe—how it is put into the bank, and how it is spent.

Suppose a tenant forgets or neglects to put into his budget of expenses the owner of his farm. He would be evicted. That happened to the rich fool of the parable. Evicted!

Our gifts should be given not to the Church or to missions or to any cause, but to God. He comes first. Then we can take the money we have thus consecrated to Him and use it for all these purposes.

To Think About.

Why give joyfully?

What proportion of the budget should be God's share?

Why give anything at all?

BENEFIT OF ORGANIC CHURCH UNION.

BY REV. JESSE M. KAUFMAN,

Field Sec'y Western Christian Convention.

Almost all religious bodies have Church organizations which are at considerable distance from each other and have little fellowship and contact with Churches of like faith and practice. Some of these Churches are located in sparsely settled sections of the country. Some were organized in the day of sectarian rivalry, thus giving to a community more Churches than were needed to serve the populace and more Churches than the community could adequately support. Others which were needed in the day of their organization, but on account of a shifting population find it difficult to maintain their work.

A weak and struggling Church is not very inviting to folks who want a Church home, and much less does it appeal to those who are little interested in a Christian program. I think that every Church is really interested in serving the Master in the most efficient way. Several things have been proposed and tried in order to make the Church effective and lift it to the place where it will truly be the "light of the world." Church federation, community Church, union denominational Church have all been tried—some to advantage and some to disadvantage. Missionary money has been appropriated oftentimes, which has done little more than just keep alive the struggling organization.

First of all, "organic Church union" would eliminate many scattered congregations. They will come to be close neighbors and friends. There would not be the feeling of distance and separation. The union will give strength to many weak Churches that are only so because folks living in the community will not associate themselves with the organization and give it their support on the ground that it is not of their particular denomination. If the Church were of the same name as the one from which they moved, they would gladly work and boost it. Organic union will give a feeling of a oneness and a consciousness of a common brotherhood and common interest. I have known several Churches which would have been the pride of the community but for the fact that the organization did not carry the particular brand that some leading citizens of the community had received earlier in life. Divisive names will gradually be eliminated, and all the followers of Christ will be interested in the Church of the community in which they live.

Organic union will mean the centralization of a community's religious organizations and Church plants. Instead of scattered efforts and inadequate Church plants, there will be a consolidation of the religious forces and a Church plant adequate to the needs of the community. The two or more weak Churches in a given territory, and separated at considerable distance from another Church of their particular name, will form one strong organization that will be able to serve the religious needs of the whole community. This will give the Church prestige, power and influence.

Then there are those conditions and places in which organic union will not make it possible to centralize as indicated above. Where such is not possible, there will be the forming pastorates with two or more Churches located close enough to each other that no territory between the Churches will be without the influence of the Church and no family but what will be ministered to by one of the Churches and their pastor. This means that no Church will need to be without a pastor and depending on preaching occasionally or just on certain Sundays of the month. The pastor can live in a parsonage owned by the Churches forming the pastorate. The Churches will have the advantage of the service of the pastor. Interchange of programs, both for worship and social activities, by co-operating Churches will add interest, stimulate the mind and inspire the soul.

In union there is strength. It is this great spiritual strength and power that is needed. It cannot come by rooting each other out. It cannot come by a wishful waiting for the other Churches to die. That is not Christ-like. That spirit is not the kind of food the soul builds upon. The organic union will give strength to all the needy weak Churches in the country. What strength each has will be added to that of another Church and the union will result in a growth and efficiency.

LEARNING THROUGH PRAYER.

When Jesus was on earth, His disciples asked Him, "Lord, teach us to pray," and Jesus taught them what we call the Lord's Prayer. Now, there is more wrapped up in these few words than a great many think, if it is lived up to as Jesus really lived it. When He was here, a soul must be truly born of God before it can say "Our Father." "He that is born of God doth not commit sin, for his seed remains in him and he cannot sin." So few seem to think Jesus has power over the soul to keep it free from sin. Yet He tells us that all power is given unto Him in heaven and on earth. If a child and through His power, are we so living as to say, "hallowed be Thy name"? His name should be on every tongue—the only name by which we are saved. We are taught to pray for God's kingdom to come, His will to be done on earth as in heaven. Oh! what a changed world this would be if God's kingdom had come and His will were fully being done on earth now.

Turn to 1 Thess. 4:3 and you will find His will that should be done on earth. We are told that not every one that says unto Him, "Lord, Lord," shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of God. Jesus prayed that God's will be done in earth as in heaven. How do you suppose the angels are living in heaven today? Is there envy, hatred, malice, and such like up there? No; sin can never enter there, and we who are His believing children should pray more earnestly for our daily bread. I really think this means spiritual food, for He says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you."

If we are forgiven only as we forgive, I fear there are many who are standing just outside the door of God's peaceful kingdom. There is so much that can be accomplished through real, earnest, believing prayer. There is a power which man can wield when mortal aid is vain, and that power is prayer. Prayer is the opening of the heart to God. Prayer does not bring God down to us, but carries us up to Him, and if the Saviour of men, the Son of God, felt the need of prayer, how much more should we? Oh, how we need the unceasing, unbroken union of the soul with God, so that life from God may flow into our life, and from our life purity and holiness will flow back to God. God will not suffer us to be tempted above what we are able and will make a way to escape for us from all the snares of the wicked one. He lets us be tempted to prove our faithfulness to Him. Jesus said we should have power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you. And again, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." So it is through Him we can say, "Thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory forever."

RADIO BIBLE STUDY.

Announcement is released by the Moody Bible Institute, of Chicago, that its radio school of the Bible, broadcasting over Station WMBI, 1080 kilocycles (277.6 meters) will begin the fall term lectures September 12th, to be concluded December 20th.

A practical and inspirational course on "The Church at Work" will be given by Rev. Clarence

H. Benson, director of the Christian education course of the institute and author of a number of books on Bible school organization, Church administration, and related themes. Each enrolled student will receive a copy of the textbook of the course.

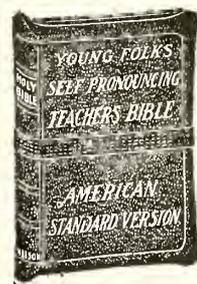

The increasingly popular work of Iris Ikeler McCord will be continued in "Introductory Studies in the Epistles of Paul." Mrs. McCord's classes have steadily increased in numbers from the first term of the radio school of the Bible to the present.

Dr. James M. Gray's renowned synthetic Bible studies will be on the air, Rev. James O. Duffy, director of the correspondence school, being the weekly lecturer. He will present studies covering the gospels and the Book of Acts.

As heretofore, the enrollment fee is one dollar for each subject, and successful completion of the work entitles the student to the certificate of the "Radio School of the Bible." Early enrollment is suggested. Mr. Benson's subject will be presented each Thursday at 3 P. M.; Mrs. McCord's, Friday at 10:30 A. M., and Mr. Duffy's each Friday at 3 P. M.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

POWER WORTH HAVING.

"Give me also this power."—Acts 8:9-20.

No wonder Simon the sorcerer wanted to get for himself the power which Peter and John evidently possessed. He could well afford to pay a large sum for it, since it would enable him to become enormously wealthy; but all the gold in the world could not buy it.

Powers rushing in and offering themselves to us are so vast that we seldom understand that we can have them for the asking. God, who sums them all up, working in and through all of them, will give Himself to any sincere taker, and give Himself unreservedly. There might even be a barrier of unresisted sin; but we need not allow any barrier to His glorious entrance.

Prayer.—O God, Thou infinite Giver, we are petitioners of Thy bounty. We are bold petitioners, for we ask no less than all of it. We are insistent petitioners, and will not be denied. We are confident petitioners, for we ask in the name of Thy Son. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A JUST GOD.

"A just God and a Saviour, there is none besides me."—Read Isa. 45:20-25.

The foundation of all spiritual peace is the justice of God. No matter what terrible injustice reigns on earth, we know that God is against it and that it cannot long stand. No matter how infidels may rave against what they conceive to be the cruelties of nature, we know that the God of nature is not cruel. No matter how at times our sorrowing hearts may rebel against our individual lot, when we come to ourselves we know that our God is a Father just and kind. You are in just hands. However harsh your fate may seem, it is not really harsh if you only understood it.

Prayer.—Infinite Justice, endless Compassion, Love unbounded and eternal, the scales of all fortune are safe in Thy hands. Complaining and fear shall be far from us, and we shall walk securely all our days. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

AS WE GO ABOUT OUR WORK.

"There were shepherds in the same country abiding in the field, and keeping watch by night over their flock."—Luke 2:8-14.

If those shepherds had journeyed six miles to Jerusalem to get a heavenly vision in the temple, none would have been vouchsafed them; the vision and the song of glory came to them as they remained at their task and did their daily duty.

Tolstoi told the beautiful story of two pilgrims, Yesei and Yefim, who set out for Jerusalem. But Yesei encountered a starving family, and stopped to bring them food and cook it, to nurse the sick, to pay off the mortgage on the home. This took all his money and delayed him so that he went back home. Yefim, not pausing to help any one, reached Jerusalem. But the crowd was so great that he could not reach the Holy Sepulcher. While he was there trying in vain to get in, he had a vision of Yesei wearing a glorious halo; for, while Yefim had been selfishly going to Jerusalem, Christ Himself had gone to the unselfish Yesei and given him His richest blessing.

Prayer.—And even thus, Lord Jesus, we would see Thee as we busy ourselves about Thy work. Thou wilt be very close to us; yes, Thou wilt be doing the work by our side. As we work in this way with Thee, we are increasingly conscious of Thy presence, rejoicing in it and upheld by it. Ah, Thine infinite condescension, so to companion a sinning soul! Amen.

THURSDAY.

ON THE UPPER LEVEL.

"I have called you friends."—John 15:9-16.

Phillips Brooks once said that men might meet on two different levels. If they meet on the lower level, they talk about the weather, about business, about politics, books and men and money and sport; they tell each other what they know. They meet on the plane of acquaintanceship. But if they meet on the higher level, that of friendship, they exchange intimate confidences, they give each other what they are.

Which shall it be? For it may be either. "I have called you friends," He says to every one of us. In His call is a sweet invitation. In His call is a blessed promise of what He will do for us if we only give Him a chance. Was ever such an imperial invitation refused? Never on the upper level of divine opportunity.

Prayer.—It is easy, our Saviour, to seek Thee on the lower plane. We can carry our money there, and our worldly interests and desires. It is not so easy to meet Thee on the upper level. We must climb to it, climb far and hard, and we can carry nothing on our back. But there is where we would seek Thee, and, seeking, may we find. Amen.

FRIDAY.

GO INTO TRAINING.

"Why could not we cast it out?"—Matt. 17:14-21.

That sad case of the epileptic boy disclosed to the disciples their lack of faith and corresponding lack of power. "Why could not we cast out of the lad the demon of his disease?" they queried; and Christ might well have answered, "Because you have not yet been long enough in my school." They were slow pupils and they had much to learn. Even with the most wonderful Teacher the world has ever seen, they needed much training before they could do their work.

So is it with Christians as they try to do the Lord's work. They must not expect to be masterly in their apprentice days. They must place themselves humbly in tutelage. They must practice and practice and practice. They must be patient with themselves and content with slow progress. All that the Lord requires of them is to do their best, not His best, and keep on doing it.

Prayer.—Thou, Master Workman of all time, teach us, we pray Thee, till we learn. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE CLOSING WORD.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."—Rev. 14:13-20.

Once I obtained the following message from the famous lecturer and author, Joseph Cook. It was his summary of life, and it was written not long before he passed away:

"Man's life means
Tender teens,
Teachable twenties,
Tireless thirties,
Fiery forties,
Forcible fifties,
Serious sixties,
Sacred seventies,
Aching eighties,
Shortening breath,
Death,
The sod,
God."

That is a remarkable condensation of experience. It is true of all of us, even up to and including the closing word. But ah, the vast difference in that closing word, according as one has lived with God on earth, or in opposition to God! After death we all of us shall stand before God; but will it be God the Judge or God the Father? Must His words be of condemnation or loving approval? Will they welcome us to heaven or leave us outside?

Prayer.—In our closing hours, dear Lord, may we have only one thought of Thee, and may that thought be joy. Forgive all that is wrong in our lives, cleanse us from every stain, and receive us in glory. Amen.

SUNDAY.

WHAT IT DOES FOR ME.

At the close of an infidel lecture in England, the speaker invited questions. To his surprise, an old, bent woman, in old-fashioned clothes, came forward and said: "Ten years ago I was left a widow, with eight children unprovided for, and nothing to call my own but this Bible. By its direction, and looking to God for strength, I have been enabled to feed myself and my family. I am now tottering to the grave, but I am perfectly happy, because I look forward to a life of immortality with Jesus in heaven. That is what my religion has done for me. What has your way of thinking done for you?" The infidel attempted to shirk the question, but was completely discomfited, and the audience showed its adherence with the old woman by a burst of applause.

It is a fair test to ask: "What is your way of thinking doing for you?" Applied to infidelity, the test shows its entire inadequacy as a way of life. Applied to the true religion of Jesus Christ, as millions will gladly testify, it proves it to be the way of happiness, of peace, and of power.

Prayer.—Our blessed Redeemer, we know what Thou hast done for us, what Thou art ceaselessly doing. We rejoice in Thee all the day long. We find in Thee all that we need for the highest satisfaction. And we pray for wisdom to testify of this grace to others. In Thy name. Amen.

OBSERVATORY.

ary Bolshevism running through the swarming proletariat like creeping fire in moss, it was Kagawa, the non-violent exponent of the Golden Rule, who became one of the stoutest allies of order and peaceful reconstruction.

"His power lies in this: that he practices the social gospel which he preaches. He does not merely talk about what Jesus would do—he does as Jesus did. He says: 'Without realizing the love of Christ in society, the message of Christ is so small. When Christ took the form of human flesh, He identified Himself with real humanity. The trouble with the Church is that it has been absorbed in adoring the cross, and has not realized the meaning of the cross in daily life, in the factory, the mine, and the slum.'"

A Campaign to Raise $50,000

FOR

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

IN ORDER TO provide a solid foundation upon which to build for the future and to secure uninterrupted carrying out of its work this year, PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE now is launching a campaign to raise $50,000. This campaign will be conducted among friends of the School in the section served by the College, as well as among the members of the Southern Christian Convention, having received the sanction of the Convention at last year's session. The funds sought are to be used as follows:

- $25,000 for Payment of Indebtedness.
- 10,000 for 1929-1930 Maintenance.
- 8,000 for Completion of the Administration Building.
- 5,000 for Equipment of the Administration Building.
- 2,000 for Improvement of the Campus.

WITH THESE FUNDS, PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE will be enabled this year to take care of a doubled student enrollment, and will be able better to carry on its work of Christian Education among the native-born boys and girls of this great Southern section. Surely all of us will want to share in this great work of preserving our Anglo-Saxon heritage and American ideals, and of educating Christian America for Christian Americanism.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The "Home-Coming Day" at the Christian Orphanage, held on Saturday, August 31st, for the children who had gone out from the institution, was a decided success. An invitation was mailed to all the children whose address could be found, and between thirty and forty came home. This is the first home-coming day the Christian Orphanage has had, and the management did its best to make it a real home-coming day for all who returned.

A service was held in the chapel at 11 o'clock. After the opening song, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, led in prayer. The welcome address was delivered by the writer and was responded to by E. Clarence McKinney (one of the boys). The children of the Orphanage rendered a short program. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, in his usual beautiful way, made a very inspiring talk to the children who had returned home, and it was enjoyed by all present. Our good brother, Sam Davis, was present and gave us a beautiful selection on the piano. Mr. J. M. Darden, chairman of the board of trustees, was present and made a very inspiring talk to the children. After the closing prayer by Dr. Atkinson, the meeting adjourned till 3 o'clock P. M.

Lunch was served by the Orphanage in picnic style—Brunswick stew, sandwiches, ice cream, cake, lemonade and watermelons. The former children, as well as the Orphanage children, seemed to enjoy the day, mingling together as of old and telling of things that happened while they were in the institution.

We all like to go back home. It always has attraction for us as no other place. The children who go out from the Christian Orphanage like to come back home. The Orphanage has a tender place in their heart, too. The Orphanage family was happy to have the children back. We are glad that we will have a home-coming day each year.

The former children met in the Orphanage chapel in the afternoon and formed a "Home-Coming Society," with thirty members, and made the dues one dollar per month. They also pledged themselves to work for and help the institution that had been a home to them in their young and tender years.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2 1/2 x 4 1/2 inches x 3/4 inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its open quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2 1/2 x 4 1/2 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

HOPEWELL, VA.

"All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose."—Rom. 8:28.

The Church at Hopewell, though handicapped by the sudden bursting of the so-called boom bubble and the subsequent lack of work for many of its members, is still on the firing line, and, though not able to do great things, is trying to do the little things. The Sunday School attendance has been fairly good during the vacation period, and the missionary societies have held their regular meetings and are sending in reports which show a good progress over those of last year.

The Church attendance is fairly good; prayer-meeting attendance is many times extra good. At a recent Church conference, the pastor, Rev. J. W. Barrett, brought a feeling of great consternation upon the people by the reading of his resignation. However, as soon as the people could recover their thinking powers, they voted against accepting the resignation and called Rev. Barrett for the coming Church year. Rev. Barrett accepted the call and the conference closed with a happy feeling that God is working things out for our good. The officers were elected with a few changes.

We come to the close of the Church year knowing that we have not accomplished what we had hoped to accomplish, but still we know we have tried. Another year we hope to accomplish more "in His name and for His sake." Pray for us, that we may.
R. H. W.

A TRIBUTE.

The following appreciation was written by Rev. J. H. Abernethy, Methodist pastor at Flint Hill, Va., to Mr. Sam Leonard Davis:
Dear Bro. Sam:

I was glad to hear of the good meeting you just closed. While we did not have so many additions at Amissville, the Baptists held a meeting one week after ours closed and they benefitted greatly by the work you and Sister Davis did there. Our Church was much revived. Everybody was highly pleased with the way you and Sister Davis conducted our meeting. To me it was one of the best in point of method, gospel and system that it has been my pleasure to have. It was sane, sound, soul-saving, searching, stirring. Sister Davis preached the plain and pure gospel in a plain and powerful way. I wonder that the Churches don't make more calls upon you than you can accept. Your art is one of the greatest contributions one could make to the work of the kingdom—I mean your piano work.

I am certainly delighted to have had you people with us, to have met you, to have learned you better. I know you now, and you can refer any preacher, congregation or person to me. Now, Sam, by all means, if you can get the work, play to His glory, sing to His glory, testify for Him. Sister Davis, continue to preach the plain, pure, powerful gospel—preach and sing to His glory.

Feel free to call on me for anything I can do for you. May God's richest blessings and His peace, comfort and strength be yours in His service all the days of your life.

Most sincerely yours,
J. H. ABERNETHY.

BIBLE SCHOOLS.

Two daily vacation Bible schools have recently been conducted at Fancy Gap, Va. One was conducted at Elk Spur in the morning, and the other was conducted at Rocky Ford in the afternoon. Miss Lillie Spain, of Waverly, Va., came to as-ist Miss Jewel Truitt and the writer in these schools.

These Bible schools were of the same type that are put on in many of our Churches. The attendance was good all the while. There was an enrollment of sixteen at Elk Spur and twenty at Rocky Ford. The children took an interest in the work and were eager to learn more about the Bible.

The handwork which the children did under the supervision of Miss Truitt and Miss Spain was especially good. Besides this, the children were taught some of the leading stories of the Bible as well as other valuable facts about the Book. Hymns, prayers and Scripture verses were also learned in connection with other material.

This is the second time that we have had a Bible school conducted at both of our Churches in Carroll County, Va. The children showed more interest than they did last summer when our first Bible school was conducted. Our Bible schools covered a period of two weeks and closed with a commencement on Thursday and Friday nights, August 15th and 16th. Miss Truitt and Miss Spain did a fine piece of work, and I am sure much good has been accomplished.

KERNODLE.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father has seen fit to remove from this life to the life beyond our friend and brother, John T. Kernodle, on the 11th day of April, 1929. Brother Kernodle was 79 years of age and came to Berea Christian Church when it was organized, in 1903, from Bethlehem Christian Church, of which he had been a member for many years. He gave the ground on which Berea Church was built, and also gave liberally of his means for the erection of the Church and has always been most generous in the support of his Church. He was the senior deacon and also a faithful member of both Church and Sunday School. Therefore, he it resolved:

1. That in the death of Bro. Kernodle, our Church has lost one whose services we greatly appreciate and whose passing we deeply mourn. We recognize in his death the providence of God and bow in humble submission to His will.

2. That the Sunday School appreciates his faithful attendance and very generous support of all its undertakings.

3. We would say to the family and friends to study his life and emulate the many virtues of this good man and be prepared, like him, when the end shall come to receive the plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter, thou, into the joys of thy Lord."

4. And we would extend to the family of our deceased brother our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement; and for comfort, we would point them to the all-wise God, who doeth all things well and whose grace is sufficient for them.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent The Christian Sun for publication, a copy be sent his family, and a copy be spread on the records of Berea Church.

WAY.

Julia Gaynelle Way was born May 14, 1926. For two years, two months and fourteen days she lived to brighten the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. C. Way. Then she was taken to brighten the home above. The many friends who attended the funeral in the home thus showed their love for Gaynelle and their sympathy for the sorrowing family.

Interment was in the Buffalo Cemetery, near Sanford. May the Lord comfort the sorrowing hearts with the thought that He will keep their treasure safe, folded in His arms, awaiting their coming.

THE JEWISH-ARAB CONFLICT.—

The strong arm of British law and order has, temporarily at least, put an end to the fighting between the Jews and Arabs in Palestine. It is perhaps difficult for us to understand the intensity of religious hatreds which exists in the East, where men take their religion with such desperate seriousness. But lest we be tempted to too much self-righteous complacency, we should remember the fires of racial prejudice which occasionally flare up in our own land. In Palestine there is a combination of both religious and racial prejudice.

It is at best a difficult situation. The Arabs so greatly outnumber the Jews that the Jews hardly constitute what we would consider a respectable minority. On the Jewish side, there is the idea that the land constitutes the ancient and God-given heritage of his fathers. On the Arab side there is the sentiment for a united land, and the right of possession and the greater numbers. The world has not yet arrived at a system of justice by which such claims can be settled.

But it is difficult not to see in that which has befallen the Jews of Palestine, the inevitable results of the power of force which they invoked against Jesus nineteen centuries ago. There exists in Palestine today a situation that can be coped with only according to the principles and methods of the Man of Galilee. It is but another illustration of the fact that the teachings of the Christ are inescapable. Unless the nations of the world meet the issues that confront them in the light of the teachings of Jesus, they, like the Jews of Palestine today, will find the same situations arising to plague them nineteen centuries hence.

SEEKING THE BAD PLACES.—

A writer has recently revealed the method by which boys' clubs are located in Chicago. When a new club is to be built, a study is made of the police records to find what particular section of the city has had the largest number of cases of delinquency among the boys, and there the new club is located. The wisdom of such a course of procedure has been justified in the cases where clubs have thus been located. There has been a marked decrease in the number of cases engaging the attention of the juvenile court. Is there in this a suggestion by which the Churches might profit? During recent years there has been a constant shifting of Churches from the crowded centers of population out into the more spacious suburbs. Sometimes the Churches have moved because their localities had become business districts, in which few people lived. Others have moved because their locality, while still remaining residential, was being occupied by a different class of people than that which made up the membership of the Church.

It is but natural that the Church membership should wish to have their Church located in quiet and beautiful surroundings. The average Church member does not like to go to Church in a neighborhood where one has to view the crowded, and often squalid, conditions which maintain in the crowded sections of large cities where often the foreign element lives. But the Church not only has an obligation to its membership; it has an obligation to the life of the city of which it is a part. In the past, with the individual Churches and the different denominations going their separate ways, many of the most needy sections have been left without the ministry of the Church.

DID ENGLAND WIN OR LOSE?—

The world ought to have rejoiced last week when the Hague Conference reached a satisfactory agreement as to the divisions of the reparations payment which the Young plan fixed for Germany to pay. At one time it appeared that the conference was going to fail to reach an agreement because of the insistent demands of Sir Philip Snowden, that England receive a larger share of the funds that were exacted from Germany. The demands made by the British representative seem to have surprised the majority of the American people.

One cannot, however, help feeling a sympathy for the British position, when all the facts are taken into consideration. When the time arrived for the funding of the British war debt to the United States, England acted upon the assumption that there could be no other possible course than the payment of her debts. She did not make the bid for sympathetic consideration in fixing the terms of settlement to which some other nations resorted. Wide publicity has been given to the sufferings of Belgium and France. And it is true that England did not suffer a similar ravaging of her soil. But the world perhaps has never known just how hard England was hit, for the simple reason that it is an ingrained tradition of the Britisher not to talk about such things. This reticence on the part of the English may have resulted in the failure of England to receive all the consideration that was her due.

On the other hand, the question arises as to whether or not the manner in which Mr. Snowden presented the demands of England for a larger allotment of reparations payments may not have lost for England more than the increased payments may be worth. Just at this time when the world is with great difficulty trying to grope its way to surer foundations in international relationships, such unequivocal demands and insistent claims do not help to engender more harmonious feelings between the nations. With such good grounds for her claims, as it seems to us, it is regrettable that the English position might not have been presented in a different way.

THE QUEST FOR BROTHERHOOD.—

One wonders at the many organizations that have sprung up in and around the Church. There are societies, brotherhoods, associations, and all sorts of fellowship and service organizations. Some of them are consciously limited to denominational boundaries. But in most cases where there has been an effort to limit them to sectarian lines, similar organizations have sprung up that overlap denominational restrictions. Surely these movements bear testimony of the desire of the human heart for universal brotherhood. They are indirect evidence that all mankind seeks to grow and to serve in fellowship with those of his kind. They should have warned us long ago against the separations and divisions which have grown up in the name of religion.

The London correspondent to the Christian Century has caught evidences of this spirit and described it in his account of the recent Boy Scout celebration in England. This is what he says: "The chief scout, 'B. P.,' has been made a baron. He has passed the three-score years and ten; but happily he is hale and hearty as ever. In twenty-one years he has seen out of small beginnings a mighty international order of boyhood arise; and last week, in the jamboree held at Birkenhead, he had the reward, enjoyed by few pioneers, of seeing translated into deeds the dream which he dreamed. From every nation scouts had come together to celebrate their coming of age. And B. P. saw his dream come true. The accounts of the jamboree leave a somewhat confused picture of great doings. Marches, rushes, vast assemblies, seasons of worship, thousands of smaller groups, a medley of tongues; all kinds of religion, but chiefly Protestant Christianity and Catholic. The archbishop of Canterbury and Cardinal Bourne both visited the camp on Sunday, and the cardinal gave emphatic testimony to the way in which the scout movement had been true to its principle not to interfere with the religious beliefs of its members, seeking rather that they should be good members of their own community, whether Jewish, Catholic or Protestant.

"Among the scouts were fifty blind scouts, fifty deaf and dumb, and fifty cripples. But more space is needed than is here available to describe the varieties of boys who had come to celebrate the festival. There are many internationales in the world of today, but none perhaps more full of promise than the scout movement, in which every scout confesses that he is a brother to every other scout, wherever he may be found. Twenty-one years ago, on Brownsea Island, a troop of twenty-one boys held the first scout camp. Last week the same flag was hoisted over the jamboree at Birkenhead, where more than 50,000 scouts were assembled and the same horn sounded; and these 50,000 were only a small fraction of the world's scouts."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Mr. O. W. Ayseue, of Liberty Church, Vance County, N. C., was a pleasant caller at THE CHRISTIAN SUN office the first of this week. Glad to see Bro. Ayseue.

Rev. G. R. Underwood, who has been for weeks confined to a hospital for treatment and surgical operation, is able to return to his home, Pittsboro, N. C., and is much improved.

We learn with sincere regret that Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga., who seemed to be improving in health, has had to return to the hospital for further treatment. We trust that the skill of physicians and nurses, by the wisdom of a loving Heavenly Father, may bring him back to better health again.

The following is received and will be read with wide interest, as Chaplain Elder is well known by many CHRISTIAN SUN readers: "Mrs. Luella Jane Stewart announces the marriage of her daughter, Mabel, to Commander W. W. Elder, chaplain U. S. Navy, Sunday, August 18, 1929, Long Beach, Calif. At home after December 1st, 316 Roycroft Avenue, Long Beach, Calif." Our heartiest congratulations to Chaplain Elder.

It was a rare privilege THE SUN's editor enjoyed Sunday, September 1st, in worshipping with our Reidsville Christians, Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, pastor. Although it was the first Sunday after vacation and the pastor and many workers had been away, there were 225 in Sunday School and a good attendance at Church services. The Christian Church, we are told, now has the largest Sunday School in the growing city of Reidsville, and the congregation is increasing encouragingly.

One of our well-equipped and very promising young ministers, in giving his first new money to missions, very appropriately writes: "The enclosed represents the first new money that came into my possession. Also, in giving this first fruit to the service of God, I am resolving to give Him the tenth of all the money that comes into my possession. I have been tithing for some time now, and it has brought God closer to me and me closer to Him, and I feel that we are working together. To my mind, the greatest joy that comes from tithing is that God is keeping an account of my labor while I keep an account of His dues, and some time our two accounts will tally perfectly." We have never known one to tithe who did not come to acknowledge it as a spiritual benefit and blessing.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., held an open-air service in the City Park on the evening of August 28th. The following program was carried out: hymn, "Day is Dying in the West"; hymn, "I love to Tell the Story"; prayer, Mrs. J. F. Brothers; Scripture, 23rd Psalm in unison; stories of missionary heroes—"A Missionary Doctor in India" Miss Helen Powell, "Setting the Bible Loose in Africa" Mrs. H. C. Caviness, "The First Woman Medical Missionary" Miss Verna Whitehurst; solo, "Follow the Gleam," Miss Rosa Griffin; address, Rev. H. C. Caviness; short pageant consisting of representatives of various nations; hymn, "The Golden Chord"; special offering; benediction, Rev. H. C. Caviness. This proved to be a fine service, and there were about 125 persons in attendance.

It was the privilege of THE SUN's editor to attend a "going-away service" at First Christian Church, Greensboro, Sunday evening, September 1st, for Miss Graham Rowland, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Rowland. The congregation and people of the Church joined with the pastor and his wife in giving a word of encouragement and congratulations to Graham, who was to leave on an early train September 2nd, under appointment of the Home Mission Board of the General Convention, to do home mission work among the Indians at Ft. Apache, Ariz. It was a most delightful service, and the whole congregation, after a most fitting address by Bro. W. B. Truitt and some words from the Mission Secretary, and also from the anxious and happy father, seemed to enter into the spirit of the occasion and to express both congratulations and solicitude for this splendid Christian woman, who goes out in her Master's name to do Christian work among an underprivileged people. By nature and training, Miss Rowland is well qualified for the great work to which she goes.

Rev. G. D. Underhill, who graduated from Elon College in May and accepted work in Goldsboro, N. C., was prevented by a very serious accident to his mother. The following from Bro. Underhill explains: "St. Johnsville, N. Y., Aug. 24.—You know that after graduation mother and I went to Albany, N. Y., where I was to be ordained on the 16th of June. On the 4th of June, mother and a friend of hers were struck by an auto and were taken to a hospital. Upon examination, the doctor found that mother had a fractured skull. For about a week we didn't know if she could possibly live. She came through nicely, but the doctor told me that a trip from New York to North Carolina would be more than she could stand for many months. It was impossible for me to leave mother, so I wrote to Goldsboro at once and secured my release. After that I started to make inquiries concerning Churches in my home Conference, with the result of securing the Grace Christian Church, St. Johnsville, N. Y. We came to St. Johnsville about a week ago and will take up my regular duties on the first of September. It is a lovely place here and I think that I am going to enjoy my new work immensely."

We learn with interest that our Church at Chapel Hill, N. C., like the one at Raleigh, has voted to unite with the Congregationalists of the university town. While the latter have no Church building in Chapel Hill, there are individual members among the residents of the town who, if merged with our membership, will make a strong and active Church. The following is from the Greensboro Daily News: "The final step in the merging of the Christian and Congregationalist denominations of Chapel Hill was taken here recently when the Christian Church held 'homecoming day' festivities and by unanimous consent of the members voted to merge the two denominations into the one United Church of Chapel Hill. The two denominations in the future will worship together in the Christian Church, with Rev. B. J. Howard, popular Christian pastor here filling the pulpit. Unification locally is regarded as the forerunner of a national merging of the two denominations in the fall. The Congregationalists endorsed such plans at their convention last spring, and the Christians are expected to approve the same plans at their October convention in Piqua, Ohio. Both denominations are non-creedal, holding the right for each member to put his own interpretation on life, the Bible, and the Supreme Being, and, indeed, they have been worshipping together already in many sections."

We congratulate our people of Hanks Chapel for having recently finished paying for and dedicated their splendid new house of worship. The first lumber for the new building was cut April 6, 1927, with Rev. J. Fuller Johnson, the then pastor, in charge, and Bro. Kemp Riddle gave the first dollar to the erection of the new building. The first brick was laid August 3, 1927, with Rev. G. R. Underwood in charge of the services. The last work on the building was done August 24, 1928, and the building was finished at 11:30 o'clock of that day. Bro. R. L. Mann gave the lot, 50x100 feet, with five acres of land in all. The last dollar on the new building was paid on August 24, 1929, exactly one year from the date the building was completed. The house will do credit to any thrifty rural section in North Carolina, and cost between $6,000 and $7,000. Hanks Chapel is in Chatham County, three miles east of Pittsboro. The following is from the Greensboro Daily News, August 28th: "Sunday was a joyful day for the members and friends when the beautiful new house was dedicated. The dedicatory service was in charge of the pastor, Rev. R. A. Whitten, of Elon College, assisted by Rev. S. M. Penn, Congregational minister of Sophia. Rev. Mr. Penn delivered the sermon for the occasion, and his message was a masterly discourse. Following the sermon, the ritualistic formula of the Christian Church was read by Rev. Mr. Whitten and responded to by the large congregation in a very impressive manner. Special music by the choir was a beautiful feature of the meeting."

Our deepest sympathy for our friend and brother, Rev. John G. Truitt, and the other members of the bereaved family over the passing of their dear mother, Mrs. H. Lee Truitt, Summerfield, N. C., on September 2nd. The Greensboro Daily News, September 5th, gave the following items touching the event: "Funeral services for Mrs. H. Lee Truitt, who died September 2nd, were held at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon at Mount Bethel Christian Church. Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor of First Christian Church, Greensboro, officiated, and Rev. F. C. Lester, of Waverly, Va., assisted. The pallbearers, who were nephews of the deceased, were Newton Joyner, James Webb, Toliver Webb, George Webb, Charlie Webb, and Grady Barham. Mrs. Truitt was for fifty years a member of the Mount Bethel Christian Church and was a regular attendant of both the Sunday School and Church services until the beginning of her last illness several months ago. Mrs. Truitt is survived by her husband, H. Lee Truitt, and six children, Miss Essie Mae Truitt, of Summerfield; J. S. Truitt, of Sanford; Rev. Howard E. Truitt, of Waynesboro, Va.; Rev. Reuben A. Truitt, of Cameron; Rev. John G. Truitt, of Dayton, Ohio; W. J. B. Truitt, of Norfolk, Va., and by seven granddaughters and seven grandsons. Hundreds of friends were in attendance at the funeral service." This woman of rare Christian graces and virtues has gone to her reward. It is given to few in a lifetime to accomplish what Sister Truitt had accomplished in rearing such a large family of Christian workers. To the devoted husband and father, Bro. H. Lee Truitt, we extend sincere sympathy in his sorrow.

NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet at the Suffolk Christian Church on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, November 6, 7, 8. The change of date was made by the executive committee to avoid a conflict with the date of the General Convention, which will be held at Piqua, Ohio, October 22-30. The program committee is planning an interesting and constructive program. Please keep in mind the date—November 6th to 8th. H. S. H.

HOW TO PRAY.

"Lord, teach us to pray."—Luke 11:1.

In all lines of work and experience, Jesus was a very busy Man. By His constant activity, in deeds and words, He attracted much attention. The disciples 'round about Him marveled at His energy and genuine earnestness. They wondered how He maintained the power to preach such marvelous sermons, remain constantly in the field of pastoral work, and pray without ceasing. So they go to Him, in all seriousness; for they, too, would like to have some of His rare qualities. But they do not ask Him to teach them to preach, even though they could appreciate the value of a good sermon. They do not ask Him to teach them to perform miracles, though they knew that this means of ministry would surely attract attention and win for them popularity. They do not ask Him to teach them the art of healing, even though they knew that He had won the hearts of many by relieving pain and suffering; but they say unto Him, "Lord, teach us to pray."

From His own life and works, they knew that He regarded prayer as the greatest power in existence. The fact that He prayed without ceasing led them to believe that He should not be other than a praying man. There were times when He prayed so fervently that others were moved by His intercession for them. On certain occasions, He prayed all night. One one occasion, He prayed so mightily that great drops of blood fell from His brow. He prayed before eating. He prayed when He took little children in His arms for blessings, and He prayed in such a way that the chosen band desired to be like Him in prayer.

When the disciples surrounded Him and sought instruction in prayer, it is most likely that Peter was the spokesman of the occasion. He was always ready to venture. Always anxious to try a new experiment—and now that his training under the Master is causing him to become deeply in earnest about all things, we hear him, as he stands forth, saying, "Lord, teach us to pray." The answer to this vital request is one of the high points of biblical instruction. The teaching cometh from the lips and life of one who spake as never man spake, for the words that follow are authoritative on prayer. Jesus took the time to teach them to pray because He realized that prayer was the chief means by which they would learn God's will. Their success as leaders in the new kingdom depended largely upon what they knew and practiced concerning God's plan. Prayer was their way to God. It was God's way to them. He led them to know that through prayer they might be comforted, might receive instruction and become powerful in all things.

Up until this time, they, like many of us, had not learned the importance of definite prayer. They knew not its compensation, because they had not given prayer a chance in their personal lives. It is evidently true that a small per cent of professing Christians do not pray. They have time for professional work, domestic life and social activity, but no time to pray. Perhaps our neglect of prayer is due to the fact that we haven't been taught how to pray. Should that be our trouble, let us, with the disciples of old, come to Him and request Him, saying, "Lord, teach us to pray." Should we do this, He would unhesitatingly teach us to pray. He would request us to follow Him by planning prayer life,

1. The plan of prayer. Every great building is the result of a carefully worked plan. Every well-written book is the product of an author's plan. One has but to look about and behold the wonders of the world to know that God had a plan. So in prayer, there must be a plan. The first section of the plan, as outlined by Jesus, is that we plan to pray in secrecy rather than in public to be heard and seen. The hypocrits had a plan, but it was the wrong kind of a plan. They prayed standing on the streets, and aloud in the synagogues. Jesus denounced this method in setting forth instruction on how to pray. Listen to His condemnation of the hypocrits.

"When thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrits are; for they love to pray standing in the synagogues, and on the street corners, that they may be seen of men. Verily, I say unto you, they have their reward."

These love to pray that others may see and hear. Their reward is to receive notice and attention. They pray not to God, but to man. Such prayer is not prayer. Real prayer is communion with God. The hypocrits of whom Christ spoke, sometimes prayed for three hours. By hypocrit, the Greek classics refer to one who is an actor but who is not real. One who is false is a hypocrit. In biblical Greek, hypocrit means one who pretends to be religious and prayerful, when in his heart he is not. These love to pray standing on the streets, with head covered and eyes lifted to Jerusalem, as was the custom of the ancient Jew.

Often we hear it said that Bro. A prayed a beautiful prayer. Such prayers are words, words, words. They are sometimes lifted but do not rise very high, for the prayer is not meant for God, but that he might be glorified and considered very religious in the sight of his fellow-man. Jesus, therefore, says, "When thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrits: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and on the streets, that they may be seen of men."

Instead of praying on the streets and in the synagogues to be seen and heard of men, Jesus suggests that our plan of prayer be in secrecy. To that end, He taught them, saying, "when thou prayest, enter into thy closet; and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father, who is in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret will reward thee openly." While Jesus does not say dispense with public prayer, He advocates that all prayers be made in sincerity. Hence, prayer in secrecy with God. Jesus holds that the test of one's sincerity and Christianity is shown by his prayers made in secret. Enter into thy closet, shut the door, be alone and pray to God alone rather than man. To many, God seems far away, and prayer availeth little. But real prayer brings God very close to one's heart. The long-distance telephone can only be successfully used when one is in a quiet place and all disturbances removed. There must not be any distraction if the distant party's voice would be brought close. So prayer in a quiet place has untold advantages over prayer that is offered on the street corner or in the Church. God, who is apparently far away, will come very close when spoken to from the prayer closet. Every man and woman, boy and girl ought to have a definite place for personal prayer. One's prayer closet may be a desk, may be a pantry or a bedroom. Prayer thus offered changes things. Some years ago a noted bishop came upon a group of convicts who were upon their knees breaking stones in a quarry. The bishop gave them some encouraging advice, and as he was about to leave said, "I just wish I could break open the stony hearts of my parishoners as you break the stones in front of you." The convict looked at the proud ecclesiastic and said, "Maybe you could if you worked on your knees." And so the prayer that changes things is the prayer that is born on one's knees. It is prayer that is offered in secret. It is prayer that is void of vain repetitions.

2. The quality of prayer. Prayer does not of necessity have to be a prolonged process. God rewards us not for the quantity but the quality of our praying. When ye pray, use not vain repetitions as the heathen do, for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. At the recent International Convention of Physiologists, held in Boston last week, Dr. Phillip Hawk, of the food research laboratories of New York City, stated that he was greatly surprised at the result of a coffee-drinking test. In this experiment, Dr. Hawk used 100 young men in endeavoring to discover if six cups of coffee used daily had any greater effect than the moderate use of two cups. His conclusion was that the nervous system was very unfavorably affected and the mechanical and mental efficiency of the human machine lowered just as much when two cups are used daily as when six are used. In other words, he says quantity is not the determining element that lowers vitality and affects the nervous system. So it is that quantity of prayer avails nothing.

The heathen pray, using words, words, words. Christians are taught to pray, not to be heard for their much speaking but to be heard of God. He refers to the fact that the Heavenly Father knows what things we have need of before we ask of Him. Therefore, praying in terms of quantity does not add one cubit to bringing about a change in His mind. Much praying does not inform Him, for He knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask Him.

3. The manner of prayer. When we pray, use not vain repetitions as the heathen, but "After this manner, Pray ye: Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power and the glory forever. Amen."

In this model prayer of our Lord we have set forth more than an illustration of the manner in which we ought to pray. We have a set form of words to be used; for when the disciples said unto Him, Lord, teach us to pray, they added these words, "As John also taught his disciples to pray" (Luke 11:1). In those days it was the custom of every Jew to recite eighteen prayers daily. The rabbis taught their pupils many prayers. Hence the disciples came asking that they be taught a prayer as even the others had prayers to recite. Jesus taught the twelve to pray after the manner recorded by Matthew and Luke, what is known universally as the Lord's Prayer.

To pray after the manner of His teaching herein recorded was the distinguished badge of discipleship for them. To be able to pray, "Our Father, who art in heaven," indicated that they were chosen men of the Master. To that end, it has been adopted by the Church universal and is a prayer of Christ's followers, rather than men of the world. The prayer we are taught to use is divided into six petitions and two distinct parts. The first portion deals with the glory of God; the second, with man's own needs.

Next week we shall think together of the contents of this beautiful prayer.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

A PLAN OF ADVANCE.

With the prospective merger of the Christians and Congregationalists, there is already a call for a plan of advance all along the line, especially in the South, in Church extension and home missionary work. Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, secretary of missions for the Congregational Church in the Southeast, says there is no reason, so far as he has been able to discover, why we may not merge our efforts in home missionary enterprises throughout the South. There are many points in the South where a sufficient number of Christians and Congregationalists live, and are without Churches of either name, who, if united, could do much in planting and building Churches. If the mission boards of the two Churches can properly get behind such projects, there should be an advance along the line, both in soul-winning, in Church-building, and in the work of Christian education. Writing in The Congregationalist, Boston, Mass., issue of September 5th, Rev. F. P. Ensminger, from the area of the Carolinas, Kentucky and Tennessee, in which he is mission superintendent, says:

"It would be a plan of advance for us if we might have 25 per cent added allowance for full service; if $10,000 might be found for larger parish salaries and equipment; if we had money to support the splendid student summer service program that trains workers as well as helps fields; if $100,000 could be found to finance city Church building programs. This is but the beginning of our Church needs."

Dr. McQuarrie, who is mission superintendent in the Southeast, says in the same paper: "To assure our Georgia, Alabama, and West Florida Churches an advance movement in city and rural centers, we should have a grant from our missionary boards of $12,000 a year for the next three to five years."

Dr. Rieker, writing of the needs and plans for certain centers in Oklahoma, says: "Without encroaching on the work of other denominations, Congregationalists ought to lay out on salaries, and mostly on adequate Church plants, $52,000."

From which it is seen that our Congregationalist brethren are calling for plans of advance in the territory that interests our own Mission Board and all CHRISTIAN SUN readers generally.

Within the last few years, the Mission Board of the Southern Convention, besides giving material aid and necessary help to dozens of less-expensive Church buildings and projects, have been instrumental in planting, or helping to get on a safe and secure financial footing, Christian Temple, Norfolk; South Norfolk; First Church and Elm Avenue, Portsmouth; Winchester, Va.; United Church, Raleigh; Chapel Hill Christian Church (now United Church); Reidsville, N. C.; Richmond, Va.; Roanoke, Ala.; Lanett, Ala.; First Church, Columbus, Ga., and other points in which the Christian denomination now indulges a very pleasing pride. Our own Mission Board, now practically clear of indebtedness, is prepared to again go forward in planning and building up Churches where the demand is pressing and the outlook is promising. If the merger takes place, as now seems most likely, Congregationalists and Christians, working hand in hand, and with a single purpose, should go forward, certainly, within the territory of our Southern Convention. This in our Master's name and in the spirit of Him who prayed, "that they all might be one," so that the world may believe that He is truly the Son of God and is the world's one and sufficient Redeemer.

A WORLD BENEFACTOR.

Mr. Henry M. Robertson, in Popular Science Magazine, declares that Mr. John D. Rockefeller has given away five hundred and fifty million dollars in the last twenty years, which is declared by the same writer to be five times more than any one person has ever given in the history of the world. Mr. Robertson is of the opinion also that this has been done five times more wisely than the giving of any other philanthropist. Rockefeller's gifts have gone principally in two directions—one to medical research, for the healing and betterment of the human body; the other to education (mostly religious education), for the enlightenment and enlargement of the human mind and the inspiration and salvation of the soul. It is doubtful if there is an institution on earth that is doing as much, and has already done as much, to relieve human suffering and heal or prevent sickness to the human body as the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research. One recalls that when Mr. Hoover was appointed by our government to go to the relief work necessitated by the devastations of the Mississippi flood, he said on arrival and after investigation: "Gentlemen, this flood is the worst I have ever seen; but without the preventive medical assistance of the Rockefeller Foundation, I think it would be one of the greatest disasters in the history of the world."

As to his educational and religious work, there is scarcely a college of recognized merit and standing that has not felt the benefits of aid coming from the Rockefeller Foundation. Millions of youths who must have gone without a college education have been helped by this man's beneficence to a life of usefulness and service, and numberless struggling institutions have been put on safe footing through his gifts. That he is a great giver, Mr. Rockefeller declared some time ago, was no accident in his life, as he was taught by a Christian mother to live within his income, whether that income was small or large, and that one-tenth of his earnings belonged not to himself but to God, who is the Giver of all things. One can easily believe that Mr. Rockefeller has made his gifts to world betterment, not for any honor or glory to himself, but all to the glory of the God whom a Christian mother taught him in youth to love, to obey and to worship. J. O. A.

HEROES FOR CHRIST.

A hero is one distinguished for bold enterprise, and Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, of the Congregational Church, Portland, Maine, was a hero when he formed the first Christian Endeavor Society in 1881. It grew slowly at first, but it flourished after 1896, when the World's Christian Endeavor Union was formed and societies sprang up in all Christian lands. It was hindered for a time in the United States by withdrawals and the formation of denominational societies, as the B. Y. P. U., in the Baptist Church, and the Epworth League in the Methodist Church; but while it lost, for the time, it inspired the organization of these other denominational societies. Like the Christian Church, its work and influence spread beyond itself, and put new purpose and activity in the young people of other denominations. The Christian Church published the first religious paper in the world—the Herald of Gospel Liberty; opened the first co-educational college—Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio—and now, all denominations publish religious papers and nearly all colleges are co-educational.

In 1910 there were 75,000 Christian Endeavor Societies, and about 4,000,000 members, chiefly in the United States, Canada, Australia, and Great Britain. The purpose Dr. Clark had in mind in the organization of the Christian Endeavor Society was the self-training of young people in worship and service in the Church. The Sunday School was doing a great work in teaching the Bible and music, but Christian Endeavor furnished opportunity for self-expression, personal service, and training for real work in the Church. Its pledge, when obeyed, cultivated loyalty to the Christ, regular attendance on Church services, and liberality in support of the Church. Its principles, when carried out, were the same to the Church that literary societies are to the college, and apprenticeship in preparation for work and business. Young people need the Church, and the Church needs young people; and Christian Endeavor is the school of preparation for Christian work.

Christianity has given young people new opportunities for service that nothing else in history has ever given. It gave the public school, the Sunday School, the Christian Endeavor, and has brought into line that vast army of young people that can conquer the world for Christ. The training of a generation in temperance gave us prohibition, and training for another generation in obedience to law will give us a sober nation. The greatest army in the nation is the army of young people marching under the banner of Jesus Christ. The greatest asset is not the banks, but the boys and girls. If they fail, the nation will perish; if they are faithful to Christ, their pledge and the Church, the Stars and Stripes will lead the world to peace, and the banner of the cross will win the victory over the nations and save the world. Young people, let's help to save the world. "We can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth us" (Phil. 4:13). W. W. S.

A TRIUMPH FOR RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

Out of Italy, the home and stronghold of Catholicism and religious intolerance, comes a note of triumph and victory for religious liberty. Mussolini, Premier and practical dictator of Italy, gave an address to the Italian Parliament some weeks ago, out of which there came a law, unanimously adopted, giving complete religious liberty to Protestants as well as Catholics in Italy. Seemingly, a new day for Protestantism has dawned in Italy, at the very time when the outside world felt that the Vatican, having gained temporal power through an independent State, was threatening religious liberty, not only in Italy but elsewhere.

The new law enacted by the Italian Parliament gives both Protestants and Jews legal standing in the State, and recognizes their Churches as institutions to be protected by the State. Among the various articles of the law are provisions guaranteeing to all citizens, of whatever creed, cult or conviction, religious liberty and the right of religious discussion; State protection; the legality of marriage performed by Protestant ministers and Jewish Rabbis, the same as heretofore granted to Catholics only; and no religion, Protestant or Catholic, is to be forced on children in the public schools. Religion will be taught in the schools, but parents can choose for their children such religious instruction as they may desire, or they may ask that their children be released from religious instruction, which request must be respected. While the Catholic teachers and priests of Italy are bitterly denouncing the law and are in consternation over its outcome, Protestants are rejoicing.

There is nothing that makes for the progress of religion like religious liberty. And there is nothing that makes for superstition, ignorance and prejudice like the suppression of religious liberty. Some of the most destructive wars, and many of the most deplorable catastrophes and tragedies of mankind have come about because of the attempt or determination of one portion of mankind to make other portions of mankind have views, religious beliefs, and convictions in accordance with their wish and will in the matter. There can be no fully developed religious life where there is constraint and repression. In Christ Jesus there is that liberty which makes for the triumph of righteousness in the world and in the hearts of individuals.

NO CREED BUT CHRIST.

Our Saviour is not responsible for the creeds that have divided His followers, and the theology that has confused the thinkers. Theology has, from time to time, emphasized certain phases of the life, the labors and the love of our Lord. When, however, we sound theology to its depths, we come back to Christ. The strange thing is that Christians have not been willing to let others, who think differently from themselves, indulge their own personal views without dividing on the essentials of Christ. What the world needs most of all is a spiritual loyalty to Jesus, the Son of the living God, and to have no creed but Christ. After all, His life and saving power are sufficient, and to that the world must come; and, in fact, all creeds have this in view. The trouble has been and is that we magnify the things that divide instead of the essentials that unite. Rev. John R. Ewers, in speaking of the early Church, very pertinently points out these salient facts when he declares that:

"The early Church had a passion for the personal Jesus: He was fresh in their minds and hearts; His spell was still upon them. Theology began with Paul, and with it various schools of thought. The early Church was not divided as ours. There were some who favored Paul and some Apollos, but there were not the hundred of denominations we have now to curse our cause. There was no creed but Christ. We must heal the divisions in Protestantism by a return to a spiritual loyalty to Jesus. We cannot go back to apostolic Christianity, but we can go forward with Christ."

"SO YOU'RE OFF FOR COLLEGE!"

Whatever else may be the purposes of education today, upon the very surface there are four major ones.

To understand the world in which we live is the first. The spirit of education today is to take nothing for granted, but by the inductive method to find out the facts from which principles may be evolved. Therefore, education is for the business of tearing the world to pieces, analyzing it, and then patching it together again. Thus it is that the botanist tries to understand the flower; the chemist, the geologist, and others the striking characteristics in their respective fields.

To understand man is the second purpose, through vivisection and through analysis. We are tearing this body of ours apart in order to understand more about the most wonderful machine in the world. We are studying the working of the mind, the indefinable endowment which makes it possible for a man to reason and lifts him above the lower animals. We are studying his personality, or soul, in order to understand more about this subtle something which is ever a fascination.

To understand God, the first great cause of all things, is the third purpose. I am not insensible to the trend in some quarters to the theory of extreme naturalism that is making no place for God or for immortality in our thinking. In some quarters the old theory of dualism is giving way to the theory of "monoism"; but these two elements are so much a part of our natures as to make one feel a sense of permanency at this point.

To take all of these laboratory findings, tangible and intangible, spiritual and material, visible and invisible, and to correlate them so that man may find himself existing in and as a part of a world which is cosmic and not chaotic, orderly and not discordant, is the fourth purpose. In other words, education is primarily for the purpose of helping man to think through the many problems incident to his environment.

With such a view, religion and education are very close companions. Attempts have been made to separate them, but they have met with failure.

In America, there have been three stages through which education has passed. In the first stage, which covers the first 200 years of our history, every educational institution in the land was the child of the Church, and the Church governed the curriculum and everything else.

The second stage dates from the time when Thomas Jefferson organized the University of Virginia, the first tax-supported school in America. Here, religion was to have no place in the regular curriculum.

The third stage is that through which we are now passing, when the State university has discovered that since religion is so inevitable and so vital a part of human nature, it must be included in the curriculum of the university. So it is that within the last several years the University of Michigan has established a school of religion on its campus, and other universities, such as Iowa and Texas, are following its lead. The fact is, there are those who prophesy that the time is not far distant when the State universities which began by excluding religion will quite universally be placing it in their curricula. No man can be considered educated unless, along with the so-called humanities, he has also studied his spiritual self and his relation to his Maker.

Such a view of education lifts one out of mere materialism and pushed him into the field of human relationship. This fact need in no sense make him less efficient in the sciences and arts, but will add to his education a value to the human race which cannot be measured.

None need fear that the last thing has been discovered in any field or the last word spoken.

It was useless for Alexander the Great to weep over the fact that there were no more worlds to conquer, and for the great composer to fret, lest there should be no more new chords to be sounded. It is likewise useless for this generation of youth to worry, lest there are no more seas to be charted in the various fields of endeavor. This generation and every succeeding one may say, as did the psalmist the millenniums ago: "Yonder the sea lies, vast and broad, with its countless swarms, with creatures small and great, with fleets of the nautilus, with leviathan at his play."

The great challenge which comes to the educated youth of today is in the seas of human relationships in which the charting has just begun.

Can one touch and handle the material stuff all about him and still keep faith with his God? Can he rise above mere materialism? Jesus answers, "Yes." He prayed, saying, "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil one."

Can labor and capital be comrades and friends instead of warring enemies? Religion says they can, if they are willing to make the Golden Rule of Jesus operative, namely: "As you would that men should do unto you, do also unto them."

Can we, in this scientific world of ours in which we see operating the laws of cause and effect, keep our faith in a personal God? Great scientists like Michael Paupin say we can.

Can all the races of man live together on our shrinking world, where major happenings are known everywhere on the same day, and do it peaceably? Some say, "No." Jesus says it can be done, for "God hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth." In His sight there is neither black nor white, red nor yellow.

Can the nations of the world, which are increasingly rich in natural resources, tolerate the crossing and recrossing of their economic paths and see it done without war? Some say, "No." Jesus says they can, and the majority of the nations of the world said, as they signed the Kellogg peace pact, "We have done with war; we shall try the plan of Jesus."

Lastly, we ask: can one man and one woman live happily together, building a home upon foundations which are spiritual and moral, thus keeping it in tact for a lifetime? Some say, "No." Jesus thought otherwise.

The youth of today is going out upon these charted and uncharted seas in the most challenging times the race has known. We follow him with our benedictions and expect him to make a contribution to his generation which is commensurate with his opportunities.—World Call.

CONFERENCES MEET.

Georgia and Alabama meets with the Church at Lanett, Ala., Tuesday, October 8, 1929.

Alabama meets with the Church at Wadley, Ala., Tuesday, October 15, 1929.

Eastern Virginia meets with the Suffolk Church, Suffolk, Va., November 6-8, 1929.

Western North Carolina meets Tuesday, November 5, 1929, at Smithwood, Randolph County, N. C.

North Carolina and Virginia meets with Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., Tuesday, November 12, 1929.

Eastern North Carolina meets Tuesday, November 19, 1929.

The great events often pass with but little fuss over them. Such was the signing of the pact outlawing war. Ex-President Coolidge went to Washington to be present at the ceremony.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Success increases strain in every walk of life, in every line of business, and in Christian life. Primitive peoples had an easy time when compared with civilized people, and simple religion had an easy time compared with religion in the present day. Before the time of railroads, newspapers, good roads, and electric lights, men toiled quietly through the day and slept at night. They cannot do that way now. The whole world speaks to man, makes demands upon his thought, his energy, and his time. It is more difficult than ever to make a living and to live a life. Human conduct is now the subject of observation, criticism, and demands are made upon behavior and conduct that try men's souls.

Private life is almost a thing of the past. Fashion in dress, in manner, in style of living, come into vogue and the individual joins the procession or is left out of the ranks. The shoes are on the market, and you wear what other people wear. Religion is reduced to forms and ceremonies; programs tell the worshipers when to pray, sing, listen, give, and join in the doxology. Religion is no longer a personal and individual experience, but a mode of conduct, a standardized life which the public can see. Public opinion is enthroned upon a judgment seat that watches the conduct of men. Schools interpret for us the meaning of life, standards of conduct, and the trend of society is toward a desire to make society, in character, what the home was once thought to be. Home life is a unit in community life; and it increases the strain upon home, Church, school, and State to make the thought, conduct and character clean and aspiring.

The Church has a great opportunity and task to make society Christian in its faith, its experience, conduct, and service. The Church was never on the verge of such a strain as now confronts leaders of the followers of Jesus Christ. If society is not cleansed of its evils, the future of the nations is moving toward perils that nothing but the Lord Himself can prevent.

The progress of Christian civilization does not make life easier; the demands increase faster than the means to meet them. The ownership of automobiles makes a heavier demand upon families now than carts and buggies did a half-century ago. All the demands upon society reach more people than in other days. It takes more religion to win the confidence and respect of others in this day than in the time that is past. Men have to know more to get on in society now than ever before. The strain for better houses, better clothes, larger contributions, all press upon men as the price that must be paid for progress. Church members could once go to Church and pay nothing and be counted good members; but that day is gone.

W. W. STALEY.

WHAT IS COLLEGE FOR?

By PRESIDENT W. A. HARPER.

I should like to suggest seven answers to the query we have raised with reference to the whyness of the college experience. No doubt, as your college experience advances, you will be able to add other reasons to this brief catalog. My own experience, however, as a student and as a college teacher and administrator, has convinced me that the seven reasons I hope briefly to outline for your consideration are really and inevitably wrapped up in the college experience, but that they will need to be brought to consciousness in actual living in each individual case.

1. One of the most valuable items in the college experience is found in the fact that it places responsibility on the individual student to make decisions for himself. There is a marked contrast between the atmosphere and methods of procedure in the college environment and those in the high school, though high schools are beginning to exhibit some of the freedom and of independency of judgment so characteristic of the college. Upon your arrival here you entered upon what we know as "the freshman period," and of which this assembly tonight is an item. In this period of induction into the Elon environment, your recently chosen alma mater has undertaken to interpret to you the ideals and the freedoms, as well as the established modus operandi, of this campus. You were assigned to an adviser who has discussed with you the courses of study which you should pursue in terms of your life plans and present commitments. You have been told how to study, how to plan your work, and various appeals have been made to you for the successful planning of what we hope will be for each of you, a successful college career. But in each instance you have been brought to the point where you had to choose for yourself. You will find this characteristic of college life forcing itself upon you insistently. It is one of college's chiefest contributions to your character development. Character grows, blossoms, and fruits in the midst of situations, complex and intricate, involving judgment as to outcomes and consequences, in which the individual is free to choose for himself.

In the atmosphere of the home from which you have come, oftentimes parents have decided for you what you should do, and because of your confidence in their judgment you have accepted their decisions. You have found that their judgments were, for the most part at least, sound and dependable. But the responsibility for decision has not been yours. It has rested upon them. In college, however, you must assume responsibility for your decisions, which means likewise that the consequences, whether good or ill, of your decisions will rest upon you. In this situation there is great hope for developing character, provided you accustom yourself to weighing all the elements involved in any particular situation and arriving at your decision in the terms of the highest values inherent therein. Character of the best type cannot develop unless decisions are reached in terms of the highest values inherent in that particular situation that requires judgment. The mere fact that we decide to do a thing and to assume responsibility for it, does not guarantee that Christian character will result therefrom. Christian character arises and grows up out of experience only when every decision arrived at is based on the sincere desire and aspiration to achieve the highest values inherent in the problem.

This brings me to the point where I must say that there are certain inhibitions and prohibitions in the college experience, as in all other experience, which the wise, discreet, respectful, reverent individual will recognize and co-operate with. That naive story in the opening chapters of our Bible, which describes the origin of evil in the world, is fraught with powerful suggestiveness at this point. Our first parents were privileged to enjoy a beautiful garden and to eat of its fruit. Of the fruit of but a single tree were they forbidden to eat, and yet just because there was a prohibition with respect to this tree and its fruit, they could not resist the temptation to indulge. This unwillingness to subject one's self to authority, this perverseness of the human heart, this unwillingness to obey has been the undoing of not a few men and women in every generation. Every social situation in which we find ourselves of necessity has its rules and regulations. Even the games that we play are governed by regulations. Our physical life which involves our very existence is under compulsion from law outside of itself to which it must conform, if there is to be continuation of life and happy response to environment.

The college experience is not different in this respect from experience in other realms of our life. There are certain ways of doing things on every college campus—ways of doing things that have justified themselves in the experience of former generations of college students and of those who are the responsible administrators and officers of such institutions. I am not suggesting that we should blindly accept authority in such matters, but rather that the presumption is in favor of the regulatory practice in an institution until experience has shown that it is subversive of the best interests of life. If we will take this attitude toward any new situation and environment in which we find ourselves, we will be in position to co-operate in the improvement of the laws, rules and regulations of society, and this, after all, is a most desirable situation. We should also resolve when we set ourselves in opposition to the rules and regulations, which men have found helpful in the conduct of life, to be able to offer something constructive to take the place of the objectionable items against which our soul rebels. It is the constructive thinkers, and not the iconoclasts and radicals, who have promoted the welfare of human society. We will find this principle operative, too, in the college realm. But here again the fundamental principle that the college student must choose for himself, after weighing all the elements involved in the situation, applies, and applies with particular appropriateness.

2. The college experience in the second place widens the horizon of life. This is true, of course, from the standpoint of geography, just as all travel widens and broadens and deepens life. But it is true in a far more significant sense of the college experience, in that the college student is confronted in a very definite way with the programs and judgments of the human race based on experience and preserved for us in the several bodies of knowledge with which he sets out to become acquainted in the curriculum of study. It has been truly said that the four years spent in college are worth while for the contacts which they make for the growing mind with the best that has been thought and said and done in the process of human history. This best is comprehended in the arts, the literatures, and the sciences which it is the purpose of the college curriculum to make available to the mind of youth. It is impossible to spend four years in such acquaintanceship with and pursuit of the best without having the horizons of life expanded and widened, without having them broadened and heightened and deepened.

3. The third benefit from college is the formation of friendships. Gathered together on the somewhat less than a thousand college campuses in America will be found in any particular year from three-quarters to a million of the choicest youth of our day—young men and young women of intelligence, of culture, of aspiration, altruistically inclined, motivated in spirit of service for the race, self-forgetful and adventurous in their response to an inner urge which challenges them to invest self in noblest enterprises. It will be difficult, it will be impossible, to find a more de-

FROM LONDON.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

II.

London's famous Tower is the old prison where criminals were tortured and beheaded and their bodies subsequently taken out to a street of the city and hung up as an example of warning to others. Here royalties, both male and female, suffered like fates. We saw the old block where many a head has been laid. The signs of the blade of the axe are there, and the old axe itself is now suspended above the block. This place is now an imperial museum, including all materials and weapons of war from the stone age up. In one room of this Tower are kept all the crown jewels.

The World War Museum is equally a marvel. In these brief ten years, England has dedicated a building to this purpose and filled it with relics of the World War, including figures and paintings of celebrated officials.

Westminster Abbey is an old cathedral, a shrine of the illustrious dead. It was a distinction to visit the tombs of Tennyson, Dickens, Handel, Macauley, Isaac Newton, Isaac Watts, David Livingstone, Wordsworth, Darwin, and many other notables of the noble past. As we turned to go, daylight was fading into evening, and as we passed out we paused for a moment upon the threshold of this ancient shrine, as many millions have done before, and we wondered where are the souls of these now and what they think about it all.

Time was when serene old London invited leisurely exploration, and one could see the sights comfortably on any day of the week. Now one takes his seat in a motor coach and whizzes from one place to another in rapid succession, with a guide-lecturer to hurry things along. Having jammed five days full of seeing this enormous, fascinating, bewildering metropolis, it was a pleasant alternative on the last day of the stay and the last day of our visit to England to board a motor coach and take a drive through the country to Windsor Castle. We went by Stokes Poges old Church and Eton College. Along the way we caught a glimpse of rural England, where scenery gives a very pretty setting to some interesting old towns and where apparently romance still lingers.

At Stokes Poges old Church we stopped a while and took a few pictures. The churchyard is the burial place of Thomas Gray, who, it is said, while sitting under a yew tree, now over a hundred years old, composed his immortal elegy in which are the famous words, "Far from the madding crowd." Stokes Park, adjoining, is the home of William Penn, and a tomb marks the resting-place of this great family.

The Church itself is a historic shrine. It dates back to 1107. The private but very attractive entrance for the well-to-do people of the manors, and the special compartments for these worshippers, including spaces for all their servants, who also had the privilege of the pew, bespeaks a quaint old custom which has long since passed away. To the right of the altar there is a small room with only one entrance from the outside and no access to the auditorium. Through the wall of this room adjoining the altar, there is a little square hole. It is said that in this room lepers assembled at Church time and the hole enabled them to see the altar while they prayed.

Eton College, England's oldest and most exclusive public school, was founded by Henry VI in the year 1440, and accommodates over 1,100 pupils. It is not a college in such a sense, but it is called a college because it was intended to be a school for the training of boys from twelve to eighteen years of age for the priesthood. This school carries seventy scholarships annually, the recipients of which are quartered within the walls.

All other students live outside but with the specific requirement that each shall have a room to himself. The building itself was never fully completed, being stopped by the War of Roses. It is now just as it was originally. The seats are long benches, running clear across the room, and the desks consist of a twelve-inch board two inches thick, lying flat on upright supports. These are all splotted with spilled ink, cut and carved all over and worn sleek by the use of the ages. The old punishment block is still in the corner, and the old brush whips are still well preserved. When a boy was punished, he was stripped bare, and the strong arms of the master applied the weapon, which it is said "left a good impression behind."

The names of all who have finished this school are carved professionally on the walls in a systematic order, and among them are the names of Gladstone, Winthrop of Massachusetts, Shelly, Gray, Arthur Henry Hallam, Balfour, Howe, Walpole, Captain Scott of the South Pole exploration, and William Pitt.

The chapel itself is a noble edifice, and its interior has been from time to time beautified in various ways. It has a splendid organ and beautiful stained-glass windows. A recent removal of a wood wainscoting from the walls has uncovered works of art in fresco which must have been there from the earliest history. Also there has been found a brass lectern which has been hidden for over two centuries. It is now polished up and in use at every service. The chapel also contains many original paintings, among which is Sir Gallahad, by Watts, presented by the artist himself. This is regarded as England's greatest public school, and so popular is it that one has to be on the waiting list for years before admission is obtained. Often baby boys are enrolled at birth.

A VETERAN OF THE CROSS.

To the Editor:

It was my pleasure recently to pay a visit to Rev. Peter T. Klapp, of Elon College. I use the word "pleasure" advisedly, for there were many real pleasures connected with my visit.

Some time ago he suffered a severe fall, from which paralysis of the right side resulted; followed by unconsciousness for many days, and his physicians and close friends felt that he must very soon pass down through the valley of the shadow to the great beyond. By what seems a miracle, he is now able to sit up, read his Bible, and carry on an intelligent conversation with his friends, and his entire recovery now seems to be a possibility.

Although this veteran of the cross has passed by ten years the allotted three-score and ten years of man, and has been called to pass through various severe misfortunes in recent months, his faith is still secure and serene, his trust in God unshaken, and he is confident that "the angel of the Lord encampeth 'round about them that fear Him." After half a century of service he would gladly render more if ever able to do so. It is a benediction to be in his presence and talk with him. One feels that to him may be applied these lines:

"He liveth long, who liveth well:

All other life is short and vain;

He liveth longest who can tell

Of living most for heavenly gain."

With all the confusion and perplexity that often arises in one's mind as to human life, its meaning, its purpose, its adversities, and its disappointments, it is helpful and comforting to talk heart to heart with one whose experiences have covered a large field and who stands within view of life's sunset with brow unbowed and faith and confidence still warm and glowing, feeling through it all "I only know I cannot drift beyond His love and care."

YOUTHS' CONGRESS.

The executive board of the Youths' Congress of the Eastern Virginia Conference held a meeting at the summer cabin of Rev. W. C. Hook, at Cold Stream, W. Va., August 19th to 22nd. Those present were Rev. F. C. Lester, Misses Lillie Spain, Ophelia Harrell, Mary Sue Parker, Simon Piland and Rev. W. C. Hook.

Three matters were considered by the board, the same being resolutions passed by the late session of the Youths' Congress. The first was a resolution asking each Church with young people's organizations (including Christian Endeavor Societies, Young People's Missionary Societies, and Sunday School classes) to send two or more representatives to the congress.

The second was a resolution to make a survey for the purpose of learning what the young people from thirteen to thirty years of age are doing.

The third was a resolution suggesting that the congress get in touch with the congress or such like organizations in the Southern Christian Convention and plan, if possible, a young people's department of the Southern Christian Convention.

It was decided to ascertain the leading young people in each Church and have a meeting of the same in the Suffolk Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., September 14th. The main purpose of this meeting is to set the goals to be reached by the congress during the year 1929-'30.

It is a general conviction that the possibilities of our young people for personal development and kingdom service have barely been touched. It is the serious purpose of the leaders of this congress to find out what the young people are now doing, what it is possible for them to do, and plan for such methods and activities as will call out their latent energies and devotion and consecrate them to the service of the Church and the kingdom.

ELON COLLEGE OPENING.

Elon College opened for the fortieth annual session this week, with an enrollment of approximately the same as last year. The registration figures have held up well, in view of the acute financial depression affecting this section of the country.

The initial registration of the freshmen was above that of last year, but the registration of the old students did not quite meet the figures of last year. Many of the old students find it extremely difficult to stay in college this year.

However, in spite of these handicaps, the college expects to reach the full registration of 400 students for the year. A number of the students are returning a week or so late, after a portion of the crops can be disposed of, or after opportunity to extend their earning period to meet last-minute deficiencies in their finances.

The college has a good working student body, and is looking forward to one of its best years in results accomplished.

C. M. CANNON,

Registrar.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the North Carolina Woman's Conference will be held with the Burlington Christian Church on Friday, October 11th. This is an accessible point, and it is earnestly desired that all of our Churches and societies be represented by delegates in the conference. Every minister in the conference is invited to come.

MRS. B. H. PARIS, Secretary.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

THE YEAR IN MISSIONS.

As figures and statistics show, the past year, ending September 1st, was the best thus far in missions in the Southern Christian Convention. The amount collected for the year ending September 1, 1928, was $38,512.99. This year, ending September 1st, the total collected was $43,282.64. This was nearly $5,000 in excess of the amount given last year. While we had hoped to reach the $45,000 by the time our books closed for the fiscal year, September 1st, the conditional gift of $5,000 made us all allows us till September 30th to raise the amount. If the many Churches and Sunday Schools and individuals who have put the matter off and expected to send a donation will do so by the 30th, we will reach the $45,000 and retain the $5,000 provisional gift.

The Mission Board is meeting in Suffolk this week, and it is hoped that the report of the Secretary will be a sufficient guarantee of progress and forward movement for the coming year. We haven't reached yet the climax of our opportunity and privilege in giving to missions, nor have we learned to sacrifice, as we will learn, to the glory of His name and the furtherance of His cause.

The Mission Secretary is naturally grateful to every one who has helped, and all may be assured that the Mission Board will do their best to properly direct and administer all funds coming in to their hands to build up the kingdom of our Lord and to carry the message of His Christ to the people at home and abroad who are perishing without it.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

MISSIONARY OFFERINGS.

WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 7, 1929.

While the books of the Mission Secretary close September 1st (in order to present the report for the year to the Mission Board, which meets the second week of September each year), the time set for reaching the goal of $45,000 was September 30th. Our last report showed a total of $43,282.64, and is about $5,000 more donated to missions this year than that of last year, and thus larger than that of any previous year. While this report begins in giving items for the new fiscal year beginning September 1st, readers should bear in mind that we have only till September 30th to reach the $45,000, which means that from this date (Saturday, September 7th) we have yet to receive $1,523.04.

The Mission Secretary will certainly greatly appreciate aid of Sunday Schools, Churches and individuals, since he feels that it would be a little short of a tragedy and a very great hurt to our work not to receive the full amount of $45,000 by September 30th. Thank you, friends, one and all.

NEWS ITEMS

By MRS. W. M. JAY.

It is nearing the close of our year, and each society is checking up to see whether they have met all the requirements for the year, I am sure. Here's hoping that all the societies have had banner years and that each society and Church will have a goodly number to attend the annual conference in your respective State. Let's push hard to finish up the work and go to conference with that grand and glorious feeling of having "gone over the top."

Mrs. Y. C. Byrd, of the Liberty Spring Christian Church, sends the following interesting information: "Seeing the need to build up the Young People's Society," she took up the work, and in the last few months has added ten new members and a good attendance at meetings. They use the mission study at their regular meeting, and on the third Sunday nights they have a short program at the Church. Mrs. Byrd has recently written a missionary plan, entitled "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," and it has been given with success at Liberty Spring, Holy Neck and Berea Christian Churches. Any Church desiring a good play to present would do well to write Mrs. Byrd, Holland, Va., R. F. D. 2.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Union (Surry) Church is doing a splendid piece of work. A special program is arranged for each meeting, having the various members to take part. They were much pleased with the missionaries' pictures which were sent to the Churches. They used their pictures in a unique meeting called "moving pictures," and had some one tell of the person's work when their picture was shown. Their social committee gave them a nice watermelon feast recently, and of course a good time is reported. They expect to raise their apportionment and go "over the top" in all the goals. Their district superintendent attended their last meeting and gave them an interesting talk, and they all appreciated the honor. This is a good suggestion for all district superintendents.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Waverly Christian Church has shown a very fine spirit during the past year. They have had meetings regularly each month, with a short business session and program at each meeting. They have a good increase in membership, and during the month of April had their mission study class. Their public program was given on a Sunday night, and they showed stereopticon pictures of our work in Japan and Porto Rico. This society did a splendid thing by securing subscriptions for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and by so doing helped THE SUN and themselves, too. They are coming along well with their apportionment, and hope to have it all by Conference.

The Burton's Grove Young People's Society has had a very successful year in many ways. They have held their meetings regularly, enrolled five members, and sent their reports in full each quarter. They gave two pageants, entitled "Candle Light or Sun Light" and "Aunt Margaret's Tea," to appreciative audiences and sent one nice box to the Orphanage. They were also well represented at the district rally. These young people have an optimistic outlook on the future and are planning great things for next year. Mrs. Payton N. Gay is their efficient secretary and treasurer.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Portsmouth Christian Church recently held a splendid service in the form of a spiritual life program, and from all reports, it proved to be a wonderful program. It consisted of hymns and a five-point program, the papers being on Bible study, family altar, prayer, tithing, and spiritual life, and a large audience was present to enjoy this feast of spiritual things. This information comes through Mrs. C. F. Rudd and is a fine idea for other societies to try.

NOW THE TIME—HERE THE PLACE!

Your Church is making an effort to reach its goal for Missions this year, namely: one-third the amount of pastor's salary. If your Church, and all the other Churches, reach this goal, we will reach the total goal of $45,000 for the year ending September 30th, the amount asked of us by the Southern Christian Convention.

Will you, by an individual gift, help your Church to achieve this desired end? Now is the time! Here is the place! By a pull together, every Church can reach the goal. Help now.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XII—September 22, 1929.

MALACHI FORETELLS A NEW DAY.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Behold, I send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me."—Mal. 3:1.

LESSON: Mal. 1:1-4:6; print Mal. 3:1-12.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isa. 11:1-12.

The Messenger of Jehovah.

"Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me." The reference was undoubtedly fulfilled in John, the messenger who came before Jesus, and who prepared the way for the coming of Jesus. But there is a wider application to the prophecy, for in a sense every one of us is a messenger before the Lord, one who is to prepare the way for the coming of the King, one who makes possible the coming of the King. There is given to all of us who are Christians the responsibility for speaking not only by word of mouth but by manner of life the things that concern the King.

The Majesty of the Lord.

"But who may abide the day of his coming? And who shall stand when He appeareth?" A certain man once said that if Julius Caesar came into a room, those present would stand up in his presence, but if Jesus Christ came into a room, those present would fall on their knees before Him. Men are vain and boastful and self-sufficient when they look at things from the human standpoint only, but even those who are most vain and boastful are not able to stand before the majesty of the character and person of Jesus Christ. And those who love Him most and who have succeeded in becoming most like Him are the first to acknowledge that they cannot stand before Him in their own righteousness. Here, of course, is the norm or standard of Christian living. There is nothing that is at once so discouraging and so stimulating as to keep Jesus Christ constantly before one as his ideal; discouraging because of the seemingly hopelessness of being like Him, stimulating because one feels that by Christ's help it is possible. This is one of the supreme contributions Jesus has made to human life.

The Mercy of the Lord.

"Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord." The Jews had gone far from Jehovah. They had broken His commandments and violated His statutes, and it would appear that they had done it more or less deliberately. But here stands the Lord with Mercy unbounded inviting them to return to claim His blessing and assuring them of His forgiveness—on the grounds, of course, of the true spirit of penitence. It is always thus. If we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Robbers of God.

"Will a man rob God?" On the surface of things, one would immediately say, "No." But Jehovah indicts His people of robbery, and robbery against Him personally. And He specifically states the charge and gives the evidence in the case. His people have robbed Him, in that they have not only not paid the tithes, but they have not brought the free-will offerings. There are no two ways about it, says Jehovah, the whole nation has robbed Him.

The ugly truth is that there are millions of people, the majority of them members of the Church and professing Christians, who are robbing God by failing or refusing to honor Him with the material things which He has committed into their trust as a stewardship, and by withholding from Him not only a fair and reasonable proportion of material things, but in using selfishly their time, talents, influence, ability, and lives. Christianity is a rather inclusive thing. It touches all of life. And one never exhausts all of its applications to life when he simply accepts a few creeds or dogmas or when he performs a few rites or ceremonies.

The Dividends of Religion.

The writer of Malachi had a somewhat materialistic conception of religion. He plainly states that tithing pays. And he is right as thousands of tithers can testify. But he has not got at the heart of the matter in thus stating the matter. Religion does not, as a matter of fact, always pay from the standpoint of dollars and cents. To apply the principles of Jesus to many phases of industry and business would be to cut down dividends in many cases. But the fact remains that religion pays large and abiding dividends. The man who does wrong can never ultimately prosper in the things that have abiding value. The man who does right may be poor in material things, but he will be rich in the coin of eternal values.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, September 22, 1929.

TOPIC: "Our Part in Making a Better World." Matt. 6:10, 28:19, 20.

Some Bible Hints.

Jesus taught us to pray for a better world, for God's kingdom to come (v. 10).

The only thing that will make the world better is to know God's will and do it. All else is vain (v. 10).

To make the world better, it must be taught; men must become Jesus' pupils. Teaching calls for teachers. That is our task (v. 20).

We must go with the message of Christ to the world. Men do not come for it. It must be placed before them (v. 19).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Is the world growing better? Compare morals three centuries ago with morals today. None of us would want to go back and live in those old days.

Our first duty is to become interested in the world. If we care nothing about the world, then we shall let it alone in its misery. World-saviours must be world-lovers.

The weapon we have with which to improve the world was forged in heaven. It is the gospel. The story of Christ, if believed, will transform mankind; and men surely need transforming.

Missionaries are planting thoughts and desires in the minds of backward nations that inevitably will bear fruit in the future. The unrest of today is but the bursting of the seed, a necessary part of growth.

A Few Illustrations.

We can work for peace. The world will not be made much better as long as wars continue. And wars will continue as long as nations arm for war. Disarmament is a step in the right direction.

We can work for a better understanding between nations. Misunderstanding and hatred create wars. Christian Endeavor, by uniting the Christian youth of the world in love to Christ, is doing its bit to remove the cause of war.

We can put into public office only Christian men of high character. A drinking man as an enforcer of prohibition is a menace. Good government comes only through good men.

We can insist on better pictures in the movies, because, after all, the movies are creating ideals of life for young people today. Patronize only good pictures.

To Think About.

How can we make ourselves better?

What betterment is needed in our town?

What service is our Church rendering?

OUR JUBILEE YEAR.

TIME: Autumn A. D. 29.

PLACE: Samaria.

PERSONS: Jesus; ten Lepers.

RECORD: Luke 17:11-19.

Galilee, with all its sacred memories, has been left behind. The home of His boyhood in Nazareth has rejected Him, and His manhood's home at Capernaum, which had been "exalted unto heaven" with His presence, had refused to see in Him their spiritual Leader. It must have been a deeply depressing thing to leave the home of His childhood and manhood under such a cloud of misunderstanding and opposition. There must have been a load on His heart as He turned His back to Galilee and faced new dangers without their sympathy or help.

But the thoughts of Jesus were not inward in self-pity for His own state, but they were outward, and every sign of distress in others and every cry for help filled His heart of hearts with a response of help for body and soul.

That Other Village.

When the Samaritan villagers refused shelter to Jesus (v. 53), it is said that He "went to another village" (v. 56), and here in this other village He finds need of His ministry. No matter how Samaritans might despise Him, yet His loving life of ministry went out to all. The only question was as to the need—the one in need was His neighbor and His brother beloved. His very need made him the more so.

Ten Lepers Cry for Help.

There is hardly a more disgusting sight than that of a leper. His condition comes at last to be so vile that one cannot attempt to describe it. These vile men "stood afar off," for the law would not allow their coming near.

It is easy to love the lovely and the beautiful. It is natural to love those who are bound to you by ties of blood and association. But Jesus came and gave us the standard of loving not only because of loveliness in others or not only because of family or friendly relations, but because of need. The disease of body, mind or soul of man was a call of need to him and should be to us who profess to follow in His footsteps. George McDonald once said that "nothing so heartens a man as a cry for help," and in saying that he revealed the creed of Jesus. The "Jesus way" was to look through the unlovely exterior and see the man within the sense and minister to his need.

Go to the Priests.

Jesus respected the law, and the law said that lepers should report to the priests. They might have objected or have given the reasonable excuse that they had gone there regularly. But they had faith in that voice that something was going to happen if they obeyed. The look in that eye, the tone of that voice, that commanding presence, all was an inspiration to them, and, like Simon who "had fished all night and caught nothing," yet let down his nets on the other side at the command of the Master, so these who had been over and again to the priests, now could not resist the voice which told them to go again, and they went with hope in their hearts that something was going to happen.

And as they went, something began to happen. One by one they began to look at each other and at themselves and see and feel the dread and hated poison leaving their bodies clean and healthy. We can think of them even dancing and shouting in their joy of new life and health.

One Thankful Soul.

Of the ten, only one returned with a song on his lips and praises to God in his mouth for his cleansing. The story is so like us all in all the story of the race! We are ready enough to receive all that is good of God, but not so ready to give thanks for what we have received. We are ready to pray and cry mightily for deliverance from disease and trouble, but we are not as ready to thank God for that deliverance when it comes. The house of God and the souls of men are full of petition, but empty of praise for blessing received. We pray best when we need most. We pray least when all goes well with us. Ten men are blessed, but only one in ten praise Him who has given deliverance.

And He was a Samaritan.

This despised Samaritan returned to give praise to God, when the others (presumably) more orthodox and more godly, went their way from Jesus until another need should come, when they should be as ready again to cry for help. But this "dog of a Samaritan" had better stuff in him, and he remembered the voice which had directed him aright and had put healing in his bones.

"In men who men condemn as ill,
I find so much of goodness still."

God says that the weeding out of the tares from the wheat is not our business, but the business of His sent messengers (angels) at the last. We are too ready to judge and pass sentence on our brethren of the family of man, but this is not our business. Last week I rode twenty miles on a bus beside a man who had been a gambler for thirty-five years, and in an hour's conversation with him I found that down in the heart of that man was that which Jesus might have brought to life and light; or I might have done so if I had more of the spirit of Jesus in me. Jesus would not have seen the gambler, but He would have seen the man and his need and draw the man out of him.

Thy Faith Hath Made Thee Whole.

Jesus never did it all. God planned that it was the power of God plus the faith of man which accomplishes things. And the power of Almighty God and the very personal presence of Jesus was powerless to help thousands who came to Him because there was no faith.

Jesus not only cleansed the body from disease, but He roused the man in him, which is a bigger thing to do, no matter if we do look at it in a different way. The world disputes His physical miracles, but His greater works was in making men over. Souls are greater than bodies, and Jesus sought the souls of men. He began on their physical need, but He could not succeed fully and finally in making a man out of a creature of God without the faith of the man himself.

"Thou whose touch could heal the leper,
Make the blind to see,
Touch our hearts and turn the sinning
Into purity." —Ninde.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

The college will begin the fall term Wednesday, September 11, 1929, with the following faculty: Rev. S. L. Beougher, B. D., M. A., Ph.D., president and professor of Bible and philosophy; Buford Jennings, B. S., dean and professor of mathematics and chemistry; Rev. G. S. Hunt, A.

B., coach and professor of French and biology; Rev. G. H. Veazey, A. B., chaplain and professor of religious education and biology; Miss Helen B. Potter, A. B., professor of English, history and education; Mrs. E. H. Pearson, B. M., professor of piano and voice; Mrs. P. M. Beougher, A. B., barsar.

Piedmont Junior College is an accredited co-educational institution, offering the following courses: English, French, mathematics, history, Bible, religious education, biology, chemistry, education, music, domestic science and commercial work.

We are expecting a very fine opening. Most of our old students will be back, as they consider it not only an opportunity but a privilege to have such an institution right in their midst. Our library will be doubled, and we will have a better-equipped laboratory than last year.

It is the definite purpose of this college to bring education, with a high standard of scholarship, within the reach of young people of limited means, yet with a standard so high and a spirit so helpful that the wealthy will seek its advantages.

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

WHY I BELIEVE IN GOD.

The Church is the most important stabilizing element in the world society at this moment of world-wide unrest.

The Church is the channel through which the ruling moral ideals of the present age of mankind have flowed into men's hearts.

The Church is custodian of the only offer made any where on earth of a power sufficient to save sinning men from their sin.

The Church concentrates in its members and adherents a larger aggregate desire for righteousness than any other fellowship of men.

The Church is the source of the greatest benevolent generosity and the largest missionary ideals that look today to the general welfare of mankind.

The Church counts more heavily than any other social influence for morally serious home life and a practical parental responsibility for the moral character of the generation now in childhood.

The Church, by its history, its inherent character, and the potentialities of its personnel, offers a far more promising hope of regenerative power equal to the need of the world than any other institution, actual or imagined, that everybody ever proposed to substitute for it.

Finally, there stands unshaken after nineteen centuries the proclamation of Christ that the Church cannot be overthrown by even the wickedest powers of death and hell. It is in actually the Church of the ever-living God.

Criticize the Church, then, as truth demands; But do not let yourself for a moment cease to love it, Nor to believe in it.

—The Continent.

Prayer.—Lord, help us poor sinners to see and understand the true values of the Church and give our lives to its supreme callings. Amen.

TUESDAY.

CONSECRATION.

Be "Instant in season and out of season."—2 Tim. 2:4.

Consecration is the next step after conversion. Having repented and received grace, we dedicate our lives to Him and the principles of His kingdom.

Consecration is like conversion, in that it is a process (growth) unto an attainment. The realization of conversion may be very sudden with some, but in reality it is not sudden at all—it is the attainment of much growth of feeling, of thought, of teaching, which suddenly breaks into reality.

A blaze of lightning which bursts out of a thunder cloud is instantaneous, but that was the result of gathering of clouds and rising temperature and other things. The clock strikes only when it reaches the hour, but the whole machinery has worked through sixty minutes to make it strike. The dam burst in the flood, but it took a lot of rain and filling to make the dam break.

The clock struck when Paul was converted on his way to Damascus, but the wheels of truth had been going round a long time. Christ's unseen hand had been laid upon Paul much before that. He had felt it, but had hardened himself against it and shaken it off. It was now that Christ knocked him down and he gave in. He could not "kick against the pricks any longer."

Saul realized then that God had laid hold of him and yoked him to a higher service. He then cried, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" This was his consecration. A transformed soul, says Lord.

In this realization he looks at things from the Lord's standpoint. That was the beginning of his consecration, which was to grow like conversion until God's work was accomplished in him; and when he exhorted his brother to be "Instant in season and out of season," he meant that under all circumstances be loyal, true, vigilant and "covet earnestly the best gifts." It is the everyday earnestness in these things and subordinating everything of subordinate character to the end in view. If not the act of dedication in the beginning amounts to nothing.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, reveal the things of Christ to us, that we may do Thy will. Consecrate our hearts in a way that we may have deepest insight into the deep things of life and Thy kingdom. Increase our faith, our loyalty, and our knowledge of Thy kingdom, that we may be perfected in Thy presence at last. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

IS A LIE EVER JUSTIFIABLE?

"Neither shall ye deal falsely, nor lie one to another."—Lev. 19:11.

"Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord."—Psa. 12:22.

"He that uttereth lies shall perish."—Prov. 10:9.

If a man's conception of the truth is so capricious that he is willing, whenever the price seems to be sufficient, to betray it, what do you think of him? If a man will lie, how much will you depend on him?

There are circumstances when to save another from pain or misery, one thinks he is justified in telling a lie. But how can any one know when the circumstances justify the enormity of a lie? One party thinks he needs to know the truth at any cost. The other thinks it is best to lie. Who is to be the judge? The fact is, that when one thinks he must lie, he takes over the whole foundation of truth, of good society, of God's laws, and places it upon an individual unreliable basis of selfish virtue, and all evidence in the history of the world is most convincing that such a foundation is quicksand.

For instance, suppose one tells a lie to save his loved one from pain—what will happen when it is known? It has only tended to postpone pain.

A doctor may lie to save his patient a few hours or days of life. Has he a right to do so? Most folks want to know when they are about to go. Life is not the richest possession. Men die for their country, for honor; why not for truth? It is false that a man must live. It is only the devil's claim that we must.

The following principle is good guidance: There can be no good character which does not rest on solid foundation. There can be no solid foundation of truth which is handled carelessly and is replaced by the false at the discretion of conscienceless people. The code of mankind from the beginning of the world has always been that truth is right and lying is wrong. It is from the wrong Jesus came to save humanity.

It matters not what the occasion for lying. It has been truly said that one never feels half so well after a lie.

"O what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to deceive."

Prayer.—Dear God, give us courage to fear no consequences of the truth. Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHAT MUST I DO?

"What must I do to be saved?"

This is a question which it is believed comes to every one. There is one way to answer it. This question of the Philipian jailer was born out of the joyful tribulation of Paul and silas. The jail was a place of misery and cursings, with little that had the semblance of peace, much less the spirit of God. The soul that can sing and be glad amidst such misery as these saints now suffered must have something divine, and this appealed to the jailer with a vengeance. No doubt, this feeling was basic with the jailer, rather than his anxiety for his safety. When the fear of his life fell upon him, he fell back upon the good he saw in the apostles. Then, with the instruction he got, he came into the knowledge of salvation and embraced it.

What if all Christians sincerely practiced their faith at all times and under all circumstances? It would almost bring heaven to earth. Others would be impelled to recognize the vital life of God and do as the jailer did—surrender to God themselves.

What must I do? Maybe I do not need to be converted like the jailer, but, as a professed Christian, I need to live the life in all sincerity, without hypocrisy. If I do not, I am a guilty soul. If I do, I shall not only save my own soul, but my life will be convincing others of the verity of God, Christ and religion.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we believe. Help, Thou, our unbelief. We believe Thy glory is lost in insincerity and unfaithful living. Keep, Thou, our souls on spirit to faithfulness. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WHAT SALVATION IS NOT.

"I come not to bring peace, but a sword."—Matt. 10:34.

Whatever salvation is, it is not God's wrath. It is true, it appears, that Jehovah, in patriarchal days, meant God of war, vengeance, etc., but Christ gave us a new conception. This new law is love, and whatever He does is to achieve that love and not restitution. His bolts are hurled not in vengeance as men retaliate. He does not delight in destruction. If He smites, it is to heal and not to kill. When His sword is drawn it glitters with lightning, but it has the glow of the sunrise on its blade.

It is not penalty. Every sin carries with it the seed of its own penalty, and if one sins the consequences are as certain as the hole in a plank where a nail has been driven. It is because this penalty is not speedily executed that man continues to sin, forgetting that he must reap what he sows. We love to play with the thrill of Niagara as long as we escape the plunge of the rapids. We love to gratify our desire for thrills if we can escape the price. But according to God's law, it cannot be done.

Prayer.—Our Father, save us from unconsciously incurring the penalty of everlasting shame. Grant us Thy penalty to follow Jesus, who took the penalty and bore the shame that we might know His grace and be forgiven. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WHAT SALVATION IS.

"He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."—Matt. 10:39.

Since man's guilt is so enormous, Christ had to set the whole plan of salvation in His grace of forgiveness to have all sins blotted out of the life of him who comes to Him. Thus, salvation

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Last week was one busy week at the Christian Orphanage. The boys put one hundred tons of silage corn in the silo. This amount of corn was produced on twelve acres of land. Eleven years ago this same twelve acres of land produced seventy-five bushels of wheat—six and one-half bushels to the acre. This shows what can be done by careful handling of a piece of land and rotating crops, etc. If nothing happens, in a few more years the Orphanage will have a farm in a high state of cultivation. Some may say that it was quite a lot of silage to grow on twelve acres of land; but when you take into consideration that this field of corn was thick in the row and averaged from ten to fifteen feet high, you can get some idea as to the quantity that can be produced on an acre of ground. This means milk and butter for the children for the next year.

Then, during the same week our boys unloaded and hauled into our three buildings a car of coal and cut twelve acres of hay. You see, our Orphanage boys enjoy real work! We have forty-five acres of excellent soy-bean hay to mow and cure and haul to the hay-loft. We are hoping to have clear weather in which to cure it.

We now have one hundred and twenty boys and girls in the Christian Orphanage, and twenty-five applications, and funds are running very low. In the thirteen years we have had charge, we have financed the Orphanage so we have never had to go to the bank and borrow money for running expenses. If our Churches will stand by us loyally this fall, we hope to pull through again; but it looks a little doubtful at this writing.

We are hoping and praying that we will have a splendid Thanksgiving offering this coming Thanksgiving, in order to place us on a good financial basis. If our Sunday Schools and friends who have been contributors toward the support of this institution for all these years could have been here on "Home-Coming Day" and looked into the faces of the fine young men and women who had been reared here and had "come home" for the occasion, they would have felt proud of the investment which they had made in this institution from time to time.

means freedom from guilt through that grace. It means we love Him. It awakens in one a sense of what one might have done, and inspires every possible effort to correct a bad past. It centers interest in others and the general welfare of them. It turns one's thoughts and actions to the right. By growth (development), it shapes such effort, if persisted in, into Christian characters.

Prayer.—Dear Father, our God, we thank Thee that we may so live in Christ that we are honored with the name, "a child of God," who will inherit the crown of glory in heaven. We pray for the power to attain this. In Christ's name, we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

A POWERFUL THING TO SAY.

"Believe."—Acts 16:31.

When the Philipian jailer cried unto Paul for salvation, Paul might have replied, "Let us out of here and God bless you." Who wouldn't have said that? But it seems that that was not uppermost in his mind. Paul was living for salvation. He was in prison for salvation. Whether in jail or not, it seems to have been of little consequence to him compared to his purpose and the opportunity it afforded. Thus, when he had a chance to say something seriously to this jailer, he said, "Believe." In other words (in slang of today), "get rid of what's the matter with you." As soon as this man professed faith and surrendered to instruction in the way of the Lord, he was saved, he and all his house.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we must acknowledge that the path of glory to many of Thy people has been through contumely, persecution, tribulation. Let it be our honor to become like Jesus. Let our comfort be that He has preceded us on their path, and let this be our strength that the Scripture may be fulfilled in us. Amen.

WHAT IS COLLEGE FOR?

lightful milium in which to form friendships for life. And it is out of the crucible of this experience that friendships have been formed which have molded life and determined destiny.

These friendships very naturally are formed first of all between the students themselves, but oftentimes the most fruitful friendships are those which arise between faculty members and students, in which the wisdom of age and learning combine with the enthusiasm and charm of youth in the sharing of experience, in the understandings of the heart—friendships that years of separation in the uttermost parts of the earth have not been able to sever or even to diminish.

Let me speak a word of caution at this point. You must, of course, choose your friendships. Be sure that they are worthy of your best and refrain from giving comfort to the mistaken notion that the members of the faculty of your college are your natural enemies. Believe rather that friendships with members of the faculty are highly desirable, desirable equally with friendships with fellow-students, and that a well-rounded life in college required friendships in both groups. I can assure you that you will find the faculty members of this college anxious to counsel with you in respect to any matter, sympathetically anxious to co-operate with you in meeting any problem which you may bring to their attention. Do not approach them in a fawning or obsequious manner, but as you would your parents, your aunts and uncles, your elder brothers and sisters, and you will find a hearty response. Failure to cultivate friendship in college is a serious mistake, and will depreciate the value of the college experience for any one who is guilty of such neglect.

4. College is pre-eminently a situation in which new loyalties develop. It would perhaps be nearer the truth to say that college is a situation in which new loyalties multiply, so thick and fast and compelling are the causes which would enthrone us in their embrace and make us willing victims of their aims and ambitions. Before we know it, we are loyal to our room-mate, to our class-mates, to the informal social groupings in which we are thrown constantly, to our literary societies, to the college athletic teams, to the social clubs formally organized, to the religious associations and organizations of the campus, to the college newspaper, to the college annual, to the informal discussion groups, to the spirit of the campus itself, not to mention dozens of other causes that appeal to us for our loyal support. The beauty of this multiplicity of loyalties is that it in no sense weakens that sense of devotion and loyalty which we feel for home and for causes which have previous to our college experience made their compelling appeals to our hearts. The chiefest loyalty, of course, growing out of the college experience is that which knits the heart of the student to his alma mater. It is a beautiful custom which makes of our college a foster-mother. From the warmth and enthusiasm of that sentiment which spiritualizes the concept of college and conceives it in terms of motherhood, there springs forth a gripping loyalty that binds the student to his alma mater with bonds of affection that time cannot weaken and separation cannot loosen. One of the most beautiful scenes of a college commencement is to witness the devotion and affection of the returning graduates to the shrine at which they learned to think high thoughts and to dream the dreams that have meant for them achievement and success. It is not easy for us now on the threshold of our college career to understand the enthusiastic loyalty of the alumni of a college for their alma mater, but twenty-five years from now it will be far different. The intensity of your spirit of loyalty a quarter of a century from now will be conditioned upon the response of your heart to the causes associated with your alma mater as they appeal to you for your loyal and enthusiastic support during your college days.

5. College not only develops loyalties, but it engenders love. During the happy days of the college experience, we not only become loyal to the groups with which we are associated and of which we are a part, but we come to love them, to embrace them with hearty affection. Unconsciously these causes and loyalties enthrone themselves in our sentiments, and as a consequence even the mention of the name of our alma mater or of some cause or organization connected with our alma mater brings a flood of emotional satisfaction no matter where we may be or under what circumstances the memory of former days and experiences may be brought to our attention. So devoted in our affection do we become to the college which has instructed and nurtured us, that the meeting of some person who has had a similar privilege, though at a different time, becomes the

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance.

In size, 3 3/8 x 4 1/2 inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

Holman Jewel Testament

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2 1/2 x 3 1/4 inches x 3/4 inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2 1/2 x 3 1/4 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

occasion of the renewal of happy experiences and of the rehearsal of joyous scenes that cannot be forgotten. Love, after all, arising out of the emotions and deeply rooted in our sentiments, is the principal characteristic of the human heart.

Give reign, therefore, to the cultivation of love for your college and all that goes with it. Love the campus, love the flowers and shrubbery of the campus, love the walkways and driveways and the grass of the campus, love the wall that surrounds it, love its trees and its squirrels and its birds, love its buildings and their equipment, love its faculty and its students. Let love be the supreme passion of the heart in its response to your college experience, and happy and gracious will be the consequence of that experience in the development of Christian character.

6. Reference has already been made to the fact that college is an opportunity to discover the meanings inherent in our present experience and in terms of the experience of the past. We used to think that students went to college to acquire information, but now we know that they devote themselves to study in order to understand the processes of life and their consequences. Progress would be impossible for the human race if it could not benefit by the experience of the past. Progress would be impossible in individual life if a man could not benefit by all personal past experience, if he could not derive meanings from those experiences, personal and racial, and utilize them as controls for his conduct and as the bases of his decisions and judgments for situations untried. So, likewise, it would benefit us little to know of the experiences of the past unless we could extract from them their meanings and bring those meanings to bear upon the solution of our own problems from whatever source they may arise. When it happens, therefore, that one of our greatest philosophers tells us that education is a reconstruction of experience in terms of the meanings of life derived from the experience of others, we may rest assured that he has given us the golden key that will unlock for us the mysteries of human progress and that will likewise make clear the highways along which that same progress is to proceed hopefully in the centuries to come. That group of seniors, therefore, who last year decided that the college should discover for us the meanings inherent in personal and racial experience were wiser perhaps than they knew in the conclusion to which they came.

7. But these meanings of experience need to be organized into programs of action. They need to be generalized into a philosophy of life. One of America's greatest educators has said that the college graduate who is not able to sit in judgment on the things that he has learned and out of his findings through such judgment to construct for himself a consistent philosophy of life is not an educated man, but an ignoramus, no matter how much knowledge he may have acquired or how well informed he may be with reference to the facts and tendencies of life.

We need, therefore, to have time in college to meditate on the meanings we shall derive from a consideration of personal and racial experience. We shall need time to think through to their ultimate conclusions the meanings that we have discovered as inherent in experience. We shall need time to organize these discovered meanings into a consistent and satisfying philosophy of life. And may I add this word, that no philosophy of life can be sound and satisfying which neglects the religious and spiritual values of life?

The college experience, therefore, is a challenging one, in that it puts responsibility on the individual student to make choices for himself, in that it widens the horizons of life, in that it lends itself to the forming of friendships, in that it develops loyalties, in that it engenders love, in that it discovers meanings from the experiences of the individual and of former generations, and in that it offers a choice opportunity of organizing and generalizing those meanings into a helpful and satisfying philosophy of life. I trust that the college experience of every member of the class of 1933 be replete and abundant in these seven helpful and wholesome contributions offered by the college to those who take seriously their opportunity for study and advancement.

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

The annual series of revival services began at Bethlehem Christian Church August 25th, with the Rev. Joseph Macauley breaking the bread of life. It seems that he was the man for the place, and that there is not another who could have been more appreciated by the people. His messages were very forceful, clear and to the point. Interest was high all the week, attendance was good, and many Christians were drawn nearer to Jesus, while others were regenerated, and some found Christ precious to their souls for the first time.

It was a great revival, and may the influence thereof last throughout eternity. Three were received into the Church by confession, and four by letter. The ordinance of baptism will be administered September 8th, at 3 o'clock P. M., by the pastor, at Norfleet's mill pond.

OBITUARIES.

TUCK.

James William Tuck, son of Amanda and Edward I. Tuck, was born in Halifax County, Va., May 5, 1871, and died in Birmingham, Ala., August 16, 1929, age 58 years, 3 months, and 11 days. The deceased when a young man went to Birmingham and worked as a skilled mechanic. He never married. Three years ago his health began failing, and for seven months prior to death he was in the Ensley Sanitarium.

His body was brought back to Virginia, Va., and placed in Union Christian Church, where he worshiped when a boy and where his ancestors for generations had worshiped. Many relatives and friends came to view the remains. The funeral was from the Church at 11 A. M., August 20th, and the burial in Old Union Cemetery.

He is survived by one brother, Sergeant Mac Tuck, of Clarksville, Va., and three sisters—Mrs. Ida Wilkins, Mrs. Ada Williamson, and Mrs. Rosa Hobbgood. One sister, Mrs. Thomas Tuck, of Virginia, Va., died about ten years ago.

Bro. Tuck was of a friendly disposition, and made friends wherever he went. While his years of decline were spent far from home and people, friends there were kind and rendered every needed attention.

STANFIELD.

Little Lester Stanfield was called from a Christian home to be at a better place August 17, 1929, 1:45 A. M., after a few days' suffering with infantile paralysis. He was born October 11, 1918.

The funeral service was conducted from the home of the deceased on Third Ave-nu, by the writer, assisted by Rev. Charlie Young, of Greensboro, and Rev. O. A. Guinn, of Danville, after which the remains were laid to rest at the family burying ground, near Whitmill.

He leaves, to mourn his loss, father, mother, five sisters and two brothers and a host of friends. The large crowd that attended the services and the large number of floral designs were a token of the esteem and love the people had for him.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

INVESTIGATION OF PROPAGANDA.—

Senatorial investigations, in the main, have not a very brilliant record for having achieved much that was worth while. But it is earnestly to be hoped that the present senatorial investigation of navy propaganda will not be permitted to lag until it has gotten to the bottom of the facts in the case. The question of the limitations of armament and naval strength is one which concerns every one. It is important as it affects the future peace of the world; and it has an interest for every individual who pays taxes, either directly or indirectly, which means all of us.

The present investigation has grown out of a suit instituted by William B. Shearer against certain shipbuilding corporations. Shearer is suing for $300,000, which he claims is due him for services rendered at the 1927 Geneva Conference on Naval Limitations. Shearer claims to have gone as the paid representative of these companies to work against any limitation of naval equipment. Shearer also claims to have carried with him certain information which he had received from officials of the Navy Department which he was to use in his publicity campaign for bigger and more expensive navies.

There have been many charges and counter-charges. A few weeks ago a naval officer, of high rank, made the accusation that the publicity campaign that was being carried on by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, in the advocacy of peace and the limitation of armaments, was being financed by British money. He charged that the Federal Council was the tool of British propagandists. The charge was effectively answered at the time it was made. But should the Senate committee decide to investigate both sides of the issue, such an investigation would be welcomed by those who are working in the interests of peace and reduction of the tax burden.

However, in the light of the increasing activity of the Church and religious organizations in questions of political and social significance, it is well to recognize the fact that there are those who would not hesitate to secure the support of the Church for their own private and individual ends. Church and State have been permanently separated as to organization in this country. But as affairs are now going in this country, it is going to require wisdom of the highest order to prevent the Church being drawn into entangling alliances that will work out to the detriment of the spiritual interests of the Church.

WEEKLY GIVING.—

There is no better plan for the financing of the enterprises of the kingdom than that laid down in the New Testament. "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him," was the injunction of St. Paul to the Corinthian Church. There are three important principles laid down in this command. The first is that giving for the work of the kingdom is to be one a weekly basis. The second is that giving is an obligation that rests upon every member of the Church. Paul says every one of you. And the third is to the effect that all giving is to be in proportion to the prosperity which God has bestowed upon the individual.

It needs to be recalled that the first day of the week which is referred to is our Sunday. Already the Church had departed from the old Jewish custom of worshiping on the seventh day, and were holding their religious gatherings on the first day of the week in recognition of the Lord's resurrection. This can mean but one thing, viz: that their gifts were to be a part of their worship. It had to do with the memorable event which they were celebrating on the first day of the week. If it were intended as being merely a part of the summing up of the business transactions of the week, it would not have been scheduled for the day that was being given over to holy things. No Christian has entered into the fullness of his birthright until he has made his giving a recognized part of his service to his Lord.

There is also occasion to emphasize the fact that every one should have a part in this expression of love for the Christ. It is a strange fact that we bitterly resent being counted out of every thing except the collection. That is due to the fact that we have been thinking of the collection purely as an obligation, and not as a privilege. The fact that some are having no part in carrying on the work of the kingdom not only makes it hard for the few who are not willing that the kingdom shall suffer lack, but it also means that the spiritual lives of those who are not having their share are being dwarfed and stunted.

And the last and most important fact of all is that the individual is called upon to measure and test his life in terms of the divine rather than the human. This is a truth that runs all through the Bible. But somehow it seems very difficult for men to apply this truth to their lives. We are constantly measuring our lives by what others are doing and saying. Man's relation to man is important, but man's relation to God is more important. It is absurd to measure one's love and loyalty to one's God by either the liberality or selfishness of another man.

THE U. S. OF EUROPE.—

There has been no more challenging proposal made in recent years than that which was recently suggested, that the various nations and countries of Europe organize into the "United States of Europe." In so far as the proposal has been defined, it is to organize the countries of Europe into a federation similar to the United States of America, with some form of centralized control which will harmonize and direct their common interests. One of the outstanding ideas is the economic proposal to do away with the tariff barriers which have been erected between these countries.

The first reaction is to think instinctively of all the difficulties which of necessity must stand in the way of the perfecting of such an organization. It must be admitted that they are many. There are the age-old differences of racial origins. There are the suspicions and bitterness which have been accumulated through many wars. There are the barriers of language, which always make it difficult for people who speak different languages to arrive at a satisfactory basis of agreement in their thinking. There are the ancient traditions of each nation which must be reckoned with. The force of tradition is never realized until a course is launched which runs counter to traditions.

It is not difficult to find reasons why such a proposal should challenge consideration. The economic advancement and prosperity which has come about in the United States of America is bound to make an impression upon poverty-stricken Europe. The policy of isolation which the party in power in the United States of America has constantly emphasized and adhered to since the close of the war has forced Europe to the realization that she must consider her own interests as against the policy of her creditor in the West. The refusal of the United States to officially sanction and enter the League of Nations and the World Court must have made a deep impression upon the European nations which were trying desperately to find a way out of their difficulties. Then there is the bill to revise the tariffs upward which is now pending in the United States Congress, which will impose an added burden upon Europe if it is adopted.

The first reaction to the proposal is to pronounce it impossible of achievement. But then this fact must be remembered, our age is the age in which the impossible is being achieved. When it is recalled that many times in the organization of our own Federal government, it looked as if the difficulties were insurmountable, and yet a way was found; there is hope for Europe to find a way to effect a closer unity if it is really desired. The greatest barrier that has ever stood in the way of organizing and maintaining large political governmental organizations has been lack of mediums of quick communication and quick transportation. This barrier has been completely broken down in modern times. Given a sufficiently strong motive for unity and the determination to achieve it, there is practically no limit beyond which modern organization and administration may not go.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. Alfred W. Hurst was duly and with appropriate ceremony installed as pastor of the Elon College Church on Sunday, September 15, 1929.

Dr. W. C. Wicker, Elon College, has been called to the pastorate of Pleasant Grove Church, Halifax County, Va., beginning with the close of the present Conference year.

Rev. T. Fred Wright, Paces, Va., has been called to and has accepted, we are advised, the pastorate of our Sanford Church, beginning his residence and work at Sanford at the close of the present Conference year.

It was recently stated in THE SUN that Rev. J. E. Franks had accepted the pastorate of New Elam Church. Bro. Franks advises that this was a mistake, and that, so far as he knows, nothing has been said officially to this end. We regret we were erroneously advised in the matter.

New money for missions still comes in and is greatly appreciated. It is a good and timely thing to consecrate to kingdom service the first bill received of the new issue. Rev. Joe French, Broadway, Va., is having "Dollar-Day Sunday" in his Churches at an early date. Franklin, Va., had such an event in its Sunday School recently and sent in, as a result, seventy-one new dollars.

The women of the North Carolina Woman's Christian Conference are planning a splendid program for their annual session, which is to convene with Burlington Christian Church Friday, October 11th. The theme the women have adopted for their annual missionary conference at Burlington, N. C., is "To Know Him and to Make Him Known." Some of the subjects to be presented under this theme are "Knowing Him Through the Bible," "Knowing Him Through Prayer," "Making Him Known Through the Elon Summer School," "Making Him Known Through the Sunday School," and "Through Mission Study Books," etc. The women desire and hope for the presence of every pastor in the two North Carolina Conferences and in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference.

We print elsewhere a brief poem from the hand and heart of our good friend and former schoolmate John A. Oates, Fayetteville, N. C. We knew John as an earnest student in college, as a faithful citizen of the State, and as a man who led the prohibition forces to great success, as head of the Anti-Saloon League in this State, when the State, by an overwhelming majority several years ago, voted for State-wide prohibition; but we had not known him heretofore as a poet. However, no man could write "The Wondrous Pageant" who had not, through the years, had a deep sense of the presence and power of God and who had not sought through the years to live a life of close contact with God. We wish that our readers may, every one of them, note carefully the sublime implications of "The Wondrous Pageant" and to realize with Bro. Oates that in our lives and in this universe of the great good things about us there "is an all-directing God."

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Henderson, N. C., known throughout our Southern Convention as the capable and efficient secretary of Christian Education, has resigned that position and has accepted the position as religious education worker for the Congregationalists of Florida, with headquarters in Jacksonville. Her address will be 117 West Forsyth Street, Jacksonville, Fla. Miss Coghill will go to Daytona Beach September 30th for a three-day meeting with Florida Congregational ministers and their wives, and will then begin her active work in behalf of the young people in Florida. We are not losing—the Christian Church cannot lose the fellowship, the asset, and the services of Miss Coghill, since she is so thoroughly identified in spirit and in heart with the work, especially with the young people in our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the Southern Convention. She only enters a different field in the same work, and will, by her gripping public messages and agreeable personality, win the young people in the Congregational Churches in Florida to a more willing and active service for the Master and for the kingdom. She carries with her into her new field of activity the good will and the best wishes of our entire Convention.

BETHEL.

Our revival services began at Bethel, Wake County, August 25th, and closed the 29th of August, 1929. The attendance at each service was encouraging. Interest was very good from beginning to end. Rev. J. S. Carden, Durham, N. C., one of our beloved pastors, was with us and did the preaching in an acceptable way. He had served as pastor of Bethel eighteen years ago. Remarks by those who had heard him were to the effect that Bro. Carden improves with age and experience.

Bro. Carden's messages were of a high spiritual type and were food for the soul. His stay was very pleasant, and it renewed and formed friendships. Bro. Carden is a consecrated man to the ministry and a soul-winner for his Christ. May the Lord bless his labors of love wherever he goes.

The Church was encouraged and strengthened because of the meeting. A splendid co-operative spirit existed in the community, which we greatly appreciate. There were many reconsecrations, seven professions of faith in Christ, and five additions to the local Church and perhaps more to join later.

We enjoyed the meeting and thank the good Lord for the blessings received. We hope all will live faithful to professions of faith and reach a home in heaven. L. L. WYRICK, Pastor.

RICHLAND, GA.

We had a great meeting at Rock Springs, receiving eleven members, all being baptized. Rev. J. H. Dollar, Reidsville, N. C., did the preaching in an inspiring and effective way. The Dollar reunion was held at the Church on Thursday of the revival and was voted an annual affair, to be held at the Church on Thursday after the second Sunday in August.

We began our revival at Red Hill, August 18th, and closed the night of the 23rd. We received six members. Rev. M. B. Brown, of the Baptist Church, did most of the preaching. Bro. Brown was born and reared in this old Church, but moved away and united with the Baptist. The revival reminded me of "home-coming." The people spoke often of the "good old days" when Dr. Jubilee Smith, Rev. J. D. Elder, Rev. H. W. Elder, and others used to hold great revivals.

Red Hill is a memorable place to many. The present building was erected before the Civil War and served as a Church and Masonic lodge. Later the second story was taken off and a new roof put on. During this year new weatherboarding, new windows and doors were put in, and painting done inside and outside. The old wooden blocks that supported it were removed and replaced with brick pillars. It is now in good shape to serve another generation. Most of the old members have moved away, but there are a great many children in the community. Their greatest need is an active, consecrated pastor on the field. I am resigning October 1st.

We are in the midst of a revival at Richland, Ga., at this date (August 27th), and Rev. J. D. Dollar is doing the preaching in a very effective way. We are having the hearty co-operation of the other Churches in the town. The membership is small, but no pastor has a more loyal band to work with. This Church feels very keenly their loss on account of the affliction of their beloved former pastor, Rev. H. W. Elder. He organized the Church and built the present magnificent brick edifice in which we now worship. He was carried back to the hospital at Plains, Ga., this morning. He is very feeble. His loved ones and friends are not expecting him to be with them much longer without a great change for the better.

THE SUN LETTER.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN in every home is our goal. Of course this is quite an undertaking, but it can be done. The circulation manager cannot do it alone; the editor or the managing editor cannot. It will take the hearty co-operation of the entire Church. Every member of the Church should be loyal to the Church paper, because it means so much to our denomination. If our people would only take and read it! We now have about twenty-eight hundred on our mailing list. Suppose these twenty-eight hundred would get just one new subscriber and also send in their own renewal—that would give us five thousand, six hundred on our mailing list. Counting five to the family, we ought to have about six thousand families in our Southern Convention. This would put THE SUN in most of our homes. Then all of our people would learn of the institutions of our denomination and they would come to their rescue and our denomination would grow as never before. Let every member of our Church help us get new subscribers for THE SUN—only $2.00 per year.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Elon College, N. C. Circulation Manager.

THE WONDROUS PAGEANT.

I watch the crimson daybreak and the rising of the sun,

I watch the far-flung painting when the busy day is done—

The quiet of the evening and the coming of the stars,

I hear the tinkling cowbells across the meadow bars.

I smile back at the daisy and greet the goldenrod,
For behind this wondrous pageant is an all-directing God.

The sunrise songster warbles a waking song for me

As he sings his wondrous solo of nature's liberty;
The field mouse scampers wildly beside the quiet trail,

And the unseen lily blossoms far in the darkened vale.

There's glory running riot where man has never trod,

For behind this wondrous pageant is an all-directing God.

The crimson rose runs rambling along the garden wall,

The world is full of beauty and the sky is over all;
The daylight brings us happiness, and the twilight brings us rest,

Each day is full of glory, but tomorrow is the best.
'Tis more than passing picture; 'tis more than earthly clod,

For behind this wondrous pageant is an all-directing God.

THE BASIC PRINCIPLES OF LIFE.

BY PRESIDENT W. A. HARPER.

(Opening address to Elon College students, delivered September 8, 1929.)

"We are severally members one of another."—Rom. 12:5.

Social solidarity is the watchword of our day. We have become accustomed to think in universal terms. Our practice, however, does not comport with our philosophy, for while we use the language of brotherhood, we practice the creed of paganism. It has always been thus. The prophets and the seers have ever lived in the vanguard of progress, far in advance of the oncoming host.

It is all but impossible today to take up a book or a magazine or to attend a public gathering where groups of men and women have assembled to consider ultimate issues of life, in which emphasis will not be given to the common interests that bind men together in their social strivings and aspirations. We speak so glibly of the social gospel and of human brotherhood and of the universal fellowship of the human race, that the impression grows upon the thoughtful listener that we are prone to use words in the place of achievements, to call our hopes our facts, and to believe that the announcement of ideals means the realization of our dreams and aspirations.

Men, however, have not always looked upon humanity as a brotherhood, and they have not always regarded life as a fellowship. Its relations they have at times accepted as accidental. Shakespeare, for example, looked upon life as a stage, and upon the individual man as a player on that stage. Manifestly, in such a situation the relations between the individual actors in the play are temporary and without abiding significance. There are those today who look upon their brethren as pawns, useful for the particular moment or need, and to be discarded when the occasion for their usefulness has passed.

The Apostle Paul twice speaks of life as a race. He enjoins the Hebrews, whom he was anxious to win to the Christian standards of life, to run with patience the race that was set before them. And in writing to the Corinthians, who were thoroughly acquainted with athletic contests, he reminds them that those who "run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize." He then urges them to run in such a way that they may obtain and reminds them that every athlete must be temperate in all things, that he may win a corruptible crown. How much more, therefore, ought those who profess to be Christians to be temperate in all things, that they may win an incorruptible crown, is the lesson which he draws from the Isthmian games to which the Corinthians were so completely devoted! Paul, however, was not satisfied with this figure. Only one athlete could win in a contest, and he wanted every Christian to come out victorious in the race of life.

He, therefore, in writing to his friend, Timothy, resorts to another figure to express his conception of life. He conceives it as a battle. He says to Timothy, "I have fought a good fight." And in another instance he enjoins this same friend to "fight the good fight of faith." Evidently Paul was not pleased with this figure either, because he realized that his Master came as the Prince of Peace and enjoined his followers not only to love their friends, but to love their enemies as well. To think, therefore, of the Christian life as a warfare was to think of it in un-Christian terms.

Today, however, this figure represents the actual practice of the great majority. We find business organized on a competitive basis; we find labor and capital contesting with each other; we find nations organized especially to promote the economic welfare of particular groups of men as against the economic welfare of the human race. We even find the Church of Christ divided up into competitive groups which we call denominations, a situation which has been aptly described as the scandal of Christianity. It is a generally accepted principle that the individual man will act in line with his own selfish interests rather than bestir himself to promote the happiness and well-being and success of his brethren when in conflict with his own narrow, selfish interests.

Evidently, though, a happier situation is in the offing. For we not only have a League of Nations to which all but four nations of the earth belong, but the nations of the world have agreed with each other to outlaw war and have formally renounced it as a method of settling international disputes. The day will come when the nations will beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, and when the modern devices of scientific warfare will be used as instrumentalities for promoting human life rather than as engines for its destruction. The time will come, too, undoubtedly, when industry and government and individual life and all the social institutions, which serve life, will be organized co-operatively rather than competitively. Then the lamb and the lion will lie down together and the lamb will not be inside the lion. That day is surely coming and will be evidence that the spiritual state of men affects even the most ferocious animals. No man can be a Christian, and his dog and cat and horse not find it out.

The apostle Paul foresaw this, and evidently gave up his figure of life as a race and his further figure of life as a battle, and came to think of it rather as a brotherhood. We find him stating this most plainly in his letter to the Romans, in which he speaks of the relationship that should characterize one Christian with reference to another under the figure of the human body with its inseparable dependence of one member of the body upon another. He says, "For as we have many members in one body and all members have not the same office, so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one member one of another." When Paul had once conceived of life under this figure, he was so enamored of it that he recurs to it again and again, seven times in writing to the Corinthians, twice in writing to the Ephesians, and again in writing to the Colossians. Our prophets and seers and philosophers and, happy to say, many of our statesmen and not a few of our captains of industry and leaders of labor, together with a host of individual men and women, are convinced today that Paul's figure of the human body as expressive of the mutual relationship that necessarily exists between individual Christians and between the various institutional organizations that serve human life, is a satisfactory description of the ultimate facts and issues in the situation. We must be careful, however, not merely to commit ourselves by word of mouth to this idea, but to seek every opportunity possible to infuse the spirit of brotherhood based on the identification of interests organically in all the relations of men with one another. Surely there can be no conflict between the various members of the social order, since they are organically united.

In order to make this organic relationship effective, there must be certain basic principles for the guidance of action and the conduct of life. For those of us who are college students, these principles may be illustrated by intercollegiate athletics, and particularly by a football game. Let me pause at this point long enough to say, however, that college athletics do not necessarily build character in a student body. They are great potential character-builders, but they must be conducted according to the highest standards in order to result in Christian character. I am a firm advocate of college athletics because I believe we shall increasingly make the potential goods that inhere in them realities in the lives of students and in the spirit of the college itself. Their potential energy must become kinetic goodness if Christian character is to result.

We have already witnessed our candidates for the football team, in their uniforms, going each day to the athletic field for practice. It is safe to say that no one in Alamance County works harder at his job, whatever that job may be, than the men who are members of this football squad, and who constitute the hope of Elon for a successful season this year.

Success in athletics depends upon four things, and every one of them has its lessons for the great game of life.

1. The lesson of the rules. Every sport has its rules adapted to the particular game, and the players must respect these rules or they will be disqualified.

In our day, when there is such chafing under restraint, such opposition to authority, such aversion to rules and regulations in every realm of our experience, it is refreshing to know that those who engage in football and the other types of college athletics yield themselves readily to the rules of the game. The more readily the rules are obeyed, the more valuable the game is for character-building, and the more likely is victory. The player who breaks the rules is unworthy and will endanger the sport as such. He will bring defeat and shame to his team.

Life, too, has its rules, its principles, and it is obligatory upon each and every one of us to conduct ourselves in accordance with those principles, to recognize that organization, authority, regulations, and rules are necessary for the successful living of life. We must come to the point where we not only submit to the rules of life as a necessary evil, but regard them as promoters of freedom. It is one of the paradoxes of civilization that as freedom and liberty increase, the rules and regulations designed to govern men in their relationships with one another increase and multiply. Experience has taught that individual freedom is promoted by social limitation in the interest of group life. Athletic games have made no small contribution to our understanding of this vital principle for the ordering of life.

2. College athletics are valuable, too, for the emphasis they give to training. Every candidate for a team gives a pledge to the coach that he will abstain from certain practices and that he will positively do certain things. In order to make the team, the candidate is willing to regulate his diet, his sleep, his leisure time, and so to organize himself that he can perform at a maximum rate of efficiency. In addition to this, he agrees to accept the daily grind of practice in order that he may acquire the skill, the initiative, the resourcefulness, the insight into the critical situations native to the game, so that when in the contest itself he may be able to acquit himself creditably and as a seasoned veteran. He further agrees to obey the will of the coach. To his command he

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

BEYOND EXPLANATION.

Many of the highest values, and most certain truths, cannot be explained. "Business is business," but the Church of the living God has persisted and become the most powerful institution on earth, not because it followed business methods, but because it was divine and is divine. No one can explain how the Church has lived and prospered through the ages, in the light of business dealing and reasoning. No one can explain how twelve men (and one of them a devil), under the instruction and leadership of one who never wrote a book, composed a hymn or painted a picture, has rewritten human history in terms of His life and teaching. And some one has said, well and wisely, that when human history is finally and correctly written, it will be nothing more or less than "His-story."

No one can explain, in the light of reasoning and intellect, how it has come about that the most popular poem in the world, and more often quoted than any other, was not written by Homer or Virgil, Shakespeare, or Milton, or any other or "the twelve greatest poets" of all ages, but by a Hebrew lad who had far more training in a sheepfold and with a shepherd's staff and sling than in any school of books and teachers, or with an author's pen. The greatest poem of all time begins "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." That is the greatest poem, because it not only appeals to the intellectual, but satisfies and comforts the heart. When the president of the oldest university in America was asked to ransack the literature of all time and name the best sentence ever written, he complied with the request, to the best of his ability, and out of the storehouse of his wealth of knowledge and reading, declared that the sentence unsurpassed by any writer of any or all time was by a young man named Micah, and reads as follows: "He hath shown thee, O man, what is good; and what does the Lord require of thee but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God?"

The most harmonious note, and far-sounding, ever struck on the great theme of love was not by any musical composer, or by the best literary lights of the world, but by the apostle Paul when he wrote the thirteenth chapter of 1st Corinthians.

These, and a thousand other phenomena of history and of fact, cannot be explained other than to say that they are of divine origin and have the divine imprint and approval, and are therefore spiritual and not temporal.

The things of the spirit cannot be explained. They simply are. They reveal the hand, the mind and the power of God. And the one reason why the Bible remains the most widely read, and deeply studied, of any book ever published is because it is not the word of man, but the word of God; it is not a Book created and written by man, but a Book in and through which God speaks His mind to the minds and souls of men.

No more can one explain the nature, the power, the joy of the spiritual life. One can know and share the joy of the spiritual life, but it is a life hid with Christ in God; a life that shares sweet fellowship with Him who is supremely human, and more than human, because He is divine. When one lives and has fellowship with Him, one has a peace and an abounding joy that one cannot explain.

A UNITED CHRISTENDOM.

Various agencies, as well as many Churches and communions, are putting forth a strenuous effort to bring about in our day a united Christendom. A century ago it was the custom to emphasize, with great vehemence and vigor, the doctrines and teachings of Scripture that divided Christendom. Then preachers in hundreds of pulpits felt called upon to emphasize not only baptism, but the mode of baptism, and many congregations were made to feel, by zealous preachers, that the mode of baptism made all the difference in the world, and unless a certain mode was submitted to, there was little hope of eternal salvation. Very, very little of such preaching and emphasis are in evidence in our day. There are preachers and there are laymen who believe, as thoroughly as any ever did, in some definite mode or manner of baptism, but they are not heralding to the world those beliefs because such a belief emphasizes the division and not the union of Christians.

The same is true of Church government. A hundred years ago there were zealous souls in the pulpit and in the pew, who felt that the only and the divine way of governing a Church was by the episcopacy or a presbytery, or by specific and well-defined "methods." There are churchmen today in pulpit and in pew who believe as they did in former times in the superiority and even in the divinity of such government, and they are not heralding these things to the world nor emphasizing them as in former times because they help to divide rather than unite Christendom. The Christian world has changed its emphasis, and now Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists (in many quarters), Congregationalists and Christians are emphasizing those essential and salient truths of Christianity which help unite, and are relegating to the background of their thinking and of their emphasis those doctrines that divide and those sayings which separate the body of Christ, the Church.

It is significant that a body of outstanding churchmen in the various communions have under the name of "The Christian Unity League" extended a cordial invitation to Christians of all creeds and communions to meet in a "Christian unity conference and round-table" discussion at St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church, New York City, November 13-15, 1929, under the following pact and preamble:

"We, Christians of various Churches, believing that only in a co-operative and united Christendom as being opposed to the Spirit of Christ and the needs of the world, and we are convinced that the Christianizing of the world is greatly hindered by divisive and rivaling Churches.

"We, therefore, desire to express our sympathetic interest in and prayerful attitude toward all conferences, small and large, that are looking toward reconciliation of the divided Church of Christ; and we propose to recognize, in all our spiritual fellowships, the practice of equality of all Christians before God, so that no Christian shall be denied membership in our Churches, nor a place in our celebration of the Lord's Supper, nor pulpit courtesies be denied other ministers because they belong to a different denomination than our own; and, further, irrespective of denominational barriers, we pledge to be brethren one to another in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour, whose we are and whom we serve."

A GODLESS STATE.

Russia is undertaking the impossible. It is doubtful if there is a sadder scene on the religious horizon of the world than that presented by Russia. Russia, as a recent observer said, is trying to banish God. According to Dr. Chamberlin, who has recently been in Russia and made a study of present conditions, says in the September Atlantic that "atheism has become almost a State creed." Under the law, religious organizations of any kind are forbidden—

1. "To create mutual aid funds."
2. "To render material support to their members."
3. "To organize special meetings for children, young people, women, and for prayer, or to organize meetings, groups, for Bible study and education in religion."

Lenin, Russia's Soviet leader, declared that "religion is one of the forms of spiritual oppression, lying everywhere on the masses of the people, who are oppressed by eternal work for others. Religion is opium for the people." Therefore, the only hope of Russia, according to Lenin, is to rid itself of religion. Atheism is taught in the schools, and the "Society of the Godless" is one of the most flourishing in the Russian republic.

A godless creed cannot long endure. Missionaries from Protestant denominations are going into Russia, and the Baptists have quite a following, but the work is exceedingly difficult, because Russia had a Church and a knowledge of God, and the Russians have deliberately turned their backs on God and repudiated the Church. It will be far more difficult to win Russia to Christ than it will a nation of idol worshipers. Neither an individual nor a nation can, with any degree of safety or security, repudiate God. One of the hurtful signs of the present is the increasing number of atheists in the world; not only in Russia, but in Japan, China, America. The "Society of the Godless" is by no means confined to Russia.

The sad spectacle in Russia, however, is that of an organized effort on the part of the State to make the children of Russia atheistic. The Commission for Education of Russia, in an article entitled "The Anti-Religious Struggle in the School," declares that "Theaters, concerts, moving pictures, radio, visits to museums, richly illustrated scientific and especially anti-religious lectures, well-arranged children's literature—all this must be set in motion, developed, completed or created for the great objective of most quickly transforming the whole growing generation into an absolutely atheistic one."

And then this high light in the educational world of Russia addressed the following warning to religious teachers in the schools: "The believing teacher in the Soviet school is an awkward contradiction, and departments of popular education are bound to use every opportunity to replace such teachers with new ones, of anti-religious sentiments." Russia is headed for the rocks, for the people who forget and repudiate God cannot endure.

THE MYSTERIOUS IN CHRISTIANITY.

The soul is stifled when any professed Christian decides that he will believe only what he can understand, and accept that which is "practical and rational." The strength of Christianity is the marvel and the majesty of its mystery. Our Saviour, while on earth, emphasized this salient fact repeatedly. In talking to that scholar and "master in Israel," Nicodemus, Jesus said to this practical man and rationalist: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." For the life of him, Nicodemus could not reason that saying out, could not follow it logically and understandingly, and so he said in his confusion, "How can these things be?" (John 3:9). The glory as well as the strength of Christianity is the sublime mystery of it that the mind itself cannot comprehend. And such is the glory of the great and the good things all around us.

One scarcely knows which brings the greater thrill, the program of song that delights the ear and heart over the radio, or the mystery of that marvelous machine which the man who invented it could no more fathom and explain than we who enjoy it. The radio can no more be explained than Edison can explain electricity, or the most learned physicists can explain the power residing in an atom of earth, air or water. A while ago a member of the English Parliament said, in addressing that body, that there was sufficient power, if suddenly released, in one dewdrop hanging from the eave of the great building in which Parliament was assembled to blow that building into fragments; and, moreover, that there was sufficient atomic power in one penny, if released, to pull a freight train of heavily loaded cars twice around the earth, if the power that held the atoms of the penny together were suddenly released and could be harnessed for locomotion. The rose loses its beauty, and the flower its fragrance when analysis is made of them to understand their mechanism and make-up, which, by the way, no mortal has yet understood.

We cannot understand the mystery of the most commonplace things about us, and if we could, their majesty and grandeur would disappear. With advancing science and learning, the world doesn't grow less mysterious, but more so.

We were reading this morning that the mother of Jesus said to the servants at the marriage in Cana of Galilee: "Whatever He shall command you, do it." They obeyed, and Jesus said, "Fill the waterpots with water." Then He commanded them to draw out. No mortal mind can any more grasp the majesty and mystery of the power to transform that water into wine than the mind can understand the majesty of the shining stars, the glowing sun, the silvery moon and the meaning of life and love. If we discard Christianity because of the mystery attached to it, we would logically discard the glory and the grandeur of things around about us.

HABITS ARE GOOD OR BAD.

Habit, in most people, is stronger than will. Habit includes an involuntary tendency toward thought, speech, or action. There may be good habits or bad habits, and life is made up largely of habits. The formation of habits begins very early in life and, once formed, remain to the end of life. It is very important to begin life by the formation of good habits. Association with others is essential to best life or worst life. "No man lives to himself." Intimate association with others should rest upon careful selection. This does not mean that one should be snobbish or self-important, but select persons of good character and good reputation as intimate associates. This will grow into a habit that will win the confidence and respect of other people. Then, the habit of reading good books, and especially the Bible, is a good habit to form in early life; and it will grow in value as years and experience add to our character and reputation. Whatever habit is formed will come to be a pleasure. To read THE CHRISTIAN SUN until it becomes a habit, makes a Church member anxious to subscribe for it. That is one habit that Church members ought to cultivate. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is one of the best Church papers. The front page, by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, is a fountain of good information; and "The Family Altar," by Chaplain H. E. Rountree, is a source of fine suggestion to the family. Then the "Sunday School Lessons," by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, to say nothing of missions by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, and Orphanage by Superintendent Chas. D. Johnston, furnish interesting food for thought and service.

THE SUN ought to go into every Christian home, because it would plant seed that would bear fruit to help all the institutions of the Church. Here is a challenge to any reader of this column on habit: can you name any regular reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN who does not support the Sunday School, the Church service, and the enterprises of the Church? If you know such a regular reader of THE SUN, send the writer of this editorial the name and address of that person, and it will be kept as confidential information.

The habit of attendance upon Sunday School and Church can be cultivated in such a way that the time for service would be an urge to go. The habit to stay away is just as strong the other way. The same is true of giving. A systematic and habitual giver finds delight in giving. We love to do what is our habit. Outside of the new birth, there is no more valuable experience than the formation of thinking pure thoughts, speaking the truth, abstaining from evil, and doing what God requires of His children. The most satisfactory life is the "life that is hid with Christ in God."

W. W. S.

LOBYISTS AND LYING.

It is a sorry spectacle that faces the American people at this time. Any citizen has a right to advocate a large navy if in his honest judgment the best interests of our country demand it; but no man has a right to pose as a disinterested citizen in such advocacy, when he is really a paid lobbyist and in the service, too, of those who will profit tremendously by success from his efforts.

That is what disgraces us at this time. Mr. William B. Shearer has posed as a disinterested naval expert. As such, he has created sentiment to have all the cruisers built which the recent congressional bill made possible, and besides he figured largely in wrecking the Geneva Conference on the limitation of armaments.

It now appears that he was all the time in the employ of three great private shipbuilding concerns. They have paid him $50,000. He is suing them for $250,000 more. It is a sorry spectacle, a national disgrace.

The whole world will approve President Hoover's demand for an explanation and for senatorial investigation. Shearer deserves a prison sentence,

Such falsifying strikes at the very tap-root of democracy, which depends for its life on an honest and informed public opinion.

Shame on Mr. Shearer! Lobbying is an honorable profession, when it is known to be such. But Mr. Shearer's procedure will put the whole profession under the ban of public disapproval. Shame on Mr. Shearer and all his slime-tribe!

THE CHURCH AT WORK.

Piqua Convention Items.

Piqua is only thirty miles north of Dayton. Why not plan to visit the Headquarters after the Convention?

Whatever else you do, be sure to be on hand when the Convention opens, and stay until it closes. Be on time at each session. It is just as easy to be on time as a little late.

Each speaker and each committee should provide several typewritten copies of addresses and reports, so that secretaries and reporters may have them promptly if desired. Typewriters save errors.

The men's banquet, on Friday night, will likely be a great event. A special committee is promoting the attendance, and that committee will reach our men far and near. If they have the information, our laymen will be there by hundreds. Put a ring in your diary around Friday night, October 25th. The women will have a great meeting in another Church at the same time, with Dr. Mary Cushman, of Africa, as speaker.

Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, formerly president of Palmer College and now pastor at Elon College, N. C., will be the speaker at the Saturday night program of the Convention.

All pre-Convention reports are to be in the hands of the Convention Secretary by September 16th, ready for the printer. The Convention is right at hand. Next month will be here before we know it.

It is a great honor to be a delegate to the General Convention. Every delegate should be present. Every Conference should have full representation. Conferences and Churches should see that no delegate is kept away for financial reasons.

Valuable Literature.

The various denominational secretaries take great care to select literature and forward it to the various Conferences at their annual sitting. This literature is valuable and worthy of reaching the workers in the Conference. None of it should be overlooked, wasted or remain unused. Conference workers will do well to get it into the hands of the delegates and visitors, and some of it should be carried home to the Churches. Not only should we not waste this valuable matter, but we must become an informed people, and we need to cultivate an appetite for the reading of religious literature. The literature end of the Conference session is important.

Those Stewardship Books.

What have you read in 1929? Miss Mary Rountree, Lincoln, Kan., stewardship secretary of the Northern Kansas and Nebraska Conference, says: "I have read 'Jesus' Teaching on the Use of Money,' which I think is surely worthwhile reading, and I wish especially that many parents would read it."

Every-Member Canvass.

If you are going to use the every-member canvass at all, do it well. Plan, prepare for it and work it. Please do not botch it and call it the every-member canvass, and thus bring reflection upon one of the greatest spiritual, financial and enlistment agencies the Church has ever used. Please do not dishonor such a great Christian agency by abusing it. It surely is a God-given means of blessing to Church and members alike.

WARREN H. DENISON, Sec'y.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Mary Elizabeth Darden, daughter of William Wright and Nancy Langston Darden, was born in Holy Neck district, Nansemond County, Va., on November 16, 1839. She married Luther Rawls, of Holy Neck district, May 30, 1867, when 26, and her husband 30. Her husband died on June 9, 1915, after they had lived happily together for about fifty years. He was a Confederate soldier four years. She moved to Suffolk in 1916, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. V. Gatling, at 4 P. M., September 12, 1929, at the age of 89 years, 9 months, and 26 days. She was the mother of six children, who survive her—Jesse P. Rawls, of Enterprise, Ala., who married Maggie Jones, daughter of Benjamin F. Jones, and they have five children and two grandchildren; Mrs. E. S. Norfleet, deceased, and her husband died September 6, 1928; Mrs. J. V. Gatling, whose husband was of Gates County, N. C., and they have two daughters, Azzie married Dr. J. L. Rawls, and they have two children, Mary Emily married Dr. J. P. Cross; Dr. J. E. Rawls married Emma Copeland Holland, and they have eight children; Mary Sue married E. H. Williams, and they have two sons and live in Smithfield, Va.; Dr. David L. Rawls married Sarah Davis, and they have three children. That makes a family of six children, twenty grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren now living, thirty in all.

She is survived also by a brother-in-law, Dempsey Langston, of Gates, N. C., and a useful member of Sarem Christian Church. He is a very Christian man.

Mrs. Rawls was a member of Holy Neck Christian Church, founded by Rev. James O'Kelley in 1793, for eighty years. Her husband's grandfather, Hardy Rawls, sold the land on which Holy Neck Church now stands in 1747, and an English Church had occupied that place for forty-six years. It was abandoned by the English after the Revolutionary War. Holy Neck has been an important community for nearly 200 years, and since 1793 it has been noted for its substantial citizenship, hospitality, social refinement, and Christian character. Among the prominent and devoted members of Holy Neck Christian Church, Luther Rawls and his companion, Mary Elizabeth, were counted in the front row. Their children rise up and call them blessed.

Dr. J. E. Rawls, one of the founders of the Lakeview Hospital, which has rendered such good service in Suffolk for many years, and his brother, Dr. D. L. Rawls, fills an important position in that institution. Drs. D. L. Harrell, W. T. Gay, and J. L. Rawls, who married Miss Azzie Gatling, are also useful and successful members of the Lakeview staff.

The service of these children, and their helpers, are the fruit of the Christian home. Her simple life of faith in Jesus Christ, her devotion to Holy Neck Christian Church, and her service and prayer in the home still live, and will live on while her offspring are faithful to her teaching and example. She had a host of friends, and she loved them all. Her life and conversation were an inspiration to all who came in contact with her. The end, like her life, was like a babe going to sleep in the arms of mother.

Funeral service at her childhood Church, Holy Neck, Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock, September 15, 1929, conducted by her pastor, Rev. Dr. N. G. Newman, and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

REV. HUNT CONDUCTS REVIVALS.

Dear Bro. Editor:

I will try to give the readers of THE SUN a brief sketch of my revival activities during the summer. My first meeting was at LaGrange, Ga., First Church, with Rev. C. W. Hanson. Here we labored two weeks, had a fine meeting, and added about seventeen names to the Church roll. The work goes well at this Church, and it has before it a great opportunity.

The first meeting in my charge was at Pleasant Grove Church, in Chambers County, beginning the third Sunday in July and continuing until Friday night following. Rev. J. D. Dollar assisted me in this meeting and did some fine preaching. One new name was added to the roll as a visible result. We were sorry that Bro. Dollar was having some trouble with his throat at that time, and hope he is well by now.

My second meeting was at old New Hope Church, in Chambers County, Ala., where I have been pastor for twenty-three years. We had a fine meeting at New Hope. The best we have had in ten years, I think. Seven new names were added to the Church roll, five upon profession of faith. Staley Hunt, who graduated one year ago at Elon College, did the preaching for us during the meeting, and every one seemed to enjoy his sermons.

My third meeting was at Mt. Zion Church, in Randolph County, Ala. Here we had a fine meeting and received into fellowship nine new members. Rev. C. W. Hanson did the preaching from Monday night until Friday night, and we all enjoyed his sermons. The Church here is on the upgrade, and the Church and community are still rejoicing.

My fourth meeting was at Antioch, in Chambers County, Ala. Rev. R. A. Whitten, of Elon College, N. C., did the preaching for us, and we all enjoyed his earnest, timely messages. Our meeting closed Friday night, with seventeen received to fellowship. In all these meetings there was not a dull service, and we all rejoiced in the Lord together.

The week following the third Sunday, I was with Staley Hunt at Shady Grove Church, in Clay County, Ala. We had a great meeting at this Church, considering the surroundings. It was a great pleasure to me to be able to attend this meeting, and one member was received to fellowship.

The week following the fourth Sunday, I assisted in a union meeting at Cragford, Ala., with the M. E. Church, South. Staley Hunt is pastor of the Christian Church, and Rev. Porter is the pastor of the M. E. Church. We had a fine meeting at Cragford. Revs. Igow and Keeble assisted in the meeting. One member added to the Christian Church was the visible result. Every one enjoyed the meeting. Thus you see that I have not been idle.

Next week I am to help Bro. Hanson at the Congregational Church, in LaGrange, Ga., where we expect to have a good meeting. I am trying to give my best to, and do my best for, the kingdom of my Christ.

I close this letter by asking every Church in our Conference to take an offering for missions and send it to Dr. Atkinson at once, so you can get credit for your contribution when due. Please don't put it off. I need the prayers of those I love.

G. D. HUNT.

VALLEY STEWARDSHIP SECRETARIES.

As guide and help to Conference stewardship secretaries in the way of foundational and constructive aim, by courtesy of the Conference and of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which (by the way, ought to be more generally used as a medium of information between Churches and workers) recommendations, adopted as part of the stewardship report at the late session of Valley of Virginia Conference, are herewith presented. Because of the habitual late issue of the "Annual," with reference to the work this secretary is trying to promote, the privilege of space here and now is of inestimable value.

Remember, please, the recommendations are intended as guide only; not goal. If a Church can go beyond, let it be done! As for the "guide," the best effort of each of us to bring the Churches to such plane of adaptability as will put the recommendations, point by point as per calendar setting, into actual practice is our responsibility. Shall we each assume it at once?

RECOMMENDATIONS.

1. Continued and continuous reading of all current stewardship matter at hand, especially the weekly writings of our own stewardship leaders in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Herald of Gospel Liberty; also books on Christian stewardship, such as can be purchased or made available through a Church or community library or otherwise.

2. The adoption of a stewardship book to be used for class study during the special stewardship period—November-December.

3. Creation or continuance, as the case may be, of a finance committee, to be composed of the pastor (ex-officio), financial secretary, treasurer, stewardship secretary, and from one to three other members, whose obligation shall be to study and, as rapidly as can be made practicable to a given situation, apply to the Church's financial management the best methods known to good business.

4. Looking toward acquiring the highest standard of Christian character and to a more commensurate and adequate Church and benevolence support through systematic, individual paying and giving; the finance committee and the pastor conferring and concurring, immediate urge of definite, constructive preparation for early introduction of the annual every-member canvass.

5. Where a pulpit is occupied by the pastor every Sunday, a series of four to six stewardship sermons; and where preaching is monthly, stewardship expressly to be stressed in not less than three consecutive sermons; in either instance preferably immediately preceding "Tithers' Enrollment Day," second Sunday in December.

6. Signers of the tithers' enrollment card definitely to be sought and enrolled at the preaching service on the second Sunday in December or the nearest Sunday thereto.

In subsequent issues of THE SUN, by request of Conference, under the special heads denoting the three underlying needs which suggested them, will be given separately the stewardship secretary's Conference "remarks" on each couplet of recommendations.

MRS. J. J. LINCOLN.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the North Carolina Woman's Conference will be held with the Burlington Christian Church on Friday, October 11th. This is an accessible point, and it is earnestly desired that all of our Churches and societies be represented by delegates in the conference. Every minister in the conference is invited to come.

FROM LONDON.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

III.

Of the many royal palaces in Europe, none can trace its origin to so early a period as does the Windsor Castle at the little town of Windsor-on-the-Thames. For over eight hundred years this has been the residence of the kings and queens of England. It is a walled enclosure, covering about fifty acres, dating back to the tenth century, situated on an eminence overlooking the cities of Windsor and Eton, and the silvery windings of the Thames as it loses itself in the vision of the distance.

The present state apartments of the castle are a magnificent suite of rooms sumptuously furnished and enriched by an historical collection of works of art of great interest and value. Housed in a series of showcases is the China Museum which is a valuable collection of the Royal China services of all the kings and queens. They are original specimens of the Neapolitan, Worcester, Minton and Copeland wares, all of which mean a great deal to those versed in ancient royal china. Among the rooms are King Charles II dining-room, which was the king's public dining-room. Its ceiling was painted by Verio, and is one big representation of the banquet of the gods. Its fine specimens of wood carvings are by Gibbons, representing fish and game and fruit. Its furniture is of the finest inlaid Tudor gilt chairs and mirrors, and its tapestries are Flemish, of Brussels loom in the seventeenth century.

Ruben's room, named after that master of arts, is used as a reception room for sovereigns paying a visit to the castle. Its portraits and paintings are all by Ruben, and its furniture is French of the seventeenth century.

The state bedroom walls are covered with green silk damask, the furniture is upholstered in old Chinese silk, and the borders of the curtains of the bedstead, quilts and window curtains are worked in silk embroidery.

The walls of the king's closet, which is the queen's dressing-room, are covered in crimson silk damask, and the furniture is upholstered in English embroidery; and the queen's closet, which is the king's dressing-room, is furnished in the same manner. The queen's audience room and presence room are ornamented, respectively, by Verio's works, called "Britannia Proceeding Towards the Temple of Virtue" and "Justice Driving Away Sedition, Envy and Other Genii."

St. George's Hall is the largest in the castle (185 feet long and 30 feet wide). The banquets of the Knights of the Garter and other State occasions were held here. The arms of all the knights decorate the walls, and the names of all the knights are written in the panels of the dado. In the gallery at the east end is a fine organ, and the gallery at the other end is for the use of bands during banquets.

Time and space forbid mention of the grand reception room, the throne room, the grand vestibule, the deanery, the royal tomb house, St. George Chapel, the cloisters, the towers, the residences, Lord Chamberlain's apartments, the terraces, the ramparts, Elizabethan buildings, the library, one of the greatest of the world, and the parks, walks and bridle-paths. Suffice it to note that it takes a force of five hundred men quartered on the premises for its upkeep. Only the following rooms are used by present royalty: the throne room, the grand reception room, St. George Hall, the queen's audience chamber, the Van Dyck room as a drawing-room, and the picture gallery as a writing-room.

The royal family spends eight weeks out of each year here, and it takes about eight weeks to get ready for their occupancy. Out in front, extending away from the castle are the royal parks and gardens. Here is where the King walks and rides.

The return trip from Windsor to London threaded its way by the Thames River through villages, wood and dale. There is a gracious loveliness in this silver strand winding through hill and vale. Its embankments are lined with small attractive cottages whose flower gardens extend to the water's edge and glitter in the sunlight with all the colors of the rainbow. Here and there the tea gardens attracted us and we stopped to refresh ourselves, some to "drink of the spirit of the country" and be happy. Thus endeth our stay in London and visit to England.

The boys who could not afford to go to London had a good time in and around Weymouth. All hands found a welcome at the Royal Naval Canteen, the White Ensign Club, Sailors' Home, Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute, and other places of reception. In addition to visiting these places and to spending a lot of time on the Esplanade (the grand promenade of the beach), the following events of entertainment took place: The Arkansas played the Anglo-American Baseball Association at London on Sunday, the 28th of July, and won the game, 8 to 7. Quite a few of the fans were out to give them a hand and a yell. At Dorchester, on the 24th and 25th, there was a military display of the King's First Dragoon Guards, in pre-war full-dress uniforms. This is called Dorset's greatest summer event.

On the 31st, a push-ball game was held between some English units and our ships. The report of the games by the ship's "Evening Bulletin" was as follows: "A crowd of 'rooters' composed of British and American fans were on hand to cheer the players who participated in the games. It was 'tuff' on the players. The 'Yanks' have their football, the British their cricket—but push-ball, we'll say, is intended for the 'survival of the fittest.'

"The games gave the spectators many laughs and exciting moments. In fact, it might be said that they compared very favorably with the bull-fights that we witnessed at Barcelona.

"The Utah battled the huskies from H. M. S. Vulcan. This was the feature game of the day. The two teams battled for three periods, an extra period being called to determine the winner. Neither side could score, and when the referee's whistle blew at the end of the third period, the ball was found to be exactly one foot from the center of the field on the Utah's defending side, and the game was awarded to the Vulcan. It was some battle, and he who is under the impression that push-ball is a game for pleasure is very much mistaken.

"In the final play-off between the Arkansas and the Florida, a funny thing happened. In the first few minutes of play it was discovered by the British that a little push-ball (it was only thirty feet in circumference) could never hold two American teams apart. In the third dash for the ball, 4,000 pounds of navy 'beef' came together, and of course it was the end of the push-ball.

"We were told by the British that never in the history of push-ball in England had such a 'catastrophe' occurred.

"As a result of the 'explosion,' the final games had to be called off, but we know who would have been the recipients of the medals had the ball been made of iron."

We have been to Spain, Italy, Gibraltar and England, and we have seen the Spanish, Italians, French and English at close range. We are impressed with the fact that these people take themselves seriously and that the most of them realize that they represent their flag and they are governed in their conduct by a heritage handed down from decade to decade. They are proud of their life, their country, their flag and their King. This has reflected our pride in our country, which is at the top in wealth, tradition and victories; and we are doubly glad that we are citizens of the United States, and when the "Star Spangled Banner" is played we can stand at salute without an apology.

All hands have been complimented by the admiral and our captain on their conduct and their fine behavior. It really has seemed merited, for the spirit of the Bib U has been one for all and all for one, for a genuine good time and for exemplary conduct.

It is to be hoped that these little "weekly" remembrances have been of interest to you and that it has served to keep you informed of the activities of the navy life and many pleasures afforded.

THE WATER OF LIFE.

In these midsummer days of such excessive heat, when man and beast seem exhausted from the lack of life-giving showers, and vegetation is so wilted it is with a feeling of refreshment that we turn to the fourth chapter of the gospel according to John and read again the story of the woman at the well.

She had gone to draw water for external and internal refreshment, even as we seek it today. (And even though men today seek to slake their thirst with the popular drinks of the day, they ever turn to the pure, sparkling water, which only can truly satisfy.)

Jesus the Christ also sought to have His thirst quenched by this water from Jacob's well, and as He talked with the woman He talked of another type of water, a fountain ever flowing, carrying life-giving power to all mankind. The woman was skeptical, for had not that well been there since Jacob's time, and had never been known to dry up? What water could surpass it in value? Yet Jesus answered her with the beautiful words of the 13th and 14th verses: "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again; but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst: but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

Then the woman's impassioned plea, "Give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw." And our hearts respond to her cry as we thirst for the natural water. But Jesus wanted her to thirst for the living water, the river of salvation that Ezekiel saw in the vision—"water to swim in." Water to wash away the pollution of the earth life, water to satisfy the thirsty soul that is never satisfied with the supply that the world gives.

We believe that the woman thirsted and drank of the fountain of life and then went to her own household and brought them to Jesus. A woman of the despised Samaritans, a home missionary! The disciples wondered. Later Jesus spoke the words signifying that out of them who believed on Him should flow rivers of living waters which would refresh all with whom they may come in contact.

Their sphere is broad, and the influence of the Spirit's power may be felt around the world to all the dry and parched places and touch the dry and parched hearts who are seeking for the water of life. Oh, may we plunge deep! may we drink deep of the life-giving stream, that it may flow through us to others, a channel of blessing to be used of God with no sin to impede the flow.

"I heard the voice of Jesus say,

'Behold, I freely give

The living water; thirsty one,

Stoop down, and drink, and live.'

I came to Jesus and I drank

Of that life-giving stream:

My thirst was quenched, my soul revived,

And now I live in Him." W.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

SOME OBJECTIONS TO TITHING.

The most common objection is "I cannot afford it." Such objection comes out of the man looking at the money. He needs to face himself and look at his own side of it, and ask "Can I afford to put God first in my life?" Having confessed Christ, and thereby avowedly confessed Christ's Lordship over him, he has established self-denial as a principle of life toward his Lord. How, then, can he refuse to bring the tenth to his Lord, and not join the crowd of these who deny His authority? To refuse the payment of God's tenth is to deny Him the right to decide the proportionate payment, and this is a species of religious anarchy. He thus seriously injures his spiritual character, and puts himself on a low plane of life, and loses many blessings that God would bestow upon him.

Tithing Not Abolished.

There has been a widespread notion that tithing was abolished with the fulfilling of the law by Jesus Christ, and is not binding upon Christians. This is an insidious error. Ceremonies may be changed, but moral principles can never change. The law of tithing is a moral principle as old as Abraham, and antedates the giving of the law. Jesus did not abrogate this moral principle. He commended tithing. In the seventh chapter of his epistle to the Hebrews and the eighth verse, Paul tells us that Jesus as our High Priest in heaven receiveth tithes. That is sufficient to establish the obligation upon all his followers, and we wonder that so many writers on tithing have overlooked this great passage.

Tithing is an Act of Worship.

It is a blessed act of worship, because it involves the giving of one's self to God. Whence does all wealth come? Assuredly, there is no wealth produced except that which comes through labor. Think that over. It is the product of our brain, brawn and labor; so, when one pays the tenth to God, he is giving a part of himself to God. It is more than answering a temporary call. It is an act of worship, and puts the giver into fellowship with his Lord as much as his songs and prayers. As this prevails, the whole Church is lifted to a higher plane of fellowship with her Lord—the Head. So, God gets not only the gift, but the giver; not only the money, but the man; not only the possession, but the possessor. This is a spiritual victory supreme.—Christian Evangelist.

Only sixteen days from this writing (September 14th), and less than sixteen days when THE SUN reaches its readers, and our period for raising $45,000 for missions by September 30, 1929, will be up. Over one thousand dollars ($1,219.75) to raise. Surely those who are interested and haven't helped to the limit will help now. Thank each and every one who will help now.

PORTO RICO LETTER.

Many write and ask what do I think is the most important branch of our Christian work that will reach the majority of this island? Of course, I think that all the departments of the mission, or rather the Christian, work are important and reach some classes of people. But there is one program that will reach every part and every soul on this island, and that is the evangelistic campaign. That will reach hungry souls that never have had the opportunity of hearing the gospel.

I had a very interesting experience yesterday. Rev. and Mrs. Caldwell, missionaries of United Brethren Mission, asked me to go with them to their new country field, where Mr. Caldwell, the superintendent of the U. B. mission, has been holding an evangelistic campaign for the last few months. First, we had a picnic supper by the side of one of the prettiest rivers of the island, and then went to the evening service.

Bro. Caldwell is one of the most active, consecrated, and enthusiastic missionaries we have on the island. He has been doing a splendid work. He works not only for his own mission, but is always ready to help others. We young missionaries in Ponce certainly have found a real father, who is always ready to encourage us in our work and help us in our troubles. We certainly appreciate him and his good wife. I started to tell about the evangelistic work; however, this could be included.

Mr. Caldwell has a large tent that he takes with him, and has the help of some of his workers, and preaches the gospel to those who never have heard of the story of Jesus and His love. Last night, the tent was full of these mountain people, some of whom walked over two miles to hear him and to sing the precious words that they have learned to love. First, the Lord's Prayer was taught to them; then a couple of simple hymns; then the message of religion in the home was given to them by one of the Porto Rican pastors. After the splendid message, Mr. Caldwell showed about twelve slides of the healing of the blind man. Indeed, it was a very impressive service.

I am sure it is of some interest to all of us to know that Porto Rico soon will be won for Christ by the faithful and active workers here. As the results of these campaigns, I was told that soon a chapel will be rented and a regular worker will be placed in this section. May all those that are interested in the work of Porto Rico, no difference of what denomination, pray earnestly for this consecrated worker, and other workers, so that we may announce the glad tidings of Porto Rico for Christ.

I sincerely believe that the time is coming soon when we will all be working together and forget the spirit of denominationalism.

NOW THE TIME—HERE THE PLACE!

Your Church is making an effort to reach its goal for Missions this year, namely: one-third the amount of pastor's salary. If your Church, and all the other Churches, reach this goal, we will reach the total goal of $45,000 for the year ending September 30th, the amount asked of us by the Southern Christian Convention.

Will you, by an individual gift, help your Church to achieve this desired end? Now is the time! Here is the place! By a pull together, every Church can reach the goal. Help now.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XII—September 29, 1929.

THE CHRISTIAN AND HIS LEADER (MASTER).

GOLDEN TEXT: "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."—Eph. 4:12.

LESSON: Col. 1:17-27.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Phil. 2:5-11.

Paul did not found the Church at Colossae, but he felt free to write in a more or less personal way to the Colossians, in view of the fact that one of Paul's converts and followers, Epaphras, did found it. His letter was called forth by fasters which Paul felt were compromising the central fact of Christianity—the centrality and supremacy of Jesus Christ. It appears that certain teachers who, by the way, were not opponents of Christianity, had been teaching the doctrine that although salvation came through Christ, there were certain observances and certain "mysteries" that one could observe and gain that would give them a little higher standing as Christians and give them "special privileges." Paul's letter to the Colossians is a passionate defense of the centrality and supremacy of Christ, and it is a good theme for the lesson—The Christian and His Leader.

The Supremacy of Christ.

"For He is before all things, and by Him all things consist." Christ is above all, both visible and invisible. Paul does not deny that there might be other powers, and principalities, but he says that Christ is supreme, and that all these other powers or being have their existence by Him. Because of this fact, the Colossian Christians need not fear these invisible powers, nor are they under obligations to them.

"That in all things he might have pre-eminence." Time is fulfilling this statement. Increasingly Jesus Christ is coming to take first place in the various phases of life. It is the task of Christians to help Him to have this pre-eminence.

The Fullness of Christ.

"For it pleased the Father that in Him should all fullness dwell." There has always been an instinctive hunger in the human heart to know something about God. Philip voiced it when he said, "Show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." And Jesus answered in significant words: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." In Jesus Christ there was the fullness of God. He who would know what God is like, what he can expect from God, will find the answer to it all in Jesus Christ.

The Reconciling Work of Christ.

"And you, that were some time alienated and enemies in your mind my wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled." It is blasphemy to interpret Christ's work as reconciling God to man; God has always loved man. But Christ is the Great Reconciler, in that He reconciles man to God. Because of Christ's character and work, He has brought men into a new and friendly relation to God. It is significant that Paul says that the Colossians had been alienated in their minds by wicked works. The reason why so many do not accept Christ is not so much intellectual difficulty, but wrong living.

The Redeeming Work of Christ.

"To present you holy and unblamable and un-reprovable in His sight." Christ did not come primarily to make men happy, but to make them good. The supreme contribution which He has made to human life is His ability to transform character. If any man be in Him, he is a new creature. Old things are passed away; behold all things are become new.

Christ Our Hope.

There was a great deal of emphasis in the section of the country in which Colossae was located on "mysteries." It was one of the doctrines of Oriental religions, and emphasized the fact that there was a secret, which the favored ones knew, which outsiders did not and could not know. Paul suggests that Christianity is open to all. The real mystery is not a mystery at all; Christ has thrown light on the mystery. Our hope is to have Christ within us, to have His Spirit transforming our lives. All this means that there is no special merit in observing certain days or in performing certain rites as the Colossians were urged to do. At the same time, Paul urges his readers to set their minds on the things that are above, not on the things that are on the earth. The best and surest way to live positively and victoriously is to be so absorbed in the good things of life that the bad things of life have no time or opportunity to get into life.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, September 29, 1929.

TOPIC: "How Can the Young People's Organizations in Our Church Work Together?"—1 Cor. 3:4-9; Rom. 12:10-12.

Some Bible Hints.

Church work should be team-work. No one can do everything, or even anything alone (v. 6).

Pride enters when we feel that we are doing the work. When we see that it is God who is working through us, we become humble (v. 7).

If we work with God, we shall work with one another. Strife comes when we forget God (v. 9).

The secret of co-operation is love. When we like one another, it is easy to work together (v. 11).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The young people's organizations in the Church should have a combined plan, with each organization assigned its part. This can be done when representatives of all organizations form a council.

Trouble is sure to come when one organization tries to do the work of the other and monopolize the whole field. In the nature of things, each organization specializes on a particular work.

Intervisitation between organizations helps to give the young people of one set an idea of how the other set works. Regular mass-meetings between all organizations have the same effect.

The pastor should be the link between all organizations. There may be a young people's council, with at least one representative from each organization, the pastor being the chairman. In this way he can harmonize and arrange campaigns.

A Few Illustrations.

An orchestra does not play on the same note. Not all organizations need to do the same work. There can be harmony in great variety.

Labor specializes in order to gain efficiency. It plans and divides its tasks. This is what Christian Endeavor tries to do through its committees.

No one organ of the body can do the work of all the body. Here is a high degree of specialization. We walk with our feet, work with our hands, and so on. The Church's organizations should also specialize.

The Sunday school is the teaching branch of the Church. That is its main feature. Christian Endeavor is the training branch for Church work. Boy Scouts is the Church leading youth in outdoor activities. There need be no conflict.

To Think About.

Why should one organization not seek to absorb all others?

What is the combined program of work for all our organizations?

How can we secure better co-operation?

OUR JUBILEE YEAR.

TIME: Autumn of A. D. 29.

PLACE: Jerusalem.

OCCASION: The Feast of Tabernacles.

RECORD: John 7:11-36.

The feasts of Israel were ordained of God as the great "rally days" of Israel. The law of the three great feasts—the Passover, Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles—required the presence of every able-bodied man in Israel. The lesser feasts were more optional, but these three major feasts did much to preserve the nation, and through thousands of years to this day the Jewish holidays celebrating these feasts have preserved the Jewish nation in a miraculous way.

Where Is He?

The curious crowd were united in their curiosity, but divided in their opinion of the one whom many thought might be the Messiah or at least a "good man," while others declared that "he deceiveth the people" (v. 12). The spies which had followed Jesus had spread their propaganda and the leaders had done their best to create an atmosphere of opposition to Him in which they could work safely. His name was on every tongue, but many whispered it in fear, even if mingled with hope.

Behold the Man.

Suddenly, in the midst of their doubts and fears, Jesus appeared in their midst and began to teach "as one having authority," and not as their leaders spoke, citing authorities and traditions. Jesus spoke and taught as one who had the truth from God; and not from the "tradition of the elders," or any such source.

They Marveled.

No doubt the work and impression brought back to Jerusalem by the spies who followed him was to the effect that He was just an ignorant carpenter of despised Nazareth, in equally despised Galilee. The people expected to see an ignorant ranter, such as the "Zealots" of their like from the North country, but when they faced this Master of men "they marveled," as they might, for they were in the presence of the greatest Master of men of all time.

The Doctrine of Jesus.

Jesus claimed two great things for His teaching. First, it was God; second, it could be proven if they would only try it. His word was that if they wanted to know whether His teaching given Him from God were true or not, to just try it and they could know. If any man would do as He, he would know whether His teachings were of God. Here was a plain way to the truth, and it ever abides. The revised version puts it even stronger, and says that "if any man willeth to do His will," he should know. It was the attitude which counted. He who would not be convinced, and he who would not try, could not be reached; but he that was open and eager for the truth could know. It is just the same today. None are so blind as those who will not see, and none so deaf as those who refuse to hear.

Seeketh Not His Own.

Jesus ever sought the will of God, and never merely His own glory. A full one hundred times in the gospels Jesus is called the Son of God, or God is called Father. The words are as plain as words can be, and Jesus claimed over and over again that His power came from the Father, and that He came to do the Father's will, and not His own. We may not be able to explain the trinity (the word "trinity" is not in the Bible), but we can know by the Bible that Jesus is the Son of God and sought the glory of His Father, and not His own glory.

Seeking to Kill Him.

The last argument of evil is force, as if that proved anything. To kill a man who has told the truth will never kill the truth, but will ever bring it to light. The blood of the martyrs was the seed of the Church, and the killing of Jesus, in the end, was the life of the gospel and the life-blood of the Church. The cross on which He died has been glorified because of these men who sought to kill the truth by killing Him who told it to them.

The Denial of Guilt.

Calling names and lying are as old as the world. Every criminal and every guilty soul since Cain has thought this the way out. If one tells you the truth (say they by action), tell him that he has a devil, and if he accuse you of crime (say they), tell him that he is a liar. As if that settled anything. But it was old two thousand years ago, and is the game which is used today and will be used tomorrow by him who has a guilty conscience.

They knew that they had planned to kill Jesus, and they knew that He told them the truth, and yet they say that He has a devil and that He is a liar. They fling what they themselves are at Him.

For a Good Work.

Jesus had wrought a miracle on an unfortunate man in their midst and had made him whole on the Sabbath. He called to their attention that the rite of circumcision was within the law, and asked them if this was done for a man's good why was it not even better to make a man whole on the Sabbath, since "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath"? This had no answer from them. It was too deep and too true to admit of argument. Even calling of names and threats had done them no good, and they had nothing more to say on that subject.

The People are Divided.

When Jesus had stopped the mouths of His hecklers, the people were greatly impressed. But some said one thing and some said another. Some said that this was the man which the rulers had said they would kill, and yet when He comes and faces them they deny it and do not act as they had threatened. The wonder in the people takes the form of saying, "We wonder if this is really the Christ and they are afraid of Him"; but others say, "It cannot be. The law and the prophets tell us where the Christ comes from (Bethlehem), but this man is a nobody, and nobody knows whence He is." They took Him for a Galilean and of despised Nazareth, and not knowing that He was of the prince of the tribe of Judah (according to their prophets) and born in Bethlehem, the city of David, and not in Nazareth as they supposed. They thought Him a nobody from nowhere, when He was of their royal house of David and of the line of their kings.

Meditation.

Our Master came to do the will of the Father and to reveal that will to us. His plain word was misunderstood then and they rejected Him. His plain word is misunderstood today, and we are too lazy or too indifferent or too selfish to seek and know and do His will. The proof is for the asking, knocking, seeking soul. It lies near at hand to every one who "willeth to do His will," but there is no good thing on earth beneath or in heaven above or in the waters underneath the earth which is not worth seeking to find. Jesus, the highest good, offers us the most, and the price is the highest, albeit the plainest. The asking soul shall have the door of life and of usefulness and joy opened to him. So let us whole-heartedly ask. So let the untiringly seek. So let us persistently knock, that we shall have given unto us a fellowship of service with Him.

NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet at the Suffolk Christian Church on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, November 6, 7, 8. The change of date was made by the executive committee to avoid a conflict with the date of the General Convention, which will be held at Piqua, Ohio, October 22-30. The program committee is planning an interesting and constructive program. Please keep in mind the date—November 6th to 8th. H. S. H.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

"I am the Good Shepherd, and I know mine, and mine know me, and I lay down my life for the sheep."—John 10:14.

Jesus here appeals to the human love crave as the exact type of that love between Him and His children. This is the one great controlling influence of one's life. To give one's heart to Him is expressing that crave and fulfilling all law.

To a child, a mother is all power, knowledge, love and everything. The winds may scream, the lightning flash, the thunder crash, homes shattered, the child feels absolute safety in its mother's arms.

That is the kind of confidence we may put in God, and in so doing He has said, "Sooner shall a mother forget her first-born child than I shall forget Thee." All who come into contact with Jesus comes to feel that "Here is one who loves me," and it is the union of these two qualities that makes Jesus Christ a charm to the soul.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we thank Thee that the publicans and sinners, rich and poor, the strong and the weak, the young and the old, all come within Thy fold and love. Love us; draw us unto Thyself in love until Thy union is completed. Amen.

TUESDAY.

WHY I BELIEVE IN THE CHURCH.

"God . . . dwelleth not in temples made with hands."—Acts 17:24.

Because Jesus focused His efforts on building it.

Because Jesus saw the necessity for organized effort, and so do we

Because it is the organized effort of God against the evil of the world and the victory of righteousness cannot be won in any haphazard fashion.

Because I believe in the fellowship of a common task. We must have atmosphere in everything, and that which contributes most to the growth of the kingdom is the fellowship of Christians.

Because its supreme interest is in character, that Christ might dwell in hearts.

Because it is the only institution on earth which is brave enough to stand up and accept the social ideal in its entirety.

Because it will succeed. He said, "I will build my Church." He was not talking about a wood, brick or stone structure, with a spire on it. He was talking about men and women who will declare their loyalty to Him and who undertake to live in the same high mood. This is the building of God, the house not made with hands, the temple of the Spirit, eternal in the realm of true moral and spiritual value.

Prayer.—Help us, O Lord, that Thy Church may be real to us and to Thy people, and that we may reach our home in the eternal Fatherland. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

WHAT IS THE KINGDOM?

"The kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit."—Rom. 14:17.

He who serves God on these lines is acceptable to Him.

One man believes and acts accordingly and God credits him with being in the kingdom.

Another man believes that all wrongs can be righted and all crooked ways can be made straight and he is accounted in the kingdom.

One does justly, loves mercy, gives God the glory and worships Him, and that is all the Lord requires of him.

Another loves to make life larger and happier for others by caring for the distressed and the lonely and living pure himself, and God says he is in the kingdom.

Another walks uprightly, deals justly, spurns unrighteousness and lives truthful, and he is in the kingdom.

Another loves folks and he lives accordingly, and he is counted in the kingdom.

Another is sorry for sins and decides to sin no more, and he is in the kingdom.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, reveal Thy kingdom to us in the life we have to live every day, and make our souls rich in heavenly treasure. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE BLESSING OF CONFESSING.

"Whosoever shall acknowledge me before men, him shall the Son of man acknowledge before the angels of God."—Luke 12:8.

Most folks have a pride in having others know about their fortunes. In religion, they are more reticent. We do not even like to make it as much of a topic of conversation in which a personal acknowledgment is made as we do other topics. It is no wonder that Jesus put a premium on it.

A refreshing story comes to us. We are told that a festival was given at the Roman coliseum in honor of the architect who designed it. His honor was celebrated by sacrificing a few Christians to the lions. He leaped to his feet and cried, "Why all this horror? I am a Christian."

Paul said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ."

We often feel that we have to go with the crowd. To be alone in an idea, especially that of religion, is hard. But Christ gave us an example when He withstood the devil in the temptations. Then angels blessed Him for His stand.

There are no crowns without previous contest, and thank God that sin can be done away with and that there is a place where the devil stops. To believe and to acknowledge Him in all our ways stops him.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we desire to keep Thy whole law. Teach us how to make a sincere, honest and serious effort to do it, and to stand for Thee always. Amen.

FRIDAY.

MEETING GOD.

"Prepare to meet Thy God."—Amos. 4:12.

All who believe that God exists and that there is a soul which does not perish with the body, knows that a time must come when they shall face God.

Whether this shall come by accident, violence, disease, at home or far away, in bed or on the street, we do not know, but we do know that it will come.

"Prepare" means that time is given us to make all things ready for the meeting. All the satisfaction we may have in contemplating such a meeting lies in that preparation.

Every day we are fitting or unfitting ourselves for this meeting. To neglect it is disastrous. "Cromming" just before judgment is bad. Character is not made in a day. But what satisfaction there is when we have prepared and come to the end here with visions of angels and a power to grasp what has hitherto been unknown!

Thus this fact is reflected, that our greatest concern is not hereafter, but now. Meet God every day in the heart of thy soul. How beautiful is the companionship of thought, feelings and daily engagement set in the presence of the Lord. So meeting Him in life, we have no fear of meeting Him in death.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, save us from so living, that we shall not know when we transgress Thy law and have no condemnation. But may we live in Thy presence piously, shunning evil, doing good, full of love, and pure desire. Amen.

SATURDAY.

LIKE A TREE BY A RIVER.

"He shall be like a tree planted by a stream of water."—Psa. 1:3.

It is promised that a true Christian's life shall be like a tree planted by a river. That means thriving, green, beautiful, happy and fruitful. Can we be all that to our community? Answer it by picking out those whom you know or believe to be that way.

There is an epitaph on a tombstone which reads: "She was always pleasant." We are told that visitors pause there a little longer than elsewhere.

Prayer.—Dear Father, help us to live and to make others happy, and may life be spent in a way that we shall not be ashamed. Amen.

SUNDAY.

LIFE'S STEWARDSHIP.

"Render the account of thy stewardship. He that is faithful in a very little is faithful in much."—Luke 16:1-14, 12:41-48.

"It is required of a steward that he be found faithful."—1 Cor. 4:2.

Life is a stewardship and each one is the steward of his life. Most folks know how to care for their farms, their gardens, their orchards, their vines, their houses, their business, and there is not a tree so snarly but that it may be made a pretty tree. But many fail to care for their soul so well. In this temple of ours each is responsible for the current of his desire; he is the custodian of his body, his health, his welfare, and his conduct. He is to produce courage, bravery, moral excellence, modesty, purity and love. Christ has made virtue a new thing, an inward refining power and a passion for excellence.

The soul needs faithfulness, not law, which rebukes laxity, wrongs and sins. The moment one gets careless and indifferent, the soul is lost.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, Thy word and Thy spirit pronounces us guilty. Thy verdicts are just. We deserve condemnation for our failures and sins. Forgive us and make us faithful to this trust of life Thou hast given us. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We sometimes wonder what our Church membership would do if each one could be superintendent of our Orphanage for a while and confront the many appeals we have to consider each week. I feel sure the real needs of helpless humanity would cause them to see real opportunities for doing good as they never saw them before. While our Master was on earth living and mingling with mankind, He was busy healing the sick, opening the eyes of the blind, causing the lame to walk, and doing many things for helpless humanity. A beautiful example of touching human need. If He spent much of His time in this kind of work, and He considered it worthy, does it not behoove us to follow His beautiful example and help those in need? Suppose we had no human need to help, would we have anything to touch our hearts?

Just a few days ago a widow lady came to me with five little children. A little, frail woman, small in stature, looked so weak and worn that she hardly looked able to cook a meal, and pled with me to take her children. Husband dead, no home, no funds, but five little tots to feed, clothe and care for, and no work. A widow in distress, children fatherless, children pleading for a home! What shall we do? What would you do if you were superintendent of the Christian Orphanage?

ORPHANAGE HOME-COMING DAY.

A general invitation having been published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, asking all the boys and girls who had been reared at the Orphanage to come back "home" on Saturday, August 31, 1929, and about thirty answered the call. These boys and girls, who have now grown into men and women, together with all the children now at the Orphanage, assembled in the reception hall of the building, which had been their "home" while at the Orphanage, at 11 A. M.

The address of welcome was made by Superintendent Chas. D. Johnston. Several songs and musical numbers, as well as recitations, were given by the children of the Orphanage. Dr. J. O. Atkinson made a talk. J. M. Darden made a short talk on "Home." Sam Leonard Davis, of Norfolk, Va., rendered several beautiful musical numbers.

There were many expressions from the young men and women as to how happy they were to come back "home."

At 12:30 they adjourned for a wonderful lunch out on the lawn, which had been prepared by the superintendent and the matrons, and was composed of Brunswick stew, ice cream, watermelon.

At 3 o'clock the young men and women, as well as every child at the Orphanage sixteen years of age and over, met in the reception hall for the purpose of organizing a society, the object of which was to keep in touch with one another and to do what they could for the Orphanage. After many suggestions, it was decided to name the organization "Home-Coming Society."

The following officers were elected for the year: J. M. Darden, president, Suffolk, Va.; Mrs. Edwin King, vice-president, Burlington, N. C.; Miss Pearl Goodwin, secretary, Raleigh, N. C.; Miss Rebecca Johnston, assistant secretary, Elon College, N. C.; Chas. D. Johnston, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.

It was voted to make all children sixteen and over, now at the Orphanage, honorary members, and all other members to pay dues of $1 per month, same to be sent to Charles D. Johnston, treasurer, monthly.

The society is anxious for every boy and girl who has made their home at the Orphanage at any time to join this society and do what they can for the Orphanage in order that the Orphanage may be able to do for others what it has done for them.

This was a great day, the only regret being that there was not 100 per cent present. Every one is looking for the next "Home-Coming Day" to be a great one, and every one is asked to try to make the attendance 100 per cent.

Any one wishing information can obtain same by writing to either J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va., president, or to Miss Pearl Goodwin, secretary, care Register of Deeds' Office, Raleigh, N. C.

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

We are glad to report a glorious revival of religion at Isle of Wight Christian Church. The messages, which were from God and delivered by Rev. E. B. White, of Dendron, Va., were straight from the blessed old Book, powerful and to the point; messages that spoke against sin and for God. Many souls were reconsecrated and took new stands for the Lord. Interest and attendance were good throughout the week, and five additions were made to the Church.

May the God of Isaac, Jacob and Abraham give the officials and leaders of that Church wisdom, that they may lead and direct these young converts in the right way. We feel that a much-needed and lasting good has been wrought in this Church. May the Lord follow it with His blessings.

HOME-COMING DAY.

Sunday, September 29, 1929, will be "Home-Coming Day" at Liberty (Vance) Church. This is celebrating the seventieth anniversary of the Church, and during this time twenty men have served as pastor. Some of them have gone to their reward, others cannot be located, while some have been invited to come. We are using this space in our Church paper, hoping to reach each and every one of our former pastors. Now, if you have served this Church as pastor, as evangelist, assistant in any way, or a member of the laity, you are earnestly and cordially invited to come back and spend the day with us. We hope, if possible, that each of you will avail yourself of this opportunity to get together for a day of real worship and Christian fellowship. If impossible to come, we hope you will send a word of greeting, that we may at least get in touch with you.

We will have a full program for the day that each one will enjoy, and through this day of worship together we trust that every one will be inspired to greater service for our Lord. We are asking all pastors to have a place on the program, and we want you to come and fill your place. Let me repeat that the call is meant for you, my brother; therefore, come—a welcome awaits you.

THE BASIC PRINCIPLES OF LIFE.

yields his own judgment and accords a willing obedience. I know full well that the charge is made against inter-collegiate athletics that the individual tends to become part of the machine, and that consequently some of the inherent value for character building is lost. It is, however, an evidently worth-while experience, for the sake of a great cause, to give one's pledge to undertake grinding practice and then to yield willing obedience to another's will and decision. The doing of these things has positive value in building character, has suggestive value, too, for the obligations that devolve upon men and women in the discharge of their vocational and professional duties.

3. The team-work required by intercollegiate athletics is a natural outgrowth of the training demands. It is a beautiful thing to witness an athletic team in action—the flower of the manhood of an institution, alert and buoyant with life, eager to give itself for the sake of alma mater, moving with the precision of the needle of the compass, unified in method and in purpose! I do not know anything that is more impressive than a well-trained and well-disciplined football team as it appears on the athletic gridiron ready for a contest, ready to give the best for the sake of the honor of its college. The willingness of the individual player, as the game progresses, to forget himself as an individual and to merge himself in the team as a whole, constitutes a most inspiring aspect of the athletic benefit to be had in our modern colleges. Athletic teams know that games are not won by individual stars in the athletic firmament, but by the milky way, so to speak, of team-work in which the individual star loses his individuality in the shimmer and the glimmer and the glory of the team as a whole.

We speak about social solidarity, we plead for universal fellowship, we long for Christian brotherhood in the organization of our social relationships with one another, and we do well, but the college athletic team has achieved these worthy aspirations through its devotion to the team as a whole and through its practice of all that is connoted in the term team-work.

4. But college athletics are not complete without a reference to those who play vicariously from the bleachers. The well-trained players, willing to enter into a game according to the rules and in the spirit of team-play, do not constitute the whole benefit to be derived from intercollegiate athletics. The bleachers also contribute their part, and a splendid part it is, too, that is due to their enthusiasm, their loyalty, and their love expressed in no uncertain terms for the success of their team and for the honor of their alma mater. What can be more inspiring than the cheering accorded a college athletic team by the members of the student body? Their enthusiasm is infectious, their devotion is unalloyed, their loyalty is self-forgetful and perfect. Out of such a situation as this, a most splendid contribution to character-building arises.

We likewise need to be enthusiastic for our life-work. The late President Elliott, of Harvard, used to say that men need to fall in love with their work and to enter upon the day's task as upon an athletic contest. President Elliot was not mistaken in this view. There is danger that the dull, drab, monotonous routine and grind of life may take from the human heart that it victimizes, the exuberant joy, that devoted enthusiasm, which are necessary for the achievement of the best results. When college days are over and the brass bands and the megaphones have ceased to glorify the contest on the gridiron of sport, the need for enthusiasm and love for our work, for loyal devotion to great causes will still be part and parcel of the necessary equipment and attitude of the individual in his effort to live a forthright life. It is this spirit of enthusiasm which will turn the hardest task into joyous play, which will make of the most menial labor an avenue of uplifting service, the vestibule to heavenly places of holy living.

But what are these four principles that we have found inherent in intercollegiate athletics, but four methods of expressing that sense of brotherhood, that sense of fellowship, that sense of social solidarity which characterizes our world today and which Paul described under the figure of the relationship that should exist between the several members of the human body? Let us, therefore, learn the rules of life and let us willingly embrace them; let us be willing to subject ourselves to that training which is necessary to achieve success in what we have called the game of life. Let us approach every problem, every situation that confronts us in the spirit of genuine team-work, and let us be enthusiastic for the causes to which we devote ourselves, self-forgetfully enthusiastic so that the victory which we hope to achieve will be for us not a personal attainment, but a social accomplishment. In this way shall we truly become "severally members one of another" and realize in our individual lives and in the social order that brotherhood of the spirit, that democracy of life, which Jesus came to teach and which He so signally exemplified.

OBITUARIES.

YARBROUGH.

On Sunday, August 18, 1929, our Heavenly Father saw fit to call from labor to reward our friend and sister, Mrs. Pattie Alston Yarbrough. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the Ladies' Bible Class of Liberty Church, of which she was a member, bow in humble submission to our Father's will, knowing that He doeth all things well.

2. That in the passing of Mrs. Yarbrough we are reminded of the uncertainty of life and the certainty of death.

3. That our Sunday School class has lost a sweet, Christian character, a loyal member, known as "Aunt Pattie" and loved by all.

4. That we extend to her loved ones our deepest sympathy and condolence.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun, a copy to the Christian Advocate (Methodist) for publication; also a copy sent to her family.

COMPLAINTS OR QUARRELS.—

One hears frequently complaints from certain Church members about all the tasks that they are called upon to perform, or the number of contributions they have been called upon to make. There is a tendency for the timid Church official who hears such complaints to take them as a warning that it is time to make the program of the Church lighter. In many such cases, however, such grumbling is an expression of satisfaction rather than of dissatisfaction. We are all so constituted that we like to have some notice taken of what we have done. There are two ways to attract such attention. One way is to boldly brag about how much one has accomplished. The other way is to grumble a little about how hard the task was, in order to call the attention of the other fellow to the recognition which is our due.

If you want to know just what is back of much of the grumbling you hear, sympathize with the grumbler and then apply a generous dose of praise for the good work done, and show him how necessary he is in the carrying on of the work; and then watch the interest and enthusiasm with which he will attack the next task that comes to hand. On the other hand, folks who have to constantly associate with one another, and who have nothing to do, are just bound to break the monotony by an occasional quarrel. It is much better to have a Church full of overworked members than it is to have a membership forced to quarrel with one another in order to start something that is interesting.

THE IMPORTANCE OF WORSHIP.—

"If you can't get people to come to the services of worship, you can't do much for them." In these words are summed up the convictions of a minister who has had a remarkable success in the capacity of pastor in the far West. Those of you who have had years of experience in the work of the Church, look back over the way that you have come and see whether or not your convictions fit in with this declaration. There are those who do not hesitate to say that they find the worship services of the Church dull and uninteresting. How many men or women do you know who have attained a satisfactory religious experience by going their separate and individual ways? How many men or women have rendered a service to the kingdom that is worthy of mention, who have not been regular attendants at the services of worship? Take a look at what is going on in the average Church, and see if much is being done for, or with, or through the folks who are members of Churches but who do not attend the services of worship.

If there is as much truth in this preacher's statement as the facts seem to indicate, is there not occasion to present the matter of Church attendance in a different light? Church members have been told that it is their religious duty to attend Church, and it is. But perhaps it would be equally as true to tell the careless Church members and all others that unless they attend the services of worship that there is not much that can be done with them. It is time that Church members face the facts. When the doctor is dealing with a difficult case, he does not hesitate to tell his patient or the nurse that unless his directions are followed that there is nothing much that he can do for the patient. After all, there is no one who has so great an interest at stake in the spiritual condition of the individual as the individual himself. And he ought to know exactly what is his part, if anything is to be done for him.

SPIRITUAL ENTHUSIASM.—

Our present-day scheme of things in religious activities seems to be competent to deal with practically every problem save that of generating spiritual enthusiasm. We seem to have more of everything else in our modern Christianity than we do of moral enthusiasm. From whence does spiritual enthusiasm come, and how is it generated?

The lack of spiritual enthusiasm cannot be due to the dearth of intellectual activity. There has never been a time in the history of the Church when those who were engaged in the service of the Church were possessed of finer trained intellects than are the workers of this present day. Those who are being trained for kingdom service are receiving intellectual advantages that are the equal of that which is being given for any other profession. There are even those who think that the lack of spiritual enthusiasm is due to the emphasis upon intellectual ability. There is no adequate ground for believing that there is antagonism between intellectual ability and activity and spiritual enthusiasm. If there has ever been an intellectual giant among the followers of Christ that man was St. Paul. But his intellectual ability was coupled with a spiritual enthusiasm that was always burning at a white-heat.

An effort is sometimes made to create enthusiasm by presenting the needs of the world and the opportunities that they offer for service. Such a knowledge is necessary for intelligent planning of the program of activities. It may also have a strong influence in determining the field in which one may elect to labor. But such a knowledge is inadequate as a dynamic.

Enthusiasm can be awakened only by the promise of personal gain and enrichment, or by loyalty and allegiance to a cause which one holds dearer than life itself. For the Christian, such a source of inspiration is to be found only in that which is offered in Jesus Christ. To all those who marveled at the enthusiasm of Paul, he had but one answer, Have I not seen the Lord Jesus Christ? When we fall in love with Jesus Christ, His purpose, and His program, we are on the road that leads to spiritual enthusiasm.

A RELIGIOUS DAILY.—

Bishop Joseph E. Berry, of the Methodist Church, has proposed that all the denominations unite in the publishing of a daily religious newspaper. It is the idea of Bishop Berry that his publication shall have the support of "all the Churches, organizations and individuals who are committed to the promotion of righteousness throughout the republic." It is easy to understand why such a proposal is suggested. There is no institution in the land which exerts a more constant and powerful influence than the daily press. Constant repetition makes for conviction. When one hears an idea repeated over and over, there is a tendency to unconsciously accept it. Then there is the power of cumulative evidence. There are two methods of argument; the one faces all the facts, marshals them in the relative order of their importance, and draws conclusions; the other ignores all facts not favorable to a preconceived conclusion, and selecting only that which tends to establish that for which one is contending, presenting such facts constantly.

There can be no doubt but that the latter course is the policy of many of the modern daily newspapers. The way the press is dealing with the prohibition question is an illustration of what we mean. Many of the daily papers are carrying on an insistent campaign to discredit prohibition. They give wide publicity to all news items which show up prohibition in an unfavorable light. Many editorial writers and paragraphers are following the same policy. All their references to the prohibition question are in a sneering vein of ridicule. These facts are well known. And there are other important political and social issues that are treated in the same way.

But whether or not a religious daily would be the solution of the problem is open to serious doubts. Such a paper would circulate only among those who would be least susceptible to the insidious propaganda which needs to be controverted. It is in line with the widespread tendency to have a centralized bureau or department to tell the people how they must think, feel and act. Are men and women who have had the modern advantages of education incapable of doing their own thinking and drawing their own conclusions? The thinking mind ought to be able to discern the true from the false, and to sift the relevant from the irrelevant. We may have misjudged the public, but we are convinced that a newspaper that dared to print the news without bias or coloring, and which did not construe its mission to be the broadcasting of ready-made opinions, would be the most welcome addition to the realm of publicity.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Eastern North Carolina Conference, we are advised by its president, Dr. W. C. Wicker, is to meet in regular annual session with Mt. Auburn Church Tuesday and Wednesday, November 19-20.

Dr. Frank E. Jenkins, president of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and Dr. S. L. Beougher, president of Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., while in the city the past week were welcome visitors at THE CHRISTIAN SUN office.

Rev. P. T. Klapp, who was ill for many weeks in spring and summer, is sufficiently restored to be in the pulpit again, and last Sunday met his regular appointment, riding nearly 100 miles to do so. A remarkable restoration indeed!

Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., having resigned as pastor of our Haw River Church, Rev. Carl Dollar, member of the senior class in Elon College, has been called as his successor and has accepted. Bro. Dollar is to serve the Church two Sundays each month.

The State Sunday School Convention of North Carolina meets with the First Baptist Church, Raleigh, October 2-4, inclusive. A splendid program has been prepared and on the roster are speakers who will give much valuable counsel and help in religious education. Among the speakers is President W. A. Harper, of Elon College.

Dr. C. C. Ryan, pastor of the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., has returned from his three months' tour of the Holy Land. He is now giving his congregation an account of the many interesting things and sights that came in his way. Besides visiting Palestine, his tour extended to Syria and Egypt, to Italy, France and Switzerland.

From the Graham Messenger, September 20th: "The revival of the Christian Church at Haw River closed Wednesday night. They had one of the best revivals held here in a long time. Rev. Fleming and Rev. Crutchfield are able preachers, and everybody enjoyed the services. Several new members will be added to the Church, we are sure."

Rev. A. R. Flowers is this week engaged in a joint meeting with White Level Baptist Church and Plain View Freewill Baptist Church, Franklin County. After an engagement with Holly Springs in October, Bro. Flowers plans to work in Georgia. He is an active man in the ministry, giving unreservedly his strength of preaching the gospel and building up the Churches, especially with the young people.

The women of the Burlington Missionary Society and Church are making ready for a great meeting of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference, annual session, at the Burlington Church, Friday, October 11th, beginning at 10:30 A. M. The program is to appear in the next issue of THE SUN. Ministers throughout the three Conferences of this State and Virginia composing the Woman's Conference, have all been invited to be present and to bring a delegation from their Churches as well as from their society. Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C., is president, and Mrs. O. H. Paris, secretary. A delightful day and a great meeting are anticipated.

Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, pastor, was assisted in revival services at Pleasant Hill Church, Alamance, beginning Sunday, September 1st, and continuing for a week, by Rev. Neil Rowland. The Church was very much revived, large audiences attended the meetings, the people heard Bro. Rowland gladly, and there were additions to the Church, and others are to join. The pastor feels that the Church was much blessed and benefitted by the meeting. Bro. Crutchfield is this week assisting Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., pastor, in a meeting at Haw River. The attendance is good and prospects favorable.

From the Christian-Evangelist (Disciples), St. Louis, Mo., issue of September 12th: "The General Convention of the Christian Church (not Disciples) will vote in September on the plan of union with the Congregational Church which was adopted by the National Council of the latter body last June. Favorable action is anticipated. The plan does not call for the immediate vanishing of the constituent denominations, but to the forming of a common organization to which will be committed as many functions of each denomination as each one is able and willing to commit to it. Individual Churches will operate as members of the united body, and gradually the larger denominational activities and responsibilities will be united in all respects. The goal is complete organic union. The plan is being hopefully observed as one possible of extension to other denominations. If it works, other Christian groups may join the fellowship."

The very striking, stately and permanent memorial in stone to Rev. James O'Kelly was erected at a conspicuous and suitable site on the Elon College campus by the builders the past week. The memorial is to be unveiled, with proper ceremony, at the college on Wednesday, October 16th. The whole Church is invited to attend this unveiling and epochal event. The Rev. James O'Kelly, the apostle of religious liberty and equal rights in ecclesiastical government, to preachers and laity, died at a ripe old age on October 16, 1826. This memorial in stone, that will endure through the ages and is fittingly erected on the campus at Elon College, where future leaders in the Church will view it and acquaint themselves with the great spirit who did so much for religious liberty and Christian democracy in the world, will be unveiled on a day exactly one hundred and three years from the day on which he died. October 16, 1929, promises to be a great day and a history-making episode in our Christian annals. Prepare now to come and see.

The newly elected pastor was installed at Elon College on Sunday, September 15th. The Greensboro Daily News of Monday, the 16th, says of the event: "Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, former president of Palmer College, whose baccalaureate sermon, delivered at Elon College at the recent commencement, made such a profound impression on all who heard it, was yesterday installed as the sixth pastor of the Church at Elon College. Distinguished men and long pastorates have characterized the college Church. The late Dr. W. S. Long was the first pastor. He was followed by Dr. J. U. Newman, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who presided at the installation service yesterday, was the third in order, serving for about twenty years. Drs. N. G. Newman and W. S. Alexander each served five years. For many years the late Dr. J. W. Wellons was the co-pastor in charge of pastoral visitation. Dr. Hurst began his pastorate under most favorable auspices, with a great congregation present. Words of welcome were spoken to him on behalf of the town by W. E. Lowe, mayor; on behalf of the Church by J. C. McAdams, chairman of the board of deacons; on behalf of the students by S. F. Jackson, president of the student senate, and on behalf of the college by Dean A. L. Hook. The installation prayer was fittingly offered by the Rev. A. P. Hurst, father of Dr. Hurst, who has recently become an Elon citizen and member of the local Church. Dr. Alfred W. Hurst is the youngest pastor ever to serve the Elon Church, being slightly less than thirty years of age. He began preaching at the age of sixteen years, and during his years as a minister has completed college course at Palmer and Defiance Colleges and his seminary course at the University of Chicago. He comes to the Elon pastorate fresh from college executive and pastoral experience at Palmer College."

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference will be held at the Franklin Christian Church on Tuesday, November 5th. A large representation from each Church and society is most earnestly desired. Mrs. John Ferguson, president of the National Commission of Protestant Church Women, comes as a special guest of the Conference. Pastors are urged to attend, and to give notice of time and place of meeting. 400 W. 34th St., Norfolk, Va. MRS. L. W. STAGG, Secretary.

NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet at the Suffolk Christian Church on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, November 6, 7, 8. The change of date was made by the executive committee to avoid a conflict with the date of the General Convention, which will be held at Piqua, Ohio, October 22-30. The program committee is planning an interesting and constructive program. Please keep in mind the date—November 6th to 8th. H. S. H.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The circulation manager is making a special effort to collect renewals and to get new subscribers for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Many letters have been mailed to SUN subscribers, asking for renewals. These letters are not sent as duns, as some people think, but just as kind reminders that THE SUN needs money to pay the printer. When you mail us a check for two dollars to renew your subscription, to THE SUN, you are not making a donation; you are buying a year's subscription to one of the best-edited religious papers I know. If you will read its pages from week to week and at the end of the year you don't think you have gotten value received, please let me know. We want to place THE SUN in every home. Let all THE SUN subscribers help us do that. Won't you solicit at least one new subscriber?

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

JESUS CHRIST THE WONDERFUL.

BY REV. E. B. WHITE.

"His name shall be called wonderful."—
Isa. 9:6.

The greatest wonder of the ages is the wonder of redeeming love. The Almighty, self-existent God, whose wisdom is infinite, whose power is unlimited, and whose love is boundless, foreseeing the ruined condition of man, totally depraved and wretched, ignorant, impure, and perfectly helpless—so loved the world (the whole family of man) that He purposed the salvation of those captivated by sin and drawn away from Him. The story of human redemption began in the counsels of eternity, before the foundations of the earth was laid, before a single star was planted in the firmament, that they might stand perpetual beacons upon the fields of heaven, forever declaring the "glory of God, and publishing to the world His handiwork; before the Holy Son of God, the Almighty King. Our gracious Heavenly Father devised the wonderful plan of salvation—entered into sacred covenant with His Son, His only begotten Son, that pure Being, to become the atoning sacrifice, the Ransomer, the Redeemer.

In the "fullness of time," the glorious Son of Righteousness rose in the spiritual firmament and shed light and life upon an endueged and benighted world. Thus the types, the sacrifices, the scapegoat, the brazen serpent, the cities of refuge, and all the rest stand forth illuminated in the marvelous light of their great antetype. All the prophecies concerning the "ancient of days," the Messiah of prophecy, the Anointed One, the Lord of glory, from Eden to John the Baptist, are fulfilled. The incarnation of God in humanity, in the person and nature of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, is the supreme miracle of Christianity. In the incarnation, His divine nature became mysteriously blended with His human in the one blessed personality. Our Redeemer is wonderful because He is God-Man, He took upon Him the infirmities of men; but "in Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily."

The King of glory is wonderful because He so loved the world—lost sinners—that He left the throne of the King, became incarnate, and entered into the circumstances of lose men in order to obtain eternal redemption for them, and to lay the foundation of His own everlasting mediatorial glory. He who "knew no sin was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." All the claims of God's insulted honor and government were met by the Lamb of God, who voluntarily paid the price due the transgressor. It was "to give His life a ransom" for the condemned captives of the Prince of this world, that our Great High Priest underwent His passion and suffering. The precious, sacred blood of Jesus Christ—the atoning sacrifice—alone paid the penalty, satisfied Divine justice, and rolled away the curse. The Deliverer brought in an everlasting righteousness; He vindicated the authority of God; He gave perfect obedience to the severest demands of the will of the Father. Indeed, He is the wonder of the ages!

He is wonderful because His is the greatest name in history. Art, science, literature, architecture and painting honor Him as they honor no other man. His sublime and matchless character is the miracle of history; the story of His wonderful life is the unequalled wonder of all literature. The entire race has failed to become what it was designed to be. In the history of the world, there is only this one exception—Jesus of Nazareth. He actualizes the paramount purpose for which man was created. The great men who ever lived in the world are not great enough to be classed with the Founder of Christianity. Our Lord is the one Man who has lived in this defiled, loathsome world who was so perfect, so infinitely perfect in purity and fullness of goodness, that men who have studied His character and life acknowledge Him to be the perfect ideal of wisdom, purity, integrity, holiness and love. In Him we have the model of perfect character. He meets and fulfills our deepest aspirations.

Our Lord was wonderful in His claims. He said, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." "I can destroy sin, Satan, death." Yes, the self-existent, ever blessed, incarnation of Divine love, our everlasting Friend, is the only way to the Father, and the only channel of communication from Him. The only hope of the world today is in the religion of the Man of Galilee.

Christ is wonderful because He belongs to no particular race. Though a Jew, all men were drawn toward Him. The greatness of our Redeemer was His heart. It was the largest heart which ever throbbed in the world. Our Lord's great heart overflowed with love, compassion and tenderness to the whole human race. I just cannot understand how a professing Christian can believe in Jesus Christ and not believe in missions. Jesus Christ not only taught missions and commanded missions, but He was a Missionary from heaven to a foreign world full of sin and degradation.

Isn't it glorious to know that our Lord does not belong to any age? The immutability of God is declared in the sacred Scriptures (Heb. 1:10-12, 13:8; Jas. 1:17). Beloved, states and empires may pass away, and the great globe dissolve, yet our Heavenly Father is the same yesterday, today and forever. His mighty power to save, His precious blood to cleanse, His great love for the Church, His bride; His determination to carry on the work which He has begun in His saints, His intercession—all these change not: they are immutable.

Our Lord is wonderful in His supreme revelation of our Heavenly Father. He said, "I and my Father are one. He that hath seen me hath seen the Father also." Yes, He is "the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of His person." Like a flash of lightning from a dark sky, the King of glory came from heaven, that the splendor of Divine love might break undimmed on the eyes of mankind, and convey to us with pierced hands the Father's pardon. He was Himself what He came to reveal. Behold Him walking on the Sea of Galilee, commanding the winds and waves; behold Him healing the sick, and subjecting even death to His authority! Could mere man do this? No, never! Christ challenged the faith of men in His Messiahship on the ground of His wonderful miracles. Were they not designed to prove the divinity of Christ?

Our Lord is wonderful because "He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him." He is ready to deliver the penitent from the bondage of Satan and give them the liberty of the sons of God. Therefore, you need not carry a self-accusing, self-torturing heart. Repent and accept this wonderful Saviour on gospel terms.

Christians, be "living epistles" to the power and preciousness of His grace.

THE CHURCH AT WORK.

The Piqua General Convention.

The Piqua Church will entertain all delegates and the official delegation from the Congregational Church free for lodging and breakfast in the homes of the people. Then they will in like manner accommodate as many of the Convention visitors as possible after delegates are provided for. Meals will be served in the dining-room by the ladies of the Church for a moderate charge. Some always prefer hotel accommodations at their own expense. Such accommodations may be secured as follows:

Hotel Favorite (six blocks from the Church): Without bath—one guest, $1.50 to $1.75; two guests, $2.50 to $3. With bath—one guest, $2.25 to $2.50; two guests, $4 to $6.

Glencoe Hotel (six blocks from the Church; no baths): Hot and cold running water—one guest, $1.25 to $1.50; two guests, $2 to $2.50; four guests (two beds), $1 each. Pitcher and bowl (no running water)—one guest, $1; two guests, $1.50.

Rooming houses: A number of private rooming-houses will accommodate guests for about $1 per day, or $3 per week.

Please write Rev. Raymond G. Clark, Piqua, Ohio, about your accommodations, and be sure to tell him whether you are a delegate or a visitor. Please give him full and accurate information in your first letter, for he should not be expected to take the time to write you for fuller explanations.

Piqua has a population of 20,000. There are seventeen Protestant and two Catholic Churches, a high school, two junior high schools, five grade schools, and two parochial schools.

The Convention program is practically completed. It will be a full session, with many important items on the agenda.

Attention, Conference Secretaries!

Please send the full name of all delegates, and when you send in lists of ministers and others for the "Christian Annual," please do not forget this important matter. Please arrange them alphabetically, too. It should be "Smith, John C.," and not "J. C. Smith." Then, if they are typewritten, it pleases better, for no one likes to see his name misspelled, and it is almost impossible to tell from many secretarial reports just how to spell a name. With many persons, m, n, u, v, e, i, and other letters all look alike.

All Convention delegate lists should be sent without delay to the Convention Secretary as soon as they are chosen. He should be notified by the Conference secretary if any changes are made in the list of delegates. There should be no delay in any such official matters, for the Convention meets October 22nd, and it is now September 19th.

Rev. Edwin B. Flory is secretary of the Committee on Christian Education; Rev. Lester T. Proctor, of the Committee on the Church and World Problems; Rev. Carl R. Dille, of the Committee on Finance; Rev. Joseph W. Fix, of the Committee on Evangelism and Life Service, and Rev. Simon A. Bennett, of the Committee on Foreign Missions.

W. H. DENISON,
Secretary.

Dayton, Ohio.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the North Carolina Woman's Conference will be held with the Burlington Christian Church on Friday, October 11th. This is an accessible point, and it is earnestly desired that all of our Churches and societies be represented by delegates in the conference. Every minister in the conference is invited to come.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

October and November are Conference months with us of the Southern Convention, excepting the Virginia Valley, which meets in August, and this year had a most successful session. Our minds, with resuming active work among the Churches after the summer revivals or vacations, naturally turn to Conference and what we are to do about it. Every Church naturally desires to carry to Conference a good report of the year's work. All Churches that can legitimately do so, naturally want to report an increase in Church membership, as an indication of activity and of growth through the year.

That which should interest every Church and Church member now is the raising of Conference apportionments. The Conferences, through counsel and deliberation, asked every local Church to send to the annual session and to the Treasurer of the Conference certain "apportionments" which are essential to the growth and development of the enterprises and the institutions of the Church. Through the year, and in certain seasons, special offerings have been taken for various causes and enterprises; but now Conference requests the Churches to take the offering for united enterprises that are absolutely essential to the life of the Conference and the Churches. Every Church should show its loyalty and devotion to its Conference by not only taking an offering now, but by getting the full amount of the Conference apportionments. The Conference certainly hasn't asked for a dime that is not needed, nor for a dollar that will not be used for most worthy and meritorious purposes.

Our Conference apportionments are not large. All Churches can raise them in full, if there is proper co-operation to this end. It is to be hoped that no individual will interpose his personal prejudice or opinion, but will yield to the wisdom of the whole body in seeking to raise in full Conference apportionments. It is not likely that the Conference or the Convention goes wrong, very long at a time at least, and if there are errors or mistakes for the time being, they will be corrected. It is far better to prove our loyalty and devotion by helping to raise Conference apportionments than to interpose objection and withhold co-operative activity. We should this fall have the greatest sessions of our Conferences ever held. Very many Churches have had successful revivals. Thousands of souls have been born into the kingdom. Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions showed great increase in numbers and in activity among the younger people. Faithful and earnest pastors have sought to break the bread of life and to carry the message of life and growth to their people. There has been every opportunity afforded for spiritual growth and development, for kingdom enlargement and extension. We should now, out of gratitude to Almighty God, the Giver of every good, seek with zeal and sacrificial giving to prepare our own hearts and our own Churches for the very best annual sessions of Conference that we have ever had. To this end, all of us should labor, pray and give.

THE PRAYER MEETING.

This writer attended an "old-fashioned" prayer meeting the other Wednesday night. Very few were present. The pastor, two or three deacons, the Sunday School superintendent, one or two teachers, half-dozen women. That was all. There were a few songs, a Scripture reading, a prayer and comment by the pastor, two or three prayers and some testimony by a few of the faithful, and it was all over. And yet one wonders if it was all over.

You cannot write "finis" at the close of a prayer meeting. It just seems to be over. Moreover, it seemed to be a very tame and uninteresting event. But to the earnest souls that worshiped and said their prayers there, it was neither of these. One would come nearer the truth by saying this is "the beginning" than to say this is "the ending." The very heart, soul and power of the Church were packed into that prayer meeting. The history of Christianity and of the Church reveals this fact.

Earnest men and women tarried together in a prayer meeting, and Pentecost broke forth to startle and to arouse a sleeping world. There were only one hundred and twenty disciples who prayed together till Pentecost came and the real fellowship of saints began.

Then the new Church, which had miraculously taken form and body following Pentecost, prayed together, held a prayer meeting at Antioch, and foreign missions were born—the biggest business inherent in and growing out of the nature of God, that to unite the souls of men in a world brotherhood.

"Down by the riverside," the women held a prayer meeting. Paul was constrained thither by the Spirit, and our ancestors in Europe caught the first gleams of a rising sun whose rays were to illumine their heart and soul and make a career for Christianity unparalleled in time or history.

Paul and Silas were holding a prayer meeting in prison—just praying and singing there at midnight—and then an earthquake: prison doors and windows fly open, conversion takes place, souls are born into the kingdom of God. "The Great Awakening" of 1800 grew out of days of fasting and prayer, and the revival of 1857 that swept thousands into the kingdom of God in the United States began in prayer.

The prayer meeting may seem to the world, and even to many of us in the Church, a very dull, uninteresting sort of thing. It has few, if any, thrills; but we should bear in mind that it is charged with dynamite, or something more powerful than that, for only the angels of glory and the God whose praises they sing can discern the power of a prayer meeting; what the prayer meeting has done for the Church and the world, and, best of all, what the prayer meeting does for the devout souls who gather there when privilege and opportunity afford. The very soul of the Church is its midweek prayer meeting. Oh, for a revival of the good, old-fashioned prayer meeting!

CHRIST AND THE COLLEGE.

The place where Christ is most highly honored and exalted, or most humiliated and shamed, is the college and university. In the college, the shape the character of civilization and the Church, youth of the land who are to mold the thought and receive the training that is to shape their destiny and fix their attitude in life. The Church and those most deeply concerned in the progress of the kingdom have always been aware of this fact, especially in the history of America. Only sixteen years after the Pilgrims reached these "inhospitable shores," the oldest and yet the greatest of our educational institutions, Harvard University, was "founded for the purpose of promoting religion." This institution still wears the name of a preacher, Rev. John Harvard, its first benefactor, who gave the institution his library of religious books, and out of gratitude they named the institution for him. Yale University, not far away, was founded by a group of ministers "for the purpose of teaching religion." Dr. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of Parks Street Church, Boston, declares in a recently published sermon that "every great institution which stands today in America, typically representative of the larger hope and the larger life, can be traced directly to the heart of Christ through the heart of His Church.

Read the long list of illustrious names of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and you will find how the Spirit of God moved the hearts of men. The intellectual impetus came from the Church of God—that part of the Church that had an open eye and an open heart to the will of the Infinite. . . . It is the Church of God to which is attributable, more than to anything else, that great movement toward freedom which seeks to enlighten all and keep none in bondage."

Read "The Story of Liberty," and one will find that the great Church of the living God is the great emancipator, the one force that has done more than all other forces combined to set the mind and the soul of man free.

You cannot set the soul free and leave the intellect bound. You cannot set the intellect free and leave the soul bound. The individual is one. When he exerts himself to learn, to think and to know, he is intellect; when he exerts himself to will and to do, he is volition; when he exerts himself to feel, to express and to train his emotions, he is feeling; and when he exerts himself in entirety and in fullness, then he is soul—a soul which, reaching up toward or seeming to apprehend the Infinite, is spirit. And so our colleges, whose care it is to train the mind, the thinking, the intellect, and shape the character and destiny of our youth, were planted for the purpose of promoting religion, exalting the Christ, honoring and glorifying the Father. Christ is the Head of the Church; the Church is His very body; and just as He uses the pulpit and the sanctuary to train and inspire the hearts of His followers, He uses the school and the college to train and inspire the head, the thinking, the knowledge of His followers. All Christians, and in fact all who care and long for growth and enlargement, rejoice in the progress and development of the Christian college and share in its triumphs and its victories for truth, progress and righteousness. J. O. A.

PREPARING FOR A NEW PENTECOST.

The Churches of Protestantism are preparing, and millions of individual Church members are hoping and praying, for a new pentecostal, a real, genuine, spiritual experience during the year 1930, when the 1900th anniversary of the earthly ministry of our Lord and the birth of the Christian Church, in the experience of Pentecost, are to be celebrated. The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, through its Commission on Evangelism, held a meeting at East Northfield, Mass., this summer and outlined a program of preparation for Pentecost, which program, it is recommended, Churches and congregations should begin to work on this fall and continue until the "Day of Pentecost" (June 8, 1930). The Federal Council Bulletin for September states that the program is so organized as to provide a plan which each denomination, or local Church, can carry out independently and, at the same time, feel that it is sharing in a common plan whose major points all have agreed upon. The program, beginning with October, is built about the Sunday School, the Christian Endeavor, or the Bible school, by whatever name it may be called in any Church. This program is given that any and every Church, desiring to share the benefits of the spiritual blessings of Pentecost and the pentecostal season may, with October, begin working on as follows:

1. A visitation of the entire Bible school enrollment and membership of the Church one week preceding rally day, to secure attendance.
2. The observance of "Rally Day," October 6th, in the Bible school and the Church.
3. A survey of the entire community covered by the parish or parishes concerned.
4. A continued emphasis on Church and Bible school attendance until New Year's.
5. Attention given to unattached members, seeking to secure their affiliation with some local Church where they reside.
6. Exaltation of the Lord's Supper, through enrichment of the Communion service, better understanding of its divine purpose and a greater loyalty in attendance by the membership.
7. The observance of a "decision day" at Thanksgiving time or Christmas, or both.
8. Creation and distribution of evangelistic literature.
9. An autumn ingathering, using every available practical method for securing evangelistic results.
10. Giving attention to the constant care and culture of the new converts.

New Year's to Easter.

1. Observance of the week of prayer during the first week in January.
2. Emphasis placed on the value of individual and family devotions during the entire period.
3. Instruction of boys and girls for Church membership.
4. The wide use of the fellowship of prayer.
5. By the "home visitation" plan, revival meetings, and pastoral evangelistic work and preaching, to win every possible person to Christ and His Church.
6. Special observance of Passion Week.
7. An ingathering during this period that shall be worthy of every local congregation.

Easter (April 20) to Pentecost (June 8).

1. A Church attendance crusade that shall seek to have every member of every Church in America in Church services somewhere each Sunday.
2. The reading of Luke and Acts simultaneously, a chapter daily.

3. That all the Protestant ministers of America be requested to preach on the same subjects each Sunday.

4. That during the ten days preceding "Pentecost," a series of "upper room" union prayer meetings be held in Churches, homes, shops, offices, and stores, in every community throughout the nation.

5. That in addition to the Easter ingathering, this period be used for a united community and also local Church effort in soul-winning by whatever method may seem most advisable, so that the 1900th "Pentecost" may be as the first Pentecost—a time of great ingathering. J. O. A.

CLAIMS OF THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

An orphanage is a modern Christian institution to care for Children whose parents are gone. Heathenism and paganism never dreamed of such help for the unfortunate. Greece or Rome, with all their learning and power, made no such provision for orphans. It remained for Christianity to house, clothe, feed, and educate the helpless little ones. This age surpasses all other ages in the care and training of children, and the orphanage touches the heart of Christian teaching. Centuries passed before this obligation was realized by the Church; but it has at last gripped the sympathy and moved the people of God to care for the homeless little ones; and, as the people are informed, they respond with their prayers and their gifts.

The support of the orphanage is a great opportunity for Sunday Schools as well as Churches. A monthly offering helps the orphanage and those who give, for Jesus said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The Bible gives an account of a beautiful orphan. She was taken by her cousin Mordecai and brought up as his own daughter. She was a poor alien peasant child, but she was beautiful, and when the servants of King Ahasuerus sought a wife for the king, Esther was chosen of all the young women brought into the palace for the king to make his choice.

In the great crisis, when a decree had been issued by the king to destroy all the Jews in the 127 provinces of his empire, it was Esther who went in before Ahasuerus, at the request of Mordecai, won his favor, and saved the race to which she belonged. Mordecai's home thus became a tiny orphanage, and Queen Esther was a sample of what an orphanage can do for the world.

The Christian Orphanage has claims upon all the members of the Southern Christian Churches; claims which should appeal to the heart, head and purse! It must be a heartless Christian who does not feel for orphans. Children have a hard road to travel when parents live. Think of teething, mumps, measles, school, and all experiences up to manhood and womanhood, and you see a rugged path for those who dwell at home; then think of the little ones whose lives must grow to maturity without father and mother—and it will touch your heart. It is a sad picture to see a group of little children looking into a widowed mother's grave. No wonder Jesus loved little children, for He could see all their trials in all conditions; and real Christians have the love of Jesus in their hearts.

Thought grows out of love, for "as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." There is thought that is of the head only; but when the heart loves, the head will think in terms of love. When Christian hearts are moved by love, the head will think, so that heart and head join in sympathy and help for the little ones. Such thought leads to inquiry, prayer, help, and giving. Have you thought seriously of the 120 children in the Christian Orphanage? If you have not, it is time to think.

The Christian Orphanage was founded by the Christian Church in 1907. It takes money to care for the 120 children, and their needs have claims upon you and your money, too. Every Sunday School in the Southern Christian Convention should take a monthly offering for the orphanage. Always send whole dollars, not fractions of dollars. Make it a special offering; use special envelopes; take it by classes; teach the children so they can understand what it means to give. When we feel, think and give, interest in the orphanage will grow. W. W. S.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Delegates from the Southern Christian Convention to the General Convention, at Piqua, Ohio, October 22-29, 1929.

The delegates from the Southern Convention to the extraordinary session of the General Convention, to be held at Piqua, Ohio, will be the same as were the delegates to the last General Convention, which met at the regular session at Urbanna, Ill.

Vacancies caused by death or withdrawal from the denomination will be filled by the Executive Committee. A complete list of all delegates and alternates will appear in next week's SUN, and, in addition, announcements will be sent out from the President's office to all delegates, giving full details as to transportation, etc.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"Tomorrow" is a word that implies delay in whatever is to be done. Hesitation, when a matter is plain, is full of risk. Putting off what should be done today jeopardizes the matter and reflects upon the individual. In moral and spiritual decisions, "now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation." Moral and spiritual decisions set the standard for all human decisions and actions. There is no tomorrow in our obligations. If a loan is secured from the bank, the note is signed today. It may mature tomorrow, but the transaction is today. "The days of our years are three-score years and ten"; that is the normal life of man. But we live the years by days—present days, not tomorrows. Years are made up of days, and the most important opportunity for doing our work is today. "Give us this day our daily bread," is a part of the Lord's Prayer. The rich man had much goods laid up for many days, but his soul was required of him that day. We can lay up treasures in heaven, but not upon earth, for the future in this life is unknown. We may really know more about the future beyond this life than we can know about the future in this life.

If we live the life of a true follower of Jesus Christ in this life, we know that we will dwell with Jesus Christ in the world to come, for He has said, "I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." We are just as certain of our destiny beyond this life, if we do not follow Christ, for "how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation"?

Prompt action under plain conviction is always safe; hesitation, delay, tomorrow is always dangerous. All this is plain in the field of religion. Individual experience answers to this statement. All spiritual decisions, or failure in decisions, carry us forward in the path of the just or carry us down the broad road to failure or destruction.

Now, leave the purely religious life and consider human interests in the field of material interests and personal decisions. Decisions should not be made in haste and without thoughtful and prayerful consideration; but when data received and examination leads to a conclusion, immediate action is safest. In business, this is a safe rule. In accepting positions, there is no better rule. In the field of human affection, looking to marriage, it is all-important. Hasty love means doubtful happiness. Hasty accepted positions may fail for both parties. Never defer decisions unless the facts are not known, but always defer decisions until the facts, upon which to base a conviction, are known. Success depends more upon correct decisions than anything else. To decide wisely what to plant, how and when to cultivate, what fertilizers to use, and, after harvest, when to sell the market products—these are all questions for decision. What is known as sound judgment is nothing more nor less than wise decision.

In the purchase of a car, clothes, land, cattle, poultry, furniture, any necessity of home, farm, or business, decision comes in and determines the judgment of the purchaser. The selection of a school, profession, pursuit in any field of service, may settle the success of a whole life. It will not do to put off such questions after one knows what should be the choice. It is not safe to listen to the persuasion of others to do this or that in life. Receive information from any and all sources, but make the decision yourself. If you should be a doctor, do not listen to friends who want you to be a preacher. An uncalled preacher is a failure and deserves the pity of all men. Listen to the inner voices that call you, and then obey.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

The Sunday Schools of the Virginia and North Carolina Conferences are requested by the Southern Christian Convention and the several Conferences to make an offering quarterly, preferably on the fifth Sunday, for Elon College. We say on the fifth Sunday preferably because then the offering for the college will not interfere with those supposed to be made monthly for missions and the orphanage.

The schools that have adopted this plan write that it is creating new and intelligent interest in the college—the very hope the proposer of the plan, Dr. L. E. Smith, had in mind when he recommended it to the Southern Christian Convention.

Quite a number of the schools are thinking the matter over, and it is prayerfully hoped that they will, on the fifth Sunday in September, take an offering for our college and so enjoy the blessed experience of the cheerful giver of whom our Master said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

During the first quarter of the present fiscal year of the college, which runs from June 1st to May 31st, the following Sunday Schools have sent in offerings:

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

The college opened on September 11th, with the largest enrollment in the college department for the first day of any previous year. The influence of the school is growing, students are coming this year from high schools which we have never been able to reach before. It is not a question of getting students, but of having the facilities to take care of them. This institution offers an opportunity for a Christian education to a class of youth unreached by any other college, and the expense is within reach of all.

The Christian college earns its right to that title not because it was founded by the Christian Church nor because it offers certain courses in Christian training and uphold certain standards of attendance at religious services, but because there is an all-pervading Christian atmosphere, a motivating Christian spirit that manifests itself in faculty and student alike in a spirit of reverence, co-operation and good will, and that makes it easier to be consciously imitative of the spirit of Him for whom we train leadership.

An intellectual training will not prepare us for high ideals; it must be accompanied by the moral, and I know of no moral growth that does not come from religion. Piedmont Junior College is a vision in process of fulfillment, and the fulfillment of the vision is yet to come. To do the work that the college should do, endowment that will guarantee a certain stability of income, and a group of buildings and equipment are necessary.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN will tell the story of the larger vision and program for Piedmont Junior College from time to time.

REVIVAL SERVICES.

Revival services began at Concord July 28th and ran through Friday, August 2nd. The attendance was very good, considering other meetings of the community. The pastor preached at 10 A. M., and Rev. W. B. Statler, who was conducting a bush-arbor meeting nearby, preached Sunday afternoon.

Rev. J. W. Knight, Stokesdale, N. C., took charge of preaching the Word on Monday. Bro. Knight endeared himself to the people and made many acquaintances. He was very ardent and persistent in his efforts to do his best for the Lord. He is a consecrated man, and one of our Bible preachers of a full and complete salvation. May the Lord prolong his day and renew his strength to preach the gospel of our Lord. It was good to be in his fellowship. May the Lord bless his efforts of love wherever he goes.

There were two additions to the local Church and many reconsecrations for a closer walk with God. The Church was revived and encouraged to continue faithfully in being a spiritual light-house for a lost people. We had a good meeting. May the Lord be given the praise and glory due Him is our prayer in gratitude for what was done.

Evangelistic services began at New Hill September 8th and closed Friday night, September 13th. Rev. R. A. Whitten came to us on Monday and did the preaching. Bro. Whitten is a minister deeply interested in the advancement of the kingdom of God in the hearts of men. He is consecrated to the work of soul-saving. His personality won for him many friends around New Hill. His messages were of a high spiritual order and consisted of biblical truths. We enjoyed his fellowship. May the Lord bless him with strength for his labors of love elsewhere.

Rev. J. S. Carden spent a few days with us during the meetings, this being his Church. He preached one mighty acceptable sermon. His old friends were glad to see him. May people have great confidence in Bro. Carden. We were glad to have him.

There were several reconsecrations, and many asked for prayers. A fine spirit of co-operation was manifested by local Church members of other denominations. The singing was good. We greatly appreciate all efforts put forth during the meeting and thank the Lord for blessings received and for whatever was accomplished.

L. L. WYRICK.

ROANOKE, ALA.

Our ministers' and laymen's meeting will be held at Roanoke, Ala., on the fifth Sunday in this month. We hope every pastor and preacher will be present, and that quite a number of our laymen will avail themselves of the opportunity afforded through this meeting to undertake something definite for the Church. Evidently our Church must look to a larger program of service. We should, as ministers and laymen of the Church, not be satisfied with present attainments, but should seek to do definite work for Jesus Christ, and we hope to be able at this meeting to develop some plan of constructive work for our Church.

There are three great interests demanding our special attention at this time, and to each of these we must devote some effort. I speak of evangelism, education and missions. These are the three great demands made on the Church of Jesus Christ. If our ministers and laymen could devise some plan by which we could reach out and carry forward these great interests, it would by no means be a failure. We must enlarge our evangelical program. The recruits we add to our fellowship will determine largely our success in educational and missionary success. We have a great question to handle in regard to the preparation of the youth of our Church for leadership and service, and this will be done largely by our own institution, namely: Piedmont Junior College, as a starter along this line. Much depends upon the start we give our young men and women.

I am happy to say to the brotherhood of these Conferences in the Far South that we had the finest opening in the history of Piedmont Junior, and we should work and pray for the institution, and then we should be so much interested in the missionary work of the Church that we would not fail to impress its importance upon our people; and as we lay emphasis on these great interests, the Church will take on new life and undertake greater things for God.

Meet us at Roanoke on the fifth Sunday in September and let's talk and pray for our Church and for the glory of our risen Lord.

G. D. HUNT.

PORTO RICO LETTER.

A year ago, the 13th of this month, the most destructive and tragical cyclone took place, and left this beautiful island like a dry forest and swept away all its products. Hundreds of people were left homeless, without food and clothing. But the kind help of the Christian people of the United States and other countries helped to shelter and give them clothes and food; also comforted them by their cheerful messages through their missionaries and other workers on this island.

Today, if one were to take a trip around the island, one would never know that such destruction had taken place, as mother nature has been working hard to cover all her physical defects. In fact, the island never has looked as beautiful as it is now. Right this minute I fear the storm, as the rain and the wind are beating so very strong, and the lightning and thunder are so furious that I have to stop every few seconds and look around to see if no damage has been done. Yes, I am all alone in a big and empty house. I suppose I still had fear of the cyclone of the last year. Let us hope that no destructive storm will take place this year.

As I started to tell of the conditions of the island today, I shall continue with my story if no interruptions take place by the rainstorm at this hour. Yes, mother nature has done a remarkable work, but she has not been able to improve on the crops that these people almost lived on. Today one would find this island suffering from the economic, poverty, rural housing conditions, sickness and disease that the cyclone has brought. Today the people of this island are suffering more than they did a few months after the storm, and the question comes to our mind: what is the solution of the problem?

To us who are studying the problems of this island, it seems that industries, better health departments, better educational system, rehabilitation, and above all, a better and a clean political status are necessary. And all these will be accomplished if the island is evangelized; and we should not be discouraged nor cease praying, as the time is coming when all these improvements will take place, through the help of the Father and the Christian leaders of the country.

I would greatly appreciate any material, such as old clothes, pictures, story books, pencils, papers, which will help me to start my work of fall and winter; also let us not forget that Porto Rico needs your daily prayers.

Ponce, P. R.

VICTORIA E. ADAMS.

THE DUKE FOUNDATION.

The extensive nature of the benefactions made possible by the endowments of James B. Duke grows upon us. A recent statement said that while the principal part of the proceeds go to education, there is also a large provision for hospitals and other objects. Duke University is, of course, the outstanding benefaction. Besides the other departments which receive large sums there, the hospital and school of medicine will have resources for becoming one of the very greatest medical centers in the world. The foundation will also establish a hospital in every county in North Carolina.

These facts were recently stated by the North Carolina Christian Advocate, which added that last year the Duke Foundation yielded $46,071.37 for building rural Churches, $36,918.08 for maintaining rural Churches, $21,250 for superannuated Methodist preachers in North Carolina, and $117,155.16 for orphanages in North Carolina and South Carolina.

These figures express a vast Christian service. For time to come, the benefactions of the Duke family will be alleviating pain, sheltering aged ministers and orphan children, building and supporting country Churches, and affording the highest opportunities of education.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

TREASURE CHESTS FOR FILIPINO TOTS.

"We who desire peace must write it in the hearts of children."

Believing this to be true, the Committee on World Friendship among Children is planning a project for cultivating understanding and good-will between the children of the United States and those of the Philippine Islands. This is the third of these good-will projects, the first being the dolls of friendship with the children of Japan, and the second the friendship school bags with the children of Mexico.

The country chosen for the third project is the Philippine Islands, and the symbol chosen to bear the good-will greetings from the children of the United States to the Filipino children is a friendship treasure chest. The project will be consummated in the Philippines on December 30, 1930, a national holiday commemorating the death of Dr. Jose Rizal, the great Filipino patriot. The Department of Education will receive the Friendship Treasure Chests and distribute them and their contents to the children of the Philippines.

It was found necessary to make the friendship treasure chests of a material impervious to white ants, and because of its decorative possibilities, metal was finally chosen. The chests are 10 1/2 x 6 1/2 x 5 inches in size, with handles of brass and a lock and key. They are delightfully lithographed in eleven colors, and the committee believes that children will happily study the charming old maps; the pictures of Washington and Rizal, of Columbus and Magellan; the watchful sea serpent and whale; and old Boreas and Father Neptune controlling the winds and the waves.

It is hoped that the filling of the friendship treasure chests will be the culmination of a program of study of the country and the people. As a help to such a program, a bibliography of books on the Philippines has been compiled and arranged in two lists, one for adults and one for children.

As in other years, the children of the United States will be asked to send to the children of the Philippines a personal letter of friendly greeting with a good-will message, together with such articles as crayons, drawing sets, games, scrapbooks, harmonicas, sewing kits, paper dolls, puzzles, handkerchiefs and beads. In addition, it is hoped that every friendship treasure chest will contain at least one book. Even though the Filipino children learn English in their schools, there are very few public libraries. There is, therefore, a great need of good books. A bibliography of 400 books suitable for children from six to fifteen years of age has been prepared under the supervision of Miss Clara Whitehill Hunt, of Brooklyn, a librarian widely known as an authority on children's books. It is hoped that each chest will contain at least one book, and if possible a second. It is planned that wherever possible this project will be made a community affair, offering as it does an unusual opportunity for peace education.

The War Department has offered to send the Friendship Treasure Chests to the Philippines free of charge by army transports sailing from New York and San Francisco. The chests may be secured from the Committee on World Friendship among Children, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York City, at $2.00 each.

EASTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

The next session of the Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference will meet with the Church at Mt. Auburn, Warren County, Tuesday, November 19, 1929, at 10 A. -M., and continue in session two days only. The invitation to meet with Mt. Auburn was extended to the executive committee and approved by that committee as provided by Conference at its last session.

It is earnestly desired by the officers of the Conference that all Churches shall be represented by a full delegation, and that the Churches be prepared to make a full report on the first day of Conference, showing all apportionments raised. The pastors of the several Churches are requested to make an earnest effort to have the reports correctly filled out, with all information necessary for a complete exhibit of all the activities of the year. We need complete records of all the work done in both Church and its auxiliary societies.

All ministers are requested to make a full report of their work. Such reports make a good showing, give inspiration to the representatives of Conference, and add interest and enthusiasm for greater undertakings for the future. Modesty which withholds needed information is false modesty and is not commendable. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Shall we make this the greatest Conference session which we have ever held, or shall we neglect the King's business? That depends on both Churches and ministers. We should make the Conference a period of Christian fellowship, communion of spirit, and faithful loyalty to the cause of Christ.

Mt. Auburn will do herself proud in entertainment. If you come, you will be glad; if you fail, you will be sad. Let us make our annual Conference all that the kingdom demands, and we shall be happy at every remembrance of it.

Fraternally yours,
 W. C. WICKER, President,
Eastern North Carolina Conference.

RALLY DAYS.

October will be observed as "Rally Month" in many Christian Churches, with the following suggestions for the various Sundays:

- First Sunday—Rally day in the Sunday School.
- Second Sunday—Young people's rally service.
- Third Sunday—College day.

Fourth Sunday—General Convention day (the Sunday upon which the General Convention of the Christian Church is in session at Piqua, Ohio.

The Herald of Gospel Liberty and the Sunday School Herald, our Christian Church publications, have published program helps for these occasions in every Church and Sunday School. Free material for the program for the rally occasions and for promoting these services may be secured from the Department of Christian Education, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio. Through arrangement with the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Christian Convention, Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, Va., rally-day posters, leaflets and offering envelopes have been sent to the Churches of our Convention.

The offering on "Rally Day" goes to help extend our Christian education work through Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, summer schools, colleges, field work and literature, and every phase of the work with boys and girls, young people and adults in this field. The offering from Southern Churches should go to Mr. C. H. Stephenson, 120 West Martin Street, Raleigh, N. C., treasurer of the Board of Christian Education. The work of this board is vital to our future Church, for through its program leaders are trained and boys and girls helped to receive the Christian nurture which they may rightfully expect from the Church and the college and the home.

DELEGATES TO CONFERENCE.

All who are coming to the session of the Georgia and Alabama Conference, which meets with the Lanett Church, on the 8th, 9th, and 10th of October, please notify me if they are to be given free entertainment; also if any are coming by rail, so that the trains may be met and free transportation given to Church. Please notify me as early as possible of your coming.

Lanett, Ala. J. D. DOLLAR, Pastor.

GRATEFUL.

The Sunday School at First Christian Church, Roanoke, Ala., planned a surprise for their pastor a few weeks ago in his absence. On Sunday, September 15th, he stood before them clad in a nice, new, tailor-made suit as a result of their planning. The little Willing Workers also made a plan. They realized that accessories would be essential, and selected very beautiful patterns.

The writer has often wondered how a minister feels with a nice suit, given by those with whom he labored and loved. He knows now, but cannot express it. He only hopes to be a better servant, and prays God's richest blessings on every one who had a part in this glad surprise.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson I—October 6, 1929.

RECOGNIZING OUR DEBT TO OTHERS.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others."—Philip. 2:4.

LESSON: Neh. 4:15-23; Mark 12:28-34; Rom. 15:1-7; Philip. 2:1-8; Col. 3:12, 4:1; James 2:14-17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 40:5-10.

Foreword.

The general theme of the lessons for this quarter is "Some Social Teachings of the Bible," and the aim of these lessons is "to guide the pupil into an understanding of Bible teaching on some social relationships, with a view to establishing right habits and attitudes in dealing with others." In other words, these lessons are concerned not only with giving knowledge, but with getting action. They are a series of interesting and suggestive and vital topics, and teachers and class ought to spend a fruitful quarter together as they study and discuss and act upon them.

Recognizing Our Debt to Others.

Paul once said, "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians; both to the wise and the unwise" (Rom. 1:14). Now, as a matter of fact, it is quite probable that Paul did not owe a cent to any man. He undoubtedly scrupulously paid his obligations. But Paul, with every other thinking man, realized that he was under an unpayable obligation, a colossal debt to others, not only the cultured Greek, but those who did not have the Greek culture, not only to the wise but to the unwise. He had received things at the hands of others which put him in debt to others. There had come into his life from all those who lived before him, knowledge and blessings, arts and sciences, culture and progress—all the things that made civilization of his day had come without any effort on his part. He was heir to all the ages that had gone before. He had received at the hands of others the things which he enjoyed. He recognized this debt. Furthermore, he recognized his debt, not only to those who had gone before, but to those who were his contemporaries—the men and women of the world in which he lived, both those with whom he came in contact and those whom he would never see. Paul knew that "no man liveth to himself." A man cannot isolate himself from others. There come into his life blessings at the hands of others, which he has not earned. He is in debt to others for many things which he enjoys. And if this principle was true in Paul's day, it is all the more true today. Our modern world is closely knit together, and it is becoming more closely knit together all the time. Because we do not live to ourselves, we are in debt to others, and we might as well recognize that fact and make an honest effort to pay our debts. The Scripture passages of today's lesson suggests several factors in our debts to others.

Our Obligations to Work with Others.

Two small boys were in a trolley car when an extremely large woman came in. Because there was no seat available, and because of instinctive courtesy, one of the boys quickly got up and said, "Madam, have my seat." It was a fine gesture, but it was inadequate, for there was not the barest possibility that the large woman could be seated in the space occupied by the small boy. The other boy quickly sensed the situation, and he quickly arose and said, "Madam, have our seat; it is going to take both of us." In our great big, complex world of social relationships there is much to do. It is going to take all of us to do it. There is a place for all of us. And we come to our own highest self-realization and we make progress most surely as we work with others. The secret of the great work which Nehemiah accomplished when he rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem was due to the fact that his people "returned all of them to the wall, every one unto his own work." We are workers together with God.

Our Obligations to Love One Another.

Religion is a very personal matter. We are to love God with all our mind, soul, strength, heart; but we are to love our neighbors as ourselves. Religion is also a social matter. Paul said, "Owe no man anything but to love one another." The heart of love is indiscourageable good will. Jesus Himself is authority for this law of love to others. Love is the fulfilling of the law.

Our Obligation to Help One Another.

"We, then, that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves." "Look not every man to his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Christianity came into a world whose principle of action was largely that the strong ought to exploit the weak, and this principle is still operative in large areas of life. But Christianity insists that the strong ought to help the weak.

Our Obligation, Serve One Another.

"Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus." Whatever mind Christ Jesus had, He had a mind for service. He went about doing good. He insisted upon the spirit of humble and sincere service, not only to those who are our peers, but to those who are less fortunate. The Christian world needs a revival in terms of a passion for service. We owe it to others to serve them.

Our Obligation to Give to One Another.

James says that it is a poor kind of faith that does not issue in action. In fact one good test of a man's faith is what he does for others. Because there are continually coming into our lives blessings from others, we are under obligation to give unto others. We should keep in mind, too, that we are to give not only to our contemporaries, but we are to live and give and serve in such a way that we shall move civilization to a little higher level than we found it, that we are to pass on to coming generations the blessings which we have received in increased measure.

Teaching Thoughts and Topics.

1. There is no such thing as a self-made man.
2. Religion never becomes really vital personally unless it finds expression socially.
3. Co-operation, not competition, is the law of progress.
4. Because we have received, we ought to give.
5. Every generation is the heir of all the generations that have gone before it.
6. A good test of a man's character is his effort to pay his debts.
7. Over and beyond all our debts to others, there is our debt to God.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, October 6, 1929.

TOPIC: "Ideals Worth Living For."—Phil. 3:7-14, 4:8; Gal. 5:22, 23. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

Seek "the knowledge of Christ"; that is, seek to know Christ, and also the knowledge that He possessed (v. 3:8).

To achieve the power of Christ, to be filled with His spirit, is the highest Christian ideal (v. 10).

To clear the mind of evil and mean thoughts and fill it with thoughts of sweetness and beauty would make us noblemen (v. 8).

We think mostly of making good, and very little of having the fruit of the Spirit in our lives. These are Christian ideals (vs. 22, 23).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The Christ way of living is the ideal to follow; and to find it we must study His life in the Scriptures.

Abraham (Gen. 12:1-3) presents a picture of consecration. Are we willing to give up all for God—for what we believe to be the highest?

Joseph, forgiving his brethren, is an ideal of forgiveness and generosity. Can we forget wrongs so completely?

David, in his pious hours, singing, praising, praying, suggests an ideal of private contact with God. Have we such dealings with the Eternal?

A Few Illustrations.

John presents the Christian ideal in the words, "Love one another." He learned that from Christ. What effort do we make to reach this ideal?

Jesus presents the highest possible ideal in Matt. 5:43-48: "Be perfect in love like God." That was His aim; to be as God is. It may be our aim; but oh, what understanding it calls for!

Paul presents in his own life the ideal of self-sacrifice (2 Cor. 11). He gave all. And he found joy in giving all to Christ and his people.

The ideal of the praying Christian is to be always in the mood of prayer, as a flute is always ready to sound its note. Prayer should be as natural as breathing, and as easy.

To Think About.

What ideal appeals to us?

Why is money-making a wrong ideal?

How may we attain our ideals?

NEWS ITEMS

Arrangements were made with the Department of Christian Education of the General Board during the summer to have the literature for "Rally Day" sent to Southern Churches as it is sent to others. This, we believe, is as it should be, for it saves time and expense and correlates the work in all of our Churches. The cost is to be borne by our Southern Board, and the offering is to go to our own Treasurer, Mr. C. H. Stephenson, 120 W. Martin Street, Raleigh, N. C.

Last week, literature went from our office to all pastors and superintendents, urging the observance of "Rally Day," and asking for an offering. October is rally month in our Church. It is the time when all organizations call back the scattered forces and seek for new recruits. The first Sunday is the big "Rally Day" in the Sunday School. This can be a great help to your Church and other organizations.

And do not forget to promote the children who have done their work in the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor. You want your child promoted in the public school, and they want to be promoted in the Church school. The first Sunday in October begins a new Church school year, and is time for promotion.

Please do not forget the offering for Christian education. Your board is anxious to do efficient service, but cannot without financial support. Give us three thousand dollars to complete our budget, and we will do some real work for the Church. That is not much to ask from two hundred Sunday Schools, but it means the success or failure of this department.

Allow me to introduce to the readers of this column our new field secretary, Miss Jewel Truitt. She is a graduate of Elon who majored in religious education and who was a leader in religious activities on the campus. She is now eagerly learning the work of this department and is anxious to serve. If you have need of help in your Church, please call on her. The office remains for the present at Waverly, Va.

The young people of Eastern Virginia elected officers this year and are taking the matter seriously. On the third Sunday in August they met for a week-end retreat at the home of the pastor-counselor, Rev. W. C. Hook, and outlined plans for the year. In accordance with these plans, every pastor and superintendent was asked to give the name and address of at least three leaders among the young people of their Churches, in addition to the name of the president of the Missionary and Christian Endeavor Societies. These picked workers from each Church were invited to meet in the Suffolk Christian Church on Saturday, September 14th, for consultation and further organization. At this meeting the congress was divided into two districts, the one including greater Norfolk and the other from Suffolk west. The district chairman appointed leaders in still smaller groups.

A survey is now being made to find out exactly what young people are really doing in the local Churches. When the survey is completed, plans are to be made for increasing the activity among the young people along those lines where there seems to be the greatest weakness. The congress proposes to use the organizations already in the local Churches, but will endeavor to correlate these organizations and to stimulate Christian activity among young people. The progress of this work will be watched eagerly by many, and this writer prophesies that great good will be accomplished. All young people in Eastern Virginia are urged to rally to the support of their congress, which is the support of young people's work in their Church.

F. C. LESTER,
Chairman.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

Effective September 20th, the Southern office of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, formerly in Chattanooga, Tenn., will be located in Atlanta, Ga. Office space has been taken in the new section of the Walton Building. The new offices will be in charge of W. Ray Breg, Southern secretary, formerly in charge of the Southwestern offices of the organization at Dallas, Texas. Mr. Breg is moving his family to the city at once.

This action marks a change in the policy of the organization, since the office in Chattanooga has been conducted by the All-South Extension Committee. This committee was dissolved at the last convention and the work in the Southern States will be handled from the Atlanta office.

Dr. Daniel A. Poling, New York City, president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, is appointing a Southern advisory committee, which will have its first meeting this fall, probably in Atlanta. At that time, plans will be made for the next gathering of the Christian Endeavorers of the South. Special emphasis will be given by this committee to the crusade with Christ for evangelism, Christian citizenship and world peace, and to a greater missionary interest on the part of Christian Endeavorers throughout the South. Special plans are being made to bring large support on the part of the Christian Endeavorers to their own denominational missionary and benevolent causes.

SOCIETY CONTRIBUTES BIBLES.

The beautiful large hotel, the Governor Clinton, was recently furnished and opened to the public in New York. A few days before the opening, 1,160 Bibles were delivered to the hotel by the New York Bible Society, one Bible to be placed in each guest room. The manager of the hotel then requested the society to arrange for a special religious service dedicating these Bibles, to be held in the hotel on the first Sunday the hotel was open to the public. The service was held on the third Sunday afternoon in August.

The Bibles were piled in the large lobby of the hotel in the form of a cross. The hotel orchestra furnished music, Miss Cornelia Armstrong, from the Federation of Churches, sang two appropriate solos, one of which was "How Sweet is the Bible." Rev. Thomas Ross, a New York City pastor, read from the Scriptures, gave a short address on the value of the Bible and offered the prayer of dedication. Mr. John C. West, in a very appropriate address, presented the Bibles, and Mr. Kill, the manager of the hotel, responded, graciously accepting the gift. It is interesting to note that nearly all the employees of the hotel were present at this service.

AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLES.

Authorized and Edited by American Revision Committee, and Published by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

These Bibles contain the Concise Bible Dictionary which forms the helps to these Teachers' Bibles. It supplies, in the most condensed and convenient form, all the latest information about the Bible, its writers, its language, the various versions, complete chronology, life of Christ, with harmony of the Gospels, life and travels of St. Paul, etc. The illustrations are reproduced from recent photographs, and truly illustrate the articles. The Combined Concordance is entirely new, and has been made expressly for the American Standard Version. It combines with the Concordance, Subject-Index, Scripture Proper Names, etc. The 12 Maps have been carefully revised and are beautifully colored. In making orders, give the number and price.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

A WET HOOK.

"Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men."—Mark 1:14:20.

Once some boys were out fishing for trout. They walked back and forth along the stream, now and then throwing in the lines. It was a good trout stream, but they met with no success. As they concluded that the brook had been fished out and were about to go home in disgust, they met an old man, whose basket was fairly filled with fish. Amazed, they asked him how he had caught so many while they caught none. "I have been watching you," he answered. "You have had your hooks in the air most of the time. The fish are not in the air, but in the water. Keep your hooks wet."

That is good advice for "fishers of men" as well as fishers of fish. Always keep trying. Hold your hooks patiently where the fish are. Maintain your Christian purpose ever before you. Seek souls all the time and not just a small part of the time. Make that your business, your main business, your passion, your instinct.

That is to work at fishing for souls, and not merely play at it.

Prayer.—Great Evangelist, Thou Master Soul-winner, teach us Thy ways, we pray Thee. Thou didst go about doing good, never ceasing Thy loving efforts, conversing, preaching, healing, praying, serving wherever there was need. May we have Thy patience, Thy constancy, Thy courage, and grant us, if it may be, some measure of Thy great success. In Thy name. Amen.

TUESDAY.

OUR GLORY.

"Far be it from me to glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Gal. 6:11-18.

Glorying is not wrong, if we glory in the right things. Pride is not amiss, if we are proud of that of which Christ is proud. How the Saviour rejoiced in the glorious temple and in the splendors and beauties of the Holy City! How Paul exulted in the Redeemer and His divine work! All the resources of his matchless eloquence were drawn upon to praise his Lord and commend Him to the heathen world. He went to Ephesus, Athens, Corinth, Rome, the glories of the world; but he knew nothing in any of these magnificent cities save Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, to whom can we turn but to Thee for all praise and beauty, all power and glory? Thine is the kingdom, and it is everlasting. May our share in it be a worthy one, Thy strength enabling us. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GOOD THINGS—WHEN?

"Thou in thy lifetime receivest thy good things."—Read Luke 16:19-31.

Is it a dangerous thing, in the light of this parable, to have received many good things in this life? The implication may be thought to be that God has only a certain amount of good things to give out, and that whatever He gives His children in this life, detracts from their good things in the next life. The rich man in the parable, however, had set his heart on earthly goods, and his affection was not fixed on things above. He got what he was after, as men are likely to do, and it is not strange that he did not get what he was not after.

The emphasis belongs on "thy"—"thy good things." The rich man's good things were not God's good things; what he called good did not coincide with what God calls good. The beggar at the gate received what came from God and he knew it to be good, and what the rich man did not want. Little did he care that he had missed the rich man's good things. As George Macdonald wrote:

"The trowth's the trowth, think what ye will;
An' some they kenna what they wad be at.
But the beggar man thoeth he did no that ill,
Wi' the dogs o' this side, the angels o' that."

Prayer.—Dear Lord, we want good things, and Thou dost want to give good things to us. But they must be what Thou knowest to be good things, and not what Thou knowest to be worthless things. May we have them, Thy grace helping us. Amen.

THURSDAY.

MUMMIES.

"Is not this great Babylon, which I have built?"—Dan. 4:28-37.

Once there was a strange auction in London. Three mummies were put up for sale. One was the preserved body of a great queen of Babylonia. One was the mummy of a famous pharaoh of Egypt. The third was the body of a great king of Assyria. All three mummies were knocked down for seventy-five guineas. The total power and splendor of three world sovereigns put under the hammer and going for about four hundred dollars!

Nebuchadnezzar paced his splendid halls and gazed from his lofty battlements over his magnificent capital, exclaiming in his pride, "Is not this great Babylon, which I have built?" And the next day he was on his knees eating grass with the cows. So is it with all the pomp of men. "Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" What have we of which to be vain? What have we which will not in time become mummified?

One thing we have, and one thing only—our love for the Lord Jesus Christ! That love will never get into a mummy case. That love will never be sold at auction. That love will never crumble with the crumbling of our cities. It grows deeper and brighter and stronger with the passing of the years. It is the one permanence in our lives.

Prayer.—We rest on Thy foundation, O Christ. Thus established, we can never be moved. Thus founded, we shall never fall. We bless Thee, that we can rest in Thee, forever. Amen.

FRIDAY.

EVER BEFORE ME.

"My sin is ever before me."—Psa. 51:1-8.

David was wise in keeping his terrible sin ever before him. Sin ought to be kept in mind. We ought to remember our past falls, that we may not repeat them. We ought never to forget the temptations to which we have yielded, but remain on our guard against them. But in keeping our sin ever before us, we must not become morbid. If we have taken the sin to Christ, if He has forgiven it, if it has been washed away in His blood, then we should be done with it as our sin. He has put it behind Him, and we must put it behind us.

Prayer.—Our Saviour, we hold our sin before us because we hold Thee before us, and our sin is with Thee. Thou hast saved us from our past, now save us in our present. For we trust in Thy salvation. Amen.

SATURDAY.

RECEIVING WITH BOWED HEAD.

"Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth."—Prov. 27:1-8.

When Rudyard Kipling published his poem, "The English Flag," Tennyson sent him a letter of hearty praise. To this communication, Kipling made a reply with which the laureate was much pleased: "When the private in the ranks is praised by the general, he cannot presume to thank him, but he fights the better the next day."

That is the way to receive praise, humbly, with bowed head. Praise should make us realize our deficiencies. Praise should show us how little we deserve it. Praise should make us sorry that we have not done better and determined to do better. Praise has a most useful part to play in the Christian life.

But it must not be the praise we lead up to, the praise we prompt, the praise we virtually put into other people's mouths. We shall receive it as the good people will receive Christ's praise at the last day: "Lord, when saw we Thee hungry, and fed Thee?" Praise received in this way is food to the soul.

Prayer.—We look for no commendation from Thee, O King of glory. We do not see how Thou canst give it, even of Thy overflowing grace. May we only escape Thy deserved condemnation, and that will be cause for rejoicing through endless ages. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE FIRST PAGE.

"Jehovah will perfect that which concerneth me."—Psa. 138:1-8.

The psalmist gives us a wonderful thought. We are not satisfied with ourselves as we are, most of us. We are trying to improve, we are reaching out after perfection; but ah, it is so far ahead of us! And here comes the psalmist with the assurance that the Lord will look after our perfection. He will actually perfect that which concerns us.

What have we to do about it? Nothing, except the best we can.

There is a story about the admired historian of England, J. R. Green. He was an invalid most of his life, and depended on his wife, who wrote so constantly for him that her right hand developed writer's cramp and she had to learn to write with her left hand. Her first practice sheet was illegible, but she persevered, practice sheet after practice sheet, until her left-hand writing could be read easily. Green took her first practice sheet and always kept it. Whenever he was especially sick and discouraged, he would take it out and look at it, and never failed to get from it an inspiration to struggle on.

That is the kind of human life on which God can base His perfecting of His creature.

Prayer.—Our Lord and Saviour, we rest on Thee. We know how unworthy our lives are, but Thou canst make them worthy. We know how imperfect we are, but Thou canst perfect us. Lift us into Thy perfectness, O Thou Perfect One! Amen.

The First Congregational-Christian Merger

This Page will be Occupied every Week to December 12th with the Story of

A Great Challenge

With the approval of the Southern Christian Convention, BETHLEHEM JUNIOR COLLEGE, at Wadley, Ala., has merged educationally with Piedmont College, at Demorest, Ga., and has changed its name to PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE. These two colleges, thus united, become the organ of the Christian and Congregational Churches in the western part of the eleven States of the Southeast, while Elon College ministers in the name of these Churches to the eastern part of the Southeast and beyond.

Piedmont College is in the geographical center of these Southeastern States, while PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, some 200 miles farther west, ministers to a large field of its own, where great educational need is joined with the greatest possibilities of usefulness. PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE will send its graduates, after two years of training, to Piedmont Senior College, thus saving to the Christian Churches the expense of the junior and senior years, while they will get the benefit of the equipment and faculty of the older and larger college.

Piedmont College has begun its campaign for two million dollars, to further equip and endow it for its fast-enlarging work, and is appealing to the Congregational Churches of the nation for this. These Churches have already contributed considerably more than a million dollars toward Piedmont College, and now are expected to add two millions more. It has more than five thousand donors, from Maine to the Hawaiian Islands and from the Canadian line to the Gulf of Mexico.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE is just beginning its campaign for $50,000 to complete its plant to meet its present pressing needs and to enable it to take a worthy place in its merger with the Senior College and as representative of these two great denominations, famous for their educational ideals and institutions. It is appealing to the Christian Churches for this and for $250,000 for the required endowment of a recognized Junior College. Both of these appeals have been approved by the Southern Christian Convention and the College has been officially authorized to raise these amounts.

Surely the Christian Churches will not fail to raise $300,000 for this great educational enterprise, while the Congregational join it with $2,000,000 for their part of it!

This is The Great Challenge of The First Congregational-Christian Merger

The Trustees of Piedmont Senior College have placed President Frank E. Jenkins at the head of the Piedmont Senior Campaign for $2,000,000, while the Trustees of PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE have also placed him at the head of its campaign for $300,000. He is now organizing this double campaign throughout the nation. The readers of "The Christian Sun" will hear from him every week for twelve weeks, at least, and through other literature and letters. His address will be—

HOME-COMING DAY.

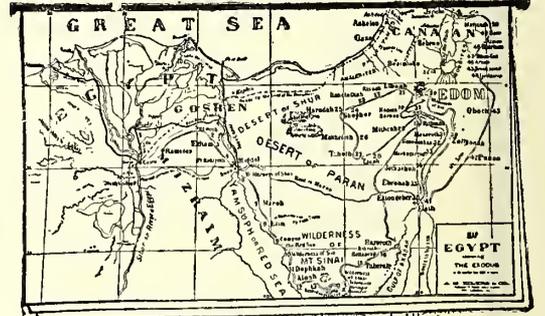

Sunday, September 29, 1929, will be "Home-Coming Day" at Liberty (Vance) Church. This is celebrating the seventieth anniversary of the Church, and during this time twenty men have served as pastor. Some of them have gone to their reward, others cannot be located, while some have been invited to come. We are using this space in our Church paper, hoping to reach each and every one of our former pastors. Now, if you have served this Church as pastor, as evangelist, assistant in any way, or a member of the laity, you are earnestly and cordially invited to come back and spend the day with us. We hope, if possible, that each of you will avail yourself of this opportunity to get together for a day of real worship and Christian fellowship. If impossible to come, we hope you will send a word of greeting, that we may at least get in touch with you.

We will have a full program for the day that each one will enjoy, and through this day of worship together we trust that every one will be inspired to greater service for our Lord. We are asking all pastors to have a place on the program, and we want you to come and fill your place. Let me repeat that the call is meant for you, my brother; therefore, come—a welcome awaits you.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The orphanage family had a real treat on Saturday, September 21st. The Pleasant Hill Sunday School, from near Liberty, N. C., held their annual picnic on our grounds. The day was cool and pleasant and a large crowd came. The orphanage children rendered a program composed of songs, stunts and recitations which was enjoyed by the audience. At 12:30 the good women spread a bountiful lunch on our picnic table under the shade of the trees, and all the orphanage family was invited to join the visitors at lunch, which invitation was accepted and our little folks enjoyed the good things to eat more than words can express.

The Pleasant Hill Sunday School has always been loyal and faithful to the Christian Orphanage, and its monthly offerings have come as regular as the months have come. We were delighted to have this Sunday School to picnic on our grounds and enjoyed their visit so much we hope they will make it an annual thing.

MR. FORD'S RELIGION.

Recent newspaper attacks upon Mr. Henry Ford's fine statement concerning prohibition have overshoot the mark in common decency, not to mention the truth. One of the editorial attacks in an Ohio daily insinuated that he was insincere both in the attitude toward prohibition and religion. A friendly newspaper man went to him and asked him for a statement concerning his religious views, and this is what Mr. Ford is reported to have said:

"I believe in God and in Jesus Christ. I was brought up in the Church. I belong to the Church. I attend Church. I never go to hear a sermon, whether it is by a preacher in a small Church or a large one, that I do not get help.

"Religion is like electricity. I do not understand electricity, but I am deeply interested in it; I want to know all I can about it. I know that it warms our hearts and that it makes the world better. I know that it lights up the dark places of the earth. I see and admit its effectiveness, even though I do not profess to understand it at all. We need more religion and less professionalism in our ministry, and we need it mixed into industrial life; you can take the Sermon on the Mount and put it down into industry anywhere and it will work."

That ought to hold our newspaper cynics for a considerable spell. But more, it ought to mean something to every boy and girl in the land to hear the richest man in the world saying that he feels the need of going to Church, hearing the gospel proclaimed, and rendering his share of furthering the kingdom of Jesus Christ in the world. —Christian Index.

at the age of 57 years, 1 month and 18 days. Besides her husband, she is survived by two daughters and eight sons, twenty grandchildren and a host of other relatives and friends.

She had been a faithful member of pleasant Grove Church since a girl, and in this Church cemetery her remains were laid to rest in the midst of a very large congregation of sorrowing friends. The floral offering was abundant and beautiful. God bless her loved ones. Burial services by the writer, assisted by Bro. Moffitt and Bro. Kidd.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

A UNIVERSITY PASSES.—

Des Moines University has been closed indefinitely by the board of trustees that was charged with the control and supervision of the institution. It will be recalled that this was the institution that was the scene of rioting and disorder among the students just before commencement last year. The students were enraged over the action of the trustees in discharging certain members of the faculty. The formal announcement of the closing was to the effect that "the trustees have concluded that if a Christian university is to be established and maintained it must be done somewhere else than in Des Moines."

The closing of this institution marks the end of an attempt to establish and maintain an institution of higher learning that had for its avowed purpose the promulgation of a most ardent type of fundamentalism. It is not surprising that the effort should have ended in failure. It was specialization gone to seed. It is difficult to understand the sort of thinking that holds that for a man to be religious he must be carefully shielded from the consideration of any other ideas or theories than that held by a particular group. Modernism is losing its place in the limelight, not because of the tirades that have been launched against it by the fundamentalists, but because the religious world has found that the road to spiritual power does not lie that way. Dangerous or misleading theories of religious teaching are not counteracted by making them contraband. "By their fruits ye shall know them" is the test that seals their doom.

WHAT IS A DEAD CHURCH?—

A magazine writer has recently published statistics as to the thousands of dead Churches that there are in the United States. This writer pronounces a Church dead if it reports that a year has passed without the addition of one or more members. There can be no question but that it is a severe indictment of the members and the methods of a Church that has not had a single addition within a twelvemonths. But it does not necessarily mean that the Church is to be classed as a dead Church.

Any attempt to measure the spiritual life of a Church by the number of new members that it receives is always misleading. There are Churches whose program consists chiefly of high-pressure revival campaigns. Many of these Churches annually drop large numbers from their rolls for non-attendance, failure to support the Church, and other causes. Those who are acquainted with Church work in communities where the population is fairly stable are aware that some years there are a number of young people who have reached the age when they may be expected to come into the Church, and do. There are other years when there is no such available list from which to draw new members.

Many of the Churches that were thus classified as belonging on the dead list were in country districts, from which there has been an extensive migration to the cities. It ought not to be so, but there are times when the Church is doing well to hold its own. The work of the Church is in some respects like that of an army in the field. There are times of attack and advance, which must be followed by reorganization and consolidation.

WHEN EVERYBODY CO-OPERATES.—

The Toledo Times publishes some facts which throw an interesting light upon the question of the safety of railway travel. "Accurate statistics show that a person is safer on board a train than at home, which speaks more for the security of railroad transportation than of the insecurity of a man's 'castle.' Railroad travel is 100 per cent safer today than it was five years ago. Last year there was only one fatality as a result of a railroad accident for every 49,000,000 passengers carried. Five years ago the average was one fatality for every 24,000,000 passengers. When it is considered that only 16 of the 800,000,000 persons transported on trains in the United States last year were killed, the safety of this mode of travel causes greater wonder."

There is no other source to which may be attributed this increase in safety than to the constant and insistent "safety campaigns" that have been waged by the railroads. It would seem that there should be no occasion for men to be constantly reminded to be careful when their own lives as well as the lives of others are endangered by their carelessness. But the figures show that the safety-first campaigns have borne fruit.

These facts ought to serve as both a lesson and an encouragement for all those who are working in and through the Churches. So much of the time we are reminding people about things that they ought to be observing without being reminded, that it would seem that we are engaged in a useless task. It may also carry a suggestion that will help us to do better work in the future. There must be found a way to increase the sense of responsibility all down the line.

THE LAW RELATING TO ATHEISM.—

Some of the newspapers, the attention of which has been called to the fact that there is a law on the books of North Carolina which disqualifies a witness who does not believe in God and hell, are suggesting that the legislature should at once revoke such an obsolete and indefensible statute as that.

When Judge Shaw, in the recent hearing here, summarily dismissed one of the witnesses when the latter announced that he had no religious beliefs or convictions, the legal minds of the State became active and researchful. Judge J. Crawford Biggs, as quoted by the News and Observer, delved into the historical records and found that apparently "there is no case reported in this State in which a witness has been excluded from testifying on account of his religious beliefs or want of religious beliefs," but that there are several cases in the North Carolina courts "in which the Supreme Court judges clearly indicated that a witness would be disqualified to testify if he were an atheist and did not believe in Divine punishment."

The first of these cases dates back to 1856, but that there have been several similar rulings in recent years, one in 1922 and another, more recently still, in 1924, in which Chief Justice Stacy, laying down the rules for disqualification of jurors, stated one of them as follows: "If he be an atheist or deny the existence of Almighty God, he is presumed to be insensible to the obligation of a juror." The statute governing oath in North Carolina was enacted in 1777 and rests on the theory, as duly set forth, that the oath derives its sanctity from being "an appeal to Almighty God as the omniscient witness of truth and the just and omnipotent avenger of falsehood." The Legislature, it is stated, has consistently refused to amend this statute in any way.

North Carolina is not the only State in which it is necessary for a witness to believe in Divine punishment in order to qualify before the court. Alabama, Louisiana, Maryland, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, South Carolina and the Federal courts, according to Judge Biggs, all make this requirement. New Hampshire will not accept the testimony of a witness who does not believe in future punishment. Arkansas and Maryland rule out an atheist as incompetent.

Judge Biggs finds, however, that no religious test is required of witnesses in California, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin and England, while "even an atheist" may be a competent witness in Connecticut, Florida, Kentucky, Maine, Missouri, New York, Tennessee and Texas.

In short, "the credibility of the witness may be attacked on account of his religious opinions in some States and may not be in others," and "the common law rule that a witness who does not believe in a Supreme Being and Divine punishment is incompetent has been affected in various ways by the statutes and constitutions of the several States."—Editorial in Charlotte News.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. M. T. Sorrell changes his address in Danville, Va., from Third Avenue, or R. 2, to 117 Motley Avenue.

After ten years of successful work with the Haw River Church, Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., retires from that pastorate, much to the regret of the membership. Brother Fleming has done a good work at Haw River, and, in addition to having developed the work, he has made life-long friends there.

The Congregational and Christian Churches of Norfolk, Va., and vicinity, will unite in a Community Training School at Christian Temple, October 6th-12th. The opening session will be on Sunday, October 6th. President W. A. Harper of Elon College will act as Dean of the school. Brother Hermon Eldredge of Dayton and others deeply interested in Christian Education, are on the roster of teachers and instructors.

Miss Jewel Truitt, who did such valuable work in Christian Education at Fancy Gap, Va., the past summer, is now Field Secretary for the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention, succeeding Miss Pattie Coghill, who has accepted a position with the Florida Congregational Churches. Miss Truitt is a graduate of Elon College and is a competent worker in Religious Education and is devoted to the great task. Her address is Waverly, Va.

On Sunday, October 13th, Rev. Roy Helfenstein, D. D., pastor of People's Christian Church, Dover, Del., and Dr. Jason N. Pierce, pastor of the First Congregational Church, Washington, D. C., will exchange pulpits, both for the morning and evening services, Dr. Pierce preaching in Dover, and Dr. Helfenstein in Washington. The exchange of pulpits between our Christian and Congregational ministers will help the people of the two communions to become better acquainted with each other, and seems a most fitting thing to do.

"The other day I thought of suggesting a wonderfully economical way for numerous delegates and visitors from Virginia to attend the Convention at Piqua, Ohio. I motored to my native home this summer, and found hard-surfaced road all the way. I went via national road 40 to Washington, D. C., and straight south to Richmond, Va. Exact motor route: Richmond, Va., to Washington, D. C.; Washington to Frederick, Md., on 240; Frederick, Md., to Vandalia, Ohio, on 40; Vandalia to Piqua, on 25. Roads well marked, hard-surfaced, beautiful scenery; about 625 miles, one way, Richmond to Piqua."—E. T. Cotten.

Gov. O. Max Gardner of North Carolina has issued a proclamation calling upon the people of North Carolina to set aside the week of October 6th-12th as Fire Prevention Week. This is in keeping with the statute laws of the State, and since this law was enacted there has been improvement year by year the past seven years in preventing fires, and while the total fire loss in the State during the seven years is $44,799,499, this is below the national average, and the fire loss for the year ending December 30, 1928, was $4,912,925, this being a million and a half dollars under the seven-year average.

A cablegram has been received by his father, Brother M. J. W. White, Sr., from Dr. M. J. W. White, Jr., and wife, who recently sailed, as medical missionaries under the auspices of the Congregational Board, to the Philippines, that they had had a safe arrival at Manila and would remain at Manila till November first to take the proper examination before going to the island on which they are to engage in missionary work. Dr. and Mrs. White will be in charge of a hospital with fifty beds and every equipment for first-class work. They have gone in the name of their Lord, the Great Physician, to help relieve the suffering and heal the sick of those in need, even as our Saviour while on earth went about doing good, helping and healing His fellowman.

NOTICE.

There will be a meeting of the Educational Committee of the Western North Carolina Christian Conference Monday P. M., November 4th, at the Christian Church in Burlington. All who may have business with this committee will please report at that time and place.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

By WARREN H. DENISON, Sec'y.

The eyes of all the Church are turning toward what promises to be one of the most interesting and epoch-making Conventions the Christians have ever held. All delegates should be on hand from first to the last. A splendid delegation from the Congregational Churches will be present as guests of the Convention.

One outstanding item on the agenda will be that of the union of the two Churches. It will be the first union between different denominations, not members of the same family, in the United States if the union is consummated. Already the Congregationalists have heartily approved it. It is not likely that the Christians will be other-minded when they have talked, prayed and worked for it more than a century.

Speakers.

Bishop Francis J. McConnell, president of the Federal Council of Churches; Mr. Fred B. Smith, world-renowned speaker and moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches; Dr. Peter Ainslie, pastor and editor and a world-wide speaker on Christian union. Dr. Mary F. Cushman, medical missionary in Africa; Dr. Edward W. Cross, chairman of Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life of the Congregational Churches; Dr. George William Brown, secretary American Bible Society. All these are from other fellowships.

Addresses and sermons will be given by a splendid list of our own leaders, such as President Dr. Frank G. Coffin, Columbus, Ohio; Dr. L. E. Smith, of Norfolk, Va.; President W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.; Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, Elon College, N. C.; Dr. William G. Sargent, Providence, R. I.; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.

Then there are thirteen phases of Church work to be presented by a like number of our Church leaders, who will speak to those subjects.

Dr. Frank H. Peters will conduct the Communion service on Saturday, and Dr. Staley will follow with the memorial service.

There will be an upper-room prayer service each morning before the Convention opens. These are in charge of a special committee, and there will be a different leader each day.

There will be a men's 6 o'clock banquet on Friday night, with Eldredge, Harper and Fred B. Smith as speakers.

The young people will hold a great rally and banquet, with a strong program, beginning Saturday at 4 o'clock.

The women have secured Dr. Mary F. Cushman, a noted medical missionary to Africa, as their speaker at a women's meeting while the men have their banquet Friday. There is a question as to which will have the larger attendance that evening.

No delegate can afford to miss the Convention, for it is possible that he will look back to it with a feeling that he has had a part in a movement which will be the beginning of greater events.

Piqua is a city of 20,000 population and is only thirty miles north from Dayton. It is on the east and west lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and the north and south lines of the Baltimore and Ohio. It is easily reached from New York, Washington, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Chicago.

The Convention will be a splendid opportunity to know your own workers and leaders better, to enjoy a much larger fellowship, to become better acquainted with our whole Church, to get a glimpse of the great stream of youth that is becoming a very part of our activities, to get a spiritual uplift. One will go back to his Church to finer and nobler tasks.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

SEEING GODS AND SEEING GOD.

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

"Where your treasure is, there will your heart be."—Matt. 6:21.

As we contemplate the viewpoint of both Christians and non-Christians in regard to one another and in their gropings for realities, it is quite plain that one thing that hinders many from being religious is their inability to rightly estimate the actual religious experience of other people around them. Professed Christians assume that all others are indifferent to Christianity and are without religion at all. Inversely, others think that Christians are hypocrites and haven't as much of the idea of Christianity as they have. Then each calls the other stupid and unworthy. If something can be done to help folks to understand one another and to be more tolerant in realities, they will appreciate one another more.

The first thing we have to do is to recognize that the world is not spiritually empty. Whether Christians, hypocrites, or non-Christians, folks are absorbed in sacrificing to gods which seem to them richly satisfying. Folks are not being spiritually starved. They have their deities and the things they worship. By this is meant that they are in search for things of this life that are treasured by them as primary things to be achieved; and these things so absorb their minds that everything else is forgotten or is pushed back into the background. Christianity and Jesus Christ have no further appeal to them.

Now, let us mention some of these things which are so much like gods in our lives. First of all, we will take speed. How we are speeding in everything! The rush of the day has become so great that often its momentum is not lost until 3 o'clock in the morning. From go-carts, with motors to them, to flying machines, we are getting a thrill of panoramas which makes us dizzy, and the noise of the machinery makes us deaf. We are rushing along at such a rate that we are failing to see people or things in their true perspective.

We are tourists who go to London and see the Tower, Westminster Abbey, Parliament and Windsor Castle, but we see nothing of Brixham and Clapham, where typical English living is represented. We go to Rome and are told a great deal about Caesar and other great men of the past, but only a little about Mussolini's industrial benefactions. We go autoing and we drive so fast that we cannot read the signs along the road. Who ever saw an autoist stop and read the historical signs along the highway? If he stops, he has to back up. So filled are we with the demon of rush that if one has to stop or slow down for ever so brief an instant some one from behind is honking him out of the way.

It is quite plain that we are seeing one another at the same rate of speed and with the same perspective. Is it any wonder that we misunderstand folks and misjudge them? So long as we see people in a superficial sort of way, we shall never know them, and so long as we do not know them we shall misjudge them. Christians are still going to be accused of being hypocrites, and sinners are still going to be without interest in things religious.

Second, let us take the god of wealth. As we go hither and thither in any place, we are impressed with the astounding wealth of everybody. Never in the world did folks seem to have so much money, or its equivalent, as now. Even a bunch of sailors with nothing more than a few dollars in their pockets go ashore well dressed, ride taxicabs, attend shows and many other pleasures, and feel themselves as rich as a king. We have to go to the poor-houses of the States and the squalor sections of the cities to be impressed with anything different. The spirit of the age is "Let us get all the cash and all the pleasure we can at any sacrifice." The mere fact that one can do this, makes him feel that his condition is an index to his worth, and that he can buy for himself all the happiness that he needs. It is plain that this idea minimizes the worth of other people, and sets up a self-dependency that tends to lift self above everybody else. Man's worth cannot be appreciated by those who feel that way.

Third, let us look at the god of flesh. Personal wealth and independence have led man to spend his life gratifying his appetites to the extent of his ability. Appetites are real indeed, and mighty, and to be reckoned with; but their chief value is not the ultimate end of life. They are to be sublimated as a means to the true ends of life.

There is nothing more real to us than the flesh. How we do love this body of ours! its beauty, its strength, its powers, and the things that develop these powers to their highest degree of efficiency. Chiefest among these powers is the sex. We are delighted that God made us men and women, but many often forget that He ever made us for anything else. Listening to conversations here and there, that is about all some folks think about. In addition to this, much of our environment accentuate the idea. The stage, the music, the billboards, the dance and the dress, all strike a high note in sex appeal. We positively rejoice in nudity and naughtiness. Where nudity and sex appeal is the strongest, there one will find the largest crowd. Deplorable as it may be, many young people, it is understood, are taught that if they do not let themselves go in these matters they may develop a complex and land in the madhouse. Such a worship of the flesh destroys the spiritual vision and spiritual possibilities. As the worth of others lies largely in spiritual perceptions, one so hindered will find himself unable to comprehend the true worth of others.

Fourth, let us turn to the god of comfort. We have certainly gotten away from the hardships of primitive days. We should. We would not return to them. It is believed that God would have His people live their lives with as much comfort as is consistent with right living. But it was never intended that the comfort and ease which is to be acquired should take one away from the great idea of genuine service to humanity. Nevertheless, man has reached a steam-heated, well-lighted, soft-cushioned, hot-bathed age. We are warding off or cushioning all the bumps and escalating all the heights. We are doing everything we can to make life easy and painless. In his disparagement of the worth of mankind, some one has said that all we are today is that our primeval ancestors have crawled out of the slime of the sea, through animal life to the human, in order to sit down and be comfortable. We have no part in such a belief; but, nevertheless, the statement emphasizes the idea of the important place we give to the gods of ease and comfort. With such obsessions, human sympathies are impossible, and one cannot feel for the other fellow's sufferings as he should.

There is another god whom we worship. It is the devil. We also worship him. It is said that by "devil," religion means the personification of conceit and pride, and the pull to make one's self the center of things. If Satan is the personification of conceit, this age is one of devil worship. For example, there are those who say, in regard to their idea of religion, "I shall believe in nothing which I cannot understand and which I cannot prove." And this is said not with an air of open-mindedness, but with that air that embraces the very soul of wisdom. A poet has commented on this by saying:

"To observations which we make,
We grow more partial for the observer's sake."

Henry Ward Beecher said that this is the worst disease of mankind. Men lose their wisdom in proportion as they become conceited. And Johnson, the author, has said, "He who overvalues himself will undervalue others, and he that undervalues others will oppress them." And Ruskin is credited with saying, "Conceit puffs a man up, but it never props him up."

So long as man sacrifices himself to the rushing superficialities of this existence, to goods and to gold, to appetites, comforts and conceits; and so long as he finds these ends satisfying to his living, it is not likely that he will ever see God. So long as man lives this way it is not likely that Christianity will ever make any appreciable headway. So long as man lives this way, it is not likely that he will ever appreciate the true worth of others, or come to a better understanding of them. So long as these things are the ultimate end of life, Jesus is going to be an enigma, God a fake, and religion impotent.

Our appeal to you is to make God the end of your search in life, and to make Jesus your example and fellow Him. You will find Him poor indeed. When on earth, He had not where to lay His head. You may have to be poor with Him. But we are reminded that He is poor not because He is too weak to be rich, but because His strength is needed in something better.

You will find Him chaste and pure, but chastity to Him is normal and healthy, and He is chaste not because He is too pure to feel the pull of sex, but because He subdues the sex into something which embraces the soul.

You will find Him having no thought of comfort and ease. These things mattered little to Him. Humility was His natural spirit. But He was humble not because He was too ignorant to be proud, but because He was too wise to be proud.

There is a superior reality in every thing which lies beyond the material benefit of that thing. There is a spiritual value in riches which lies beyond it, or else wealth has missed its intended use. Amidst the comforts of life, there is a sympathy to be extended to those who are less fortunate. There is a humility which is to characterize those who have a reason to be proud which offers its wisdom to those who need to be lifted up.

Men! Christianity is waiting for you to accept Jesus Christ and follow Him; waiting for you to make righteousness, truth and beauty the chief ends of life; waiting for you to realize that, as one by one you embrace Him, there is going to be less and less of the worldly gods uppermost in the minds of man, and more and more of the brotherhood of man; less hypocrisy among Christians and more of humanity turning toward God. Christianity will mean nothing to any one until that takes place. "Babies cannot see beauty."

If you would come to Christ, do not make the mistake of trying to come to Him through your understanding, your reason or through what you may be able to prove. To approach Him by intellectual means is impossible, and one gets nowhere. The way to Jesus is the way to any person. One never finds contact with another person merely by arguing with him. No lasting

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

"IT WAS NIGHT."

The Bible is nothing if not dramatic. That is to say, it often packs into one sentence, or brief expression, a whole volume as a climax to an event. An illustrious example of this is in John 13:30, the last four words, "And it was night." Jesus had been telling of His approaching betrayal and crucifixion. They pressed Him to know who would betray Him. He answers by signifying Judas Iscariot. On learning this, Judas went out from the holy presence, and then the writer of the book of John says dramatically, "And it was night." From that day to this it has been night with the soul, or with souls, that go out from the Christ. It is Christ or chaos in this world. Either Christ and the light or chaos and the dark. "The Christless life is chaotic. The burdens of life become unbearable without the great Burden-bearer."

This is as true in Church and State as it is in the individual life. A most illustrious example as well as a most pathetic one, is Soviet Russia today. They have crucified Christ afresh. They are putting on pageants and plays and programs that revile the idea of God and ridicule the thought of Deity. They are teaching children by the millions in their public schools that the idea of God is a man-made theory and that religion is only "opium for the soul." This is an extreme example and a far-away illustration. The fact remains, however, here and elsewhere that when the soul goes out from the presence of, and turns its back on, Christ there is chaos.

First of all, it was night in the soul of Judas. Secondly, it produced night, dark, black night, in the history of the Jews. Their night as a nation and a people had come when they, through Judas, turned their back on Christ.

The world never needed more than it needs today the light of the presence of Christ. Our industry, social and political problems must be flooded with light, even the light that comes from the Son of God, if they are to be solved correctly. It is useless to say that the Sermon on the Mount or the Golden Rule are simply idealistic and will not do for the working-man or the business organization. The most practical thing in this world, and for this world, is the teaching of our Lord, and the world is never going to iron out rough problems and places until it adopts in business and in every-day life the teachings of the Son of God. It will ever be Christ or chaos in the Church, in State, in the individual life. It was night for Judas Iscariot, for the Jews, for any and every soul when Christ is left behind and ruled out of the reckoning.

"CHRISTIANS," "DISCIPLES OF CHRIST," OR "THE CHURCH OF THE LORD"—WHICH?

An exceedingly interesting editorial from the Christian-Evangelist, St. Louis, Mo., is printed elsewhere in THE SUN this week under the caption "What Name, When They Ask You?" This reprint is interesting for two reasons:

First: It shows that, officially, our Disciples friends and brethren do not know what to call themselves, according to the very frank statement of the editor of their Church paper. It had been our observation that wherever Christians did not have a Church, our Disciples brethren called their Church "Christian." But, the census-taker will be around next year, and the great desire seems to be to give the proper or legal name, and our Disciples brethren are at a loss.

Second: Since our Disciples friends take the Bible, the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, as a "sufficient rule of faith and practice," we wonder why they insist on making the rest of the world interpret the mode of baptism according to their interpretation, since very many good people in this world, equally scholarly and conscientious in their interpretation of Scripture, hold to a different view on this mode of baptism. Since our Disciples brethren want a name that will unite us all, why not take the good name of the good Book and all of us wear that one name, allowing in reality, as well as in word, the individual to interpret for himself these mooted points which have divided the Christian world into so many sects, isms and scisms? Our understanding of history is that Rev. Alexander Campbell, the founder of the Disciples Church, or whatever its legal name will be "when the census-taker comes around," came to our people, Barton W. Stone and others, and for quite a while considered uniting with them, but having been originally an immersionist, he could not get over his conscientious scruples in this regard, but he did like our name very much, and afterwards taught it as a goodly name to his followers, but at the same time taught them that before they put on that name they should follow, not their, but his, interpretation of Scripture on the subject of baptism, and that only those who had been immersed could properly wear the name "Christian" or "Disciples of Christ."

We just wish the editor of the Christian-Evangelist, and all like him who are looking for a good name, would adopt that given the disciples at Antioch, viz: "Christian," and that they would allow those who differ from them on the mode of baptism and other divisive questions to interpret this and other Scripture in a way to satisfy their own minds and consciences and take them in also.

We could wish that our Disciples friends who seem to be looking for, and are in doubt about, a good name would do all this before 1930 and be ready with a good, clear conscience to give a straight-forward, honest-to-goodness answer to the census-taker when he comes. Meanwhile, let CHRISTIAN SUN readers turn to the reprint in this issue from the Christian-Evangelist on "What Name, When They Ask You?"

What a pity that this great and growing people will allow a question, in no wise essential to salvation, to so separate them from other Churches even, and from each other, that they cannot agree upon a name.

J. O. A.

WHAT NAME, WHEN THEY ASK YOU?

The editors of the Christian-Evangelist recently received a letter from a subscriber in Gower, Mo., containing the following pertinent inquiry: "As a Church people, what is our legal name? When the census-taker comes next year, are we to be 'Christians,' 'Disciples of Christ,' or 'Church of Christ'? Honestly, I do not know, nor do I imagine I am the only person who does not know. I feel some instruction along this line by our papers and ministers would be appreciated. I know it would be me."

Since the reply to this letter may be of interest to other readers, and in accordance with the good suggestion of our valued subscriber, we pass it on "to whom it may concern":

"Replying to your kind favor, which came in my absence, regarding the legal name of our Church, I do not think we have a legal name. Some local Churches are incorporated, and in such a case the local Church has a legal title, but our Churches, taken collectively, have no such arrangement.

"We have always declared that the New Testament is our only rule of faith and practice, and such being the case we might very fittingly use any of the half-dozen or so names for the Church to be found in that Book. In a certain degree, the government has given its own title to us, and in the census we are known as the Disciples of Christ. Therefore, what I shall say, and I hope it will be what you will say also, when I am asked to what Church I belong, will be 'Disciples of Christ.'

"The Christian Church is a different body, according to the dealings of the government with the Churches. It, for example, was once called 'The New Lights.' It is the body of people called together by Barton W. Stone and others before Stone tried to merge his movement with the Campbell movement. Stone called his followers 'Christians.' Campbell called his 'Disciples of Christ.' The body known as the 'Christian Church' is about to unite with the Congregationalists. I think the union is to take place about October 1st.

"The Churches of Christ are congregations that broke away from the larger body now known as 'Disciples of Christ' because of disagreement over the right to organize missionary societies and to use the organ and other instrumental music in the public worship of the Church. These Churches differ from ours only slightly, and in my opinion it is a great pity there was ever a division.

"I note your suggestion about instruction in the paper on the point and thank you for it. It is a good suggestion and I hope the Evangelist can do something in that way soon, and constantly."

An interesting discussion of the name we should wear may be read in a tract by A. H. Buhler, evangelist, of Greenville, Texas, recently published by the Christian Board of Publication. Mr. Buhler says:

"A divided Church can never save a lost world. Jesus prayer that we all should be one, just as He and the Father were one, that the world might believe in Him (John 17:21). Christ is not divided. Divisions among His followers are never mentioned in the New Testament, save by way of condemnation (1 Cor. 1:12, 13, 3:1-9). The followers of Christ are probably more completely divided in name than in great doctrinal teachings, and yet if they will drop all human and distinguishing names given by men, they will find themselves together on the name Christian. Just as fractions (divisions) in arithmetic may be reduced to a common denominator (name), and thus combined into a unit, so the divisions of the Church may be made one under the name common to them all—Christian. Only in this way may we answer the prayer of our Lord for us, and help Him save a lost world.

"No matter how expressive, how beautiful or how significant a human name may be, it must not supersede and supplant the God-given name, Christian. No other name signifies the proper and full relation to Christ. As applied to the Church, 'Disciple' will not do, for it applies to the individual in his relation to Christ as the great Teacher. It simply means 'a learner (a pupil)'. 'Brethren' will not do, for it simply refers to our relation to each other. 'Saints' will not do, for this primarily refers to a perfected life, and ours is very imperfect, even though we are struggling to attain perfection in Him. Only the name Christian satisfies all the conditions of Scripture, includes all scriptural names by which God's people are called and answers all the longings of the human heart.

"Luther said, 'Call yourselves not Lutherans, but Christians,' and this is in harmony with Paul's instruction (1 Cor. 1:12, 13). Wesley said, 'I would that party names were forgot, and that we as humble disciples might sit down together at the Master's feet, read His Holy Word, imbibe His Spirit, and transcribe His life in our own.' So say we today.

"What name do you wear? What name should we wear? 'The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.'"

Personally, we believe that the most beautiful name of the Church to be found in the New Testament is in Acts 20:28, where it is called the "Church of the Lord." We have never known any religious body to put on that lovely and expressive name. If there were any way to change our name, I should be in favor of calling it "The Church of the Lord."—Christian-Evangelist (Disciples).

QUALIFICATIONS AND WORK OF DEACONS.

The office of deacon grew out of a Church trouble—the murmur of Greek-speaking members against the native Hebrew members, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministrations. Poverty was prevalent in that day, and it was greater among those who identified themselves with the Christian faith. This division among the members grew into hard feelings, and the apostles called a meeting of the believers and proposed the selection of seven men to assist in the distribution of the public charity. They suggested that seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, be appointed over this business.

The oldest ecclesiastical office, next to that of the apostles, is that of deacon. The apostles were chosen by Jesus Himself; but deacons were chosen by the congregation. Both are engaged in the Lord's work, but there is a distinction in their call and work. So far as known, this innovation corrected the trouble, prevented a division in the Church, and satisfied the whole body of the believers.

1. The qualifications of deacons, as expressed in the choice of Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas and Nicolas, were very high. They were full of faith and the Holy Ghost. Paul's expressed qualifications of deacons, in his letter to Timothy, enlarged somewhat upon the original requirements. Deacons, he said, must be honorable, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre, holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. That word conscience is a great word in the moral sense. It is composed of con (together) and scire (to know). It is knowing with God; that is, God and self coming together in the final settlement of a moral question. Man cannot know the right alone; but when God, by His word or His spirit, joins the individual in his decision, it is right for the individual. Intellectual culture alone cannot settle a moral or spiritual question.

A pure conscience is knowledge that has been reached by the united effort of God and man. Such a conscience decides and acts wisely. When all men and God reach decisions together, wisdom will control and righteousness will abound among men. The qualifications of good deacons embrace honorable standing with Jesus Christ, ministers, the congregation, and the public.

2. The work of deacons: Paul associates deacons with bishops in Philipians 1:1. The work of deacons is plainly that of assisting ministers in the Lord's work—in the Holy Communion and the charities of the Church. It is difficult to specify in detail the work of deacons, as it involves the Bible and ecclesiastical history. The origin of the deaconship suggests that necessity may discover new service in caring for the interests of the Church; but it is clear from Acts 6:6 that they were appointed over the business of the poor in the congregation; and "the poor ye have always with you." Widows seem to have been the chief objects of the charity of that day; and James says, "pure religion and undefiled before God is to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Helpless men would be equivalent to widows; hence, charity undertakes to relieve all necessity. Deacons represent such charity, and their work enlarges with new conditions.

When the deacons were elected and ordained by the apostles, and entered upon their work, the number of disciples multiplied in Jerusalem, and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith. The Church must be united before it can redeem the world. Jesus prayed "that they all may be one, that the world may believe." Deacon Stephen was the first martyr to the gospel, and his reputation was equal to any of the apostles, and he died saying, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." The first life given up for the gospel was the life of a deacon.

Serving-tables may include all the temporal affairs of the Church, with a spiritual significance. That office was established to improve the preaching of the gospel. "We will give ourselves continually to prayer and the ministry of the word." The apostles were, by this new office, to have more time for prayer and preparation for preaching. Congregations and deacons are responsible for much of the poor preaching of the present day. If deacons would do more in their office, and members would attend more regularly, and thus create a more spiritual atmosphere, it would increase prayer and preparation on the part of the minister, increase Church membership, and win the leaders of men to the Saviour and the Church.

STORING UP TRIPLE RESERVES.

Roger W. Babson is the author of many books, dealing with the religious life from the standpoint of a business man.

He argues in this book for the accumulation of reserves in the realms of finance, physical well-being, and of the spirit. It is refreshing always to have a business man plead for spiritual things.

It is a little strange, however, that he does not argue for the storing up of mental reserves. He has a business administration school of high grade in connection with his "business service," published every week. Surely he does not depreciate mental reserves.

There is need also for a fifth reserve—what we may call the human reserve of friendliness. Life is poor indeed without its reserves of friendship.

AN EXCURSION IN AMITY.

This heading is given and this line is written with the wish that it may catch the eye and grip the mind of very many CHRISTIAN SUN readers. Dr. Martyn Summerbell, president of Starkey Seminary, Lakemont, N. Y., has written a book of very recent publication entitled "Our Friends in Other Folds." In this perfectly delightful volume of 133 pages, the author makes "an excursion in amity" that is a delight to the mind and a joy to the heart. There are just six chapters in the book, and there are just six topics treated. Here they are: "Our Friends, the Episcopalians," "Our Friends, the Presbyterians," "Our Friends, the Congregationalists," "Our Friends, the Baptists," "Our Friends, the Society of Friends," "Our Friends, the Methodists."

In these excursions, our keen-witted and scrutinizing author and historian gives the reader, in most graphic and gripping manner, a marvelous amount of history about the six denominations treated, and then in the light of these gripping facts shows what a great contribution to Christianity and to civilization each of these communions has made. Dr. Summerbell treats the denominations with the pen of a master historian, but with the mind of a most capable scholar and a most amiable and sympathetic brother and minister of the gospel. We wish that every CHRISTIAN SUN reader had the joy that has been ours of reading this sympathetic and yet scrutinizing history of the denominations treated, and this broad and brotherly interpretation of the vast contribution to our Christian thinking and character that these various communions have made. Dr. Summerbell shows a most friendly and fraternal spirit in interpreting these denominations, and thereby makes a real contribution to friendship among the Churches and to the union of the followers of our Lord.

Coming as the book does at this time when so much is being said and done about Christian union, the volume is a most timely one, indeed, and all who read it will certainly have greater admiration for the other denominations of Christendom than that to which any one may happen to belong. In all his public utterances and writings with which this writer is acquainted, Dr. Summerbell has never given the public such a worthy, meritorious and monumental contribution as this, "Our Friends in Other Folds." The book may be had from the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, for $1.50 the copy. Every reader will certainly find it worth more than the price.

THE SUN LETTER.

The renewals to THE SUN have come in better for the last two weeks. But not like we had expected. We hope as the Conferences begin to meet that the subscribers will see the circulation manager and renew. Then help us get some new subscribers, too. We ought to have five thousand paying subscribers, and then we could put THE SUN on a paying basis. It is our Church paper. Every family in the Christian Church ought to have enough self-interest in our Church paper to support it. Invest two dollars in it and you will get value received and you will be helping support your Church paper.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Geography and the Bible measure human faith and human character. Geography is taught, believed, and used in practical life; yet men have not seen all of the world. They believe that three-fourths of the surface of the world is water, and one-fourth is land. They believe that the earth revolves on its axis once every twenty-four hours, and that it gives us day and night. They believe that an eclipse of the sun is produced by the moon coming between the earth and the sun; and that an eclipse of the moon is caused by the earth coming between the sun and the moon. The roundness of the earth and its revolutions are not questioned. All this, and more, is pure intellectual acceptance of what science has revealed. There is no moral or spiritual character involved in this belief in what geography teaches. The average man does not require proof of much that he believes as taught in geography. He believes it, acts upon his faith and moves on with the progress of mankind.

What has been said of geography is true of history. Students in school, scholars in high position, men and women in their homes, all read and believe history. Who would question Herodotus, called the "Father of History," who wrote 484 years before Christ? Down through the centuries from that far-off date, historians have recorded the doings of nations, and subsequent generations have read and believed what was written. The faith of mankind in the writings and achievements of men is marvelous and universal. The world could not exist with progress if such faith did not operate and co-operate in society. Faith in the teachings of science and in men is the foundation for well-being and progress. The business of the world rests on faith, and that faith is kept alive by the safety, value, and success of the factories and markets of the world. Even government rests upon this confidence which men have in one another. Take this natural faith out of society, and governments would fall to pieces and society would be wrecked. There is no plainer mark of ignorance or malice than a lack of confidence in others. Men usually see in others what is in themselves. It goes without formal proof that men have faith in men and in nature; and this is a great boon to society.

It seems that faith weakens in many minds when they come to the Bible. The reason for that is that the Bible reaches the heart and the conscience as geography and history do not. It touches the moral element in man, makes him conscious of his need and his responsibility. This is where the devil comes in and tempts men to doubt. The devil does not interfere with faith in geography, history, and man; but when the heart becomes conscious of sin and begins to think of soul responsibility, the devil begins his work of creating doubt in the man. But the record of creation in Genesis, written centuries before Herodotus, is just as easy to believe as geography or history. In fact, the Bible account of creation is just as true as science, even in the realm of science. If the Bible were simply an intellectual production, scientific minds would have no ground for argument. It is the moral element in the Bible and the work of the tempter that produce skepticism and fill the pages of literature with doubt and unanswered questions. The man who believes geography and Herodotus, and questions the Bible violates every principle of honest fairness and moral integrity.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

The leading exponent of the curriculum as experience has set forth his matured thinking in a volume entitled "Religious Education in the Modern Church." The theory of religious education is really in advance of the theory of general education, and W. C. Bower, the author of this book, is to be credited with that happy circumstance.

Unlike some other writers in the field of the curriculum, Dr. Bower is not entangled with religious denominations or with their officials, or with interdenominational groups that owe their continued existence to the denominations. He is free to pursue his findings to their ultimate conclusions, because he is officially free of such entangling alliances. In this book he has restated the convictions of his earlier "The Curriculum of Religious Education," and has re-enforced his originally prophetic viewpoint by the researches of the Committee on International Curriculum, of which he was the chairman, and of his own seminar work in the University of Chicago.

Dr. Bower's definitions of the religious educator as a "human engineer" and of religious education "as the development of Christian personality functioning through a Christian institution and the spiritual reconstruction of society," will commend themselves to competent thinkers in this field, who will also readily agree with him that religious education is not to be conceived "as instruction in a body of knowledge, the inculcation of predetermined ideals, or training in predetermined habits."

Conceiving of religious education in such terms, Dr. Bower proceeds to show that content, method, and institutional organization are undifferentiable (except in thought) aspects of the same educational process, in all of which "the learner," or what he prefers to call "the growing person," is the responsible and active agent. Knowledge becomes of greater value in an experience-centered curriculum than in a curriculum conceived as information or discipline or recapitulation, because it is necessary as the medium through which meanings are to be discovered in the racial experience, and what is more important, its pursuit, being highly motivated, will be much more zestful. It becomes a fruitful means of enriching, interpreting, and controlling the experience of the learner in terms of Christian ideals and purposes.

Method is "curriculum procedure," the way in which we deal with content or subject-matter, and so method and content necessarily and inevitably determine and condition each other. Method thus becomes a widening experience in meeting and responding to situations. The teacher in such a procedure becomes the guide of the learner in interpreting and controlling his own experience. Dr. Bower, therefore, conceives of method as the chief concern of the learner, the teacher sustaining to him the relation of "stimulator, counselor, technical adviser." Teaching thus takes upon itself an enhanced value.

"Steps" in the process of mastering an experience are set forth as follows: Feeling the problem in an experience or situation; defining the problem; analyzing the problem; searching the learner's past experience; searching the racial experience for facts; evaluating the outcomes; choosing an outcome; planning to carry the outcome through; testing the outcome and the process; identifying the outcome in terms of the Christian way; generalizing the outcome; appreciating the outcome; stabilizing the outcome into habit.

Organization as constituting the setting in which the personal and racial experiences are discovered to have meaning as purposive controls for conduct and mastered through interpretation and enrichment, thus becomes an essential aspect of the educational process, conditioning both subject-matter and method or procedure or teaching technique. Here, too, in Dr. Bower's viewpoint, the learner must become a responsible participant. Organization is, therefore, an instrument of education, and the school "an institution," "not to be thought of merely as a mechanism or formal framework in an orderly and economical fashion," but as "a selective, simplified and purified environment deliberately created for the fruitful furthering of the experience of growing persons toward personally and socially desirable ends." Organization, therefore, in its most essential aspect is both curriculum and method.

There has just appeared a book* by one of Dr. Bower's graduate students in religious education, which sets forth in a practical way the theory of Dr. Bower's book. Miss Leberman has had a rare experience as teacher in the week-day religious schools of Gary, Ind., and has in her book, under Dr. Bower's guiding hand, produced an experience-centered curriculum for the daily vacation Church school (primary age). Dr. Bower's other students are diligently at work on other courses for other age levels. There is no questioning the fact that the series of curriculum courses now being produced in the University of Chicago under Dr. Bower's leadership will affect the religious education movement even more decidedly than did the constructive Bible study courses it produced a generation ago influenced biblical scholarship.

No review can do justice to Dr. Bower's book. In addition to giving the incisive study of the curriculum to which reference has been made, he traces the history of education and of religious education. He further discusses the nature of religion and experience and their relation to personality. Any experience becomes religious, says Dr. Bower, when it is examined for its highest values and in terms of God. He also evaluates the various methods to provide adequate instruction in religious education to our youth, deciding that the week-day religious school movement offers us the finest avenue of such service. But the reader is referred to the book itself, which will be found as entrancing as a novel and altogether more satisfying.

It is refreshing, too, to find a unit in the Standard Leadership Training course consisting of twelve chapters of the orthodox ten.

Here is a book the world of religious education has been waiting for—which fearlessly calls for a curriculum guide rather than our time-honored courses of study, which exalts the learner and dignifies the teacher of the local group and thoroughly democratizes the curriculum of religious education, whether it be conceived as subject-matter, method, or institutional organization. Such a book will produce a revolution, but it will be a constructive revolution—the primary need of religious education in our day.

CONVENTION INFORMATION.

BY PASTOR RAYMOND G. CLARK.

Get Acquainted Before You Arrive.

The beautiful city of Piqua has a population of 20,000. It is located in the Miami Valley, and is the center of an excellent agricultural region. The city is an important manufacturing center. There are twenty-five manufacturing plants.

At the corner of Broadway and Greene Street, more than one mile from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad station, where taxis meet all trains; three blocks north, three blocks west, and one block north from the Pennsylvania Railroad station; four blocks west from the Union Bus station; four blocks west and one block north from the city square.

Convention Church Described.

Five words characterize this modest-appearing structure—plainness, neatness, compactness, economy, utility. The open court between the two buildings leads to the main entrance or family vestibule, from which entrances lead to all sections of the plant. Last April the education unit was dedicated, the dimensions of which are 36 feet by 120 feet. It has three floors. Each of the seven departments of the Church school has its own assembly, with separate class-rooms adjoining.

The Church has recently published an unusually fine manual of fifty-seven pages, which contains the complete details of the work of all the departments of the Church during the last year, the organization of the school, a detailed description of the plant, with thirteen pictures displaying interior and exterior sections, and a finance statement showing the cost of each contract for the building. This manual also demonstrates a method of Church publicity that is worth while to many ministers and laymen. A copy will be mailed any delegate for 60 cents while they last. Address the Christian Church, Piqua, Ohio.

Convention Sessions.

All general sessions of the Convention will be held in the auditorium and the adult assembly combined. Quiet and comfort are assured during the sessions because each of the nineteen committees will have its private meeting-room on the top floor of the education building. The dining-room is on the ground floor of the education building, where neither noise nor fumes will annoy. All Convention displays will be in the basement of the old building. (Special display-rooms should not be requested.)

Upon arrival, enter the family vestibule, between the two buildings on Broadway, where you will be greeted by the reception committee. Guides will escort you to the registration office and to other sections of the building; pages and scouts will be at your service; automobiles will be waiting to convey you to your place of entertainment. No efforts are being spared to make guests feel at home and comfortable. Meals will be served in the dining-room by the ladies of the Church for a moderate charge. There are two well-equipped rest-rooms for the ladies and a large general parlor. Have mail sent to the Christian Church, Piqua, Ohio. Rev. D. G. Pleasant will be the Convention postmaster.

Where is Piqua?

Piqua is in Ohio, thirty miles north from Dayton and eighty-eight miles north from Cincinnati; seventy-two miles west from Columbus, and 500 miles west from Washington, D. C.; thirty-eight miles northwest from Springfield, forty-seven miles south from Lima, 120 miles south from Toledo, and ninety-eight miles south from Defiance; 175 miles southwest from Akron, 212 miles southwest from Cleveland, 600 miles east from Des Moines, Ia., and 285 miles southeast from Chicago, 385 miles northeast from St. Louis, 114 miles northeast from Indianapolis.

All trains arrive at Piqua on Eastern standard time.

Pennsylvania Railroad trains leave Columbus, Ohio, 2:25 A. M., arrive Piqua 4:18 A. M.; leave 4:35 A. M., arrive 6:18 A. M. (flag, extra fare); leave 1:45 P. M., arrive 3:23 P. M.; leave 6 P. M., arrive 8:22 P. M.; leave 9:30 A. M., arrive 11:32 A. M.; leave 11:45 P. M., arrive 1:42 A. M. Leave Chicago, Ill., 10:45 A. M., arrive Piqua 6:12 P. M.; leave 10:15 P. M., arrive 5:43 A. M. Leave Indianapolis, Ind., 4 A. M., arrive Piqua 9:06 A. M.; leave 5:05 P. M., arrive 8:35 P. M. (flag, extra fare); leave 10 P. M., arrive 1:45 A. M. (stops to discharge passengers from St. Louis, Mo., and points beyond).

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad trains leave Dayton 8:25 A. M., arrive Piqua 9:23 A. M.; leave 1:10 A. M., arrive 2:01 A. M.; leave 10:40 A. M., arrive 11:38 A. M.; leave 2:36 P. M., arrive 3:28 P. M. Leave Lima, Ohio, 3:05 A. M., arrive Piqua 4:20 A. M.; leave 10:43 A. M., arrive 12:13 P. M.; leave 3:45 P. M., arrive 4:46 P. M.; leave 12:05 P. M., arrive 1:09 P. M.

Big Four Railroad trains stop at Sidney, twelve miles from Piqua, where interurbans and buses leave for Piqua about every two hours.

Hotel Accommodations.

Hotel Favorite (six blocks from the Church): Without bath—one guest, $1.50 to $1.75; two guests, $2.50 to $3. With bath—one guest, $2.25 to $2.50; two guests, $4 to $5. All meals extra.

Glencoe Hotel (six blocks from the Church; no baths): Hot and cold running water—one guest, $1.25 to $1.50; two guests, $2. to $2.50; four guests (two beds), $1 each. Pitcher and bowl (no running water)—one guest, $1; two guests, $1.50.

Rooming houses: A number of private rooming houses will accommodate guests for about $1 per day, or $5 per week.

Interurban lines: These cars run from one to two hours apart from Dayton, Lima and Sidney. They make connections at Dayton with trains and cars from Springfield, Columbus and Cincinnati.

Buses: Interstate buses from Detroit, Mich., and from Covington, and Louisville, Ky., and Nashville, Tenn. Local buses arrive from Sidney, Dayton, Greenville, Urbana, and other cities.

Please write Rev. Raymond G. Clark, Piqua, Ohio, whether you are coming by train or auto; whether you plan to stay throughout the Convention; whether you are a delegate or a visitor. Give us all the possible information in your letter, so it will not be necessary to write you. If you plan to go to a hotel at your own expense, write it.

DOVER, DEL.

The reception tendered Dr. R. C. Helfenstein and family of People's Christian Church, Dover, Del., by the Lend-a-Hand Society of the Church, Thursday evening, upon their return from a two months' exchange of pulpit and vacation period in the West, was one of the most delightful occasions of the season.

Promptly at 8 o'clock, Dr. & Mrs. Helfenstein, two daughters, Misses Dorothy and Charlotte, and son, Dwight, were escorted to the Community Hall by H. C. Taylor, master of ceremonies, followed by the reception committee of the society, including Mrs. H. C. Taylor, Mrs. Mary M. Wolcott, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Hopkins, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Massey, Mrs. E. L. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Hutton. Standing in front of the platform, behind which were banks of flowers of all kinds, Dr. and Mrs. Helfenstein and family were greeted by hundreds of members and friends of the Church, all of whom gave sincere expression of their delight in having Dr. Helfenstein and family return from their vacation and marking the beginning of the tenth year of Dr. Helfenstein's pastorate at People's Church.

After all had greeted the pastor and family, Mrs. Walter Morris, first vice-president of the society and chairman of the program committee, entertained the large number present to one of the most interesting programs that it has been the privilege of Dover people to witness in many years, it being a living talking moving picture album.

Mrs. Morris, dressed in the style of dress of fifty or more years ago, presented caricature pictures from an old family album, including the parson, taken by J. Dawson Satterfield; the parson's wife, Mrs. Mary Morris Lynch; the belle of the town, Miss Frieda Von Rider; Deacon Jabez Hicks, John B. Hutton; "Sister Jane," the deacon's wife, Mrs. Reynolds Reed; "Bertha," her daughter, Mrs. Louise Morris Hartnett; "The Village Gossiper," Miss Mildred Jones; the deacon's daughter, Miss Pearl Smith, and old Granddad Hobbs, Elmer E. Benson.

After the entertainment, all assembled were invited to the dining-room, where the refreshments were served. Dr. Helfenstein, when called upon for remarks, reviewed the work of the past nine years' pastorate in Dover and the pleasant memories of those years and expressed the hope that the tenth year on which he is entering would be more profitable than ever before. A response was given by John B. Hutton.—Delaware State News.

SERMON.

friendship can be formed by maltreatment. Human friendships take place by likes which take place long before one asks the question why he likes. One loves his sweetheart long before he asks himself why he loves her. So it may be said that one worships his friend, or his love, first, and afterwards he seeks to come to an understanding with that one. It is to be borne in mind that the function of reason has never discovered anything. It seeks to interpret what has already been discovered. In one's contemplation of Christ, why should he change the whole approach to learn of Him and try to reason Him out before he will acknowledge His worth to the human soul?

Again, when one falls in love with a person, he may undertake to find out what it is that compelled that affection, and having come to an understanding of that affection, he then wills to cultivate in his own life the qualities which he loves in the other. It is then that such a friendship becomes vital.

Thus, as Christians come to Christ they will learn what true religion is, and that it will subordinate all their passions and appetites to the higher and the holy existence. They will spend their strength for good without a scintillation of hypocrisy. They will see the divinity in others and stand by to rescue any who need such ministrations.

And as others, non-Christians, may come to Christ, they will come to know that the Church is the one organization for the propagation of the kingdom of righteousness, and that the Church holds the secret of God in its life. They will see that out of the past comes the faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as God incarnate; and with that faith comes the conviction that a thing so great and so eternal as the Church of God, and a thing so potent and enduring as Christianity, standing the test of all the ages, cannot be very far wrong.

They will believe in the truths of the Bible, and come to realize that "the saints shall inherit the earth and shall judge the world." They will understand that the Lord will gather His own unto Himself, "As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that they are scattered, so he will seek out his sheep in the cloudy and dark day" (Ezek. 34:12). They will learn that all others will be outside, where there will be wailing and gnashing of teeth. They will love God, learn of Him and follow Him.

MISSIONS
 REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

WORLD-FRIENDSHIP PROGRAM.

The Foreign Mission Department, the Home Mission Department, the Woman's Mission Board and the Department of Christian Education of the Christian Church have recently published, and now have ready for distribution, "World-Friendship Programs" for young people of the Christian Church (series III). The booklet issued carries outlines for twelve programs, beginning with October and continuing one for each month through September, 1930. These "World-Friendship Programs" are intended for Young People's Missionary Societies, for Christian Endeavor Societies, or any other groups of young people in Christian Churches. The price of the booklet, to cover printing and postage, is only 10 cents, or a dozen copies for $1.00. A very wide use of these programs should be made by our young people's groups, whether in Sunday School classes, missionary or Christian Endeavor Societies. Along with the programs, there is recommended for each group using them a booklet, on which the programs are based, entitled "Youth and the World Outlook." This booklet costs only 35 cents the copy, and may be had from the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio.

The programs show through study and preparation on the part of the editors, Marion McCord and Lucy M. Eldredge, and they certainly will be found of great help to any and all young people's missionary groups or societies. The programs, with their suggestions, will aid any group or any society wishing to do so to pursue in orderly and well-directed manner delightful studies in missionary plans, pursuits and projects. We hope that many, very many, of our Young People's Societies will order and will use these "World-Friendship Programs."

Mission Secretary.

We had our goal of $45,000 to try to reach from September 30, 1928, to September 30, 1929. We have, thanks to our Heavenly Father and to all who in His name and for His sake, have sacrificed and helped, reached the goal and some over, as above shows. With such a showing we should all of us take courage, thank God and press forward.

ELON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Elon College Missionary Society has had a most successful year, and the interest, enthusiasm and loyalty have been fine. They have a membership of sixty-six and are divided into four circles, each having monthly meetings. They held their final meeting of the year recently, when reports were given from all the departments of the society of the work done the past year. It was inspiring to hear these reports, which showed just what had been accomplished along all lines. A splendid devotional service was conducted, letters were read from Dr. Atkinson and Dr. Coffin, and the meeting was pronounced one of the best of the year. Plans have already been made for the new year, and they are expecting to do even better things.

The cradle roll rally was held recently, with thirty-one present. Mrs. L. D. Martin is the superintendent and has done good work in this department. A fine program was rendered, games were played and refreshments served. It was a real thrilling sight to see those little tots bringing their mite-boxes and dues and dropping them in the basket. Their superintendent entertained them in April with an Easter-egg hunt, which the little ones enjoyed also.

The Young People's Society has had as their leader Mrs. J. W. Patton, who has been most efficient in her efforts. They have a small membership, but real determination and loyalty. Meetings were held regularly, good devotional programs were rendered and a social hour was enjoyed. This society is a young people's Sunday School class and missionary society combined, and they have succeeded in raising their goal of $50.

The Junior Missionary Society, under the leadership of Mrs. S. W. Caddell, has a membership of twelve, and are a loyal band, too. They recently completed a quilt, on which are names of nearly every one in Elon community, having been put there on the payment of ten cents per name. It is a beautiful piece of workmanship and the girls deserve credit for their work.

The Willing Workers are an active bunch of children, and Mrs. W. S. Alexander and Mrs. J. S. White have been the superintendents for this society. They are willing workers in deed and truth and held their meetings regularly, using the study-book "Navajo Indians." They gave their superintendent, Mrs. Alexander, a linen shower before she left, to show their appreciation of her interest and helpfulness to them. They raised their goal of $25. CORRESPONDENT.

NEWS ITEMS.

BY MRS. W. M. JAY.

Miss M. Violet Griffin, superintendent of the Willing Workers Society of the Windsor Christian Church, sends the following news item: They have five active members and have raised their quota of $30, which speaks well for so small a group. They are interested and hope to increase their membership and attendance next year. This is where the parents can help so much in molding these young lives for future usefulness. A live Willing Workers' superintendent and co-operative parents can do much in organizing children in the Master's work.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Christian Church has held regular meetings every month, with good attendance. The pastor Rev. W. D. Harward, has faithfully taught the study books and Mrs. Harward has been their spiritual life superintendent. These two consecrated people have helped so much to make their society interesting and helpful to all. They have raised their quota and have taken a life membership for their efficient president, Mrs. H. H. Johnson. Mrs. Julia Carr is the secretary of the Mt. Carmel society.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Bethlehem Christian Church has just completed a successful year's work. Under the leadership of the superintendent, Mrs. J. W. Folk, the society reached its goal of eighty-five dollars ($85). The following officers served for the year: president, Miss Beulah Bracy; assistant, Miss Frances Winner; secretary, Miss Helen Sumner; assistant, Elizabeth Winner; treasurer, Miss Doris Eure; pianist, Miss Mary Jones; program leader, Miss Doris Eure.

After each business session, which was held once a month, a spiritual program was rendered, after which a delightful social hour was enjoyed. A pageant, "Lovest Thou Me," was presented by the society, a silver offering was taken, realizing a nice sum for the benefit of the society.

It is a great thing to be missionary in spirit, to realize the meaning and instill in each member's heart that "God is Love." If it be God's will, the good work will continue next year, and may more be accomplished than ever for His name's sake.

The Barrett Missionary Society of the Holland Christian Church is a young people's society, just two years old. They are a live bunch, and have held regular meetings, studying "Youth and the New America." They entertained the Y. P. Society of Holy Neck in April, and the following program was given: missionary reading, Robert Dalton; piano solo, Antionette Dalton; essay on "Friendship," Nancy Holland; reading, Edrie Holland; duets, Gladys Swanner and Dorothy Daughtrey; songs by the society. The social part of the evening was taken up with games and contests and an ice cream course was served.

The Willing Workers Society of the Holy Neck Christian Church has had a very successful year under the direction of their superintendent, Mrs. J. T. Harrell. A very interesting pageant entitled "Alice Through the Postal Card" was given at the Church on a Sunday night in July. A very enjoyable Saturday evening was spent at their superintendent's home, where games were played and refreshments served. These children are doing a splendid work and are interested in missions.

The Weman's Missionary Society of the Franklin Christian Church has closed one of its best years. The attendance has been good, the interest keen and their love for the mission work greatly increased. They held some very effective meetings throughout the year on Thanksgiving, Christmas, day of prayer for missions, one-day school of missions, and a mite-box opening day.

The mite-box day was one of their most interesting meetings. The room was arranged attractively, the table being covered in white crepe paper, in the center of which was a bowl, banked around with yellow daisies for receiving the mite-boxes. Yellow daisies and yellow candles were used all about the room. The meeting was opened with a devotional, and while the pianist played softly "O Zion, Haste," six little children dressed to represent our mission points came down the aisle and stood on either side of the table and repeated Bible verses. At the close of this there was prayer for each of our missionaries, and as soft music was played they prayerfully went forward and dropped their mite-boxes in the bowl. A social was then enjoyed and all pronounced this a most uplifting and spiritual meeting.

The Weman's Missionary Society of the Bethlehem (Va.) Christian Church has held regular meetings with good attendance. They observed the "Day of Prayer" for missions and had a most helpful service. Their mission study class was taught by their pastor, G. A. Pierce, and they used the "New Africa" and "What Next in Home Missions." All their appointments have been sent in and they are hoping for a better year next year. Their cradle roll rally was in July and a very fine time is reported. Mrs. J. W. Folk is the president of the woman's society.

The Holy Neck Woman's Missionary Society has just closed a most successful year. They say, if asked what was the keynote to their success during the past year, the answer could well be hearty co-operation, loyalty, generosity and faithful attendance on the part of every member. They planned some special feature in advance for each quarter, thereby raising their goal each time.

The work of the spiritual life superintendent has been a source of inspiration to every member and has been an added blessing to the society. The present officers have been re-elected and plans have been made for the new year. They are starting out with a greater zeal and inspiration to make the year 1929-30 the best ever.

Lesson II—October 13, 1929.

KEEPING FIT FOR THE SAKE OF OTHERS.

(Temperance Lesson.)

GOLDEN TEXT: "Know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which ye have from God? and ye are not your own, for ye were bought with a price; glorify God, therefore, in your body."—1 Cor. 6:19-20.

LESSON: Dan. 1:8-20; 1 Cor. 9:19-27; 1 Tim. 4:7-12; 2 Tim. 2:1-5.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 66:1-4, 16-20.

Keeping Fit for the Sake of One's Self.

A man ought to have a desire to keep fit for the sake of his own selfish interests. From the standpoint of feeling well, of mental efficiency, of clear thinking, of steady nerves, of material success, a man ought to try to keep fit in an inclusive sense of the word. A careful study of the lives of successful men in the true sense of the word would reveal the fact that for the most part they were men who had learned to discipline themselves and who kept physically and mentally fit. The man who feels badly all the time, who dissipates his strength in unwholesome ways, who dulls his mind with unclean and evil thoughts, who is a slave to his self-indulgence can neither do his work efficiently nor think clearly. The athlete, the true athlete is careful of the things he eats, and of the things he does, so that he can come to the test with strength unimpaired, with nerves steady, and with reserve unbounded. And he is justified in doing this in order that he may make a good showing and win distinction for himself.

Keeping Fit for the Sake of Others.

But a man should also keep fit for the sake of others. He does not live to himself; he cannot live to himself. He lives in a world of social relationships and social obligations. He must, therefore, keep at his best, not only for his own sake, but for the sake of others. He owes it to others, as he owes it to himself, to keep himself at his best, physically, mentally, socially, morally, spiritually. To revert to the figure of the athlete again, he ought to want to keep fit, that he might make a good showing and do well for himself and he ought to keep fit for the sake of his team-mates. The star player on the football or baseball team who "breaks training" and reports for the big game "out of condition" not only robs himself; he plays the traitor to, and robs, his team. And the man who lives at anything less than his best, not only does himself an injustice; he is a traitor to, and robs, society.

This matter of keeping fit has a double application. It involves the elimination from our lives of the things that will keep us from being fit. It also involves the development within our lives of the things that will make us more fit. This is true whether we think in terms of our physical, our mental, our social, our moral, or our spiritual life. The far-reaching implications of the gospel of Christ are seen nowhere more clearly than here.

The Story of a Young Man who Kept Fit.

The story of Daniel is the story of a young man who kept fit, both for the sake of himself and for the sake of others. Finding himself a captive in a strange land, he determined that he was going to keep fit. An opportunity might come. He wanted to be ready, and he purposed in his heart that he was going to live the kind of life that would keep him fit. This certainly entered into his decision. It should enter into the decision of every ambitious young person. The difference in the story of Daniel and the story of Samson is to be found in large measure right here. The one kept fit for the sake of the task that might come. The other gave himself over to a life of self-indulgence.

But Daniel also kept fit for the sake of his three companions. He knew the power of personal influence and example. Even if he never got a chance, he knew that he owed something to his friends. He must keep fit for their sakes. It would probably have been quite a different story if Daniel had refused to recognize his obligation to keep fit for the sake of others.

The moral of the story is, of course, plain. There is every incentive and impulse to those of us who are Christians to keep fit in every way, just because we are Christians. But there is the added incentive and impulse in the claim which others have upon us, both those who are Christians and those who are not Christians. Jesus Himself said, "For their sakes I sanctify myself."

Paul's Advice About Keeping Fit.

Paul evidently knew something about athletics, and it is quite probable that he had seen the Grecian games, for he uses them as a figure of life and its activities. He says a striking thing in writing to the Corinthians, who lived at the city where the great games were held. He suggested that the athletes train and discipline themselves in order to win a corruptible crown, and he reminds his readers that they are striving for an incorruptible crown. How much more ought they to exercise self-control and mastery in keeping fit in all things.

Teaching Points.

1. A man is not free to do as he pleases because of his obligation to others.
2. The body is the instrument of the spirit. We should take care of it.
3. If a man has a heart purpose as to what he is not going to do, it will help him to act with vigor in what he ought to do.
4. Life is a strenuous game which demands fitness.
5. Self-discipline is an essential factor in success.
6. It takes courage to live at one's best.
7. Our best is none too good for the Master.
8. Clean living pays large dividends.
9. Abstinence is the safest temperance in the matter of alcohol.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, October 13, 1929.

TOPIC: "Jesus Teaching Us to Pray."—Matt. 6:5-13.

Some Bible Hints.

Praying merely to make a good effect on those that hear us is vain. Prayer must be sincere and real (v. 5).

Secrecy in prayer is often the test of its reality. We mean something by it when no one hears but God (v. 6).

There is no magic in set forms or words. The heart's cry is the only prayer that has value (v. 7).

God knows our needs; yet, like a father, He wishes us to consult Him about them. He wants human fellowship (v. 8).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The Lord's Prayer is a sample, not a fixed form. It is "after this manner" that we are taught to pray.

Probably Jesus often prayed in the presence of His disciples. That is the best way to teach—by example. But they knew that behind His prayers lay a life of communion.

Prayer is far more than words. It is life. It is the expression of our character. The desire of our deepest being is our real prayer, and not the words of our lips.

Jesus taught persistence in prayer (Luke 18:1). We persist only in the things that are supreme in our thoughts. If our one aim is to glorify God, then that aim is a continual prayer.

A Few Illustrations.

In the parable of the Pharisee and publican, Jesus teaches humility in prayer. Pride makes prayer impossible. Selfishness is a worm that destroys it.

In Mark 11, Jesus teaches the necessity of faith when we pray. But faith means certainty that the thing we ask for is according to God's will. When we know that, we confidently expect a reply.

If we always got at once things we asked for, we should never learn the deep meaning of prayer. We are denied that we may seek more earnestly.

Prayer draws us to God, not God to us. He is always ready, we are unprepared.

To Think About.

How does life teach us to pray?

Why are some prayers not answered?

How may we know what things to pray for?

NEWS NOTES.

Upon the election of a new field secretary for the Board of Christian Education, the chairman of that board and the new field secretary made out a list of things that they thought the board should try to do. Some goals or ideals towards which we want to strive were also listed. Of course, we do not limit the work to this, because we want to help in any way we can; but these notes in black and white help to clarify the meaning of and the need for this work in our Church.

We hope the readers of THE SUN will read every one of these items, remembering that the field secretary wants to help you with your problems, and that she cannot do it if she does not know about them. Help us accomplish more by your co-operation.

Work to Be Done.

1. Furnish notes on the Sunday School lesson for THE CHRISTIAN SUN each week. (Rev. H. S. Hardcastle does this.)

2. Furnish notes on the Christian Endeavor topic for THE CHRISTIAN SUN weekly. (The field secretary is to do this.)

3. Furnish news items for THE CHRISTIAN SUN on the work of Christian education. (This is the work of the chairman and field secretary.)

4. Promote special days by furnishing suggestions and literature.

5. Promote all enterprises of the Church according to the Church year as adopted by the Convention.

6. Visit all Churches that desire help in any kind of religious educational work.

7. Conduct teacher-training classes in any Church or Churches that desire it.

8. Give teacher-training work by correspondence.

- 9. Help Sunday School conventions to build programs for religious education.
- 10. Conduct or assist in conducting daily vacation Bible schools wherever desired.
- 11. Co-operate with all departments of the Church in all matters that pertain to religious education.
- 12. Conduct summer schools of Christian education at Piedmont Junior College (about July 1, 1930) and Elon College (about August 1, 1930).
- 13. Develop a circulating library on religious education to be used by all who are interested.
- 14. Publish the minutes of Sunday School conventions and act as statistician for the conventions.
- 15. Sponsor young people's congresses and all forms of work for young people.
- 16. Raise $4,500 with which to work annually.

Goals.

- 1. Trained officers and teachers in all Sunday Schools, C. E. Societies, missionary societies, and other Church organizations.
- 2. Every Sunday School superintendent and teacher reading at least one book every year on their own particular field of work.
- 3. Every Sunday School superintendent and teacher taking at least one religious periodical.
- 4. Adequate literature in every Sunday School.
- 5. A "Workers' Council" in every Sunday School, meeting every quarter (better, every month).
- 6. Every Church represented in the summer schools.
- 7. Proper missionary education in every Church, so that all will want to go or give.
- 8. Stewardship studies and practice in every Church.
- 9. Everybody awake and at work for the Church.

Do you think our program worth while and our goals worthy of the name? Perhaps you will say, "They lack all right, if something is only done about them." Fine! we like your answer. Well, there's only one way to make them work, and that's for you to help hard on every one of them. Now, just a little warning: If our "work" and "goals" do not get into workable form, there is reason to believe that a great deal can be traced back to our failure to do No. 16. Look at our program carefully. Do you think it will take $4,500 annually to do all of this work for the whole Southern Christian Convention? Sure, it will. Now, let's get that money to our treasurer, so our time can be spent on other things.

There are two things that we should be working on especially right now. They are "Rally Day" and "Promotion Day." Both are interesting to the members of the Sunday School; both arouse new enthusiasm on the part of teacher and pupil; and both are probably needed in our Sunday School to get everything in fine condition for a good year's work. Try promoting your boys and girls and having the happiest and biggest rally day ever.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THOU CANST.

"Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean."—Matt. 8:1-4.

It was a leper who said that. He was suffering from the most terrible, vile, and disgusting of all diseases, and it was incurable by any earthly physician. When he went to Christ and asked for healing, he asked what was impossible unless Christ were more than earthly.

Now, that is the way we are to go to Christ with our petitions. If men can grant them, we take them to men. If we can answer our own prayers, it is unmanly to take them to Christ. We carry to Him the needs that only God can meet and supply.

And so, by the very act of prayer, we refuse to set any limit to the power of Christ. If He were not omnipotent, it would be foolish to go to Him. If he could be measured by human standards, He would not measure up to any human prayer. Prayer has one faith, that nothing is impossible to our Saviour.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, we come to Thee because Thou art what Thou art. Nothing is too base for Thy conquering holiness. Look upon us with Thy merciful eyes and lift us up. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

NOTHING GREATER.

"Thou hast striven with God and with men, and hast prevailed."—Gen. 32:24-31.

Jacob knew that he had been wrestling with God in prayer, that limping upon his thigh meant something to him. Perhaps if we had to do some literal wrestling with God, our prayers would mean more to us. Certainly if we realized that in prayer we are approaching all wisdom, all power, all majesty, and all glory, we should know—what so few of us really do know—that prayer is the greatest thing we can do.

When we pray, we actually ask God to let us take His omnipotence into our feeble hands and use it as a tool to perform our little tasks. When we pray we actually ask God to admit us to His library and open to us His books of omniscience and point out the perfect solution of our little perplexities. When we pray we actually ask God to lift us up out of our earthly ruts and place us for a moment beside Him on the throne of the universe, that we may share His glory. Prayer is all this. Prayer is nothing less than all that is implied in this.

What poor preparation we make for this wonderful act! How lightly we go to this most tremendous of all appointments! How carelessly we take up our prayers and how heedlessly we conclude them! Nothing so notable in all the world is so slightly done.

Prayer.—God of our prayers, forgive us that we pray so poorly. God of our prayers, admit us to Thy school. There may we learn Thee better, and learn ourselves better, and come at last to dwell in Thee. Through riches of grace in Thy Son, our Redeemer. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

JEHOVAH'S REMEMBRANCERS.

"Ye that are Jehovah's remembrancers, take ye no rest, and give him no rest, till he establish."

Isaiah is very bold. "Give God no rest!" We are reminded of Christ's parable of the importunate widow. We are reminded of the Syro-Phœnician mother. Our Father in heaven certainly does not object to determined asking. Indeed, He does not pay attention to any other kind.

"Jehovah's remembrancers" is a good name to take with us when we pray. Does God forget? Never! Does He fail to see our needs and require to have them pointed out? Not at all, not for the very least of our smallest needs. Is He careless, that we must prod His memory? He created memory, He built mind, He made thought.

But, just the same, He likes to be reminded. He wants His children to be His remembrancers. Thus, He knows, and we associate ourselves more closely with Him. He might easily anticipate all our desires, and send us every day a full measure of blessings before any thought of them had entered our heads. Then they would come to us like the air and the light, so familiar that we seldom think of God in connection with them, or stop to thank Him for them. The more we can be God's remembrancers for ourselves and others, the more firmly knit is our partnership with Him.

Prayer.—And so we pray to Thee, our God, and take no rest; aye, and give Thee no rest. For Thou dost not want rest in this blessed enterprise of blessing—Thy children and Thy world. Amen.

THURSDAY.

PRAYERS ARE SURELY ANSWERED.

"Go in peace; and the God of Israel grant thy petition that thou hast asked of Him."—1 Sam. 1:9-17.

God gave Samuel to Hannah, because she asked for Samuel. If we want definite answers to prayer we must offer definite prayers. An arrow with a blunt point hits no mark. Praying is a business, and we must be business-like in conducting it.

The wife of the pastor of a large city Church made it a habit to sit in the gallery and to pick out from the congregation below her first one person and then another for whom she would pray. She kept this up for years, and at the end she thanked God that every person for whom she had thus prayed had united with the Church. If her prayers had been less definite, they would hardly have been so successful. Prayers that have a clear-cut end in view carry our zeal whirring with them. As a racer to a goal, we cannot speed too fast.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, we would be about Thy business. We would be fervent in spirit, serving Thee. Lord Jesus, we pray Thee, teach us to pray. Amen.

FRIDAY.

LOVING AND PRAYING.

"If you forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."—Matt. 6:7-15.

Many who are not of a revengeful spirit must wonder why it is that our Saviour, in giving us His model prayer, laid more stress on the spirit of forgiveness than on anything else in the prayer. The petition, "And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors," together with Christ's comments on it, lack in our English version only two words of being as long as all the rest of the prayer put together. Why is this?

It is because Christ wishes to show us that the spirit of love is the spirit of prayer. The loftiest prayer is intercessory, prayer not for ourselves but for others, and if we are to pray for others we must leave in our heart not the faintest trace of grudges, of suspicions, of envy, or jealousy, or the remembrance of any quarrel or wrong. This is what Christ would emphasize, and His emphasis must be ours.

Prayer.—Thou, the Crucified, who didst pray for Thy foes on the cross of agony and shame to which they had driven Thee, help us into Thy realm of perfect love. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WAIT FOR GOD.

"My soul, wait thou in silence for God only, for my expectation is from Him."—Psa. 62:1-7.

Our prayers are best when there is most listening in them and least of our talking, when we wait in silence for God only and are not clamorous for blessings. The spirit of prayer is the spirit of meditation rather than the spirit of petition. It is well often to offer prayers that are all praise, and then again prayers that are all thanksgiving, and then prayers that are all meditative.

We so besiege God with our eager requests that He has no opportunity to bestow upon us what is far beyond our requests. The surest test of friendship is the ability to sit quietly together, the soul of each going out to the other confidently, constantly, and fruitfully. So if we are God's friends, we shall love to sit in the silence with Him.

Prayer.—Here we are, our Father, waiting upon Thee. We hush our longings, we put away our desires. There shall be no room in our souls this hour for anything but gratitude. Thou hast filled our lives with good things. We can ask nothing more. Now, in this solemn and glad moment, make us conscious of Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

GOD AND MEN TOGETHER.

"Working together with Him."—2 Cor. 6:1-10.

When God sent Cornelius to Peter, he sent Peter to Cornelius. No business concern in the world, however marvelously its various elements interlock, however perfectly they co-operate to a common end, can for a minute compare with God's control over human affairs.

For example, some girls in an India school felt themselves at the end of their progress. They were keenly desirous of training to become Christian workers, but did not know where they could get it. They agreed to write out their petition and meet and pray over it every day. This is what they wrote, "O Lord, if this desire to work for Thee is not from Thee, take it away; but if it be from Thee, then please put into the heart of some Miss Sahib or Mem Sahib, whether she be rich or poor, just so she be able to answer our questions and to prepare us for the work, to open a school where we can get ready for this work, and please also send us the answer within a month, so that we certainly may know it is from Thee, and also grant that we may be asked to go to this school."

Just such a new school was being started, and within a month these girls, living several hundred miles from it, were asked to enter it.

Prayer.—Our Father, we are all Thy children. Thou dost not lose track of any of us. Thy providences are always working for our good. What can we do but trust Thee always and love Thee utterly? Amen.

A Great Challenge

THE TIME HAS COME

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE TO BE EQUIPPED AND ENDOWED

WHAT IS TO BE DONE?

FIRST: The Budget for this year must be provided. This calls for $10,000 in donations.

SECOND: The Endowment must be brought up to $250,000, in order to give this College the full standing which it now gets only through Piedmont Senior College.

THIRD: The fine buildings, nearing completion, must be finished and adequately furnished. The Campus must be put in presentable order, and be made a thing of beauty for its educational value. The College must be freed for its best work. This calls for $40,000.

TOTAL: $300,000.

BEFORE EXCLAIMING: "It is too much—it can't be done!"

REMEMBER: The assets of two of New England's forty-two colleges and universities would re-endow every college and university in the whole South—fourteen New Englands in territory—and endow a score of new ones with the average endowment of the Southern colleges.

REMEMBER AGAIN: That one preparatory school in New England has received enough endowment, in the past four years only, to re-endow every college and university in South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama, and endow a half-dozen new colleges with the average endowment of the colleges in these three States.

AGAIN REMEMBER: That PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE and Piedmont College are in the center of the only homogeneous, American-born, Anglo-Saxon population in this country, where 974 out of every 1,000 are American-born; yet with the poorest educational equipment in the United States.

WHO SAYS: "It can't be done?" Congregationalists are raising $2,000,000 for Piedmont Senior College. Surely the Christian Churches will raise $300,000 for the PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, both for its own sake and to do their part in establishing a combined institution with nearly $3,000,000 in assets to represent these two bodies in Christian education.

FRANK E. JENKINS

PRESIDENT PIEDMONT COLLEGE, Demorest, Ga. and

PRESIDENT BOARD OF TRUSTEES, PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, Wadley, Ala.

Special Note

I find that both the Administration Building and Girls' Dormitory of the PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE are not yet completed; and while a few rooms in the Administration Building can be used, there is no heating apparatus for any part of the building. Cold weather will soon be here and Faculty and Students will be shivering with cold unless something is done immediately to furnish heat. It will take $10,000 to put the College in proper running shape for this year's work, even though it has already $100,000 worth of campus and equipment. I urgently ask immediate attention to this on the part of members of Christian Congregations.

Please send your checks, payable to PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, to me at Demorest, Georgia, and, after reording them, I will forward them to the Treasurer of the College, who will receipt for the same. This is a very serious matter and calls for immediate and liberal action on the part of the members of the Christian Churches to whom this College belongs and for which the Southern Christian Convention has approved all that is asked for above.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our financial report this week pushes us over the fourteen-thousand-dollar mark. We are five hundred dollars behind this time last year. Yet we have been called upon to care for more children this year than last year. Twenty-five pressing applications on our desk now. When we increase our number, we are compelled to increase our expense account. We are very anxious to pass the fifteen-thousand-dollar mark during October. Let every Sunday School do its best during October to help us reach that mark. That will be half-way to our goal. Then during November and December we will have fifteen thousand dollars to raise to reach our goal of thirty thousand dollars set by the Convention. Can it be done? Surely our Church is going to stand loyally by its orphanage and its 120 children!

Our people love the Christian Orphanage. They love its 120 children. They will see to it that they do not suffer. And through October, November and December it will raise, through its monthly offerings, its Thanksgiving offering, and individual offerings, the sixteen thousand dollars to push it up to its goal. The Thanksgiving offering is the only special offering the orphanage now has during the year. It is to be taken by both the Sunday School and Church. This year we hope every Sunday School and Church will put on a special campaign during the Thanksgiving season and raise its part of the fifteen thousand dollars needed to reach our goal.

Begin to plan now for that campaign and have it all worked out by Thanksgiving, so you can put it across in a fine way. You have never failed us. We don't believe you will fail us this year when we need your help so much. If you have not read Dr. W. W. Staley's article in THE SUN, September 26th, on page five, "Claims of the Christian Orphanage," please look up the paper and read it. It is worth while, and you will enjoy it and it will do you good.

MARRIAGES

HUFFMAN—SHORT.

Monday, August 12, 1929, was the scene of a quiet wedding at the home of the officiating minister, Rev. A. W. Andes, when Miss Valton Short, of Leaksville, Page County, Va., became the bride of Mr. Roy A. Huffman, of Alma, Page County. These are excellent young people, and are well known and very popular in the Leaksville and Alma communities. Mrs. Huffman is a popular school teacher in Page County and an active Church worker at Leaksville. The groom is a son of the merchant, Charles Huffman, at Alma, and is a farmer. They have gone to Washington and Philadelphia for a few days' honeymoon.

A. W. ANDES.

HOLSINGER—FULK.

On August 22, 1929, there appeared at my home Mr. Hunter Holsinger and Miss Willie Fulk for the purpose of having the words said that would make them man and wife. The ceremony was a quiet one, being witnessed only by a few intimate friends and relatives. The groom is a son of W. B. Holsinger and a member of our Concord Church. The bride is a splendid young Christian woman from Mayland. The union of two such good young lives as these bespeaks for the union happiness and usefulness. They will reside for the present at the home of the groom.

A. W. ANDES.

OBITUARIES.

CLARK.

Mrs. Jenkins Clark, a much-esteemed Christian woman, departed this life at her home in Raleigh, N. C., at the age of 57 years. Funeral and burial at New Elam Christian Church on the day following her death.

B. J. HOWARD.

WOMACK.

B. G. Womack, an aged and esteemed citizen of the Moore Union Church section, came to the end of his earthly pilgrimage June 21, 1929. Many friends gathered with the bereaved wife, children and grandchildren for the funeral services, which were held at the home. He had been a member of Moore Union Christian Church.

B. J. HOWARD.

CLAYTON.

Mrs. Halsie Hunter Clayton died at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Hunter, Sanford, R. F. D., August 24, 1929, at the age of 28 years. She had been an invalid for several months, and had repeatedly expressed her readiness for the departure. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Funeral services were conducted by the writer at Shallow Well Church.

B. J. HOWARD.

HOWARD.

On the evening of August 10, 1929, the tired and worn body surrendered the noble spirit of my own dear mother, Mrs.

A. S. Howard. Though bowed with grief, my father and all of her eight children and nineteen grandchildren rejoice in the blessings of her love and well-spent life. She was a little more than 71 years of age. Rev. W. T. Mattox, Chapel Hill, N. C., conducted the funeral services.

B. J. HOWARD.

tives. Since his boyhood he had been a member of Apple's Chapel and a deacon for many years, and was faithful to his Lord and to his Church to the end. He will be much missed in his Church and community, but we feel our loss is his gain. The Lord comfort the bereaved.

T. J. GREEN.

APPLE.

Lewis David Apple departed this life August 4, 1929, being aged 69 years, 5 months and 1 day. His nearest of kin are two nieces, besides many other rela-

We, the members of Mt. Bethel Sunday School, feel very keenly the loss of our faithful and loyal member, Sister Lizzie Truitt, on September 2, 1929. While we mourn her passing and will miss her cheerful presence, we feel our loss is her gain.

Therefore, we bow in humble submission to God's will and extend to her loved ones our deepest sympathy, and recommend that a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be recorded in the minutes of our Sunday School.

RAWLES.

Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Rawles died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Willie M. Gatling, Suffolk, Va., September 12, 1929, aged 89 years, 9 months and 27 days. The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. H. S. Hardecastle, at Holy Neck Church, and the body laid to rest by her loved ones in the Church cemetery. The attendance was the largest the writer has ever seen at this Church, and the floral offerings the most abundant.

Mrs. Rawles was the daughter of the late William Wright and Nancy Langston Darden and the last surviving of nine children. She married Luther Rawles, who died in 1915. She is survived by five children—Jesse P. Rawles, Enterprise, Ala.; Mrs. Willie M. Gatling, Drs. David Luther and Japheth Edward Rawles, Suffolk, Va., and Mrs. E. H. Williams, of Smithfield, Va. Rosa, who married E. S. Norfleet, died in 1921. She also leaves twenty grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

The deceased had been a member of Holy Neck Church since childhood, and exemplified in her life those womanly virtues whose value is beyond all earthly treasure. Her life was bound up with the life of her home, her community, and her Church. She knew no limit to her labor and sacrifice for her family, and was always ready to respond to the needs and comforts of her neighbors. Her religion was undisturbed by doubts and fears, her love for her Church almost a passion, and her faith and trust in God simple and sublime. She came "to her grave in a full old age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season," and "her children arise up and call her blessed."

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.—

As the Christian Church turns its attention and pins its hopes for the future upon Christian education as the means of propagating its message and building up the spiritual lives of its members, it becomes increasingly evident that the task can be accomplished only through co-operation. Educational work that merits the name has to be built upon a sure foundation. Already the emphasis upon Christian education has brought together the leaders who are formulating the courses of study and working out the methods that are to be used. It is a well-known fact that the material used as subject-matter in both the International Sunday School Lessons and in the Graded Courses of Sunday School instruction is selected with no thought whatever of serving denominational ends.

And each year sees those who are engaged in the task of presenting the lessons and teaching them to the classes being brought closer together. Institutes are being held that represent several denominations quite frequently in the towns and cities. We have found that the methods that achieve results in one denomination will work equally well in another. Some day we are going to give ourselves seriously to the task of providing adequate religious instruction for all the young people of the communities in which our Churches are supposed to minister. And when that day comes, we shall find that we can meet the task only by consolidation and co-operation.

IS SILENCE INFALLIBLE?—

Our modern method of thinking has tended to throw overboard all previous ideas of infallibility and to establish in their places the infallibility of science. The authority of scientific facts is one thing. The authority of scientific theories is quite another. Many religious thinkers and writers have been more or less brow-beaten by the bold and insistent claims of the scientists. Mr. G. K. Chesterton, writing in the New York Herald-Tribune on "The Frivolity of Science," rebukes such timidity and suggests that perhaps science is not as formidable and infallible as has been imagined.

Mr. Chesterton reviews some of the scientific theories that have now been discarded, and summarizes his conclusion that scientific theory does not offer an abiding foundation in these words: "If we are to rebuild our cities or re-establish our citizens according to the curves of relativity or the pedigrees of Mendelianism, then it does become relevant to remind the scientists of today that something totally different was taught by the scientists of fifty years ago, and something totally different will probably be taught by the scientists of fifty years hence. Then, indeed, we have a right to explain to them that we decline to have a new morality every fifty years. It is obvious that we can not perpetually dig up the foundations of society to suit the fashions of science. And it is equally obvious that most of these hypotheses are as fugitive as the fashions in hate or whiskers; that the furry lemur may last no longer than a particular sort of furry muff; that the curve of space may vanish like the cut of a coat. The conclusion of common sense is that whatever else it may be founded on, a civilization ought not to be founded on science."

A STATESMAN'S VIEWS ON RELIGION.—

As men of outstanding ability give their serious consideration to the social problems which confound the world, their seeking of a solution is leading them to a greater emphasis upon the part that religion can and does play in shaping the destiny of mankind. Premier Mackenzie King, of Canada, has recently had some most significant things to say. Addressing the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Canada, He recognized the work of the Church in the following manner: "The worth, influence and power of the truth are growing daily. I have a growing conviction of the place the Church and religion hold in the life of the nation and the world, but especially in the influence of the rural Church and the country preacher. Ministers in villages and small communities all too infrequently realize the far-reaching effect of their work.

"The greatest endeavor in the lives of men should be cultivation of what I term the right attitude. And in obtaining that right attitude, there is no influence comparable to that of the Church—a Church not diverted by this side-show and that side-show, but concerned with the eternal verities. I frequently view with cynicism, contempt, and even grief, the advertisements I see outside some Churches, trying to compete with the movies, because I feel that the people who are drawn by that sort of thing go away with as little permanent profit as those attending some other form of entertainment. Let the Church get down to realities; back to her true mission of spiritual things. And if the Church does that, then the application of religion will take care of itself. If I were a preacher I would preach on this text every Sunday of my life: 'Let this mind be in you which is also in Jesus Christ'—that mind which is concerned with intellectual and spiritual things."

AN EXPURGATED BIBLE.—

The report is now being circulated through the press that it is proposed by the British National Sunday School Union to issue a special edition of the Bible which shall omit all references to sex. Such portions of the Bible as deal with the delicate question of sex will either be deleted or edited in such a way as to indirectly convey the meaning of all the well-meaning attempts to foster purity, this one impresses us as being the most ill-advised and mistaken. Any reader of current literature must have been disgusted, if not nauseated, by much of the sex literature that is flooding the press. But the evil lies in the manner in which the subject of sex is treated, and not in the fact that sex subject-matter is discussed. Most thinking minds must have at some time taken comfort in the fact that in the Bible we find one book that deals with sex relationships in a safe, sensible, and practical way.

This last effort marks the culmination of the old mistaken policy of secrecy and evasion in dealing with the matter of sex. It is diametrically opposed to all that modern psychological investigation is teaching us. It is not through the pages of the Bible that curiosity is aroused concerning the facts of sex. There may be recurring instances of teachers of the Bible facing embarrassing situations in dealing with certain portions of the Bible, but in most cases the embarrassment is due to the fact that the right sort of instruction should already have been given.

But there is another question involved that has a far more dangerous significance. If the prude assumes the right to delete all Bible passages which shock the supersensitive sense of propriety, what has been done to the authority of the Bible, even though the action was prompted by a desire to promote the cause of purity? It was bad enough when the theory-possessed individual went about his task of selecting such texts, as isolated from the context, appeared to support his contention. Even though he ignored the rest of the Bible, he at least left in tact that which was not especially favorable to his purpose. If one group, no matter what may be the purpose, assumes the right to reject and cast out such portions of the Bible as are found objectionable, how can the same right be denied to other groups?

The way in which such a course of procedure opens the door for criticism is shown in the concluding paragraph of an editorial in the Baltimore Sun. The writer has been discussing the omission from John's gospel of the incident of Christ's dealing with the woman taken in adultery. The paragraph is as follows: "That shame-faced exit is one of the most perfect episodes in all the four gospels. It is too much to conclude that the reason for leaving out a story which contains the gist of Jesus' gospel of tolerance, forbearance, and forgiveness, is not merely that adultery is mentioned? May not that chapter particularly irritate the censors because it gives concise and classic evidence of Jesus' way of disposing of censorious and stony-faced people who are eternally zealous to cast the beam out of their brother's eyes without previous optical treatment for themselves?"

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. Carr E. Gerring, Wakefield, Va., who has been ill for some weeks, is much improved, we are advised, and able to be about some again.

Rev. E. Carl Brady, formerly of Elon College, N. C., is now at Hemp, N. C., where he is principal of the school there, in addition to serving as pastor for some near-by Churches. Bro. Brady is one of our strong and promising young men, who should be kept busy in the pastorate.

Rev. J. H. Dollar, who has been conducting the music for the Methodist Church in Reidsville the past week, is this week conducting the music for the Baptist Church of his city. Besides being a faithful and beloved preacher, Bro. Dollar is a capable and trained musician and leader of choirs.

Wednesday, October 16th, will be an epoch-making day in the history of the Christian Church. A beautiful granite memorial will be unveiled on that day on the campus of Elon College. All CHRISTIAN SUN readers, who can do so, should make an effort to be present on this historical occasion.

THE SUN's editor grieves to learn of the death of Bro. B. W. Fields, deacon and assistant superintendent of the Sunday School in our Reidsville Church. Bro. Fields was a pillar in his Church, a dependable man, devout, active, consecrated, one on whom his pastor could always rely for assistance, counsel and help. We certainly are grieved to hear of his sudden and untimely passing.

Our Lynchburg Church is to begin a series of evangelistic meetings October 13th, to continue through October 20th. The pastor, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, is to do the preaching, and the famous Higgins sisters, of Guilford County, N. C., are to sing during its meetings. The Higgins sisters will give a musical program in Miller Park October 13th, at 3:30 P. M., and will sing also in the Rivermont Avenue Methodist Church while in Lynchburg, and will also sing at noon meetings in several industrial plants of the city.

The Federal Council's call for the people of the Churches to send to their mission secretaries their first new dollar for missions seems to have met with hearty approval and co-operation among Church people. It is a beautiful idea, for when one dedicates the first fruits to the service of God, one may indulge the hope of using subsequent gleanings and gatherings to the glory of God and the benefit of man. Our own Mission Secretary has had many beautiful letters accompanying the first new dollar, and many have responded, and some are responding. Thus far the Mission Secretary has received and sent on to the purpose designated $554 new dollars.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, Elon College, N. C., has spent twelve weeks successively in evangelistic work with pastors and Churches who have kept him busy. He reports many good and glorious meetings and experiences, and rejoices in the work of soul-winning, to which so many faithful pastors are dedicating their activities. This week and next, Bro. Whitten is to assist Rev. A. W. Andes at our Leaksville Church, in the Valley of Virginia, and Timber Ridge in West Virginia. The Lord seems to be blessing Bro. Whitten in his evangelistic services, and he is finding it exceedingly agreeable to work with his brethren in the ministry.

All who prefer to be known simply as Christians and who take the Bible as a sufficient rule of faith and practice, should put October 16, 1929, down as a day and an event to be remembered. Rev. James O'Kelly, the fearless champion of religious democracy, passed from earth to his reward just one hundred years ago, and the century following his labors has witnessed the triumph of his trials, of his faith, and of his courage. The exercises at the unveiling of the memorial to his name will be interesting and of historical significance.

From the Southern Congregationalist: "Miss Mary Ann Jefferys has resigned as extension worker for Florida, in charge of religious education and young people's work, and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, of Henderson, N. C., has been appointed in her place. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, who takes up the work on September 16th, is splendidly trained for this work and has had large experience. Miss Coghill is one of the leading graduates of the Elon College School of Religious Education and has been field secretary of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Christian Convention, with which denomination it is expected that the Congregationalists will unite. Miss Coghill is well known among our Southern Congregational leaders and she will be heartily welcomed to this work."

Bro. J. M. Darden, Assistant Secretary of Missions, Suffolk, Va., claims to be the happiest man on the Mission Board or in the Churches, because the good people of the Convention made him cancel that note of $5,000 which was given him November 10, 1928, by the Mission Board, which note was to be marked "Paid in Full" if, together, we raise $45,000 for missions from September 30, 1928, to September 30, 1929. In returning the note marked "Paid in Full," Bro. Darden writes as follows: "I herewith enclose you the note of the board dated November 10, 1928, for $5,000, marked "Paid." I have marked many a note paid in my life, some paid by check and some by currency, but I tell you frankly I have never marked one paid that has given me as much pleasure as to mark this one paid. When notes were paid by either check or currency, they were in settlement of a debt due me, but I feel that this note was an investment in helping to spread the gospel. May God bless you, and may we do even greater things for our Lord in the years to come."

The Greensboro Daily News, October 4th, carried on its front page an account of a movement in the city of Greensboro to unite Grace Methodist Protestant Church and the First Christian Church. The matter of union, according to the Daily News, was presented at a meeting of the official members of Grace Methodist Protestant Church, and every member in the meeting voted in favor of the merger. The same account reports Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor First Christian Church, as favoring the merger. We have no other account than that given in the Daily News. Years ago, steps were taken officially looking to the merger of the Christian and the Methodist Protestant Churches, but on some account the merger was not effected. These two denominations are exceedingly close akin in origin, in history, in polity and in program. Their biggest, if not their only, difference seems to be in name, and certain traditions and customs that have sprung up about each in the process of time and events. While the spirit of merging and consolidating Christian forces is in the air, we see no reason why the Methodist Protestants and Christians should not at least give serious consideration to the question of uniting their forces and their activities.

NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet at the Suffolk Christian Church on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, November 6, 7, 8. The change of date was made by the executive committee to avoid a conflict with the date of the General Convention, which will be held at Piqua, Ohio, October 22-30. The program committee is planning an interesting and constructive program. Please keep in mind the date—November 6th to 8th. H. S. H.

COMMITTEE MEETING.

The Educational Committee of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will hold a meeting in Suffolk on October 16th, in the Suffolk Christian Church, at 10 A. M. All persons who want to consult the committee before the annual Conference will please communicate with the committee at that time in person or by letter.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOSEPH W. FIX, Preacher.

PLAYING SECOND FIDDLE.

"He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."—Matt. 23:12.

One of the greatest and hardest lessons for the Christian to learn is that of being humble before God. Not many of us like to take a back seat. There is something in us that makes us want to stand in the lime-light. We would rather play the first violin than second fiddle. To be humble is better than being highly exalted. To be humble is to be great. Greatness does not consist of wealth, but of humbleness.

In the Scripture lesson according to the gospel of John, we read the experiences of a man who became great by willingly humbling himself before the Lord. John, as we have seen in those first verses, was willing to play second fiddle. By humbling himself, he became exalted. "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came to bear witness of the Light, that all men through Him might believe. He was not that light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light, that all men through him might believe."

People from far and near came to hear the words of this wonderful preacher. He was just a common man. Nothing attractive about him. In appearance, he wore a garment made of camel hair. He was just a man named John, but he was on fire for God. He preached sermons that warmed people. Today the world is calling for preachers like John, who will give place in their lives for the fire of God. It is said that when Wesley preached, great throngs came to hear him, and that on one occasion a young preacher, greatly discouraged, went forth and asked Mr. Wesley the secret of his work, and how he might draw great throngs. Mr. Wesley said, "Get on fire for God and people will come see you burn up." It is true that we all rush to see a thing that is on fire, be it a barn, hay-stack or house. We will go to hear the preacher who is on fire—and we will watch him burn up for God. John was on fire for God.

1. John had a power. This power from God in his life drew men to him. So powerful was he that the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask, "Who art thou?" And he confessed, I am not the Christ. And they asked him, "Art thou Elias?" and he said "I am not." And they said unto him, "Who art thou?" For surely he had more power than any man they had yet seen. To them he resembled the rugged prophet Elijah. But said he, "I am not he." Who, then, was he? "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness." Just a voice, that which cannot be seen. Just a man who is going forth with the power of God in his life to prepare the way for the Lord.

The greatest men of all times have been those who were willing to perform an humble task in order to give place to one who would do a greater task. Many a wife has remained home and played the second fiddle in order that her husband could play first violin. Because John was willing to humble himself before the Lord, he had the power which came from Him and said, "All power is given unto me."

2. John had a purpose. "Make straight the way of the Lord." He went forth especially to do one task. His purpose was that of preparation and getting men and women ready for the advent of the Christ, who would soon come after him. His task was just to make ready the way for Him who was the "Way." John was a voice, but willing to use his voice, though feeble it may be, to prepare the way. John had a mission to fulfill. He readily does his part, even though it demand taking an humble seat. He did not care to be seen of men, or be heard for his much speaking. He came not to trespass on another's territory.

Great numbers of people hinder the progress of the kingdom because they won't humble themselves. They desire to have glory and honor heaped upon them, and have not learned that the secret of greatness is the secret of being humble.

John may well be described as the apostle of humbleness. And by so humbling himself before the Lord and putting Jesus foremost, he became great without attempting greatness, notoriety, or publicity.

There is a story that tells of a colored man who saw the governor of his native State as he walked through the State penitentiary grounds. The negro approached the governor and said, "Now, Gov'nor, I don' wanto ask no pawdon of youse, but I is a nigger and a criminal, and date makes me de lowest down man in de State. You is white and de gov'nor, and dat makes you de highest man in de State. Let's shake hands and let boff ends meet." There is a picture of John, both ends meeting in Him. In his ministry, he had one undying purpose, and that was to do his bit in preparing the way for the Christ. He acclaimed himself as being unworthy of unloosing the shoes of Him who should come after him.

John realized that he could not be Jesus. Could not do the work of Jesus, but saw the opportunity of preparing the way for Him.

3. John had a passion. "Behold the Lamb of God." His one undying passion was that of introducing men to Jesus. His purpose being that of making straight the way of the Lord found expression through his passion and devotion to the new kingdom. As he stands with the brethren around the fishing nets, John beholds the Master, about whom he had been speaking, as He drew near. We hear him say to Andrew, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of Before long the dilapidated building was transformed—roof, windows, broken seats all made good as new. There was no difficulty about the pastor's salary. The various apportionments for mission work were paid promptly. The congregation looked forward to the annual business conference with eager anticipation. Where was their treasurer getting the money that was being expended?

"When the day for the conference came, the old miller arose, gave his report of funds received and disbursed, adding that there was a balance on hand. Then he said: 'My friends, you want to know where the money came from. It came from you, and you were none the wiser. Every time any member of this Church brought grain to my mill I took out the Lord's tenth. This tithe of grain from the congregation I sold from time to time and thus received money to carry on our work. And,' he added, 'none of you here knew the difference.'"

REVIVAL AT ANTIOCH.

Revival services were in progress last week at Antioch Christian Church, Isle of Wight County, Va., with the Rev. J. F. Morgan, assisting the pastor. These services were very inspirational and uplifting. Many people reconsecrated their lives to the service of the Lord, and seven found Christ dear to their hearts for the first time. Seven additions were made to the Church.

There will be a joint baptismal service of Antioch, Mt. Carmel and Isle of Wight Christian Churches, held by the writer, on the afternoon of September 29th, at 3 o'clock, at Jenkins mill-pond, near Windsor, Va.

The greatest need of the hour is the rediscovery of the blessed Christ. Not as a humanized God nor a deified human, but the Lord Jesus Christ; He who is a person equal with the Father in the sacred Godhead; He by whom and for whom all things were created. We need to rediscover Him as our life, our peace and our hope. He is our Priest and our Advocate with the Father; He is our Redeemer and our divine, everlasting Friend. We need to rediscover Him as the way to the highest possible standards of life. This, then, is the believer's surety on the great day of judgment—the sacred blood, the righteousness, the infinitely glorious person of Christ. He is worthy of all praise in heaven and on earth. The supreme need is that we be completely surrendered to Him.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

I sometimes wonder if we really appreciate the blessings we have. I believe we often fail to appreciate blessings until they are taken away from us; then we realize what they meant to us. Children often fail to appreciate their parents until they are taken, and then they realize the loss in their life and in the home. Parents hunger for little acts of appreciation from their children that could so easily be given, but just neglected. I know I loved my father and mother as tenderly as any boy could, but since they are gone I see so many little acts of kindness I could have shown them that would have cost me little, but would have been appreciated by them, and I neglected to perform and lost the joy I would have received.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN visits our homes each week, filled with good things to read; articles that are uplifting and wholesome. It gives us news from our college, missions, and the orphanage. I wonder if we really appreciate its visits each week.

It takes more than seven thousand dollars each year to print and mail it alone. The printer is the only man who gets a salary; the rest of us do our work for the joy we get out of the work. Let every subscriber mail in a renewal check and help pay the printer.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,

As THE SUN goes to press we learn, with deep regret, of the death this morning (Wednesday) of Bro. J. W. Carlton. Funeral services will be from the home, 414 North Lombardy Street, Richmond, Va., Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE WINGED LIFE.

"The life with God is life with wings," declared Amos R. Wells. But Dr. Wells is not the first one to make the claim. A long time ago Isaiah (40:31) gave this promise: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles." Was it not John Wesley, one of the world's busiest men and most productive preachers and writers, who, when asked how he could accomplish so much in the course of a day, said: "When I face a busy day with great problems, I spend an hour alone with God in prayer, but when I have an exceedingly busy day with tremendously weighty problems, I spend two hours with God in prayer before beginning the work of the day." It is difficult, when problems press upon us, exceedingly difficult, to wait, even to wait upon the Lord. We get restless, nervous, anxious. We feel like action only will suffice and deeds of our own hands and hearts can count. The psalmist David did not think so, for again and again he cries out, "Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, He shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the Lord."

When our Lord realized that His disciples were to undertake the most momentous problem ever laid upon the shoulders of men by the hand of God, He commanded them that they should wait for "the promise of the Father." They were to spend a winged life. They were to fly to the uttermost parts with their message, the heavenly message. God was to give them wings to expedite their business.

When Jehovah declared His power to Israel, He said: "I brought you to myself on eagle's wings." The Christian Observer recently gave the story of an eagle that illustrates: "A captive grew up in a hen-yard with a clog on one of its feet. At last the owner decided to liberate the eagle and took off the clog, but it went hopping about just the same. So one morning he set the eagle on the wall just as the sun was rising. The eagle looked for the first time at the rising sun; then, listing himself up, he stretched his mighty wings, and with a scream, launched himself into the upper air. He belonged there all the time, and had simply been living in the wrong place."

And then this striking comment is added: "Like the eagle, many of us limp through life content to pick up crumbs here and there, satisfied with the company of fussy, cackling hens, when we might be soaring toward the blue, building our nests nearer heaven, and feasting our eyes on the beauty of God's whole plan for us."

It is the privilege of the children of God, to soar to the high places with God and view the beautiful and inspiring things of the world and of God and to get close to God as they mount up with eagle's wings. The truly Christian life is the winged life. J. O. A.

I KNOW HIM.

The twelfth verse, first chapter, two Timothy, carries this declaration from the apostle Paul: "For I know Him." Prior to using these words, Paul had declared that he "suffered." Suffered for what? He had suffered because he had been appointed "a preacher and an apostle and a teacher of the Gnetiles." Moreover, Paul had declared that this appointment was not of his choosing, or by man, but according to the purpose and grace which was given in Christ Jesus even before the world began. On account of this appointment and calling, Paul had suffered, though he was not ashamed of that suffering, nor of his calling, nor of the cross of Christ, in which, to tell the truth, he glorified. But through it all, Paul had come, as he himself declares, to know Christ. Rev. J. Lee Johnson preached at Liberty (Vance) on Sunday, September 29th, declaring emphatically that Paul had arrived at the very best, most helpful and wholesome knowledge that any one could have in this life. That there were certain elements entering into this knowledge that are salient and worth considering:

1. Knowledge is valuable. There is nothing that hurts and hinders the mind and the soul of men like ignorance. Without knowledge, one is embarrassed, hindered and is uncertain. Knowledge lifts one to a place of security and certainty. One reason why we are often in fear and doubt and uncertainty is because of the lack of knowledge. The most valuable knowledge within the reach and range of man is a knowledge of the Christ who declared that He Himself was "the way and the truth."

2. Knowledge is costly. The most valuable knowledge requires a tremendous price, and many are not willing to pay the price. Students who have come to learning and scholarship have had to burn the midnight oil and pay the price through long hours of application and diligent search. The only way to have a knowledge of Scripture is to pay the price by self-denial in other pursuits. Bro. Johnson declared that the greatest Bible scholar he knew, or had ever come in contact with, was one who told him that he paid the price by denying himself of other pursuits, of pleasure, exercise or indulgence in other particulars, and gave himself by day and by night to the limit of his strength, to the study of the Word of God. Paul paid the price through suffering and through service.

3. But this is personal knowledge and involves two persons. Paul said emphatically, "I know Him." Paul was a person, and the Christ he knew was a person—not a theory, not a scheme, not a creed, not a philosophy, not a system of theology, but a person—"I knew Him." We often lose sight of the person that we are seeking to know by applying ourselves with too much diligence to the machinery that was made to help carry us to Him. If one is going to see a loved one, the train that carries him may be splendid and interesting, but the traveler is most concerned and most passionate about the one to whom he is going. It would be silly to lose sight of his loved one in meditating upon the mechanism of the train that was carrying him to the object of his devotion.

What the Sunday School, the Church, the missionary society and all need to bear in mind is that these are only helps and should not obscure our vision of the Person beyond and above all. What the world needs today more than it needs machinery or science, or culture, or money, or anything else, is an intimate, personal acquaintance with Jesus the Christ, the world's only Saviour and Redeemer. When we can say with Paul, "I know Him," we have reached the grand climax of learning, and the only way to reach the climax is to pay the price, even the suffering and sacrifice and service as Paul himself did. J. O. A.

CONGREGATIONALISTS AND MISSIONS.

Frederick A. Gaskins, treasurer of the foreign mission board of the Congregationalists, the corporate name being "The American Board," announces the closing of the 120th fiscal year of his board on August 31, 1929. This is the oldest foreign mission board in America, having been organized to send out missionaries prior to any other foreign mission board in America. It is recalled in this connection that when the board applied to the Massachusetts Legislature for a charter, away back in the old days, one legislator arose and objected to granting a charter to any board in Massachusetts whose purpose was to send the gospel to far-away places, declaring that Massachusetts "had no religion to export." This wise (?) statesman has had many followers since his day. There are yet people who feel like the home base has no religion to export. Such people will not learn from the Word of God, nor from history and experience, that the more Christianity we export to, and share with, others, the more we have; and the less we export to, and share with others, the less we have. This is not human arithmetic, but divine economy, sustained by facts and proven by the history of all Church activities. We, of the Christian denomination, still have Churches who feel like they need all their religion at home, and as long as they feel that way about it and act upon that feeling, they will need all they have at home, and then some, for the very nature of the Christian life is that it increases by sharing and decreases by keeping.

But, back to the American board with its past year in foreign missions. The total receipts for the year, says Treasurer Gaskins, amounted to $2,077,739.22, while the expenditures of the year were $2,133,752.47. The board began the year out of debt, but closed the year $50,204.28 in debt. During the year there was an increase in individual gifts, but a decrease in offerings from Churches. According to the treasurer's report, the American board now has work in seventeen countries, with 97 mission stations, 1,641 outstations, 23 training schools, 80 secondary schools, 1,243 elementary schools, 11 colleges, 27 hospitals, 31 dispensaries, and an overseas staff of 650 American men and women (missionaries sent out from this country), 334 native pastors, 548 native preachers, 3,027 native school teachers, 2,284 Bible women and other types of workers, making a total of 6,183 national workers.

These figures show something of the magnitude of the work, as well as its character, carried on by our Congregational brethren, and reveal the fact that they are now, as they have ever been, imbued with the missionary spirit and a worldwide vision for kingdom work. J. O. A.

PEACE.

The heart of Christianity is peace. The goal of Christian effort is peace. The result of regeneration is peace. Jesus is the Prince of peace. Peace is something the "world can neither give nor take away"; but God can give "peace that passeth understanding." "Peace on earth and good will among men" will come more and more as the Church experiences peace in her heart and in her life. Civil nations will never be at peace till the Church is at peace; but it is coming. When selfishness and greed yield to the better feelings of good will and love for enemies, the dawn of the day of peace will come. There are signs of its coming now. Churches are more friendly; nations are more friendly; exchange of ideas and visitations of friendly types, as the visit of Premier MacDonald to President Hoover, and many other acts, contain signs of the coming of peace. All modern inventions and business indicate conditions that mean more friendly relations between nations. The exchange of products, in the field of business, means that the exchange of ideas will increase with the years. Nations will some day "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks," and business will take the place of war.

Peace does not imply uniformity, but unity. Nations will not change their names and governments to be at peace with one another. Races will not merge into one race in order to have amity. The races will remain distinct as Caucasian, Mongolian, Ethiopian, American, Malay; but there may be unity among them all in business, in education, in government, and in religion. Unity is a spirit and not formal uniformity. Unity in the Church of Jesus Christ should come, and may come, but not uniformity in creed and government. Jesus prayed for unity, "that they all may be one: as Thou, Father, art in me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me" (John 17:21). When that prayer is fully answered, not only will unity fill the Church, but the world will believe that God sent His Son, Jesus Christ, into the world to save the world. The lack of unity in the Church is the cause of delay in saving the world. If real spiritual unity pervaded the Churches of any community, it would win the unsaved to Jesus Christ and the Church. Such unity would not only produce peace, but such co-operation as to hold up Christ only, and not our Church. If all the races were one race in stature, color and language, they could never agree in thought. As they are, they can all agree in believing in Jesus Christ as the only Saviour, for "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12). Looking to Jesus only would bring peace to individuals and the Church. War is the material and physical expression of mental and spiritual conditions. War exists in the mind before it struggles on the field of battle. The world needs peace, and Jesus Christ only can give peace. W. W. S.

"A BUSY CHURCH."

There are two ways in which a Church may get busy. One is with worship, the other with work. One may become so eager of results and so busy with work that the spirit of reverence and worship is neglected. What our Lord meant by His Church was a holy people, a separated people, a people imbued with such spirit of reverence and devotion and worship that it, like Himself, would "be about His Father's business." If a Church will purify its purposes, pursuits and programs with prayer and genuine worship, it need not fear about results. Our gospel leads to works, but works cannot save us. Works are not a cause but a consequence. Works do not precede, but grow out of worship. "And their works do follow them," says the inspired writer. We may get so busy with the social gospel and the social order and social betterment that we forget the source of light and power to the individual and to society. The editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate puts it tersely:

"We speak much of a busy Church, of its having a hustle, of 'selling' Jesus to men. Should we not desire to see the Church first of all a holy people, separated from evil, bearing the marks of the Master, given to prayer, eager to know and do God's will? When the congregation is baptized with the Holy Ghost, there is activity indeed. Then lassitude is gone, an amazing energy is manifested. The roads to far-off climes are crowded with those who turn the world upside-down. Sword and famine and distress cannot stay them. They are hustlers indeed. Never were there busier men than Paul and Livingstone and Wesley; nor were there ever men who more devotedly practiced the social gospel. Jesus is properly accredited with proclaiming the duty of doing good—and He practiced His own rules. He first said to a sick man, 'Thy sins are forgiven thee,' and afterward, 'Arise, take up thy couch, and walk.'"

What the world needs today is individuals of devout hearts. "The pure in heart shall see God," and the pure in heart alone can rightly interpret Him to the world. He has always made known His will in the world through the pure in heart, through those who put Him first in their thinking, and never get so busy as to leave Him out. That was a beautiful situation in the Garden of Eden. The surroundings, the environment, the heredity and all the rest, had done their best. But sin entered; then the whole place became polluted. Sin introduced into the most sanitary situation will soon render the whole situation unsanitary. As individuals become devout in soul, God speaks to them and reveals Himself in saving power. The busiest business of the Church is, or should be, that of rightful, righteous worship, so that even "the still small voice" may be heard and heeded. J. O. A.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Special talents contain special obligations. The degree of such talents will determine what use to make of them. There is danger in talents of one kind that it may prevent the right use of others. It is sometimes the case that talent in one direction prevents the development of a normal life, and thereby becomes a hindrance to a successful life. The gift of music may be just enough to lead the mind into that field of service when the gift is not pronounced enough to make a living by its use. In such a case, great care should be used in its use and in deciding what course in life to pursue. The choice of life-work is the most important choice in the field of success or failure. Probably every human being could succeed if he could get into the line of work for which he is born. The cultivation of a special talent that is not capable of making a success in that particular line is to make a failure in life.

To cultivate memory to the exclusion of thought, or to cultivate thinking to the exclusion of memory is to reduce life to a one-sided course. There are spheres in which memory can be of great use, and in those spheres a great memory fills a great place; but such positions are scarce, and only those of rare memories should aspire to such positions. The gift of memory may prevent the gift of thought, or the reverse. The gift of music may prevent the practical in life, and the gift of painting may interfere with the practical in life. It is better to be a good mechanic than a poor painter; a good shoemaker than a poor organist. It is better to be a good cook than a poor teacher; a good plowman than a poor banker. It is better to be a good layman than a poor preacher. The ideal is not what is called the highest position or profession, but the life in its true place doing its part in the great work of carrying on the work of the world. True education is not preparation for the high positions, but for the position to which the life is suited.

It is more important to find one's true place than to prepare to fill it, though that is important; for if he finds his true place, he will soon know how to fill it. In a choir it is all-important to find where the singer belongs—in soprano, alto, tenor or bass. If a singer gets in the wrong place, his service will be poor; but in the right place, the talent will develop in harmony with other singers, and that makes good music. In all other work, the principle is the same. The common, every-day work of life is just as important as professions, official positions, artists, or inventors. The men that climb the poles are as necessary as the electrician; the man who shovels the coal, as the engineer. There is no common work when the work is done well.

What is true in the mechanical, the business, and the whole industrial world is also true in the religious world, in the Church. The social world is likewise made up of all sorts and conditions. The clerk behind the counter may fill her place in society and the Church as well as the musician and painter. The little birds are as necessary in the bird-world as the eagle; and the chicken in the poultry yard as the turkey and the peafowl. There is too much of a feeling of distinction on the part of Church members. If all the members in the pew would sing when the hymns are sung, it would improve the singing of the choir; and if all the members would attend Church and listen sympathetically to the sermon, it would improve the preaching. The members who give 10 cents a Sunday—if that represents their ability to give—are just as valuable as those who give one dollar per Sunday.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

The distinguished James O'Kelly was born in 1735, in Mecklenburg County, Va. He fell on sleep October 16, 1826, on his farm in Chatham County, N. C., where his body lies interred and where a monument at the end of his grave describes him as "The Southern Champion of Christian Freedom."

Some years ago, Dr. J. O. Atkinson became interested in having a memorial marker placed to his memory on the Elon campus. The Southern Christian Convention gave its official endorsement to the movement and appointed a committee to have general oversight of the matter, with Dr. J. O. Atkinson as treasurer. The committee originally appointed consisted of Judge Jesse F. West (chairman), W. E. MacClenny, and Rev. Stanley C. Harrell. Due to the present illness of Judge West, the undersigned has been elected a member of the committee and as its acting chairman.

On October 16, 1929, at 10 o'clock A. M., the beautiful stone marker to our great founder and leader will be unveiled on the Elon campus. Little Miss Dorothy Ann Harward, of Henderson, N. C., a lineal descendant of the great religious prophet of his day, will unveil it.

Preceding the unveiling, which will be on the campus and the concluding act of the occasion, appropriate exercises will be held in the Whitley Memorial Auditorium. The program for the occasion follows:

Organ Prelude—David Brown Harrell.

Processional Hymn—"O God, Our Hope in Ages Past."

Invocation—Dr. E. L. Moffitt.

Hymn—"The Church's One Foundation."

Scripture—Rev. Alfred W. Hurst.

Prayer—Dr. W. W. Staley.

Address—"The Life of James O'Kelly," W. E. MacClenny.

Address—"O'Kelly and Christian Union," Rev. Stanley C. Harrell.

Anthem—"The Sanctus" (Guonod), the College Choir.

Greetings from:

Methodist Episcopal Church—President W. P. Few.

Methodist Protestant Church—Rev. S. W. Taylor.

Southern Christian Convention—Dr. L. E. Smith, President.

Solo—"The Voice in the Wilderness" (Scott), Mrs. Grace Hall Riheldoffer.

Address—"An Evaluation of James O'Kelly," Dr. J. O. Atkinson.

Processional Hymn—"Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

Unveiling—Little Miss Dorothy Ann Harward (on the Campus).

Doxology.

Benediction—Dr. G. O. Lankford.

It is most timely to unveil this monument at this time, because the union of the Congregational and Christian Churches is, we devoutly hope, shortly after to be consummated at the extraordinary session of our General Convention, to be held in Piqua, Ohio, October 22nd to 29th, and because James O'Kelly believed in Christian union with all his bent. In the very first issue of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, our oldest paper, published in 1808, he wrote an article advocating Christian union.

It is expected that our people will make the occasion a memorable one by attending it in great numbers.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

To some, the opening of college is, "The melancholy days have come, the saddest of the year," but to most students it is the gladdest, for they feel the inspiration and the summons to invest life in something worth while, opening the way to a great democracy, a noble fellowship, a supreme devotion, with an opportunity to help rid the world of ignorance and vice, radicalism and reaction, disintegrating forces of greed and vice and anarchy.

Does the opening of college mean the opening of minds? Are we intellectually curious, ready to welcome new points of view, ready to exchange ideas with our neighbors? It means the opening of the mind to strange truths, and entertaining those truths long enough to find out whether we want to adopt them or to send them packing into the street.

College is absolutely useless unless we bring to it genuine intellectual interests. Some have not been gripped by the greater interests of life; their thoughts and conversation do not rise above the level of the talk of Coney Island. But the world does not look to the island for its intellectual leadership, and it does look, however eagerly, to the one institution which embodies all its chief hopes and loyalties, the American college.

A man with no deep-seated enthusiasms for any cause, no convictions for which he will live or die, no desire to follow up any truth, is not only a parasite, but a bore. He is not even interesting to himself. But a college of genuine intellectual enthusiasms will draw to itself the ablest minds as soon as they find out what is going on there.

What shall the opening of college be to us this year? The mere unlocking of doors and the sweeping out of dusty rooms? Or shall it be the opening of the heart to fellowship, of the mind to new truth, of the soul to the inflowing spirit?

FRANKLIN LETTER.

As the Church enters upon a new fiscal year it would be a fine thing for every member of the various Churches of the brotherhood to launch out for God by really paying God his portion. Tithing would solve all our Church and mission financial difficulties. Let us try it one year and see if there does not come a joy that surpasses the old spasmodic method of occasional giving.

The writer thinks the following story on tithing, which is an actual occurrence, is one of the finest he has ever heard. It is taken from Dr. F. F. Brown's book, "This is My Church":

"A rather small Methodist Church, located in a rural community of one of the Northern States, was greatly embarrassed for finances to carry on the work of the Church. Most of the members of the congregation were living on small farms and they thought of themselves as poor and unable to care for their Church and Church work adequately. Things went from bad to worse. The roof of the building leaked. Some of the lights were broken out. The treasury was empty, and the situation seemed hopeless. At a regular business conference, there was a full and frank discussion of the whole situation. No one had a suggestion to offer until at last the old miller, who operated the village mill to which most of them brought their grain, arose with an astonishing proposition. He said that he would take over the management of the finances of the Church for one year; that he would make all repairs, pay all bills on one condition: no one must ask him any questions about where he was securing funds, and let him explain everything at the next annual conference.

"With great surprise and some doubt, the congregation agreed to the old miller's proposition.

the world." Then John seems to stand back in humble submission. He has fulfilled his first obligation. The Master is at hand, and John shared in introducing some one to Him. From then onward, others are led to Him. Andrew goeth and findeth his own brother Peter and brings him to Jesus. As long as Peter followed Him, his life counted for much. He is made a rock, a firm foundation upon which the Church is to be built. For it was his great passionate love for him that led him to confess, saying, "Thou art the Christ." One night Jesus came near the disciples in the midst of a great storm; they all were afraid. Some of them doubted His reality and could not fathom His walking on the water. Peter asks that he be allowed to walk on the water—and as long as His faith was firmly fixed in Him, he walked. But the instant that he looks another way he goes down. So men and women today sink to the bottomless pit of sin and degradation when they have not the passion of the Master.

ELON MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

With pep and spirit prevailing in the ranks of the Ministerial Association, "the boys" have launched a program for this year which is hoped that will be far better than any heretofore. On September 14th, the association met in its first session and started things off with a hum. Plans for the year were laid, and several miscellaneous items were taken care of.

It is hoped that this year the association will be able to put on programs every Sunday. In the past, the young ministers have held inspiring services in nearby Churches of all denominations. Any one desiring services may secure them by writing the president.

On last Sunday evening, the association held services at the Elon College Christian Church. A fine program was presented and the meeting was well attended by the students of the college.

The following officers will pilot the "Sky Pilots" this year: J. Howard Smith, Newport News, Va., president; Roy Coulter, Atlanta, Ga., vice-president; Walter E. Brill, Hooks Mill, W. Va., secretary; B. P. Rakestraw, Wentworth, N. C., treasurer.

Names of the ministerial students in college: W. E. Brill, Hooks Mill, W. Va.; Roy Coulter, Atlanta, Ga.; Ray Dickins, Holley Springs, N. C.; D. C. Boone, Suffolk, Va.; H. C. Hilliard, Wise, N. C.; Ralph Johnson, Irwin, N. C.; Numa Franks, Raleigh, N. C.; E. E. Kipka, Mooresville, N. C.; B. P. Rakestraw, Wentworth, N. C.; B. H. Weston, Greensboro, N. C.; Fred Smith, Hillsboro, N. C.; J. Howard Smith, Newport News, Va.; Gordon Marshall, Bynum, N. C.; Robert Mabry, Standfield, N. C.; Sam B. Wilson, Holly Springs, N. C.; C. C. Dollar, Lanett, Ala.; Glen Weston, Greensboro, N. C.; Robert Forbis, Greensboro, N. C.; Charles Gaddy, Wadesboro, N. C.; C. P. Page, Yanceyville, N. C.

With this number, we should accomplish much this year in the name of the Master, whose gospel we are trying to prepare to preach.

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

Our first special meeting was held at New Lebanon, Rockingham County, N. C., beginning with the second Sunday in July and continued until Friday night. The interest was high and the attendance good. The preaching was done by Rev. R. A. Whitten and was enjoyed greatly by all who are lovers of the truth. The Church was greatly revived and a goodly number professed faith in Christ. Bro. Whitten's stay with us was profitable in building up of the kingdom of our Lord.

He went with us to our next meeting, which began the third Sunday in July, at Mt. Bethel, Rockingham County. Bro. Whitten seemed to be at his best the first service, when he spoke to a very large, attentive audience with power and inspiration. His message was clear and effective. Throughout the entire meeting the interest was high and the attendance good. The Church was greatly revived, and many professions were made.

Bro. Whitten made many friends in this community, and enjoyed working in this vineyard of the Lord. May God bless his efforts everywhere he may try to build up the kingdom of God, is my prayer.

The meeting at Howard's Chapel, Rockingham County, began the second Sunday in August. The Lord gave a great revival in the Church and the community. From the first service there was conviction among the people. Rev. L. A. Nall, of Elon College, did the preaching, and he preached the gospel of the Son of God. His message was in the power of the Spirit and was effective in winning many souls to Christ. Bro. Nall is a consecrated worker for our Lord. He is a Baptist, but I see no difference in a Baptist Christian and a Christian Christian when each is what the name signifies. When we are working in the vineyard together, the object is to win souls to Christ. Mr. Nall is young, and we pray that he will live long and carry the gospel to whom the Lord would have him to go, whether it be Christian, Baptist, or any other in need of help.

During the services there were more than thirty professions, and fourteen additions to the Church. The Church was greatly revived and is making greater progress, for which we give God the praise. These revivals and the workers, together with Him, have been a great inspiration to me, and I believe they have been to all who have labored together with us. May the good work continue until God's kingdom shall encompass all peoples, is my prayer.

INFORMATION—BASIC OF STEWARDSHIP.

By Mrs. J. J. LINCOLN.

I.

Information Through Reading.

Suppose every capable person in the Christian Church, of high school age and above, a student of his Church through reading—what would happen? Each studiously trying to learn what the Church is, what his particular branch of the Church stands for, what it is doing, what it could do if all knew a lot about it and would try to help. Concerning any branch of the Church, if members knew more they would do more. In our own case, of course the first and best source from which to learn these things is our own publications, chiefly THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Herald of Gospel Liberty. With all-the-year general, though necessarily indirect, instruction in stewardship which the initiative, alert pastor does not fail to give, if what is written on the subject by our own staffs of editorial and departmental writers, Dr. Denison leading, thoughtfully were read by a worthy per cent of members throughout the Conference, especially officers and teachers, by this means alone in one twelvemonth the whole aspect of stewardship would change from passive notice to anxious concern.

While writers mentioned are as good as the best, and all Christian learners particularly and wisely are admonished to begin at home (meaning, of course, with one's own denominational literature); that very beginning creates desire for breadth of view and volume of acquisition to be obtained through the widest reading possible to one's opportunity. And so the busiest of us, if truly devoted to the purpose of qualifying for what is a reasonable service as faithful stewards, in addition to making use of every incidental aid, at least once the year, presumably at the special stewardship period, will welcome the chance through the manifold advantages of a stewardship study class to hear and learn what others better informed than ourselves would teach us.

Only the Book is an ultimatum. "This Book of law shall not depart out of thy mouth" is the holy injunction. Do we read it searchingly, hungrily, daily? Books merely are opinions, but narrow indeed is the one who seeks not through books to mold much of self-opinion. Searching, reflective reading by Christian people of the great messages of stewardship by different writers, as these messages are being broadcast from countless printing stations, would start a current of influence which sooner or later would cut its way through any Church to the desired goal.

Until a larger number of our own people become readers and students of the foremost religious literature, stability, growth and purity of the Christian Church will continue to suffer indefensible weakness. This is a day when no more can the Church than one's secular business fail to keep up. And that does not mean that in matters of religious education this is a new day solely of the kind that some would claim. Jesus called his followers to learn—to learn of Him; to keep on learning of Him. Either the Church goes forward upon a guarded self-knowledge (Heb. 8:10, 11) gained through reading and study of the Word, both per se and per the best expository writers, new and old, or it goes weak, weaker, dead.

No one is asked to accept, uninvestigated, all or even part of what a book or any compilation of current reading sets forth. It is your privilege and mine to prove the logic and validity of what is written. I am so thoroughly convinced of the truth and justice of the whole stewardship claim and requirement: further, that acceptance of the stewardship principle, so vital to Christian character, is dependent upon knowing about it, that I am begging you—men, women, young people—to read, read read, and then—read some more!

REVIVAL SERVICES.

The revival meetings at Union, Long's Chapel and Haw River were well attended and much interest manifested. There were professions, additions and baptisms at each Church. Rev. H. A. Walker, pastor of the Reformed Church, Burlington, N. C., was with us at Union; Rev. R. A. Whitten, Elon College, of the Christian Church, was with us at Long's Chapel, and Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, pastor of Liberty Christian Church, Henderson, N. C., was with us at Haw River. Each of these brethren brought good gospel messages, and their messages were much enjoyed by those who heard them.

It is a real treat to sit at the feet of a good gospel preacher whose messages increase faith, hope and love and call the unsaved to Jesus Christ. We were glad to have these brethren with us, and wish for them much success in their work.

P. H. FLEMING.

NEVER DESPAIR.

Things at their worst are certain to mend,

The longest of lanes must at last have a turn.
Keep steadily on, and you'll find at the end

The goal is before you for which you yearn.

There's a silvery lining to every cloud;

When night's at its deepest, 'tis nearing the morning;

Though darkness may seem the whole sky to enshroud,

The sun will break forth, the glad heavens adorning.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

THE KINGDOM CAMPAIGN IN JAPAN.

As the first step in mobilizing the Christian forces of the Japanese empire for the "Million Souls' Movement," a prospectus has been prepared, setting forth the plans and purposes of the campaign. Ten thousand copies of this prospectus will be broadcast among Japanese Churches and Christians, and three thousand copies of an English translation will be available for missionaries and friends whom they may wish to interest in the movement.

It is hoped that missionaries will make large use of both the Japanese and English copies of this prospectus. The next step in this movement, so pregnant with possibilities, is to get it into the mind and heart, the prayers and purposes of every pastor and every Christian in the land.

Here are some challenging paragraphs culled from this prospectus:

"Japan the land of the gods, God's country! this is our prayer, our slogan, our goal. Our Japan is in distress. Our Japan has lost her way. Man's distress, however, is God's opportunity. Man's perplexity is God's challenge.

"Distressed Japan is a humble Japan. Perplexed Japan is a challengeable Japan. Self-satisfaction and pride are swiftly disappearing. The sound of the breaking away of the husks of the nation's thinking and of its life echoes gloomily far and near.

"The birth-pangs of a new Japan! The violent birth-quickening of the kingdom of God in Japan is on. The time is at hand. The kingdom of God is near. The time has come for repentance and for consecration to the task of spreading the gospel.

"The thought life, life as a whole, politics, education, industry, everything in Japan must be brought under God's direct control. Through Christ-like Japanese, a Christ-like Japan must be brought to the birth. To transform this vision into reality, we must increase the present two hundred and fifty thousand Christians to a round million. Numerals are void of power, but there is strength in numbers. The mustard seed becomes a tree. And unless it becomes a tree it cannot shelter the birds of the air.

"We believe that one million Christians will make possible the Christianization of Japan's public opinion and conscience and realize through the Church a really Christianized Japan. Every Christian a soul-winner, winning one soul a year, and thus in three years quadrupling the number of Christians, this is the program of the "Million Souls' Campaign."

"In 1930, the year in which it is proposed to begin this campaign, commemorates the twentieth century period since Christ began His public ministry. We believe that it is most fitting for us Christians to follow in the footsteps of our Lord, and for three years give ourselves as he did for a similar period to aggressive evangelism."—Bulletin, Foreign Mission Conference, U. S. A.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM FOR OCTOBER.

The Woman's Board of the Southern Christian Convention, under the direction of our efficient president, Mrs. J. A. Williams, has a plan by which the program for the various societies will be published each month in THE SUN for the convenience of all. We will aim to publish them in the last issue of each month for the following month's programs. The magazine number of the Herald of Gospel Liberty gives the programs, also detailed helps and suggestions on same for further information. It is advisable to all women's societies to order the envelope of helps from Mrs. Emma S. Powers, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio, as this envelope contains leaflets and helps for the whole year's programs. This envelope costs 75 cents, but is well worth the amount, and every wide-awake president should have one.

Women's Societies' Program.

Theme: Consecration.

Central thought: The need of the hour is not money; it is consecration, which will lay money on the altar.

1. Song.
2. Prayer.
3. Business.
4. Devotional period—some stewardship pillars.
5. Reading—seven reasons.
6. Story of Pink Girl and Little White Box.
7. Current news (THE CHRISTIAN SUN).
8. Heart-to-heart message (letter).
9. Circle of sentence prayers.

Oh make Him the Master of all that you have,
The Lord of your heart and soul;

Yield Him all of yourself for His dwelling-place,
And let Him take the whole.
He will do for you, He will work with you,
He will reign in your life alone,
And you will find the blessing that you have missed
And the joy you never have known.

—Annie Johnson Flint.

Program for Young People.

All young people's leaders should order the "World Friendship Programs" for the young people of the Christian Church; also the small booklet, "Youth and the World Outlook," from the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio; price, 35 cents.

What do we mean by missions?

Purpose: To make "missions" a definite part of our Christian lives.

1. Music by pianist.
2. Introduction to year's programs.
3. Prayer—unison.
4. Hymn, "Jesus Calls Us O'er the Tumult."
5. Quizz—summing up.
6. Illustrations.
7. What is missions?
8. Scripture, Matt. 25:34-40.
9. Hymn, "Lord, I Want to Be a Christian in My Heart."
10. Silent prayer benediction—closing with melody of hymn just sung hummed softly by all.

Program for Willing Workers or Juniors.

Theme: Worshiping God.

Songs: "O Worship the King," "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts."

Sentence prayers: Praying that we might know God better this year, and that we might worship Him by bringing our gifts for boys and girls in other places, that they, too, might worship Him.

Discussion: "Our Own Church." Look at Church buildings; examine rooms for religious symbols; what date was Church built? What leaders in cemetery (if there is a cemetery)?

Of what denomination are we a part? Are we just a local organization? Into what part of our own land do we reach out? Into what part of the world? How can we learn about this? (Foundation for future study.)

Plan for gifts for some mission field. Study about that field.

Song: "Jesus Loves Me."

Prayer: Praying that our gifts might help. Gifts may be for the Indian work, La Rosadas, Porto Rico, the Japan kindergarten, Haverhill, or any other place you choose.

URGES DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

"Establishment of a Federal Department of Education, with its head in the President's Cabinet, is proposed in the national interest and in the interest of the children of America," states an article written for Universal Service by Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, author of a bill similar to the Robinson education bill. It is the senator's belief that such a department should have been established years ago, and he expresses the wish that it will be provided for in the coming session of Congress.

"The measure I have introduced, the same as that sponsored by Vice-President Charles Curtis while he was in the Senate from Kansas, does not propose in any way to curtail or limit the activities of the several States and Territories, without regard to race, creed or color, and will thereby work toward the abolishment of illiteracy.

"The measure expressly provides," the article continued, "that the creation and operation of the separate departments neither impair nor infringe upon the laws, rights, duties, authority or responsibilities of the several States, Territories and the citizens thereof, 'with respect not only to public educational agencies and institutions, but likewise as to the private educational institutions and agencies in the several States and Territories.

"The department would collect facts and statistics showing the progress of education in the several States and Territories. It will be invaluable to the States and Territories and local school subdivisions through furnishing reliable and accurate information as to educational programs and advanced methods of educational instruction. As a separate government department, its opportunities for real service to the country, and particularly to the children of the country, will be enhanced many-fold.

"Accurate and up-to-date information is necessary for the successful functioning of any enterprise. There is no enterprise in America today in which the country is more vitally interested than in the proper education of its youth. Equal opportunity for all is dependent upon equal educational facilities for all.

"Creation and operation of a separate department will make available to every school district in the country the information and plans and accomplishments of the best-equipped and managed education systems of the world. It will be even more than a clearing-house; it will be a guide and an inspiration in education.

"The children of America certainly are entitled to this much attention and guidance from the Federal government. It will be especially valuable to the children in rural districts. It will stimulate educational progress in the urban districts as well.

"I am satisfied that every thinking parent feels as I do, that education should continue to go forward, and should be recognized and made more effective and far-reaching by a place at the council table of the nation.

"Such recognition should no longer be withheld. The present Bureau of Education, while functioning to the limit of its capabilities, is a step in the right direction, but only a skeleton of what the Department of Public Education should be.

"The question involved in this proposition is not whether the Federal government shall have a part in education; that policy already is established. This bill merely provides that the part the government takes shall be more efficient. It will give a better basis of co-operation and guidance—not control, which, in my judgment, would not be desirable—on the part of the Federal agencies dealing with education."

ARE WE WILLING?

"Thy people shall be willing in the day of Thy power."—Psa. 110:3.

Opposite this text I have fastened in my Bible an article by Christian Kuhnle, entitled, "The Secret of Moody's Power," from which I wish to quote for the readers of the Review.

"At the burning of Farwell Hall, in Chicago, back in the sixties, Mr. Moody, having lost his parish and most of his earthly possessions, set out for New York with a feeling that his life had been broken in sunder. In the train he prayed that God would endue him with more power for a greater work. His plea was, 'Make me willing, O Lord, in the day of Thy power; willing to receive all Thou wouldst bestow upon me.'

"In a room at the old Metropolitan Hotel, New York, he kept up that prayer hour after hour, kneeling, walking the floor, pleading, 'O God, make me willing to be as strong for service as Thou wouldst have me.'

"Toward evening a friend knocked at his door. Receiving no answer, he entered. Mr. Moody was standing, with tearful eyes uplifted, and saying in a soft, broken voice, 'O Lord, stay now Thy hand! No more! No more!' His prayer had been answered. God had fed his hungry soul, and filled him even to the lips.

"That was the beginning of the marvelous work of evangelism throughout America and Europe which must ever be a mystery to those who doubt the energizing influence of the power of God in answer to prayer."

We assuredly believe, we know, that we are living at a time when the Lord is drawing very near to His remnant people in power from the saving of men and women from sin. There is no other power than that of the Holy Spirit that can move the heart to repentance. We may have a perfect understanding of doctrines, lacking in nothing in that respect. Material equipment for service in all lines may be complete. But, like Mr. Moody, we must have the baptism of the Holy Spirit. It is not in human power to change the sinner's heart. It is not in our power to change our own lives. We must resolve again and again to put away our sins; but not until we have sought and obtained the help that comes only through earnest prayer to God, not until the Holy Spirit comes into our hearts, can we be free from sin, and successfully work for others.

We are "in the day of" His "power." We are in the time of the "latter rain." And the Lord admonishes His people: "Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain" (Zech. 10:1). And in Luke 11:9-13 the Saviour tells us that the Lord is more willing to bestow the Holy Spirit upon His people than are earthly parents to give bread to their hungry children. Fathers and mothers, can we fail to appreciate this lesson?

The word is: "Thy people shall be willing in the day of Thy power." Shall we understand that we shall be willing in simply a submissive, unresisting sense? or does it not rather mean that, like Mr. Moody, our whole soul should be intensely drawn out toward God in earnest supplication and prayer? When we realize our own soul's deep need, when we truly sense the power and wiles of the foe, when we seriously contemplate the vastness of the work the Lord has committed to His remnant people, should we not most earnestly seek for the baptism of the Holy Spirit?

The blessed promise is: "It shall come to pass, . . . saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh," "and all flesh shall see the salvation of God" (Acts 2:17; Luke 3:6). And truly the precious gospel of the Son of God is being carried to all flesh; men and women everywhere are turning to the Lord, from the slavery of sin, and superstition, and ignorance, transformed by the power of divine grace into lives of gladness, of peace in the soul, of domestic happiness. O it does pay when we see men and women rejoicing in the salvation of God!—Review and Herald.

A BROKEN BUCKLE.

"Dr. James Hamilton," says a writer in the Congregationalist, "tells of a gallant officer who was pursued by an overwhelming force, and his followers were urging him to greater speed, when he discovered that his saddle girth was loose. He coolly dismounted, repaired the girth by tightening the buckle, and then dashed away like our Sheridan on his famous ride from Winchester. The broken buckle would have left him on the field a prisoner; the wise delay to repair damages sent him on in safety amid the huzzas of his comrades.

"The Christian who is in such haste to get about his business in the morning that he neglects his Bible and his season of prayer, rides all day with a broken buckle. 'He rides for a fall,' as the English say, and if he is tumbled into the dust, he has nobody to blame but himself."—The Sabbath Recorder.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Lesson III—October 20, 1929.

USEFUL WORK A CHRISTIAN DUTY.

GOLDEN TEXT: "If any will not work, neither let him eat."—2 Thess. 3:10.

LESSON: Gen. 2:15; Exod. 20:9; Neh. 6:3; John 5:17, 9:4; Acts 20:33-35; 2 Thess. 3:6-12; Ephes. 4:28.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 8:1-9.

(Gen. 2:15) "And the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it and to keep it." Let us keep in mind that we are at the beginning of things, and in a situation which was typical of an ideal state of things. And at the beginning of man's history, and in an ideal state of things, man has work to do, useful work to do. There was no place for loafing in the divine order of things. Adam was given something definite to do. He was to dress and to keep the garden.

There was, of course, a double purpose here. Man was to work for the sake of the world in which he was placed. God had made provision for co-operative effort on the part of man in making the world a better and a more beautiful place. Man needs to work for the sake of the world. But man needs to work for the sake of the man himself. An all-wise God saw the legitimate and necessary place that work must have in a well-rounded life and character. It was not an arbitrary decree of a petty sovereign that made work a part of normal life; it was loving insight on the part of an all-wise Father.

(Exod. 20:9) "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work." The Ten Commandments were and still are the basis of sound civilization. They deal with things fundamental. In the light of what has been written above, it is not surprising to find that the law of work finds embodiment in them. Work is not something that a man can take or leave alone at his whim. It is a divine command, written deeply in the eternal order of things.

It is to be noted, however, that all of life is not to be work. That would make life drudgery. Man cannot live either by work alone or by bread alone. In the world of work there must be a time for rest and worship. Man needs the one as he needs the other.

(Neh. 6:3) "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down." As a matter of fact, the man was laying bricks. But he saw the relation of the common-place work he was doing to the divine program and purpose. The thing he was doing took on a hallowed significance because he saw it in its wider relationship to moral and spiritual movements. The things that lifts house-keeping, business, work of all kinds out of the realm of drudgery into the realm of high enterprise is to see them in their relation to the wider purpose and activity of God. All of life becomes a sacrament when one gets this view of work.

(John 5:17, 9:4) "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." "I must work the works of Him that sent me." The world into which Jesus came looked upon work as degrading, something beneath the dignity of those who thought well of themselves. Jesus by His own example put the stamp of dignity and divinity upon it. The Father worked, and He worked. Men become sharers of the divine character when they become workers.

(Acts 20:33-35) "Paul followed the example of his Master. In spite of the fact that by virtue of his high calling as a minister of the gospel, he was entitled to support, he waived that right and earned his own way. He was not setting precedent for ministers that must be followed; he was putting the stamp of dignity and worthiness on work before people who held a mistaken view of work.

(2 Thes. 3:6-12) The Thessalonians, looking for the speedy return of Jesus, felt that it was not necessary to work. They stopped work, became loafers and, as Paul says, "busybodies." He sharply rebukes them and enjoins them in the name of Jesus to work. He goes even further. He says that if any man would not work, he ought not to have anything to eat. He who is capable of working, but who will not work has forfeited his claim for support. It is a stern doctrine, but a great deal of charity work would be simplified if this principle were applied. It is the neglect of this principle that makes so much charity work demoralizing and pauperizing.

(Eph. 4:28) "But rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have whereof to give to him that hath need." Here is a new note as to the purpose of work. A man is, of course, to work, as has been suggested in order to help to do the world's work. He is also to work for the sake of himself. But Paul says he is to work for the sake of others. He is to labor so that he shall have something to give to those who are willing to work, but who are not able to work. What an "about-face" the application of this principle would bring into all our lives—to work not that we might have to spend on ourselves, but that we might have to give to help others.

Teaching Points.

1. Industry is a quality of the divine character.
2. The law of work is an integral part of the universe.
3. Good and useful work exalts a man and develops character.
4. The question of motive enters into the matter of work.
5. Religious ideals and principles must be applied to work.
6. Worship is a law of life just as much as is work.
7. Work makes us partners with God.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, October 20, 1929.

TOPIC: "Taking Part in the Meeting, Why and How?"—Col. 3:12-17.

Some Bible Hints.

Take part humbly, not proudly, and do not despise the efforts of others. Forbear (v. 13).

An imperfect testimony expressed in love and with good will proves more helpful than a learned and loveless essay (v. 14).

To give out, we must first take in. What? The word of Christ. We must read it, ponder it, practice it (v. 16).

Speak for Christ, speak as if He were speaking through you, speak nothing that you do not believe He would speak (v. 17).

Suggestive Thoughts.

We take part because it is our duty to help one another by our experiences and knowledge. We must pass on our spiritual blessings.

Speak in meeting because Christ sends His messages through us. The simple thing we have to say may be a message to some one who needs it. Be a willing instrument.

Every thought that we prepare to express in meeting should be watered by prayer. Think: Will this help or hurt, comfort or wound? What would Jesus do?

If we wish to be worth-while workers in the Church in days to come, we must train by taking part in the meeting. It is usually those who have been Endeavorers in times past who are today the best workers.

A Few Illustrations.

To learn to speak eloquently we must practice speaking. To learn to pray in public, we must pray in public, i. e., in the meeting. It is a training-ground.

Preparedness applies to Christian Endeavor work. The real Endeavorer begins a week at least, before the meeting to prepare for it by prayer, study, and meditation.

Begin by doing the easy things. A child begins with the alphabet. Do not try to make speeches. A few words are enough at first.

We grow interested in the things we keep on doing. The more we take part, the more interest will we have in the things of the kingdom.

To Think About.

What helps for taking part have we got?
Is it a duty to take part in meeting? Why?
How can we improve our meetings?

THE CHURCH AT WORK.

Are Your Plans Laid?

This is the official notice that November and December are the stewardship educational period of our Church year. All Churches, Sunday schools and pastors should see that the first six weeks are devoted to a very thorough and carefully planned campaign for study and instruction. There should be both adult and young people's stewardship classes. Of course, pastors will preach a series of stewardship sermons. Superintendents will plan definite suitable classes and instruction for all ages of the pupils. This stewardship message has both interest and power in it. The period of instruction, study classes, reading contests, pageants, essay contests, preaching will come to a great climax on December 15th with an enlistment and enrollment of tithers. The convention did well in planning such a close to the stewardship period. Let all be ready to begin in earnest on November 1st. For study books, we recommend for adults: "Dealing Squarely with God," a four-chapter book; "Jesus' Teaching on the Use of Money," a six-chapter book; "The Stewardship Life," a twelve-chapter book. For young people we recommend: "Stewardship in the life of Youth," a five-chapter book; "The Way to the Best," a five-chapter book; "Life as a Stewardship," a five-chapter book.

We shall be glad to correspond with leaders about other books. We now remind all pastors that it requires time to get your books, and to select your instructors, and have them thoroughly prepare themselves to teach. May your Church receive a great blessing from your instructional period.

Piqua Convention.

The time is right at hand for our great Convention. Some pastor-delegates write that they cannot afford the expense of the trip. This is not a personal trip, and it does seem to us that any Church that is honored by having its pastor chosen as a delegate, or any layman not able to finance his way, would do a fine thing to pay the expenses or give him a generous purse. Some consecrated layman would do himself an honor by making it possible for some delegate to attend. It is fine to know that some Churches have a way of doing things like that, but there are other Churches that just do not think of doing such splendid things.

Every delegate ere this should have notified the pastor, Rev. Raymond G. Clark, Piqua, Ohio, when he is going to arrive and whether by auto, train, bus or traction. Some will want to make hotel reservations at their own expense. Tell him about it. Let us all help the entertainment committee in every possible way. The entertainment matter is a difficult one. Make their burdens as easy as possible. Please do not forget to help in every way you can. Be sure to tell in your first letter also whether you are a delegate to the Convention itself or a visitor. The Piqua Church has a great reputation, and they will do their best to live up to it.

Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., Dover, Del., will be chairman of the publicity committee of the Convention. He will do his work well, for he knows how to do it. He will have a special office room.

The young people's special program will begin Saturday at 4 o'clock and continue until the close of the evening. There will be a banquet, toasts, address—all in the Greene Street Methodist Episcopal Church.

Do not miss the men's banquet Friday night at 6 o'clock sharp. Plate, one dollar. Send your dollar and name at once to Mr. A. E. Buchanan, Piqua, Ohio, if you are not expecting to be a regular attendant at the Convention. All reservations must be in by Wednesday, October 23rd. Hear Fred B. Smith, Harper, Eldredge, Troy orchestra, Dayton Amphion male quartet. No solicitation of funds. Bring your wife or friend to hear Dr. Mary F. Cushman, medical missionary to Africa, and to greet Rev. and Mrs. Clark P. Garman, our missionaries just home from Japan.

Trains.

Piqua is on the Pennsylvania Lines running east and west through Columbus, Ohio. It is between Columbus and Chicago; also between Columbus and Indianapolis, Terre Haute and St. Louis. It is on the Baltimore and Ohio lines running north and south between Louisville, Ky., and Detroit, Mich., running through Cincinnati, Dayton, Lima, Deshler, Toledo. Piqua is between Lima and Dayton. The Big Four running between St. Louis and Cleveland stops at Sidney, Ohio, which is twelve miles from Piqua, and buses leave for Piqua about every two hours.

"Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." This is one of the majestic and beautiful sights John saw from the Isle of Patmos when he was permitted, by the grace of God, to look and see "within the gates" that which was already therein.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

MANNA AND WHEATFIELDS.

"He rained down manna upon them to eat, and gave them food from heaven."—Psa. 78:13-20.

"It is a great thing," says George H. Morrison, "to see God in the manna. It is a greater thing to see Him in the fields. It is a great thing to see God in the miracle. It is a greater thing to see Him in the usual." Do we not sometimes think that if only God would send us our daily blessings wrapped up in bundles carried by angels, it would be easier to believe in a divine providence? But it would not. Before long, the angels would become as commonplace as the grocer's delivery wagon, and we should grumble if one of them was half an hour late.

What must God think of us when we so slight the agencies which He prefers to use and uses more frequently? Is it not a slight when we refuse to see Him in His ordinary, natural processes and acknowledge Him only when He steps out of the order which is His general choice? Our gratitude for the manna, when God sees fit to send manna, is vitiated by our lack of gratitude for the loaf of wheat bread, which He sends every day.

Prayer.—Beneficent Provider, we take our life from Thy hands of lovingkindness, day by day, hour by hour, in just the way Thou seest best to send it. Miracle or what men call commonplace, all shall be wonderful to us, because sent by Thee. Nothing ordinary can come to us out of Thy heaven. Nothing shall be commonplace that leaves Thy blessed hands. Amen.

TUESDAY.

ONE SIN SURELY PUNISHED.

"Whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of the hell of fire."—Matt. 5:21-26.

This is Christ's first mention of hell, and you will see that the person whom He warns against hell is the unbrotherly man. Dr. W. P. Merrill remarks: "It is not too much to say that more than three-fourths of our Lord's words about hell deal with one specific kind of sin. It is the sin of inhumanity, of lack of love, of malice and uncharitableness. To the mind of the Master, the most dangerously open and common road to hell lay through an unloving, selfish, or censorious spirit." How careful we should be to pull from our heart every unkind thought of another!

Prayer.—Quicken our conscience, all-knowing Judge! Show us ourselves as we are, and wholly as we are! Be strict with us, and help us to be strict with ourselves. Grant that we may never fall into the hell of the unloving. For the sake of the world's Lover, Jesus Christ. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

OUR MIRRORS.

"He beholdeth himself, and goeth away, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was."—Jas. 1:19-27.

We are all very likely to do just what James says we do. As soon as we leave our mirrors our image disappears from their polished surface, and with equal suddenness and completeness it vanishes from our minds. We think of ourselves as worse looking, or very often as better looking than we really are.

If we would really know ourselves, we need to use mirrors of many different kinds, and consult them often and honestly. One mirror is our reading. If it is trivial, gross, unworthy, we have in it a picture of a trivial, gross, and unworthy soul. Another mirror is the sort of companion we prefer. In him we may see ourselves. Still another mirror is our memory. Is our mind a treasure-house of what is good and true and beautiful? Those treasures image a good, true, and beautiful spirit.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, show us ourselves. Help us to see ourselves as we really are. Help us, seeing ourselves with all our faults and sins, to purify ourselves and make ourselves what Thou dost wish us to be. Through the grace of our Redeemer. Amen.

THURSDAY.

DYING FOR OUR COUNTRY.

"Thy servants take pleasure in her stones."—Psa. 102:12-22.

The very stones of Jerusalem were dear to the Jews. The very soil of the Holy City was precious. They never forgot their sad days of exile from their beloved land. The scattering of these home-loving Jews among the nations is one of the most sorrowful tragedies of history.

There is an old story that is worth reviving. A certain captain had been lecturing his recruits on the duties of a soldier, and wished to see what impression he had made, so he asked Private Jones, "Why should a soldier be ready to die for his country?" Private Jones scratched his head for a minute and then looked up with a winsome smile, "Sure, Captain," he said; "you're quite right. Why should he?"

That is the attitude of many persons toward their native land. But to one with a mind and a heart, though he will gladly admit the superiority of other countries to his own in many respects, and though he will never say, "My country, right or wrong," yet no other land can take the place of his own. He thanks God every day for giving him his native land, and ever prays to be worthy of it. That is his answer to Private Jones.

Prayer.—Our fathers' God, Author of liberty, how much we owe Thee for our glorious inheritance! May we do our share to preserve it inviolate. May our land be a blessing to the whole world. God bless our native land! Amen.

FRIDAY.

PROFITABLE LONELINESS.

"And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day."—Gen. 32:22-31.

In this experience of the patriarch's which affords so many hints for our prayers, we note that he was alone. Into that sacred and momentous hour not even his beloved Rachel might enter. He was bereft of human companionship that he might press into a closer relation with God.

"The world is too much with us." It is so much with us that heaven cannot get to us. Earthly friendships are blessed, but not if they prevent our heavenly friendships. Earthly friendships will be rendered still more blessed if they make room for heavenly friendships. The joys of family life must never encroach on our quiet hours alone with God.

A well-managed household will leave ample space for privacy. The closet of prayer is the most necessary apartment in the house. It is easy by mere thoughtless pressure on others, to drive out their spiritual life. Devotion is a plant that needs ample room for growing. Give others the chance to be alone. Insist on that holy privilege for yourself. With the world shut out and with God shut in, you will not come away without a blessing.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, how often Thou didst withdraw by Thyself into solitude to talk with Thy Father! Cold mountains and the midnight air witnessed the fervor of Thy prayer. We would imitate Thee. We would go apart, and find Him whom Thou didst find. We are so glad that He will be waiting for us. Amen.

SATURDAY.

SEEING TO ONE'S OWN.

"Every one over against his own house."—Neh. 3:28-32.

When Nehemiah accomplished his great task of rebuilding the wall of Jerusalem, he applied to it most of the principles of co-operative industry. The entire work well deserves the study of modern masters of labor. And one of the fruitful rules which he used was this, that the builders should work, as far as possible, opposite their own houses. Thus they would have borne in upon them all the time that what they were doing was for the defense of their dear ones and their homes. Their wives and children would look on and encourage them in their toil. They would have a sense of personal responsibility for the work, a personal interest in it.

So in all our larger labors, for the community, the State, the nation, and the world, let us build over against our own house. All successful toil begins at home. The farthest outreach of human endeavor is only an extension of what we find hinted to us and urged upon us right in our own families. All needs of the most distant lands are mirrored on that mimic stage. If we are not a reformer at home, let us not pretend to be a reformer abroad. If we are not builders in our own dooryard, we shall erect no worthy structure elsewhere. As we do the thing that is next to us, we shall find other things to do next to those things, and so on and out.

Prayer.—Be with us at home, O Thou, Creator of homes. Be fire on our hearth, be light in our ceilings, be wisdom on our shelves, be food in our kitchens. And as Thou dost bless us in our homes, help us to carry blessedness into other homes as far as we can reach. In Thy name, Lord Jesus. Amen.

SUNDAY.

LOOKING FOR REWARD.

"Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. 25:31-40.

There is a story of a little Jewish lad who was told that when he finished learning his Hebrew alphabet, an angel would drop a piece of money for him down from the skies; so the lad, instead of studying all the harder, studied very little, and spent his time gazing up into the sky to see his piece of money come down.

That is the way a lot of us do our work. We cannot keep our minds away from the expected reward. Even if there were no heaven, a godly life would be best worth living because of the peace and joy it brings on earth, and the frequent worldly prosperity as well. But the great rewards are the eternal gains in heaven.

Prayer.—We trust Thee with the results of our living, gracious Father. We do not deserve any reward. But Thou dost love to abundantly pay Thy servants, and we are sure we shall be more than content. Amen.

FRANK E. JENKINS
PRESIDENT PIEDMONT COLLEGE, Demorest, Ga.

LIBERTY, VANCE.

Sunday, September 29th, marked a great day in our Church. We planned and prepared for a great home-coming of former pastors, assistants, members and friends. What a good day we had together! but we were reminded of the fact that even sweet has its bitter. While the Church could not seat the people, there were many that failed to come. We regretted so much that not a single former pastor was present.

We had a full day in worship and fellowship together. Sunday School at 10 A. M., after which Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, its pastor, gave the welcome address in a very befitting manner. This brought us to the time when we were to enjoy a real treat. We had been fortunate in securing as the morning speaker Rev. J. Lee Johnson, Fuquay, N. C. Words fail us to describe this marvelous message.

After a bountiful dinner served in the grove we had a real get-together period—a time to meet and greet each other. At 2 P. M. we reassembled in the Church and had the great privilege of hearing our beloved Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, speak to us. His messages are always fine and inspiring to us. The next speaker was Prof. S. M. Smith, Raleigh, N. C., now with the Anti-Saloon League. It was indeed a glad surprise to have Prof. Smith take part in our home-coming service. The next speaker was our pastor, who brought a message from Rev. M. W. Butler, Conshohochan, Pa. Bro. Butler sent a fine article to take his place on the program.

Dr. Atkinson brought greetings from Bro. P. T. Clapp, a former pastor; also Dr. P. H. Fleming, for which we are grateful and assure them that we appreciate those messages of love.

After this, the history of the Church was read by our pastor, and a large basket of flowers presented to Mrs. Elizabeth Ayscue, the only living charter member. The presence of Aunt Bettie was a benediction to all, just to look upon one who for seventy years has stood faithful and loyal to the dear old Church.

We were very glad to have as visiting ministers Rev. R. A. Whitten, Elon College, and Rev. D. M. Spence, pastor of the Henderson Church.

History of Liberty Christian Church.

On September 24, 1859, the Church at Liberty Hill was organized with only a few members. These faithful Christians pledged themselves to be governed by the following principles: (1) Christ the only Head of the Church. (2) The name Christian is the only appellation by which we will be known, to the exclusion of all party or sectarian names. (3) The Holy Bible, or the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, is our only creed or confession of faith. (4) Christian character or vital piety is the true scriptural test of fellowship and Church membership. (5) The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Since that time (seventy years ago), the following pastors have served the Church: 1860, Elder P. W. Allen; 1861, Elder Geo. W. Walker; 1862, John N. Manning; 1863, James W. Wellons (better known as "Uncle" Wellons), who served the Church for ten years, and was assisted by Rev. R. C. Tuck in 1869; 1874, Elder P. W. Allen, assisted by M. L. Winston; 1875 & 1876, Elder P. W. Allen; 1877, Elder "Uncle" Wellons; 1878 & 1879, Elder J. W. Holt.

In 1879, a board of trustees, composed of C. E. Ayscue, J. W. Hamm, G. H. Adecock, B. F. Ayscue, and W. A. Cunningham, were elected for the purpose of locating a site and building a new Church. In November, 1880, under the pastoral charge of Rev. David Jones, the Church decided to drop the name Hill and use Liberty Christian Church. Conference was asked to do likewise.

Up to 1880 the pastors were called "elders." Bro. Jones was the first to have "Rev." applied to his name. In 1881 Rev. David Jones served the Church and helped to cut and haul timber to build the first Church on the present site. In 1882 he continued serving, with the assistance of P. W. Allen and M. L. Winston. In 1883 M. L. Winston had full charge. In 1884 & 1885 Rev. P. T. Klapp.

In 1886, Rev. J. T. Ball accepted, but later resigned, and "Uncle" Wellons took charge, serving from 1886 to 1893; 1894, Rev. J. D. Wicker accepted a call and served for four years; 1899 & 1900, Rev. W. D. Harward; 1901, Dr. W. T. Herndon took charge and served four years; 1905

& 1906, Rev. M. W. Butler; 1907, Rev. C. E. Newman was called and served for seven years; 1914 & 1915, Rev. J. C. Stuart; 1916, Rev. G. J. Green took charge and served four years; 1920, Rev. B. F. Black was called and served two years; 1922, Rev. J. E. Franks accepted and served for four years; 1926, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, the present pastor, took charge.

From a small membership seventy years ago, the Church has grown to a total membership at present of 407. All those charter members who, through faithful and sacrificial service, gave us our Church have gone to receive their reward, except one—Mrs. Elizabeth T. Ayscue, who is now with us.

OBITUARIES.

TRUITT.

Mrs. Elizabeth Massey Trutt was born November 23, 1863, and died September 2, 1929. She is survived by her husband, H. Lee Trutt, and six children—James S., Howard E., Ruben A., John G., W. J. B., and Miss Essie Mae, and fourteen grandchildren.

For fifty years she had been a loyal member of Mt. Bethel Church, Rockingham County, N. C., which she loved and served. Her faith in her Saviour was humble and genuine, expressing itself in good deeds. Her life was beautiful, her example an inspiration. In her own gentle way she exerted a lasting influence in her community and her home.

It was in the home that she rendered her greatest service. Each of the six children are college graduates, all of them filling places of usefulness and three of the sons are giving their lives to the gospel ministry—a wonderful testimony to a mother's faith and prayers. She was a co-worker with God.

Her death was not unexpected. An incurable disease had fastened itself upon her; her suffering was intense, but she bore it with patience. She was a true wife, a good mother, an humble Christian and a loyal friend, and she has now entered into the joys of her Lord.

In the absence of her pastor, the funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, Va.

C. H. ROWLAND.

WATSON.

In the passing of Bro. John B. Watson, Jonesboro, N. C., June 20, 1929, Lee County lost one of its most widely known and highly respected citizens, and Shallow Well Christian Church was bereft of a most faithful and consecrated member. He was 77 years of age. Rev. O. I. Hinson assisted the writer in the funeral services.

B. J. HOWARD.

HOLDER.

Mrs. Permelia Partin Holder, relict of the late James Holder, was 74 years of age when she passed away at the home of her son, in Chatham County, May 6, 1929. She was a member of the Church since childhood, and was much respected for her general piety. Funeral at Lystra Baptist Church.

"THAT NOTHING MAY BE LOST."—

Bible students will recognize the clause at the head of this paragraph, as the reason which Jesus gave for His command to gather up the fragments at the conclusion of the feeding of the five thousand. We are beginning to examine our present system of competitive denominations in the light of this command. And we are going to have to give increasing attention to this phase of the subject in the future. Modern business has found that the source of its profits lies in co-operation, in cutting down the "overhead," and in eliminating that portion of the organization which cannot prove its worth.

A recent survey of Church and religious conditions in Minneapolis shows that it takes four and one-half Protestant Churches to minister to the same number of people ministered to by a single Catholic Church. If it is possible to convince men and women that these additional Protestant Churches are conserving that which is vital to the Christian message, and the spiritual welfare of humanity, the cost will continue to be cheerfully borne. But once let the masses become convinced that we are supporting all these Churches to perpetuate those differences which are at least non-essential, and only divisive, and it will become increasingly difficult to keep them alive. This same survey shows that 29 per cent of the Churches have a small growth, or are stationary or declining. It is certainly an alarming fact that 60 per cent of the people of Minneapolis are entirely unrelated to the religious life of the city.

YOUTH AND RELIGION.—

One of the most momentous questions that confronts the religious world of today is the attitude of youth towards religion. It matters little in the light of the future as to what religious views may be held by the present generation if it is unable to transmit its faith to the generation which is to come after it. There can be no doubt but that much of the criticism of youth has been made from superficial knowledge of what youth is really thinking and doing. It is not even possible to formulate an adequate estimate of youth from the things that are actually being done, for often youth is moved to conform to the prevailing mode because of an unwillingness to break with surroundings.

While the deep thoughts of the heart will one day find their expression in conduct, there are those who have not yet found the courage to break with the customs of their fathers who will one day chart a different course for themselves; while on the other hand, there are those who are at present conforming to the standards of their companions who have departed from the straight and narrow way, who will in the future, when they have had a little more experience, turn back to the paths in which their fathers walked.

Dr. Reinhold Niebur has had an unusually good opportunity to know the spirit of modern youth with reference to religion, especially among the college youth of the day. The following paragraphs represent Dr. Niebur's estimate of religious conditions among the young people who are attending our educational institutions:

"Vast numbers of students come from irreligious homes, or homes religiously indifferent, and nothing at college has changed the attitudes with which their homes endowed them. There are others, also a large group, who accepted religious forms and customs as long as they were at home, but sloughed them off without a struggle as they entered the fraternity or sorority house, where religious rites are not a part of the daily routine.

"Another group, however, are deeply troubled by intellectual difficulties in regard to inherited religious creeds. The more strict the homes from which such young people come, the greater the shock when they are plunged into the new thinking which modern science has created. Undoubtedly, many in this group have renounced religious faith with a finality which will determine all future attitudes. Not a few are the victims of teachers who are themselves in much the same state of mind, and are unable to discuss religious values without an animus which leads them far from the kind of scientific impartiality which they profess.

"After all the deductions are made, there remain two classes of religious students. One is the large number of young people who are not disturbed in any of the inherited traditions of the past. The faith of their fathers, alike in its excellencies and in its limitations, is their faith. The other and final group is made up of young folk, an increasing number, whose religious life finds its focus, fellowship and authority in the person of Christ; and they justify the assertion that the most vital and hopeful spiritual life of our time is in the colleges."

CHRISTIAN WOMEN AT WORK.—

These lines were suggested by the Woman's Missionary Conference of the Christian Church in North Carolina, which was held on Friday, October 11th, at Burlington, N. C. Musing upon the fine spirit of the meeting, this writer was led to contrast it with other religious gatherings which he has attended, and to note certain differences.

One fact that was notable was the complete absence of any airing of differences of opinion. It is seldom that one attends representative religious gatherings that are entirely free from arguments over differences of opinion, methods and objectives. Sometimes such arguments are lengthy, heated, and sometimes they engender personal animosity. Now, it is not to be imagined that all those women who were assembled for that occasion thought alike on all points. Arguments could have been started in that group that would have lasted until the going down of the sun, and still they would not have been settled. Everybody knows that every woman has individual opinions of her own, and that most of them can defend their opinions stoutly when the occasion arises. But they were so desperately in earnest about a matter of such tremendous importance that all personal differences of opinion were forgotten in the consideration of the great task that was challenging them.

It is a notable fact in connection with the mission work of the women of the Church that whenever a missionary society is organized in a Church the work that is done by the women represents just that much additional support from the Church of which the society is a part, for the mission cause. Some organizations divide the work without multiplying results; but that is not the case when a woman's missionary society is organized. We do not have statistics to prove our point, but we have yet to hear of a Church whose support of missions was not increased by whatever amount the society contributed. Now, the women of the Christian Church in North Carolina have been able to effect the organization of missionary societies in only about one-third of the Churches within the territory. But there was no lamenting or bewailing over the fact that not every one who should have had a part in the work was not represented. The women who were in attendance at that gathering were too busy to take their time talking about the folks who ought to have been there and were not.

Another notable fact about that gathering was that the eyes of all those present seemed to be fixed upon the future. Did you ever stop to think how much talk about the past one hears in many religious gatherings? Sometimes such gatherings become so absorbed in contrasting the present with the past that the future is entirely lost sight of. In thinking back upon that conference, one is reminded of what Paul said about forgetting that which is behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before.

And finally, when one got away from that meeting and began to review those things which had made the deepest impressions, it was found that the center of it all had not been men, or money, or organizations—but Christ. Now, that is just the case when one reads that great volume of missionary history, the Book of Acts. In Acts there are sermons, addresses, meetings, conquests and conferences; but in the center of it all and filling and transforming it all is the figure of Christ, with all His tender love, and His gracious offer of salvation for lost and needy sinners. That is missionary effort at its best.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The following is received and should be of interest to many SUN readers: "Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Green announce the marriage of their daughter, Elizabeth, to Rev. Floyd D. Ballard, Monday, September 23, 1929, Nashville, Tenn." Bro. Ballard is a graduate of Elon College, a former pastor of Henderson Christian Church, and is now a student in the theological department of Vanderbilt University, from which he hopes to graduate next March with the B. D. degree. Our best wishes to Bro. Ballard in his happy venture.

With the passing away from his home in Richmond, Va., on Wednesday A. M., October 9th, of Bro. J. W. Carlton, a figure that loomed large in our Christian annals passes to the spirit world. A faithful man of God, of marked modesty and humility, and an unswerving sincerity and devotion to his Church, his life left its impress upon a family of four surviving sons and a daughter, who, by their liberality to Christianity and the Church, have made the name known and familiar to all CHRISTIAN SUN readers. The funeral was conducted from the home, 414 North Lombardy Street, Richmond, on Thursday, October 10th, at 3 P. M., by the pastor, Dr. C. C. Ryan, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, and Rev. P. T. Klapp, a former pastor for nine years and a life-long friend of the deceased. The interment was in a Richmond cemetery. A large group of sympathetic friends, a very impressive and becoming service, and a most fitting and artistic display of lovely flowers marked the event. Ministers from Suffolk, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Elon College and Richmond, both of the Christian and other denominations, were present at the funeral as a mark of profound respect and esteem for this man of God who had served his day and generation well and had now fallen on sleep a little while before reaching the eighty-ninth anniversary of his birth.

REMINISCENCES.

BY REV. R. A. WHITTEN.

Summer, with vacations for many; long, wearisome journeys for others, and continued hard work for the less fortunate, is now a matter of history. So glorious has been my own, that I desire to share it with others.

On the second Sunday in July, I began an evangelistic campaign with the people of New Lebanon, Rockingham County, N. C., and their beloved pastor. The spirit of pastor and people was such as to inspire one for service and a gracious revival was the result.

The third Sunday in July we were with Rev. J. W. Knight again. This time with the Mt. Bethel Church, Rockingham County, N. C. In spite of threshing machines and closed highways for repairs, congregations were good, and the meeting ended with a splendid group of new converts and many Christians with a firmer grip on the Christian life.

On the fourth Sunday night in July we arrived at Apple's Chapel, Guilford County, N. C., where we found the people in an attitude of prayer, and together with our sincere friend, Rev. T. J. Green, we launched out into the deep. There was to be heard frequently in this meeting shouts of praise and thanksgiving to God. Numbers rededicated their lives to the Master's service, and a fine group of converts gave evidence of answered prayer.

The week following the first Sunday in August, we were happy to be associated with Dr.

P. H. Fleming and his loyal congregation at Long's Chapel, Alamance County, N. C. Owing to the exceedingly busy time in that section, we were hindered in the work; nevertheless, the spirit was fine and we rejoiced to see fruit from our labors.

From Long's Chapel, our next meeting was more than five hundred miles' distant. After closing Friday night at Long's Chapel we packed our grips (the family with me), and early Saturday began the trip. We reached LaGrange, Ga., about 10:30 P. M. Sunday. Early Sunday morning I completed the trip to Antioch Church (Alabama Conference), near Roanoke, where I met my former pastor and one of my most esteemed friends, Rev. G. D. Hunt. I found both pastor and his delightful people earnestly engaged in prayer for an awakening of spiritual life. Needless to say that we had a revival, for I am certain that none of us who attended will forget the glorious time we spent together, and our hearts were made happy by the large group of new converts.

Leaving Antioch about 10 P. M. Friday, we drove to LaGrange, Ga., and after about three hours' rest began our journey homeward. We reached home (Elon College) about 10 P. M. Saturday. Next morning, the third Sunday in August, we drove to Sophia, near High Point, N. C., where we began a meeting with our Congregational friends. Rev. S. M. Penn is pastor, and a fine, congenial, Christian fellow. The Congregational Church at this point is a new organization and the membership is not so large. It was a pleasant experience to labor with our new neighbors. We trust that faith has been made stronger for the cause of Christ, and the work greatly strengthened by the united prayers and efforts during the meeting.

Closing the meeting Friday night at Sophia, the following Saturday morning, accompanied by our brother, Rev. S. M. Penn, we drove to Pittsboro, and our Hank's Chapel Church in the evening (same date) we held service. On the fourth Sunday morning in August, we dedicated the Church (Hank's Chapel). Bro. Penn preached the dedicatory sermon, which was thoroughly enjoyed by the large congregation present for the occasion, after which the Church was dedicated in a very impressive service.

On Monday following, we were fortunate to have Rev. T. J. Green come to assist us in our revival here. His messages were clear and forceful and appreciated by the large crowds in attendance. There were numbers of rededication and several converts, five of whom united with the Church.

On the first Sunday in September we reached Mt. Gilead Church, near Louisburg, Franklin County, N. C., where a warm welcome was given by our friends of many years, Rev. E. M. Carter, and his hospitable congregation. The earnest prayers and faithful efforts of the people were rewarded. Fourteen converts were added to the membership of this Church at the close of the meeting.

Monday after the second Sunday in September found us with Rev. L. L. Wyrick, one of our most earnest and consecrated ministers, at New Hill, Wake County, N. C., Church. We were greatly strengthened at this point in the meeting by having our good Baptist friends unite with us wholeheartedly in the meeting. We can but feel that the season of worship together during those days will be profitable through the days to come.

Monday night after the third Sunday, we were again with Rev. E. M. Carter and his people of Beulah Church, Wake County, N. C. Here we formed acquaintances with many fine Christian folks. During the meeting here, some splendid young men were happily converted to the Christian faith.

Monday following the fourth Sunday in September, driving through a blinding rain, we reached New Hope Church, Franklin County, N. C., where, to our surprise, we found a good-sized congregation engaged in a prayer-and-praise service. In spite of weather conditions, our audiences continued to grow in numbers and interest. One important feature of the meeting, and without which failure would have been the outcome, was the prayer meeting. The men assembled in the grove on one side of the Church, and at the same time the ladies on the opposite side, where both groups held an old-fashioned prayer service.

The women gained the first victory; and while a large number of big, strong men were kneeling in the leaves with their faces toward the earth, but with hearts lifted to God, we could hear the voices of praise floating out over the still night air from their meeting some distance away. The following night there was a shout from a prodigal son, a man who arose and by faith clasped the open hand of a loving father. This was followed by the shouts of saints, and for a time numbers of big, red-blooded men embraced each other and shouted the song of victory. Many were reclaimed and others found Christ precious to their souls.

In few words, this meeting, which continued till Monday night after the fifth Sunday, was a victory for Christ's kingdom.

It was not in our own physical strength alone that we were permitted to travel more than six thousand miles, serve temporarily four Churches, and, without one day's rest, labor incessantly for more than eleven weeks; but were sustained by the power from Him who said, "My strength is made perfect in weakness."

After trying to relate briefly the rich experience of the summer's work, which has indeed been the richest of my life, I am persuaded that the gospel of the Son of God has lost none of its powers through changing scenes and passing years. To Him be all the glory and praise, because when Christ with His atoning blood is exalted, He will honor His word. Customs and styles have changed—man is still subject to the laws of nature effected by heat and cold—but beneath the surface, regardless of style, there beat hearts with the great need of salvation and a desire to find God. The religion of the Lord Jesus Christ is as real to earnest, seeking souls today as when the shepherds heard the angel's song on the Judean hills.

Next, we expect to be with Rev. A. W. Andes, at Leaksville Church, Page County, Va., near Luray. Pray for us.

CONFERENCES MEET.

Eastern Virginia meets with the Suffolk Church, Suffolk, Va., November 6-8, 1929.

GOD'S GREATEST DESIRE.

BY REV. T. N. LOWE.

"In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths."—Prov. 3:6.

We are all interested in the true enjoyment of life. And why shouldn't we be? God wants us to enjoy ourselves in a true and wholesome way. He wants to be happy. And when I try to give you a recipe for the enjoyment of life, I am putting the emphasis on the word "true." There are many ways to enjoy life. But to experience the true enjoyment of life is to live in harmony with the divine will and to always feel His nearness. We can say, then, with Solomon of old the words of the text, "In all ways they acknowledge Him."

Important Condition—Acknowledge Him.

There are many recipes on many subjects in life, and the most of them are very long and complicated and difficult to follow; but the one Solomon gives is very short, and any one can understand it and practice it if they will. "Acknowledge Him"—and why shouldn't we? God is our Creator; He made us and gave us all we have. We are willing to acknowledge the fact that we have earthly parents; we look to the President of the United States as our President; we look to the Governor of our State as a leader in our State. Then why shouldn't we acknowledge God in all our ways? In order to live in the true spirit of enjoyment in this life, and to enjoy eternal bliss and happiness in the next, we must "acknowledge Him in all our ways." Let us look at some of these ways:

1. Acknowledge Him in your secret ways. Such presence should not be a dread to us. His is a kindly presence. As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Since this is true, then, we should be careful what thoughts we think. Acknowledge Him in our secret thoughts. The lodge is a secret order or institution, and I think most of them acknowledge God as the Creator and Preserver of all.

I know two lodges at least that will not take in a man who doesn't believe in the existence of a God. And that is right. If a man doesn't acknowledge God, he is not fit for anything. Yes, we must acknowledge Him in our secret ways. And I am glad that so many do.

2. Acknowledge Him in your ways of thought. Some one has said, "If the fountain be pure, the stream which flows therefrom shall be unstained." Evil thoughts produce evil words and other evil deeds. We sin by thought, word and deed. But if we acknowledge Him in all our thoughts we will not sin. O that God would be constantly in our thoughts what great sins we would be saved from. All evil deeds ever done were first thought out and then acted. But if all our thoughts were thought out while we were acknowledging God, they would lead to such deeds as would meet with approval with God and man.

3. Acknowledge Him in your ways of business. The best partner we can have in business is God. Then, in all your business, acknowledge Him. In most all our State and national documents, God is acknowledged. It is a shame that in the peace treaty of the World War and in the League of Nations there is not to be found the name of God. We are told that our President fought hard to have it put there and that the sessions be opened with prayer, but the presiding officer of the conference was an atheist and he thought it a waste of time to pray and have God acknowledged in the document. Well, it has failed to go through, and it was perhaps because of that fact. I thoroughly believe in acknowledging God in our business affairs. Before going to work in the morning and before undertaking any new business affair, we should ask God's approval and blessing upon it. "In all thy ways acknowledge Him."

4. Acknowledge Him in your ways of pleasure. Did you ever stop to think how long some of the pleasures of our day would last if all those who engage in them would acknowledge God in it all? If they would say before the next dance, "Now, we will dance this number to the glory of God," what would happen? Suppose some one would say, "I'll go to the pool-room tonight to the glory of God"—what would happen? Yes, if we would attend the movies, the operas, the dance, and other places of enjoyment all to the glory of God, things would take a different course than they are now.

"He Shall Direct Thy Paths."

The second part of the text tells us what the reward is if we acknowledge Him in all our ways—"He shall direct thy paths"—and we may ask, "How and where shall He direct our paths?"

In the pilgrimage of life, how sweet it is to know that God is directing our thoughts and our actions all through life. He directs the paths of little children and keeps them in the straight and narrow way. He helps the aged and infirm, and in fact all those who put their trust in Him. He will direct their path all through life.

God has a plan for every life, and He will direct that life if He is allowed to. What a wondrous truth is this! And yet how reasonable a one. Shall the architect draw the plans for his stately palace? Shall the artist sketch the outlines of his masterpiece? Shall the shipbuilder lay down the lines for his colossal ship? And yet shall God have no plan for the immortal soul which He brings into being and made the image of Himself? Surely he has. Yes, for every cloud that floats across the summer sky; for every blade of grass that points its tiny spear heavenward; for every dewdrop that gleams in the morning sun; for every beam of light that shoots across the limitless space from sun to earth, God has a purpose and a plan. How, much more, then, for you who are His own, in Christ Jesus, does God have a perfect before-prepared life plan. And not only so, but—

"In all the ages there never has been and never will be a man or woman just like you. You are unique. You have no double." That is true. No two leaves, no two jewels, no two stars, no two lives alike. Every life is a fresh thought from God to the world. There is no man in all the world who can do your work as well as you. And if you do not find and enter into God's purpose for your life, there will be something missing from the glory that would otherwise have been there. Every jewel gleams with its own radiance. Every flower distills its own fragrance. Every Christian has his own particular bit of Christ's radiance and Christ's fragrance which God would pass through him to others. Has God given you a particular personality? He has also created a particular circle of individuals who can be reached and touched by that personality as by none other in the wide world. And then He shapes and orders your life so as to bring you into contact with that very circle. Just a hair's breadth of shift in the focus of the telescope, and some man sees a vision of beauty which before had been all confused and befogged. So, too, just that grain of individual and personal variation in your life from every other man's and some one sees Jesus Christ with a clearness and beauty he would discern nowhere else. What a privilege to have one's own Christ indwelt personality, however humble! What a joy to know that God will use it, as He uses no other for certain individuals susceptible to it as to no other! In you there is just a bit of change in the angle of the jewel; and lo, some one sees the light. In you there is just a trifle of variation in the mingling of the species—and, behold, some one becomes conscious of the fragrance of Christ.

You remember the story of the engineer of the Brooklyn Bridge. During its building he was injured. For many long months he was shut up in his room. His gifted wife shared his toils and carried his plans to the workmen, and at last the great bridge was completed. Then the invalid architect asked to see it. They put him upon a cot and carried him to the bridge. They placed him where he could see the magnificent structure in all its beauty. There he lay, in his helplessness, intently scanning the work of his genius. He marked the great cables, the massive piers, the mighty anchorages which fettered it to the earth. His critical eye ran over every beam, every girder, every chord, every rod. He noted every detail carried out precisely as he had dreamed it in his dreams and wrought it out in his plans and specifications. And then as the joy of achievement filled his soul, as he saw and realized that it was finished exactly as he had designed it; in an ecstasy of delight, he cried out, "It's just like the plan; it's just like the plan."

Some day we shall stand in His glory and, looking up into His face, cry out: "O God, I thank Thee that Thou didst turn me aside from my willful and perverse way to Thy living and perfect one. I thank Thee that Thou didst ever lead me to yield my humble life to Thee. I thank Thee that as I, day by day, walked the simple pathway of service, Thou didst let gather up, one by one, the golden threads of the great purpose for my life. I thank Thee, as like a tiny trail creeping its way up some great mountain-side, that pathway of life has gone on in darkness and light, storm and shadow, weakness and tears, failures and falterings. Thou hast at last brought me to its destined end. And now that I see my finished life, no longer 'through a glass darkly,' but in the 'face to face' splendor of Thine own glory, I thank Thee, O God, I thank Thee, that it's just like the plan; it's just like the plan."

Some Valid Examples of the Text.

1. Abraham believed God and obeyed His call, and God called him His friend and made of him a great nation.

2. Jacob became the father of a great race.

3. Joseph became ruler of all the land of Egypt because of his obedience to God.

4. So we find this true of the disciples of the Lord and all the great Church fathers and the reformers. And it will be true of you if you are willing to "acknowledge Him in all your ways."

So, my friends, I feel sure that if you follow carefully this text as a recipe for the enjoyment of life, you will experience all that it really means. May God help you to find it so.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

MISSION CONFERENCE AT BURLINGTON.

The North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference of the Christian Church met in Burlington in annual session October 11th at 10 A. M., with approximately three hundred in attendance. The meeting was called to order and presided over by Mrs. G. H. Rowland, president, Greensboro, N. C.

In opening the Conference, the president called attention to and emphasized the theme of the program for the day—"To know Him and to make Him known" (Phil. 3:10; Eph. 3:19). The Scripture lesson, Psalm 100, and prayer was led by Mrs. J. Lee Johnson, of the Wake Chapel Society. A feature of the morning session was the reports of the district leaders in the Conference; these leaders making specific reports from all the Churches in their district, the Conference having eight of these districts covering several Churches each. The reports of the various officers were given, each showing the deep interest taken in the work the past year and the achievement reached. Mrs. Rowland, president, gave a stirring message, challenging all the societies of the Conference to greater efforts for the Master and His work, through missions, the coming year. Mrs. Stanley C. Harrell, as vice-president, made the report on honorary and life memberships, showing that a goodly number of these at $10 each had been secured during the year. It was learned with regret that ill health prevented the attendance of Mrs. O. H. Paris, secretary, Greensboro, N. C. Her annual report was read by the temporary secretary, Mrs. J. J. Henderson. Mrs. W. R. Sellers, treasurer, made a detailed report, showing just what each society in all the Churches had sent in the past year. The goal for the year was $5,000, and the treasurer's report showed collections for the year of $4,780. An offering was later taken, increasing this total and bringing the Conference to within less than $200 of reaching the $5,000 goal during the year. Mrs. Sellers, as treasurer, made an earnest plea to the women to work with a little more zeal and liberality the coming year, so as to go over the goal by the time her next annual report is read. Mrs. M. R. Rives, Graham, N. C., made the report on the young people's work, and Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, who, because of illness, was unable to be present, made the report on the cradle roll, the same being read by Mrs. J. W. Patton. Mrs. W. H. Carroll, in presenting the report of spiritual life, read a paper of deep significance and spiritual worth. The same will be printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. There were twelve ministers present and recognized most courteously by the Conference, the president expressing appreciation of the presence of those who do so much to help in the great work of missions. Mrs. W. H. Boone, of Durham, read a most fitting and inspiring paper on "To Know Him Through the Devotional Life," which paper is presented in full for SUN readers. The Mission Secretary addressed the Convention on the theme, "To Know Him Through the Bible." The morning session was brought to a most happy climax by the exceedingly appropriate and impressive devotional service, led by Mrs. W. M. Jay, president of the Woman's Society, Elon College. This part of the program was spiritually uplifting, and one could realize in the moments of devotional meditation the very presence of Him who said: "Go ye unto all the world." As a part of this wholesome service, Miss Lucille Mulholland, of the Durham Society, gave an impressive reading, "Take My Life and Let it Be," while an offering was being taken.

The women of the Burlington Society and Church served a bountiful luncheon at the noon hour, which was greatly enjoyed and appreciated by the large number of good women and their guests who had come up from all parts of the State.

Opening the afternoon session with organ accompaniment, a most helpful devotional service was conducted through "silent messages." And then attention was directed to the theme of "Making Him Known," that of the morning having been directed especially to the first part of the theme, "To Know Him." Miss Essie Mae Cotten, Burlington, N. C., told impressively of how an effort was directed to make Him known through missions at the Elon College Summer School the past summer. Mrs. H. D. Lambeth, of the Elon College Society, presented in a very striking and characteristic manner how "He may be Made Known Through the New Study Books," Mrs. Lambeth reviewing these books in a succinct but comprehensive manner. A paper was read from Rev. S. E. Madren, Fancy Gap, Va., "Making Him Known in Our Mountain Field," and a letter from Miss Graham Rowland, Fort Apache, Ariz., "Making Him Known Among the Navajo Indians."

The banner for the best-conducted society during the year, the one making the most points in the standard of excellence, was awarded to the Durham Society, Mrs. W. H. Boone, president, receiving the banner from the hand of Mrs. E. W. Boshart, of the Raleigh Society, who presented the same with fitting words and in a most gracious manner.

The next annual session is to be held with Liberty Church, Vance County, N. C.

The officers elected for the coming year are: Mrs. C. H. Rowland, president; Mrs. S. C. Harrell, vice-president; Mrs. J. J. Henderson, secretary; Mrs. W. R. Sellers, treasurer; Mrs. W. H. Carroll, superintendent spiritual life; Mrs. M. R. Rives, superintendent young people; Mrs. R. O. Rothgeb, superintendent cradle roll.

It was a great day in a great work. Mrs. Rowland and her co-workers gave a program and a conference that will carry boundless information and inspiration to the work and the workers throughout the State. It is not this writer's privilege to attend any conference during the year more inspiring than or quite so spiritually uplifting as a Woman's Missionary Conference. The women come together in the spirit of reverence and devotion to their Lord, and their whole program is carried out with the spirit of reverence, humility, zeal, consecration, that makes their meetings sources of spiritual food and soul supply to all who attend. The session of the Woman's Conference at Burlington, October 11th, was considered one of "the best yet" in the history of this body of noble women who are devoting so much of their time, talent and strength to the cause of the Master.

A CHURCH SCHOOL.

A real school of Christian education was conducted at Christian Temple the past week, October 6th to 11th, inclusive. One hundred and forty-eight pupils enrolled, and in addition there were visiting pupils each evening in all the classes so that the total number attending must have reached about two hundred. The classes lasted for two hours, a recess of ten minutes being given between the periods, and there was real study, teaching and class-room work. Those enrolling as pupils were very prompt and faithful, as they were working for credits in the International Council of Religious Education.

President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, was the dean of the school, and also taught a class. Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Dayton, conducted the chapel exercises at the opening of each session in the evening and also taught a class. Other members of the faculty were Dr. Chas. N. Edwards, pastor Circular Congregational Church, Charleston, S. C.; Dr. Charles E. Shelton, Congregational Church, Portsmouth, Va.; Rev. H. S. Hardcastle and Mrs. Hardcastle, Christian Church, Suffolk, Va.; Dr. L. E. Smith, Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va.; Rev. J. E. McCauley, First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va.; Mrs. McCartney, of the Disciples Church, Norfolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, Secretary of Missions, Elon College, N. C.

It was an institute for standard leadership training, sponsored by the Christian and Congregational Churches of Norfolk and vicinity. The text-books used and courses of study pursued were those pertaining to the Church functioning through the pulpit, the Sunday School, the missionary and all auxiliary societies in the Church. Studies and classes were conducted with the sole purpose of fitting the pupils through the institute to be leaders and teachers for the groups in which they took courses in all the organic activities of the local Church. A group of Churches, Christian and Congregational, in Norfolk and immediate vicinity financed the school, and through their members took advantage of the same, evidently to the profit and progress of participating Churches. The school was characterized by text-books and class work and close application to the problems and studies presented. It was such a school as any group of Churches throughout the Convention, conveniently located with reference to each other, might, to their own profit and progress, put on.

CHAMPION OF CHRISTIAN FREEDOM.

Thus is James O'Kelly described on the simple monument that marks his last resting-place on his farm in Chatham County, N. C.—"The Southern Champion of Christian Freedom." He was interred there October 16, 1826.

There were other champions of Christian freedom—Elias Smith and Abner Jones, in New England, and Barton W. Stone, in the West, the present State of Kentucky. James O'Kelly came first, however, in his advocacy, and he might, with entire propriety, be styled "The Champion of Christian Freedom."

James O'Kelly was in the life of the Church what Patrick Henry was in civil affairs. "Give me liberty or give me death," said the fiery orator of Virginia. "Give us the freedom with which Christ makes free," declared James O'Kelly and those who, associated with him, founded our Christian Church.

Those spiritual seers of 1794 foresaw that religion was to give the individual soul direct, personal access to God, and that it was likewise to grant all the right to interpret his relation to God and His Word as the Holy Spirit might lead him. These doctrines are common-place today, but they were revolutionary a hundred and thirty-five years ago. The Christian Church first proclaimed them.

James O'Kelly also saw that Christian freedom would lead to Christian vision, and so he announced that as the purpose of the Christian Church. Throughout our history we have stood for Christian union.

What a prophet of the Lord this man O'Kelly was! The Christian Church has every reason for satisfaction in the greatness of her founder.

PREMIER AND PRESIDENT.

Last week, two men, now of noted rank and station, but of humble birth and origin, have been the center of attention of millions of people throughout the world. The one was the son of an inconspicuous Scotch farmer, brought up close to nature's heart, without early advantages of culture and education, going as a lad to the great city of London to make his way there with his daily wage by manual labor and to fight his battle of life through adverse circumstances till he has reached the highest position in the gift of the electorate of all England—Premier Ramsay MacDonald. The other, a son of a humble village-smith in a small Iowa town; at a very early age left an orphan without father or mother to guide or to help. He, too, had to fight his battles through and to get such schooling and education as he could, and by self-help and daily earnings to carry himself and pay his way through a university course and on to the highest position in the gift of the American people—President Herbert Hoover.

It is significant of both of these men that in early life they had Christian training and have, through the years, maintained their allegiance and loyalty to the Church of their choice in early years.

The procedure the past week with these two leading world figures is, we think, unique in the annals of time. Prime Minister MacDonald, before leaving America, broadcast an address over the radio throughout this country and across the Atlantic, in which he declared that practically the whole subject dealt with by the President and himself was that of peace, an inclusive peace, a world-wide peace, and instead of the usual sort of diplomacy, they had carried on their entire program through an open, frank, sincere discussion of world conditions leading to the creation, as they both hope, of an attitude of man that would prevent war.

The object of the visit of the Premier of England was to hold just such a conversation with the President of the United States. Happy is the day in history when two great-world figures and leaders of men can spend four days together, not in subtle, secret diplomacy, but in open, frank and sincere straight-forward discussion of the problems of peace. Surely, from such a conference and conversation there will come a new impetus to the peace movement throughout the world, and a new hope that the agencies of peace will redouble their efforts in helping to create a friendly world, a friendly attitude among the nations of the earth.

WHERE THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH HAS LED.

"The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together; and a child shall lead them."—Isa. 11:6.

It is a long way from the inquisition to the present friendly relation between denominations; and we may be the "little child" that has led, in some measure, from acrimonious divisions up to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. To claim the least, the Christian Church has been friendly toward all other religious bodies for one hundred and twenty-five years, and that can hardly be said of any other denomination. Leadership does not depend on prestige, but on spirit and example; and the Christian Church has embodied a good spirit and exemplary history. It would be boasting to claim too much; but true history is humble as well as useful. A few lines may be presented to show where the Christian Church has led.

1. In Christian democracy. The Reformation was a revolt against ecclesiastical autocracy. Luther expressed what many felt, and the sixteenth century Reformation set in motion ideas that work to this day among the nations, through the Churches. The Christian movement was a further step in the direction of individual and organic freedom. That was a new day, when James O'Kelly pled for Christian liberty. It was a Patrick Henry stroke in the Church for clerical and lay rights; and practically all his contentions have been adopted by the body from which he withdrew. Episcopacy is the only distinctive thing that remains, and that in modified practice. Individual and local rights are finding their way into the conscience of Christianity and into all Christian organizations. Lay-representation, including women, is well nigh universal. Even in Episcopal bodies women are elected as delegates to official meetings. They serve on mission boards, Sunday School boards, and in regular conferences and conventions. Thirty-two States now have woman's suffrage, in addition to denominational suffrage, and this grows out of co-education in which the Christian Church has led. Equality of rights for men and women has been taught by the Christian Church from the beginning of its history. There is no real democracy that excludes any member of the human family.

2. In Christian journalism. Permanent ideas create permanent means of propagation; and it was logical for this movement to open a new channel of reaching and informing the public. Creeds and catechisms had failed; and it had to be done through public print. It was out of this burning desire to reach the public that the Herald of Gospel Liberty, the first and oldest religious newspaper, was born, in Portsmouth, N. H., in September, 1808. That paper was first issued by Rev. Elias Smith, is now issued weekly from Dayton, Ohio, and has been continued for one hundred and twenty years. As the Christian Church issued the first religious paper in the world, she has led in religious journalism. This paper, as the leader, has been followed by hundreds of denomination papers, and many independent religious papers. The fruit of this is known as the religious press. Then there is the secular press. In all great moral reforms, the religious press leads and the secular press follows.

The secular press did not lead in the fight for national prohibition; but the religious press did. The religious press safeguards civic and social morals, raises the tone of political and commercial life, and quickens the religious conscience of the nation. It would be as difficult to adequately estimate the power of this first religious newspaper, as to estimate the value of the locomotive perfected by George Stephenson, whose invention now throbs in every engine throughout the railroad world.

3. In Christian education. The Christian Church founded Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, with Horace Mann as president, in 1852, the first college in the world to admit both sexes on equal terms. The Christian Church has, therefore, led in co-education, which is essential to Christian education. To educate men only, makes a lopsided race. Women were not even admitted to the Jewish Church on equal terms with men; but Jesus admitted women on the same terms as He admitted men. This idea of equality has grown until co-education has taken possession of the educational activities of this nation and part of Europe. The public school admits the sexes on equal terms, and all the State universities, except Louisiana and Mississippi, admit women. A few years ago the Virginia Legislature spent much time and money, and many great educators delivered great addresses and wrote great articles, discussing co-education and co-ordinate education, and finally passed it over for lack of funds. Now the board of visitors say the very thing I wrote for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, at that time, that women have the right and have always had the right, to be admitted to the university, and they will be admitted to graduate and professional schools. Christian education undertakes to educate the whole man—mankind—and the whole human race, and to do that under the sanction of God's Book and God's Spirit.

4. In Christian unity. The rejection of human creeds, as tests of Christian fellowship and Church membership, initiated all the modern movements toward Protestant oneness. Organic union may be a remote consummation, but Christian comity is a forerunner of practical unity. This principle was certainly included in the prayer of Jesus for His Church; and the world cannot be won to Him by a divided household. Protestantism must have one common motive, one common purpose, and one common objective; and this can be realized only by placing kingdom interests above denominational interests. Selfishness is culpable in individuals; but it is offensive in denominational bodies. There is such a thing as denominational trespass, and four Churches in a village of four hundred arouses suspicion that some organization has trespassed upon ground already occupied by others. Divisions of territory by denominations, on the foreign field admits the necessity for unity, fraternity, and co-operation in the kingdom work.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

In the course of human progress, many things once useless become useful, many things once worthless become worth, and much that was once waste becomes valuable. Much of that which was once cast away in slaughter-houses is now converted into market values and useful products—hoofs, hair, blood are included in that list. There was a time when cotton gins were located by the side of streams and the seed dropped into the water to be carried away to save the expense of hauling them away. Then came the time when this waste was used to fertilize land, and thirty bushels were used per acre to increase the yield of wheat. Now the cotton-seed oil mill is doing a large business. The same could be said of peanut hulls, once considered worthless, then used in place of coal, and now many uses are made of them and real commercial value developed out of them.

Once the coal and the iron-ore were lying in the mountains without value because not used. Use makes value, and now the coal and steel industry almost control the world. The largest business in the world is the steel business. Think of cutlery in all its uses—axes, saws, agricultural implements, railroads and equipments, automobiles, safes, buildings—and you will see that the wealth of the world is made out of what was once not used at all. Even gold, silver, marble, diamonds once had little value. It is their use that has made them the source of wealth and use and given employment to millions of workers with minds and hands. The power of rivers ran on toward the sea until dams were constructed and the water turned wheels to run mills or generate electricity to light houses, cities and trains. Powers once considered useless become the most useful agents of man. Hydro-electric power is among the greatest mechanical forces that create wealth and minister to the comfort and convenience of mankind.

There are moral and spiritual forces going to waste, out of which the Church might increase the forces to save the world. Opportunities are all around the Church for leading sinners to Jesus Christ and the experience of a new life; and the streams of worldliness carry them away or they perish in the mire of unbelief. The Churches and Sunday Schools have time and talent going to waste; teachers not in use, singers silent in the pew, listeners asleep at home, and contributors giving nothing to the Lord. As wealth is made out of the scrap-heaps that once went to waste, great members of the Church might be made out of the scrap-heaps of society if prayer and friendly contact, invitation and encouragement were given in the spirit of Jesus who went about doing good.

Discovery and invention, real faith and real effort are needed in the Church as well as in the business and industrial world. There is much gold and silver, steel and precious stones underneath the surface of human society going to waste; and it could be brought out and changed into valuable and useful active service.

ELON LETTER.

A man came to see me not so long ago. He was very much agitated because certain securities in which he had invested funds for which he was guardian for minor children had largely, if not wholly, lost their value. He fully understood that the law held him responsible to make good the losses.

It is a much more serious matter to be a trustee than it is to own property in fee simple. A man may take chances with what is his own. If he loses, it is his hard luck. If he prospers, his friends look on and admire. J. P. Morgan is said to have lost more than a half-billion dollars in unsuccessful business ventures.

But a trustee must use far more than ordinary business judgment in the investment of trust funds. He cannot take chances; or if he does, he must make restitution or else suffer prosecution.

In many States, certain types of securities are legally approved as safe investments for trust funds. Losses sustained by the investment of trust funds in such securities are not chargeable to the trustee personally. The wise trustee seeks such investments.

The Christian is God's trustee. Whatever he possesses is the gift of God's free bounty, and he is under responsibility to invest it in the securities God has approved or else to suffer the consequences of such failure.

Has God approved any securities for His trustees? Undoubtedly. He requires a tithe to be paid into the treasury of His Church for its support. He expects offerings, free-will, in addition to the tithe. Our Master gave a general principle for all trustees: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God"—even before food, or clothing, or housing, or an automobile. He commands us to lay up treasures in heaven and not upon the earth.

It is a legitimate inference that those institutions and organizations of the Church which promote the coming of the kingdom on the earth are approved securities for the Christian trustee, and that investment in them is an acceptable method of laying up treasures in heaven.

When we appear before the Judge of all the earth to give account of our trusteeship, what answer will we make when He asks us for the record of our investment of the trust funds He has entrusted to us? It will be a terrible experience to be found bankrupt on that day.

LYNCHBURG CHURCH.

The men of the United Christian Church met at the home of A. S. Dunn Monday evening, September 30th, with a large percentage of the members present, and three visitors. We had a general discussion of the finances of the Church and promoted plans for a revival, which is to be held from October 13th to October 20th, with the pastor, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, doing the preaching, and the famous Higgins sisters singing.

In keeping with our club plan of having an outside speaker address the club on some phase of our work, Rev. Joseph H. Lynch, pastor of the Methodist Protestant Church, of Lynchburg, gave us a talk on "Evangelism." Rev. Lynch is a speaker of note in the Methodist Protestant Church, and as he brought us the message in plain, every-day language, the audience was brought to tears as he told some of the experiences he had in the evangelistic field. He told us that the burden of a revival campaign should not rest on the preacher and singers only, but that each member of the Church should take part. He said that if the membership decided to give their prayers to the work because it was the easiest thing they could do, that it would be the least that they could do. He also said that the best way to tell whether your prayers get hold of God is whether they get hold of you.

In closing, all present were asked to stand and clasp hands, when all were led in prayer by Rev. Lynch. After the meeting, ice cream and cake were served by the hostess, assisted by Mrs. W. E. Harris, Mrs. F. D. Layne, and Mrs. George Dunn. The next meeting will be held at the home of the pastor Monday, November 4th.

HOPEWELL, VA.

"The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."—Psa. 126:3.

The Church at Hopewell is glad and rejoices over the great things that God has done and is doing for them. Rally Day was observed in the Sunday School by an especially prepared program by Miss Nina Black, in which the Sunday School scholars took part. A special offering was taken for Christian education. The Sunday School recently elected the following officers: superintendent, Mr. L. E. Hurlbert; assistant superintendent, Mr. G. A. Robertson; secretary, Miss Nina Black; treasurer, Mr. W. L. Boyett; pianist, Miss Mary Lily Nash. We look forward to a successful year under these leaders, and we pray God's richest blessings upon them.

Our pastor, Rev. J. W. Barrett, preached two wonderful sermons on "Faith," calling upon us to "contend for the faith" and not to cease our "work of faith and labor of love."

In the afternoon, the Junior Christian Endeavor Society was reorganized under the leadership of Miss Dorothy Elliot. This work had died down because the former leader has a situation out of the city which hindered her in the junior work. Miss Elliot is a volunteer worker and a lover of children, and we look forward to a wide-awake junior organization under her leadership. The Senior Christian Endeavor Society is planning for a special rally day program on next Sunday night.

The missionary societies are planning for a year of greater consecration and service in the field of missions. The Church has put on a special campaign for funds to meet the indebtedness on the Church building, which is meeting with good success.

On October 16th, Rev. Barrett will begin special revival services with the Rev. Wilbur Diggs, of Onemo, Va., assisting. We beg a special interest in your prayers for these services, that God's power may be felt in the Church and the city; that His cause may be built up and souls saved, "to the praise of His glory."

The need is so great in Hopewell and in all parts of the earth. May our jubilee year be a year of deeper consecration to those who bear the name of Christian, and may revival fires be kindled which shall sweep to the uttermost parts of the earth, garnering in the sheaves which are white unto the harvest.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONGRESS.

On Saturday afternoon, September 14, 1929, a special session of the Young People's Congress of the Eastern Virginia Conference was held in the Christian Church at Suffolk, Va. The program was as follows:

Called to order by President Simon Piland; devotional service, Jewel Truitt; "Why We are Here," president; "What We Did at Winchester," Vice-President Mary Sue Parker; "What Other Congresses are Doing," Treasurer Ophelia Hurrell; "What We Can Do," Rev. J. E. McCauley; "Checking-up on Ourselves," Secretary Lily M. Spain; district organization; business moment; counsel, Counselors Rev. W. C. Hook, pastor, and Mr. Clyde Johnson, layman; closing service, Rev. F. C. Lester.

In his address, Rev. McCauley suggested three splendid goals toward which the congress might work. These were: first, greater loyalty to and participation in Church activities by the young people; second, evangelism; and third, making the congress a foreign missionary agency.

In order to secure better working units, it was decided to organize two districts in the congress, known as the eastern and western districts. The idea is to have, in addition to the general meeting of the congress, at least one district rally during the year. The western district was organized at this session of the congress and plans made for the organization of the eastern. Officers for the western district were: president, Miss Doris Eure (Bethlehem); vice-president, James Leuter (Holy Neck); secretary, Dorothy Daughtrey (Holland); treasurer, Margaret Daughtrey (Franklin).

Three goals for the current year were set. They are: first, a survey of the work already being done by the young people in the Churches; second, a contribution of $1 for current expenses from each member organization in the congress; and third, that each member organization send at least two representatives to the annual general assembly of the congress.

While we realize that our congress is just touching upon a great work, we believe that steps are being taken in the right direction, and that with the information gained from the survey we will be able to plan and carry on work that will be well worth while. We are hoping and praying for a bigger and better future.

Secretary.

INFORMATION—BASIC OF STEWARDSHIP.

BY MRS. J. J. LINCOLN.

II.

Administration through working. The Church has this to remember: Jesus went after the sheep that strayed and became separated from the fold, and He taught His disciples to do likewise. With reference to moral and financial support by members, we are told the Church as a whole exists on a sort of fifty-fifty basis. About half do nothing, pay nothing, seek nothing. Might it be possible that sometimes they get nothing? Failure of the Church to win and line up in service the delinquent half lies within the realm of administration concerning which lack of energy and misapplied energy both are to be considered. In matters of membership and finance, most careful attention should be paid to practices that best will strengthen and preserve equity and unity as per entire conference. In any association of Churches, a balanced, well-propogated financial system that trains for regular, proportionate, individual paying and giving is the course to take. Even if of remote possibility to effect in some situations solidarity is the solution for the reason that personal giving through orthodox channels first of all promotes spirituality by establishing outlet for insistent individual spiritual expression, also welds a fraternal adhesion which a variety of plans never could do whatever their single value.

Once on the scriptural paying-giving basis, no matter how much nor how little it takes for a person to meet that requirement, what has been the long-standing, indifferent half of the Church gradually becomes a part of the eager, working whole. Only the wisest method—a method that everywhere is being tried and proved—can bring a membership to this standard, and at that, in the case of some Churches, it's a long way to achievement. All the more reason for early beginning.

In the adoption and promotion of the financial policy proposed in Conference stewardship recommendations three and four, every Church has a chance. Workers for every part in the most effectual scheme of Christian organization that could be devised, easily would be available if all of the more dependable half would take trouble and time to defend and pursue their Church's interest and not leave it eternally to the same two or three or half-dozen. Notwithstanding the two or three or half-dozen long have been willing and faithful, and probably still would be to the end of days, it is their responsibility to discover how much more would it hasten the coming of our Lord if, as living stones, however rough and un-hewn, the bulk of the reputed fifty per cent were awakened and aroused to positive participation.

New recruits to the working few would be bound to bring new vision and aim. A job for every member is the ideal for healthy Church progress. Begin in your Church by enlisting those who occupy, as it were, the waiting list. Many need only encouragement and a try-out. And to these—the not-so-active of the half who, in varied measure, do support the Church financially and otherwise, but, after all, evidence no constant, consuming concern—my appeal, my prayer, is that in equal devotion and purpose with the few, they might rally to their side. And then my appeal, my prayer, for the combined working half unified, as it would be through understanding and a willingness to seek better adjustment is that, harmoniously, shoulder to shoulder, even as one, they might assume the real task of the Church and quit playing at it.

Too long the better part of the Church has dalled, bemoaning a feebleness it cannot justify. Capable, needed members have been unwilling to show themselves approved. They have not worked for the Lord as they would work for humankind if obligated by legal contract. Things pertaining to earthly profit have been first. Church business conference might flunk defunct; often it has done so. If things moved at all, it has been upon the opinion of a handful or less. Where is the license or authority that any old way will do for the Lord? It doesn't exist. "Seek ye first" is Jesus' yearning plea. Jesus craves for us a Father's care and bounty. Be not careful for yourselves; serve me. You are my children. I love you. I, your Father, will supply all your need, is God's pleading assurance. When we who call ourselves bearing the ark are Christian enough to give ourselves, literally, in full strength and sincerity, to the building of God's real and final temple which is within us, very soon the all-but-detached half of the Church in large numbers will be restored and reclaimed.

By those looking on, one's desire for an objective is estimated by the effort made to obtain it. In many things this is a new day. Not so with divine law and love. These never change. We change. As concepts unfold and opportunity enlarges, Jesus constantly is teaching us better ways to apply our quickened understanding, and He demands that we do it. Jesus never meant for His Church to be a drone. He gave Himself to be the Church's sure foundation and commissioned us to build it into a "true tabernacle, such as the Lord pitched and not man." We have been going too much man's way; let us turn to the Lord's. The Church is the institution of salvation, the only one. It lays waiting for you and me to bestow upon it industrious, intelligent application of every asset of life. Giving to God the first and best that brain and brawn produce is required. But, still, that is not enough. The spirit of industry must be exercised both in theory and practice. God knows individual talent and holds each of us accountable according to—for value received.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

PORTO RICO.

With pleasure I submit the following report (which includes only those packages addressed to the Barretts, Ponce), feeling that it is due my sisters at the home base for their most hearty co-operation at a time of great need. Conditions on the island after the cyclone of September 13, 1928, would have made life almost unbearable but for the power to help, in a limited way, that came so quickly and willingly from our folks at home.

When the boxes and packages of clothing began to arrive, we had no idea they would be the double help they finally became. A room in our home had to be set aside as a store-room for several months. We thought, for our own convenience, it would be best to keep an account of everything, so before opening a package the name and address of sender was copied in a notebook, also the amount of postage, when not torn so we could not count it.

Then the contents were counted and put in separate boxes according to kind—men's, women's, boys', girls', little girls', little boys', babies' shoes, hose, hats, caps, notions, house-linen, towels, etc. Then we piled the mission car full of boxes and went ourselves to help in the distribution as fast as the boxes came, and to every one of our preaching points. We also helped other missions who were not receiving help from home in their fields.

Quite frequently near midnight found my daughter Olyn and me in our "store-room" counting and sorting clothing and putting up packages for certain cases. Can you not see what it meant to us to be able to help in the midst of such destitution left in the wake of the storm? We soon found that clothes were not the only things needed. A nurse employed by Ponce's sanitary department came to buy clothing and I sold her five dozen new children's dresses and rompers for $5, which were distributed by her in one of the poorest sections of the city. That money bought bedding for one of our old, sick members who lived in Salinas Playa and whose house was blown over and who lost everything. Later on, money from a lady member of our Richmond Church helped put her little house up again.

So after the urgent need of clothing was attended to and the packages continued to come, and learning that some of our people preferred paying a small sum rather than receive gratis, we consulted with our native workers and decided to sell some of the new and best garments when it seemed wise. Prices ranged from 3 cents to $1.

A group of women and girls under the direction of our native missionary, Dona Delfina, took charge of this work. The money was put in the bank and a strict account kept. The sum grew little by little until we began to have visions of the possibility of helping in a way we had not dared dream of.

You may be interested in the facts revealed by my notebook. I have grouped the States in geographical sections.

Canada, 3 packages; New England States (Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Massachusetts), 25 packages; Eastern States (New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania), 15 packages; Middle Western States (Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa), 61 packages; Southern States (Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama), 62 packages. Total number of States sending, including Canada, 15; total number of packages, 167; amount spent on postage and express by senders, $327.51; total number of garments, 8,765 (not including shoes, hose, hats, bed-linen, blankets, towels, 1 pair new curtains, about 75 yards new material, soap, notions, seed); less than 2,000 garments were sold, amounting to $344.92 (a little more than amount spent on postage and express).

What have we done with the money? Dona Delfina is our treasurer. Without the help she and my daughter Olyn have given me, I could not send this complete report.

One of our Sabana Llana members received help to rebuild his house. The poor have been helped with food and medicines. New lamps were bought for the Sabana Lland Chapel. Books for departmental work in Ponce Sunday School were purchased. Special job of printing was needed for evangelical campaign for which $10 was lent to Ponce Church, which was paid in due time. A pastor and wife, eager to give their boy an opportunity at one of the Christian institutions on the island, borrowed $25 to help send him. This sum will be returned next month. Ponce Church needed an organ; the one in use was bought by my husband and me in May, 1903, and it has served well, but needs to be replaced. The Church was more than willing to help in the purchase of a new one, so we used second-hand clothing to complete the fund and now have a fine new Estey organ, with cedar bench and floor lamp to aid the poor sight of the one who has been organist of Ponce Church for nearly twenty-nine years. Thanks, friends, we needed the new organ badly, and I certainly enjoy playing it.

Now we are able to give one of our girls who has been with us since a little tot and is now past eighteen years of age and who has for years proved faithful to her Master and the Church, one year in the Blanche Kellog Institute for girls, a Congregational school for preparation of missionaries. Expenses for one year are $159, $50 of which is paid, and the rest is to be paid in installments before May 1st. Also help pay for dental work required to be done before her acceptance. Another Ponce girl has entered Ryder Memorial Hospital for the Congregational Church to train for life-work. Over $20 is in bank to help build a rural chapel.

Has it been worth while to you to gather these garments and mail them to Porto Rico? I am sure you will answer "yes." It has meant much to us. This report does not include the money sent from the States. This is the result of and answer to the urgent plea for help in September, 1928.

I have heard Dr. Atkinson say "Our people are not missionary," but I believe they are becoming so—Ohio sent 40 packages, Virginia came next with 36 packages, and North Carolina followed closely with 25 packages. Ohio is my native State, Virginia my husband's, while North Carolina belongs to us both. That's where our children have attended college. We are proud of those States and feel humbly grateful to all, both young and old, who have stood by this work so nobly during one of the most trying years since its beginning.

May the Father repay with His richest blessings one and all.

EVA REED BARRETT.

Ponce, P. R.

P. S.: One hundred and sixty-seven letters have been written, acknowledging receipt of boxes. I saw this task, and I have had the help of my two daughters, Olyn and Mabel. E. R. B.

THE GREATEST EVENT.

Viewed from one standpoint, there have been three great events in the history of this world. The first was the making of it, when God made everything out of nothing. The second great event was the flood, when God destroyed the world in all its iniquity. The third great event, and to my mind the greatest of all, was the advent of Jesus into this world.

Jesus was the Creator of the heavens and the earth. He was the Maker of all (John 1:3). What a marvel! what a mystery that God became man! What a wonder of wonders, that the Creator and Upholder of all the worlds could, like the rest of us, be born of woman, and grow up from infancy to manhood as we do! What a mystery to the human mind, and methinks to all the angel host, that the glorious Son of God could become but a germ of life, and be born—the Son of the Eternal God become the Son of a sinner! Can you comprehend it?

And what a marvel that in all this, though He became the Son of man, He was still God; and that as God, all His Godship was subject to His humanity. Can you understand that?

And then think that this marvel and wonder was all to the end that, as one of us, He might show us that with the same help that you and I may have, we can live in as close touch with our Heavenly Father as He lived; and triumph over sin as He did.

Then, wonder of all wonders, He died upon the cross for us, that atonement might be made for all past sins; and that every soul, if he will, may stand justified before God, and be accepted in Jesus as if he had never sinned!

The Son of the Highest became the Son of a sinner, that a son of a sinner (marvel of marvels) might become a son of God. This great wonder, beyond the ken of angels or of men, mysteriously wrought to the end that a poor sinner like me, whom He could have left to perish and still have been just, might have everlasting life. Such love is without a parallel. As I write, the words of the poet press upon my mind and heart—

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
 That were a tribute far too small;
 Love so amazing, so divine,
 Demands my life, my soul, my all."

Yes, my friends, the first advent of Jesus Christ was the most wonderful event the universe has ever known.—Advent Review and Herald.

THE CHRISTIAN VIEW OF RECREATION.

LESSON: Jere. 31:12, 13; Zech. 8:5; Matt. 11:16-19; Mark 2:18-28, 6:30-32; John 2:1-11. Print Mark 2:18-28.

GOLDEN TEXT: "I came that they may have life, and may have it abundantly."—John 10:10.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Phil. 4:4-9.

It is a significant fact that when the prophet Zechariah pictured the restoration of Zion or Jerusalem, he said, "And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof." That was his way, not only of describing the peace and the security of the city, but also of showing the legitimate place which recreation for boys and girls had in the divine order of things. It might be added that many city boys and girls would think that the New Jerusalem had come down out of heaven if they were allowed to play unmolested in the streets of the city. But it also needs to be said that many cities and towns are making provision for recreational and play facilities for boys and girls, recognizing the legitimate place which such recreation has in the life, not only of boys and girls, but of adults as well.

Some one has said that anything that concerns human life is not foreign to the gospel of Jesus Christ. The lesson committee did well, therefore, to include in the list of topics that concern principles of social living one on the Christian view of recreation, for recreation vitally enters into human life. These comments will discuss in a general way the matter of recreation, rather than in a specific way with the various Scriptures that are given as the background of the lesson.

The Purpose of Recreation.

Recreation ought to take as its purpose to recreate. It is that form of activity or that cessation from activity that renews, refreshes, re-creates the one who indulges in it. It is designed to afford relief from strain, rest from labor, a change of outlook, a variation of activity, and furnish impulse and strength for old tasks in a new spirit. It is never to be considered as an end in itself, but as a means to an end—the renewal or re-creation of strength of body or mind or heart.

Our Modern Life and Recreation.

Our modern life demands not less, but more recreation. The strain and stress, the high tension of much of modern life demands that recreation have a place in a person's program. This applies to old and young, rich and poor, male and female, bond and free. The wise person will try to provide for recreation.

The Dual Possibilities of Recreation.

Recreation may be either constructive or destructive. The things which a man does for recreation or in leisure have a vital influence on not only his health, but on his character. It has been said that what a young man does with his time after he gets off from work determines his destiny, which is perhaps an exaggeration, but which puts in striking and pointed form the tremendous potentialities of recreation. As a matter of fact, the Church ought to emphasize the moral significance of recreation.

The Danger of Commercialized Recreations.

Those who are engaged in commercialized amusements and recreations are usually, almost always, concerned about profits. Human values and moral ideals come second with them. Capitalizing the instinctive demand of the human life for recreation, they have furnished what pays rather than what uplifts. This fact constitutes one of the most distinctive challenges to parents and the Church. One feels that Jesus would be a Crusader against many forms of commercialized recreation in which many Church members engage and by which many Church members make a livelihood.

The Christian View of Recreation.

The Christian view of recreation is that, like everything else, it must be interpreted in terms of personality. The test to which recreation must be subjected is the simple question as to whether it will be a means toward the end of developing Christ-like character. Even those things which are harmless in themselves must be avoided if they keep us from being at our best. And this applies not only to the things that concern the body, but the things that concern the mind and the heart.

The Sabbath and Recreation.

The Sabbath stands as a perpetual and generous offer from a gracious Father as a means to increasing the sum total of human happiness and human values. It must be kept in mind that man cannot live by bread alone. He who looks upon the Sabbath as a day simply for joy-riding or golf, or attending athletic contests or reading the Sunday paper, or lounging, has missed the heart of the thing. True indeed the Sabbath ought to be a day of rest. And true indeed the Sabbath might well include wholesome recreation. But as Dr. Jowett says, "There is more real recreation in one hour of communion with Christ than in a whole week of social revelries, however gracious and worthy they may be." The Sabbath is made for man, but it is made for man at his best. It fulfills its highest mission only as men come to the new week's work, rested in body, refreshed in mind, quickened in spirit.

Recreation and the Life More Abundant.

Jesus said, "I am come that they may have life, and may have it abundantly." Recreation is to help us to live at our best, and then that best is to be given whole-heartedly to the Master for His service.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, October 27, 1929.

TOPIC: "What Is Worship?"—Psa. 95:1-6; John 4:20-24.

Some Bible Hints.

Worship is praise, realization of the great things God has done for us (v. 1).

Worship is humble recognition of the greatness of God and our own smallness (v. 5).

Worship is not connected with either place or ceremony. It is an attitude of mind (v. 23).

Worship is spiritual; it is the spirit of man communing with the Spirit of God (v. 24).

Suggestive Thoughts.

In olden days, worship was considered the doing of things in a certain way—ceremonial. Some take this view of it yet. Jesus shows us that it has nothing to do with ceremony, but with the heart.

Since worship is adoration of God, it can come only from a heart that loves God. An evil mind cannot worship because its thoughts are wrong.

Worship includes reverence. We are not worshipping when we sit chatting in Church or dreaming about our engagements or our business.

True worship means the absorption of the mind in the contemplation of God (Rev. 1:10). It is not always easy, and certainly not light-hearted, as this chapter shows.

A Few Illustrations.

Some people have little appreciation of beautiful pictures. To gain it, they must study pictures and try to see their beauty. It is the same with worship. To appreciate God is hard for some folks.

Worship is not flattery of God. That would be contemptible. Worship is the love of the child for its father and communion between the two.

The person who cannot love cannot worship. Expressions of love are the natural expression of the soul in worship. Human love is a shadow of the divine.

The words "hidden treasure" arouse the cupidity and love of adventure of many. The word "God," which sent St. Francis into an ecstasy, should arouse in us the adoration of love.

To Think About.

Should we have more worship in our Church services?

How develop the spirit of worship in our society meetings?

How does worship help us?

STUDY BOOKS.

The following study books for the missionary societies this year have been by the Interdenominational Committees:

Women—"From Jerusalem to Jerusalem," by Helen Barrett Montgomery (on foreign missions), price 50 cents. "The Crowded Ways," by Chas. Hatch Sears (on home missions), price 60 cents.

Young People—"Going to Jerusalem," price 50 cents.

Willing Workers—"Jumping Beans," by Robt. N. McLean; price, 75 cents. (Try to secure some Mexican jumping-beans to exhibit, which will be very interesting to the children.)

Beginners—"Little Lord Jesus," by Lucy W. Peabody; price, 25 cents.

We invite all adults of our Churches to read the study books this year. They are not only interesting, but give much information. The above books can be secured from the Christian Publishing Company, Dayton, Ohio.

THE CHURCH AT WORK.

Dr. Mary F. Cushman, a noted medical missionary to Africa, will be the speaker at the women's mass-meeting Friday evening at 7:15 o'clock in the Methodist Church at Piqua. On this same evening, at 6 o'clock, there will be a men's banquet in the Christian Church. There will be a high-grade program. Any layman or minister living within a hundred miles will count himself fortunate to be present. There will be no solicitation of funds. Any man not attending the Convention regularly, but who wishes to attend the banquet and program, should send his name and address at once, with his plate charge of one dollar, to A. E. Buchanan, Piqua, Ohio. Attend the banquet and bring your wife or sweetheart to the women's meeting.

Prayer and Thought.

Every delegate to the Convention should be giving his best thought and earnest prayer to the great themes that will engage his attention: Christian education, Christian union, world problems, evangelism and life service, finance, foreign and home missions, publications, social service, stewardship, spiritual life, jubilee year plans and spirit, ministerial relief and pensions, and other great Christian matters for our people to fill their place and do forward work.

Convention Credentials.

All conference secretaries have been furnished with special blanks to certify to the Convention secretary a complete list of delegates and alternates, and with the conference's method of filling vacancies. These will be passed to the committee on credentials and roll and will constitute the credentials of delegates, thus avoiding the necessity of individual credential blanks, which are easily forgotten or misplaced. Your Conference Secretary will send your Conference's official list to this office and the names are being published in this column.

It is very important for all pastors to decide now what stewardship classes they will have, beginning November 1st. It is important, so that the text-books may be chosen and ordered, ready for that date; also that the instructors may be chosen and have time to prepare themselves and make their plans for the classes. Every Church should have one class at the least. Many should have more than one class. Success will mean to plan now. We shall be glad to make text-book suggestions.

ALCOHOL IN CANADA.

The New Outlook, the official organ of the United Church of Canada, in a recent editorial, calls attention to a document just issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce for the Dominion, giving an exhaustive analysis of the liquor situation in Canada. The report, which is made up of elaborate statistical material, paints an alarming picture in the growth of the consumption of alcoholic beverages. According to the editorial comment in the New Outlook, the statistics also reveal that the number of deaths caused by alcohol has more than doubled in the period of government control or sale. The editorial further discusses at some length the present exportation of liquor to the United States from Canada and prophesies that legislation will be introduced during the next session at Ottawa, prohibiting clearances on liquor exports to the United States.—Federal Council Bulletin.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference will be held at the Franklin Christian Church on Tuesday, November 5th. A large representation from each Church and society is most earnestly desired. Mrs. John Ferguson, president of the National Commission of Protestant Church Women, comes as a special guest of the Conference. Pastors are urged to attend, and to give notice of time and place of meeting. 400 W. 34th St., Norfolk, Va. MRS. L. W. STAGG, Secretary.

THE SUN LETTER.

The circulation manager attended the Georgia and Alabama Conference in the interest of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The people were kind and generous and gave us about twenty-five renewals. We hope to do as well at the Alabama Conference. We want to urge the subscribers of THE SUN to see us at the Conferences and renew. THE SUN needs money to pay the printer. You need THE SUN in your home. When you subscribe for THE SUN you are not making a donation but you are buying one of the best religious papers I know of. You will get your money's worth, and more. It ought to be in every home.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

DYING FOR JESUS.

"Always bearing about in the body the dying of Jesus, that the life also of Jesus may be manifested in our body."—2 Cor. 4:5-11.

Nothing will be more delightful in our memories than any sacrifice we have made for Him who made the supreme sacrifice for us. All we can spend for Him is as nothing, but we know that He counts it dear to Him, and so we also rejoice in it. His praise and gratitude, however undeserved, are the greatest things that can come into any life.

And often, too, we shed our blood for Christ unwittingly. We are so engrossed in work for the Master that we give more of ourselves than we realize at first. The heroes of the cross sometimes fall without knowing how fast and how far they have run. Like Stephen, they see the heavens opened, and Jesus standing at God's right hand ready to welcome them.

Prayer.—Make us ready to die for Thee, our Saviour. May we indeed be crucified with Thee. In willing sacrifices, of goods and of the body, of the mind and the spirit, may we bear about with us Thy dying. And may this death prove to be in us the joy and power of the life eternal. Amen.

TUESDAY.

GOD HEARS.

"The righteous cried, and the Lord heard, and delivered them out of all their troubles."—Psa. 34:15-22.

The Lord heard before the righteous cried, and his deliverance was ready before the troubles began: God's love outspeeds our anguish and His provision moves ahead of our need. The very words in our tongues, before they are uttered, He knows them altogether. It is impossible to catch the Divine Helper unprovided with instant aid.

The psalmist says it is the cry of the righteous that is heard by the Lord and answered with deliverance. That is not to say that any sincere and earnest cry for deliverance is rejected by the Lord, for none is; but the unrighteous do not cry to the Lord. They may moan in agony, or shriek in terror, or roar in baffled rage, but they do not know the Lord to cry to Him.

Prayer.—Acquaint us with Thee, O God, and we shall be at peace. Our cries shall be lifted to Thee daily. We shall not let the path to Thy throne grow strange to our feet. We will pray to Thee in joy as well as sorrow. We will be at home with our Father. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE PIN OUT.

"Therefore, we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things that were heard, lest haply we drift away from them."—Heb. 2:1-9.

A moment's sin may undo a life of rectitude. A moment's unbridled ferocity may plunge into blackness all the days to come. It is terrifying to think what ruin a single hour may bring forth.

Marcus Dods says that these brief departures from honor and right are "like the taking out of a pin or a ratchet that lets all we have gained run down to its old condition."

"Is it fair," we are likely to ask, "that we should suffer so long and so much for a few instants' wrong-doing? Yes, for the wrong-doing of those few instants had been years in preparation. No one is base at once. Satan never takes a fortress by assault. He always creeps inside in disguise, and does not summon his attack from without until the fortress is virtually his.

The writer of the letter to the Hebrews was right when he spoke of the course of sin, not as a sharp break with righteousness, but as a drifting away.

Prayer.—Help us, then, to be vigilant, O our Judge! May we ever obey the Saviour's command, and watch and pray. May we give the devil no opening into our hearts. May we stand to our defenses day and night, Thy grace aiding us. Amen.

THURSDAY.

BE A GUIDEPOST.

"Behold, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world!"—John 1:29-37.

Approaching a certain revival meeting, you would have seen men and women standing about the big tabernacle carrying standards with large placards bearing the sign, "This Way to Find Salvation." There was to be no mistake in any one's mind about the kind of business carried on in that building. Those people were not ashamed of it, but gloried in it. Why should they not, when at considerable personal sacrifice and with no hope of personal gain, they were simply trying to bring to their brothers and sisters the greatest possible blessing?

Such a signpost was John the Baptist when he cried, "Behold, the Lamb of God!" Such a signpost every true Christian is glad to be, pointing people, in every way he can and at all times, to the Saviour of the world.

Sometimes in public ways and sometimes in private, by conversation and letters, by addresses and in Sunday School classes, in prayer-meetings and parlors, in books and periodicals, and nowadays over the radio, by song, by pictures, by tracts—there are many ways of being guides to Jesus Christ, and all are effective if used by humble, sincere, and thoughtful followers of the Master.

Prayer.—How else, our Saviour, are men to know Thee except by being told of Thee? And who shall tell men of Thee except those that are acquainted with Thee and are daily blessed by Thee? May our feet be swift on Thy errands. May our hands be proud of Thy standard. And may our voices always be eager to sound Thy praises to all men. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE ORGAN SPEAKS.

"Behold, I will pour out my spirit upon you."—Prov. 1:20-29.

A great organ was to be dedicated. The choir was ready for the opening anthem. The organist was in his place and a large audience was eager for the first notes of the splendid instrument, but no sound came from it. There were the tall pipes, golden and shining. The stops were mechanically perfect. The pedals were prepared for the deep undertones. But something was wrong with the bellows, and no current of air could sweep into the pipes, so the organ was silent. Months of building, at great cost, but no sound. After a disconcerting pause, however, the difficulty was remedied, the organist struck his fingers on the keyboard, and a burst of majestic harmony filled the temple.

So is it with any life that is not filled with the Holy Spirit of God. It is a dumb life, a dead life. The Spirit has not filled the organ.

Prayer.—May that not be our sad case, Thou Holy Spirit of the living God! Come to the creatures Thou hast formed and breathe into us the breath of life. Behold, we have no words without Thee, and no song is in our mouth. We have no music in ourselves, but all our voice is in Thee. Speak Thou to us, that we may speak to others. Amen.

SATURDAY.

PRIEST AND APOSTLE.

"Consider the Apostle and High Priest of our confession, even Jesus."—Heb. 3:1-15.

Dr. James A. Francis once called attention to this illuminating combination of titles of Christ—Apostle and High Priest. For an apostle, he said, comes from God to men, while a high priest goes from men to God. An apostle is a messenger telling men what God wishes them to know, while a high priest lays before God the needs and petitions of mortals. In order to be a complete apostle, he said, one must know God; and in order to be a perfect high priest, one must know men.

Now, all this is true of Jesus Christ, and of Him alone, because only He is at the same time complete God and complete man. Only in the God-man can sin and mercy meet, lack and fulfillment, disease and healing, misery and eternal joy, death and life, heaven and earth come together in Him, and find their union.

Is Christ an Apostle to us? Have we received His message from the Father? Is Christ a High Priest to us? Have we entrusted to Him our petitions to the Father? His is the great intercession. He is the Intermediary between God and man. Is He our Intermediary, or are we living a hopeless, isolated life?

Prayer.—O come to us, Lord Jesus! Be all to us Thou dost long to be. Establish in us the blessed connection with our Father, that His life may flow through our life forever more. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE ROCK, OUR REST.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matt. 11:25-30.

India has many boy merchants, and for their use as they journey the charitable have placed rest-stones along the roads. A woman missionary once passed a weary little fellow as he reclined against one of these stones, and quoted the above verse to him. The lad was invited to the mission school, and there he learned to love Jesus. His face lighted up as he heard the verse beginning "The Lord is my Rock." "That is better than any rest-stone," he said. "It keeps one rested all the time."

There can be no rest except in something as firm and substantial as a rock. Try to rest against the swaying branch of a tree, try to find slumber on the seat of a bouncing automobile, and you will long to have beneath you some surface as solid and unmoved as a rock.

Prayer.—Firm beneath us, O Lord, are Thy everlasting arms. Changeless and sure is Thy provided rest. Our confidence is our comfort, its persistence is our peace. We rejoice in Thy endurance, O God of the ages. Amen.

The First Congregational-Christian Merger

This Page will be Occupied every Week to December 12th with the Story of

A Great Challenge

DEAR FELLOW-CHRISTIANS:

I wonder if you realize what an educational system our united Churches have to do our share of Christian educational work in this field of vast need and untold possibilities.

There is Elon College on the north side of the great Southeast, with its noble history and fine equipment. There is Piedmont College in the geographical center of this great Southeast, with its fine history, the best-known young College in the Congregational United States, with its many friends, more than 5,000 of whom donate to its budget, and just beginning its campaign for $2,000,000 more of equipment and endowment. And then there is PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE (formerly Bethlehem College), 150 miles west of this center in a great field of its own.

And still farther west is Thorsby Institute, than which there is no finer preparatory school in Alabama. In East-Middle Tennessee is Pleasant Hill Academy, with its great work for years, probably soon to become a junior college; and Country Life Academy, south of the center of North Carolina, a natural feeder to Elon College and probably a junior college in time—all as representatives of these united denominations, not only in serving the young people of these two denominations, but also in doing a strong unsectarian Christian work for all these fourteen Southeastern States.

Does it not thrill the heart of every one of you, and does it not call upon you to do your part of sacrifice to enable these, your own institutions, to render the greatest personal service to these States, to this nation, and to the kingdom of God?

The vote of the Southern Christian Convention has put on PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE the duty and responsibility of securing the funds for its full equipment and endowment—$300,000; and the Board of Trustees, by vote, have put on me the duty and responsibility of finding this within the Christian Churches of the Southern Christian Convention. On the other hand, the vote of the Trustees of Piedmont College has put on me the duty and responsibility of securing $2,000,000 for Piedmont College, to add to the fine property it already has.

Foundation for the Piedmont campaign has been thoroughly and solidly laid during many months of preparation for it, and I have full confidence that the amount will be secured. I do not know your Churches so well, but I have been at one of your Conventions, and have met many of the members of your Church, and I know something of your devotion to Christian education.

Therefore, I appeal to you with confidence—to every one of you who read "The Christian Sun"—to come to the help of your own College, and thereby to have as your educational resources in the central and western part of the South, institutions with equipment and endowment bordering on $3,000,000.

Please send your checks and pledges to me, made out to PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, and I will, after recording them, forward them to the Treasurer of PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE, who will acknowledge and receipt for them.

Fraternally and sincerely yours,

FRANK E. JENKINS

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Shall we say no? Last week an appeal was made to the Christian Orphanage to take a little boy and a little girl who were in destitute circumstances. The people who came to see me said to me, "If you knew their pitiable condition you would take them." We have not had the time to go to see them; and if we had gone, however pitiable their condition, we could not take them right at this time. I understand that they are bright children and need a home in the Christian Orphanage or some other home of like kind. If our people could only know the distress and the affliction there is in the bounds of the Southern Convention and the many appeals that come to us week after week and the opportunity it gives our people to do kind and generous deeds, I believe they would be willing and glad to give more bountifully to comfort and help those in need. The Christian Orphanage is a home for orphans and helpless children. We try to make it a real home for them.

We want them to know that the Church, through its orphanage, is giving them a home. The Church does not only want to give them a home, but it wants to give them such advantages, educationally and religiously, that they will develop into fine citizens when they reach maturity. The orphanage is a modern way of doing this charity work in a fine way. It offers every individual an opportunity to have a part in feeding, clothing, educating and training these fatherless and motherless children.

Who is it that has the heart to deny a helpless child? What can come nearer touching the heart than the pleas of a little child, especially a fatherless child, so lonely in the world? If every member of the Christian Church would do his or her duty, the orphanage could do a larger work and reach so many children that need its loving care.

In our coming Thanksgiving offering, let every member of the Christian Church, both young and old, do their part to help us raise the fifteen thousand dollars needed to reach our goal. Begin now to lay aside a real offering to help swell the offering in your Church and Sunday School.

May God put it into the hearts of our people to come to the rescue of the little children in the Christian Orphanage is our prayer.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

THE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY.

Dedication Day, October 19, 1929—University of North Carolina.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

Temples of tomes, thy stately grace
Adorns this proud October hour!
Within thy walls, the mighty race
Of deathless souls, undying power.

Still walks this earth with deathless tread
The gone-but-unforgotten soul
That kept its course, though scant of bread,
Where Wisdom's mighty waters roll.

Here, lone within this classic shade
Shall sages pause to quaff their fill;
Shall weave for thee their accolade,
Beside these waters deep and still.

A thousand wheels shall sing the song
Of gain and gold and goods and pelf,
But to this spot shall e'er belong
Communion rich of self with self.

Forever here this torch shall burn
Serene and star-like, full and free;
Perchance some dreamer here may turn
A line to live immortally.

DARKNESS AND LIGHT.

There are no stars tonight.
The clouds shut out the heaven's blue,
And though I look with longing eyes,
I cannot pierce them through.

Some nights the stars shine bright,
Some nights the lightnings flash,
And then we feel we get a gleam
Of that Eternal Light.

Oh, Light Divine, that ever guides
The pilgrim on his way,
Though clouds hang dark along the path
That leads to endless day!

Yet, though the clouds be blackest night,
The eyes of faith may pierce them through
And catch the light of glory bright
Of that eternal day.

Oh, Jesus Christ, Thou art the Light
That bids all darkness flee;
Increase our faith, that we may see
Beyond life's darkest night. —Anon.

MARRIAGES

GARRISON—TATE.

Sunday, September 29, 1929, promptly at 3 P. M., Miss Barbara Princess Tate became the bride of Mr. William Daniel Garrison, both of Caswell County. They took the marriage vows at the home of the bride's pastor, Elon College, N. C. Mrs. Daniels is a splendid Christian young woman. She has taught school very successfully a few years, and at present occupies an important position in Penn's Factory, Reidsville, N. C. The bride is talented in music, and has been musician at Concord Church for several years, which position she now holds.

The pretty bride was attired in a beautiful dark-blue Georgette crepe, with gray accessories. The room was decorated with dahlias, snap-dragons, patient plants and ferns. The groom is a farmer, of Reidsville, Route 7, and is held in high esteem by his neighbors. The fortunate groom by his neighbors.

They expect to make their home in Caswell County. Only a few intimate friends witnessed the ceremony that made them one. Immediately following the ceremony they motored to Mr. Thomas S. Garrison's, where a sumptuous supper awaited them. Their many friends wish them the best in life. May a long, happy and prosperous life be theirs.

REED.

Mr. W. P. Reed was born November 1, 1865, in Warren County, and he and his family moved to Henderson more than twenty years ago, and had made this their home during these years. He joined the Church several years ago and proved himself faithful to both Church and Sunday School.

Bro. Reed was called from this life on September 5, 1929, at the age of 63 years, 10 months, and 4 days. He was a member of the First Christian Church of Henderson at the time of his death. He is survived by his wife, two daughters, one son, fourteen grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

The funeral services were held from First Christian Church September 8th, with interment at the Epsom Cemetery. The services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. H. A. Ellis and Rev. I. W. Hughes. May God bless and comfort the bereaved.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

O'KELLY AND CHRISTIAN UNION.

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

In discussing this subject, we shall have to depend largely upon the declarations of the spirit and purpose of the movement in which the Rev. James O'Kelly was a leader. It is a most regrettable fact that the library and private papers, among which was the great leader's diary, were burned. This loss is greatly to be deplored by the historian, and the student of antiquarian interests; but it may enable us to arrive at a more correct appreciation of those ideals and principles which O'Kelly and those associated with him held dearer than life itself. Men may give intellectual assent to concepts which do not materially influence their own conduct nor mold and fashion the contribution which they make through the institutions which they establish.

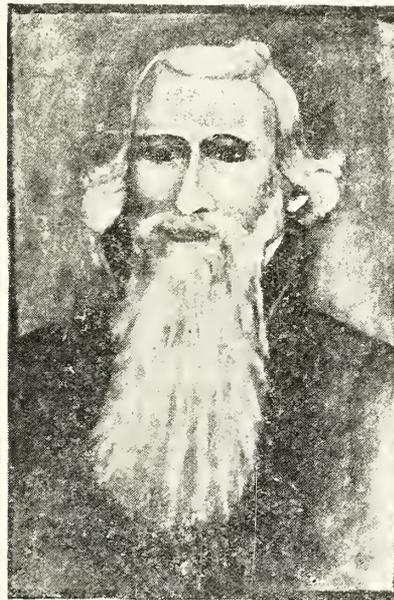

The movement which resulted in the organization of what is known as the Christian Church was led by men who were seeking more than a fellowship in which those of identical beliefs and modes of Christian practice might find the freedom to exercise those beliefs and practices. They were seeking to formulate and to define a fellowship that would be broad enough to include all those who in loving loyalty and obedience to the Lord Jesus Christ were seeking to walk in the way to which Christ had called them. The movement had its genesis in one of the greatest spiritual awakenings this country has ever seen. Men of diverse denominational affiliations and of widely separated theological traditions were being lifted to the very heights of spiritual exaltation by fellowship one with another in the Lord. They were moved by the joy of seeing men and women by the scores and by the hundreds, in penitence and in faith, accepting Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. And they sought to organize and perpetuate such a fellowship.

It is one thing, in moments of great spiritual exaltation, to catch a vision of great possibilities. It is quite another thing to arrive at a satisfactory working basis upon which to achieve the envisioned possibilities. The traditions and associations of the past never assert themselves more powerfully than when men gather and, in the cool light of reason, endeavor to formulate the principles upon which a new undertaking shall be launched. It is then that individual differences of opinion are most likely to assert themselves. It is a most exacting and difficult task to discard all that which, though it may have been useful in the past, is no longer essential; and at the same time to retain all those elements without which the future of the movement must of necessity be impoverished.

The effort to formulate the basis of an all-inclusive Christian fellowship resulted in the adoption of what seemed to them certain cardinal principles, to-wit: "The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church." "Christian is a sufficient name for the Church." "The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice." "Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership." "The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all."

Upon this basis, these enthusiastic souls sought union and fellowship with all followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. The entire spirit and purpose of the movement was aptly summed up in the single sentence, "In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity."

REV. JAMES O'KELLY.

The spirit and purpose of the men and of the times that made possible the organization of such a Christian fellowship may best be illustrated by extracts from "The Last Will and Testament of the Springfield Presbytery," as published in the first issue of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, September 1, 1808.

"The Presbytery of Springfield, sitting at Caneyridge, in the County of Bourbon, being through a gracious Providence, in more than ordinary bodily health, growing in strength and size daily, in perfect soundness and composure of mind; but knowing that it is appointed for all delegated bodies once to die, and considering that the life of every such body is very uncertain, do make and ordain this our last will and testament, in manner and form following, viz:

"Imprimis. We will that this body die, be dissolved, and sink into union with the body of Christ at large: for there is but one body, and one spirit, even as we are called in one hope of our calling.

"Item. We will that our name of distinction, with its reverend title, be forgotten, that there be but one Lord over God's heritage, and His name one.

"Item. We will that our power for making laws for the government of the Church and executing them by delegated authority, forever cease; that the people may have free course to the Bible, and adopt the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus.

"Item. We will that candidates for the gospel ministry henceforth study the Holy Scriptures with fervent prayer and obtain license from God to preach the simple gospel, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, without any mixture of philosophy, vain deceit, traditions of men, the rudiments of the world. And let none henceforth take this honor to himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.

"Item. We will that the Church of Christ assume her native right of internal government—try her candidates for the ministry, as to their soundness in the faith, acquaintance with experimental religion, gravity and aptness to teach; and admit no other proof of their authority but Christ speaking in them. We will that the Church of Christ look up to the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into His harvest; and that she resume her primitive right of trying those who say they are apostles, and are not.

"Item. We will that each particular Church, as a body, actuated by the same spirit, choose her own preacher, and support him by a free-will offering without written call or subscription—admit members—remove offenses; and never henceforth delegate her right of government to any man or set of men whatever.

"Item. We will that the people henceforth take the Bible as the only sure guide to heaven; and as many as are offended with other books, which stand in competition with it, may cast them into the fire if they choose: for it is better to enter into life having one book than having many to be cast into hell.

"Item. We will that preachers and people cultivate a spirit of mutual forbearance, pray more and dispute less; and while they behold the signs of the times, look up and confidently expect that redemption draweth nigh."

In such a spirit of fellowship, liberty, forbearance, and Christian charity was the Christian Church organized, to the end that Christian union might be made possible and encouraged among the followers of Christ. Throughout the year of Christian Church history, her members have lived up to the spirit of her founders as embodied in her organization, with about as great a degree of consistency as might be reasonably expected, in

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. D. D. Nash, of our Hopewell Church, Hopewell, Va., was a deeply interested visitor at Elon College on October 16th to attend and enjoy the unveiling ceremonies of the O'Kelly Memorial.

The General Convention of the Christian Church is in session this week and part of next at Piqua, Ohio. Owing to the interest centered in the vote on uniting the Congregational and Christian Churches, a large attendance is contemplated.

We are dedicating this week's SUN to the memory of Rev. James O'Kelly. The might, worth and merit of this great and good man are just beginning to be recognized in the world, and the centuries to come will enhance further the labors he wrought on earth.

You will wish to keep your copy of this week's CHRISTIAN SUN. Other space is yielded in large measure to that of presenting to our readers the invaluable historical information presented at the O'Kelly Memorial unveiling and exercises at Elon College October 16th.

Miss Jewel Truitt, secretary of the Board of Christian Education, was a welcome visitor at Elon last week, stopping over from Waverly, Va., on her way to Ramseur, N. C., to conduct for a week or ten days a school of Christian education in our Ramseur Church. Miss Truitt hopes to put on many of these schools through the Church during the coming months.

Supt. C. D. Johnston, of the Christian Orphanage, was carried to the Burlington Hospital last Friday, October 18th, where he was successfully operated on for appendicitis. For a day or two prior to the operation, Bro. Johnston was quite ill. Since the operation, he has been resting with more comfort, and his condition is now regarded by his physicians as favorable.

Bro. C. D. Johnston, superintendent of the Orphanage and circulation manager of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, who attended the Georgia and Alabama Conference week before last and the Alabama Conference last week, reports very happy, successful and largely attended session of both Conferences. Rev. H. W. Elder was able, though very feeble, to attend both Conferences, much to the joy of his brethren.

One of the most interested and delighted visitors at the O'Kelly Memorial exercises, Elon College, N. C., October 16th, was Bro. A. S. Dunn, of Lynchburg, Va. Whenever there is to be a word spoken or a program put on to honor the true historical lights of the Christian Church, just count on Deacon Dunn to be on hand. He arose at 3:30 o'clock in the morning to get here and expected to be deep into the night in getting back, but on leaving Elon he said it was all worth while and he did not regret the day. He had had a great time.

Sunday, October 13th was "Home-Coming Day" at Mt. Auburn, Dr. W. C. Wicker, pastor. A great audience was present, and the occasion was all that could be desired for worship and good-fellowship. It rejoiced the hearts of the large congregation that a former pastor, Rev. P. T. Klapp, was able to be present and to preach in the afternoon. After a bountiful lunch on the long table in the grove and an hour of genuine delight socially, the pastor, Dr. Wicker, preached in the afternoon.

It was a matter of universal regret that Judge J. F. West, of the Supreme Court of Appeals, Waverly, Va., chairman of the Committee on the O'Kelly Memorial, was prevented by extreme illness from being present at the ceremonies of the unveiling of the O'Kelly Memorial at Elon College October 16th. Judge West had longed to see the day and contributed much to make the historical event a reality. The large audience present, by a rising vote, expressed appreciation for his faithful service and deep regret at his illness.

Here is a personal letter from our friend, Rev. G. H. Veazey, Roanoke, Ala., that tells of an unusual and, we think, an exceedingly interesting event: "We celebrated my father's eightieth birthday yesterday. Of twelve children, eleven were present. Of sixty grandchildren, thirty-nine were present. Of thirty-seven great-grandchildren, eighteen were present. It is useless to say it was a great day with us. My father has been reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN for more than thirty years. He saw your request for the first new dollar for missions, and since has no way of earning any money, he finally got a new one-dollar bill and asked me to send it to you for missions. I'm sure you will be needing money this coming year."
